Mr. ROBB: All we are doing is giving to the countries concerned the advantage of our most favoured-nation column. But perhaps the best answer I can give my hon. friend is to inform him that of all those in Canada who have urged the government to negotiate these treaties the strongest representations have come from large industries in the city represented by him. I have in mind two particular industries there, doing a considerable business, and I may quote without giving names—although there is no reason why the names should not be given—

Mr. SPENCE: Let us have the names.

Mr. ROBB: Well, one is the rubber industry of Toronto, a very large industry in which my hon. friend is no doubt interested. I will quote an extract from a letter received from Mr. Thomas Bradshaw of the Massey Harris Company:

> We are extremely anxious that we should extend our European business in every way possible, and especially to do so at the present time in those countries which are beginning to import our goods. The situation we find is that in certain European countries where the United States has a more favourable agreement than Canada, goods are being imported from the United States such as we manufacture in Canada. Trade connections are being made and we are absolutely unable to sell and make favourable connections. We know that we are losing a number of good opportunities now, and we fear it will be very difficult indeed for us to make good these losses in future years because many of the valuable connections which might be concluded will be taken up by United States manufacturers.

That is an extract from a letter dated February 8, 1926, signed Thomas Bradshaw.

Mr. BENNETT: What about 1928? What is his view now?

Mr. ROBB: We cannot make a treaty in half an hour, you know. We have been negotiating all the time and this is the conclusion of our work.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Did these people ask you to extend all the privileges of the French treaty to these different nations in order to trade with them? That is what you are doing in this case, just as you did yesterday in the other case. That is exactly what you are doing. You are giving to these different small nations all the advantages of the French treaty.

Mr. ROBB: Admitting all that, we are getting something in return.

Mr. CAHAN: What are you getting?

Mr. ROBB: You cannot sell unless you buy, and we are now selling to these countries, notwithstanding that we have no trade agreement with them. We are selling more than we are buying.

Mr. SPENCE: Keep on selling.

Mr. ROBB: But we wish to increase our trade. Now, I have given the spread in the different customs tariffs. It would take some time to run over the different countries to show the benefits to be derived.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister a moment ago spoke about the United States as our competitor. Is the United States giving to these people in its market the same advantages as we are extending to them in ours?

Mr. ROBB: It is not what the United States are doing; it is what they are buying from us. That is what interests our industries; it is the fact that they can get in there on the same terms as other countries. And everyone knows that the more they can sell there, the better for them. Take the agricultural implement industry, for example. If that industry can run night and day, one part of the time on export business and the other part on domestic business, does it not stand to reason that it can sell cheaper in its own country? My hon. friend will agree with that.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not agree with that at all. I do not agree that any business can run profitably night and day, except a few industries, such as steel. It is ridiculous to talk about businesses running night and day because it is not profitable to do so.

Mr. CHURCH: There are some people who call themselves manufacturers, but who are really the worst enemies of the manufacturers in this country; they want to grab all the privileges, and they do not care what becomes of those people who are out of employment. No wonder the minister has read letters from them; they want to secure all the advantages there are from such a treaty at the expense of everyone else. We have had unfortunate experiencs with regard to the last three or four treaties, and I predict that this will not be different.

Mr. CAHAN: The other side of the question should be explained by the minister, namely what imports we are likely to receive from these countries and how these imports will affect our own markets. The hon. gentleman said he was selling something to these central European countries. So he is; he is selling the labour markets of Canada to the extent to which these countries are placed at an advantage in our markets over our own producers. We are also told that this will provide a greater market for the manufacturers of rubber and of agricultural machinery, but I would not give the Canadian market as represented by prospective imports from central Europe in order to assist those two large combinations known as the rubber combine and the agricultural combine. The great need of this country at present is not to advance the interests in foreign markets of the combines and trusts of Canada; outside of our agricultural and mining production our great need is to foster and encourage the small industries which formerly operated in Canada, giving employment to the people in our small towns and country villages. If we are to retain our population and give employment to those who may come to Canada from abroad we must encourage these smaller industries which formerly gave local employment to thousands of people and kept them at home. Therefore I believe that before we pass this bill we should know what imports we are likely to receive from abroad, what imports are given a particular advantage in our market. Otherwise it seems to me we are giving them our markets without a quid pro quo, and the only satisfactory thing about the treaty is the fact that it can be rendered ineffective by giving six months' notice.

Mr. SPENCE: It is not often I agree with the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church), but I endorse everything he said to-day, and I endorse also the remarks of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I am not going to repeat their statements, but notwithstanding the representations made by the two large firms in Toronto who favour this treaty I think it would be far better for us to consider the thousands of other industries in the city of Toronto rather than those two combines which are getting everything from this government. The importations from these foreign countries will create a great deal of unemployment in Canada, and in addition to that everyone knows that every treaty we have made since this government came into power has been detrimental to the country as a whole. Unemployment is increasing every day, and I say this is the biggest farce in the world. Let England make all the treaties she likes, but let us sit quietly and do all the business we can without allowing foreign countries to dump their cheap goods into our markets. I never heard so much rot before and honestly I do not know how the minister can defend such a treaty. We know that since 1922 this government have been ruining the industries of this country, and in the end it will drive them all out of the country. It makes a man sick when he is accustomed to do business on the level.

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps that is why the stocks of all the different industries in Canada are so high.

Mr. SPENCE: That is no sign of prosperity.

Mr. ROBB: I listened to my hon. friend; surely he need not interrupt me.

Mr. SPENCE: I have heard that repeated too often.

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps that is why stocks have increased in value, and perhaps that is why they are paying the same dividends although the shares have been split up. Perhaps that is why the great industries of our country are employing almost twice as many men as they employed in 1922, and perhaps that is why our exports have increased so enormously during that period.

Mr. SPENCE: But the minister must know very well that there are far more closed factories in Toronto now than there were in 1922, and there is not half the employment to-day.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that, and no one else knows it.

Mr. SPENCE: That applies even to the Massey Harris Company, which has been propped up by this government

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps that is why they are building more houses—

Mr. SPENCE: Half of them are empty, and the same applies to the stores.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. SPENCE: You cannot get away with that kind of stuff.

Mr. ROBB: In answer to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, if we take the agreements as they come, Esthonia is first. The imports from that country were fibrilla, flax fibre and flax tow. Those came in free; no duty at all was collected on them. We sold to Esthonia wheat flour, rubber manufactures, internal combustion engines, harvesters and binders, mowing machines, ploughs and other farm implements together with parts for such implements. Then we come to Hungary; the concession we have with regard to that country is of considerable value to the fishing industry and the manufacturing industry of Canada. The imports from that country were largely beans.

Mr. BENNETT: And we do not produce any beans in Canada?

Mr. ROBB: We do, but we had a bean crop failure last year. When we have plenty of beans we can take care of our own requirements, but when we do not grow them here we have to buy them from some other country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was that the only article imported?

Mr. ROBB: Practically. The total value of the imports for the year ending March 31, 1927, was $60,956, of which $58,000 represented beans. Then we come to Latvia; the imports from that country in 1923 amounted to $8,810, of which $7,286 entered under the free tariff. There were no imports in 1924, but in 1925 they amounted to $2,927, of which $2,844 came in free. I suppose that represented raw material for some of our industries. The total imports in 1926 amounted to $400 and they all came in under the free tariff column. In that same year we exported to Latvia articles to the amount of $528,765. From Lithuania in 1923 the total imports were $5,873. These came in under the free tariff column. They were required I imagine for some of our industries.

Mr. CAHAN: Why do you select 1923?

Mr. ROBB: Our record commenced in that year. In 1924 the total imports were $525. That is to say $525 came in free.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The industries did not require as much trade that year.

Mr. ROBB: I will answer that argument just in a moment. In 1926 the total imports were $300.

Mr. BENNETT: The industries were worse off still.

Mr. ROBB: In 1927 they were getting better. The imports amounted to $4,107.

Mr. STEVENS: They are getting worse all the time.

Mr. BENNETT: No, better.

Mr. ROBB: From Roumania the imports in 1927 were $35,666. There were $7,473 worth of nuts, $23,256 worth of beans, and $4,937 of other articles. We sell them canvas shoes, rubber tires, canned fish, agricultural implements, automobiles and other articles amounting in all to just about half a million. Before sitting down there is a matter I should like to put on record. I noticed in the press this morning some comment on the payments that have been made to Canada by different countries to which Canada loaned money during the reconstruction period, and there seems to be some misunderstanding as to Roumania. Under the agreement entered into in 1919, Canada loaned to Roumania $20,449,084 at 5½ per cent interest, and repayable in five years. My hon. friend did not object to trading with Roumania. That was during the time the friends of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) were in power.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not object to trading with them now, but I do object to the terms on which we are trading.

Mr. ROBB: Ah, but the terms now are better than the terms in my hon. friend's time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Not at all. The minister knows very well that that money was loaned as a war measure.

Mr. ROBB: Yes?

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was no trading about it, it was a war measure.

Mr. ROBB: They are paying their own way now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We are very glad to hear it.

Mr. ROBB: Up to the end of 1922 Roumania had paid no interest and no principal. Negotiations were undertaken by Hon. Mr. Larkin with representatives of Roumania with a view to placing this debt on a better basis. An agreement was made under which the arrears of interest plus interest thereon, amounting in all to $3,520,636, were capitalized with the original principal and new bonds for the sum of $23,969,720 were issued to Canada. These bonds bear interest at 4 per cent and mature April 1st, 1968. There is provision for a sinking fund which would retire the whole issue by the maturity date. The service of these bonds—interest and sinking fund—is secured by a special export tax on grain, payable in sterling. To date, interest payments have been received by Canada regularly on the due date to the amount of $5,273,290 in all.

Mr. KAISER: I was much impressed with the remarks of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). It is all right for us as Canadians to consider our own products and whether we can market them, but we must remember that other countries are acting similarly and are seeking markets for their products. One of these countries, Lithuania, is a much smaller country than Canada with a population of 4,800,000, about one-half of our own. The articles they are endeavouring to sell are corn, cattle, hams, poultry, eggs, butter, timber, flax, linseed, hides and wool. Now as a Canadian I contend that our markets for butter, eggs and wool have been sufficiently invaded by the treaties already entered into without opening the door to every other country in the world to make inroads in our market which should be preserved for our own products.

Mr. CAHAN: I simply wish to remark in reply to the Minister of Finance that the imports which we now receive from these countries is no indication whatsoever of the imports which we are likely to receive under the more favourable tariff which is being granted to them. Take every one of these countries if you will. Look at the discussions at the last Economic conference at Geneva last year and you will find that every country is looking to the preservation of its own markets for its own local industries in order to keep its labouring people at home. These treaties are simply breaking down every safeguard we have in Canada, and placing other countries in a most advantageous position to compete locally in our markets with such manufactures as they are able to develop.

Mr. BENNETT: There are two or three points to which I should like to direct attention. First, these treaties are not set out in the statutes but such portions of them as the minister thinks desirable are referred to. I do not think it is sound legislation to proceed in that manner and not have before us the treaties upon which these concessions are based. Some of the treaties are very old. One is dated 1914, another is dated 1923, and a third bears as late a date as 1927. What we in effect are doing is giving adherence to treaties about which we know nothing. It is not sufficient to say that we are giving our support to the trade portion of these treaties. Let us look at the preamble, and the preamble is an important part in this regard:

Whereas by treaties of commerce and navigation or by agreements made by exchanges of notes between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the countries and on the date set out in the schedule to this act, it is provided that the stipulations of the said treaties or agreements respectively shall not be applicable to any self-governing dominion unless notice is given of the desire of His Majesty that the said stipulations shall apply to such dominion but that nevertheless goods of such dominion shall enjoy in each of the said countries respectively the same treatment as would be enjoyed by similar goods if produced in the United Kingdom so long as goods produced or manufactured in the respective countries are accorded in such dominion favoured-nation treatment; and whereas it is desirable that Canada should have the benefit of that portion of each of the treaties or agreements which provides for the exchange of the said mutual trade advantages: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Now the effect of that is what? I ask the minister to state definitely what the effect of this notification or expression of desire to deal with these several countries is? Are we bound by all the provisions in the treaties or are we bound by portions of them only? If we are bound by portions of them only, how can that be having regard to the terms of the treaties themselves? The excerpts that are set out in the explanatory notes certainly throw no light upon that point There are references to particular articles of the treaty by which it is provided that the treaty itself shall not apply to self-governing communities nor to India, except under certain conditions. I should like to know whether or not we are bound by all the terms of the treaty merely because we give notice in that particular regard? It will be noticed that with respect to Esthonia, article 28 provides:

Nevertheless, goods produced or manufactured in India or in any of His Britannic Majesty's self-governing dominions, colonies, possessions or protectorates shall enjoy in Esthonia complete and unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment so long as goods produced or manufactured in Esthonia are accorded in India or such self-governing dominion, colony, possession or protectorate treatment as favourable as that accorded to goods produced or manufactured in any other foreign country.

Have we the right to limit our adoption, or as was said yesterday, our acceptance of that treaty with that particular foreign country?

Mr. ROBB: That is clearly understoood.

Mr. BENNETT: The trouble is that we have not before us the treaties themselves. It is a wrong principle to ask parliament to exercise its legislative powers with respect to certain sections of a treaty without our having before us the whole of the treaty that has been negotiated between the two contracting countries. That is the first point. Then the minister has made the point that the export trade of the country will be greatly developed by the adoption of these treaties. May I point out to the minister that the argument he made with respect to the agricultural implement business is answered in the United States Commercial Intelligence issued only a few weeks ago. They say that to-day they are displacing Canadian implements in Canada to an extent they never did before; that the business of the United States was greater in agricultural implements last year than it was ever before in their history, and that the business which they do in Canada is greater than they do in any other part of the world. What is the minister doing in this case? He is displacing Canadian manufactured goods in Canada by those of a foreign country and he is endeavouring to open up a foreign market, a market that may be destroyed overnight. Let me ask the minister this further question: How long are these treaties for? It is not stated in this bill how long they are for, there is nothing to indicate how long they may last, because I find that each of them is on a different basis. There is at the end of the bill a provision with respect to the legislation coming into force and the suspension of inconsistent laws; but when is it to be ended? Are we bound by the terms of the commercial treaties that England negotiated with these countries for a term of fifteen or twenty years?

Mr. ROBB: They may be terminated on twelve months' notice.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is that to be found?

Mr. ROBB: In the explanatory notes.

An hon. MEMBER: The third section.

Mr. ROBB: They have different terminations but they are all covered.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 3 reads:

The governor in council may make such orders and regulations as are deemed necessary to carry out the provisions and intent of this act, and may upon giving six months' notice to the government of any of the countries mentioned in the said schedule of his intention so to do, order and direct that the favoured nation treatment accorded to such country by this act shall cease and determine, whereupon it shall cease and determine accordingly.

The point I make is that it is not competent for the Dominion of Canada to pass that section if the treaty itself says that it shall be a treaty that requires two or three years' or twelve months' notice. Each treaty has its own particular provision.

There is another point in that regard to which I wish to direct the attention of the minister. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) the other day read certain paragraphs from the findings of the Economic conference at Geneva. That Economic conference adopted as a principle the view that treaties of trade and commerce should be of long date and they gave the reasons why. Now we say that we are negotiating a treaty, because that is what this amounts to, with these various countries, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, from which we buy beans and other goods of that sort amounting, according to the minister, to $4,000 in one year. I believe one year it got up as high as $5,000, and in another it dropped as low as $300. When our business in agricultural implements in Canada has been displaced by United States goods, as it was last year, according to their statement, as it never was before in our history; when we cannot sell at home but are trying to sell somewhere else, and when suddenly those foreign countries give us notice that they are through with us, what is going to happen to our business in this country? That is a question which the minister should be thinking about. He is telling us how he is expanding Canadian trade. I suggest to him that he should endeavour to expand it at home instead of leaving Canadian agricultural implements to find markets in other parts of the world while the Canadian demand is being supplied by long trainloads of United States machines, the manufacture of which provides employment for United States workers. These foreign countries in which the minister is endeavouring to find markets for our goods are building up their industries by highly protective tariffs; they are endeavouring to produce goods in their own countries, and when that trade is lost to us we shall turn in vain to our country for a market that has been displaced by goods manufactured by the people of the United States. I suggest that the time has come when the minister should direct his attention to the filling of Canadian requirements with Canadian-made goods.

Mr. ROBB: Does my hon. friend argue that we should impose an increased duty on agricultural implements? Let us understand each other on this.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the old story—draw a herring across the trail if you can. I will answer the minister's question. Parliament took the duty off agricultural implements and the price became higher. The material, the steel, the iron and everything else imported that went into those goods we gave a drawback upon not only for foreign trade but for local trade as well. Notwithstanding that fact, the United States industry has displaced our Canadian implements to an extent that never occurred before in our history. The United States Commercial Intelligence for February, 1928, states that the greatest market the people of the United States have to-day for their agricultural implements is the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. ROBB: How does my hon. friend propose to stop that?

Mr. BENNETT: Apart altogether from the fact that it is the business of the minister and not mine to stop it, I will tell him how I would do so. I would stop it by changing seats with the Minister of Finance. That is a very simple way too. I can only say this that if the party which I have the honour for the moment to lead were in power, these things would not continue. Further, we have in our hands what instruments, what tools, to use the words of an Englishman, to accomplish that end? We have the tariff, the excise tax, drawbacks, freight rates; we have in our hands all these things as tools that will enable us to see to it that this thing ends without increasing the cost to the consumer by a single dollar. Why is it that the price of agricultural implements has gone up in the last five years? Why has the price not gone down, if the argument of my hon. friend is sound? Why is it that the figures cited by the hon. member for London (Mr. White), the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson) and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser), have not been controverted? Because they cannot be controverted, because they are taken from trade journals, because they are statements of fact. The minister says: If you were in power, would you impose a duty? It might be that a duty would be necessary, but I would utilize the machinery of government and the power of this parliament to an extent that would secure us against the invasion by the people of the United States of our market and not compel us to go abroad to seek markets for our products.

When the Minister of Finance read a letter from the head of a great manufacturing concern dated in 1926, all he had to do was to take the figures for that same concern for 1927 and bring them up to date and he would find that, instead of expanding their trade in in this country, they are yielding it to their United States competitors; that they have taken over the J. I. Case Company in the United States so that they may be able to get some benefit from that in addition to the factory which they have in France, and that they are depending more and more upon their export business and less and less upon the domestic consumption which is being taken away from them by somebody else, owing to the fact that conditions are as they are.

What will happen when these markets are lost to us? There is one market that we have control of, and that is our own. There are six markets that we have not control of, and those are mentioned in the schedule of this treaty. That is the point we desire to make, and that is the point which the minister should keep in his mind. While he can legislate for Canada he cannot legislate for Esthonia and Latvia, and when they give notice to terminate the treaty, when they no longer receive our goods under the most-favoured-nation treatment, we shall seek in vain for a channel for our trade, after we have developed a channel across 3,000 miles of sea and a long distance by land, and at the same time have neglected the opportunity at home, and had our home market taken from us by somebody else. I have upstairs—and I can get it for the minister; I showed it to him during the recent debate—the statement made by the Americans that they had established in this country last year the greatest channel of trade for their implements that they had in the world, and now we are going to Esthonia and Latvia with foreign shipments, foreign currencies, and all that is therein involved, and neglecting the market at home.

The Minister of Finance asks, what would you do? Would you put on a higher duty? My answer is very simple. I would do whatever is necessary to enable us to manufacture at home the goods required by the Canadian people, and it is not necessary to increase the cost to do it either. You may appeal to your agrarian friends from Saskatchewan and ask them to cheer loudly when you speak of low duty. You may appeal to the hon. member for Weyburn, with his repeal of the order in council dealing with the values to be placed on vegetables and eggs, or to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni who asks for a duty on eggs and makes his recital as a free trader that the duty would not increase the price. You may tell the cotton industry in Quebec that it is necessary to have a duty of 7½ per cent on yarns, and then abandon it because the agrarians demand that you should do so. You may do all that, but in the end this humbug will be understood by the people. This is nothing more or less than the old story; it has been practised so long in this country that it has become a habit with the minister. He appeals to the agrarians with one tale, and to the manufacturers with another, hoping to hold them both. If he wants to know what the market gardeners of Quebec think about it, let him ask that delegation that is about to wait upon the Prime Minister headed by the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville; let him ask the agrarians from Saskatchewan whether they are going to let the order in council go or have it re-enacted; or ask my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville whether he is going to see the market gardening industry of Quebec destroyed. The humbug will end at last. To the left you have those who insisted on having the order in council rescinded. My hon. friend from Weyburn has a smile on his face, like the cat that came in with the canary. He realizes that he has been successful in having the order in council cancelled. My hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville is not smiling, because he has discovered what the cancellation of the order in council means. Yes, I see him smiling now, to think of the reception that his delegation will get from the Prime Minister and the cabinet when they ask for the re-enactment of the order in council and my hon. friend over there from Marquette is wondering what is going to happen; is the government going to rescind it and then re-enact it the same session? Is my hon. friend from Weyburn to have the pleasure of seeing it rescinded in the early part of the session, and then reintroduced and passed in the closing days of the session? Is protection to be made effective on market gardening by order in council after the house prorogues? Ask the hon. gentleman who heads the delegation. Ask him what speech he will make when he presents the delegation to the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

It is the same old story, Mr. Speaker. Here we have it again in connection with these treaties of trade and navigation to carry Canadian goods into the far recesses of Austria, Esthonia and Latvia and the other communities that came into being by reason of the treaty of peace. But while all this is happening, what about Canadian markets? That is the problem we are putting to the hon. Minister of Finance, and it is a problem with respect to which we have a right to an answer. The hon. Minister of Justice, whom I see in his seat, smiling urbanely as ever, appealed the other day to Caesar, Caesar being the league of nations. May I ask him if he has read what the economic conference said about negotiating treaties of this kind with a short life? It was said that they should not be subject to easy termination because the channel of trade that may be destroyed makes great difficulties for both parties. After we have been sending our goods to Esthonia and Latvia, when that channel of trade is suddenly terminated by the people of those countries saying they do not need our goods any longer, the Canadian manufacturer will look in vain for his market at home, for he will have lost it to the United States of America. That is the position we put to the minister, and he rises in his wrath and asks, would you put a duty on agricultural implements?

Mr. ROBB: I am not wrathy.

Mr. BENNETT: Then perhaps he is righteously indignant. He asks, would we put a duty on agricultural implements. I answer, we would do anything that may be necessary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. BENNETT: I am so glad that my hon. friends are interested in what I am saying. Per adventure it may be the rescinding of an order in council that I am speaking of.

I do suggest to the hon. Minister of Finance that we have a right to see what is involved with respect to the various terms for the termination of these agreements, for obviously we cannot by mere statute change the terms of the agreements. They date back to 1914, I believe. Lastly, it is quite apparent from what has been said that this is but a little more of what the great Napoleon described as ammunition, as fodder with which to feed the electorate as to the vast foreign trade developed by this country—$30,000 worth of beans one year, and $500 worth of something else next year.

My hon. friend took occasion to refer to the loan to Roumania, and to the fact that in this morning's press adequate appreciation was not expressed of the great services of this government in collecting the interest from Roumania. Does he recall how we were condemned as a party because we loaned the money to Roumania? Does he recall the speeches, embalmed in Hansard, that were made against the Minister of Finance of that day and his supporters regarding the loan to Roumania? It was money lost and gone forever, he then said, and now he rejoices in the fact that, like the poor woman, Roumania has found her treasure again. He says it is due to the genius of the Liberal government because they reduced the interest from 5 to 4 per cent, and the Hon. P. C. Larkin was the genius who has discovered that Roumania can pay her interest. Does the Minister of Finance recall his speeches of those days condemning the loan to Roumania? I should judge from the smile of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he did not think much of the loan to Roumania.

Mr. MALCOLM: I do not think much of it yet.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but unfortunately the Minister of Finance was rejoicing in the fact that his High Commissioner in London has been able to negotiate an arrangement by which the loan is perfectly safe beyond peradventure.

Mr. ROBB: No. I said that we had collected $5,000,000 outstanding, and when we came into office not one cent of interest or principal had been collected.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not, for the loan had been made only a short time before. The loan was made to Roumania during her reconstruction period on the understanding that credits were to be available in Canada to give employment to Canadian workingmen during the period of reconstruction in this country. That credit having thus been used, there was some difficulty in the days of reconstruction for Roumania, but very shortly afterwards she found her feet and now every day is making progress towards stability. The Hon. Mr. Larkin told me in London what had been negotiated a few days before with Roumania, and that there had been assigned to this particular debt the proceeds of an export tax upon wheat. Now, wheat is one of the most important exports of Roumania, and we have this export duty upon wheat for the service of this loan. Our interest is being paid promptly, a sinking fund is provided, and the loan is safe. Yet my friend the Minister of Finance takes responsibility for having reduced the interest rate to four per cent and accepted new securities for the old. I am sorry my friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce has so little confidence in the loan with regard to which there has been a complete novation; the loan now is the loan of this government and not of its predecessors. But I think the hon. gentleman should at least say that those who made the loan had high faith and confidence that it would ultimately be repaid, and that it was made by us as an international obligation and duty and to give employment at that particular period of reconstruction to a large number of Canadian workmen. The government of that day believed the loan was well secured. It now transpires that it was safe in every particular, and although the government have reduced the rate of interest to four per cent, they probably did so for reasons perfectly good to themselves, because they compounded some of the old interest. I wish my hon. friend a long life of peace and happiness in some other office than that which he now occupies, for in that event he will be with us until 1968 when the securities mature.

Mr. MANION: The Minister of Finance a few minutes ago, replying to an hon. member on this side of the house, stated that there was very little unemployment in this country. Again and again the members of this party are accused of being unpatriotic because we have drawn attention to the obvious fact that there is unemployment in the Dominion. I have in my hand the Canadian Unionist, the organ of the All-Canadian Congress of Labour, and I propose to quote its opinion on the question of employment in this country which the minister says is in such excellent condition. The article begins:

> The government spokesman, moving the adoption of the address in the House of Commons on January 27, declared that "unemployment was considerably lessened and the demand for labour has increased."

Then a little lower down I find the following:

> The desire to minimize the prevalence of unemployment is shared by both the old-line political parties.

I read that passage to show that this paper is not the mouthpiece of the Conservative party; it is a labour organ pure and simple. Again:

> Nowhere can one obtain statistics of unemployment that have any claim to accuracy or completeness, without collating the reports of at least two government departments.

And again:

> The prosperous condition of Canadian industry is proclaimed from high places: the partial returns on unemployment are quoted as though they revealed the whole situation. But casual observation is sufficient to convince one that prosperity is confined to comparatively few among the population and that unemployment is rampant among the masses.

In another part of the article the writer estimates that the unemployed in the cities and towns of Canada amount to a quarter of a million. He says:

> To sum up the situation of the Canadian working class: the dry-as-dust figures from official sources speak with a horrible eloquence, and they prove beyond dispute that among more than one-third of the workers (the only section for which statistics are available) unemployment is rife. Applied to the remainder of the workers by simple rule-of-three, they show that a quarter of a million urban wage earners are involuntarily idle and suffering from unmerited poverty.

And he concludes:

> —and government spokesmen. . . are contemptible indeed when they seek to beguile the public with platitudes about a "prosperity" that is a delusion and a snare.

I have quoted the article, Mr. Chairman, because continually we on this side of the house are accused of exaggerating any ill conditions in the Dominion and are taunted with being unpatriotic in drawing attention to undoubted facts. Only a few minutes ago the Minister of Finance made the broad statement that Canadian employment is good and that no one could deny it. Well, the Canadian Unionist denies it. It reminds me of other broad statements the hon. gentleman has made without adducing the slightest proof of their soundness. Again and again he has told this house that his tariff reductions last year did not do any harm to the motor industry of Canada. Yet the Department of Trade and Commerce has issued statistics that the manufacture and export of automobiles has decreased and the import of automobiles has increased. Those figures I placed on Hansard some time ago. I bring this to the attention of hon. members because I believe general statements of this character made by the minister should be backed up with ample proof, and that the government should hesitate to accuse the official opposition of unpatriotic motives simply because we have described conditions as they actually exist, and as confirmed by this labour organ.

Mr. MALCOLM: Is the writer's statement true?

Mr. MANION: He gives figures.

Mr. MALCOLM: But he admits that there is no authority for his figures.

Mr. MANION: He simply says that the figures given out by the government are not reliable.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think if my hon. friend will read the article again he will find that the writer says that statistics are difficult to obtain.

Mr. MANION: But after criticizing both political parties, he expresses an opinion similar to that which we on this side of the house have expressed. He is speaking as an expert on labour, and it is claimed that the All-Canadian Congress of Labour is the largest Canadian-controlled labour organization in existence. However, I wish to put his opinion on record because it confirms what we have frequently pointed out, that there is a great deal of unemployment throughout the country. Only the other evening while in Toronto I was stopped three times by people asking for the price of a meal as I walked from my office to the Albany Club, a distance of less than a mile.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are looking so prosperous.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps so; I try to look as prosperous as my income will permit. I might point out that the same condition exists in Montreal, where soup kitchens have had to be opened.

Mr. McINTOSH: The hon. gentleman is dealing with seasonal unemployment.

Mr. MANION: I am dealing with unemployment in general. The winter season is a little worse than the summer season; that is all. I submit that unemployment is severe in the Dominion, that in consequence we are losing our people to the United States, and that undoubtedly such a treaty as this will still further decrease the employment of our own people and increase the employment of foreigners.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is there not unemployment even in the United States?

Mr. MANION: The papers describe the unemployment there as very bad. But for that matter the unemployment condition is also very bad in free trade England. The Minister of Finance cited as proof of prosperous conditions in this country that the prices of stocks are soaring, and that therefore employment must be good. In the United States stock prices have gone up even more markedly than in this country, and yet unemployment there is very bad too.

Mr. CAHAN: We have not yet reached section three of this bill, Mr. Chairman, but it is pertinent to a discussion of section two. It provides that the government upon giving six months' notice may determine the treaty. In looking over the articles of these various treaties which are quoted in the explanatory note annexed to the bill, it will be found that in the case of Esthonia the treaty may be determined on twelve months' notice; in the case of Hungary, on twelve months' notice; in the case of Latvia, on twelve months' notice; in the case of Lithuania, three months' notice; in the case of Portugal, twelve months' notice; in the case of Roumania, six months' notice; in the case of the Serb, Croat and Slovene kingdom, twelve months' notice. Why does the hon. gentleman provide for six months' notice in respect of treaties where our very adhesion is an assent that we will only exercise our rights to determine them by longer notice?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has just answered the inquiry asked by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) as to the termination of the treaties. This bill was prepared by the law officers of the crown, and the tariff commissioner having directed my attention to the point, I had intended when we came to this particular article to move that it be amended so as to make the maximum twelve months. Some of them expire in three months, but the maximum is twelve. I intend when we reach the clause in question to move an amendment accordingly.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the minister going to conclude the schedule of goods that are imported from these countries? He has given two or three of the countries and I should like to have the list complete.

Mr. ROBB: I thought I had given them all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I have not the information in regard to the Croat and Slovene kingdom and Portugal.

Mr. ROBB: I will take that up.

Mr. EVANS: I did not expect that this discussion would develop into a protectionist-free trade argument. I want to correct the leader of the opposition in regard to the agricultural industry. It is not by any means a matter of sale that prevents that industry from prospering; if it is not prospering it is due to the price. No one knows this better than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who a little while ago received a petition to put agricultural implements on the free list. In our research department of the United Farmers we have found that an implement made in Hamilton—a seed drill—was selling $30 cheaper in the United States than it was being sold to the western Canadian farmer. Indeed, an hon. gentleman near me declares that it was $55 cheaper to the United States than to the Canadian farmer. I wonder what the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) has to say to that?

Mr. BENNETT: I say I do not think the statement is accurate.

Mr. EVANS: It is accurate, I can assure the hon. gentleman of that.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Give us the name of the maker of the drill.

Mr. EVANS: I cannot, offhand.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I should like to take it up in Hamilton.

Mr. EVANS: This is in line with what is going on in other directions.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): There are affidavits to support the statement.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I want to know the name of the maker.

Mr. EVANS: Our Canadian manufacturer seems to be unable to do anything until he is linked up with the politician, and for that reason imports are kept out. As I have said before in this house, there is no enterprise among the manufacturers, and the small dealer is all the time being closed out in the small towns. The small manufacturer has no place to-day in Canada where workingmen can be employed. There is no room for workmen except in great companies in the larger centres of industry where labour is concentrated. I do not know why things should be thus, but acts of brigandage of this nature are taken advantage of by certain men to the detriment of the rest of the country. I remember having paid on one occasion $164 for an agricultural implement in Saskatoon when a relative of mine in England actually bought that implement $26.50 cheaper. The hon. gentleman has been asked how he would remedy these things and put the implement industry on a sound basis. He is afraid to tell us and to-day I challenge him. He said he would do what was needed. Well, what more is needed? The western farmer is to-day paying the price in freight rates and tariff, and there is a differential in favour of the Canadian manufacturer on shipments from the industrial centres of the east to the western provinces. If this is not enough for the manufacturer, what does he want? I challenge my hon. friend to say. Apparently the manufacturers have come to rely solely upon the tariff; they are coming to regard the tariff, rather than their own enterprise and industry, as the foundation of their success.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Orders in council authorized.

Mr. ROBB: I move that, in line three, the word "six" be struck out and the word "twelve" be substituted therefor.

Mr. CAHAN: The minister promised us within the past half hour that when he proposed the amendment it would be that the notice provided by the treaty itself should be given. We should therefore have the amendment appropriately worded to provide, in the case of Lithuania, for example, the giving of three months' notice, in the case of Portugal, twelve months' notice, and so forth, as provided in the treaties themselves. In the case of Roumania it is six months. That is to say, the notice which we give should be in accordance with the terms of the treaty to which we are acceding.

Mr. ROBB: That would cover the point; there should be that reservation. I therefore move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again this day, and in the interval the necessary amendment may be drafted.

Mr. BENNETT: You have to provide for the termination of the agreement within the period specified in the treaty itself.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister bring in the return asked for?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: During the dinner hour will the minister obtain for us information as to what trade goes to England from these different countries? It is to no purpose, in support of a treaty of this kind, to quote imports of goods into this country in times past. These different countries expect to get something from these treaties and surely they expect to increase their exports to Canada as a result of the lowering of our duty on certain articles they manufacture.

Mr. ROBB: Surely.

Mr. GEARY: What are the products of those countries?

Mr. ROBB: I will give a list.

Mr. GEARY: That is, dealt in with Canada. But that has nothing to do with the information I am asking for. If we were given some figures to show the exports of those countries into Great Britain, it would be an indication of what we may expect to have come into Canada under lower duties. There is nothing at all in what the minister has said to indicate the wisdom of this treaty. Nothing that he has said in regard to imports indicates what the benefit to either country will be under the treaty, and it is obvious that these countries are not entering into the treaty for the fun of it: they expect to find an outlet for their manufactured goods and their other produce. Now, what are those manufactured goods and those products which under a lower tariff they expect to ship to this country?

Mr. ROBB: Perhaps it will ease my hon. friend's mind if I observe that those countries are largely agricultural.

Mr. GEARY: I know that.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 24, to incorporate the Highwood Western Railway Company—Mr. Coote.

Bill No. 41, respecting the Imperial Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company of Canada—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa).

Bill No. 48, respecting the Calgary and Fernie Railway Company—Mr. Gershaw.

Bill No. 52, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—Mr. Speakman.

Bill No. 60, respecting the Canadian Surety Company—Mr. Hocken.

MANITOBA AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 53, respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada—Mr. McLean (Melfort)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for completion.

The CHAIRMAN: An addition has been made to this clause. After the word "may" in the eleventh line the words have been added "within two years after the passing of this act continue the construction of and". A further amendment has been made by the addition in the twenty-fourth line after the word "if" of the words "within the said periods respectively." In the twenty-fifth line the words "so commenced and is not" have been added.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 57 respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company—Mr. Kennedy—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—New branch lines authorized.

Mr. DUNNING: There is an amendment to that section, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: In the sixteenth line the word "township" is changed to "townships", and the words "seven to" are struck out and the words "eight or" substituted therefor. In the seventeenth line the word "eight" is struck out and the word "nine" substituted therefor. The words "from mileage sixty-five at or near Wembley" in the twentieth and twenty-first lines have been deleted. The words "township seventy-eight" in the twenty-fourth line have been struck out and the words "townships seventy-eight or seventy-nine" substituted therefor.

Mr. KENNEDY: I think the amendment made in the railway committee was to substitute the words "seventy-eight or seventy-nine" for the words "seventy-seven to seventy-eight" in subsection (a) and in subsection (b) "township seventy-seven or seventy-eight" instead of "seventy-eight."

The CHAIRMAN: That is not in the bill I have. In my copy in subsection (b) the words "township seventy-eight" have been struck out and the words "townships seventy-eight or seventy-nine" substituted therefor.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend from Peace River knows the ground but the copy in possession of the Chairman is signed by the chairman of the railway committee. "Seventy-eight or seventy-nine" is written in in subsection (b). If my hon. friend is sure it should be "seventy-seven or seventy-eight" instead of "seventy-eight or seventy-nine" he could move that amendment. He knows best the precise location.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not a copy of the map handy.

Mr. CAHAN: Unless it is a mere correction, notice would have to be given of that amendment.

Mr. DUNNING: I think that is right. Perhaps the hon. member for Peace River would consent to leave the bill in committee in order that he may determine what amendment should be made.

Mr. KENNEDY: That would be the better way. I am fairly sure about it, but I do not like to put my word against the signed copy of the chairman.

Mr. DUNNING: It can be understood that my hon. friend will give due notice of the amendment before the bill comes up again in committee.

Mr. CAHILL: If the figures are not right there must have been an error on my part in putting them down. In that case I hardly think it necessary to give notice of an amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY: I am quite certain that in subsection (a) the words should be "seventy-eight or seventy-nine."

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite right.

Mr. KENNEDY: And in subsection (b) "seventy-seven or seventy-eight."

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend is prepared to move an amendment now, in view of the fact that apparently there is a clerical error in the record we may dispense with the usual notice.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I submit that no amendment is necessary; there has been a mistake in the notation made on the original bill, and all that is necessary is to make a correction.

Mr. DUNNING: In any event the mistake must be corrected by some formal action on the part of this committee. I suggest to my hon. friend that he leave the bill in committee in order to enable him to confirm his impression, or he may move the necessary substitution now.

Mr. KENNEDY: Let it stand.

The CHAIRMAN: Bill No. 57 stands.

BRITISH EMPIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 40, to incorporate the British Empire Assurance Company.—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On the title.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask the chairman of the committee or the proper minister, what steps, if any, have been taken to ensure that the name appropriated by this company does not clash with that of some other insurance company? There is an insurance company called the Empire Life Assurance Company, or the Empire Assurance Company, something very similar to this.

Mr. ROBB: I have no record of that, but I imagine that the matter would be closely scrutinized first by the Department of the Secretary of State, which grants the charter, and afterwards by the Department of Insurance.

Mr. GEARY: The company to which I refer is a provincial company.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): There is also a Western Empire Life Assurance Company, so that there are evidently two Empire insurance companies already in existence in Canada.

[Mr. Cahill.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: This bill was proposed by the British America Assurance Company which has been incorporated for seventy-five years or more. They desire to have a subsidiary company and they are following the law which was passed last session. United States companies enjoy that privilege; English companies have it, and now for the first time Canadian companies have it. The bill was carefully considered in committee and no objection whatever was taken in this connection.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 56, respecting the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada.—Sir Eugene Fiset—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. HEPBURN: Before this bill passes I should like to discuss the merits of it. Last session a bill similar to this was introduced into the house, its purpose being to increase the capital stock from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000. We who opposed the bill at that time both in the banking and commerce committee and on the floor of the house maintained that the real purpose of the bill was to increase the profits of the shareholders at the expense of the participating policyholders. This contention was upheld by the Superintendent of Insurance, and with due respect to that gentleman I think he is generally recognized as one of the outstanding financial men in the Dominion of Canada. He is a man who cannot be swayed by anything other than his own good judgment. We often hear references made in vague and indefinite terms to the influence of the big interests on the governing body in this Dominion, and I was glad indeed that parliament saw fit to block that proposed legislation, which was obviously unfair not only to the policyholders of the company, but to the insurance business in general.

The contention that the main purpose of the bill was to increase the profits of the stockholders was denied by the sponsors of the bill, who waxed wrathy at the mere suggestion of any such thing, but those who were in favour of the bill were put to the test by an amendment moved by a member of the Progressive group proposing a 15 per cent profit limitation on the proposed new capital. The amendment was endorsed by the Minister of Finance, who said at the time that after all it was the policyholders' money which provides the real capital of the company. He also said that a 15 per cent profit limitation was not an unfair rate of interest on any legitimate investment. The amendment was carried, and immediately the bill was withdrawn. Anyone who had had any question in his mind up to that point as to the real purpose of the bill certainly was in doubt no longer. The fact that the company withdrew its bill and refused to accept the 15 per cent limitation was a complete admission on the part even of the company itself that the real purpose of the bill was to re-arrange the company's stock so as to exact a greater profit, and to do that with the authority of parliament. The company is back this year with a bill of a similar nature, but this time they have carefully paved the way. A reorganization of the directorate has taken place and men of political prominence now sit on the board, it being expected, no doubt, that they will in some way or other be able to facilitate the passage of this bill through the house. On top of that, the best lobbyists were obtained, and they canvassed members before the bill was even introduced. I believe that this has been the most thoroughly lobbied bill in the House of Commons that I have seen so far. If one were to judge by the enthusiastic support this bill received in the banking and commerce committee, those who are opposed to it must be a small minority, but we are not discouraged, and we hope to stir up enough opposition so that the policyholders will take some action and their sentiments perhaps be reflected in some way or another on the floor of this house. We are encouraged by the fact that the Superintendent of Insurance is again opposed to this bill, in face of the fact that a press report, emanating no doubt from the head office of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada, appeared some time ago to the effect that some agreement had been reached with parliament by which the passage of this bill was assured. This report, I believe, was responsible for the stock of the company, which stood at that time at $560 per share, soaring to its present value of $2,000 per share. Before passing this bill in its present form parliament must consider this matter very carefully because certain principles are at stake.

Canada stands second among the nations of the world to-day in per capita life insurance. Life insurance is a real economic necessity. It is of national importance, and is rendering a service comparable only to that rendered by our chartered banks and trust companies, and from a humanitarian standpoint it gives protection to widows, children and dependents. The operation of life insurance companies should therefore be supervised and guarded closely. This company is attempting a stock manipulating scheme which is not in the best interest of the policy-holders or the insurance business generally. To-day, when the whole trend of events in the insurance world is towards mutualization, the Sun Life company is asking permission of this parliament to increase its capital. Those who have taken out insurance with the company have done so on the present basis of operation. If we pass this bill, we will be a party to a breach of contract between the company and the policyholders. It is useless to argue that this increase in capital will not be a tax upon the policyholders. To bear out this contention I would refer to the evidence of Mr. Macauley, given before the royal commission on insurance. Under oath before this commission he stated, in reply to a direct question, that he had been repeatedly requested to allow shareholders to pay up more money and had refused, (1) because the company did not need the money or capital; (2) because the new capital would be taking away more of the profits belonging to the policyholders.

To use his exact words, he stated:

> The reason that guided me particularly in refusing was always that it would be a tax on the policyholders.

Mr. ERNST: May I ask if the hon. gentleman is a policyholder in the Sun Life company?

Mr. HEPBURN: Yes, I am. In 1901 the Canada Life Assurance Company increased its paid up capital from $125,000 to $1,000,000. The president of the Sun Life company at the time issued a circular in which in caustic and severe terms he criticized the action of the Canada Life company in that regard. Referring to the part which dealt with the direct effect of an increase of capital of $875,000 upon the Canada Life policyholders, he stated:

> And now let us see the extra amount of profits that the change will cause to be absorbed. On an 8 per cent basis, half of the interest on the paid up capital $40,000, will likely be taken from the policyholders' earnings, which is $35,000 more than in the past. Therefore the policyholders will be mulcted yearly to that extent. On a 20 per cent basis the policyholders' annual loss would reach $175,000.
> How does that harmonize with the president's statement that the policyholders cannot suffer in any way whatever by the calling in of the capital stock.

That was what the president of the Sun Life thought of the action of the Canada Life at that time. What must the company honestly think of itself to-day, when it has not only called in its unpaid capital, but is actually asking parliament to let it issue more capital stock? The calling in of the unpaid capital stock, and the issuing of new stock, brings up another matter upon which some light should be thrown.

At the time the Canada Life Assurance company increased its paid capital its shares were quoted at $525. The minute the $875,000 was paid in, according to the president of the Sun Life, the market value of the stock became $4,593,000, and to use his own words:

> The shareholders would seem to pocket the whole benefit of the difference of $3,718,000, and seemingly all for the best interest of the policyholders, another admirable illustration of the administration of a great trust maintaining the people's interest even against their opinions.

Now I agree that the president of the Sun Life was perfectly right at the time. It was a get-rich-quick scheme. To-day Canada Life stock stands around $1,200 per share, and those same stockholders have been enriched by a further four million dollars or so.

But the point I want to make is this. If the president of the Sun Life was right at the time, and he surely was, how does it apply to-day to his own company? A few months ago the Sun Life increased its paid up stock to its full authorized capital, from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. Its stock is quoted at approximately $2,000 per share. On a 20 to 1 basis its $500,000 paid in is now worth ten millions. Therefore the shareholders in question benefited by the transaction to the extent of $9,500,000 on the present market values, the interest on which is borne by the policyholders. If the two millions of new capital stock asked for in this bill is issued at par, with a fixed dividend of 25 per cent, and enjoying a share of the reserve fund now the property of the shareholders, it will mean that the marketable value will be at many millions, which will mean another melon the interest upon which will be borne by the policyholders.

Mr. Macauley, the present president of the company, is an astute business man, and in order to facilitate the passing of the bill has conceived the brilliant plan of throwing up a smoke screen, and so he says that the Americans are trying to buy up control of the company. The patriotic appeal is the last resort. Since 1911, however, the old flag-waving stuff has lost its punch. The Superintendent of Insurance points out that if the Americans were trying to buy up the stock, which is not the case, the two millions of new capital asked for is not necessary to protect the company from such a contingency.

It might be interesting to point out the inconsistency of the Sun Life in this respect—about as inconsistent as many of the arguments advanced by some of our opposition friends in regard to trade treaties. They appear to entertain the idea that they can make a hole in the fence big enough to let their chickens through into their neighbour's garden, but not big enough to let their neighbour's chickens trespass in their own gardens. From information under my hand I find that the Sun Life has money invested in 233 foreign concerns, mostly American, and on top of that a fair share of their insurance business is done in the United States. The company has twenty thousand shares of fully paid up stock, and at the present time sixty-five people own 15,126 of these shares, or over 75 per cent; and 194 people own the balance of 4,874 shares, or about 25 per cent of the capital stock. So with the whole of the capital stock in the hands of so few people, it is quite obvious to me that there is no danger of any outsiders obtaining control against the wishes of the present shareholders. Their whole argument in this regard lacks force and reason, and may well be treated lightly.

A brief statement of the company's affairs shows that the original paid up cash capital was $305,000. From that small sum of money the company's business was built up. Special dividends and stock bonuses have been declared, bringing the capital stock prior to January of this year up to $1,500,000. To do this they divided a stock bonus of $845,000 and declared a special dividend of $350,000. On the actual capital of $305,000 they have been declaring dividends annually of $225,000, or at the rate of 73.8 per cent on the actual cash investment. At the same time the company has been piling up a huge reserve, which is the property of the shareholders. On January 1 of this year the marketable value of the 15,000 paid up shares was $30,000,000. So the cash investment of $305,000 has grown in value by nearly a thousand times the original amount. Now, I think that is nearly enough for the company to have, and that a halt should be called in their manipulations. Stock manipulations and stock watering are all too common in this country, the result being that the Canadian public is weighted down to-day paying interest on tremendous capitalizations of this kind, built up by manipulations and profits taken from the people themselves.

Referring again to the financial record of the company, a few years ago when it was necessary to increase the capital in order to operate in the American market they issued their new stock at a premium, and properly so, of $300 per share. This premium went where it should go—to the policyholders. There is no intention on the part of the company this time to divide the money with the policyholders, to whom it rightly belongs. On the contrary, according to the bill this stock will be issued at par to their friends, and immediately it assumes a market value they will make a profit ranging from ten to forty million dollars by the transaction.

I understand that the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) proposes to move an amendment that the capital stock to be issued be held in trust for the policyholders. I am quite prepared to support this amendment, but on general principles I would rather see the bill thrown out entirely. Therefore I reserve my right to vote for the amendment, but if there is sufficient support I shall vote for the rejection of the bill itself.

Mr. KELLNER: Mr. Chairman, I also wish to add my voice in protest against the passage of this bill. The hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Hepburn) has gone into the activities of the company so thoroughly that I need not quote any figures. I will content myself with the broad statement that in my opinion this is an effort to water the stock in order to make some money for the company without its rendering any service whatever in return. Further, I hold that it is the duty of the government to regulate such activities. The government is entrusted with the welfare of the people of Canada, and in view of the fact that under the law it is an offence not to have any money at all, I argue that correspondingly it should be an offence to have too much money. If a Canadian strolls into any city or town of this Dominion and is found to be without this "visible means of support" he will be arrested. Now, it seems to me that it is reasonable to argue conversely that if anyone in this country has too much money, and has not obtained it honourably, he also should be subject to the same treatment as the beggar. Only parliament can determine the ways by which it may be permissible for any citizen of Canada to obtain money. Therefore I think an application of this kind should be scrutinized very carefully to make sure that it is not an attempt to get the privilege of passing out to the shareholders a huge amount of money without rendering any corresponding service therefor.

It is worth while, Mr. Chairman, to consider the reasons advanced by the company for this increase in their capital stock. I well remember that a short time ago it was argued in the press that in order to enable this company to go into foreign fields and underwrite insurance and engage in other business activities it was necessary to increase the capital stock. Well, at the present time Canada is making very strenuous efforts to induce foreign capital to be invested in the development of this country. So long as we are going to the four corners of the earth to induce capitalists to invest their money in Canadian enterprises, why should we make it easy for the Sun Life Company to invest their funds in foreign countries? Then the previous speaker touched on another matter. He stated that the newspapers a little while ago carried a notice from the president of the company that there was grave danger of the Americans getting control of the company. I remember having read some of these articles. The president would evidently lead the Canadian people to believe that in some secret, unseen manner the Americans were going to come over and simply steal this Canadian company. Anyone who has gone into the history of the company to any extent will realize that the directors had it in their own power to keep the Americans or anybody else from doing anything of the kind. Until a short time ago only 75 per cent of the stock had been fully paid up. The directors had control of the transfer of shares until such time as the shares were fully paid up. If they wanted to maintain this as a Canadian company and to retain practically the same shareholders as were formerly in the concern, all they had to do was to refrain from calling for the last 25 per cent on the shares. But a few months ago they sent out a call, and the remaining 25 per cent was paid up. Now the directors have no say in the matter and the shares may be transferred without their approval, so that there is an opportunity now for the shares to get into the hands of others than Canadians. That there is a possibility of this happening is a different matter.

It is worth while considering the very great advance that has taken place in the shares of the company. A few months ago the shares were somewhere around $600 or $700; at the present time they are about $2,000. Do hon. members think that the investing public of this country and of the United States sat down and figured out the possible earnings of the company within the next few months and, after looking into the matter more thoroughly, decided that, whereas, a few months ago the company had an earning power which would justify the payment of $600, now it has an earning power on its shares that will yield a value of $2,000? Will anyone argue for a moment that there is any possibility in the world that the investing public of this country came to the conclusion, after mature deliberation, that these shares were worth that much more than they were a few months previously?

One thing more I wish to touch upon. This possibly has been one of the most successful companies we have ever had in Canada. It operated for a considerable time on a very small capital; in fact, until 1897 it had a paid-up capital of only $30,000. Now if they have been getting along so marvellously well on so small a capitalization, is it not rather risky to give them the privilege of materially increasing their capitalization, especially at a time such as we are passing through, particularly having regard to the investments that are offering? All companies are liable to make indiscreet investments, and while this is an ably managed company and all that, parliament owes a duty to the shareholders and policyholders of the company and would do well, I submit, to discourage this endeavour. We owe this to the policyholders at least, in order to ensure that they shall receive that consideration to which they are entitled.

Possibly no other company in Canada has made money more quickly or has gone further afield to make it. We find that the Sun Life has investments practically throughout Europe and North America. If increasing the capital stock is going to facilitate these foreign investments, I should think it would be very much better if we left the stock where it stands. Possibly no country in the world today requires capital more than Canada does, and certainly none is making a greater bid for it. It is almost nine o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I submit that this question should be given very serious consideration. It would be a grave mistake for this house to pass a measure like this without considering it thoroughly, and in view of the fact that we have had only half an hour to-night to discuss the subject, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. CHURCH: I shall take only a few minutes of the time of the committee on this bill. The principle of the bill is laid down in its preamble. This company is in a good financial condition. The bill should have gone to the private bills committee and not to the committee on banking and commerce. Our Insurance Act needs an overhauling in the interests of the policyholder and of the poor lapsed-policy man who loses his all. If he cannot pay more than three years' premiums, then the company confiscates and hoards those premiums.

This company has been coming to parliament, asking for special legislation, which has been passed on their behalf in the following years: in 1865, by chapter 43; in 1870 by chapter 58; in 1871, by chapter 53; in 1882, by chapter 100 and in 1897, by chapter 82. And now they are seeking to have this bill put through. They want to amend their various acts and to increase their capital stock as well as to alter the economic and financial laws and, by legislation, change the par value of their shares for the good of their stockholders and at the expense of their shareholders. The capital of the company is now $2,000,000. By the general Insurance Act, section 70, the capital of a company shall be deemed to be impaired when its assets, exclusive of its paid-up capital, are less than its liabilities calculated according to the requirements of the act. Mr. Finlayson, the capable superintendent of insurance, offered objection to this bill. The company also seeks power to alter the stock qualifications of its directors in order to make certain handouts, dividing the stock into different classes. I submit that this parliament should protect the policyholders.

Progress reported.

COMMERCIAL TREATIES WITH EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 203, respecting trade between Canada and Esthonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Portugal, Roumania, and the Serb, Croat and Slovene Kingdom—Mr. Robb—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering section 3 of the bill. The minister moves that the words "six months" in the third and fourth lines of section 3 be struck out and that the words "within the respective periods required by each of the several treaties or agreements in regard to the termination of the same" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. CAHAN: This amendment is a fair attempt to carry out the understanding at which we arrived, but I think it would be clearer if it were to read "within the respective periods prescribed by each of the several treaties or agreements for the termination of the same".

Mr. ROBB: This amendment was prepared by the law officers of the crown, but I see no objection to the words proposed by my hon. friend; perhaps they are better. I will therefore accept that suggestion. I ask for leave to withdraw the amendment I have proposed, and to substitute the words suggested by my hon. friend.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister moves that section 3 be amended by striking out the words "six months" in the third and fourth lines and inserting the following in lieu thereof:

Within the respective periods prescribed by each of the several treaties or agreements for the termination of the same.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5—When act comes into force.

Mr. GEARY: Before the house rose at six o'clock I asked the minister to give some of the information which he must have collected during the negotiation of these treaties, and his answer was that we were supposed to know that the products of these different countries were mainly agricultural. I suppose the minister was referring to beans, which seem to have been the product most in evidence as coming from any one of these countries Other articles cited by the minister came in free. But that gives us no information at all as to the possible effect on the trade of this country of the agreements now contemplated. Probably the minister had something to do with the negotiation of these treaties, and I think he owes it to the house to give some of the information he thus acquired. It is no help to us to give the exports from these different countries to Canada under the old tariff; we want to know the probable or possible effect of the new tariff upon the agricultural and industrial life of this country, and we can secure that information only by learning what are the products of these countries and to what extent and under what conditions they have been exported to other countries, such as Great Britain. I do not know where the agreements were negotiated; we have had no information in that regard. Probably they were put through by half a dozen trade commissioners and concluded by correspondence between the different capitals. These agreements may have a disrupting effect on the industries of this country; we do not know. If the minister has been closely in touch with the negotiations no doubt he has weighed the possible advantages and disadvantages which may result in the future, so I would like him to answer that question a little more fully. It is not well to pass it off by saying that we are supposed to know that the products of those countries are mainly agricultural. If the minister knows that they are or are not such, let him say so, but we are entitled to have some statement from him as to the probable effect upon the commerce of the country.

Mr. ROBB: The observations of my hon. friend lead me to believe that possibly he was not in the house when I introduced this measure, because I then explained that we were accepting the terms of a trade agreement made with the mother country, to which we are entitled to subscribe. During the course of the afternoon I placed on record statements of the imports from these different countries. Was my hon. friend present when I did so?

Mr. GEARY: If the minister had listened to me he would have heard me touch on that, but the point I made was that he gave this house no help in determining the future effect of these agreements upon the commerce of Canada.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is giving a very large order. We have looked carefully into the trade of the country and we have determined that it would be advantageous to Canada to make this trade agreement, but we are not able to say—my hon. friend knows it is impossible to do so—how much of the trade now going to other countries will be diverted to Canada. The fact remains, however, that the balance of trade now is largely in favour of Canada.

Mr. GEARY: I asked the minister to tell us what has been the result of his inquiry during the negotiations into the possible effect of the new tariff on Canadian trade. I am a little suspicious of the different trade treaties which this government has entered into. The minister himself has a passion for making treaties, and I cannot recall any country in Europe, except perhaps Monte Carlo or Russia, with which he has not proposed to enter into a treaty. I should like to know a little more about what the result of his observations was in regard to the effect of this treaty, but so far the minister has given us nothing.

Mr. ROBB: I repeat that I have not placed before the committee the extent of the trade of the different countries with which we are making treaties with all the other countries of the world, but perhaps it might ease the mind of my hon. friend if I were briefly to review the general situation as it affects Canada. We heard this afternoon from hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly from the gentleman who has a right to speak for that party, that as a result of these trade treaties we are exposing our industries to the competition of those countries apparently forgetting that at the same time they are opening their doors to our products. My information is that our products are going to those countries. The leader of the official opposition chided me very severely this afternoon for entering into these agreements, and, when asked what he would propose, emphasized particularly the increased importation of agricultural implements into Canada during the past year. I invited my hon. friend to come out flatly and say what he proposed to do to stop that. The hon. gentleman was very careful not to use the word "protection," although his friends around him I believe entertained the idea that protection was the cure he had in mind. My hon. friend hedged very carefully by saying that we could adjust matters through the instrumentality of the railways.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. ROBB: That was the inference from what my hon. friend did say.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend did not say that? I will give the hon. gentleman credit that he did not say so explicitly. In the case of the transportation of grain and grain products there is a special reduced rate on export business. We do not reduce the rates on products intended for the home market but we do reduce them on products that are shipped out of this country. I did not understand my hon. friend to say that he intended to reverse that policy.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say anything about it.

Mr. ROBB: No, my hon. friend was very careful. He was almost as careful as they were at the Winnipeg convention.

Mr. BENNETT: He was not quite as careful as my hon. friend himself usually is.

Mr. ROBB: Let us look at the trade of Canada and find out whether there is any justification for the charge made against us that by reason of these treaties trade is not as good in Canada as it was in 1922.

Mr. BENNETT: No one said that.

Mr. ROBB: Let us find out if unemployment is greater now than it was in 1922. No, I shall take the trade of Canada first.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this a speech for the gallery?

Mr. ROBB: Oh no, my hon. friends have invited it.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a third budget speech.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the budget for 1929. We have not had that yet.

Mr. ROBB: I have here a statement of the trade of the world prepared by the economic committee in Geneva. They point out that in 1913 the per capita trade of Canada was $145.50. In 1926 the per capita trade of Canada was $240.84. They also point out that in 1913 three countries had favourable trade balances per capita: the United States, $7.13; British India, 60 cents; Argentina, $6.78. In that year Canada had an adverse balance of trade. Hon. gentlemen opposite were then in office.

Mr. BENNETT: They were just getting ready for war in the Balkans.

Mr. ROBB: There was no war then. Canada had an unfavourable trade balance that year, 1913, of $29.61 per capita. What were the conditions in 1926? There were six countries that had favourable trade balances per capita, as follows: the United States, $3.22; British India, $1.01; Brazil, $1.97; South Africa, 14 cents; and France, 2 cents. Canada which in 1913, under the administration of my hon. friends opposite, had an unfavourable trade balance, in 1926 had a favourable trade balance of $29.34 per capita.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the fourth time this session the statement has been read.

Mr. ROBB: Is it? I have some information here which has not yet been read this session. My hon. friend was very much alarmed this afternoon over the condition of the agricultural implement industry. He pointed out that we had to compete with other countries, and that there was a considerable increase in the importation of agricultural implements from the United States. Let me show what was the result of the change in the tariff on agricultural implements of which my hon. friends complained so bitterly, and which they resisted for many weeks and finally voted against. We had some difficulty in putting it through; we were told we would ruin the agricultural industry. The change in the tariff took place in April, 1924. In August of that year the employees in 37 factories in the agricultural implement industry numbered 4,498. In 1927 the same factories reported 8,698 almost double the number. There are 69 firms manufacturing agricultural implements in Canada. In 1924 they reported an average for the whole year of 6,700 employees. In 1926 they reported 10,091 employees. So much for the agricultural industry which it was said we had ruined.

Let us come to the automobile industry. This afternoon we heard from the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) in whose constituency there is located a very large automobile industry—I do not want to say that it is the largest in Canada. I do not want to accuse my hon. friend of being a party to what took place, but I know that when we reduced the duty on automobiles in 1926, there came to Ottawa a very large delegation composed of men who were sincere, who believed that we were going to ruin the industry.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister fixed it up later.

Mr. ROBB: That is not what my hon. friend said this afternoon. He complained that we had ruined the automobile industry and he was supported by his leader.

Mr. KAISER: I am afraid that the minister is a little wrong in his calculations. I never said a word about the automobile industry.

Mr. ROBB: He said that we had ruined industries, and his friends around him referred especially to the automobile industry.

Mr. MANION: I spoke of the automobile industry and I quoted the statement of the Department of Trade and Commerce. If the minister wishes, I will quote it again.

Mr. ROBB. All right.

Mr. MANION: This is the exact quotation. After a brief summary of the situation, they say in this report of the Department of Trade and Commerce, under a government in which my hon. friend (Mr. Robb) is Minister of Finance:

In review, a comparison of statistical data covering the Canadian automobile industry for 1927 with the figures for the corresponding period of a year ago shows the following features: (1) Production was lower by 13 per cent; (2) exports were lower by 23 per cent; (3) imports were higher by 28 per cent.

Then I said:

Has the automobile industry been adversely affected? The answer is obvious. Let me quote further:

"During December, 1927, the production of automobiles in Canada amounted to 3,435 cars. This was the lowest output reported for any month during the past three years, being only slightly over one half the number of 6,617 cars made in the previous month and less than one half the number of 7,752 cars produced in December of a year ago."

This is my quotation from the same report, and I will finish it:

I quote still further:

Imports of automobiles into Canada during 1927 totalled 36,630 cars, an increase of 28 per cent over the 28,535 cars imported last year which in turn was almost double the 14,632 cars brought into Canada during 1925. . . Exports of automobiles from Canada during 1927 amounted to 57,793 cars, a decrease of 23 per cent from the 74,553 cars shipped to foreign countries in 1926.

That is the report of my hon friend's Department of Trade and Commerce in regard to the situation in the automobile industry during the past year.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has quoted statistics and I find no fault; but no person in this house knows the answer better than he does. He knows that the Ford industry was closed down. He knows that dealers throughout Canada in Ford cars were unable to get their supplies. I am not going to argue the question with my hon. friend, who is a doctor and a good one. I am going to put in evidence the statement of a gentleman who is at the head of one of the largest automobile industries in Canada. I have in my hand the Commercial and Financial Review for 1927, published by the Montreal Gazette, and in that publication I find at page 159 a statement by Mr. R. S. McLaughlin, president of the General Motors of Canada. He should be an authority; my hon. friends in 1926 considered him an authority on automobiles. This is what he says in that statement about the automobile industry:

Although Oshawa is an outstanding example, more than fifty other Canadian cities and towns benefit by the increasing importance of Canadian automotive industry. Important steps were taken during 1927 to increase the content of Canadian labour and materials in cars fabricated in this country. Contracts involving millions of dollars for parts and materials were let for the first time in Canada. In 1926 it was said that 100,000 persons in the Dominion were dependent on the automotive and allied industries. In 1928 it is probable that there will be half again as many, exclusive of the thousands who are involved in the sale and servicing of cars through dealer organizations from coast to coast. There seems little doubt that the coming year will be notable not only for the passing of the million mark in automobile registrations, but for the setting up of new records of production in the automotive industry in the Dominion.

That is the statement of a man who is in the business and who ought to know, and the people of Canada will be more ready to accept such a statement than the tales of woe of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MANION: It was claimed by men engaged in the automobile industry that the reduction in the tariff, until it was changed again, would ruin that industry.

Mr. ROBB: But they guessed wrong.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The minister, by many words and by a great deal of irrelevant argument, has entirely evaded the question that was very properly put to him by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) and which was, as I understand it, what imports were likely to come into Canada as a result of this treaty. The minister in connection with the Australian treaty had no doubt as to the object of Australia. We were told that they expected to increase their exports of raisins. He had no doubt whatever as to the intention and expectation of New Zealand when the treaty was made with respect to agricultural produce, the result being that imports of butter have been enormously increased to the great detriment of the dairy industry of Canada. What the hon. member for South Toronto is asking is what products these countries have in mind under similar circumstances and for which of these they hope to secure an increased market in Canada. The minister was well informed in regard to these other treaties; surely he must have similar information in regard to this one. That is what the hon. member is asking for and that is just what the minister has avoided giving to the committee.

Mr. ROBB: I can only repeat that I have not those figures before me. My hon. friend knows from the trade we have had in the past what the trade has been in Canada. I say frankly to my hon. friend that we are changing these countries from the general tariff to the most favoured-nation tariff, and only time will tell to what extent it will help them. We know that we are getting the most favoured-nation tariff on our raw products.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister provide the information respecting the two countries he left out, namely, Portugal and the Slovene Kingdom?

Mr. ROBB: The imports from Portugal are as follows:

Commodity	1926	1927
Figs, dried	$ 6,586	$ 8,098
Wines, non-sparkling	218,032	248,091
Other seeds	.....	3,642
Sardines	1,318	980
Damask of cotton	$ 16,280	$ 4,298
Bed quilts of cotton	146	54
Handkerchiefs	474	174
Sheets and pillow cases, cotton	703	1,639
Embroideries		225
Clothing, cotton	516	395
Other cottons	1,328	3,024
Damask of linen	1,876	4,852
Doylies, traycloths, et cetera, of linen	671	6,345
Other flax, hemp, and so forth	124	1,384
Corkwood, not manufactured	79,772	123,597
Corkwood, manufactured	19,275	60,902
Salt		1,474
Containers, n.o.p. (packages)	357	359
All other articles	1,359	1,493
Total	$ 348,817	$ 471,026

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

The exports were as follows:

Commodity	1926	1927
Wheat		$1,141,908
Flour of wheat	$ 2,456
Rubber manufactures	2,350	14,881
Codfish, dried	77,250	90,702
Masts and spars	341
Planks and boards	7,077	705
Harvesters	12,086	4,261
Ploughs and parts	1,169	1,313
Other farm machinery and parts	732	1,648
Needles and pins	3,085	1,995
Automobiles, passenger	14,810	3,078
All other articles	417	12,966
Total	$121,773	$1,273,457

With reference to the kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, about 80 per cent of the population are engaged in agricultural pursuits. The kingdom has a population of twelve millions. The principal exports from the kingdom include grain, wheat flour, beans, prunes, hemp, live stock, meats, eggs, wood, cement, copper, ores and minerals. The imports into Canada during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927, amounted to $6,854, and the exports from Canada for the same period $116,325. The principal exports were:

Wheat flour	$ 37,128
Ploughs	4,275
Parts of agricultural implements	1,487
Automobiles	61,159
Other articles	12,276
Total	$116,325

Their import tariff consists of two columns containing the minimum and the maximum duties.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is there a clause in the Portuguese treaty similar to the one in the Czechoslovak treaty respecting wines whereby we guarantee that no provincial tax shall be charged against them unless a tax is charged against ours? We have not the treaty before us and have to take everything for granted.

Mr. ROBB: They receive most-favoured-nation treatment, so I imagine they will have those terms. My hon. friend pointed out—

Mr. CHAPLIN: I pointed out in connection with the other treaty that we were particular to see that by its terms the foreigners were protected in the Ontario market, for example, that this government could look after them, but it could not protect our own people in the Ontario market.

Mr. ROBB: I pointed out to my hon. friend in connection with the other treaty that that applied only to goods in transit and in warehouse.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister made that statement, but the transit clause had nothing whatever to do with the other. The transit clause stood by itself, and the other stood by itself. One had reference only to the goods, and the other referred to their transit. There would be no sense to it otherwise. Now the same clause comes in here again.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to remind the minister that when he was speaking in regard to our importations from Hungary he stated that out of a total importation of $60,000 we imported $58,000 worth of beans. Will the duty on beans from Hungary be reduced under this treaty? Will they come in under the preferential tariff?

Mr. ROBB: I will give my hon. friend the tariff, and then he can judge for himself.

Mr. STEVENS: Give us the item.

Mr. ROBB: It is item 47; the intermediate tariff is 22½ cents, and the general tariff 25 cents a bushel, so they will have an advantage of 2½ cents a bushel.

Mr. BENNETT: Over what they had before?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, but they will still have to pay 22½ cents a bushel.

Mr. FRASER: Evidently this treaty will result in a greater importation of beans. The minister has stated that we had a poor bean crop last year. I cannot say whether that is correct or not, but at all events we increased our importation of beans from 146,000 bushels in 1926 to 595,000 bushels in 1927, about four times as much. I do not want to dispute the minister's statement that we had a poor bean crop in Canada last year, but I do know that in my district in British Columbia we used to grow a lot of beans, but at the present time the farmers have quit growing beans for the simple reason that they cannot compete with the cheap beans from Hungary and Japan, and this reduction in the tariff will still further aggravate that situation. The amount of beans grown in that district may seem small, but it is large for that particular locality, which exports quite a large quantity of beans. But the minister by this treaty is making conditions worse for that section. At the present time they cannot make the living growing beans that they did a few years ago, and now the duty is to be decreased, resulting in greater importations than ever.

Mr. ROBB: There will still be a duty of 22½ cents a bushel.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister has a very insinuating manner. He came in this evening having in his possession the annual report made by a newspaper upon economic conditions in Canada. He proposed to produce that report containing an article written by the president of an automobile industry in Oshawa, and then to endeavour to make the member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) responsible for statements with respect to automobiles which were made by the member for Fort William (Mr. Manion).

Mr. MANION: On the word of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm).

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I saw him produce the report and get it ready with the aid of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning). He then proceeded to fasten upon the member for Ontario a statement which he did not utter in order to make capital out of the observations made by the president of the automobile industry in Oshawa. The attempt failed because we would not let him get away with it. It was unworthy of him. When the government introduced their legislation to reduce the tariff on automobiles they told the people of this country that under no conditions would they vary it. They received a delegation in a theatre in this city, and the Minister of Finance at least had courage enough to say that he would stand by his guns—and those guns turned out to be squibs. Then he changed his legislation so as to afford a higher measure of protection to the industry than it had theretofore enjoyed. He knows it and everybody who understands the facts knows it. He raised the protection, not by the tariff, but by the use of the excise. I put upon Hansard the other day, and I repeat now, the figures of the Trade and Commerce department showing exactly what was imported into this country with respect to automobiles last year compared with the preceding year. When he says there were bad times in the automobile industry because the Ford Motor Company at Ford was closed that year, he is entirely beside the facts. As a well-informed minister of the crown he should know that at page 454 of the Commercial Intelligence Journal it is shown that in 1927, we imported for assembling purposes $29,582,000 worth of automobile parts, as against only $25,000,000 worth in 1926; in one year the value of the imports had risen by over $4,000,000. That is the answer. And the same state of affairs prevails with regard to other parts that enter into the manufacture of automobiles.

But the minister stated that I made certain observations with respect to the agricultural implement industry, and then he endeavoured to raise a target which he proposed to demolish. What did I say? That during the last few years this country has been steadily increasing its exports of agricultural implements and as well increasing its imports of such implements from the United States. Let me take the same authority that he quoted this afternoon, Mr. Thomas Bradshaw. What did he say when the government brought down its tariff with respect to agricultural implements? And what did Mr. Vincent Massey, the president of the Massey-Harris Company then say? They said the industry would be ruined if the policy initiated by the government was carried out. What was done by the administration? Rather than go back on their promises to the agrarian interests, and still desiring to placate the manufacturers, with that well-practised double-dealing, on the one hand blowing hot and on the other blowing cold, they gave a drawback upon all the imported materials entering into the construction of agricultural implements—wood, steel and iron—and thus afforded a larger measure of protection to the industry than it had theretofore enjoyed. The hon. gentleman knows it. What has been the result? There has been an increase in the prices paid by our farmers for their implements, not a decrease. And no one on the other side has risen to answer what was said by the hon. member for London (Mr. White) the other evening, that whereas in the year prior to the legislation with respect to drawbacks we manufactured 63 per cent of all the agricultural implements used in Canada, the last return we have shows that we made only 54 per cent. We have not the complete figures for last year, but they will show that more than half of all the agricultural implements used in this country were not of Canadian manufacture.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How much did we export?

Mr. BENNETT: I am just coming to that point. But we are told, our manufacturers have been busy. Busy on what? On manufacturing agricultural implements for export.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All right.

Mr. BENNETT: Just let me read the United States government report with respect to that, because it is all-important to keep in mind their statement as to what has happened to their own agricultural implement industry. I am not going to give a summary, for fear of misapprehension. Here are the exact words as stated at page 437 of the commerce reports issued by the United States Department of Commerce. I commend this to the Prime Minister in view of what he said in 1923 with respect to these matters:

> The outstanding feature of the shipments of agricultural implements during the year 1927 was the large total that went to Canada, amounting to $29,791,472 which was 33 per cent of the total shipped to all countries, and which exceeded the shipments to all of Europe by more than $8,000,000.

Now the hon. Minister of Finance is talking about the business we are going to do in agricultural implements in Europe, whereas the United States did more business in Canada by $8,000,000 than they did in the whole of Europe last year.

Mr. ROBB: What year is my hon. friend quoting, 1927 or 1928?

Mr. BENNETT: I am quoting the commerce reports issued by the United States Department of Commerce on February 13, 1928, dealing with the calendar year 1927. Let us go a step further:

> Canadian purchases in 1927 were the largest ever reported and were greater than the average shipments to all countries in the years prior to 1918.

Further:

> These large Canadian purchases resulted from the material betterment of conditions in Ontario and the prairie provinces, especially Saskatchewan and Alberta, where American tractors, threshing machines, and harvesters were sold much more extensively than in 1926. Purchases of wheeled tractors were exceptionally large, amounting to 15,749 valued at $12,421,105 as compared with 8,173 valued at $6,823,648 in 1926. Sales of American implements in Canada have been showing consistent and rapid increases during the past three years and, since each of these years has been a good crop year, the buying power of the farming population has been materially enhanced. It is also worthy of note that exports of implements to Canada comprised 90 per cent of shipments to all of North America, including Central America and the West Indies, and exceeded those to all of South America by $10,000,000.

That is the story during the three years that have elapsed since this government dealt with the tariff on agricultural implements. Let us see just what that means. The right hon. Prime Minister asked me what we have been exporting. Ah, Mr. Chairman, no question could better prove my case, for it proves that while the American manufacturer has been taking advantage of the market near at home, the Canadian manufacturer has been forced to ship his product three thousand miles by sea and thousands of miles by land to find a market to replace his home market captured by his competitor to the south as I have read from the United States report. That is the glorious procedure of this government. Then they talk of our expanding foreign trade! May I in this regard refer to the language used by the right hon. Prime Minister just one year before he was forced—forced, I say—by his supporters from Saskatchewan to take this course, in order to make it seem that he was meeting their wishes in regard to the tariff on agricultural implements, while at the same time he was endeavouring to tell the manufacturers of these implements that all was well. These were his words when dealing with the tariff on May 23, 1923:

> What is the position with regard to the United States? Since the Liberal convention was held, there has been enacted by the United States a much higher tariff than ever before existed between Canada and the United States. The Fordney-McCumber tariff, so-called, to-day is operating to the disadvantage of Canada. Is there any member of this house who will stand up in his place and say: Notwithstanding that obvious fact we think we should throw down our bars against the United States and give them an opportunity to come in here and affect our industries in a manner even more seriously than they have already been affected.

That was the question propounded by the Prime Minister in 1923. In 1924, yielding to pressure to put these items on the free list, he appeased the manufacturers when they complained by giving them free raw material, free ore, free steel. The result has been that we have decreased the quantity of agricultural implements produced in Canada by upwards of 10 per cent since this tariff came into force. In other words, we have bought from foreign lands 10 per cent more of our agricultural implements than we were purchasing at the time this legislation was enacted, with no advantage to the farmer inasmuch as prices have not been lowered. The facts placed on Hansard by the hon. member for London (Mr. White) the other night cannot be controverted; they cannot possibly be denied. The trade journals which the hon. member produced, giving references to page and date, abundantly establish his contention. But there has been another effect of this policy: it has compelled the Canadian manufacturer to seek his markets thousands of miles away while his competitor across the imaginary line south of us has been able to pour his products in over a few hundred miles by train to the destruction of the Canadian manufacturers' market. There is no doubt about this; the figures conclusively prove it. It may be said, as has been said frequently in the past: "Oh, well, we are a low tariff party; we are reducing the tariff on implements of production",—then turning to the manufacturer and saying: "We will not hurt you; we will give you a drawback on everything you import, so that while it may appear that we are reducing the tariff we are in reality affording you greater protection than ever". That is the hypocrisy of the tariff policy of the Liberal party. That is the sort of double dealing which they practise: one story in the east and another in the west. It is the same in regard to fertilizers and other things as well. The Minister of Finance when in Winnipeg last year discussing the tariff was prone to tell the people about the difficulties encountered during elections, when so much exaggeration was indulged in. He pointed out how little real basis there was for the statements made at such times. But when it comes to the question of getting votes I doubt whether there is anyone who can trim his sail to any passing breeze, without coming up in the wind, to greater advantage than can that hon. gentleman. In that regard he is more practised than his leader. It is indeed a valuable accomplishment to be able to catch the advantage of every passing breeze. The Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) smiles. No doubt he is thinking of the speeches he made in 1925 in the province of Manitoba with respect to this government. That evidently is what is passing through his mind. He is reflecting on the threats of destruction which he was then breathing against the government—the disaster that would overtake them if they did not reduce the duties. But notwithstanding that they have not fulfilled his wishes, he can well smile, for they have made him an exalted minister of the crown. It is no wonder; he smiles because of the power thus entrusted to him. In the most serious moments of his life he could never contemplate the possibility of a capacity so small invested with authority so great.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: I say that with great deliberation, because the administration of the department shows that he is wholly unfit for the duties of administration. We might as well be perfectly frank and fair about it, and the house will have an opportunity to decide whether or not that is so. The time has come when it is desirable in some things to speak with great frankness; and when you find departments administered as some departments are administered in this country, hon. members would be lacking in courage if they did not express themselves candidly. That is my opinion in that regard and there is no need for apology.

The Minister of Finance in the treaty he has introduced to-day has been careful to avoid dealing with the subject directed to his attention by the hon. member for Cariboo. He realizes that in respect of many of the articles to which reference has been made he is bringing about, in this instance, the same condition that resulted in relation to the Australian treaty with respect to raisins and other commodities. In other words, by giving a blanket concession, absolutely regardless of the details of his agreement, he is incurring the risk of having our markets destroyed with respect to such commodities as may be produced in the countries with which he is dealing. Now we are endeavouring to develop our resources. As the Prime Minister asks, if the markets to the south of us are shut off by the Fordney-McCumber tariff or any other policy that may be adopted in the United States, what happens? Here we are adopting a blanket policy with respect to these various countries with which we are making agreements, and the only stipulation we make is that the lowest tariff we give to any people in the world, with the exception of the British tariff, shall be extended to them.

Mr. ROBB: And they say they will give the same tc us.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, they say that they will give us the lowest tariff they have. But I submit that the treaty is in its essence wholly wrong because it pays no regard to the varying circumstances and conditions prevailing respectively in the two contracting countries. I do not think a treaty is sound which provides a blanket concession such as this. It was not customary in days gone by to negotiate treaties in this form; it was customary to name the articles affected and to determine the measure of duty that should be applied. What we have done is this: we have gone to these countries and said, "You give us your best tariff and we will give you that tariff which is most favourable to you." Bear in mind that the League of Nations, to which the Minister of Finance made reference this afternoon, has stated that the only country in the world that has reduced its tariff since the war is Canada. We have a lower tariff than any of these six nations affected. If we are the only country that has reduced its tariff since the war, and these new states that came into being by reason of the doctrine of self-determination have erected, according to the report of the economic conference, high tariff walls for the purpose of endeavouring to render their communities self-sustaining and self-contained, it is obvious at what a disadvantage we have placed ourselves. Willy-nilly we are making a blanket arrangement by which we say to them, "You give us the lowest you have and we will give you the lowest we have." But as Senator Dandurand says, Canada has reduced its tariff three times since the war, and it follows therefore that our tariff is relatively low to those of the various countries involved. My hon. friend from South Toronto, who is desirous of ascertaining the tariff rate with respect to some of these items, has asked for certain figures. We had certain figures given to us yesterday, but none have been volunteered to-day. We do not know what the tariff is in relation to Esthonia or Latvia or Lithuania or the country of the Serbs. We do not know what their tariff is on the various items involved; we have no idea what intermediate tariff they levy. In negotiating this treaty, to which we are asked to give our approval, the minister has offered us nothing in any shape or form to indicate what duties are imposed by these foreign countries. We know of course that they have varying tariffs; they have high tariffs and low tariffs; some have intermediate tariffs and others have not. Others again have one tariff against the world. But we have undertaken to accept the lowest tariff from them, whatever it may be, and we are giving them in return—apart from the British preferential tariff—a rate lower than that we shall enjoy from any of them. And this we are doing regardless of any other consideration. I submit that is not a proper basis on which to negotiate a treaty. For instance, we should know exactly whether, by reason of such a treaty, raisins are to cost us $2 or $3 per pound in duties. Had we known that when the treaty was negotiated with Australia, the situation would have been different, because there are many admirable things in connection with that treaty. I suggest, however, that if the minister had had the knowledge of bargaining he should have had, he would not not have made that agreement with respect to raisins. He has said himself, and we have it on record, that when he went to Australia he tried to raise the tariff so that he would have something with which to bargain, having in mind the very fact to which I now allude. So it is painfully apparent to us as the years go by that to place upon the statute book a treaty about which we have nothing before us to indicate the measure of the duties imposed is but to put our heads in a noose and leave the noose open. As a result some products may come in here more readily than they will go anywhere else, while at the same time we have the advantage of the lowest tariff, whatever it may be ,in these countries in Europe. There is nothing to indicate that the protection is fair or just, and certainly it is a departure from the principles under which tariff treaties were negotiated in the early history of this country. For that reason we are directing attention to the undesirability of entering into blanket treaties with respect to trade which contain no specific reference to the various matters affected, and which do not allow this country to safeguard its industrial, agricultural and indeed its national life through this parliament. We have had occasion during the last few weeks and months to direct attention to the fact that the treaty negotiated with New Zealand by order in council has brought into Canada from the country during the last few months thousands of pounds of butter. I do not refer to the Australian treaty; I speak of a tariff treaty negotiated by order in council, with respect to which this parliament was not consulted. I submit that to negotiate commercial treaties in this way is to bring about injury to the economic life of this country which cannot be easily overtaken, because as he said not long ago my hon. friend realizes the difficulties with which he had to deal in considering the effect as regards raisins and the effect of the New Zealand treaty with respect to butter.

I do not want these cases to be similar in character, and for that reason we venture to point out the undesirability of negotiating blanket treaties with no reference to the articles affected, leaving the lowest tariff in each country to affect the imports into the respective countries without regard to the peculiar circumstances and conditions under which we maintain our national life.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has spoken so rapidly and has covered so many subjects in the course of his remarks that I hope he will pardon me if at the moment I do not fully grasp the significance of all that he has said. However, he did begin by referring to the agricultural implement industry, and I believe he cited Mr. Bradshaw as an authority. The impression he sought to leave with the committee was that through its legislation the government had in some way injured the agricultural implement industry.

Mr. BENNETT: I will correct that; if I spoke so rapidly that my hon friend could not hear me I will now speak slowly. I said that when the legislation was introduced lowering the duty on agricultural implements Mr. Bradshaw said that if it remained as it was it would be ruinous to the industry, and that the government gave drawbacks upon the steel, iron and other raw materials entering into the construction of these implements, so that the industry was better off than ever.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the effect of the legislation really has been to help the agricultural industry?

Mr. BENNETT: To give it the same protection it had before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend arguing that the effect of the legislation has been to help the agricultural implement industry or to injure it?

Mr. BENNETT: I repeat—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no difficulty in answering that question. The legislation passed by the government has afforded to the agricultural implement industry as much protection as it had before, if not more. The point I made was with regard to the duplicity involved in endeavouring to make one part of the public believe the government were removing duties while they were really putting the manufacturer in a better position than he occupied before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend must not get away from the point. His argument was that the agricultural implement industry was now obliged to export very much more largely than had been the case formerly, and the inference was that it did so because it was not in as favourable a position as it had been before the legislation had been passed by the government, or as it would be were it supplying the home market primarily.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I assume my hon. friend will still admit that Mr. Bradshaw is an authority deserving of quotation?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly he should be.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then allow me to read to my hon. friend what Mr. Bradshaw has said in reference to the agricultural implement industry as his words will be found in the Montreal Financial Times under date of March 9 of this year. He says:

> The year 1927 witnessed a conspicuous advance on the part of the implement industry in Canada. Sales showed a substantial increase in most fields—

Later on he said:

> Production in all Canadian implement factories last year was noticeably greater than before, and in many of them it was necessary to engage in night shifts to a considerable extent.

Mr. BENNETT: That is export business.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the business in which these companies are engaged. Mr. Bradshaw proceeded.

Although the implement industry was able to make a substantial advance in Canada in 1926, its progress in 1927 was even greater. All companies reported increased business both in east and west.

Further on he said:

In view of the generally good conditions as outlined and the substantial progress made in recent years, the implement manufacturer feels justified in taking an optimistic view.

I think we can accept the statement of Mr. Bradshaw as to the position of the implement industry, and I think the manufacturers of agricultural implements know their business better than does anyone else. If it is profitable to make their sales in an export market rather than in the home market I think the manufacturers should be given that privilege, so long as the Canadian consumer has the opportunity of getting his goods from whatever sources they can be obtained at the lowest cost possible. His interests then will be amply protected. I say therefore the policy of the government in enabling the consumer to obtain his implements from sources which may be even more advantageous to him than those of the home manufacturers, and at the same time enabling our manufacturers to increase their total production, and in particular their export business, has helped both the producer and the consumer.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend has been quoting figures, and to substantiate what Mr. Bradshaw has said I find that in the year 1921, when hon. members opposite were in office, the importation of agricultural implements from the United States amounted to $24,134,783. Today my hon. friend complains because that business amounts to about $18,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: $29,000,000.

Mr. ROBB: I see the reason for the difference; I am quoting the figures for the fiscal years.

Mr. SPENCE: You are quoting them to suit yourself.

Mr. ROBB: It makes no difference; it is a year's business just the same. During the fiscal year 1927 our export of agricultural implements to the United States amounted to $4,204,581, so the trade goes both ways.

I must have misunderstood my hon. friend from Toronto; I thought he was asking for the export of goods from the different countries mentioned to the United Kingdom, but now I infer that the house requires information as to the difference in tariffs, and I am quite prepared to put that information on record.

Mr. GEARY: What I suggested to the minister was that he should take the house into his confidence as to the negotiations, and as to what he learned which induced him to enter into this treaty. He has given us nothing whatever on these points.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend wanted to know—

Mr. GEARY: What the prospects are under the new tariff.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend wants me to give the difference in the tariffs. For instance in Esthonia we are getting a reduction of from 10 to 50 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: What are the rates?

Mr. ROBB: I will give the rates. On explosion motors operated by naphtha fuel, and other machinery, the rates are 0.23½ gold francs per kilo. The reduction under the French treaty with Esthonia is 20 per cent off the general tariff. In the case of agricultural machines the general tariff is 0.02 francs. The reduction under the French treaty with Esthonia is 30 per cent. Their franc is one-fifth of a dollar in round figures, and we get a reduction of 30 per cent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is the rate so much a pound or so much a kilogram?

Mr. ROBB: A kilogram, I imagine. There are reductions of 50 per cent, 50 per cent, 20 per cent, 33⅓ per cent, 25 per cent and 50 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: What is the rate on beans entering Hungary?

Mr. ROBB: We do not ship beans.

Mr. FRASER: You referred to Hungary this afternoon. I do not know what you meant by it.

Mr. ROBB: We do not ship beans to Hungary.

Mr. FRASER: What does Hungary charge if we want to ship them to that country?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We may have a chance to export beans.

Mr. ROBB: I have not the rate on beans.

Mr. KAISER: The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are quoting figures purporting to show what has been accomplished in the matter of agricultural implements. They claim that as the result of a change made in the tariff the agricultural implement people employed more hands. Now in the case of this large industry when the duty was taken off the government endeavoured to assist them from the bottom by permitting certain materials from a foreign country to enter Canada free and to go into the manufacture of agricultural implements. When the members of the government are setting up claims in regard to the number of men employed in the agricultural implement industry why do they not state how many men were thrown on the street in Oshawa because the malleable iron works closed for a year or two? For years and years we made malleable iron for this industry and thus built up a large industry. It was a secondary industry and this government never considers the little industries. Canada needs the smaller factories, and they require to be looked after just as well as the larger ones. Malleable iron entering into the manufacture of these implements was allowed to come into the country free or almost free. A few days after the government made this change the large industries took from their factories in Oshawa every mould and every pattern. They were actually closed down, the men were thrown on the street, and the malleable iron industry in Oshawa would have been out of business to-day had it not been for the springing into existence of the automobile industry, whereupon the malleable iron works changed from making malleable iron for agricultural implements to making iron for automobiles. But this readjustment required several years. The government effected a little change in the tariff in the interest of the large industries and put a number of small industries out of business. This is something which should be taken into consideration when the government make such boasts as those in which they have been indulging.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) grins and laughs; I do not know why.

Mr. DUNNING: May I not smile? I was not thinking about the hon. gentlemen.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend may smile if he chooses but there are two ways of doing it. Last night when a similar treaty was under discussion we drew the attention of the minister to the fact that the French treaty would be carried en bloc into these treaties. We have no way of judging what the effect of the French treaty upon Canadian trade is as applied to these different countries; the minister is not vouchsafing any information on that subject. I want to take this opportunity of protesting, as I did yesterday, against the system of blindly incorporating one treaty into another without any knowledge of the possible effect of the treaty with France upon the seven treaties we are now adopting. I call the attention of the committee and the minister to the fact that in the explanatory notes in this bill we have nothing before us at all except the quotations from the treaties indicating that Canada may, under certain conditions, join in the benefits or what are suggested as benefits likely to result from those treaties. We have no information before us as to what the effects of these treaties will be. I draw attention to the further fact that these seven treaties are made with Great Britain, which has an entirely different fiscal system from that of Canada, and we have not before us any information that will enable us to judge whether or not treaties which it may be quite proper for Great Britain to make are suitable to the fiscal policy of this country.

There is another thing I want to refer to, because there has been some argument and a bit of cross-firing regarding the effect of the tariff in two or three principal industries. The minister quoted figures for two selected years regarding the agricultural implement industry. What I wish to place before the committee in that respect is a quotation from the Trade of Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927. I shall not bore the house with the details, but I have them here and if required I will give them. The total imports of agricultural implements in 1923 were $8,392,000. That was the year, if I recall rightly, when the amendment to the tariff was made.

Mr. ROBB: No, it was in 1924.

Mr. STEVENS: I will give the other years. About that time an amendment to the tariff was made reducing the duties, and this is the story in regard to imports of these agricultural implements. I am giving the round figures:

Year	Imports
1923	$ 8,300,000
1924	11,600,000
1925	6,400,000
1926	13,200,000
1927	18,800,000

The point is this, that in these few years the importations jumped to more than double what they were prior to the change in tariff.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has my hon. friend the figures as to the output of Canadian companies during that period?

Mr. STEVENS: I will deal with that in a moment. The export trade shows a corresponding increase. The figures are as follows:

Year	Exports
1923	$ 6,000,000
1924	9,000,000
1925	11,000,000
1927	17,000,000

It is not a sufficient answer to say: Oh, you have lost a great deal of business in Canada; there has been a tremendous increase in imports, but you have been exporting. This is what I want to draw to the attention of the committee. The Minister of Finance and his colleagues argue on the basis that if we can keep Canadian trade just about even, we are doing well. Canada ought to be progressing more effectively and in a larger degree than any other country in the world.

Mr. ROBB: Canada is doing so.

Mr. STEVENS: It ought to do so. Its natural conditions warrant us in expecting it to expand in every direction, but it is not doing so in these particular branches of trade. We have increased our exports and that is all to the good, but we must look at the other side of the story and realize that we have increased our imports in this industry. I have under my hand the figures, which I shall not bore the committee with at the moment, but which show that the cost to the Canadian purchaser has not been reduced correspondingly; as a matter of fact there is an increase in the cost to the Canadian purchaser. But Canadian factories have lost about $10,000,000 worth of business owing to increased imports in this particular line.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend intend to give the committee the increase in the home trade?

Mr. STEVENS: The figures are not given

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They would be interesting.

Mr. STEVENS: I make this suggestion, although it will take a little mental arithmetic. We might take the exports and if we deduct from them—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All I want is the bare increase in business.

Mr. STEVENS: I have not the figures under my hand. I was endeavouring to suggest a way by which they might be arrived at. I am not saying that there has been no increase. I am saying that there has been a large increase in exports, but there has also been a tremendous increase in imports.

Let me deal now with imports of automobile parts. The figures are as follows:

Year	Imports
1923	$14,000,000

That is an average of about $15,000,000 a year. Then in the second budget of 1925 we amended the tariff adjustments that were first introduced and we put certain parts and materials on the free list, with what result? The result was that importations of automobile parts increased in 1926 to $23,000,000 and, in 1927, the figures for which the minister did not quote, to $29,000,000. What has been the effect? The effect of the amendment to the tariff in 1925 has been simply to double our imports of parts entering into the manufacture of automobiles. Let me take some of the items. For instance, a line of manufacture that is handled wholly in Canada is tops, wheels and bodies. I see no imports of these prior to 1925, but in 1926 we have an importation amounting to $6,000,000, showing a tremendous increase in this importation and naturally a loss to Canadian trade. The result of the whole thing is this, as my hon. friend pointed out a moment ago: You closed up in Oshawa a malleable iron factory for a period of time. It is true they reopened that and are working again. In another section of Canada near Windsor there was a factory successfully manufacturing automobile tops, and this factory has been closed up and out of business ever since. Authorities that know tell me that in Ontario alone there are two hundred industries that are seriously affected by these amendments to the tariff. It is not sufficient to say that Massey-Harris, the International Harvester, possibly the General Motors and a few other large companies have compensated their loss in some other way, if other industries in other cities and towns have been seriously and adversely affected. That is our complaint. We say to the minister in regard to this treaty just as we said in regard to the treaty that was under discussion yesterday: We have no way of gauging its possible effect upon Canadian trade. Personally I am quite prepared to endorse the principle of making trade agreements with other countries; but I would want to use our bargaining power, that is our tariff, in making specific treaties with these different countries, getting some advantage in their market in return for an advantage offered in our market. But in this case we are given nothing of the kind, and I venture to say that the minister has not an official in his department nor has the Department of National Revenue an official who can give us any idea of the possible effect of this treaty. This series of treaties will go into operation; imports will start to come in and then industries which are adversely affected will come next year before parliament or before the government and plead for some redress in regard to the unfair competition to which they are subjected. That is not a reasonable way to legislate or to make treaties, and we are justified in complaining very bitterly that the minister is unable to give us any information regarding the possible or likely effect of this treaty. When the hon. member for South Toronto put his question to the minister this afternoon, it was a pertinent query that ought to have brought forth some response, I repeat what I said yesterday in regard to the treaty with Czechoslovakia, that we are blindly ratifying to-night these seven treaties without knowing any of their terms. Furthermore, we do not know to what we are committed in the way of navigation, because these are trade and navigation treaties.

Mr. ROBB: There is nothing about navigation. We are accepting only the trade part.

Mr. STEVENS: It is very comforting to get that information from the minister.

Mr. ROBB: I would direct my hon. friend's attention to the preamble, which is very clear:

Whereas it is desirable that Canada should have the benefit of that portion of each of the treaties or agreements which provide for the exchange of the said mutual trade advantages.

That is all we accept.

Mr. STEVENS: I read this also in the preamble:

Whereas by treaties of commerce and navigation or by agreements made by exchanges of notes between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the countries and on the dates set out in the schedule to this act—

Mr. ROBB: That is the title.

Mr. STEVENS: No, it is the preamble.

It is provided that the stipulations of the said treaties or agreements respectively shall not be applicable to any self-governing dominion unless notice is given of the desire of His Majesty that the said stipulations shall apply to such dominion but that nevertheless goods of such dominion shall enjoy in each of the said countries respectively the same treatment as would be enjoyed by similar goods if produced in the United Kingdom so long as goods produced or manufactured in the respective countries are accorded in such dominion favoured-nation treatment;

Mr. ROBB: Read on.

and whereas it is desirable that Canada should have the benefit of that portion of each of the treaties or agreements which provides for the exchange of the said mutual trade advantages: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

We have not a single article of the treaties before us except these articles which refer to the method by which we shall become a party to the treaty. That is the complaint we make, that the minister ought to have given the house copies of these treaties long ago so that we might have studied them carefully, together with information regarding trade other than just the bare imports and exports—because, after all, we are not making this agreement simply to deal with $300 worth of beans, which was mentioned in regard to one of the countries, but with the expectation of doing a growing business. If we expect to do additional business we want to know what direction that business is going to take. If we expect to increase our importations from these countries—and there can be no other object—we want to know what effect that is going to have on Canadian trade.

My hon. friend from Cariboo a moment ago drew attention to the question of beans. It raised a laugh in the house, but I want to say that I know that particular district and have known it for nearly thirty-five years. There are hundreds of farmers in that district, which is in what is known as the dry belt of British Columbia, who succeeded years ago in raising a very high quality of bean. It was their whole crop, and was just as important to them as the wheat crop is to the prairie farmer or the vegetable crop to farmers in other parts of the country. It was life or death to them, financially; it meant success or failure. Conditions were difficult for them because of competition from Japan and China, and the beans from those countries, by the way, were found upon examination in Canada to contain a certain poison, and there was a time when we had to shut those beans out of this country in the interest of the health of the people of Canada. There is now coming in from certain of the Balkan states what is known to be an inferior bean, a small yellow bean, which is not on a par at all with the beans we can produce in the district to which my hon. friend has referred and in other sections of Canada; they are not comparable at all, and yet our farmers are faced with this competition. The minister and others may say, what do the few beans we import amount to? But I say that it means all the difference between these farmers continuing in business or being driven out of business.

An hon. MEMBER: It means spilling the beans.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. It makes all the difference in the world to them. It is a serious matter. I notice in the tariff which I have under my hand a long schedule of stuff coming in from Japan. Now the Japanese treaty of 1913, irrespective of what it contains, is to become our treaty with these seven different countries, and I ask the minister, does he know, in the light of the Japanese treaty, what the effect of these other treaties will be on Canadian trade. He may answer that he does not think they will have much effect. I do not know; I have not had time to check it up, but the point I am making is that both the French and the Japanese treaties become our treaties with seven other countries by one stroke of the pen, without the slightest information being furnished to parliament as to the possible effects. I submit that that is not fair to the people of Canada. Those in Canada who will be affected will not know it for one, two, three, four, six months, or perhaps a year, and then they will begin to realise that importers in Montreal and other parts of Canada are bringing in goods with which they cannot successfully compete. Someone may say, let us buy these goods in the cheapest market; but owing to the depreciated currency in these countries, and that factor, I am glad to say, is lessening from year to year—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): How does depreciated currency affect the situation?

Mr. STEVENS: The depreciated currency of Europe has been one of the most serious factors affecting our trade. My hon. friend can shake his head, but I know it; I have studied it from end to end. And not only is that a factor, but there are also the long hours of labour and the low wages paid in those countries. There is no gainsaying that their standard of living is lower than the Canadian standard. It is all very well to come forward with this rather fantastic theory that the great desideratum should be to buy your goods in the cheapest market and sell them in the dearest, and then fold your arms and feel that you have propounded a profound philosophy, but as a matter of fact these things are not dealt with by theory; they are not determined by any philosophical reasoning, but by cold facts, competition and experience, and the experience of Canada will be suddenly to wake up and find that she has entangled herself in a dozen treaties in the last few hours which parliament is blindly ratifying without adequate information as to what the effects will be.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend was for a short time—for altogether too short a time, I have no doubt he imagines—Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he knows the staff of the department fairly well. I think he will agree that among our best trade commissioners is Mr. Wilgress, who represents Canada as trade commissioner with headquarters at Hamburg. My hon. friend complains that we have no information before us from any of the officers of the department recommending treaties with these countries.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not say anything of the kind. I said that parliament has no information before it. The minister may have the information on his desk, but we have been discussing these matters now for two hours; one of these treaties we discussed for nearly two days, and I submit that, whatever information the minister has, it has not been placed before parliament.

Mr. ROBB: We have a letter from Mr. Wilgress dated September 21, 1926—possibly he was then writing to my hon. friend as minister—in which he says:

> You will note that while Canadian goods are at present receiving the reductions, the Esthonian government are awaiting official notification from Canada that most-favoured-nation treatment is being extended to goods of Esthonian origin. I cannot too strongly urge that steps should be taken as soon as possible to officially notify the Esthonian government in the above sense, since there are practically no products which Esthonia could export to Canada, and hence the advantages would be all on the Canadian side if such a step was taken.

I admit at once that perhaps it might have been better had we had printed and distributed among the members more detailed information as to the difference in the tariffs, but as I pointed out on the introduction of the measure, we are obtaining concessions running from 10 to 50 per cent in the tariffs on our goods going into these countries. My hon. friend complains that this treaty is based on the treaty made with Japan, and he mentioned particularly beans. My hon. friend surely is not going to chide me over the Japanese treaty, which was made by the Conservative government in office in 1913.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not my point, and the minister knows it.

Mr. ROBB: I am not finding any fault with the government of that day; I think it was a pretty good trade agreement with Japan. In 1922 we imported from Japan $8,194,682 worth of goods, and we exported about $14,900,000 worth; in 1927 the respective figures were $11,000,000 and $30,000,000 odd. That is a pretty good kind of trade.

I submit experience will prove not what my hon. friend has suggested, but that this trade will be of equal advantage to the Dominion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister give us the trade under the French treaty?

Mr. ROBB: In 1922 we imported from France $13,482,005 worth of goods, and exported $8,248,000 odd; in 1927 the respective figures were approximately $23,000,000 and $15,000,000. I admit at once that in this case the balance of trade is against us.

Referring again to agricultural implements, mentioned by my hon. friend, I observe that our total exports to all countries for the fiscal year ending March, 1927, were about $17,000,000 in value, and our total imports about $18,000,000. But had my hon. friends thought for one moment they would not have brought up this question, particularly as to the increase in our importations, because the records show that this increase is represented mainly by farm tractors and tractor parts. My hon. friends did not treat that industry as kindly as we did the agricultural implement industry in 1924. In 1918 they put these tractors on the free list, but did not make any provision for our manufacturers to get their raw material on the same basis, with the result that they put the industry right out of business. To-day we are not manufacturing any farm tractors, and last year we imported $8,000,000 odd.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What we did in 1918 was in the nature of a war measure to increase the production of grain at less cost. The minister knows that very well. What has he done to alleviate the condition? Nothing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Did the government supported by the hon. gentleman do anything for the industry between 1918 and 1921?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We simply took off the tariff.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But you did not put it on again.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the Union government was in power it was well understood that no tariff changes would be made except in a few instances; that is, there was no general adjustment. If what we did was wrong, why did not the present minister make the necessary change? Has he done anything?

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has again followed his old course of imputing to me an adverse reference to the Japanese treaty that I never made.

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. STEVENS: What I complain of is that by this omnibus measure we are embodying in the seven treaties dealt with the treaty with France and the treaty with Japan, without any adequate knowledge of what the effect will be. Then the minister told us we had no information. But after we have been debating this and the other treaties for two days, he produces for the first time a letter from our trade agent in Hamburg. That letter contained only a suggestion to the government that the time had come when we should enter into treaties with these countries. My complaint is that the minister has had since 1926, when the letter was received, until 1928, to prepare his precis of this whole business, which should have been laid on the table with these bills so we would know what the effect would be. I am not complaining of the officers of the department. I am complaining that the government of the day brings down measures without furnishing the information to enable us to judge their merits. I protest vigorously against passing these treaties. It may be that they will work out satisfactorily, but we are going blind at the present time. As I said on a previous occasion, neither the minister himself, nor any of his colleagues, nor any official of his department, is competent to say now what will be the effect of these treaties.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FOREST CONSERVATION AND PATHOLOGY

Mr. LADNER:

1. Is the government carrying on any work in forestry pathology in the province of British Columbia?
2. If so, what is the staff and what is the amount of money spent during each of the last three years?
3. Does the government of Canada engage in the work of forestry conservation in the province of British Columbia?
4. If so, what has been the expense thereof?
5. In view of the great devastation amongst the forests of Canada due to disease, is it the intention of the government to further increase the work of forest conservation and forest pathology?

Mr. RINFRET:

Department of Agriculture—

1. If this question includes forest entomology the government has carried out a great deal of research work as outlined in reply to question 3.

2. Forest entomology in B.C.

Staff..	6	7	8
Expenditure..	$9,033.79	$12,068.14	$12,045.42

3. Yes. In addition to other work of this kind the Dominion Department of Agriculture has paid special attention to injuries by forest insects in British Columbia. For the past six years the division of forest insects of the Dominion entomological branch has been investigating the extensive forest insect outbreaks in British Columbia. Its officers have studied the insect outbreaks wherever large amounts of timber were being destroyed, have devised and recommended methods of control, wherever possible, and have undertaken the supervision of control measures that were instituted on their recommendations by the provincial forest branch and the Dominion forest service. Through the effect co-operation of these three organizations a large amount of valuable timber has been saved during the past few years.

This work has in the past been devoted chiefly to the control of extensive outbreaks of bark-beetles in yellow pine. The bark-beetle control work has now been brought to a successful conclusion and recently the investigations have been extended to include bark-beetle outbreaks in lodgepole pine, Douglas fir, and other timber trees, injury by the western cedar borer, and other destructive forest insects.

4. As stated under question No. 2.

5. Under consideration.

Department of the Interior—

1. Aside from pathological work on wood performed in the forest products laboratories in this service at Vancouver; and aside from the incidental pathological problems which come to the attention of our forest protective and administrative organization, no special provision has been made by this service for forest pathological study.

2. Impossible to segregate incidental charges to pathological studies.

3. Yes.

4. The forest service expenditure is as follows:—

POPULATION OF CANADA

Mr. KELLNER:

1. What is the present population of Canada?
2. How many now resident in Canada were born in Canada?
3. How many resident in Canada are British born?
4. How many resident in Canada are foreign born?

Mr. MALCOLM:

1. Estimate as of June 1, 1927—9,519,000. Latest census (1921)—8,788,483.
2. 6,832,747 (1921 census).
3. 1,065,454 (1921 census).
4. 890,282 (1921 census).

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC PROPERTY

Mr. TUMMON:

1. Is there a salvage department maintained by the government for the disposal of government owned machinery, equipment and such like?
2. If so, under what department of the government are said salvage operations carried on, and who is in charge of the same?
3. Is the equipment and machinery offered for sale in each case by public tender?
4. What publicity is given the advertisements?
5. If not offered for sale by public tender, how is disposal made?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Yes.
2. Government contracts supervision committee; L. R. LaFléche, secretary, L. H. Beer, salvage officer.

3 and 4. Unless required by another department of the government, invitations to tender are sent to all persons and firms known or thought to be interested and (or) by (a) public notices (b) advertisements in the press.

5. See answer to 3 and 4.

STEAMSHIP HOCHELAGA

Mr. WARD:

1. Is there a contract between the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Hochelaga Shipping and Towing Company, Limited, for the operation of the ss. Hochelaga between Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and Pictou, Nova Scotia?

2. When does the contract expire?
3. What are the terms of the original contract?
4. Who is the manager of Hochelaga Shipping and Towing Company, Limited?
5. What are the passenger fares charged?
6. Has the Hochelaga been under charter or contract to any other department of the government during the past three years?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Yes.

2. November 30, 1928.

3. The original contract, dated July 21, 1924, provided for a regular daily service, except Sundays between Pictou and Charlottetown, from June 1 until October 31 in each year, from 1924 to 1928 inclusive; subsidy to be payable at the rate of $5,000 for each full month's service, or such proportion thereof as may have been earned. On March 22, 1927, a supplementary contract was signed, extending all the provisions of the aforesaid contract, to cover the months of May and November in each of the years 1927 and 1928; subsidy to be payable at the rate of $5,000 per month for each of the said months. The contract contains the usual provisions in regard to the carriage of mails, approval of freight and passenger rates by the minister, etc., as are common to all subsidized service contracts.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

Mr. MANION:

1. How many schools in the province of Ontario receive financial aid under the Technical Education Act of 1919?

2. How many schools in each of the other provinces receive grants under this act?

3. Does the government contemplate the withdrawal of financial support now provided under the Technical Education Act of 1919?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Answered by No. 2.

2. Number of municipalities conducting day classes in Canada and receiving grants under the Technical Education Act: British Columbia, 15; Alberta, 3; Saskatchewan, 3; Manitoba, 5; Ontario, 32; Quebec, 10; New Brunswick, 8; Nova Scotia, 1; P.E. Island, 1.; Number of municipalities conducting evening classes in Canada and receiving grants under the Technical Education Act: British Columbia, 39; Alberta, 9; Saskatchewan, 2; Manitoba, 1; Ontario, 57; Quebec, 21; New Brunswick, 8; Nova Scotia, 24; P. E. Island, 9.

3. The act does not terminate until March 31, 1929.

Note: As there is no uniform definition of the word "school" and the provincial statistics are based on different conceptions of what constitutes a school, the number of municipalities conducting day and evening classes, and receiving grants under the act, and not the number of schools, is reported to the Department of Labour.

CUSTOMS INQUIRY

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What were the remuneration, living expenses and other allowances received by each of the commissioners in the recent customs inquiry, and to whom paid?

2. What was paid to counsel engaged in the case by the government in respect of remuneration, living expenses and other allowances?

Mr. ROBB:

MR. ALBERT ELLIOTT

Mr. MacNUTT:

1. Is Albert Elliott of River John, Pictou county, in the employ of the federal government?
2. If so, what is his position?
3. By whom was he recommended?
4. What other applicants were there, if any, for this position?
5. Was it made by the civil service, and, if so, when and how were applications called for the same?
6. How much to date has been paid Elliott for his services?
7. At what rate is he being paid?
8. What part of his duties, if any, are performed in the county of Colchester?
9. What expenses, if any, have been allowed Mr. Elliott for services performed in Colchester county?
10. What seizures, if any, have been made by Mr. Elliott since his appointment?
11. What previous qualifications, if any, did Mr. Elliott have for this position?

Mr. EULER:

1. Yes.

2. Special customs-excise enforcement officer.

3. Chief, customs-excise preventive service.

4. No record of any for this position up to time of Mr. Elliott's appointment.

5. No. Appointment made by the Honourable the Minister of National Revenue. Vide subsection 4, of section 2, of the Department of National Revenue Act and of the statutory adoption of the provisions of votes 352 and 540 of the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928.

6. Salary—$1,050; expenses—$26.20.

7. $1,200 per annum.

8. Officers in the preventive service are a mobile force and are apopinted for the whole province and not for any particular county. Mr. Elliott's duties at times take him into Cumberland, Colchester and Pictou counties.

9. See answer to question No. 6. No record is kept of expenses incurred in any particular county.

10. Two excise seizures.

Note: General reports from divisional chief state very little smuggling along shore in vicinity of Tatamagouche during past season.

11. No previous experience as law enforcement officer; chosen principally on account of his character and knowledge of the district.

TOURISTS

Mr. ROBINSON:

What sort of control, if any, is the Department of Immigration exercising to ascertain that any individual entering Canada as a tourist has returned home after the period of time he may have stated when passing through the hands of the immigration officials on arrival?

Mr. FORKE: Control in any doubtful case is exercised under the provisions of section 13 of the Immigration Act which provides that an officer may require a deposit of money as a guarantee that any person admitted to Canada as belonging to any of the non-immigrant classes shall leave Canada within the time agreed upon at the time of entry. In view of the tremendous volume of tourist or non-immigrant passenger traffic it would be impossible to ascertain that every person of this class left Canada, e.g., during the fiscal year which ended on the 31st of March, 1927, approximately five million people entered Canada at Niagara Falls and 8,826,220 entered Canada at Windsor.

RAILWAY AND PEACE RIVER LANDS

Mr. NEILL:

1. Is it the intention of the government to bring in a bill this session enabling them to negotiate with the province of British Columbia for the transfer to that province of the railway and Peace River lands?
2. Is it the intention of the government to negotiate an agreement with the province of British Columbia for the return of these lands to the province on the basis of equity suggested in Commissioner Martin's report?

Mr. STEWART:

1. It has been found that legislation is not necessary.

2. It is the intention of the government to carry on negotiations with the province of British Columbia during the recess with a view to the transfer to the province of British Columbia the ownership and control of the said railway and Peace River lands.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

WOOL AND MUTTON IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Mr. McGIBBON:

1. What were the quantities and values of the imports and exports, also duty collected on (a) raw wool and worsted tops of wool; (b) sheep skins; (c) mutton and lamb; (d) manufactured or partially manufactured products of wool, not including raw wool or worsted tops, for each year ending March 31, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926 and 1927?
2. What was the total of the above-mentioned imports and exports for the said five years?

Mr. MALCOLM: I table the return.

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LAVOIE ACCIDENT INQUEST

Mr. FAFARD:

For a copy of the report of the inquest held at Anse-à-Giles station in connection with the accident to Mr. Chs. Eugene Lavoie which took place on the national railways, on the 10th of February, last.

ALBERTA RAILWAYS

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River) moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, reports and other documents passing between the Department of Railways and Canals and the Alberta government, and the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, with reference to the purchase of the railways of Alberta, by the Canadian National Railways, or by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railways jointly.

Hon. CHARLES DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The other day I asked that this stand until I could see my hon. friend regarding it. I have not had an opportunity of doing so yet. There is some question in my mind as to what in the way of correspondence my hon. friend wants, and if he would let the motion stand to-day I might have an opportunity of seeing him about it.

Motion stands.

UNITED STATES COAL IN WINNIPEG

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River) moved:

For a copy of the report made by the investigators to the Minister of Customs, with regard to the alleged dumping of American coal into the Winnipeg market.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): The information asked for by the hon. member was obtained by the investigators of the department on the understanding that the same would be treated as confidential. For that reason it would be impossible to give the information. I have however no objection to showing him the information privately.

Mr. KENNEDY: Why has an investigation of this kind to be held under those conditions? It is public business.

Mr. EULER: It would be impossible to get the information except with the assistance of the exporters in another country.

Mr. KENNEDY: All right. I will drop the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I would ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) when we may expect the report to be brought down of the commission that was appointed to investigate tobacco conditions in western Ontario.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): The report is now in course of preparation, but it has not come to hand yet.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved the second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Annual royalty payable to the crown.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For regulations I propose to take part of the Ontario statute governing the method by which the computation shall take place for the collection of royalties. We found some little difficulty in applying the provisions of the Ontario law to the Yukon, but since this bill was printed and brought down, I have now a complete set of regulations modelled almost exactly on those contained in the Ontario act, with some very slight changes to make them applicable to the Yukon and also to the three prairie provinces and the Northwest Territories, where I intend to apply this system of the collection of royalties rather than the old system which is now in vogue. I would have no objection to taking the bill out of committee and embodying these regulations in the bill, if that is thought wise by the committee, so that instead of it being left to the minister and the department to make the regulations, they will be a part of the statute. I just wanted to point out to the committee that our difficulty was in making the regulations that are contained in the Ontario act applicable to our conditions. I am prepared now to report progress, so that these regulations may be embodied in the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: And the bill will be reprinted?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Progress reported.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 188, to amend the Canada Grain Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $8,500,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Quebec in an amount not exceeding $8,500,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the Governor in Council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How much has been advanced by way of loan to the harbour commissioners up to date?

Mr. CARDIN: Up to the present time we have advanced $14,669,995.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask further, in what year and on what terms was that loan granted as regards repayment, and in what amounts was it advanced?

Mr. CARDIN: Previous to 1912, $4,125,000 had been advanced to the old commission. Since that time $13,500,000 has been authorized, of which, as I said a moment ago, $10,515,800 had been advanced. The total amount authorized is $17,625,000, of which we have advanced $14,669,000. In exchange for these advances the harbour commissioners hand over their debentures to the Department of Finance. I regret that I am not in a position to give my hon. friend the details that he requires as to the redemption of these debentures, but I hope to do so when the bill is in committee.

Mr. BOYS: In what year was the first advance made?

Mr. CARDIN: I think it was as far back as 1880.

Mr. BOYS: As I understand, interest at the rate of 5 per cent is to be paid on these advances. How much interest has been paid from 1880 down to the present time?

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. CARDIN: On loans prior to 1888 it has been paid $932,721 in interest; on loans subsequent to 1888, $217,000 odd—or a total of $1,150,000.

Mr. BOYS: What would be the total amount of interest for that period calculated at 5 per cent?

Mr. CARDIN: It would be five or six million dollars for all the loans.

Mr. BOYS: What is the policy of the department not only in regard to this commission but others when interest is not paid; is the failure to pay winked at, or is any serious attempt made to recover the arrears?

Mr. CARDIN: The Quebec harbour commissioners have always contended that the lack of facilities made it impossible for the port to earn sufficient money to meet the interest on the loans made. Up to last year owing to the prohibitive freight rates they were deprived of very important traffic as they were getting no grain shipments over the Transcontinental, although the railway had been built with the view of exporting grain through the port of Quebec. Last year the rates were reduced, and the commissioners expect that they will now be in a position to earn more revenue, and that when the facilities are completed they will be able to meet their obligations. Of this proposed loan of $8,500,000, a little over $2,000,000 is required to increase the storage capacity of the elevator; its present capacity is two million bushels, and this is inadequate. It has been represented that unless additional facilities are provided the port cannot get the benefit of the grain traffic over the Transcontinental which is expected to develop as a result of the reduction of rates.

Mr. BOYS: I suppose similar representations have been made every time they needed a loan—the prospects were wonderful and they had to have the money. On these representations, although the probability of getting any return is apparently nil, yet year after year moneys are advanced. I am not singling out this particular harbour, but I have to refer to it as it is the only one now before us. Is it the policy of the department to go on making these huge advances without any prospect of getting the interest paid? Does the minister think there is any probability of the interest being paid in the next twenty-five years? If so, on what does he base his opinion? I think we ought also to have some further information of the nature of the program that warrants this loan so that we may know what is to be done with the money.

Mr. CARDIN: I am certainly of the opinion that we will get some interest on the money we are advancing. We have already expended a large amount of money on the port of Quebec in developing what is known as Wolfe's Cove terminal, but we can expect no revenue on that expenditure unless we vote the necessary money to complete those facilities. But although the facilities are not complete, business has been increasing. In 1923, the elevator handled a little over five million bushels of grain, as against nearly ten million bushels in 1927, despite the fact that the rates on the Transcontinental railway were prohibitive until the recent reduction. Since the lower rates have been in force the elevator has been filled to capacity.

Mr. BENNETT: That is only a couple of million bushels.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. People interested in the grain trade complain that unless we increase the capacity of the elevator and provide further facilities they will not be in a position to take advantage of the reduced freight rates over the Transcontinental. I am free to admit that there should be a limit to the advances made to any port—

Mr. BOYS: What is the limit?

Mr. CARDIN: —but we ought to take into consideration the development of our trade and the greater revenue that will follow. I think there is ample justification for this advance in order to give the harbour commissioners an opportunity to complete the facilities of the port and earn the revenue to be expected therefrom in the near future.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Am I right in saying that having regard to the loans already made and the amount now asked for, with the arrears of interest there will be about thirty million dollars involved? And would not this sum be equivalent to about a dollar a bushel on the grain that has been handled?

Mr. CARDIN: The total amount authorized at present is $17,000,000, and we are asking for $8,500,000 more.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Taking the $17,000,000 with the $8,500,000 we have $25,500,000, and adding $5,000,000 odd of arrears, that brings it to $30,000,000 odd.

Mr. CARDIN: As regards the unpaid interest, I may say that for several years the commissioners have been making a claim against the Department of Immigration. The port of Quebec is receiving all the immigrants—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARDIN: This is a very serious matter.

Mr. STEVENS: That is an old ghost.

Mr. CARDIN: The port of Quebec, I say, has been receiving all immigrants. The steamers bringing these people to Canada stop at Quebec where the immigrants land, and this requires the use of a very important part of the harbour. No allowance is made to the harbour commission for the use of its wharves and sheds and they are unable on account of the immigration to afford the facilities they would like to give to various companies and firms. As I say, they are not receiving a cent, and they have a claim against the department running up to—

Mr. STEVENS: Thirty million dollars?

Mr. CARDIN: Oh no, about $2,500,000. They have also a claim against certain other departments using the present facilities at Quebec, which could be taken advantage of by trading vessels. That claim probably will come before the house some day for consideration. When therefore you set off their claim against the interest due by the harbour commissioners, I do not think the position of the port of Quebec is so bad. I do not think it is bad, taking into consideration their claims against the departments.

Mr. BOYS: What were the revenues last year and, say, the previous year? While on this subject I have this observation to make: If this spirit of generosity were evident in the administration of all departments, we might not feel as we do; but some of us are getting a little bit tired voting large sums of money when we cannot get a copper in our own counties which are asking for three or four thousand dollars. There is no money at all for ordinary purposes. So far as I am concerned, no money has been spent in many years in the constituency I represent; yet these large sums seem to pass without any struggle. The minister is to be congratulated on being able to stand in his place and wear that smile, expecting to get the money voted on the strength of the argument he has presented. Imagine where he would land if he were to appear before a committee of financiers and endeavour to justify his request for $8,500,000 in this matter after what he has said in the house. I suppose the test after all is revenue. We have heard about the prospects, but if we could ascertain what the revenue was last year and for the last five years, and had some intimation as to any increase that might be expected, we could form some idea as to whether or not there is any possibility within the next twenty-five years of the arrears of interest being paid, or even half paid.

Mr. CARDIN: I can sympathize with my hon. friend in the statement that it is not always easy to get small amounts for our own constituencies. There are certain things in my own constituency which I cannot get from the Minister of Finance. I am in a better position to speak of the port of Quebec, inasmuch as I am not personally interested in it. The revenues of the port in the following years have been:

1924	568,627 77
1925	568,533 25
1926	678,882 06
1927	702,310 01

Mr. BENNETT: Gross?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: What are the expenses?

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps the minister could give us the net revenue for the years mentioned.

Mr. CARDIN: I can give the expenses:

1924	397,078 18
1925	404,670 36
1926	595,272 89

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): They are going up.

Mr. CARDIN: The expenses, it is true, are going up. As regards the prospective revenue it is rather difficult to suggest any amount, because we do not know what business the port is going to do. As I have said, however, we have the representations of the people who are supposed to know, the people in the grain trade. They are very urgent in their request that the expenditure be made. I may add that the shipping federation of Canada has made strong representations even to the Prime Minister that these facilities be provided: in their view, in the light of their experience, these facilities are absolutely necessary to the proper development of the port of Quebec. Now we must get our information somewhere, and the people who ought to know are those who are interested in the trade. It is on these representations—

Mr. BOYS: If they paid the piper they would not be so keen.

Mr. CARDIN: —we are asking parliament to vote this. As regards the general financial position of the harbour commission, I would point out to the committee that other harbours in Canada which are in a prosperous condition to-day were not a few years ago so fortunately situated. They were given the facilities necessary for the traffic going through those ports, and consequently they improved; and I think it will be the same in connection with the Quebec harbour, when we shall have completed the facilities required for the handling of the trade.

Mr. IRVINE: I would ask the minister to speak a little louder, and at the same time to state as clearly as possible exactly on what ground he asks for this amount.

Mr. CARDIN: I regret that my voice did not reach my hon. friend; I was afraid I was speaking too loud for those near me. It has been represented to the commission and to the department that the present facilities in the port of Quebec make it impossible to take advantage of the reduced rates for the moving of grain on the Transcontinental, Limited, as these facilities are, it is impossible to take care of any development in trade in that port. It is pointed out to us that if we want to develop the port and to get the business which we might expect, as well as to facilitate the export of grain through Quebec, we must add to the facilities that now exist. I was saying that we have to rely on someone for information, and, I ask, who is in a better position to advise either the commission or the government as to the desirability of making new advances to the port of Quebec if it is not the shipping federation of Canada, the people who are supposed to know something about shipping and about the necessity for developing the port? Who should know better than they or better than the people actually engaged in the grain trade? Not long ago a committee was appointed by the senate to consider the movement of grain and the development of ports, and that body reported that the development of the port of Quebec was absolutely necessary. I believe a similar report was made by the grain commission. It is true that up to the present time the operation of the port has not been very profitable or very promising, but this is due to the fact that the facilities are absolutely inadequate. That is not only my opinion or the opinion of the commissioners; it is supported by the shipping federation and by the people trading in grain. We are only bringing this matter before parliament in compliance with the requests and representations of people who are supposed to know something about it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister is very vague, and perhaps necessarily so, as to just what facilities are lacking. He might help the committee by reading one of the reports to which he has referred, because frankly I cannot see wherein the facilities are lacking.

Mr. CARDIN: The following letter was written by Mr. Smith, then general manager of the Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers, Limited, of Winnipeg, under date of October 19, 1927:

I am quite satisfied that to make Quebec a suitable export grain port, you would be forced to increase your present elevator facilities. It is to be remembered your present elevator capacity has to take care of quite a large domestic trade, so that probably only one million bushel capacity is available for export shipment.

This is, of course, quite inadequate, particularly if you ever hope to very materially increase the shipments of grain. With only a million bushel space available, you immediately limit the number of grades a large shipper can send to Quebec, and, as a consequence, your export shipments are curtailed on account of the fact that you only get wheat shipments of one or two grades and in that way miss the steady flow which would naturally result if all types of wheat could be stored at Quebec.

I would therefore strongly recommend to the commissioners at the port of Quebec to increase their present grain elevator capacity by an additional two million bushels.

I am entirely in sympathy with every movement made by the Quebec authorities to develop their port for grain shipments, and believe by the continuance of the efforts already expended you will meet with more success in the near future.

Mr. BENNETT: Was that in reply to another communication?

Mr. CARDIN: No. Then we have the report of the Royal Grain Inquiry Commission of January, 1925:

The situation at Quebec is virtually that of Montreal, with the additional advantage of a longer season. There does not seem to be any reason why the port of Quebec should not share with Montreal a part of the advantages of the St. Lawrence route. Montreal has developed wide business connections with the grain trade so that the traffic is accustomed to move through this port.

It is open to Quebec to do the same thing; no physical obstacles lie in the way of the inauguration of an extensive grain export trade. Indeed, as the capacity of the port of Montreal begins to be taxed at the peak of the movement, a part of the traffic might with advantage move to Quebec. Quebec also enjoys a more favourable insurance rate and is 180 miles nearer to Liverpool than is Montreal.

The report of the special committee of the senate appointed to inquire into the conditions responsible for the routing of large portions of Canadian export grain via American instead of Canadian ports contains the following words:

—that rates be granted upon export grain over the Canadian National railways to Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, St. John and Vancouver, such as would develop trade through the above ports.

As a corollary to the recommendation in paragraph one, that necessary elevator accommodation should be provided by the Dominion government at Canadian ports.

Recently the chief commissioner of the Board of Railway Commissioners, when the board was studying rates, said:

To enable any seaport to handle traffic of this nature (export grain) much outlay must be made, peculiarly and solely adapted to such business. And unless a harbour is equipped for such purpose, it is futile to expect the trade to flow that way.

Commissioner Oliver said:

If sufficient transfer storage, such as exists at Fort William, were provided at Quebec, grain could be moved forward all-rail to that storage at all seasons. During the period of closed navigation it could go into storage (as it now does at Fort William and Port Arthur) to await the opening of navigation on the short ocean haul; and if in storage there, it could be readily pushed forward to St. John and Halifax as required to give return cargo to vessels bringing merchandise to those ports.

I think these opinions are of some importance and are deserving of consideration both by the committee and by the government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: About a year ago I understand that some of the grain pool people in the west built new elevators at Buffalo. Why does not the government make arrangements with the wheat pool to build elevators at Quebec, if that is a good place, instead of at Buffalo?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not authorized to answer for the pool in that regard.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister is answering for the government.

Mr. CARDIN: If we properly develop the facilities of the port of Quebec in regard to wharves and sheds it will be a greater inducement to the pool to build an elevator there. Where would be the advantage to the pool in building an elevator at Quebec when they are not sure of obtaining the proper wharves and berthing space for the ships?

Mr. CAHAN: What is the present rate from Fort William to Quebec over the National Transcontinental Railway?

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid I have not that information, but I will give it to my hon. friend when the bill is under consideration in committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think it is something over eleven cents a bushel.

Mr. CARDIN: I believe it is eleven cents, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. IRVINE: I believe that two or three years ago—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—we voted $5,000,000 for this very purpose, on substantially the same grounds as those urged by the minister to-day. I do not want it to be assumed that I am opposing improvements in the harbour of Quebec. I want to see that harbour improved. I want it to have all the facilities required for the business which comes its way, but I think we ought to know what improvement will be effected in the financial position of the commission by this vote. I should like to know what increase in the income of the commission was made possible by the expenditure of the $5,000,000 already referred to, in order that we may be able to see whether by the expenditure of $8,000,000 more it will ever be possible for the commission to emerge from this burden of debt. If it is not going to be possible for the commission to do that I think it would be better business to write off the whole thing, because we are only going to saddle it with an impossible proposition. Therefore I should like to know exactly what improvement resulted from the expenditure of the $5,000,000 voted previously, and how much was thereby added to the income of the commission.

Mr. CARDIN: The money expended up to date out of the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 has not yet bettered the financial position of the port of Quebec for the reason that the works undertaken with that money are not yet completed and therefore cannot be used. We will need a part of the money we are asking for to-day to bring them to completion. The money expended so far has been devoted to the construction of wharves and also to dredging. The wharves, however, are not completed, and since we are not in a position to use the new facilities that are being provided there cannot be any betterment in the financial position of the commission. We cannot expect that until the projected works are finished. Eighteen cribs, I think, have been sunk, but the cement work has not been placed on the top of these cribs because two years must elapse before the cribs are solidly sunk in the bed of the river.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the minister if the entire $5,000,000 was expended in building wharves?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the minister think the present loan will complete the facilities that the commission deems necessary—

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: —to make a first class port of Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: This money will not only complete the facilities which the commissioners had in mind when they sought assistance in 1925, but will also provide for the extension of the present facilities. Of the sum of $8,500,000 the amount required to complete the facilities we had in mind when we came before the house in 1925, is $5,000,000—that is to say Wolfe's cove terminal—but $2,500,000 is needed to increase the storage capacity of the present elevator and to build the necessary wharves to make use of that increased capacity. So with the present vote all the facilities required for the port of Quebec, according to the representations made to us, will be completed. This amount covers the whole of the improvements, and as I have said the program will extend over a period of five years from now.

Mr. BOYS: Apparently the minister has been prompted in the introduction of this resolution by representations made to him by persons who, as he says, ought to know and whose views in that connection should be regarded. He points out that the shipping interests and those engaged in the grain business have made the recomendations which have had weight with him and have influenced him to introduce this resolution. I think I am making a fair statement of what the minister said in that connection a moment or two ago, and I observe that he nods his head in approval. But I would ask the minister if he has not heard of representations made by those engaged in the grain and shipping interests in regard to the requirements of the port of Collingwood, in the county of Simcoe, and if so whether he is likely, when the matter is to be dealt with by council, to meet these requests, for the same reasons and with the same generosity that characterizes his action in the present instance?

Mr. CARDIN: Personally I would have no hesitation in acceding to the request of my hon. friend. I would point out, however, that representations of the same character have been made to us by the people of St. John, N.B., and of Halifax, and we are meeting them in the same way as in the case of Quebec. I regret very sincerely not to be able to give the answer my hon. friend would like with regard to the port to which he has referred. It so happens that the port of Collingwood does not come under my jurisdiction but under that of the Minister of Public Works, who is more generous than I am.

Mr. BOYS: Will the minister set his sympathetic will at work then when the matter is before council, and see that the same considerations which prompted him to give sympathetic treatment to the port of Quebec will be given due weight in the case of the port of Collingwood?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MILLAR: It may be quite proper to expend this amount of money on the port of Quebec, but I think that in past years certain anomalies have occurred in connection with our efforts to build up that port. Those who recall the speeches that were made at the time of the construction of the National Transcontinental railway will observe that the purpose of building this railway was to enable freight to be carried through an all Canadian channel to the port of Quebec. I think that for a short time the rate on grain was 6 cents a bushel from Armstrong, near Fort William, to the port of Quebec. Shortly afterwards, however, it was raised to approximately 21 cents. We expended an enormous sum of money in the building of a railway which could be equipped with trains drawing heavy cars to carry grain to the port of Quebec, and a rate was fixed that was absolutely prohibitive. The result is that the grass was allowed to grow up around the rails of this great railway. We are asked now to spend more money on the port of Quebec. I think it might be well to ascertain from the minister how much grain has been handled through the elevators of the ports which have a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels. That capacity ought to be filled several times if the amount of grain were being carried there that was originally contemplated.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is an improvement since the new rates came into force.

Mr. MILLAR: If my memory serves me aright the rate is now between 11 and 12 cents.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Eleven cents.

Mr. MILLAR: I cannot imagine very much grain going that way except after the close of navigation. I believe the rate to Montreal from Fort William is about 9 cents or less, and I am afraid that grain will continue to go to Montreal in spite of the expenditure at Quebec. It is utterly useless to spend money upon any port such as Quebec in order to attract grain and other freight if some barrier exists which prevents that freight getting there. But if the rate were reduced to eight or nine cents I can well imagine that Quebec would become an important grain port. We have frequently made mistakes in trying to attract trade under conditions that were unfavourable. A lot of money has been spent at Halifax, and some hon. gentlemen opposite get quite angry when one suggests that it is going to be difficult to make of Halifax a great grain port. We have also expended a considerable amount of money in providing facilities for the handling of grain at Prince Rupert but the efforts to attract trade to that port have not been very profitable.

Mr. BENNETT: It is better now.

Mr. MILLAR: It may be a little better now. It would be wise for us to make sure that the freight is going there, or that other conditions are favourable so that the grain can go there, before the money is expended on this harbour. Could the minister give us the quantity of grain which passed through the port of Quebec last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Exactly 9,773,370 bushels, and in 1923 the quantity of grain handled there was only 5,600,000 bushels, so that between 1923 and 1927 there has been increase of nearly 4,000,000 bushels.

Mr. MILLAR: Could the minister give the percentage of that grain that passed into Quebec by rail route?

Mr. CARDIN: Unfortunately I cannot.

Mr. MILLAR: What percentage of that is export grain?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think I can enlighten the hon. member on his question. The increase in the two sets of figures quoted by my colleague will represent the quantity that has come by rail since the low rate went into effect.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have been interested in the earnest appeal of the minister for the harbour of Quebec. I recall the request in 1922 or 1923 for a loan of $1,500,000. It was supported, as I remember it, by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). It was opposed by the Progressive party. The statement was made that the port of Quebec was over-equipped; that they had facilities that the port had not yet grown up to. One plea made was: We require money to buy paint in order to preserve the equipment that was already there, that had been built in advance of the times. There was strong opposition and it was understood that this loan of $1,500,000 was to be cut to $750,000 and that the applicants would be satisfied if that amount were given. But towards the end of the session the government became gay and hilarious in spending and the result was that the whole amount of $1,500,000 was given.

It was stated in gossip—I do not know whether it was true or not—that out of that sum, $70,000 was for lawyers' fees. At all events it was distinctly admitted that Quebec had built larger than the accommodation required; that the traffic had not grown up to the accommodation provided, but it was said they required this money to preserve what they had already built. If this were my case, I would think it a splendid opportunity to save a few millions of dollars for the country. Everyone knows that the basic difficulty with Quebec as a port of shipment for grain is that the railways prefer to carry to and ship from Montreal, and until that situation has changed it will be idle for this government to spend money in this way. I want to ask the minister if it was not claimed in 1922 or 1923, whichever the year was—and in any event it was the year when the $1,500,000 was given—that Quebec had built larger harbour facilities than were required and that the money was needed amongst other things to preserve what had been constructed. I am sure there are some Progressive members present who will recollect what took place at that time. It was felt then, as it is felt now, that the government was altogether too generous with Quebec or with any other applicant who, with no merit in the claim, asked that government money should be voted for such a purpose as this. I am opposed to the grant and I do not think it should be given. I do not believe Quebec will suffer if it is not given. If I thought Quebec would suffer, my mind would be changed immediately. This government can quite well afford to keep this money and come back with a proposal next year or later when it is shown that the movement of grain is towards Quebec and not towards Montreal.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I want to call the attention of the committee to what was said in June, 1925, when the present minister was asking the house to vote $5,000,000 for the improvement of the elevator and wharves at Quebec. On page 3889 of Hansard of that year, Mr. Caldwell, a former member for a New Brunswick seat, asked the minister this question:

> Mr. Caldwell: Could the minister tell us what amount of grain the present facilities at Quebec could handle yearly if used to their full capacity?
> Mr. Cardin: I am told it is forty million bushels.

That is a revelation in regard to what the minister says to-day. He tells us now that there have been 10,000,000 bushels of grain shipped through Quebec, so that at the present time that port has four times the capacity it is using, and yet he is asking us for another $8,000,000.

Mr. CARDIN: Although I am not sufficiently expert in elevator matters to speak authoritatively upon the subject, it seems to me that there is a great difference between handling grain day by day or week by week and what we call the storage capacity. What the commissioners seem to be more concerned about at the present time is larger storage capacity at Quebec during the winter season, so as to take care of a greater quantity of grain to be reshipped through St. John, New Brunswick, or to be ready for shipment when navigation opens. If you have a capacity of only 2,000,000 bushels in the elevator at Quebec, you cannot expect that shippers of grain will be in a position to deal very much with that port. They cannot store more than 2,000,000 bushels there, which is the full capacity of the elevator. It may be that with an elevator having a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels, we can handle a larger quantity of grain than we have handled in the past.

Mr. STEVENS: I am rather interested in the minister's last argument. I cannot believe that he seriously advances that argument in support of the contention that that will in any way help the revenues of the harbour commissioners of Quebec so that they may be able to pay any modicum of interest on the loans advanced. Let us examine the matter for a minute. The minister suggests that we should increase the capacity of the elevator at Quebec so that grain may be stored there and later forwarded to St. John or Halifax. In the first place the minister argued half an hour ago, and laboured the point, that it was not until they got the rates down this year that they could get grain to Quebec at all. Surely the minister is not going to suggest that this grain from Quebec to St. John is going to be carried free. It certainly is going to pay a heavy freight rate. If the grain is stored all winter or part of the winter in Quebec and then sent on to St. John, it is going to pay the additional rate from Quebec to St. John. How in the name of common sense can the minister expect to move grain through Quebec and on to St. John in that way? Let us take another supposition. Does the minister expect to earn, out of the storage of grain in Quebec, sufficient even to make a showing upon the interest that is going to be charged against it? What are the figures? I am speaking from memory and am subject to correction, because I am not at all certain of the exactness of my figures, but I think that the normal charge for storage of grain is one cent per bushel per month. Suppose the minister doubles his present bushel capacity of two million bushels; the maximum number of months during which the port would be closed would be five, and he would not expect to carry that grain more than four months, let us say; that would amount to four cents a bushel on two million bushels. It is very easy to figure out what that would amount to; and that is assuming that the elevator was full to capacity, and that there were no difficulties about the different grades of grain. I do not wish to be offensive, but as a matter of fact it is sheer nonsense to suggest that you are going to earn by the storage of grain in Quebec any sum of money that will be commensurate with the needs of the harbour board of that port.

I want to make it perfectly clear that I am out for the development of all the ports of Canada, whether on the Atlantic, the Pacific or the great lakes, where their development can be shown to be a reasonable proposition. I am going to use the port of Vancouver as an illustration. I have under my hand two reports. I sent to the parliamentary library, where certainly all the reports should be available, but all I could get was two, the reports for 1923 and 1924. I am going to show what the port of Vancouver has done in the way of paying interest, and this record has been characteristic of the whole history of the port ever since money was spent there. They set aside, in 1923, $168,000 in the sinking fund, to provide for the retirement of government bonds which were given for advances. They set aside $424,000 for interest during construction of the Ballantyne pier, and they paid to the Dominion government all the interest due on bonds issued, amounting to $145,000.

I take the next year, 1924, and I find that they set aside a reserve for depreciation of $69,000. They paid interest on debentures chargeable to construction amounting to $422,000, and they paid sinking fund reserve amounting to $226,000.

Mr. WHITE (London): What is the total investment?

Mr. STEVENS: The investment would run from five to seven million dollars. But let me finish my point. The minister talks about a young port. Why, this port of Quebec is hoary-headed. It is three hundred years old. Surely that is a reasonable time for a port to develop. Quebec is the oldest and the most renowned port, historically, in the whole Dominion of Canada, and to talk about needing time to develop its facilities before it can start to pay is sheer nonsense. The facts are these, and my hon. friend the gallant member from Quebec South and his illustrious colleague the Minister of Justice, who I have no doubt will jump to the defence of the port of Quebec shortly—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, no.

Mr. POWER: You have not said anything yet.

Mr. STEVENS: The port of Quebec has never attempted to pay any interest on the advances that have been made to it. It has never given that matter a serious thought. To pay the interest has never entered into the caclulations of the board, and furthermore, this talk about the Minister of Immigration being indebted to the Minister of Marine because immigrants land at Quebec is nonsense, because the people of Quebec are delighted to have these people land there.

Mr. POWER: They don't stay more than half an hour.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps my hon. friend gets a good deal of comfort, then, out of the fact that the new Duchess ships of the Canadian Pacific line are going to Montreal, so Quebec will not be bothered with that traffic.

Mr. POWER: Till they run aground.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend will have to fight that out with the Minister of Marine. The fact is that these new Duchess ships are going to the port of Montreal.

As to the amount of grain handled, there is an elevator with two million bushels capacity at the port of Quebec. I have in my hand a report of the harbour board of Vancouver, showing that in the year 1924 there passed through that port 53,000,000 bushels. And what facilities did they have to handle that 53,000,000 bushels? Only one elevator with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels —less capacity than the port of Quebec has to-day—and yet they handled 53,000,000 bushels. It is true that the present minister, or at all events, that under the aegis of the present minister, the superintendent who accomplished that remarkable feat was fired. They discharged him out of hand. That is the way they recognized the efficiency of the superintendent. However, that is by the way. The point I am making is that with one elevator with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels they handled 53,240,000 bushels. The port of Quebec, with an elevator having a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels, handles 10,000,000 bushels, and the minister coolly informs us that the port is congested and requires an additional 2,000,000 bushels capacity.

Mr. VENIOT: One port is open all the year, and the other for only seven months.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us make allowance for that. The Postmaster General with that subtlety of mind of his developed by his long political training suggests that one port is open for twelve months and the other for only seven months. That was in my mind.

Mr. VENIOT: But it did not come out until it was pushed out.

Mr. STEVENS: I know that my hon. friends from Quebec and Montreal never like us to rub in the fact that these ports are closed for five months of the year, but let us make the necessary allowance in our calculation for that. Take seven-twelfths of 53,000,000 bushels, and you have a capacity—

Mr. VENIOT: Not at all. The hon. gentleman is again unfair. At the port of Vancouver it is a monthly, weekly, and daily in-and-out business, whereas at Quebec it is a system of storage during five months, and there is not the same frequency of in-and-out handling of grain at Quebec as there is at Vancouver. That is where my hon. friend is unfair.

Mr. STEVENS: There is nothing in the argument my hon. friend advances, for this reason, that for seven months of the year the port of Quebec has as ready access to the sea as any other port in Canada.

Mr. VENIOT: Not at all.

Mr. STEVENS: I will leave that to my friends from the port of Quebec to decide. Certainly I shall not argue that they have not complete access to the sea during seven months; just the contrary, and I think I have the support of my hon. friends from the port of Quebec in that statement. If we take seven-twelfths of 53,000,000 bushels, we shall have the figure that the port of Quebec would handle at same ratio, which would be a little over 30,000,000 bushels. The point I am making is this. Here we have Quebec, with 2,000,000 bushels capacity, handling only 10,000,000 bushels. I have no objection to giving them more capacity, none whatever, if they are going to handle grain through that port and export it over the high seas, but if they will use their present equipment to capacity, or anything near to capacity, they will find that, instead of making this lamentable showing, they will have some revenue over expenses for the purpose of paying the interest on capital. I will give the revenue for the port of Quebec from 1923 to 1927:

Year	Gross Revenue	Expenses	Net Revenue
1923	$400,000	$379,000	$ 21,000
1924	568,000	397,000	171,000
1925	568,000	486,000	82,000
1926	678,000	595,000	83,000
1927	702,000	631,000	71,000

That is where the trouble is. Even with the present facilities the port is not properly managed, or the business is not there to permit the earning of sufficient revenue to pay even a modicum of the interest due.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How do the receipts and expenditures compare with those of the port of Vancouver?

Mr. STEVENS: I will give my hon. friend the comparison in a minute. At 5 per cent on the amount invested in the harbour the commissioners would require $850,000 to pay the interest, and last year they had a surplus of $71,000. Now, surely we are looking at this as a business proposition, and I ask: Is it wise for us to spend an additional $8,500,000 on the port until some evidence is forthcoming that there is a possibility of making it pay?

My hon. friend from Frontenac asked for the figures of the port of Vancouver. In 1923—of course, these figures have grown enormously in the last few years—the operating revenue was $725,000, and the operating expenditure $362,000. This suggests another method of comparison. Here is a harbour commission operating with a revenue of $725,000 and an expenditure of $362,000 leaving a surplus of $363,000, or about a 50 per cent ratio; whereas we have in the port of Quebec an operating revenue of $702,000—approximately the same as the revenue of the port of Vancouver—with an operating expenditure of $631,000. I ask the minister to address himself to the harbour commissioners at Quebec in these terms: "Bring down your operating charges and expenditures and thus demonstrate to parliament that you are going to operate this port as a business concern, so there will be some possibility of earning sufficient to take care of your interest. Then parliament will be only too glad to vote any sum that may be required for the development of your port." But the history of the last fifty years shows clearly that there has been no effort whatsoever on the part of the commissioners or those in control of the port of Quebec to make it pay.

This is not a case of drawing invidious comparisons between one section of the country and the other. Take the port of Montreal. For the last forty years that port has paid its interest, and in recent years I believe it has set aside a sinking fund for retiring its bonded indebtedness. It is carrying out its obligations to the people of Canada, and is a well-managed institution. And by the way, even at that there was ample room for rather extravagant expenditures, which I will not for the moment bring into question.

Mr. MILLAR: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman? I believe the record that he has given of the port of Vancouver's operations is correct. But is not this the situation: the record reached at the port of Vancouver was in consequence of a great pressure of grain, which was handled by a very efficient superintendent with small handling facilities—a record that perhaps has not been equalled by any other port in the world.

Mr. STEVENS: That may be for that particular year. Let me take the year 1924, to which my hon. friend refers. In that year the expenditures on operation were just slightly under one million dollars, and the earnings were $1,870,000, and out of the surplus they paid some $400,000 in interest and set aside $226,000 to sinking fund. Again we have an operating ratio of slightly over 50 per cent. When we come before parliament and show management of that kind, I think the harbour commissioners are waranted in asking for support; but when in 1922, 1925 and 1928 we come before parliament and show no progress whatsoever in the differential between operating revenue and operating cost, then I say it is time for the government to be asked to inform the Quebec harbour commissioners, firmly but kindly, that they must produce a better record before they can expect further advances.

Another argument the minister puts forward is this: Give us this money and let us build the facilities so we can earn revenue. I again submit these two reports—and there are similar ones but I cannot get them. I find that these results were achieved by the harbour commissioners for Vancouver while the main facilities, the Ballantyne pier and No. 2 elevator, were under construction at a cost of six million dollars. Yet the commissioners paid each year some $400,000 interest during that construction. I submit to the Minister of Justice, to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and to the cabinet as a whole that this matter ought to be taken seriously. It is no longer possible to bluff us by saying: If you rise in parliament and express your views on this proposal you will be branded as opposed to the development of the port of Quebec. We are not opposed to its development, but we are opposed to the methods of handling the business there; and we have a right to criticize those methods. Personally I do not feel inclined to oppose the bill, in fact I feel very much to the contrary, but I would not be doing my duty if I calmly voted for this loan of $8,500,000 in face of the record that has been placed before parliament on this and other occasions.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Chairman, on every occasion when we have come before parliament to ask for assistance in developing the port of Quebec we have been told that it is a great national port and should be developed, but the official opposition has always objected that we should first arrange to get lower grain rates on the Transcontinental railway, and then parliament would be well disposed to vote the money required for this development. Last year we succeeded in obtaining from the railway commission favourable grain rates to the port of Quebec, thus placing it in a position to compete with the other ports of this country. It has been generally recognized that the money so far advanced for the development of the port of Quebec has been well spent not only in the interests of the province and district of Quebec but of Canada as a whole. We are now before parliament asking for an additional sum to continue these works so as to increase the capacity of the grain elevators, which is something that all competent people have admitted for years to be necessary in order to handle properly whatever traffic may go to Quebec. I am greatly surprised, after the arguments that have been advanced in this house for ten or fifteen years to show the necessity for the development of the port of Quebec, that the opposition should offer objection to the undertaking. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite are not serious when they contend that this money is not needed. They cannot be serious when they pretend that the harbour commission of Quebec has not paid interest on its loan. I admit that a part of the interest has not been paid. But, on the other hand, what has the city of Quebec done to justify the expenditure of money to provide improvements necessary for the development of the port? The city of Quebec handed over to the federal government property worth over $5,000,000. What was that for? It was handed over so that the city of Quebec might be given the necessary facilities for its development. This is known to every hon. member of this house and throughout the country. We have a written agreement from the federal government whereby the government undertakes to do certain works in Quebec to develop that port, in consideration of the property handed over to the federal authorities. When, therefore, hon. members opposite suggest that the commission has not paid interest on the money advanced by the federal government, I say they are not serious, for they overlook the great sacrifice which the citizens of Quebec have made in return for the improvements which they are given. This was recognized by the leader of the Conservative party, Sir Robert Borden himself, who is on record as stating that neither money nor effort should be spared to develop that port. I desire to quote from the first volume of Hansard of the first session of 1919, page 293, what Sir Robert Borden had to say on the subject. As leader of the government at that time, referring to the necessity of our obtaining western traffic, he said:

> Having regard to the probable enormous development of western traffic to this city and its wonderful possibility by reason of the situation which I have described and seeing also the necessity of providing adequately for future development, the government thought it desirable to possess an extensive waterfront on the St. Lawrence. With this view we have acquired three miles of the best waterfront in Quebec extending from Sillery to Cap Diamond; and portions of the waterfront from the Cap Diamond to the Champlain market have also been secured. This magnificent waterfront will give to the government and to the harbour commission the opportunity of almost unlimited development of port and terminal facilities; and I hope you will agree that in thus looking forward to the possibilities of the future the government have taken no unwise course. In adopting this policy, we feel that we are acting not in the interest of Quebec alone but in the interest of all Canada, for Canada as a whole is concerned in the provision of modern and effective facilities necessary for the outflow and inflow of commerce at all great ports.

Those are the words of the leader of the government of that day who recognized that the port of Quebec had to be developed at all costs. It is nothing new to members from Quebec to see such strong opposition when we come before parliament asking, not for charity or for any favours, but that we be given what is our due. We vote millions of money for the development of the harbour of Toronto and other ports as well, and no opposition is offered when reasonable explanations are given for these expenditures. But every time we come before parliament asking for money for the port or the city of Quebec, there is always this opposition, as though we were asking for charity. Once more I say we are not asking for charity, because in return for what we receive we have surrendered to the government more than any other city of Canada has given.

[Mr. Lavigueur.]

Mr. BRADY: I rise to protest against what I consider, in view of the facts we have before us, a very unnecessary expenditure involving a vast sum of money, particularly under conditions that do not by any means substantiate the claims that are being made therefor. I happen to have a few facts which I should like to present to the committee and particularly to the members of the prairie provinces regarding precisely the relationship of the port of Quebec to the prairies. We find that the prairie grain area extends about 900 miles west of Winnipeg; that is to say that grain shipped from west of Winnipeg to Fort William is hauled over 1,250 miles. The average haul of grain reaching Fort William is approximately 800 miles. Taking the several grain railway points some 400 miles west of Winnipeg as the centre of grain production, the average length of haul to Quebec would be 1,750 miles, which is double the length of haul from Winnipeg to Fort William. We know there are three routes by which grain moves from the western provinces; one is by lake and canal, the second is by lake and rail and the third all-rail, which is the way I believe grain would come from the prairies to the port of Quebec. I find that the Board of Railway Commissioners have said that the lake and canal route is fundamentally cheaper and better than the all-rail route; in fact they say the all-rail route is practically ignored as compared with the other two routes. The evidence given by both railways was that their respective western equipments and organizations were fully employed only during one-third of the year while the grain movement was greatest between harvest and the close of navigation on the lakes, and that during the remainder of the year two-thirds of their equipment was idle and their organizations disrupted for lack of traffic. Moreover, we find that the development of this port to such an extent seems to be contrary to the development of our waterways about which we have heard so much, this session, and I fail to see how this great expenditure at Quebec is in agreement with the data which we have received with regard to the hauling of grain.

We are all great advocates of the development of Canadian ports; that is a fundamental principle to which I think we will all agree, and just here I would like to refer to perhaps the newest port on the Pacific coast. We have heard about Vancouver, which is a splendid port and a city with a great future, but the port of Prince Rupert is conceded to be a second Portsmouth. During all seasons of the year, by day and by night, vessels can enter that harbour from two directions, from the north of the Queen

Charlotte Islands or from the south by Cape St. James. There are no tides to interfere with the movement of vessels; there are no fogs to hamper shipping, and along the inner harbour for a distance of eight miles the depth of water is not less than forty feet along the waterfront. The future of the Pacific coast is assured; the great developments in shipping will be on the Pacific, and what is this government doing to promote the great oriental trade which must be developed by either Canada or the United States? The number of vessels entering Prince Rupert has increased since the elevator was built, and we must attribute to the Alberta wheat pool the movement of grain to that port, they have recognized its strategic position and have increased the movement of grain in that direction. Up until last week I think twenty-eight ocean going vessels called at that port, and while I do not know the amount of grain which will go through it this year, I presume it will be in the neighbourhood of 10,000,000 bushels. Last year, which was the first year grain was shipped through Prince Rupert, about 6,000,000 bushels passed through that port. So I would point out that this huge expenditure at Quebec, when all the facts are opposed to it, cannot be in the public interest and certainly is not for the well being of Canada at large. Therefore I do protest against such a large amount of money being spent upon a harbour which during 1926, exported only 3,095,334 bushels of grain, while the port of Montreal exported 74,660,253 bushels during the same period. I can hardly believe the object of this expenditure is to take trade away from Montreal; for I do not believe the exportation of grain from Quebec will be greatly increased by building immense terminals at that port. Even if two elevators are constructed there I do not believe the volume of grain passing through Quebec will be greatly increased.

Mr. EVANS: It is said that the purpose for which this motion is brought before the house at this time is to facilitate the shipping of western grain to the markets of the world, and since I have been in this parliament it has been said repeatedly that these great expenditures on the ports of eastern Canada have been made for the benefit of the western farmer. It seems to me that there is no doubt that the port of Quebec has been discriminated against, and during the last few years it has come out several times in this house that this discrimination has been practised by a combination of shipping companies and by the insurance companies. To such an extent has this been the case that demurrage has been charged for the time taken by a boat to go from Montreal to Quebec to load grain.

Too many of these expenditures are made on the excuse that they are for the benefit of the western farmers; the new elevator at Halifax is another sample of that sort of thing, and it is all charged up against the grain trade. In my opinion, unless Quebec can be shown as a point where package freight will be loaded to the extent to which this improvement will be needed, this expenditure should not be made. I do not believe Quebec will ever be a very great port with regard to the shipment of grain. In the west a good many years ago the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company found it necessary to construct a large terminal at Buffalo. The grain landed at Buffalo is within ten or twelve hours of a port that is open all the year round. At ports such as New York and Boston bargains can be made and transportation secured at the very lowest price. We have found out during the last twenty years, when the Transcontinental has been in use, that the port of Quebec is not a grain port. I think this tremendous sum of money which the house is asked to vote for the port of Quebec is unwarranted and unnecessary. I wish to protest against it and I do so for the reason that the facilities already existing at Quebec have never been used to their fullest capacity, and this is particularly the case in regard to grain. When this expenditure is shown to be necessary I am sure the country will make the necessary appropriation, but at present I am opposed to it and cannot do less than vote against the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL: When a vote of $5,000,000 for the purpose of increasing the facilities at the port of Quebec was proposed in 1925 the group in this corner of the house strenuously opposed it. We pointed out in substance that every facility should be provided for developing trade through that port, but the existing facilities should be fully taken advantage of before further expenditures were made. It is true that since that time the discrimination in freight rates against the port of Quebec have been removed. That, perhaps, is the argument used by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-day in asking that a further sum of money be voted to increase the facilities of that port. To that extent I am with the minister. I believe there is an opportunity now of developing a considerable amount of trade through that port. I do not agree that the rate of 11 cents a bushel from Armstrong to Quebec is an entirely prohibitive one. It is true that it is higher than the usual rate paid on the lakes; but in the early spring and summer, when the full movement of grain is on and there is a lack of competition amongst the vessels moving the grain, the grain rates on the lakes have frequently been higher than 11 cents a bushel. In fact, on one occasion, I think it was in 1922, we paid an average rate of 14 cents on the lakes during the whole season, three cents higher than the present rate to Quebec. Now that the rate to that port has been reduced to 11 cents I believe it will set a maximum for lake and rail traffic. I believe the steamship companies will keep their rates down to 11 cents, so that the reduced rate to Quebec has had a very good effect in that respect. I believe that at certain times in the year, particularly after the lake ports close in the fall, a considerable amount of grain will move forward to Quebec. In addition to that I am of the opinion that there will be opportunities of developing the cattle trade, provided that our cattle do not continue to go to the United States as they do at present. I think we shall develop not only a cattle trade, but traffic in other lines, to the port of Quebec. We in this group kept consistently hammering at the rate question for four or five years until something was finally accomplished. We can hardly be accused therefore of trying to divert the shipment of our own products to foreign ports. It has been proved conclusively that our grain deteriorates in quality when it passes through United States ports. If one will read the report of Professor Rutherford, which is attached as an appendix to the report of the Royal Grain Commission of 1923, it will be found that he points out, as the result of his investigations in the old country, that grain carrying a Canadian grade certificate and arriving in the old country from United States ports has a lower grade than Canadian certified grain shipped from Canadian ports. It shows conclusively that although this grain carries a Canadian grade certificate it is mixed when it passes in transit through the United States, a fact which is seriously affecting the marketing of our grain to-day. Professor Rutherford also points out that in the case of grain arriving in the old country from Vancouver the Canadian grade certificate is accepted due to the fact that there is no mixing at the port in question, or there was none at the time. Therefore it is to our interests to see that every bushel of grain possible is carried through Canadian ports, and I am prepared to go a long way to assist the government in bringing about that condition of affairs.

[Mr. Campbell.]

I am sorry that we have not a little more information on this matter. In view of the fact that $5,000,000 was spent on Quebec only three years ago it is hardly reasonable to expect the house to vote this large amount of extra money now. On the other hand I think that if we could be assured that these facilities were really necessary and that there was going to be sufficient trade at Quebec in a few years to take advantage of them, no objection to the vote would be raised in this part of the house. I suggest that the minister send this resolution to a committee. If that were done there could be called before the committee members of the harbour commission of the port of Quebec, members of the wheat pool, representatives of shipping companies and other interests and the whole matter could be thoroughly investigated. I am sure that we are fair enough not to offer any opposition to the vote provided that the necessity of these facilities is fully demonstrated. But with the information at present in our possession I am not convinced that this expenditure is necessary, and in view of the fact that the port of Quebec has not been paying even interest on its bonds, it is unreasonable to expect this house to vote such a very large sum of money without at least having before it some further information. I am not one of those who hold the Quebec harbour commission responsible for the condition of affairs in the past, because we have been lending the commission money on the one hand to provide facilities, and on the other hand deliberately preventing trade from going to that port. That is the condition of affairs that has existed in the past, due to the prohibitive rates that have existed on the Transcontinental.

The minister of Marine and Fisheries made a statement some little time ago, which was reported in the press, to the effect that if the insurance companies did not cease to discriminate against the ports of Quebec and Montreal, he proposed to see that a Canadian Lloyd's was established. I congratulate the minister upon making that statement, and I hope the matter will not be allowed to remain there. It is something that some of us in this section of the house have been suggesting for many years—not that there should be a Canadian Lloyd's in its entirety, I do not agree with that; but that a large insurance corporation, centralized we shall say at Montreal, as it likely would be, would be of very considerable assistance. I do not believe a profit-making institution, existing purely to pay dividends, would bring any large measure of relief. What we have in the past suggested to the government is that they build up an organization similar to what exists within the Canadian National Railways to-day, an institution that would insure cargoes from all our Canadian ports, collect the regular rate of marine insurance and refund at the end of the year all the money left in the treasury. This institution should be in the hands of capable business men who would see that it was efficiently managed and operated on a cold-blooded business basis, and if the money on hand at the end of the year over and above operating expenses were refunded to the shippers of all those goods, I believe we would then eliminate all the discrimination against Canadian ports. That is where a good deal of the trouble exists to-day, and I suggest to the minister that he consider the establishment of some such organization.

There is no doubt in my mind that shipments from Quebec should carry a very much lower rate of insurance than shipments from Montreal. I have been assured that at least two-thirds of the risk between Montreal and Liverpool is based on the risk in the St. Lawrence river alone, so that the insurance rate from Quebec ought to be relatively smaller than that from Montreal. Under present conditions, however, we are not likely to have a lower rate, for the simple reason that not merely Lloyds but any organization we might build up here would very likely have its headquarters in Montreal, and it is hardly reasonable to expect that a business organization of that kind would do otherwise than endeavour, so far as possible, to assist shipments from their own port. This is the particular business of the government, and if the government really want to assist the movement of traffic to Quebec, I earnestly suggest to the minister that he take the matter into consideration and try to build up an organization along that line. This is not a new experiment; it is done already by the Canadian National Railways and by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. The minister knows, as does every member of the house, that millions of dollars have been saved to the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine by that system of handling their own insurance.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not intend to detain the committee at length, as this question has already had a full and free discussion. I agree with the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) that the bill should be referred to some committee so that the matter may be thoroughly investigated and the interested parties brought together. In 1925 an amount of $5,000,000 was voted for the port of Quebec, and as the situation stands to-day I do not feel that we are justified in voting this additional sum. In 1925 a friend of mine told me—and I am not taking this for the absolute truth, although it was given to me as such—that the moss was growing on the wharves and that on all the piers you could write your name in the dust that had been lying there for years.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Where did that report come from?

Mr. SPENCE: That was the information I got from a particular friend of mine in the city of Quebec, and one who is just as much a friend of that city as is my hon. friend.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: He cannot be a very good friend of the city of Quebec.

Mr. SPENCE: Surely no one would support an expenditure that was unjustifiable, and the robbing of the treasury in order to sink money in a mudhole like that. The minister said that he sank eighteen cribs. He sank more than that; he sank $18,000,000. Everyone knows that I am always pleased to support justifiable expenditure in any part of the Dominion, because you cannot make money unless you are prepared to spend money; personally I am always ready to spend a dollar if I can see a possible return of a dollar and a quarter. This should be the attitude of the government, but they should not spend money simply at the request of any individual. It is unfortunate that Quebec cannot become a grain port owing to the fact that it has access to the sea for only seven months of the year. Moreover there is some mismanagement. Those of us who are in business like to see revenues increasing with expenditures, but in this case the expenditure is increasing out of proportion to the revenue. The expenditure, which in 1923 was $379,000, increased to $631,000 in 1927, or within only $71,000 of the revenue. Where is this money going to? What makes up the expenditure? Is it all for wages and overhead, or what? Perhaps the minister can justify it.

Then we have another bubble that is bursting. Every year we have demands from Quebec against the government in regard to the accommodation of immigrants in that port. If there is any justification for that claim, let us settle it and wipe it off the slate. Let us give Quebec a square deal, but do not let us sink $8,500,000 into that port if the expenditure is unjustifiable. As I have said, I think the better plan would be, as the hon. member for Mackenzie suggests, to appoint a committee to investigate the matter, because I think the government will receive support from all sides of the house if it is shown that the expenditure is justified. Personally I will support it if I can be convinced that it is a proper expenditure.

Mr. SPENCER: One trouble about the port of Quebec, as with the port of Halifax, seems to be its geographical situation. We cannot supply grain traffic to a port which is so situated that it cannot be a grain port. Unfortunately in matters of trade we sometimes try to go against natural economic conditions, and this seems to be a case of that kind. The minister said that the port of Quebec had certain claims against the Department of Immigration. What are those claims? If they are for rent, what is the amount? What is the capacity of the immigration shed at that port? What rent does he think the Immigration department should pay to the port of Quebec? We were told in 1925 by the minister himself that there were elevator facilities at Quebec capable of handling 40,000,000 bushels of grain per season. This year, however, he comes back and asks parliament for a larger amount in order to build additions to the elevator, although last year they handled only 10,000,000 bushels.

Mr. SHORT: First I want to take exception to the remark just made about Halifax being geographically isolated. We have heard the story time and time again from our friends from the west that Nova Scotia is geographically unsuited for the shipment of grain and other shipments from the west. She was not geographically unsuited during the great war when we had to depend upon the port of Halifax for shipments overseas; but when the question is one of shipment of our own commodities in time of peace they tell us that geographically we are unfavourably situated. I am not opposed to this vote for the port of Quebec if it can be justified, but in 1925 we were told that they required $5,000,000 to equip that port so that it could be made suitable for grain shipments. Now they come along two or three years afterwards asking for $8,500,000 in addition to the $5,000,000 appropriation of 1925. We in the maritimes are prepared to support the vote if we are assured that the expenditures are justified. That is all we desire to know, but we want a stop put in this house to the talk about Nova Scotia being geographically unsuited for ocean traffic. We think Nova Scotia should be given a square deal the same as any other province.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: When the $5,000,000 loan which has been referred to several times was voted in 1925, the minister made it quite plain, as recorded in Hansard of June 4, 1925, that that appropriation was to carry out a five-year program. At page 3887 of the Hansard of that date, the question was asked by the hon. member for Macleod:

Mr. Coote: How much of this construction is contemplated this year?

Mr. Cardin: It is very hard to say, but the execution of the whole program will certainly take five years.

Mr. Caldwell: What will the whole program cost?

Mr. Cardin: Five million dollars.

Mr. Caldwell: Is it estimated that this $5,000,000 will complete the whole five year program?

Mr. Cardin: Yes.

I recall, too, that in the year 1925, on June 4th, some of us were suspicious that a federal election was not very far off, and we were right. A federal election came on in the fall of 1925. Is the minister not just a little premature in asking for $8,500,000 at this time? There will not likely be another federal election this year, and it seems to me that the minister is a couple of years ahead of time at least. Surely, according to what the minister told us in 1925, that $5,000,000 has not all been expended, judiciously expended, at least, and if it has, I wonder if he has carried out the spirit and the letter of the resolution upon which the loan was based. I find that the resolution was introduced on May 28, 1925, and a very important clause of that resolution reads:

That the corporation shall, upon any advances being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of issue, and bearing interest payable half-yearly at the rate of five per centum per annum.

It goes on to say that these interest charges shall be collected from tolls, and so on. Now the information given to us is that absolutely no interest has been paid by the Quebec harbour commissioners.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a mistake. The interest was kept back when the advances were made, exactly as was done in the case of Vancouver, although my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre did not say so.

Mr. STEVENS: What was that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: During the period of construction, when those advances were made by the government, an amount sufficient to cover the interest was kept out of the advance by the Minister of Finance. It is very easy to pay the interest in that way, and that has been done in the case of Vancouver as well as Quebec.

Mr. STEVENS: Except in the items I read, interest was provided out of operating revenue at Vancouver.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Out of construction. That is what the hon. gentleman himself said.

Mr. GEARY: The interest during construction is always made a capital charge.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The impression we got over here, with our imperfect facilities for hearing, was that no interest had been paid in recent years, and that there was over $8,000,000 of interest outstanding. Now as a business proposition, when anybody goes to get money from a business concern, if he has not paid the interest and generally some of the principal, he is not likely to get another loan, and I do not know that we would be following strictly business principles in this house if we were even to consider making another loan to a corporation that has been unable to pay interest on the loans already made.

Further, in the debate that took place on the loan that was made to Quebec harbour in 1925, the minister stated that the total elevator capacity of Canada for grain was 200,000,000 bushels. That takes in all our storage elevators, at Vancouver, Fort William, Port Arthur, Montreal and Quebec. We had also one built recently at Owen Sound, and I understand there is a movement on foot to build another one at Collingwood, on the Georgian bay. We have at Quebec an elevator with a capacity of 2,000,000 bushels, and the minister stated in 1925 that that 2,000,000 bushel capacity elevator could handle 40,000,000 bushels of grain in a season. I fail to see where there is any great need for increasing the elevator capacity at Quebec, and certainly with the amount of grain handled at the port of Quebec, some 5,000,000 bushels in 1925, and not quite 10,000,000 bushels in any year since, I fail to see where there is any real need for the expenditure of another $8,500,000 for further elevator capacity at Quebec. I do not know whether there are enough of us here to vote down this unnecessary expenditure, but certainly some of us will vote against it.

Mr. SPENCER: I would ask the minister to give me a reply to my question: what rent does he think the Immigration department should pay to the port of Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot satisfy my hon. friend on that point because I have not before me the accounts, but I think the total amount claimed is in the vicinity of $2,000,000. That is what they are claiming from the Department of Immigration for having placed at their disposal facilities for the landing of immigrants at the port of Quebec, wharves and sheds, and so forth, which the commission was prevented from using for other shipping, and that is the reason for their claim against the Department of Immigration. I am not in a position to say what would be the proper charge, but I can say that the port of Montreal would not be prepared to provide the necessary facilities for the landing of immigrants at that port, and they would refuse to do it because it is not a paying proposition. In fact, nothing has been paid by the Department of Immigration, and it is using facilities which could be devoted to the shipping interests of the port.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What about Halifax and St. John?

Mr. CARDIN: It is the same thing.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Are they paying anything on account of immigration?

Mr. CARDIN: No. The port of Halifax was formerly under the control of the Canadian National Railways, and St. John has made no claim.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They were not losing any money. The government has spent $19,000,000 on the port of St. John without getting any revenue.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): They are asking for a loan.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, because they formed a commission last year in accordance with the Duncan report.

Mr. CARDIN: I may not have given the proper information, or I may have been misunderstood, in regard to the interest. The interest on the loan of $5,000,000 in 1925 was kept back by the Department of Finance, so practically it has been paid. When I said that the interest had not been paid I was speaking of the interest on the previous advances to the port.

Mr. McGIBBON: How much was the interest on the previous advances?

Mr. CARDIN: It runs to several million dollars.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is very indefinite. Is it two, four or six million?

Mr. STEVENS: Over five million.

Mr. MILLAR: What other large Canadian ports have failed to pay interest on advances?

Mr. CARDIN: The port of Vancouver and the port of Montreal are paying interest; they are the only two. The port of St. John was the property of the city, and works were erected there by the government through the Public Works Department.

Mr. MILLAR: Has Toronto paid any interest on its advances?

Mr. CARDIN: No. The port of Toronto is controlled by the city, and the money has been spent through the Department of Public Works.

An hon. MEMBER: How much?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It amounts to $10,490,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this bill going through provided that the port of Quebec pays interest on the loan. The minister refers to the amount owing to the port by the Department of Immigration. Why does he not collect it? If there is any minister in the house from whom it ought to be easy to collect money it is the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke). But the port of Quebec is in very good company in not paying interest. As a matter of fact, this government does not pay interest; the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) has collected money in excess of the amounts due in respect of income tax, and he has retained that money for eight, nine and ten months without paying interest. In fact he still refuses to pay such interest. The sauce that is good for the goose is good for the gander. I do not wonder at the Quebec harbour commissioners declining to pay interest if they think they can get away with it. Then we have the national railways failing to pay interest, and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. So the minister has fairly good precedents to guide him. I submit that the proposal made by the member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) has considerable merit. I would also suggest that from the loan there be deducted the amount of overdue interest.

Mr. GARDINER: Were the immigration facilities at the port of Quebec provided by the Department of Immigration or by the harbour commissioners?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not quite sure, but they are at present under the control of the harbour commissioners and have been for some time. The wharf and buildings occupy the best space in the port.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the harbour commissioners erect the buildings in the first place?

Mr. CARDIN: They were built by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the harbour commissioners consent to the building being placed there?

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: They could not refuse the use of the wharf and building for immigration purposes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The immigration facilities were placed there before the harbour commission was formed.

Mr. SHORT: Were those immigration facilities provided out of the five million dollars which was appropriated for the harbour some years ago?

Mr. CARDIN: No, those buildings and wharf formed a part of the property of the old harbour commission.

Mr. SHORT: Then they were charged up to the general expenditures of the Department of Public Works. This being so, what right has the harbour commission to expect the Immigration department to pay for the use of those facilities?

Mr. CARDIN: All the wharves and buildings erected by the Public Works department have come under the control of the harbour commisisoners since the commission was organized. That is practically the case with all the other harbours—after the incorporation of the various harbour commissions the respective properties, which up to that time had been under the control of the department, were transferred to the various harbour commissions and now form part of their assets. That is why the Quebec harbour commissioners are entitled to some revenue from the wharves and buildings used by the Immigration department.

Mr. SHORT: Then I presume that the same thing will apply to the immigration buildings in the port of Halifax—if our harbour does not pay, the harbour commissioners will be able to charge the Immigration department for the use of the buildings erected by the Public Works department?

Mr. CARDIN: The case is absolutely the same.

Mr. SHORT: And I presume we shall receive the same leniency in Nova Scotia that is extended to Quebec; that is, if we are not able to pay our harbour expenses, the government will not expect any interest on the debentures, and we shall be able to charge the Immigration department for the use of the immigration sheds.

Mr. STEVENS: This is the time to present your bills; bring them along.

Mr. BOYS: I understood the minister to inform the committee that the total interest in arrears was a little over five millions dollars.

Mr. CARDIN: I was guessing; I had not the figures before me.

Mr. BOYS: I wondered if I had misunderstood him, because I have in my hand the report of the board of audit made at the instance of the Minister of Finance, bearing date January 16, 1926. I observe that the board was instructed:

To inquire into and report upon the following matters:
1. The financial affairs of the Quebec harbour commissioners.

The board reported as follows:

Unpaid interest on the foregoing loans, calculated to December 31, 1926, $8,830,992.52.

The same report deals with the indebtedness of the harbour as follows:

—resulting in a net debt of $24,546,412.81 as of December 31, 1926.

To that must be added, if this legislation goes through, $8,500,00, making the total debt $33,000,000 odd. If then we add even one year's interest—and we should allow a year and a half—we find the total indebtedness will be $34,650,000. Surely before we are asked to make this loan we should have more information. I do not know what the attitude of the minister will be towards the suggestion that the proposal should go to a special committee for investigation, but I think it would perhaps meet the situation. Speaking for myself, I have every desire to support any expenditure in Quebec that the facts and figures warrant; but there is certainly nothing before the committee at the present time to warrant increasing a debt that is now over thirty-four and a half million dollars by the vote which the minister now seeks from the committee.

Mr. POWER: I do not think my hon. friend's figures are quite correct. He is adding the $8,000,000 which it is proposed to vote, but he is neglecting to deduct the $7,000,000 claim against the government.

Mr. BOYS: We have not heard about that.

Mr. POWER: Let the hon. gentleman read the document which he has before him. The report of the Auditor General gives it.

Mr. BOYS: If I have made any misstatement I am ready and willing to correct it at once. I have quoted the figures from this report. If there is some claim outstanding in connection with the Immigration department I am not making any reference to it.

Mr. POWER: I did not mean that the hon. gentleman had made any misstatement; I said the figures were not quite correct, in that on the very next page the Auditor General himself admits that there is a claim by the harbour commissioners of Quebec of something like $7,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: He does not admit it; he says the claim has been made.

Mr. BOYS: The claim is $1,300,000 odd and there is a further claim of $2,000,000; and the interest amounts to $3,500,000 odd.

Mr. POWER: It amounts in all to about $7,000,000.

Mr. BOYS: That is correct. It has been outstanding for years without any effort being made to enforce it.

Mr. POWER: There was some question as to how this account arose and who built the immigration sheds. The sheds themselves were built by the Department of Public Works, and therefore by the parliament of Canada, but the wharves on which these sheds were erected were built by the harbour commission. Permission was asked from the commission to erect these sheds and I happen to have in my hand the annual report of the harbour commission in this regard. I will read the following extract from it:

On application permission has been given to the Department of Agriculture to erect immigration buildings on the Louise embankment, or on the breakwater, or on both, with the understanding that the terms for the occupation of the ground will be settled amicably between the government and the commissioners. The site chosen has been the breakwater—

And so forth. Apparently this question has never been settled. As long as I can remember I have heard the claim put forward by the people of Quebec and by public bodies in that province that the Dominion government owed for this. There is a recommendation on the point from the audit board, and I understand that the Department of Marine and Fisheries has always recognized the claim. The audit board recommends that this claim be settled in some way in order that we may arrive at some satisfactory figure, showing just what the port of Quebec does owe the Dominion government, and thus straighten out the matter. In justice to both parties some arrangement should be made to settle the question. I may tell the committee however that to my knowledge the present state of affairs is due to no laxity on the part of the port of Quebec in endeavouring to enforce its claims, because on all possible occasions it has written to the government and forwarded memorials to the different departments in an effort to receive payment. But the commission has received nothing. Every year the annual report of the Quebec harbour commissioners—which report must be made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries—includes certain sums payable by the Dominion government to the commission.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Can the hon. member give us the ground of these claims which are due, or alleged to be due, to the harbour commission, totalling $7,000,000?

Mr. POWER: I have not all the figures; I have some of them.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I thought the hon. gentleman had a statement giving that information?

Mr. POWER: The claim is based partly on the rental for the ground and partly on the services rendered to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the wintering of boats at the wharves belonging to the harbour commission. The Solicitor General has handed me the following statement:

Claims against the Dominion Government		Accrued interest
Department of Public Works	$ 755,209 04	$ 182,620 03
Department of Interior	351,437 32	382,361 30
Department of Marine and Fisheries	314 25	192 54
Department of Naval Service	1,475 00	619 56
Department of Militia and Defence	38 75	16 20
Department of Immigration	2,613,716 00	3,029,070 14
Intercolonial railway	2,637 00	964 05
Commissioners of National Transcontinental railway	2,253 96	823 86
	$3,727,081 32	$3,596,667 68
Total of claims and accrued interest	$7,323,749 00

Mr. BENNETT: My difficulty is with respect to the $3,000,000 accrued interest. It is larger than the principal.

Mr. STEVENS: Compounded for twenty years.

Mr. POWER: I presume that the interest on the loan is compounded too.

Mr. BENNETT: The report does not show whether it is compounded or not and I thought the hon. gentleman would be able to say. This accrued interest of $3,000,000 strikes me as a very large sum; it must be at compound interest. I asked the Minister of Finance whether the $8,000,000 was also compounded, but he was not in a position to say positively.

Mr. ROBB: I think they are both compounded.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I confess I am very much alarmed on behalf of the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke). If the Minister of Immigration is to have deducted from his appropriation this year this charge of over $2,000,000—

An hon. MEMBER: Seven millions.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Seven millions. If he is to have deducted from his appropriation this year that considerable sum, I fear the Dominion of Canada will suffer seriously by the hampering of the hon. gentleman's magnificient efforts to induce immigrants to come to Canada. This is a very serious matter for the minister and I am perturbed to see with what placidity and equanimity he receives these startling figures affecting his department. I should be very sorry indeed to see his wonderful efforts along immigration lines curtailed by millions; most assuredly it would be a calamity to the Dominion. Really I think we are entitled, before this matter goes through, to receive more information than so far has been given us. Probably that will apply to other votes of a similar character. It is all very well to say that $8,500,000 is being asked to provide increased facilities, but that is a very wide term which may mean much or nothing. I think the house should be provided with more details in connection with these expenditures, and I have thought so for some time. Since hearing of this accrued interest and of the demands made upon the various departments of the government by the harbour commissioners I am more convinced of that than ever before. Apparently some of these matters date back fifteen or twenty years, and I wonder who has been handling the business of the harbour commission, to allow these departments to get into debt to this extent. Apparently there has not been a very good business man at the head of the commission, or they would not permit other departments to get into their debt to these amounts. I think we should have more details on the items given us by the hon. member for Quebec, who told us the amounts owing by the Department of Public Works, the Department of the Interior and so on; I think we are entitled to that information.

Mr. BOYS: I would like to read just a reference to the gross earnings and gross expenses for the years 1924, 1925 and 1926. In each case the gross earnings are given as 100 per cent, and the gross expenses for 1924 appear as 69.83 per cent; for 1925 as 85.25 per cent and for 1926 as 87.68 per cent. There is more than a page and a half of this return devoted to the results of operations from 1924 to 1926 inclusive. This is certainly most illuminating, and I am going to venture to read it unless I can secure consent to place it on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want to delay the house or to tax my voice if I can secure consent, but otherwise I will read it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. BOYS: It will be difficult to digest it all as I read it.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no objection to filing it.

Mr. BOYS: It is nearly six o'clock, and I presume it will appear in Hansard to-morrow so that hon. members will be able to read it. That being so, I will hand it in and it can be incorporated as part of my remarks.

Results from operations 1924-1926 inclusive:

The published reports of the Quebec harbour commissioners for the years ended 31st December, 1924, 1925 and 1926, give the following information:

Gross earnings	$ 568,627 77	$ 568,533 25	$ 678,882 06
Gross expenses	397,078 18	484,670 36	595,272 89
Surplus	$ 171,549 59	$ 83,862 89	$ 83,609 17
From which should be deducted overcharges to capital accounts, claims against governmental departments, etc	280,836 52	187,312 88	211,787 64
Deficit before interest on government advances	$ 109,286 93	$ 103,449 99	$ 128,178 47
Add annual interest due the Dominion government.	460,743 45	489,802 20	494,741 17
Deficit before charging depreciation	$ 570,030 38	$ 593,252 19	$ 622,919 64

Assuming that the claims against various governmental departments can be fairly considered as earnings, the results portrayed above would be affected as follows:

Annual deficit (as shown above)	$ 570,030 38	$ 593,252 19	$ 622,919 64
Less claims against governmental departments	116,981 00	97,306 00	113,785 00
Annual deficits before charging depreciation	$ 453,049 38	$ 495,946 19	$ 509,134 64
If interest on the claims against the government be considered as earnings; the above deficits would be reduced by	138,894 00	144,743 05	149,608 35
Annual deficits before charging depreciation	$ 314,155 38	$ 351,203 14	$ 359,526 29

Examination of the published reports clearly shows the expenses to have increased steadily and out of proportion to the earnings during the three years; this fact is set out in the following percentages:

	1924 per cent	1925 per cent	1926 per cent
Gross earnings	100	100	100
Gross expenses	69.83	85.25	87.68

The accounts examined by us provided no explanation for these variations, due largely to the suspension some years ago of cost accounts.

The figures submitted above clearly demonstrate that, even allowing for a reasonable increase in traffic at the port of Quebec, the gross earnings will not be sufficient in any year to pay the operating expenses and interest on government loans; and as no provision has been made for depreciation, it may be forecasted that the annual cost of repairs and renewals will increase considerably in the future.

It will be noticed that the annual deficit for three years, excluding claims against departments of the government and interest thereon—neither of which have been paid by any of the departments—but including interest on government allowances, averaged $600,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the government should endeavour to adjust these claims before we proceed further with this resolution. In my opinion the harbour commission of Quebec have a correct and proper claim against the other departments of the government if their wharves have been used by those departments and if they have not been paid for such use. That is my personal opinion as a lawyer, because it is quite clear that the space thus utilized cost the harbour commission money upon which they have been paying interest. That is quite clear from the report which has been tabled here. The question now is as to the fair allowance for the use of that space and the interest which should be allowed for the non-payment of these rentals by the government departments. There is the further point that it is unfair to ask the harbour commission to pay interest if we do not allow them interest if they are entitled to anything. We all want to be fair, and in my judgment this matter should be adjusted without delay, because we are carrying $8,800,000 arrears of interest against the harbour commission of Quebec, against which they say they have a set-off amounting to many millions of dollars. I do suggest to the Minister of Finance and to the various departments affected that this matter be adjusted without further delay, and the whole debenture debt of the harbour commission reorganized in some way. This might be done as my hon. friend from Centre Vancouver has suggested, by issuing new debentures indicating the amount of the indebtedness as of January 1, 1928. There is nothing more conducive to this very condition than to continue this sort of thing, which is not right or proper. If the facilities which cost the Quebec harbour commission a large amount of money have been used by another department without payment, the commission have been deprived of that space which might or might not have been used by someone else, and they are entitled to receive a reasonable rental.

Here is another difficulty which I think the government might also consider. This is a large sum of money and, when I saw this resolution on the order paper I proceeded to make certain inquiries. We are asked to grant $8,500,000 to the harbour commissioners, and this amount represents 50 per cent of the money which has been expended there so far. That must be borne in mind. Now I find that the large liners are being constructed in such a way as will permit them to go to Montreal, and we are spending roughly $1,500,000 a year to make it possible to navigate from Montreal to Quebec. For instance, the new ships Laurentic and Megantic, together with the new Duchess ships of the Canadian Pacific line, are going to Montreal. I only learned that last week, in consequence of inquiries which I made after I saw this resolution on the order paper. I understand that additional beam has been provided so that the depth of water required will be somewhat less than was formely the case, and the large liners, including the Duchess of Athol and the Duchess of Bedford, as well as the Laurentic and Megantic, ships of roughly 20,000 tons register, all go to Montreal. Under these circumstances, might it not be desirable for the minister to reconsider this resolution, first to give effect to the very proper claims of the Quebec harbour commissioners for such sums as may represent a just and proper rental for the use of their facilities by the various departments of the government? In that regard this is no different from railway companies, which have inter-departmental charges. When one department uses the telegraph system, for instance, although it may have a frank, a charge is made for that particular service. The same applies to other branches of industry; the manufacturing end of a concern makes a charge against the administrative end if it uses part of the manufactured material of that concern, and this is exactly the same principle. The harbour commissioners have only one thing to sell; they sell space, and if that space is used by some of the departments of the government a fair rental should be paid.

Then I submit to the minister that in view of the sums which we are compelled to pay annually to maintain and extend the channel between Montreal and Quebec, and having regard to the fact that these large ships now proceed to Montreal, it is desirable to reconsider the whole situation as to whether or not at this moment it is desirable to contemplate such a large expenditure. This is a national port; I need hardly say that this is not a Quebec port in the general sense of that term. This is a national port and is the concern of every part of Canada, perhaps more especially western Canada because the facilities with respect to grain are the facilities from which it is expected a very large revenue will be obtained if those facilities are used by the public to their full extent. I look at the harbour of St. John, for instance, and I find that last year that harbour handled 25,000,000 bushels of grain, with an elevator capacity of only 2,100,000 bushels. They have a capacity of 1,600,000 bushels at one point and 500,000 bushels at another, and with this total capacity of 2,100,000 bushels they were able to handle 25,000,000 bushels of grain. It did occur to me that with facilities at Quebec capable of handling 2,000,000 bushels, the proper course to pursue at the moment, having regard to the commitments which have been made, would be to ascertain whether or not it would be possible in the seven months of the year during which navigation is possible, to increase the turnover of grain from 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 bushels to possibly 15,000,000 or 16,000,000 bushels. This struck me as a fair suggestion to submit to the minister, because everyone who lives in any part of Canada other than Montreal, Quebec or the eastern provinces is vitally interested in the success of these ports. To the extent to which they are loaded with unnecessary debt it becomes an increasing burden upon the shippers, because the tolls charged must be sufficient to pay the interest upon the investment. Under those circumstances would it be unfair to suggest to the minister, seeing that it is six o'clock, that between now and the time his resolution is next in committee he settle and determine, if possible, the two propositions to which I have directed attention, namely, the claims of the government in respect to the portions of the piers that have been used by various departments as outlined by my hon. friend for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and that referred to in the report of the audit board; and secondly, whether having regard to all the circumstances a less ambitious program might not be possible and a lesser sum appropriated for the purpose at this time. It does appear to me, having regard to what has taken place, that fifty per cent of the possible expenditure is entirely too large a sum to ask for until we have proved by concrete effort what may be accomplished in connection with the movement of grain from the western provinces through the elevators at the city of Quebec.

Mr. ROBB: The statements which have been made by the hon. leader of the opposition will render it much easier for the Minister of Finance when he comes before parliament, as he intends to do, to clean up these outstanding accounts. Indeed, when we provided in the preparation of the budget this year for the writing down, as hon. members will recall, of some $16,000,000 odd that might be classed similar to this in accounts for soldier land settlement, and for advances to settlers for seed grain in western Canada, we had in mind that these old standing accounts with the harbour commission of Quebec should be cleaned up. While much has been said to-day as to the total amount owed by the harbour board of Quebec, it must be kept in mind that the total advances made by the Dominion amount not to $24,000,000 but to $14,000,000 odd.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. ROBB: It is true that the unpaid interest has been compounded to something over $8,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is the minister quite certain of that?

Mr. ROBB: If it is not compounded in the one case it is not in the other, and both accounts are on the same basis. And then it must be remembered that they have an overdraft in the bank amounting to some $747,000 odd. But coming back to the question of expenditure, the Dominion of Canada has advanced the sum of $14,000,000 to provide facilities at the port of Quebec where large liners call. If we did not make provision for the accommodation there of these large steamships their passengers would probably go to New York, Boston, or some other port in the United States, because they would not go by vessel to Montreal. My hon. friend will agree that most of the first class passengers disembark at Quebec and take the train there to their destination. We must keep in mind that we are bringing business to our Canadian railways, and it is not all Canadian business. I recall coming home on a vessel last year that was loaded down, every berth occupied, and on the whole ship there were not one hundred Canadians; most of the passengers were on their way to the middle west and other parts of the United States. That represents the business we are getting through the great port of Quebec. If you compare the $14,000,000 we have invested in Quebec with the money spent on inland ports by the Department of Public Works, I think the comparison will not be disadvantageous to the port of Quebec. My hon. friends might very well allow the resolution to go through, and then the bill to be founded on it can be introduced.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, it is six o'clock.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, April 19, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

JUDGES' SALARIES

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Winnipeg South Centre) presented the first report of the special committee appointed to consider the question of the adequacy of the remuneration paid to the judges of the various courts in Canada, as follows:

Your committee recommend that they be given leave to print their proceedings and any evidence taken by the committee to the extent of five hundred copies in English and two hundred and fifty copies in French, and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Your committee also recommend that they be given leave to sit while the house is in session.

On motion of Mr. Thorson the report was concurred in.

GENEVA OPIUM CONVENTION

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the senate informing this house that the senate doth unite with the House of Commons in approving the opium convention signed at Geneva on the 19th day of February, 1925, after the second opium conference, and which was signed on behalf of Canada by the Canadian representative duly authorized to that effect.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to move:

That the name of Mr. H. A. Stewart (Leeds) be substituted for that of Sir Henry Drayton on the committee on national railways and shipping.

Motion agreed to.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

On the order:

First reading of bill to amend and make operative certain provisions of the Copyright Act.—Mr. Ladner.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): This bill standing in my name, Mr. Speaker, is one which had its origin in the bill of the hon. senior member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier), which was introduced on April 1, 1924. As a result of the introduction of that bill and of a further bill dealing with the same subject in 1925, the subject was referred to a special committee, which prepared a report, comprising some three hundred pages, which I have in my hand. The committee went exhaustively into this question, in which the Canadian Authors' Association, the radio people, the theatrical people, and a number of other people in Canada are interested. The committee's report did not seem to find universal approval, and in 1926 I became sponsor for bill No. 3, which was practically a copy of the bill originally introduced by the senior member for Ottawa. Following its introduction, conferences took place between the interested parties, the Canadian Authors' Association, publishers and printers, theatrical and radio people, and as a result a modification of the clauses which were in controversy was agreed to, so that finally the only clause remaining which was a matter of controversy was one relating to licenses by which printers and publishers have certain rights in regard to reproducing works in Canada against the wishes of the authors of these works.

In 1927, by Bill No. 45, the subject was again introduced into parliament, but through the exigencies of parliamentary business and procedure, that measure was never carried through to completion, and now this bill stands on the order paper in my name for presentation to parliament this year.

I wish to explain that I understand from a statement which the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) made to the house the other day, that it is not the intention of the government to introduce a measure relative to the Copyright Act this session. I believe also that a convention is being held in Rome at which it is hoped by most of us, and indeed it is likely, a representative of Canada will be present. That convention has to deal with matters in connection with the Berne convention, of which Canada along with thirty-five other nations is a member, and as a result of international rearrangements regarding copyright which may be made at that convention, I am hoping that the government will see its way clear to introduce a measure providing a remedy that will satisfy the claims of the authors, as well as certain other remedies which certainly ought to be provided by parliament. I shall not enter into details at this stage because they are well known to the government. As I have reason to believe that the government will, following this convention in Rome, introduce a measure to remedy the situation, and perhaps considerably revise the Copyright Act, I ask leave to withdraw this bill.

Bill withdrawn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

LEAGUE OF NATIONS—CANADIAN STAFF

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. Who represents Canada in the League of Nations, Geneva?
2. What is his position and duties?
3. What official staff does Canada maintain in connection with the league?
4. Who constitute the staff: (a) what are the duties of each; (b) what salary does each receive?
5. What is the total expenditure made by or on behalf of Canada in connection with the league, for the fiscal year 1926-27?
6. What has been the total expenditure made by Canada in connection with the league from inception up to December 31, 1927?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. W. A. Riddell.

2. Canadian advisory officer, charged with furthering Canadian interests in connection with the League of Nations, including representation at conferences and meetings of league organizations.

3. Three members.

4. Name—Duties—Salary.

W. A. Riddell, Canadian advisory officer, $6,000.

Miss M. Clark, secretary, $1,500.

Miss E. McLennan, stenographer, $1,200.

5. $181,119.54.

6. $1,610,223.36.

INDIAN INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, RED DEER

Mr. SPEAKMAN:

1. Has the government leased or rented that property known as the Indian industrial school, situate near Red Deer, in the province of Alberta?

2. If so, to what party or parties?

3. For what period?

4. What annual rental is paid?

5. For what purpose is the property to be used?

6. What acreage is involved?

7. Are the lessees exempt from municipal and school taxation?

Mr. FORKE:

1. Yes.

2. Reverend Roderick A. Macdonell of Red Deer, in trust for the Scottish Immigrant Aid Society.

3. March 1, 1923, to April 30, 1928; in 1926 an arrangement was made to renew the lease for a further five years from April 30, 1928—and thereafter subject to termination by either party on one year's notice.

4. Nominal rental, one dollar per year.

5. For depot and training centre for immigrants from Great Britain.

6. 1,116.

7. The lessee agreed to pay all taxes, rates and assessments which may be levied against the land. The government is not aware of any exemption granted to the lessee by the municipal or provincial authorities.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RAIL AND RIVER COAL COMPANY

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland):

1. Does the Canadian National Railways or any of its subsidiaries own a controlling interest or any stock in the Rail and River Coal Company, situate in the United States of America?

2. Does the Canadian National Railways or any of its subsidiaries own stock in any coal companies in the United States of America; if so, state: (a) names and location of companies; (b) extent of interest or holdings?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. The entire capital stock of Rail and River Coal Company was owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which company now forms part of the Canadian National system.

2. None other than company mentioned in answer No. 1.

GOLDBROOK—UPPER MIDDLE RIVER MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. JOHNSTONE:

1. Who is the present contractor for conveying the mails between Goldbrook and Upper Middle River, in Victoria county, Cape Breton?

2. How long has he had the contract and what is his salary?

3. Who was the previous contractor and when did his contract expire?

4. What was his salary?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. D. A. McRae.

2. Since 1st July, 1927, $150 per annum.

3. Alex. J. Grant & Don D. McDonald, sureties to J. N. McRae (deceased). Contract expired on 30th June, 1927.

4. $93.60 per annum.

CANADIAN FARM LOANS

Mr. BENOIT:

1. Has the government appointed, according to article 3, chapter 66 of the revised statutes, a commission to handle Canadian farm loans?

2. If not, will one be appointed soon?

Mr. ROBB:

1. No.

2. This matter will call for attention on the part of the government as soon as the provinces which intend to participate in the plan are heard from.

OHSWEKEN POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. SMOKE:

1. Who is the present postmaster at Ohsweken, Ontario?

2. When was he appointed and upon whose recommendation?

3. Was Mr. J. S. Johnson, former postmaster of Ohsweken, Ontario, dismissed?

4. If so, was an investigation held, and what were the reasons for his dismissal?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Clifford Styres, OAS.

2. 11th April, 1928. On recommendation of government candidate for constituency.

3. Yes.

4. Dismissal was authorized on representations from the Department of Indian Affairs.

INDIAN SCHOOLS—TEACHERS' SALARIES

Mr. BRADY:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Indian Affairs to increase the salaries of teachers now in their employ?
2. If so, what will be the rate of increase and on what date will the increase become effective?
3. On what basis are the salaries paid to teachers in Indian schools fixed?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. No general increase.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Qualifications, experience and nature of duties.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

INDIAN AGENTS—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. Who is the agent for the Department of Indian Affairs in the province of Nova Scotia?
2. What are his duties and remuneration?
3. Referring in each case to the Indians of Pictou county, Nova Scotia, who is the agent for that department in that county?
4. Who is the medical officer?
5. What are his duties?
6. What was paid him by way of salary for the years 1925-26-27?
7. What was paid him by way of expenses for the years 1925-26-27?
8. What was paid him for medicines or supplies during the years 1925-26-27?
9. What was the total amount spent on or on behalf of said Indians during the years of 1921-22-23-24-25-26-27?

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

IMPROVEMENT AND BEAUTIFICATION OF OTTAWA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the Federal District Commission Act, 1927, be amended to provide,

1. That the period for the payment of the annual grant to the Federal District Commission at present fixed at sixteen years from the first day of April, 1927, be extended to thirty years from the first day of April, 1928, the said annual payment to be reduced to the sum of $200,000.

2. That the Minister of Finance may provide for the purposes of the commission by the sale or other disposition of securities of the commission, guaranteed as hereinafter provided, an amount or amounts not to exceed in the aggregate $3,000,000, or he may, with the approval of the governor in council, pay to the commission, out of the consolidated revenue fund, such sum or sums, not exceeding $3,000,000, as may be required for said purposes, or may make such provision partly in one way and partly in the other. The governor in council may authorize the guarantee of the payment of principal of and interest on any such securities, the proceeds to be deposited to the credit of the Minister of Finance in trust for the commission and released by the minister in his discretion for the purposes of the act.

3. That the Minister of Finance may provide out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may be required to pay interest on the said securities and also such sums as are required for the purpose of establishing a sinking fund or for retiring the said securities by annual instalments.

4. That the provisions of the Expropriation Act instead of the Railway Act shall be made applicable to expropriation proceedings of the commission.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

DEVELOPMENT OF WATERPOWER AND IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, at page 1946 of Hansard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in moving the adjournment of the debate on the St. Lawrence waterway until the papers were tabled, assured the house, in reply to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion), that the debate would be resumed, notwithstanding any obstacles in the rules, when the papers were tabled. May I ask if this arrangement will be carried out? After consulting the whips as to the convenience of members, could a day, or part of a day, be set aside for resuming the debate?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I did not quite catch my hon. friend's remarks. Did he say that I promised a day would be named for the discussion of this matter? I do not think I ever made such a statement. I did say that the rules of the house would be followed, and I remember my hon. friend saying that he hoped the fact that the debate was being adjourned would not preclude some further discussion before the close of the session. I think that is all that was said. I certainly did not intimate that a day would be set apart for the purpose.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I think the Prime Minister is partly right. On the occasion referred to he did not say that a day would or would not be named, but when I asked him if there would be an opportunity for further discussion after the papers were tabled, his reply was that there would be. I pressed my question, but he did not give any further answer.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I intimated that opportunities for discussion are always open to members and that I stand by; but I did not say the government would fix a day for the discussion of this particular subject, because I think that would be going rather too far having regard to other measures of equal importance that await consideration.

Mr. CHURCH: Let me quote from Hansard, page 1946:

Mr. Manion: Just before the Prime Minister concludes, after these papers are tabled, if the house so wishes I suppose there will be an opportunity for further discussion?
Mr. Mackenzie King: The members of the house always have that privilege.
Mr. Manion: Perhaps there might be some obstacle in the way, so I presume it is understood that if the house so desires there may be a further discussion on the papers.
Motion (Mr. Mackenzie King) agreed to and debate adjourned.

There was a definite promise that this debate would be resumed when the papers were tabled.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

INADEQUACY OF ACCOMMODATION

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I desire to bring to the attention of Your Honour the inadequancy of accommodation for committees of the house. I am speaking now more particularly in regard to the committee on railways and shipping, of which I happen to be a member. That committee is occupied with the consideration of very important matters, which involves bringing to Ottawa a number of officials of the Canadian National Railway system with their staff and files, and their time is exceedingly valuable. This morning we were told that the committee would have to meet in a room away off in a corner of the house. Through the courtesy of the government whip (Mr. Casgrain), we turned out the members of the illustrious party opposite from one of their smoking rooms, and we secured very fair accommodation, for which we were grateful. But I submit that an important committee of this character should not be driven from pillar to post for a meeting place. I assume the answer will be that several committees are meeting. No doubt this is the case, but I think we should set up a system so that when a committee has a certain task to perform which it is clearly understood will extend over many days, a room will be set aside for its use. We have held our last three meetings in different rooms, and we only know of the change of meeting place at the last moment, so that necessarily there is considerable confusion in members finding where the committee is sitting. I submit this condition of affairs should be remedied by the proper officers of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: I thank the hon. gentleman for his remarks. I find from various quarters that already this building is inadequate with respect to the rooms available for committees and for members.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall confer with the hon. Minister of Public Works on the matter.

HUDSON BAY

AERIAL SURVEY OF HUDSON STRAIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I want to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when we may expect the report he promised on the results of the aerial surveys in Hudson strait.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I shall be in a position to table that report to-morrow.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): May I ask the Minister of the Interior whether he is yet ready to table the correspondence with the United States in regard to the Chicago drainage canal?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Yes, but I find there is an arrangement with the government of the United States in regard to the tabling of the report. I shall ask the permission of the house—in fact I may do so now—to table the report immediately after eight o'clock, when I should like to make a brief statement on the matter.

LOAN OF $8,500,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

The house resumed, from April 18, consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution. — Mr. Cardin. — Mr. Johnston in the chair:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Quebec in an amount not exceeding $8,500,000 to carry on the construction of terminal facilities, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Some few years ago this house had before it a vote of a similar character. At that time the amount asked for was $5,000,000 and the minister in response to queries stated that the $5,000,000 was to cover a five-year program. Moreover, he said that this was all that would be required for that program. According to his statement, that five-year program will not have reached its conclusion until 1930; yet we find the government coming back to the house again this year and asking for $8,500,000 more. At that time it was demonstrated to the satisfaction of the committee that the facilities at Quebec were ample for the business then being transacted—absolutely ample. A considerable opposition from this corner of the house, and some from my friends to the right, has arisen on the ground of the non-necessity for this expenditure, and the suggestion has been made that the item might be laid over until such time as the traffic flow into Quebec will have shown a sufficient increase in volume to justify the additional facilities asked for. These facilities at the time of the previous vote were not required, but it was explained by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) as well as by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) that if they were provided the business would go to the port. It was also indicated that within a short time it was expected that the grain rate from Armstrong to Quebec would be reduced. Now that grain rate has been reduced; it has been cut almost in two. Yet the total increase has been but 5,000,000 bushels. At that time about 5,000,000 bushels went through the port, and the total last year was about 10,000,000. According to the minister's own admission also the capacity of the elevator will not be reached until 40,000,000 bushels per season passes through the port.

I have visited the port and have seen the docks down there and I must compliment Quebec and this government on the excellent facilities they have provided for cattle. I do not think that an hon. member opposite will allege for a moment that there is any further space required for cattle storage. The question arose yesterday regarding deep sea vessels, liners and so forth, and there was some half-hearted interjection to the effect that the amount of money asked for was required to make it possible for more of these larger vessels to dock. I do not know why that statement should have been made. I myself have inspected one of the largest liners afloat, the Empress of Scotland, which was docked at Quebec; and we all know that many of the other great transatlantic liners dock there frequently.

Frankly I am not prepared at this moment definitely to oppose this vote. If forced to do so I will vote against this resolution, unless the government is prepared to allow the bill which will follow to go before a committee where we can get information from the engineers, examine the blue prints, and have a full demonstration of the requirements of the port, together with proof of the prospects of an increased volume of business. The request is not an unreasonable one. I admit it is not original; the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) made it yesterday, and it was supported by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence). The minister will find that most hon. members on this side of the house will be perfectly willing to pass this resolution if he will agree to send the bill to a committee for further examination. It is perfectly absurd to expect us to let the matter go through at this stage when we take into consideration the weak response the minister has so far been able to make to the request for information as to the necessity for this vote. His explanation has been so futile as to convince me that until we have further information this house would not be justified in passing the resolution. If the minister desires to have the resolution go through, let him undertake to send the bill to a committee. Not only would he be wise in doing so, but he would be showing confidence in his own view of the matter. He would be saying to the house, virtually, "We have nothing to hide; this matter is open and aboveboard. The facilities are needed and we are prepared to prove it." But he has not yet proved his case. Indeed, I do not think the government can prove it in this house, and all we ask is that we be given an opportunity to get the facts. We have a right to ask this before we are urged to vote this enormous sum of money, at least two years before the program of 1925 is completed.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was not my intention to speak at this stage, expecting to make, on the second reading of the bill, any remarks I have to offer. But there have been such extraordinary statements in the course of the discussion that I think I owe it to those I represent in this parliament to say something now. In the first place, this amount which is asked for in connection with Quebec harbour comprises two items. One is to complete the Wolfe's cove harbour development, started after the appropriations of 1925. This item would be $5,310,000. The second item is for new grain and other facilities on the Louise docks—that is, the old harbour. It amounts to $2,840,000. There are also debentures issued to the public amounting to $350,000 which fall due in 1928 and 1929, and these must be met. These are the items which make up the amount of $8,500,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would prefer to finish my statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to get this clearly in my mind. Is the wharf at Wolfe's cove the same wharf for which $2,800,000 was voted in 1925?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In 1925 we voted $5,000,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But of that amount $2,800,000 was for one wharf. Is this the same wharf?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The whole $5,000,000 was for the improvement of Wolfe's cove. I am going to show my hon. friend the work which has been done, if he will allow me to proceed with my explanation.

The reasons given to the house in 1925 were that the old harbour was not sufficient for the traffic which was using the port of Quebec. Obviously the new works, which are not completed, cannot be utilized at present, and there were then and still are seven deep-water berths provided with shed accommodation in that harbour. Three of these berths were used and are being used by ships which carry immigrants, and these berths cannot be rented or leased to shipping companies; they must be available all the time for ships carrying passengers and immigrants. One of these sheds has been burned since 1925, and part of the money which is asked for is to provide for the reconstruction of that shed. Last year only two berths were available for passenger and immigrant traffic, and many ships were detained through lack of accommodation. Two other berths are used for ordinary cargoes such as lumber, cement, asbestos and so on, as well as for cattle. Facilities to take care of that traffic have been built in recent years, and obviously those two berths cannot be used for passengers or immigrants. One berth, number four, is rented to the Canadian Pacific Steamship Company, while two other berths are used for grain and for oil bunkers; these are used to their full capacity. One berth is rented to one of the shipping companies; I do not know whether it is the Cunard or another line. Those are the only berths available, and as I have already said three of them are used for the immigrant and passenger traffic.

A few moments ago my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) handed me a telegram from the secretary-treasurer of the harbour board indicating what space is used for the immigrant traffic. It is as follows:

> Total frontage Quebec for ocean vessels 8,150 lineal feet not including coasting berths. Frontage taken up by immigrants, passenger boats at berths 18, 26, 28 and 29, 3,300 lineal feet, or 40 per cent.

That is the reason why the shipping federation petitioned the government, stating that additional facilities were required there. The president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the head of the Canadian National Railways both endorsed the demands then made upon the government for the extension of the harbour, as being a work which was absolutely necessary.

What has been done? At the time the last vote was passed much opposition was manifested, really more than the bill deserved. The works at Wolfe's Cove were started immediately afterwards, during the navigation season of 1925, and they have progressed satisfactorily during the years 1926 and 1927. Sixteen cribs, having a total length of 2,666 feet, are now sunk in position and filled with stone, and the concrete superstructure on top of these cribs was to have been started early in this year. It is expected that by the close of navigation this year this wharf surface will be completed. The remaining cribs for a length of 1,634 feet, to complete the 4,300 feet of wharf, must be sunk in 1928, as one year must elapse after they are sunk to allow the concrete wall to be erected thereon. The present application for a vote of $5,310,000, which is a necessary complement to the first application, includes the construction of the necessary facilities and equipment without which the wharves cannot be utilized by the shipping interests. When the wharf is completed the facilities to be erected thereon such as sheds, railway tracks, elevators and so forth, are all works which can and must be executed at the same time in order to have these facilities ready for operation with the least possible delay. Some of my hon. friends opposite were asking yesterday why the previous vote of $5,000,000 had not produced any revenue as yet. It cannot produce any revenue until the work is completed; it is easy to see that. Shipping companies have made application for space in the new harbour, as soon as the work is completed. The works which have been begun with the vote of $5,000,000 cannot remain as they are; they must be completed.

The second item is for enlarging the grain elevator and for some other works which are necessary in the old harbour. In 1925, when the question of the shipment of grain through the port of Quebec was discussed in this house, hon. gentlemen opposite of the Progressive group took the position that it was absurd to provide for that movement, because a prohibitive rate was in force on the Transcontinental Railway, and that railway was not serving the purpose for which it was built. I admitted at that time that the claim was sound in many respects. I admit that my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) has been a consistent advocate of the use of the port of Quebec for the shipment of grain. He argued that the rates should be decreased; that it was of vital importance and even a necessity that the port of Quebec should be used for the shipment of grain. Well, I promised at that time that I would use all my energy for the purpose of trying to reach that desirable goal. I think we have succeeded. Much work has been done, and finally we were pleased to have the railway board of Canada decide that the rate had to be decreased. It was decreased and is now 11 cents and as a result, as I said yesterday, the harbour commissioners report that the elevator has been filled since the reduced rate went into force. But those who wish to see the desired goal reached, state that it will be useless to have the rate decreased unless the facilities in the port are also extended. That statement is made in the report of the Royal Commission on Grain. That was not urged by the people of Quebec; that was not the statement of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) or of the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Parent) or of myself. The Royal Commission on Grain said that the storage and elevator facilities in the port of Quebec should be largely extended. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) read a letter yesterday from a man who is deeply interested in the grain trade, Mr. Smith—I think he is one of the officers of the pool—saying that these improvements are necessary, and that shippers cannot take full advantage of the reduced rate unless the needed facilities are provided.

One hon. member who spoke yesterday said that the west is not asking for these improvements and facilities and that they will be a charge upon that part of Canada. Well, I do not think that is a fair argument. As I said, all those bodies which have urged these improvements are not animated by a local point of view. The commission referred to, for example, was appointed to study the problems in connection with the grain trade and they suggested that this work be done. Furthermore, I have in my hand a petition signed by members and senators representing western constituencies, dated September 26, 1920, and addressed to Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister of Canada. No Quebec name appears on that petition. I am not a signatory of it. I did not know at the time that such a petition had been drawn up and signed. But in that petition the very improvements which we are proposing to-day were asked for and suggested by these western members and senators. I will read only the last portion of the petition to the following effect:

> That it make such arrangements that the marine insurance rates from Canadian seaports shall be the same as from New York, and that sufficient additional grain storage be built at Quebec, Halifax and St. John to handle the business in Canadian grain which, we believe, it will be possible to win back from New York, if these suggestions are adopted.

These are the final words of the petition that was signed and addressed to Sir Robert Borden in 1920 not by the Quebec members but by the western members of the House of Commons and of the senate.

Now the trouble we are experiencing is due to the fact that the work is being done under a commission. But we are not responsible for that. The present commission system now in force in regard to the harbour of Quebec was instituted in 1913. Somebody said yesterday: Surely the commissioners must have been lacking in competence to have allowed matters to go on as they did. I think I need only mention the names of those who have been at the head of the board to show that those men did their best. Certainly they were men who enjoyed the confidence not only of the community of Quebec but of Canada as a whole. My hon. friends opposite will remember Sir William Price. Surely that man stood high in the estimation of the people of Canada and his memory has been held in general esteem since his death. Sir William Price was a former chairman of the Quebec harbour board. He is one of those who were responsible for the starting of the work at Quebec, and he always claimed that it was impossible for the commission to take interest because the best part of the harbour is used for government purposes and in the national interest. Then we had

Senator L'Esperance. He is one of the able members of the senate who has been president of the harbour commission. Ask Senator L'Esperance about these improvements. He devoted his time and his energy to carrying out the works projected for the harbour. We have had the late General Sir David Watson, who distinguished himself in the war. He was a president of the Quebec harbour commission and a first class man. I may say that the present president of the Quebec harbour commission, the Hon. Mr. Power, possesses the confidence of all the citizens of the district irrespective of politics, and is doing his best in the interests of the harbour. But as I said 40 per cent of the best part of the harbour is used for national interests and is absolutely unproductive as far as the work of the board is concerned. The commission have tried to remedy that condition, just as their predecessors did. They claim that the most important of the facilities at Quebec harbour are for passengers and for immigrants. The commissioners sought to bring about a remedy and they passed a by-law with that object in view, but every by-law which the board passes has to be accepted by the government. The commission are not as free in that respect as any other financial institution would be. They adopted a by-law to impose a charge of a dollar per head upon every person using the port of Quebec or landing there. There is nothing extraordinary in that. It is done in other ports, not in Canada, but in the ports of other countries. The port of Cherbourg is one of the important ports of France, and it has been built up and developed in that way. I have disembarked and embarked at the port of Cherbourg and I have been charged a tax for doing so. But the government has always taken the position that it would hurt immigration to Canada if such a charge were to be imposed. The claim has been made also that the steamship companies would have to pay the toll and incorporate it in their passenger rates. But successive governments and departments of immigration at Ottawa have always held that we should abstain from such a course in order to encourage immigration. Very well, I do not object to that, but it makes the facilities at Quebec public works in the interest of the country at large. How could you expect interest to be paid when you prevent the commission from collecting the only revenue which they really could collect? I heard my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries say yesterday that the port of Montreal does not want the immigrant traffic. I know it does not. Every commodity that comes into the port of Montreal pays a duty for using the advantages of the port. They prefer there packages, cases and barrels of freight, to enter the port and so they derive an important revenue. Immigrants do not pay anything and, as I have said, the best part of the port of Quebec is used for that purpose. It may be that the system of commissions and making advances is not the ideal one though it has been thought better to let prominent business men in various communities which are interested, manage the affairs of their respective ports. The Duncan report recommended that it would be a good thing for Halifax and St. John if they also had commissions which they did not have before. The system was again ratified by parliament when last year we adopted legislation for the purpose of putting both Halifax and St. John under the control of commissions. These two ports will now be coming to parliament asking for advances; it is the only way by which they can do their work, and there is no way of avoiding it.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the Duncan report contemplated making these ports national ports, not necessarily through commissions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Statutory ports through commissions exactly as in the case of Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT: The report did not put the matter in quite that way.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But it is exactly the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite agree that public money was to be spent on those ports. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We are asked to pay interest. Other ports in Canada have been developed and some of them have not the benefit of being under commissions, but nobody is asking them to pay interest on the money which has been spent on them. It will be seen by the public accounts that the government has spent $19,218,417 on the port of St. John.

Mr. CARDIN: It is $21,000,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Nobody is claiming that they should pay interest on that amount. In the port of Halifax $17,080,049 has been spent by this country and nobody has yet asked that they should pay interest on that sum, or that we should not look at Halifax until they pay the interest. As regards Fort William my hon. friend is not anxious to offer the government interest on the sums which have been expended there. We have spent an amount of $15,000,000 on that port.

Mr. MANION: Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. But when the question is one of Quebec, we are told that $14,000,000 has been spent in Quebec; that interest amounting to $8,000,000 is owing on that, and that we should not do anything for Quebec until that is settled.

Mr. MANION: In Fort William and Port Arthur we handle, I should say, twenty times the quantity of freight that is handled in Quebec. They constitute a national port.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That does not detract at all from my argument.

Mr. BENNETT: The only point that was made was that in case of Quebec there were outstanding obligations, being promises to pay by the commission with interest, whereas in the other cases moneys were expended by appropriations of parliament.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know that. I am endeavouring to explain why such is the case. It is because we are under a commission and the others are not.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If we had no commission and the money had been spent, as has been the case in other ports, we would not be asked to pay a cent of interest.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend think that should be a reason for preventing necessary work from being carried on? I say it is not.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): With regard to the expenditure of $17,000,000 at Halifax, I would point out that that was for the completion or partial completion of the terminals of a system of railways extending over the whole Dominion. It was not a government expenditure for such purposes as that now proposed for Quebec. It was for the construction of terminals to complete the railway system and to enable that system to carry on its business economically and profitably.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Exactly the same as the work we are asking for in Quebec. My hon. friends from Toronto were rather critical yesterday, but I never heard the hon. member for East Toronto offer to pay interest on the sums which we spent on the inland port of Toronto.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. RYCKMAN: Will the Minister of Justice be just? For every dollar that the government has spent on the port of Toronto, the city of Toronto has spent five dollars. Has Quebec done that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is another proposition altogether. I merely say that we have spent $10,000,000 on the port of Toronto and nobody is paying interest on that sum—

Mr. RYCKMAN: And Toronto has spent $50,000,000.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —and some of that has been for works in improving the site in Toronto, works which are not of much use as regards shipping. Other works are being constructed in Canada and nobody is offering to pay interest on them. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) yesterday was one whose voice was loudest as against this nefarious resolution on the order paper. There is a public work called the Welland canal, which goes through St. Catharines, and so far as I am aware nobody is paying interest on that. My hon. friend said yesterday: Why should the grain growers of the west not come to Quebec and build an elevator there as they have done at Buffalo? Is he asking them to go and build the Welland canal because it is, after all, for the shipment of grain that the Welland canal is being built? We are pleased to vote money for the Hudson Bay railway and for the port at Fort Churchill, but I must tell my hon. friends that some of us do not think that Fort Churchill is a better port than Quebec and we do not expect interest to be paid immediately on the expenditure which will be made in Fort Churchill. Nevertheless we are voting the money because we think that national works must not be considered only from the point of view of locality, and that we must see a little further than our own constituency. I do not blame any particular government for the amounts which have been expended. My colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. Cannon) reminds me that we are going to spend money to experiment on the carrying of coal from Alberta to Ontario. We do not expect any interest on that amount but we are voting it because we think it is in the national interest.

We have only a few ports in Canada and I claim that we should equip them properly and that parliament should be rather generous in that regard. What do the United States people do? Some hon. gentlemen are always pleased to quote the example of the United States and so I took the trouble to ask for a statement from that country in that regard.

This was prepared at Washington and I see that to this date the congress of the United States has voted appropriations amounting to $661,613,501.75 for works in United States harbours. The figures in round numbers are as follows:

Boston	$28,000,000
Providence, R.I.	23,000,000

I shall not quote the figure for the port of New York, where, of course, the expenditure is tremendous. In other ports, the expenditure has been as follows:

Philadelphia	$54,000,000
Wilmington, Delaware	6,900,000
Washington, D.C.	4,000,000
Norfolk, Virginia	15,000,000
Wilmington, North Carolina.	10,000,000
Charleston, South Carolina.	10,000,000
Savannah, Georgia	25,000,000
Jacksonville, Florida	23,000,000
Montgomery, Alabama	3,000,000
Mobile, Alabama	15,000,000
New Orleans, Louisana	32,000,000
Galveston, Texas	60,000,000
Duluth, Minnesota	16,000,000
Milwaukee, Wisconsin	27,000,000
Chicago, Illinois	15,000,000
Detroit, Michigan	57,000,000
Buffalo, New York	43,000,000

Before my friends of the pool built an elevator at Buffalo, the government of the United States had spent $43,000,000 on Buffalo harbour. To continue:

Los Angeles, California	$13,000,000
San Francisco, California (1st)	19,000,000
San Francisco, California (2nd)	317,000
Portland, Oregon	36,000,000
Seattle, Washington	10,000,000
Juneau, Alaska	1,000,000
Honolulu, Hawaii	7,000,000
Porto Rico	3,000,000

So I think I may fairly claim that we have a good deal yet to do before our own ports, which are greater ports than most of those I have mentioned, are equipped in the manner congress has provided for American ports. I need not dwell upon the importance of the St. Lawrence route because I think everybody recognizes its importance. I think it will also be recognized that the St. Lawrence ports must be equipped in the most modern way if they are to be in a position to compete with our friends to the south in the matter of shipping.

At the London congress of 1923, held under the auspices of the International Association of Navigation Congresses, Mr. L. H. Saville, chief engineer of the admiralty, made a very important report from which I wish to quote, as follows:

> The percentage number of vessels of 30 feet draught and over is at present very small, but it is on the increase, and there is little doubt that when the Suez canal is deepened to 40 feet, the percentage number above 30 feet draught will be greatly increased, and first class ports would do well to afford a depth in their approach channels not much inferior to that of the Suez canal.

He adds:

> A first class passenger harbour serving the Atlantic trade will require to provide depth in the neighbourhood of 40 feet at low water.

Sir, only the harbour of Quebec on the St. Lawrence can supply such a depth of 40 feet, and at the very works for which this money is requested, the depth at low water is and will continue to be 40 feet.

One more word and I conclude. When other public works have been undertaken—I am referring especially to some of recent date—it has been stated that both of the two historic parties were pledged to the work. Now if there is a work to which both the two historic parties are pledged, it is the development of the port of Quebec. As I have already indicated, Sir William Price and others who opposed me politically in the district of Quebec claimed, and with some reason, that they originated the harbour works at Quebec. At the last general election I had the privilege of hearing the then leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Meighen, in addressing a huge meeting in Quebec which received great publicity all over Canada, say in almost his first words that the port of Quebec would be completed by those who had commenced the work, namely, the Conservative party. Well, we are pledged to it, too, and as far as I am concerned, I am not only going to see that this pledge coming from us is redeemed, but we are also going to redeem on behalf of my hon. friends opposite the pledge they made in that regard. True, Mr. Meighen said that it would be completed by the Conservative party, but really we should have to wait too long for that, so I hope my friends opposite will help me to redeem the pledges which both parties have made.

My friends angularly opposite said yesterday that at the last general election they opposed the loan to Quebec harbour which was made in 1925. That is quite true. It did not hurt us very much, for we were successful anyhow. But let me say to my hon. friends that I could quote not only newspaper editorials but pamphlets and circulars, saying that we of the province of Quebec and the district of Quebec had sold the east to the west on many occasions, that we had always been ready to vote any amount of money that was needed for the west, that we had always accepted legislation for the benefit of the west, but never for the benefit of the east. That is what we were charged wtih in our own district, and it was said that when it came to a national public work of interest to the whole of Canada, our friends from the west, for the upbuilding of which we had been quite willing to expend whatever was necessary, were the very first to try and prevent the Quebec district from getting the public works which it required. I answered at that time that it was quite true that our friends from the west did not help us, but that probably in the years that were to come, with better information, they would amend their views in that respect. I was pleased that the tone was a little better yesterday, and that my hon. friend from Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) almost supported the resolution. Of course, he suggested a committee, which I do not like very much. Why should this bill be given different treatment from any other bill? We are taking the responsibility for this legislation, and we are prepared to give all the information which is needed. I quite realize that those who oppose the legislation would try to put obstacles in the way of its passing, but surely my hon. friend from Mackenzie, who has been advocating the shipment of grain through the port of Quebec, will help us to provide the necessary harbour facilities for shipments through that port.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the minister wants my assistance, all he has to do is to accept my suggestion and send this resolution to a committee of the house, where, if the information we desire and which the minister assures us will be forthcoming is presented, I shall have no difficulty in supporting the measure.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why should not my hon. friend accept my suggestion, rather than force me to accept his? He did not ask for a committee on the Hudson Bay railway, in which he was so deeply interested.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I remind the minister that the vote for the Hudson Bay railway was contingent upon receiving political support from western Canada, and not on the merits of the issue at all?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh, I see. May I tell my hon. friend that it is not so with the vote for Quebec harbour? It is quite independent of the support of the hon. gentleman. We are asking that this work be done in the national interest of Canada, quite independent of the support which is given to this government in the district of Quebec and the province of Quebec, and thank God we are given good support there. We have more than sixty of them.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. minister has certainly made a most excellent defence of the position he has taken, but he has failed utterly to face—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friends opposite will not even wait until I complete my sentence. I say that he has failed utterly to face this fact, that the port to which he is referring is operated under a system of administration adopted by this parliament, namely the harbour commission system. In his recital he reviewed the other ports of Canada which until very recently had been administered by the Department of Public Works or the Department of Marine and Fisheries. But he left out of his calculation entirely the ports that are under a similar form of administration to this, namely, a board of harbour commissioners. We are not complaining—and I insist upon this fact being established—we are not complaining about spending capital money on the port of Quebec. That is not our position at all. Our position is that the works which have been created as a result of the money spent there in the past are not showing a reasonable return to this country. We have no assurance from the Minister of Justice or from the Minister of Marine that this additional expenditure of $8,500,000 will bring any better results. That is our complaint. We are asking for information to demonstrate the soundness of the proposal, and no information is vouchsafed.

Now let me call the attention of the committee, not to a report prepared by some opposition critic of Quebec, but to a report made to the government by its own auditors, and which was placed on Hansard last night. It will be found at page 2157. The report deals with the years 1924, 1925 and 1926. I will take the last year, the figures for the other years being somewhat similar. The administration of this port shows that the gross earnings for 1926 were in round figures, $678,000, and the gross expenses $595,000, leaving a surplus of $83,000. The auditors say:

> From which should be deducted overcharges to capital accounts, claims against government departments, etc. of $211,787.64.
> Overcharges
> Leaving a deficit before interest on government advances of $128,178.47.
> Add annual interest due the Dominion government, $494,741.17.
> Deficit before charging depreciation, $622,-919.64.

Then they take off all of the claims made by the port of Quebec against government departments, leaving a net deficit of $359,000 odd. These are not my figures; they are the figures of the auditors, appointed by the government, who prepared the report. Therefore, any complaint or quarrel must be with the auditors. But this is what I want to specially stress for the consideration of hon. members. The auditors continue:

Examination of the published reports clearly shows the expenses to have increased steadily and out of proportion to the earnings during the three years:—

I pause there. These government auditors present a statement that the expenses have increased steadily and out of proportion to the earnings during the last three years. In view of this I submit to the government that before another $8,500,000 is placed in the hands of the commission some explanation of the statement ought to be vouchsafed to parliament. Then we have the auditors making this further statement:

The accounts examined by us provided no explanation for these variations—

That is, variations in earnings.

—due largely to the suspension some years ago of cost accounts.

Here is another point. The commission comes before this parliament and asks for this additional $8,500,000. The board of audit tells us that the commission has suspended cost accounts, and that the absence of these cost accounts makes it impossible for the board to properly audit the books. Then let me draw attention to this further statement by the auditors:

The gross earnings will not be sufficient in any year to pay the operating expenses and interest on government loans.

Again, I ask, are we to loan another $8,500,000 in face of the statement that the gross earnings will not be sufficient to meet the operating expenses and interest on government loans? We have to determine whether we are going to keep the port of Quebec as a place for the expenditure of public money without any expectation of the interest being paid; or whether the port is to be administered under the aegis of a board of harbour commissioners. If the latter, we have a right to demand that it shall pay interest on its indebtedness to the crown. The report continues:

It may be forecasted that the annual cost of repairs and renewals will increase considerably in the future.

And again:

It will be noticed that the annual deficit for three years, excluding claims against departments of the government and interest thereon —neither of which have been paid by any of the departments—but including interest on government allowances, averaged $600,000.

On excluding these claims, $359,000 last year. Now, it is not a question whether we are going to advance money for the development of the port of Quebec. We have already advanced large sums of money, on which interest is not being paid by the harbour board. The evidence of the auditors shows that this harbour board is not attempting to pay interest on its indebtedness.

A moment ago I said that the Minister of Justice had failed to cite two other harbours that were organized on exactly the same basis as the port of Quebec. I am going to show what the port of Vancouver did last year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We know Vancouver is a splendid port. This is simply for publicity.

Mr. STEVENS: All right, I am going to make a request to the government in a few minutes. But let me first give these facts. Last year Vancouver harbour commissioners paid $681,000 in interest to the government and put aside a reserve for depreciation of $180,000 and for sinking fund of $200,000, or in all $1,061,000. In addition, they had built up a reserve for depreciation of $416,000 and for sinking fund of $800,000. In other words, the reserve now is $1,200,000. Now I say to the government—no, I say to parliament: If it is to be the practice to spend public moneys, as the minister argued at such length and with such vociferousness, without expecting a dollar of interest in return, then the port of Vancouver should be relieved from payment of interest to the exchequer. Why should Vancouver or Montreal be required to pay interest on the advances made to them if other ports are to be allowed to escape payment? Vancouver, Montreal, Quebec, Chicoutimi, St. John and Halifax have asked that their ports be placed under a board of harbour commissioners so that local interests may be taken care of and the port conducted in harmony with the wishes of the people. If the government would put up the capital expenditure, each port authority undertook to pay interest and provide a sinking fund for redemption of loans. We are criticizing this proposed loan because there is no evidence that the Quebec Harbour Commissioners are making the slightest effort to pay the interest on their indebtedness.

Now, I come to what the Minister of Justice and his colleague the Minister of Marine referred to, the claim against the Immigration Department. I agree with my leader (Mr. Bennett) that there is every evidence that there is fair ground for compensation for the use of the harbour. The suggestion was made by my leader yesterday and I repeat it now, that a careful accounting be made by the audit board or by some competent authority to ascertain what the claim amounts to, with compound interest if you like, and that this be written off the total sum owed by the port of Quebec; the remainder to be funded, as part of the funded debt of the country, against the harbour of Quebec, whatever it may be—eight or ten millions. Let us start at that point, and let the harbour board of Quebec undertake to pay its interest and provide a sinking fund. But I may be asked: After this is done are you going to vote this $8,500,000? Let me call the attention of the committee to this fact: three years ago we voted $5,000,000 for the port of Quebec, and parliament was told that this was for a period of five years. We are now faced with another demand, within three years, for $8,500,000 more. Now I submit that this $8,500,000—granting that we are given an explanation of these points to which I have referred—should be cut down to a reasonable amount. So far as I can see there is no justification, in any information that we have had, for the voting of $8,500,000, and I suggest therefore that it be reduced to a reasonable sum. Moreover we are entitled to a clear demonstration as to what it is to be used for, together with some indication of how the harbour board intends to pay the interest and sinking fund in connection with it. Either that, or we should abandon entirely the practice of making loans to the port of Quebec and let the matter be placed under the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Public Works, having all the accounts and the administration submitted to parliament.

I am not sure that I am correct in what I am about to suggest, but I fancy that the accounts of the harbour commission of Quebec are not included in the public accounts presented to parliament. I think I am right in that; the minister indicates that I am. Now, what are we doing? In the face of this record to which I have referred, and in view of the criticism—because it is criticism—of the auditors appointed by the government, we are asked to vote another $8,500,000, the expenditure of not one dollar of which we are going to be allowed to scrutinize. No member of this house can call it in question. The minister cited expenditures at Halifax, Saint John, Fort William, Toronto and other places; but in every instance, so far as these are concerned, every dollar is subject to scrutiny by parliament. In every instance the names of the persons to whom the money was paid have been reported in the public accounts. But in the case of the port of Quebec not one single dollar is submitted to the scrutiny of parliament, nor is any information given as to how it is spent. Under the circumstances I resent the suggestion of the Minister of Justice and others, that in offering these criticisms we are opposing the port of Quebec as such. We are simply opposing the method by which the money is appropriated and expended. There is much more that might be said on the subject, but—

An hon. MEMBER: That is enough.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; some of my hon. friends do not like to hear these criticisms, but parliament must face the facts; and I submit again to the minister and to the government that we should adopt one course or the other. If the money is to be spent without any control on the part of parliament, we have a right to demand a return on these investments. If, on the other hand, no interest is to be paid and no accounting made, then we should no longer vote money on that basis, but bring the matter under the control of parliament and under the scrutiny of the public accounts committee.

Mr. DUNNING: I have just a word or two to say on what I regard as the practical aspect of the problem before the committee, and not so much with reference to the remarks made by my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) who has just sat down. I may observe, however, that as he was speaking I wondered what sort of speech he would have made had his party been successful in the last election and his then leader appeared in the house to carry out the pledge which he gave so specifically when speaking in Quebec during that election.

After all, the point is a practical one. We have the ancient port of Quebec, and we have spent as a country each year millions of dollars to facilitate the carrying of trade past Quebec to ports further up the river. That is a situation which does not obtain in relation to any other of the ports of Canada. In no other case can it be said that the government is spending millions, but for the expenditure of which the trade of a particular port would be much greater than it is. But it is a fact, with respect to the St. Lawrence river, that the millions which we expend—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Thirty millions.

Mr. DUNNING: Thirty millions. I say, it is a fact that the millions we spend above

Quebec have the effect of creating, at least in large part, the problem which has risen in connection with the financing of that port. My hon. friend says that no interest is paid. Why is no interest paid? Because sufficient use is not made of the facilities which have been provided, to enable a sufficient revenue to be earned.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It does not pay, then?

Mr. DUNNING: It is merely a question of getting sufficient business through the port of Quebec in order to enable the fees charged to pay the expenses and interest on the money advanced.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It does not pay now, and you propose to spend another $8,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend interrupts. I venture to say that if we had started with Vancouver—a great natural port though it is—on the basis of advances instead of on the basis on which it was instituted, that port would not in all probability have evolved so quickly to the favourable position which it now occupies. But for many years public expenditures were made in the ports of Vancouver, Halifax and St. John, and subsequently the commission form of administration was instituted under very favourable terms.

The suggestions I have to make have to do purely with the question of enlarging the use made of the port of Quebec and, by enlarging its scope of usefulness, the probability of its being able to pay interest on advances made. Manifestly, from the information which has been placed before the house, the present accommodation at the docks and slips is not sufficient to care for a very much increased trade. It is admittedly necessary to complete the plans which were formed a few years ago for the development at Wolfe's cove, and to which my hon. friend opposite, through the mouth of his leader, is absolutely and completely committed. The promise to complete that work was just as definite on the part of my hon. friends opposite as on the part of leaders on this side of the house.

Mr. McGIBBON: Not necessarily along these lines.

Mr. DUNNING: Since that time a change has taken place. The rate on grain from Armstrong to Quebec has been reduced to a point which has created a grain loading and a grain storage business at Quebec. I do know a little about the grain business, and in my opinion the best way to build up the port of Quebec, from the point of view of revenue, is to provide adequate facilities for the winter storage of grain at that point. I am satisfied that if there were adequate facilities for the winter storage of grain at Quebec the tendency, after the close of navigation on the great lakes, would be increasingly to ship all-rail on the new rate to that port. In fact, it is demonstrated by what has taken place since the new rate came into effect.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister permit a question? He knows the grain business thoroughly. Out of what does a grain elevator make its chief revenue—from grain passing through the elevator or from grain stored in the elevator?

Mr. DUNNING: That depends entirely upon the location of the elevator and the class of business it is doing. At Vancouver the great earnings of the grain elevators come from the handling charges for putting the grain through the elevators. On the other hand an elevator located at Fort William, as the deskmate of my hon. friend can tell him, derives a large revenue from the charge for winter storage.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: I have had the privilege of operating these elevators, and I think I know from whence the earnings came. With respect to an elevator located at Fort William, its most valuable earnings are from winter storage, and the aim of every elevator company at such points is to fill up their elevators for the winter as soon as possible after the close of navigation, because there is then a continuous earning at low expense until spring. It is true that during the period of open navigation every effort is made by the same institution to handle as much grain as possible, but the earning from winter storage is undoubtedly a very profitable source of revenue for any elevator located upon waters which are not navigable during a certain period of the year.

Mr. STEVENS: I quite agree with the minister there, but that was not my question. Take a grain elevator at Fort William, if you like; from what does that elevator obtain its chief source of revenue—from grain passing through the elevator or from the winter storage of grain?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Neither.

Some hon. MEMBERS: From mixing.

Mr. DUNNING: Some of my friends behind me would answer that question in a way which would not exactly touch the point. Again I would say that it depends upon the elevator, even at Fort William. If it is an elevator with a fast handling capacity and a limited amount of storage it will make money out of the handling of grain; if on the other hand it has a large tank storage capacity, it will make money through the storage of grain in the winter. Some of the elevators with which I have had something to do had a tank storage capacity of 10,000,000 bushels. It depends on the nature of the business, and studying the port of Quebec from that point of view I am honestly of the opinion that there are great possibilities, not so much in connection with the fast handling of grain through elevators but in storage for the winter months of grain brought forward by rail during the closed periods of navigation on the lake under the new rail rates which went into effect a year ago. I say that because even with the limited storage capacity available at present the western grain pools have used the port of Quebec to a very considerable extent during the past winter.

Mr. BENNETT: Nine million bushels.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the figure. Why is that; what is the attraction to the owner of the grain in getting a substantial portion of his holdings as far as Quebec? The answer is very plain: A great many of our largest ocean liners turn at Quebec, and these liners carry parcels of grain back to Europe. They are not cargo boats, but almost every one of them loads a proportion of grain, which is practically a ballast cargo. Unquestionably in this way there is an oportunity to have grain moved economically, and indeed at lower rates than prevail at other times on the north Atlantic. In my opinion—and I speak merely as a practical grain man who has had something to do with the business in a rather large way—there are great possibilities in the accommodation of the cheapest kind of grain storage at the port of Quebec in order to enable those interested in the grain business to utilize the low rate which now exists and to accumulate their grain at that point near the seaboard for export as soon as the season opens in the spring.

I have only one other word to say, and that is with reference to the statement of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell). I understood him to say, with reference to the Hudson Bay route, that it was in the nature of a political bribe to the people of the west. If I am unfair in my understanding of what he said I hope he will correct me now. I want to contradict that statement; I only hope my hon. friend was not bribed by it; because I would consider the price altogether too high.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. CAHAN: I do not profess to have the experience with regard to the storage of grain which is possessed by the Minister of Railways, but from such knowledge as I have of the operations of the port of Montreal I think I can say that the earnings of that port are larger during the summer months, when grain is being transhipped, than during the winter months when the elevators are used for storage purposes. I think there is no doubt about that.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish my hon. friend would repeat that statement; I did not catch it.

Mr. CAHAN: I think the earnings per month of the elevators in the port of Montreal are larger during those months when the port is open to navigation than when these elevators are used simply for storage purposes. My hon. friend shakes his head. I will have the figures looked up, and we will have an opportunity to discuss that question later. I wish the minister had refreshed his memory before making such a positive statement as he has made.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not argue that in connection with the port of Montreal they do not have tremendous earnings simply out of the transfer business, but the winter storage in Montreal is clear profit, with no expenses attached to it.

Mr. CAHAN: That is an entirely different issue, and places a different complexion on the statement which I understood the minister to make.

Some reference has been made to Vancouver. I do not think any hon. member of this house who has watched the progress of that port can fail to have a feeling of satisfaction and pride in the way Vancouver has developed. Of course it has the advantage of being on the Pacific coast; it is open during the whole year. Sometimes I think that if Columbus had only discovered the Pacific coast of America before he discovered the Atlantic coast the development on the Pacific coast would have been beyond the reach of our imagination. On our north Atlantic coast, of course, we have severe winters; many of our ports along the St. Lawrence are closed for a considerable part of the year, and the earnings of those ports are seriously diminished as compared with the earnings of the ports on the Pacific coast.

With regard to the port of Quebec, I do not believe any member of this house has any objection to the development of that port in the national interest of Canada. If I felt that we as a party opposed the development of that great port—and it will be a great port in the future—I would have to dissent absolutely from that view. However, I look upon Quebec as a port which is likely to be open all year within the next ten or fifteen years; I sincerely hope that such developments in the navigation of the St. Lawrence to Quebec may be made as to render it possible to keep that port open for at least ten months of the year. Having that possibility in mind, I believe the members of this house are desirous that this port should have every facility which is required for its future development.

However, there is a difficulty in the way. Personally I do not think the traffic of the port of Quebec, which at present is largely a passenger traffic, can be properly developed if it is anticipated that that port will pay the carrying charges on the money necessarily invested in its development. Therefore personally I am opposed to the commission system as applied to these eastern ports with which I am more or less familiar. The Minister of Justice hardly met the criticism which has been made from this side of the house; at least I put a different interpretation upon that criticism than the one which the minister has placed. If the government had come to the house and asked for an appropriation of so many million dollars, five or eight as the case may be, for the purpose of developing the port of Quebec as a national port, without any subterfuge whatsoever, I feel that his proposal would have met with more general approval. This appropriation is presented as a loan, and that is a mere subterfuge. There is no anticipation that the development of trade and commerce in the port of Quebec, which at present consists largely of immigration and regular passenger services with such additional traffic as comes through it in the way of freight will, within a reasonable term of years, create sufficient revenue to pay the interest upon the advances necessary, or for return of the principal or provide for the depreciation of property in the meantime. That being so, why keep up this subterfuge? Why set forth upon the statute books of Canada that you are making a loan to the harbour commission for which you are receiving its debentures upon which interest is payable annually, when there is no reasonable prospect of the port having sufficient revenue to repay to the government the interest and sinking fund on that loan.

That is the criticism which I make with regard to placing such harbours as Chicoutimi, St. John, and Halifax under commissions which receive loans from the Dominion government and are expected to pay the interest on these loans and sinking funds, plus the depreciation of harbour works, from the receipts obtainable from the traffic entering those ports. I suggest that putting Halifax, for instance, under a commission with the expectation that that commission will be able to tax the trade of Halifax harbour to a sufficient amount to repay the principal and interest of the loans necessary for the development of that port is perfectly futile—nay, it is ridiculous. If that port, placed under a commission, is to be taxed a sufficient amount to repay interest plus the cost of operation and sinking fund for repayment of principal, the tax upon the shipping of that port would be so great as to prevent any trade or commerce entering from the Atlantic. And in the case of the port of St. John, for its commission to assume so large a capital indebtedness is one of the measures which will retard the development of the trade and commerce of the port rather than develop it, because it will necessitate placing such a tax upon the trade directly passing through that port as to preclude the port from fulfilling its functions as a great national outlet and inlet. Therefore I suggest that with regard to certain classes of ports which are really parts of our national transportation system, and which are as necessary to transportation as the railways of the country and without which the railways could not function efficiently, they should be regarded as national ports to be sustained by the national government, and that we should not resort to the trick and subterfuge of making advances or loans for the developments of these ports, when the trade and traffic will not give a revenue sufficient to maintain operations and pay sinking funds and interest thereon.

If the government will examine into these eastern ports along the St. Lawrence which are only open for traffic for a limited season of the year, and if it will look into the trade and traffic passing through Halifax and St. John it will find that it will be absolutely impracticable for these ports to earn sufficient to pay their way. Why then go through the farce of making loans which are really cash advances the repayment of which you may never reasonably expect? That is the measure of criticism which I have to make. The port of Montreal is so far paying the interest upon the advances made. It is having some difficulty in keeping up the sinking fund for the payment in the future of its bonds as they become due; and in the case of that port if you are to tax its trade sufficiently to obtain a return to the country of the principal and interest, plus the carrying charges of the port, you will soon have to impose such taxation upon the trade passing through Montreal as to preclude it from really ever functioning as a national port of Canada. I do not like to do things by way of pretext or by subterfuge. Personally I do not like following an ancient practice or a practice which has been established by other governments before the present administration, and to offer the procedure formerly followed as a justification for continuing to make these loans.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Perhaps we are the true Conservatives in that respect.

Mr. CAHAN: I have found the province of Quebec to be more Conservative than it receives credit for. My hon. friend who is so critical of precedents at times, is always willing to justify his own conduct by some far-fetched precedent from a Conservative regime.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is in order that my argument shall have greater influence upon those to whom it is addressed.

Mr. CAHAN: If my hon. friend would address himself to the actual facts and the actual conditions that prevail rather than to devising fallacious arguments to appeal to the intellects on this side, his speeches oftentimes would be more effective than they are.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: But to state my case briefly: It goes against the grain, coming as I do from the province of Quebec, to take an adverse stand, but I would point out that never will a single measure come before the house which I regard as justifiable in the interests of the country as a whole, while at the same time calculated to promote the development of these ports of Quebec but it will receive my earnest support. But it goes against the grain to vote for a loan of $8,500,000 when I know it is essentially not a loan, but that some day in some way some offset must be found for that unless the harbour commission of Quebec is to acknowledge itself bankrupt. If that commission is to be maintained as a commission, an appropriation should be made to it annually for providing facilities for the immigration service which is carried on though the port of Quebec and which is essential to the well-being and development of the whole of Canada. In the second place, apart from the freight traffic, if it is desirable that we should develop the passenger traffic at that port as a great inlet and outlet for both national railways, we should consider making a further appropriation in that respect so as to relieve the city of Quebec of the burden of carrying locally the charges for what is really a great national undertaking and one absolutely necessary not only for the development of the commerce of the country but to preserve for all time commercial outlets and inlets for our export and import business.

Further, with regard to that part of the works which may be developed and which are used in the ordinary course by the steamship companies making their headquarters at Quebec, they should pay a reasonable amount as well for these facilities. What I object to is the futility of placing upon Quebec the burden of alone maintaining these great national services out of the taxable traffic which passes through that port. I do not think Quebec can carry that burden alone. The whole matter should be reconsidered. When I am saying that I am not disparaging the city of Quebec. We have, as the Minister of Railways has said, given certain facilities to trade and traffic as far as Montreal. We undoubtedly will in future provide facilities for trade and traffic far beyond Montreal into the interior as this country grows and develops. But Quebec, to my mind, looking to the future, will become a great ocean port which is bound to carry a large part of the trade and traffic of eastern Canada not only during what we now term the summer and autumn season, but throughout at least ten or eleven months of the year. Therefore I am anxious to see this port developed; but I commend to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and to other hon. gentlemen who represent Quebec in the government that they should consider meeting the problem fairly and fully now, and that they should not year by year place upon the port of Quebec a financial burden in respect of which the trade and traffic of that city alone will never be able to make a sufficient return to meet the obligations of the Harbour Commission.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was evidently somewhat annoyed at remarks which I made the other day, because he brought up the Welland canal as being on a par with this development at Quebec. First of all I wish to point out to him, although he knows it quite well, that the Welland canal is not under the commission but under parliament. The work is being performed by government engineers and each year the accounts come before the department and we have an opportunity of discussing the estimates in the house. There is a great deal of difference between that method of procedure and a commission coming to parliament and asking for a five-year cheque without any regard being had, so far as the house is concerned, to how the money is to be spent, and all we have is an audit that, if any atention were paid to it, might induce members to vote differently from the way they have done in the past. When the question was before parliament in 1925 I never spoke on it at all. I was prepared to sit and listen to the information that was given in regard to the situation. Apparently the fact that I quoted the minister's own statement also annoyed the Minister of Justice. Because I quoted from 1925 the statement of the then and the present minister he did not like it. Was that because it was true? On that occasion I listened to the members who spoke on the subject and I voted on the question because of the arguments brought forward by those who were providing the goods to go through the port. I refer to Mr. Sales, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and others of those who knew. I refer also to the minister who is sitting right in front of me, the present Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke). I do not recollect that he said anything on the question but I know I voted the way he did. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) also made a long address. I voted then against the motion while he also voted against it, and I presume he and others will vote against this further advance because this is worse than the last one.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have received a good deal of information since that time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member may have received something more than information. Perhaps he will give us the information. For the benefit of those who probably did not care to look up what happened several years ago, I want to quote again what was said when the matter came up in 1925. Mr. Caldwell, who was opposing the vote, asked the minister the following question:

Mr. Caldwell: Could the minister tell us what amount of grain the present facilities at Quebec could handle yearly if used to their full capacity?

Those are not, as the Minister of Justice says, the facilities that are being built now or that were being built last year, but the facilities that were in existence in 1925. As regards the facilities that were in existence then, the minister gives this reply:

Mr. Cardin: I am told it is forty million bushels.

That was the capacity then, and what has been the result? Ten million bushels of grain have passed through that port. They have not done more business than that with a forty million bushel capacity and yet they are coming to parliament requesting a larger vote to provide even greater facilities. According to the minister's own statement, the facilities for wheat or other grain are four times as great as they have required.

What is said about the facilities for cattle? They have built large facilities for cattle. With the facilities which were then in existence ten thousand head of cattle could be handled, yet during one year I think the number reached five thousand and the average prior to the present year has not been more than three thousand. Indeed the number went as low as 1,500 head of cattle during one year.

In respect to the Montreal development someone said that by developing Montreal we hurt Quebec. Was it wrong to have developed the port of Montreal? Was the money expended on the port of Montreal money wrongly spent? If the money was properly spent in Montreal, must we now go back and subsidize Quebec to make it as cheap a port as Montreal? If it is cheaper to carry goods to Montreal, that is where they will be carried. I have nothing against the port of Quebec. I want to see all our ports provided with the necessary facilities to carry the traffic that is coming to them, but certainly it has not been demonstrated that Quebec is a cheap port to run, and, of course, the traffic will go where the charges are the lowest.

The minister criticized a remark I made about the western people building an elevator in Buffalo. The remark I made was quite apropos. If those people will go into a port like Buffalo, where grain can be handled cheaper, and will build there an elevator without any cost to the country at all, why should we have to build elevators ourselves in Quebec or any other port if private interests will do it? It must mean that grain can be handled cheaper through Buffalo than through Quebec. The minister told us in 1925 that Quebec had a capacity of forty million bushels, and yet in only one year has it handled ten million bushels; in the other years it has handled only about five million bushels. Therefore, until Quebec is using approximately up to the capacity it has, I do not see why we should spend money to provide further capacity that may never be used.

Mr. MANION: I had no intention of taking part in this discussion because I was not in the house yesterday, and I had not given any particular study to the question, but some of the comparisons which the Minister of Justice made were so malapropos that I just wish to mention one or two of them. He said, for instance, that something like thirteen or fourteen million dollars had been spent on the harbours of Fort William and Port Arthur, which is really one harbour. But the difference is this. While the port of Quebec handled last year something under ten million bushels, Fort William and Port Arthur handled nearly three hundred million bushels, and while the port of Quebec has had over seventeen million dollars expended on it, which with this eight and one-half millions will make over twenty-five millions, about half that amount has been expended on Fort William and Port Arthur, handling the immense amount of grain they do, as well as general freight.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There are other sources of traffic than grain. Over one hundred thousand immigrants came to Quebec last year, and not one to Fort William.

Mr. MANION: I venture to make the assertion that nearly as many immigrants came through Fort William and Port Arthur as through Quebec, and it must be remembered that these immigrants do not stop at Quebec; they pass through.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But they do not land at Fort William.

Mr. MANION: No, but it does not require an expenditure of twenty-five million dollars to prepare the port of Quebec for the landing of immigrants. I was saying that in spite of the vast amount of grain that is handled at the head of the lakes, making Port Arthur and Fort William the greatest grain-shipping port, I believe, in the world, the expenditure on that port is just about half of what will have been expended on the port of Quebec when the sum mentioned here is expended.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not opposed to expenditure at Fort William.

Mr. MANION: Nor am I opposed to expenditures at the port of Quebec so long as the work is really required. The port of Vancouver in 1923 had less than two million bushels elevator capacity, and yet in that year it handled fifty million bushels. It is true that it has not handled so much since then, but with a capacity of two million bushels it handled in one year fifty million bushels.

I think the point made by the hon. member for Lincoln a few minutes ago was sound, and that is that if there is a demand for additional elevator capacity at any port, generally speaking you will find private interests who will be glad to provide the capacity. Nearly all the elevators at the head of the lakes, except one large one, were built by private funds, and I believe that if greater facilities are needed at the port of Quebec, there will be private interests who will be glad to provide them.

I did not rise for the purpose of opposing the expenditure on the port of Quebec because, like anybody else who has visited it, I love the old city of Quebec. I think anyone who has any sentiment in him cannot come away from that city without a real affection for it, but it is the duty of parliament to scrutinize the expenditures that are made at any port and in any part of Canada. Unfortunately, with this harbour commission form of government, we do not get the opportunity of scrutinizing the expenditures at the port. There are many people in the city of Quebec, I believe, who do not think these improvements are necessary. I was there some time ago myself, and while naturally I do not wish to mention names, there were many citizens of Quebec who told me that the expenditures were a long distance ahead of the necessities of the port, and they told me also that the expenditures were made so carelessly that perhaps they were made for other purposes than the building up of the port of Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wish these informers would say that to me. I have never met one who would say such a thing.

Mr. MANION: If they did, my hon. friend would not repeat it in the house. I stand by my hon. friend in supporting the expenditure in Quebec, and by the hon. gentleman behind him (Mr. Power), for whom I have always a friendly feeling. I understand that he is supporting this vote just as I would support a vote for any work that I considered necessary at Fort William or Port Arthur, but I think the government would be well advised to allow all these expenditures to be properly investigated by this house, or if not by this house, by some committee of this house, with the right to call before them the commissioners of the port of Quebec, and go thoroughly into the expenditures which are being made in the port. I do not wish to take the attitude of opposing an expenditure like this, but in view of the comparatively small traffic passing through the port of Quebec, as compared with other ports mentioned by the Minister of Justice, I find it difficult to understand why so much money is needed, and much more difficult to understand why we should not have all these expenditures thoroughly scrutinized, whether they are made in the port of Quebec or elsewhere.

Mr. HARRIS: I would not have taken part in this debate had not the Minister of Justice seen fit to refer to the good city of Toronto. He well knows my feelings with regard to the national port of Quebec. I had the honour and privilege of saying a few words in this house on behalf of the city of Quebec when the minister was in his seat, and he was gracious enough to congratulate me afterwards on the good word I had said for Quebec. It is, however, very disappointing to us to see the slow progress which the port of Quebec is making not only in the handling of grain, but also in the handling of live cattle and hay. When the $5,000,000 loan to Quebec harbour was under consideration in 1925, it was stated that a great movement of cattle and of hay and of grain could be expected through the port of Quebec, but the facts adduced as to those movements are not such as to warrant this house in voting another $8,500,000 for the port, and before we go ahead in an experimental way and spend this large amount of money, I think we should be shown what results have been achieved by the expenditure of the $5,000,000 loan voted in 1925. Before asking us to vote this money, you should demonstrate to us that the port of Quebec is developing as fast as you were wont to prophesy it would when in 1925 you obtained a vote of $5,000,000 for the port.

It has been my privilege during the past five years never to miss an opportunity of passing a day in Montreal and two or three weeks in Quebec. The Minister of Justice will admit that Quebec is not going ahead in point of population and industry or as a national port at the same rate as some of our other ports. In regard to port development, I have in mind particularly Montreal; in regard to growth of population and industrial development I am thinking of the city of Toronto. And may I refer to the manner in which the Minister of Justice mentioned the city of Toronto? His heated tone and wild gesture rather amused me, and I did not think he was helping to improve the bonne entente between the two provinces. The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), the government whip, interjected something about Scarborough beach. Let me tell the house that not one dollar of the money of this Dominion has ever been spent on protection of the Scarborough beach area. It is not covered by the 1913 agreement. In that area which I have the honour to represent there are 100,000 good Canadian citizens, and they deserve some consideration at the hands of the government. The hon. gentleman's interjection was most inept. I may say that the city of Toronto is standing behind the Toronto harbour commission in paying back the bulk of the loss which has been sustained, in order that the harbour may be developed and that loss in years to come converted into an asset not only for the city of Toronto but for the whole Dominion. As every hon. member knows, it is the duty of the Dominion government to protect the shore line where there are large centres of population. Under the 1913 agreement the Toronto shore line protection work from Woodbine avenue west is being assisted by the Dominion government, but not eastward in the Scarborough area, where, as I said, there is a population of 100,000 To-day the city of Toronto has been generous enough to advance the necessary funds to protect the shore line, and up to the present the Dominion government has not been asked to participate in the cost, although, I repeat, it is the duty of the federal authorities to look after this work. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will admit that the city of Quebec is very fortunate in that the rock formation resists the ravages of storms much better than the sandy shore line of Toronto.

Now, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should give us some more details as to what has been done at the port of Quebec during the past three years. What about the shipments of hay, cattle and wheat from the port? What has been the development along the line voiced in this house by many hon. members in 1925—encouraging more and more traffic over the transcontinental line? Let the minister give us facts and figures so that we may vote intelligently on this proposal, and let those facts and figures bear some relationship to the experiment which we undertook in 1925 when we voted $5,000,000 in order that a national port might be developed at Quebec. It might be edifying to hear the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) and other of our Progressive friends reiterate some of the statements they made in 1925 in support of the vote to which I have referred, but they are sitting very quiet to-day—there has been an election or two in the intervening years. I was sorry to see the Minister of Justice rise to such great heights of eloquence in an attempt to introduce political issues. Instead of acting as a statesman and giving us information on which we might base an intelligent decision, he told us what we had done years before. Let me tell him that the people of this country are tired of politics; they want to hear sound business arguments. As the matter stands now, I do not feel disposed to vote in favour of the proposed loan. I would urge the government to use a little common sense and refer the proposal to a committee, for conclusive facts and figures to be submitted. In 1925 we were promised that, given lower freight rates, there would be such a movement of grain through the port of Quebec that the interest and other charges would be fully met. Well, the freight rates have been lowered, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had an opportunity to tell us how the business of the port has developed. Let him now tell us why he is asking for another $8,500,000. Let him base his request on the facts and figures which he must have under his hand at this time.

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that whatever facts and figures I might quote to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Harris) they would not satisfy him, and he would ask for still further information before admitting that this request is absolutely justified.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like the hon. minister to base that assertion on facts too.

Mr. CARDIN: There is one point which does not seem to be very clear in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is the expenditure made out of the vote of $5,000,000 authorized in 1925. As I think I explained at the opening of the discussion, this amount has not been all spent. Work has been started at Wolfe's Cove, the new terminal, but it is not yet completed. About two and a half or three million dollars has been spent in the building of cribs and the dredging necessary for the placing of these cribs, as well as for other materials essential to the completion of the work. The contractors have already sunk sixteen cribs, and the work on the top of the cribs cannot be completed before a certain period has elapsed to permit the proper footing of the cribs. It takes two years before the cribs can be properly sunk, and before you can begin building the concrete superstructure. The work, I say, has been started and cannot be completed before the end of this year. By the end of the summer season of 1928 the work in connection with nearly the whole of the $5,000,000 will have been finished.

There are certain works to be provided for. We have to provide sheds, rails and other facilities on these new wharves which are being constructed, and we come before parliament this year for the reason that we do not wish to run short of money at the end of next year before we can complete the work already started. At the end of the navigation season of 1928, I repeat, certain work I have outlined will be completed. If we have no money available to complete the work at this terminal we shall be exposed to delays, and we decided therefore that it would be preferable to come this year before parliament, before the $5,000,000 has been completely expended, in order to get the necessary funds to carry on profitably.

We have no return to show on the money already expended, for the very good reason given by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and myself yesterday: these works are not completed and therefore cannot be utilized. At the present time the work consists merely in cribs which have been sunk and filled with stone, and a certain amount of dredging has been done. We cannot use the cribs to advantage as they stand. We need the money we are asking for if we are to complete the work, but it will not take the full $8,500,000. The amount necessary to complete the wharves, tracks, sheds and elevator facilities is $5,300,000, and the other sums contributing to the total $8,500,000 are rendered necessary for increased storage capacity in the old section of the port of Quebec. In asking for this money we are supported not only by individuals, by the people of Quebec, but by the shipping federation. We are supported by persons interested in the grain trade, by persons who are supposed to know something about that business. And these persons are to be found not only in the city of Quebec but throughout Canada. What we are asking for has nothing to do with adding to the facilities for disposing of grain in the elevator at Quebec. I stated in 1925 that the present facilities, so far as the elevator is concerned, could handle 40,000,000 bushels of grain, supposing that the 2,000,000 bushel elevator were used all the time. But we are not asking for any increased facilities for disposing of grain; what we want is greater storage capacity.

Mr. GARDINER: How much?

Mr. CARDIN: Double the present storage capacity.

Mr. GARDINER: What is that?

Mr. CARDIN: At present it is 2,000,000 bushels, and we are asking for an additional 2,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. CARDIN: About $1,900,000 for the storage capacity. The balance of the money required is to reconstruct and repair the present wharves in order to permit the advantageous use of this increased storage capacity in the old section of the port of Quebec.

We are also asking for a certain amount, which is included in the $8,500,000, to meet certain debentures due the public. The harbour commission of Quebec owes the public over $1,150,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they guaranteed by the Dominion?

Mr. CARDIN: They were given under the old commission, and we have to meet these debentures maturing presently. All these items are included in the $8,500,000, but what is needed to complete the works undertaken in 1925 and 1926 is the sum of $5,300,000. This will complete the program which has been advocated and supported very strongly by the shipping federation, not only at the request of the people of Quebec but because the members of that federation are convinced that it is absolutely necessary that Quebec be developed more extensively in order to take care of the traffic which should go through that port.

When it is said that we have no justification to offer for this vote, may I ask this question: What better proof, what more urgent request could be suggested than the demand of the shipping federation, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways, as well as the request of the very people who are interested in the grain trade? Even if this matter were submitted to a committee, no one could bring forward anything which would add strength to our argument, for the reason that no stronger support could be given that argument than it has already received in writing from these various quarters. What would be the use of bringing these people before a committee to repeat orally what they have already stated in writing? What they stated in writing two years ago, in the representations they made to the government, is much stronger than anything that might be said orally if they were called before a committee. These are the people whose word we are taking in coming before parliament and asking for this money.

It is all very well to say that the port of Quebec has not shown the same prosperity or the same financial development as the port of Vancouver, and that Quebec has not been paying interest. But the same criticism could be made against all other public institutions to which we have advanced money in the past. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member (Mr. Cahan) have said, "Oh, well, the position is different. You have a commission at Quebec, while at St. John, Fort William and Port Arthur there is no commission." Well, this is only an objection to form and procedure. But what is the real meat of the matter? I submit it is the money which is advanced by the government to any corporation or institution. If we are not getting any return from the port of Quebec we are in no worse position than in respect of moneys we have advanced to other ports or public bodies that have been organized in the country. The objection, I say, is a question of form, and I am free to say that I am almost ready to concur in the views expressed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. It may be that the present system of handling these affairs through a commisison is not the proper one. I have my doubts on the point and I am ready to take the committee into my confidence to the extent of stating that I am considering another scheme of dealing with the business of all our ports in Canada. I think we have reached the time when it is necessary to make a change in the procedure which has been followed up to the present time, and I am quite willing to consider that matter. However, that is a very large problem; it has many aspects which must be considered, and I am not in a position to say that we should delay the work at Quebec until we are ready to come before the house with a new program which will apply to all our harbour commissions and all our Canadian ports. I think I can say to the committee that before very much of this money which we are asking is spent at Quebec my successor or I will come before parliament with a program which will suggest something to take the place of the organizations we have at present.

The port of Quebec has not been paying interest, but as I said yesterday, and as everyone is bound to admit, the facilities are not complete. That port has been only partly equipped, and while the ports of Vancouver and Montreal are showing good results, those results have been made possible because we have spent the money necessary to equip them perfectly in order to take care of their traffic. Quebec has not been getting the advantage of all the traffic which could go through that port, for the very reason which was mentioned by the hon. member for Mackenzie in 1925 and subsequently. The rates on the Transcontinental railway were prohibitive, and no grain went to Quebec by that road. During the last year the position has been changed; grain is moving in larger quantities, and now that we have removed the obstacle of the high freight rates it is time to remove the obstacle of lack of facilities in the port. What is the use of doing away with the prohibitive rate on the Transcontinental railway if we do not have the facilities at the port to handle the grain which will come over the railway? We are not trying to provide for one month or for six months; if we are to look upon these problems from a national point of view, as the leader of the opposition said yesterday, we should provide for the future, and we should be ready to take care of the business which may come to that port. The business will come when the facilities are there, and we should not wait to build up these facilities until the trade is waiting to use them; trade will not come under those conditions. Why is the traffic so large at Port Arthur and Fort William? The reason is that the government, through the Department of Public Works, spent $21,000,000 developing those ports, and that is why the elevator companies established their plants in those cities. If we had waited for them to build their elevators before we spent any money on dredging and on docks, to-day there would be no docks, no elevators and no trade there. I am glad that Vancouver is playing such an important role and occupying such a high position in the development of our country; we are all glad of that, but we must remember in making comparisons between Vancouver and Quebec, Montreal and ports in the maritime provinces, that Vancouver is open all year, while the ports in eastern Canada are open for only five or eight months of the year. But because they are open for only a comparatively short period, should we close them altogether; should we refuse them the facilities which are necessary for their operations during the months they are open? We cannot evade the conditions which exist in Canada, we should be prepared to face the situation as it is, and to look at the requirements of the port of Quebec as we have faced all the other public enterprises we have undertaken in Canada.

I am quite willing to agree that there is a difference in the method of dealing with the port of Quebec and the other ports which have been developed through the agency of the Department of Public Works, but it is only a matter of procedure. Let us change the procedure when we have the facts before us; let us adopt another system then, but so far as the advancing of money is concerned and the proper returns upon that money, the port of Quebec can be considered in the same position as was the port of St. John before the harbour commission was incorporated. That is the position now occupied by the port of Toronto and by other ports throughout Canada. We are not getting a return on all the expenditures we are making for the good of the country; we say we should look at these questions from a national point of view, and I was glad to hear those words used by the leader of the opposition yesterday. Let us look upon these questions in that way, and let us make those expenditures in the port of Quebec which are necessary to assist our railways and our trade in general. We should adopt the attitude we took in connection with the branch lines expenditures. We had to admit that for a few years we could not expect any profit from those branch lines, but we knew they would feed the main lines of the railway; we knew they would help to develop the trade of the country; we knew they would build up the prosperity of Canada and we voted the necessary money, although there was no prospect of an immediate and direct return. The position is the same with regard to the port of Quebec, and I think the request is reasonable particularly in view of the fact that it has been established that we need $5,300,000 to complete the construction already begun, the rest of the money being necessary to double the storage capacity of the elevator which is already there.

This request for a loan of $8,500,000 to the port of Quebec will be duplicated shortly when we consider the question of the port of St. John and Halifax. Why are we making expenditures there? We are doing so because we have been told by the Duncan commission as well as by all the representatives of the maritime provinces that something should be done to permit these ports to develop even in advance of the expected trade. It is pointed out in the Duncan report that these are Canada's natural ports duirng the winter season, and they should be given a chance to handle Canadian trade, some of which is being given to American ports at present. We all agree with that; last year we incorporated the harbour commissioners with a view to placing that port on an equal footing with Quebec, Montreal, Vancouver—

Mr. BENNETT: And Chicoutimi.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, Chicoutimi and other ports, in order to advance the necessary money for their required developments as suggested by the report of the Duncan commission. The same thing applies to the port of Quebec. The case for the port of St. John is no better than the case which has been made for the port of Quebec. Already the government has advanced to St. John the sum of $21,000,000, which has been expended in dredging, building docks and in other ways looking to the development of that port. Who will reproach the harbour commissioners of St. John because they are not paying interest on that $21,000,000, which has been expended by the Department of Public Works? They will never be in a position to pay interest on that money.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the resolution I am moving is justified under the circumstances, and it should be accepted by the committee because the government are trying to do the best they can to develop our facilities in order to take care of our increasing trade. We want to keep the important position in regard to trade which we occupy to-day among the nations of the world.

Mr. GARDINER: When it has been demonstrated that money asked for the development of facilities in our national ports is really required, no objection to that expenditure has been raised in this quarter of the chamber. But the position in which I find myself to-day is that so far we have received very little information as to the purposes for which the money now asked is to be expended. We have received, for instance, no information from the minister with respect to the tonnage capacity of the port. We do not know whether the tonnage is increasing, and if so to what extent. We have no information whatsoever in that regard. Then again no information has been forthcoming as to how much of the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 has been spent and for what purposes that expenditure has been made. The minister has stated that a certain portion of the money has been spent, but for what works and in what amounts we are left in the dark. If difficulty is experienced in putting the present resolution through the house the fault lies with the minister because of the lack of information with respect to it.

Let us return to the situation with respect to this port as it existed in 1925 when parliament was asked to vote the sum of $5,000,000. I have before me the revised Hansard for that year and I observe that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) asked the minister upon what works the sum mentioned would be expended. The minister replied that the first item of the proposed expenditure would be dredging, which would cost $1,500,000. I ask now how much dredging has been done, what the cost has been, and is it completed or only partly completed? We have no information at all in that regard. Then the minister stated that $2,800,000 would be devoted to the building of a new wharf. I ask him to state now how much of that wharf has been completed and what the cost has been up to date. This is another item as to which there is a complete lack of information. The minister on the occasion referred to said there would have to be a reconstruction of tracks on the new wharf at a cost of $125,000. In 1925 we made provision for that work. To-day the minister tells us that out of the vote of $8,500,000 asked for it is intended to provide for tracks on the new wharf. In 1925 the following other items were stated to be provided for by the vote of $5,000,000: Electric light, $3,000; roadways, $65,000; riprap, $70,000; water mains for the water supply on the wharf, $150,000. I suggest that the minister give us some information along the lines indicated. If the information is forthcoming and we are satisfied with it there will be no objection to this vote as far as we are concerned.

Coming to the question of harbour commissions, I quite realize that ports under the care of commissions are somewhat different from ports not managed by commissions. These commissions, of course, are organized for the purpose of making the operation of these ports more efficient. But I would point out that it is highly necessary for parliament to scrutinize closely such expenditures as are proposed here, because the commission is not responsible to parliament. It may be quite true, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) suggested, that it would be advisable to do away with the commission for the port of Quebec. The subject is one to which I have as yet given no consideration, but it may be worthy of some attention.

It is presumed that because the grain rate from Armstrong to Quebec has been reduced there is going to be a very much larger traffic in grain through the port of Quebec. In that connection I have been reading what I had to say on the subject in 1925, when I emphasized the importance of obtaining a lower grain rate. If that were done I thought the port might have some chance of proving a success. Well, the grain rate has been reduced; there is a possibility of a large volume of grain flowing through the port, and it is proposed to devote a portion of the proposed loan to an extension of the elevator facilities so as to accommodate an additional 2,000,000 bushels. The minister stated a few minutes ago that the cost of the new elevator would be approximately 95 cents a bushel storage capacity, or $1,950,000 for a 2,000,000 bushel elevator. Now he says he wants that extra accommodation for the storage of grain in winter time. Did the minister ever stop to figure out exactly what that storage capacity will earn in the winter time? If it is required merely for storage capacity in the winter, too much is being paid for an elevator of that capacity. The rate usually charged for winter storage is one-thirtieth of a cent per day, in other words, one cent for every thirty days a bushel of grain remains in storage. Assuming the capacity is taken up by grain in storage for a full five months, just about sufficient money will be earned in that time to pay 5 per cent interest on the capitalization of these two elevators, no more and no less. So if the elevator is intended merely for winter storage purposes, that does not seem to be to be a very profitable undertaking. If it were a question of storing the grain for a few days until it could be placed on board ship it would be a different proposition, but if the extra elevator is desired simply for winter storage purposes in my opinion it would be impossible for the harbour commission to pay interest on such a basis. That does not take into consideration insurance, depreciation, or other items. Such a proposal, when you examine it very closely, defeats itself. If the minister would just take the committee into his confidence and give us all the information he has with regard to the tonnage going through the port, the increase or decrease, as the case may be, and the possibility of new tonnage; if he would give us all the information that has been asked for by different members of the committee, his resolution might receive a different reception.

Mr. BENNETT: I regret that I have to take issue with certain observations that have been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is an error to suppose that the criticism that has been made in connection with this resolution is directed at the city of Quebec. Speaking for myself I am opposed to any attempt to leave the impression that when hon. members, having in mind the public interest, call attention to certain facts, it is because it is Quebec that is being dealt with. The minister I think very wrongly endeavoured to induce the house and the country to believe that.

Mr. CARDIN: I can relieve the mind of my hon. friend in that regard. I had no intention of saying such a thing.

Mr. BENNETT: I know exactly what the minister said; his language is reported in Hansard. I am glad to have the minister realize that no effort is being made to discuss this or any other item of the same character merely because the city happens to be Quebec or Toronto. The same principles that have been advocated with regard to Quebec will be advocated with regard to Toronto or any other city in Canada. The hon. gentleman in his observations was rather led away by figures than by the application of them. He said that the ports of Fort William and Port Arthur would never be able to pay the $20,000,000 odd that had been advanced to them. No money was ever advanced to them—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Nor to Toronto.

Mr. BENNETT: I was just coming to that. No money was advanced to them or to Toronto, because no commission had ever been set up, and we must consider the fundamental fact that expenditures of public money at the head of the lakes were made by parliament under its direction and control, with the public accounts committee inquiring into every dollar thus expended, whether under contract or otherwise. The harbour commissions at St. John and Halifax were also referred to. Those commissions were not sought by the people of the communities themselves; they were placed upon them by the government in consequence of the Duncan report.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not the case with regard to the port of St. John. They asked for it in 1920, and the proposal was defeated. Afterwards they got it by a plebiscite.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, they asked for it and it was refused. They then took a plebiscite and the majority of the people were in favour of a commission.

Mr. POWER: Is that not asking for it?

Mr. BENNETT: I am just coming to that.

Mr. RALSTON: In regard to Halifax, telegram after telegram was received by me insisting upon the implementing of the Duncan report in its entirety, including the recommendation in reference to a harbour commission.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am endeavouring to say.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend said that it was not sought.

Mr. BENNETT: Not sought in that sense.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, when we rose for recess the hon. the Postmaster General and the hon. the Minister of National Defence had taken issue with my statement that Halifax and St. John had not come under the provisions of the statute relating to harbour commissions of their own motion, but rather because of the provisions of the Duncan report. What I was endeavouring to present to the house was the fact that these two ports had been recommended by the Duncan commission to be treated as national ports. My own personal view was that it was never intended that they should be dealt with by harbour commissions at all, but rather that they should be treated in the sense in which ports are regarded as national ports, just as the free port of Hamburg is a national port; and the Dominion, I suggest, should make the necessary appropriations for dealing with these harbours and making them national ports in every sense of the term. The mere placing of them under a harbour commission I have never thought to be an implementing of the recommendations of the Duncan report.

In this connection might I suggest to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he consider the desirability of utilizing the young engineers of this country who are graduating from the Royal Military College and elsewhere, as is done in the United States. You will find that in the United States the graduates of West Point and Annapolis have been used very extensively in connection with the ports to which reference was made this afternoon by the Minister of Justice. These young engineers have been put in charge of them, have made the recommendations as to the expenditures, and from time to time have secured the necessary appropriations from congress; and in every instance there has been a committee of congress which has dealt with these expenditures and appropriations.

I cannot but think that the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not desire to leave a wrong impression on the house, but the effect of their observations was to do that very thing. The port of Fort William and Port Arthur never had any money advanced to it—never; neither did the port of Toronto; neither did the other ports that were mentioned this afternoon. What happened was that this parliament, on the initiative of the government of the day, appropriated moneys for the purpose of dredging, building wharves, docks, slips, and so forth, and from time to time these moneys were expended on contracts called for in the ordinary course by the minister whose department was principally concerned, and the public accounts of the country of the succeeding year would indicate how the money was expended. But in the case of these harbour commissions we have no check upon the expenditures at all. When I some years ago made reference to the fact that an audit was desirable, it will be recalled that my friend from Vancouver Centre and myself were able to induce my friend the minister to see the desirability of provision being made for the parliament of Canada exercising some supervision over the accounts, the manner in which they were kept, and the purpose for which the money was expended, through an audit board, and the report of the audit board that was placed on the pages of Hansard yesterday is a report made at the instance of the minister, I take it, in pursuance of the provisions of the Audit Act to which reference was last year made.

There is a clear distinction between those cases in which the harbour commission unquestionably will pay its way and in which sufficient interest will be earned by the fees derived from various sources to meet the interest on the sums of money outstanding, and those cases in which it is quite clear the money will not be earned. The port of Quebec certainly is a case that belongs to the latter category. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries this afternoon pointed out what might be hoped to be earned at Quebec. I can only say to him that if he will appeal to the Minister of Railways, he will tell him that a four million bushel terminal will never in the world make a storage terminal. I appeal to my hon. friend from Acadia and to other hon. gentlemen from that section of the house who spoke this afternoon, whether anything short of a ten million bushel terminal can in any sense be classed as a storage terminal with respect to a port like Quebec. It is for that reason that I pointed out that there is no likelihood by the mere increasing of the elevator capacity in Quebec from two to four million bushels of making it a storage terminal, and the Minister of Railways pointed out that the storage terminal is a money-making terminal. I observe, for instance, that last year the harbour of St. John handled twenty-five million bushels of grain, and yet the total revenue of the port of St. John was only about $257,000. That being so, I do suggest to the minister the desirability of reconsidering the whole situation in the light of the knowledge that has come to the government, in the light of the reduced rates that were made last year. I am not now interested in these matters, but at one time

I was very considerably interested in grain facilities, and knew something about them, and I cannot think that a four million bushel terminal will in any sense assist the government in making the harbour of Quebec a storage terminal. You would have to have at least a ten million bushel capacity for that purpose.

I desire to point out further, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that if any effort is made to convey grain by rail to the harbour of Quebec for storage in the spring, the facilities will have to be largely in excess of four million bushels. It is not possible during the time navigation is open to convey the grain to Quebec by rail, in competition with bringing it to the head of the lakes by rail and then down to Montreal by water. Considerable grain that has gone to Quebec in the last twelve months went there by water carriage. I mention that because it does apear to me that if the plan for the development of the port is based on the assumption that a four million bushel terminal will in any sense provide storage facilities adequate to the extent of earning interest on the money invested, the assumption is entirely erroneous.

Now, with respect to passenger traffic I am wholly in agreement with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think there is no more beautiful scene in all the American continent than that from the deck of a ship as you approach the harbour of Quebec at sunrise or sundown. I confess that I have never witnessed that impressive sight without considerable emotion. Quebec in my judgment must always remain the deep water summer seaport of this country, and anything that makes efficient and effective provision for taking care of the large ocean liners that enter the port will certainly receive the support and assistance of those who sit to the left of the Speaker. The Louise basin, if my memory serves me right, has now a depth of water of thirty feet, and, as I understand, there is ample docking and berthing space to take care of all the first class liners, to use the words of the minister, that now or in the near future may come to the port of Quebec, for the reasons I gave yesterday as to the movement up the river of ships of 20,000 tons and over. But the United States traffic, the first class passenger traffic which our ships are endeavouring to secure, must come largely to the harbour of Quebec. I recall coming in there on the Empress of Scotland, and 80 per cent of all the passengers were destined to United States ports, some for New York and Boston, and others for Chicago and further west. Everything that can be done by this parliament, having regard to our financial position, should be done to insure a continuance of that traffic to the harbour of Quebec. With respect to the appropriations for further facilities at Wolfe's Cove, this is principally for the construction of piers upon the cribs that have already been put in place, with additional elevator capacity as well, but only to the extent of 2,000,000 bushels. However, for the reasons I have indicated I cannot think that those extra facilities will add materially to the revenues of the port.

There is a universal desire on the part of the members of this house to insure that the passenger traffic should be retained for the harbour of Quebec, and to assist in every possible way the development of the port in the shipment of grain for export. But we do suggest very strongly that there must be something in the administration of the port itself that does not secure the results that have been secured in other ports. The figures before us abundantly prove this, for they disclose a marked difference between the gross and net revenues that does not obtain at our other maritime centres. The minister is right in saying that having regard to the character of the present facilities it is to be expected that the net would be very low as compared with the gross earnings; but the fact is they are so much out of line that in the opinion of those of us who have given some time and attention to the figures there should be a close examination of the accounts to ascertain if it is not possible to prevent a continuance of this condition of affairs. The minister says that he has in mind a plan by which he hopes to be able to alter that condition. This is commendable on his part. But in the meantime we are asked to vote a very large sum of money by way of loan to the commission. May I point out again that if the minister were asking for an appropriation, it would be subject to the power and control of parliament? But since the commission cannot possibly pay its interest, in the light of the report made by the audit board to the minister, and also in the light of what the minister himself says, should it as a matter of business be permitted to expend these moneys, which are nothing more than a direct appropriation out of the public revenue, without our having control directly through our auditors? In other words, to lend to the port of Montreal or the port of Vancouver—ports that are able to meet not only their interest but to take care of sinking fund and depreciation charges and set aside adequate reserves—is a purely domestic matter; we simply guarantee their securities. But where we have what amounts to a company in default, a company that would be in the hands of a receiver if it were a commercial enterprise, and I lend money on the receiver's certificates, surely I should have the right to audit the accounts. In other words, in this case we should bring before a standing committee of the house those responsible for expenditures in the port of Quebec to ascertain how the money is being expended. For instance, we have sitting now a committee dealing with the Canadian National Railway accounts. Why is it we do not analyse the accounts of the Canadian Pacific railway as we do those of the Canadian National Railways? For this reason, if the Canadian National Railways were an institution that did not require financial assistance from this country, then only from time to time might it be necessary for an audit board or a special committee to be set up. But where you have the very condition with respect to the port of Quebec that you have with respect to the Canadian National railways, namely, the appropriation of public moneys, true, under the guise of a loan, but admittedly with no prospect of the interest being met, should we not do one of two things? Should not this matter be referred to a committee before the appropriation is made? Or, secondly, should not these moneys be treated as expenditures of the Dominion and subject to the audit of the Auditor General under the control of the public accounts committee, with power to send for and examine witnesses to ascertain whether or not these expenditures have been made in the most economical and efficient manner possible?

Realizing as I do the difficulties in respect to freight traffic, I do not think the revenues in that regard can ever amount to sufficient to meet interest demands. If the dreams and fond hopes of some are borne out with respect to deep water communication from Fort William to the sea, there will be less grain stored at Quebec; and if the Hudson bay route is in operation two years from now, there will be still less grain for storage at this port. So it seems to me that this must be treated as a direct appropriation for the public service of Canada to develop Quebec as a national port, and before the minister asks us to give our approval to so large an obligation, he should say frankly to the house that he will treat this as an appropriation subject to audit and that the expenditures shall also be subject to our examination for the purpose of determining why it is that in this port alone the operations are so conducted that hitherto they have resulted in an annual deficit. Under these circumstances is it unfair to ask the Minister of Finance—because it is to him I appeal—to treat this as an ordinary appropriation, giving the people of Canada the right to examine into the expenditures and to determine why a port thus situated should have an annual deficit of operating expenses over operating revenue?—something that does not occur in the other ports to which reference has been made. After a close examination of the whole matter and the securing of reports from the proper officials, as well as from the engineers, if the government believes it is in the interests of the public that these moneys should be appropriated out of the revenues of the country from time to time in order to make the port of Quebec what I have no doubt we all desire to see it become, I for one, subject to the amount being properly determined and its being efficiently and effectively expended, would heartily support it.

It is quite right to say that the party to which I belong has pledged itself to assist in the development of the port of Quebec. As observed by the minister and one of the speakers this afternoon, there should be no question of party politics in relation to that port. It is not something that belongs either to Liberals or to Conservatives; it is not a port in respect of which expenditures should be made either by Liberals or by Conservatives as such. It is a port over which, for the reasons I have indicated, the jurisdiction of the harbour commission should be ended, and the necessary expenditures should be made subject to tenders being called for, contracts awarded, and all expenses checked as they are in other matters. Every dollar spent in Fort William, St. John, Courtenay bay and Toronto, as mentioned by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) this afternoon, was expended under the control of the government of the country as a direct appropriation and not as a loan. There is this distinction to be noted: in the one instance the minister has in the treasury the promise to pay of the ports, which are under commission; in the other case he has none. Among the assets of the country, in the public accounts, are the debentures of Montreal and other ports over which there are commissions. But where public moneys have been appropriated there is no more promise to pay either interest or principal than there is in the case of a post office built in Edmonton, say, or Calgary. Post offices, dredging, wharves, piers, money spent in St. John, Halifax, Toronto, Fort William—all these are moneys taken out of the annual revenue from time to time with respect to which there exists no promise to pay, and there is no question of interest being earned or paid. In relation to these harbour commissions, however, for reasons which may at the time have been good but which in my judgment, and as the minister said this afternoon, have no longer any binding force on us, the harbour commissions have given debentures, bonds, by which they promise to pay these moneys back to the country with interest thereon. And the difficulty lies in the fact that we are now approaching this matter in the same manner as heretofore, although we realize, as the minister has very frankly admitted, that we cannot look forward with any hope to receiving either interest or principal, having regard to the fact that we are endeavouring to develop a national port. If that be so should we not treat this question as we would treat an appropriation to build a wharf in Nova Scotia or a post office at Mahone Bay? Should it not be treated as an appropriation of public moneys for the purpose of developing a public institution, namely, a great port intended to serve the interests of the country as a whole?

Undoubtedly we on this side of the house are anxious to co-operate in building up the port of Quebec; but we are anxious at the same time to ensure that there shall be 100 cents of value for 100 cents of expenditure. For every dollar expended there should be a dollar of effort put forth. If this were a commercial enterprise the receiver would be in charge. We urge, therefore, that there should be direct control on the part of this parliament over the expenditures that are made in connection with the harbour of Quebec. To this end the question should, I submit, be referred to a committee of the house. Much more important is it in this case to refer the whole subject to a committee than it is in the matter of judges' salaries. Where there is default—and were this a commercial enterprise it would involve the appointment of a receiver—the question should be investigated and a report brought down as to what moneys should be spent in order to save what we have already expended. After all that is what a receiver does. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), up in his committee, is dealing with the Vermont Central railway, and we are going to pour large sums of money into that railway, now in the hands of a receiver, with a view to saving what we have now in it.

Mr. DUNNING: We are not pouring any sums into the Vermont Central under a receivership.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: There is an amount of some $4,000,000—

Mr. DUNNING: It is not our money.

Mr. BENNETT: We are behind the receivers' certificate; we have to take care of it. I do not think my hon. friend will question that. The point I am making is that if this were a commercial enterprise the harbour commission of Quebec would be in the hands of a receiver. You know, Mr. Chairman, as well as I do, that if a receiver desires to put more money into an undertaking he goes before a judge, with every detail of the business, and is authorized to issue receiver's certificates for the purpose. In other words, he is enabled to take such action as will save the money already invested in the undertaking. Take the great St. Paul railway: that is the best illustration in recent times of the procedure I am pointing out. When the business has been rehabilitated the receiver was discharged—

Mr. CAHAN: And the receiver's certificate becomes a first charge.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, the receiver's certificate becomes a first charge on the undertaking. Is not the harbour of Quebec in that position? I ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin), a skilled lawyer and an able administrator, whether that does not appear to him to be the situation. We are asked in this instance to put $8,500,000 into the institution. We are agreed that some money must be put into it, because we desire to develop the port as fully as possible. Well, as a matter of business we say that if we put that money in we should have a committee decide how much is required in order that we may save what we have already expended and make the port what we desire to have it become. In other words, that is a direct appropriation by the parliament of Canada to the harbour in question for the purpose of improving it so that it may render to the Canadian people the service we should expect from a great national port. I suggest that in all cases of this nature, where there has been default or failure to pay contractual obligations the question should be referred to the committee on railways and shipping before parliament is asked to vote a dollar. This matter vitally affects the existence of the railways themselves, the National Transcontinental being a part of the Canadian National system, and it should therefore, I submit, be referred to the committee so that the harbour commission may present its case and that those associated with it, including the engineers, may be able to satisfy the committee of the necessity for the proposed expenditure. We are being asked to vote money which, in the case of a commercial enterprise, would be advanced on receiver's certificates. In this instance we ourselves will put up the money, and we should therefore be thoroughly satisfied of the necessity for the proposed expenditure as a means of saving the present investment and improving the facilities that now exist.

I cannot usefully make any further observations. I need hardly say that I desire in every way to assist the minister in carrying out his plans for the development of the harbour, but I cannot think that this house would be true to the trust reposed in it if for a moment it did not point out the facts which I have indicated. The expenditures that may be required for the development of the port should be made only to the extent to which necessity indicates, in the light of knowledge obtained by the standing committee of the house which deals with railways and shipping and subject to absolute control on the part of parliament, through the Auditor General.

Mr. DUNNING: Just a word with reference to my hon. friend's remarks concerning the Central Vermont, which I think are capable of being misunderstood, as I misunderstood them. Of course there is an important difference between the position of the Central Vermont and that of an institution such as we are now discussing. I understood my hon. friend to say that this parliament was furnishing the money to rehabilitate the Central Vermont Railway, but apparently my friend means that receiver's certificates are being issued which, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has said, are a first charge upon the property when the receiver is dealing with the discharge of his receivership.

Mr. CAHAN: And they have precedence over any interest of the Dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: Our interest amounts to $33,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: That may be so; I have not the exact figure in my mind. I would point out, however, that there is a distinction between the Central Vermont Railway and the institution now under review. There is a minority interest in the Central Vermont Railway; there are minority stock and bond holders. In the case of a harbour such as the Quebec harbour I believe the Dominion is the only creditor.

Mr. BENNETT: No, there are bonds in the hands of the public. The minister is overlooking the fact that part of the money requested to-day is to take care of the bonds in the hands of the public.

Mr. DUNNING: Then there is a minority interest, but I understand that they are guaranteed bonds.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries could not tell me.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It would be strange if they were not.

Mr. BENNETT: It seems that they were issued in the early days.

Mr. GEARY: I believe there are now outstanding, in the hands of the public, bonds totalling $1,100,000 against the harbour commissioners of Quebec. These bonds were offered for sale and were taken up by the public under powers which were conferred in the original act.

Mr. DUNNING: Unguaranteed?

Mr. GEARY: I do not know, but it is stated somewhere. I do not flatter myself that I can usefully add anything to the discussion up to this point, and I would have had nothing to say had it not been for the manner in which the Minister of Justice put his case this afternoon. It seemed to me that the minister made this a local issue as between the city of Quebec and some of the other municipalities in the province of Ontario, and incidentally the Minister of Justice, together with two or three of his friends behind him, had something to say about the harbour commissioners of Toronto.

There is no interest paid and no interest due in regard to expenditures made by the harbour commissioners of Toronto. In 1911 the harbour commission was formed by a statute of this parliament, and it was definitely provided in that statute that this should not be a Dominion commission in the sense of having control of navigation facilities only, but that it should be a land company in effect and that the city of Toronto should turn over to the harbour commissioners all its waterfront property, worth many millions of dollars. Under that act the harbour commissioners:

> . . . . may hold, take, develop and administer on behalf of the city of Toronto, subject to such terms and conditions as may, at the time the control thereof is transferred to the corporation, be agreed upon with the council of the city, the area known as Ashbridge's bay, together with the dock property and water lots owned by the city of Toronto in the harbour as defined by this act. . . .

All the property of the city of Toronto, including Ashbridge's bay and the docks, wharves and land along this waterfront, was turned over to the harbour commissioners of Toronto who have administered it since. There was no provision in the act by which the harbour commissioners could secure advances from the Dominion government; on the contrary, they have gone to the public for their money and have borrowed it on bond issues which have been endorsed largely by the city of Toronto. Although the interest on these bonds has not been kept up out of the proceeds of the harbour, the deficit has been made up by the corporation of the city of Toronto, and the bonds are in good standing with all payments made to date. The city of Toronto has never come to this parliament for any advance whatever on account of its harbour. It has been suggested by hon. members opposite that because there is an amusement park in the west end of the city called Sunnyside, and another in the east end called Scarborough, the moneys of the Dominion have gone towards the establishment and maintenance of these parks, but that is a misapprehension; not one dollar has gone for that purpose. These lands have been reclaimed at the expense of the city of Toronto; the parks have been laid out, the buildings erected and the property managed by the harbour commissioners out of the revenues of the harbour chiefly derived from lands turned over by the city, supplemented by the amounts the city of Toronto has been obliged to pay. I should say that for every dollar spent by the Dominion government on navigation five to six dollars of city money have been added to the funds of the harbour commissioners. You might as well talk of charging interest on the money expended in dredging the river channel between Montreal and Quebec as to mention charging interest on the expenditures for navigation purposes at either Port Arthur or Toronto. It is the same thing, and as my leader has said, in every case the appropriation and expenditure of the money placed at the disposal of the harbour commissioners of the port of Toronto for navigation purposes has been under the scrutiny of this parliament.

Perhaps that will settle this point in the minds of hon. members of the house, and I have only a word to add in regard to the proposal now before us. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that out of the amount now asked for, some $5,310,000 is required to complete the work for which this parliament appropriated $5,000,000 only three years ago. The terms of that appropriation were very definite; it was worded as follows:

. . . . such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of five million dollars, as may be required to enable the corporation to complete the construction of terminal facilities in the harbour of Quebec, for which the plans, specifications and estimates have been approved by the governor in council before the passing of this act; and to construct. . . .

[Mr. Geary.]

It does not say to begin the construction, or to construct in part.

. . . . such additional terminal facilities as may be likewise approved as necessary, further to properly equip the said port.

My understanding of the situation, as outlined by the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is that this $5,000,000 improvement has been started, and it has been found impossible to complete the work with the sum voted. Whether it was estimated wrongly at the time or whether it was known that $5,000,000 would not be sufficient I do not know, but it would appear that $5,000,000 is only half enough. The works are in an incomplete state, partly under water; they will be lost if further moneys are not voted, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries asks for $5,310,000 to complete works which it was obviously contemplated would be completed for $5,000,000. We have not been told whether that is the result of a bad estimate; apparently something is wrong with the estimate of $5,000,000 which was presented to this house in 1925. That has not been sufficient for the work, and we are now asked for $5,310,000 more to complete it. As far as I can see that is the situation; in 1925 the harbour commissioners of Quebec contemplated this work, but whether they expected to spend $10,000,000 on the work then in prospect we do not know. If they did it was wrong of them to ask this house for only $5,000,000, saying that that would complete the work, and on the other hand if they miscalculated the cost and now find themselves saddled with a work which will cost over $10,000,000 on which they had expected to spend only $5,000,000, there is something radically wrong with the construction department of the Quebec harbour commission.

The second amount asked for is $2,840,000. I only need refer to the remarks of my hon. friend from Acadia to show that the expenditure of that amount on a storage elevator is not justified by the business which may be expected. We are going to spend over $2,000,000 for further storage; that is an important matter, as the Minister of Railways has said, but you can tell almost to the cent what will be the income from that expenditure. You know the rates for storage, you know the period for which storage will be used, you have the cost of management, and when it is proposed to provide storage facilities for an additional 2,000,000 bushels of grain it is possible to say whether or not you are justified in making that expenditure in view of what you will get in the way of returns. That is not a matter which has to do with the port of Quebec as far as the passing through of grain goes. The facilities at that port to-day are acknowledged to be more than are required for all the grain that can reasonably be expected to pass through that port. They will take care of 40,000,000 bushels of grain in the season, and even with the reduced freight rate the volume of grain handled there has only risen to 10,000,000 bushels. So that four times the amount of business actually done in Quebec is already provided for. Surely we do not need to contemplate that feature at all. The only question then remaining as to the $2,980,000 is, will it pay? Is it good business to put up a 2,000,000 bushel storage elevator considering what the returns from that elevator will be? As to the remaining item of $350,000, it is a matter of refunding to which no objection can be made. May I point out to the minister that if this were a going concern which had been meeting its fixed charges and its operating cost, to say nothing of depreciation, we might have been justified in advancing the sum of $8,500,000 because the returns would be in sight, but in the case of the Quebec harbour we know the interest on the loans is in arrears, and we know moreover from the auditors' report that there is no prospect of ever collecting that interest. Therefore you are going into a proposition in which the interest and fixed charges, to say nothing of other items, cannot be met. The right policy to pursue is to follow the course which has been suggested by my leader to scrutinize carefully every item and consider whether the expenditure is justified, not only from the point of view of dollars and cents but from the point of view of making Quebec a great national harbour and maintaining it as such.

Once more, may I say that I regret exceedingly the tone that was taken by the Minister of Justice in his remarks this afternoon, remarks which to some extent reflected the feelings of others. Personally I should like to see the port of Quebec developed, or any other port on the east or west coast developed, if it is going to add to the general prosperity of Canada. It is a small thing to accuse any hon. member, even by implication, of being influenced in his attitude by local attachment. That is nonsense in the case of myself, and I know that in saying that I can speak for others both to the right and left of me. We desire to look at this as a national matter. The fact that we are dealing with the port of Quebec—and we are all proud of that city and its historic associations—does not enter into the matter at all, nor the fact that it is not Toronto; and if the Minister of Justice, and one or two others, suggest that we are influenced in our attitude by local prejudice, they are following a course which is entirely wrong.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not see why this port should not have its votes in the estimates, and not by resolution. The trouble in the administration of these ports is that politics has been rampant in them. The government in my opinion are spending money like water. Money has been spent on some ports and canals in this country which never should have been spent; money that should have been spent has not been spent, and in many cases practically every dollar of that expenditure has been wasted. There has been no well conceived general plan of development. We have been creating ports on the great lakes where the expenditure has been used for political purposes. The same can be said of some of the canals. I know a canal where it was customary to start work a month before every election but after the election was over that expenditure was discontinued. There are instances of this kind in almost every province in the Dominion. The port of Montreal is in politics to-day. The elevator business is also in politics. The grain trade is in politics. The railways, also the canals, are in politics. Canada is more cursed with partyism than any other country in the world. We can solve no economic problems at all in this parliament, all such questions are referred to the courts or to a commission. The port of Quebec is a great port with a history dating back over three hundred years but it has never had a chance; the politicians have killed it. The Liberal party which launched the Grand Trunk Pacific is responsible for all the railway ills of this country to-day as well as for all the evils that have grown up in connection with our ports and grain trade. I know of no agencies where politics have been used to a greater extent than in connection with the port of Quebec, the administration of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and the administration of the national railways under the present chairman. The port of Quebec will never have a chance against the port of Montreal until its administration is freed from politics. It used to be said that New York and Boston were the great ports of the Atlantic seaboard of the United States; now there are nine or ten fine ports along that sea coast from Boston to Savannah. Every one of these ports is prospering and the ships which enter and leave them are gathering business from the seven seas. Have we seen any like development in the case of our ports? The ills the maritime provinces are suffering from to-day are largely due to politics, and politics prevailed to a very great extent in the administration of the Intercolonial railway. The Quebec bridge was built and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway constructed to help Quebec and the grain trade.

The great port of Vancouver handled 53,000,000 bushels through one elevator which I saw when I was there last year and which has a capacity of only 1,250,000 to 1,500,000 bushels. The opening of the Panama canal has revolutionized matters of transportation on the North American continent and particularly in regard to the transportation of grain from the prairie provinces. You will never settle this grain problem while it is in politics. The elevator question is in politics; the port of Quebec is in politics, and as regards the grain policy of this country you will never get any more grain passing through the city of Quebec until you change your elevator and grain policy. We had a royal commission appointed in 1924 to investigate this question. What did they recommend? They recommended that an embargo be placed upon hard wheat going to the United States, as will be found at page 145 of their report. It was a hard struggle to get this commission appointed; I was in the house at the time, and I made some comments and charges in regard to bootlegging of Canadian grain and the elevators at Buffalo and New York. The government said that this was not so; but when the evidence was taken, it was proved that it was so; that bootlegging in grain was taking place at Buffalo and New York, United States wheat being mixed with Canadian and the flour shipped overseas as number one to the detriment of Canada.

The minister is not handling this question in the proper manner, although I do not wish to blame the present minister entirely. He could not find a five dollar bill for life saving stations in the upper great lakes to protect the lives of our brave sailors who are endeavouring to advance the grain from the prairie provinces to the seaports. Last month an American life saving tug from Ashtabula and Erie, Pennsylvania, had to come up and take some men off a tug caught in the ice on lake Erie. What did the Ontario government do? They sent a wire to Hon. Mr. Martin, the Minister of Agriculture congratulating him on his forethought in getting a United States tug to save a few Canadian sailors on lake Erie.

[Mr. Church.]

What did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries do last session with regard to grain? He is talking about getting more grain to Quebec. He had the coastal laws suspended on the Great Lakes, with the result that our boats are lying up at the docks and all the grain is going to fill American hulls. Last summer I saw in the Detroit river, United States ships carrying our grain down to Buffalo, where during the past few years they have erected twenty-eight elevators. What does the commissioner of industries of Buffalo say about this matter? One of the main things in his report is that he takes pride in the fact that they have been able to get Canada's hard wheat to fill up twenty-eight elevators at Buffalo where they can bootleg our grain and mill it into flour for export. Every Canadian would rejoice to see those twenty-eight elevators erected in Quebec, Montreal, and other places along the gulf of St. Lawrence, where they would be if this country had a proper grain policy, and a proper water-borne traffic through Canadian ports overseas.

After all is said and done, the discussion initiated by hon. members on this side of the house will do a great deal of good if it can persuade the government that we have had enough politics in regard to this matter. The Hon. Mr. Hoover has spoken, in a report to congress and to the Interstate Commerce Commission about this particular problem, and in his report he refers to the great ports in his own country on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts. He says that a definite, well-worked out scheme, like those which New York, Boston and Baltimore have, should be adopted and that before votes of money occur or are gone ahead with, competent engineers should be employed to investigate the whole question from engineering, financial, navigation, and economic standpoints. It must not be forgotten while this vote for Quebec harbour is under discussion, that as regards the export of our grain, the overseas market with regard to grain has all been changed. Argentina and Russia are back in the market and many of the Balkan states and others are back to-day competing with our grain growers for the overseas markets of the world. The result is that the grain situation in the old world has been changed and we have been sitting here spending millions of dollars on some of our ports without any results as to routing Canadian grain in mass through our gulf and coast ports.

The port of Quebec could, in my opinion, be made a great port if we had a well-worked out economic plan. Last year I visited it for the first time in twenty years; it is suffering from congestion owing to lack of modern facilities for handling the freight traffic. It will never be a port except for five and a half months in the year, and it will be a grain port only if it has the support of an all-Canadian rail route and waterborne traffic route for grain and an adequate and economic storage capacity. It will be a good storage place for grain forwarded there late in the year and held in the elevator for spring shipment overseas. I understand that the capacity of the Quebec elevator is only 2,000,000 bushels and that last year they handled out of that port only about nine or ten million bushels, whereas at Vancouver with an elevator with a capacity of 1,500,000 bushels they were able to handle 53,000,000 bushels.

Reference has been made to other ports, and there has been a very wide discussion of the policy of this country in general in regard to national ports and ports on the great lakes. There are a few ports like Montreal and Vancouver which pay the interest on their indebtedness. The quantity of grain shipped through the port of Montreal during the last few years is as follows:

Year	Bushels
1921	138,000,000
1922	135,000,000
1923	120,000,000
1924	165,000,000
1925	166,000,000
1926	135,000,000
1927	185,000,000

Let us not forget that last year there landed in the port of Montreal 80,000,000 bushels of grain from the United States. We are pursuing a very foolish policy on the great lakes in regard to grain. We have amended the coastal laws with the result that our own Canadian boats are tied up at the docks and our United States competitors are getting all this grain. Is that a proper policy for the people of this country? No, we must change our whole grain policy and adopt the recommendation of the commission by imposing an embargo and utilizing all-Canadian routes to get our grain through to the seaboard in Canadian hulls.

The government has been spending money like water. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced his Grand Trunk Pacific scheme away back in 1896, it took $36,000,000 to run and maintain the country, whereas to-day it is taking $400,000,000 a year to run the country. The province of Ontario used to get along with an expenditure of $6,500,000, but to-day it alone is spending $57,000,000 a year, or $21,000,000 more than it cost to run the whole country in 1897.

Some reference was made by hon. gentleman opposite to the port from which I came. Let me tell the Progressive members of this house that the port of Toronto has never got the loan of a copper from the government of Canada. Since confederation only ten millions have been spent by the government on Toronto harbour. The taxpayers of Toronto have themselves spent $30,000,000 on harbour improvements. Any money the government spends it handles itself free from the city or harbour board. From 1867 to 1912 only $2,000,000 were spent by the government. In 1912 the port was reorganized, and the harbour board has jurisdiction only over city property in the harbour. The government never built a dock or a wharf in Toronto, and Toronto harbour right down to the present time never got a five cent piece by way of loan from the government. There are five commissioners under the new scheme, three appointed by the city council and two by the government, and the two commissioners appointed by the government are on the city board spending city money. The government spends its own money and it has built a seawall, a turning basin in Ashbridge's bay and dredged the entrances. The late Lieutenant Governor Clarke, Mr. Smith and I were commissioners, and we had a non-political board for twenty years, until 1925. It was the present government's two delegates that caused all the recent trouble; the government appointed two politicians or ward-heelers, and they tried to work a city board on a Liberal basis with the taxpayers' money, mind you, not the government's. I was a commissioner without a cent of remuneration, for twenty years. I was appointed by the city council and I worked all that time with my colleagues. We never had any politics on the board till 1925. A gentleman by the name of MacKendrick, appointed by the city in 1924, joined the two Liberals and while he was a commissioner, he tried to buy a large property at a cut rate for his company on Fleet stret. I objected to this as improper, and an illegal government inquiry was started over a purely city board, spending only city money and not a cent of government money, by a person who, while acting, had, according to the harbour board's own solicitor, Mr. A. C. McMaster, K.C., and the government's own legal officers, no powers, and acted only voluntarily. Well, they had a year's inquiry over nothing, with nice, fat fees for the judge, although, while sitting he was neither judge nor commissioner, and a number of lawyers got fat fees as was the case in the customs inquiry. They spent $75,000 of the taxpayers' money, found not a cent misspent or a thing wrong, if you please, on this investigation; they did not get anybody, nor did they find out anything. The only body they got was the taxpayer. Mr. Home Smith and Lieutenant-Governor Clarke served for many years without fee or reward. I myself served for twenty years on the harbour board, and got nothing for it; all we got was abuse. I spent thousands of dollars of my own money also in the work. We were a non-political board until two disturbers appeared with political minds. While I was chairman of the harbour board I settled the viaduct case long standing, opened up Fleet street, and made rapid strides. I resigned my seat voluntarily. After this farce of an inquiry the city council unanimously reappointed me, but I got sick of the work and the abuse and gave up this end of my work after twenty years full service.

If you want to make a success of the port of Quebec or any other port you must eliminate politics; in other words, as Mr. Hoover says, you must have a non-political administration of the board. The port must be administered from an economic standpoint. If the port of Quebec had been given any chance at all, it would have been a great port to-day, but the money that has been voted for the port of Quebec has not been spent to the best advantage and the same is true to a certain extent of Montreal. They take on a large staff in Montreal, I am told just before election time, and then turn them off after the election. The port is in politics. I think every Canadian is proud of the port of Montreal. I am a warm supporter of Montreal, and I believe that it will grow from strength to strength as a port if the commissioners are let alone.

The government have now had considerable experience in connection with these various harbours, which should be an example to them, and let us make a fresh start with Halifax and St. John by administering these new ports from the commercial aspect. We can still do something with Quebec, but I do not believe in giving $8,500,000 to the port of Quebec at the present time. I was in the house in 1925 when Mr. Caldwell and the present member for Macleod, in reply to questions, were informed by the minister that the $5,000,000 that was being voted at that time for the port of Quebec would be sufficient to complete the whole five years' program. Only three years have passed since then, and here is the harbour commission back again asking for $8,500,000 more. It will take a lot of money to provide the necessary extensions for handling the grain, but even when that work is finished, I doubt if any more grain will go to the port, because the Canadian National Railways are not trying to help the port of Quebec.

Those of us on this side of the house, Mr. Chairman, would like to see the port of Quebec dealt with fairly and justly and equitably, the same as any other port. We must not forget that these ports are a connecting link in a well organized transportation system, but we have not a properly connected transportation system in this country because our transportation system is mixed up in politics. The ports are also in politics, and you will never get them out of politics until public opinion drives them out.

The province of Ontario pays forty-nine per cent of the postal receipts of this Dominion. The city of Toronto contributes $62,000,000 in customs duties, and well on to $7,000,000 in postal receipts, and we have never got a cent from the government during the last four sessions except a few dollars for revolving doors for the post office, and when that item is reached I am going to move to strike it out.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the terminals costing $1,500,000 last year?

Mr. CHURCH: What about terminals? Let me tell the minister about the terminals. He is a new minister here, and he seems to think he knows something about the Toronto terminals, but I think he knows more about elections and the ballot boxes in New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: The people know how to handle the ballots.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not want to be unfair to the minister because he supported my newspaper bill to make public the ownership of newspapers, and to let everyone know who Mr. Honourable-in-Trust is in connection with some of these newspapers. The city of Toronto itself spent $30,000,000 on its own property—the harbour.

Mr. VENIOT: I was referring to the postal terminals, not the railway terminals.

Mr. CHURCH: The government spent some money on the postal terminals, but they get a revenue of yearly $7,000,000 out of the Toronto post office. The minister has a patronage list in the post office department, and you have to pay a dollar to join the Liberal ward association before you can get a temporary job. Even a returned soldier in Christie street hospital, if he wants a job at the post office for five or six days at Christmas time, has to pay a dollar and join the ward association. There is no city in Canada that is paying the peak of taxation like Toronto is. We have spent $30,000,000 of our own money on our harbour, and if it had not been for the harbour improvements and breakwater at Sunnyside the right of way of the Canadian National railway would have been washed out. Eight millions were spent (1914-1924) by the government on the harbour. About $2,500,000 of this was spent on a breakwater to protect the right of way of the Canadian National railway, and a contract as to the harbour in 1912 was made with the city of Toronto and the federal government, and this government is trying to back out of it. The city of Toronto has spent over $10,000,000 on the viaduct agreement on the water front and thirty millions on its harbour besides. We seek no favours from the government; we would not get any anyway, and we do not ask for them, no matter what government is in office.

So far as the port of Quebec is concerned, I agree with the leader of the opposition that this vote ought to be cut down, and an interim grant of $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 made, this year; and a proper survey should be made of the business of the port and its finances and terminals. The grain law of Canada should be revolutionized in the interest of Canadian ports, and the coasting laws should be re-established. There should be a showdown with the Canadian National Railways to further help the ports of Montreal and Quebec. There should be non-political administration of the port of Quebec and all the other ports. The port of Vancouver has been ruined through the dismissal of one of the ablest traffic superintendents on the North American continent, as the hon. member for Vancouver said in the house last night. There should be a non-political administration of these ports, a proper survey made of the business of the port, and expenditure made on business principles; for at present money is being spent like water on ports and harbours. Money is being spent on ports where there is not a ship, and when the pork barrel is opened up, they sometimes vote money for harbours where there is not even a row boat. I do not say that that is true of the port of Quebec. I believe that Quebec never had a fair show. Take politics out of the administration of the port and have a proper survey made by reliable engineers, not the kind of a survey that was made in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, which it was estimated would cost only a few million dollars instead of one hundred millions. We should get a proper survey of Quebec harbour and an up-to-date plan even if we have to go to Great Britain for engineers. Go and get them, and have a survey and permanent plan of development made of the port of Quebec. I venture to think that every good Canadian, when this is done, will rejoice to see the great port of Quebec go ahead by leaps and bounds and get a fair share of the gain and other traffic from the interior of Canada. What I have said of the port of Quebec will apply also to the ports of St. John and Halifax when organized.

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, the citizens of Quebec and hon. members who are interested in the port must feel gratified at the almost unanimous desire expressed on both sides of the house to see the port of Quebec improved to accommodate the great ocean traffic now developing there. But the trouble is we have been debating this question now for almost two days without making any progress, and our friends who are interested in the port may begin to question the sincerity of those who speak so well of Quebec. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Church) has told us about the great port of Toronto, and has emphasized the point that during the period when he was on the harbour board it was a non-political organization. I think I shall be well within the mark when I say that the board of harbour commissioners of Quebec is justly as non-political as my hon. friend's board.

I agree with much that has been said tonight as to our having spent a lot of money on our ports for which the country has not received the value that it should have received, and the records of the public accounts will confirm this. I observe, for instance, that we have spent some $21,000,000 on the port of St. John. Well, no one will say that that is a better port than Quebec. We have spent on the lake port of Toronto—I am not finding any fault; I am simply placing the facts before the committee—through the Public Works Department between ten and eleven million dollars. My hon. friend from Toronto Northwest says that the port never got a copper from the Dominion, but apparently he has not looked at the public accounts.

Mr. RYCKMAN: He said in the nature of advances.

Mr. ROBB: Quite right; we paid out the money and did not expect to get it back.

Mr. RYCKMAN: It was not a loan, it was contributed.

Mr. ROBB: But the fact remains we spent $10,000,000 on the port of Toronto.

Mr. RYCKMAN: There is no question of that

Mr. ROBB: No one will argue that the port of Quebec, where the ocean traffic of the world comes, is not entitled to equal consideration. No one will challenge the point raised by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that wherever public moneys are paid out there should be a careful audit. But after all that is exactly the position we are in to-day.

Mr. CHURCH: May I point out to the minister that the $10,000,000 was spent by the Public Works department; the city of Toronto had no control over it?

Mr. ROBB: Certainly; but the money was paid out of the exchequer. We have the right, and we exercise it, to insist on the most careful scrutiny wherever public money is expended. Now the port of Quebec asks for an advance of sufficient money to take care of its harbour plans for the next five years. Everyone will agree that to do such work economically and efficiently we must be able to lay out a program extending over a period of years. No advance is made until a report is received from the engineers indicating the progress of the work. I believe there is a superintendent of harbours who checks up the work of the port engineer. That report is sent to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, where it is carefully checked, and then the accounts are sent to the Department of Finance before the advance is made.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Are advances made to the harbour commission of Quebec on monthly applications from the commission to the minister, giving the amount of construction work to be done and detailed statements?

Mr. CARDIN: The procedure followed at Quebec is the same as that followed at Montreal. The work is executed, a report is made by the commission to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that report is checked by us, and when we are satisfied we ask the Department of Finance to advance the money.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): On monthly applications?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is the procedure followed in the case of Montreal.

Mr. CARDIN: Not necessarily.

Mr. ROBB: Then these advances are made. Bear in mind, the accounts are carefully audited. We insist on an additional audit wherever these expenditures are made. We have a perfect right, for example, to check the expenditures made in the port of Halifax.

I have not heard any person say yet that the money spent there was spent to the best advantage. It is quite true, as hon. gentlemen say, that we have wasted money. But we are all aware that government expenditure is never made as cheaply as private expenditure.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister permit a question before he leaves that point? He is dealing with the system of audit. Will he kindly explain these statements in the report of the board of audit that checked the port of Quebec's accounts?

> Examination of the published reports clearly shows the expenses to have increased steadily and out of proportion to the earnings during the three years.

And:

> The accounts examined by us provided no explanation for these variations, due largely to the suspension some years ago of cost accounts.

Now I put this question to the minister, having some knowledge of the meaning of this language: upon receiving a report of this character from a board of auditors appointed for the purpose of examining these accounts, does he think it a wise policy to make any further advances before some adequate explanation is forthcoming of what I would call a dereliction of duty on the part of the board?

Mr. ROBB: I was just coming to that. I imagine that when I send out the audit board, as I intend to, to audit other ports we may have similar reports to this.

Mr. STEVENS: These insinuations might as well be cleared up at once. I ask the minister now to instruct the board of audit to check carefully the expenditures at the port of Vancouver—the papers in connection with which I called for and they were laid on the table— because I think some of those expenditures were recklessly, extravagantly, improvidently and wrongfully made.

Mr. ROBB: Is my hon. friend referring to the contract for the Ballantyne pier?

Mr. STEVENS: No, I am not.

Mr. ROBB: I thought not. I was proceeding to say that the government has the right to go in. It was for that very purpose that the audit board was created under the act assented to on June 27, 1925. Here are the powers of the audit board covering this point:

> It shall be the duty of the board to act in an advisory capacity to the treasury board and under its direction to inquire into and report with regard to any matters entrusted to it by the treasury board including the following:

(a) the sufficiency of the methods of accounting and of the procedure in other respects employed in the conduct of the public business of Canada or of any department or detail thereof;

(b) the economies which may be effected in any of the public services or in the conduct of the public business;

(c) the financial affairs of the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, Limited, and any other undertaking owned or carried on by the government of Canada;

(d) —

—and I direct my hon. friend's attention to this:

It is under that that we have the board look into the accounts. The question asked by my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) is a very proper one, but the chairman of the audit board has informed me that he has had a talk with the commission and they recognize that their system of accounts might very well be changed so as to afford more information. And the system of accounts will be changed. But there is no report that the contracts were irregular or that there were any irregular expenditures. Now I come back to this point: To carry on the work successfully and economically they must be able to lay out a program for more than one year, and it is not unreasonable to give them a sufficient sum to cover a period of five years. They say that this amount is required for a five year program, and I can assure my hon. friends that under the Audit Act we have full powers to go and audit their accounts. And it is our intention to do so in respect to that port as well as in respect to others in Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I asked a question of the minister and he was kind enough to answer. I asked the question after a hasty glance over the act passed last year covering the loan made to the Montreal harbour commission. I found that in connection with that commission a certain course was taken to safeguard the interests of Canada in doing business with the port of Montreal. I found in the first place that before the money was granted the plans had to be approved by the governor in council. That seemed to be wise and businesslike. Monthly statements were also required to be presented by the harbour commission to the minister in connection with applications for loans on account of construction work being performed. A detailed statement of expenditures in connection therewith was submitted. That also struck me as a very wise provision inasmuch as it kept the minister constantly in touch with what was going on. In view of these provisions in connection with the Montreal harbour commission I asked the minister a question in regard to the present resolution and I understood him to say the same course was not being followed in relation to advances to the harbour commission of Quebec. I notice that there was a further safeguard in the case of the Montreal harbour commission, in that the corporation deposited with the Minister of Finance debentures equal in value to the loan asked for. That, too, was good business. It is a fact that in 1925 the sum of $5,000,000 was advanced to the Quebec harbour commission and we were told at that time that this sum would be sufficient to complete certain works. It is now apparent that it will not be adequate to complete the works which it was said it would take care of, and we are now asked for further millions to supplement that grant. The minister has said that certain statements are presented—he has not told us at what intervals—to his department in regard to these expenditures. One would expect such statements to be submitted. But why not follow the same course in dealing with the harbour commission of Quebec as was adopted in connection with the harbour commission of Montreal? Why not require monthly statements presented to the minister, giving a detailed account of construction work undertaken and of the moneys expended thereon? That seems to be a reasonable course, and I cannot help thinking that if the same method had been followed in the case of the Quebec port the government would have been more in touch with what has been going on, and the financial condition of the port would not be as bad as it is at the present time.

Mr. CARDIN: When I replied to my hon. friend from Frontenac a few minutes ago I spoke from memory in regard to advances made in the past. I notice that in the bill which will be introduced following the resolution there is a clause providing for monthly applications and monthly statements from the commission before they can get any money. So that the clause in the Montreal act to which my hon. friend has referred—I do not know whether it is in the Quebec act of 1925 —will be found in the bill which we propose to introduce on the basis of this resolution.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That was wise. Can the minister inform the committee just how frequently these statements have been presented in the past covering the $5,000,000 advanced in 1925? Apparently they have not been presented monthly.

Mr. CARDIN: Offhand I cannot say, but I shall be in a position to give this information definitely when we reach the committee stage on the bill. As regards my hon. friend's observation with reference to the adequacy of the $5,000,000, I may say that this amount is sufficient to meet the requirements we had in view in 1925. The money has not all been spent, and the vote for which we are now asking is for the purpose of adding to the facilities which were provided for through the advance made in 1925.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How much of the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 has been spent?

Mr. CARDIN: About $3,000,000.

Mr. KAISER: As I understand it, the harbour commission now owe $750,000 to the banks, presumably for current obligations. We are voting $8,500,000 for additional facilities. The minister has stated that the port has claims against the government amounting to something over $7,000,000. No doubt the government is considering that $7,000,000 odd in addition to the $8,500,000. If that sum were paid over this year or next year, as an obligation which we owe to the board, would the board have the power to add still further facilities or would they be obliged to use this money in paying interest on the loans advanced?

Mr. CARDIN: The claims of the commissioners are set up against the government's claim for interest. The government is claiming $8,000,000 or arrears in interest on moneys which have been advanced to the Quebec harbour commission. The commissioners say, "Well, you claim that interest, but we have a claim against the government for taking care of the immigrants and for other services. Our claim amounts to almost $7,000,000, and we would like to set that off against the claim of the government for interest on the loans which have been made to us." They are not asking for payment but simply that their claim be accepted to apply against the amount of interest claimed by the government.

Mr. KAISER: Then we are in the position of lending them $8,500,000 and allowing the interest to be offset by claims against the government; in other words we not only lend them money but pay the interest as well.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. CARDIN: That is the claim of the commissioners, but as yet the government have not decided to accept it.

Mr. GARDINER: At this point I should like to ask the minister as to the attitude of the government in regard to these claims. How long have they been in existence, and what is the government going to do about them?

Mr. CARDIN: These claims have been in existence for a long period of years, and I am free to say that the accounts sent in by the commissioners have not been accepted by the various departments to which they were sent. There is no doubt that the commissioners are entitled to something for having taken care of the immigrants and so on; they are entitled to some compensation, but up to the present that claim has not been accepted by the departments concerned.

Mr. IRVINE: Why not charge it up to the Department of Immigration?

Mr. CARDIN: It is charged to that department, but the various ministers of immigration have refused to accept it.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister has just admitted that there is some justice in the claims made by the harbour commissioners against the various departments. When did he arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. CARDIN: I have been of that opinion always, but I cannot force my views or convictions upon my colleagues. I am convinced that the commissioners should receive something, if not the whole amount; they should receive a certain compensation, but up to the present time the successive ministers of immigration have refused to accept my views.

Mr. GARDINER: Does not the minister think that before any further loans are made to the harbour commission the question of these claims should be settled? Is not this a good time to settle them?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot see any relation between the two matters. The claim of the government is for interest from the harbour commission, and that is quite different from the advance for which we are asking at present. If these accounts are accepted from the harbour commissioners, the amount will be set off against the claim of the government for the unpaid interest.

Mr. FORKE: What difference would it make in the long run?

Mr. CARDIN: It is simply a matter of bookkeeping, but the position of the harbour commissioners will be more clearly presented because a large proportion of their indebtedness for interest will disappear if their claims are entertained.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Cannot the cabinet as a whole settle that?

Mr. ROBB: The cabinet as a whole did settle the question of the remission of a considerable amount of money to the Soldier Settlement Board, and the remission of advances for seed grain.

Mr. GARDINER: Those matters have no relation to the subject under discussion, but with respect to the other question, in my judgment the minister cannot say it has no relation to the matter with which we are now dealing. The relation I see is this: Just so long as the claims of the harbour commission remain against the government, that provides them an excuse to refuse to pay interest, which means that the harbour will not be operated as efficiently as should be the case. Now I should like to ask the minister if he could give me the information I asked for before six o'clock. I notice that the Minister of Immigration is smiling; probably he would not be quite so joyous if a part of his appropriation were taken to pay some of these just claims. Can the Minister of Marine and Fisheries give the committee any information as to the expenditures which have been made out of the $5,000,000 loan since 1925? How much has been actually spent in dredging, providing new wharves and so on, and what is the condition of the work at present?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to give a detailed statement of the expenditures which have been made, but as I said a moment ago—and that was only a repetition of what I have said several times before—out of the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 approximately $3,000,000 has been expended in dredging and in the construction of the cribs which have been filled with stone and sunk into the river. The work remaining is the concrete work upon those cribs, and the balance of the money to which the commissioners are entitled will complete the cement work which was provided for in 1925. The $5,300,000 in addition for which we are now asking is to extend that part of the work which is covered by the $5,000,000 voted in 1925, of which nearly $3,000,000 has been expended already. There remains the concrete work and the construction of certain sheds and roadways upon these cribs.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that the minister's reply is to the effect that in so far as the vote of 1925 is concerned, the work contemplated under that vote is only partly completed, but that sufficient funds still remain to complete the work as contemplated at that time. Further, I understand that the new vote which we are discussing to-night is to provide for an extension of that work?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: I am glad to have that information; we have been trying to get it ever since this resolution was introduced. Now I want to ask the minister whether in view of the contemplated new work, which will eventually cost $8,500,000—

Mr. CARDIN: It will cost $5,000,000.

Mr. GARDINER: That is right, $5,310,000. In view of that, will the minister give us some information as to the tonnage into and out of the port, which will warrant this contemplated construction?

Mr. CARDIN: The committee will understand that it is very difficult to say what tonnage will pass through the port of Quebec in the years to come. However, for the information of my hon. friend I might say that in 1926 about 900 ocean steamers went into and out of the port of Quebec, and the total tonnage was 6,408,659. In 1927, although the new terminals constructed out of the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 were not in use, the tonnage was 6,820,375, so there was an increase of over 400,000 tons without taking into consideration the new facilities.

Mr. GARDINER: How many steamers were there that year?

Mr. CARDIN: The total would be about 900, but I am not sure as to the exact number. If the reduction in rates on the Transcontinental will have the effect of causing a greater volume of grain to flow through the port of Quebec we may reasonably expect a greater tonnage. We have to recognize that ocean vessels are becoming larger and larger and that each year the tonnage will be greater. As I said at the opening of this discussion the shipping interests are behind these improvements and they say: In view of the developments and the needs of the port, we support heartily the program of the harbour commission. But my hon. friend will clearly understand that I cannot give any definite figure as to the prospective increase in tonnage.

Mr. GARDINER: Would it not be reasonable to suppose that when the present works are completed, that is to say the works undertaken under the $5,000,000 vote of 1925, they will take care of all the requirements in increased tonnage for some years to come?

Mr. CARDIN: The representations which were made to the commission and to the government were in support of the program we are contemplating at the present time, including the additional work. The representations of the shipping federation and of the grain people not only supported the improvements decided upon in 1925 but requested new undertakings. They feel that an expenditure which will run to about $10,000,000 should be made to equip properly the port of Quebec and give it the facilities which they think are absolutely necessary. That is the representation which has been made to us.

Mr. GEARY: Without disturbing the minister's argument further, will the sinking of the sixteen cribs, and the placing of the superstructure upon them, require more than the original $5,000,000 before this work is available for use?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GEARY: Then the remainder of the $5,310,000 is to produce more cribs, an entirely new proposal?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister this afternoon gave us some information with regard to the number of berths available in the harbour of Quebec. I notice that he stated a berth was rented to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and another to a second shipping company. Could he give the committee any information as to the rentals paid by the two companies in question for the private use of these berths?

Mr. CARDIN: No, I cannot give the rentals at the present moment. I have certain information here but it is incomplete. The Robert Reford Company, for example, is sending a cheque for $4,000. My notes are not sufficiently complete to permit me to give exact information.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister secure that information before the bill comes before the committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, certainly.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it is advisable for us to know whether or not these rentals are profitable.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be quite ready to supply the information.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister have the plans showing the work contemplated under the $5,000,000 vote in 1925 and the plans of the work contemplated under the present vote?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to draw the minister's attention to claims made upon the Dominion government by the harbour commission of Quebec. There are two items in particular that interest me. One is a claim against the Department of the Interior for $351,437 plus interest of $382,361, and the other a claim against the Department of Immigration for $2,613,716 with accumulated interest of $3,029,070. In each of these claims the interest is a good deal larger than the principal.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to point out that at 5 per cent simple interest these amounts must have been running for over 20 years. What rate has been charged on these outstanding accounts? Is it simple or compound interest?

Mr. CANNON: In answer to my hon. friend I want to point out, in order that the matter may be well understood, that the present commission came into existence in 1913, and we have to make a distinction between the loans made since 1913 and whatever advances may have been made previous to that year. The total advances made by the government to the present commission amount to 13½ millions. Now the advances made by the government of Canada for the harbour of Quebec from prior to 1867 till 1913—and the harbour was administered by several bodies during that time—amounted to only $4,125,000. Great emphasis has been laid in the present discussion by several gentlemen opposite on the claim that the harbour board was bankrupt. The leader of the opposition ended his remarks by saying that the board was insolvent and practically in the same position as a commercial corporation in the hands of a receiver. In order to reach that conclusion they charged up against the harbour board an amount of $9,103,899.34 but the present commission should be responsible only for the interest on the advances made since the inception of the commission.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not if they took over the liabilities of the old board.

Mr. CANNON: I will come to that in a minute. I wish to give these figures: Advances previous to 1913 by way of accrued interest charged up to the commission, $6,022,565.38; interest on advances made since 1913, $3,081,433.96. But on the $5,000,000 voted by parliament in 1925, or at least on that part of the $5,000,000 which was really advanced, the interest was deducted by the government before the money was paid.

Mr. GARDINER: How much was deducted?

Mr. CANNON: Five per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: For how many years?

Mr. CANNON: Since 1925. On the advances made under the legislation passed in 1925, the commission does not owe one cent of interest to the government because the Minister of Finance retained it, and this is done in all such cases wherever construction is going on.

Mr. GEARY: It is provided for in this legislation.

Mr. CANNON: Yes. I should like the members of the committee, in order that they may understand the situation, to bear in mind first that certain moneys were advanced before 1913 when the present harbour commission system did not exist; that the first large advance made to the Quebec harbour with a view of developing Quebec and making it a national port was made in 1913 under the Borden government; that war broke out, and that then the commission had practically to place the harbour in the hands of the government for war purposes. Naturally there was no idea at that time of administering the harbour from the standpoint of making profits and revenues and paying interest. The whole harbour was placed at the disposal of this country, but nevertheless the Minister of Finance every month and every year charged up interest against the port of Quebec.

An hon. MEMBER: During the war?

Mr. CANNON: That is something that must be borne in mind when the general situation of Quebec is under consideration, and it is going too far for any member to say that the port of Quebec should be considered as bankrupt. The whole harbour facilities were placed in the hands of the Dominion government during the period of the war.

Mr. VENIOT: And for two years afterwards.

Mr. CANNON: And for some time afterwards. As everybody knows, many soldiers came back through the port of Quebec, but that peculiar situation was never considered by the Department of Finance. That is number two. Supposing the same system were adopted for the other harbours in the Dominion, what would be the situation? Last year we incorporated a harbour commission for the city of Halifax. What attitude would hon. members for Halifax or the people of that city have taken if the government had told them: We are incorporating a harbour commission, but before you start developing or looking after the shipping facilities of your harbour, we will charge up to you $19,000,000 which have been already advanced—not only the capital but the interest from the very moment one cent was advanced from the Dominion treasury. Would any hon. member say that that was fair? Nevertheless that is the attitude taken in regard to Quebec harbour. We are not bankrupt if we are treated in the same way as other sections of Canada have been treated, and the rules which obtain in regard to other harbours of this country should obtain in regard to Quebec.

Let me take for instance the harbour of Toronto. I may say to the hon. members for Toronto that I was in their beautiful city last week; I admire its development and the harbour improvements and works; I do not begrudge a cent they received. But would their harbour commission be in a position to make the report which was mentioned by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) if they had to pay interest on the $10,000,000 which were expended by the Department of Public Works on harbour improvements in Toronto?

Mr. GEARY: It is not the same thing. Why should it be?

Mr. CANNON: The interest should be charged up if Quebec should be charged up with interest. The situation is the same.

Mr. GEARY: Surely the situation is not the same. These are navigation works. You might as well charge up the cost of dredging the river channel opposite Quebec.

Mr. CANNON: Legally my hon. friend is perfectly right.

Mr. GEARY: Practically I am right.

Mr. CANNON: Legally he is perfectly right, but I am not talking strict law; I am talking equity.

Mr. GEARY: I am not talking law.

Mr. CANNON: I am asking for Quebec fair treatment from this house. I am not quibbling as to the interpretation of statutes; I know there is a difference between a loan and a gift; but if $10,000,000 was given to the harbour of Toronto, I congratulate my hon. friends on having received that money. I am pleased that they received it. But when the harbour of Quebec comes before parliament asking that we be given the means to improve our harbour facilities, I ask my hon. friends to discard petty and mean considerations and to look at the matter as we should look at it.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister allow me?

Mr. CANNON: If last year we told Halifax that they would have to assume liability for the $19,000,000 which were expended in that city prior to last year, not only the capital, but the interest, that commission would not be able to work. Supposing when the resolution concerning Halifax is brought before the house, the Quebec members get up and say: Before half a million dollars are advanced, you will have to show that $19,000,000 have been looked after and that every cent of interest has been paid! Supposing we did the same thing concerning St. John, New Brunswick!

Mr. VENIOT: You would get killed.

Mr. CANNON: That only goes to show that this matter is not one of dollars and cents and a small matter as to whether interest was paid or not. It is a larger and much wider matter than that. It is a question of finding out if the Dominion government as such and the federal parliament as such wish to develop Canadian trade through Canadian ports or want Canadian trade to go through United States ports. That is the whole question. Hon. members who sit in the corner have shown sympathy.

Miss MACPHAIL: Be very careful about that.

Mr. CANNON: I think it is a very favoured corner. It has shown some sympathy for the harbour of Quebec. My hon. friends have said, and rightly so, that parliament should be given information. That demand is quite legitimate, and I am quite sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who has charge of this legislation will be pleased to give to the house all necessary information. There is nothing to hide in this matter.

Again I repeat, this is a national question, not one simply of local concern, and we from Quebec ask all our colleagues, whether they belong to the Conservative party or to the Progressive party, to consider this as a national question. In the harbour of Quebec you have, so to speak, the whole question of our national future summed up. When a newcomer enters Canada seeking his fortune, having confidence in the greatness of our country, where does he land? He lands at Quebec. Where does he go?

An hon. MEMBER: To the United States.

Mr. CANNON: He goes to the western provinces. My hon. friend on the other side says that he goes to the United States. He knows better. These newcomers go to the western provinces. My hon. friend forgets that Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have been built up by these newcomers, and that Canada does not end at the borders of Ontario but stretches farther west. These western provinces produce wheat, and that wheat has to be shipped to some market. Are we going to spend millions to encourage immigration to come to this country in order to develop the natural resources of our western provinces, and then when it comes to marketing the goods these newcomers produce, so that the advantages of our immigration may be realized, refuse to spend the necessary money on our harbours and provide the necessary shipping facilities? I do not think this parliament will hesitate.

It is most unfair, I repeat, to speak of the harbour of Quebec as if it were a corporation which should be placed in the hands of a receiver. If the harbour of Quebec were given the same treatment financially that has been accorded to other harbours, the figures would be quite different. Lastly, I have no doubt that the government will be quite satisfied to give to all members of the house any necessary information they may require as to the nature and character of the work which ought to be carried out at Quebec.

Mr. SPENCER: The Solicitor General, in coming to the rescue of the Minister of Marine—

Mr. CANNON: I did not; he does not need any help.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Nobody is in danger on this side.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister gave a statement as to the amount of money guaranteed by the port of Quebec to the Dominion of Canada, but that was not a reply to my question. The figures to which I referred were the amounts supposedly owing by various departments of this government to the port of Quebec. I mentioned two, the Department of Immigration and the Department of the Interior, and in both cases the interest exceeds the principal of the amount claimed. I asked the minister if he could give us the number of years during which interest has been accruing, and if it was calculated at simple or compound interest.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to say whether it is simple or compound interest, but so far as the length of the account is concerned, it is a very old one. The first one which was produced dates back thirty years.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the amount of the liabilities charged up to the commission when it was first formed in 1913?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that information here, but I can have it when we go into committee on the bill.

Mr. SPENCER: Perhaps the minister would also bring down the information I asked for.

Mr. GARDINER: I was very much interested in the remarks of the Solicitor General. In my judgment, all the ports that are under the administration of the commission should be on the same basis and be treated in the same way, and if it can be shown to this committee that the port of Quebec did not have as good a deal as the other ports when its commission was first formed, then I maintain that a proper settlement should be made before we go further with this legislation, so that we may know just exactly where we stand. That is a very strong reason, in my opinion, why this matter should go to a committee. If the remarks of the Solicitor General are correct, and I have no reason to doubt but that they are, I can quite understand that the people of Quebec feel they have a very strong grievance. This is the first time I have heard that this commission was charged, when it was formed, with these liabilities, and I think I am safe in saying that the committee as a whole did not understand that that was the situation. Would it be possible to prevail upon the government to clean this matter up before we go further with this legislation? I would like to see that done, and if the claims of the commission for further assistance can be shown to be well grounded, I would be satisfied.

Mr. KAISER: I understand that there is a claim of $2,000,000 against the Immigration department by the port of Quebec. We have immigrants coming in also at Halifax, Montreal, Vancouver and Toronto. Is there any reason why Quebec should receive consideration in regard to these claims any more than these other ports?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no particular reason except that the harbour commission of Quebec claim that the immigration causes such a tax upon their facilities as to deprive the commission of one of the best sections of the harbour, and they feel that they are entitled to compensation. If a similar situation exists in any other port, I would see no objection to considering the claim of that port.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is that a valid, subsisting claim which is recognized by the government as a material, substantial claim?

Mr. CARDIN: So far as my department and myself are concerned, we are prepared to recognize that claim, but up to the present time it has not been entertained by the various departments concerned.

Mr. RYCKMAN: As long ago as 1922 when the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the present Minister of Justice, was asking for $1,500,000, he said in regard to this claim:

> Of course, there is a bill standing in the books of the commission against the federal government on that account. This bill has never been paid, and I do not expect that it ever will be.

It seems to me that too much has been made of this claim. Away back in 1922 the claim was stale and was not recognized as a claim that the government would ever undertake to pay. It has dragged along for nearly six years, and after such a period an ordinary debt would be outlawed, but we find this claim now set up as an important reason why the Quebec harbour commissioners should receive consideration. There is every reason why they should receive consideration, but this is not one of them. Nor do the remarks of the Solicitor General apply, for a reference to Hansard of May 5, 1922, will show that the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries recognized that the harbour commission of Quebec was insolvent and could not pay its interest, but in course of time he hoped that it might approach to the success of the harbour commission of Montreal. We are sorry that that has not come about. But it is not on any sectional grounds as the Solicitor General alleged—

Mr. CANNON: I never alleged anything of the kind. On the contrary—

Mr. RYCKMAN: Read Hansard to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order —to a question of privilege. I was particular to state my position with great care, and my hon. friend has no right to make such a statement. I deny it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman; on the point of order—

Mr. CANNON: It is not a point of order; it is a question of privilege and is not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member cannot escape his responsibility. He rose to a point of order, not to a question of privilege. On the point of order I wish to say that in my hearing the hon. gentleman did refer to hon. members on this side of the house and told them to remember that Canada did not begin or end at the boundaries of Ontario. If that was not an imputation of sectionalism I do not know what is.

Mr. POWER: That may have been only a lesson in geography.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The Solicitor General also said that this was not the narrow question that the opposition were trying to make it appear.

Mr. CANNON: I did not say that.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Read Hansard to-morrow. I maintain that it is not a narrow question. But the people of Canada will demand that this money when expended shall not only come under review by auditors who may be sent to the port of Quebec to examine the accounts, but by auditors who are responsible to parliament; that parliament shall have an opportunity of investigating expenditures running into millions of dollars in the case of a harbour commission which, up to the present time, has failed to carry on the business of the harbour of Quebec with success to the city and to Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I merely intervene to say that having been acting Minister of Immigration during the year mentioned by my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman), 1922, I recall that we were billed by the harbour of Quebec for the facilities accorded the Immigration department. On that occasion I took the ground that we were also disembarking immigrants at Halifax, which was under the control of the federal government, and as the facilities there and at Quebec had been provided by the Public Works department it was hardly fair to charge the Immigration department for their use. But it was brought to my attention, and I know it to be a fact, that the facilities at the port of Quebec were not what they should be, that frequently ships had to anchor out in the river for two or three days because we were not able to examine immigrants fast enough through lack of the proper facilities. There is no doubt that although the facilities were provided by the Public Works department, they are on property operated by the harbour commission, and do entail hardship on the commission inasmuch as they occupy space that is needed for the ordinary business of the port and must be provided elsewhere. While I think it is difficult to recommend payment of a claim of this kind in view of the fact that other ports are in a similar position, particularly Halifax, nevertheless there is some justice in the claim. I think the citizens of Quebec made the mistake of their lives when they had the harbour board appointed. They would have been in exactly the same position as all the other ports mentioned, that is, they would have had the advantage of the expenditure of public money free of interest. As for saying that we should charge the port of Halifax the $19,000,000 we have expended there, it is unthinkable; the harbour commission could not continue under such a burden.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I may tell my hon. friend that it was not the city, it was the parliament of Canada that inflicted this upon us.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): You should have resisted. In reply to my hon. friend from East Toronto, the Minister of Finance assured him that the very accounting that he is calling for is made to-day, notwithstanding the fact that the expenditure is under the control of the harbour commission.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I did not understand it that way. There is no investigation by parliament into the expenditures on the harbour of Quebec; there would be in the case of any other harbours receiving money directly from the government, such as Fort William and Toronto.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If I understood my colleague correctly, he said the audit was exactly the same as in the port of Montreal, that we would have access to the report and that full information would be given to the house.

Mr. RYCKMAN: But the point is, there would not be an investigation by the public accounts committee.

Mr. MANION: At Fort William, for example, where there is no harbour commission, the work is done by the Public Works department under the direction of the deputy minister and his engineers, so it is done directly under the authority of the parliament of Canada; whereas in the case of a harbour commission the work is done under their own engineer and not under the supervision of the Public Works department.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They are under the Marine department.

Mr. MANION: The harbour is not under the Marine department.

Mr. LAPOINTE: You are speaking of those under commissions; they are under the Marine department.

Mr. MANION: But they have no investigatory powers. They might be able to do it if they insisted. But take any work that is done at Fort William or Port Arthur: it has to be submitted to the Public Works department, and as a matter of fact it is done by them through their own engineers and officers. They lay out the plans and perhaps call for the tenders and supervise the whole work. That is the whole difference.

Mr. SPENCE: When I spoke yesterday I thought the debate would close within a few minutes, but twenty-four hours have elapsed and we are still discussing this question. I suggested then, and I still contend, that if this government owes the Quebec harbour commission any money on any account the matter should be straightened out. It is unfortunate that members of the government should try to create an impression in the country that we are endeavouring to discriminate against Quebec merely because it is Quebec. There is no intention on the part of any member on this side to vote against any legal improvements or developments which may be necessary at that port. I do not think anybody wishes to take that position and it is wrong for any hon. member to insinuate anything of the kind. But we do wish to get all the details in connection with this matter and to know what is being done with the money. We are being asked to vote a large sum, and it is important that we should know just how it will be spent. If the government will give us the necessary information they will not encounter any difficulty.

Mr. COOTE: I must crave the indulgence of my impatient friends opposite for speaking so late. I have been present the greater part of the two days during which this discussion has been in progress, and I have listened patiently—sometimes impatiently—in the hope of getting some information which would really justify the committee in passing the reoslution. I have been reminded of a story I once heard—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

An hon. MEMBER: Get down to business.

Mr. POWER: A bedtime story? It is half-past ten.

Mr. COOTE: This story is about a coloured gentleman, a darkey who was driving a team of mules through a southern swamp. It was late in the day, and by the time he got into the interior of the swamp it was quite dark.

Sir EUGENE FISET: There was no swamp.

Mr. COOTE: A thunderstorm came up and every time there was a flash of lightning it lit up the road. The darkey liked that, but very soon the flash was followed by a clap of thunder which naturally made the mules very restive. As the storm got worse, after a particularly brilliant flash of lightning and the resultant clap of thunder, the mules became altogether unmanageable and ran away with the darkey, who fell into the bottom of the wagon. In this plight he began to pray, and his first words as reported were these: "Oh Lord, if it's all the same to you, could we have a little less noise and more light?" Now I think we have had the noise, but I do not believe we have had all the light that we should have had.

Mr. DUNNING: What about the mules?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are all over on the front benches.

Mr. COOTE: I could not help thinking, as the minister was complaining of our having wasted two days on this question, that if we had been given the information to which I think the house is entitled when it is asked to vote $8,500,000, we might have disposed of the matter yesterday. If this question were referred to a committee and they devoted two sessions to it, I fancy they would find out all the facts by the end of that time. As it is, although we have spent nearly two days on it, we have not nearly all the information which should be given us. Perhaps it is not fair to lay all the blame on the minister, although he might have given a complete statement at the outset and so have saved a lot of time. I want to refer first of all to the question of the audit of moneys spent not only on this harbour but on all harbour commissions. That expenditure should be audited by the Auditor General's department. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say that he will have the audit board audit the accounts if necessary, but I have never known the audit board's reports to be submitted to parliament. The Auditor General's report is submitted to us annually and referred to the public accounts committee, and the house has an opportunity then of finding out how every dollar is spent in every department of government. But we cannot find out anything about the expenditures of these commissions.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COOTE: I regret that the one who speaks last in these debates is under so serious a disadvantage. The house gets so noisy that it is almost impossible to speak. I do not think it is fair. I have sat and listened quietly to the discussion for two days, and now I have a right to be heard. I want to say first of all to the minister—and I do not intend to keep the committee very long—

An hon. MEMBER: A good thing.

Mr. COOTE: Maybe, but I could talk for half an hour if absolutely necessary. I was going to say, we voted $5,000,000 for the Quebec harbour in 1925, and we were told then that this was sufficient for a period of five years. Now after three years the minister comes back and asks for $8,500,000 more. He has not yet enlightened us as to what has made him change his mind, and why he now finds it necessary, two years before the expiry of the five-year period, to ask for this large additional vote. The minister should know just what claims ought to be allowed which are now being pressed by the commission. He might have told us what revenue has been collected by the commission during the past two years.

Mr. DUNNING: He did; it is all in Hansard.

Mr. COOTE: Well, that must have been while I was called out of the house. I am sorry I missed it. Somebody suggests that it is so small I did not miss very much anyway.

Mr. DUNNING: The light was shining, but you weren't here to see it.

Mr. COOTE: The minister might tell us—in fact, I hope he will when he brings down the bill—just how many berths there will be when he gets the wharf completed, and how many berths will be available for use. He might also let us know whether the prospective tonnage will require this additional accommodation.

Now, a word or two in regard to the proposal to erect the new storage elevator. I do not think the minister has yet given any reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Acadia as to how he was going to secure sufficient revenue from that elevator to pay interest on the money. I did intend to read some of the remarks made by some of the hon. members in 1925 with regard to the possibility of shipping western grain through the port of Quebec, but I do not think I will do so. If anyone is interested he will find these statements reported in Hansard. The remarks of the hon. member for Provencher were particularly well put. He pointed out that in his opinion grain never would go through the port of Quebec during the open season, because the railway companies would not furnish enough cars to carry grain that distance when they could unload their cars at Fort William. In order to provide additional rolling stock which would be necessary they would have to spend millions of dollars, as the hon. member pointed out. If the hour were not so late and if some hon. members were not so impatient—and I really do not want to get into their bad graces—I would read some of the words of the hon. member.

Mr. POWER: Perhaps those gentlemen have seen the light.

Mr. COOTE: They have not seen much light if I correctly understood the number of bushels which have been handled through the present elevator at Quebec. In my opinion we are just as likely to handle 40,000,000 bushels through that elevator in one year as the proverbial camel is to go through the eye of a needle. It never will be done, for the simple reason that grain will not go to Quebec to any extent except when the river is frozen up. Then it will be used for winter storage, and the elevator will not handle very much more than three or four times its capacity in any year.

I think the cost of elevator construction, which was given by the minister as approximately 95 cents a bushel, is much too high. It seems to me that that statement is a sufficient reason for us to ask the government to give this question very careful consideration. In the face of the present situation, and in order to remove any doubt as to the voting of this amount the government have only to convince the house that this work is needed, I do not see why they have not been willing to let this matter go before a small committee, preferably the public accounts committee, before which the engineers could appear and demonstrate the need for this additional accommodation at Quebec harbour.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. STEVENS: On division.

Resolution agreed to on division.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 214, to provide for a loan to the Quebec harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

PAPERS TABLED RESPECTING DIVERSION OF WATER

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the consent of the house to revert to the order, Motions.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I desire to place upon the table a return asked for by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the subject being the report of the three Canadian members of the International Waterways Commission dated on or about April 5, 1906, recommending the negotiation of a treaty with the United States. I should like, with the indulgence of the house, to make a short statement in regard to these important documents.

Incorporated with the material which is being tabled to-day regarding the Chicago diversion is a series of exchanges between the Canadian and United States governments, which has taken place subsequent to the exchanges tabled on February 24, 1926. In view of the complexity of the Chicago diversion matter and of the lengthy nature of this recent correspondence an explanatory statement with respect to it is desirable.

The tabling of this further correspondence will demonstrate the careful manner in which the interests of Canada have been continuously guarded by the Canadian government as the Chicago situation has developed from month to month.

On February 24, 1926, there was tabled in the House of Commons an interchange of correspondence between the Canadian government and that of the United States with respect to the matter of the withdrawal of water from the great lakes system by the Chicago sanitary district. In my statement to the house at that time, covering the correspondence then tabled, I mentioned the fact that on January 5, 1926, the Canadian government, having secured an official interpretation by the United States government of the permit which the United States Secretary of War had issued on March 3, 1925, in favour of the Chicago sanitary district, had set forth its position in a comprehensive manner in a further despatch, dated February 4, 1926, which included a protest against then pending proposals for the construction of a nine-foot navigable channel in the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, based upon the diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second from the great lakes through the sanitary district canal, and that this despatch had been withheld from publication, in accordance with an understanding with the government of the United States.

In the interval which elapsed pending the receipt of the reply of the United States government to this note, and because of the increasing concern arising from the progress of the Mississippi waterway measure before congress, the government of Canada sent a further communication to the government of the United States on April 30, 1926, drawing the attention of that government to the international aspect of the matter and protesting vigorously against the action contemplated by the measure.

At about the same date the Dominion government was in receipt of a communication from the government of the province of Ontario, transmitting a copy of a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province also protesting against the enactment by the United States congress of any legislation authorizing the abstraction of water from the great lakes system at Chicago. This protest was also formerly transmitted to the United States government on April 23, 1926.

A response to the Canadian government's representations was received on July 26, 1926, which among other things, advised that the bill which had been before congress and which had had in view the authorization of a diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second from great lakes system to the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, had not been enacted into law during the session of congress then recently closed, and advised further, however, that the bill would be taken up for consideration shortly after the next session of congress which convened in December.

To follow this point further I might state that the Mississippi waterway measure was considered by the reassembled congress in December and was passed with a reference to the 10,000 cubic feet per second diversion deleted, and with an amendment added to the effect "that nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing any diversion of water from lake Michigan." In view of the consistent protests which the government of Canada had registered in opposition to the principles embodied in the Mississippi waterway measure as first introduced, the amendment to the bill should give ground for a considerable measure of satisfaction on the part of the people of Canada. This amendment removed the objections of the lake bordering states which had been vigorously fighting the proposal in congress, and would appear to have very largely met the objectionable features inherent in the original bill.

Furthermore, in response to a specific inquiry made in the Canadian government's despatch of January 5th, 1926, as to what progress had been attained by the Chicago sanitary district and by the municipality of Chicago in the provision of the curtailment measures called for by the permit of the United States Secretary of War, dated March 3, 1925—under which authority the diversion is now being made—the United States government in its despatch of July 26th, informed the Canadian government:

(a) That preliminary investigations had been made with regard to the installation of controlling works at the intake to the sanitary canal, and that it was expected that detail plans would be prepared during the ensuing year, and that no difficulty in the completion of these works prior to the expiration of the permit was anticipated.

(b) That the progress made by the city of Chicago in carrying out the installation of sewage treatment works was satisfactory.

(c) That it was expected that the installation of water meters would, in the near future, result in a reduction in the consumption of water used for domestic purposes.

From the statements made by the United States government as to the progress made by the Chicago sanitary district in meeting the conditions of the Secretary of War's permit we would be warranted in assuming that the United States government was satisfied that the progressive reduction which it anticipated in its note of November 24, 1925, would be realized. This note anticipatel a reduction by December 31, 1929, to 8,000 cubic feet per second and probably 6,700 cubic feet per second, and stated further that the sewage treatment program of the sanitary district had been arranged so as to make it possible to effect a reduction to a gross flow of 4,167 cubic feet per second by the year 1935 or before.

The subsequent exchange of correspondence tabled to-day has to do mainly with the securing of the assent of the United States government to the publication of the despatches to which I have just referred. This was formally requested in a communication from the Canadian government dated November 16, 1926.

In a response dated December 7, 1926, the United States government expressed the view that the report of the Joint Board of Engineers on the St. Lawrence waterway project had greatly altered the understanding of the situation with respect to diversions from great lakes watersheds, and that it would, therefore, be unjustifiable to publish the correspondence which was based upon, at least, a partial misapprehension of the facts. The note pointed out that there had been a general impression in many parts of Canada and United States that the fall of some thirty inches in lake levels was very largely due to the diversion at Chicago, whereas, the joint board's report showed that only a small part of the fall in lake levels had been due to that diversion. The note further suggested that the two governments enter upon a discussion of the practical question of providing compensatory works as recommended by the Joint Board of Engineers.

In the response of the Canadian government, dated September 1, 1927, the Canadian government pointed out that it had not been under any misapprehension as to the extent which the abstraction of water through the Chicago sanitary canal had lowered the levels of the great lakes, and that it had been fully advised that this lowering had been in the neighbourhood of six inches, and pointed out that if any misapprehension existed in the United States or in Canada as to the degree of lowering occasioned by the Chicago abstraction, the publication of these papers would go a long way towards relieving such misunderstanding.

The Canadian note furthermore pointed out that the installation of compensatory works for the restoration of lake levels would in no way recoup to the great lakes system, the power which is lost to that system by water abstracted therefrom through the sanitary canal, and that while recognizing the marked advantages which may be gained by the construction of suitable compensating works, Canada would not be prepared to enter upon a discussion of any plans for the construction of such works if this course involved an assumption that the present abstraction through the Chicago sanitary canal is to continue. A further suggestion that the correspondence be published was incorporated in the Canadian note.

In the United States government's response the suggestion as to the publication of the correspondence was accepted incorporating, however, in the series to be published, a further despatch dated October 17, 1927, in which it inferred that the apportionment of water for power purposes at Niagara under which Canada receives 36,000 cubic feet per second, and the United States, 20,000 cubic feet per second, was in compensation for the abstraction of water by Chicago. It is hardly necessary to state that the Canadian government does not concur in this viewpoint and that all Canadian governments have consistently taken the stand, in all protests made to the United States government, since the initiation of the abstraction of the water, that no compensation has anywhere or at any time been made for the Chicago withdrawal.

The house is also aware of the suit which is now pending before the United States Supreme Court, under which the states of Wisconsin, Ohio, Pensylvania, and Minnesota, with the support also of the states of Michigan, and New York, are questioning the legality of the permits which have been issued by the United States Secretary of War to the Chicago sanitary district authorizing the withdrawal of water through the Chicago sanitary canal, and questioning further the right even of congress to authorize such withdrawal from the great lakes system.

This suit in the United States Supreme Court is, of course, a purely domestic matter with which the government of Canada has no direct contact and with respect to which it could not with any propriety taken any action or make any representations. I might add, however, that as the suit involves legal principles of the very highest importance to Canada, the progress is being followed with the utmost care, in order that the effect on Canadian interests of whatever decision is reached may be fully appreciated, and that any necessary action may be taken to protect those interests.

It will be evident from the foregoing that the Canadian government is maintaining the closest possible contact with every phase and feature having to do with the Chicago diversion. The government of Canada has consistently refused to recognize the diversion in the slightest measure and will continue to present the Canadian viewpoint with all possible firmness to the United States government against the entire principle of abstracting water from the great lakes to another watershed.

ST. JOHN HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $5,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Saint John in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 to enable the corporation to construct such terminal facilities as are necessary properly to equip the port of Saint John, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister would be good enough, in a clear and concise way, to tell us the circumstances under which this resolution is being moved. This is a large sum of money and we should like to know just what is involved in it and what obligations the country accepts, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as apparently there was in another case. It seems to me we should get a statement of that kind from the minister in the case of this harbour commission which is coming to parliament for a grant for the first time since it came into existence.

Mr. CARDIN: The conditions in connection with the placing of the harbour of St. John under the harbour commissioners are embodied in the act under which the commission was created. The total consideration for the transfer of the harbour to the commissioners amounted to $2,135,118, apportioned as follows: existing bonded indebtedness of the city occasioned in the development of the harbour, to be taken over by the harbour commissioners, $1,467,164; balance to be paid to the city in harbour commissioners' bonds, $667,953.04. Of course this does not include the expenditure made through the Department of Public Works; it covers only the expenditure made by the city of St. John. As we all know, St. John harbour is a very old one, having been established in 1783.

Mr. STEVENS: Are those bonds to be a first charge, first mortgage bond?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Guaranteed?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no guarantee.

Mr. STEVENS: I mean the $600,000 bond to which the minister has referred, to be given to the city of St. John?

Mr. CARDIN: This will be the payment.

Mr. STEVENS: Cash payment?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, that the government is supposed to make to the commission.

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand the matter, the Dominion of Canada has bought the harbour?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Assuming obligations for $1,500,000 and paying some $600,000 in bonds; is that correct?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Harbour commissioners' bonds?

Mr. CARDIN: To be paid to the city in harbour commissioners' bonds. The commissioners themselves are going to pay the city of St. John by bonds of the St. John harbour commission as created last year, the sum of $667,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What rate of interest?

Mr. CARDIN: Five per cent, the rate which is charged to all the commissions.

Mr. GEARY: It is the commissioners who are buying the harbour?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: How was the price arrived at?

Mr. CARDIN: It was a valuation.

Mr. RYCKMAN: By whom?

Mr. VENIOT: By the engineers of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. RYCKMAN: No arbitration?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. STEVENS: Do I understand that the $600,000 worth of bonds of the harbour commission are to be given to the city of St. John in addition to the $5,000,000 worth of bonds that will be issued by the Dominion government for this loan?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. The program which has been presented to us by the commissioners of St. John requests an amount of $10,000,000 for the work that they were disposed to undertake after careful examination by their engineers, but it has been agreed that $5,000,000 would satisfy them and would cover a program of three years' development. The statement which is given to me is that the initial development proposed with the loan now asked for would provide working space for four vessels loading general cargo and two vessels loading grain, and it includes the necessary dredging to provide basins and a channel of thirty feet at low water, to be increased to 35 feet should that later be found necessary. There will also be provided a new grain elevator, with a capacity of 2,400,000 bushels, with grain conveyor galleries connecting with two of the new berths. The new shipping berths will be equipped with one storey freight sheds 575 feet by 90 feet. The work is to be undertaken with the idea of providing a complete unit of development ready for operation within the term of three years over which the loan is to be spread, as provided for in this bill.

As was stated this afternoon in the course of the discussion on another proposal, these developments in the port of St. John are recommended by the Duncan commission. This is what is said by the Duncan commission in regard to the matter:

> We recommend that, in respect of each of these two harbours—

That is St. John and Halifax.

> —the federal government should establish a statutory harbour commission, whose business it would be to see that the port facilities are developed on such a scale as will gradually—but by no means slowly—create channels through which trade can expand both winter and summer.

It is pursuant to these recommendations of the Duncan commission that we have incorporated the present harbour commission to take over the harbour, and following that recommendation we are accepting part of the program which has been suggested by the present harbour commission. I may say for the information of the committee that the gross earnings in 1927 amounted to $257,704.97 and the expenditures to $218,462.80.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that include the interest charges?

Mr. VENIOT: The interest on the city's own indebtedness.

Mr. CARDIN: In 1926-27, with the present elevator facilities, they handled 25,855,000 bushels.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Does that mean if the present rate of earnings is maintained, the interest on the bonds will be earned in part?

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think I can say that interest on the $5,000,000 for which they are asking will be met for some time. The commissioners do not expect to be in a position for some years to pay interest on this amount.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is the $5,000,000 for the completion of one unit of development?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is that really $5,000,000, or does it mean $10,000,000?

Mr. CARDIN: The amount required for the whole development which they have in view is $10,000,000, but they have represented to the department that with $5,000,000 they are capable of building a complete unit.

Mr. GEARY: The minister does not expect that there will be any interest chargeable during construction?

Mr. CARDIN: No. The interest will be retained by the Minister of Finance.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, April 20, 1928.

The house met at three o'clock.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the Auditor General's report for the year ending March 31, 1927, and the public accounts for the year ending March 31, 1927, be referred to the select standing committee on public accounts.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to direct attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to these public accounts now being referred to the public accounts committee, when we are within reasonable distance of the end of the session, something should be done so that they may be studied in the meantime and brought before the committee at the next session. The public accounts committee has not been sitting for two years or more, and there is a great deal of work to be done by it. Many things in the Auditor General's report should be inquired into, and it should be understood that the passing of this motion will not preclude the public accounts committee being set up next session and dealing with these accounts, because they are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1927, a year ago, and they were not brought down in the early part of this session. I shall probably have something to say about the fiscal year and the public accounts on another occasion, because our budget is only as of March 31, 1928, so far as that feature is concerned. If these public accounts cannot be considered by the public accounts committee next session great injustice will be done.

Mr. ROBB: I admit at once, Mr. Speaker, that this motion should have been made on the day the accounts were tabled. It was an omission on my part.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I was directing attention to. Would there be any objection on the part of the administration to these accounts and the Auditor General's report being studied and made available for consideration by the public accounts committee to be set up next session? I think there should be no objection.

Mr. ROBB: There will be no objection on the part of the administration.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS OF DIVORCE BILLS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That for the balance of the session all divorce bills received from the senate be read a first and a second time forthwith and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills; and that standing order 22 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, why should senate bills have a preference over other private bills? As a matter of fact, this session we proceeded—as usual, I suppose—by unanimous consent of the house to give the debate on the address precedence, and then again by unanimous consent to give precedence to the debate on the budget, with the result that there has been less opportunity for private bills to be dealt with this session than in any of the previous sessions during which I have been in the house. If this course is continued, it will be impossible in subsequent sessions, unless I very much mistake the temper of hon. members, to secure unanimous consent to precedence of public business. Public business will have to take its proper place on the order paper, and private members will at least have Wednesday afternoons and one hour two nights a week in order to present and discuss their private measures. But under present conditions, with the great mass of private legislation held up without any chance, as it seems to me, of securing the approval of the house during the present session—some of it private legislation which is just as important to the country as many of the public bills that have been introduced—I see no reason why we should give to senate bills precedence over any other private legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The motion relates only to divorce bills, and I think it facilitates what the hon. member has in mind, namely, the getting out of the way of some of the legislation that in procedure helps to block the way when we are trying to reach other private bills. In short, this motion is simply intended to expedite to some degree other private legislation on the order paper.

Mr. CAHAN: I have no right to speak again, but I would suggest to the Prime Minister that the passing of this motion will simply give precedence to senate bills over other private legislation which is coming before this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend insists on his objection I shall not hesitate to withdraw the motion until he has had time to consider its significance. Then I think he will find that what I am saying is quite correct, that the purpose of the motion is simply to permit of the disposal of certain divorce bills that come from the senate, to which this house does not give time in debate or committee, but which have to be read a first and a second time. This motion would send them immediately to the private bills committee. To that extent the way is left clear for other private legislation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I think the solution of this problem lies in the hands of the house itself. We have before us now a senate bill dealing with the question of establishing a court in Ontario to deal with divorce cases. If the passage of this bill could be expedited this session, then there would be no necessity in the future for such a motion as this.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to protest as strongly as I can against the disgraceful way in which we are dealing with these divorce cases. I heartily agree with the member who has just spoken with regard to the necessity of having these divorce cases transferred to some court where they can be properly dealt with. At the present time, as we all know, they come before this house and are given three readings, and we are getting into the habit of lumping them together and passing batches of ten, twenty and thirty without giving them the slightest consideration. For some years I sat on the private bills committee where the same thing was done. I doubt whether the ordinary member of the private bills committee read one case in fifty of those coming before him. If some unusual protest came before the house regarding some particular case we were forced to read the evidence in that case. Although we are supposed to have certain safeguards in this house in the passing of legislation, provided for by a distinct reading three times of each bill and also by discussion in private committees, as a matter of fact, so far as the house is concerned, there is absolutely no investigation into any one of the cases—not one. I feel that we as members here are not justified, in what is supposed to be, as regards such cases, a more or less judicial committee, in continuing in this most perfunctory way to pass these bills without any investigation whatever. I think, Mr. Speaker, that in the very near future I shall insist that a test case be made in connection with one of these divorce bills and that we discuss in this house the merits of the case. I fancy that if we did so the first thing we should have to do would be to ask the one lady member of the house to withdraw. The next thing would be to ask that the galleries be cleared, and in the next place, to have the Hansard reporters leave the chamber, because I submit that the evidence which would be produced in this house would be such as to constitute obscene literature which would be refused carriage through the mails of the country. I submit that we are placing ourselves in an unfortunate position if, to avoid publicity of this kind, we condone the manner of granting divorce as at present observed. In my judgment whether we regard divorce as good or bad, we are submitting to a course of procedure that involves the maximum of expense and the maximum of publicity—

Mr. BOURASSA: And the minimum of safeguard.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite right, the minimum of safeguard with regard to the granting of divorces. It is a public disgrace, and I for one do not propose indefinitely to submit to this kind of thing. And if it came to insisting upon the discussion of these bills one by one I for one feel that perhaps the session would not be in vain provided such a course led to a revision of the rules of procedure.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): I should like to refer to the publication of these divorce cases. Now, we have many committees—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to speak to the motion, which is that for the balance of the session all divorce bills received from the senate be read a first and a second time forthwith, not discussing the evidence in any case.

Mr. BRADY: I am not referring to evidence, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking with reference to the publication of these cases at great expense. The divorce publications are considered by hon. members to be of a revolting nature, and they are torn up and thrown into the waste paper basket the moment they reach their hands. I think these publications involve unnecessary expenditure of public moneys, and I submit for that reason that the evidence should not be published and distributed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried on division.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Is it possible to pass that motion on division? I thought there had to be a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under standing order 45 it is provided:

> Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the order paper, but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the house.

This motion relates to private bills. I would direct the attention of the hon. member to No. 358 under this standing order:

> Motions applying to the business or arrangements of the house as a rule require notice, but some are of such a purely formal nature that by general consent notice is not insisted upon.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do I understand that this is to be regarded as a purely formal matter and that we can, without any notice of motion, and not by unanimous consent, but in the face of decided opposition in the house, set aside the rule which requires three readings of each bill before it may be passed?

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The purpose of the motion was to save the time of the house. Possibly I had better ask, Mr. Speaker, that you allow the motion to stand as a notice in the regular way, and it can be brought up again at a subsequent sitting.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is that the motion has been declared carried and the objection was not taken before that declaration was made by the chair. I submit that, the chair having given its ruling and the motion having been declared carried, it is rather late for the hon. member to intervene. Under the circumstances the declaration of the chair that the motion is carried should stand.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit that a point of order with reference to a ruling of the chair should be considered.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion has been declared carried and under the rules it must stay carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I appeal against the ruling of the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is too late.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think there is something more important than losing time. In fair play I appeal against the ruling of the chair.

Mr. SPEAKER: Introduction of bills.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I have a right to speak to the point of order. I appeal against the ruling of the chair in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: The appeal is against a judgment of the house and not against a ruling of the chair. The motion was put. I asked the question whether it was the wish of the house that the motion be carried. There was apparently some dissent and I declared the motion carried on division. Had it been a substantive motion I would certainly have had regard to the difference of opinion in the house, but as this is purely a formal motion I declared it carried. It is too late now to appeal. The motion having been declared carried, no appeal lies against the judgment of the house.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, may I point out, in fear and trembling lest I be declared out of order, that a motion made in a case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover may be made by unanimous consent of the house. In this case unanimous consent was not given, so there is no reason why the motion should be declared carried.

HUDSON BAY

REPORT OF AERIAL SURVEY OF HUDSON STRAIT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I lay on the table of the house the report of the Hudson strait expedition, December 31, 1927.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 206 for the relief of Esther Brand. —Mr. Garland (Carleton)

Bill No. 207 for the relief of Irene Adela Crann.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 208 for the relief of Jessie Ferguson.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 209 for the relief of William Herbert Gamble.—Mr. Tummon.

Bill No. 210 for the relief of Mabel Maude Giles.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 211 for the relief of Alice Mockford.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 212 for the relief of Alvah Arthur Norris.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 213 for the relief of Eleanor Porter. —Mr. Geary.

Motion for second reading of bills Nos. 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, agreed to on division, and bills read the second time.

PORT HOPE LIGHTHOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. W. BOWEN (Durham): In the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) I would ask the Prime Minister a question based on a telegram which I received to-day. This telegram states that last night the lighthouse at Port Hope disappeared into the lake, owing to the fact that the government has not kept the pier in repair. Will the government look into this matter and take some action?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am sure there must be some error in the message if it attributes this incident to any neglect on the part of the government. I have no doubt that it was due entirely to the elements, but the matter will be looked into immediately, and I have no doubt some means will be taken at once to have the lighthouse rebuilt.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

ATHABASCA ELECTION—INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct the attention of the government to the situation which exists with regard to one of the standing commitees of this house, and to ask a question based thereon. The committee on privileges and elections has been called once—on March 29, I think—since it was appointed, and at that time there was not a quorum present. An important matter has been referred to this committee, namely the investigation of the report made by Mr. Justice Clarke on the Athabaska election scandal. If it is because the chairman of the committee cannot attend its meetings that the committee is not being called, I ask the government if they will now consider again calling the committee together and appointing another chairman or deputy chairman in order that the business of the house in relation to that committee may be proceeded with.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): As chairman of that committee perhaps I may answer my hon. friend. On several occasions I have asked the clerks of committees to call meeting of this particular committee, but as an hon. member stated in this house yesterday, it has happened that a number of other committees were meeting on those particular days. The clerks have not found it possible to have the sittings of the committees except under the conditions mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). I have therefore given instructions to have this committee called practically every day in the week in order to try to get a quorum. The committee will be called next Tuesday, and if there is no quorum a meeting will be summoned every subsequent day during the week until a quorum is secured.

ACCOMMODATION AVAILABLE FOR MEETINGS OF COMMITTEES—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. SPEAKER: The member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), on the orders of the day yesterday, stated that the accommodation for the committees of the house was very inadequate, that important committees had to depend on temporary rooms provided at the last moment, and asked that this condition of affairs be looked into.

The information I have in respect to this matter is to the effect that there were seven meetings held yesterday morning. There are four rooms always at the disposal of the committees, namely, 231, 375, 424, 429, and one room, 268, a spare room which is usually at the disposal of committees. The government caucus room, 497, and the opposition caucus room, 116, are, with the consent of the chief whips, frequently used by the committees. This happened yesterday when both rooms were in use by committees. The rooms had been prepared by the staff the night before for the meetings.

The accommodation I have mentioned is the maximum space available for the use of the committees. The only method of increasing the space would be to enlarge the parliament building, as all the space for the accommodation of members and committees is completely taken up.

Mr. DUNNING: May I say that the complaint of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre, and the complaint of other members, especially of the railway committee, were not confined to the committees sitting yesterday, especially the committee on railways and shipping. The chairman of the general railway committee is unfortunately not in his place, but I feel sure that if he were he would be saying on behalf of that committee what I am now saying. It is a fact that on no occasion this session has the railway committee occupied the room designated as the railway committee room, and on no two occasions has the railway committee met in the same room; it has been a movable feast all session, and the same applies to the special committee on railways and shipping. Now as pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre yesterday, in connection with both these committees there are always present a large number of officials and experts of one kind or another, and in connection with the general railway committee there is a very large number of persons interested in the bills before the committee. Therefore I would on behalf of these committees request your honour to take the special circumstances into consideration and endeavour to make the conditions a little better for us than has been the case this session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I shall do that with pleasure.

BRITISH EMPIRE STEEL CORPORATION

PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I would ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) if he would kindly give us some further information with respect to a report in this morning's press concerning an agreement entered into between the Nova Scotia miners and the British Empire Steel Corporation on a profit-sharing basis.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): I am sure my hon. friend does not want me to go into the details of the agreement, which has not yet been signed. I can say, however, that a vote of the miners was taken the day before yesterday and the proposed agreement, which involves a two years contract, was adopted by a majority of 5,688.

CANADIAN NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED LEGISLATION RESPECTING ALIENATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Last year, if I recall aright, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) promised us that this year he would introduce legislation providing that no portion of the national parks would be alienated in the future without the consent of parliament. I would ask the minister if he intends bringing down the legislation at this session.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): No, we will not be able to bring down the legislation this session. I may say that the difficulty we have met with has been the necessity of having a realignment of boundaries and an agreement with the provincial government as to those boundaries. We have almost completed the desired arrangement, but matters are not sufficiently advanced to permit the introduction of the necessary legislation this session. However, as soon as an arrangement has been concluded the necessary legislation will be introduced.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

PRINTING OF PAPERS TABLED RESPECTING DIVERSION OF WATER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): May I remind the Minister of the Interior that he promised to have the necessary steps taken for the printing of the papers laid on the table last night in connection with the Chicago drainage diversion?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry, but I forgot my hon. friend's request. I will move on Monday to have the papers printed.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO TABLING OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): I would again ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) if he is able to give the house any definite information as to when the report of the Royal Commission on Fisheries will be tabled, and will be in the possession of members? The session is drawing to a close and if any action is to be taken with respect to that report it will have to be taken soon.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I am not in a position to state definitely when the report of the commission will be tabled. The report is now being prepared and I expect that it will be tabled during the course of next week.

EXPORT OF ELECTRIC POWER

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF BILL NO. 2 AS GOVERNMENT MEASURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): I would draw the attention of the government to Bill No. 2, relating to the export of electric power and its position on the order paper under public bills and orders. The government has on more than one occasion expressed its entire approval of the principle of this bill which, in its present form, is the result of consultation and conference with the Department of Trade and Commerce and is, I think, satisfactory now to all concerned. May I ask the government if, under these circumstances, they will consider the advisability of allowing the bill to pass, as it is one very much in the public interest, and if that cannot be done, whether they will take it over as a government measure with a view of its being enacted into law at this session? I do not press for an answer to-day, as I see the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) is not here, but I should like the Prime Minister to make inquiry and consider the matter.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Perhaps I had better give my hon. friend an answer at once. The request he makes opens the question whether other public bills should not receive like treatment. I am afraid that if the government expresses a preference for any one measure other hon. members having bills they wish to have considered would have reason to feel that the government was probably favouring one more than the others. Under the circumstances the most I can say to my hon. friend is that the government will at his suggestion consider how far the public interest is likely to be affected by the bill being delayed until a subsequent session. In any event I should not like to promise my hon. friend that this particular bill can be taken up this session.

VALIDATION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

The house resumed from April 10 consideration in committee of Bill No. 62, relating to the submission to parliament of certain regulations and orders in council.—Mr. Stewart (Edmonton).—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Hon. CHARLES A. STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I think a word of explanation would be in order here. When I explained the provisions of the bill to the house I pointed out that a difficulty arose owing to the fact that all the orders in council passed in accordance with the statutes had been tabled, but by reason of a neglect extending over a considerable number of years they had not been validated by a resolution of the house and all I was asking to do was to have them validated. It has been pointed out to me since the bill has been under consideration that I am actually doing a little more than that; that I am putting those orders in council in a little different position from what they would be in if they had been simply by resolution validated in the house, and I am going to move an amendment which, I am informed by the Justice department, will place them in exactly the same category as if they had each year been validated by resolutions. I beg to move to amend Bill No. 62 by adding the following sentence at the end of section 1:

> Nothing in this act shall operate to place the crown in a better position than it would have been had the said orders in council been approved by resolution in the manner provided by the respective acts.

Mr. BENNETT: I mentioned this matter the other day to the Minister of the Interior and he was good enough to place before me a copy of the proposed amendment. I was thinking about it as he was mentioning it and it occurs to me that possibly it should go further and say:

> Nothing in this act shall operate to place the crown or any person in a better position.

I think that is what I had in mind in discussing the matter with the minister. Not only the crown but individuals might be affected by giving the orders in council the force and strength of a statute, which is the effect of the bill. I take it that the minister does not intend to place either the crown or anybody else in a better position than they would be in if the orders in council had been merely approved. There are orders in council which affect the rights of individuals, and if they had no foundation in law this statute would now make them a valid statute of the parliament of Canada so that the defence that might be open to one individual as against another would be ineffective. I do not suppose it is intended to do more than to say that to the extent to which an order in council had validity, it shall now have validity notwithstanding the fact that it was not approved in the manner prescribed by the act under which it was issued. That is the position; but that need not interfere with the matter, because if the officers of the crown so advise, words can be added when the bill is again before the house. The amendment brings at least the subject matter before the house, and it might be dealt with in that way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not having a legal training I am not just sure as to amendment my hon. friend suggests to the amendment I have just moved, but I can assure him that neither the department nor I want any person to be in a superior position to the crown—

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —and if it is necessary from a legal standpoint to add the word "person", then I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be a very proper place when the Prime Minister is in his seat to direct attention to the fact that these orders in council—and the minister invited me to inspect them—are very numerous. I should think there must be not less than four or five thousand of them altogether. This brought to my attention the fact that many orders in council affecting public rights are from time to time passed and there is no record of them so far as the public is concerned. I suggested to the minister—and this is not a new suggestion because I had occasion to think it necessary some time ago during the brief period that I was acting in the department—that these orders in council should be published in the Canada Gazette at the end of every month. I can conceive of no other way in which the public interest can be served and in which those interested would have an opportunity of observing just what legislation is enacted by the executive; because after all an order in council has all the effect of a statute, its validity depending upon the statute authorizing it and the order in council being the executive act of the crown's advisers in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by statute. Therefore, so far as the public is concerned, they have all the effect, force and power of a statute. The public in many instances can know and learn nothing unless the order in council is printed in the Gazette. Therefore I suggested to the minister the other day that it is very desirable that such a practice should be followed so that every person concerned might have an opportunity of observing just what executive actions were taken by the government from day to day and week to week in connection with various public interests that are affected by order in council.

I know how difficult at times it has been to follow these matters. In the Polson case it will be recalled that the Privy Council set aside a judgment that was predicated upon an order in council because the conditions with respect to the publication of the order in council had not been observed. Last night I directed the attention of the minister to a case in which a difficulty had arisen by reason of parliament having taken certain action with respect to an order in council. I am not asking the minister to answer at the moment, but I think all orders in council affecting public properties and public rights should be published in the Gazette as soon as possible after they have been passed; I can conceive of nothing more important in the public interest than that this should be done. For instance, the Department of National Defence has a rule that certain orders in council must be published in the Gazette, and the Department of Interior has a similar rule. I am not now referring merely to the formal business, for instance the cancellation of a quarter-section or something of that sort that requires the action of the governor in council; I am referring to those matters that affect largely public interests and public rights. I think the question of how this can be dealt with is worthy of consideration. In our statute we have only such orders in council published from year to year as may be regarded as important, and the Gazette should be the medium through which the public is informed as to every order in council that affects public interests and public rights.

Mr. CANNON: Does my hon. friend mean, first, all orders in council which affect rights of either individuals or public property, and, second, orders in council which are passed in accordance with the provisions of previous legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. CHURCH: As a humble member of the house I wish to protest against this procedure. You have the Liberal party to-day proposing to govern by commissions, by orders in council, by governor general's warrants. Although in opposition they condemned all these ways and means. We have to-day this honourable house proposing to pass a bill to validate government by order in council in regard to properties in the western provinces of which no one knows the present value. Even if it does relate to the past it governs also the future. The other day we had before us a bill in regard to the Peace River valley. The Department of the Interior, like the Department of Marine and Fisheries, seems to-day to be nothing but a political machine. Just the other day what did they do by order in council? They granted in effect to Mr. Backus, an American millionaire, a subsidy of $700,000 of the taxpayers' money of this country in connection with his power and light and transportation proposition in the Lake of the Woods district. We have a government in this country that is supposed to consist of the Governor General, the Senate, and the House of Commons, but now it is proposed to take away all the powers of this house in regard to such great questions as those affecting the Dominion lands and Dominion forest reserves and Dominion parks, water powers—mines and minerals and rule by order in council and delegate to this house powers the potential value of which no one can estimate to-day. The value of these properties not even the minister who presides over the department of the Interior can tell. What this government is doing in connection with the Chicago water diversion is done very largely by order in council.

We have private bills on the order paper to-day relating to the mergers of the banks of this country, and let me say that the people of this country will soon not own our Canadian banks at all, because American stock-jobbing interests are buying up the stock of the chartered banks of this country in New York. If a bank failed to-day you could not proceed against the shareholders for double liability because the banks are falling into the hands of the Americans, and the stockholders are Americans with no property within the jurisdiction of Canadian courts. We have public bills on the order paper seeking amendment to the Insurance Act (lapsed policies) and dealing with bank mergers and water powers, all with the object of protecting the people and the resources of the country, and yet we cannot get these measures discussed at all or passed a first reading simply because they are standing in the names of private members. But a minister of the crown can come down to this house and get amendments to acts relating to our Dominion lands and Dominion forest reserves and parks, and mines and minerals of an enormous potential value and rule by order in council. But the closure rule is applied against the private members. If private members want to put up with that sort of thing, well and good; now is the time to protest and get our rights, but so far as I am concerned, I wish to protest against private members not being allowed to proceed with legislation that is in the interest of the working classes of this country, measures dealing, for instance, with the banks, loans and trust companies, insurance companies, and the exportation of water powers from this country.

[Mr. Church.]

Under public orders there are three pages of important progressive public bills standing in the name of private members, and the most consideration they can get all session is a first reading, but there is no difficulty at all when the Minister of the Interior seeks to give Mr. Backus a subsidy of $700,000 to protect his light power and timber domain. Sir Adam Beck was opposed to that measure, so was the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, and many public bodies in Winnipeg are opposed to it, but it has been made a government bill and passed. Even if it was O.K.'d by the Ontario government, they are not protecting the municipalities to-day so far as the hydro electric movement is concerned, because they have sounded in the Gatineau deal the death knell of the hydro. The Gatineau Power Company and the International Power Company contract makes the Ontario Hydro to-day just a filling station for Mr. Graustein and these big American power companies. As a private member, I protest against this way of doing business by order in council. This is not a free parliament when a private member cannot bring in and have considered a measure that is in the interests of the public and force it to a vote; it is not a free parliament; we are just degenerating into a mock parliament. We have rules which are a hundred years old, and so far as the private member of parliament is concerned, he might just as well go back home and stay there because he can accomplish nothing in this house under the antiquated rules we have. If this is responsible government, all I can say is that it is a sorry day for the people of this country.

The report in regard to the St. Lawrence waterway was brought down to the house only a day or two ago, whereas on the other side of the line it was published in nearly every American newspaper nearly three months ago. I read it myself in the New York Times and the Detroit Free Press about a month ago. Why does not the government give us an oportunity to consider, for instance, the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Leeds, to regulate the exportation of electric power, or the bill standing in my name relating to bank mergers or to lapsed insurance policies? The government will not advance these bills, which are all in the interests of the public, at all. I am surprised that the two Labour members from the city of Winnipeg, who are in favour of public ownership and stand for the public, as far as I can see, do not protest against this way of doing business.

Mr. CHURCH: You have it now. I wish to protest against this way of doing business. In the Quebec legislature and the Ontario legislature a private member can bring in a bill to amend a government statute, and have his bill read a first and second time, and then have it referred to the private bills committee, where it will receive ample and fair consideration, but when a private member brings a bill into this house which is in the interest of the public, he cannot get it considered at all after a first reading—a fine free parliament! I would appeal to the Minister of the Interior to take over the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Leeds and give it preferred treatment in this house, and I would suggest to the Minister of Finance, if he wants to do anything to improve the banking law of this country and banking conditions in Canada, that he should find out who owns the eight banks now remaining in this country and take over the bank mergers bill and the lapsed insurance policy bill. Formerly we had eighteen banks in Canada, but now we have only eight, and I venture to say that before parliament reassembles next year, those eight banks will have dwindled down to four or five, unless parliament in the meantime does something to prevent further bank mergers without its consent.

The Prime Minister stated the other day that we would be given an opportunity to discuss the St. Lawrence waterway. He made that statement during the discussion on the motion which I had before the house, and I would have pressed that motion to a vote before six o'clock, but I understood from the Prime Minister that the debate would be reopened after the papers had been brought down, and yesterday we were told that the debate would not be reopened and that we would not be given any special day to discuss that question. I am surprised that the Progressive party does not protest against these antiquated rules. We might as well abolish the House of Commons if we are to have government by commission. The St. Lawrence waterway, the Alberta resources and other economic questions have been referred to the supreme court and commissions; but Mr. Backus is not sent to the supreme court when he wants a hand-out of $700,000 in the shape of water-powers, dams and regulation. I protest against this way of doing business. This is not a free parliament. Hon. gentlemen opposite to-day have abandoned all the principles of Liberalism by introducing this bill. A bill similar to this could not get through the British parliament, it could not get through the Australian parliament, it could not get through congress; not one of those bodies would delegate its powers to outside authorities or government by commission or government by order in council. Dear knows who is going to be the next American millionaire to file a claim under the Railway Belt Water Act, the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, the Dominion Lands Act, the Rocky Mountains Park Act, or the Yukon Act, for some rich timber resources, water-powers or mines and get away with the title deeds and to find Canada a happy hunting ground.

Mr. IRVINE: Is it the purpose of this act to ratify certain orders in council?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, these are all orders in council which have been cancelled, whatever rights may have existed under them; but the act calls for a resolution validating the orders placed upon the table year by year, and this is necessary because of the failure to take that procedure in former years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: You are not granting new powers or new rights?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not a single right in the world; it is simply to validate what has been cancelled.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not all cancelled.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, practically all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask for a little fuller explanation of the amendment which I think has been moved? Unfortunately we cannot hear very well at this end of the chamber. It reads as follows, I believe:

> Nothing in this act shall operate to place the crown in a better position than it would have been had the said orders in council been approved by resolution in the same manner provided by the respective acts.

I confess that I cannot quite understand this. If it means anything at all, it seems to me it may very easily invalidate the purpose in view.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The object of the original bill was to validate by statute those orders in council, but under the provisions of the act—this was pointed out to me by the leader of the opposition—we were taking greater power than we would otherwise have had by a simple resolution validating the orders as provided for in the act. This is to give us no more power than we would have had had we simply year by year passed the requisite resolution validating the orders then upon the table. That is why I am inserting in the amendment the word "person" after the word "crown", as suggested by my hon. friend. As amended it will read:

Nothing in this act shall operate to place the crown or any person in a better position than it would have been had the said orders in council been approved by resolution in the manner provided by the respective acts.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: After the word "than" the word "either" should be substituted for "it".

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has asked a question that I myself asked when the legislation was first introduced. The fact is the law requires that orders in council shall be laid upon the table, and not ratified by statute but by a resolution. The distinction between the two is of course well known to hon. gentlemen. A resolution does not give any greater validity to the act done under the orders in council than merely to indicate that it was before this house; but a statute gives it life and validity, whether it was within or beyond the power of the minister. Having regard to that fact, I pointed out to my hon. friend that I thought it desirable to make it clear if any orders in council—they are very numerous, some five thousand, extending over a number of years— affected rights and were in law beyond the power of the governor in council to pass, it should not be taken that this validation, so-called, gave life and validity to what would otherwise have been an illegal act, or an abuse—using the word in its proper sense—of the power of the governor in council under the various statutes. So the amendment that has been drawn indicates clearly that this act of this parliament does not give the crown or any person any greater rights than either would have possessed had the orders in council been approved by resolution, as provided by the several statutes under which they were authorized. I think that sufficiently protects the public interest, although I am bound to say to the hon. minister and the hon. member, that the matter is of very grave concern, for it affects so many orders in council. Until I went through them last night I had no idea how many there were. I suggested to the minister that he might prepare a schedule to attach to the act, but it is quite clear that this would be impracticable. A preamble, as my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) suggested, might possibly be inserted, but to give a history of all the transactions would involve specifying the numbers of the various orders in council, which in itself would be a considerable task. I think the minister is not quite correct in saying that only cancellations are affected, for in turning over the various volumes I recall one that made a grant of public lands the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, and another that affected matters dealt with in the Forestry Act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I failed to remember that they go back to 1906.

Mr. BENNETT: I noticed that a few did. There is, of course, some force in what the hon. gentleman from Northwest Toronto (Mr. Church) said, that there is grave danger of validating what was not contemplated by the original statute; but I think after the discussion we have had the amendment amply protects the interests of any person that may have been affected either directly or indirectly by reason of the enactment of this legislation. If the law officers of the crown are satisfied with it, certainly I should be.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My instruction to the law officers was not to place us in any better position—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —than we should have been in had the resolutions been passed by parliament year by year.

Mr. CAHAN: We simply wish to be assured that in this form it will not do more than that. It seems to me that the amendment as read a few moments ago was rather crude. It referred to a person as "it".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has been changed.

Mr. CAHAN: If the Prime Minister has had it under consideration I am sure it is improved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Thank you.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that when the bill is prepared the amendment will be expressed in better language.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What I instructed the officers to do was to prepare an amendment that would leave us in exactly the same position as we should have been in had the orders been validated by resolution. That is all. In the original bill we were doing more than that.

Mr. CAHAN: What is the form in which the amendment now stands?

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment now reads:

Nothing in this act shall operate to place the crown or any person in a better position than either would have been in had the said orders in council been approved by resolution in the manner provided by the respective acts.

Mr. IRVINE: Very few members know what we are doing. How does the minister explain the failure of governments from time to time to bring the resolutions before parliament according to the law? It seems to me that we should have before us a copy of every order in council; otherwise we cannot act intelligently.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend would need to have considerable time at his disposal to go through them all.

Mr. IRVINE: I appreciate that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can assure my hon. friend that there are no actions pending. On one occasion we were approached by a Winnipeg solicitor with respect to an order in council, and upon following the matter up we discovered—this is the information I received from them—that in the opinion of the officials they were doing their full duty in listing the orders in council and giving them to the minister to be tabled. What would then follow, that is to say the resolution to validate, would be prepared by the officers of the house. This does not in any way affect the order in council except that action might be taken as to the validity of the cancellation of any order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since the minister has assured us that this proposed legislation applies merely to the cancellation of certain orders in council conferring rights on individuals, it is far less objectionable than I had thought it to be. At the same time, how can we tell what rights are involved? It may very well be that certain individuals or corporations may have rights that should be recognized, and there is nothing here to protect such rights. We are practically signing a blank cheque and after that it is left to the administration to carry out. It seems to me, even though this is largely a formal matter, that before we pass it we should have some such arrangement as is suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), a sort of schedule giving the number of orders passed, limiting in that way the application of the measure. I do not think that is asking too much, even if the matter has to be held over another year. No one will suffer in the meantime. It has been carried on in this way for a long time and no one has challenged the validity. I think the minister would then be on safe ground. Even although this is legislation of a negative character, I confess I do not like it, because every measure of the kind should be definitely agreed to by parliament itself.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can assure my hon. friend that where any private rights were involved no officer of the crown nor any minister would undertake to deny a fiat in order to test the matter in court. That would be unthinkable. On the other hand, where we are dealing with thousands of orders in council it is well that the provisions of the statute regarding them be carried out. Why the slip should have occurred as between 1906 and 1917 I do not know. The explanation I received was that dependence had been placed on the officers of the House of Commons. All the other provisions of the statute have been complied with. I want to impress upon my hon. friend that wherever there was even the semblance of a legitimate claim—wherever any party was prejudiced owing to any act on the part of parliament or of the department—I have never yet refused a fiat to test the question in court. I repeat, that is something that is unthinkable. All these orders in council are in my office and I would lay them on the table, but I am sure my hon. friend would not look at a tenth part of them. No attempt is being made to deprive anyone of any right whatever.

Mr. FRASER: Where does the minister get his authority for saying that this act refers to the cancellation of orders in council? I cannot see any reference to cancellation of orders in council.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should have been more explicit in that regard. There may be some orders in council that have not expired.

Mr. BENNETT: Water rates in connection with Jasper, for instance.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There may be some in 1909 and 1910 that have not expired.

Mr. FRASER: This has reference to the passing of orders in council and not to cancellation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It simply carries out the provisions of the statute with respect to orders in council; that is all.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not like the addition of a section by way of exception to the act, especially as it is better draftsmanship to include it in the only clause of the act. I do not care for the omnibus designation "crown or any person", which of course includes the whole world. If it would be of any assistance to the law officers of the crown and as if the same had been approved, by resolution in the manner provided by the said acts respectively.

I would suggest this amendment. After the word "approved", in the fourteenth line of the bill, add the words:

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It means the same thing.

Mr. RYCKMAN: It means the same thing, without lugging in the crown and all and sundry.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I quite admit that it serves the same purpose, but I should prefer to leave it as it stands. I discussed the matter with the law officers and I have given what they suggest.

Mr. CAHAN: It does seem to me that the suggestion is a fair one. Where we are asked to validate some four or five thousand orders in council, it is better that the language should be so expressed as to give only the same validity that these orders in council would have had if they had in due course been approved by both houses of parliament in accordance with the acts mentioned in the the draft bill. Therefore I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) is one which should be considered. As it now stands, the bill provides that orders in council or regulations previously made by the governor in council under the authority of certain acts cited are hereby declared to be and to have been valid, notwithstanding any failure to have the same approved by both houses of parliament as required by the said acts respectively. I would suggest that it should read, "—are hereby declared to be and to have been valid to the same extent as if the same had been approved by both houses of parliament as required by said acts respectively", thereby indicating that we are giving no new validity to the orders in council by reason of a confirmatory statute. I think that would cover all we should be asked to grant, and I believe that is in conformity with the suggestion made by the hon. member for East Toronto.

Mr. EVANS: I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that all the acts mentioned in this bill have to do with that part of Canada which does not as yet enjoy the right to its own natural resources; this bill refers to the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, the Dominion Lands Act, and so on. I must confess that I do not quite understand the purport of this legislation, but we are evidently asked to validate certain orders in council which were made under certain acts the passage of which was felt by many of us to have been a usurpation of power by the Dominion government. I confess that I am suspicious of this legislation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): These are only orders in council which were passed under such statutes as the Dominion Lands Act. We are not touching the acts at all.

Mr. EVANS: Since we are now on the verge of placing these resources under the control of those who rightfully own them, I think this legislation might be well postponed for a time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not quite so optimistic as the hon. member for Rosetown with regard to the transfer of these natural resources to the provinces which legitimately own them. It seems to me that this legislation together with something which was passed a few days ago clearly indicates that the government have not in mind at present the transfer of these resources. If they are contemplating doing so, I think legislation of this kind should be left in abeyance. I understand that a provincial conference has been called for after the close of the session to consider this whole question, so why should anything be done with regard to these natural resources in the meantime unless the government have made up their minds that this provincial conference is only a gesture as far as they are concerned? I think we should have something from the Prime Minister with regard to what the government propose to do, and I think he should tell us something of what they are prepared to place before that conference with respect to the transfer of natural resources.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must correct my friend at once with regard to a provincial conference. There is no intention to have such a conference with respect to the question of natural resources. The government intend to discuss with the government of Manitoba matters affecting the Manitoba resources; we intend to discuss with the government of Alberta matters pertaining to the natural resources of Alberta, and possibly with the government of Saskatchewan matters pertaining to the natural resources of Saskatchewan. It is not to be a conference of the three western provinces with the Dominion, but separate conferences intended to carry a little further the progress which has been made already towards a final arrangement which will effect the transfer of the resources.

With regard to this legislation, it has nothing whatever to do with the question of the transfer of the natural resources. Certain orders in council were passed under statutes enacted by this parliament, and those orders in council should have been confirmed by a resolution of this house. Through inadvertance on the part of departmental officials those resolutions were not brought to the house, and as a consequence individuals who are fond of raising technical objections or finding reasons which may have some force at law in delaying procedure or invalidating the orders altogether, might be tempted to take advantage of the fact that the procedure called for by the acts has not been fully complied with. The government admit that there has been oversight in the matter in not having these orders confirmed as they should have been. The orders go back, I understand, to 1906, and the whole purpose of this amendment is to ask parliament to say that notwithstanding this omission these orders in council shall stand as though they had been regularized in accordance with the original intention of the legislation, and that in virtue of this legislation no person or the crown shall be put in a better position than would have been the case had the regular procedure been followed.

Mr. CAHAN: I have a suggestion to make to the Prime Minister. I would suggest that all the words after "declared" in the twelfth line be struck out and that the following be inserted: "To have the same force and effect as if they had been approved by both houses of parliament as required by said acts respectively."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is all right.

Mr. CAHAN: I think that gives them the validity they would have had, which is the intention of the house. I submitted this amendment to the Solicitor General, and he quite aproves of it.

Mr. RYCKMAN: And if that is not accepted, I submit that the amendment as proposed will not do. I submit it would be an arguable case whether an order in council which has been cancelled or a regulation which has been repealed would be set up again notwithstanding the amendment. The possibility of that situation arising is obviated by the language suggested by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then I will ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

Motion agreed to and amendment withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Cahan moves that all the words after the word "declared" in the twelfth line be struck out, and that the following words be added.

To have the same force and effect as if they had been approved by both houses of parliament as required by said acts respectively.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that the main aim of this resolution is to keep the country out of possible litigation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And to protect individuals also.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. IRVINE: Perhaps the title is not very important, but it seems to me that the present title is not correct. This is now called "An Act relating to the submission to parliament of certain regulations and orders in council." I think it should be, "An Act for the failure to submit to parliament certain regulations and orders in council."

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

TORONTO TERMINALS RAILWAY COMPANY

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 204, respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Issue of securities by C.N.R. to purchase securities of company.

Mr. CAHAN: We should have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the bill which was referred by the house to the special committee on national railways and shipping, and was there examined in detail. The officers of the company were brought before the committee, and the evidence taken before the committee was printed and supplied in due course to all members of the house. I have the material here to go over the same ground if the committee desires, or as much of it as is within my personal knowledge.

Mr. CAHAN: The minister might make a very short statement as to the purport of the bill.

Mr. DUNNING: The amount in the original authority of $7,000,000 for the Toronto viaduct scheme has proven insufficient. It has proven insufficient partly because of changes—the usual changes which take place in the development of a scheme over a period of years—and partly because of the construction of additional facilities for the Canadian National Railways within the terminal area. For instance in the original estimate there was no provision for a Canadian National railway engine terminal which it has been found necessary to erect within the area of the terminals, but which is owned by the Canadian National Railways and not by the terminals company. Another difficulty lies in the fact that with respect to certain property purchases and certain property sales there is quite a difference between the original estimates of the engineers and the actual results in the relative value of these properties. That, I think, is broadly the situation. It is, as my hon. friend I think knows, a joint undertaking between the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Candaian National Railways, and the city of Toronto. I may say that negotiations, subsequent to the original legislation, rather reduced the share of the city of Toronto and increased the share of the railway companies, which again somewhat affects the total amount required.

Mr. CAHAN: Will this cover the entire expenditure and complete the work?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, from experience with large engineering works I seldom take the word of an engineer on such a point until the undertaking is definitely completed. I would prefer not to commit myself to a statement that there will be nothing further, but this at least was estimated to cover all the work which is presently planned in connection with the enterprise.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Would the minister state the nature of the agreement between the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and the city of Toronto?

Mr. DUNNING: I have the complete agreement here but I may say briefly that the undertaking was to create union terminals in the city of Toronto in order to bring all railways into the one terminal. The city was greatly interested in having that result brought about as were also the railways. Following lengthy negotiations, indeed following the commencement of a union passenger terminal, this arrangement with the Toronto Terminals Company was brought into being by legislation in 1920. Speaking from memory 50 per cent of the stock is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway and 50 per cent by the Canadian National Railway Company. As I understand it, the city is not a partner in the terminal company itself but with respect to the cost of the terminals work which affects city streets, city sewers, city parks, and a thousand and one things, there was an apportionment of the cost as between the city on the one hand, and the terminals company composed of the two railways on the other. I cannot say offhand what the city's share is but I will give it to my hon. friend later.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I understand the minister to say that the new agreement reduced the city's obligation.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no. If I did say that it was not my intention to do so. What I intended to convey was this, that when the original scheme was prepared it was merely an estimate as to what the share of the city would be on the one hand and what the share of the railways would be on the other. Subsequently, following the original legislation, an agreement was prepared, and when the principles of the legislation were translated into action the city's share, by virtue of that agreement, did not turn out to be as much as was anticipated when the legislation of 1922 was before the house. I think I have the actual figure here. The city's proportion is $441,000, less than was anticipated when the original legislation was passed in 1922.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I suppose it is quite proper to pass legislation of this character with respect to terminals in the city of Toronto, but I would remind the minister that a similar agreement was entered into between the government, the Canadian National Railways and the city of Quebec. I know that the minister is sympathetic toward the city of Quebec and I hope he will receive with favour the remarks I am about to make. I should like him to try and make Sir Henry Thornton understand that Quebec has some rights in the matter of terminals and that those rights should be considered by the national railway management. An enormous sum of money is being expended upon terminals in Toronto but I do not believe that city was ever called upon to pay interest on that investment. On the other hand, altogether different treatment, it would seem, is being extended to the city of Quebec. Therefore I would direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to the railway situation in Quebec and the agreement that was entered into between the Canadian National railways and the city of Quebec under which that city, as I said yesterday, sacrificed a property worth $5,000,000, which represents a great deal of interest on money invested in different improvements, in order to get certain railway improvements and improvements to the port of Quebec.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I would expect in a case of this kind the Minister of Railways would take up the cudgels for Toronto. Let me assure the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency that in this case Toronto is paying fully everything that could be expected from that city. As the matter turns out Toronto does not have to pay as much as it was thought in the first place and what I believe a tribunal decided that it should pay. The fact is that the city pays its own share of the shops. It provides business for this railway, of which we are very proud; it increases the receipts of the Canadian Pacific; it betters the country, and all through you will find that the city of Toronto is paying its full share without help from anybody.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend was scarcely fair to me when he said he did not expect me to take up the cudgels for Toronto.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I said that I would expect him to do so.

Mr. DUNNING: I have made precisely the same explanation to my hon. friends from Quebec as the hon. member for East Toronto has just made. I can understand the feelings of members representing the city of Quebec when one considers the history of past railway agreements with that city. May I, however, respectfully say that that fact has no more to do with the Toronto terminal than the tirade of the hon. member for Toronto Northeast yesterday had to do with the Quebec harbour? I am merely endeavouring to discuss this question on the basis of a railway business matter and not on the basis of whether it is in Toronto or Quebec or anywhere else. If we have regard to the history of the matter, the railways, through their Toronto Terminals Company, have done very well, and having regard to our experience with similar large expenditures I do not think it has taken a very considerable percentage beyond what was first anticipated, if we take into account what has been added in the way of necessary new work to the original basis on which the original estimate was made.

Mr. BENNETT: It is costing forty per cent more than the estimate.

Mr. DUNNING: It would not be correct to say forty per cent more than the estimate for the work then estimated. For instance, the new engine terminals were not planned in the original work in 1913.

Mr. BENNETT: That was an arrangement made between the three railways, the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. DUNNING: Exactly, and in the legislation of 1922 I am advised—I was not here at that time and I have had to study the history of the matter—the new engine terminals were not taken into account as part of the expenditure under the statute. They have since proved to be absolutely necessary with the growth of business, the extension of motive power and the construction of the terminals themselves. That has necessitated a great deal of the increase of forty per cent in the expenditure.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I am not the hon. member for Toronto Northeast, but I assume the Minister of Railways referred to me. He has given rise in my mind to the difference between the two situations.

Mr. DUNNING: I referred to the hon. member for Toronto Northeast, not to my hon. friend who has just spoken.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not think the hon. member for Toronto Northeast spoke yesterday.

Mr. DUNNING: I mean the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). I am sorry.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Let me point this out—and it is a lesson to be learned. In my opinion it shows what splendid work has been done by the Department of Railways and by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the city of Toronto. This work is a joint work; it is overseen by both the railways. The terminal company is just the agency of the railways and I believe not a dollar of the expenditure is misplaced. There is no danger of any political heeler receiving any of that money. There is no danger of a job being made for anyone. Every account is strictly audited; every cent is accounted for, and it is to the credit to the railways and, of course, to the Minister of Railways, that that situation exists.

Mr. CHURCH: There is only one point in this bill to which I wish to refer and that is why the amount is being increased from $7,500,000 to $10,500,000. The city of Toronto has contributed $32,000,000 to rebuild the harbour plus $10,000,000 for the cost of the viaduct making $42,000,000 in all for grade separation and waterfront development. The chairman of the railway board found that the city was not liable for any part of this cost of grade separation, inasmuch as the Railway Act did not provide for it, and the city went in voluntarily. Many years before the agreement known as the Toronto viaduct agreement of 1913 was entered into in regard to the division of the cost between the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk and the city, it was decided that the city was not obligated for one cent. What we say to the committee is this, that Toronto is the only city in the Dominion that is to-day paying for grade separation an amount of about $43,00,000 all told. A large part of the Sunnyside harbour improvements east of the Humber river was for protection of the right of way of the national railways and the city has expended more than $5,000,000 there. As regards the Canadian National in Toronto, a large part of this extra money is to provide for the Canadian National's share of the cost of the new Union station, and works ancillary to the viaduct. I may put the situation in three or four paragraphs in Sir Henry Thornton's own words when he was giving evidence before the select standing committee on railways and shipping. The Minister of Railways said that, to start the ball rolling, he would ask the question:

Why the increase from $7,500,000 to $10,500,000?

Sr Henry Thornton: The amount of money asked for is for certain works which are ancillary to the construction of the Toronto terminal, and which have grown out of the Toronto viaduct proposition. For example, it was necessary to construct for the exclusive use of the Canadian National railways an engine house, and a number of other things of that character have been necessary and have been occasioned by the Toronto viaduct and the new Toronto terminal.

Mr. Jelliff: What was the cost of the new engine house?

Mr. Brown: The engine house and coach facilities, about $2,000,000.

Sir Henry Thornton: In addition to the engine house there was an additional express house and express facilities; there were offices for the Canadian National railways, which represented $300,000. The first item, "express facilities," amounted to $346,000. There was also a power house, which was not originally included, which represented $665,000. That totals $1,306,000. In the adjustment of our relations with the city, the city was unable to bear as large a proportion of some of the expenses as we expected, and that had to be cared for. There was also a difference of about $1,000,000 in regard to land. We expected to get about $3,000,000 for certain lands we were going to sell, but we only got $2,000,000. Briefly, this represents necessitous work which had to be done as growing out of the construction of the Toronto terminal.

Mr. Jelliff: Work not contemplated in your original arrangement?

Sir Henry Thornton: Partly not contemplated and partly underestimated.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: Does this $10,500,000 represent the total investment of the National railways in the Toronto viaduct?

Sir Henry Thornton: No, the total cost of the Toronto viaduct—

Mr. Brown: It will be about $17,500,000.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: The National Railways' participation will be about $17,500,000?

Sir Henry Thornton: Eventually, yes.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: Including the station?

Sir Henry Thornton: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: All the terminals?

Sir Henry Thornton: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: And the viaduct?

Sir Henry Thornton: Yes.

Mr. Milne: Has the C.P.R. a like amount invested as compared with the C.N.R.?

Sir Henry Thornton: I should think approximately, yes.

The Chairman: The proportion between the two you would say is about half and half?

Sir Henry Thornton: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stevens: Is the seventeen millons in addition to the ten and a half?

Sir Henry Thornton: No, the seventeen million is the total.

The city of Toronto has contributed $32,000,000 to eliminate all these level crossings, and one-third of the amount of the cost of the viaduct, $10,500,000. This bill is for $7,500,000 for ancillary works for the Canadian National, growing out of the viaduct, namely, a new engine house, express terminals, offices, land and incidentals.

Mr. POWER: I would not for one moment oppose any vote for Toronto. I think that Toronto is entitled to the greatest possible consideration from this house. I think all the members on this side of the house will agree with me in saying that Toronto is a magnificent city and a magnificent port, one which will no doubt one day become an ocean port, and certainly we should not begrudge one cent to Toronto provided there can be shown some justification for the expenditure. There is no sectional feeling on this side of the house, I can assure my hon. friend of that. I sat silent in my seat yesterday listening to my hon. friends opposite assuring me that they loved Quebec, though, may I add, with a purely platonic friendship, because we do not get much from them. I have the same feeling of affection for Toronto as they have for Quebec.

As I understand this vote, it was originally intended to permit the city of Toronto, in conjunction with the two railways, to bring the railways into the city, but unfortunately they began apparently by putting the cart before the horse; for they built a magnificent station in the centre of the city of Toronto and then came to parliament to ask us to purchase the necessary property and to build tracks into that station. That may be the proper procedure, but we in Quebec, not having had the benefits of any favours from the Canadian National Railways, are not in a position to say whether it is or not. In any case the fact is that millions of dollars have been spent on a station in Toronto, and then parliament is asked to bring a railway into that station.

Mr. RYCKMAN: The station was built by the railways.

Mr. POWER: It is immaterial to me by whom the station was built. The fact is that the station was built, and then parliament is asked to vote millions to bring the railway to it. In our part of the country we build the railway first and then think about the station. That brings me to the point I wish to bring before the committee. As I said before, there is no objection to voting this money for Toronto, even although the estimate has been materially increased and there is no assurance that the revenues are going to be any higher than before.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure they will not be.

Mr. POWER: I am quite sure that if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had admitted in this house yesterday that there would be no justification for the Quebec harbour vote from an increased revenue standpoint there would have been a howl from all sides of the house, but here is the Minister of Railways boldly, and almost brazenly, telling this house that we are expending offhand $34,000,000 or $35,000,000 for which there is no justification from a revenue standpoint.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no.

Mr. POWER: It is the most extraordinary statement I have heard from a minister of the crown in the last ten years.

Following the line of the argument which has been developed in this house, and which I think is a most effective and a logical one, we in the city of Quebec have been asking for station terminal accommodation from the Canadian National Railways, and at one period of our existence, thinking that we might obtain some favour from the government if we gave them something, we handed over to the railway property worth $2,000,000.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: No, $5,000,000.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend was mayor of the city of Quebec at the time, and he should know. We handed that amount over to the Canadian National Railways on condition that they would give us something in return. But not only did we receive nothing in return, but the Canadian National Railways instead of building a station, rented accommodation from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in Quebec. At the present time the Canadian government railway is paying something like half a million dollars a year to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that Canadian National trains may run into the city of Quebec, in spite of the fact that a site for the building of the station has already been given to the railway by the city of Quebec itself in order that proper terminal facilities should be built. We naturally think that the Canadian National Railways, before seeking such an enormous sum for Toronto, should show some consideration for the smaller communities in this country, and we think that a small community like Quebec, though possibly it does not produce such returns to the Dominion as other larger communities, should at any rate receive reasonable accommodation and get something in the way of a station and terminal facilties of which the country need not be ashamed. I do not wish to stress the point with reference to Montreal, because I see my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George in his seat, and to my knowledge he has never missed an opportunity of setting before parliament and the country the claims of the city which is distinguished by having him as its representative, and when the proper time comes, I am sure that he will see to it that that rat-trap which is called Bonaventure station is torn down and a proper station built in the metropolis of Canada. It would perhaps have been well for his own sake and the sake of his city if he had had a measure of that kind tacked on to the bill which is now before us. He might have had more chance of getting it through—not that I wish to make any insinuation about what is called in the United States logrolling—

Mr. CAHAN: We are casting our bread on the waters now, expecting a return later.

Mr. POWER: Does my hon. friend expect any gratitude in politics? If so, I am surprised that he should still retain after so long a political experience some of the illusions of his youth. So far as I am concerned I should like him to see to it, whenever he wants anything for Montreal, that it is tacked on to something else, though not to something for Quebec. Of course we have always believed that anything that benefits Montreal benefits Canada, and we have always said so, though perhaps not out loud. Now, Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to take up so much of the time of the committee.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Elaborate further your love for Toronto.

Mr. POWER: On a previous occasion when this matter was discussed I said it was a good thing that Toronto should be beautified, at least on the exterior, that it would be of advantage to the Dominion for strangers to find Toronto a beautiful city. If they do not remain there very long, so much the better for the reputation of the city. I hope the minister and the members for Toronto will take my observations in good part—especially the latter, for whom I have such an undying love. I hope that on some other occasion they will not forget the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, but live in hopes that some day one good turn will deserve another. If I do not strenuously oppose this measure, but simply call the attention of the minister to the fact that other communities throughout the Dominion are really in need of government assistance, and ask him to cast his benign glance on the district from which I come, then I think I shall have done my duty to my country and to the constituency which I represent.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I think the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) overlooked the fact that we have a Canadian National Railway terminal station in Quebec city. It was erected on the very valuable property known as the Champlain market site on the harbour frontage, which was handed over to the railway by the city of Quebec. This station was built two years ago at the enormous cost of $25,000! In 1910 under the agreement then entered into between the Canadian Natioanal Railways, the government and the city of Quebec, it was arranged to build a station at a cost of two million dollars. Tenders were called, and contracts were let. Then in 1911 came a change of government, and all those plans, which had been prepared by railway, steamship and other experts, were set aside, and this little $25,000 station was substituted for the two million dollar structure. To-day the Canadian National Railways system brings passengers into Quebec and hands them over to the Canadian Pacific Railway hotel. Year after year we have been asking for the terminal facilities that were promised us, but without success. I think that Sir Henry Thornton, who seems to have so much time to spare, should give more attention to the rightful demands of the city of Quebec and remedy the very unsatisfactory situation which we now have to endure.

Mr. CHURCH: Might I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a triplicate agreement to build the Toronto viaduct at a cost of thirty-three million dollars, of which the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian National Railways and the city each bear a third. All the works ancillary to the viaduct are to be paid for by each of the parties. Recently Sir Henry Thornton told a committee of this house that the central regional area of the Canadian National Railways yields about 75 per cent of the whole revenue of the system. The Laurier administration took $122,000,000 credit and $23,000,000 cash out of the old Grand Trunk in the central region and put it into Quebec to build the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to encourage any sectional discussion as to where the revenues of the Canadian National Railways come from and where they are expended. I do not think either the management or parliament would desire the system to be run on that basis, but rather on the basis of rendering the best possible service to the country as a whole. With regard to my statement which the hon. member for Quebec South described as "bold and brazen", it does happen to be the truth. Whether or not the condition is similar to the condition in respect of Quebec harbour, which was dealt with yesterday by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is neither here nor there. But it is a fact with respect to our large terminals, more especially Toronto and Montreal—there are others—that our two railway systems are facing in the not distant future tremendous expenditures on improved facilities, expenditures which cannot in the nature of things increase the revenues of the railways at all proportionately. Reference was made by the member for Quebec South to what he described as the "rat-trap" Bonaventure station at Montreal. I say quite frankly that I do not know of any city of the size of Montreal with railway terminal conditions at all comparable with those now existing there so far as the Canadian National is concerned. The Canadian Pacific conditions in Montreal are of course considerably better; but it is well known that the Canadian National conditions are very bad indeed. Due to the merging of the former government line, the former Canadian Northern line and the former Grand Trunk line, we have a very difficult situation indeed in Montreal which will cost a great deal of money to take care of, involving an investment which, I repeat, cannot produce an increased revenue in proportion. Such investments do however tend to reduce expenditure in operating along some lines, but even in that connection it is too much for this parliament to hope that the large expenditure which will be necessary in these congested terminals will represent a revenue at all proportionate to the outlay. Even a considerable contributory factor cannot be looked for. The expenditures must be made, both from the point of view of public safety and of giving service to the public. The entrance to the city of Montreal over the Canadian National lines at the present time, as is well known, with its number of level crossings, gates and so forth, is a constant source of danger. That condition has to be faced on every railway system wherever there is a quickly growing centre of considerable size. In Toronto we have got along very far with the work. And it has been expensive work. It will not tend to increase the revenues of the railway; in some measure it may tend to reduce expenses of operation, although not in any very great measure even in that direction. We have the Montreal problem to face, and the Quebec problem is of a slightly different character, as the city is not of such great size, and the terminal is not so congested. But there again we have another problem. In the cities of Ontario and in the west, to a greater or lesser degree, we have this terminal problem to deal with, and during the next ten or fifteen years at the outside it will be necessary for the railways of Canada, not only the Canadian National, to face the question of relatively unremunerative expenditures on improved terminal facilities.

Mr. BOYS: I have no desire to prolong the discussion, but there is one point which it might be advisable to make clear. It seems to me there is a misapprehension, either imaginary or real, on the part of my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur) regarding this bill. One would imagine from what he has said that the city of Toronto was receiving in this connection a grant or gift or loan, with or without interest, or something of that sort. He shakes his head; if I am wrong I shall be glad to withdraw the suggestion. But when he discusses this question in connection with Quebec and evinces what seems to be a desire to get back a little bit at some of the discussion that took place yesterday and the day before, it does give me the impression that he is under a misapprehension. The city of Toronto as a municipality is getting nothing whatever out of this legislation in any shape or form. This is nothing more than an authorization from parliament to enable the Canadian National Railways to issue bonds for the sum of money in question in order that they themselves may carry on their undertaking in that city. Whether the stand some of us took regarding Quebec was right or wrong, this matter certainly is not in any shape or form a parallel with the Quebec harbour resolution. The whole of the Canadian National Railways will become responsible for the repayment of these bonds when they are issued.

Mr. DUSSAULT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, when I shall next meet my constituents, they will certainly ask me to explain the vote that I shall cast to-day. We are asked to vote $10,500,000 to the Canadian National for improvements to the station at Toronto. Each time that the least thing is asked for my county, even if its is simply a spot where our farmers can sit down and relieve themselves of their parcels while awaiting the train, we are told: if you can guarantee us some return we shall accede to your request. Will there really be, in the present case, an increase in earnings which, even in the first year, will pay the interest and a portion of the sinking fund on the amount we are asked to vote? You are aware, Sir, that such will not be the case. The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) told us a few moments ago that this could not be.

When the house was discussing, yesterday, a loan to the Quebec Harbour Commission, we were told: Gentlemen, you have not paid any interest, nor have you a sinking fund for your prior loans. These gentlemen, Sir, sitting on your left were shocked and asked for a special committee to investigate the matter. Why do they not ask for a special committee, to-day, to inquire if really the amount asked for will bear interst the very first year.

May I ask the hon. Minister of Railways if he can point out, in the Province of Quebec, one single railway station which is in keeping with the earnings to which we contribute each year, to the National Railways? We contribute each year to the surpluses of the National Railway. The sections of the railway which give the best returns are those of Montreal to Levis and Levis to Campbellton; and there is not in Montreal, Levis and Campbellton or between these places, a single station where those from Toronto, who to-day are asking for $10,500,000, would walk in without making a great fuss and expressing the views that the people of Quebec are not civilized. If we are not civilized, it is because we allowed these people to extract from the budget millions of dollars; this must cease. They are shocked when $8,000,000 is requested for the Quebec port, yet each year we vote $8,000,000, $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 to accommodate them. They are not shocked when they receive these amounts, yet they pay no interest. These sums are voted simply to embellish their city. Their city is really the Queen city—but it is so at our expense.

When I shall again come before my constituents, they will ask: Who are those who opposed the vote of $8.000,000 which Quebec requested for its harbour? Members from Ontario. We noticed that not one member from the maritime provinces rose to protest against the Quebec bill. Why? Because to-morrow or the day after the house will be asked to vote $5,000,000 and $500,000 for the maritime provinces. Those who are asking us, to-day, $10,500,000 were asked yesterday to tell the house that Quebec was claiming $8,000,000 and that no interest was guaranteed.

Now, we are asked to vote $10,500,000 without any earnings being guaranteed.

I think the Minister of Railways' adviser is presuming too much. Each year through the intervention of this adviser the house is asked to vote $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. He seems to have so little difficulty in having these enormous sums voted that he takes everything for granted and pockets all the credit, very little does he think of us who voted those amounts. The 61 Liberal members for Quebec, each year vote large sums to build lines in the west, yet on every occasion these gentlemen hailing from the west vote against all expenditure which might benefit us. For instance, we never opposed the construction of railways in Ontario.

When the minister brings down his estimates, we are agreeable to do everything possible to preserve in this country the "bonne entente;" if this confederation must in reality be a confederation, we from Quebec must do our share, as those from other parts should do theirs. However, when the time comes to vote money for Quebec, all sorts of objections crop up: that we cannot meet our interest on such and such an enterprise, we cannot show any compensation for the money voted. From all angles a plea is sought to deny our just claims. At present, we are asked to open up the Peace river region. For that purpose, the house is requested to vote millions; yet in our province, to-day, the railways cannot give us the service which we need and to which we are entitled. Why open up new regions, if you cannot give service to the parts that are already settled? We are the first settlers of this colony, we should be the first to get service. Was it not in our province that, in 1608, Champlain founded his colony? Is that not the place where civilized people first settled in this country? We have not one single suitable station in the province of Quebec, yet we are asked to vote $10,500,000 to build a station for people who came to settle in our country a hundred years after us. Do you think that is fair treatment? However, I must cast my vote for such a measure, because I feel that there would be no living in this country without harmony. Yes, these Toronto gentlemen will tell us in their speeches of "bonne entente," at banquets that they are our best friends; our feelings towards them are equally as good. Our vote on the present measure will say: Gentlemen, do not spend your money in making speeches to us on the "bonne entente," but when you are alone at home, whether you are members from Toronto or other Ontario ridings, instead of losing your time in preparing speeches, try and convince one another that if you seek favours from Quebec, you must also be generous towards them. Quebec will never claim more than its due.

Mr. SYLVESTRE: Mr. Chairman, I read in the Ottawa Journal yesterday that the Quebec members had been dumb this year. After all we have heard in English from hon. gentlemen across the way about the love they have for Quebec, I think this is a good opportunity to reciprocate in French, and tell the committee about the love of Quebec for Toronto.

(Translation): Mr. Chairman, this is certainly a special opportunity for us, members of the rural districts, to discuss the question of railway stations. I wish to assure the house that our feelings, like those of the hon. members for Ontario who spoke yesterday, are of the best.

We do not wish to criticize the amount which it is proposed to grant Toronto for the embellishment of its station, however there is one thing which must be borne in mind: there also exists beside large towns, small centres which deserve consideration. In our Chicoutimi and Lake St John districts, located on the other side of the Laurentian hills, the only means of communication we have is the national railway. Some years ago, the city of Quebec and the provincial government made quite a considerable grant to the Lake St. John railway to further its expansion and give us suitable stations. Now what strikes us on our arrival at Quebec, at the station known as that of Parent square? There is not a shed, there is not a station site throughout the whole system of the national railway, from ocean to ocean, which can compare in ugliness and discomforts with this station The same may be said on our arrival in Montreal, at the station known as the Moreau station. The Bonaventure station is a palace compared with the Moreau street station, where there is not even a suitable waiting room, and where in winter the wind not only penetrates through the windows but also through the walls, to the great discomfort of the travelling public. We should be treated in a more decent manner, because of all the lines of the Canadian National, there is not one which equals the Chicoutimi, Lake St. John, Montreal and Quebec line, in volume of both passenger and freight traffic. The mills erected within the last few years ship by the means of this railway thousands and thousands of tons of freight, and the travelling public which congregate there from all parts of Canada, when getting off at a station, find only sheds. And as just stated by the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Dussault), when we ask for improvements, we are answered: the traffic and returns do not justify such a step. The amount which it is proposed to grant for the Toronto station, even the half of it would allow us to have suitable stations from one end to the other of the railway in the districts which I have just mentioned. It is more than time to grant us the improvements which have been asked for ever so long. It is not only a question of comfort but also one of public safety and hygiene. It is most discouraging to observe the condition of stations especially between Quebec and Chicoutimi. The length of trains has increased considerably, within the last few years, with the result that platforms have become too short; people are forced to alight from trains at some distance from the platform, in the mud or dirt. Accidents have even happened owing to this state of things. The same condition exists as regards the cars themselves. I acknowledge and I am aware that the railway company has certainly made considerable improvements, however in view of the expenditure which we are making for other localities, for the embellishment of large towns and especially for that of Toronto, we are entitled to request not things of a decorative nature, but decent improvements. I therefore take the opportunity to repeat my request to the hon. Minister of Railways, so that he may insist, with his advisers as well as with the President of the National Railways, that urgent improvements be carried out from one end to the other of our line. I am not criticizing what is being done elsewhere but I am simply asking that a small portion of the enormous sums spent elsewhere be granted to us.

Sir EUGENE FISET: When this estimate was before the committee on railways and shipping I took the trouble to direct the attention of the chairman of the national system and his officials to the condition that existed on the railway in the lower part of the province of Quebec, the condition of our railway platforms and of our stations; and I even went as far as to say that that part of the eastern division was, as we say down there, the "orphan' section. I took occasion also to direct the attention of the officials of the Canadian National Railway to the quite apparent discrimination that existed as between the treatment accorded to the eastern division on the one hand and to the remainder of the system on the other. Personally I have no objection whatever to the proposed expenditure for Toronto; but, sir, it seems to me that in justice to our own section of the country it would be advisable for the minister, if he could do so, to vouchsafe us an inkling as to what is going to be done to remodel the station at Quebec, to say nothing of stations elsewhere. I understand there is an agreement between the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National as to the use of what is called the central station at Quebec. I also understand that a tentative program has been prepared by the officials of the national railway to provide adequate station accommodation. I should like to know if the management of the system intend to submit this program to the committee on railways and shipping at its next meeting, or later on when the estimates for the system are being considered. In the second place I should like to know if it is the intention of the management to treat the eastern section as really a part of the system. We are afraid that owing to the deficit on the eastern section being made good by parliament, the management are disinclined to undertake any expenditures whatever in connection with that section. I do hope that these matters will be brought to the attention of the manager of the system and that by inaugurating improvements he will make it manifest that we are entitled to consideration notwithstanding the fact that parliament has to make good any deficit on the eastern division.

Mr. DUNNING: Plans for station accommodation in Quebec have been under the consideration of the management for some time past. As to whether definite conclusions have been reached, I cannot say from memory. I can, however, say that my hon. friend and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) are both members of the committee on national railways and shipping, and therefore can obtain any information from the officials before that committee with respect to station plans anywhere. I know my hon. friend will take advantage of his opportunity in that regard.

As to the general question of the eastern line, I may say that I have not found the management backward at all in making the necessary expenditures in that region since the Maritime Rates Act came into force. As a matter of fact I rather fear consequences opposite to those feared by my hon. friend. Very naturally when those managing a railway are aware of the fact that any deficit in operation will be borne from the national treasury instead of charged against the system they are not likely to be more miserly, shall I say, than they would be if deficits were charged to the system treasury instead of being voted by parliament as the Maritime Rates Act contemplates. I think my hon. friend is very capable of looking after the necessities of his own section, especially as now, in consequence of an act which passed this house a few days ago, he will have an opportunity, in regard to matters of maintenance and otherwise, to go to the railway commission and get an order from that body the same as is possible in the case of railways in other parts of the country.

I did not catch the remarks of the hon member for Lake St. John (Mr. Sylvestre) in their entirety, owing to my non-familiarity with the French language, but I gathered that he is calling attention to the lack of decent station accommodation in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SYLVESTRE: Especially in the province of Quebec.

Mr. DUNNING: As regards Canada generally there are very few cities where first class terminal railway accommodation exists. The terminal facilities at Toronto are not yet completed, and speaking offhand I cannot think of any city, outside of Winnipeg, on the Canadian National, where it may be said that the terminal conditions are reasonably adequate. At Winnipeg, owing to the tremendous volume of grain needing to be handled, action with respect to terminal facilities was expedited. I think it may be said from the point of view of adequacy that the Winnipeg terminals, which were undertaken before the Canadian National came into being, are possibly the most up to date; but otherwise—and it is true not only of the province of Quebec but of every other province in the Dominion—we have not yet established what would be regarded in other countries as the type of terminal facilities required for great cities; we have been too busy stretching out in order to serve the country generally. Nor have we yet done very much in the way of providing what may be described as the frills of a railroad. Indeed it may be some years yet before we are able to meet that condition satisfactorily.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The minister stated a few minutes ago that the provision of terminals in other cities, especially in Montreal and Quebec, would have to be considered in the near future. He also stated that an enormous amount of money had been spent in the city of Toronto and that the work is not yet completed. He might have said that this expenditure runs into hundreds of millions when the waterfront of Toronto is taken into account.

Mr. GEARY: We have built a new city hall too, don't forget that.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: If I may be permitted I would suggest that this matter be allowed to stand until it has been investigated by a special committee.

Mr. CHURCH: The hon. member has spoken of the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars in Toronto when the cost of the viaduct will only be $33,000,000.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: But I was referring also to the enormous sums expended on the waterfront at Toronto which, of course, came from the national treasury.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. gentleman is having recourse to poetic licence.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I do not think there is any reason for urgency in this matter. It can well stand over until it has been investigated. There should not be any greater hurry to vote this amount of money than there was when we were asked to vote money for the Quebec harbour, in connection with which the suggestion was made that the matter be investigated by a committee of the house.

Mr. DUNNING: This matter has been investigated by a committee.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Yes, but I should like to see more than that. I should like to see the matter investigated by a special committee which should be given power to inquire into the question of terminals in Montreal, Quebec and other large cities as well as Toronto. My fear is that after the $33,000,000 have been granted and spent in Toronto, when we come to ask for reasonable terminal improvements in other cities, parliament and the railway authorities may say to us: We have spent so much money in Toronto that we shall have to let this matter stand for some time. The result will be that the city of Quebec, which has been waiting so long to get justice, will, as usual, again have to wait for the good will of parliament and of the railway authorities in the matter of getting some kind of decent railway facilities. I suggest to the minister and the committee that this matter should stand and that a special committee be appointed to consider the advisability of granting a reasonable amount of money for railway terminals in the other large cities I have mentioned as well as in Toronto.

Mr. LAFLAMME (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to add as I do not wish to delay any further the committee. As the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Sylvestre), mentioned a short while ago, in answer to the Ottawa Journal which intimated that less French speeches are heard this year than in previous sessions, I wish to state that if we do not make use oftener of our mother tongue, it is because the majority of members in the House cannot follow us.

I wish to support the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset), who a short while ago told us of the difficulties encountered in the eastern portion of our province in obtaining necessary improvements in the way of fences and ditches. Personally, since I have the honour of representing the riding of Montmagny, I have had great difficulty in obtaining work of that nature. I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), for having so smoothed the way as to enable us now to apply to the Railway Commission in order to obtain these improvements, instead of applying to the board of management of railways, as it has been the practice heretofore, without the slightest chance of success. The present bill under discussion requests that we should vote $10,500,000 to build a station at Toronto. Quite so, but if the city of Toronto wishes this embellishment, I think that its contribution should be greater. After all, this is in the interest of the city of Toronto; the object, if I am not mistaken, is to lessen accidents and so forth. If the government is to help in the embellishment of Toronto, I think that this city should itself contribute more effectively.

While we are on the subject of stations, I wish to tell the committee that there are still in my riding two stations which are not provided with electric lights. It strikes me that in the year 1928, there should not exist any stations lighted by lamps; it is certainly not very satisfactory for the travelling public. This goes to show that we are entirely deprived of modern improvements which, after all, are not more costly than the old methods of lighting. It cannot be gainsaid that this part of the national railway, which in the past was known by the name of Intercolonial, is the most paying portion of our railways. For the last few years it is with the profits realized on this portion of the national railways that the board of directors has been able to meet the deficits of the other parts of the system. It seems to me that if the traffic is sufficiently large to realize such considerable profits, this section of the national system should be treated as fairly as other parts of the Dominion. If the sections of the national railways to the east of Sainte-Rosalie, Levis and Quebec are the most paying ones, we certainly have a right to request equal treatment with the other parts of the national system. It is our duty while discussing this bill, to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the existing conditions in this part of the province of Quebec, in order that he may advise the management of the national railways to grant us what we request simply because it is fair to do so.

Mr. DUSSAULT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, since it is a question of an expenditure of $10,500,000, and the earnings which may be derived from such an investment, would it not be possible to obtain from the hon. Minister of Railways, a statement of returns and expenditure for the various sections of the Canadian National Railways. We maintain that the two sections from Montreal to Levis, and Levis to Campbellton, are the best paying sections of the national railway system, but we have never been able to obtain from the management of the national railways the statements which would allow us to establish before this house the financial situation as it exists in regard to net profits in the various sections. This is very detrimental to us.

To-morrow the western members will ask this house to vote them money for branch lines, when the main line in their districts does not even pay any interest on the outlay of its construction. The main line in certain localities return but deficits, yet we are asked to vote $2,000,000, $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 to further build branch lines, and we comply. We vote those amounts because we do not really know what are the various sections in this country that are responsible for the surpluses or deficits of our railways. We are asked $10,500,000 for improvements in the city of Toronto. Does the management of the various railway sections around Toronto show surpluses or deficits? We are anxious to know. We are asked to vote this amount, while on the other hand we are told by the Minister of Railways that this expenditure of $10,500,000 will produce no further earnings and will only be for the embellishment of the city. Must we vote such amounts for the embellishment of the city of Toronto?

If the city of Montreal has been able to earn such good returns heretofore with the only station of Bonaventure, I wonder why Toronto cannot wait ten years more with the present station which is a much better one than that of the national railways at Montreal. Unless we get further explanations. I do not think that the house can vote this amount.

THE CANADIAN CREDIT INSTITUTE

The house in committee on Bill No. 49, to incorporate the Canadian Credit Institute—Mr. Thorson—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On section 8—administration of the institute.

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask the promoter of this bill how it comes to this parliament? I think it is purely a provincial matter and should go to the provincial legislature.

Mr. THORSON: The bill was thoroughly discussed in the private bills committee, and it passed that committee without any controversy save for one or two very slight amendments. The purpose of the bill is set forth in clause 2:

The objects and powers of the institute shall be:

(1) To organize, promote, operate and control a national institute of credit men and to examine into and improve conditions relating to the work of credit men throughout Canada.

Then it goes on to specify the manner in which those objects shall be accomplished.

The idea behind the bill briefly is this, that it is desirable now to have uniformity in the standards, and to improve the standards, of credit men who are engaged by commercial houses throughout Canada. Formerly, every man who was engaged in business knew his customers personally, and knew the extent of credit that he might safely afford to them, but that time is now past. Our business houses to-day are engaged in business the ramifications of which extend from one end of Canada to the other, and it is impossible for the proprietors of them to know personally their customers and the amount of credit that may safely be extended to them. In addition, much of the business of Canada is now being conducted by corporations, and the business of many of these corporations is not confined to a particular part of the country but extends throughout the various provinces. In order that a man may be assured that the credit department of his business is being properly run, it is desirable to have some sort of institute at which credit men can be properly trained, and being so trained can get from the institute a certificate that they are thoroughly familiar with credit matters. The purpose, therefore, is to set up a Canadian institute of credit men which shall have power to set examinations and grant certificates to the members who have qualified. The business men of this country who are seeking a competent credit man can then have some degree of assurance that they are getting a qualified man from the fact that he has become a member of the Canadian credit institute.

The jurisdiction of this parliament to incorporate an institute of this sort is, I think, entirely beyond dispute. There will be nothing to prevent provincial legislatures from incorporating provincial credit institutes. The Dominion of Canada has already incorporated similar associations—the Dominion association of chartered accountants, for instance, which was organized in 1902 along similar lines to those proposed here. Similar legislation was passed in 1913 with regard to general accountants, and later with regard to stationary engineers, and so on. I think that answers the question of my hon. friend.

PRIVATE BILLS—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—PROCEDURE IN DIVORCE BILLS

The CHAIRMAN: There are a number of private bills beginning with No. 74. If it would serve the purpose of the committee, time would be saved by having the first clause of Bill No. 74 read and taking the other bills as read. Is that the wish of the committee?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This afternoon I rose to protest against this procedure, and I do so again on principle. I have no immediate concern with any one of these bills, but I am decidedly interested in seeing that something be done to remove what I regard as a standing disgrace to this house. Steadily through the years this practice has become more and more objectionable and to-day hundreds of divorce bills are coming before parliament. I do not see any other way of calling the attention of the house to this abuse than by objecting to such a procedure as this.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member objects the rule may not be suspended without unanimous consent, and we shall have to take the bills one by one. Do I understand that the hon. member objects?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I object to this procedure for the reasons I have given.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understood the hon. gentleman to object merely to the procedure, but he knows perfectly well that these bills are carefully examined by a committee of the senate and the evidence taken. Everything possible is done to safeguard the interests of the parties applying for divorce. It has not been the practice of the House of Commons to go to that extent, but inasmuch as these bills require validation by this house we have accepted the work of the senate committee in ascertaining the facts. The mere fact that my hon. friend thinks there should be a divorce court in Ontario should not affect the consideration of these bills. I have no quarrel with his view; I agree with him thoroughly in that respect, as to a court where these matters could be tried. But I do think that to delay the work of this house by an examination of these cases in detail—if that is the idea—is hardly necessary as a means of safeguarding the interests of those concerned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask, then, whether the government is prepared to afford facilities for the discussion in this house at this session of a bill regarding the divorce court?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The government has no desire in the world to thwart the discussion of any bill; that is not the object in view. The government is perfectly willing that there should be the fullest discussion of matters of this kind. But to pick out any particular measure for discussion at length, and to fix upon that one as a precedent, is a matter involving some difficulty.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would call attention to the fact that this was done last year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I repeat, there is no desire to thwart the discussion of any measure of great public interest, such as a proposal with regard to the establishment of a divorce court in Ontario. Speaking for myself, I should be very glad to see the discussion take place on the bill which deals with that matter.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What progress has been made with the bill before the senate, the object of which is to establish a divorce court in Otario? Will that bill come before this house at this session?

Mr. CANNON: It is before the house now.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): When it comes before the house I presume my hon. friend (Mr. Woodsworth) and the rest of us will have an opportunity to discuss this point.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out that at the moment there is nothing before the committee and this discussion therefore is out of order.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was hoping that my hon. friend would not press his objection.

Mr. McGIBBON: Possibly there is some merit in what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has said, and if a special committee were appointed consisting, say, of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) to deal with the matter, it might result in something.

Mr. DUNNING: It would appear, Mr. Chairman, that we can make better progress by discussing the bills individually. If there is an objection to taking them en bloc we may as well proceed with them individually; it would save time.

Mr. CAHAN: Order No. 34, Bill No. 27, letter A of the senate, which is the measure respecting the proposed divorce court in Ontario, cannot come before the house during this session unless the government is prepared to facilitate its discussion. The position taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is—

The CHAIRMAN: I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but I would point out that we have a considerable bulk of bills before us and we are losing valuable time.

Mr. CAHAN: You are liable to lose very much more time.

The CHAIRMAN: There is nothing before the committee and therefore the discussion is out of order.

Mr. CAHAN: I will move, then, that we take the bills one by one. Speaking to that motion, I wish to say—

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, I must point out that there is no necessity for such a motion inasmuch as it merely proposes to adopt what is the regular procedure of the committee. A motion would be necessary to do otherwise than what my hon. friend is proposing.

The CHAIRMAN: Under the circumstances, I will call the first bill, No. 74.

DOROTHY ESTELLE MCCUTCHEON

Bill No. 74, for the relief of Dorothy Estelle McCutcheon.—Mr. Casselman.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. CAHAN: On this motion I wish to say this. I think I appreciate the temper of this house so far as this question is concerned. Bill No. 27 from the senate proposes the establishment of a court in the province of Ontario for the consideration of divorce cases. That bill came from the senate during the last session but made no progress in this house. It is before the house at the present time and again it is making no progress, and the temper of this house—at any rate of a considerable number of hon. members—is that these senate bills shall be discussed one by one, if it takes weeks, in order to force some understanding as to what is to be done with that bill. It seems to me therefore that it would facilitate the discussion of these matters if we could have some undertaking on the part of the government—

The CHAIRMAN: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but he must know, from his experience in parliament, that he is not in order at the present moment in discussing any measure under public bills and orders. Just now we are considering private bills.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not discussing anything under public bills and orders. In the consideration of this particular bill before us I am simply pointing out that the opposition is not to the bill itself. But there is a feeling in the house—and I have heard a considerable number discussing the matter from time to time—that these bills should not be facilitated in any way unless there is to be an understanding regarding senate bill No. 27.

Mr. IRVINE: Who is sponsoring this bill?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Casselman).

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill to tell the committee the original cause of the trouble in this family. This is a very important question indeed; we are asked to vote on a bill which is going to break up a home, so I would like to know the full details in order that I may be able to vote intelligently. I insist that the sponsor of the bill give us some details; we do not know the evidence which was given before the senate committee and there are a lot of things I would like to know about the bill. I want to know the original cause of the trouble from the beginning to the climax.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, Mr. Chairman. I object to being a rubber stamp, and I desire to have the sponsor of this bill give us some information, as would be done with any other bill. We have not had an opportunity to discuss the bill, and if we are to act reasonably I think we should have that information.

The CHAIRMAN: I may say that this bill, together with the others, has been before the private bills committee, and it is customary to accept bills coming from that committee. The sponsor of this bill is not in the house at the moment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I would ask that the bill stand until the sponsor is here.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the committee that this bill shall stand?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not think my hon. friend can be really serious; I cannot believe that he wants this house to listen to all the evidence taken in each of these divorce cases. I quite agree that Dorothy Estelle McCutcheon should have been able to appeal to an Ontario divorce court rather than to the Senate of Canada in order to get the relief given by this bill, and that Adelaide Marie Moore should have had the same opportunity. That is a point which we should like to discuss, but if those hon. members in whose names these bills stand have to give a summary of the evidence given before the senate divorce committee, I must say they have my profound sympathy in their task. It will challenge all their tact and ability to present that evidence in such a way as we could listen to it, and in such a way as those in the galleries could listen to it. Really I cannot think the hon. member is serious in wanting that evidence gone over in this house; I do not think any good purpose would be served by so doing. The question of an Ontario divorce court has come up time and again; it was passed upon by the senate this year. The government should recognize the wish of the people to have such a court established in Ontario, and we should have an opportunity to discuss that question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. member for Frontenac is really very much afraid of the evidence which might be brought forth I am quite willing to move that the galleries be cleared in order that we may hear the evidence.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the committee that bill No. 74 shall stand?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would like to say one word to my hon. friend. I believe every member of this house thinks we should discuss this question of the establishment of a divorce court in Ontario, and it should be discussed very seriously. It is true that the bill which came from the senate was passed by that body early in the session, but it has been sponsored here by a private member and therefore appears under public bills. At the same time it must be remembered that the evidence in this case and in all these cases has been printed and distributed to all the members of this house, and if my hon. friend wants to go over that evidence he is at liberty to do so. My own feeling is that the senate goes into these matters very carefully, and it never has been the custom in this house to go into them unless some particular case about which there is trouble is brought up for discussion. Our system here has been to accept the evidence taken before the senate committee and to accept the findings of that committee, because they go into these matters very carefully. It seems to me very hard on the people who have gone before the divorce committee and proved their case to have that bill gone into here again. I think we should carry out the suggestion made by the chairman and pass these bills as they have been brought down by the senate, unless there is some difficulty with some bill which a member of the house wishes particularly to discuss.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

The CHAIRMAN: The question immediately before the committee is whether or not we shall proceed with this bill. All those in favour of proceeding with the consideration of Bill No. 74 will please say, Yea.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit that even the Chair cannot proceed in this arbitrary manner to prevent discussion on a bill before the house.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no desire whatever to do that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It looks very much like it to me.

The CHAIRMAN: Bill No. 74 is before the committee at the moment. All those in favour of proceeding with consideration of Bill No. 74 will please say, Yea.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The discussion is still going on.

Mr. DUNNING: Until it is decided whether or not we shall proceed with this bill nothing is before the committee. Once the question is decided my friend will be perfectly free to discuss the matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The bill is before the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: The bill is not yet before the committee.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; we are discussing section 1, and we have a perfect right to discuss it as we have a right to discuss any other bill.

Mr. POWER: I rise to a point of order. The sponser of this bill is not in the house, so I suggest that we cannot proceed. I think this bill should stand and that we should take up the next bill.

The CHAIRMAN: I think my hon. friend is wrong in his position; the bill is before the committee and it is for the committee to say whether or not we shall proceed in the absence of the sponsor. If we decide that point we can proceed.

Mr. POWER: Then I would ask who moved that this bill be before the committee? It has been called, but someone has to move to bring it before the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: The bill appeared on the order paper in the regular way; it is before the committee in the regular way at present, and it is for the committee to decide whether we should proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit that that is an extraordinary position to take; if we are not to proceed with it the motion should be that we refuse to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN: I think my hon. friend is a little mixed in the procedure. We were considering the bill when he, or some of his friends, objected, and now it is for the committee to decide whether or not we will proceed. If the hon. gentleman would allow that question to be decided we would get somewhere.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think I am very much mixed in the procedure. The first section was called; we were discussing that section and we asked that before the bill be proceeded with the sponsor of the bill be here to give us some information. I think that is a reasonable request, and if he is not here the bill should stand until he comes.

The CHAIRMAN: I put the question to the committee whether or not we should proceed in the absence of the sponsor, and I took it that the committee wanted to proceed. I am now asking the committee to decide the point as to whether or not it is the desire of the committee to proceed to a consideration of Bill No. 74. All those in favour of proceeding with Bill No. 74 will kindly say, Yea.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask hon. members to stand so that the clerk may count them.

And on the count being taken:

The CHAIRMAN: Yeas, 48; nays, 13. The committee has decided to proceed with the consideration of the bill. Section 1 has been called.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to know under what rule we proceed with this bill when its sponsor is not in the house.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not know that there is any rule in our rule book which says that the sponsor must be in the house. The committee has charge of its own work and it has decided to proceed with the bill.

Mr. POWER: I do not know whether the bill has been printed in French. If it has not I do not think we can consider it. I do not think the evidence has been printed in French, and that is another reason why we cannot proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend should have raised his objection before the second reading of the bill.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Right to marry again.

Mr. IRVINE: In the absence of the sponsor of the bill I suggest that either the chairman of the private bills committee or the chairman of this committee should enlighten us as to what we are dividing on and what this clause proposes. I notice that the chairman of the private bills committee has just come in. I would ask him, in the absence of the sponsor of the bill, to tell us what the trouble is. We want to know what has happened in this particular case, and what caused the family disruption.

Mr. PARENT: My hon. friend informed the committee that I had just come in. Well, he cannot be surprised if I do not know what he is talking about.

Mr. IRVINE: The matter before the committee at the present time is a bill sent down to us from the senate, and which has been considered by the private bills committee. It is a bill for the relief of Dorothy Estelle McCutcheon. We want to know what the facts are so that we can give an intelligent vote. As there is nobody else here who is in a position to give us information, I direct to the chairman of the committee my question for enlightenment.

Mr. POWER: The discussion affords ground for the objection I made a few moments ago. That objection was not quite overruled because I did not make it in a formal way. I suggested also that the evidence was not printed in French. I cannot tell what the facts are unless I read the evidence in French. I have been told that matters of this kind appear much better in French than they do in English, and unless the evidence in this case is before us in French, I must make a formal objection to proceeding with the measure.

Mr. STEVENS: I have been a member of this house for eighteen years and during that time I have been opposed to the system of granting divorces through the medium of parliament. I have consistently refused on all occasions to take any part in the passing of a divorce bill. I have done that as consistently as any hon. members of the house who claim to be particularly prejudiced against this class of legislation. I agree in large measure with the view expressed by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), that one glance at the order paper must convince one that the passage of these bills in this manner, there being at least seventy-five of them in one string on the order paper, is not calculated to increase respect for the procedure adopted here. I recall twelve years ago a lengthy discussion in this house on the bill to provide for a divorce court. That proposal has not advanced during the long period which has intervened, and I do submit that while the efforts of my hon. friends to my left may not have my approval or the approval of the house in full measure, there is some justification for their course. They say: We object to this kind of procedure because it is not conducive to the good name of the house. I direct my next observation with all due respect to the Prime Minister and to the government. I think the Prime Minister ought to be in his seat. He ought to be here as the leader of parliament to note the difficulty in which the house now finds itself, and the very great danger of making sport out of perhaps some of the most serious breaches that are brought to the attention of parliament. We have undoubtedly during the last half hour been making parliament more or less of a farce in the case of seventy-five bills that I hold in my hand and anyone of which might very well be and is undoubtedly a serious human tragedy. Let me say this in answer to the request made by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) for certain details. I might preface that word with the word "sordid" and say "sordid details". I am sure that neither I nor any other hon. member desires to have these details read to the house. In fact, if he will glance at the language in the preamble to this bill, he will find there a complete answer to his query, an answer that I am quite sure no one desires to read nor to treat frivolously; but there it is.

This brings me to the question of our method of procedure in dealing with this bill as with other similar bills. These unfortunate people, in one respect blameworthy people, bring their suit in the senate and before a committee of the senate their case is tried. There is no committee of parliament that is held in higher regard throughout the Dominion of Canada than the committee of the senate which sits on divorce.

Mr. DUNNING: And no court.

Mr. STEVENS: I was coming to that. There is no committee of parliament that discharges its duty more faithfully and with more judicial care, thought and procedure than the committee of the senate on divorce. Furthermore, I had occasion this week to discuss the matter with two very able lawyers, friends of mine, not members of the house, and I question whether there is a divorce court in provinces where such courts exist, or any other court in Canada that treats the subject matter brought before it more carefully and judicially than does the divorce committee of the senate. Therefore I submit to my hon. friends that this case, the immediate bill before us, being Bill No. 74, letter E of the senate, having gone to that court, having been dealt with, the evidence having been heard in all its sordid details and the bill having been passed on to us, it is unnecessary for the house or for the private bills committee to go into extreme details in the matter unless the decision of the senate committee is called in question. In such a case the House of Commons acts in a measure as a sort of court of appeal, but in none of these cases has the bill been called in question. In every instance, so far as I know, both sides have concurred in or at least have not complained of the decision. I suggest that we should cease the controversy. On the one hand I appeal to the government as the leaders of the house—if the Prime Minister were in his seat I would appeal to him frankly to face the situation that has arisen and that will arise again next year—I have forgotten the number but I think there are two hundred and some odd divorce bills before parliament this year—and to allow parliament to disentangle itself from the mess in which it finds itself involved. On the other hand I appeal to my hon. friends to my left to allow these bills to pass in the usual orderly manner so that we may proceed with the business of parliament and not make a farce out of what is a most serious human tragedy.

Mr. DUNNING: I rise largely to concur in the main with what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has just said. I desire however to point out that even if the senate bill, which now stands as a public bill, were dealt with and passed by the house, the problem of the house dealing with divorce bills would not be entirely eliminated. Under our rules it would still be possible for any hon. gentleman to do what hon. members have been doing to-night, because divorce would still be granted with respect to the people of some provinces, one province at any rate, in the manner which has been prevalent in Canada since confederation. We would merely to some extent lessen the difficulty; we would not altogether remove it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): We would remove it to a large extent.

Mr. DUNNING: I agree that we would remove it to a large extent. I would point out however that it is and has always been possible for obstruction of the kind we have experienced to-night to take place, and I am finding no fault with hon. gentlemen. I know their motive is to force this question. What they desire to do is to substitute another court for the court of parliament in connection with this matter. But I submit that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was entirely right in his description of the dignified and proper manner in which these cases have been tried. It is not correct to allow the impression to go out to the country that parliament does not give proper and judicial consideration to these divorce bills. It is true that it has not been the custom of this chamber to give such consideration. The court has been set up in the senate for many years and the judicial committee of the senate which tries these cases supplies us with the evidence. When the bills come before this chamber it is competent for every hon. member to read the evidence in connection with every case and to make a specific objection on a specific bill if in his judgment the evidence there recorded does not warrant the action of parliament in the matter. Therefore while we may have objections to this method of granting divorces, we should not convey to the country by our actions or by our speeches the impression that divorce is lightly granted by the parliament of Canada. In reality divorce is less lightly granted by parliament than by any court in Canada or indeed by any court that I know of anywhere else. Whatever objection we may have to the procedure, there is possible through the machinery of parliament, a more complete check upon divorce than exists in the machinery of the courts. I do not think the lawyers in the house will disagree with that statement. I join with my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre in appealing to the committee to maintain the dignity of this House of Commons and to proceed in the regular manner with these bills, having regard to the evidence which is printed and in our hands with respect to every particular case.

Mr. POWER: Just before nine o'clock may I remark that if I made what appears to have been a formal and technical objection, I did so in order to add weight to the words of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin who said that when a person introduces a bill of this kind, he should at least be present to see it through the House of Commons.

ELECTRICITY INSPECTION ACT

The house resumed from April 16 consideration in committee of Bill No. 36, to amend and revise the Electricity Inspection Act—Mr. Malcolm—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 34—procedure.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): When this bill was last before the committee, objection was taken to section 34 by the hon. member for North Simcoe in connection with the judges before whom these cases should be tried. I have an amendment to submit to paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section which has been drafted by the law clerk, and has been submitted to the hon. member for North Simcoe to meet his objection. I move to substitute the following for paragraphs (a) and (b):

(a) Before any justice of the peace, police, district or stipendiary magistrate for the district, county or place in which the offense was committed if the penalty does not exceed twenty-five dollars; or

(b) before any two justices of the peace, police, district or stipendiary magistrate or any magistrate having the power or authority of two or more justices of the peace, if the penalty exceeds twenty-five dollars.

I may inform the committee that this meets with the objections of the hon. gentlemen opposite who wanted the section changed to meet existing conditions.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

The house resumed from April 18 consideration in committee of Bill No. 196, to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act—Mr. Stewart (Edmonton)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Annual royalty payable to the crown.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Representing the constituency in which this legislation when enacted will solely apply, I am happy to say that I can commend it to the house. In principle and in effect this is legislation which has been asked for by the people of that constituency now for some years past. It has been my duty, as representing that district, to present in successive years the views of the mine owners, the miners and producers of ore in that territory to the Minister of the Interior.

It may seem strange to the house that the people of any community should be seeking legislation that imposes taxation, for that is what this legislation in effect does. It would not be asked for if it were not that the bill not only imposes taxation, but eliminates another form of taxation which is on the statute book at the present time. The taxation now to be imposed is in substitution for taxation which is unfair, impractical and exorbitant, and which, if exacted, would be disastrous to the industry upon which it was imposed, and because on the face of it, it would be disastrous, the legislation although it has been on the statute book for some years past has never been enforced.

The effect of this bill is to impose a special sales tax on the proceeds of ore produced and mined, exported and sold from Yukon territory. The people of the Yukon, just as the people of the rest of Canada, would welcome the abolition of the sales tax, but if in the wisdom of the government it seems necessary to impose a tax on the natural resources which are being developed in that part of the country, then the policy laid down by the legislature of the province of Ontario in its Taxation of Mines Act, of which the present bill is almost an exact copy so far as it goes, is considered to be the best possible way of dealing with the situation.

The exacting of royalties on minerals produced in the Yukon is not a new venture on the part of the government. Almost as soon as it was discovered that that part of Canada contained mineral deposits the government enacted legislation imposing taxation. As far as I am aware, as early as July 29, 1897, the first order in council was passed by the then government imposing taxation on the output of mines in that part of the territory then included in the Northwest Territories. It was not a modest tax. The first order provided for taxation of 10 per cent on the gross output of mines producing up to $500 a week; on mines producing over $500 a week the taxation was 20 per cent. In those days that taxation was collected in specie. The tax collectors went about with pack trains of horses and mules from claim to claim and exacted the amount of tax in gold and gold dust. It was a common sight in those old days to see the caravans of the tax collectors coming into town loaded with gold taken from the mines by way of taxation. This tax was ultimately reduced to a tax of ten per cent straight, then to five per cent, and at last to 2½ per cent, at which rate it remains to this day. The tax was based on an arbitrary value placed on gold of $15 an ounce. That may seem a low value, but as a matter of fact the placer gold produced from the various sections of Yukon runs in value all the way from $12 to $18 an ounce; so $15 as a general average is about right.

In 1903 legislation by way of order in council placed the rate of taxation on minerals from lode mining at the same rate as that levied on placer gold. In those days there was no lode mining; therefore no tax was collected. In 1908 by order in council iron ore was exempted from taxation for a period of twenty years. Why, only the government of that day knew. Probably someone had a scheme for developing iron ore and wanted to get rid of the tax. In 1910 an order in council was passed exempting copper ore from taxation for ten years; in 1911 a similar order in council was passed exempting gold from lode mining from taxation for a similar period.

During the war years an embargo was placed on the exportation of minerals of all sorts from Yukon. This was all right as to gold, because we could market and handle this precious metal within Canada; but as to the other minerals, it was found to be impracticable, because we did not have the refineries or smelters or the machinery with which to treat those ores, with the result that the embargo had to be lifted and special permits given for the exportation of silver, lead and other minerals.

In March 1922 an order in council was passed imposing a royalty charge or taxation of 2½ per cent on various minerals, and placing an arbitrary value on those minerals. For instance, gold was valued at $15 an ounce—2½ per cent at that valuation meant taxation of 37 cents per ounce; silver at 60 cents an ounce, which amounted to 15 mills per ounce; copper at 10 cents per pound, which amounted to 30 cents per hundredweight; lead at 4 cents a pound, which amounted to 10 cents per hundredweight; zinc at 4 cents per pound, which amounted to 10 cents per hundredweight. Those who are familiar with the values of metals on the money market to-day will observe that silver is valued over and above its present market value, and so is copper, while lead is slightly below.

In June 1922 an order in council was passed exempting silver and lead from this rate of taxation imposed in that year for three years, unless in the meantime a smelter should be constructed in Yukon territory. An an encouragement to establish smelters I could never understand the object of that order. From year to year during 1925, 1926 and 1927, subsequent orders in council were passed suspending the imposition of the tax imposed by the order of March 1922, until on January 1 this year the exemption ceased, and now that rate of taxation is in full force and effect on the gross output of mines in Yukon. That is, they pay on those values whether the operation wins or loses.

This bill imposes a more equitable method of taxation, and it goes further in that it removes what is a species of government by order in council. The imposition of those rates of taxation was all by way of order in council, and the bill as originally introduced this session by the Minister of the Interior merely declared the principle of taxing the annual profits from mines, and left the working out of the collection and calculation of that taxation to order in council. I compliment the minister on having withdrawn that feature of the bill and placed all the details upon the statute book, so that now there will be no further uncertainty in the matter.

Government by order in council is a sore spot in Yukon. For many years government in that territory was largely carried on by order in council, and this was largely responsible for the unrest and dissatisfaction that existed in the early years of that camp. For instance, large and valuable mining concessions were given away by order in council without the slightest justification; whereas if they had had to pass this house and the senate they never would have gone through. The size of claims was regulated by orders in council; mining claims would be 100 feet square to-day, 250 to-morrow, and 1,000 the next day. Those orders in council were passed here at Ottawa, doubtless upon the advice of local people who did not give the government of the day proper advice. Probably the Yukon Placer Mining Act of 1906, which was passed after a long period of agitation by the miners and others interested in Yukon, did more to establish confidence in mining and to do away with the unrest and dissatisfaction in that territory than anything else that had been done up to that time.

When in 1924 the industry of lode mining had assumed importance in Yukon, it was my duty and privilege to introduce into this house the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. As a private member I was not then able to deal with the subject of taxation as embodied in the Yukon mining regulations, and it remained under order in council until now, when the Minister of the Interior has introduced this bill, No. 196, to regulate the taxation of the profits of lode mining in Yukon territory.

The producers of ore have considered the subject of taxation. Those who are the most deeply interested in the industry, those who have the most capital invested in it, agree with the government policy that the natural resources now being removed from that territory in large quantities in the shape of silver and lead ores of great value should pay a certain amount of taxation into the exchequer. The chief mining company in that territory is the Treadwell Yukon Company, mining also on a very large scale at Sudbury, Ontario. As the minister explained in introducing the bill, after consultation with the management of that company and with others interested in mining, the government has decided to adopt this method of taxation. It is only comparatively recently that lode mining has assumed important proportions in Yukon. In 1914 and the years immediately succeeding, when the territory had been practically depleted of manpower because of the war, the first discovery of valuable ore was made in that territory. About a quarter of a million dollars was taken out in a very short time from one claim know as the Silver King. Unfortunately, the method of mining in that instance was what is known as high grading: the high grade ore was taken out, no capital was put in to further develop the property, and it lay idle until very recently. In 1919 an important discovery of high grade galena ore was made in that territory. Since that date the industry has continued to grow and is now in a highly encouraging condition.

The greatest difficulty the industry has to face in Yukon is the remoteness of its situation—the great distance of the ore, in place, from the smelters or the refineries. So far as quantities and values are concerned, there is not very much left to be desired. It is only distance that works against the immediate capitalization of the deposits of ore in that territory. For the most part the ore is mined at an elevation of from four to five thousand feet, some forty miles from the river, which is the main artery of transportation. All supplies have to be hauled in and the ore freighted to the river by tractors, the ore and concentrates being sacked there and loaded on to barges, run down the river two hundred miles, and then conveyed via the Yukon river to the railway. It is hauled over the coast range by railway, loaded on to freighters on the Pacific coast, and freighted down to smelters in the state of Idaho. This Canadian ore cannot find a market in the Dominion of Canada and therefore it has to be taken all the way from the Yukon down into the state of Idaho and there refined and marketed.

Up to date the output from that district has been something over $6,000,000 in silver and lead. For the year 1927, from eleven shippers, that is to say eleven operating mines, one on a large scale and the others on more modest lines, the quantities and value of silver and lead ore shipped from that territory were:

	Tons	Value
Concentrates	2,689	$1,031,690
Ore	1,425	241,290
Total		$1,273,980

For the year 1928, on a very close and accurate estimate, the shipment will be:

	Tons	Value
Concentrates	3,650	$1,390,000
Total		$2,010,000

This represents an estimated increase for the year 1928 of about three-quarters of a million dollars. The average value of the ore per ton shipped this year from the territory is $232 which, if the ore were more accessible or located in this part of the world, would create an excitement greater than that caused by the discoveries in northern Ontario and Quebec.

In addition to these exports the existence of thousands of tons of ore has been demonstrated, and the prospects are that ore will be discovered in such quantities as to justify the establishment of smelters and refineries and possibly the extension of a railway into that country. There is one feature of the situation which I should like to call to the attention of the government, and particularly of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot). I refer to the desirability of introducing an airplane service into Yukon territory. The Postmaster General at the present time has before him a proposal whereby an airplane mail service can be introduced in the Yukon without costing the treasury of the country one cent in addition to the present cost of the mail service in that territory. I desire to quote briefly from a letter from the superintendent of a mining company in Yukon concerning the use of airplanes in connection with prospecting for mineral deposits. Referring to the use of airplanes for this purpose he says:

> This does not mean in any wild and uninhabited country but if you will look on any map of this territory you will notice three large blank areas, one between the Yukon and Pelly rivers which includes lake Taltmain, lake Drury and Little Salmon lake. Few rivers are shown in this area and what are shown are indicated flowing the wrong way. Another area is between the Pelly and McMillan rivers with the Ross on the southeast. The third area includes the McArthur group of mountains, is between the McMillan and Stewart rivers. A few creeks are shown in this third area but I understand they flow in the opposite direction from those shown. Any one of these three areas is more accessible than the Mayo district and as near as I can learn from studying various geological reports of the Yukon and descriptions from trappers and others who have been through these areas. The rock is very favourable for mineral deposits—not particularly for placer but for gold, silver and lead lodes. Some lead and silver has been reported from the Ross district and some gold quartz from the Pelly. With a plane the company could do more prospecting in these areas in one year than it could in ten by the old poling boat and traveling afoot methods.
> I trust the government will be able to extend its aerial service through this territory before long. It is very much faster and cheaper than the packhorse method. In studying over several maps I was very much surprised that the very centre of this territory had been overlooked by government geologists. If we are fortunate enough to get a plane I would like to make some arrangement with the Geological Department whereby they could send a man with the necessary equipment to do the aerial mapping of one or more of these districts and we would supply the pilot and gasoline.

That is a suggestion for the Postmaster General in connection with the effort now being made for the establishment of an airplane mail service in that territory, and I trust he will see his way clear to consider it favourably in co-operation with the Geological branch of the Department of the Interior, so that before long we may have an airplane service established there. The great mineral deposits in that territory warrant some effort on the part of the government in aiding prospectors and miners in opening them up, There is a vast store of mineral wealth there which will add to the commerce and trade of this country. Everything must be imported into that region for the development of these mines; even oil is imported by the operators of the silver mines for use in their engines. That country provides a good market for all kinds of Canadian goods; they produce nothing but minerals and in order to produce those minerals they must have a supply of tools, machinery, food and everything else which is used in an operating mine. The government would do well to direct its attention to aiding in further development of the mineral resources of that territory. The bill now before the committee will go a long way towards encouraging the development of lode mining in that territory in that it is a relief from an unfair system of taxation. There may be a few suggestions which I would like to offer to the minister in committee, but after all this is new legislation even in the province of Ontario. It was only placed on the statute books of that province about a year ago and there has not been time as yet to try it out. However, I venture to say that it will work satisfactorily and will be of great benefit to the mining industry of the territory to which it applies.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In reply to the hon. member for Yukon I would say that that was one of the reasons we thought it wise to read the provisions of the Ontario act, since it is new legislation. However, knowing the desire of the mining population in particular to have a statute which cannot be changed, we have decided to incorporate the statutory provisions of the Ontario act into our legislation, together with the small changes required so far as the office of gold commissioner is concerned. So I would ask that we give this legislation a trial for one year; if we find some unworkable provisions they can be amended later, but this has been given very careful consideration by the geological survey, by the mines branch and by the Department of the Interior, and we have profited by the experience of the province of Ontario.

On the title:

Mr. BENNETT: It seems to me it might be well to add, at the end of the regulations, words to indicate that such regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette. At the end of the regulations as now set out in the reprinted bill there is a clause which provides that additional regulations may be made, and I think it desirable to provide that these shall be published in the next issue of the Canada Gazette.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I propose doing that with all our regulations, particularly those affecting the mining interests and those having to do with forestry. That is my intention.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be better to have that stated in the act, but the minister has said he will do it and I know he is anxious to get his bill advanced to-night. For the moment it will be quite satisfactory to let it go at that, because he will probably deal with the whole problem at another time.

ST. JOHN HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $5,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

The house resumed from April 19 consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution—Mr. Cardin—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Saint John in an amount not exceeding $5,000,000 to enable the corporation to construct such terminal facilities as are necessary properly to equip the port of Saint John, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works, and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of the details which I gave yesterday in regard to this resolution, and in view of the fact that when the bill is introduced it will have to go to committee where we shall have the opportunity of getting all the details, I suggest that the resolution be put through now and that I be given permission to introduce the bill, with the understanding that all details required will be furnished when the bill is in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: I have only one observation to make with regard to the statement of the minister. This legislation involves the payment of public money to this harbour board and contemplates the delivery of the securities of that board to the Minister of Finance. I submit that the Duncan report did not contemplate that sort of national port development; it contemplated a direct expenditure of public money for the purpose of developing the ports of St. John and Halifax.

Mr. VENIOT: Under a harbour commission.

Mr. BENNETT: Under a statutory commission. This contemplates a harbour commission, but the Duncan report contemplated and stated in terms a statutory commission. In my judgment Sir Andrew Rae Duncan had in mind a statutory commission which would be an administrative body, not a body charged with the responsibility of issuing securities which would not be of value to this country. If this harbour cannot earn 5 per cent upon $5,000,000, as it may not, and as is not intended it would by the Duncan report any more than Quebec has been able to do so, it seems to me an improper thing that it should issue securities and place them in the treasury against grants of public money, when we know that so far as the payment of interest is concerned the securities are of no real value. That is the point we endeavoured to make yesterday, and I cannot help but think that the principle with respect to both Halifax and St. John is not sound, because it imposes an obligation upon those ports which we do not expect they will be able to discharge. We have imposed such an obligation upon the port of Quebec, and obviously it is not expected that the port of Quebec will be able to discharge that obligation. So it does occur to me that if we are to make a national port, as the words were used by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, we should do it directly, and not by this indirect means which is adopted for the purpose of placing in our treasury securities which are without value. That is the point I desire to make with the minister, because there is a very serious principle involved in it. That has led to all the difficulty in Quebec; there can be no doubt about that. If we had continued to expend public moneys at Quebec as we have done at other ports at the head of the lakes, without taking promises to pay from the port, the present situation would not have arisen. The difficulty with port administration under a commission is that they become political commissions rather than national port commissions; the minister knows that very much better than I, because in small communities such a commission is bound to be a political commission. We must remember that when the statute was first passed it contained a provision whereby at least one of the commissioners was elected by the community. I daresay the minister recalls those days when there was an election held for the selection of a commission by the ratepayers of the community. Now the real truth under existing conditions is that as soon as there is a change of government there is a change of the commission, and the harbour commission instead of being a body constituted to develop the port becomes nothing more or less than a political commission. I am not saying that of one government only; I am very careful not to do so, because virtue does not rest in one particular set of men and lack of it in another. The real fact is that the circumstances and conditions under which these commissions discharge their duties lend themselves to political purposes, very often to the finding of employment for political followers. That, as I say, is not applicable to one side more than to the other, but the fact remains that it operates against the efficiency of the commission. Take for instance the harbour of Montreal. A change of government in 1911 was followed by a change of the personnel of the commission, and there was a change of government in 1921, followed by another change of commission. There was a change of commissioners in the harbour of Quebec in the same way. The harbour of St. John, so far as the commission is concerned, is now dealt with in the same way as Halifax. The commission is appointed from political followers pure and simple, all Liberals. Now a national port is not a Liberal port, it is not a Conservative port; it belongs to Liberals and Conservatives. Because a Liberal government is in power is no reason why only Liberals should find employment on the harbour commission.

Mr. CARDIN: It is not the case in Montreal.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say it was. I am trying to avoid a discussion of that phase of the controversy because I happen to have some evidence of a very striking character with respect to some ports in Canada. I am not for a moment saying that if the party that is out of power had the opportunity it would not do exactly what has been done by the party in power; I want to be perfectly clear about that. But I submit that any legislation that makes that possible is unsound, very unsound. Starting with a new venture—because it is a new venture, we are developing under the recommendations of a commission two ports as national, all year round ports—let us try to resist the clamour of those who represent that at election times they vote for us, and remember that there is an obligation resting upon us higher than the protection of these electors. It would be hard for the minister to look at it in just that way, I will admit.

There is one other suggestion. This afternoon the Minister of Railways pointed out that he had sent to a special committee the bill founded upon the resolution providing for the necessary funds to build terminals at Toronto. I should like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries between now and the second reading of the bill to be founded on these resolutions, to consider whether he does not think he would be doing a real public service by sending these three resolutions relating to Quebec, St. John and Halifax to that special committee. I think the minister told the house last night that there had been a suggestion for a larger sum with respect to both harbours.

Mr. VENIOT: With respect to St. John.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to all of them.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Railways says with respect to Regina they do not desire public expenditure.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to see that Regina does not require anything.

Mr. DUNNING: It does.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I did not misunderstand the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: Like Calgary.

Mr. BENNETT: It wants a post office. May I suggest to the minister that if a little more consideration is given to this matter from the standpoint of the determination of particular items and evidence given as to just how the money was to be expended, that would create public confidence. The matter could be threshed out by hearing witnesses in a way that could not be otherwise possible. For instance the minister very frankly read to us the reports which he did last night, and he has some with respect to the port of Quebec. In that instance it was the old story of default in the payment of interest. In the present case it is a new venture. We would have an opportunity by a reference to the committee of examining witnesses with respect to the railway question, because the railways are affected. There is no doubt that having regard to closing the St. John gateway the national railway is tremendously interested in St. John harbour. I think the minister would agree too that it is the only railway that carries traffic to any considerable extent to Halifax; of course there is the Dominion Atlantic which carries traffic to Yarmouth or some other port rather than Halifax. Under these circumstances I should like the minister to take into consideration the suggestion I have made. I believe it would go far to satisfy the public mind with respect to the expenditures on all these ports. It would do something to indicate that the house was making an intelligent study of all the circumstances connected with them, because it would have before it, as the Minister of Railways remarked very properly, a transcript of the evidence given, and every member instead of having to ask questions in this committee would be able to read the evidence and satisfy himself in every particular with respect to the matters in question.

Mr. CARDIN: I think I am bound to answer the observation made by the leader of the opposition in so far as the recommendations of the Duncan report are concerned. I contend that we are following exactly those recommendations. To establish the truth of that statement may I quote these words from page 30 of the report:

> It is to be remembered, too, that even in Canadian ports—and particularly at Montreal where port development has reached a very high level indeed—considerable tonnage is being handled which is not Canadian, either in origin or in destination.
> We had, at our request, a private session with the Montreal harbour commission and, by hearing from them the steps they took to survey and stimulate production in their immediate territory as well as wider afield, we are confirmed in our view as to what harbour commissions (constituted of business and experienced persons) at Halifax and St. John could do in stimulating the trade of the maritime provinces.

Having had that conference with the harbour commission at Montreal the Duncan commission made that recommendation, and they discovered that an organization of the kind would be efficient and would prove satisfactory to the maritime provinces. As far as the expenditure is concerned I submit that the house is committed to the development of the ports of St. John and Halifax, and to the expenditure of money for this purpose—money which is absolutely necessary, because we read at page 29 of the same report these words:

> —it will be necessary to create facilities even ahead of expansion of trade.

These are the recommendations of the Duncan commission, and the house has accepted the obligation of carrying them out. Such being the case I submit with all deference to the leader of the opposition that notwithstanding the evidence which may be given before a committee we are bound to carry out what has been requested by the harbour commission. We cannot say that we have met the recommendations of the Duncan commission merely by the incorporation of a body to look after the affairs of the ports of St. John and Halifax when it is stated in the Duncan report that the present facilities are not adequate and it is recommended that those facilities be increased. What are we doing to-day? We are endeavouring to develop the facilities in accordance with a plan that has been prepared by very competent engineers. In view of the fact, theerfore, that the house is committed to the fulfilment of all the recommendations in the Duncan report, I submit respectfully, with all due deference to the views of the leader of the opposition who, I admit, is looking upon these matters from a broad point of view and with the idea of giving all possible assistance to the development of all the facilities existing in our Canadian ports, that we are committed to the point that nothing ought to be done to stop the passing of the measure and granting the request which has been made to us. Under these circumstances, with the details that I have already given, and in view of the fact that the conditions in the ports of St. John and Halifax are pretty well known and that an opportunity will be given later on to supplement the information which has already been given, I ask that I may be permitted to have the resolution carried and the bill introduced.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought I made it quite clear that I had no intention of interposing any serious obstacle to the passing of the resolution. I asked the minister to consider the suggestion I made for the purpose of dealing with it on the second reading, and I think the statement made by the Postmaster General as to a larger sum being sought would in itself constitute some reason why that should be so. I wholly concur in, and desire to associate myself and those who sit to the left of the Speaker with, the sentiment expressed by the minister that we must implement the recommendation made in the Duncan report. But the extent and purposes of present expenditures cannot be fully ascertained by all hon. members merely from the minister being able to answer questions. A committee is very useful even if it serves only the one purpose that, if a record is taken of what occurs before the committee, it is made very easy for every hon. member to have that knowledge which is sometimes denied him on account of backwardness in asking questions in the house or of difficulty in making himself heard or hearing what is said. I always regard a small committee of the house as having very great value. I observed that on at least one occasion in the British house, when a somewhat similar matter involving the expenditure of certain moneys was being considered, a small committee was appointed for the purpose of making a report to the house in order that there might be a record of the proceedings; because it is almost impossible for six or seven hundred members to be cognizant of everything that is going on. I offer the suggestion merely for the consideration of the minister and not for the purpose of obstructing the passage of the resolution. I endeavoured to make that clear yesterday in respect to another resolution, so that we may proceed with full information and knowledge of the facts and avoid committing the public to an expenditure which the public might regard as being unwarranted. If need be, the public can read for themselves the evidence that is adduced before such a committee. It is that principle I have in mind with respect to this matter, just as the Minister of Justice the other day felt that it was desirable that the question of judges' salaries should be considered by a select committee. There the public interest is involved without regard to party, and we might consider the question of our ports in much the same way. The question of the Toronto terminals, for instance, is a matter affecting everyone who travels, and the same thing is true in regard to ports of St. John and Halifax; they belong to the west as well as to the east. The tolls to be collected will depend upon the character of the expenditure and the broad vision of the engineers who superintend the work of construction. In fact I had almost made up my mind the other evening, having read these matters with some care, to suggest to the minister that the course pursued by the Minister of Railways with respect to Fort Churchill and Port Nelson, namely, the calling in of the greatest experts whose services he could command for the purpose of getting a report upon the harbour facilities, might be justified with regard to these harbours, having regard to the fact that, as I endeavoured to say yesterday, these are harbours that should be considered not from the standpoint of Quebec or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia but from the standpoint of the whole of Canada. If they are to succeed far beyond being merely ports for the incoming and outgoing of ships, which is not the important matter; if the trade of Canada is to be served by them, we should try to get the last word in technical service and advice with respect to the development of the ports. Probably upon this continent you could get expert advice of the highest character with respect to ports of that kind, just as the Minister of Railways last year sought the opinion of an estuarial engineer in connection with the Hudson bay ports. I had that suggestion in mind; whether or not it is of value is another matter, because the minister knows better than I do the character of the advice he will receive from his engineers. But I do not believe we can afford to play with these matters and run the risk of our money not being properly expended, having before us the interests of the country as a whole with respect to these harbours. That matter might be considered by the minister between now and the second reading of the bill. I have no further observations to interpose with respect to the passage of the resolution as such.

Mr. VENIOT: Before this resolution is passed I should like to say a word in connection with it. I am not going to undertake to discuss the merits or demerits of the proposition set forth by the leader of the opposition as to how this money should be expended, but I do not think I would be doing my duty as a representative of the province of New Brunswick if I allowed the impression to be left on the committee to-night and to go abroad by the words of the leader of the opposition that St. John harbour would not be able to pay any part of the interest on the loan that would be made to it.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say any part.

Mr. VENIOT: Or even the whole of it. If St. John harbour is developed as it should be in order, together with Halifax, to take care of transatlantic shipments, especially in the winter time, there is no reason to suppose that as regards the amount of money necessary to prepare the port of St. John for that transportation it cannot secure sufficient revenue to pay at least the interest, if not the sinking fund. St. John harbour is, or was prior to a year ago, the only harbour in Canada owned directly by a city. Under a royal charter that harbour was conceded to the city of St. John, and the Department of Marine and Fisheries had no control in any way over that harbour. Over a period of several years, considering that in years gone by, at least prior to 1910 or 1911, St. John harbour was not getting sufficient recognition from the different governments at Ottawa, the corporation of the city of St. John undertook to improve the harbour at its own expense, and to that end it expended in the neighbourhood of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000. It paid the interest on that expenditure and it set aside a sinking fund to the extent that last year there was in that fund an amount of $667,000 to meet maturing bonds. Not only did it pay interest and provide sinking fund payments, but each year it had a surplus, and its surplus would have been greater had it not been that in 1925, St. John, seeing that it was necessary to divert Canadian export trade to Canadian ports and not being able to get a proper freight rate which would warrant grain going through that port, diminished its side wharfage and top wharfage charges on grain from six cents to one cent a bushel in order to encourage the western farmers to ship their freight through Canadian ports. Had St. John not done that, its surplus in 1925, 1926 and 1927, after meeting interest and sinking fund payments, would have been a great deal larger. But St. John was acting from a national point of view; its interest was the development of Canadian ports, and the encouragement of Canadian trade to go through Canadian ports. I think all will admit that it is diversity of freight that makes up the revenues of a port. Any port on the Atlantic that depends entirely for its revenue upon the shipment of grain cannot be a financial success. Last year 25,000,000 bushels of wheat passed through the port of St. John. It had six million tons of export trade and one and a half million tons of imports.

Mr. BENNETT: Is not the minister wrong about six million tons of exports other than grain?

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say other than grain. Grain did not amount to more than 850,000 tons of the 6,000 000 tons exported. St. John's trade is not all transatlantic. St. John has a large exportation of farm products to other than transatlantic countries. Furthermore, for its size St. John is equipped to-day for the cattle trade in a way that no other port in Canada is equipped. There is room in our newly constructed sheds at St. John to-day to accommodate at one time 1,353 head of cattle. St. John has also some of the best frost-proof warehouses to take care of agricultural produce, such as potatoes and other produce which has to be shipped in winter to prevent perishing. With all these advantages, and with the amount of money that St. John is asking for to-day, $5,000,000 —it is true that they did ask for $10,000,000, which would have completed the program in five or six or perhaps seven years, and would have put the port in a position to handle double the grain and double the mixed freight which it is handling to-day—when you consider that Vancouver, with all its facilities and improvements, handled 43,000,000 bushels, I believe, of grain last year, and that St. John handled 25,000,000 bushels—and the quantity would have been much larger last fall and this winter had it not been for a restriction, if I may use that term, on the exportation of grain transatlantic—you begin to realize the possibilities of the harbour of St. John.

It is true that large sums of money have been expended by the government in the past on the harbour of St. John. I am not going to say that the money has always been judiciously expended. But leaving aside the Courtenay bay proposition and taking St. John harbour as we look upon it to-day, together with the improvements that are to be made on the west side, where the Canadian Pacific is bringing large quantities of grain and has not the facilities necessary to bring larger quantities, and considering that the Canadian National has no way of reaching the west side of the harbour except with the special privilege of running over the lines of the Caandian Pacific from east to west; considering also that St. John is prepared as a city to-day, if I can believe the officials of the city, the mayor and the commissioners, and I believe that I can, to expend still further sums of their own in aiding the railways and giving greater facilities in the way of a bridge across the harbour so that the Canadian National may have extended privileges on the west side—all these things considered, I feel that St. John deserves a great deal of praise for what it has done, and further that any sum of money which this parliament may vote to St. John will be judiciously expended.

The leader of the opposition referred to the political aspect of these commissions. It is true that when this new commission was appointed it was tainted with Liberalism.

Mr. BENNETT: Not tainted, surely.

Mr. VENIOT: But it is also true that the full harbour organization of the city of St. John, without regard to political affiliations, was taken over by the present harbour commission; not one single dismissal was made. Let me go further. The engineer in charge of the harbour works in St. John to-day is the same engineer who was in charge of expenditures in the main harbour, the present harbour for which we are seeking improvements. He is the engineer of the Department of Public Works who has been in charge of those works during the last eight or ten years. His name is Mr. Gray, and I think I am safe in stating that no more efficient and no more capable engineer on harbour construction and improvements can be found in the Dominion of Canada. He has had a vast experience. No engineer could possibly be obtained to-day who knows more about the peculiar tidal conditions in the harbour of St. John and the bay of Fundy than does the present engineer, due to the long experience he has had there.

The work in St. John perhaps will be more costly than in any other harbour in the Dominion, for this reason: the heavy rise and fall of the Fundy tides necessitates the construction of piers of a much greater depth and far more costly than are required in any other harbour in the Dominion.

When the bill is in committee I expect to go into further details, but lest I may not have that opportunity let me say now that so congested are conditions in the harbour of St. John that in December, 1926, and January, 1927, ships coming in for grain and other cargoes lost no less than 155 days demurrage, mostly because they were lying in the stream awaiting berths. That is the condition. St. John and Halifax are the only two ports on the Atlantic coast through which Canadian trade can go in and out during the winter season. May I point this out also, that in the winter time the United States ports of Portland and Boston are losing so much of their trade to Halifax and St. John that there is a movement on foot in the senate at Washington to devise some means of preventing this loss. To my mind Halifax and St. John, being the only Atlantic ports that are open the year round, like Vancouver on the Pacific, are really our two national ports on the Atlantic coast, and for that if no other reason they should receive all the encouragement that I feel this house will give them.

I wish to thank hon. members on both sides for the very generous support they accorded to the maritime provinces last winter when their case was before the house. I do not accept the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition as made in a spirit of criticism or opposition to this grant, but rather in an endeavour to find a better method of carrying on these works. Speaking for myself, I court the most rigorous investigation of all expenditures for the development of the harbours of the maritime provinces.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I would not have the committee think from what the hon. leader of the opposition has suggested with regard to the personnel of the commission that I do not consider those gentlemen in every way qualified for their job.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not mention their qualifications—except politically.

Mr. POWER: Is it a qualification?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend stated that they were politicians, leaving the impression on the committee that they were appointed primarily because they were adherents of the Liberal party. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) does not happen to know those gentlemen personally as I do. The leader of the opposition probably knows them pretty well, and I think he will join with me in what I am about to say, because I quite realize that he did not single them out particularly because of their political views. But I want to take the committee into my confidence to convince them that political considerations had not primarily to do with the appointments. In the city of Halifax there has been a good deal of criticism of the government for their selection of those gentlemen, simply because they were not regarded as dyed-in-the-wool, hard-shell partisans. It seems you are damned if you do and damned if you don't. Our endeavour was to select as commissioners those who had the widest experience and the best qualifications, which, combined with their personality and long residence in the city, admirably adapted them to discharge the duties of their office. Mr. Peter R. Jack, the chairman of the commission, was born in the city of Halifax; he is a bright, energetic, young business man and has been associated with many of the most progressive activities of the city, and I think everyone agrees that he is well qualified for the position. Mr C. W. Ackhurst is a shipping man, has been connected with the waterfront all his life, and is a very able and efficient man of business. Mr. John Murphy was controller for two or three terms, and then mayor of the city for two terms, and is regarded as one of the ablest of its citizens, thoroughly imbued with its civic spirit and point of view. Those are the type of men appointed to administer the harbour. True, they happen to be Liberals, but I do not think that should be regarded as a disqualification, provided they have the proper business experience and capacity to discharge the duties of their office. That a man happens to be an adherent of the party in power has never been regarded as a disqualification for office by this or any other government, provided he possessed the requisite qualifications for appointment.

I may be permitted to read to the committee the resolution which was passed by the Halifax board of trade immediately after those gentlemen were appointed. And I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that the Halifax board of trade is not by any means composed wholly of supporters of the Liberal party.

Mr. BENNETT: Judging by the last election.

Mr. RALSTON: Judging by the last election, as my hon. friend interjects. I do not think there can be the least doubt about that. At any rate I have no doubt myself. This is the resolution:

> This board appreciates Hon. J. L. Ralston telegraphing them of the appointment and personnel of the Halifax harbour commission and wishes to commend him on his selection and assure him of the board's assistance and co-operation; also,
> The board wishes to congratulate the harbour commissioners on their appointment and assure them of the fullest co-operation and assistance.

That is the personnel of the Halifax harbour commission to whom this house will be asked to vote a certain sum of money when the bill is introduced, and I can honestly, sincerely, and frankly say that I believe those men are amply qualified to discharge the duties of their office, even though they may happen to be adherents of the Liberal party.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, to have to make another observation in respect to this matter. The point I was endeavouring to make was that the political character of the commission involves political patronage in the expenditure of moneys, and all we on this side have been suggesting is the desirability of assuring one hundred per cent of effort for every dollar of expenditure.

Mr. RALSTON: May I interrupt my hon. friend? If the statutory commission is appointed at all, would my hon. friend suggest that something should be inserted in the act that the appointees be not supporters of the government?

Mr. BENNETT: No. The Minister of National Defence is too astute to put that construction on what was said. I pointed out that originally the constitution of harbour commissions provided for the election of at least one member. That was done away with and the appointment of partisans substituted. I was careful to say that either party would do the same thing; I did not say that my hon. friend's party was responsible.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not suggest it.

Mr. BENNETT: I pointed out that the appointment of your own partisans assured patronage being relied upon in connection with expenditures, and we in this house know that in small communities the tendency is to prevent a hundred cents of effort resulting from a dollar's expenditure. This being a national port, so vastly different from anything else we have, a port in which we are all interested, I am sure the minister realizes that the pressure put upon him—the minister from Nova Scotia—to have his friends looked after with respect to the work of the harbour will be very great indeed. I am sorry to say it is so, human nature being as it is. I see my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) smiles, for he knows just what it means in New Brunswick—and just what it will mean in Nova Scotia also. That patronage evil might be overcome in two ways. First, the personnel of the commission should not wholly reflect the view of the party in power. This practice is followed in England, as my hon. friend knows. For example, the head of the port authority of London on one occasion was certainly everything else than a supporter of the particular government of the day, and the government itself, except through the Board of Trade, had nothing to do with the matter at all. Secondly, it is desirable that this parliament should have some control over that expenditure, direct through the Auditor General and through the public accounts committee. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and I placed that before the house two years ago with some degree of force. Once more I say to the Postmaster General so far as New Brunswick is concerned, that every hon. member in this house is to my knowledge in favour of these expenditures in St. John; but what we fear is that the result of this effort will not be to get 100 cents of value for 100 cents of expenditure. And I need hardly say to my hon. friend that those of us who are familiar with what has transpired in days gone by in the public accounts committee and in other investigations as well have some reason to realize that public moneys expended, not by the city of St. John but by the government of Canada, in connection with dredging contracts for instance, were not wholly beyond suspicion. I will use only the words that came out in connection with one or two investigations, and the Postmaster General will understand the rest of it. And that was not limited to any particular class of individuals.

Mr. VENIOT: Or to any particular party.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. I want the minister to understand that I was only suggesting that St. John might not pay interest. But if we expect to recover the interest it will involve the payment of tolls, wharfages and other charges such as might make it disadvantageous to the port; and I want the lowest possible tolls to be exacted and the lowest possible dues to be charged, for a reason I did not care to mention, but which I communicated to my hon. friend to my right, namely, the effort of seaboard ports on the United States front to take away from us a part of the traffic we now have. For this reason we shall have to maintain the lowest possible tolls and charges to insure success in our operations. Therefore we must not regard these moneys as loans in connection with which interest and sinking fund are to be taken care of, but rather as contributions made by the parliament of Canada towards the development of a national port. I am sorry if I did not make that clear, for it was the purpose of my observation. Regardless of what the return may be, the most efficient method should be pursued, under the direction of the most competent engineers, and the charges imposed should have some regard to the service rendered, irrespective of the question of interest or sinking fund. I do not think the minister should place in the treasury of the country the bonds and debentures of these commissions and find himself, in a year or two, faced with the statement, "We are unable to pay interest because the tolls are not sufficient to enable us to do so." I do not want to see this port labouring under the handicap that has hampered the port of Quebec, as indicated by the minister yesterday. That is the position I take with respect to this matter and which I wish to make quite clear. The Postmaster General misunderstood me if he thought for a moment that I suggested that the harbour of St. John could not earn charges, for it undoubtedly could if the tolls were high enough. But that might have an adverse effect on its traffic, and our business is to provide traffic, making these facilities thoroughly effective and useful in the national interest of Canada.

Mr. ROBB: Was it not argued yesterday that the port of Quebec should earn enough to pay interest on the money?

Mr. BENNETT: What was argued was that the port of Quebec, had it been efficiently conducted and a proper ratio of gross and net earnings preserved, as has been done in the case of St. John, would have paid interest on the present investment. St. John last year not only took care of interest and sinking fund but it had a surplus of $40,000. That port had net earnings of $218,000, including interest and sinking fund charges, as against $257,000 odd of gross earnings. The argument that has not been answered and cannot be answered is that the expenditures in Quebec were out of all proportion, as between net and gross earnings, to any other port in Canada. And what is more, there is the report of the audit board, set down in black and white, to which no answer was made. That report bears out the argument.

Mr. BELL (St. John-Albert): Regarding the resolution before the committee with reference to the proposed loan to the harbour commission of the port of St. John, I wish to place myself on record as strongly supporting the proposal. The harbour of St. John was taken over by the present board on August 1 last. The board as at present constituted is composed of men of ability and character, together with an engineer of the highest standing in the profession—I refer to Mr. Alexander Gray, late Dominion engineer at the port of St. John. The loan asked for is not as large as was recommended by the harbour board, having been reduced by half; and it is to cover a period of three years. The vote as at present proposed is the outcome of the creation of the Duncan commission, whose report bearing on the question of port development and equipment contains the following statement at page 29:

it possible, in present circumstances, to secure adequate port development. We recommend that, in respect of each of these two harbours, the federal government should establish a statutory harbour commission, whose business it would be to see that the port facilities are developed on such a scale as will gradually—but by no means slowly—create channels through which trade can expand both winter and summer. The development of a port is as much a matter of mechanical and technical equipment, business organization and practical administration, as is the development of any extensive manufacturing or industrial business.

The winter port traffic started in St. John in 1901. In that year the total revenue of the port was $40,630. In 1927 the total revenue was $257,704.97. During the last ten years the development of the winter port traffic has been hampered by lack of adequate berthing facilities. In 1926-27 one ship had to wait twelve days for a berth and another eight days. Due to lack of facilities in the winter port season of 1926-27 transatlantic steamers were held up for a total of 155 days. With the present inadequate equipment much business is lost. Berths, warehouse room and elevator storage are urgently needed if the business of the port is to increase at a normal rate. The proposed improvements call for pier accommodation, representing from five to six steamships. A grain elevator is urgently needed as are also transit sheds with office accommodation. The estimated cost is $5,000,000, the work to extend over a period of three years. I am convinced that a straight government loan would be much better than an obligation on the part of the harbour board. I should not like to have the board undertake any obligation on which they could not meet interest.

I might say in support of what the Postmaster General has stated that undoubtedly, with the new facilities that will be provided, and having in mind the additional expenditure which later on will probably be involved, through the erection of a bridge across the river, the Canadian National and the new terminals which will also be established will greatly facilitate the export and import business. I trust that the house will give the most favouralbe consideration to this resolution and provide the St. John with what is necessary to assist it in its worty effort to develop trade through that port.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 216, to provide for a loan to the St. John Harbour Commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

56103—143½

HALIFAX HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $500,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize a loan to the harbour commissioners of Halifax in an amount not exceeding $500,000, to enable the corporation to construct such terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the port of Halifax, upon approval by the governor in council of detailed plans, specifications and estimates for such works and the deposit of debentures of the corporation to cover said loan.

He said: The harbour commissioners of Halifax request this money to provide for improvements and additional equipment to wharves, piers and sheds to an amount of $290,000; improvements to elevator system, including conveyor galleries, $60,000; additional port equipment, including a locomotive train and a fuel oil bunker plant, $150,000, making a total of $500,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand that the present facilities belong to the Dominion?

Mr. CARDIN: The present facilities belong to the Canadian National Railways, and the harbour commission is negotiating with the Canadian National Railways to have these facilities placed under the control of the commission.

Mr. MILLAR: Is the minister in a position to give us the amount of grain which went through that port last year?

Mr. CARDIN: I have not that information before me, but I will have it when the bill is in committee.

Mr. MacNUTT: I would ask the minister if the harbour commissioners of Halifax are working under the same arrangement with the government as are the commissioners of St. John. The minister will remember that the city council and the board of trade of Halifax refused to accept the appointment of this harbour commission for a year or more, due to some disagreement as to the exact interpretation of the recommendation of the Duncan commission.

Mr. CARDIN: The position in Halifax is exactly the same as that in St. John; the commission is constituted in the same way and has the same powers. I well remember that a delegation came to Ottawa from Halifax asking that that port be considered as a purely national port, that the expenditures be made by the government without tolls or dues being charged and with no interest to be paid back to the government That was the contention of the representatives of the board of trade, but after discussing it with them we decided to proceed as we had procedeed at St. John, and the Minister of National Defence stated a moment ago that after the appointment of the Halifax commissioners the board of trade declared themselves satisfied and ready to co-operate with the board which was named to look after the affairs of that port. So at present there is a complete understanding between the public bodies of Halifax and the harbour commission as it is now constituted.

Mr. EVANS: As this makes a total of over $14,000,000 which is to be spent for the development of these eastern ports, I would ask the government if they have any policy with regard to the movement of grain from the west, since these developments are made particularly to handle that business? If the lower rates on the Transcontinental railway have any effect at all they will undoubtedly benefit the ports on the Atlantic coast, and in that case it seems very unwise to spend such a large sum of money on the port of Quebec since the facilities of that port never have been used to their full extent. Do the government intend that the port of Quebec or the ports on the Atlantic shall receive a greater amount of grain, or what do they intend?

I would also point out that we have seen fit to direct a great part of our wheat through United States ports as the most feasible route to the markets of the world. If there is to be winter handling, which the Minister of Railways said yesterday was so profitable, why should we store wheat at Quebec? If the grain is to move over the Transcontinental railway at all it is certain to go to Halifax or St. John, and it seems to me that the government should formulate some direct policy with regard to those ports rather than spend such sums as $5,000,000 and $8,500,000 indiscriminately on the same port without knowing whether or not it will be used to its capacity.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I might be permitted to answer my hon, friend in that regard without attempting to lay down any fixed policy on behalf of the government, because these are largely matters of development. I would point out that there is a difference between making provision for winter storage and for winter handling. In the nature of things there will be comparatively little winter storage at a port which is open during the winter; there is comparatively little winter storage at Vancouver or at Halifax and St. John. On the other hand, at interior ports, both in the United States and in Canada, there is an increasing tendency to provide for winter storage in order that grain may be in a strategic location for spring shipment. In that connection it has been found more advantageous than would be the case, in the national interest of Canada, to store grain for the winter in United States winter storage terminals. A number of years ago a company, with which I believe the leader of the opposition was connected, was a pioneer in the direction of providing winter storage for grain within Canada, instead of using to such a large extent United States facilities located at United States lake ports, and other interior ports, for that purpose. And so in Canada we have been gradually building up two types of facilities, one for the continuous handling of grain at ports which are open the year round, and the other winter storage facilities as close as possible to the channels of world trade at places which are not open the year round but are closed for a considerable portion of it. Montreal has gone in for winter storage to a far greater extent in recent years than formerly. Utilization of the winter storage at Quebec, filled to almost its full capacity for the first time, is further evidence of the use which the trade and the pools will make of winter storage as near as possible to the outlet of navigation. If the trade is there for them I think it is of considerable advantage to have in Canada enough winter storage to take care of Canadian grain, and as a matter of fact as much American grain as can come. That is the broad answer I make to my hon. friend.

Mr. EVANS: I could understand the minister's explanation if we stored this grain at great milling centres such as the United States have, but I do not think the example of the United States should be followed in this case, because none of the hard wheat leaves the United States, and the best of the other wheat is used within the country.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think my hon. friend quite understood me. The provision which has been made in the United States for winter storage in recent years has been made for the storage of Canadian rather than of American grain. That is true especially of the port of Buffalo.

Mr. QUINN: May I ask the minister if this vote of $500,000 for the Halifax harbour commission will make provision for the salaries of the commission and the staff?

Mr. CARDIN: No, this vote is to build additional equipment, wharves and so on, in the port of Halifax. It does not provide for the salaries of the commissioners. They are paid out of the revenues of the port.

Mr. QUINN: Have the salaries of the commissioners been fixed?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. QUINN: What are they?

Mr. CARDIN: The president's salary is $4,000 and that of each of the two other commissioners $3,000.

Mr. QUINN: And the salaries will be paid out of the revenues?

Mr. CARDIN: Out of the revenues of the port.

Mr. QUINN: And also the salaries of the staff?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 217, to provide for a loan to the Halifax harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

IMPROVEMENT AND BEAUTIFICATION OF OTTAWA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIZE KING (Prime Minister): I wish the house to consider the resolution, appearing as No. 22 on the order paper, with respect to the Federal District Commission. I may say that if the house is prepared to pass the resolution there will be ample opportunity of debating the principle of the bill and all matters of detail in committee. I think we might pass the resolution and introduce the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Agreed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved:

That the Federal District Commission Act, 1927, be amended to provide,

1. That the period for the payment of the annual grant to the Federal District Commission at present fixed at sixteen years from the first day of April, 1927, be extended to thirty years from the first day of April, 1928, the said annual payment to be reduced to the sum of $200,000.

2. That the Minister of Finance may provide for the purposes of the commission by the sale or other disposition of securities of the commission, guaranteed as hereinafter provided, an amount or amounts not to exceed in the aggregate $3,000,000, or he may, with the approval of the governor in council, pay to the commission, out of the consolidated revenue fund, such sum or sums, not exceeding $3,000,000, as may be required for said purposes, or may make such provision partly in one way and partly in the other. The governor in council may authorize the guarantee of the payment of principal of and interest on any such securities, the proceeds to be deposited to the credit of the Minister of Finance in trust for the commission and released by the minister in his discretion for the purposes of the act;

3. That the Minister of Finance may provide out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may be required to pay interest on the said securities and also such sums as are required for the purpose of establishing a sinking fund or for retiring the said securities by annual instalments;

4. That the provisions of the Expropriation Act, instead of the Railway Act shall be made applicable to expropriation proceedings of the commission.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Prime Minister's suggestion is agreed to without prejudice.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I was rising to say, because there are some hon. members whom I would not care to bind in any sense who desire to make some observations on this matter, and the statement of the Prime Minister, I think, absolutely protects them in that regard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Absolutely. This is just to allow the bill to be introduced.

Mr. BENNETT: Pro forma.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the Prime Minister make a short explanation of the proposal?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The bill to be based on the resolution proposes to reduce from $250,000 to $200,000 the amount granted to the commission as an annual appropriation. It is estimated that at the present time something like $150,000 a year is required for the maintenance of the work already done by the commission on parks and driveways. For the period of time to which reference is made in the resolution it is probable that an amount equal at least to $200,000 a year will be required for maintenance alone. It is proposed that any small amount over and above what is required for maintenance should go to meet small incidental capital expenditures in connection with the work of the commission, such for example as the construction of greenhouses. The rest of the resolution is a proposal that there should be voted by parliament for capital expenditures by the commission, a total sum of $3,000,000, to be provided either by payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, or by the issue of securities to be redeemed over a period of thirty years. The intention of the government, if parliament approves, is to provide at once, by way of capital expenditure, chargeable to the public debt, the sums necessary to meet the cost of expropriating what is now known as the Russell house property, including the Russell theatre property. Other capital expenditures would be met by the issue of securities to be redeemed over the period of thirty years. It is hoped that parliament will approve a plan of providing for the construction of a confederation park in the centre of the city by the expropriation of a few buildings at present situated between Sparks street, Laurier avenue, Elgin street and the canal. It is not proposed that all of the buildings will be expropriated but only some that can be taken over to the advantage of all concerned. At the present time, as hon. members know, there is on Laurier avenue a large open space in the nature of a park, known as Cartier square. Below Cartier square there is the property, owned by the Ontario government, on which the Normal model school and Normal school buildings are situated. Adjoining parliament hill is Major Hill park. The members of the commission feel that if the property between Cartier square and Major Hill park could be acquired and transformed into a park there would be in the heart of the capital, one large central park, and this open space would lend a character to the whole city which would have its effect in the ultimate beautification and development of the capital.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the commission any revenues at all?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think not.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mackenzie King thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 218, to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Monday, April 23, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

RESIGNATION OF SIR HENRY DRAYTON

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that the Speaker has received the following communication:

House of Commons.
Dominion of Canada.

To the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons.

To wit:

I, Henry Lumley Drayton, member of the House of Commons of Canada, for the electoral district of West York, do hereby resign my seat in the said House of Commons, for the constituency aforesaid.

Given under my hand and seal at the city of Ottawa, this twenty-third day of April, nineteen hundred and twenty-eight.

Witness, S. CHARTERS.
Witness, R. B. BENNETT.

The Speaker also received the following letter:

The Honourable, the Speaker of the House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER:

I enclose herewith my resignation as member of the house. This course, severing as it does many happy associations, I find necessary owing to my acceptance of the chairmanship of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario.

May I thank you and the members of the house for the kindness and consideration always shown me, and for the lasting friendships I am proud to think I carry with me.

Yours sincerely,

H. L. DRAYTON.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the communication which you have just read I should like to assure my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bennett) that all of us on this side of the house join very sincerely with him in regretting the resignation of Sir Henry Drayton as a member of the house. While Sir Henry Drayton was opposed to us politically, and differed from us on many matters of political opinion, differences were usually so expressed as not to tend to lessen the ties of friendship existing between hon. members on both sides of the house. I might almost say that no member of the house had more personal friends among members of all political parties than the member for West York. Sir Henry some years ago in order to serve his country in parliament resigned the position of chairman of the railway commission, a very important position in the public service of Canada. He did so, I believe, from the highest and most public spirited of motives, and since that time he has continuously served in parliament as a minister of the crown or an honourable member of this house. Sir Henry is now returning to duties somewhat similar in character to those he discharged on the railway commission. As chairman of another very important commission, I am sure he will bring to his new task that exceptional personal and professional equipment which marked his tenure of office as chairman of the railway commission. We all wish him every success in his new field of public service.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): On behalf of myself and those associated with me who sit to your left, Mr. Speaker, I desire to thank the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) very sincerely for the kind references he has made to Sir Henry Drayton, who until a few moments ago was the member for West York. With all that the Prime Minister has said with respect to Sir Henry Drayton, it is of course our delight to agree. To his public duties he brought a highly trained mind. He was an experienced lawyer and an able administrator, and his experience as chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners gave him an insight into Canadian business, and a knowledge of conditions throughout the country, unrivalled at the time he accepted the very onerous and responsible duties of Minister of Finance of Canada. At that time it was exceedingly difficult to induce any man of standing to undertake so large a responsibility, having regard to the then condition of our country. Sir Henry Drayton had, as the Prime Minister has said, a very high sense of his duty to Canada, and the discharge of that duty occasioned him a great deal of worry and anxiety. Like most public men, now that his services in this chamber have ceased they are more truly recognized at their real worth, alike by his friends and his opponents. I am sure we are very deeply grateful to the Prime Minister and those who sit with him for the kindly references they have made to our colleague, and their appreciation of what the house has lost. His departure, however regrettable it may be to members of the house generally, will be much more keenly felt by those of us who have been so intimately associated with him in parliament.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): We in this corner of the house desire to be associated with other members in expressing our regret at the resignation of the hon. member for West York, Sir Henry Drayton. It is quite true that Sir Henry has given very valuable service to his country, and while he is leaving this particular field, in which he had laboured so long and faithfully, he is nevertheless available for public service in another direction. When I first came to this house some years ago I think I received more encouragement from Sir Henry Drayton than from practically any other member of the house, and I shall always remember with great appreciation his kindly manner on all occasions. Once again I wish to say on behalf of those who sit with me how heartily we associate ourselves with other members in the house in this expression of appreciation of Sir Henry Drayton.

CAP ST. IGNACE POSTMASTER

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Was Joseph Bossinotte, late postmaster at Cap St. Ignace, dismissed on account of political partisanship?
2. If so, who made the accusations of political partisanship?
3. Were said accusations denied by said Bossinotte?
4. If so, was an investigation held?
5. If not, was an investigation asked for?
6. In the affirmative, by whom?
7. Why was such investigation not held?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Yes.
2. The member for the constituency.
3. Yes.
4. No.
5. Yes.
6. Former postmaster.
7. Member for constituency stated that he had personal knowledge of the political activities of the postmaster.

SCHOONER ADMIRAL BEATTY

Mr. QUINN:

1. Was the schooner Admiral Beatty seized by the Department of Customs?
2. If so, what was the date of seizure?
3. Has the said vessel been released?
4. If so, on what date?
5. Was there a trial as the result of seizure?
6. If so, what was the result of the trial and judgment of the court?
7. Has the judgment of the court been carried into effect?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PURCHASE OF ALBERTA RAILWAYS

Mr. KENNEDY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, reports and other documents passing between the Department of Railways and Canals and the Alberta government, and between the Canadian National Railways and the Alberta government with reference to the purchase of the railways of Alberta, by the Canadian National Railways, or by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railway jointly.

CAP ST. IGNACE POSTMASTER

Mr. CAHAN:

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, and orders in council relating to dismissal of Joseph Bossinotte, late postmaster at Cap St. Ignace, county of Montmagny, Quebec, and to the appointment of his successor in said office.

OSHWEKEN, ONTARIO, POSTMASTER

Mr. SMOKE:

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, telegrams, orders in council, relating to the dismissal of Mr. J. S. Johnson, late postmaster at Ohsweken, Ontario, and to the appointment of his successor.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MR. JOHN MACKINNON

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the report of the investigation in the case of locomotive engineer John MacKinnon, of Riviere du Loup, and of all the correspondence relating thereto.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I would point out that this motion evidently asks for something which has a bearing upon the relations between the management of the Canadian National Railways and one of their employees. It has not been the custom of this house to pass orders for returns of this character, in view of the fact that all matters of this kind are in the hands of the management.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I would ask the minister if an investigation took place in this particular case?

Mr. DUNNING: I have no personal knowledge of it. If my friend would drop his resolution, I will be glad to ascertain the facts and take the case up with him.

Mr. POULIOT: Very well.

Dropped.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

APPLICATION OF MONEYS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the provisions of the Railway Act in regard to the railway grade crossing fund be amended to provide for the application of the moneys by the board towards the cost of actual construction work in respect of crossings at rail level in existence on the first day of April, 1909, and in respect of existing crossings constructed after that date where in any case an agreement, approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners, has been entered into between the railway company and a municipal or other corporation or person by which the municipal or other corporation or person agrees to bear a portion of the cost of the construction; and the total amount applied out of the fund in respect of any one crossing, where the cost of construction does not exceed $100,000 shall not exceed 40 per cent of such cost; and where the cost of construction exceeds $100,000 shall not exceed 40 per cent of such cost with a maximum of $100,000.

The grants or the unexpended portions thereof made under the statutes of 1909, c. 32, 1914, c. 50, 1919, c. 30, of $200,000 each year for twenty consecutive years from the first day of April, 1909, may be expended to aid construction work for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of crossings in existence on the first day of April, 1909, and in respect of existing crossings constructed after that date where agreements have been entered into as aforesaid.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): In connection with the report of the superintendent of penitentiaries, I would direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that on page 15 a strong recommendation is made that prisoners be given employment in order that they may support their families, who are often in great want, and I ask if the government are giving serious consideration to this recommendation.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The question is under consideration, and I assure my hon. friend that it is receiving serious consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN WINNIPEG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Last Friday in the city of Winnipeg some 1,500 unemployed persons, including a large number of recent immigrants, went to the provincial government buildings asking for help because they were destitute. I understand that a telegram was sent to the federal government asking that some action be taken in this connection, and I would ask what action is being taken by the government. It seems very strange to me that immigrants should be brought in when this state of affairs exists.

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I had some private information from Winnipeg to the effect that there was a tendency on the part of labour to concentrate in that city this spring because of the publicity which has been given to various developments likely to take place during this summer in Winnipeg and in the country to the north of that city. I had a wire in regard to the delegation referred to by my hon. friend, and immediately I wired the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg for information. I have his reply here, which I will read to the house:

Your wire re unemployed. Plenty of work available, in fact not enough hands to fill applications. Men marching streets of Winnipeg mostly local people who will not go to farm work. No new arrivals amongst them. Possibly a few of last year's arrivals who refuse farm work have joined the crowd. Will report later.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask whether the request of the provincial government will be complied with, namely, that the immigration hall at Winnipeg be opened for the registration of immigrants out of work? That seems reasonable.

Mr. FORKE: That is a matter that will require some consideration. On first thought I do not think it would be practicable to undertake any such thing; however, in the meantime I will give no definite answer.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then do I understand that no action is to be taken in this matter, affecting as it does 1,500 people, especially in view of the fact that the provincial government are asking that something be done immediately? If that be the case, Mr. Speaker, I give notice of a motion to adjourn the house to discuss the matter. It is highly undesirable that there should be nothing but absolute silence in the face of a situation of that character.

QUEBEC, SAGUENAY, CHIBOUGAMOU RAILWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) whether or not the government has made any commitments with respect to the Quebec, Saguenay & Chibougamou railway. I observe that in one of the leading financial journals it is stated that work has already begun on construction, that satisfactory financial arrangements have been completed; that the Canadian National has supervision over construction of the line and has a satisfactory operating agreement with that railway. It is also stated that Sir Henry Thornton is to be vice-president of the new road. I have followed the legislation as closely as possible this session and I have seen no indication that any bill with reference to the matter is to be introduced. I myself have no knowledge of it; possibly the minister can give the house some information.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): The Dominion government has no financial relationship whatever with the Quebec, Saguenay & Chibougamou railway. My knowledge of that railway company is that it is a provincially incorporated company; it is not incorporated by federal charter. It is intended, I believe, to connect at a point which is at present served by the Canadian National, which would probably involve a traffic agreement. But there is no financial commitment; neither the government nor the Canadian National is in any way guaranteeing the securities of or is in any sense financially responsible for the Quebec, Saguenay & Chibougamou railway.

With respect to the report my hon. friend refers to—

Mr. BENNETT: Supervising the construction.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; I have seen the reports in that regard. I have no official knowledge as to the matter, but this much unofficial knowledge I have: that the Canadian National, for the protection of their own interests, will be entering into an agreement with this company with respect to traffic and also with respect to supervision of standards of construction. With reference to Sir Henry Thornton becoming the vice-president of the company, I have no information, but I shall be glad to make inquiry as to that.

RURAL POSTMASTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I wish to ask the Postmaster General (Mr Veniot) whether we may expect legislation this session dealing with an increase of commissions paid to rural postmasters. I think he indicated earlier in the session that such legislation would be introduced.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Should the government decide to grant the request, legislation wlil not be necessary. The matter is under consideration. When the supplementary estimates are being dealt with the decision will be given to the house, with whatever details may be necessary.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

INQUIRY RESPECTING CONTINUANCE OF AID TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I asked three questions the other day regarding technical education. The final question was:

Does the government contemplate the withdrawal of financial support now provided under the Technical Education Act of 1919?

To which the answer was:

The act does not terminate until March 31, 1929.

I know that the question is really a matter of policy, but in view of the fact that members are receiving from all over the country communications opposing any withdrawal of the aid to technical education, it occurred to me that if the government had not definitely decided to discontinue the assistance to technical education it would be of some satisfaction to those interested throughout the country if a statement to that effect were made.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): At the time of the conference between the members of the federal government and the provincial premiers and ministers the whole question of grants in aid of provincial undertakings was very fully discussed. It was the general view of the premiers and ministers of the provinces that they would like to receive in the form of a direct subsidy anything to which they were entitled in the way of aid from the federal treasury. They took the view that a grant from the federal government carrying with it an obligation on the part of the provincial governments to undertake part of the work was frequently embarrassing, and that on the whole it was not good policy that grants should be made conditional by the federal government. I must say that the representations of the provinces in that particular were pretty generally assented to; it was I believe the general consensus of view that the provinces should deal wholly with these matters, which come primarily within their jurisdiction, and that if the federal treasury were to assist them in any way the assistance should be by way of subsidy grant, thus allowing the provinces to dispose of the funds as they deem best.

With regard to the Technical Education Act, as my hon. friend knows, the intention as expressed at the time the act was introduced was to make from the federal treasury a contribution only over a period of years, primarily with the object of helping the provinces to inaugurate a system of technical education, and secondarily to insure in whatever they might undertake some degree of symmetry and uniformity among the provinces themselves. But it was never contemplated that the federal treasury should continue indefinitely to contribute to technical education. At the recent conference there was considerable discussion on the question of scientific and industrial research which, as my hon. friend knows, is closely allied to that of technical education, and in this connection it was felt that the establishment of scientific research laboratories should be undertaken by the federal government. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) has already intimated to this house that the government has decided to ask parliament to make a substantial grant towards establishing in the capital laboratories for scientific and industrial research, to serve the needs of the entire Dominion. We feel that if we undertake this obligation and establish scientific and industrial research laboratories on the scale which is intended—and the decision was reached after discussion with the provinces themselves—we are going as far as we should be expected to go in dealing in a combined way with scientific research and technical education.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The aid given under the Technical Education Act does not expire until 1929. It was two or three years ago that the first notification was sent to the provinces that on the expiry of the present act its provisions would not be renewed, and the provinces have had ample opportunity, and still have ample opportunity, to make provision themselves for satisfactorily carrying on the work which has been undertaken. We may consider continuing assistance, for a period of time to correspond with that which the act was originally intended to serve, to provinces that have not taken full advantage of the act, but those that have been receiving aid for the full period of time under the provisions of this act will at the expiration of the act be expected to carry on the work for which this assistance was given them in order to enable them to make a beginning in a satisfactory way.

Mr. MANION: May I say just another word? I appreciate the statement of the Prime Minister, but would it be of any use under the circumstances for those interested to make representations to the government to reconsider the question, or to keep it open, since they have a year to deal with the matter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it might as well be understood first as last that the matter is one of government policy. It is only part of the broader policy of seeking to have the provinces continue to deal with matters coming primarily within their own jurisdiction, a practice which came to be subject to some considerable variation only during the war period. At that time there were placed upon the federal treasury a number of obligations which had theretofore been provincial obligations. We feel it is going to be better for all concerned to have the Dominion parliament take care of those matters which are assigned to it under the British North America Act and have the provinces do the same with respect to theirs.

ILLICIT LIQUOR TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Miss AGNES MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Has the attention of the government been called to a report in the Simcoe Reformer of April 12 to the effect that international rum runners are prepared to stage a bitter fight and have had a new bullet-proof speed boat built with modern armament? It is the only one of its kind, but five are ready to leave Port Dover, and the United States officials are proclaiming their intention to meet these boats with armed boats carrying machine guns stationed at two-mile intervals along the shores of the United States. If the government has any knowledge of this, what do they propose doing to prevent unfriendly relations developing out of the situation?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I also saw in the newspapers the report as read by my hon. friend, but I took from it that if any such action is proposed, it is proposed by United States people, not by Canadian citizens. I see in that no effort to violate Canadian law.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): In the event of the boats just referred to being built in Canada, would the minister think that Canada was not involved in the matter?

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 189, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Application of certain sections of part IX extended to Nova Scotia.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is a very simple bill. Part IX of the Prisons and Reformatories Act, section 148 states:

This part applies only to the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

This is a mistake, because sections 155 to 160 inclusive, which are part of Part IX, apply specifically to the interprovincial home for young women at Cloverdale in New Brunswick and apply to Nova Scotia as well as Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. This bill is for the purpose of correcting what is an obvious error in section 148.

Mr. BENNETT: Was this not in the statute before and in the revision, dropped out?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Apparently section 148 was not amended in order to make it consonant with sections 155 and following.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

[Miss Macphail.]

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 190, to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Constitution of court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This clause is made necessary on account of the fact that there are now two judges of the exchequer court, the president and a puisne judge. It is to make it clear that when the words "judge of the exchequer court" are used in any statute, they apply equally to one or other of the two judges.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Official referees.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the Minister of Justice must agree with me that it is very odd that the section should have been left in any revision of the statutes, after all the official arbitrators were dead, and especially in the new statutes that came into force on the first of February of this year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is queer that this particular section should have been retained in the statute when the men to whom it applies were dead long ago.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Jurisdiction in cases of patents, copyright and trade marks.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to give the exchequer court jurisdiction in passing-off actions as well as statutory actions for infringements of the Trade Marks and Designs Act. Those actions are common law actions while an infringement action is under a statute. The exchequer court has ruled that under the act as it stands, it has no jurisdiction in common law and has to apply the statute strictly and rigidly. Of course in relations between the crown and the subject when the crown is plaintiff or petitioner, it is specifically stated that the court has jurisdiction at common law or in equity, but in relations between subject and subject the court has no such jurisdiction. This is to give the exchequer court the same jurisdiction as the other courts have in the matter.

Mr. CAHAN: Does the term "common law" apply to the province of Quebec or exclusively to the English common law?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think on trade marks and patents, it would apply to the province of Quebec as well.

Mr. CAHAN: Apply the English common law?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I apprehend that this does not take away the jurisdiction of the provincial courts?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. BENNETT: That is perfectly clear?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Any doubt I had was that, because I recall actions with respect to violations of patents and seeking indemnities being brought in the provincial courts, and I cannot think that this would take away the jurisdiction which must be concurrent with the exchequer court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Exactly.

Mr. CAHAN: Inasmuch as two jurisdictions are created, one the exchequer court jurisdiction, and the other the jurisdiction of the superior court of the province of Quebec—

Mr. LAPOINTE: The high courts have already jurisdiction. Perhaps the point raised by my hon. friend as to the province of Quebec may be well taken. I cannot tell my hon. friend if, under the law as it is, actions at common law with regard to "passing-off" would apply to the province of Quebec.

Mr. CAHAN: At least it does not take away any jurisdiction which the courts of Quebec have at the present time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all. It is merely to give to the exchequer court something additional.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Practice and procedure, how regulated.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not quite consistent with the attitude generally taken by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, to make the practice of the high court of England as it existed on January 1, 1928, applicable to our courts. Would it not be better to let our courts frame their own regulations and have them approved by the governor in Council? It says:

[Mr. Lapointe.]

The practice and procedure in suits, actions and matters in the exchequer court, shall, so far as they are applicable, and unless it is otherwise provided for by this act, or by general rules made in pursuance of this act, be regulated by the practice and procedure in similar suits, actions and matters in His Majesty's High Court of Justice in England on the first day of January, 1928.

I must say I rather dislike that form of statute. That is only my personal view. We had the same thing in the Northwest Territories, as the minister will recall. I think it would be much better to permit the court to formulate its own rules, regulations and practice, but it might be well, having regard to the desirability of maintaining some uniformity in patent practice throughout the Empire, to say that in no case shall larger powers be conferred upon the judge or court than would be conferred upon them by the rules and regulations in force in England on the 1st day of January, 1928, rather than to have it as it now is.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As my hon. friend says, it is merely a question of date. The section already exists in our statute, and we are simply making it January 1, 1928, instead of 1907, because since that date there have been changes in the practice and procedure in England. My hon. friend suggests that it might be better if we had our own rules and regulations, but I would point out that this amendment is suggested by the judges of the exchequer court themselves, in order to make their practice more modern. Probably they will see to it that they have their own rules and regulations.

Mr. CAHAN: I am afraid they are not imbued with nationalist sentiment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is wrong. We are making this change because we want to do it. That is autonomy. We are not being forced to do it; we are doing it of our own free will.

Mr. BENNETT: The real effect is merely to say that the exchequer court practice shall be governed by the English practice as of the 1st day of January, 1928?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Exactly, instead of 1907.

Mr. BENNETT: The practice of 1907 is, of course, somewhat antiquated having regard to modern rules that have been made to meet the changed conditions of business, but it does occur to me that it would be easier and simpler to amend our own rules. There is no court in England that is exactly the counterpart of our exchequer court. The high court of justice is divided into the chancery division, the court of King's Bench, probate, admiralty and divorce, and the chancery division takes these patent cases, and the rules and regulations of the chancery division apply, except in cases otherwise expressly provided for, to all divisions, and would govern this practice. It all comes down to the courts determining whether or not a particular rule in England to meet conditions in England is applicable to conditions in Canada, which personally as a practitioner, now no longer actively engaged, I used to dislike very much, I think it much better to have our own rules sanctioned by our own court. We had the rules of the English court in the Northwest Territories in the early days, and we found it very inconvenient after a time, and passed our own rules and regulations.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—General rules and orders.

Mr. CAHAN: I would suggest to the minister that in paragraph (a) the words "practice and" be inserted before the word "procedure." I think practice differs in some respect from procedure, and I think the whole matter of practice and procedure should be subject to the general rules made by the judges in the court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend suggests using the words used in the previous section. Personally I do not see any strong objection, except that we are here simply using the language which is already in the statute, the only amendment being to say "judges" instead of "judge". We are not changing any other part of the section.

Mr. CAHAN: Inasmuch as we are withdrawing the exchequer court so far as possible from the practice and procedure which prevails in His Majesty's high court of justice in England, I think it would be wise to use the words "practice and procedure".

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have no objection, and I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the words "practice and procedure" are the words in general use. The word practice was used by some of the English judges because a practice had grown up that was not governed by their rules and practice, and so they say "practice and procedure" universally in the English rules.

FERTILIZER ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 72, to amend the Fertilizer Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Information to be set forth on brand, etc.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, as I explained to the committee on a previous occasion with respect of some other bills introduced by the Minister of Agriculture, I have grave doubts as to their constitutionality. For instance, this bill prohibits sale and possession, and unless it can be said that these powers are ancillary to the general powers over agriculture given to this parliament by the British North America Act, I think the bill would share the fate of the government grading act, in some sections at any rate. I suppose, as the minister said on a former occasion, it might be all right to pass it;—

Mr. CHAPLIN: Take a shot at it.

Mr. BENNETT: That it might be all right to take a shot at it; but I suggest to him that the "shot" might come from another quarter.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Chairman, I do think the house should hesitate to pass bills of this character where there is grave doubt as to their being within the legislative competence of this parliament. We are really passing a criminal statute, and it places upon those who are conducting a perfectly legitimate business the burden of carrying to the highest courts of the land the issue of constitutionality, a burden that is almost intolerable. I regret very much that I was not in the house last week when another bill of this description was passed, for I believe it went far beyond our jurisdiction. If I were advising a client I should regard it as perfectly moral as well as legal to counsel him to defy such a statute from the very start. I see no reason why parliament itself should undertake an illegal act; it brings the whole of our statutory law into disrepute and forms an incentive to disregard law generally.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I think the same point occurred to some members of the committee; but as I understand this bill, it is simply amending an act, and if this measure is beyond the powers of parliament, I think the act itself is in precisely the same position, and I do not see that we can make things worse by passing the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think, Mr. Chairman, that on two other occasions I pointed out that several of these bills dealing with various branches of the Department of Agriculture have this question of constitutionality bound up with them. The original law has been on the statute books a good many years, and we have amended it once or twice, but its constitutionality has never been challenged. Consequently we proceed on the assumption that it is constitutional. The Live Stock Act was challenged on this ground. I immediately got in touch with all the provincial departments of agriculture and with one or two exceptions they passed concurring legislation. Should we meet a similar difficulty with regard to the fertilizer or any other act, then we shall take the same course, and if the provinces want the legislation they will pass the necessary concurring bills. I do not think it is advisable to cross the bridge until we come to it. We have not yet come to the bridge with respect to any of these pieces of legislation with the exception of the Live Stock Act.

Mr. CAHAN: The "bridge" to which the hon. minister refers is well nigh an intolerable burden for the ordinary agriculturist or merchant dealing in fertilizers. Why should you place the burden upon an individual of carrying litigation to the supreme court at a cost of thousands of dollars in order to ascertain whether the law is ultra vires of parliament or not? It seems to me that in respect of agriculture there is a good deal of joint and several jurisdiction, and that it would be wise in all these matters to bring the proposed legislation before the provincial governments and have them, if possible, pass concurrent legislation to dispose of all doubt. But I suggest that the minister, in introducing legislation of this kind, is not assuming a conciliatory attitude in respect of the provincial departments of agriculture, whose co-operation is necessary in order to give validity to his enactment.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That position is well taken, only I happen to have done what is suggested; and I am under promise to do it with respect to the Live Stock Act. The committee on agriculture reported to-day regarding that act. The matter was taken up with the provincial ministers before we even drafted that legislation, and all other similar acts have gone before the Justice department. We have received the best advice they could give and in many instances they have even helped to draft the legislation. Why, therefore, should I anticipate that the Justice department is wrong by going to the provincial departments and asking them to delegate to us powers which we may already have, and which, according to the Department of Justice, we have? It is only when these powers are challenged that we should consult the provinces. Suppose I went to the Minister of Agriculture of either Quebec or Ontario and said, "I should like you to pass concurring legislation with respect to this matter". That minister would immediately ask, "Has it been challenged?" If I said, no, he would then ask why I wanted to anticipate difficulty.

Mr. CAHAN: We are challenging it now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The provinces are jealous of their powers and do not like to delegate them to us unless they want legislation badly enough, and it is only when legislation of this kind is challenged that it becomes necessary to have the powers delegated to us. I have found them agreeable.

ROOT VEGETABLES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee on bill No. 51, to regulate the sale and inspection of root vegetables.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This bill was amended in the committee, and I do not find on my files a copy of the printed amendment. Unless that is available we cannot discuss the matter intelligently.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have not a copy of the amendment myself; I did not expect that we should take it up so soon. There ought to be some understanding in regard to the reprinting of these bills wherever they are substantially changed, and the leaders in the house, as well as the member in charge of the bill, should be supplied with copies.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My recollection is that in committee this bill was materially changed. There were several amendments, one of which was particularly important. We should have a copy of the reprint before proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN: There are no lengthy amendments and I will undertake to read each amended clause fully, as we come to it.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Vegetables sold, etc., must comply with this act and regulations.

Mr. BENNETT: What I said in connection with the other bill, with respect to the constitutional right of parliament to enact legislation of this character, I now repeat. I do not think we should content ourselves with merely expressing our views privately, but we should publicly point out that there is a grave doubt regarding the constitutional power of this parliament to pass the bill in its present form. Such a statement is necesary in order that it might not be said that there was no one in parliament who apprehended the difficulties in connection with prosecutions that might be brought under such legislation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This bill also was submitted to the Justice department, and while there may be some constitutional doubt, as my hon. friend has said, the legislation has never been challenged.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 3 is entirely new.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why should we not continue the legislation until it is challenged? We have had the best advice from the department, not only under the present but under preceding governments, indicating that we are on sound lines.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 3, I say, is entirely new, and it prohibits the sale of vegetables by any person except under special conditions. This I consider an interference with the exclusive powers of the provincial legislatures.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As a rule there are exemptions under all these bills.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the minister explain this bill? It seems to me to impose upon the ordinary agriculturist such intolerable conditions that it would be almost impossible for anyone to carry on the business of diversified farming as it is engaged in in the older provinces. You are making almost every farmer a criminal at the start if he carries on his business in the ordinary way to which he has been accustomed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There were on the committee a number of practical farmers who did not seem to be alarmed, especially in view of the exemptions provided in section 21. I was not in the committee at the time, but the suggestion was made, I am informed, that we might provide further exemptions if we found any hardship existing such as my hon. friend fears. Very often when you make an exemption people take advantage of it, so we have taken power to remove some of the exemptions, and if we find in practice that more are desirable we can increase the number. The reason we have extended our power in this respect is that these vegetables change from year to year, just as the commercial grades of western wheat change. In the west we have what is called the western grain standards board, which is given authority to specify grades from year to year according the peculiarities of the grain in that particular year. We find that this works very satisfactorily, and since vegetables also vary we have given the government power to establish grades on the advice of an advisory board according to the peculiarities of the vegetables for the particular year. More than half the grain in the west is dealt with in that way, and it is found to be quite workable. There are certain exemptions here, with which we can deal when we reach them. I do not think this is an occasion for alarm, although looking at this act superficially it does seem arbitrary. However, it is hedged about with enough provisoes that no one will get hurt, so far as I can see.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to tell us who requested all these regulations?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We found that when we had a case in court the Department of Justice would invariably show us where the law was weak. This act has not been before the house for five or six years, and the evasions of the law have accumulated during that time. We have been shown how to stop these evasions, and we are doing so by these new sections.

Mr McGIBBON: I can assure the minister that this will not be a way to avoid trouble for his government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: As an example let us consider section 4. Under this section potatoes, onions, turnips, artichokes, beets, carrots and parsnips must be sold by weight. We all know that in markets all over this country, and especially in the older provinces, during one season of the year these articles are all sold in bunches, and later when the roots have matured they are sold by measurement and not by weight. These vegetables are never sold by weight; they are sold by the basket, by the peck or by the bushel, but now that is to be changed. I am afraid we will have our standards of weights changed one of these days, if we are not careful; we may find ourselves using the metric system without knowing it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend had taken the time to read the act through he would have found the exemptions under section 21.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are not enough exemptions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We can open it as wide as a barn door if we consider it necessary. My hon. friend should give the committee on agriculture some credit for knowing what they are doing; we thought this was a pretty good bill. There is a constitutional exception which may be taken to it, but this has been in practice from time immemorial.

Mr. BENNETT: These sections are new.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why should we expect that someone is going to gobble us up in this respect?

Mr. CAHAN: Why should you pass such a law which will include every market in the city of Montreal? If market gardeners carry on their business in their usual way, under this law our gaols will be filled with these men.

Mr. BENNETT: Or we will make a joke of the law.

Mr. CAHAN: That is so. The only exceptions made under section 21 deal with new potatoes, seed potatoes, green onions and pickled onions. We who live in apartments are accustomed to go to the market, either personally or by sending someone from the house, to purchase fresh vegetables beginning early in June. The persons who sell those fresh vegetables to us cannot carry on their ordinary business without being subject to these penalties for the commission of criminal offences. If the minister undertakes to enforce that law in the city of Montreal we will have a small revolution on our hands.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, well—

Mr. CAHAN: The minister may say, "Oh well", but why should he introduce a measure of this vexatious character which serves no useful end at all? If he is dealing with the export trade of the country and wishes certain grading with respect to that trade, we are prepared to take such a measure into most favourable consideration, but when you say that a person who has a little country place cannot sell a bushel of beets or turnips to his neighbour without weighing them, unless he commits a criminal offence, you are proposing ridiculous and preposterous legislation which this house should not favourably consider. The fact is that under the grading system proposed it will be absolutely impossible for the ordinary city market gardener to carry on business.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I admit that that is quite a natural position to be taken by one who has not studied the question; the whole thing looks ridiculous. I will admit that freely, but this law has been applied to potatoes and onions for at least six years, and I have not heard of any Montreal market gardeners being gaoled because of it. We are now extending the principle to other vegetables; that is all we propose to do.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has the law been enforced during that time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course. Some of these market gardeners have been fined, but I do not remember that any of them have gone to gaol, and I have seen no deputations protesting against the law.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wish to enter my protest against this legislation also.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To which section is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am referring to sections 3 and 4, and to section 21; perhaps as I go on I may take in a few more. The minister says there are certain provisoes under section 21 which remove from the bill its ridiculous character; he admits that it is ridiculous up to the last section, but states that section 21 removes the ridiculous features. That is one way to legislate. Let us look at that section for a moment, in conjunction with sections 3 and 4. Section 4 provides that potatoes, onions and other vegetables must be sold by weight, and if this is not done the market gardeners are liable to a fine or imprisonment. If a man wants to sell old potatoes they must be sold by weight, but if he is selling new potatoes he can sell them by the dozen or in any other way he may desire, because there is a proviso which protects potatoes coming on the market between July 1 and September 30. Suppose a man has seed potatoes for sale; if he can show that they are certified seed potatoes he may sell them, I suppose, in bulk or by measure, by the dozen or any way he likes.

Mr. DUNNING: By the bunch.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Or by the bunch. Why the exception in this particular case as compared with old potatoes? As the hon. member (Mr. Cahan) has pointed out, the market gardeners who come into nearly all our cities and towns are accustomed to selling their produce by the dozen or by the bunch; why should they not be allowed to do that? If a man has a cretain quantity of potatoes in bags why should he not be free to enter into a bargain with a buyer who wishes to take them as they are; why must he have them weighed? It seems to me the minister is assuming in this legislation that the people who go to market to buy potatoes, onions, beets and that sort of thing have not brains enough to protect themselves in making bargains with the farmers. All this restrictive legislation is most inconvenient to the farmer. The minister may say that the gaols are not full of farmers who have violated this act, but I venture to say that the government has made no attempt to enforce this part of it which the minister says has been operative for the last six years, otherwise the gaols would be full, because the people simply cannot conform to an act of this kind. The minister has not told us yet why this provision is necessary; at least if he has I have not heard it. Why does he propose to compel everybody to sell everything by weight? If it were a matter of export then I could understand the weight regulation, but I cannot understand applying such a provision to a little deal between two persons in a market town. Give them credit for a little common sense; do not hedge their operations about with restrictions which make them liable to fine or imprisonment. Will the minister tell us whence came the demand for this legislation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We had these questions all thoroughly discussed five years ago, but I have no objection to going all over them again. I judge from my hon. friend's remarks that he disapproves of selling by weight. Why is selling by weight necessary? Because we have no standardized bag in this country that I know of in connection with the sale of potatoes or any other vegetables. In some parts of Canada a bag of potatoes means 100 pounds, in others it is 90, 80, or even less. If I order so many bags of potatoes how am I to know what I am getting unless I know how much the bag contains? We have at least four different sizes of potato bags, and we are trying to get down to our recognized standard of weights.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): A man is coming to market with a load of potatoes. He finds when he comes to make up his load that he is short of what you call standard bags. He has some old sacks and things of that kind, so he fills them up with his potatoes and takes them into the market. Some of the sacks may contain two bushels, some two and a half bushels. Now, if I come along and want to buy those potatoes, and if I am willing to bulk the lot, using my own judgment as to how many potatoes are there, why should I not be permitted to do so? In any case, if I have any doubt about it I always have the right to demand that they be weighed, and if he is anxious to sell he is going to conform to my wishes and let them be weighed. Why tell him, therefore, that he must sell only by weight? An inspector, nosing around to find some justification for his job, sees me enter into that bargain with this farmer. I am satisfied, the farmer is satisfied, but the inspector reports that the farmer sold these potatoes without having weighed them, and he is liable to fine and imprisonment. That is the kind of legislation the government is asking this house to put through. I repeat that it is not only unnecessary, it is ridiculous; and the ridiculous feature of it is not eliminated by section 21.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, there is nothing in the law to prevent a farmer from taking his potatoes to market in two-bushel bags, three-bushel or four-bushel bags, so long as he marks the number of pounds on the bag. We want to encourage selling by weight, which is the only sure way by which the customer may know what he is getting. I cannot imagine that a buyer would take a whole lot of potatoes, say, for $10; that is a hypothetical case—I do not think it would ever actually occur, because a buyer would want to know how many bushels there were in that lot. However, there is nothing in the act that I know of to prevent him from doing that. If it is a practice which may develop —farmers bringing in a load of potatoes and buyers taking them without knowing the size or weight of the load—well then, we will have to make an exemption to permit farmers to do that if they want to. I cannot imagine, however, that they will want to do it. So far as the bag is concerned, one reads the market reports in the newspapers and sees that potatoes were sold at so much a bag, but the size of the bag is seldom given and nobody knows what the exact quantity is. That is why I think weight is the only safe standard.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Everybody knows the weight of a bag of potatoes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, it runs from 70 pounds to 100—many of them more.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): There is a bushel and a half in a bag, isn't there?

Mr. CAHAN: Section 21, which in the opinion of the minister saves the whole act, sets out that the provisions of the act shall not apply to what are commonly termed "green onions" or other vegetables with top leaves attached. Now if the ordinary market gardener who comes to the village where I am staying for part of the summer sells me carrots with the green leaves attached he is not committing a criminal offence, but if he sells me carrots which have no green leaves on them he is liable to fine and imprisonment unless he carries about with him a scale and weighs them, which is not the ordinary practice of the market gardener. So it would be with parsnips. I see the market gardener going through the country village with his cart, and I wish to buy a peck of parsnips. He may sell me a peck of parsnips if they have the leaves attached, as is very often the case, but if they have not the leaves attached he is liable to fine and imprisonment if he does not comply with this act. It seems ridiculous to make a provision so detailed apply to the market gardener. I am not looking for a political issue on the island of Montreal, but I venture to say that if the government take the responsibility of enacting these provisions into law I can raise a hue and cry throughout the island of Montreal. It would be one of the best political issues I could possibly raise—going to each market gardener throughout that island and telling him how this ridiculous legislation is made to apply to his special business.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend is apparently not familiar with the method of marketing these vegetables. For instance, there is only one way to sell green onions and that is with their tops on. They are little green onions pulled when the onions are immature, tied in bunches and sold at so much a package. I do not know whether that is the way they are sold in Ottawa or not, but that is the authorized practice. When the spring onions mature and the tops come off in the maturing, they go into storage and later they are sold on the market by weight.

Mr. CAHAN: But the carrot leaves do not come off?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They do not come off when the carrots are pulled up first. When they are young carrots, they are sold in the same way as green onions.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. CAHAN: You have not exempted green carrots.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Anything that is green is sold with the tops on.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Do pickling onions go to market with the tops on?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What are commonly known as pickling onions, silver-skin onions, are exempted.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Why favour them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because there is a small, special variety for pickling onions.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): They can sell them by the dozen. They will not have any green tops on them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend not want us to exempt them? Because if he does not, we do not need to. If we find later on that the exemption is being abused, we can remove it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Am I to understand from that that the minister will accept my suggestion in regard to other clauses of the bill? If so, I feel highly honoured and I will make several suggestions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is his suggestion? Is it with regard to what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am suggesting that the minister explain why he puts pickling onions in the exempted class so that they need not be sold by weight, while other onions have to be sold by weight. Why should pickling onions not be sold by weight?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As my hon. friend knows, if you put larger onions into a small quart measure you could not get a true weight of them by measure. I mean to say a measure full of big onions would not weigh as much as if it were full of small ones. In regard to these things used regularly by the household, it is permissible to sell small onions by measure just as it is permissible to sell young green onions with the tops on and without having to weigh them. We can have these small onions sold by weight if my hon. friend wants it, but we want to try this out.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: When this bill was before the agriculture committee we were led to believe that in certain portions of the Dominion, more particularly the maritimes, and some of the eastern provinces, where they grew considerable quantities of potatoes, they desired this legislation. But the view that was expressed in the committee by a number of members was that clause 3, which we are now considering, was altogether too drastic and far-reaching to suit conditions in many parts of Canada. It is true that in the committee the minister proposed an additional amendment to section 21 by which he might take care of a situation that was explained to him, but that amendment was very vague. It is true that it left in the hands of the minister power to meet a situation that might arise, but nothing definite was done to assure the committee that that situation would be met. The situation will arise because clause 3 reads:

No person shall sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale potatoes—

And then further on:

—unless such vegetables comply with all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder.

In our western country there are very few farmers who have not a few bushels of potatoes, twenty-five or fifty bushels, more or less, to dispose of in the spring of the year. They usually take them in to their local retail merchant and dispose of them there, or they may sell them to a neighbouring farmer. Under this legislation they would not dare to have such potatoes for sale unless they complied with all the provisions of this legislation. Just how far-reaching those provisions are going to be, remains to be seen, but some of them are outlined in clause 15 which states:

The governor in council may make regulations.

One of these is for the establishment of grades and another prescribes standard containers, and so on. Every farmer who has a few bushels of potatoes to sell must comply with all these regulations and everything that is laid down by the governor in council. If he does not comply with them, under clause 16 he is liable for the first offence to a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars, for the second offence to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, and for the third offence to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, and if he does not come through with the fine he is liable to a month's rest in gaol. I claim that this is altogether too drastic to apply in general to the whole of Canada. It may suit those districts where potatoes are grown in large quantities and where it would be worth while for the grower to comply with all these regulations, but it certainly is too drastic legislation to apply at least to that portion of the country in which I have the privilege of residing.

Mr. BENNETT: I would have the minister know that clause 3 is a new clause and not the reproduction of an old section. In addition to that he says that the unit of weight shall be a pound. The Weights and Measures Act, chapter 212, of the revised statutes of Canada, provides:

The unit or standard measure of capacity, from which all other measures of capacity, as well for liquids as for dry goods, shall be derived, shall be the gallon containing ten Dominion standard pounds weight of distilled water weighed in air against brass weights with the water and the air at the temperature of sixty-two degrees of Fahrenheit's thermometer, and with the barometer at thirty inches.

2. The quart shall be one-fourth part of the gallon.

3. The pint shall be one-eighth part of the gallon.

4. Two gallons shall be a peck.

5. Eight gallons shall be a bushel.

That is the standard established by the Weights and Measures Act, but not only does the minister change the Weights and Measures Act, but clause 3 is a new clause despite what the minister has said three times in the committee. Clause 3 is not a reproduction of an old section. If the committee will turn to clause 12, it will find there the most serious clause of all. It reads:

Any inspector may detain for the time necessary to complete his inspection any shipment of vegetables in respect of which he has reasonable grounds for believing there is a violation of the act; such vegetables shall at all times be at the risk and charges of the owner thereof; and any inspector detaining vegetables shall give the owner, where ascertained, notice by prepaid telegram or letter that such vegetables are being detained in storage or otherwise, as the case may be.

I submit to the minister that he cannot hope that small market gardeners who have their vegetables gathered up by train, under the co-operative system in some cases, and brought into town, can comply with these regulations. If anybody is found in possession of one of these vegetables under clause 3, he is liable, and under clause 12 the inspector may take them and detain them until they are destroyed. He sends a telegram to the farmer who may be ten or twelve miles out in the country to tell him what he has done. Then the minister provides that the unit shall be, according to clause 4:

The standard pound avoirdupois shall be the unit of weight used.

We are now substituting a unit of weight, whereas heretofore under the Weights and Measures Act, chapter 212 of the revised statutes, the bushel was used. Now that measure as defined by the statute is no longer to be used with respect to dry goods and it becomes an offence to sell by what, under the provisions of the statute, was heretofore the standard unit. Surely the minister does not mean that a small market gardener bringing his vegetables into town for sale is to be made a criminal by the law of parliament. It is an interference with the rights of the provinces under section 92 of the British North America Act. This parliament has the right to legislate with respect to exports, grading and things of that kind, and so far as that is concerned, the bill would be all right, but apart from all that, section 3 makes an entirely new offence, and section 12 gives one of the nine hundred inspectors which this Dominion is paying the right to seize these vegetables and deal with the offenders in the manner indicated by my hon. friend from Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael). Surely my hon. friend the minister does not intend to deal with the matter in this way, and to ask this parliament to pass this form of legislation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend would take the bill section by section—

Mr. BENNETT: I am.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course, it is necessary to refer to section 21 to know what the exemptions are, but if we are to start in the middle as well as at both ends, the matter will get tangled up in the minds of hon. gentlemen who have not studied this question. I would rather not deal with the question my hon. friend raises until we come to that particular section. I might say, however, that there is nothing in the world to hinder people from selling by the gallon, so long as there are seven and one-half pounds to the gallon, and as a matter of fact, they are selling by the gallon. So long as the weight is in the gallon, that is all right.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Would the minister say that the Prime Minister would have to have a special order in council passed to enable him to buy vegetables and fruits from his neighbours to keep his house going at Kingsmere?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I expect he will have to comply with the law the same as other people.

Mr. STEVENS: We are on section 3, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: I would like to emphasize what has already been very well said by the hon. member for Kindersley regarding section 3, and I think the colleagues of my hon. friend the minister ought to take serious note of this. Section 3 says:

> No person shall sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale potatoes, onions, turnips, artichokes, beets, carrots, parsnips or such other vegetables as may be named in this act or by the governor in council under the provisions of this act unless such vegetables comply with all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder.

I appeal to the Prime Minister for a moment. Here we have a section that says that a small farmer in any section of Canada—I will bring it right home to my own district in a moment—must be thoroughly versed in this act and in any regulations that may be made under this act by the governor in council. Some of us have had years of experience in this house, and yet I venture to say that there is not a member of this house to-day, be he agriculturist, farmer, or following any other occupation, who has the faintest idea, or anything but the remotest idea, of the regulations now in existence under this act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We have all violated the act.

Mr. STEVENS: I venture to say that the regulations are to-day being violated, not maliciously, but simply because they are not known.

I turn now, if the minister will pardon me, to the explanatory note on section 15, which provides that proceedings to recover penalties for violation of any of the regulations passed under this act may be taken under Part XV of the criminal code. Let us be sensible and ask ourselves this question: Are we going to expose all the small farmers of this country, as well as the big producers of potatoes and vegetables, to prosecution under the criminal code if they fail to observe the intricate provisions of this act?

Let me analyse the section now, and apply it to a business that I know, that of the small farmer in British Columbia. We have there hundreds of farmers, who raise from five to ten acres of potatoes, and possibly have half an acre of onions, a few carrots and beets, and so on, and they sell them in the locality to a sawmill and small industries of that kind I have in mind a farm of about sixty acres, where they raise about ten acres of potatoes, a few hogs, some apples, and general farm produce, most of which is sold to a little village close beside the farm, where there is a sawmill and other very small industrial works. The employees buy this farmer's produce, and let me say to the minister that that is the finest customer a small farmer can have, the very best. In many instances these people, knowing what the various farmers in the neighbourhood produce, drive out to the farm in a Ford car or some other vehicle and buy a substantial portion of his produce. Now section 3 provides:

> No person shall sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale potatoes, onions, turnips, artichokes, beets, carrots, parsnips or such other vegetables as may be named in this act or by the governor in council under the provisions of this act unless such vegetables comply with all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder.

That is, these vegetables must be sorted, graded to size, weighed out in bags which must contain a certain amount, and all such stuff as that, and another section provides that the weight must be marked on the face of the container. Now in British Columbia these potatoes are put in gunny sacks; that is the jute sack, the usual standard sack. The sack is used for grain in the first place, and after it has been used once or twice for that purpose, it is sold second-hand to farmers such as I have mentioned, who buy it cheaply, and use it for sacking their potatoes, carrots, turnips and such like. These sacks when well filled and properly sewn will hold about one hundred pounds, and generally speaking these potatoes are sold by weight. If a carload is being sold, the potatoes are sacked, and the sacks are weighed on scales, and they try to put one hundred pounds in a sack, and the carload is sold by weight, and usually the transaction is very satisfactorily arranged between buyer and seller.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what we are aiming at. Mark the weight on the bag.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me continue my point for a moment. We have large growers, as well as these small farmers to whom I have referred. We have large growers in the Ashcroft district, around Ashcroft and Kamloops, who are raising potatoes by the hundreds of acres and who sell them by the carload, put up in sacks. They are sold to the wholesaler in the city by the carload, in sacks, and he puts them in his warehouse, and then sells them to the grocer in the city, in sacks, and the grocer dumps them in his cellar or puts them into his bins and sells them either by the sack, the half sack, or by the pound. Now, I submit that by this section you are imposing on the small producer an obligation that is absolutely beyond his capacity to perform. that is the point. I say it is beyond his capacity to observe this regulation.

As my hon. leader said a moment ago, if it is a question of the form in which potatoes shall be exported from this country, that is a different matter. It may be desirable to say that when potatoes are exported to the European market or some other foreign market, they shall be crated, graded, and so on. I am willing to say that that is open to reasonable discussion, but in that case they are sold not by the carload, not by the ton, but by the cargo. I appeal to the Prime Minister that this section 3 should not become a statute law of this country. I again draw attention to it. It says:

> No person shall sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale potatoes, onions, turnips, artichokes, beets, carrots, parsnips or such other vegetables as may be named in this act or by the governor in council under the provisions of this act unless such vegetables comply with all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder.

I say it is not fair for us to pass this legislation; it is not wise for us to do so, apart altogether from the constitutional point of view. It is not fair to lay this burden on the ordinary producer of this country. It is a burden that is absolutely beyond the capacity of the small producer, who is trying to make a living by raising small quantities of vegetables. The average small farmer in British Columbia gets his returns from potatoes, apples and pears, small fruits, such as strawberries, raspberries, loganberries and plums, honey, eggs and butter and milk. That is the most desirable type of farmer you could have for British Columbia. You cannot ask a man like that to be an expert on the intricacies of regulations governing every branch of his business; the poor fellow would be literally driven mad.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. member appeal for the removal of all sorts of regulations regarding grading of vegetables for the local market?

Mr. STEVENS: I would certainly argue for the minimizing to the lowest possible point of the regulations that interfere with the activities of this class of farmers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have power to do that under the act.

Mr. STEVENS: That is just the point. It seems to me that what the minister does is this, he starts in with the maximum weight of regulations and interference and then grades it down. I want to see our statutes imposing the minimum interference in business and trade. Section 14 reads:

> An inspection certificate signed by an inspector or any person charged with the enforcement of this act or regulations made thereunder, shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements contained therein.

In other words, the farmer must be at the whim of any inspector. I submit that we are putting altogether too much power in the hands of inspectors, and that we have too many inspectors. I know how anxious officials are to get everything under proper control. But we have too many of these inspectors coming along one after the other; we have vegetable inspectors, milk inspectors, cheese inspectors, butter inspectors—

An hon. MEMBER: And customs inspectors.

Mr. BENNETT: He has nine hundred in his department.

Mr. STEVENS: I appeal to the Prime Minister on this larger and broader question, that every inspection increases the cost of production of the article inspected. You cannot escape it, for it is an economic truth. It is obvious that someone must pay the cost. Every time you appoint an inspector at a thousand or two thousand dollars a year, give him a car and buy his gasoline, and all the rest of it, someone is paying for that expense. Who? You can apply it at any stage you like, but it must come on the cost of production somewhere.

Mr. CAHAN: And the cost of living generally.

Mr. STEVENS: Undoubtedly. This is a serious matter. This morning a young gentleman who has made a study of politico-economic questions intimated to me that one out of every five of the male adults of Canada is employed in some form of government position—federal, provincial, municipal. If that is true, and he assured me it was, then it shows the burden that is being placed upon the shoulders of the people, because you cannot call those officials producers. Indirectly they may classify themselves as such, but they are a part of the cost of administration. This is an overhead charge on everything that goes on in the country. So I say we ought to be very careful about increasing the cost of this class of business to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. NEILL: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the minister withdraw section 3, not because I think there is any harm in it, but because it does not mean anything. It is a superfluity. It is only a reiteration of the general law which says, you must comply with this act. Section 16 provides a penalty for those who violate any section of the act. You cannot get any other meaning out of section 3 than that, and if it is obnoxious to hon. members I suggest that it be withdrawn. I do not know why all this opposition is raised to section 4, because the principle has been in effect for several years at least.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It has not been enforced.

Mr. NEILL: No, they pass these drastic laws and often do not enforce them. What was the law?

> All potatoes, onions, artichokes, beets, carrots, parsnips and turnips offered for sale shall be sold by weight, and the standard pound avoirdupois shall be the unit of weight used.

So after all we are not doing anything worse than we did last time this act was revised, and I do not remember any objection raised to the section at that time. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) in regard to section 14, that it makes the certificate of the inspector superior to the law of evidence. I also agree with what he said as to section 12, that an inspector may practically ruin a small man against whom he has a grudge, by holding up his stuff while he deliberates upon it; which is quite unnecessary because the stuff is either right or wrong, and this is easily ascertained.

After all, the main principle of the act is that we should sell potatoes by the pound, and I am quite sure that that is acceptable to the average farmer in British Columbia. How else would he sell them? We put up our potatoes, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre knows, in 100-pound sacks, and the sale being by weight, fraud is prevented. If she buys by the sack, how is the housekeeper to know whether she is getting ninety pounds or a hundred pounds? I remember once trying to sell some potatoes to a storekeeper. I asked for a certain price in 100-pound bags, twenty to the ton. On my declining his offer of a lower price, he said, "I will give you so much more if you will put them up in 95-pound sacks, and then I can sell them for 100-pound sacks." I do not think there is any harm in carrying out this principle of selling by weight. We are doing it already.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I might point out that it is the practice of the draftsman of the Justice department whenever they make a change in a section to repeat the whole section in order to simplify matters. Previously the law applied only to potatoes and onions, and it worked out so admirably that we decided to make it apply to all vegetables.

Mr. STEVENS: Section 3 is entirely new.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Therefore the principle of this legislation has been in force for five years and has been found to be sound. There has never been any occasion for alarm or confusion in applying that principle.

Mr. STEVENS: Not the principle embodied in section 3.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same principle is involved. I think my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre enunciated a very sound principle, that when enacting such legislation it is well to start with the minimum of restrictions and regulations. That is exactly what we did five years ago. We started with a small specific number of vegetables which were recognized on almost every market. There was no doubt that those vegetables—potatoes and onions and so forth—should be sold by weight, and that was done. That having worked out satisfactorily we extended the principle to others. I cannot understand what the difficulty is about. I remember when we enacted the egg regulations we took the opposite attitude; that is to say, we made a very wide exemption in favour of poultrymen and farmers generally. These regulations did not apply to farmers marketing fifteen dozen or under in one day. This provision has worked out satisfactorily in a sense, but gradually it has come to be grossly abused. You may sell fifteen dozen as many times in one day as you like, and if only you are persistent enough you may defy the law. This exemption in the case of eggs was provided with the best intentions, but it has grown into a decided abuse. Nevertheless exemptions are necessary at the beginning, and that is one reason why we have taken the power either to reduce the exemptions, under section 21, or to increase them to meet the requirements as they arise, thus obviating the necessity of coming to parliament so frequently. That is the purpose, but there is no new principle involved.

Mr. NEILL: What new principle is involved in section 3 which is not covered by section 16?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are including a lot of new vegetables.

Mr. NEILL: Section 16 provides that every person who by himself or through the agency of another person violates any of the provisions of the act shall be liable. Is not that all-inclusive? What is there in section 3 which is not covered under that section?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that the Justice department, to make it perfectly airtight, advised this section.

Mr. STEVENS: Isn't that my point? You are providing the maximum to start with in order to make it airtight.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have been operating for five years under the minimum, and some people have been able to get past us in the courts.

Mr. CAHAN: How many thousand inspectors will the minister require under this act, and by whom will they be paid?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We shall have a few less than we ought to have, but if my hon. friend will look up the estimates of the department the year before this government came into power he will find that we are exceeding the number for the first time this year.

Mr. CAHAN: I am not interested in that; I desire to know how many inspectors there will be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If we are extravagant in the number of inspectors we have we must be very economical in our management, or the aggregate estimates would be larger than they are.

Mr. CAHAN: How many inspectors will be needed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know how many. Some of the inspectors perform duties under as many as five acts.

Mr. CAHAN: How many do you require in Montreal, for example?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When we are on the estimates I shall be delighted to give that information; I am not prepared to say offhand. My deputy informs me that in the city of Montreal we have three.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: A few minutes ago the minister made a statement which I think is entirely inaccurate. I do not suppose he meant it so, but he gave the house to understand that he initiated this legislation five years ago with two or three items, and that he is now increasing the number. Section 4 refers to potatoes, onions, turnips, artichokes, beets, carrots and parsnips. All of these are included in the legislation already in existence. On the opposite page of the bill, giving the corresponding section in the present law, these vegetables are all enumerated, and no vegetable has been added. The minister stated definitely, however, that he had increased the number of vegetables, and that was his reason for coming to parliament with this bill.

An hon. MEMBER: "Or such other vegetables as may be named by the governor in council".

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes; in other words, he is not changing the act. The minister is asking us to give the governor in council power to make any changes that may be thought necessary, and I object to that most decidedly. Later on I shall have something to say in that regard, because if orders in council are to be passed under this act it will only make it worse for the poor unfortunate farmer. It has been well pointed out that it would be impossible for the small farmer to keep this law. Certainly it will be very difficult indeed for him to know what the law is if orders in council are to be passed including other vegetables. The ordinary farmer in my county does not take the Canada Gazette, and even if the orders in council were published therein, I do not think he would know about them. I have looked over this bill rather carefully and it seems to be the new sections which the minister wants to get through. Every one of these new sections is objectionable, and I can see no argument whatever for section 3. As has been pointed out, there is no use in passing legislation which cannot possibly be complied with, and it is utterly impossible to imagine that the small farmers and dealers in this country could comply with section 3. So that the minister is beginning by making criminals out of these farmers right away. Other sections have been commented upon, and it seems to me that the minister wants to get more inspectors in his department, and that this is the main reason for his bringing his bill before us. Now, there is a feeling in the country—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why should I want more inspectors?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Section 10 gives the minister power to appoint an advisory board which may at his request prepare and recommend standards and grades, and so forth. Then he may appoint "such inspectors and other officers as are deemed necessary." This is a new section. There is a feeling in the country, I say, that the minister has too many inspectors already. He wishes to appoint them for everything in connection with agriculture. Why does he ask for this new section, 10?"

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have asked my hon. friends many times to name one or two or any number of inspectors that are unnecessary, and I shall be delighted to dispense with their services.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why does the minister want to have section 10 enacted empowering him to appoint more inspectors?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are already appointed; we want to give them the authority to act. They are already in the department.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the minister mean that he has already appointed inspectors without authority? Is that what he means?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This law has been tested on several occasions and proven to be weak, and we want to be sure that our inspectors have specific authority to operate under this act as well as under the others.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In other words, this act does not apply to vegetables other than those covered by the old act, but by passing this new act we will place many of our small dealers and farmers under a law which they cannot possibly understand. Power is given under section 10 to appoint an advisory board and such other officers as are deemed necessary, and under sections 12 and 14 the inspectors are given more and more power over these people. The smaller dealers in this country will be afraid to carry on their ordinary business as they have been carrying it on in the past. Apparently these are the sections which the minister desires most, because there are no vegetables mentioned other than those which are already included in the present act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would point out again what was freely discussed in the agricultural committee, that there might be some injustice to farmers selling in small lots. I have recognized that possibility, and I think I referred to it before the amendment was made in committee. It was my suggestion that we should have power to step in and make regulations exempting farmers from these provisions if we found any injustice being done. We do not think it advisable to make the exemptions too general because of the abuses which may arise. These sections were inserted to meet just such cases of farmers selling in small lots.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would that be done in individual cases?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, you could not do it in individual cases; it would have to apply to everyone, but it would be applied if a great many individual cases of injustice arose.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why not do it now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not want to anticipate trouble. We have given these wide exemptions in connection with the sale of eggs, and I am sure no one in British Columbia wants that exemption of 15 dozen freed from the regulations, as it is now. British Columbia poultry men never liked that regulation, so in this case we would rather have power to either reduce or increase the exemptions as may be indicated by the way the act works out from time to time. We do not anticipate any abuse, but if such does arise we will make a change.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How will this work out in the New Westminster market, for example? I understand the minister has been there and has seen the farmers bring in their goods, which they sell to the citizens of the town and district. In that market so far as I know there is very little selling by weight; vegetables are mostly sold in packages, in boxes, in sacks and so on. It seems to me there would be great consternation in New Westminster and other markets if this law were put into effect; it would be a great inconvenience to the farmers and to the purchasers, who are accustomed to buy their goods in boxes or parcels. More than that, it seems to me that the minister is badly twisted with regard to potatoes. As I read the proposed act, it will be lawful to sell new potatoes otherwise than by weight, but old potatoes must be sold by weight. That is directly opposite to the custom which now prevails at least in British Columbia, ordinary potatoes are sold in sacks or by the bushel, while new potatoes are always sold by weight. I doubt very much whether under section 21 new potatoes can be sold otherwise than by weight except when they are shipped, because the minister will notice that section 21 says:

(a) to new potatoes when shipped between the 1st day of July and the 30th day of September. . . . .

What about new potatoes which are sold on the market but which have not been shipped? How will this affect potatoes which are sold direct by the producer to the consumer? They are brought in to the market by the farmer, and unless you have some extraordinary interpretation of the word "shipped," I do not see that they can be sold except by weight.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has asked me how these regulations will apply to New Westminster and other small markets. Most of these regulations will apply just as they are being applied at present. These vegetables are sold now by weight, so there will be no great change there. With regard to subsection (a) of section 21, only one word is underlined, which shows that that subsection was in the act previously, and we managed to survive under it. I would ask the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), as a practical vegetable grower, coming from a district where this business is carried on extensively, if he would like to make these exemptions wider. I remember we discussed this in the committee and it was thought that if we exempted all farmers it would allow persons who were both traders and farmers to come under the exemptions, so it was thought better to assume the authority to widen these exemptions, and if injustices were caused we could meet the situation by the necessary changes. As a matter of fact, in the Seeds Act we have specifically exempted farmers dealing with one another, and we have done the same in connection with artificial fertilizer. We could make these exemptions so wide that all farmers would not come under the provisions of the act in their dealings with each other, but if we did that it was thought that men who were both dealers and traders as well as growers would be exempt from the provisions of this law, which would not be wise. We have taken the power to meet conditions as they arise, and since most of these troubles have not arisen during the last five years I do not think we should anticipate them and legislate for them in advance.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Under what section do you receive power to increase the exemptions?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the new subsection (f), which I do not believe is in the bill before my hon. friend. That gives us power to make regulations dealing with such special trade practices as the advisory board may specify, with the approval of the minister. If the advisory board find that there are abuses in the working out of the act they will make recommendations to the minister, who will have the necessary regulations changed to meet the situation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Of course that means legislation by the advisory board and not by parliament.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have an answer to that which I made before, if my hon. friend remembers. I do not want to be told later that two wrongs do not make a right, but for at least a quarter of a century we have had the western grain standards board to deal with the commercial grades of western grain. That board is appointed from time to time from the trade, the milling industry and the farmers, and they set the grades year by year; this year in particular the work of that board covered more than half the wheat produced in the entire west. So you may say that parliament is removed not once but several times from these individuals.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister does not claim that is at all analogous to this case?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, but it comes very near it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: So far as grain is concerned, the people who own it, who grow it and deal in it, are the ones that make the standard, but in this case it is to be another body which has no interest in the farmers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The personnel of the western grain standards board is recommended by the board of grain commissioners and appointed by the government.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so, but they are all men who are familiar with the trade.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think we may select men who do not know anything about it?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The men who are to determine these standards will be officials of the department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, we have other advisory boards and I cannot recall any instance in which members of the department have been put on them.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will this board be patterned after the tariff advisory board? If so, how are we going to get recommendations from it?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If a farmer in my county, for instance, who sells to his neighbours or goes into the market at the mill in the county town and sells vegetables as he has been in the habit of doing, what protection has he got if he sells in some other way than that prescribed in this bill? Is he not liable to criminal prosecution without any further question?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is he not liable to criminal prosecution if he sells his potatoes, carrots, turnips or anything else, in any other way than by weight?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He will have to comply with the weight requirement. But in order to avoid cluttering up these pieces of legislation with all kinds of provisions it is usual to provide for the making of regulations, and so long as they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the act these regulations will cover such detailed features of the working out of the act as my hon. friend refers to.

Mr. EVANS: I suggest to the minister that that word "person" in the first line of section 3 be changed to "dealer", otherwise I think the legislation is altogether superfluous and objectionable to most of the people of this country; it interferes with the free exchange of goods between the grower and the consumer. The minister's reference to grain is not to the point, because the board of standards know that all the grain has to pass a certain point and will be inspected by one set of inspectors. But these vegetables come in by the wagon load to certain towns or cities, and a man is liable at once to prosecution if these vegetables do not come up to the standards fixed by the standards board. It seems to me that the act will have the effect—perhaps not intentionally—of concentrating the trade in all these things into the hands of the big dealers or wholesalers or cold storage proprietors. If we make the change I have suggested I think it will meet with the approval of the house and of the whole country.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I wish to point out to the minister what is happening along the main highways in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Take for example my section of the country: hundreds of farmers have stands out in front of their farms on the highway on which they display for sale baskets of fruit and vegetables of all kinds. Under this law they must have scales there in order that everything may be weighed before it is sold. But those who buy these things know the value of them just as well as those who sell them do. The buyers are perfectly satisfied with the trade they make, yet the minister intervenes with a law of this kind which is absolutely illogical and against the business of this country as people want to carry it on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend were buying a thing wouldn't he want to know its weight?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): In regard to the application of this act, we have had it in force in the maritime provinces for some years in respect to the shipment of potatoes. I refer more particularly to the old act, which I now have under my hand. By this measure the existing act is changed to give the governor in council or the minister power to make the regulations that were formerly covered by statute. Now, the standard or grade of potatoes and onions were defined in chapter 181 of the revised statutes of Canada along certain lines which I need not go into. It was found in the operation of the act that it was advisable to have the power, as the minister explained at the beginning of the discussion, to vary the different grades according to the standards required by the crop production of different years. In order to do that it is necessary to give the minister, under advice from the advisory board, the power to make regulations regarding these matters. The details with respect to that will be found in section 15 of the present bill. I quote subsection (f):

To prescribe the time when any regulation shall come into operation, the particular kind or kinds of vegetables to which it shall apply, and the part or parts of Canada within which it shall be in force;

So that I think hon. members will readily see that there is no intention on the part of the department or of the minister to apply this act to the small dealings of neighbours among themselves, or between persons within the same community.

Mr. BENNETT: It says so, though.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): It gives general power, and the minister has explained that this section was drafted by the Justice department to make the act strong and to give the necessary power where it was decided by regulation to enforce it. Now I want to explain to the committee some of the benefits that have accrued from this act to our growers and to our dealers in the maritime provinces in regard to the shipment of potatoes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is export business.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): It is interprovincial trade.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): And also trade within the provinces themselves. So far as it has been applied it has not been compulsory except where requested by the shippers or growers. Many of our wholesale dealers two years ago asked that the act be put into force so that inspectors would be supplied by the department for the grading of carloads of potatoes when a request to that effect was made. That action was taken by the department a year ago last September and many inspectors were specially appointed for the enforcement of this act in Prince Edward Island. A per carload fee of $5 a car was placed upon inspection, and those who got the benefit of the inspection paid the cost of it. When the dealers buy potatoes from the farmers they buy Canada A stock, and if on inspection at the car door they prove to be below standard the farmer has to regrade his stock. These potatoes are sold to dealers in Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other of the large markets in central Canada, according to the grade, the greater proportion of them being sold as Canada A grade. When they arrive at destination the bill of lading is accompanied by a certificate signed by the inspector stating that he inspected those potatoes and that they are up to the grade specified in the certificate. If the man who buys the potatoes feels that they do not turn out right, he immediately telegraphs to the man he buys from, who arranges with the department to have an inspector sent to inspect the car at point of destination before it is unloaded. If the potatoes are found to come up to the grade specified in the certificate, then the man who sold the potatoes can collect his price for the shipment. If the potatoes were sold without the inspector's certificate and objection was taken at point of destination to the quality, the grower or seller, would have no recourse except to accept the word of the man who bought the potatoes. If the deal took place on a falling market, nine times out of ten the man who shipped the potatoes would lose very heavily on account of not being in a position to protect himself against any complaint that might be made regarding his shipment. The act has worked out very well in this regard and has given great benefit to our people in the maritime provinces. It can be seen from the market reports covering the last two years that the price of potatoes of Canada A grade from the maritimes has advanced. Inspected stock from the east sells at from ten to fifteen cents a bag more in the central markets of Canada than potatoes that come in without inspection from other points.

The request that has come forward from our people for changes in the grades has helped to bring about the changes in the act. The Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice can explain better than those of us who are engaged in the actual working out of the act, why certain clauses of the act are necessary, but in connection with changing the grades as previously defined in the statute, our people who are engaged in growing and shipping potatoes have asked that certain restrictions be put upon the number of small potatoes. I might read particularly from chapter 181, the old act. The definition of Canada A quality reads:

In this grade the diameter of potatoes of the round varieties shall not be less than one and seven-eighths inches, and of potatoes of the long variety one and three-fourths inches.

Mr. STEVENS: Where is that covered in this legislation?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): That will be covered in this legislation by regulation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How are the general public going to know?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): The reason our people request the change is this. They say that you can have a shipment conforming to the highest standard of merchantable or table stock potatoes, classed as Canada A, with the tags on, and still there need not be one potato in that shipment more than two inches in diameter. If a carload of potatoes went forward less than two inches but not less than one and seven-eighths inches in diameter they would be looked upon as a very poor grade of potatoes. Our growers and dealers, in order to protect themselves against unscrupulous people selling seconds instead of Canada A grade, are asking that not more than twenty per cent of the shipment should be under two and one-half inches.

Mr. STEVENS: Where will the hon. member find, in regard to the very point that he is now mentioning, safeguards for the grower in this legislation which is being substituted for the old act?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): First I might explain another change that is being asked for by our people, namely to establish a grade for turnips as well as for potatoes. A considerable business has been developed within the last two years with United States points for the shipment of turnips in the fall and winter seasons and our people have asked that a grade be established. As regards the question of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, he will find that by section 15 of the bill power is given to the governor in council to make regulations such as are necessary for the enforcement of the legislation and the standards of grades required for the different vegetables. This is to be done on the strength of the advice of the advisory board as outlined in clause 10. The matter is not altogether left to the minister and his department to handle by order in council. Before the minister acts, the question is submitted to the advisory board which, as is the case in connection with several other acts, represents the growers, the shippers, the purchasers, the consumers and the trade generally as affected by the particular vegetable to which the regulations may refer.

Mr. STEVENS: Where is that defined in the bill?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): Clause 10 refers to the advisory board.

Mr. STEVENS: But that does not describe the matter in the way the hon. gentleman puts it.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): My description may be taken from one or two of the other acts such as the Seeds Act or the Fertilizer Act, which the Agriculture department has had put through. The same advisory board is used in connection with this.

Mr. STEVENS: I have been interested in what the hon. member has said. His reference to large shipments of potatoes is very pertinent, but may I ask him this question: suppose that in his own fair province of Prince Edward Island a farmer in any of the small communities is not loading his potatoes into a car and shipping them off to the big markets, but is selling them locally; does my hon. friend think that farmer should be compelled to observe regulations such as would be applicable to the class of shipment to which he refers?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): If a farmer at one end of the province buys from a farmer in the other end, he does not go and look at the potatoes but he says: I want Canada A potatoes. Then the man who sells Canada A potatoes and tags them as such should be responsible for delivering what he sells. In that regard the act is a benefit and to that extent it is enforced.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman did not catch my question, which is after all largely the quarrel with this legislation as it is drafted. Let us leave out of account the man who ships from one end of the province to the other or to any point a long distance away. Let us take the case of the farmer—and there are tens of thousands of them in Canada—who sells his products in his little village or town to a sawmill or pulp mill close by, which by the way is his best customer. Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair to apply to such dealings the same regulations that he would apply to the larger transactions to which he has referred?

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): I do not see my hon. friend's point in asking whether it is fair. If a man wants to sell to his neighbour Canada A potatoes, his neighbour has a right to expect that he will deliver Canada A potatoes.

Mr. STEVENS: I agree, but that is not the point.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): To that extent the act is enforced.

Mr. STEVENS: Who is to determine when the act is to be enforced and when it is not to be enforced? Surely if we pass an act at all it ought to be enforced.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): The regulations will determine that. The objection may be raised that we are doing by regulation and order in council what should be done by legislation, but it has been found necessary to define grades by regulations rather than by the statute.

Mr. STEVENS: But the legislation, if we accept it, states:

No person—

That is, no farmer, no dealer, no grower.

—shall sell, offer, expose, or have in possession for sale potatoes . . . . unless such vegetables comply with all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens): It says, "all provisions of this act and regulations made thereunder." If my hon. friend follows that out, he will find that it is within the right and power of the minister and the department, upon the advice of the advisory board, to make reasonable regulations to protect both the seller and the buyer from dishonest and disreputable dealings in the trade, and it has had that effect, particularly in regard to potatoes, I do not see why it should not be extended to other vegetables where practicable.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has suggested that one of these sections could be dispensed with. I would like to have an opportunity of discussing the matter with the Justice department, to see what can be done without weakening the bill. We have had a full discussion, and I suggest that these two sections stand in the meantime, so that we may see what amendments can be made that will not sacrifice the intent of the bill. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni made a similar suggestion in regard to the Seed Grain Act; we brought down an amendment accordingly, and it went through immediately.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Might I suggest another matter that might be referred to the Justice department? In the act there are very clear definitions of "minister" "inspectors", "vegetables", "grade" and "container", but in section 3 there appears the word "person", and there is no definition of that word. It seems to me it ought to be made very clear whether the word applies to women as well as to men.

Mr. BENNETT: The Interpretation Act covers that. There is another difficulty that I would like to mention to the minister. This statute in terms repeals an act that came into force in Canada on the first of February last, being chapter 181 of the revised statutes of Canada. That statute defined in terms the grades of potatoes, onions, and so forth. The new statute does not define them in terms, but it creates an advisory board. It does not say how many there shall be on that board, and there is no indication as to how they shall be selected, or where they shall come from.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We can insert that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am pointing out what it means. It also provides that they may report to the minister, but it is the governor in council that passes the regulations. Now the whole question of grading, which heretofore in Canada was dealt with by the statute which is now to be repealed, is to be left to regulations about which the average man can know little, and his opportunities for getting knowledge of them will be less. He must depend largely upon the Canada Gazette, whereas heretofore he had chapter 181 of the revised statutes of Canada from which he could obtain all the information that he required with respect to potatoes, onions, and other vegetables. I go a step further, and this is a question which I would ask the minister to consider very carefully apart from what has been said by others. Section 15 says that the governor in council may make regulations:

That means different grades for different parts of Canada, depending upon the political pressure that may be put on the minister or the government. That is what that means, and that is why it should not be placed upon the statute book. Heretofore we have had a standard grade, one grade throughout the country fixed by statute. We are now leaving it in the hands of the governor in council to make regulations with respect to many things, including among other grades—one for one part of Canada, another for another—the very thing that should not be if the statute is to be constitutional, for it is quite clear that if the statute is to have any validity as a statute, it must deal with either foreign trade or interprovincial trade. If it deals with purely local matters within the province, the province has the power, and not the Dominion. It is only because the Dominion's legislation operates throughout the country as a whole, dealing either with interprovincial or export trade, that this parliament can deal with the matter. Here we are asked to give the governor in council power to make different grades applicable to different parts of the country. Surely the minister does not intend that. That is the very thing that chapter 181 says should not be done, because the desire is to have some sort of uniform legislation throughout the country.

In addition, this means an increase in the number of inspectors, and it clothes them with enormous power. As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, in answer to a question that I directed to him, pointed out, it allows the certificate of an inspector to be prima facie evidence of the commission of an offence. Just imagine it! The certificate of an inspector, with the regulations in his hands, not published, is to be prima facie evidence of guilt before a justice of the peace. I ask the minister if he thinks that can be tolerated in Canada. I leave it to the minister, does he think that sort of legislation, in this country at any rate, should be given support and approval, and especially in view of the fact that there is the statute already defining grades and providing for sales by weight, without the necessity of making any new provision? There you have chapter 181 of the revised statutes of Canada, and now we are going to take all that power out of the hands of parliament and put it into the hands of an advisory board, not knowing how it is to be selected or appointed. The governor in council may make regulations applicable to Alberta, perhaps, and not to Saskatchewan, applicable to British Columbia, and not to Ontario, and the certificate of the inspector is to be prime facia evidence of violation of the provisions of this act. Surely the minister does not want to do that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Most of the hon. gentleman's remarks have been based on the assumption that the law provides for only one grade of any article to be applicable throughout Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend surely knows that we have two grain inspection districts in Canada, and have had for forty years.

Mr. BENNETT: The old act, the Manitoba Grain Act, was changed to the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The western standards do not apply to eastern Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The act is an act for the whole of Canada, but with respect to certain standards, of course, they do not grow the same kind of grain in the east as in the west.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But the western standards do not apply to eastern Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: They cannot.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: So there is no precedent being created here at all. As a matter of fact, in the Fruit Act as it was, the apples of British Columbia were compulsorily graded for export, and to-day they are not compulsorily graded for the maritimes, and that has been approved by the Justice department.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not speaking of apples. Chapter 181 is an act to regulate the sale and inspection of root vegetables, and this bill seeks to repeal that statute. Section 3 of chapter 181 defines the following grades of potatoes: (a) Canada A quality; (b) Canada B quality; (c) Canada C ungraded quality. That is what I am pointing out, the variations.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the use of grading two varieties of vegetables by statute, and leaving all the rest to be done by order in council? We are simply treating them all alike; that is all. My hon. friend laughs at that. We have graded potatoes and onions before. Why from now on should we have potatoes and onions graded by statute, and all the other vegetables graded by order in council?

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister from Prince Edward Island told us that the grading of potatoes has worked out well. Now the Minister of Agriculture proposes to change it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We are not changing it. Every now and then my hon. friend starts off on a new tack and under a wrong assumption as to facts. He has made two or three statements about grading contrary to the statute, when half of our grain this year was graded by the grain standard board.

Mr. BENNETT: We are not talking about grain; we are dealing with roots and vegetables.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is a precedent—something that is very dear to the lawyer's mind. I think we might let sections 3 and 4 stand, and go ahead with the rest of the bill.

Mr. McGIBBON: Withdraw the whole bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I see no reason why we cannot get some relaxation of this section as suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) without sacrificing its strength.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): We are stressing potatoes and grain.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The same principle is involved. Grading is grading, whether it be wheat or anything else.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): What is in the minister's mind with regard to inspection of these smaller vegetables? We go to the market here in Ottawa and see displayed for sale bunches of carrots and other vegetables. How are they to be inspected? How is the purchaser to know that they have been inspected?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Our inspectors go on the various markets of Canada, where there is a substantial business, including Toronto and Ottawa, and draw attention to any violation of the law, and if that violation is persisted in we prosecute.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): You will need all the adult population in Canada to enforce this section. For instance, are you going to have an inspector in Aylmer to inspect the farmer's little truck load of vegetables?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have graded for home consumption a changeable article like eggs, ten times as difficult to administer as the grading of vegetables, and yet the public have accepted that as a good law.

Mr. BENNETT: And it has been held ultra vires by the courts.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 3 and section 4 stand?

Sections stand.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

56103—145½

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six it had been agreed to let sections 3 and 4 stand. Sections 1 and 2 had passed. The committee is now considering section 5. Shall the section carry?

Mr. McGIBBON: So far as export conditions are concerned the minister is on pretty safe ground. Personally I think it would be a good thing for everyone on this side of the house if this bill went through as introduced to-day. I am rather inclined to think that the minister has not very well read the lessons of history regarding restrictive legislation. I remember some time ago, when the party which I have the honour and pleasure to support was in power, we imposed restrictions on the carrying of arms; we made everyone having in his possession a rifle or shotgun take out a permit. It affected about 99 persons out of every 100 in my riding and created a particular hell for everyone who had supported that legislation. As regards restrictive legislation of this nature, dealing with the domestic business of our farmers, I think the minister is on dangerous ground if he is looking to the peace, comfort and welfare of his government. This legislation will be obnoxious to the people, and the result will be only one of two things: either the spirit of the law will not be observed at all, or the act will create a lot of trouble for the minister and his government. That would of course be reflected more or less on every man who is in parliament to-day, because the people would be coming to us with all their grievances, as they have done in the past, using rather harsh language towards the government and those in authority as well as towards everyone else associated with the act.

I have on a great many occasions in this house objected to all these restrictions that are being put on the liberties of the people. It seems to me that it is becoming a fad; we are almost going crazy in this regard. And this is just another piece of such legislation which the minister is bringing in. The act will never be enforced in the smaller places; I think I am quite safe in saying that. You could not enforce it. It will only create intense dissatisfaction; it will provide more positions to be filled and will incur more expense. It will indirectly run up the cost of living and the cost of doing business. I think the minister would be well advised to abandon it so far as the domestic field is concerned. As regards the interprovincial trade, the minister this afternoon had, I thought, some regard to this phase of the question. But if you are going to apply this legislation to all the little trading transactions that take place on the country roads, in the villages and towns, and render the farmers liable to the penalties specified in the act, you will only create trouble. The act will be a farce and will never be enforced; if you try to enforce it—well, God help the government and the people who try to carry it out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I assume that my hon. friend's remarks apply to section 5, the one under discussion. I may say that every vegetable grower in Canada in every province has asked for this section. At least one representative from New Brunswick in this house has urged upon me the necessity for it, in order to provide for compulsory inspection if we deem it desirable to take that power, and the grading of vegetables for export. It is the same as in regard to cheese and butter; there is no new principle involved. The fact is, we are being urged to pass this legislation

Mr. McGIBBON: For export, yes.

Mr. SPENCER: From what quarters has the minister been requested to bring in this legislation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The representatives of the vegetable growers have requested it. If my hon. friend wishes me to mention names, I may say that one gentleman who has urged it upon me is the newest member from New Brunswick. One of the reasons why they want this legislation is the fact that their market in Cuba was nearly ruined by the export of defective potatoes to that country. The representative of Cuba—with whom I happen to be living—has told me that unless something is done to improve the New Brunswick potato situation his country will have to exclude those potatoes from the Cuban market; not that the potatoes are not good, but they are very carelessly handled. In order to satisfy myself I got a barrel of these potatoes shipped to the fruit commissioner's office and, accompanied by Mr. Caldwell, who was a member of this house, two years or so ago, I went and inspected this sample. I found from 30 to 40 per cent of the potatoes defective; they were cracked or wounded or bruised in some way. And they were all beautiful potatoes. But after travelling a considerable distance, broken and cracked, and passing through the warmer climate of the southern Atlantic, a great many of them were on the point of heating and it was just a question whether they should not be dumped into the sea. The result was that we were given warning that, unless this condition stopped, the Cuban people would have to put an embargo on our potatoes. It was due, not to the farmers, but to the dealers in New Brunswick who were handling these potatoes. In compliance with an urgent request from every part of the Dominion, we are taking some power with regard to the export of potatoes, just as we do in regard to anything else that is shipped out. These powers may appear to be far-reaching and, to some, exasperating. But I may assure the committee that we are not beginning to take in respect of these matters anything like the power which is exercised in Australia and New Zealand. There the authorities go very much further than we do, and say to a man that unless his goods are up to a certain standard they shall not be exported at all to any country, because Australian and New Zealand growers do not want their reputation injured abroad. We exclude no farm product from export which is at all edible, but we want it graded just as we do with butter, cheese, eggs and many other articles to which I have referred. Then it must be remembered that we are only asking for authority to do it; it may be a year before we bring it into practice. We were grading fruit for export two years before we applied the law for home consumption. When the people become familiar with a law by using it voluntarily, we gradually make it compulsory when we are asked to do so.

Mr. McGIBBON: I hope the minister did not misunderstand me; I think he is absolutely right so far as export business is concerned, but I believe he is absolutely wrong when he tries to apply it to all the little domestic transactions which take place in the small towns. For my own sake politically I hope he goes through with it; this bill will give me a lot of votes. But I am trying to do a favour for the government by keeping the minister right, and at the same time I am trying to keep peace among the farmers in my riding.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have agreed to let these two sections stand. This is not an arbitrary measure; I am told that this bill is the result of requests from growers, shippers, consumers, and the trade generally. If one of the Toronto members who is a prominent wholesale produce dealer were here, he would tell you that these provisions are necessary; in the committee he confirmed them all. I am sure the growers, as represented by the hon. member for Yale, are also unanimous in their support of these provisions. However, the two sections to which my hon. friend is referring will stand, and probably we can find some less provocative language which at the same time will attain the desired end. I should like to consult the Department of Justice before changing the wording, because they have said that this is the correct form.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have a good deal of respect for the ability of the minister.

Mr. MANION: I do not rise as an authority on farming, but I would like to say a word or two in general on this bill. I apologize for speaking on it at all, because as I have already said I do not know very much about farming, although a large section of my constituency is composed of farming communities. At that, I am not worse than most of the other members who spoke this afternoon; I presume a good many of them in these days of the automobile are like myself, hardly able to tell a horse from a cow. However, coming as I do from a section of northern Ontario where farming is a very difficult pioneering occupation for a great many people, I do not like to see too many restrictions placed upon farmers. Perhaps one third of my constituency is composed of people who are pioneer farmers, who have gone into bush country similar to that of northern Quebec and some parts of British Columbia, and who have had to hew their homes out of the bush. In many cases they have been confronted with many difficulties, and I do not like to see more restrictions placed upon those men who already have enough difficulty in making a living. It is very difficult to populate that section of Ontario extending west from North Bay to the Manitoba boundary, an area almost as large as Germany and France together. It will supply a large area of magnificent farming land once it is cleared, but it requires a long, hard life of pioneering in most cases before enough land is cleared to make good homes for the farmers. In view of that, and in view of the fact that these farmers sell practically all their vegetables in the towns and cities of the neighbourhood, I do not like to see their difficulties increased in any way. As a matter of fact, I have the impression that we are too prone to legislation in our country; perhaps it would be a good thing if we had a closed season for legislation extending from about January 1 to July 1. That would pretty well cover the session of Parliament, and would result in a shorter and more profitable session while letting the country go along in better shape than is now the case.

Mr. CAHAN: It would give us a more contented community.

Mr. MANION: As the hon. member (Mr. Cahan) has suggested, probably it would give us a more contented community. Unfortunately in our country there are a great many people who believe that because something is old it is of no use and that only the new is useful. They read of something which has been done in New Zealand or in some other country or state and think we must immediately copy it. I do not believe that is necessary in all cases. I think we might well leave these restrictive bills out of our legislation for a while and let our pioneering sections grow up and get further advanced before such measures are passed. Most of the people are not familiar with this sort of thing, and they will not take the trouble to read them.

I am speaking very generally now, because I quite understand that in regard to exports of fruit, wheat and many other agricultural products it is necessary for the good name of Canada that we have grades. I do not question that for a moment, but at the same time I am not one of those who believe that the ordinary buyer in the small town or city, or even in the large town or city, cannot look after himself or herself pretty well. We have in my city a market to which the farmers of the surrounding district come two or three times a week, and they get along very well with the people in the town. Unfortunately for the farmers in that pioneering section, during the war the government of which I was a supporter advocated greater production. I say unfortunately, because greater production meant that all kinds of people in the towns and cities produced fruits and vegetables in their back yards or in vacant lots. That became something of an obsession with many people, and as a result the farmers in that section of the country find it very difficult to make a living. We are finding it very hard to keep people on the land, and I believe restrictive legislation of this kind has something to do with driving the people off the farms because it makes things more difficult for them. I suggest to the minister, with the best intentions in the world, that in the future we might well drop some of this restrictive legislation, particularly as it affects truck farmers. I will admit readily that for export on a large scale, in order to compete in the markets of the world, it is necessary that we should have grades in order to give our products a good name, but I think we might easily go too far in other directions. I say this with no intended reflection upon the civil servants in the department of my hon.

friend, but I think unfortunately it is true that there are a number of civil servants in every branch of public life who look around for ways in which to use their energies.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: I have had something to do with inspectors of various kinds in various branches of governmental work, and I have found that with the best intentions in the world, and meaning nothing wrong, they are often looking for something to restrict. They desire an opportunity to put their names on legislation; they like to point out that they were the fathers of this or that measure. I believe we might check that tendency in all branches of the public service and leave our people in quiet and contentment for a while. That will give our pioneer sections an opportunity to fill up with farmers, who will have time to get established on the land without too many restrictions. The people in the towns and cities have things a great deal easier than these pioneer farmers, so I say they should be allowed to take a chance once in a while. It is the old story; if you put a support on a healthy child's back the back will never get strong, and the same thing applies to the people in our towns and citites. Let them take a chance; they are pretty good gamblers now, as anyone can see by watching the stock markets. Let them gamble with the farmers of their communities, and in that way the farmers will have a chance to get well established on the land, especially in those sections of northern Ontario to which I have referred.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder if my hon. friend would take his own prescription when applied to the many inspections which take place at Fort William and Port Arthur. Why harass the farmers, he might well say, with all this inspectional service, not letting them pass with a single grain of wheat, oats or barley without some monster inspector wanting to do something to make himself officious and to degrade his grain for him? Would that be good for Canada, or would it hurt Canada in the grain markets of the world?

Mr. MANION: The minister has taken up a subject in regard to which I admitted he is correct. I was not referring to that. I admitted the need in exports of importance.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If it is good for the goose it is good for the gander.

Mr. MANION: I am not so sure.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. CAHAN: Which is the goose and which is the gander?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have made exceptions. There are exceptions in connection with the grain trade. You can send forward mixed cargoes as long as you indicate on them that they are mixed. So there are exceptions in this legislation and there is power to make dozens of exceptions if we find in the administration that exceptions are necessary. But why discuss that phase of it? I want to make some progress. The domestic side of the question is embodied in clauses 3 and 4, and nobody is objecting to clause 5. Even going as far as we are in clause 5 we are not within approaching distance of what the other overseas dominions are doing in protecting the quality of their goods in sending them overseas for export. We are miles behind them.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): I am not going to discuss the bill in general, but I want to point out to the minister again that the matter will be materially helped as regards the chief objections that have been taken by changing the word "person" in the different clauses. In clause 3, which was allowed to stand, the second word in the first line is "person" and the same word appears in clause 6, 7, 8, 9 and so on. The discussion for the last hour or so has been in regard to the export end of the vegetable business. That does not cover the thousands of farmers who wish to trade between themselves. Throughout western Canada and in some of the other provinces one farmer will call up his neighbour and want to know if he has a few potatoes or something else and that neighbour will throw three or four sacks in his car and take them over.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend object to grading vegetables for export?

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what we are dealing with.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Why apply it to the individual who is not exporting? That is my point and that is the point which was raised by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) and received favourably by the minister. The word "person" appears all through the clause. Why not substitute the word " dealer"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The custom right along has been to provide by regulation for grading for export. There may be a better way but I do not know what it is. If anybody will evolve a better way I shall be delighted to accept it because we want nothing but the best. We cannot put all these details into the law. There is scarcely any law, especially affecting agriculture, which has not a provision for making regulations based upon the law so that changes can be made rapidly from time to time as the circumstances warrant, instead of our having to wait until parliament meets to get an obvious injustice corrected.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Either I am wrong on this subject or a number of the members of the committee are. In my opinion you do not have to grade any vegetables at all. You can sell any number of any kind of vegetables you wish without grading; but if you do sell vegetables and call them the grades according to this legislation, then they must come up to the standard.

Mr. CAHAN: Even if a person is a market gardener, under this legislation his vegetables must be graded and certified.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I do not believe that is the case. If you put these vegetables in a container and mark them as being of a certain grade, then they must come up to that standard and weight, but if there are no grades there are no restrictions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That depends upon what we have in our regulations.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Any vegetable that is going to be exported should be graded. But supposing an ordinary farmer goes to a neighbour for two or three sacks of potatoes to carry him over until his new crop is ready for use, according to this legislation if it passes in its present phraseology, he will have to tag those bags of potatoes and weigh them, the sack will have to be a certain size and on it will have to be the name and address of the man who grew the potatoes. That is all nonsense.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is not necessary unless he grades them.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The clause refers to "person" instead of "dealer" or "middleman". That is the point to which I wish to draw the attention of the minister.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Barrels to be well filled.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to ask this question of the Minister of Justice who is now in his seat and who in his absence was made responsible for this legislation, because we have had it presented to the committee that this bill has been approved in all respects by the Department of Justice. What does he think of this pernicious activity on the part of the Minister of Agriculture in providing all these grades, regulations and restrictions with respect to market gardeners, for instance, in Montreal? ?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was dealing with his deputy minister.

Mr. CAHAN: What does the Minister of Justice say in regard to this? ? I think the minister is framing a political issue that will be very attractive to hundreds and even thousands of people in Montreal who are engaged in market gardening, who will now come under these restrictions and whose business will be entirely changed if these provisions are put into force. In fact as that business is now conducted in the markets of Montreal, you are going to fill your courts of sessions with petty criminal cases and your gaols with agricultural criminals.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am a pretty busy man and it is impossible for me personally to study the legislation of all the departments. Apart from that I have such a good feeling for my friend the Minister of Agriculture that I might lack the necessary impartiality and I prefer that my deputy and the other officials of my department deal with his proposed legislation. I am told by those officials that the bill as drafted is perfectly legal and constitutional, and I do not think my hon. friend should worry about the political issue that can be raised with regard to it.

Mr. CAHAN: Does my hon. friend think the ordinary market gardener who comes into the city of Quebec or Montreal with his team of horses or with his Ford automobile to distribute throughout the city or the outskirts or through the markets the products of his farm, should be compelled, before he can sell his goods, to undergo all this grading and weighing and to put his products on the market in a certain kind of container with an inspection certificate on it, failing which he will be liable to all sorts of fines, forfeitures and penalties? Does my hon. friend think that is wise or expedient legislation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Personally I am not enamoured of too many restrictions. I must admit I believe in freedom of trade. I think the functions of government are to keep the field open, and restrictions are rather hampering than helping. On the other hand, I am told that the people who are interested, the gardeners themselves, are asking for this legislation. I do not know why. If I were one of them I would not, but that is the information which is given to me.

Mr. MANION: The Minister of Justice has brought up a point that is interesting. He understands, as we all understand from the minister, that those interested are asking for this legislation. I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that the dealers largely were asking for this legislation, and I can quite understand that they would like to have everything measured by the pound or by the bushel or by the bag, and so forth.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are the very ones who do not want it.

Mr. MANION: Has the minister received any representations asking for this legislation from the ordinary truck farmers?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, from the growers. I can give my hon. friend a list of those who helped to have passed the original act of 1922, upon which this bill is based.

Mr. MANION: I should like to have the names.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They are as follows:

Prince Edward Island
Representing growers—
W. N. McGregor.
Representing dealers—
Nelson Rattenbury.

Nova Scotia
Representing growers—
F. W. Foster.
Representing dealers—
A. E. McMahon.

New Brunswick
Representing growers—
A. A. H. Margison.
Representing dealers—
O. R. Estey.

Quebec
Representing growers—
Roger Gagnon, John McEvoy, Jos. E. Parent.
Representing dealers—
Wm. Bell.

Ontario
Representing growers—
Henry Broughton, J. G. Fleming, J. M. McNaughton.
Representing dealers—
David Spence, M.P.

Manitoba
Representing growers—
R. P. Andrews.
Representing dealers—
J. G. Anderson.

Saskatchewan
Representing growers—
E. W. Marvel.
Representing dealers—
J. M. McCrae.

Alberta
Representing growers—
R. Noel Hammond.
Representing dealers—
S. S. Savage.

British Columbia
Representing growers—
C. E. Barnes, J. T. Mutrie, R. M. Winslow.
Representing dealers—
E. L. Fraser.

My hon. friend will note in the list of dealers the name of David Spence, M.P. I wish he were in his seat.

Then, in addition to our own inspectors, the following were present in an advisory capacity, representing provincial departments:

Wilfrid Boulter, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
Dr. M. Cumming, Truro, NS.
A. G. Turney, Fredericton, N.B.
J. H. Lavoie, Quebec, Que.
A. H. MacLennan, Toronto, Ont.
J. D. Smith, Edmonton, Alta.
R. C. Abbott, Vancouver, B.C.

I might mention that this organization is still in existence, and when we get the advisory board—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What is the name of that organization?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is the Vegetable Growers' Association in the different provinces.

Mr. EVANS: Regarding the inspection of vegetables for export, I would like to give a hint to the Minister of Agriculture. While inspection is quite necessary, I do not think that this legislation is going to solve all the trouble. We found in western Canada that while we had to market our wheat collectively, and depend on the government to provide the machinery and facilities for the moving of our wheat from the farm to the markets of the world, we did not solve all our troubles until we formed ourselves into what is known as the wheat pool. I think if the government here would facilitate the means of co-operation and help the farmers to form themselves into societies, such as the New Brunswick potatoe growers' association, and get them to do this work for themselves, it would be of lasting benefit. Legislation such as this will not meet the bill for very long. Even in the grading of eggs, poultry, and so on, we found in western Canada that it did not meet our needs, and to-day the people in Saskatchewan are solving this problem for themselves simply by forming themselves into co-operative societies and marketing their products through the pool system. In fact, I might say that in some cities in the west it has been found necessary to form milk pools because the farmers were so badly robbed of their prices and earnings. Instead of attempting to pass legislation of this kind to meet the situation, I would rather see the government help the farmers to co-operate and do this work for themselves. I think the time is coming when all our produce will have to be marketed co-operatively, and in western Canada to-day we are ready to take over the whole of the machinery for the marketing of our wheat. I think that in connection with an article like potatoes, which have to be collected in bulk to be moved to the markets of the world, no better scheme could be adopted by the government than to help the farmers do this work themselves.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): In reply to my hon. friend from Rosetown, I would point out that in the province of Prince Edward Island, and I think in New Brunswick also, we are doing the very thing he suggests. In Prince Edward Island we have the Co-operative Potato Growers' Association handling millions of bushels of potatoes, amounting to millions of dollars worth, and it is all handled on the co-operative system.

The government has given to us the same assistance which they give to the western farmer in the matter of inspection. We have two classes of inspection, the seed potato inspection, and the table stock inspection, each under a different branch of the Department of Agriculture. The seed potato inspection is carried on by the Department of Agriculture without cost to the farmer, and every carload of potatoes is certified by a government inspector, and tagged for export. The inspection for seed potatoes is compulsory. No man can ship certified seed potatoes without having them government inspected and a certificate placed on the sack.

When it comes to shipping table stock, inspection and certificate is not compulsory, but unless the shipment is inspected and certified by the inspector, for which a fee of five dollars is charged, the car cannot go forward as Canada A table stock. This inspection was undertaken voluntarily in Prince Edward Island, and both growers and shippers have found it beneficial. I think I am safe in saying that last year fully 90 per cent of the table stock shipped out of the province was inspected, and that inspection was voluntarily accepted by both the grower and the shipper. The shipper paid the five dollar inspection fee to the inspector, who would then place his certificate on the car. This inspection protects both the grower and the shipper. When those potatoes reach their destination, if the consignee makes any complaint against them, the shipper can produce his certificate of inspection to show that the potatoes were of class A grade when shipped, and it is then up to the consignee to pay for them.

I think the agitation for this compulsory inspection came largely from New Brunswick. The New Brunswick growers have not gone in for voluntary inspection to the same extent as the growers of Prince Edward Island, and some of the growers and societies in New Brunswick have been asking for compulsory inspection. I think that is the reason for this bill. I do not think it will make any difference to Prince Edward Island, because fully 90 per cent of our potatoes is inspected. When it comes to small business transactions between farmers, and the sales of truck farmers who take their vegetables to town, if I thought for one moment that it would impose any hardship on them I would not support the bill; but I understand the minister intends to move an amendment which will pretty well cover regulations in connection with local traffic. I think this legislation is in the interests of all concerned. Perhaps the suggestion of the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) that the word "dealer" should be substituted for the word "person" is worth while considering, but I think every eventuality has been pretty well taken care of.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In order that the committee may know to what extent our vegetable growers have taken advantage of what we are seeking to enact by this section, let me quote some figures. They have been asking for this grading and have voluntarily offered to pay five dollars a car. For example, British Columbia has had 472 cars of potatoes graded for export at five dollars a car, and has also applied the system to domestic business. Although the growers did not need to take this course, they found it so advantageous for export that they have also had their potatoes graded for the home market. On the prairies 135 carloads have been inspected at a cost of five dollars per car; Ontario 163 cars; eastern Ontario and Quebec, 178 cars; Nova Scotia, 32 cars; New Brunswick, 3,138 cars; Prince Edward Island, 2,545 cars. They have pressed their money upon us and asked us to take it. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that we are tailenders in not moving more rapidly in this respect. Then in regard to onions, which are grown principally in Essex county in this province and in British Columbia, these are the carload figures, inspected at five dollars per car: British Columbia 152 cars; the prairies, 37 cars; Ontario, 174; eastern Ontario and Quebec, 21 cars; Nova Scotia, 3 cars; New Brunswick, 1; Prince Edward Island, none—making a total of 388. We do not usually associate turnips with grading, nevertheless our turnip growers have made strong requests for the application of this system to their crop, and these are the figures of carloads inspected at five dollars per car: British Columbia, none; the prairies, none; Ontario, 2; eastern Ontario and Quebec, 10; Nova Scotia, none; New Brunswick, 2; Prince Edward Island, 4—just 18 cars; not many, but it is a beginning. Why should we object to this system? We have been carrying it on on a voluntary basis, taking the money forced on us, and turning that money over to the Minister of Finance. This is the source of the $60,000 that I reported. Why should not the law recognize this extensive business just as it recognizes any other business? We are on section 5. Have we to start all over again and demonstrate the principle of grading? Surely not.

Mr. COOTE: Section 6 provides that "no person shall sell or offer." Has the minister inquired of his colleague the Minister of Justice whether the word "person" includes a woman? We have been advised that it is very questionable whether a woman is a person. If the courts should uphold this view, a woman would be allowed "to sell or offer for sale" these vegetables without coming under this legislation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is consolidated and some of it is an exact copy of the old act. My hon. friend will notice that there are no underlined words in this section. It has been in force for six years, and as yet we have run up against no snags. Why borrow trouble?

No person shall sell or offer, expose or have in his possession any potatoes for sale by the closed barrel unless every such barrel is well and properly filled.

If the barrel is not properly filled the contents rattle around and are bruised. Probably that is what happened to the New Brunswick potatoes—they were all cracked up as if they had been under a roller.

Mr. COOTE: I am not asking any question in regard to the packing of potatoes in barrels. I wish to know if the Minister of Agriculture has secured an opinion from the Justice department as to whether the word "person" would include a woman.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a joke.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That point was raised before; it is a little stale.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The point at issue is not covered by the minister's figures regarding shipments of carload lots of potatoes. We are quite satisfied with the grading system in that respect. But take the case where a farmer goes across the road to his neighbour to buy a bag of potatoes, something that frequently happens. As drafted, such a transaction would come under this section and one or other of those farmers would be guilty of an infraction of the law. We think such a case should be exempted. The suggestion made to the minister is to substitute "dealer" for "person".

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the old regulations they were exempt. I had to leave the agriculture committee to attend another meeting, but I asked the committee to consider the advisability of widening the exemption to make it apply to such cases. So we have two ways of protecting the farmers.

Mr. CAMPBELL: In the agriculture committee I understood that an amendment was to be made to the bill to cover that specific case. I fail to find it in this bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Unfortunately the agriculture committee, apparently thinking that the changes were small and relatively unimportant, did not recommend that the bill be reprinted as amended. The following is the amendment to section 21, providing that the provisions of the act and regulations thereunder shall not apply:

(f) To such other special trade practices as the advisory board with the approval of the minister shall specify.

That is not exactly what I suggested when I had to leave the committee. I proposed that something should be inserted to correspond to the provision in the Seed Act and the Fertilizer Act where farmers, as such, are exempted. That is done in many provincial and federal laws. The committee thought it wise not to apply it to any particular class but to take power to exempt such other special trade practices as the advisory board, with the approval of the minister, might specify. I suggested "trade or farm practices", which would exempt the farmers. I am ready to consider such a suggestion. The committee seemed to think however that this would make it so wide it might be open to abuse.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I understood that the matter was settled in the agriculture committee. I hardly believe that the committee were of the opinion that they were not exempting the class of farmers to whom I have referred in this instance. I rather think the majority of the committee understood that this was being done. Here the minister or the advisory board is given power to make certain exemptions, but sections 3 and 4 apply definitely to all persons whether farmers or dealers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Those two are standing in the hope of their being modified to meet the wishes of the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the minister's own suggestion should be adopted. I can conceive of the case where some man might want to get his neighbour into trouble, where there happened to be ill feeling in the community. It would be the simplest thing to have a man brought before a justice of the peace and fined for what has always been the practice in the community, of one farmer selling a sack of potatoes to another, not in the capacity of a dealer, but simply because he wanted to help his neighbour out. I think the minister's own suggestion should be carried into the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will consider it when we come to that section.

Mr. COOTE: We had better stick to one section at a time. The minister is quite right. I believe that amendment we adopted in section 21 was understood to be the recommendation of the minister. If it is not we can amend the section when we come to it.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 11—Power to enter premises.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This section is going too far; it is altogether too stringent. Does the minister realize just how far he is going? He gives an inspector the power to enter any place, and house, and farmer's yard or any store, merely on suspicion. That is too much power to give any individual.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would not give the minister that power.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would the hon. member suggest that he be kept out of the building?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister may want to make a joke about it, but there are others who do not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all. But the inspector must have authority to enter or he must keep out. Which shall it be? He cannot be in the basement or on the roof. This authority is given in all our acts of this character. It has been in this one for about twenty-five years and if it has stood the strain for that time it will stand it for another twenty-five years, which is about as long as I expect to be interested in it.

Mr. McGIBBON: We could not have better evidence than the minister himself has given that the act has never been enforced. The people will not tolerate for a moment the exercise of the power given in this section. If the minister does not know this, he ought to. If he says the section has not been invoked it is only because it cannot be enforced.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is this the same section as in the old act?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. MANION: This is changed from "potatoes or onions" to "vegetables." A man might suspect onions.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Or bunions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is extending it to all vegetables.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Power to detain shipments of vegetables.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This is a new clause, about which I am doubtful. I am as suspicious of these new clauses as the inspector will be of premises which he will inspect.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This section has been in the fruit act for many years, long enough to give it a good trial. Indeed, it has worked so well in the fruit act that we have incorporated it bodily here. I understand from my officer that it, too, has been in existence for twenty-five years. It has proved quite satisfactory.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Has that section ever been enforced or taken advantage of by the department?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: How often?

Section agreed to.

Sections 13 and 14 agreed to.

On section 15—Regulations.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There are a good many changes in this section; perhaps the minister will explain the necessity for them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under subsection (a) the grades will be established in the usual way on the advice of the advisory board, as under the fruit act. In 1924 we drafted a bill to amend the act in many respects and referred it to the agriculture committee. We endeavoured by statute to describe the grade, but the agriculture committee could not agree on a description of grades. I believe we stranded on the question of onions, and we let the bill die in the agriculture committee after having tried and failed to describe these grades. In the same way, all attempts to describe commercial grades of wheat below No. 3 northern have failed, and we are now attempting to do what we have done with the commercial grades of wheat, which are fixed by a board each year. Here we are providing for the establishment of standard containers for vegetables, which is done at the request of the growers. If it is desired to sell these articles by the bag we will establish a standard bag; at present a bag may contain 70, 80, 90, 100 or 200 pounds, and we desire to make the weight uniform. If a gallon measure is used we will establish a standard of 7½ pounds for that measure, and so on. We will also prescribe the units of sale for vegetables as well as the brands or marks which may be used and the manner in which they shall be placed on the containers. A great many dealers have had private brands for a great many years which they desire to retain, and we make provision for that. We also provide for the inspection, for the issuing of certificates and for the imposition of fees; if you are going to grade you must issue certificates. Then subsection (f) prescribes the time when any regulation shall come into operation, and so on. The only time we can take advantage of this power is when parliament is in session; we may not wish to exercise it for six months, because nearly all the legislation under which we have been given authority to do some kind of grading has not been put into force until the people are ready to have it applied.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would like to refer the minister back to subsection (a), which provides for the establishment of grades for vegetables intended for sale. Is it the intention that potatoes or onions shall be graded as eggs are graded, into extra specials, fresh firsts, firsts, seconds, and so on? How are potatoes and onions to be graded, and who are to constitute the advisory board? Apparenty the farmer who takes his potatoes and onions to the market will be obliged to specify whether they are firsts, extra specials, or something of that kind, but he is not free then; he will have to put them in a certain kind of bag or container which bears a certain stamp. Even then he is not a free man; he will have to get a certificate from a government officer stating that the potatoes are of the size specified and that the bag bears the prescribed mark, and in order to get that certificate he will have to dig down in his pocket and pay the fee which will go towards the salary of this inspector who acts as an agent of the government—one of their election agents, I suppose, when the right time comes. Coming back to sub-section (a), how many grades has the minister in mind for potatoes and onions? Will they be graded according to size, according to colour, according to whether or not some of the tops are on, or in what way? Will they be graded according to age, according to the particular kind of potato, or what will be the standard? I would like to know what the farmers will be up against in this grading business.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend has raised a very important point, and it is to solve that difficulty that we have adopted this plan. Four years ago a number of members of the committee wanted to retain these names to which my hon. friend objects and to which I also object. That is the reason for this change. The grades of onions at present are fancy, choice, standard, and boilers.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What about pickling onions?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I thought the old cardinal numerals were good enough, and I thought it would be more understandable to have the grades numbered one, two and three. At that time some members differed so strongly that there was no way of getting together; we received a shower of wires from the respective sides, so we simply dropped the whole thing like a hot potato, or a hot onion if you like, and let it go until to-day. Now we want to change the names of the grades, and remembering that we failed to agree before, we now propose to call them one, two and three under the regulations. Potatoes at present are graded into A. B. and C; I cannot say why that was done instead of using the numerals 1, 2 and 3, but I think I will try to get them to correspond with the grades of onions.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I think the minister would be wise in so doing; the general public could more readily understand potatoes or onions graded according to number than those classified as fancies, extras, specials and so on. There is a good deal of confusion at present in regard to the classification of eggs, and I am sure those grades would be more readily understood by the public if they were designated by numbers. At any rate, I suppose the inspector will come along to a man who has potatoes or onions on the market and will classify those vegetables as No. 1 or No. 2 and place a card on the bag or bags showing the public that the farmer is offering for sale No. 1 potatoes or No. 2 onions so certified by the inspector, and the seller will receive a certificate or card to that effect. That will be his guarantee against being brought up before a magistrate for selling No. 2 potatoes as No. 1; is that the idea?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not quite that. These parties grade their own goods; they get familiar with what the grades call for. They put a tag on their own wares, either potatoes or onions, indicating the grade. When the inspector comes around, if he finds their wares are not up to grade he will admonish them to be more careful in regard to the grades. He does not jump right at them and prosecute them, but he indicates what the grade is and possibly changes the tag, lowering it to what it really is, and ask them to comply more closely with the law. Well, if the man persists in misrepresenting his goods and offends repeatedly, we sometimes have to prosecute him, but ordinarily that would not be done for the first offence.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): And yet the farmer would likely know much more about what was a first grade potato than would the inspector, who was probably picked up in some city and never saw a potato except on the table. His job is to get some convictions and show that he is a live inspector by making trouble for the farmer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not select them anyhow.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Supposing he comes along and grades No. 1 potatoes, but the farmer has not got them in a properly marked bag or box, is the farmer liable to a fine? The potatoes are really No. 1 but are not in a box which is properly marked.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no use grading unless people will look and learn.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You can judge whether they are No. 1 or No. 2 grade and whether they are in a bag or box which bears a mark, and the farmer is liable to a fine if he has them in a bag which has not a mark on it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: All the grades that I know of require a mark on them.

Section agreed to.

On section 16—Penalty for violation.

Mr. KELLNER: Suppose a sample of potatoes or onions which is given a proper certificate is later subjected to a hard frost and the quality is damaged, whereupon the dealer then sells them; who is responsible? Against whom would the consumer have recourse—the man who grew the potatoes or the man who sold them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, that would be a matter of adjustment between the two parties concerned. We cannot be responsible for that. The railways have broad shoulders, and if there was provision for heating and somebody neglected to fire up, there might be a case against them. But whoever issued the certificate cannot be responsible for that; it is usually a matter of adjustment. We try to get them together; they expect to deal with each other again, common sense prevails, and they settle.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wish to move an amendment to section 16. The penalty under that section for violation of the act is placed, for the first offence, at a fine not exceeding twenty-five dollars and not less than ten dollars. I submit that that is pretty harsh in regard to the enforcement of a law which will be new to a great many people. The minimum fine should be very greatly reduced for the first offence, so that the man may be given a chance, and I think the maximum for the first offence might also be reduced.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not prosecute on the first offence.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You may not prosecute, but you will not be the inspector all over creation. It will be somebody acting for you.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: His reports will indicate how many times the man had offended.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Am I to understand—if I am it will alter my opinion at once—that when one of your inspectors finds a farmer violating this act, no action will be taken on the first offence until the inspector reports to the department?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the practice. I think it is a good practice to give a man a second chance; he may have offended innocently.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am not quarrelling with the minister on that point at all, and that may be the practice; but it is possible that the inspector in the course of his duty need not wait to find out what the department thinks about it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh yes, he cannot prosecute off his own bat; he has to refer it to the department.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In what section of the act is that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not in the law, but it is in the instructions or in the regulations as to how to administer the act. You could not say in the act that an offender may violate the law a certain number of times before somebody knocks him over the knuckles, but that is the way it works out.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): You are giving instructions to your inspectors that a man who violates this law once is liable to a fine of not less than ten dollars and not more than twenty-five.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is in the law.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have no doubt that if the minister were acting as inspector he would give a farmer a warning and tell him not to do it again; but here is an act which is for the guidance of his inspectors and which tells the inspector that the proper thing for him to do is to pull a man before the magistrate and have him fined not more than twenty-five dollars and not less than ten dollars for the first offence, and for the second offence not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than fifty dollars. For the third offence I think it is two hundred dollars.

Mr. KAISER: Two hundred dollars and fifty dollars—after the Ontario Temperance Act.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I suggest that the minister reduce that fine for the first offence to a minimum of one dollar and a maximum of five dollars.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would not be very effective.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister himself says he is not going to prosecute for the first offence.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would be less than the cost of inspection. They would all take the fine and save the cost of a trip.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In the enforcement of a new law like this, give the farmer some little chance to get educated as to what the government wants him to do. Do not leave it in the power of an inspector, an injudicious inspector if you like, to impose a fine of ten dollars upon a man whose potatoes are No. 1 but who has them in a bag which is not properly marked.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This has been the law for five years. There are only three or four words inserted there; it is really a reprint of the old law. We cannot lay down any hard and fast rule to apply to all offenders, because offenders differ in degree; some will do it innocently not knowing the law, while others will do it deliberately and persistently, and certainly the innocent offender should be given a second chance. In regard to a maximum of five dollars and a minimum of one dollar, the one dollar is only what he would pay for inspecting the car, and if the offender is given a minimum fine, as magistrates have a habit of doing, the offender would pay one dollar as a fine and save the inspector's fee.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister said he would not prosecute at all for the first offence.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If he was an innocent offender, and it was his first offence.

Mr. ARTHURS: He could not be innocent if the law is on the statute book and he violates it.

Mr. SMOKE: I understand that any one can set the criminal law in motion; any person in the neighbourhood may lay a first or a second or a third charge, as the government may do.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certainly.

Mr. SMOKE: He is not dependent at all on the will of the inspector or of the department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the best argument advanced yet.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If that argument is a good one—and I at once agree that it is—then it knocks the bottom out of everything the minister said a while ago, namely, that his instructions to the inspectors would be not to be harsh in the case of a first offence. He connot instruct Tom, Dick and Harry all over the country; he can only instruct his own officials to be lenient

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Supposing it is not an inspector but a neighbour of the farmer who lays the information; in that case the minister has no influence over the man. Let us suppose he lays an information through malice or for some other reason, and the man comes before the court. As I understand the matter, the magistrate who hears the case, if he finds that the man violated the law in having for sale potatoes under grade or not being in a market bag or box, has no option but must impose a fine of at least ten dollars or at most twenty-five dollars for the first offence.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That hypothetical case may occur because any citizen can put the law in motion, but he would have twice as much difficulty in proving his case because he would have to prove that the potatoes were not properly graded or that they were underweight. The department would have the certificate that was issued in the first instance and that would be prima facie evidence of correctness; consequently the private prosecutor would have at least twice the difficulty of getting a conviction that the departmental officials would. My fruit commissioner informs me that he cannot recall a single instance in which a prosecution has been entered by a private citizen.

Mr. KELLNER: Once you pass this legislation the enforcement of it is entirely out of your hands, and as an authority I will quote the Minister of Justice who told us the other day that the government could not enforce these laws; that it was up to the provincial governments to do so. The minister therefore would not have any authority.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to point out to the minister something that may easily arise in connection with this measure, and it is what I had in mind when I made some observations a short time ago. A farmer comes into town and sells a few bags of potatoes. A dealer there who has means of handling farm produce is not going to look with favour on farmers coming around and dealing directly with his customers. There you have an instance where a dealer may go to a magistrate, lay an information against a farmer and cause a great deal of trouble, although the farmer may have sold only a couple of sacks of potatoes. That is what I think we should guard against.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) suggested that we should take this section by section and that would seem to be the sensible course.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: With regard to these prosecutions, is the inspector given the right to prosecute without reference to the department?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Never.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If an offence is committed and the inspector wishes to take action, what happens?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If he is an ordinary inspector he sends a report to the district inspector, that is the inspector of the particular province. The latter sends it in turn to the fruit commissioner who has charge of the administration of the law. Before reporting to the deputy minister the fruit commissioner requests the district inspector to make a thorough investigation into the case. If the circumstances warrant, the latter reports back to the fruit commissioner who takes the matter up with the deputy minister. If the case is a difficult one he sometimes takes it up with myself and more often he takes it to the Deputy Minister of Justice to see if there is ground for a case. We do not like to prosecute without being sure of getting a conviction, because otherwise the prosecution may not do much good and may do harm.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That means that it is the deputy minister who in practice gives orders or instructions to bring about a prosecution, and nobody else in the department exercises that power. Is that correct?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The fruit branch sometimes exercise jurisdiction themselves if the man is an old offender who has been a repeater and there is no doubt about his persistence and determination to get past the law. In that case the fruit branch can act off their own bat.

Mr. ARTHURS: What is the definition of a "repeater"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One who commits the offence the second time.

Mr. RYERSON: Is it the intention of the government to make this legislation applicable to the small individual grower who markets his products either on the market or to his own customers throughout the district, or is it intended to apply to those who are shipping throughout a province or for export?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That will be left to the committee when we come to clause 21 where there is a provision giving authority to the government to make the exemptions as wide as we like. We can make a further provision when we come to that. That seems to be the stumbling block in the bill and I think the exemptions should have been in the beginning of the bill so that we would know what they were. There were only two or three small amendments, although they were important ones, and it was not thought advisable to go to the expense of reprinting the bill. Clause 21 covers that point and I shall be glad to have my hon. friend's opinion on it.

Mr. MALONEY: I think further consideration of this bill should be postponed. I have altogether too much respect for the minister's sagacity to believe he is fathering such a measure. The final paragraph of section 21, the most vital portion of the whole bill, nullifies the effect of the measure as I should like to see it go into law. If vegetables and fruits are to be graded or their sale protected in any way it should be those that are for export, and clause 21 exempts both fruits and vegetables for export. There is nothing in the world to prevent exporters from saying: This is interfering with our foreign trade, and the result will be that this bill will have absolutely no effect in regard to fruits and vegetables for export. But it penalizes the small fruit growers and the small vegetable farmer; it penalizes the housewife who wishes to go to the market and openly buy by the bunch or by the dozen or in any other manner, what vegetables and fruit she may desire. For that reason I feel, in justice to the Minister of Agriculture, we should report progress and allow him to sleep on it and bring it up again another day.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have not yet come to that clause. We intend to leave the bill in committee.

Mr. CANTLEY: If the farmer who comes into town and sells vegetables from his wagon is to be brought within the scope of this bill, the Minister of Agriculture will be considered an infernal nuisance throughout the country. If the bill is passed as it now stands—and my understanding is that the minister wants that to be done—there will be very few Liberal farmers in the county of Pictou.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The better that should suit my hon. friend. He should support this bill.

Mr. CANTLEY: They will not support your government.

Section agreed to.

Sections 17 and 18 agreed to.

On section 19—Penalty for careless handling, wilfully destroying, etc.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is quite clear to me what is meant by wilfully destroying or pilfering, but just what does the minister mean by "carelessly handles"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Throwing around recklessly.

Mr. ERNST: Then why not say recklessly handled?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then the man goes to market with a load of potatoes and drops a bag off his wagon as he is unloading it will have the inspector tap him on the shoulder and say, "Twenty-five dollars for 'carelessly handling' ". He may get off the first time if he drops a bag, but if he drops the second one he will be soaked good and plenty. The inspector will say, "You have hurt the feelings of that bag of potatoes, or turnips. They are fairly crying out. You have bruised them. You have injured them. You have handled them carelessly. You are liable to a fine of twenty-five dollars." One man takes hold of one end of a bag of potatoes and another man the other, and they heave it into a car without any consideration for the feelings of the potatoes at all. They are bruised, wounded, hurt. Must a feather bed and springs be provided for the potatoes to land on? Must a man wrap them in wool to be sure he will not violate the law? If he drops a bag on the ground that is carelessly handling, and he is liable to a fine of twenty-five dollars.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If one is as clever as my hon. friend he can ridicule almost anything. I do not think the hon. member was in during the earlier part of the evening when I explained that just through careless and indifferent handling of the potatoes of New Brunswick by the exporters to Cuba, they almost lost that market and had an embargo placed against them. In order to make sure that such an accusation was warranted I got the fruit commissioner to bring up one or two barrels of these potatoes from New Brunswick, and I saw with my own eyes that as a result of this rough handling forty per cent of the potatoes were bruised and cracked open and unfit for export. You would think a land roller had been run over them. Should not we do something to protect our export trade particularly? Should we not try to avoid having an embargo placed against us? An embargo is sometimes a difficult thing to get taken off. There is an embargo against our potatoes now in Great Britain, put on for what seems to be a very trifling reason, but we cannot get it taken off. If Cuba put an embargo on our maritime province potatoes, it would be a very serious matter. We want to avoid that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Just see how the minister proposes to avoid it. He says to the farmer, "If you throw that bag of potatoes on the ground that is careless handling, and you are liable to a fine" but paragraph (e) of section 21 provides that this act and the regulations made thereunder shall not apply to any vegetables for export if that would prevent the sale and export of such vegetables to any foreign market. So the potatoes intended for export are exempt; you may throw them around as much as you like, but if you throw around the potatoes that are to be sold for home consumption, you are liable to a fine. Section 21 says clearly:

The provisions of this act or regulations made thereunder shall not apply,—

(e) to any vegetables for export where compliance with the said provisions would prevent the sale or export of such vegetables to any foreign market.

No matter how roughly you handle the potatoes for export, even if that would prevent their sale and export, the provisions of this act do not apply, yet the minister says it is export trade he is legislating for.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will deal with that section when we come to it.

Mr. ARTHURS: But the minister's whole argument was based on the export trade.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In the case mentioned by the minister, where potatoes were bruised by careless handling, what person would be prosecuted and fined under this section for that offence?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If we could discover who did the rough-house work on the potatoes we would prosecute him.

Mr. ROBINSON: In case the carriers are the offenders, and in my experience they usually are, how would you get after them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know farmers' organizations that have prosecuted the railways before this.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am not a lawyer, but I want to appeal to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am being appealed to a lot to-night.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: My reason for appealing to him is this: I believe this provision in regard to careless handling cannot be enforced in practice. The Minister of Agriculture himself admitted that in the case he cited it would be impossible to tell who did the careless handling. With regard to wilfully destroying or pilfering, surely that is covered already in the Criminal Code. No one can wilfully destroy or steal anything belonging to another without being punished. So why put such a provision in here which is already dealt with in the Criminal Code? If anybody should wilfully destroy or pilfer potatoes that were being shipped, you would not require a clause of this kind to prosecute him. Is not this something which could more properly be dealt with under the Criminal Code, rather than in an act concerning vegetables? I ask the Minister of Justice if that is not right.

Mr. ARTHURS: The Minister of Agriculture based his argument on the export trade and said that careless handling might damage potatoes intended for export. But section 21 provides:

The provisions of this act or regulations made thereunder, shall not apply,—

(a) to new potatoes when shipped between the first day of July and the thirtieth day of September, both dates inclusive;

(b) to certified seed potatoes as defined in the regulations under The Destructive Insect and Pest Act;

(c) to what are commonly termed "green onions" or other vegetables with top leaves attached;

(d) to what are commonly known as "pickling onions" or

(e) to any vegetables for export where compliance with the said provisions would prevent the sale or export of such vegetables to any foreign market.

The minister has taken his stand on the export trade, whereas as a matter of fact these provisions apply only to potatoes for local consumption.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We can deal with that section when we come to it. I do not like mixing up the sections.

Mr. ARTHURS: We cannot carry section 19 without reference to section 21.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will come to section 21, but do not let us discuss two or three other sections with this one.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would ask the Minister of Justice whether a clause of this kind should properly be put in a bill regarding vegetables.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend want sections 19 and 20 to stand?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think section 19 is superfluous. The last two offences mentioned there are covered by the ordinary criminal law.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend wish to have section nineteen stand?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes.

Section stands.

Section 20 agreed to.

On section 21—Vegetables excepted from operation of act.

The CHAIRMAN: There are two slight amendments to this section. In subsection (d) the words "silver skin" have been inserted before the words, "pickling onions." As amended the subsection will read:

(d) to what are commonly known as silver skin pickling onions.

Another subsection is added:

(f) to such other practices as the advisory board with the approval of the minister may specify.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is simply legislation by order in council with a blank sheet.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Subsection (e) of section 21 reads:

The provisions of this act or regulations made thereunder shall not apply,—
(e) to any vegetables for export where compliance with the said provisions would prevent the sale or export of such vegetables to any foreign market.

So far as the export, for instance, of potatoes or onions is concerned, those vegetables do not have to be graded, they do not have to be put in specially marked boxes or packages, they do not have to be sold by weight —in short, it does not make any difference whether they are bruised or how carelessly they are handled, if any of these things will have a tendency to prevent the sale of potatoes for export, then they are absolutely exempt under this subsection. Does it strike the minister as logical to treat the export trade in that free and easy fashion as compared with the strict rules that he lays down for the home market? It does seem to me that it ought to be the other way around: In the local market the reputation of our potatoes and onions and other vegetables could very well depend on the opinion of the people there; but when competing against the world it is essential to keep up our reputation for the quality of the articles we export. By this subsection the restrictions of the act appear to be absolutely removed with respect to the export trade.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This subsection has been in all along, but I understand it has been used only once. If my hon. friend wants it removed there will be no objection on my part. This is the reason for its insertion. The orientals in British Columbia are very productive growers of vegetables. The law requires the name of the grower to be on the tag, and sometimes the oriental name spoils the sale by the dealer to his customer in other countries.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In that way it would injure the oriental.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. The goods may have gone out of the hands of the oriental into the hands of the dealer, but when the latter wants to sell those goods the purchaser objects to the oriental name. The precaution is not on behalf of the oriental particularly, although he is resident in Canada, but on behalf of whoever holds the goods with the oriental name on the tag. If that hampers the sale of the goods it does do an injury to their marketing. As I said before, we discussed this very carefully, and although it has been called into requisition only once, we can remove it if my friend wishes.

Mr. ARTHURS: It is very easy to throw a little dust in the air and camouflage the whole situation. As a matter of fact all the provisions of this bill are nullified by this subsection of section 21. The minister brings up the case of the dealer, but the man who suffers in the end is the oriental grower.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No.

Mr. ARTHURS: Yes, because the exporter will not buy a second time from the oriental. Every other section of this bill is subject to section 21. It is not whether the tag bears an oriental or an occidental name; all the sections are subject to section 21.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If this applied to the oriental I would not be ashamed to admit it, for I would not wish to do him any injustice; but the goods are not in his hands at all.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am against the oriental, I am for the occidental.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The goods have passed from the oriental grower into the dealer's hands, and are probably paid for, with the result that if the goods are turned back the dealer suffers. I have no objection in the world to removing the clause, but I thought it showed an element of decency on the part of the people of Canada.

Mr. ARTHURS: Again the minister has confined his remarks to the position between orientals and occidentals in British Columbia. But the section covers everything in this bill. Only half an hour ago the minister said there would be no charge made by his inspectors for a first offence. If a man has bought potatoes from an oriental in British Columbia, and is found exporting them without having them properly tagged and marked, he is let off the first time by the ipse dixit of the minister himself. If he wants to protect the dealer who is a buyer from orientals, he is taking the proper course.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend will make a motion and get a seconder we will delete this subsection.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister has been asking that every section be laid over until we reached this section. Now we are showing that section 21 is essential to the whole bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This was not the crux of the situation until quite recently.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister has travelled from the maritime provinces over to the Pacific. At first he referred to a shipment of potatoes from the maritime provinces down to Cuba that were about 40 per cent off. I am not aware that there is any considerable oriental population in the maritime provinces engaged in raising potatoes. Now he has travelled by aeroplane, radio, or some other means, out to the Pacific coast and is dealing with orientals. While he would be very proud to champion the cause of the oriental, it does seem to me that special consideration is being given by this subsection to the oriental that is not given to native-born Canadians—white people. That may suit him, but it does not suit me.

Mr. FRASER: That is all very well, but the point is that special consideration is being given here to orientals that is not being given to native born Canadians or white people. That does not appeal to me.

Mr. ARTHURS: With reference to the oriental in British Columbia, if I understood the minister correctly, a dealer buying potatoes say from an oriental can remove the mark after getting them in his possession, if it is a mark that is objectionable to the trade. Is that the effect of that clause?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is what he said. There is no crime committed.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that the effect of the clause? A Chinese grower puts a Chinese mark on the packages; they are delivered to the dealer, and after that the dealer can remove that mark if he likes and put on another?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that the tag follows the goods except in cases like this where the tag is objectionable because of its oriental name, then the tag is permitted to be taken off and the dealer puts on his own tag.

Mr. FRASER: Then you are giving a preference, nothing more or less, to the Chinese grower in British Columbia, which is the very thing British Columbia is complaining of all the time. You let the public buy these potatoes without knowing that they are Chinese grown. I would say that is very objectionable.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was dealing with section 21. If my hon. friend will take the responsibility of moving that this subsection (e) be removed, I will not object if the committee agrees. We have had only one case under it since the law was enacted some six years ago.

Mr. FRASER: I think the minister should take the responsibility for removing the objectionable clause.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister has charge of this bill, and he need not attempt to put any responsibility upon the opposition. We have expressed our opinion about it. He is promoting the bill; it is for him to say as to that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The agriculture committee has made no change in it. I do not know how long or how fully they considered it, because I had to leave. In the absence of any expression of opinion from them, I do not know what they want. In nine cases out of ten it will strike at white dealers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the minister wants to abdicate his functions and let us on this side of the house prepare the bill, we will accept the responsibility.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The minister has consented to let section 19, I think it is, stand. Since section 21 has an effect upon the whole of the bill, I suggest that the whole of that section be allowed to stand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is another subsection, first. We will let subsection (e) stand if my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would recommend that it stand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very well.

Mr. FRASER: I want to ask the minister about subsection (a) of section 21. Why do you confine the exemption on new potatoes to the first day of July? Suppose you have new potatoes ready for the market on the fifteenth day of June, why should you not be able to market them as quickly as on the first of July?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think it should apply sooner?

Mr. FRASER: I think it should apply earlier than that. I know we have new potatoes before the first of July in British Columbia.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I suppose that is the patriotic clause; it is desired to have it come in on the first day of July.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: You had better let the whole of section 21 stand for the present.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would like to have (f) read. We will let (e) stand. The others have passed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ERNST: With reference to section 21, I suggest to the minister that he let it stand and consider it carefully in the light of section 5 of the bill, which relates to export from Canada. Whoever drafted section 21 entirely forgot section 5. The minister has told the committee this evening that the chief object is to make a better and more uniform product for the export market, so that the potato growers in Prince Edward and New Brunswick will not be shut out of the market for Cuba. Section 5 gives the governor in council power to make export regulations. Section 21 says that the provisions of this act including export regulations shall not, for instance, apply to new potatoes; to certified seed potatoes; to what are commonly termed green onions or to other vegetables with top leaves attached; to silver skin onions and to other vegetables under clause (e). Has the minister considered the effect of section 21 in relation to section 5, and the release from the provisions of section 5 of any goods which are going into the export market? I suggest that the whole of section 21 be allowed to stand, and that consideration be given to the question of amending section 21 so as to include in it certain small producers, although I do not know how you could make any distinction between the large and the small producer.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Since my hon. friends will not discuss the saving nature of subsection (f) of section 21 and will not move an amendment to eliminate subsection (e) of that section, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 191, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Unlawful association; publishing seditious books, etc.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would like to ask the Minister of Justice one or two questions in regard to this bill. In the explanatory notes I notice this section is to be repealed, and it seems to be rather lengthy. Apparently when that section was incorporated in our statutes it was considered advisable to put some restraint upon certain organizations, societies or individuals who were propagating certain doctrines or doing certain things in this country. The various matters are specified in the section which is to be struck out, and the severity of the penalties would seem to indicate that when the bill was passed these offences were considered to be very serious indeed. This bill is very short; it simply states that section 98 is to be repealed, and all these offences and the penalties imposed are to be wiped out. My question is this: Is there anything in any statute to take the place of section 98 of the Criminal Code, imposing penalties for any of the offences mentioned under that section, or are we to suppose that the repeal of section 98 gives these persons a free hand in respect to the matters for which formerly they were severely penalized?

Mr. LAPOINTE: A bill similar to this has been adopted by this house five times, and in each case it has been rejected by the other chamber. Section 98, which this bill seeks to repeal, was placed in our statutes in 1919; at that time the sections affected were 97a and 97b, but the number of the section was changed in the revision which took place last year. At the time these two sections were inserted in the Criminal Code it was suggested that there was some unrest in the country; it was just after the war, and it was thought desirable to define certain kinds of what might be called sedition. Sedition is already subject to the disposition of the criminal code and more particularly of the common law. Ever since this amendment of 1919 was adopted the labour community of Canada have felt that it was aimed to prevent them from pursuing their ordinary activities. I do not say that that is the correct interpretation, but I know that since 1921, when I became a member of the government, every year that the Trades and Labour Congress sent delegates to interview the government this was one of the matters which they urged more particularly. They have received advice from the legal advisers of the labour unions to the effect that by stressing the point the courts might even decide that a strike was an unlawful association under the provisions of that section. I repeat that I do not say they are right in that contention, but this has been a sore spot with them ever since 1919. This house has voted five times to eliminate this section, and we are doing so again this year.

We have already in the code all that is necessary to prosecute for the crimes of sedition, seditious libed, seditious words or unlawful meetings. Section 87 deals with unlawful assemblies; section 130 deals with seditious oaths; section 132 refers to seditious words, seditious libel and seditious conspiracy. Under section 135 of the code we have provision with regard to the libel of any foreign sovereign; and in section 136 we have provision against publishing false news. As I said, under the British law sedition is an offence under the common law, and always has been such. In the British parliament it was proposed to define sedition and make it a statutory offence; the commission which was appointed for that purpose reported accordingly, but after a long debate the British parliament came to the conclusion it was better to leave it under the common law as it then was. The same thing has happened in Canada; the commissioners who prepared the Criminal Code had an article defining sedition, but after a long and important debate this house decided to leave it under the common law. That condition continued until 1919, when this amendment was placed in our statutes. At the same time section 133 which existed at that time was repealed and I intend to move an amendment in order to reinsert section 133. This was done last year and in the years previously, and it is only due to a mistake that this bill did not contain that provision. I think the house will see that parliament obviously went too far in 1919 when the section which I am now going to read was repealed:

> No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith,—
> (a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mistaken in his measures; or
> (b) to point out errors or defects in the government or constitution of the United Kingdom or of any part of it or of Canada or of any province thereof or in either house of parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada or in any legislature or in the administration of justice; or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure by lawful means the alteration of any matter in the state; or
> (c) to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred and illwill between different classes of His Majesty's subjects.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is that intended to modify acts already existing?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This was in the code until 1919, but it was repealed at that time, and I desire to reinsert it now. I read the section to show that parliament went too far in repealing it. Surely it is not seditious to criticize acts of a government. We may not like some of the criticism, but I would not go so far as to say that it constituted sedition to blame even the present government for its actions, public or otherwise. We have in the Criminal Code and in the law all that is necessary with respect to the crime of sedition.

Mr. MANION: Have we ever prosecuted or punished anyone under this section that was repealed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am glad my hon. friend has asked that question. The officers of my department tell me that to their knowledge no prosecution was ever made.

Mr. MANION: Since 1919?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Since 1919.

Mr. CHURCH: I think it would be a backward step for parliament to pass this bill. Coming from an industrial centre I wish to protest against the repeal of section 98 of the Criminal Code. Communism is rampant in this country to-day. Books are being brought in preaching revolution and European doctrines and economic principles—doctrines which the people here do not want. The Canadian people are opposed to these doctrines both from the standpoint of patriotism and loyalty and from the standpoint of labour itself. I do not believe that the labour organizations of the country approve of the repeal of this section, and this applies particularly to the trades union movement in Canada. The trades union movement has no greater enemy than the red flag of communism. In the larger centres of population the communists are preaching revolution; they are advocating the policy, when any strike takes place, of resort to force and other measures of violence. Just look at the sort of freedom that is enjoyed in the United States. Do we want communism in Canada? This country has the utmost freedom and there is nc complaint from people who want to assemble lawfully. People can hold meetings in Hyde park whenever they wish to do so, and in the city I come from labour and capital have always got along amicably. The section which this bill seeks to repeal is in my opinion necessary in the interests of labour itself. Our laws are liberal enough as they are and there is no reason why this section should be repealed. Labour and capital in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are getting along well to-day. In my opinion this bill is a backward step.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I was not aware that it was the intention of the government to have this bill considered to-night. I am wholly opposed to the passing of it, amending the legislation as it stands at the present time. I think we have to be thankful that we have a senate in Canada, and I trust that the senate, if the bill passes, will again justify its existence by declining to approve it. The reason this law was introduced was, as I remember, that there was no precise categorical definition of sedition, and it was necessary when men undertook to overthrow law and authority by violence to have something definite and to show, when they did advocate the overthrow of government and constituted order by violence, that it was a crime. And it was on the statute books as a crime: they knew what they were doing and if they committed that particular crime they would suffer, and justly so. Let us read just the first clause of section 98:

Any association—

And anyone in this house who objects to this clause should, I think, declare himself, and his constituency should know that he does object to it.

Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada—

How?

—by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

And such an association shall be subject to the law of this land. The gist of this matter is the overthrow of authority by force and violence, and I believe there is no one member of this house who is prepared to advocate that in Canada it shall not be an offence to seek by force, violence and terrorism the overthrow of government. Take any other means you like which are perfectly lawful. I resent on behalf of the labour organizations the suggestion that they are a unit in support of this amendment. They are not. There are, of course, some who are anxious, in the interests of communism—rampant communism—to get around this law so that they may not be hampered by it.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the hon. member tell me what labour organizations are in favour of retaining this legislation? He has made a definite statement. Will he prove it?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I have made a definite statement and I will prove it. There are labour men in the city I come from, and in Hamilton, who are just as strongly opposed as I am to the repeal of this law. I do not know the names of the labour organizations, but I am quite sure that a majority of the honest thinking labour men of this country are opposed to the repeal of the law as it stands. A short time ago in Port Arthur a case was tried by the Hon. Mr. Justice Kelly, with a result that was staggering to him. There was an institution set up which inculcated the destruction by force of government, law and order in Canada. It was taught in the schools on Sunday and they had a wide list of men who were pledged to that very thing. What is the benefit of the law as it stands on the statute books? ? It is simply this, that there is a distinct offence defined. Sedition is not defined in the British law so that it is clearly understood by the man on the street. It is a matter for lawyers, a matter wherein lawyers have disagreed and cases have gone from court to court. But here, as I say, is a plain offence, an offence which is clear in the mind of each one of us, and a distinct remedy for it. This house should not only pause but stop and decline to pass such a bill as this. For my part I am surprised—and surprise has been expressed before—that the Minister of Justice, in the face of offences such as the law as it stands now can deal with readily, seeks to put it into the hands of men to spread bolshevism throughout the country, men who will, if opportunity is given, attack any government by force, men who seek to humiliate the country and to attack not only governments but any institution which traverses the course they think should obtain, and who instead of doing this in the way we are all proud to have men who hold views opposite to ours do, namely, by argument, persuasion or any other lawful means, do it by the dagger, the gun and the bomb. I believe the right-minded people of all classes, labour included, are against removing this law from the statute book, and I am unwilling that it should be removed without my protest, as forceful as I can make it. I am sorry it lacks more emphasis, but I will rely upon the sound judgment of the senate if this house, for any reason, is anxious to disturb the law as it exists to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is certainly wrong when he says that the labour people are opposed to the repeal of the section. Year after year, as I have stated, the Trades and Labour Congress have asked for the repeal of this section. Mr. Tom Moore is the distinguished president of that congress and there is no higher-spirited citizen in Canada than Mr. Moore who has given a great deal of assistance in maintaining industrial peace in Canada. This is one of the sections which the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, the brotherhoods of railway employees and all the other labour organizations are protesting against; they say that it creates unrest in their ranks and amongst all classes of labour in the Dominion. I may tell my hon. friend that I believe this was hasty legislation, which in a moment of stampede created by a strike in Winnipeg, passed its three readings on the same afternoon and did not receive the attention and consideration it should have received. Therefore it is the duty of parliament to remove it from the statute book, and I do not agree with my hon. friend that the senate is doing its duty in preventing the will of the people, as expressed in the House of Commons from prevailing in Canada.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In the first place I certainly should like to comply with any reasonable request that the labour organizations may make, and no man in this country has a higher opinion of Mr. Tom Moore than I have. The minister is quite right in saying that he has been most helpful in keeping the labour organizations within legitimate lines in endeavouring in a reasonable way, to accomplish their purposes and to bring about what they desire, and I for one should like to see any of his wishes carried out if at all possible. The minister says that the labour people fear that this section may affect them, although from his observations I judge that in his opinion the section does not affect labour organizations in the way they think it may. I certainly would feel very strongly that anything in the section that affects the proper and legitimate action of the labour unions or Mr. Tom Moore's own organization should be repealed or amended, and I cannot see why the minister cannot find some way of amending it to meet their wishes. Surely, however, no one in this country will object to the first subsection of the section, which reads:

> Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

Does any reasonable person think anyone in this country should have the right to attempt to bring about industrial, governmental or economic change by the use of force, violence, or physical injury?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That depends upon what "force" means. Some people claim that a sympathetic strike is force as defined in the section.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am not a lawyer, but it would not strike me that a sympathetic strike would come under the head of force for the purposes mentioned. If there is any doubt about the matter, and if the minister believes, as he states, that this legislation was passed in a hurry under pressure, why can he not amend it in such a way as to cover that?

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is what I am endeavouring to do.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister is not amending it; he is repealing it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I want to leave the Criminal Code as it was prior to 1919.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But the minister is not suggesting any amendment to this section. He wants to repeal it altogether.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I want to leave the code as it was.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the labour organizations believe they are prejudiced by this section; if the other house has refused to agree to its repeal, and if the minister really wants to meet the wishes of the labour people, surely it is possible for him to amend the section in such a way as to show conclusively that it does not affect the labour organizations in the way they fear it does. I am not going to stand here and advocate that there should be on the statute book a law which may unreasonably prejudice a labour organization. As I said before, I should be inclined to meet sympathetically any wishes put forward by Mr. Tom Moore. But the minister has sought three times to repeal this section.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Four times.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: He does not think the labour organizations are affected by it, but if he wants to make sure they are not, why not adopt the other course and bring in an amendment which will meet with the approval of everybody and go on the statute book, rather than bring in this amendment to go forward to the senate in the hope that it will again be defeated there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. If it is defeated there again I will bring it in again next year, and I think next year there may be a different majority in the senate.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But is there not some intermediate way of doing it instead of repealing the section?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am doing my best.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is it not possible to amend the section in such a way as to meet the ideas of the labour organizations and make sure that the amendment will become law, instead of repealing this section again and perhaps have it thrown out by the other chamber? I submit that the minister is adopting a course that does not look as if he was really trying to meet the wishes of Tom Moore and the labour organizations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The labour people are very much pleased at the course I am taking.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If this section were amended in such a way as to make it plain that it did not apply to the ordinary labour organizations, as they fear it does, would the minister not be a great deal surer of accomplishing what he is aiming at than by seeking to repeal this section in exactly the same way as he has already done three times? If he really wants to accomplish the purpose he says he has in mind, is there not some other way of doing it? I ask him if he will not consider amending this section.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am amending it. I repeat, the English law on sedition, and it is our law, is quite sufficient to cover any case of sedition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On several occasions we have had this amendment proposed in the house. I have been interested in this legislation since 1919, when it was enacted. I have no desire to recall in detail the trouble we had in Winnipeg at that time. I myself arrived in Winnipeg in the middle of the strike, just about the time this legislation was enacted, and so was able to see not only how adversely it affected labour at that period but how it might affect labour adversely in any crisis that might arise in the future. A great deal has been said with regard to the position which the communists hold in this country at the present time, and of the serious menace they are to the country. I think I am free to speak with regard to the communists, since I do not belong to the communist party, and since the Independent Labour party to which I belong, has been challenged at the polls by the communists and bitterly denounced. The wildest statements have been made in regard to them not very far from the chamber in which we are now sitting. It has been said that the communists and the One Big Union are one and the same thing. As a matter of fact, if there is any bitter fight being waged at the present time in Canada, it is between the communists and the One Big Union, and any man who confounds two distinct groups in the labour party shows either that he is absolutely ignorant of conditions or that he is wilfully trying to confuse the public mind. We have some dangers in this country, but not the least of these dangers arises from the lack of knowledge on the part of the great majority of the people as to the various labour organizations, and what their objectives really are.

Let me spend a few minutes in reviewing the points that ought to be discussed with regard to this legislation. One of the previous speakers has read the first clause of the section which is being repealed, and he says that no sane man can object to this clause as it stands on the statute book. I want to say that I object to it most decidedly, and in so speaking I am speaking on behalf of the great labour movement of this country, not merely on behalf of some O.B.U. or some Canadian brotherhood organization, or some communist organization, or some left wing organization, or some independent labour party or Canadian labour party, or the Trades and Labour Congress, but on behalf of every one of these organizations, because they all realize that this section is a distinct menace to trade unionists. It says:

> Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about . . . . any industrial or economic change within Canada, by use of force—

"Any economic change by use of force." Surely a lot of us want economic and industrial changes. Even in this house we want tariff changes, economic changes. The whole point of that paragraph lies in the definition of the phrase, "by use of force." One of the Toronto members said that the Trades and Labour Congress had no worries in this regard. That is not true. I hold in my hand the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada report of their proceedings at the thirty-sixth annual convention, and I find that as far back as that, and every year since, this plea has been reiterated by the congress.

Mr. GEARY: What date is that report?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: September 13th to 18, 1920. This report contains a review of this new law which had only a short time before been placed on the statute book, and I find here the legal opinion of Mr. J. G. O'Donoghue, barrister of that city we hear so much about, Toronto, on certain stated questions submitted to him by the executive council of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. This report, I might say, was placed in my hands by Mr. Tom Moore personally several years ago, when we were discussing this matter, and Mr. Moore was urging that we take action along this line. Mr. O'Donoghue says:

> The use of these words leaves the door wide open for the prosecution of every trade union in Canada. If "force" is intended to mean "physical force" it should be so stated. The pressure or influence exerted by trade unions is the exercise of "force". That can be interpreted to come within the above section. Read the following extract from Judge Metcalfe's charge to the jury in the Russell case:

That was one of the Winnipeg cases which was in the minds of everyone at the time. Mr. O'Donoghue continues with this extract from Judge Metcalfe's charge to the jury in the Russell case:

> "Mr. Russell gave us his idea of a sympathetic strike. He said, 'When a dispute originates between an employer and his employees, and when the labour organizations see that organization being beat, they come to their assistance by calling a strike to force their employers to bring force to bear upon the original disputants to make settlement.' That is Russell's definition given in the box. . . . . Force, force, force."

Mr. O'Donoghue continues:

> Any dictionary will show that "force" has a very wide meaning, covering "influence", "pressure", and the like. If the statute meant "physical force" it would not go on to enumerate "violence" and "physical injury". A court would be quite justified in interpreting the word in its natural or dictionary sense.
> As for the word "terrorism" some light can be thrown upon the interpretation of it, by that given it in the Winnipeg case of Rex v. Russell. There Judge Metcalfe says:
> "To walk around about, for instance, to a place where people are employed in large numbers, and to 'boo', gentlemen of the jury, as much terror may be inspired through that as by two or three fighting chaps coming along with bludgeons. Take it from me, in strikes you can incite terror without hitting a man over the head. You can incite terror of starvation; you can incite terror of thirst. Is not that quite as effective as inciting by bodily violence? Your stomach will bring you quicker than a crack on the head sometimes. If it is possible that picketing can be done in this country, then the lawful method of picketing is so ineffective that it is a reasonable inference that in a strike of this class, unlawful means would be intended to be applied. Sometimes it has a deterring effect upon people's minds by exposing them to have their motions watched, and to encounter black looks."

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does he think that any organization in Canada should be permitted to seek economic or industrial changes by violence or injury to persons?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Most decidedly no. But I fancy this section is misunderstood. I say that in time of crisis the word "force" is understood to be violence, whereas it may simply mean such force as is commonly used in a peaceful strike—pressure. That was the interpretation actually given to it in 1919 by the late Judge Metcalfe.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I can quite appreciate that there might be a very honest misunderstanding in regard to the meaning of the word "force"; but will the hon. gentleman look that over and see if the section could not be changed by cutting out the word "force" so that it would read "violence and injury to persons"?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That would be a great improvement, but the criminal code already covers it. I do not want to go back over old disputes but, remember this, that an attempt was made to send men out of this country without trial. That is what some of us have been trying to bring before the house again and again. It was in those hectic days that this kind of legislation was put upon the statute books. Now allow me to examine two or three other clauses of this statute. Subsection (2):

Any property, real or personal, belonging or suspected—

I want hon. members to note that.

—or suspected to belong to an unlawful association, or held or suspected to be held by any person for or on behalf thereof may, without warrant, be seized or taken possession of by any person thereunto authorized by the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police,

And so on. Let me emphasize that. Any property belonging to or suspected to belong to such an organization may be seized, and that without warrant. In that connection I quote a well-known statement made many years ago by Lord Camden:

Where is the written law,

He asks.

—that gives any magistrate such a power? I can safely answer there is none, and therefore it is too much for us without authority to pronounce a practice legal which would be subversive of all the comforts of society. If suspicion at large should be a ground of search, especially in the case of libels (i.e. seditious publications), whose home would be safe?

I think hon. gentlemen will surely recognize the reasonableness of our objection to having suspicion as a ground for the seizure of goods. I proceed to subsection (4):

In any prosecution under this section, if it be proved that the person charged has—
(a) attended meetings of an unlawful association;

This might mean that if I stopped at a street meeting or went into a hall where a meeting was being conducted by some society that advocated strikes and similar means of action, and Judge Metcalfe's interpretation was applied, I would be liable to prosecution under this section. This clause (a) is very broad. I have often gone to meetings to find out what was going on or because I had a suspicion that it was of a nature that I did not want to go on, but under those circumstances I might be charged with being a member of the association.

(b) spoken publicly in advocacy of an unlawful association.

A trade union might be regarded as unlawful.

(c) distributed literature of an unlawful association by circulation through the post office mails of Canada or otherwise, it shall be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that he is a member of such unlawful association.

I have always entertained the idea that British justice presumes a man innocent until he is proved guilty. In this case the presumption is that he is guilty until he can prove himself innocent. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is not in harmony with British traditions.

An hon. MEMBER: A postman delivering such literature would be liable.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. Then subsection (5):

Any owner, lessee, agent or superintendent of any building, room, premises or place, who knowingly permits therein any meeting of an unlawful association—

—becomes liable to a fine or to imprisonment, or to both fine and imprisonment. In practice, labour organizations have found it very difficult to rent buildings because the superintendent or agent was afraid he might get into trouble; and he might very well be afraid. Let me quote subsection (6):

If any judge of any superior or county court, police or stipendiary magistrate, or any justice of the peace, is satisfied by information on oath that there is reasonable ground for suspecting that any contravention of this section has been or is about to be committed, he may issue a search warrant under his hand, authorizing any peace officer, police officer, or constable with such assistance as he may require, to enter at any time any premises or place mentioned in the warrant, and to search such premises or place, and every person found therein, and to seize and carry away any books, periodicals, pamphlets, pictures, papers, circulars, cards, letters, writings, prints, handbills, posters, publications or documents which are found on or in such premises or place, or in the possession of any person therein at the time of such search, and the same, when so seized, may be carried away and may be forfeited to His Majesty.

I do not wish to say anything that would lower the dignity of our various officials, but I think some of us have met stipendiary magistrates and justices of the peace who were not particularly broad-minded, and yet a man of that character may, because of his suspicion, order a man's home to be broken into and his goods seized. I say that is an intolerable situation, and I fancy this act has remained on the statute book this long simply because no prosecution has ever been attempted under it. Let me go on a little further with subsection (8).

Any person who prints, publishes, edits, issues, circulates, sells or offers for sale or distribution any book, newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, picture, paper, circular, card, letter, writing, print, publication or document of any kind, in which is taught, advocated, advised or defended, or who shall in any manner teach, advocate, or advise or defend the use, without authority of law, of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, as a means of accomplishing any governmental, industrial or economic change, or otherwise, shall be guilty of an offence, and liable to imprisonment for not more than twenty years.

That is a very broad clause under which it is very easy to convict a man. Further than that, anyone who imports such literature into Canada is liable. Mr. Chairman, I could go into the library of parliament and find fifty books at least on one shelf teaching anarchism, philosophically or otherwise, books which are liable to come under that ban. I know of some books of this character which have been seized in the mail. I know of some people who innocently ordered by mail from Great Britain books which they had seen advertised, and these people can be prosecuted under this section. Yes, my friend from Calgary (Mr. Adshead) suggests; what about the seizure in the public library at Calgary? That, of course, was at this particular period. Books were actually seized from the public library of Calgary which were thought to be seditious; and I know of the case of a man, now a member of the provincial house in Alberta, whose home was violently entered at night and a number of books taken, books which he had brought over from England, many of them books which he had treasured for the past twenty or thirty years. They were seized and he has never been able to get them back.

I want to call attention to the safeguards that were in the original Criminal Code. But first a few words as to the definition of sedition. I think I cannot do better than read from a recognized authority, Crankshaw, which every lawyer knows, where the author says:

In section 102 of the English draft code there is, in addition to what is above contained in article 123, a clause defining a seditious intention as,—

"An intention,—

"to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the person of Her Majesty, or the government and constitution of the United Kingdom or of any part of it as by law established, or either house of parliament, or the administration of justice; or to excite Her Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure, otherwise than by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in church or state by law established; or to raise discontent or disaffection amongst Her Majesty's subjects; or to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of such subjects."

And it goes on to say:

The Canadian code as originally drawn and introduced into parliament contained a clause defining a seditious intention in terms similar to those above quoted from section 102 of the English draft; but the clause evoked a long discussion and a great deal of criticism during the consideration of the bill in committee; and it was ultimately decided to strike out the clause, and leave the definition to common law.

In tracing, with his usual clearness and ability, the history of this most interesting branch of the law, Sir James F. Stephen says, that there are "two different views of the relation between rulers and their subjects. If the ruler is regarded as the superior of the subjects, as being by the nature of his position presumably wise and good—the rightful ruler and guide of the whole population—it must necessarily follow that it is wrong to censure him openly, that if he is mistaken his mistake should be pointed out with the utmost respect, and that whether mistaken or not no censure should be cast upon him likely or designed to diminish his authority. If, on the other hand, the ruler is regarded as the agent or servant and the subject as the wise and good master who is obliged to delegate his power to the so-called ruler because, being a multitude, he cannot use it himself, it is obvious that this sentiment must be reversed. Every member of the public who censures the ruler for the time being exercises in his own person the right which belongs to the whole of which he forms part. He is finding fault with his servant. If others think differently they can take the other side of the dispute, and the utmost that can happen is that the servant will be dismissed and another put in his place, or perhaps that the arrangement of the household will be modified. To those who hold this view fully, and carry it out to all its consequences there can be no such offence as sedition. There may indeed be breaches of the peace, which may destroy or endanger life, limb or property, and there may be incitements to such offences, but no imaginable censure of the government, short of censure which has an immediate tendency to produce such a breach of the peace ought to be regarded as criminal."

At the present day, when the right of forming political organizations, of holding political meetings, and of giving—through the press, or on the public platform—free expression to our thoughts upon and criticisms of public men and affairs, is so well recognized, a written or printed publication, a public speech, or an assembly, meeting, convention or combination would have to be of an extremely vicious, inflammatory, and dangerous character to form the basis of a successful prosecution for a seditious libel, a seditious speech, or a seditious conspiracy.

Now we removed in 1919 the safeguards which had hitherto existed, and which are intended by the amendment of the Minister of Justice to be replaced upon the statute book. I think no one will suggest that it is not a fair statement that we should have on our statute book a safeguard which provides that:

No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith,—

(a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mistaken in his measure; or

(b) to point out errors or defects in the government or constitution of the United Kingdom, or of any part of it, or of Canada or any province thereof, or in either house of parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada, or in any legislature, or in the administration of justice; or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure, by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in the state; or

(c) to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred and ill-will between different classes of His Majesty's subjects.

I am urging that that be replaced. It was cut out in 1919, and we ask that it be again inserted. Labour is asking that, and surely labour is not unreasonable in asking to have restored the safeguards that are in the British code.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Progress reported.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I ask the Minister of Justice if he is going to have this bill reprinted showing the proposed amendments? If not, will he not send a copy at any rate to the leader of the opposition? This is a bill which has been here for weeks and weeks.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will give a copy of it. It is the bill as it was last year and the other years, to reinsert the section as it was before 1919.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I should think that as a point of order it is not validly before the house at all. This is an entirely different piece of legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, it is simply to make the legislation exactly as it was.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, April 24, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

First report of select standing committee on privileges and elections—Mr. Denis (Joliette).

WEST YORK VACANCY

ISSUE OF WARRANT BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the electoral district of West York, consequent upon the resignation of Sir Henry Lumley Drayton, sitting member therefor.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 219, respecting the Sisters of Charity of the Northwest Territories—Mr. Marcil.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the unanimous consent of the house for the second reading of this bill now, that it may be sent to the standing committee on private bills. This is a senate bill, and merely authorizes this order to increase its power to hold property, and other powers incidental thereto.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT CONVENTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MAXIME RAYMOND (Beauharnois) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I would like to ask the Secretary of State if Canada will be represented at the International copyright convention which is to be held in May next at Rome?

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased, in answer to the hon. member for Beauharnois, to inform him that Canada will be represented at the International copyright convention which will begin on the 7th of May next, at Rome. In this connection I might add that this will be the first time Canada is represented as a separate and autonomous member of the International Union for the protection of authors' copyrights, which is in keeping with the evolution of our policy of representation abroad in all spheres of activities.

Canada will have as its representatives the Hon. Mr. Philippe Roy, Commissioner for Canada, at Paris, and Mr. Jean Désy, legal adviser of the Department for External affairs, at Ottawa.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

RECLASSIFICATION OF TECHNICAL OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I would like to ask the government if they are still negotiating with the Civil Service Commission with regard to the reclassification of technical men in the Department of Agriculture, and if so what progress has been made.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): I have no special data with regard to the technical men in the Department of Agriculture, but the whole question of increasing the salaries of the technical men is still under consideration and is before the Civil Service Commission.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has asked for and obtained a report in regard to the payment of claims made by depositors in the Home Bank. If he has received the report will he tell us what action has been decided on by the government?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I have received a memorandum from the officers of the exchequer court advising that there were not sufficient funds to pay thirty-five cents on the dollar to the depositors in the Home bank. The government have not yet reached a conclusion as to whether an amount will be placed in the estimates or whether a bill will be submitted to carry out the original intention of the House of Commons in passing that legislation, but I may tell my hon. friend that we are favourably disposed towards meeting them at least in part.

DANGER TO BORDER RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. C. ROBINSON (West Essex): I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of External Affairs to a very serious situation which exists along the Detroit river. Three times within the last month stray bullets fired by American preventive officers in their efforts to enforce the Volstead Act have lodged on the Canadian side. On one occasion a bullet passed through a house in Sandwich within two feet of a four year old child; the bullet was found and shown to be from a high powered rifle such as these preventive officers carry. On Saturday last Mr. Edward Warren of 656 Ouellette Avenue was driving from Walkerville to Windsor on the River Front road; at 7.15 p.m. a bullet went through the windshield of his car and nearly blinded him with broken glass. Apparently some of these officers are not accustomed to carry firearms, and I would ask the minister to draw this matter to the attention of the United States authorities, and to ask that these officers point their guns the other way.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think it is fortunate that my hon. friend has brought this matter to the attention of the house. I will immediately draw the attention of our minister at Washington to what my hon. friend has said, and I have no doubt that a conference by him with the Secretary of State will be all that is necessary to have the wishes of my hon. friend complied with.

On the orders of the day.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I would like to ask the Minister of Immigration and Colonization if he has any further information with regard to the employment situation in Winnipeg, to which I referred yesterday?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I have no information other than I gave my hon. friend yesterday.

ELIGIBILITY OF WOMEN FOR SENATE

JUDGMENT OF SUPREME COURT ON QUESTION SUBMITTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I would ask the Minister of Justice if he has received any report with regard to the reference to the supreme court of the question of whether or not women are eligible to sit in the Senate.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I have been informed that the judgment of the supreme court was delivered to-day, and their judgment is that under the British North America Act women are not eligible for appointment to the senate. I understand that the basis for the judgment is that the act must be interpreted in the meaning it had when it was adopted in 1867, and that at that time the expression "fit and qualified persons" as it appears in the act could not apply to women as they were then disqualified for appointment to public offices. The judgment was unanimous. In view of this judgment, and in view of the fact that women in this country now have an equal franchise with men, and in view of the further fact that one of the seats in this house is occupied by a woman, the government have decided that they should have the equal right to sit in the other chamber, and means will be taken to secure an amendment to the British North America Act in that respect.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

IMPROVEMENT AND BEAUTIFICATION OF OTTAWA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 218 to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make provision for certain capital expenditures by the federal district commission to carry out a plan of improvement and beautification in the centre of Ottawa as the capital of Canada, also to extend the period of time of the annual appropriation to be made to the commission for the purpose of maintaining improvements which have already been made. The act proposes an immediate appropriation of $3,000,000 as an amount to serve for capital expenditure in connection with improvements which the commission has in contemplation. Provision is made whereby this amount may be advanced to the commission direct by the Minister of Finance and made a charge upon the consolidated revenue, or advanced upon the issue of securities by the commission, these to extend over a period of thirty years. The principal and interest of such securities are to be guaranteed by the Department of Finance and to be redeemed by a sinking fund to be maintained by the department for that purpose. The annual appropriation for purposes of maintenance is being reduced from $250,000 per annum at which it now stands to $200,000 per annum.

That the bill is being introduced at the present time is due to the fact that last fall the government was advised by the federal district commission and by the city council that the owners of the Russell house property were contemplating the immediate demolition of that property and had applied to the city for the right to erect a new modern hotel on the site. The federal commission pointed out that if that step were taken at the present time it would interfere with what they believed was a development which should be made and made speedily within the central part of the city; and the city council pointed out that unless the government could give some immediate reason why a permit should not be granted to the hotel authorities to go on with the erection of the new hotel, the board of control would be obliged to give the permit for that purpose.

I might say that at the time the government was informed of this proposal on the part of the Russell house owners the work of demolishing the old property had already commenced, and the government was given to understand that plans had been called for and were being prepared for the new hotel which was about to be erected. It was apparent that either a decision had to be reached immediately or in the event of a postponement, and the property being subsequently acquired, that a very much greater outlay would be necessary to indemnify the owners against expenditures which they might be put to in the interval of time between that at which the government might authorize the immediate expropriation of the property and the time at which parliament might be in a position to grant authority for the expropriation.

In the circumstances, and more particularly because of other circumstances which I shall mention, it seemed to the administration advisable to give to the federal district commission the authority to expropriate immediately the properties in question. The further reasons were the following: to have allowed the owners of the hotel to erect a modern hotel on the old site, having regard to improvements that the government had already made and improvements that were in immediate contemplation, became the equivalent of presenting the finest site in the capital of Canada, to a company which was proposing to build a hotel in no way equal to the Chateau Laurier, but one that while large and serviceable would not, it was thought, in any way approach in architectural beauty the other hotel which is in the near vicinity of the parliament buildings. It would have meant that going from parliament hill into the heart of the city the new hotel would be the structure immediately facing all the visitors to parliament hill. It would have meant further that so far as the company was concerned they would have had as a frontage for their hotel the advantage of the expropriation that had already been made between Wellington street and Sparks street west of Elgin street and this side of the post office and an immediate view of the houses of parliament. They would have had at one side all the improvement which is being made on the driveway between the canal and the present Russell house property, and they would virtually be given by the country this exceptional environment, which the government felt ought really to belong to the country as a whole. In the circumstances, conferences were held with the federal district commission and with the members of the board of control and the city council as to whether in some way an arrangement for joint action could not be made between the city and the commission, in the event of the government undertaking to allow the expropriation of the Russell house properties. It was discovered, after some little conference, that the city was prepared to co-operate with the federal district commission to make the central part of the city all that the members of this house and the citizens of Canada generally could wish the centre of the capital of the Dominion to be.

In order that I may bring to the minds of the members of the house the nature of the proposed improvements and just what was before us as we were considering the matter, I would recall that the government of Canada owns practically all the land that is on the south shore of the Ottawa river from the old Perley home on the west to beyond the archives building on the east. The parliament buildings stand practically in the centre of that stretch. Opposite the parliament buildings is the property on which the Chateau Laurier is at present situated with Major Hill park immediately behind it, and the Daly building which is property the government of Canada has acquired. That means that all the land which lies immediately to the south of government property along Wellington street between the east block and the Chateau Laurier, and which is intersected by the Rideau canal, is pretty much in the centre of property now owned by the government. It is also in the centre of the city, and for the most part to all intents and purposes already a large park area. There are still some buildings on parts of it, but at comparatively little cost to-day the whole can be made quickly and readily into a great central park, facing, as I have said, on property already owned by the government.

There is the open space with which hon. members are familiar, between Wellington and Sparks streets and between Elgin street and the post office, and which has been expropriated. From there to the station except for the city post office it is all open space. The Rideau canal is government property and the property to the right of it also owned by the government, constitutes, at the present time, a driveway in the course of improvement. A large area has been opened up by the commission on the property formerly occupied by the old Dey's rink which fronts on Laurier avenue. Beyond Laurier avenue there is Cartier square which is already a park owned by the Dominion and beyond Cartier square are the grounds of the collegiate institute, the normal school and the model school, all of which are government-owned properties. Those latter properties are owned by the provincial government. Hon. members will therefore see that with the exception of the few buildings that front west on Elgin street and a few buildings fronting on Nicholas street on the far side of the canal which are of an antiquated character, omitting a few principal structures that face on Rideau street beyond the railway station, all the area to the north and south lying between the Ottawa river and Lisgar street and to the east and west between Elgin street and Nicholas street is to-day virtually one large park area.

The commission pointed out to the government that without any very great expenditure, having regard to the significance of the properties to be acquired, this vast area might be made into a park in the very centre of the capital of Canada. As I have said, the government felt that to allow the most important part of that property to remain in the hands of private owners and be used for a public hotel would, in the light of the circumstances I have mentioned, be very short-sighted and would show a distinct lack of vision on the part of the administration in regard to the future development of the capital of our country. To allow members to see the scheme of development which is proposed I have had a plan prepared by the commission. If I could have copies of these plans distributed, hon. members would be in a position to follow more easily what is proposed with respect to the development that is contemplated.

As hon. members well know, the business centre of the city so far as traffic is concerned has come more and more to be that particular part of Ottawa lying between Elgin street on the one side and the central station on the other. It is also the part that is for the most part used as an approach to and as an egress from parliament hill. Although our grounds of parliament have a main entrance, it is not used to anything like the same extent as the entrance at the head of Elgin street. That means that traffic more and more is concentrated at the very doors of parliament, and already it is evident, I think, to all who have given any thought to the question, that there is need for a better regulation and distribution of traffic in the immediate vicinity of these houses of parliament. The commission therefore proposes as a central feature of the development, if parliament appropriates the money for the purpose, to make a large circular space around which the traffic of the city will have to move in one direction in the area through which Sparks street runs at the present time and which is bounded on the south by the present Russell house and on the north by the square that has already been expropriated. The idea would be to have something corresponding to what in the city of London, England, one sees at Piccadilly circus or Oxford circus whereby in the centre of the city the traffic would be obliged to move one way around the sides of a circle and into which particular area the different streets would run. That centre would be virtually the heart of the capital. In all probability, when the erection of the national war memorial is further under consideration it will be thought advisable that the memorial should be placed in the centre of that circle.

May I add that at the present time, as hon. members know, there is no single point at which the parliament buildings in their entirety can be viewed from any distance? Beautiful as they are, prominently as they are placed on this hill, there is not in Ottawa any point at which, when one gets beyond Wellington street, these buildings can be viewed as a whole. If the park project which is proposed is carried through, there will be given from the greater part of the park a commanding view of the parliament buildings. Indeed it is proposed that there should be constructed from the Laurier avenue bridge a driveway which will run diagonally through the heart of the park and which will, coming up to the approach at Elgin street entrance, afford to anyone approaching the parliament buildings a complete view of their imposing front. In other words, a visitor to the city standing on Laurier avenue bridge, situated as it is at present, would get from that point an unobstructed view of the main entrances of the houses of parliament. The memorial tower in the centre would be practically in the centre of that view and the avenue that would approach the building would be the main avenue to the houses of parliament. All of us, I think, regret only too sincerely that when the buildings were placed where they are, some system of city or town planning was not followed whereby there would have been an adequate and dignified approach to the houses of parliament. But if we feel the lack of that approach to-day; if we feel there has been an omission in that particular in the past, I am inclined to believe that those who come after us will realize the omission even more than we do, and will regard us as having been remiss if, seeing the situation as we now see it, we do not endeavour to improve and rectify it.

If hon. members will look at the plan which the federal district commission have drafted of what they have proposed, they will see that it virtually corresponds with what I have in this brief way sought to outline. Having regard to the properties that lie on the east side of the canal and to the west of Nicholas street, may I say further that for the most part they are already owned by either the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or the Canadian National Railways? I have personally had talks with Mr. Beatty, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and with Sir Henry Thornton, of the Canadian National Railways, and asked if their companies would be prepared to co-operate with the city and with the commission in improving that particular area in so far as their interest in it is concerned, and I have their assurances that they will be only too happy to further to whatever extent may be necessary so far as their companies are concerned the work of the improvement and beautification of the heart of the capital of Canada.

May I say that the government naturally was hesitant about adopting this proposal before having an opportunity of submitting the project in its entirety to parliament, but as I have just explained, it was a matter of then deciding or of necessitating later on through delay a very much larger outlay. Moreover, so far as the decision itself is concerned, and that is what I think bears immediately on our consideration of the matter here, it would appear to be a case of deciding now or never whether these particular properties shall be obtained. Naturally a time comes in the development of every city where new buildings take the place of old ones, and unless the government takes steps immediately to acquire the properties I have mentioned, it is altogether probable that new structures of a very costly character will be erected, and that any future government will find it all but impossible to proceed with a development of the kind.

Had the government been obliged to trust solely to its own judgment in this matter, possibly the decision would have been as it is, but fortunately the government had before it the expressions of view and opinion of hon. members of this house during the last session when the amendment was brought in to the Ottawa Improvement Commission Act, and the name of the commission was changed to that of its present designation as the federal district commission. At that time several hon. members of the house spoke with reference to the appropriation which the government was then asking from parliament, and I think almost without exception—there was exception taken on the part of one or two—but almost without exception the expression of view as given from all parts of the house was that the government's request for the purpose for which the appropriation was intended was far too modest. The then leader of the opposition, the hon. Mr. Guthrie, member for South Wellington, speaking for himself and I judged for his friends in his party, said that he thought the appropriation we had asked for should be several times what it was, and he very wisely, I think, drew attention to the importance of making changes without loss of time and of seeking to make Ottawa, as it should be, worthy in all respects as the capital of the Dominion. My hon. friend the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) was in the house at the time and participated in the debate, and if not in express terms, was, I think on the whole most sympathetic with the views of the then leader of the opposition. My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) also spoke and expressed approval of what the government was then doing and his belief, I think, that for the capital we could not go too far in planning further developments along right lines. From among the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite, the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Garland) also spoke, strongly advocating the appropriation of a much larger sum. Then my friend the leader of the Progressives mentioned, if I recollect aright, or if he himself personally did not, some of his following did express their approval of the course the government was then taking, and I know that one hon. member in particular, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), said that he thought there had been great neglect in the approaches to the parliament buildings, and he advocated steps being taken in the near future which would improve the approaches to parliament hill. In these circumstances I think I am correct in saying that the government was justified at least in feeling that when it came to parliament with the present proposal, hon. members, in view of what had been said, as well as what was left unsaid, would view with approval the step which is now being taken.

May I add that there are other reasons why I believe the house would be justified in giving its approval to the present bill? The proposal has now been before the country for some little time, and the press in all parts of the country has made observations with respect to it. I have yet to discover from any journal of importance a criticism of what is being proposed. Throughout the Dominion there is a feeling that the capital of the country should be made worthy not only of its present but of its future. If this is to be done, something along the lines now being proposed is necessary.

We had in Ottawa last fall an important conference of the premiers of the several provinces with members of the federal government. The subject of the improvement of the capital along the lines indicated was not taken up as a matter of formal discussion at any meeting of the conference, but personally I had a word with the premiers of the provinces as to their opinion, from the point of view of their respective provinces, of what the Dominion was about to undertake in the matter of the improvement of the capital. I do not think that I am misrepresenting any of them when I say that I gathered from their expressions of opinion very hearty approval of a proposal such as is now being presented to the house.

May I add in particular one further justification for the step which the government is now proposing? In 1913, before the war, the government of Sir Robert Borden appointed a commission known as the "federal plan commission on a general plan for the cities of Ottawa and Hull." The commission was appointed in September, 1913, and its members were:

His Worship, the mayor of Ottawa.

His Worship, the mayor of Hull.

Sir Alexandre Lacoste, K.C., of the city of Montreal.

Herbert S. Holt, Esq., of the city of Montreal.

Frank Darling, Esq., of the city of Toronto.

R. Home Smith, Esq., of the city of Toronto.

The order in council appointing the commission charged it with the duty of——taking all necessary steps to draw up and perfect a comprehensive scheme or plan looking to the future growth and development of the city of Ottawa and the city of Hull, and their environs, and particularly providing for the location, laying out and beautification of parks and connecting boulevards, the location and architectural character of public buildings, and adequate and convenient arrangements for traffic and transportation within the area in question.

The commission made its report two years later, in 1915, and I have a copy of that report in my hand. The report is a most valuable one, and undoubtedly it was prepared by the then government for the very purpose which we are now seeking to further in bringing before the house the proposal I am submitting in this bill. Without question the recommendations of the commission would, in part at least, have been acted upon long before this had the war not intervened, and may I say that the proposal now being made parallels in many respects a central feature of the proposals made by the commission appointed by Sir Robert Borden at that time. These gentlemen were of the view that it was all-important that the central part of the city should be reserved as an open space, and that the buildings surrounding it should be of a character to lend dignity and harmony to other important buildings in the capital.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say a word with respect to the obligation of parliament towards Ottawa as the capital city of the Dominion. I know it will be said by some hon. gentlemen that the government is doing a great deal for this city. We must however be careful to distinguish between what the government is doing for Ottawa as a city, and what the government is doing for Ottawa as the capital of this Dominion. It is impossible for any municipality to undertake the sort of planning and development required for the capital of a country. If it is to have a capital, a country must expect to incur obligations and expenditures incidental to its development, whether that capital be in some newly-acquired and undeveloped area, as is the case to-day with respect to the Australian capital about to be developed, or in some existing municipality. No municipality could undertake on purely municipal lines the kind of development which would be necessary to make its city a capital worthy of the country. And so I ask hon. members in considering what the government is proposing to do so from the point of view of the obligation of this parliament to the capital of Canada.

In connection with the choice of a capital, may I remind hon. members that Ottawa was not chosen originally as the capital of this great Dominion. In 1858, before confederation, this city was chosen as the capital of the two provinces that were united under the Act of Union. It was not until after practical developments had taken place on parliament hill, it was not until after the corner stone of the parliament buildings had been laid and their erection completed—all of which was done in relation to one province as it then existed—that the fathers of confederation, seeing the possibilities of Ottawa as the future capital of the Dominion, decided to have it become the national capital. Up to that time Ottawa had been a community that had but recently emerged from the backwoods. It was for the most part concerned with lumbering operations and manufacturing incidental thereto. Transportation also incidental to those developments had taken shape in different directions, but there was no general plan of the city. It had never been thought of as a capital; it was simply, as I have said, a community that had emerged out of the primitive forest and had taken shape from day to day pretty much as industrial development progressed. Then came confederation, and it was decided to make Ottawa the capital of what at the time was a dominion of but four provinces.

What I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members is this. From that stage the city continued practically as it then was, until the time when the Ottawa improvement commission was organized, and it is owing largely to this fact that to-day we find no adequate approaches to parliament hill or to the houses of parliament. I need not remind hon. members that it was not until 1905, when the prairie provinces came into confederation, that for the first time we had a Dominion extending from sea to sea, linking together organized provinces in all parts of Canada. That was only twenty-three years ago. So that when in relation to its future we speak of Ottawa as the capital of this Dominion, we have to keep in mind that this capital to-day, as representative of the whole of Canada, is a capital that speaks for but twenty-three years' growth of the Dominion constitutionally organized as it is to-day.

That being the case, what is going to be the position of Ottawa in the next twenty-three years, in the next fifty years, in the next one hundred years to say nothing of a much longer period? It is our duty to consider that situation, and I submit that if hon. members will consider the future development of the capital from that point of view they will see the wisdom of not losing further time in planning for its proper development. Already the evidences of the lack of foresight are only too manifest. Take the main approach to the front entrance of these buildings already referred to, Metcalfe street. It ought to be a magnificent boulevard and a grand approach to these houses of parliament, but as viewed from the main entrance it is pretty much in the nature of a country lane; it is not very much larger. There is practically no approach to parliament hill from Metcalfe street at the present time. The same is true of O'Connor street at the western end of the grounds; and the same was true of Elgin street until the changes made last year had come into being. These effects of the lack of foresight on the part of those who had to do with the previous development should cause us to have regard for the rapid development that will take place in the near future. We have on the other hand, an example of what can be done by a little foresight. Fortunately the Ottawa improvement commission was created some years ago. The commission was granted a limited amount of money, but it has followed a course of development of the city in laying out parks and boulevards which has given to the capital a character of its own, in which not only those who come to attend parliament have a pride, but in which with pride the whole Dominion shares. Having before us, on the one hand, the evidences of neglect and their consequences, and on the other hand, the evidences of what can be done by a little careful planning, with regard to the future, I say we would indeed be remiss in our duty, if now, at a moment when the opportunity is so great and when the omission would be so serious, we did not take full account of the opportunity and make the most of it.

In order to illustrate what I am seeking to bring home to hon. members, may I ask them to compare for a moment the capital of the Dominion with the respective capitals of the individual provinces, and see whether what the government is asking should be done for our national capital is in any sense extravagant in comparison with what the individual provinces have already done for their respective capitals. In the city of Toronto, the provincial buildings are located in Queen's park—a magnificent setting, not as fine as that of parliament hill, but rendered much more beautiful and magnificent by the approach to it. If we had an avenue running up to parliament hill comparable to University avenue in Toronto, this city would take on an entirely different complexion. My view is that parliament would not only be justified in taking but really ought to take steps immediately to make an approach to the main entrance of the houses of parliament similar to that which has been made with respect to the legislative buildings in Toronto. I am not, however, going to advocate that at the moment. I simply say that it is a step which, if not taken to-day, will be taken by some future government and will then be taken at enormously greater cost than would be involved at the present time. Then take the city of Quebec. There again you have the legislative buildings beautifully situated in a large, open space, and surrounded by improvements on which there have been vast expenditures. But take the western provinces, the newer provinces that could least afford to make large outlays on their public buildings. Look at British Columbia; the legislative buildings in Victoria are situated in surroundings infinitely finer than those of parliament hill in their relationship to the city. Come to Alberta: the grounds surrounding the legislative buildings in the city of Edmonton are, if anything, finer than those of the capital of Canada. Take the city of Regina: at one time Regina was practically a rolling prairie waste, to-day the legislative buildings in that city are situated in the centre of a very lovely park, embracing many acres of beautifully cultivated grounds with an artificial lake and other attractions. The province of Saskatchewan has felt it could make towards the improvement and the dignifying of the capital of that province an expenditure many times greater, comparatively speaking, than what is now being suggested for the capital of the Dominion of Canada. In Manitoba the surroundings of the legislative buildings represent, again, on the part of the public authorities, a much greater regard for their immediate environment and for the appearance of the city, as a provincial capital, than anything we have in this federal capital at the present time.

With regard to the other provinces, with their legislative buildings at Halifax, Nova Scotia, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and Fredericton, New Brunswick, I cannot speak with equal knowledge, although I think that, having regard to the size and the needs of each of these provinces, the immediate environment of the legislative buildings in these maritime provinces represents more in the way of sacrifice on the part of the legislatures and of the people than anything which this Dominion has made towards the improvement of its capital.

I hope I have helped to bring home what I really feel we cannot emphasize too often, namely, the position of this city as the capital of the Dominion of Canada. Ottawa is the focal centre of the Dominion; it is the capital of a dominion which is rapidly growing and which is acknowledged as the first of the dominions of the British Empire. It is the heart of a nation that has grown great not only in its own affairs but in the affairs of the world at large, and the time has come when thought cannot be given too seriously to the future possibilities of this city as a capital city.

I have made comparisons with our own provinces. But there are other comparisons which perhaps should be made when one is discussing Ottawa as the capital of a nation. Take the capitals of other countries—and these, again, I mention more for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that a country is largely known among the nations of the world by its capital. Take the city of London, the capital of Great Britain. I need not emphasize what the city of London means to the world as the capital of Great Britain. But I should like to point out just what it has cost the city of London in some particulars to make a very few changes that have become necessary largely because London is the capital—changes which might have been made a short time ago at comparatively little cost. Within the last couple of years the city of London has been obliged to spend more than $125,000,000 in the purchase of land for the purpose of cutting two new streets through the city; and many other millions have also been spent in tearing down buildings for the construction of thoroughfares. At the time of the great fire in London, Sir Christopher Wren pleaded with the authorities of the day to widen one or two of the main thoroughfares of that city. That plea was met with the same kind of objection often encountered by measures of this character namely that they do not bear all their fruit in the immediate present: it was contended that the expenditure was one that should not then be incurred. And it was not incurred. But to-day the citizens of London have had to pay on the widening of two streets alone—in addition to millions spent in tearing down different structures—the sum of $125,000,000 for the small additional leeway which has been thereby afforded.

I come now to Paris. In the eyes of the world Paris typifies France. What position did the French government take a few years ago with regard to their capital? Paris as a city had not been planned as the capital of France. The French authorities, realizing the importance of creating a dignified capital, had plans carefully studied, and an appropriation made for the improvement of the city. In 1853 the city of Paris spent $265,000,000 on Baron Haussmann's plans to open up the French capital to light and air and to create beautiful parks and boulevards. The sum of $265,000,000! Is there anyone who has visited Paris who does not feel that that investment, large as it was, has been a good one for the French people? Every visitor comes away feeling that Paris is one of the most beautiful capitals, if not the most beautiful, in the world. Indeed, one receives the impression that the French nation has had its character moulded and shaped to some considerable extent by the expression given to its capital city.

Then come to the United States. At the time Washington was decided upon as the capital of that republic, George Washington, in conference with Jefferson, the Secretary of State, foresaw that a great nation would arise upon this continent in the territory of the United States. Plans were made accordingly. Hon. members have heard of the work of L'Enfant who at that time, retained by Washington and the Secretary of State, laid out vast plans for the development of parks and driveways in what was to be the future capital of the United States. These plans were laughed at. They were declared to be ridiculous. Nevertheless they were accepted by the government, who retained the areas outlined for parks and driveways, with the result that the United States for over one hundred years has had secured to its capital many of its very beautiful parks and driveways. For an interval of years those plans fell into disuse, but a little later, at considerable expense, a commission for the beautification of Washington was appointed in order to see what further development might be carried out. That commission, including some of the great architects and sculptors of the United States, having gone very thoroughly into the matter, ultimately came back to the plans of L'Enfant, declaring that there was nothing they could recommend which would constitute an improvement on the suggestions that had been made a century before. Washington is modeled on those plans, and if I may make a comparison in order to indicate in a degree the very little that we are proposing here compared to what is obviously a pressing need of Washington to-day—and a similar need will suggest itself in this country some day—I would direct the attention of hon. members to the development which is being prosecuted in the heart of Washington, the large Mall that connects the capitol with the residence of the president. There is in Washington a park area that stretches for two miles, the whole of it forming a central park in the heart of the capital of the United States. From that park centre there radiate various driveways which help to impart to Washington the great charm which it possesses as a capital.

We are asking parliament to vote a sum sufficient to enable us to create a small central park about one-tenth the size I have suggested—or rather, I should say, one-twenty-fifth of that size—in the heart of this Canadian capital. What is Washington spending to-day towards the upkeep of the United States capital? She is contributing, towards permanent improvements in parks, apart from all that has already been spent, an annual appropriation of $245,000 and a maintenance appropriation of $705,000, or a total of $951,000—nearly a million dollars annually, just for maintenance and small improvements in the park areas which have already been developed. But in addition to that she is appropriating large sums of money for special improvements. One that is being developed at present is a bridge known as the Arlington memorial bridge, which is being constructed at a cost of $14,500,000. This is simply one approach to this park, or rather one connecting link between it and Arlington cemetery, which is being added as an additional feature of adornment to the capital of the United States. I believe it is correct to say that when one adds to the expenditures made on parks and driveways in Washington the expenditures which are made on public buildings, they total on an average for recent years about $9,000,000 a year. That is how Washington is being developed, and everyone knows that when the world speaks of Washington it gets a vision of the United States.

I shall not take up the time of the house by citing other examples beyond making mention of one which is related to another part of the British Empire. The Commonwealth of Australia found itself in a position not wholly dissimilar to that of Canada; the capital had been at Melbourne, which was not originally intended as a capital city. It was discovered amongst other things that it would mean an enormous cost properly to develop the heart of what was already a commercial city. At great expense and sacrifice the government decided to acquire an entirely new area and to make of the capital of Australia a model city. The property for the federal capital of Australia was purchased from the state of New South Wales and vested in the commonwealth on January 1, 1910. The total area is about 900 square miles, or 576,000 acres. The land set aside for the capital site comprises twelve square miles, and 100,000 acres is set apart for public buildings, military colleges, reserves, parks and roads. During the fiscal year of 1925 the federal district commission of Canberra expended £850,000, and during the fiscal year 1926, which is the latest for which I have been able to get particulars, they spent £1,719,000, and as yet the government of Australia have not begun in any measure to erect the permanent structures for that capital. I submit that we in Canada should be and are equally proud of our capital, and we wish to see it second to none so far as the capitals of the dominions comprising the British Empire are concerned.

I would like to conclude with one further reason why I hope the house will not only accept the present proposal with regard to this capital expenditure of $3,000,000, but will accept it in a graceful and unanimous spirit. Last year we celebrated in Canada the sixtieth anniversary of confederation, and if that celebration evidenced anything it disclosed the pride taken by Canadians generally in their Dominion and in the capital of the Dominion. For the first time in the history of this country, every part of the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific was linked immediately with parliament hill; the voices of those who participated in that celebration in Ottawa were heard in all parts of our country. I do not think enough has been said of the work of the diamond jubilee celebration committee, in linking up at that time all parts of Canada with the capital. That phase of the celebration was largely undertaken by Hon. Thomas Ahearn, who is the present chairman of the federal district commission. Mr. Ahearn not only gave his services gratuitously to the work of that committee, but through his instrumentality that whole vast linking up of the Dominion from coast to coast was carried out, so I am informed, practically without the expenditure of a single dollar by the committee. He was able to secure, as contributions towards that celebration from transportation companies, telephone companies, radio companies and electrical companies both in Canada and in the United States, all that was needed in the way of equipment and workmanship to make possible that exceptional feature of the celebration. The government feel that this country is fortunate in having Mr. Ahearn as the chairman of the federal district commission, and that we would be furthering the wishes of the people of Canada as a whole if, in connection with the diamond jubilee celebration, we could have through a further development in the beautification of this capital city some feature commemorative of that event, which might also serve as some recognition on the part of this generation of the work of the fathers of confederation. We of to-day have inherited these buildings and their surroundings, and we enjoy everything we have by way of their beauty and inspiration because of the work of those who preceded the present generation. I do not think we could more worthily honour the fathers of confederation and the vision which they had as to the future of Canada than by appropriating a sum sufficient to provide in the heart of this city, in connection with the celebration we had last year, a park which will be known to future generations as Confederation Park, and which will be commemorative of that celebration and of the contribution made by this generation to the work of the fathers of confederation. I would ask hon. members of the house to believe that this was one of the objects which the government had in mind when they gave their sanction to the expropriations to which I have referred.

I should like to put on record one or two thoughts I have in regard to the future development of Ottawa as the capital of Canada. I believe no country in the world has been so fortunate as Canada in the natural beauty of its capital city, with its environs, its commanding position, its surrounding mountains and forests, its beautiful rivers. Ottawa is located by the side of a river, as is the case with many other capitals. London, as hon. members know, is situated on the banks of the Thames; Paris on the Seine; Rome on the Tiber; Washington on the Potomac, and other capital cities are similarly situated. None of these however, have in their rivers anything comparable to the Ottawa river into which flow, within the federal district the Rideau and Gatineau rivers. Running through the heart of this city there is also the Rideau canal, which to all intents and purposes is a fine river in itself. I submit that the federal district commission should endeavour to secure both banks of all the river courses. Fortunately up to the present much of the banks of these rivers and the canal have been secured. Nothing could be done which would be more in the future interest of this city than to have the land along both sides of the Ottawa river acquired for public purposes, as far as it can be reasonably acquired, and in so far as that has not already been done. Similarly, there should be secured the land along both sides of the Rideau river and the Rideau canal. I am not saying this can be done, or that it will be done, but I think it should be done, and I think such a step would go far to make this capital what it should be in years to come. I also think, as I have already said, that the approach to parliament hill along Metcalfe street should be made more dignified, as befits this capital; that approach should be made two or three times its present width. I believe all the properties facing parliament Hill should be owned and controlled by this government in order to prevent structures being erected thereon which may destroy the harmony and beauty of the buildings on this hill. More than that—and this does not relate to the immediate present but to the future.—I believe there should be acquired in connection with this capital and the sooner the better a great tract of land, in the nature of a national park, which will be a fitting adjunct to the capital of our country. All this could be done to-day at a comparatively small cost and I believe that no investment the country could make would mean as much to the future of the capital of Canada as these particular developments if they are carried out.

There is one further step which I think will become necessary, namely that the capital of Canada be placed under the control of a federal district commission. When that step is to be taken is not for me to say at the moment. It might involve changes in the representation in parliament and might more appropriately be considered at a time when a redistribution measure is before the house. But I do think that sooner or later, and perhaps, having regard to the future, the sooner the better, this capital of the Dominion should be placed under the control of a federal district commission. The present action may prove a step in that direction.

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that as we look upon the countries of the past and the countries of the present, we find more and more reason to attach great significance to the proper development of our capital. When we speak of ancient Greece we think of Athens and all that Athens stood for, and we judge of the character of the ancient Greeks largely by the types of buildings and what is left by way of remnants of architecture in that city which in the days of its greatness was the capital of Greece. When we think of the Roman Empire our thoughts turn to Rome and to what is there left of monuments of the past, as the embodiment of the spirit of that day. Similarly when we turn to other countries, to Great Britain, to the United States, to France, to Belgium, we see in what there is in architecture and in art in their capitals something symbolic of the genius of the peoples. So too with our Dominion; the capital is becoming increasingly the focal point of this great country. It is the point to which all eyes of this Dominion are turned; and not only that, but when people think of Canada it is to the capital of Canada that all eyes of the British Empire and of the world are turned. This capital is the seat of the government of the country. It should be and is something more than the seat of government. It is here at the capital of Canada that we have the residence of the representative of His Majesty the King. It is here that we have the official residence of the diplomatic representative of the nation to the south, the legation of the United States. It will be the future home of the diplomatic representatives of other countries as from time to time they come to have their respective representations and legations in Canada. It should be the home not only of government and of diplomacy in Canada, but it should also be and is in large measure already the home of the sciences and of art and of letters. We have in the city archives which are second to none of any country in the world. We have a national art gallery with art treasures of great value to this nation. We have a national museum which is an important national possession. We are planning at this time the development of important laboratories for scientific research. Our public buildings, as far as their architectural merits are concerned, are with few exceptions worthy of our country. In addition to the houses of parliament there are other public buildings which constitute exceptionally beautiful specimens of architecture, such as the Chateau Laurier, some of the churches, and I am happy also to say, some of the buildings erected by great companies. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's building, erected on lines of rare architectural beauty, is a building worthy of the great capital of this Dominion. We may hope and I believe expect that other companies will follow the examples which have already been set.

We may not come to have the largest, the wealthiest, or the most cosmopolitan capital in the world, but I believe that with Ottawa's natural and picturesque setting, given stately proportions and a little careful planning, we can have the most beautiful capital in the world. So I would ask my fellow members of this House of Commons to view not only with sympathy but with enthusiasm a project which everyone will recognize as beyond any consideration of party, that has for its object solely and wholly the development and beautification of Ottawa as the capital of this great Dominion, something that will give some expression of all that is highest in the idealism of the nation, and something which those from beyond our gates and those who may follow in future years will come to recognize as an expression in some degree of the soul of the Canada of to-day.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to follow the right hon. the Prime Minister in his observations. I desire to congratulate him upon his conversion to the desirability of having parks in the city which is the capital city of our country; and his enthusiasm has all the zeal which characterizes the convert.

I recall that the park upon which the Chateau Laurier now stands was not invaded by a commercial enterprise without objection being taken by the Conservative party, and the speech which Sir George Foster made on that occasion will perhaps be recalled by the right hon. the Prime Minister.

We are now asked to spend over $1,500,000 to buy a park in the city of Ottawa to take the place of the park in which there has been built a hotel, and the use of which for commercial purposes was objected to by the opposition of that day. I mention that to the right hon. the Prime Minister in case he may have forgotten it.

The government of Sir Robert Borden, when it came into power in 1913, was fully seized of the desirability of beautifying Ottawa. I take it that there are very few people in Canada who are not desirous of making our capital worthy of the aspirations of the Canadian people. But when the government appointed a commission, known as the Holt commission, it was found that a very considerable sum of money would be necessary to carry out the proposed plans. That commission called to its assistance the very best expert advice which could be obtained, and as a result plans were formulated, which doubtless have been inspected by nearly every member of this house.

The plan which has been laid before us to-day is a plan which is essentially not different from the plan which was thus prepared; in general outline it contemplates the same sort of development; but it was found that during the progress of the war it was impossible to spend the sums of money that would be involved.

May I say that this country is now suffering from a debt of two and a half billions of dollars, while at that time it had a debt of less than four hundred millions. There is not a gentleman on this side of the house, and I do not know of anyone in Canada, who is opposed to making this city a capital of great beauty, reflecting as I have already said in every sense the hopes and aspirations of the Canadian people. But there are other matters which must be considered. There is a very ancient saying that you must cut your garment according to your cloth. When the right hon. the Prime Minister referred to my observations last year, or the observations of the gentleman who led this party at that time, he cannot have recently read them. I directed my attention to two points. One was that the operations of the commission should be extended, and the other was the desirability of having the commission representative in character; and I am happy to say that the right hon. the Prime Minister quite agreed with the observations made in that regard. Mr. Guthrie, it is perfectly true, urged the desirability of a larger expenditure being made than the annual sum which was contemplated by the bill, but that was all.

Now what are we asked to do? Suppose we get down to earth for a few moments and ask ourselves what we are proposing to do. We are proposing to vote $200,000 a year for thirty years, which is $6,000,000; and another $3,000,000 this year, which is $9,000,000 exclusive of interest and sinking fund. That may not be thought to be a large sum of money. We are so glibly talking of millions these days that I wonder where this country is going to end. I wonder if it is realized what $3,000,000 means to the people of this country, what $3,000,000 would do in bringing happiness and delight and some measure of creature comforts to men and women on the prairies, what it would do to men and women who find it very difficult to struggle under the conditions under which they now live, what it would do with respect to health and all the matters that are allied to the health of a nation. There is something more than the beauty of the capital and that is the health of its people. When we have seen, as I have, conditions that exist in some parts of this country because of the long distances men and women are from transportation and other facilities, we should reflect carefully as to what the reasons were that made it impossible for us to spend this money in 1913. We had a debt then of less than $400,000,000; we had bouyant revenues, and it is not an easy thing now, when we have a debt of $2,500,000,000 that is not being reduced in my judgment as it should, to ask the country to vote these large sums of money.

I am wholly in accord with the desirability of beautifying Ottawa. Is there any man who is not? It is the capital of Canada and the distinction between the city of Ottawa and the capital of Canada was one well taken by the Prime Minister but we cannot always have the things we should like to have. How many of us can always have what we want? There are in this country men and women who have artistic minds, as mentioned by the Prime Minister, but they cannot gratify their tastes and aspirations. The problem is a simple one. Can the Canadian people at this moment afford to enter upon the venture proposed by the Prime Minister? He has already made commitments of over $1,500,000 for the Russell hotel and other buildings behind it, that will involve total expenditures, according to the resolution, of $3,000,000. The Prime Minister was very frank the other day when he said that there would be required $150,000 per annum for maintenance and $50,000 per annum for general improvements that are made from year to year. So we must pay the interest upon $3,000,000 for a venture which is not intended to be revenue-producing. Therefore it will cost us something like $350,000 a year and at the end of the period we must pay the $3,000,000. I yield to no man in my desire to see this the city beautiful; but if in my older years I have become a bit practical, I think the Prime Minister will excuse me when I say that I am not disposed to enter upon large projects without at least having some idea of what is involved in money expenditures and what it means to the people who have to pay.

It is all very nice to talk about posterity raising monuments to your memory and about the right hon. member's biography being a delightful volume showing his vision and his desire to see this city what it should be; but after all, who has to pay the money? In 1958 the Minister of Finance of that day will have to provide $3,000,000 or somebody must in the meantime provide the money to pay it. There is just this further word to be said about the details of the measure. It is most unsound as a piece of national financing. It authorizes a commission to issue securities which the country must pay. Why should we hand over to somebody else the power to make expenditures with our money? The resolution states that out of the consolidated revenues these moneys may be paid and further that the Minister of Finance will provide the money to pay the interest and sinking funds. Is he going to include this as part of the national debt? Is this to be part of the obligations of the country? As I say, this is not a revenue-producing venture and if it were not objectionable—I believe it is a proper term—I would say that this is a form of deception practised upon the Canadian people by which a commission issues its securities guaranteed by the people of this country, on which securities the people have to pay out of their own revenues the interest and sinking fund. In other words, the people of Canada are putting their money into this venture to the extent of $3,000,000 capital and $200,000 a year for thirty years for maintenance and improvements, or a total of $9,000,000. That is the story short and simple, and my only difficulty is: Can we afford it?

The Prime Minister no doubt will say: It is a very small sum of money; the gentlemen who prepared this plan, the Holt commission, in their scheme for a central park contemplated in part these expenditures. It is a very desirable thing, but no nation can have all the things it now desires. Great as Great Britain is and rich as the city of London is, they did not at one step expropriate the land fronting on the Strand in order to widen that thoroughfare. Those who have seen the operations that went on there realize that they were carried on from year to year. As buildings grew old and had to be replaced by new buildings, they provided that the street line should be so many feet behind the present line in order that there might be a widening of the thoroughfare. The Kingsway is a new highway that was built from Constitution hill down to the heart of the city, but the city of London has done the work gradually. There is a big jog by the Tivoli; then there is a straight line and another jog, and wherever a new building is put up there is a widening of the thoroughfare.

Cannot we afford to proceed in this way in Canada, having regard to what our position is? I think so. I do not for one moment underestimate the financial position of this country; but when the Prime Minister referred to the men being short-sighted who laid out these buildings, I can only say that possibly they were short-sighted but it must be remembered that at that time they were dealing with a very exceptional and difficult position. If as a result of that we are now to denounce them as short-sighted, what would you say with respect to those who in 1908 took a portion of the park and gave it for an hotel? That only took place in the year 1908 and I have under my hand the debate that occurred on that occasion on the 6th day of July. That was only twenty years ago and of course twenty years make a great difference in one's attitude, especially if one has had greater responsibilities. It is pleasing to know that the government of the day, now led by the Prime Minister, is desirous so far as possible of maintaining parks whereas in those days the desire was to put hotels on them. That is what happened in twenty years and, if that be so, it may well be that those who come after us twenty years hence will say that the Prime Minister was extravagant in his proposal. If these men in 1867 were short-sighted under the circumstances I have mentioned and if in twenty years the Prime Minister has had a change of heart and desires to provide a park for that taken from the people of Canada, to put an hotel upon, against the protest of leading public men of that day—if there has been this change in twenty years and we now are seeking to buy a park at a cost of millions of dollars—it is possible that another change may take place whereby people will say that in this regard we are grossly extravagant.

I will not offer any further observations except to the Minister of Finance. If he will read the bill I am sure that he will say that it is unsound financing. Why do we not make appropriations as they do in Ontario in regard to parks? The parks commission lays down a five-year plan; it submits its estimates to the government every year; the government approves them and the appropriations are voted by the legislature. This idea of getting away from the responsibility of parliament is against the whole principle of responsible government about which the Prime Minister used to talk so much. I notice a great change between the Prime Minister in power and in opposition. Orders in council are now the order of the day. In the days of opposition they used to be denounced most roundly and vigorously. Now instead of accepting the responsibility of parliament with respect to expenditures, leaving the house to decide how much money we shall annually put into parks, we are making commitments for the present and for the future that divest this parliament of responsibility with respect to these expenditures. I say essentially that is unsound. It is not in accordance with the theory of responsible government. It is not in accordance with the theory on which Ontario operates its magnificent park at Niagara Falls. That commission lays out its plans; it makes up its budgets; it determines what money shall be paid over a period of years and the way in which the improvements are to be made; it goes to the legislature asking for appropriations; the government puts the appropriations before the legislature in order that, having regard to the financial condition of the province, they may determine what action they will take, and never yet has that commission been unable to carry out its plans as they should be carried out. I do submit that all this legislation divesting parliament of its responsibility, all this placing of money in the hands of commissions, all this authorizing of commissions to raise money on the credit of the Canadian people, for the Minister of Finance knows it is upon the credit of the Canadian people either directly, or indirectly, with guarantees in some cases and moral obligations in others—all this is a negation of the whole principle of responsible government under which we live. I ask the Minister of Finance—I know his government is sufficiently powerful to put this measure through—to recast these financial provisions to provide that this expenditure shall be a direct payment of the Canadian people to this commission, for we never hope to get the money back. The commission had no money with which to pay the interest except the money we give them; that is clear. We do not expect to get the money back; it is not intended that we should; it is not intended that they should pay interest on the money except in so far as we provide them with the money with which to do it. The bill itself makes that point so clear that there can be no difficulty over it. But I do ask the Minister of Finance to put this matter on a sound financial basis if the thing is to be done at all.

I for one do not object to any reasonable expenditures being made to beautify this capital. I am anxious that we should beautify it, but I am also anxious that the beautification should be made in accordance with our present capacity to pay for it, having regard to the demands that are insistently being made upon us by every branch of the public service. We are doing fairly well by Ottawa, I think, and we have been doing so.

We cannot do it all in a single day. We cannot tear down public buildings and turn the area into a beautiful public park just because we feel it is a beautiful thing to do.

The Prime Minister referred to the beauties of Greece and the glories of Rome, but I venture to say to him and to this house that Greece and Rome are not remembered by the buildings they put up. The beauties of Greece and the glories of Rome are remembered by the men they produced, by the laws they made, by the philospohy and the literature they created—not by their buildings. That is not the thing by which these ancient civilizations have been remembered. It is true that the Pyramids and the Sphinx are an enduring monument to Egyptian civilization, that the hanging gardens of Babylon are a monument to Babylonian beauty, that the ruins of the Parthenon and the Colosseum recall the grandeur of Athenian and Roman civilizations, but it is not upon the architectural glories of Greece and Rome, but upon their contributions to the liberty and freedom of mankind, that their great place in history rests. Their laws, their literature, their philosophy, these are the things by which they are remembered, and I say to the Prime Minister that if he thinks by going out and spending money tearing down buildings and laying out a public park, and improving the approaches to this building, we are going to make a permanent contribution to the civilization of Canada, he is very much mistaken. Canada will be judged in the eyes of mankind by the type of men and women we produce, by the laws we enact, by the care we have exercised for those who are dependent upon this country. These are the factors by which our civilization will be judged, and not by material evidence. That at least is my submission.

I have tried to make it abundantly clear on every occasion on which I have spoken of the matter that I yield to no man in my desire to see a beautiful capital in Canada, but I have to regulate my desire for beauty by my financial ability to pay for it, and I ask the ministry to pause before they commit us to this plan of financing, and to all these expenditures, without due regard to our present capacity to pay. I wonder if it is realized by hon. gentlemen opposite—sometimes I think it is not—that in these days when the burden of taxation is so great—why, only this morning I saw a letter from a gentleman who said that he was not going to remain on the Canadian side of the border, but cross over to the other side, "for on my gross income of $16,000," he said, "I pay over $700 in taxes in Canada, and on the other side I would have to pay 76 per cent less."

Mr. DUNNING: A real patriot.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The figure is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Railways says he is not a patriot. His idea is to make money where he can.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not the total taxation he would pay in the United States.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I suppose he was referring only to the income tax?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, he was speaking of the income tax, and he said that the income tax was 76 per cent higher in Canada than in Detroit.

Mr. DUNNING: That is income tax alone.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I think that we should make only such appropriations for the beautification of Ottawa as our present and immediate future financial position permits, having regard to the claims that are urgently made upon us by every branch of the public service. Until we have passed the stage where railway deficits are annually recurrent, until we have reached the point where our railways are earning sufficient money to pay the interest on their obligations, is it quite fair that we should ask this added obligation to be borne by the Canadian people? I am speaking for myself, because this is not a controversial matter in any sense of the term, and my own personal view would be, if I had the responsibility, to expend such sums as my financial position would permit, and to increase them as my financial resources warranted. But having regard to our present financial condition, and in view of the demands that are so insistently made upon us from every part of this country for public accommodation, for post offices, custom houses, and public buildings of every kind, in communities that have been without proper accommodation for years, and which are now crying out for public buildings, as well as the need for accommodation in the new communities that are being opened up, can we proceed with this venture and forego these very necessary things merely in order to have the capital beautified?

The Prime Minister used one word—he used it twice—and if he will apply it, then my support of this undertaking will be very much more readily given. He used the word sacrifice. He said they were willing to make the sacrifice. When it is explained to me just what sacrifice the government of this country is making in public expenditures to create this park and make these improvements, my mind will be very much more at rest. Has anybody seen any evidence of sacrifice? Where are they? What are the sacrifices? It was that one word that fastened itself upon my attention as the Prime Minister proceeded. He spoke of other cities, of other capitals, of other nations, of other people, and of the money they had spent, and he spoke of what has been done in this country, and of the willingness of the people to make a sacrifice for beauty, a sacrifice for the capital. When I am given some evidence of the sacrifice contemplated by this government, it will be much more easy for me to accommodate myself to the expenditure.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): I shall not take more than a few minutes, but I wish to say a word on this question. I congratulate the Prime Minister on his presentation of his case, but frankly I am opposed to the whole thing, for reasons which I shall try to make clear. In criticizing the scheme, I would say in the first place that we have no business under any conditions to go across Wellington street. I think it would have been much better had we acquired some of the buildings there, cleared them away and beautified the street, instead of going across to Sparks street. Then some of us might be able to approach this house without taking our lives in our hands. But my main opposition to the scheme is for the reason that it is out of harmony with the crude way in which our people have to make their living and furnish the income of this nation. Take our roads, for example. Thousands of our people to-day, west of the great lakes, are not able to get to the post office for their mail for weeks in the springtime. Then perhaps no country in the world is so crude as to its methods of travel, and every day, particularly every weekend, we have a list of casualties at level crossings. Some of our money might well be spent at this time in removing that menace to highway travel. Then again we need expenditure on branch lines, so necessary throughout certain parts of the country. I am sure that those of our people who are without railway facilities will not become enthusiastic over a scheme of this kind, however much they would like to be. Then I recall many of our soldiers throughout the Dominion suffering from their war service, but who have never yet been able to get on the pension list. I could name some of them off-hand if required. They should be looked after by the country, having faced death in the battle line for our protection. I know of one man to-day who has been in hospital for two years as a result of his war experience, but he has not yet been able to secure a pension. I am sure hon. members generally will recall that only last year the Minister of Finance himself, when asked if some of our civil servants whose wages were below the living line could not be granted an increase of pay, said, "It is time somebody spoke on behalf of the taxpayer." Are we then to spend every year the large sum provided for in this bill, and entrust the money to a body of men who are not even responsible to parliament? And what about the national debt? Surely before making unecessary expenditures in the manner proposed, we should do something to reduce that debt and so make it easier for the national revenue to be raised each year.

Now, I should like to have fallen in with this scheme enthusiastically, for I take second place to no one in my desire for the beautification of our capital, but, as I have already said, this scheme is out of keeping with the crude way in which some of our people have to live. Let me point out that in some of our towns in western Canada to-day—I have in mind particularly a good-sized town of three thousand inhabitants in my own constituency—there is not a government building in which a cabinet minister would house his motor car—not one. The whole cabinet is taking a most inconsistent position in asking the country enthusiastically to adopt this scheme.

I come from west of the great lakes, from a part of the country that is not even allowed to own its public resources; and yet we are asked to approve of a scheme like this. I say it is utterly inconsistent. We are not even allowed the property that belongs to us as a province, and yet we are expected to tax ourselves to provide means for the beautification of this city by making a central park and other improvements. I repeat, the Prime Minister and his cabinet under these conditions is occupying a most inconsistent position.

The Prime Minister has spoken of the public buildings of some of the other provinces, but they cannot all be cited as parallel cases. The public buildings in Regina are surrounded by land on which our settlers cannot make a living. And yet every day we are spending money to encourage immigration, when the conditions created by the concentration of wealth and industry in our cities have driven our people off the land. This scheme to beautify the capital of Canada is in accordance with the policy that has been followed in this country for many years past of concentrating everything in the cities at the expense of the rural districts. Until those conditions are changed, I say to the Prime Minister across the floor of this house that he cannot expect the agriculturists of western Canada to accept this scheme enthusiastically.

I have nothing further to say, Mr. Speaker, but I would have been remiss in my duty had I not pointed out some of the conditions under which the government expect to secure the money for this scheme.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I believe the country will support the fair and just stand taken by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). The principle of the bill is all wrong. When this commission was created in 1899 the Prime Minister said it was for the purpose of making Ottawa the Washington of the north. Well, it has become the Washington of the north. It was intended then to work up to making Ottawa a federal district. In fact this whole country has become the Mexico of the north with our new status and as a happy hunting ground for the millionaires of the United States in possessing themselves of our resources. There is no city on the North American continent to-day of anything like the same size and population that has as extensive a park area or as large expenditures on its beautification by the federal government, by the city council and by other public agencies as the city of Ottawa.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the principle of the bill is all wrong. We all want to see this a beutiful city, we all are favourable to liberal expenditure by the federal authorities on some definite plan for its beautification, but those expenditures must not be in excess of what the country can afford and a lot of it should wait. The Ottawa improvement commission has been functioning for thirty years or since 1899. With what result? The same old streets covered with snow and ice, the same old water supply, the same old way of doing things that in any business enterprise would spell bankruptcy. Every year the Dominion contributes to the municipality the equivalent of five or six mills of the local taxation, and the financial burden and liability of the taxpayers of Ottawa is distributed over the taxpayers of the whole Dominion. Do not forget that a very large amount of money is spent here every year. Nearly every large public federal building has a park around it. Take the expenditures on the Victoria musuem, and also the expenditures on the experimental farm, Rideau canal, and, further, the expenditures by the Canadian National Railways, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, by the city itself, by the school board and by this commission, running into many millions of dollars. The other day a return brought down showed that several hundred thousand dollars have been spent by the government over a period of years in renting office space in private buildings throughout the city—buildings that nobody else would rent owing to the economic situation here. It would be a far better plan if the government would improve the salaries of the underpaid people in the Post Office and the other government departments and the civil service in general and so help them to pay their rent and taxes and to get a fair day's pay for a fair day's work in Ottawa.

I am not opposing personally the gentlemen composing the commission. They are all public-spirited gentlemen, but their way of doing business is in my opinion deplorable. As an illustration of this, in 1912 they sent out an illustrated booklet showing a large number of small parks and driveways throughout the city and the expenditures that had been made on these improvements. I can show you cement walks, roadways, gradings and driveways built by this commission all over Ottawa where there is considerable poor workmanship and the life of the work has been only ten years; and yet they have issued bonds for thirty-five years. The result is that at the end of the thirty-five years you will find that what should cost $1.20 a cubic yard will cost $3 and $4 a yard as the case may be.

As a result of criticism the government has marked down the proposed increase in maintenance charges from $250,000 to $200,000. Here we have a total expenditure of some $9,000,000— $6,000,000, or $200,000 a year for thirty years, plus $3,000,000 capital expenditure—for the beautifying of Ottawa. And what has been done? They have destroyed the continuity of the Sparks street district, where the bulk of the business assessment in the city exists. Sparks street as a commercial thoroughfare has been destroyed. They have torn down warehouses and commercial buildings and ruined the street in order to create a park, in what should be an industrial district. There you have warehouses and railways sidings, with a canal at the doors of two railway systems, and I contend that these frontages should not be used for the purpose now intended but left for a great industrial district. This is not Washington. Washington is the capital of a country with a population of 110,000,000, whereas in this country we have a population of 10,000,000. I believe other municipalities of the country do not approve of this expenditure or of this policy of spending money like water. Originally in 1899 it was proposed to make Ottawa a federal district; if that were done the capital would then have the power to levy taxation for such purposes as this and we would have cleaner streets, a better water supply and lower city taxes. The city of Washington is a federal district which has powers of taxation, but this commission has no such powers; it receives no revenues. The result is that bonds have to be issued for every little bit of work that is done over maintenance. If walks have to be built and a little more gardening done, bonds have to be issued for a period of thirty years or thirty-five years—and this at the high cost of money which has prevailed in the past few years.

I cannot find anything comparable to this federal assistance measure in any city in the world. A subvention here is given to the municipality in exchange for property exemption from taxation and for the use of the police and the fire departments. Many other provincial capitals have asked for subventions from the provinces but have not been able to get them. From Victoria to Halifax the various capitals in this Dominion are contributing to the governments of the provinces. Winnipeg, for instance, maintains a police force and fire department but does not receive a dollar in the way of subvention in exchange for these services directly. Nor is there anything like this in Great Britain. In New South Wales the city of Sydney, the capital of the state, gets a million and a half a year, equal to the cost of maintaining the police force or the fire department. Melbourne has a subvention from the state goverment, as has also Wellington, New Zealand, in exchange for civic services. There are no state subventions in the United States in connection with the beautification of the state capital, and I find none in the British Empire. It seems to me that sooner or later, in the interests of efficiency and economy, Ottawa must be taken over and made a federal district.

There is a great deal of criticism of the purchase of the old Russell house site at a cost of more than a million dollars, a fabulous sum, in respect of which no tenders were called for. And only a small part of the property has been taken over. Those who negotiated the transaction got their heads together and agreed to a price of $1,125,000 for property which should certainly have been the subject of an arbitration. The matter should have been referred to a board of arbitration and the value of the land and buildings proved.

Talk about beautifying the capital! Why, as a result of the recent fire there is a wall in front of the Russell building which may fall down on a street car on Sparks street at any time, and no attempt is being made either by the government or by the city of Ottawa to remove the danger. The city architect has the power by law to send someone in at once to remove that menace, and to charge the cost to the owner of the building, but nothing has been done to safeguard the public. Ottawa is called by some of the newspapers—the Stratford Beacon and Globe among them—the mendicant city, and editorials have contended that the country cannot afford the expenditure of money along the lines here proposed or to build a new museum or court building to house the supreme court, as the Evening Journal suggests.

This federal district commission seems to be giving away things. About a month or two ago the chairman of this commission, who is also the head of the Ottawa Electric Company, a private concern which gets about two-thirds of the electrical business of the city, at higher rates than those charged by the hydro-electric, the peoples' own system, proposed to give away eleven acres of quasi civic property at Rockliffe. To whom? To Mr. Phillips, the United States ambassador, for a residence. That is not the way we should deal with public property. No member of the commission would give away his own property that way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has made an entirely erroneous statement, without knowledge of the facts. He says that the chairman of the commission has given away certain property. The chairman had no property to give away. The property to which the hon. member refers is owned by the city of Ottawa, and only the city of Ottawa and its authorities had power to deal with it.

Mr. CHURCH: I am well aware it was owned by the city of Ottawa and was leased to the federal district commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not leased.

Mr. CHURCH: The commission occupied the property and had power to purchase it on a lease from the city or an agreement regarding an interest in lands. If the Prime Minister will read the minutes of the board of control and city council of the city of Ottawa he will see that this commission has power to take over that civic leasehold property, which it occupied at a rental under a written civic lease. It was proposed to give that property away and a meeting was held at the city hall of people protesting against any such action. I am not aware of the government of the United States giving away public property in Washington.

In connection with this commission, as I have pointed out, we are faced with an expenditure of $9,000,000, while we have to meet an expenditure of $2,500,000 in London on account of Canada House, with maintenance amounting to $130,000 and half a million for a Washington embassy—all this while the people are groaning under heavy taxation. The government is spending money like water; that is all that can be said of this commission.

I submit that the purchase of this particular Russell house property should be looked into by the public accounts committee, and all expenditures of the commission should be similarly investigated. As a matter of fact, in my opinion, the commission should be abolished and its work taken over by the government of Canada. The government does not seem able to clean its own streets on parliament hill any better than Ottawa cleans its streets. The condition of the streets in the immediate vicinity of this building is a disgrace to the city of Ottawa. The Department of Public Works have been so incompetent and have so neglected this condition that one of the most popular members on this side of the house has fallen and seriously injured himself. If the government would only try to provide the citizens of Ottawa with a proper water supply, and make some effort to have the streets cleaned, it would be far better than spending money on this commission in the way it is doing.

Those are not all the expenditures which are proposed; it has been suggested that we should have a new art gallery and new supreme court building, with extensive grounds surrounding it, and that idea is supported by this wonderful paper, the Evening Journal, which has done so much for my friends on the other side of the house. Every time the Journal supports our party in Ottawa we go under, when the ballot boxes are opened. This paper seems to be the mouthpiece of this federal district commission; in the old days it supported the suggestion that Ottawa should be the Washington of the north, but when it was proposed that the hydro-electric commission should extend its activities to the Ottawa valley to break up the monopoly which then existed, this paper opposed the suggestion on election day where it is best known. I think it would be far better to beautify this city by bringing in industries which will help to keep our young men here and provide opportunities for jobs in Ottawa by a proper economic policy. I have heard a good deal of complaint from a few of the retail business men of Ottawa because the government propose to spoil the continuity of Sparks street, which should be one of the greatest retail districts in Canada. This commission has been criticized many times because of the way it buys real estate, going out to buy with a brass band; it first announces that it is going to buy some property, and all the real estate agents get busy and get there first. That is not the way to buy real estate to-day; that is not the way private owners or business men buy it and that is not the way the hydro-electric commission buy it.

We are told that we are to have a wonderful park known as Confederation park, but I believe the people of Canada have had enough expenditures of that kind within the last year or so on confederation fads. This government sent 750,000 men out of Canada; they did not celebrate Confederation day in this country on July 1st last, but took part in the fourth of July proceedings in the United States. Charity should begin at home, and Ottawa would be far better off if it had a few industries, together with a proper economic policy with cheap light and power. That would be better than squandering millions of dollars on such a scheme as this, which could well wait for a few years. I venture to say that if a committee of the house were to go over the estimates and public accounts they would find thousands of dollars which should be spent by the taxpayers of Ottawa but which has to be borne by the taxpayers of Canada. The principle of the bill is all wrong; if it is desired to make Ottawa a federal district, well and good. That was what Sir Wilfrid Laurier proposed in 1899; he wanted to take the city over on that basis, collect the taxes and beautify the city, but that idea was never carried into effect. To-day we have a federal district commission, but this is not a district at all; it is still a municipality. Look at the Rideau canal at the end of Sparks street; on one side we have a shipbuilding yard, and when you look over the wall you see a lot of stone hookers, old dilapidated dredges and scows lying there under repair. I was asked the other day if that was the first unit of Canada's navy, which was supposed to be locked up in some garage in Halifax. I am sure that is a thing of beauty and a joy forever; so on with the good work of beautifying the capital! No doubt this work is very near and very dear to the heart of the Prime Minister, but I cannot agree with the principle of the measure.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, with the remarks of the right hon. Prime Minister I am heartily in accord, and consequently I will not have very much to say. It is a very great privilege indeed for me, together with my distinguished colleague, to represent in this house the city of Ottawa. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, this is the capital city of the Dominion, so I would rather speak as one of the members representing in this parliament the capital city of Canada. I think I can safely do so because under British parliamentary procedure once a member of parliament has taken his seat he is not so much concerned with parochial or local matters, but is bound to look at questions as they affect the general welfare of the entire country. So, under these conditions, I would speak as one whose privilege it is to represent the capital city of Canada rather than the city of Ottawa.

Ottawa, as is the case with other cities, is administered by a municipal government and is under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. I may say that the city council of Ottawa and the provincial government of Ontario have done well by this city. At the same time, this is the capital city of Canada, and just as there are obligations devolving upon the municipal council and the provincial government with respect to this city, so I submit there are obligations devolving upon this national body with regard to this capital city. No one would appreciate it more and no one would be happier than I should this amount of money which I believe we can afford to spend—since the Minister of Finance has seen fit to let the resolution go on the order paper—be distributed for the individual good of those in this country who deserve and need it. Nobody more than myself would like to see that amount of money paid out to those who have returned from overseas and who are now in a painful condition. But the Department of Health is looking after the national health; the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment is looking after the painful cases, and what other systems, I ask, could be devised whereby this amount of money could be distributed to the individuals who might benefit therefrom? If such a scheme is feasible; if any hon. gentleman who is opposed to this measure simply because he thinks this amount of money could be spent in a more worthy cause were to devise means to accomplish that end, then, Mr. Speaker, I would vote against this resolution; otherwise I say there that a national obligation devolves upon parliament to look after the capital city of Ottawa as befits this country. This parliament building is but a few years old; many years were spent in its construction. Those who conceived the plans and directed the building of it thought they were looking far into the future, but it has not taken long, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the foresight of those charged with the construction of this building, to demonstrate that it is even now too small to meet the demands of this growing nation. And what will happen in a few years? So when we come to talk about foresight, we must look further ahead than say twenty-five or fifty years, even fifty or one hundred years, when it comes to matters of national importance.

We have been told, Mr. Speaker, that Rome and Greece are remembered not by the buildings they erected, not by the splendour of their architecture. But just as the literature of a country reflects the sentiments, the hopes, the ambitions and the desires of its people, so the character of the public buildings, the meeting places of the councils of the nation, the places where the destiny of a country is determined, will indicate to the people of the future whether or not these were people of culture. And it ill behooves anyone, sir, to say at this time of our national life that men and women whose names could be put down to-day will not be regarded by future generations as men and women of culture. And if we remember these countries because of their culture, we remember them also for the tangible evidences handed down to us of their contributions to art, whether in the form of sculpture, or of painting, or by their crude manner of erecting pyramids or other monuments of national importance in their day. So that on that score the argument against this resolution cannot stand.

We will suppose that there are other ways in which we could spend this money, probably in the construction of post offices and in the improvement of other public buildings. Somebody spoke of consistency. Let it be made evident, then, when any proposals for the spending of money on these public buildings or the improvement of other public works come up for consideration, that those who to-day say that there ought to be consistency are as consistent as they would like others to be at this time. We have been told that this money could be spent on roads. Roads belong to the provincial governments. In other words, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is not part of this money to be spent on roads in this city and in the surrounding country?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, and that only adds strength to my argument. If the money were spent on roads it would be devoted to the very objects for which the hon. member who spoke before me said it should be spent.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the hon. member will say there is a great difference between spending it on roads in or near Ottawa and spending it on roads throughout the country.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not disputing that, but the hon. gentleman should put that up to the government of the province from which he comes. Roads, unless they are international highways, are altogether within the jurisdiction of the provincial government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is very little more for me to say. What I ask is that this subject be viewed with the same broadness with which it has been conceived. There are obligations towards the capital city. We are told we should do as has been done in London, that we should proceed slowly. Since the institution of the Ottawa improvement commission in 1898—it is now the federal district commission—moneys have been voted to it by parliament for the beautification of the capital city.

We are told that in England matters of this kind progress rather slowly; that old buildings are bought and made the basis of future gradual development. There are no old buildings that can be bought here. The Russell house, which has been destroyed by fire, is the only old building that now stands in the way of this development, and if we are to wait until all the buildings involved are moss covered and so dilapidated that they are apt to tumble down on our heads, there will be no beautification at all.

For the reasons which the right hon. the Prime Minister advanced, as well as for those I have ventured to offer at this time, I intend to support the motion.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, there are only one or two observations I would make. I placed myself on record in opposition to this proposal last year, and I desire to do so again. It is all very well to speak of our national obligations to Ottawa as the capital of the Dominion of Canada. It is true that those obligations exist, and we all must give some consideration to them, but there are other obligations besides those that are related to the city of Ottawa. As long as this goes on I do not see much chance of getting that post office that I want in Sydenham. Why should hon. gentlemen smile over a matter as serious as that? Some of those who smile are expecting buildings or public works in their own constituencies. Does the government owe nothing to the parts of the country outside of Ottawa where works were undertaken or promised fourteen or fifteen years ago but held up by the war? Must nearly every dollar you have to spend be sunk in embassies at Washington, Tokyo or Paris, and the remainder, if any, spent in tearing down city blocks in the city of Ottawa? The Prime Minister has indicated that what he has in mind is to tear down all the city between Metcalfe and O'Connor street from Wellington right down —I do not know how far down. I suppose you would not stop short of Queen street, would you? It is indicated that that is the picture he has in his mind. How beautiful it would be to get rid of those buildings and have an avenue of trees approaching this building! For that matter, how much is to be added to the attractiveness of these buildings by tearing down the city blocks opposite? Get outside of this building, and how much can you see? You would have to have a neck as long as a giraffe to see it. When a park takes the place of the city block, nothing will be added to the beauty of this place. Some years ago, under the federal plan back in 1913, a certain amount of money was spent. As has been said, that was at a time when our national debt was comparatively small, very small as compared with the debt of to-day. Frog ponds were filled up, beautiful drives were made—and some people in Ottawa added considerably to their fortunes when those projects were being put through. Some became comparatively wealthy men through the changes that were produced in Ottawa by the construction of those drives and the beautifying of that part of the city. I venture to say that there are some who are very directly interested in the tearing down of whole city blocks and who will not be any poorer because of the part they have played in that regard. I protest again against an expenditure of this kind, against the government of the day undertaking to place in the hands of a commission, composed of men who are not responsible to parliament, the expenditure of money over a period of thirty years. It would be bad enough if it were done for a period of four or five years, but to commit those on whose shoulders will rest the responsibility of administering this country thirty years hence by tying up moneys in this way is in my judgment a very wrong principle and one to which I cannot give my support. My hon. friend from Ottawa says in regard to roads: Oh, that is a provincial matter. It is not a provincial matter as regards miles and miles of roads just outside of Ottawa across the river through the city of Hull. That is being taken care of by this government. Roads which run for miles out of the city and which ought to be under provincial control are being constructed and maintained with money advanced by the Dominion of Canada. They are not provincial roads. Where it suits the purpose of those who have the beautification of Ottawa in mind, they can make Dominion roads out of roads which are miles outside the city, and even across the river, under the plea that they are doing this all in order to add to the beauty of the city of Ottawa. The whole principle in my judgment is wrong and I desire to protest as I did last year.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I think the house is indebted to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) for his very plain, straightforward expression of opposition to the project.

Mr. BENNETT: That I did not say, and the hon. gentleman must know it. It is entirely incorrect.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry if I misunderstood my hon. friend. I thought he expressed outspoken opposition to the scheme.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not do any such thing.

Mr. McGIBBON: He said the contrary half a dozen times.

Mr. DUNNING: In that case I must be incapable of understanding the English language, and we will let it go at that. At any rate my hon. friend did not deal with the matter quite fairly in his presentation of figures. I admire the dexterity with which he demonstrated that in reality we were proposing by this scheme an expenditure of something like $9,000,000. True, he did not say that the $9,000,000 all represented new expenditure, but the impression conveyed to the country by his remarks undoubtedly would be that the proposal now before the house involved an expenditure of $9,000,000 over and above that which is at present being expended. My hon. friend of course well knows that the second amount of $6,000,000 which, by that process of fast financial calculation, he added to the $3,000,000 specifically dealt with in the bill, is made up of annual payments of $200,000, whereas already this parliament is committed by legislation to an expenditure of $250,000 per annum. If I followed my hon. friend's financial method in that regard, I could of course demonstrate that we are now committed to an expenditure of $7,500,000.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is not thirty years, so that the amount is not $7,500,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Now I come back to my hon. friend's opposition to the whole project. Would he oppose the expenditure of $250,000 annually which is now taking place in Ottawa on the work which is being done? I feel quite sure he would not, and he must adopt one position or the other. He is either opposed to the continuance of the work now being done, or he is not. If he is not opposed to the continuance of the present work, then he must be committed to the expenditure of the necessary money to carry it on, and there goes the $6,000,000.

We merely want to look at this matter fairly in order to find out what in fact it means. We are committed at this time to an expenditure of $250,000 a year, and it is proposed to commit parliament for the future to an expenditure of $200,000 a year, which is a decrease of $50,000 annually, to provide for a program of thirty years in order that the scheme may be gradually developed. Just what does that mean? It means that at the present time the people of Canada are expending through the federal commission, for the purpose of beautifying this city, approximately two and one-half cents per head per annum, and the proposal now before us, if carried out in its entirety and allowing for the capitalization of the interest upon the $3,000,000 of the capital sum, will involve how much per head? It will involve less than four cents per head per annum by the people of the whole of Canada for thirty years for carrying on a progressive scheme of beautification of their capital.

As a matter of practical fact what does history teach us with regard to these matters? The history of every national capital wherever located teaches us this, that there are always those who, in the interest of economy and sincerely believing as the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) does, that the expenditure is not necessary and not wise, oppose such expenditures. But history also teaches us in connection with every national capital that succeeding generations pay many millions more than would have been paid had sufficient foresight been displayed earlier in the history of the capital. I am pleased to say that Regina, the capital of the province which I have the honour to represent, has not been subject to that handicap because we were fortunate in having as the first premier of Saskatchewan a man of really broad vision with respect to the future of his province and its capital city. The Hon. Walter Scott was for a number of years a member of this house and subsequently he became the first premier of Saskatchewan. He put through, in the face of considerable opposition, the purchase of a large tract of what was then farm land outside of the city of Regina and he proceeded there to erect a provincial capital which is to-day the pride of all the people of Saskatchewan. As a consequence of that vision on the part of the Hon. Walter Scott, expenditures for the purposes of the provincial capital of Saskatchewan are lower than they are in the case of any of the other western provinces. That is due to the fact that vision was displayed at the start and a comprehensive plan arrived at. Let me take by contrast the province of Manitoba, which has a beautiful parliament building, located on a site altogether too small and with no approach. Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg are to-day spending large sums of money to clear the approaches to their parliament buildings. In the city of Toronto constant expenditures are necessary in order to remedy conditions such as exist there. I deprecate very strongly the exaggeration of the cost of this proposal to the individual taxpayer of Canada. The cost is easily ascertainable and, as I have indicated, it is less than four cents per head per annum of the population of Canada for the next thirty years. May I point out that those of us who have to cross these streets that are being dealt with, Wellington street and Sparks street, are becoming more and more interested personally in some improvement in traffic conditions, and the provision of more room for traffic, in order that we may have a chance to cross those streets and continue to live. The plan which is now before parliament, drafted by the federal district commission, is such as to indicate that better traffic conditions and greater public safety were taken into account in its preparation.

My hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) referred to the necessity for expenditure on level crossings. I have on the order paper a resolution which I hope to have dealt with to-day, and upon which a bill will be based, which has in view a greater use of the grade crossing fund. All these matters are related and must be considered together. I look at the question of the improvement and beautification of Ottawa from a business point of view, and having in mind the experience of other capitals in that regard, I say that if we do not undertake this work to-day, substantially on the basis outlined, the people of Canada will in the future have to pay a great deal more for doing the very thing which is now under discussion, and will in all likelihood spend throughout the year, in connection with enterprises of a similar character, much greater sums than are mentioned here. As my hon. friend from Rosetown was speaking I was reminded of the city in which he lives, Saskatoon. If the people of Saskatoon had been moved in their early history and in their subsequent development by the arguments which the hon. member for Rosetown has advanced to-day, there would not be there that beautiful city, there would not be there that great university, there would not be on every hand the expression of a people's pride in the country which they had helped to build up. That is, after all, what we are doing here. We are just doing our little bit; it is not a very big bit. Are we justified in committing the people of Canada to spend four cents per head each year for the next thirty years in making this capital a little more like what it ought to be as representative of the Canadian people?

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): I am in favour of this bill because of my conviction that the beautification of our public property is a form of national self-expression which we cannot afford to neglect. It is all very well to talk about the mental and moral achievements of the classic nations of days gone by, but however great they may have been, we must understand that what they achieved was not done in a vacuum. It was produced through the interaction between those peoples and their environment, progressively producing around themselves objects of enduring beauty. I feel that no people, especially a people like we are, can very long be denied its instinct for just this form of self-realization. After all, I think that public buildings and public parks, when accomplished along lines of true artistic merit, become the only kind of depository possible to us whereby we can pass on to future generations any mental and moral achievements we may attain. I cannot see how we can build up any bridge between ourselves and the future unless somehow we crystallize our mental gains into objective beauty of some form.

I happened to read a short while ago a book which very materially corrected my impressions about the wonderful architecture which is scattered throughout the British Isles, and which to-day forms such a strong attraction for the moneyed people of this continent. I was under the impression that these old churches and public buildings which you encounter in England about every three miles along the rural highways were produced out of the superflous wealth of the rich merchants of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries—produced, in other words, by sweated labour. I always imagined that the mortar that binds those blocks of stone together was somehow mingled with the blood of people in a state of semi-slavery, but I learned from this book that these beautiful churches were actually built by the people themselves. The wonderful stone work was done by the village mason; the beautiful wood carving was done by the village carpenter, and even the church bells were foundered at the village smithy. The whole structure from foundation to spire tip was produced locally, and these local artisans were paid by an impost made locally upon the people of the community. It is a beautiful self-expression of the character of a great people in the first stages of its formation, and all the wealth of character that we associate with the English people has been passed on to us by this means, and by no other. We must understand that the achievements of a nation with regard to character and mental acquisitions are cumulative. We cannot produce in one generation all that we aspire to be, but from generation to generation we must seek some artistic form of self-expression whereby we can effectively pass on to future generations that which we have achieved morally and intellectually.

Another thing. After all, these public improvements which we seek to make worthy of ourselves are a matter for the public. That is to say, we can achieve collectively that which we cannot achieve individually. Personally I am very fond of reading that famous essay of Bacon on Gardens, and I never read it without thinking that if I were a man of means that is precisely the kind of garden I would have around my home; but of course one would have to be a millionaire to achieve such an ideal. Here by the simple process of national co-operation we can produce in Ottawa, in Winnipeg, in Saskatoon, or in Calgary this very ideal of which Bacon spoke, and I am very glad to know that we can produce it at the reasonable cost of four cents each a year. That is much more reasonable than I thought. Is not this worth while at such a small cost to ourselves, compared with what it must have cost those English villagers in centuries gone by to build their churches? Is it not worth while to do collectively these things which bring to us such satisfaction?

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these things are altogether consistent with all kinds of social amelioration. I do not see anything inconsistent between the production of public buildings and gardens and the emancipation of the people at large. I sometimes think the story of the alabaster box of ointment is altogether lost upon us. There were people in those days who said that this box could have been sold for much and given to the poor. That is an age-old argument. But the thing we want to get into our minds is that we ought to do this thing and not leave the other things undone, and I say that if we are true to our artistic and mental and moral ideals, if we seek to give our inward thought and feeling proper expression, the good time will more speedily come when justice and equality will spread from one ocean to the other.

So long as we choose to wallow in what is squalid and unsightly, I do not think we can ever find it in our hearts to make any widespread movement for social amelioration. I would be the last to discourage the spirit running through the Prime Minister's speech. On the contrary, I should like to see that spirit so developed that it would find expression not only in Ottawa but in every town and village throughout the Dominion. I want to see that spirit sustained so that in my little town at home it will find some form of expression. I do not want my children to go on living indefinitely in surroundings that are not worthy of a great country. I should like by co-operative or national methods to see the love of beauty inculcated in our people so that it would be manifested in their surroundings. I think I catch the right spirit in the speech of the Prime Minister. It seems to me that this young nation in the formative period of its history cannot afford to neglect those things which are sometimes stigmatized as impracticable. We, above all people, even at the cost of a little sacrifice, should see that future generations have something of an objective character by which to judge what we were mentally and morally.

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we were all thrilled by the address of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and that we appreciate its sincerity and share his desire to see the capital of Canada so beautified as to attract the attention of the world. For myself, I share in that sentiment without any qualification. But in the proposal before us and in the addresses of those advocating it what is chiefly dwelt upon is the "beautifying" of the city of Ottawa. I wonder if at this particular moment in our history we can spend a great deal of money on the simple element of "beauty." I have visited every legislative building in the Dominion. When in Halifax I was pleased to view the old door through which Joseph Howe used to slip at certain stages of the ceremonial of opening of the local house; I was glad to visit the old building in Charlottetown and to examine the table around which the fathers of confederation sat in 1865, and I derived a similar pleasure when going through the other legislative buildings throughout the Dominion. I have also visited the capitals of other countries, and I have observed that since 1914 no nation has spent much money on the beautification of its capital. The United States is spending no money in Washington to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are spending fourteen million dollars on one bridge at this moment.

Mr. KAISER: That may look a great deal to us, but what does it amount to in the United States? The government of the United States are turning their attention to something that they deem to be much more important, something that we should take cognizance of—the reduction of the national debt. To-day the United States is almost out of debt; it has reduced its national debt from twenty-six billion to sixteen billion dollars—

Mr. DUNNING: They are almost out of debt.

Mr. KAISER: —and eleven billion dollars of that is unloaded upon other countries. In another five or six years the people of the United States will be absolutely relieved of their national debt. If, as a result of this, some of our people are moving across the line to-day in order to be relieved of some of the taxation incidental to our national debt, what will be the condition in this regard a few years hence when the national debt of the United States is no longer a burden in the shape of taxation?

Now, while I should like to see money spent in Ottawa, I have just one word to say to the people of this city: There is a fundamental necessity in every community on the face of the earth which should be provided for, but it has not been provided for by this city—viz a supply of pure water.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Kaiser.]

Mr. KAISER: As a Canadian I protest against the attitude of the city of Ottawa in regard to its water supply. This is an opportune time for parliament to say something in this regard. I know it is usual for men like the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) to smile when a question of this kind is mentioned, simply because they are not acquainted with the fundamental requirements of every progressive community. We should say to the city of Ottawa: Until you supply the city and the capital with pure water, which is part of your municipal duty, we do not feel disposed to spend any more money in beautifying the city. I take that ground, Mr. Speaker, and I shall urge my views against propositions of this kind until the city of Ottawa comes to its senses in this regard.

For a number of years we have been endeavouring to induce the city to provide a proper supply of water, but we have always met with obstruction. For one thing, the local newspapers take opposite views and raise all kinds of objections. To-day the city of Ottawa is charging its people per capita less for water than is charged by any other city of its size on the continent of North America. If it were to charge a price equal to the average price obtaining on this continent, it could provide a filtered supply of water that would be a credit to the city and be satisfactory to those who have come here to attend to the business of the nation. As a member of the provincial board of health it was my duty, some ten or fifteen years ago, to study water conditions in this city. Sometimes we thought we were coming to a satisfactory conclusion, but difficulties would arise and nothing was accomplished. To-day the work of the provincial board of health has been taken over by the provincial government and its functions are under the control of a member of the provincial cabinet—a circumstance which is weakening the hands of those who are trying to accomplish this improvement, because they are trying to make the question a semi-political issue. The government is afraid to urge the city of Ottawa to do its duty by itself and by the country for fear that some opposition may be reflected in the ballot box—not the unmarked ballots found on the street, but in genuine ballots cast in the election of representatives in Ontario. Unless members of parliament stand up at opportune times and voice their sentiments in this regard, urging the city of Ottawa to do its duty both by itself and by the city as the capital of this Dominion, I fear that nothing will be done for some time. I oppose the expenditure of public money in trying to beautify Ottawa, until Ottawa attends to the fundamental element of "beauty" in any place —pure, drinkable water.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ADELAIDE MARIE MOORE

The house in committee on Bill No. 75, for the relief of Adelaide Marie Moore—Mr. Church—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be now reported. There can be no debate on that motion.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I object to a bill being railroaded through in this fashion.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DELIA ELIZABETH DAVIES

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton) moved that the house go into committee to consider bill No. 76, for the relief of Delia Elizabeth Davies.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair for this bill to go into committee—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is not debatable.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion which I have put from the chair is not debatable, any amendment can be made in committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. McPHEE: I beg to move that this bill be now reported.

Mr. IRVINE: Is that motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN: No.

Mr. IRVINE: Perhaps we will be able to discuss it on the third reading.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: This motion is not debatable.

Upon the yeas and nays being called for:

Motion agreed to: yeas 46; nays 7.

Bill reported.

Mr. McPHEE thereupon moved the third reading of the bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting.

Mr. SPEAKER: That can only apply when a bill has been amended.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I humbly submit that a few moments ago I attempted to amend this bill. I was then informed that it was impossible to move an amendment, and now your honour declares that since there is no amendment the third reading of this bill cannot be put over to the next sitting of the house. I submit that this is making the whole performance preposterous. I have some very real reasons for moving an amendment to this bill, and on a point of order I submit that we should be given the opportunity to discuss these bills. Otherwise parliament may as well cease to exist.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Proceed.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I do not wish the house to think for one moment that I am trying to filibuster; that is not my intention at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: Just wait till I finish. I wish to make a few remarks, and then as far as I am concerned I have done all I intend to do in this regard. I would have made this statement the other night had the opportunity arisen, but nine o'clock arrived and I was unable to proceed. I wish to state now that I agree entirely with the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) the last evening private bills were being discussed, and on that occasion I opposed the passage of these bills, for several reasons. I ask for certain details, and I hope no hon. member of the house thinks I wanted those details at all. I asked for them because in the first place I am very well satisfied that the sponsors of these bills do not have them, in the second place that they would not give them to the house if they did have them, and in the third place that parliament would not listen to them if they gave them. Then you may ask why I requested them. I asked for them in order to emphasize the absurdity of this parliament passing bills which cannot be discussed and with regard to which no one has the information which would enable them to be discussed. That is not reasonable.

I wish also to draw the attention of the government—and I am glad to notice that the Prime Minister is now in his seat—to the fact that we have a bill now on the order paper which would place the Ontario cases in the hands of the courts, where they belong, and would dispense with the present absurdity. I desire to ask whether the Prime Minister will give us an opportunity to discuss this bill and, if parliament agrees, to make it law. That is where the divorce jurisdiction belongs; it is a judge's job, not ours. Judges can go into the matter in a proper fashion, and we cannot. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, great tragedies are involved in these cases, and the least possible publicity should be given to them. In the courts is the place for these things to be gone into, and I hope the Prime Minister will promise to give the courts a chance. If he will promise, as far as I am concerned I will undertake to let these bills go through without another word.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the other evening I raised a question as to the manner in which these bills were passed. I have no desire to obstruct the business of this house; I would like that to be understood. As I said then, I have no interest in refusing to have these particular bills passed; but I am speaking on a matter of principle, and if I may be permitted I should like to say just a few words here with regard to the general question, rather than give undue publicity to the various cases as they come up.

There is no reference whatever made to the custody of the children. I should like to move, and if necessary I shall do so in the various cases, a resolution in amendment somewhat along this line—I hesitate to do so just at this moment, but I am giving an indication of what I should like to do: That the bill be amended by adding at the end of section 1—which provides for the divorce—the following words:

> The said shall have the custody of the children, and the said shall pay annually to , for her support and maintenance, the sum of five hundred dollars so long as she remains unmarried, and the sum of two hundred dollars annually for the support and education of each of their children.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the divorce courts which are established in the various provinces provision is made for alimony.

Mr. BENNETT: Only when it is asked for.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A provision then may be made—shall I alter that?—for alimony. It seems to me that the utmost care ought to be taken in regard to these cases, especially when children are concerned. I take it that the bringing of children into the world and their education is one of the fundamental principles of the family tie; yet we dissolve that tie without making any real protection for the children. I do not think that should any longer be permitted. We should decide definitely which of the two parents should have the custody of the children, and how these children are to be maintained. Even when there are not children, it seems to me that if a man is married to a woman and spends some years with her the least he can do where divorce is granted, especially where he himself is the guilty one, is to make some financial provision for her future. In one of the cases which is before us—I do not wish to enter into the details—there are three children involved. The man apparently has lived a very careless life; as a matter of fact he is at present in an institution and his family are dependent upon the help of friends.

I should like to call attention to the fact that my suggestion is not an unknown thing or without precedent. I find that in the first divorce bill granted in Canada that was not referred to Great Britain, various provisions for the separation of the parties were made, and further there was provision for alimony, provision for the custody of the one child, and an allowance for the support of the child, with very adequate means for the enforcement of these requirements. There was also provision that in case of reconciliation between the husband and wife that the law should not come into force. It was said at the time that this was a matter that involved civil rights and hence did not come under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities. I anticipate that objection on this ground may be raised to an amendment which I may propose to-night—that this is a matter involving civil rights. But this was the ground which was taken when the motion was finally passed in the house. I refer to the Campbell case of 1879, and I shall read just a paragraph from the statement made at that time by Senator Miller, as follows:

Under the British North America Act the legislation in regard to civil rights is given exclusively to the local legislatures, but it cannot be controverted, I think, that when the parliament of Canada has exclusive power to deal with any subject of legislation, that so far as it is necessary to deal with civil rights in connection with such legislation, we have the undoubted power to deal with them, where this parliament has the right to legislate on any subject it must be considered that we have the power to legislate regarding all matters incident to that subject.

And then later on:

The whole legislative power, the whole functions of the government of this country have been remodelled anew, and under the British North America Act this question has been given absolutely to the control of this parliament.

And then again he says:

Is it not, therefore, absurd to say that if we have the power by act of legislation to sweep out of existence the divorce courts of the provinces, and deprive them of all their authority respecting the subject of marriage and divorce, that we have not the power to deal with the whole subject and its incidents under the terms of the British North America Act? I think there cannot be very strong doubts that we have the power. Marriage and divorce, and everything which is incident to marriage and divorce, as a logical sequence and corollary, are within our jurisdiction. What then is alimony? It is maintenance after the separation of the husband and wife. It is an incident of the contract of marriage. So control of children is also a right growing out of the same contract; and, therefore, being incident to the marriage relationship, belongs to the jurisdiction of this parliament.

I may say that the house passed the bill without debate, the first instance of a divorce bill in Canada being passed without being reserved for his majesty. It is quite obvious that it is next to impossible for parliament to have a committee inquire into the details of the circumstances of each of the families concerned, but surely it is highly important that such an inquiry should be made. That is my reason for urging that we should transfer some of the powers originally held by parliament to a more suitable body which can safeguard the interests especially of the women and children.

But there is something more than that. There are a number of cases—and I want to be frank and say that this condition is not by any means universal—that come before the house this year in which the evidence shows that one or both of the people involved are physically diseased. It seems to me that some day we shall reach the point where we shall insist that every man and woman before marriage shall be able to give a clean bill of health. That should and must come in this country; but it has not yet come, and I suppose in the majority of cases we may take it for granted, unless something to the contrary arises, that the people are physically in good health. But there is in the hands of the members of this house evidence in printed form that some of these people are diseased. There is evidence in at least one case, and I hold in my hand a pamphlet of more than a hundred pages in which the evidence is given that the man has been addicted to the most horrible unnatural practices. I do not want just at this stage to have to connect the name with this, not only because of the man but particularly because of the wife and child; but when we have cases in which there are the most horrible and unnatural practices, where the man is physically diseased and his wife is also physically diseased and under treatment from a physician, it is the most absurd thing and it is morally indefensible for this house to grant the right to marry again. I do not think, in the interest of the future of this country that we should permit such a thing to occur. When a case like that arises I could hardly feel justified in saying that the man has a right to marry again. I suppose technically in the form in which the clause is worded, it is the woman who has the right to marry again, but I understand in practice the man has also that right. Thus we give him an opportunity of going out and ruining other lives as he has ruined the life of the woman who is now his wife. In such cases I should like to have the bill amended by adding the following words at the end of section 2, that is the section giving the right to marry again:

Provided that this right shall be exercised only upon condition that he shall be previously examined by competent medical authorities and pronounced free of venereal disease.

That seems to be a reasonable thing. I do not like to discuss these things; but if we condemn innocent people outside of this house to lives of misery—and I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) who said the other day that there is tragedy in every one of these cases—we may well take our responsibilities a little more seriously than we have been doing. I am blaming myself along with the rest. Year after year I know I have protested against this procedure; but we all become absorbed in our business; things go as a matter of course, and we do not stop to consider all the consequences involved in our votes. I will confess that I have read more of these cases in the last two or three days than I have read in the previous six or seven years. Most hon. members have hardly realized that there is no provision for the children, no provision for their education; that they are not even assigned to one or other of the parents. I know many hon. members do not realize the physical disabilities under which some of these people labour and the diseases with which they are afflicted, and these are matters that should be considered.

In view of that situation I do not think we are going too far when we urge that the government should offer facilities for the discussion of the bill that is now on the order paper. Last year a similar bill came from the senate and it received no discussion whatever. It came towards the close of parliament; there was no one to father it at that time, and possibly it would not have passed at that late date. This year again a similar bill comes over from the senate. The senators find it simply impossible to keep up with this work. I am informed that we have something like three hundred divorce bills that must be considered this year, or at least applications have been made for something like that number of divorces. I am also informed that altogether the senate cannot get through more than two hundred divorce cases and that something like seventy-five will go by the board this year. If we are anxious that these people should in some way settle down in their lives, surely it is highly desirable that we do not postpone for another twelve months the decision concerning their marital relations. We should decide and either force them to live together, if we can do that, or give them an opportunity of living apart. We should do that at this session.

We are facing this situation. This bill has come over from the senate in the ordinary course of affairs; it is down in the midst of public bills and orders, and it will hardly be reached this session. In the meantime we are carrying on along the old lines because apparently we have not the courage to break precedents and face the situation which ought to have been faced much earlier. In the earlier times we know that only the wealthy people came to parliament to secure divorces, and while I suppose it was as great a social evil in those days as it is to-day, certainly the numbers involved were not so great. I suppose in most cases then there could be arrangements made with regard to allocation of property; but now that large numbers of comparatively poor people are seeking divorces—and in this province and in Quebec they have no other way of obtaining them than by coming to parliament—our procedure means that they are put to a great deal of unnecessary expense, inconvenience and an enormous amount of publicity that is far from being desirable. After that is all done in no one instance are we satisfactorily settling the case. We are allowing the children to be scattered abroad without making any provision for them. Therefore I would urge the Prime Minister under these circumstances to afford facilities this session for discussing this particular bill. I do not want to threaten as to what we may do; but it is quite obvious that even half a dozen members in this corner could obstruct to such an extent that we would indefinitely delay these bills so that they would not be passed this year and there would be even a greater public scandal; that we would force other bills to be delayed and thus again interfere with the business of parliament and of the country. It is not my desire nor the desire of anyone in this part of the chamber to do anything of that character, and we do not want anyone to think we are going to threaten to do it. But I appeal to the Prime Minister and the government to do what is the reasonable thing under the circumstances, namely, to give us an opportunity of considering the bill which is urged upon us by the senate, if necessary to vote it down, but in any case to consider what is to be done. Then another year, if we are to go forward in this haphazard fashion, some of us will be prepared perhaps to go to greater extremes than we feel justified in doing at the present time.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss the merits of the bill which my hon. friend would like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to give the house an opportunity to discuss. If the bill comes in the regular course before the house, I will say that I am opposed to it. May I say now that I am opposed to divorce in principle as my hon. friend is in favour of it; and I merely desire to direct the attention of the house to the fact that the hon. gentleman who is now preventing the passage of these bills is not among those who are opposed to divorce in principle.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have an amendment to move.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said that I had an amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member cannot move an amendment. Rule 113 reads as follows:

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private bill, in a committee of the whole house, or at the third reading of the bill, unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

So the amendment is out of order.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I think the request of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), that the Prime Minister state whether he would give the house an opportunity of discussing Bill No. 27, is a reasonable one. Certainly this bill is introduced by a private member, yet it is a public bill that is all important, probably of more importance than anything else on the order paper. If this bill were passed by the house it would make a very great deal of difference in the transaction of the business of this house in future sessions. This bill passed the senate this year at an early stage of the session. We have sometimes heard very hard things said about hon. members sitting in another chamber. They have rejected bills of ours because they have not had time to consider them towards the end of the session. Here is a case where a bill came from that chamber very early in the session, and has been before us for some time. I think it is only reasonable that the house should be given an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): My only reason for rising to say a few words at this time is to emphasize the injustice that is done to private members under the rules as they exist to-day. Here we have under the heading of public bills and orders no less than seventeen different bills and resolutions. All these measures have been introduced and partly discussed, and they are all now buried under public bills and orders, which appears to be simply a graveyard for private members' bills and resolutions. It does seem to me that if a private member is allowed to introduce a bill or resolution he should also be allowed to bring it before the house in such a way that parliament can make a decision upon it. What I am protesting against is that while all these measures are of importance to the members concerned, and of importance also to their constituents and to many people in the country, yet under the rules parliament is prevented from coming to a decision upon them. Surely nothing could be fairer than that an opportunity should be afforded for finishing the discussion that has already begun on these questions and having a vote upon them.

It appears to me that under the present rules too much power entirely is centralized in that section of parliament which is called the government. The rest of the house has apparently little or no power; we are hampered in so many different ways. For instance, any bill or resolution involving the expenditure of money cannot be brought before the house by a private member, and any other measure not involving the expenditure of money which a private member does bring forward can very conveniently be buried among public bills and orders.

I am not prepared to say whether or not I am in favour of bill No. 27. I have not given it very much consideration. I am not demanding that the bill be passed. I am simply asking that parliament in the ordinary course of events be given an opportunity to pass its opinion on that bill. The rules are very remarkable when a few members of the house can obstruct business in this way. I am going to be quite frank and say that, so far as I am concerned, I think the obstructionist tactics are quite justified. These rules seem to have been framed deliberately to prevent discussion and to prevent parliament from coming to a decision on matters brought before this house by a private member. The rules are framed to centralize power in that section of parliament which is called the government—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to rule whether the hon. gentleman is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that while the hon. gentleman is not speaking to the bill which is before the house, he complains that another bill does not come up for consideration, and that if an opportunity were given for its discussion we would not have the present impasse in the house whereby the discussion of a long list of bills is prevented. I think the hon. gentleman is in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was going on to state, Mr. Speaker, that I consider this principle is involved in every private bill, and I rose to protest against what I consider an injustice to parliament itself—that power that should not by any right be there is centralized in the government. I say that the government should give parliament the right to pass its approval or disapproval on every one of these measures that are now in the graveyard that we call public bills and orders, and I would ask the Prime Minister to state whether or not he proposes to give us an opportunity to discuss these measures under public bills and orders.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Campbell) has said that the rules of the house had been so framed as to give private members no opportunity whatever to discuss bills or resolutions introduced by them, and to put the control of business into the hands of the government. May I remind him that the rules of the house to which he refers are the result of a conference which took place between all parties in this house, including the party of which he himself is a member, and the report which was brought into this house with regard to the new rules was passed unanimously, my hon. friend himself being one of those who concurred in it. So that as far as the rules under which we are working at the moment are concerned, every hon. member of this house was a consenting party to them. The rules were adopted unanimously. If there are difficulties in the working out of those rules, that possibly is to be expected, but I submit that these difficulties will not be solved by adopting methods which really preclude free discussion, but rather by taking full advantage of the opportunities which the rules themselves permit.

Some hon. gentlemen opposite are interested in reaching a particular bill. The rules provide that on Tuesday and Friday evenings for the first hour private bills shall be the first order of business, and that private bills shall be succeeded by public bills. If the private bills are disposed of, we will then reach public bills, and I submit that the quickest way to reach the particular bill in which the hon. member is interested is to get the private bills out of the way so that we can come to order No. 31 for the second reading of the bill in which the hon. member is interested.

An appeal has been made to the government, and to myself in particular, to undertake to say that a certain public bill shall be given precedence and preference over all other measures. There are at least a dozen members of the house who have made a similar appeal to me, not publicly, but privately, asking that preference be given to the particular bill in which they were specially interested. I have pointed out to one and all that to give preference to any single measure was to work an injustice to all other hon. members who had private or public bills in which they were specially interested. For that reason I have refused to comply with their request.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is not a senate bill in a somewhat different class?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All private bills are private bills whether they originate in this or in the other house.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will recall that two or three days ago I made a motion in the house, and I think it was out of that motion that the present discussion has in part arisen, to get certain senate bills out of the way, so that other private bills could be brought on more speedily. Some hon. members took exception to that motion, and the discussion that has been taking place ever since has really grown out of an endeavour on the part of the government to expedite these senate measures with a view to enabling other private bills to be more speedily reached.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Could the Prime Minister not have just as reasonably and just as readily included this bill No. 27 in his motion, or made a similar motion referring to that bill only?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I again point out to my hon. friend that, assuming the government wished to take a particular bill and have it considered, the final decision as to whether or not the bill can be dealt with out of the order prescribed by the rules of the house rests with the house itself, not with the government. I submit that unless there is an obvious disposition on the part of members in all parts of the house to endeavour to facilitate and expedite the business with respect to private bills, any appeal on the part of the government to give preference to a particular bill just because one section of the house is interested in it would not meet with the approval which those most interested wish to have. I suggest that we make an effort to take up these private bills in as expeditious a manner as possible. The government recognizes there are some important measures that hon. members will wish to have considered, and it may be that a little later on in the session the government will find it advisable to grant a special time for further consideration of private bills, but it must be a consideration that applies equally to all bills and not to any one bill in particular.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The observations of the Prime Minister seem to me to entirely meet the situation, Mr. Speaker. This house is to blame for the present situation, and not the government, because when the house was asked to dispense with private members' days the motion was adopted without dissent. Had any of us asked the Prime Minister to give another Monday or another Wednesday for private members, I am certain he would have done so from what I have seen in the conduct of business this session. But none of us was aware of the fact that there was a much larger number of private bills to be considered than in recent sessions, with the result that we gave up those days without dissent. No voice was raised against the motion so far as my memory serves me.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Correct.

Mr. BENNETT: That being so, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that, having regard to the very large number of private bills on the order paper, he might agree to give one more day for their consideration, taking them just as they stand on the order paper and as if the motion to discontinue private members' days was subject to one more day being given. If that is done, I think the situation will be fairly met; and perhaps all of us will be a little more astute in the future, and when the government makes the usual motion to take private members' days, as all governments do, we will remember the number of private bills on the order paper and take the means to protect ourselves in the manner provided by the rules.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will recall what I have just said. It was equivalent to meeting the request he has now made—not in its exact terms as to the matter of time, but I did intimate that later in the session after we make further progress with public business, if we have not then cleared the slate so far as private and public bills are concerned, the government will be prepared to give hon. members an opportunity for further discussion of those measures.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask the right hon. Prime Minister if what he has said—I will not call it an undertaking—covers public bills and orders as well as private bills?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The orders of the house provide that when private bills are disposed of public bills follow in their natural sequence, and my undertaking is that the order of procedure which the rules lay down for Mondays will be followed on the day that may be set apart.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): This discussion, Mr. Speaker, seems to be a little out of order, but there are a couple of observations made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to which I cannot assent. To say, for example, that in order to reach public bills we should let pass as quickly as possible and without consideration all private bills preceding them is to my mind a rather strange proposition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I never said that.

Mr. BOURASSA: Well, it practically amounts to this: In order to reach certain public bills no member should discuss the private bills that stand in front of those public bills. But that is not the material point to which I wish to speak. Far more serious to my mind is the point raised by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), with the short observations thereon by the Minister of Justice. I think I am just as much opposed to divorce on principle as is the Minister of Justice. I think the manner in which parliament is voting divorces by the bushel is getting to be a scandal and a social evil, threatening the future of this country,—

An hon. MEMBER: Change it.

Mr. BOURASSA: —and I think it is time for it to be considered quite seriously. It would not have been my purpose to take up the large issue upon one single private bill, but since it has been raised I want to make this observation now,—that the bill adopted in the other chamber and presented in this house by the member for Stormont (Mr. Smith), which has been referred to this evening, does not mean the adoption by this parliament of the principle of divorce. Unfortunately that principle was adopted at confederation, and I think it is one of the great mistakes that was then made. So it is not a question of adopting or putting aside the principle of divorce. The question is, in what manner shall the power to grant divorce be exercised with the least evil to society and with the preservation of the family spirit and the maintenance of the social fabric. I do not think the manner in which divorces are granted by this parliament makes for a lesser number of divorces, or for the granting of them with the greatest impartiality, or with the greatest care for the welfare of families and society generally, and I believe everybody is convinced that it is largely haphazard whether a divorce is granted or refused by parliament under the present procedure. For my part, I must say that during the two years since I came back to this house it has been a question in my mind whether we are doing the right thing when we let these divorce bills pass. Simply because they are inscribed on the votes and proceedings as being "carried on division" is not sufficient to my mind to justify us in voting for their passage as we do. I am prepared to support any measure to render the granting of divorces by this parliament as difficult as possible; I am prepared to support any amendment such as that submitted by the member for Winnipeg North Centre to make people who ask for divorce understand that some responsibility must follow their "relief"; but more especially I am prepared to support every measure that will do away with the present procedure of voting divorces through this house—not to speak of the manner in which they are granted by the senate, as to which I have no desire and probably no right to pass judgment. As far as I am concerned, I propose to vote in favour of every amendment that is moved against the passing of any of these divorce bills. If the measure I have referred to is submitted by the member for Stormont, I think it will have to be considered very seriously, and not be discarded simply because we are opposed to the principle of divorce, because, as I have said, in my view the principle has already been wrongly introduced.

Motion agreed to on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Thorson moves, seconded by Mr. Goodison:

That bills Nos. 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, being unopposed divorce bills which have been reported by the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills be now read a third time, and that standing order 21 be suspended in relation thereto.

The motion must have unanimous consent.

Mr. IRVINE: I object.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion stands.

EDITH DUFF MCCOO

The house in committee on Bill No. 77, for the relief of Edith Duff McCoo—Mr. McPhee—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 1—Marriage dissolved. Shall section 1 carry?

[Mr. Bourassa.]

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I move that the bill be reported.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: The ayes have it; I declare the motion carried.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

KATHLEEN MARION BALDWIN

The house in committee on Bill No. 78, for the relief of Kathleen Marion Baldwin—Mr. Ryckman—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that the bill be reported.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Mr. SPENCER: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: The ayes have it; I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FREDERICK JAMES LEE

The house in committee on Bill No. 79, for the relief of Frederick James Lee—Mr. Anderson (Toronto High Park)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I move that the bill be reported.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: A bill must be read forthwith when there is no amendment, and there is no amendment in the present case.

Bill read the third time and passed.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION ACT, 1927, AMENDMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mackenzie King for the second reading of Bill No. 218, to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka, Ontario): Before this bill passes there are one or two observations I wish to make. I listened this afternoon with considerable interest to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and that of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), and I fancy that nearly every hon. member in this house and everyone in the country will agree that this capital should be beautified. We are all interested in this matter, just as we are interested in our individual municipalities and in our own homes and everything appertaining thereto. But, Mr. Speaker, there is something else that must be considered, and that is the advisability of this parliament voting so much money at the present time for an object of this character. The first essential which this parliament should consider is that the government that raises money by taxation must be held responsible for spending it. That principle has been violated by this government on many occasions this session. Of course, we have always been given reasons. The Prime Minister this afternoon addressed the house for an hour explaining why this expenditure should be made at the present time. In all my public or private career I have never known of a government, a municipality or a person spending money belonging to someone else who could not find excuses for so doing, but I have found it much more difficult to find people who practise economy and handle public funds as they should be handled. Here we are voting $3,000,000 to put so many buildings into the scrap heap—I was going to say it would be squandered, but possibly that is too strong. At any rate we are spending $3,000,000 and in addition we are voting $200,000 a year for thirty years, making $6,000,000 more.

This afternoon the Prime Minister cited the United States as an example, but I should like to ask him whether the financial condition of this country to-day is comparable to that of the United States. Does he think this country has made such progress financially since the war as would enable it to imitate the United States? This afternoon the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) drew attention to a fact of which I do not think sufficient notice has been taken by parliament and the country. He told us that the government of the United States have reduced the national debt of that country from twenty-six billion to about sixteen billion dollars, and have reduced taxes from $50 to $25 per head. In addition to that, of the sixteen billion dollars remaining of their national debt, they have unloaded between eleven and twelve billion dollars on Great Britain and other countries. If they continue their present rate of progress, paying a billion dollars a year, in five years they will be free of war taxation. Consequently we see that they are in a much better position than the Dominion of Canada to undertake obligations of this kind.

I object to this expenditure for another reason; the people in the rural municipalities of the province of Ontario get practically nothing from this government. For example, in my riding there are many localities which receive only two deliveries of mail a week, and when we ask the department for something more they tell us the business will not warrant it. I would also point out that the mail service is practically the only thing given by the government to the ordinary resident in a rural municipality.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to say just a word on the question of mail service. No request has been received within the last eighteen months from any part of Canada asking for more than two mails a week which has not been granted. I wish to have that statement corrected.

Mr. McGIBBON: Then I would ask the Postmaster General a further question. If such requests come in will he grant them?

Mr. VENIOT: I will, because generally speaking, I do not consider two mails a week sufficient for any part of this country where post offices are established.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am very glad I rose to-night, if for no other reason than that I have secured this promise from the Postmaster General. I have gone to his department, although not to him personally, to ask for this service, and have been told that the business would not warrant it. I am very grateful, therefore, to the Postmaster General for this promise, and I can assure him that before many days pass he will receive such a request from at least one riding.

There is another point to which I would like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister and the government, a point which I am glad to say was touched upon by the Prime Minister this afternoon. I refer to the creation of Ottawa as a federal district. While we are tearing down the Russell house at a cost of $1,250,000 in order to beautify this city, a structure is going up on Wellington street right in front of the parliament buildings which at this stage appears to have no architectural beauty at all. I suggest to the Prime Minister and the government that this should be created a federal district in the near future in order that the government may have some control over all buildings erected within a certain distance of the parliament buildings. As things now stand, I can see no sense in tearing down a building such as the Russell house because it is an eyesore situated near the parliament buildings, while another building is going up much closer which probably will not be so beautiful.

There are many things which I believe are needed by the country more than what this expenditure is being made for. The Postmaster General has promised a better mail service, and now I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) if he will carry out the intention of parliament as expressed a few years ago in regard to relief for Home bank depositors. A number of people lost their money in that institution. I am not going to discuss the question whether the government were right or wrong in granting them 35 per cent of their losses, but I do say that since that principle was adopted everyone should be treated alike. Up to the present some have received 35 per cent, but because the money ran out others whose claims were admitted received only 25 per cent, 20 per cent, 15 per cent, and in some cases only 10 per cent. As I have said, there might have been some justification for parliament not giving anything, but I can see no justice in a discrimination of this kind. I ask the Minister of Finance if he will not treat all alike and do justice to everyone. I hope he will be as frank as the Postmaster General, so I will pause for a reply.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend will look at Hansard to-morrow morning he will find that I made a statement on the orders of the day this afternoon with regard to the Home bank.

Mr. McGIBBON: I heard the statement made by the minister, but it does not cover what I am asking now. He said then he would grant their claims at least in part, but I do not see how the government can discriminate between these people. I agree that at that time the government had a good argument for not doing anything. I was not in the house then so I do not take any responsibility one way or the other, but there were two sides to the question and Hansard of that time shows that a very good case was presented on the floor of this house for both sides. However, parliament having decided that the government should grant 35 per cent, first to all depositors having under $500 in that bank and then to all those who had over $500 in the bank and could prove that they were in need of it, and the Exchequer Court having decided who were in need of it, I cannot see why there should be any discrimination and why some should be paid 35 per cent while others receive as little as 10 per cent.

Mr. ROBB: If my hon. friend will allow me to say a word just to keep the record straight, the measure which was passed by this chamber at the instance of the government provided for something over $5,000,000, which would have taken care of everyone on the basis just outlined by my hon. friend. That bill was amended in the other chamber, however, and the amendment was accepted by this house.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am quite familiar with that fact. I believe an estimate was called for as to how much money would be required to care for these people, but after all it was only an estimate and because it was below actual requirements I do not see that that is any occasion for doing an injustice. However, I believe the minister is honest enough to see that this is not working out fairly and I believe he will yet remedy the situation, because I do not believe any honest man can justify a discrimination of that kind. If we have millions to spend; if we can hand over seven millions as we did the other night to the Quebec harbour commission and $700,000 to Toronto, and if we can vote millions here for the destruction of buildings in Ottawa, surely we can do justice to those who have lost their all and have got beyond the stage in life where they can earn a living and are depending upon this money. My last appeal to the Prime Minister and the government is to equalize the task which they have undertaken and to do justice to all these people.

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express the pleasure I experienced in hearing the right hon. the Prime Minister this evening give reasons why the national capital should be placed under some definite scheme of improvement. I was very much impressed with the pictures that were drawn of the various capitals in Europe and on the North American continent, and I felt myself in accord with all that the Prime Minister said. But when he had finished I thought this an opportune moment to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister and the government a different aspect of the question, a different picture, so that a due sense of proportion might be brought into action with regard to Canada as a whole.

Centralization of investment and improvement was never a part of the confederation scheme, and much, sir, as I appreciate and realize the necessity of the beautification of our capital city; much as I admire what has been done here in respect to the victory tower and the perpetuation therein for future generations of the story of the brave deeds of our 50,000 Canadians, still I feel that I should not be doing right if, as the representative of a courageous and hardworking people, I did not present their view in the hope that the same spirit of generosity with which we are now going to vote $6,000,000 covering a period of thirty years and $3,000,000 for immediate use, may be accorded them, I am sure the ministers of every department of the government must be tired reading the letters of hon. members pleading for a little wharf here, a little marine light there, a telephone line to some community for women and children removed from the centres of civilization. But when I find, sir, that sometimes we cannot get even a hundred dollars, —a small amount, but it means a big thing to the people affected—I ask the Prime Minister and his government, not perhaps that they should go out of their way, but that they at least be actuated by the same spirit of generosity in relation to the people who need a little help, who are far removed from the parks and the squares and the boulevards but who are toiling hard to build up by their industry our great seaports and our cities; that they should give at any rate some consideration to the demands of these people.

I do not wish to dwell at length, Mr. Speaker, upon the side of our Canadian life which is often overlooked in this House of Commons. I have travelled not hundreds but thousands of miles through my constituency since last year; I have toiled and walked where roads do not exist, and I now plead for better care and a more sympathetic hearing for the people who are not capable of coming to the House of Commons to plead their own case. There are districts where women and children live with no doctors within often thirty miles, and no telephone communication. That is not confined merely to one part of western Canada; it is a condition which is very general. I have pleaded in this house, sir, for twelve months for fishermen's floats, which are necessary to the safeguarding of the whole of their interests, their capital, their homes, because all these are centred in their boats; but a deaf ear has been turned to the plea of the people.

I wish to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a grave duty incumbent upon a government. They are placed in power for a limited period, to do, not for a section but for the good of the whole, that which ought to be done. I assure the hon. Prime Minister that members on this side of the house are not chronic in their opposition to government measures; they give the deepest consideration to them, and they are ever ready to support measures which are in the national interest. But I say that in the matter of public works, in the matter of the assistance to the people who are building up this country, the government are not carrying out that duty which they should take upon themselves as a sacred pledge to perform. After this matter has been thoroughly threshed out, therefore, I trust that if the representatives of the people of Canada are in accord with the beautification of their capital city, rural interests will not suffer and a response will be made to our requests in this house for the very things which will enable Canada at a crucial moment of her existence to keep her people on the land, to keep them in the vocations for which they are best fitted, and not cause them to be driven daily into our cities with resulting unemployment and such scenes as have been witnessed in Winnipeg in the last few days. The greatest scheme of immigration, sir, that Canada can put into force is the taking of such action as may be necessary to assist our people who are now on the land and who are willing to stay there and whose children would live with them and build up the country if they were given the little help for which they ask. I have placed before the ministers here communications not from one person but boards of trade, representing whole communities, some of them large districts, begging for a few hundred dollars for a wharf upon a lakeside which would enable those people to avoid a journey of thirty or forty miles along very poor roads. And what has been the answer? The answer has very often been a polite little note, very often of three lines, that the matter will be looked into. That is all we get and we have to go back with that to our constituents. The hour is coming when the people of Canada will realize that it is not politics they want, but men who are pledged, irrespective of localitiy or of political feelings, to do what is right for the people as a whole.

I am in sympathy with the scheme of beautifying Ottawa. In my young days I was favoured with the opportunity of travelling throughout Europe and I know the heritage that a great country can store up for future generations in its buildings, museums, libraries and art galleries. All these are necessary for the life, spirit and growth of a nation; but the large sums of money spent in certain localities in Canada are out of all due proportion to their needs, while large parts of this country are left outside in the cold, pleading in vain for trade facilities. That is exactly why I stand here to-night representing those people I am doing it not as a politician but with a heart as pure, with motives as sincere and with aspirations as great as those of any member on the government side.

When the Prime Minister this afternnon displayed that eloquence of his in support of his measure, I thought for a moment perhaps he was ignorant of another picture on a bigger and broader scale, a picture not of a city but of a vast stretch of country awaiting a little help. It is only a little—a bagatelle when you consider the expenditure of $250,000 a year for thirty years. I thought if only the Department of Public Works, the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the other departments would give even an amount equivalent to a small fraction of that, we would be helping to make a contented, happy people. Canadians love their land. They would like to live there always. We have a great fertile country, millions of acres yet unsettled, and what is happening? People who have spent the best part of their lives in trying to make a living in the country by farming, give up in despair. Who would not under similar conditions? Therefore I appeal this evening to the representatives of Quebec, the oldest and most prosperous province in Canada, that they should treat matters such as we are discussing here to-night on the big, broad basis that what is good for British Columbia, must be good for Canada; for the development of western Canada will, benefit eastern Canada as well. I am not an expert in financial matters; I am not an expert in the business world; but at least I have a knowledge of the history of the past and the present trend of modern life, and, I aver the day will come when Canada will regret that she did not in the golden opportunity of her youth do more to keep our people on the land and build up healthy prosperous rural communities. We are sadly neglecting this important duty today. So far as I have been able I have done my duty. I care a great deal about the future of young Canadian people; I feel deeply for the thousands who are now struggling against difficulties which the government have it in their power to remedy.

In conclusion, let me say that this session of parliament has been an anxious one to many of our members. We found that it was not safe during the winter months for any member leaving the parliament buildings alone to proceed on any of the walks other than that leading directly to the main entrance. Why? He might slip, as many have slipped, on one of the sidewalks and, if hurt, be left lying there the whole night long and probably lose his life. The way the walks to and about the parliament buildings have been kept this winter was a disgrace, and a bounden duty rests upon the government to see that in future the place is at least made safe for pedestrians.

Another matter I should like to speak of is in reference to the water used for drinking purposes, but I am not going to blame the government for it. I have travelled a good deal in my life I have never tasted worse water than that of the city of Ottawa. The other day in my private home where I live the landlady placed water on my table for luncheon and she said: "Do not worry about the water, I have placed something in it."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BRADY: It was nothing except some purifying agent. Why was that done? It was done because the water was so muddy that no one could drink it. I should like the Prime Minister now that he is sponsoring a special scheme providing for the beautification of the city of Ottawa, to exert his power and influence to see to it that the other part, namely, a better water supply and the cleaning up of the city so as to keep pace with the beautification scheme proposed by the Prime Minister, be given the necessary attention.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I wish to take just a few minutes of the time of the house before this bill goes into the committee stage on account of remarks which were made by the Prime Minister this afternoon in reference to the statement that I had made a year ago. I have taken the trouble to look up Hansard of last year, and it may be recalled that I pointed out then that one thing which in my opinion should be done by the Ottawa improvement commisison, with the assistance of the government, was to secure the property on Wellington street between Metcalfe and O'Connor—that is the section immediately facing the parliament buildings —that an open space should be provided there extending at least from the grounds of the parliament buildings down to Sparks street, and that on the remainder of the block buildings be erected which would harmonize with the architectural design of the parliament buildings. Since that time a new building has been started on the corner of O'Connor and Wellington streets, so that we are a year too late in regard to that project. I can only express my regret that the government did not first of all secure this property immediately facing the parliament buildings and proceed to beautify it.

The capital of Canada centres on what we call parliament hill. This is the spot from which we should start to beautify the capital. I am afraid the proposal which is contained in this bill to add one more park to the city of Ottawa, while that is very desirable if we can afford it, is not the step which should have been taken first. If this is all the money we can afford to spend—and I take it from the discussion here to-day that that is the way parliament feels about it—I regret that the money was not used in securing the property on Wellington street directly in front of the parliament buildings, and then starting from the very centre of the capital to beautify it. Any further suggestions or criticisms that I may have to make, Mr. Speaker, I shall postpone until the bill is in committee.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Before the Prime Minister replies would he allow me to ask him a question? When the plans were adopted and parliament voted $250,000 a year for sixteen years, it seems to me that the commission must have had in view at that time the plaza or open space which is shown on the chart that has been distributed to-day. If so, the commission must have had also in its mind that something should be done with the Russell house block. Whether they contemplated leaving the Russell house standing or acquiring it and doing something with it, may be a matter of question, but in either case one would think they must have had the situation in mind when they were asking for $250,000 for sixteen years. If, on the other hand, the purchase of the Russell house block is a new development, I should like the Prime Minister to indicate that to the house when he is replying.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): I would like to point out just one or two features in connection with this important bill. I believe when the Prime Minister introduced the bill he made mention of the fact that we should look forward to Ottawa becoming a federal district, and that that ideal would be nearer of attainment after another redistribution measure was before the house. I think our last census was taken in 1921, so the next will be in 1931. A redistribution measure will be due shortly after the census which is to be taken in 1931, and in view of that fact I was wondering if there is any real need at this time for this legislation which is now proposed. Last session we had brought before us a bill providing for an appropriation of a quarter of a million dollars for each of the next succeeding sixteen years for the federal district commission. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that that provision would amply take care of the needs of the commission for such time as will elapse between now and the next redistribution bill, and would it perhaps not be the part of wisdom on the part of this house to go gently along as we are doing, and then make a thorough job of the business after the next redistribution?

It seems to me that we are starting in even on this measure a quarter of a century too late. I think there is more in this city that needs renovating than just the driveways and parks. It is true that it is very pleasant to take a drive over a splendid driveway and to refresh yourself in a most beautiful park, but you forget all that pleasantness if you take a walk along Bank street about five in the afternoon. You are badgered from pillar to post, you trip over water hydrants, and are jostled by pedestrians, so that at times it is certainly not pleasant travelling along Bank street. If this city were under the administration of a commission and the territory turned into a federal district, such a thing as the widening of Bank street and making it more fit for pedestrians might be attended to.

It has also been mentioned here that Wellington street is hardly safe to cross. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to continue as we are in that respect until there is a casualty on Wellington street, and then we will seriously consider the situation. Every day, on crossing that street, those of us who are so unfortunate as to have to cross it on foot have to dodge cars coming and going not at any fifteen or twenty miles an hour, but from thirty to fifty miles an hour, and the marvel is to me that we have not had casualties ere this. I do not know who has authority to supervise that situation. I believe that a part of Wellington street is under the control of the federal government, and that another part is under the control of the city, but if the whole street were under a federal commission, and the whole city were turned into a federal district, that situation could easily be taken care of.

Another matter that might be beneficial would be taking care of the civil service. If the city were turned into a federal district, I presume that the civil service would be disfranchised. Possibly that might not necessarily be entailed in such a procedure, but it would seem to me a very wise step to take. Then there would not be a continual bombardment not only of the members representing the city of Ottawa, but of other hon. members with a view to positions in the civil service, the reviewing of salaries, and such like.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) mentioned that this expenditure was so trivial that it amounted to only four cents per capita per year. That may be true in regard to this particular expenditure, but the trouble is we have so many of these trivial expenditures. We have $8,500,000 for Quebec harbour, $5,000,000 for St. John harbour, and $500,000 for another harbour, etcetera, etcetera, and we have hanging over our head a national debt of almost two and a half billion dollars, which amounts to almost $300 per capita. So it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are going rather extravagantly, to put it mildly, and that we can well afford to let at least this measure of extravagance ride over for a few years. If we have another census in 1931, that is only a matter of three years, and a redistribution bill will be brought down shortly after that. In from three to five years we could perhaps have a federal district created here, and the commissioners in charge could build from the ground up and create a capital city which would be of real beauty and of which the nation might well be proud.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express on behalf of the government, my appreciation of the manner in which the proposal that I made has on the whole been received by hon. members. It was perhaps too much to expect that an opportunity would not be taken to point out wherein an equivalent expenditure might serve an infinite variety of needs in different parts of the country and particularly in the constituencies of hon. members. But I would say in respect of any requests that have been made to the government for consideration, if any can be found which promise to be an equally good investment on the part of the nation, I think the government will be ready favourably to consider them. What has possibly escaped the attention of some who have been critical is the fact that the government is not giving away this money. We are purchasing property which will be owned by the Dominion of Canada, and which will enhance in value very greatly as the years go by. A parallel case may be suggested. When parliament hill and the properties in the immediate vicinity were purchased some years ago, no doubt there were many who felt that the money then being expended on this wide-open space might more properly be devoted to a variety of other purposes. But who would say to-day that the investment had not in the course of the years multiplied itself many times over?

[Mr. Carmichael.]

Mr. BENNETT: May I interrupt the right hon. gentleman to remark that as I understand it this land is to become the property of the federal district commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The federal district commission is created by the government for the purpose of administering the property, but the property will belong to the people of Canada. I venture to say that in the course of the thirty years which has been mentioned as the time over which expenditures might be made, this property will have paid for itself time and time over in the mere appreciation of value that will have taken place. On a cash basis therefore, if we are to measure it in terms of money pure and simple, the government is really making an investment of very considerable value to the nation, and if one were seeking further justification it might well be looked for from that point of view.

May I say a word in regard to what has been expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite as to there being in this particular measure some evasion of the principle of responsible government? There is no such evasion in what the government is proposing. There is no seeking to get away in any particular from the control of parliament. At this very moment parliament is giving all the powers that can possibly be given under this legislation. No power will be given to any commission or to any executive or to any body other than what this parliament gives at this particular time. Every dollar to be expended will be a dollar that this parliament has voted and is appropriating by assenting to this legislation. That is responsible government in the fullest meaning of the term.

Further, I may add that all expenditures by the commission in the nature of capital expenditures have to be submitted to the Minister of Finance in the first instance and then approved by the government. The commission is the body entrusted with giving special thought and attention as to what should be done, but every step has to be approved in the first instance by the government as a whole. So we are not turning over to parties who are in no way responsible to parliament sums of money to be expended as they may think fit. Moreover, the commission makes its report to parliament every year. One hon. member this afternoon had in his hand a report made some years ago, and he said it was the last he was able to obtain. I might say to him that I have a report dealing with the proceedings of the commission for the past year. It was tabled here only a short time ago by the Minister of Finance. Every year these reports are tabled.

With respect to expenditures, I would point out that the accounts of the commission may be examined by a committee of this parliament at any time. Some hon. member suggested that possibly the expenditures should come before the public accounts committee. Most decidedly they will come before the public accounts committee if there is the slightest reason to suspect that every dollar cannot be accounted for in the fullest measure. The expenditures are audited by the Auditor General. This officer in that particular exercises the same control over the expenditures of the commission as over other expenditures by departments of government.

Mr. BENNETT: I am thoroughly familiar with the Audit Act, and I think the Prime Minister will find that unless special provision is made for the purpose neither the Auditor General nor a committee of the house has any control over the commission's expenditures.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The act provides as follows:

> The commission shall from time to time before making expenditures under this act, submit to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General detailed estimates of the expenditures proposed to be made by it, which estimates shall be accompanied by such full information as is sufficient to enable the governor in council to determine as to the necessity or advisability of such proposed expenditures, or of any portion thereof; and no expenditure shall be made by the commission under this act until it has been approved by the governor in council.
> The commission shall send to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General on or before the first day of September in each year a detailed statement of all its receipts and expenditures up to the last day of March in such year; and copies of such statements shall be laid before parliament by the minister within the first fourteen days of the next following session thereof.
> The commission shall, whenever required by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, render detailed accounts of its receipts and expenditures for such period or to such day as he designates; and all books of account, records, bank books and papers of the commission shall at all times be open to the inspection of the minister or of such person as the minister names to inspect them.
> All expenditures by the commission shall be subject to the audit of the Auditor General in the same manner as other public moneys.

Mr. BENNETT: The point I desire to make is that while the reports have to be made to the Minister of Finance and laid on the table, they are not subject to reference to the public accounts committee as are the reports of the Auditor General. If the Prime Minister makes that clear I shall be abundantly satisfied with respect to it. Parliament should have this jurisdiction. In the one case it depends on the Minister of Finance whether the report goes to the public accounts committee; in the other it goes there as a matter of right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The public accounts are laid on the table each year and referred by the Minister of Finance to the public accounts committee. With respect to these accounts, if any hon. member at any time wishes to have them so referred, the government will see that this is done.

Mr. BENNETT: That is very satisfactory.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that makes it clear that so far as the public money which we are voting is concerned, it is in every particular safeguarded by every means that parliament has devised for safeguarding the expenditure of public funds.

A good deal has been said about what the government is doing for the city. I was glad that the hon. leader of the opposition agreed with me that the distinction between Ottawa as the capital and Ottawa as a municipality should be kept in mind. From the city's point of view I may say that the argument is not all on the side of the government. The government has a large amount of property in the city, and that property is exempt from taxation. I have been given the following figures, which I assume may be taken as reliable. They are to the effect that in 1923—that is the latest year for which I could get them—the value of Dominion government property in Ottawa exempt from municipal taxation was $33,413,025. The present tax rate of the city is 31.70 mills. That is the annual rate that would be paid to the city on government property were it taxed like other property.

Mr. BENNETT: It is unnecessary to say to the Prime Minister that the tax rate would go down at least half, because a million dollars bears such a proportion to the total revenue that the rate would at once decline.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am prepared to admit that this statement must be read in the light of economic considerations which would govern, but I am pointing out a truth which has more or less escaped attention during discussion, namely, that the city of Ottawa does not receive on government property any taxation, and that all it receives in lieu of taxation is an annual grant of $100,000. In 1924, in a memorandum submitted by the city of Ottawa, it was contended that the government should pay annually certain sums which I shall state. I am giving the city's contention; I am not saying that if it were examined, it would be upheld to the degree to which the city alleges it should be. These are the amounts: a grant of say, $100,000, towards the maintenance of a fire brigade, and of $40,000, towards the maintenance of the police department; towards pavements, streets and sewer maintenance, $50,000; towards street lighting, $5,000. These amounts total $195,000 and, if the government were in the same position in respect of its properties as the owners of other property in the city, these it is alleged would be the grants we would have to consider making, to some extent at least, to the city. In addition to the $100,000 in lieu of taxation, we pay, I understand, some $40,000 for a water supply, and that is all the city gets. When we consider the relations between the government and the city, I submit that the extra amount being given by the government to the city for improvement and park purposes may be regarded as certainly not in excess of an equivalent.

Now what is the exact extent of the present proposed outlay? A good deal has been said about the expenditure of millions. I have asked the Finance department to prepare a careful statement showing what an annual allowance of $200,000 over a period of thirty years, plus this capital investment of $3,000,000 extended over thirty years, would amount to per annum, and I am advised that, with borrowing powers at four and a half per cent on a thirty year basis, the capital outlay of $3,000,000, with an annual grant of $200,000, would represent an annual outlay of $384,200. That is the extent of what parliament is being asked at the moment to grant for the purpose of further improvements and maintaining the work that has already been undertaken. I believe the house will feel that this amount, taking all the circumstances into consideration, is a reasonable grant to the federal district commission.

Further, in speaking of the city and its obligations, I may say that I agree heartily with hon. members who have criticized the city for the water supply and the manner in which snow has been cleared. In discussing these matters with the city, I told the mayor very frankly that I should hesitate to come to parliament and ask for this appropriation unless I could get from him a direct assurance that the city intended to improve its water supply and its method of street cleaning. The mayor advises me that with respect to the water supply the board of control is at the present time giving very serious consideration to this important question with a view to seeing what can best be done to improve matters and provide a purer supply of water.

Mr. KAISER: Are they any more serious now than they were twenty years ago?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is something which my hon. friend will have to find out for himself. I cannot speak on behalf of the city council beyond expressing the belief that they are more serious. I imagine that, for one thing, public opinion in this city compels them to be more serious; and I believe that the many expressions of opinion that have come from parliament hill are not without their influence. Certainly unless the city in the matter of a pure water supply does waken up to its responsibilities to the citizens generally as well as to hon. members of this parliament, it will wait a long time before meeting with any sort of reception to a request for further co-operation on the part of the government. Not only must the city take the question of its water supply very seriously into consideration, but it must within a short time show us that it has found a means of providing such a supply of pure water as this city should have. With regard to the manner in which the streets have been cleaned, I am advised that the city has already undertaken to purchase equipment which, in another winter, will facilitate the plowing of 100 miles instead of 25 miles as has been the case up to the present time. They expect to have a much more effective means of dealing with the streets as respects the removal of snow.

As regards Wellington street in front of the parliament buildings, the government has directed attention repeatedly to what has appeared to be an abuse in permitting motors to be parked before the grounds of these buildings. We have also discussed the practice of rapid driving to and fro to the risk of pedestrians crossing Wellington street. Wellington street is controlled by the city and not by the government, and I am informed that the city council has passed an ordinance prohibiting parking on Wellington street in front of the parliament buildings. This regulation will be carried into force. The mayor, as recently as yesterday, assured me that this would be done, and asked for the co-operation of our own Department of Public Works in the matter. This I consider all-important: Wellington street should be kept free from parking, at least in front of these buildings and grounds.

I think I have touched upon most of the points that involve any possible controversy. I may add further, with respect to this particular project of Confederation park, that the board of control of last year undertook to see if the project went through, if parliament voted what is now being proposed, that Elgin street on one side of the park, and Nicholas street on the other side, would each be widened to about twice its present width; and they also undertook to see that at any time in the future no buildings would be permitted to be erected within that park area. As a matter of fact, they have, I am informed, obtained from the Ontario government an act, or promise of an act, authorizing the federal district commission to control the character of buildings, as respects architecture, style and so forth, fronting on the new park along Elgin street. In this way, I believe, character and dignity will immediately be given to the central portion of the city, and such improvements as are effected in that section will undoubtedly be reflected in other parts.

Again I thank hon. members for the manner in which they have received this proposal, and I congratulate my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bennett) on the skill with which, in at least a portion of his address, he strove to ride two horses, although I am happy to add that the burden of his weight appeared for the most part to be on the right one.

Mr. BENNETT: I am learning from the Prime Minister, although the process is slow.

Mr. SPOTTON: For the Russell house site, I understand, the Prime Minister has paid $1,125,000. After deducting from this amount the sum that he will receive for the wreckage, will he be in a position to say to the people, "Yes, I paid this much money for the site, but I have so much land as a real asset, which in a few years will be worth two or three times the amount paid out"? Perhaps the Prime Minister will tell us how much was paid per foot. If he expects Ottawa to become a New York, will he be able to tell the people of Canada that he has a real commercial asset if he wished to resell it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps I can answer that question better when we are in committee. I do regret, however, that I omitted to answer a question asked by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), as to whether or not the commission had in mind the purchase of the Russell house last year when parliament was asked to make an appropriation of $250,000 a year. I do not think the commission had that purchase in mind at that time; what they had in mind was the sum needed to complete the driveways and in particular a large bridge being constructed across the Ottawa river connecting the Ontario and Quebec shores near Remic rapids. They also intended to widen the driveways, because many of them are much narrower than they should have been made. However, they did not have in mind the purchase of the Russell house; if they had thought of it this measure would have been brought in last year. As I explained before, this proposal is now before the house for the reason that during the fall of last year the government and the commission were informed by the city council that the owners of the Russell house were about to demolish that building and erect a new hotel there. That was, so far as I recollect, the first intimation received by the government and by the commission of any intention to tear down the Russell block.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: This is without prejudice to the rights of members to discuss the whole matter in committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Power to sell or lease real property.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is nothing in this section which is new; it is simply reinserting a clause which was left out of the last bill but which was in a previous one.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Period for payment of annual grants extended.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This section simply extends to thirty years the period for which the appropriation of $200,000 shall be made instead of $250,000 for sixteen years as was the case under the act of last session.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I should like to ask the Prime Minister the reason for extending these payments over a thirty year period in view of his statement that following another redistribution he might seriously consider making Ottawa a federal district.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I might say to my hon. friend that a redistribution could not affect the method of financing a project such as the construction of driveways, park improvements and so on. That would have to be carried on under a federal district commission just as it is carried on now. The reason we are asking for a longer period of time is that it provides a guarantee of permanency and maintenance with respect to improvements which are to be made. It does give to the commission for a few years some small margin to work on in the matter of local improvements, although it is contemplated that by the end of thirty years the full amount of $200,000 will be required solely for purposes of maintenance. At present I understand that half of the original grant, which would be something like $125,000 a year, is required for the actual upkeep of the parks and the overhead expenses of what had been previously provided for.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest to the government the desirability of substituting the word "five" for the word "thirty". Five years is the life of a parliament, and I cannot think it quite consonant with the ideas of the right hon. gentleman as heretofore expressed that this parliament should bind the hands of future parliaments. I am quite aware of the fact that it would be quite competent for succeeding parliaments to change that figure to forty or to ten; they would have that power, but a vested interest is acquired when a statute of this kind is passed by parliament; the commission naturally expects that that is the end of it. I suggest that instead of making provision for thirty years we endeavour to deal with this matter during the lifetime of a parliament. It is true that one or two sessions of this parliament will have passed, but I think the right hon. gentleman would be quite within the general constitutional practice if he said, "I desire that a given sum shall be available for this commission during the lifetime of the parliament over which I am the directing head." But when you ask parliament to bind its hands for thirty years I cannot help but think that is going too far, and that it is not quite consistent with the general principles under which we conduct our government.

I made inquiries to-day of my hon. friend from Welland as to the practice followed by the Ontario commission, and the house has already heard me state the facts as they apply there. Every year they bring up their estimates; although frequently they have made provision for five year periods or even longer, each year the legislature votes the sum of money which may be required to give effect to the projected plans of the commission. Having regard to the fact that this legislation is practically but an amendment to the Federal District Commission Act which was passed last year, and having regard to the fact that the Minister of Finance must review the expenditures and the governor in council must pass upon them, I cannot but think this mere declaration that $200,000 should be made available should not be binding for more than the life of a parliament as established by statute, which is five years. Assuming there was an election at the end of four years resulting in the defeat of the administration, as has happened in this country, the estimates for the fifth year might be fairly thought to be within the competence of the outgoing administration as far as the commission is concerned.

In order that the matter may be considered by the committee in a concrete way, I move that the word "thirty" be struck out and the word "five" substituted therefor, for the reasons I have indicated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I thought there was the slightest possibility that this amount would not be required, perhaps for all time to come, for the upkeep of parks, driveways and improvements, I would see a great deal of force in what my hon. friend says, but it is quite evident that a sum of money will be required for maintenance purposes for a number of years. We are reducing the amount which apart from capital expenditure is given to the commission to spend; it is reduced from $250,000 to $200,000, and it was in that connection and at the request of the commission, for reasons which I have already mentioned, that the time was extended. However, if it would help my hon. friend and myself to come a little closer together I would have no objection if we left the period for which the appropriation of $200,000 is to run at the original period which parliament agreed to in the act of last year; that is to say, sixteen years. I think we could leave this act as it is with respect to the length of time, and simply reduce the amount of $250,000 to $200,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I apprehend that this bill will not leave the committee to-night?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope so.

Mr. BENNETT: It is doubtful; I believe some of the members wish to speak in detail about the expenditures. As the Prime Minister has been good enough to say he would agree to reducing the term from thirty to sixteen years, with the consent of the committee, I will withdraw my amendment until I can discuss the matter further with some of those who are interested.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Very well, that section will stand. Let the amendment be withdrawn and section 8, which amends section 2 of the act, stands.

Section stands.

On section 9—$3,000,000 for purposes of commission.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to that, some hon. members did not expect we were going into committee immediately on this bill, and they are interested in knowing the details of the proposed expenditures. Perhaps the Prime Minister will give a statement as to how the $3,000,000 is to be expended.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. For the acquisition of the Russell house block, property, leases, etcetera, and the construction of the park, including the remodelling of the intersection of Sparks and Elgin streets, an outlay of $1,600,000 will be required. To complete the Remic rapids bridge, to which I made reference a moment ago, $423,200 will be required. For new driveways and parks, that is the enlarging of some of the areas already planned, $144,400. For the widening and improving of existing driveways and parks, $116,600—a total program for this year of $2,281,200. That is the total capital expenditure. My hon. friend knows that the bill requires either that that amount should be met immediately and directly out of the consolidated revenue, or that securities for that amount should be issued in the name of the commission, the interest and principal of which would be guaranteed by the Minister of Finance. I gather from what hon. gentlemen opposite have said that it would meet with their approval more completely were the government to meet these capital expenditures in large part immediately, rather than issue securities running over a term of years. If that is the case, I do not mind saying to my hon. friend that the Minister of Finance is quite prepared favourably to consider making the expenditure in that way.

In addition to what I have quoted, it is estimated that during future years, expenditures on new driveways and parks will be $600,000, and the remodelling of the existing driveways will amount to $130,000, or a total of $730,000; this together with the outlay in 1928 makes a total outlay of $3,011,200. I think that gives my hon. friend the particulars for which he asked.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Can the Prime Minister give some information as to how the value of the Russell house property was arrived at?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that in arriving at the valuation the commission retained the services of leading valuators who gave the commission the benefit of their advice. After consulting counsel and taking into account what had been paid by other interests for properties in localities not far distant, an amount was agreed upon which in the opinion of the commission and of the valuators was a fair amount to pay for the property. The commission were of the opinion that to have instituted court proceedings in the matter would have involved in all probability a still larger expenditure. I understand the sum that has been agreed upon for the Russell house property is $1,125,000, or a valuation per square foot of $22.75. To complete the entire square between Sparks street and the city hall and between Elgin street and the canal there remains some property of Mitchell and McDougall, which it is estimated, will bring the total cost to $1,235,000, or an estimated total cost of all three properties per square foot of $22.18.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the balance made up of in that first item of $1,600,000? We have not the full details.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are some smaller properties in the square. The figures which I have just given relate to the Russell house block, but the total confederation park area includes some other small properties which will have to be acquired, and a considerable amount of work will have to be done in levelling the park and making the driveways through it.

Mr. BOYS: Is it the intention to pull down the post office building?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not contemplated at the present time, no.

Mr. BOYS: Then has the government considered whether there is any necessity for acquiring the Russell house property, as long as the post office stands? Looking at this plan, it would seem as if it was a wild scheme, with the post office standing in the way. Personally I could support the proposal more willingly if the post office also were taken down, because there would be a more or less unobscured view of the parliament buildings from that open front; but as long as the present post office stands I cannot see the wisdom of spending a million and a half for the Russell house block—for I am given to understand that the value of the Russell house property is placed at $1,250,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: $1,125,000, the total value of the properties is placed at $1,235,000.

Mr. BOYS: Does that include the building at the southwest corner of that block?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It takes all the properties between Sparks street and the street which is between the city hall and the Russell house.

Mr. BOYS: My judgment would be that there are about 225 feet on Sparks street, with a depth perhaps not quite so great. It seems to me that it would be the simplest thing in the world to get a driveway leading to the parliament grounds without acquiring the Russell house property at all. I repeat that so long as that post office stands it seems to me to be an incomplete and undesirable scheme. If the Prime Minister is prepared to go so far as to say that while it is not part of the present scheme it is in contemplation and will certainly result, in perhaps three or four years, in the removal of the post office, perhaps we would support that part of the proposition. But that does not appear to be part of the scheme; it is not in contemplation, and therefore I think the proposed expenditure is an extravagance. A driveway which would complete the drive from the experimental farm to Rockliffe, is, I think, very necessary. I have seen many driveways but I have never seen any city which has a more beautiful driveway than has Ottawa. As far as spending money upon that is concerned, I am in favour of it; and there should be a connection between that driveway from where it now enters under Laurier Avenue to a point near the Chateau. I can quite understand that it might be thought necessary to have a driveway starting from somewhere near the drill hall and gradually rising to reach the square in front of the buildings, and this plan of course contemplates that, but it contemplates such a driveway going through the land on which the Russell block now stands. What is the necessity for that? I do not think it is any compliment to the city of Ottawa, with a population of 125,000 or 130,000 people, that from a commercial, industrial and business standpoint you can pull down one of the best blocks on the most important corner in the heart of the city at a cost of $1,250,000, merely to make a park. I do not know whether or not the citizens of Ottawa are in favour of such a scheme; I can hardly imagine they would be, Where can you find on the continent of America a city that would want to have one of its best blocks in the very heart of it pulled down merely to make a park about two hundred feet square? If you could not get an entrance to the parliament grounds without doing this there might be some justification for it.

I agree with the Prime Minister that if a large sum of money is to be spent, the proper place to spend it would be in widening Metcalfe street perhaps as far as Laurier avenue so as to have an approach leading up to the front of this building. But to have an entrance to one side and to spend a large sum in pulling down a building like the Russell block does not appeal to me in the slightest degree. It is quite evident that the Prime Minister has in mind for the future the widening of Metcalfe street, but he does not say how far south of Wellington street the proposed widening of Metcalfe street is going to go; and I understand it is suggested that it is to be widened to from two or three times its present width. As I said before, if that is going to be done, the widening should go at least to Laurier avenue. If it does not go that far, how far is it intended that it should go?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To Lisgar street, which is much further south.

Mr. BOYS: That would make a much more imposing entrance. That would be about seven blocks down Metcalfe street, and it can be figured out how much it would cost to widen Metcalfe street from two to three times its present width over that distance. Are there to be two entrances to the parliament buildings, one of them from where the Russell house is? Because that would not be a suitable entrance unless the post office is to be pulled down. Is the government going to pull down the post office and make that site into a park two or three hundred feet square? Then perhaps in four or five years are they going to undertake to widen Metcalfe street down to Lisgar street at a cost of goodness knows how many million dollars? We ought to make up our minds now what we are going to do. If it is the intention to make an approach by widening Metcalfe street, we ought to save our money for that purpose. I want to register as firm and definite a protest as possible against the expenditure of this money to pull down a block in the heart of Ottawa, a block which is not essential to the improvement under contemplation, because the scheme will not be complete when the block is pulled down and the country will still be face to face with the Metcalfe street improvement outlined by the Prime Minister in his address this afternoon. I think we should go slow in the matter. I am quite in favour of making an annual expenditure in connection with improvements in Ottawa on account of its being the capital city, but I do not think we should commit ourselves for a period of thirty years. It might be all right to provide for a scheme covering a period of five years, but I want to register my protest against wild extravagance in connection with pulling down the Russell block and getting such a little return when we know that a great deal more has to be done in the future.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could the Prime Minister inform the committee as to the cost of acquiring the property between Wellington street, Sparks street, Elgin street and the post office where the buildings have been demolished?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid I have not the figures under my hand. I could give my hon. friend the price per square foot for that property, buildings and land, as purchased by the Department of Public Works. It amounts to $23.75.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to say a word or two in support of the proposal made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys). It is right in line with the suggestion I made last year that any further money we spend in beautifying Ottawa as the capital city of Canada should be spent directly in front of the main entrance of the parliament buildings. I should not like to state categorically how far south the widening of Metcalfe street should be carried out, but it would be much better for us to spend whatever money we can afford in widening Metcalfe street than in purchasing the old Russell block. My idea is that the government should expropriate the property on the west side of Metcalfe street so far as it is necessary to widen that street and as many blocks south as we can afford to go. Those buildings need not be demolished at the present time; they could be allowed to stand for the next ten years if necessary, and in that time the rents coming from those buildings might largely cover the capital outlay we would incur. The view which the people are going to get of the parliament buildings from this area we are now purchasing will be largely a view of the east block, and many people coming to Ottawa will see the east block from that angle and will think that is the parliament building. We should have a wide avenue leading directly from the main entrance of the parliament buildings into the heart of the city, and I can only regret that the government have not spent this money in purchasing the properties necessary to carry out that improvement instead of purchasing the Russell block. The city of Ottawa is so badly in need of another hotel that it is rather a pity the government did not permit the former owners of the Russell house property to put up a good hotel on that site and spend the money we are now using to acquire the Russell block in purchasing property which would enable us to provide a wide thoroughfare directly opposite the parliament buildings and leading down into the heart of the city.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it the intention of the government ultimately to expropriate the property between Slater street and Laurier avenue and Elgin street to extend the scheme up to Cartier square?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not in contemplation at the present time. I understand that within the area to which my hon. friend has just referred there is a block of buildings to the east of Elgin street between Laurier avenue and Queen street. A number of houses, a store and also a church come within the possibility of the enlargement of Elgin street which the city council have undertaken to carry out themselves and I understand they are doing that by a plan of deferred widening of the street.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to the financial position I did not quite follow what the Prime Minister said. Clause 9 as it now stands is hardly the sort of clause we should enact. We admit that we have not the money with which to pay the interest. The $3,000,000 expenditure will cost roughly $135,000 a year when guaranteed by the Dominion, and there will be no provision for sinking fund, which for the sake of argument we will place at one per cent. That would make a total of roughly $165,000 or $170,000. Now of the $200,000 a year, it takes $150,000 for maintenance, and the rest for general work. I gathered from what the Prime Minister said that the government had no particular preference for any scheme of financing, but I am sure the minister will realize that if we guarantee $3,000,000, and the commission is to get the money and issue its securities, it is really, to use a word that was very much in vogue in this country at one time, camouflage, because the commission has no revenue with which to meet the interest, and, as provided by section 10 of the bill, the interest will be paid out of consolidated revenue. Why not make a direct appropriation for this purpose and provide that we will advance for the purpose of this work the sum of $3,000,000 out of consolidated revenue, instead of taking the securities of a commission which we have ourselves created, knowing that it will not meet any interest obligations, and that we ourselves must meet them, together with the sinking fund, as well as in the end pay the principal itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I wanted to say to my hon. friend was this. I understood that he had a preference for the principal sum being paid directly out of consolidated revenue. I hoped it might help to bring us all into agreement were I to give him the assurance that with respect to capital expenditures made immediately on the Russell house block, they would be made chargeable to consolidated revenue and be paid direct by the Minister of Finance. That would reduce considerably the total amount on capital expenditure to be met by securities to be issued by the commission. I think that might well remain optional with the Minister of Finance. I am not sure that the minister might not conclude, when asked for the money for the purpose which these capital expenditures are intended to serve, that it would be better for him to meet that capital expenditure directly out of consolidated revenue. On the other hand, it might serve a useful purpose for the country to have the securities issued by the commission and guaranteed by the Minister of Finance, and distribute the payments over a series of years, seeing that those who will come after us will be benefiting by the expenditures in equal if not larger measure than we are, I think my hon. friend can rest assured that the government, if it is allowed that amount of latitude, will be most careful to take the course which is obviously in the public interest.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): May I ask the Prime Minister if the commission have any other driveway scheme in mind outside of the one mentioned past the Russell house to Cartier square?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The commission has a plan that involves driveways through all parts of the city, and that scheme is being projected little by little. I think the greater part of it is now nearing completion, but I understand from the commission that the driveways were originally constructed, at a time prior to the use of the motor to anything like the extent it is being used to-day, and that most of the driveways will have to be widened and enlarged. A good deal of the expenditure will be in enlarging existing diveways.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): The government own considerable property to the west of these buildings on Wellington street, and I was wondering if the commission had ever thought of running a driveway through that property, connecting with the Sherwood driveway, running around the rear of this building, then connecting up with the driveway to Rockliffe. Such a driveway would avoid the tearing down of very valuable property; it would follow the river and get away from the traffic on the other streets, and would really make more of a scenic driveway than the other. I do not know whether it has been thought of at all, but it could be done for far less money, and would serve the purpose just as well.

Mr. SPENCER: In discussing this bill, which is to vote funds for the beautification of this capital, I agree entirely with the hon. member for West Calgary that it would be in the interests of this country if the necessary moneys were to be provided out of consolidated revenue. First there is the $6,000,000, payable at the rate of $200,000 a year, which is to be paid out of consolidated revenue. Then there is a further $3,000,000 for which the commission is to issue its own bonds or securities. They would issue bonds, say, at 5 per cent. They may get them for less, but we must reckon on a fair margin, and at 5 per cent we should actually be paying in principal and interest $7,500,000 for the use of $3,000,000 to beautify this city. I would like to see the capital beautified; I think it should be, but at the same time I do not want to impose unnecessary taxation on the people of this country. If you spread the $3,000,000 over the thirty years it would amount to $100,000 a year. Would it not be better to pass a statute to take this amount of $100,000 a year out of consolidated revenue fund for the thirty years so that we would get rid of paying the annual interest? I do not think sufficient consideration is paid in this house to the question of interest. It is the biggest tax we have to bear. It is the heaviest burden on the Minister of Finance in connection with the national debt and in the present case I think it would be much better to take $100,000 a year from the consolidated revenue fund, rather than to issue bonds for $3,000,000 on which we would be paying interest for thirty years, and which would eventually cost the people of this country $7,500,000 for the use of that $3,000,000.

Mr. SPOTTON: Perhaps this is an appropriate point at which to repeat the question I put to the Prime Minister. It is the first question I have asked the Prime Minister or any member of the government since coming into this house, and as a matter of courtesy to the constituency which I represent I should like him to give me an answer. I understood the Prime Minister to say to this house, "Yes, we have spent so many millions, but we have a real asset to show for it. We bought some town lots for you, and these town lots, as time goes by, will increase many times in value." The Prime Minister has said that this land cost $22 to $23 per square foot. At $23 per square foot it means, in the language of my county, over $1,000,000 per acre. Does the Prime Minister mean to say to the people of my county, "Yes, I have bought some town lots, but they are yours. They belong to the people of Canada. It is true I paid $1,000,000 an acre for them, but if at any future time we decide to sell them for commercial purpose I will guarantee that you will get three or four or five or many more times the amount we paid for them." I would just like the Prime Minister to let me know if I misunderstood him, and if not, would he give me his reasons for thinking that this property is going to become very valuable for commercial purposes in the years to come. If he can give me any good reason for thinking so, I would feel more like voting for this bill. If this is a foolish question, all right, say so, and let it go by, but I do not propose to have my first question in this house sidestepped.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I have every desire to be courteous to him, and particularly to his constituency. I had no thought of evading any question of his, and indeed if I had assumed for a moment that he was asking me a concrete question I would have been very quick to reply to him. What I did say was that the amount of money which the government is expending at the present time is in the nature of an investment in land in the city of Ottawa. Personally I cannot imagine from the point of view of investment pure and simple a better investment that the government could make in real estate than to secure the best property in the city of Ottawa and hold it for the future of the nation. None of us knows what the demands on the city of Ottawa through the course of years are going to be. The day may come when an area in the centre of this city will be required by the government for a variety of purposes. The government of Canada will own that area. What will be its value then in relation to the small figure we are paying to-day? Not a small figure, it is true, when comparison is made with town lots in a small community, but relatively small with regard to the future. The parallel I drew was that at the time parliament hill was purchased there were undoubtedly many like my hon. friend who made comparisons between the amount of money that was then being paid for parliament hill and what was paid for town lots in the small communities from which they came.

Mr. SPOTTON: But take Toronto, New York and other cities.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But those who purchased parliament hill made for Canada the best possible investment that could be made by that purchase. The government has no thought of selling town lots out of the area that it proposes to buy in this connection, but it is endeavouring to secure—

Mr. SPOTTON: How is it a commercial asset? It brings in no revenue in the meantime, it is simply a park for the unemployed to sleep in, and in the event of its being sold it must be disposed of for building purposes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not speak of the government speculating in real estate. I spoke about this as an investment—and an investment in more senses than one. I think if my hon. friend studies what has taken place in several large cities he will find that they have been saved from total destruction solely because of some open space or spaces which have prevented fire from extending further. Frequently I have thought of what the possibilities might be if this capital were to take fire, as the city opposite did on one occasion, and the fire should sweep through say from lower town to where the proposed park will be located. Such an open space in the heart of the city, from the point of view of insurance against a great disaster of that kind, is a factor which, having regard to its properties, the government might well take into account in connection with this proposal. I was regarding it solely as a national investment in speaking as I did.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to be hypercritical; in fact I have not yet spoken of the proposal before the house, but is it not incorrect to suggest that the purchase of this property is an investment in any shape or form? An investment in the ordinary term is something upon which we get an immediate return, or, if not, we expect later on to have an opportunity of selling what we have purchased at an enhanced price. Of course the space outside these buildings forms a very fine setting, but, unless you use the word in a sentimental sense, it was certainly never acquired as an investment. As the right hon. gentleman has suggested, it might be considered as an investment in the sense of affording fire protection, but it is decidedly not an investment from the standpoint of bringing any financial return, because we cannot imagine any circumstances under which we would sell that open space. Nor can I imagine any circumstances under which anyone could purchase from the government the area covered by this scheme. If we go through with the scheme it will be solely for the purpose of beautifying Ottawa, and not for any distinctly monetary return that it may bring us in the future. It has a sentimental value, if you will, or an open air or health value, anything of that sort, but certainly it has not any investment value, because by no stretch of the imagination will we ever think of selling it in town lots. The Prime Minister spoke of the open spaces in some of the European capitals. I well remember an open space to which he did not refer—Princes street in Edinburgh, one of the most beautiful streets in Europe. I think the open space between the Castle and Princes street has been preserved in that condition for centuries, and under no circumstances would Edinburgh think of selling that beautiful park, yet on the opposite side land is of the highest value because it is on the principal street of the city. So in this case I think it is wrong to create the impression that we are buying this property as an investment; it can be regarded as an investment only from a sentimental standpoint.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to delay matters but I would say to my hon. friend that the authority I had in mind in using the term seemed to me to be fairly good. I have in my hand the report of the federal plan commission on a general plan for the cities of Ottawa and Hull, a commission appointed by the government of Sir Robert Borden. One of the phrases as I recollect, the commission somewhere uses with respect to the purchase of areas for parks and the like is that no better investment could be made. I cannot put my hand upon the passage, but the president of the commission was Sir Herbert Holt, and I think Sir Herbert knows a little about investments.

Mr. MANION: No one has more respect for Sir Robert Borden than I have, but I should not like to accept every word that has been said by every commission appointed by him or by any other prime minister. Even if Sir Herbert Holt made use of the term, with all deference to his financial ability I would say that it does not properly express the idea that he probably had in his mind. Anyway, I am quite sure that all the investments of Sir Herbert Holt bring a much better return in money than this investment will ever return to the Dominion.

Mr. STEVENS: I would point out to the Prime Minister that it is obvious, if you figure the outlay on an investment basis that the property will have to double in value about every twelve or fourteen years in order to keep pace with the annual interest on the capital expenditure. Therefore I think it is a mistake to suggest that this is in any way an investment that will bring in any monetary return. The only justification for the outlay is from the standpoint of beautifying Ottawa. I should like to take this opportunity to say that unless the city council can find some better way of dealing with the filthy condition of the streets every spring—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: —for a period of two months, they will have very little right to ask for further grants from this parliament. I know of no city possessing such remarkable natural beauty where the streets are allowed to get into such a filthy condition in the springtime as are the streeets of this city. I have observed this every year for the last eighteen years, and to my mind, and I say it advisedly, no reasonable effort is made to clean the streets. Their condition is not only inconvenient, it is exceedingly unhealthy. Inquire among your friends, and you find many of them are suffering from serious colds. They call it an epidemic of grippe, but it is nothing more than the result of the offscourings of winter's accumulation of filth.

I concur in the remarks of my hon. friend from Oshawa (Mr. Kaiser) that it is about time the capital city of the Dominion endeavoured to find a fairly decent water supply. The water in the city is not fit to bathe in, to say nothing of its use for drinking purposes. I have been looking for an opportunity to say this and I have said it in two minutes. And I mean it all. I could speak for half an hour just as strongly on the subject if it would do any good.

Mr. HARRIS: I want to make one or two observations in view of what the Prime Minister has said regarding driveways in the larger centres of population. It is true that in the larger centres there is a tendency to build driveways, but as a rule they are found on water frontages, such as lakes, to which they may be adjacent. In the suburban areas where residences and educational institutions are situated it is customary to construct boulevards from eighty-six to 100 feet in width. I am opposed to this particular scheme because you are coming into the heart of the city and putting in a wedge, dividing upper town from lower town. It seems to me that business men and visitors who come to the city, desiring to do business in either section, will find it quite inconvenient traversing this area from Elgin street down to Sussex street below the Chateau every time they want to carry on a transaction; it will cause delay, and it will constitute a handicap. If you must have a driveway why not confine yourself to the outskirts of the city, as is done in Toronto? In Kingston the situation is very much the same as it is here. Going along King street, Kingston, if a driver wants to go to Queen's university he has to traverse almost a mile from the centre of the city through a park before he can reach that educational institution. This may be a means of beautifying the city, but from the point of view of the visitor who has business to transact it will be a great handicap when he discovers that the city fathers have seen fit to open in the heart of the city a park area, shutting off one business section from another and one centre of educational institutions from some other. In my opinion we are making a mistake in dividing the city in this way, thus putting a wedge between two sections. It would be better business to build a boulevard of reasonable width up to Elgin street. Certainly I would not take this hotel away from the centre of the city. It would be more advisable in the interests of Ottawa to leave this commercial investment which the Prime Minister speaks about—and he did use the word "commercial"—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not use that word.

Mr. HARRIS: He said "commercial investment."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I venture to say that if my hon. friend looks through Hansard he will not find the word "commercial". I used the word "investment" and possibly it was open to the broader construction given it by some hon. members; but I did not use the word "commercial".

Mr. HARRIS: I accept the Prime Minister's correction and I hope Hansard will do the same. I repeat, it would be better in the interests of those who visit the city on business if we had another first-class hotel on the site of the Russell house.

Mr. KAISER: We have read in the press that $1,125,000 has been paid for some property. Can anyone on the government side tell us from whom it has been bought, and what steps were taken to see that this is a fair price?

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Acquisition of property.

Mr. MANION: In subsection 2 of section 13 it is provided:

> Any plan and description deposited under the provisions of the Expropriation Act may be signed by the chairman of the commission or by the secretary thereof.

Why not have it signed by the chairman or by one of the commissioners?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no objection to the change. I move that the subsection be amended by inserting the words "one of the commissioners" in place of "the secretary thereof".

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that in answering a question I gave a figure which I understood was the amount paid for the property between Elgin street and the post office, and Wellington street and Sparks street. I am advised that this is the figure at which the property was valued by the Public Works department, but the actual figure has not yet been finally determined, because there are still proceedings before the court in the matter of the expropriation of the properties.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In connection with the whole of the property, or parcels of it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say, but I am inclined to think it is the whole.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The right hon. gentleman cannot give any information as to what that area will cost?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will give further particulars when the bill comes up again. I move that the committe rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

APPLICATION OF MONEYS FROM GRADES CROSSING FUND

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I have a resolution which I should like to dispose of before eleven o'clock. I do not know whether my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) objects.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to have it moved, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: I move that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the provisions of the Railway Act in regard to the railway grade crossing fund be amended to provide for the application of the moneys by the board towards the cost of actual construction work in respect of crossings at rail level in existence on the first day of April, 1909, and in respect of existing crossings constructed after that date where in any case an agreement, approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners, has been entered into between the railway company and a municipal or other corporation or person by which the municipal or other corporation or person agrees to bear a portion of the cost of the construction; and the total amount applied out of the fund in respect of any one crossing, where the cost of construction does not exceed $100,000 shall not exceed 40 per cent of such cost; and where the cost of construction exceeds $100,000 shall not exceed 40 per cent of such cost with a maximum of $100,000.

The grants or the unexpended portions thereof made under the statutes of 1909, c. 32, 1914, c. 50, 1919, c. 30 of $200,000 each year for twenty consecutive years from the first day of April, 1909, may be expended to aid construction work for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of crossings in existence on the first day of April, 1909, and in respect of existing crossings constructed after that date where agreements have been entered into as aforesaid.

Mr. BENNETT: This is without prejudice to our right to discuss the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: It will be very much easier for hon. members to discuss the matter with the actual bill before them, and with the comparison between the amendments proposed and the existing sections, than it would be to discuss it on the resolution. Of course, this is understood to be entirely without prejudice to the right of any hon. member to discuss any phase of the subject.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 220, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Wednesday, April 25, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has Canada at present a table of precedence? If so, what is it?

2. Has the table at page 661, 1928 Parliamentary Guide, not been abolished in view of Canada's new status, and will a new table be issued?

3. Why is the United Church of Canada excluded from existing table, also the Jewish church, under clause 13, page 662, Parliamentary Guide, 1928?

4. Are not such tables contrary to resolution of the House of Commons, 1919, abolishing titles in Canada, and in view of the fact that the existing table was adopted in a despatch from Downing street, dated December 29, 1893, are members of the House of Commons and Senate placed at the foot of the list because of the principle in such table that the church takes precedence ahead of the state?

5. Who is the corresponding head of the Baptist church in item 13 of table? Is it Reverend Dr. Shields or the modernist Reverend Dr. Marshall?

6. Will a new table be brought down this session, and by whom?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Since confederation Canada has had a table of precedence, which when last formally revised was as follows:

(December 3, 1923)

1. The Governor General or officer administering the government.
2. The Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.
3. The Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec.
4. The Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia.
5. The Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick.
6. The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba.
7. The Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia.
8. The Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island.
9. The Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan.
10. The Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta.
11. The Prime Minister of Canada.
12. Archbishops and bishops according to seniority.
13. The moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the general superintendent of the Methodist Church in Canada, and the corresponding head of the Baptist Church in Canada.
14. Members of the cabinet according to seniority.
15. The Chief Justice of Canada.
16. Members of the privy council not of the cabinet according to seniority.
17. The Speaker of the Senate.
18. The Speaker of the House of Commons.
19. The Prime Ministers of the provinces of Canada.
20. The chief judges of the courts of law and equity according to seniority and the judge appointed to perform the duties of chief justice at Quebec and Montreal.
21. The puisne judges of the Supreme Court of Canada according to seniority.
22. Judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada.
23. The Solicitor General of Canada.
24. Members of the Senate.
25. Puisne judges of the courts of law and equity according to seniority.
26. Members of the House of Commons.
27. The chief of staff, National Defence, the director of naval services and the director of the air force provided they are of the rank of major-general or its equivalent or higher rank.
28. Members of the executive council, provincial, within their province.
29. The Speaker of the legislative council within his province.
30. Members of the legislative council within their province.
31. The Speaker of the legislative assembly within his province.
32. Members of the legislative assembly within their province.

Note.—Judges at present on the retired list and judges at present holding office but who shall retire after the date of the new table shall not be affected as to precedence given to them by the old table.

Retired judges were given precedence next after the present judges of their respective courts by the old table.

2. No.

3. Since the United Church of Canada has come into existence recognition has in practice been given to its head. There has been no change in practice affecting representation of any other denominations or faiths.

4. The answer to both questions is: No.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and annual reports passing between the board of harbour commissioners, Vancouver, or any member thereof, and the Minister of Marine and/or the Deputy Minister of Marine or any official of the Department of Marine and Fisheries during the years 1911 to 1928, inclusive.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—INSURANCE ON PROPERTY

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all insurance placed upon property of the Vancouver harbour commission from the year 1913 to the 20th April, 1928, with a statement showing the agent through whom such insurance was placed and the distribution by such agent to sub-agents and insurance companies, and the amount of premium paid on each policy, and the amount of commission accruing to the said agent in relation to the placing of the said insurance.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—ELEVATOR NO. 3

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all correspondence relating to the acquiring, leasing, purchasing, construction and operation of No. 3 elevator formerly known as Woodwards elevator, together with a copy of all calls for tenders, tenders, contracts, engineers' plans, specifications and other data relating thereto, and copies of resolutions of public bodies submitted to the Marine department in connection with the original acquiring of the said elevator. Also a copy of all correspondence relating to the claim of K. A. Blatchford, of Edmonton, and associates in connection with No. 3 elevator or shipping barge associated therewith. And a statement showing the amount paid in settlement of the said claim, and a copy of the legal advice secured by the government as to the merits of the said claim and all other documents relating thereto.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—TERMINAL RAILWAY

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all correspondence relating to the purchase of lands for right-of-way of the terminal railway in the port of Vancouver, together with a copy of all documents, title papers, leases or claims for damage relating thereto, with a statement showing in the case of each parcel of property acquired the method by which it was acquired, the amount paid in cash or in bonds, and to whom paid. Also a statement of all commissions paid to agents in acquiring said property.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all correspondence relating to the purchase by the board of harbour commissioners of Vancouver of all property for the use of the harbour commissioners other than terminal railway property between the years 1913 and to date, together with a copy of all leases, agreements to purchase, deeds or other documents relating thereto.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—HARBOUR FACILITIES

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of all correspondence, reports, plans, specifications and other documents presented to the Minister of Marine during the last six months by the board of harbour commissioners, and having relation to the extension and facilities at the port of Vancouver.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—BALLANTYNE PIER

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of correspondence relating to the purchase of all equipment of whatsoever kind installed on Ballantyne pier, together with a copy of all calls for tenders, tenders, contracts and engineers' reports, plans and specifications relating thereto.

AERIAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, tenders, and all other documents regarding the selection and appointment of a commercial aviation company to transport mails, etc., between Montreal and Ottawa.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION

Mr. SPENCER:

For a return showing the amount of arrears for temporary service paid into superannuation fund No. 5 by the several departments of the government, or branches of the public service functioning under the authority of the parliament of Canada, for the fiscal years 1925-26, 1926-27, and 1927-28.

RADIO—CKCX STATION AT TORONTO

Mr. T L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, and all other documents for and against a license to CKCX radio station at Toronto.

He said: I do not want to put the government to a great deal of trouble. I do not desire all the correspondence; all I wish is the material on which the order for the refusal of the license was acted upon. An order similar to that passed on the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) will do.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre) moved:

For a copy of the report of the advisory committee appointed by the Minister of Customs in 1926, which committee acted in conjunction with Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, and which report was signed by the various members of the said advisory committee.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): I will merely say that there is no such report signed by the various members of the committee but there is a report signed by the chairman. If that is what the hon. member desires, I shall be glad to have it brought down.

Motion agreed to.

DUMPING ACT

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved:

For a copy of an order in council and all letters and correspondence and other documents on which the same was based, relating to the cancellation of that portion of the Dumping Act applicable to the fruit and vegetable industries, and copy of all protests, if any, received against such action.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): This motion asks for the production of an order in council cancelling a portion of the Dumping Act. No such order in council was passed and no portion of the Dumping Act has been cancelled. I think I know what the hon. member wishes to obtain, but the motion should be worded in a different manner.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is understood that the correction will be made.

Motion agreed to.

PORT OF VANCOUVER—SPILLERS ELEVATOR JETTY

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre) moved:

For a return of all correspondence of whatsoever kind passing between Mr. R. H. Gale of Vancouver and the Hon. Dr. King and/or the Minister of Marine or any officer of his department and relating to the purchase or leasing or dealing with the jetty connected with the Spillers elevator and immediately east of the Lapointe pier, together with all agreements, contracts, leases, resolutions of the harbour commission, recommendations or objections from public bodies in Vancouver or private citizens in relation thereto. And also a statement showing in detail the cost of the construction of the said jetty and the quantity of grain passing over the said jetty since its construction to date, and the revenue therefrom year by year. And a statement showing the cost of operation, the carrying charges, interest, sinking fund, insurance and all other charges.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I rise to draw attention to the nature of the request. The motion reads:

For a return of all correspondence of whatsoever kind passing between Mr. R. H. Gale of Vancouver and the Hon. Dr. King.

I do not think the government can undertake to bring down correspondence of whatsoever kind between a private citizen and a minister of the crown in regard to their affairs.

Mr. STEVENS: The motion does not say so. It continues:

And relating to—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It does.

Mr. STEVENS: Pardon me. I do not wish to appear rude to my right hon. friend but the resolution is clear. It reads:

All correspondence of whatsoever kind passing between Mr. R. H. Gale of Vancouver and the Hon. Dr. King and/or the Minister of Marine or any officer of his department and relating to the purchase or leasing—

And so on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend ought at least to specify the subject, but I would say that he should in the case of a minister specify the minister by the office which he holds, as the hon. member has done in the case of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not think it is proper, in asking for returns from parliament, to ask them in the name of individuals.

Mr. STEVENS: If I might explain, the only difficulty in that regard is this, that the department of my hon. friend the minister is the Department of Health and it is not the Department of Health that is affected but the minister representing British Columbia, who happens to be in the cabinet, that is affected, and I could not think of any other way to make it clear and limit the matter to the object of the resolution than by inserting the name. I did not do this with any idea of discourtesy. At that time I think my hon. friend was Minister of Public Works That caused the difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government of course should undertake to bring down any correspondence that is public and I would not for a moment in that regard try to quibble on the question of the form. If that is what my hon. friend wants he can have it, but when a motion refers to correspondence of whatever kind passing between individuals, the line will have to be drawn somewhere.

Motion agreed to.

TITLES OF HONOUR

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George) moved:

1. For a copy of the address to His Majesty the King, which was adopted by this house, in or about the month of May, 1919, dealing with the conferring of titles of honour or titular distinctions, decorations or orders, upon His Majesty's subjects domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada, in the form in which said address was transmitted to His Majesty;

2. For copies of all correspondence between the government of Canada and His Majesty's government at Westminster, or any member thereof, relating to the said address;

3. For a copy of the King's regulations prescribed by or in the name of His Majesty, dealing with or referring to the acceptance by His Majesty's subjects of titles of honour, titular distinctions, decorations or orders, which may be conferred or proposed to be conferred by any foreign government, governmental authority, state, power or potentate;

4. For a list of persons domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada, who, since May 1, 1919, have been the recipients of any foreign title, titular distinction, decoration or order from any foreign government, govermental authority, state, power or potentate; stating the nature of the title, distinction, decoration, or order so conferred in each case; also stating whether approval of the acceptance of such title, distinction, decoration or order by such recipient was signified by or in the name of His Majesty; and also stating whether and in what cases such approval as aforesaid was refused by or in the name of His Majesty to any such recipient; and also stating specifically the names of those domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada who, since May, 1919, have accepted any such foreign title, distinction, decoration or order, without approval thereof signified by or in the name of His Majesty.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in so far as it is possible to supply my hon. friend with the information for which he has moved, the government will be glad to do so. But I would draw attention to the fact that some persons may have been the recipients of titular distinctions, honours, decorations or orders conferred by foreign governments or authorities or powers without any communication of that knowledge to the government, and it might unfortunately be the case that their names might be omitted from the return. We shall gather together for my hon. friend the names of as many as we are able to obtain, but lest some of those who have received honours should be sensitive in the matter it must be understood that any omission from the return will in no way be intentional on the part of the government.

Motion agreed to.

OLD AGE PENSIONS—YUKON

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon) moved:

For a copy of the agreement between the Dominion government and the gold commissioner of Yukon territory on behalf of said territory covering old age pensions.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to the resolution carrying, but I might say that the agreement has not as yet been completed. The new commissioner has taken the agreement back to the Yukon for the carrying out of certain procedure incidental thereto. He had not the seal of the Yukon with him, and several things have to be done.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): If the minister will produce the agreement without the seal, we will not quibble about that.

Mr. HEENAN: That is all right.

Motion agreed to.

DUMPING DUTY ON FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): Following the interjection of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) in regard to the notice of motion for the production of papers relative to the dumping duty on fruit and vegetables, I would ask him a very definite question. Has the authority given to the Minister of National Revenue to determine the value of fruits and vegetables for the purpose of applying the special or dumping duty been cancelled? By this I do not mean has order in council 1088 been rescinded, but has section 47A of the Customs Act been so amended as to take away this authority from the minister?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): There has been no amendment to the act whatever. The order in council authorizing the minister to fix values has been cancelled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I would ask the Prime Minister if he has fixed upon a day for private members' legislation.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I intimated last night, but no doubt my hon. friend did not hear me, that the government did intend later on in the session to give additional time for the consideration of private bills.

ALBERTA RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I desire to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr.

Dunning) whether he has any knowledge of an offer now being made by the Canadian National Railways for the purchase of railways in the province of Alberta.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I know of no recent new developments in that connection. My hon. friend is, of course, aware that negotiations have been going on for some considerable time, but I have no knowledge of any new developments.

OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): In reference to the grant made by the government to the Olympic games committee, I would ask if there is any control by the government over the expenditure of that money. In this connection I might say that last fall the finals for the amateur lacrosse championship of Canada were played at New Westminster between the Westons of Toronto and the New Westminster team, and the championship was won by New Westminster. Previous to those games, it was announced by the committee that the winners would be sent to the Olympic games, but now they say, "That is all right; you can go to the Olympic games, but you must pay your own expenses." That does not seem to be fair, and I suggest that if the government is contributing to the expenses, they should see that Canada's national game of lacrosse is properly represented at the Olympic games.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I am not sure whether the question of my hon. friend was intended to advertise the excellent lacrosse team of New Westminster, or to seek information. I shall note his question, however, and give him a reply later.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if these various Olympic grants have been an accountable or non-accountable expenditure during the past twelve years, and to whom the money was paid, and whether the accounts will come before the public accounts committee. It seems to me there are too many officials going over there. They are nearly all non-contestants.

PRIVILEGE—MR. NEILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I desire to rise to what I think is a question of privilege, and to correct a slight error. At page 2455 of yesterday's Hansard I find it recorded that the right hon. the Prime Minister, speaking in answer to an hon. gentleman opposite, said:

> May I remind him that the rules of the house to which he refers are the result of a conference which took place between all parties in this house, including the party of which he himself is a member, and the report which was brought into this house with regard to the new rules was passed unanimously, my hon. friend himself being one of those who concurred in it. So that as far as the rules under which we are working at the moment are concerned, every hon. member of this house was a consenting party to them. The rules were adopted unanimously.

I do not wish it to be recorded that, even inferentially, I was an assenting party to the perpetration on this house of that weird conglomeration of inconsistencies that we now call our rules, and I would refer for corroboration to page 1437 of Hansard of last year. There, at the conclusion of a long debate covering thirty-three pages, during which there were two or three divisions, I read the following:

> Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Minister of Justice) moved:
> "That the report of the committee of the whole on the rules of the house be now adopted".
> Sir George Perley: I second the motion, Mr. Speaker.
>
> Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?
>
> Some hon. members: Carried.
> Mr. Neill: On division.
> Mr. Speaker: Carried, on division.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It is quite evident that I was in error in making the statement I did, but I thought at the time I was stating the situation accurately, and that there had been no division. If I made a slip on that occasion, I hope my hon. friend will forgive me.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the Prime Minister for reinstating my self-respect.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $8,500,000 TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 214, to provide for a loan to the Quebec harbour commissioners.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I assume that we shall not discuss the bill on the second reading? There are some amendments we desire to offer, and I assume that that may be done in committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not heard a single word which the leader of the opposition has said. I do not like to ask him to repeat his remarks, but possibly, if they were of sufficient importance, he will have the courtesy to do so. May I ask you to see, Mr. Speaker, that order is preserved in the house?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: I was suggesting to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) that there were some amendments we desired to offer to this legislation, and that by going into committee at once, without discussing them at the moment, we would preserve our rights, and he said that was satisfactory.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—$8,500,000 may be loaned to harbour commissioners for terminal facilities.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this bill and two similar bills that deal with the appropriation of public moneys to be expended through a harbour commission, I think it is quite apparent now from what we have heard during the last few days that the case made by the Minister of Justice with respect to Quebec harbour has been entirely unanswered. It is quite clear that if we are to treat that port as a national port, and it is the only deep-water national harbour that we have in Canada, this money should be directly voted to Quebec harbour, and be spent under the control and supervision of the government of Canada, and not otherwise. The Minister of Finance instructed the audit board to make a report with respect to the harbour commission at Quebec. That report was made and is now upon the pages of Hansard. Rightly or wrongly, the audit board was of the opinion that the harbour could not hope to earn interest upon this large expenditure, which is to be utilized in the manner indicated by the minister. That is now a matter of record.

Under those circumstances should this country play at financing and take securities that are promises by itself to pay to itself?—for that is all it means. The harbour commission securities are promises to pay by a body created by parliament, and those moneys are to be paid to the people of Canada; but the people of Canada are to find the money and the audit board has reported that the interest will not be earned. So what we are doing is taking promises to pay to ourselves that which we ourselves must pay. Therefore once more I appeal to the minister to make this a direct appropriation to the harbour of Quebec. The harbour of Quebec has established its right to the money. The auditor's report establishes the fact that the harbour commission has been expensively administering the affairs of the port, and that it cannot pay the interest. How then can we with any sense of financial consistency pass an act to authorize a body to borrow money which we know it can pay only by money it gets from ourselves? I submit that the case made out by the Minister of Justice last week abundantly and clearly establishes that this harbour is entitled as of right to the expenditure of these moneys for the purpose of equipping it as the deep water port of this country over a period of seven months each year and perhaps longer.

I cannot possibly bring myself to vote to place in the hands of a commission, without the control of parliament over its operations and expenditures, the large sum of eight million dollars when we know that we ourselves must pay the money and the interest on it; and we will not pay 5 per cent interest, because if we borrow the money ourselves, or pay it out of borrowed money, we will pay probably 4½ per cent. If the minister persists in dealing with public moneys in that way, I can only say that there must be some reason to be given for it other than the necessities of the port; for certainly considerations of economy in financial operations and everything that makes for the proper conduct of public business will favour this being done by a direct appropriation of parliament. The harbour of Quebec has just as much right to the expenditure of these moneys as have other ports in various parts of the country to the moneys that are being expended on them. Having established that fact, we know that the harbour commission has been operating at a ratio of expense out of relation to that of any other harbour commission in Canada; coupling that with the audit board's report that the harbour will not earn interest on the advances, we should deal with this as a direct obligation by the people of Canada, and this year make an appropriation of whatever sum is necessary to discharge the initial obligations in connection with the undertaking. It may be that next year and the year after larger sums may be necessary to complete the work at Wolfe's cove and elsewhere in order to make the harbour what it should be.

Once more I repeat, in respect of this and other harbours it is quite apparent that there should be a complete survey made by competent authorities to enable us to understand the situation in its entirety. On previous occasions the right hon. Prime Minister has referred to the importance of securing expert advice on our public undertakings, such as the beautification of the capital and the estuarial conditions at Fort Churchill and Port Nelson. Consequently when we come to deal with what so vitally affects the cost of moving grain, providing passenger facilities, and all that is involved in these harbour works, we should not lightly proceed without having the best advice obtainable. As we have not dealt with these matters on so large a scale as they have been undertaken by other countries, surely we are warranted in having that expert assistance and advice so essential to making this undertaking a success. If the minister is still of the opinion that, although he knows the situation is as reported by the audit board, and persists in making advances to a commission, which amounts to nothing more than a promise to pay ourselves certain money with interest, then I feel that he must surround his measures with safeguards which are not now provided.

Mr. CARDIN: I agree with the opinion expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) at the conclusion of his observations, that a survey of our ports should be made. I realize that the time has come when such a survey must be made and certain changes effected in the whole system of our harbour commissions.

As to making a direct advance to the port of Quebec, I would hestitate to ask for such a thing at the present time. It is true that the harbour of Quebec has not been in a position to meet its interest, but, as I explained and as the Minister of Justice and other hon. members who spoke on the matter explained, it is due, to a great extent at all events, to the fact that the port was not properly equipped and capable of giving to the harbour commissioners sufficient revenue to meet their obligations. They have always contended, as we ourselves contend, that when the port is provided with adequate equipment they will be in a position within a few years to pay, if not the whole, at least a part of the interest on the advance that we are making. Suppose we were to start with a direct advance to the ports of Quebec, St. John and Halifax; thereupon I am quite sure that Vancouver and Montreal would feel they were unfairly treated in that they were forced to collect dues sufficient to meet their obligations. In fact it would be unfair to place those ports in such a position, while the ports of Quebec, Halifax and St. John—which will be great ports before very long—were placed in the favourable position of not having to pay any interest on moneys advanced. At present I cannot agree to act on my hon. friend's suggestion.

As to the payment of interest by the port of Quebec, I think it is important to remember that the major part of the eight million dollars which is to-day charged as interest in arrear is on loans that were made to the harbour long ago. In fact I think that the interest accruing on expenditures previous to 1913, carried to January 1, 1928, amounts to over six million dollars, while the interest accruing on expenditures since the organization of the commission in 1913 to January 1, 1928, is only three million dollars. By far the larger amount of the advances has been made since 1913. Up to 1913 the expenditures totalled $5,307,106. On these expenditures we are claiming from the harbour commission six million dollars interest; that is, we are claiming more in interest than the capital expenditures made up to 1913. These expenditures were made a long time ago to meet the requirements at that time, and I submit that it is not fair to charge to the present organization at Quebec an amount of $6,000,000 of arrears in interest on an advance of $5,000,000 expended up to 1913. The real responsibility of the present harbour commission would be for the expenditures which have been made since 1913. If we take into consideration the amounts loaned and the expenditures made the arrears and interest will be only $3,280,000. Against that there is, as we have indicated already, the claim which the harbour commissioners are making against the Department of Immigration for the use of 40 per cent of the present facilities in the port of Quebec, and I think it is only fair that the commission's claim to a substantial amount should be recognized and entertained by the government. If that claim were entertained it would wipe out the amount the commission is supposed to owe to the government as arrears in interest.

I think the situation in the port of Quebec has been to a large extent misunderstood. We have always spoken of that large amount of $8,000,000 of arrears in interest, but we have never taken into consideration the fact that these arrears have accumulated on expenditures amounting to $5,000,000 up to 1913. I repeat that the position of the harbour of Quebec which we should consider is the position as it has existed since 1913. That is only fair—

Mr. CAHAN: Why since 1913?

Mr. CARDIN: Because the harbour commission of Quebec, as it exists at the present time, was so constituted in 1913. The body having charge of the harbour of Quebec before 1913 was not similar to the present organization. One might argue very properly, I think, that the expenditures which had been made in the port of Quebec up to 1913 ought to be considered in the same manner as the expenditures made by the Department of Public Works in all other harbours which are not controlled by any harbour commission.

Mr. CAHAN: Why should not the present expenditures be dealt with in the same way?

Mr. CARDIN: I see no objection to considering the present expenditures in the same light, but I contend that it would not be fair to single out two or three of our ports in Canada and allow them to go scot free in respect of interest on advances, while we make other ports which are just as important, from the standpoint of Canada as a whole—Montreal and Vancouver—earn money to reimburse the government for the advances they have received.

Mr. CAHAN: But there is no unfairness so long as there is no competition.

Mr. CARDIN: Even if there is no competition the situation is the same. You cannot compare Montreal with Vancouver. Vancouver can be compared with Halifax and St. John because it is an open port the year round; and it would have a good claim if it urged that in respect of expenditures which have been made in that port interest should not be paid. My hon. friend, with all his experience, realizes that once we open the door to an exception in reference to any one of these ports it will be a serious matter for the minister. He can readily understand what the life of a minister as well as of the government would be in view of the representations and requests that would come not only from the different harbour commissions but from all commercial and financial institutions; because we must remember that when a vote is before parliament, or when a request is made to the minister or to the government for an advance for St. John, Halifax, Montreal, Quebec or Vancouver, we not only have to deal with the particular harbour commission but we must face the representations and the very strong requests that come from these financial and commercial organizations in the localities affected. Boards of trade are always supporting representations made by commissions everywhere. I do not say that it would be wrong in principle for us to suggest that they should not be bound to pay interest, but it is unfair to single out and make an exception of three ports. I have promised to look into the affairs of these harbour commissions during the recess and I propose, possibly at the next session, to introduce a new scheme to deal with the various harbour commissions in Canada. Then will be the proper time to place them on an equal footing, giving them the same powers and privileges. But, I submit, we should not impose upon one a handicap which will operate to the benefit of others.

In the circumstances I consider it only fair to the ports, and quite logical on the part of the government, to proceed this year along the same lines we have followed in the past. Of course it will be only a matter of procedure. Suppose we make an advance and have an amount placed in the estimates: so far as the money itself is concerned there will be no difference. Whether the money is advanced through the Department of Public Works or through my department by means of a special vote in the estimates, or whether it is advanced through the medium of particular legislation, there is no difference at all as regards the money. There is a difference in the mode of procedure; that may be true; but, I repeat, there is no difference whatever so far as the advance itself is concerned.

I think I had better take this opportunity of answering a few questions which were put to me by hon. gentlemen when we were dealing with the resolution. My hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) drew my attention to a certain figure I had given in 1925 when we discussed the advance of $5,000,000. He asked me what tonnage had passed through the port of Quebec and I replied, 594,614 tons. I am not sure whether I gave the exact amount, but at any rate I gave the figure 594,000. Possibly I was mistaken; according to the information which has been supplied me since, this represents only the imports. The exports for the year 1924 amounted to 206,285 tons. So far as the last year 1927, is concerned, the figures are not available; they have not yet been compiled. I can however give the figures for 1926. In 1926 the imports amounted to 865,611 tons and the exports 356,239 tons. If you compare the tonnage going through the port of Quebec in 1926 and 1922 respectively, you will find that the traffic has practically doubled. In 1922 the imports amounted to 499,620 tons while the exports only totalled 150,781 tons, and I may add that these figures do not include the lumber and timber exported through the port of Quebec. From year to year these figures show very conclusively that even with the incomplete facilities existing at that port the traffic has been growing very rapidly. As we have been told already, very serious complaints have been made by the people interested in shipping; even this year representations were made by the Canadian Pacific Steamships Limited asking that greater facilities be provided. They requested an interview with the harbour commissioners to discuss the situation, and stated that if nothing could be done, if they could not get more than they have been able to obtain up to the present, they would have to refuse certain cargoes for the port of Quebec. I am informed that at present there are about twenty vessels in that port without accommodation, so that I believe we are absolutely justified in asking for this advance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it not a fact that the condition which the minister states now exists at Quebec, where a large number of vessels cannot be accommodated at once, is quite common in all Canadian ports? I have a distinct recollection of a similar situation which existed at Vancouver in spite of the excellent facilities to be found there, so that does not prove anything. Now, to go back to the other point the minister raised a moment ago, I would ask what facilities are lacking to have caused these complaints to come to him in respect of the small volume of business now going through that port?

Mr. CARDIN: I have already indicated the complaints; some of them have been received from the shipping federation. In 1925 they sent a long memorandum to the Prime Minister asking that the developments for which we are providing be proceeded with, stating that they were absolutely necessary. In addition to that we have had representations from the grain trade.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Were not the complaints of the shipping federation particularly directed to the lack of berthing facilities? On the other hand, the minister has been discussing the lack of facilities for warehousing and taking care of the volume of goods going through that port.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think it would be profitable to build wharves with no sheds to take care of the cargoes; an ordinary wharf is not of much value without sheds and trackage facilities to handle the goods coming from the ships. To be complete, the port must have not only the proper docks but the sheds, the trackage and the other appliances necessary for the movement of cargoes over the wharves.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister mind giving the committee any facts in his possession with regard to the unnecessary delay of ships through lack of facilities for loading goods?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot give any particular details in that regard; I must take the advice of those who know something about these things. I cannot discuss it with the shipping federation or the grain people, who are asking for an extension of the present elevator; they are supposed to know more than I do about these things; they are the experts dealing with the matter, and when they make representations to the department or to myself we must accept them. Surely I should not be expected to follow my own views or to adopt that spirit of opposition which may be in the minds of certain people.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would not suggest that the minister take that attitude, but I do think it would be common sense to accept the principle that in the case of any representations of that kind the minister should acquaint himself with the facts in connection therewith, thus placing himself in a position to supply the very moderate amount of information sought by the committee.

Mr. CARDIN: The representations we have received appear to be reasonable, in the light of the information given us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just on that one important point, how many boats, if any, have been delayed while waiting to load goods as a result of the lack of facilities, and for how long have they been delayed?

Mr. CARDIN: Does my hon. friend refer to the past, or to the present year?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): To the present year.

Mr. CARDIN: I repeat that I cannot give any specific details with regard to any particular boat being delayed one day or two days. But I will place on record the letter from the Canadian Pacific Steamships Limited to the chairman of the Quebec harbour commission:

Dear Sir:—

It would appear that the berthage situation at Quebec this season is likely to be so acute as to probably result in our having to refuse to accept cargo for Quebec discharge and loading by our new fast freight boats, and as we are extremely loath to do this if the difficulties can be overcome, I would be very glad if you could make it convenient to grant an interview at an early date to Mr. W. M. Kirkpatrick, foreign freight traffic manager, and to the writer, in order that this question may be discussed.

Yours truly,

W. A. WAINWRIGHT,
Assistant to the Chairman.

I think I am bound to attach some degree of importance to representations of that character.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister quite properly does so; no one will blame him in the least, but he might also acquaint himself with the particular situation complained of. For example, I would like to ask him now what were the special cases referred to by the Canadian Pacific Steamships Limited? When did they anticipate the difficulties, and for what reason? Surely since the minister has had this interview with them he has acquainted himself with the details of the complaint.

Mr. CARDIN: No; they addressed themselves to the chairman of the Quebec harbour commission, who sent me these documents to support the requests of the commission. We desire this money to provide for four additional berths for vessels of the Canadian Pacific express type; two additional berths for large size ocean freight steamers and two berths for canal size steamers. So the money for which we are asking is to cover the expenditures necessary to provide for eight new berths which, according to representations made to me by persons who know something about it, are absolutely necessary. All the berths at present completed are occupied; the commission cannot provide any new berths if a company desires to increase its traffic, nor can they meet a situation such as that indicated by Mr. Wainwright. According to the representations made by the shipping companies and by the grain people, eight additional berths are required to place the port in a position to meet the present situation as well as conditions which probably will prevail within a very short time. I can hardly be requested to go into all the expert or technical details in regard to these matters. Suppose the expenditure were made through the Department of Public Works; the Minister of Public Works would have to rely on the reports he would receive from his resident engineers, supervised by the engineer in the department. We have to rely on somebody.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, it may be gratifying to the taxpayers of Canada —it is not to me—to know that all that is required for the expenditure of amounts such as these are general statements by some shipping company or railway. The minister is not able to give us any details as to what losses have been sustained by the holding up of cargoes or vessels, but he says in general terms: I have had complaints from the railway and shipping companies, and therefore I am doing this.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. BOURASSA: I might give my hon. friend a little of my own experience in the port of Quebec; which is the converging point of traffic on the river, both from the east and the west, as regards the Canada Steamship Lines. I travel extensively over that route every summer. I have seen boats coming up the river and down from Montreal to Quebec delayed an hour or an hour and a half and compelled to stay in the river until the day boat had sailed or until the Saguenay boat to Quebec had landed—all because the accommodation is so limited. Under present conditions it is impossible to provide accommodation for all the boats proceeding to or passing through that port during most of the summer. Some barge from the great lakes loaded with grain will occupy part of the berth ordinarily used by these boats; a boat will be coaling at another wharf, and as a result there is no room for either the ordinary passenger boats or the freight boats to dock. I have made inquiries of officials of the company in regard to the matter, and they have said: "We have been asking for the last five years for proper wharf accommodation, but we cannot get it. We are crowded and cramped; on the one side there is the pilot wharf"—I do not know what they call it—"and on the other side the accommodation is required by some other company. We need about three times the wharfage capacity we have at present, but we cannot get it because there is no room for it." So that I have personally had to experience the discomfort and inconvenience occasioned by this lack of proper accommodation in respect to freight as well as passenger traffic at the port of Quebec.

Mr. CAHAN: I endorse every word the leader of the opposition said this afternoon about dealing with these appropriations for Quebec. I think the time has come when it is necessary to inaugurate a policy in respect to these national ports. In respect to all large capital expenditures necessary for the development of these national ports, the appropriations should be made directly from the federal treasury and the expenditures made under the direction of or through a commission, but subject every year to review by this house. It is opportune at this time to consider a new policy, because my personal opinion is that in respect of the ports of St. John and Halifax, which are also national in their character, the government, by making advances which are to be repaid by means of sinking funds, is placing upon them financial burdens which will actually in practice strangle their import and export trade. If we are to develop a national policy of transportation we should make ingress and egress for passengers and freight at our Atlantic and Pacific ports, which come in competition with the ports of the United States on the eastern and western coasts, as inexpensive as possible. So far as we are dealing, therefore, with a national policy, we should consider the fact that the extension of these ports involves an expenditure which is a burden for all of Canada. The government have recognized that principle in respect of ports on the Hudson bay. They must recognize it in respect of such a port as Quebec. We all know there is absolutely no possibility of taxing the trade of the port of Quebec sufficiently to repay to the government the capital expenditures by way of sinking fund while at the same time the port is paying annually the interest upon the debentures issued therefor. Harbour commissions should be bodies authorized, under the supervision of the department, to supervise and manage the business of the port. A commission of business men could do much to bring to the ports of Quebec, St. John, or Halifax a larger measure of business than they now have. And the business of the port should be taxed to the extent necessary, and only to that extent, to carry on the operations of the port, and provide for the maintenance of such permanent harbour works as are constructed by direct appropriations from the treasury of Canada.

I do not wish to digress, but I think this is an appropriate occasion to lay emphasis on the importance of a change in respect to harbour administration, a matter to which the leader of the opposition made some reference. The government are adopting a vicious policy in respect to the ports of St. John and Halifax. I do not pretend to know so much about the port of St. John, but I do look with the greatest apprehension upon the application of that policy to the port of Halifax, which has been and I hope will contiue to be more in the future than in the past one of Canada's national ports. If the business of that port can be conducted so as to pay the operating expenses of the commission and a certain reasonable expenditure for maintenance from year to year, that is all that should be expected of that port. Otherwise the tax which you place upon the export and import trade will be so great as to make it impossible for Halifax or impracticable for St. John to compete with Boston, Portland, or New York. We must make them national ports; we must make them cheap ports for vessels to enter and clear, and we must conduct the business of those ports in as economical a manner as possible consistent with their efficient operation and sure development. Therefore I endorse most sincerely and heartily the suggestions made by the leader of the opposition. If we are to have national ports maintained in this country, the government must adopt that policy.

With respect to being unfair to other ports, the only two other ports to which such a policy might be deemed unfair, are the ports of Vancouver and Montreal. First, as regards Vancouver, I was sent some years ago by a large banking institution to make an investigation of the trade of the Pacific coast and I spent a considerable time upon that work. I came back with the profound conviction that, so far as Canada is concerned, a great volume of our trade, a volume that in a few years will, I believe, exceed the volume of our Atlantic trade, will certainly be going through the port of Vancouver. Vancouver may be doing very well at the present time and with the limited appropriations which have been made for the extension of that port it may offer a fair prospect of paying from year to year the interest on the capital expenditures which have so far been made. But if you are to make the port of Vancouver and the port of Prince Rupert further north, great national ports, this country must be prepared to make annually appropriations from the public treasury for the large capital expenditures which are necessary for their development, without looking for any return of interest thereon to the federal treasury. It will be quite sufficient if you leave to the commission of each port the exacting of the lessened port taxation to defray the ordinary expenses of operation and the expenses of maintaining in good repair the structures which have been built by direct appropriations from the treasury.

In regard to the port of Montreal I am not at the present time going into the larger aspect of the matter, namely, the development of the port in connection with the possible development of the St. Lawrence river. But the United States ports on the great lakes are the competitors of Montreal; the Hudson river will, I am sure, in the near future also become a competitor for Montreal's export trade, and if we are to develop Montreal's export trade in competition with United States ports, certainly large expenditures which are made in the port of Montreal must be made in the national interest, and justified from the point of view of the national interest, and this country must expect no return to its treasury of those principal sums appropriated but must be satisfied with a revenue from that port which will maintain its structures in good and efficient repair and ensure the operations of the port at such a low cost as will enable it to obtain and keep its business in competition with all rival ports lying to the south of the United States boundary. Therefore I think now is the opportune time, as the leader of the opposition has suggested, to inaugurate a new policy before you place upon the ports of St. John and Halifax a burden which cannot be borne by any prospective trade of those ports and which must prevent them from being developed as they should be in the national interest of the whole country.

Mr. CAMPBELL: On Wednesday last the minister quoted a letter which the harbour commissioners of Quebec had received from the central selling agency of the wheat pool. In case there might be any misunderstanding about that, I should like to read a telegram which I have just received from the man in charge of the central board representing the wheat pool. The telegram reads:

> Smith's letter personal reply to General Tremblay. Quebec harbour improvements never discussed by provincial or central boards. Speaking personally believe pools in sympathy with general policy of harbour improvements that will increase shipments of Canadian grain through Canadian ports but naturally not in position to make definite recommendations to government.
> (Signed) GEO. MCIVOR.

Mr. GARDINER: According to the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a few minutes ago, exports and imports of freight through the port of Quebec in 1924 amounted to approximately 800,899 tons and in the year 1926 this had increased to 1,221,850 tons, or an increase of practically 50 per cent in two years. That is quite an increase in tonnage in a port the size of Quebec. Has the minister any information as to the revenues in 1924 representing the tonnage of that year and also the revenues in 1926 representing the tonnage of that year?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the figures I have, the revenues of the harbour for 1924 were $568,727.77 and in 1926, $678,882.06.

Mr. GARDINER: That is an increase of about $110,000 for an increase of tonnage of 50 per cent. Can the minister explain why the revenues in 1926 have not increased in proportion to the increase in tonnage?

Mr. CARDIN: I must confess that I cannot give the details.

Mr. GARDINER: I take it that those are the gross revenues?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to bring up again the question of the facilities handed over to the commission in 1913 and also the liabilities with which the commission was charged. This afternoon the minister informed the committee that the facilities turned over to the commission in 1913 cost this country $5,307,106. He also stated at the same time that the interest charges on those facilities prior to the time that they were handed over to the commission amounted to approximately $6,000,000. Is that the exact statement the minister wished to convey to the committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: It is apparent to me that the Quebec harbour with this tremendous interest charge on the initial cost of the facilities has not had a fair show. I will admit that, and it seems to me that some remedy is required in that direction. I would like to see the government clear this situation up before we proceed much further with this bill, because if the commission remains with the same liabilities, in the event of it requiring a further appropriation as time goes on for the extension of the harbour facilities, the present situation will be only accentuated, and we shall be in no better position then to remedy that situation than we are to-day. So I would impress upon the minister the necessity of cleaning this matter up before we go much further. I am sure the committee would view such action on the part of the minister with sympathy, in order that we might give the commission the opportunity of starting from a sound basis; and once put on an efficient basis, if they are not successful, we shall know where to lay the blame. But as it is at the present time, we can hardly charge the harbour commission with any incompetency in view of the figures placed before the committee by the minister.

There is another point that I would bring to the attention of the committee, and which was discussed last week, and that is the question of the claims of the Quebec harbour commission against the various departments. I do not know whether the government have had the oportunity of going into this matter since the bill was last before the house, but I would ask the minister if he has had that opportunity. It appears to me that this matter also should be settled before we go any further. I do not like this method of delaying important decisions. Important questions like this should be decided at the earliest possible opportunity, so that the harbour board will be given a reasonable opportunity of showing what it can do. I

I would also like to support the statement of the leader of the opposition with regard to different treatment of our various harbours. I think the time has come when we shall have to make them national in scope. We are competing with the country to the south of us, which is much richer than we are, and if we are to maintain Canadian trade in Canadian channels, I can see the necessity for a policy different from that pursued in the past in regard to these harbours.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the minister answers, in order to save time, may I say that there are three matters at least on which we are agreed. One is that Quebec should be treated as a national port. The second is that improvements are urgently required. The third is that we are to vote the money to make those improvements. We differ as to whether this should be done directly by the administration or through the commission, and the reason why I urged the minister to reconsider the matter was not because of anything that was in my mind on the day the discussion opened, but because the report of the audit board, laid upon the table of the house by the government itself before the discussion commenced, contained three paragraphs reading as follows:

Examination of the published reports clearly shows the expenses to have increased steadily and out of proportion to the earnings during the three years; this fact is set out in the following percentages:

	1924 per cent	1925 per cent	1926 per cent
Gross earnings.. ..	100	100	100
Gross expenses. ..	69.83	85.25	87.68

The accounts examined by us provided no explanation for these variations, due largely to the suspension some years ago of cost accounts.

The figures submitted above clearly demonstrate that, even allowing for a reasonable increase in traffic at the port of Quebec, the gross earnings will not be sufficient in any year to pay the operating expenses and interest on government loans; and as no provision has been made for depreciation, it may be forecasted that the annual cost of repairs and renewals will increase considerably in the future.

Then this is the final paragraph:

It will be noticed that the annual deficit for three years, excluding claims against departments of the government and interest thereon—neither of which have been paid by any of the departments—but including interest on government allowances, averaged $600,000.

That is the report of the audit board, and it is because of that report, which is not the report of this house, but the report of the official body appointed by statute to consider these matters, that we now make to the government, through the minister, the suggestion—we have made it as strongly as we can, and I am content to leave it at that—that in the light of those facts he should not treat this matter other than as a direct appropriation of moneys for the purpose intended under the supervision and control of the government, and with an audit of the accounts. In order to save time, I am suggesting to the minister that we should add these sections to the bill, if he still persists in putting the bill through as it stands. These are the four sections that we added to the Federal District Commission Act last year, and in adopting them I suggested to the Prime Minister then, and I still think, that he was pursuing the proper course:

15. The commission shall send to the minister on or before the first day of September in each year a detailed statement of all its receipts and expenditures up to the last day of March in such year; and copies of such statements shall be laid before parliament by the minister within the first fourteen days of the next following session thereof.

16. The commission shall on or before the first day of December in each year make to the minister an annual report for the information of parliament, setting forth a description of the nature and extent of the works and undertakings of the commission for the year ended on the thirty-first day of March in that year, and such other matters as appear to it to be of public interest in relation to the said commission. Copies of such annual reports shall be laid before parliament by the minister within the first fourteen days of the next following session thereof.

The section mentions December; that date could be changed. Then section 17 reads:

17. The commission shall, whenever required by the minister, render detailed accounts of its receipts and expenditures for such period or to such day as he designates; and all books of account, records, bank books and papers of the commission shall at all times be open to the inspection of the minister or of such person as the minister names to inspect them.

That is not necessary with respect to the harbour commission, having regard to the provisions of the audit board, but it is very desirable as giving the minister power that is not in terms given in the Audit Act itself. The minister in the statute I am reading from is the Minister of Finance. The minister in the case to which I am directing attention might be either the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Minister of Finance. Then section 18 reads:

18. All expenditures by the commission shall be subject to the audit of the Auditor General in the same manner as other public moneys.

I made the suggestion to the Prime Minister last evening, and I gathered from what he said that he thought the suggestion was wholly in the public interest, that the expenditures by the commission should be subject to investigation from year to year by the public accounts committee, the same as other public accounts certified by the Auditor General. I was dealing last evening with the federal district commission, and if the minister is determined to pursue the course that is now indicated with respect to the bill before us, I desire to make the same suggestion with respect to this bill.

Mr. CANNON: From what act was my hon. friend quoting?

Mr. BENNETT: From the Federal District Commission Act, 1927.

Mr. CARDIN: Under the law the Minister of Finance has the power to send the audit board to make an audit of the accounts of any of these harbour commissions. As I understand the contention of the leader of the opposition and some of his followers, it is that the report of the audit board is not necessarily brought before the public accounts committee. I think last night the right hon. Prime Minister agreed in regard to the federal district commission to refer its reports to the public accounts committee if so required by any hon. member.

Mr. BENNETT: I will assist the minister if I may do so without disturbing the sequence of his remarks. The statute that we passed last session incorporating the federal district commission provided for the audit of the accounts of the commission by the Auditor General and their being laid before parliament. I suggested to the right hon. Prime Minister that there was some little doubt as to whether those accounts would be treated in the same way as the public accounts certified by the Auditor General, and that we might remove any doubts. He was good enough to say that in his opinion the act as it now stood was ample to enable that to be accomplished, if I followed him correctly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Correct.

Mr. CANNON: Does my hon. friend refer to sections 16, 17, 18 and 19 of the Federal District Commission Act?

Mr. BENNETT: I think those are the sections I read.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not see any great objection, Mr. Chairman, to the incorporation of those sections in this bill, but I do not think it is necessary. This bill provides that the harbour commissioners must make monthly reports to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and supply the department with all the information that may be required from them. At present the audit board has the necessary authority to audit the accounts, and their report has been placed on Hansard. Apparently the only difficulty that may arise and cause apprehension to the leader of the opposition is that the report of the audit board is not of itself submitted to the public accounts committee.

Mr. BENNETT: What we want is a report of the harbour operations by the harbour board. We do not want it to be left to the minister to say that the audit board shall do something; we want it provided for as in the case of the federal district commission, and there the Prime Minister agreed with us that it was in the public interest. The reports of the federal district commission are certified by the Auditor General. The audit board may never report. The minister asked them to in this instance and laid their report on the table, as he was bound to do. That is how we know the condition of affairs in Quebec harbour.

Mr. CARDIN: Every year our harbour commissions are issuing reports of their operations, and those reports are made to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. CARDIN: Those reports are public documents. I am not sure whether they are laid on the table of the house every year, but they could be, and I see no objection to their being referred to the public accounts committee. Instead of complicating the bill by adding new sections which may conflict with other sections, I may tell my hon. friend that I am prepared to make a declaration that the report of the Quebec harbour commission shall be tabled and referred, if required, to the public accounts committee. I would remind the hon. leader of the opposition that probably we are dealing with this in a temporary manner, because I propose to do something to correct the evils which are said to exist in these harbour commissions. The recommendation in the audit board's report is worthy of consideration:

> The scope of this investigation has not permitted us to formulate any practical suggestion for the improvement of the financial control over the affairs at this port, but we would suggest that the question of consolidating the management of all the contiguous ports should receive your consideration.

This is the suggestion made by the audit board. I am not prepared to say that I will carry it out in its entirety, but I frankly admit that we have to do something. At the present time, however, we are not in a position to deal with the problem because we have not been able to give it sufficient thought. I am asking parliament to treat the Quebec, St. John and Halifax harbour commissions in the same way as the other harbours have been treated up to the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: None of them is in the same position, because in this case we have the audit board's report.

Mr. CARDIN: I appreciate that point, but I am giving this undertaking, that in a very short time I shall look over all these harbours, secure expert advice, and bring before parliament legislation which will cover the objections that have been made while this bill has been before the committee. I have no time, as was suggested by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), to look into the accounts of the commission extending over a number of years and make a settlement right away. I need time to ascertain what charges would be reasonable. I admit that up to the present time they have not been very seriously considered by the department, so we are not in a position to consider how much of the claim would be entertained. I think the government should be empowered to advance the money to the Quebec harbour commission, with the understanding that the commission must observe the law and make to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a detailed report, which will be tabled and refered to the public accounts committee whenever required. The same remarks apply to any reports of the audit board which may be called for by the Minister of Finance; every such report will be tabled and, when required, referred to the public accounts committee.

Mr. CAHAN: Are you prepared to make such audit annually?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Now the making of the report is optional.

Mr. CARDIN: No, the act incorporating the commission requires them to make their report annually to the minister.

Mr. CAHAN: But my hon. friend will admit that the report which the harbour commissioners make to the minister is not a detailed accounting of their expenses.

Mr. CARDIN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. This is a very complete report covering all the operations in the harbour and giving all the details that we have, for example, in the annual report of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. CAHAN: The report that I have seen from the Montreal harbour commission is printed in a book. True, possibly, it gives as much information as that contained in the report of the Canadian National Railways, but it is simply a balance sheet. That does not meet the complaint made this session and every session since I have been in the house. There should be nothing private or secret or confidential with regard to expenditures made by the Quebec harbour commission, especially expenditures of moneys which are advanced on the credit of the Dominion. And the report which they make to the minister, and which should be laid before this house, should be as complete a report as those of other departments which are audited by the Auditor General and submitted to the public accounts committee and made subject to inquiry from year to year so far as necessary.

Mr. CARDIN: I believe the reports which are made by the harbour commissions are meeting absolutely the requirements indicated by my hon. friend. They give the details of all their operations and report upon all expenditures. I am sure these reports are quite complete and there is nothing secret about them—absolutely nothing. Everything is indicated in them. I have in my hand the report of the Quebec harbour commission for the year 1926, showing the financial condition, the trade passing through the port, expenditures, operations and certificate of audit. Everything is included in the report. I cannot see, therefore, any objection to tabling the report and having it submitted to a committee of the house for the securing of further details on the items indicated. I see no objection to this, and I am sure the commissioners would not either.

Mr. CAHAN: That would meet the objection in part.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The conditions in connection with this harbour are exceptional. The board have an unfortunate report in that they have been unable to pay interest. They are now asking for a large sum of money—eight and a half millions—and, as I understand it, their expenditures are not audited by the Auditor General of Canada unless there is a special request from the minister to have this done.

Mr. CAHAN: Not even then.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is stated in the report, if I remember rightly, that there is an absence of cost records of operations in that harbour. The minister says he is anxious to effect some improvement. Why not begin right now in this bill and provide that these expenditures shall be subject to the Auditor General, and have inserted the clauses which have been suggested by the leader of the opposition? That would not prevent the voting of this money, nor would it prevent the expenditure of it; but it would surround it with safeguards which I think we are entitled to urge in view of the unfortunate record with regard to the repayment of money, and in consideration of the very large sum now asked.

On section 3—Interest on debentures during construction to be charged to capital account.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to the additional clauses suggested, which appear in the Ottawa bill, do I understand the minister to say that he does not desire to insert these sections in this bill? It is not very difficult for him to maintain his position. He has a majority behind him who can say that they shall not be inserted in the bill, but I ask him whether he does not think it desirable in the public interest that they should be enacted. I should like to have his views in the matter.

Mr. CARDIN: The observation I made in this regard was to the effect that everything which is covered by the clauses to which my hon. friend refers already exists.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. In the law incorporating the harbour commission these provisions exist, and they appear even in the present bill. This bill provides that a monthly report shall be made by the commission to the minister, and that the commission shall submit any other report which may be required by the minister at any other time in relation to their affairs. The law constituting the harbour commission stipulates that the commissioners shall make a report annually to the minister. This provision exists in the legislation. The only provision that does not exist is that the report shall be submitted to the public accounts committee.

Mr. BENNETT: No—submitted to the house.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes; they are not submitted to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the point.

Mr. CARDIN: I am ready to undertake that these reports which the commissioners make me shall be tabled, and I will undertake also, at any request, to have them referred to a committee of the house. I agree to that.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Are these accounts subject to audit by the Auditor General?

Mr. CARDIN: They are subject to audit by the audit board, which was the body especially created to go over certain branches of the administration not conducted in the same manner as are the departments. When the audit board was created it was given the power to go over the accounts of the Canadian Nationals Railways, of the harbour commissions, of the then Ottawa improvement commission and of all other organizations through which we spend public money or through which we administer public affairs. These bodies were not covered by the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, but in order to have the affairs of these commissions audited the audit board was organized. That board, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) says, has the right to act at the discretion of the Minister of Finance. That is quite right. But if any member should ask the Minister of Finance to have the audit board investigate the Quebec or the Montreal harbour commission, no one would imagine any objection coming from that minister; he would agree to such an investigation. As a matter of fact, the audit board has audited the affairs of practically all the harbours in Canada. It has audited the affairs of the harbour of Vancouver and of Montreal, and the Montreal audit was tabled two years ago. This year it has audited the affairs of the port of Quebec and that report also has been tabled. What remains to be done is to provide some facilities for investigation by a committee, as in the case of any other branch of public administration.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is this: The audit board's report itself states in terms that the board was not asked to make a report on methods of improving management and administration. Perhaps the minister remembers what he read just a moment ago. In one instance the executive power has control while in the other instance the control is with this house. And there is a great distinction between the executive and this house, because the minority in the house are able to do something when the matter is with the house, whereas, when it is with the executive, they have no such power.

Sir EUGENE FISET: On the other hand, my hon. friend knows that the Auditor General audits all expenses after they have been incurred, in accordance with the direction of the audit board. A continuous or a post audit may be ordered: that was the reason for the creation of the board.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) has touched the point we are endeavouring to make, that the accounts are not audited by the Auditor General; and the audit board can function, so far as these accounts are concerned, only at the instance of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance asks them in terms to do only what he wants done, and they themselves have reported here that, owing to the fact that the reference to them was not broad enough, they are not able to report on improved methods of administration or management, for want of which, they say, this condition has been brought about.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not think my hon. friend is quite correct; that is not exactly the position taken by the audit board.

Mr. BENNETT: See the terms of their statement.

Mr. CARDIN: "The scope of this investigation has not permitted us to formulate—"

Mr. BENNETT: Why?

Mr. CARDIN: Because they are venturing on a new program; they are suggesting a complete change in the management of the affairs of the port. They are not speaking about any limitation in the scope of their investigation as regards ascertaining the real financial situation. They say, "We hesitate—"

Mr. BENNETT: They do not say that.

Mr. CARDIN:

> The scope of this investigation has not permitted us to formulate any practical suggestion for the improvement of the financial control over the affairs at this port, but we would suggest that the question of consolidating the management of all contiguous ports receive your consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that means Chicoutimi; that is the contiguous port.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not know why my hon. friend should particularly refer to the port of Chicoutimi, for which we voted the sum of $500,000 last year.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister lay on the table the papers with respect to that port?

Mr. CARDIN: I will have no objection at all, because I am afraid that before very long—I give my hon. friend warning—we will have to come to parliament and ask for a larger grant to the port of Chicoutimi. I think the circumstances and conditions will absolutely justify the request which we will make. Under the circumstances, I think I have gone far in promising what I have promised, and I think this bill should be allowed to go through without complicating it with new sections as suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Do I understand that the minister will be quite satisfied to have the accounts of the various boards come before the public accounts committee?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly, or before any other committee the house may appoint.

Mr. GEARY: I would ask the minister to supplement some information which he gave us a short time ago. The money now requested will construct eight new berths, as he has indicated. How many will have been constructed with the sum of $5,000,000 voted by this house in 1925, and what will be the total number of berths when the two plans are completed.

Mr. CARDIN: When the commission came to the government in 1925 they presented a program for the construction of eight berths, but at that time we represented that the amount was rather too large for that year, and suggested that they reduce it to $5,000,000. That only represented half the total, so in 1925 they had a $10,000,000 scheme in hand. They had prepared all their data on that basis, and they said that with $5,000,000 they could only execute half the work they contemplated when the whole program was prepared. So the $5,000,000 voted in 1925 and the $5,000,000 included in this present vote is to complete the program which they prepared with expert advice in 1925, and this whole program will provide the eight berths which I mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. GEARY: Then will the minister tell me this: Would the money voted in 1925 provide for the construction of four complete berths from the bottom up, or would it not?

Mr. CARDIN: It would, and it will.

Mr. GEARY: And that is what has been begun?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: Then the work was divided laterally in half?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, it is practically half.

Mr. GEARY: These are four new berths as distinct from the four which were begun under the vote of 1925?

Mr. CARDIN: This provides for the completion of the program of 1925.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the undertaking of the minister meets the situation, although there is no reason why he should not add to the statute the sections which were proposed. However, in view of the fact that he will investigate the whole situation during the recess, and in view of his undertaking to lay these accounts upon the table of the house to be dealt with in the manner indicated, so far as I am concerned, and speaking for those associated with me, I regard that as satisfactory and thank him for his undertaking.

Bill reported.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

IMPROVEMENT AND BEAUTIFICATION OF OTTAWA

The house resumed, from April 24, consideration in committee of Bill No. 218, to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927—Mr. Mackenzie King—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I promised that I would verify a certain statement which I made to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) with respect to the price per square foot of the land expropriated between the post office and Elgin street. I find that the statement as I gave it to him was correct. The price I quoted was the price offered by the Public Works department. This was regarded by the owners of the properties as too low, and the adjustment of the amount is before the court at the present time. The actual price has not yet been fixed.

Then in conversation with my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bennett) I indicated that if it were agreeable to him I would change from thirty years to sixteen years, as it was in the act passed last session, the period for which the $200,000 per annum is to be paid to the commission for purposes of maintenance and small improvements. I think my hon. friend will agree that this is a reasonable change when I mention to him this fact, namely, that possibly the commission may have acted already upon the assumption that the $250,000 which we voted last year was to be paid for a period of sixteen years. Now we are cutting it down to $200,000, and I hope my hon. friend will agree that we are doing the right and safe thing in limiting the period to sixteen years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely in one year they have not made any commitments so far ahead.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They were planning a program which would take sixteen years to complete, when the amendment was put through last year.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: That period covers the probable life of about three parliaments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would move that the word "thirty" in line eighteen of section 2, subsection 8, be struck out, and that the word "sixteen" be substituted therefor.

Mr. CAHAN: Under the previous act the sixteen years ran from April 1, 1927, so if we are to confine it to the same period, under the amending act it would be for fifteen years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend thinks it material to make the period fifteen rather than sixteen years, and if that will help to harmonize the views of all, I will not be captious about it, but sixteen years is a short time.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps it would not make very much difference, but the objection I have heard stated is that this parliament should not attempt to bind parliaments too far ahead; that this whole matter of the improvement of the federal district must come up from time to time, at least once in each new parliament, and that each new parliament must decide for itself as to the future. It is not wise, therefore, to fix by statute these annual appropriations for too many years ahead; and to reduce the term one-half might to that slight extent meet the pressing criticism in respect of this measure.

Mr. BENNETT: The action of the Prime Minister in respect to this matter is certainly not what we might call a provocative one, but I cannot bring myself to believe that we should go beyond the life of any one parliament. I should like to be able to do so, but there comes a time when you must dissent from a suggestion not because of any political difference but because a fair principle is involved. The question of the responsibility of parliament to the country in respect to the matter is one thing, but to bind the hands of future parliaments in connection with improvements, as I regard it, is a serious matter, and reluctantly I think we shall have to stand by the position we have taken and ask the committee to say whether or not five years is a sufficient period within which to let a commission created by this parliament know that they may rely upon a given sum of money per annum. That is as far as I can go with my hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to the hon. leader of the opposition that I agree with him about not binding parliament for a period of any undue length. I believe it is wise in these matters, as has been suggested, to arrange that the proceedings of any of the bodies which are spending public moneys should come before parliament periodically for review, especially before every new parliament. If I felt that in consequence of what we are now doing, the proceedings of the commission in any way would not be subject to review, I would not for a moment suggest that the period be changed from thirty to sixteeen years. I would point out to my hon. friend, however, that to urge that the period stand at sixteen, or at fifteen years, if that will meet the situation, is one thing, but that to reduce it to five years is to undo what parliament did last session in permitting the appropriation to be made for sixteen years; I think that is rather different from making the appropriation now for the first time. I would ask the committee, seeing that what I propose is to reduce from $250,000 to $200,000, the amount which last year was voted for sixteen years, to accept my suggestion that "thirty years," as in the bill before the committee, be changed to "sixteen years."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Prime Minister means that the maturity of the bonds would be after a period of sixteen years, and the amount would be the same?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I do not think any bonds will be issued for this purpose. Practically all this money will go for maintaining the improvements which have been made already, and the making of some slight further improvements and alterations. There is no doubt that as long as this commission continues to operate this amount of money will be asked for every year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then this has nothing to do with the bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it is the part of the bill which relates to the annual appropriation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It does not deal with the specific amount to be contributed from the consolidated revenue or the $6,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no mention of $6,000,000, as far as I am aware. The part which referred to the bonds was dealt with by the committee yesterday. I have intimated that the Minister of Finance intends to meet at least half that amount out of the consolidated revenue fund, possibly the whole of it, and not to issue bonds at all.

Mr. CAHAN: If I might have the attention also of the leader of the opposition for a moment, it seems to me that the suggestion made by the Prime Minister is not unfair. This parliament has already committed itself to a larger amount annually. In dealing now with section 2 of this bill the Prime Minister has agreed that he will not increase the term beyond that fixed by parliament last session, but he reduces the annual appropriation by $50,000 a year. In view of the decision of parliament at its last session, and if this permissive period is now reduced to fifteen years so as to adhere to the same term as before, I think it might be fairly considered by the house as a reasonable compromise.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a compromise at all.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We made a certain arrangement under the act of last year, and now we are now making a cash appropriation of some $3,000,000, which takes up some of the commitments previously made. If we can alter last year's bill to that extent, we can surely alter this one. Do we have to admit that if we made an error last year we have to continue it? This parliament has no right, in my opinion, to go beyond its own lifetime in making commitments; each parliament, if it is worth anything at all, has the right to deal with the expenditures made during its existence. That is the objection I have to that particular clause.

Mr. BENNETT: I move in amendment to the amendment that the period be five years. I did not say five years without mature consideration. All I can say to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George is that the fact that we did it last year is no reason why we should not undo it now. This is the first opportunity we have had of undoing it; therefore I desire to offer this amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I think the bill as it now stands would be improved by the amendment suggested by the hon. the leader of the opposition. But I am not so much interested in the actual number of years fixed as I am in what the hon. the Prime Minister suggested in his last remark. The bonds for the $3,000,000 were dealt with, I believe, by the committee last night. As I did not happen to be in the house at that moment I should like to make a remark on that point now and perhaps move an amendment on the third reading. I should like the assurance of the Prime Minister that no bonds will be issued in this connection. If he will look at the situation for a moment he will discover that if the bonds are issued it will mean that the people themselves give their own securities to be handled by bond dealers, and the people themselves will have to pay. I notice in another clause that they guarantee the interest on bonds issued on their own security, which is absurd. I know of no better example of the effects of our present financial system than the one we have right here. It will mean that they will pay over thirty years one and a half times the actual amount expended during the life of the bonds. I should be glad if the Prime Minister would assure the committee that the financing in this case will not be done in that way. If we cannot afford to finance it directly or immediately out of the consolidated revenue fund I suggest that the government issue its own bonds, non-interest bearing; that is that they use the Finance Act in exactly the way the banks use it, namely by the issue of notes on the strength of their own bonds, financing this directly and then taking back so much per annum over a period of as many years as the Prime Minister desires. In that case fifty years would be better than sixteen.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In connection with the capital expenditure, as I explained on the second reading of the bill, this is primarily for the purpose of the construction of a confederation park, something commemorative of the diamond jubilee of confederation and a sort of recognition by the present generation of the work of the fathers of confederation. I should not like to have a purpose of that kind frustrated by disagreement amongst the members of the house if I can bring about unanimity. I am prepared to say to my hon. friend, after conference with the Minister of Finance, that he is quite prepared, so far as the capital expenditure is required to be provided for in this bill, to have it advanced out of the consolidated revenue fund. I intimated yesterday that that was the intention with regard to any immediate outlays, and it might be and in all probability would be what the Minister of Finance would do eventually. I still have the feeling that where a great public improvement is to be enjoyed in future years by those who come after us they might well share in meeting the cost of it, and it was for that purpose alone that a longer period of time was suggested. But I would say to my hon. friend and to the committee, with respect to the capital expenditure, that all moneys paid to the commission will be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have given this whole question some considerable thought over a period of two years. I should like to see Ottawa beautified; I should like to think we are now in the position to undertake that beautification; but in the course of my examination of my viewpoint in the matter, I find it difficult to come to the conclusion that we are yet in a position where we may be able to afford the expenditure. I frankly do not think we are in a position to-day to do so. Had the Minister of Finance not been so gracious to the millionaires of Canada in his reductions in the income tax, there would have been a great deal stronger ground for the position now taken by the Prime Minister. I am going to find it very difficult to explain to my people and to the people throughout the country whom it is stated I represent, why I supported the expenditure of millions of money for the beautification of Ottawa while there are still thousands of people who in many cases are unable to maintain for themselves what is the ordinary standard of living in Canada. How am I to justify voting millions for beautifying Ottawa—and in the final analysis it is for vainglorious purposes; it is the beautifying of something for the satisfaction of our vanity—in the face of 8 per cent money for the farmers, and a wretched $20 a month pension for the aged and infirm who have toiled all their lives in an effort to build up the country? How am I to justify such a vote in the face of the fact that men are being jailed because they are unemployed? How am I to justify it in the face of the attitude of the government towards the Home Bank depositors, when all they hand the depositors is merely regrets? If I go to the fishermen of the maritime provinces and tell them that I voted millions to beautify Ottawa, how can I justify my vote when all they get is a royal commission to examine into their wretched condition? No other member can appreciate things of beauty more than I can or is more desirous of satisfying his desires for beauty and charm of surroundings. If I could bring down to Ottawa the tens of thousands of people scattered throughout this country who, because of social and commercial conditions that exist, are condemned to drab, drear lives of great toil and struggle with no hope of rising above a certain level of living and a certain environment; if I could take them down here for a holiday to enjoy this beautiful city and these things with which we propose to increase its beauty, I would feel easier in mind on the matter and a good deal freer to support the legislation.

In passing may I say that this prating about monuments to our wisdom, about the gratitude of posterity and the foresight and vision of statesmen, does not appeal to me, and the erection of monuments and parks utterly fails to satisfy my conception of the things that are really needed in the country at this moment. The time may come when all that may be justified, but it is certainly not now especially whilst thousands are struggling through life in Canada at wages which are below the standard of living. I undertook in connection with this matter to make an examination into some statistics, and I find that in spite of the fact that the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, a committee of this very house, in 1926 declared that the minimum standard of living in Canada would require an annual wage of $2,400, the great majority of the wage earners are receiving not much more than $1,000 a year. Here we have the situation where the great mass of toilers in Canada are living on one-half or less than half the wages which a committee of this house says is the minimum upon which a reasonable standard of existence can be maintained. Yet I am expected to go back to them and to justify a vote of millions for beautification while they struggle along through their unfortunate and frequently miserable lives in a condition relative to poverty.

I submit to the Prime Minister that it would be a far more worthy thing, a far more statesmanlike thing, if not all this sum but the larger portion of it were turned over to the relieving of poverty and misery and to a real attempt to solve the problem of unemployment, a problem which is growing more and more acute every year with the introduction of greater and more efficient machinery. The beautifying of Ottawa may be all very well for those whose salaries are now sufficient to guarantee them all the beauties in life which they desire. It may be all very fine for the right hon. gentleman himself, and even for myself at the moment in a much humbler sphere of life, to satiate our appetites for beauty. But we have opportunities that other people in Canada will never have. If the Prime Minister would make an annual excursion for the people of Canada to come and see this city, there might be some reasonable excuse for this work. Let me say to him and to the leader of the opposition that while they were both in a measure correct with respect to the historical remembrance we have of Rome, Greece and even Babylon, my boyhood memory rather carries me to the achievements of the great generals, such as Hannibal, Alexander the Great and so on. If I read history in a less superficial manner than so many do, I find that with all that great display of military splendour, of wonderful monuments, architectural designs, parks and so forth, the most appalling slavery and destitution was the lot of the great masses of the people whether they were of Rome or Imperial Greece or Babylon, or of the unfortunate races who came under the sway of these empires. I think in doing what we are asked to do now we are simply preparing a vision for the eyes of those who are already wealthy enough to live in the Chateau Laurier, men who come here as lobbyists, as persuaders of government for the granting of special privileges. We are going to gratify their senses. I want to say that in great measure our efforts may be wasted, because I can imagine many of these gentlemen who now reside in the Chateau Laurier would get a far greater thrill from the sight of a tax-free bond than from the sight of dawn on the bay of Naples or of a sunset in the Rocky Mountains, and yet we propose to spend millions in order that those who reside in the Chateau Laurier may gaze with admiration at about eleven in the forenoon on this beautiful park which the Prime Minister is asking us to establish—I will not say as a monument to his own memory particularly, but as a monument to our alleged statesmanship in this house. May I say in closing that he would have more worthily served the object he has in view if, instead of embalming in the industrial records of librairies those flowers of idealism that sprang to his mind in the past with reference to justice and humanity, and to which he gave utterance in his book Industry and Humanity, he had taken those flowers, now lying desiccated and flattened between the leaves of his book, out into the open and watered them by the application of practice. That would have been a far finer monument to his memory than ever this public park will be. If we turn our attention to solving the economic difficulties of our people we shall give posterity much greater occasion to remember us than we shall by erecting a park to be gazed upon from the Chateau Laurier.

I am not opposing any attempt to beautify Ottawa, but I think that at this stage, in view of the condition of our finances, so long as we have over two billions of national debt and no reasonable method proposed for paying it off; so long as unemployment continues, with seventeen hundred men jailed in Winnipeg—not because they were not willing to work, but because there was no work for them to do last winter; and the chief of police of Winnipeg stated that in his opinion these men were, with one exception, of types as fine as had ever come to his notice—so long as these conditions continue there is no justification apparent to me at least for the voting of all these millions that are now being asked for. I submit that the Prime Minister would be well advised to reconsider the bill and to reduce the amount from $3,000,000 to $1,000,- 000; or let us vote this thing year by year, if we are to vote it at all, instead of voting one lump sum at the present time. Let us proceed cautiously and reasonably, and not plunge into it as if we were as wealthy as Rome, Greece and Babylon together.

In passing, I agree entirely with the position taken by the hon. member for Macleod last night, that you are going to have a ridiculous left-handed view here under the plan proposed. Anyone walking out from the main entrance of the parliament building will not be able to gaze on a beautiful park. The view he will see will be the drab and miserable picture he sees to-day. There is no change contemplated along Wellington street, fronting the house. Only across to the left will there be a glimpse of the green sward and the flowers, as the proposal now stands.

Now that the Minister of Railways is in his seat, may I refer to the chief argument which he used. He said that this is such a small matter per capita that surely no reasonable excuse could be given for not voting the money. Identically the same argument could be applied to every vote that we have ever been asked to pass in this house. Taken by itself, the per capita taxation would be a very small item, as the result of any particular vote, but to use that as an argument why we should agree, with the condition in which our finances are, to vote this money is not good enough for me, and I intend to oppose this bill unless the Prime Minister can see his way to reduce the amount. I think he is asking for altogether too large a sum at this stage.

I hope that I have not hurt anyone's feelings. Let me simply reiterate before I take my seat that I would far rather support the Prime Minister in carrying into immediate practice those great ideals on behalf of humanity that he set forth in his book, Industry and Humanity, than fall in with this plan for the gratification of the vanity of those who expect posterity's gratitude—gratitude which can be more justly anticipated if we seriously attack our great social and economic problems and by solving them bring charm, beauty and happiness to the people who toil.

Mr. IRVINE: I would like to get clear in my mind what the difference is going to be if this project is going to be financed from the consolidated revenue fund. I would ask the mover of the amendment to the amendment kindly to explain to us what it is about, because we could not hear a word in this part of the chamber.

Mr. BENNETT: As the proposal stands in section 2 of the bill, there was to be an annuity of $200,000 payable for a period not exceeding thirty years from the 1st of April, 1928. That is the annuity; it has nothing to do with the $3,000,000, and that annuity is payable out of the consolidated revenue fund. The amendment of the right hon. the Prime Minister was to substitute fifteen for thirty years, and to that I moved an amendment that we do not bind the hands of parliament beyond the term of parliament, namely, five years.

Mr. CAHAN: I would ask the Prime Minister what is the interpretation which the government place upon this amended section 8. It says:

> The minister is hereby authorized to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada to the commission the sum of two hundred thousand dollars a year for a period not exceeding . . . years.

Does that bind each succeeding Finance minister to pay that amount for the full term, or does it leave it to the discretion of each succeeding Finance minister whether he will pay it or not? It is "may," not "shall." What interpretation does the government place on this section?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If in the next fifteen years there should be another Prime Minister he will be free to propose whatever he may think this house should give to the federal district commission.

Mr. CAHAN: That is not, I think, a pertinent answer. I am dealing with the construction of the statute and with the practice. Where a Finance minister is authorized to pay for a term not exceeding, say, thirty years, does that bind the Finance minister to pay the amount each year? Is it not merely a permissive, and not an imperative, statute?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the purpose of it is to give the commission the assurance that it will have, from year to year for the period of fifteen years, the money that will be required to maintain the improvements which it is making at the present time, and which it would not make unless it had that assurance. The commission is constructing driveways and parks now, and if it felt that it was not going to have the necessary sum to maintain these driveways and parks when completed, I do not think it would incur the original expenditure. This simply gives the assurance which will permit of a continuity and permanency of policy on the part of the commission.

Mr. CAHAN: I must confess that I read the statute as permissive, and not as absolutely binding.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the expectation would be that the Finance minister would give that amount to the commission for the period of time mentioned.

Mr. SPENCER: The suggestion has been made that if bonds are going to be issued for this work, we should issue interest-free bonds. I would just like to remind the house that this is not an entirely new suggestion. It has been made not only by many eminent men in Great Britain, but by those who were associated with Henry Ford in the large undertaking of the development of Mussle Shoals. It went so far there that a bill was introduced into congress and and secured considerable support. If we want this money in even amounts per year we could take it out of the consolidated revenue fund, but if we want more than $100,000 per year for the first few years, and at the same time want to extend the capitalization over a number of years, this is the way it could be done. Therefore I take pleasure in supporting the suggestion of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine).

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Bennett) negatived.

Bill reported.

ST. JOHN HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $5,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of bill No. 216 to provide for a loan to the St. John harbour commissioners.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister give the same undertaking with respect to St. John harbour that he has given with respect to Quebec harbour?

Mr. CARDIN: Absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misapprehension, that we think these moneys should not be raised by loan through harbour commissioners. In support of this view —I did not have it beside me the other day —I read from the Duncan report these words:

> We are satisfied that neither at Halifax nor at St. John—although developments at St. John have been more extensive than at Halifax—is it possible, in present circumstances, to secure adequate port development. We recommend that, in respect of each of these two harbours, the federal government should establish a statutory harbour commission, whose business it would be to see that the port facilities are developed on such a scale as will gradually—but by no means slowly—create channels through which trade can expand both winter and summer. The development of a port is as much a matter of mechanical and technical equipment, business organization and practical administration, as is the development of any extensive manufacturing or industrial business.
> We believe it is in the public interest of Canada, and in the interest of the future growth and expansion of its activities, that its Atlantic ports should be developed, just as it has been that its railways and canals should be developed—though development of these has naturally come first. We believe also from the evidence we have had that, under existing conditions of proprietorship at these ports, there will neither be inducement enough, nor impetus enough, to create really great ports, since for some time, at all events, it will be necessary to create facilities even ahead of expansion of trade. All that the Fathers of Confederation said about the importance to Canada of outlets and inlets on the Atlantic ocean open all the year round is as true to-day as it was then (and is indeed, from a commercial point of view, more immediately true now than then), and, in respect to ports—as well as in respect to the railways—the experience of the late war is fresh enough in mind to illustrate one phase of the national viewpoint and national necessity.

The words I particularly direct attention to are those that make it clear, as I submitted the other day, that the purpose and intention of the report was that the ports of Halifax and St. John should be developed by public moneys as national ports, because it is stated that they "should be developed, just as it has been that its—Canada's—railways and canals should be developed," namely, by the direct expenditure of public moneys. There is not a canal in Canada thus otherwise developed.

Mr. DUNNING: Our railways.

Mr. BENNETT: Our railways, publicly owned, have been built largely by public moneys or guarantees of public moneys.

Mr. DUNNING: Guarantees.

Mr. BENNETT: Sir Andrew Rae Duncan said they should be treated as our railways and canals were treated, using those words in their generic sense. Evidently the Intercolonial railway was in his mind—a railway built by the people of Canada through the direct appropriation of their moneys for that purpose. This port will never be a national port in the sense in which the maritime commission meant it if you are merely to borrow money through commissions for the purpose of extending it in the manner indicated. For let me point out that we have three illustrations here of what we may expect. Quebec wants eight million dollars for its harbour. The audit board said that the harbour commission cannot possibly make that profit annually on their operations. Halifax wants only $500,000; the interest on which is $25,000 per annum. The interest on the St. John loan will be $250,000 per annum.

Now, Halifax is a magnificent terminal. That terminal was bought by the direct application of public moneys to the harbour without any harbour commission, so that Halifax now requires only half a million dollars. St. John requires $5,000,000, which will place its harbour at a very great disadvantage with respect to the other ports on the Atlantic seaboard if tolls are to be imposed to meet the annual interest. Therefore it is my submission that the Duncan report contemplated with respect to the development of national ports at St. John and Halifax that public moneys should be directly applied for that purpose through the statutory commission operating in the administration and management of the port. The maritime commission were very careful to add one word more in respect to that:

> We had, at our request, a private session with the Montreal harbour commission and, by hearing from them the steps they took to survey and stimulate production in their immediate territory as well as wider afield, we are confirmed in our view as to what harbour commissions (constituted of business and experienced persons) at Halifax and St. John could do in stimulating the trade of the maritime provinces.

It is those observations which I had in mind the other day, but not having the report under my hand I was not able to refer to them beyond my memory. I cannot think that we are doing our duty by the ports of Halifax and St. John if we merely create harbour commissions under the conditions of the existing Harbour Commissions Act, and ask those bodies to issue securities at 5 per cent per annum and expect them to pay either the principal or the interest. We should make an appropriation of such money from year to year as is required for the purpose of developing those harbours, and it should be a charge upon the revenues of the Canadian people. We should not leave it to the defaults of the local body as happened in Quebec, because low tolls will have to be imopsed to make St. John harbour a success. For instance, how can St. John compete with Halifax if Halifax requires only $500,000 and St. John $5,000,000? How can you ask Halifax to impose tolls to raise $25,000 a year only and ask St. John to impose tolls to raise $250,000 a year?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RALSTON: The $500,000 is for one year, and the $5,000,000 for three.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and that is all asked for at the moment. The interest required in one instance is $25,000—

Mr. RALSTON: The $250,000 is spread over three years.

Mr. BENNETT: The interest taken out of the $5,000,000 leaves that much less to be spent in the harbour of St. John.

Mr. RALSTON: It is a three-year program.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and they have asked for $10,000,000. Now, if we are to start in this way with these harbours we are not doing our duty by the provinces, as indicated by that report, which sets out just what was contemplated. In ports such as Hamburg and London the tolls are kept down to the lowest possible level by reason of competition with other ports. But we are now imposing on these ports by this legislation the necessity of charging, for the use of the harbours, tolls that will have to be high enough to pay the interest on these moneys. The result will be that the port will lose the traffic, which will go through Portland, Boston and other ports. These moneys should be an expenditure by the Canadian people in consequence of estimates brought in and submitted to the house by the minister in order that we may be able from year to year to make our contribution to the development of our ports until they shall have met, in every possible sense, the requirements of the trade of Canada. It was for that reason that I suggested to the minister that an expert report be made with respect to Quebec. At any rate I desire to go on record, as positively and distinctly as I can, as being convinced that this proposal is not what is contemplated by the report, and never can make for the development of national ports. The ports must not be obliged to pay interest on the money we put into their development, and it ought not to be through harbour commissions that moneys are made available for the purpose.

Mr. ROBB: I am sure that the citizens of the different cities whose harbours we are now proposing to improve will look with some favour on the attitude which my hon. friend takes to-day. I may have misinterpreted the sentiment of hon. gentlemen opposite as expressed a few days ago when we were discussing the port of Quebec. As I recall it, we spent the greater part of two days on that debate, every hon. member saying that Quebec was a fine port. But every hon. gentleman opposite made speeches and came out straight against any money being voted to the port of Quebec.

Mr. BENNETT: Name anyone who did so.

Mr. ROBB: No, I will not name anyone. I am in the judgment of the house, and I may have misinterpreted hon. gentlemen opposite. It occurred to me early to-day, particularly when my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) was speaking, that hon. gentlemen opposite had developed a new policy in this regard. From the economy which they advocated last week they have jumped to the extravagance which we notice this week. They all want to dip into the public treasury, saying, at least by implication, that they are in favour of contributing money to the development of these ports without charging interest. That is a very popular policy with the people in the places where you are spending the money, but it is not so popular with the taxpayers.

Mr. BENNETT: Who will pay the interest in Quebec?

Mr. ROBB: This is not a new policy my hon. friends are introducing to-day; it is a policy that has prevailed in this country for some time. We have spent millions, through the Public Works and other departments, in the port of St. John, and millions in the port of Halifax; and we gather from the information now before us that the work is not yet perfect and that they are coming back for more money. With that part of my hon. friend's observations—I am not sure that I understood him rightly—

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I take exception to the remark that the government has spent millions in Halifax.

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I take most decided exception to that statement. The expenditure was made as part and parcel of the railway system of the country and not specifically for the development of the port.

Mr. ROBB: My reading—

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I may add this: In my judgment you might just as well say that the money spent in Moncton in connection with the railway, or the money spent in Truro or anywhere else on the railways, is spent by the government for the development of those places. The money spent in Halifax was spent in order to enable the railways to handle the traffic of their roads. You might just as well argue that a clock without a pendulum is complete. A railway without terminals is not complete.

Mr. ROBB: I am not quarrelling with the statement that harbour development is necessary, but I say that we have spent that money under departments of government and it has not been very satisfactory. In the first place the location of the harbour at Halifax has not been satisfactory, according to shippers and the citizens themselves. And I am told that the same thing applies to St. John. Now, coming back to the observations of my hon. friend, as to having a commission to look after all ports: I am inclined to that point of view. I should be willing perhaps to go even further than my hon. friend and further than my colleague the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin). I think that all ports on the Atlantic—and maybe on the Pacific—should be put under one management and that they should all share in the receipts as well as the expenditures with a view to developing good ports. I may say that I am not quite satisfied even with this legislation. But my hon. friend wants to dip into the public treasury and take out the whole amount. Now, my experience has been that if you have a commission responsible for the interest on the money that goes into the port, you will get a better administration, because they will take care of the interest. But when the money is spent at Ottawa the interest charges are forgotten; no one worries about the interest except the Department of Finance who have to provide it. I say to my hon. friend therefore that his party has made a wide jump from last week, when it preached economy, to this week, when it is preaching a doctrine which looks to me like extravagance.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry the minister should have made that last observation. It is in the interests of economy that we have been trying all afternoon to strengthen the Quebec act. It is because the audit board, named by him, went there and made a report, which I read to the house this afternoon, that we have been endeavouring to prevent a recurrence of the condition that has prevailed in that port. It is our desire to have the spread between gross expenditures and revenues reduced from the amount reported by the board, and to have the accounts, the contracts and the expenditures sent to the public accounts committee for investigation. And the minister has been good enough to say that this will be done. It is because we believe in national economy rather than national extravagance that we urge that the ports of St. John and Halifax be nationalized by the expenditure of public money under proper control.

Mr. ROBB: We have had that all these years.

Mr. BENNETT: The people of St. John owned their own port without a commission, and it is only since 1913 that there has been a commission in Quebec. In Halifax there has never been a commission, and the Dominion government built there, in connection with the railway terminals, wharves which are a part of the railway expenditures, as the Minister of Finance knows. The minister urges economy: that was the very point I endeavoured to make when I said that we should vote a given sum per annum instead of $8,000,000 to the port of Quebec in the first instance, $5,000,000 to St. John, and some other sum to Halifax. Let this parliament vote the sums of money required for this year, that the accounts may be in the hands of the Receiver General, that the Auditor General may review them and that we may have a parliamentary inquiry to ascertain whether or not for each dollar of the money spent we have received one hundred cents in value. We urged this last week; we have urged it this week and we will urge it next week. We protest against the extravagance with which public moneys are being squandered in this country, and in the light of the expenditures which are being sanctioned it ill becomes the minister to say that because we are endeavouring to tighten up the safeguards and to protect the public exchequer we are therefore endeavouring to be extravagant with the public money. He had to admit the other day that there was no likelihood of interest being paid on the money lent to the Quebec harbour commission; I read the words of the audit board this afternoon, and if you impose tolls and charges for dock services in Halifax and St. John for the purpose of making a return on the money invested at from one-half per cent to one per cent more than it costs this country for money, you cannot hope to have those ports compete with other Atlantic seaboard ports. It is because of the Duncan report which has been adopted by this house and because of the desirability of making these ports free as far as it is possible to make ports free by reducing port and dock charges to a minimum that we urge that the government, which means the people of this country, should take over directly the administration of the ports through a statutory commission. The Duncan report did not specify a commission such as then existed at any given port. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries referred to what was said with respect to Montreal. The Duncan commission studied the operations of the port of Montreal, but as the minister has said, Montreal and Vancouver are exceptional ports. The commission urged the appointment of a statutory commission composed of experienced men. After investigating the situation, the commission recommended that these harbour boards be composed of experienced business men. It was because of that very recommendation that I directed attention the other day to that question in regard to these two ports.

Extravagance as against economy is what the minister is now embarking upon, and since the government now are voting a three-year program here, a sixteen-year program there and a five-year program somewhere else, the Minister of Finance cannot hope to have that economy of control which comes from voting money from year to year to meet the necessities of a given situation, after he had received the report of an expert to ascertain what should be done to make out a rounded program. Parliament exists for that purpose, and when we hand money over to another body parliament divests itself of its control unless it is specifically preserved. If we spend two or three days or two or three weeks on this matter and at the end secure recognition of the fact that this house shall have control over expenditure of public money, then the two or three days or weeks will be well spent. That is all I have to say to the Minister of Finance, and in our efforts to assist him in the conduct of his affairs in an economical and inextravagant manner we should receive his assistance and support instead of being misrepresented as to what we have said.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

SENATE BILLS—FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton) moved that the following bills from the senate be now read a first and second time and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills:

Bill No. 221, for the relief of Edward Bennett.

Bill No. 222, for the relief of Annie Amelia Eliza Ferguson.

Bill No. 223, for the relief of Laura Langstaff Dent Kemp.

Bill No. 224, for the relief of Helen McLean.

Bill No. 225, for the relief of Robert Pius Nageleisen.

Bill No. 226, for the relief of Elsie Irene O'Meara.

Bill No. 227, for the relief of Doris Read.

Bill No. 228, for the relief of Thomas Zeamond Toll.

Bill No. 229, for the relief of Katie Louise Turner.

Bill No. 230, for the relief of Samuel Radcliffe Weaver.

Bill No. 231, for the relief of Florence Elizabeth Mousley Monarque Westover.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is pursuant to the motion made by the Prime Minister the other day.

Motion agreed to and bills read the first and second time.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, April 26, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Sixth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONTRACT FOR TRANSPORTATION OF COAL

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. Were public tenders invited by the management of the Canadian National Railways for the freighting of coal to Prince Edward Island from the mainland during the years 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, and 1928?
2. From what persons or firms were tenders invited, if any?
3. Were specification and tender forms supplied? If so, what were the details?
4. If no forms were supplied, what were the particulars and conditions?
5. How many tenders were received in each year?
6. What is the name of each firm or person tendering and the unit prices of each tender?
7. Are "The Albion Lumber Company," "The New Glasgow Terminal Company" and "The Egerton Coal Company" three separate companies or are they names used by the same party for the purpose of tendering?
8. What are the names of the president, secretary and manager of the above-named companies who have corresponded with the railways officials or signed tenders during the above years?
9. What amount, if any, was the railways management paid for the cargo of coal lost in transit to Prince Edward Island four years ago this season?

Mr. DUNNING: These questions have to do with the freighting of Canadian National Railway coal by water from Pictou, on the mainland, to various railway points on Prince Edward Island. The questions are designed to bring out the prices submitted for the work referred to by numerous competitors during the last five years. The management feel that it would be unfair to all concerned to place competitors in possession of information of this kind, and hold that it is not in the public interest to give out information of that character.

Possibly it would be sufficient to say that the work in question was given wide publicity among vesselmen and forwarders on the island and adjacent shipping points, both by letter direct and by public notice by local agents of the railway; that numerous offers for the work were received, and that the lowest tenderer was given the contract.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. ALEXANDER BATES, LOUISBURG

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

1. What office or appointment does Alexander Bates of Louisburg, Nova Scotia, hold in the Department of National Revenue?
2. What is his age?
3. When was he appointed?
4. What remuneration does he receive annually?
5. Did the Civil Service Commission approve of his appointment?
6. What standing was he given by civil service examiners?
7. How many seizures has he made since his appointment?
8. What are the total fines collected through his seizures during each of the years 1925, 1926, and 1927?

Mr. EULER:

1. Customs Excise Examiner, Grade 1 Outport.
2. Fifty-four years on May 16th, 1927.
3. Employed February 8th, 1905. Services dispensed with for political partizanship, O.C. June 8th, 1912. Re-employed July 18th, 1925.
4. $1,440.
5. Yes.
6. He was the only successful candidate, obtaining a percentage on his examination, of 77.1.
7. Nil.
8. Answered by No. 7.

PAYMENTS UNDER DRYDOCKS SUBSIDIES ACT

Mr. COWAN:

1. What was the total amount paid by the Dominion of Canada in each of the years 1921 to 1927 inclusive, to dry docks under the Dry Docks Subsidies Act?
2. What amounts have been paid to each dry dock in Canada under the above act in each of the above years?
3. For what period of time in each subsidy is the government committed?
4. What is the number, name and location of dry docks classified under first, second and third class in Dry Docks Subsidies Act?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1.

CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. How many chartered banks are there now in Canada, and what are their names?

2. What bank mergers have taken place since 1900 in Canada?

3. What applications, if any, are pending at present for merger of banks?

4. Is the stock of chartered banks now being bought for American interests in such large aggregate amounts subject to the double liability where the foreign holders of the stock and their property and assets are outside the jurisdiction of the Canadian courts, and what steps are being taken to protect the Government accordingly?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. ROBB:

1. Eleven: Bank of Montreal, Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of Toronto, Banque Provinciale du Canada, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Royal Bank of Canada, Dominion Bank, Standard Bank of Canada, Banque Canadienne Nationale, Imperial Bank of Canada, Weyburn Security Bank.

2. Summerside Bank and Bank of New Brunswick, Commercial Bank of Windsor and Union Bank of Halifax, Halifax Banking Company and Canadian Bank of Commerce, Exchange Bank of Yarmouth and Bank of Montreal, People's Bank of Halifax and Bank of Montreal, Merchants Bank of Prince Edward Island and Canadian Bank of Commerce, People's Bank of New Brunswick and Bank of Montreal, Western Bank of Canada and Standard Bank of Canada, Northern Bank and Crown Bank of Canada under name of Northern Crown Bank, Union Bank of Halifax and Royal Bank of Canada, United Empire Bank of Canada and Union Bank of Canada, Eastern Townships Bank and Canadian Bank of Commerce, Traders Bank of Canada and Royal Bank of Canada, Bank of New Brunswick and Bank of Nova Scotia, Banque Internationale due Canada and Home Bank of Canada, Metropolitan Bank and Bank of Nova Scotia, Quebec Bank and Royal Bank of Canada, Northern Crown Bank and Royal Bank of Canada, Bank of British North America and Bank of Montreal, Bank of Ottawa and Bank of Nova Scotia, Merchants Bank of Canada and Bank of Montreal, Bank of Hamilton and Canadian Bank of Commerce, La Banque Nationale and Banque d'Hochelaga, Sterling Bank of Canada and Standard Bank of Canada, Molsons Bank and Bank of Montreal, Union Bank of Canada and Royal Bank of Canada.

3. None.

4. Section 125 of the Bank Act applies in case of insolvency to all shareholders. Enforcement depends upon the process of law. The provision is for the protection of the creditors of an insolvent bank whose interests, in the first instance, are the concern of the liquidators and the court.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE LINES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. FRASER:

1. Has the government sold to the British Columbia Telephone Company, the telephone lines owned and operated by the government, south of Kamloops, British Columia?

2. If so, at what price?

3. What is the total pole mileage of the lines involved in the transfer?

4. How many telephone stations are affected?

5. What has been the total cost of the property disposed of?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. Yes.

2. $50,000.

3. 1,006 miles.

4. 145.

5. As some of these lines were built thirty years ago it would take considerable time to compile data covering total cost to date and would in no way represent their present value. The main feature is that they were being operated at a $30,000 yearly loss which by selling is being saved. A very heavy expenditure would also have been absolutely necessary to standardize them so as to meet long distance toll line requirements.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

Mr. ROBINSON:

What sum would be required to pay 35 per cent of their deposits to all depositors of the Home Bank to whom the government has heretofore made payments?

Mr. ROBB: The government is securing certain data in relation to the whole matter of the distribution of relief under the Home Bank Creditors' Relief Act but has not before it the particular amount asked for in this inquiry.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington):

1. What was the Canadian production in each province during the calendar year 1927 of (a) butter, (b) cheese, (c) potatoes, (d) wheat?

2. What was the number and estimated value in each province in 1927 of (a) dairy cows, (b) other cattle?

3. What was the number and estimated value in each province in 1927 of (a) horses, (b) sheep, (c) hogs, (d) poultry?

GRAIN IN TERMINAL ELEVATORS

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. How many bushels of wheat were received in the private terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, Ontario, for each of the years 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, respectively, of (a) No. 1 wheat, (b) No. 2 wheat, and (c) No. 3 wheat?

2. How many bushels of wheat were shipped out of the said private terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, Ontario, for each of the years 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, respectively, of (a) No. 1 wheat, (b) No. 2 wheat, and (c) No. 3 wheat?

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. How many bushels of Kota wheat were received in the private terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, Ontario, for each of the years: 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, respectively?

2. How many bushels of Kota wheat were shipped as Kota wheat out of the said private terminals for each of the said years, respectively?

3. How many bushels of Durum wheat were received in the private terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, Ontario, for each of the years: 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, respectively?

4. How many bushels of Durum wheat were shipped as Durum wheat out of the said private terminals for each of the said years, respectively?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. Re Public terminals: What is the total amount of each grade of wheat received into the terminal elevators during the past crop season?

Re Private terminals: What is the total amount of each grade of wheat received into the terminal elevators during the past crop season?

2. Re Public terminals: What is the total amount of each grade of wheat shipped out during the same period?

Re Private terminals: What is the total amount of each grade of wheat shipped out during the same period?

3. What is the total number of bushels of grain dried at each inland terminal inspection point during the past season?

4. What is the total number of bushels of tough and damp grain, respectively, which was dried at the inland and terminal elevators during the months of September, October, November and December, 1927?

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): In regard to question No. 2 in reference to terminal elevators, which has just been passed as an order for return, I have no objection to that if it does not mean further delay. The question has been called during the last two weeks and it has been allowed to stand on every occasion. I simply wish to ask the minister whether the order for the return is ready or not.

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is no desire to have unnecessary delay with regard to this question, but it has been very costly and troublesome to procure all the answers for it. I can assure my hon. friend that the answers will be ready so that the return can be tabled to-morrow or Monday.

OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Yesterday the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) and the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) made certain inquiries regarding grants to the Olympic games and I promised them a reply to-day. Grants have been made towards the expenses of Canadian athletic teams competing at Olympic games as follows:

1920	Antwerp	$15,000
1924	Paris	25,000
1928	Amsterdam	26,000

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Payments have been made to the Olympic games committee. A cheque covering the grant of $26,000 for the 1928 games was paid to the treasurer of the Canadian Olympic committee on July 6, 1927. The grants are not accounted for to the government.

OUTBREAK OF RABIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. E. TUMMON (South Hastings): In view of the serious outbreak of rabies in certain parts of eastern and western Ontario which is causing considerable concern to many people in my constituency and in other constituencies as well, I should like to ask the government whether they would make a statement as to what effort has been made to check the disease, what is being done at the present time, and whether the government propose to comply with the suggestion of the Department of Health of the province of Ontario to place an embargo on dogs entering Canada from the United States?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): The first step we take where it is established that an outbreak of rabies has occurred, is to put the area concerned under quarantine. That was done two or three years ago in connection with the city of Ottawa and later with the city of Montreal. If conditions warrant in the parts referred to by my hon. friend, the same procedure will ensue if that action has not already been taken.

Mr. ARTHURS: That does not answer the latter part of the question of the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I presume that will come under the Department of Health. It has not come to my attention.

Mr. TUMMON: I directed my question to the government. The Minister of Agriculture answered, I presume, for his department. If the other question refers to the Department of Health, the Minister of Health is in his seat.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health): I should like my hon. friend to repeat the question relating to health. I did not catch it.

Mr. TUMMON: I asked whether the government proposed to comply with the suggestion of the Department of Health of the province of Ontario that an embargo be placed on dogs entering Canada from the United States.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That would have nothing to do with the Department of Health. The Department of Health of the United States might make a request to the government for an embargo.

Mr. ARTHURS: This is a very important subject for the consideration of the government, as it concerns not only health but indirectly the Department of Agriculture. The minister certainly has preconceived ideas regarding this report. He has not considered, I think—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman is an old member of the house and he knows very well that a debate cannot take place on the orders of the day. The hon. gentleman has put his question and the government are now fully advised of the purport of it.

Mr. ARTHURS: And they are not answering it.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): This question is being treated with great levity by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is an outbreak of rabies in this country; human life is threatened, and the house cannot get from the government an answer to a civil question as to what is being done to put a stop to that oubreak. That is the story.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I may say to my hon. friend that the question has been asked on the orders of the day, and I doubt very much whether any notice was given to the minister in advance by the hon. member who asked it. Had some notice been given I have not the slightest doubt that the minister would have been in a position to answer immediately. Certainly the government will look carefully into the situation and will be in a position to make a statement on the orders of the day to-morrow.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister would answer if a dog bit him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If a contagious malignant disease, like foot and mouth disease, broke out in the United States my deputy would automatically issue an order putting an embargo on animals subject to that disease coming in from the United States. I am not sure whether or not he has that authority with regard to rabies but if he has, an embargo would go on automatically. With regard to a quarantine, if the circumstances indicate that there is an outbreak of the disease, the chances are that there is a quarantine on now at the place, wherever it may be. That can be done without any reference to the minister.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the whole government so weak that they know nothing and have done nothing about this outbreak up to the present time?

Mr. DUNNING: Cheap.

Mr. BENNETT: Almost as cheap as the insult to the house by the minister.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, some two thousand years ago we are told there were seven sleepers. It seems to me that we have a somewhat similar situation to-day only the number has increased—there are about seventeen sleepers in this government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Let me ask this further question: Seeing that we have a Department of National Health, is the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) or the Minister of Health (Mr. King) not aware, in reference to the outbreak of rabies, that twenty-four people have been under treatment in the city of Kingston?

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Department of Health I would remind my hon. friend that this matter would undoubtedly come within the purview of the Ontario Health Department. If it is desirable that an embargo should be placed on dogs from other countries, representations made by the Health Department of Ontario or any other provincial department should be made to the federal Department of Agriculture, which controls this phase of the matter.

ATHABASKA ELECTION

QUESTION RESPECTING MEETINGS OF PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. F. KELLNER (Athabaska): I rise to a question of privilege in regard to inaccuracies that occur in some of the records of this house, and also in regard to the conduct of one of its standing committees. Looking over the votes and proceedings, one would be led to believe that the committee on privileges and elections had been called for Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Such is not the case. It was called on Tuesday, but has not been called since, and I think the necessary correction should be made in the records of the house. Further, when we met on Tuesday, we had before us two bills, Nos. 32 and 28, which were disposed of, and thereupon the chairman immediately advised the committee that the proceedings were ended, that we had concluded the business which was before the committee. The members of the committee did not accept that, and they proceeded to consider the report of Commissioner Clarke in the Athabaska case. It was pointed out that that matter was before the committee regularly, but my recollection is that the chairman stated that that matter had been passed on last year and was not regularly before the committee. If the house will refer to the discussion which took place on Friday when the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) brought this matter up, it will be seen that on that occasion the chairman of the committee, speaking on this matter, said that the committee would be called on Tuesday, and if there was not a quorum on that day, the committee would be summoned for every subsequent day during the week. I do not know what interpretation you would put on that, but I was wondering if the interpretation was that the committee would be summoned until a quorum was obtained, and not after. I submit that we should have that committee called, and notices of the meeting sent out in the regular way, and a real effort made to have the committee meet.

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): My hon. friend spoke from a long distance, and I am not sure that I caught quite clearly everything he said. I may tell him and the members of the committee that if the committee was not convened for to-day it was because copies of a report had to be prepared. The committee has been called for next Tuesday. The order was given by me to the clerk to have the committee called for Tuesday of next week, when all the papers will be available to members of the committee.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): I feel some dissatisfaction with the explanation given by the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. As a matter of fact, within an hour after the committee had closed its proceedings on Tuesday, I sent to the chairman twelve copies of the report of Mr. Justice Clarke, and so I do not see why there should be any delay due to the lack of copies of that report. It is now a month since this matter was debated in the House of Commons, on March 29th, and this house will probably sit for another month, and we shall require strict attention to the business before the house if we are going to get through and to do our business in a business-like fashion.

[Mr. Kellner.]

There is at least one other meeting of this committee required before we can proceed to the actual business of examining witnesses. We cannot proceed very well without witnesses, and I think it is very unfortunate that the call that was issued for meetings of the committee both yesterday and to-day was cancelled by the chairman, because a preliminary meeting is necessary before we can actually get down to business on the report and summon witnesses in connection with it. I think it would be better for everybody concerned if a little more enthusiasm was shown in the conduct of the business of this committee.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): This is a matter touching the privileges of this house, and I would think, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a question that can be put aside in just a light way. One of the standing committees of this house was appointed, and to that committee has been referred a definite item of business. An effort was made the other day to direct attention to the situation, and the chairman promised us that the committee would be called. A meeting was called, and then against the protest apparently of some members of the committee, it is not to meet again until next Tuesday, the meetings which were to have taken place on Wednesday and Thursday of this week having been cancelled. This committee, after all, is in the control of the house, and some steps should be taken to see that it functions in the manner in which it was intended that it should. I think the right hon. the Prime Minister will admit that any matter that touches the privileges of parliament and the conduct of public business, for which, not the Prime Minister personally, but the government as such is responsible, is worthy of being carefully considered, and every step should be taken to see that there is no deprivation of the privileges of members with respect to committees or otherwise. I feel quite sure that a word from the Prime Minister would result in the matter being put on a proper basis. If my hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Denis) has concluded that the duties of chairman are too onerous or too exacting, or if he does not desire to act, I am sure he would gladly arrange that his position be taken by someone who will see that the committee meets and discharges the business for which it was appointed.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I am glad to answer the statement made by the leader of the opposition, all the more so because it was clearer than the question that was put to me a while ago by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). The hon. member for Peace River said that twelve copies of the report which is to be submitted to the committee were sent to me, but he forgot to mention that there are twenty-nine members of that committee, and that twelve copies is not sufficient for twenty-nine members. Therefore copies have since been made. The committee was not convened yesterday nor to-day simply because the members composing it insisted that these copies should be printed or duplicated in some other way for distribution at the next meeting. Of course, the leader of the opposition was not conversant with this fact when he criticized the conduct of the chairman for not calling together the committee. Let me point out that there is no attempt at fencing or hedging. The committee will be called together next Tuesday, and all hon. members will be welcome to attend the meeting. The committee will proceed in the same manner as any other committee. I think this explanation should be satisfactory to the house.

RADIO—INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, on April 10 I put some questions on the order paper with reference to radio licenses, which were treated as an order for return. Sixteen days have since elapsed, and as the questions are very simple I see no reason why there should be any delay in bringing down the answers. I shall be glad to know if this information will be supplied at an early date.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I think, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be in a position to-morrow to satisfy my hon. friend. I am not quite sure, but I think the return has been prepared and sent to my office.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): May I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries when we may expect the correspondence to be tabled in reference to the same subject?

Mr. CARDIN: I think the correspondence will be tabled in a very short time.

BRITISH HIGH COMMISSIONER TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister any idea when the British High Commissioner to the Dominion, Sir William H. Clark, will arrive in Canada?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I understand that Sir William H. Clark will be coming to Canada very shortly, possibly next June, but I cannot say definitely, no final word having yet been received from him.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. E. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) if he had received any reports from the judges of the exchequer court regarding the claims of the Home bank depositors. Has he yet received such a report? If not, does he expect to receive it in time to take any action on it this session?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): If my hon. friend will refer to Hansard of the 24th instant, he will find there a statement that I made in reply to a question from the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). I shall be glad to furnish my hon. friend with a copy of the memorandum there referred to.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $8,500,000 TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the third reading of Bill No. 214, to provide for a loan to the Quebec harbour commissioners.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it was our purpose to move certain amendments to this bill on its third reading, but the undertakings given yesterday by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin)—which I take it may be regarded as governmental undertakings—are accepted as embodying the principle which we desired by sections to incorporate in the bill. In order that there may be no difficulty in the future in respect to the matter, I therefore direct the attention of the house to our purpose and to those undertakings.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

IMPROVEMENT AND BEAUTIFICATION OF OTTAWA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 218, to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927.

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that in respect to this bill the Prime Minister would have accepted the proposal of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to limit the period during which the annual payments are to be made to five years intead of fifteen. My chief objection to the bill is that this parliament, through a commission, is making commitments for fifteen years, which in the ordinary course of events will cover the lifetime of possibly three, if not four, parliaments. I think the principle is wrong, and I am surprised that it should be seriously proposed, especially after what the Prime Minister said in this house when in opposition and since he became head of the government. To give to a commission the expenditure of moneys over a period of fifteen years is to my mind preposterous, and to take away from future parliaments the right to say how that money shall be spent, I think is also preposterous. Therefore I move an amendment as follows, seconded by Mr. Manion:

That the bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend by striking out the word "fifteen" in line eighteen and substituting the word "five" therefor.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, in order that the house may be fully seized of the significance of the amendment, may I read that portion of the bill which it is proposed to amend? It reads as follows:

The minister is hereby authorized to pay out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada to the commission the sum of two hundred thousand dollars a year for a period not exceeding fifteen years from the first day of April, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight, to be expended by the commission for the purposes and subject to the provisions of this act.

As the bill was originally introduced the period was thirty years, but after listening to what was said by hon. members I agreed to amend the section by substituting fifteen years. In not accepting the further amendment of the leader of the opposition, that five years should be substituted for fifteen, I gave as the reason that this parliament at the last session did authorize the payment of $250,000 a year for sixteen years. That is the law as it stands to-day; the legislation actually in existence at the moment. The commission to-day is authorized by this parliament to receive $250,000 a year for sixteen years. Now, I have cut down from $250,000 to $200,000 the amount which this house proposes to authorize to the commission annually. I am actually proposing that the annual allowance shall be less than that to which the commission is at present entitled by way of an annual appropriation over a period of years. In those circumstances I regretted that I could not see my way to accepting the further amendment moved by the leader of the opposition, and once the house clearly understands, as it understood yesterday when it voted on the subamendment and defeated it in committee of the whole, that that law to-day does give to the commission—and it was given by hon. members on all sides at the last session—an appropriation of $250,000 for another fifteen years, while it is now proposed to give $200,000 for the same period, I hope the section will be allowed to stand as it is.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the commission suffer inconvenience if the amendment were passed?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say whether they would or would not. All I can say is that they have been operating this last year on the assumption that they would receive $250,000 a year, for maintenance and small local improvements, guaranteed over a period of sixteen years. I believe they have made provision with respect to the widening of driveways as well as in connection with other work to be undertaken which has to be planned years ahead if it is to be carried out successfully. This provision they have made in the expectation of the sum of $250,000 for that period of time, and I think we ought to stand by the legislation which parliament has already passed in that regard.

Broadly speaking, I agree with what is doubtless aimed at in the amendment and what in fact was stated by the leader of the opposition, that in making grants to public bodies it is well for parliament not to extend too far into the future the appropriations that are to be made annually. I would submit, however, with respect to a number of important matters which have been dealt with by this parliament in recent years, that the practice has been followed of making grants over a period of years. Grants made for technical education, for example, have been made over a period of ten years; grants made by hon. gentlemen opposite when in office, in aid of highway construction, were made for a period of ten years; grants made also for purposes of agricultural instruction over a period of ten years. May I say to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that in 1919, when his government were in office, they made a grant to this improvement commission for a period of ten years, which period was extended last year to sixteen years from 1927.

While, therefore, my hon. friend is perhaps rendering a helpful service in directing the attention of the house to the wisdom of controlling, possibly more fully than has been the practice in the past, appropriations made by parliament, I submit with regard to this particular amendment that in the light of the legislation already enacted, the section should be permitted to stand as it is.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): This particular bill is, I think, the one in which we endeavoured to apply, as something that should be observed generally in matters of this kind, the principle to which reference has been made. Personally I have held a very strong view for some considerable time as to the undesirability of any legislature or parliament tying the hands of succeeding legislatures or parliaments with respect to annual expenditures. That idea may or may not be sound, but I do not think that when matters of policy are affected —and matters of policy always are affected in relation to grants of public moneys—this parliament should tie the hands of two or three succeeding parliaments. Not denying that parliament has always the right to repeal legislation, I submit that it is undesirable to create vested rights with respect to legislation; and the undesirability of such a policy can never be more apparent than it is in this particular measure. Last year, it is true, this house enacted a measure which granted to the commission an annuity for a period of some thirty years

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Sixteen.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, sixteen, the grant being $250,000. If my memory serves me, the matter was not challenged. The government has now introduced legislation reducing that annual grant by $50,000, while the term of the grant is also reduced from thirty to fifteen years. As regards the reduction in the amount, that is something which must always be a matter of policy; and the government, with all the facts before it, has concluded that it is desirable to reduce the grant from a quarter of a million to $200,000 per annum. That is a matter with respect to which the government, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has said, accepts fullest responsibility in the light of information obtained and of the knowledge it has of the situation in question.

As to the term: the government has reduced the period of the grant from thirty to fifteen years. Our contention is merely that the very circumstances that have operated to induce the government to change its policy of last year and to reduce the grant from $250,000 to $200,000 may make it very essential for another body of men in another parliament to conclude that there should be a substantial change with respect to the whole matter. For instance, a very strong agitation is being carried on in this city, and the Prime Minister himself admitted, not without reason —and I too am sure it is not without cause— that by reason of the government of Canada, that is to say the people collectively, owning in Ottawa some $45,000,000 of property which is not taxable, there is imposed upon the citizens a burden which is not at all commensurate with their taxing power, and that with respect to the removal of snow, the cleaning of streets, the supplying of water of proper quality, a limitation is imposed upon the ability of the city to meet the situation for the reason that it cannot tax that forty millions odd of property. The Prime Minister referred to this matter the other day. Now, it well may be that this parliament will have to make a grant in lieu of taxes to enable the city of Ottawa not to overburden its own citizens too onerously with taxes in view of the fact that there is so much government property which is exempt. That also is a matter of policy. I submit therefore that we should not do anything whereby we may bind the hands of the next parliament in its attempt to deal with this question in any way it sees fit. Grant the commission $250,000, if you like, or $300,000 or $100,000; and possibly, by reason of the circumstances that have arisen, make a contribution in lieu of taxation that might be imposed on property of the government were it not exempt. This arises out of the clear distinction which must be made, and to which the Prime Minister directed attention, between Ottawa as a municipal organization and Ottawa as the capital of Canada. Because Ottawa is the capital of the citizens of all Canada, we make this a contribution towards the beautifying of the city and not for domestic municipal purposes. I cannot but think that the principle involved —the principle which the right hon. gentleman when in opposition always contended should be applied—is the soundest possible principle with respect to the expenditure of public money. No parliament should create a condition which leaves a succeeding parliament under the necessity of either repealing existing legislation with respect to which vested interests or rights may have arisen, or of carrying on regardless of the views of that succeeding parliament, simply because the preceding government has done what is being done in this case. The cases which have been referred to, with respect to technical education, highways and matters of that kind, in my judgment, stand in exactly the same position, unless there are very extraordinary conditions which can be submitted to parliament, and without those very extraordinary conditions, which might arise on questions touching the public debt and the necessity of liquidating it, one parliament should not say that in its wisdom it has placed upon its successors a burden which they must respect because of the interests which may have grown up under it. The power of parliament is always there, but that power cannot be always exercised efficiently because commitments may have been made and obligations created and these interests may be affected by reason of any attempt to repeal or amend such legislation.

As I say, it is with regret that one has to deal with this matter as a matter of principle with respect to this particular legislation, and I have endeavoured to assure the Prime Minister that it is because we believe a principle should be laid down which will be of very great value in this country at this time, when there is a tendency to entrust public moneys in large sums to commissions, that we are impelled by whatever sense of duty may actuate us in the discharge of our obligations here to move this amendment to the third reading of the bill.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on the main motion. It is my desire to have for the Canadian people beauty and culture. I believe that is the desire of every hon. member who sits in this house, but I do not believe that we should have splendor in the capital city while hardship exists in Canada in all too many places.

Ottawa is very well supplied with parks and driveways, and besides that it has a glorified farm not far away that serves as a park and a very beautiful one at that. If the plan as proposed by the government is carried out, the view of the parliament buildings from the driveway will be a slanting one; it will not be as good a view as could be obtained if Metcalfe street were very much widened and Wellington street were also widened. I do not think that a view from one corner would do the parliament buildings justice, because they are indeed very beautiful; and if we are going to have a driveway from which they are to be viewed by tourists and visitors, they should be viewed from the point of greatest vantage. I think that Ottawa needs very badly a good commercial hotel, a hotel which will offer to tourists and Canadians comfort and some beauty at prices they can afford to pay. I think it is true that the rank and file of the Canadian people cannot afford to stay at the Chateau Laurier. I have often noticed that the people who most frequently stay there are people who are in the enviable position of being able to pass their hotel bills on down the line.

The Canadian teachers go in parties to Washington almost every year; and I have often wondered why Canadian teachers did not come to Ottawa. It may be because they cannot afford to stay in any of the hotels in which they would desire to stay. I would say that for my own part, had I been planning this development, I would have liked to see a very good commercial hotel built on the site of the Russell house.

The Prime Minister in his very admirable speech referred to the beauty of the architecture of Greece and Rome. We all agree that their architecture is very beautiful. I have not had the privilege of seeing it but pictures lead me believe this is so. But it is known to all of us that that beauty was created by people burdened with debt and with labour. The building of some of the beautiful structures in rural England, referred to by the member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), falls into an entirely different class. In that case the people themselves decided to build a beautiful building and taxed themselves locally, and with their own hands created the beauty. That was an expression of the ideals of the people of the community. But in this case, the expenditure proposed will bear a close resemblance to that in ancient Rome and Greece, because here the people themselves have not expressed a willingness that this money shall be spent to beautify Ottawa. The people are quite remote from Ottawa, and the most of them will never see the beauty that is Ottawa. I think Ottawa as it is is a very beautiful city. It is true, I suppose, that as time goes on its beauty will be still further enhanced.

I am not so anxious that two or three hundred years hence we will be judged by the beauty of the capital city as I am that we will, with all the facts before us, feel that we are rendering a wise decision. What we think of ourselves is much more important, in my view, than what anyone else will think of us. We live now in a social age, and so I think possibly our age will be judged by a standard different from that of the civilization of the past; I would say that the average living conditions of the individual would be a good test to apply to our civilization.

The greatest piece of art in Canada is a Canadian child; and until all Canadian children have a pretty decent chance to make something worth while of themselves, I am not going to wax very enthusiastic about making an already beautiful place more beautiful still.

There is a very interesting report which was published just recently by the Department of Health, called Maternal Mortality in Canada. I hope all the hon. members in this chamber have read that report. It contains some amazing facts, such as that in the fifty-ninth year of confederation 1,532 Canadian mothers died in childbirth and left motherless 5,073 children. This comment is to be found on page 26:

If these homes had been in Denmark instead of in Canada, a thousand of the mothers would not have died.

On page 27 of the report a statement has been compiled to show that the letters of advice which came from doctors who signed the death certificates of these mothers attributed death in 68 cases to the poverty of the mother. She had to go through the trial and suffering of childbirth and was too poor to be relieved of those further sufferings of which she could have been relieved if she had had more money; and 120 died from exhaustion; they went to their deaths because they had not the vitality necessary; they were overworked and under-nourished. One hundred and forty-seven of these mothers had no doctor in attendance; and it was the opinion of the doctors who wrote the letters of advice that if they had had advice the lives of many of these mothers would have been saved.

The medical profession commenting some months ago upon this report said that they had no doubt at all that 50 per cent of all these mothers could have been saved if the necessary measures had been taken to save them. While that is true, then, I think our first great task is this one which I have outlined.

When I think of the over-burdened farm women, of whom I know some thousands, as you who are sitting here know some other thousands—women who are very much overworked and who break down in middle life because they are overworked—my conviction is that if we are to be well thought of by succeeding generations, our first task is to make things better for Canadian mothers.

Two years ago evidence was given before the industrial committee by a certain Ontario manufacturer who stated that the wages paid in the industries in a certain town amounted to fifteen dollars a week. The Bureau of Statistics states that $972 is the average wage paid for the whole of Canada for 1924. While these things are all true, I do not think we are justified in launching into any lavish expenditure for the beautification of an already beautiful city. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner):

That Bill No. 218 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to amend by striking out the words "three million dollars" in the ninth line of clause 9 and inserting therefor the words "one million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars".

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two on this particular question and to give the reason for my vote. I find myself in disagreement with my leader in this little group. My past experience in civic affairs is my guide in the action I take on this particular occasion. During my activities on the city council of Winnipeg, they at times went to the provincial government requesting certain grants for improvements which were more of a provincial than civic nature. Under those circumstances we were always able to obtain promises and grants as well from the provincial government of Manitoba for certain improvements in Winnipeg. If that were the case in Winnipeg and if I, as a member of the city council, could go to the provincial government and obtain grants from them for civic purposes, I cannot see how I could logically oppose a vote of this nature this afternoon, and consequently I supported the proposal of the government. I think most members of the house ought to support the government in a case of this character. We ought to have a certain amount of pride in the national capital of this Dominion and therefore we want to see a capital of such a character that we can have pride in it. Money that is spent by the government for beautifying Ottawa is money that is well spent. I quite agree with nearly all that the previous speaker has said on this question. I am in favour of beauty and of culture. When I am in favour of beautifying the city of Ottawa, I vote in accordance with what I think; that is, I vote for and not against the grant made to beautify the city.

Another question which was brought up this afternoon was that of the control of expenditures by parliament. I am quite in agreement that parliament should have full control of all expenditures made and I do not see that by voting this sum of money this afternoon for a period of sixteen years parliament divests itself of one bit of control of the money that is going to be spent in future years in Ottawa. Next year or any future year parliament can, if it so wishes, merely by a vote of the house, cut off its grant to the federal commission. If it so wishes it can also increase the grant which parliament has made for beautifying the city. To me the laying out of a fifteen-year project by the federal commission is equivalent to the erection of a fifteen-storey building. The plan for the whole building has to be drawn up before you start erecting it storey by storey. So when you draw up a fifteen year program for the city of Ottawa, the plans have to be laid out first so that you may know exactly what kind of a scheme you are going to go ahead with. Therefore I can see nothing wrong in the government asking parliament to accept such a plan.

Another question was raised by the leader of the opposition in reference to the exemption of taxation in this city. There is not in the Dominion of Canada a capital city that is not faced with exactly the same problem. In fact most cities in Canada to-day give large exemptions to corporations which are of a revenue-producing character. Parliament is not a revenue-producing institution; it exists purely for legislative and administrative purposes, and so the question of exempting from taxation the property of the government in either a national or provincial capital is on an entirely different basis from the question of exemption from taxation of commercial organizations. Therefore I do not think a city which is a national or provincial capital can expect to tax its government for any services it may receive from that city.

One statement, however, I should like to have had from the Prime Minister on this particular question and that is as regards the water supply of the city. I should like him to have assured the house that before any money is handed over under this legislation to the federal district commission, there would be an assurance from the civic authorities that they would take some definite steps, beyond speaking about the matter, to give to the people of Ottawa and the members who are compelled to come and reside here for several months of the year, a decent and ample supply of water. In this regard the Prime Minister might perform a good service not merely to the members but to the people of this city. This money ought not to be handed over to the commission until such assurances are given. As I said before, I am in full accord with the proposals looking to the beautification of Ottawa; but I think the first essential to any city is an ample and pure supply of water, and before this money is handed over I think the Prime Minister should make some announcement to the house on this particular question. The man or woman who is well off can buy water for drinking purposes, but the poor people of the city of Ottawa are compelled to drink the water that is being supplied to them at the present time. Some members of this house have claimed that the water supply here is not fit to bathe in, and I quite agree with that sentiment. I think the Prime Minister would be doing a good service if he took this question into consideration and got some definite announcement on the matter from the city government.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I did mention, when we were in committee, that I had discussed very fully with His Worship the Mayor the question of the water supply. I pointed out to him that I was perfectly sure that hon. members of this house would hesitate to vote any money for improvement purposes in the city unless they had the assurance that the city council was giving attention to the question of a pure water supply, and that they intended to deal with that matter speedily. The mayor assured me that the matter is before the city council or the board of control, and that they were hopeful that very shortly they would have a scheme evolved. I also said the other evening that if the government finds that the city does not co-operate as we hope it will, and as I know hon. members of this house expect it will, the government will move with due caution with respect to its part in the matter of co-operation.

This money is required to some extent immediately because, as hon. members know, the demolition of the buildings which have been destroyed by fire and of the property immediately adjacent cannot be postponed with advantage to anyone but with respect to other improvements I agree with my hon. friend from Winnipeg that the city ought to be given to understand that unless they do co-operate with this parliament in the matter in which we are all mutually interested, the government will ask the commission to take that fact into consideration in regard to any further allowances it may make. I might add that every expenditure made by the commission has to be authorized in the first instance by the governor in council, and speaking on behalf of the council, I would say that we will ourselves take cognizance of the city's action in this matter.

With regard to what my hon. friend the mover of the amendment (Miss Macphail) has just said, I would point out to her and to the house, that with respect to large, open spaces in the centre of cities, it is an experience the world over that those who benefit most in the end are those who, unfortunately, are in limited circumstances and who as a consequence are precluded from having the enjoyment of homes and grounds such as those more well-to-do are able to afford. Those people are unable very often to leave even their own tenements; they know nothing of a sojourn in the country over the week-end. They are the ones who perhaps more than any others derive the major benefit of the large parks in the great cities. At the rate at which development is taking place in Ottawa, I am confident that it will not be long before this city will become congested in the matter of population, and I do not hesitate to say that the ones who more than any others will appreciate what this parliament is doing to-day are the mothers of little children who will find it possible to enjoy advantages for their families in this way of which otherwise they would have been deprived.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the duty of the city, though.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are dealing with the capital.

The house divided on the amendment (Miss Macphail), which was negatived on the following division:

ST. JOHN HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $5,000,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

The house resumed from April 25 consideration in committee of Bill No. 216 to provide for a loan to the Saint John harbour commissioners—Mr. Cardin—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Interest during construction to be charged to capital account.

Mr. GARDINER: Up to the present time what public works have been turned over to the harbour board?

Mr. CARDIN: The wharves and other facilities constructed by the Public Works department have not yet been turned over to the harbour commission. After construction by the Public Works department these works are turned over to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for administration purposes, so they are now under the control of my department. They have been administered by the corporation since its inception. The cost of the works constructed by the Public Works department at Courtenay bay, including dredging in the bay, channel and breakwater in connection with the drydock, amounted to $9,603,266. On the piers, basins and channels and for dredging at West St. John there has been expended $11,697,393.27. These two amounts represent the expenditures made in the harbour of St. John through the agency of the Public Works department. We are taking over from the city of St. John for transfer to the harbour commissioners property amounting in value to $2,135,118. The harbour commission assumes the financial responsibilities of the city of St. John with respect to this property. It is taking over the bonded indebtedness amounting to $1,467,-164, and is to pay the balance of $667,953.04 to the city in the form of bonds. The bonded indebtedness to be taken over by the commission and the new bonds to be issued to the city are to be guaranteed by the government both as to principle and interest. This is provided for in the act incorporating the harbour commission.

Mr. GARDINER: In regard to the twenty-one million dollars odd worth of property to be turned over to the commission is the government going to charge it up to the commission or make a gift of it?

Mr. CARDIN: This will be handed over to the commission and we do not propose to make any claim in respect of interest on it. These expenditures have been made for several years past and we have never asked any interest, and they will be treated just the same now. This will be an asset to the commission; we do not intend to claim any interest.

Mr. SHORT: Was not that expenditure of $9,000,000 for Courtenay bay practically for terminals in connection with the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian National was not in existence then.

Mr. ARTHURS: We have here an expenditure of $21,000,000 on the harbour of St. John, made previously to the inauguration of the harbour commission. Yesterday we had an expenditure—the minister will correct me if I am wrong—of some $13,000,000 in connection with Quebec, on which the government has been asking interest for many years. Why this distinction? Why should there be an expenditure of $21,000,000 in St. John on which no interest is charged at all while Quebec is asked to account for $13,000,000 in connection with the harbour there?

Mr. CARDIN: The reason for attempting to collect interest on the $13,500,000 in Quebec is that this money has been advanced to the harbour there since the establishment of the commission as it exists at the present time.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am referring to amounts advanced prior to the establishment of the commission.

Mr. CARDIN: The hon. member is wrong in regard to the amount.

Mr. ARTHURS: But I am right in principle.

Mr. CARDIN: The amount advanced originally was between four and five millions. These expenditures were made in Quebec previous to 1913 through a commission different in character from the commission that has been in existence since that year. That is the reason we are charging interest, because the money was expended through the agency of a commision while in St. John the money has been spent through the Department of Public Works.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why charge Quebec with more responsibility than St. John?

Mr. CARDIN: I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend that the port of Queber should not be discriminated against but should be given the advantage of the money spent prior to the organization of the present commission, just as we are making practically a gift to the commission at St. John of the $21,000,000. The contention is worth considering, and in adjusting the accounts between the government and the commission I think the point should be considered in favour of the harbour at Quebec.

Mr. SHORT: The harbour of St. John is charged with $21,000,000 already expended Is that the idea?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. SHORT: And they will be charged 5 per cent on that expenditure?

Mr. CARDIN: No. As I have explained, these facilities which have been constructed through the expenditure of the $21,000,000 are to be handed over to the present commission without charge as a pure gift. This certainly will help them to obtain some return on the investment they propose to make if they are authorized to receive the loan of $5,000,000. Their liabilities will not be as great as those of Quebec.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How long has the St. John commission been operating?

Mr. CARDIN: It was incorporated last year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In view of the statement made by the minister yesterday, that he had in mind certain changes that might do away with these commissions, I would ask him whether it is reasonable to turn this over to a commission which he is likely to abolish next year.

Mr. CARDIN: I did not say that I proposed to abolish this commission.

Mr. CHAPLIN: No, but you—

Mr. CARDIN: I intend to study the question and to effect certain changes in the operation of these harbours. But I did not say that I was prepared at the moment to wipe out all these commissions. They may be remodelled, or their practice of accounting and making returns and reports may be changed; but I am not prepared to say that I will abolish them.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But you said yesterday that you might go so far as to abolish them.

Mr. CARDIN: I might; but if I do not go that length I want to make the provision we are asking for.

Mr. GARDINER: I did not understand the minister fully as to whether it is the intention to charge interest on this money.

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. GARDINER: I want to congratulate the minister on the method he is adopting in this transaction. I will merely observe at this point that, in studying the question of national harbours between now and next session, it would be well for the minister to put all harbours on the same basis, giving them all the same opportunities.

Mr. CARDIN: That is the idea.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. BENNETT: I understood the minister to say that we would treat this bill as we did the Quebec bill with respect to the suggestions as to the accounts.

Mr. CARDIN: Absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought that was clear.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

HALIFAX HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $500,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 217, to provide for a loan to the Halifax harbour commissioners.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I wish to record my emphatic protest against the passing of this bill, because it is not in accordance with the recommendations of the Duncan commission, which recommendations the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a year or more ago informed the house that the government was prepared to accept practically in their entirety. I have nothing further to say now except to protest against the bill as not being in accord with the recommendations of the Duncan commission.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I do not rise in opposition to the expenditure of this money at the port of Halifax, particularly in view of the large sums which are being expended in other ports of Canada. Let me say first that the remarks of my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston)—I am sorry he is not in his seat—have come to my notice, and when he named the commissioners who were appointed he spoke of prominent business men of Halifax, of some considerable standing there. When he indicates to this house that they are not strong partisans and politicians, however, I take exception to his statement. The chairman of that commission, Mr. Jack, I have known for a great many years, indeed, since boyhood; we have been neighbours; as a matter of fact there is a family connection between us. His father was a very strong partisan and a constant contributor to the Liberal organ of Nova Scotia, the Halifax Chronicle. Mr. Peter Jack is a very strong partisan and an ardent worker in the Liberal interests; he is a young man of ability and energy. Mr. Ackhurst, another of the commissioners, is also a very strong partisan who works in the interests of the Liberal party on every possible occasion. The third commissioner, Mr. Murphy, has been a Liberal candidate in the constituency of Halifax, but never has been successful. I know he ran in at least one election and I believe in two, and was defeated each time. He is a constant worker. So much for the political feelings of these gentlemen. They are not, as my hon. friend said, simply Liberals; they are very ardent, earnest and hard-working Liberals.

I maintain that the Duncan report is not being carried out in connection with this vote. In Halifax we have had a very satisfactory system of handling the business of that port; It has been looked after with a very considerable amount of intelligence, energy and enterprise. I am sorry I have not the figures here; I asked for them, but they have not as yet reached me. I can say, however, that as the result of the efforts of the business men of Halifax the business of that port has increased enormously in the past few years. The ship tonnage entering and clearing and the tonnage of the merchandise carried by ships coming and going have increased very considerably due to the energy and enterprise of the merchants of Halifax, and not to the appointment of any harbour commission. Halifax is situated very differently from any other port in this Dominion; it is the end of a system of railways extending across the entire country. I am repeating myself to some extent, I suppose, because I think I have touched upon these points before. But these terminals form part of the system of the Canadian National Railways. It is just as necessary for the railways of this country to have facilities with which to carry on their business as it is for any business concern to have the facilities necessary to operate successfully a private enterprise. For that reason these facilities have been under the management of the Canadian National Railways, and as far as my knowledge goes that situation has been very satisfactory to the shipping interests of that port. Therefore we do not wish to be hampered with any commissioners; we want to be free to have the Canadian National Railways carry on this terminal work as it has been carried on in the past, unhampered by any rules or regulations which may be formulated by a commission.

So far as I know what is to be done with this vote has not appeared as yet. There are many ways in which it could be spent and in which even more money could be spent, and I am sorry a larger sum has not been granted to us. For instance, the people of Halifax are very much interested now in a bridge across the Narrows. I believe the railways are also interested in it, because at present they are operating two terminals. One is in Dartmouth, where the traffic centres from what is called the Musquodoboit railway, which is really a branch line, probably the most profitable of all branch lines of the same length in the Dominion. That has been reported to me; I do not state it as an absolute fact, but apparently it is true. At all events, a very large business is done by that road, which has a terminal in Dartmouth, across the harbour, and the traffic coming to Dartmouth has to be transferred by truck or lighter or in some other way across the harbour. This applies also to traffic coming to Halifax for Dartmouth; it has to be transported, at considerable expense, by lighter or by truck. If a railway bridge were constructed between these points where traffic centres, I think the saving would be very large not only to the owners of the goods passing to and fro but to the railways as well. That is an expenditure that I would like very much to have seen provided for, at least to some extent, in the estimates.

I have pointed out the peculiar situation in connection with these terminals in that they are a part and parcel of a railway system extending over the whole Dominion and are absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the business of that road. They were built and paid for by the railway department, and operated by it, I believe, economically and satisfactorily to the shipping interests and the public generally in Halifax. For some reason they are turned over to the Public Works department—how much of them I know not, whether the wharfs only, the wharfs and elevator, the station and local freight shed there, or the whole thing. But whatever has been turned over to the Public Works, it is proposed now that a commission shall take charge of the entire business—a commission unacquainted with the port and with the local traffic handled by that road. Just why these terminals should be turned over to the Public Works department, any more than the freight shed at any station along the road would be, is something I have not yet had explained or learned the reason for.

The traffic of the port was being carried on in a very satisfactory manner up to the time of the appointment of that commission. The commission, I believe, has not yet taken charge. I suppose up to the present they have been studying the situation; in any case they have made no drastic changes in the management. If there are to be charges imposed on the shipping of the port to satisfy the expenses of that commission, I for one, and the whole shipping interests and I believe the people of Halifax generally, will protest against any such tax upon the shipping of the port of Halifax. We have the credit of operating there very economically; it is perhaps the most economically managed port on the Atlantic coast, and we do not want that reputation destroyed or interfered with by any taxes upon shipping that may be imposed by this commission. Futhermore, any such tax is at present absorbed by the railway in their freight charges; that is, the freight rate covers any terminal charges there may be in connection with the traffic of that port. If the terminal charges are transferred to the shipping, then the railway benefits to that extent, and that is a situation we certainly do not want to see arise in the port of Halifax.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to say a few words, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the subject now before the committee. I was interested in the remarks made by the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) and in the criticism he levelled against the personnel of this commission. I took occasion the other night to express my own opinion of the personnel of the commission, to give to the house something as to the past record of these gentlemen in the business and civic life of Halifax, and to back that up by a resolution from the Halifax board of trade commending myself and the government on the selection of these commissioners, and assuring them of the board's assistance and co-operation. I do not think I ought to have to say more than that. It is down in Nova Scotia, at least, a novel and startling idea that a man is disqualified from accepting a position of this kind simply because he happens to be the adherent of a particular political party.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point; it is the other qualifications.

Mr. RALSTON: I have tried to make it clear what the other qualifications are, and have put on record the resolution of the board of trade.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is it desirable to have all the members of a commission of one particular party?

Mr. RALSTON: It seemed to be on the commission of which my hon. friend from Fort William (Mr. Manion) was a member.

Mr. ARTHURS: He did not stay there, either.

Mr. RALSTON: No, but his place was taken by another who possesses the same characteristic as that spoken of by the hon. senior member for Halifax. The gentleman appointed to that commission was the one who has just resigned his position in this house, Sir Henry Drayton.

I also am a little surprised to hear the hon. senior member for Halifax suggest that the fact that a man belongs to a political party is a disqualification for a position, because I happen to remember that in the constituency of Halifax, at the last election, when I presume my hon. friend had the right to recommend, the returning officer, who is supposed to be a judicial officer, and who for years was the sheriff of the county, was displaced and the gentleman put in his place was the defeated candidate of my hon. friend's party in 1921. I should have thought that was a position in which political partisanship would not have had a part; but that was done in the very city of Halifax in which it is now suggested that adherence to a political party precludes a man from taking a position. I do not think I need take more time than to say that these gentlemen have been widely commended as having ability for the task which they have been given.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): They are only given a half a million anyway.

Mr. RALSTON: And I remember that the same party which now protests about political partisanship dismissed from office two gentlemen well and favourably known in Nova Scotia, Mr. Macdonald and Professor Rogers, efficient and qualified secretaries of the Duncan commission, because it was thought that they might have some political leanings. So that I do not think my hon. friends can claim to be so simon pure as would be suggested.

The point was raised by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) and the hon. senior member for Halifax that this legislation is not carrying out the Duncan report. That is the suggestion on the one hand; and the suggestion of the hon. senior member for Halifax, on the other hand, was that he did not want the report of the commission carried out, because he did not want the commission anyhow. I have telegrams from all over Nova Scotia asking that the Duncan commission report be carried out in every respect.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I repeat that the appointment of the commission for the port of Halifax is not carrying out the Duncan report. The Duncan commission's report called for the nationalization of the harbour which is not being done.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is suggesting that the Duncan report should not be carried out at all. The Duncan commission recommends that there shall be a statutory commission for the port of Halifax. My hon. friend (Mr. Black) is not in favour of that, notwithstanding the fact that no doubt he with hundreds of others in Nova Scotia, including representatives of boards of trade throughout the province, called on the government to implement in full the recommendations of the Duncan report. I will deal in a minute with the question which my hon. friend raises. How are we going to find out what the Duncan report means with regard to a harbour commission? The quickest way to do that would be to read the report, and my hon. friend cannot find in it one line which suggests this nebulous word "nationalization" of a port. The word is never used in the report with regard to harbour commissions. The report is made by a commission one of whom is a barrister and understands something about the English language, while another was a judge. This is the wording used in the recommendations in respect of the harbours:

> We recommend that in respect of each of these two harbours the federal government should establish a statutory harbour commission, whose business it would be to see that the port facilities are developed on such a scale as will gradually—but by no means slowly—create channels through which trade can expand both winter and summer, The development of a port is as much a matter of mechanical and technical equipment, business organization and practical administration as is the development of any extensive manufacturing or industrial business.

That is the definite recommendation of the report. Again near the end of the report they state that they have been in communication with and have had a private session with—whom? With somebody who wants to put into effect new ideas about port development that have not been heard of before in Canada? No; that they have been in communication with the Montreal harbour commission, which has been established for some years; and they say after going over the operations at Montreal:

We are confirmed in our view as to what harbour commissions, (constituted of business and experienced persons) at Halifax and St. St. John could do in stimulating the trade of the maritime provinces.

And again, immediately after the reference to Montreal, they say this:

We express the hope that the recommendation we make with regard to a public commission for each of these two ports will not only be accepted but will be acted upon promptly.

The leader of the opposition the other night pointed out that something was said about railways in this part of the report. If my hon. friend will read the section carefully, he will find—and I say this with all deference—that it does not mean just exactly what he thought it did. This is what they say in the report:

We believe it is in the public interest of Canada, and in the interest of the future growth and expansion of its activities, that its Atlantic ports should be developed, just as it has been—

That means just as it has been in the interest of Canada.

—that its railways and canals should be developed—though development of these has naturally come first.

My hon. friend thought it meant that harbours should be developed just as the railways and canals have been developed. That is not what it says. It says that it is in the interest of Canada the Atlantic ports should be developed just as it has been in the interest of Canada that its railways and canals should be developed. Where did the idea of a statutory commission come from? When the evidence was given, were they talking about what my hon. friend referred to a few minutes ago? Let me read some of the evidence given by Mr. Cornell, the expert called before the commission by the board of trade of the city of Halifax. Mr. Cornell, as reported on page 776 of the evidence, says this:

Probably the quickest way to bring this to the attention of the commission would be to glance through the annual reports of the harbour commissions of Quebec, Montreal and Vancouver, and you will find in reading their reports that the minds of the commissioners are centred principally on the two things: Port development and solicitation of traffic; and inevitably they make a great deal of the improvement in the quantity of traffic moving through the port each year.

[Mr. Ralston.]

That is where harbour commissions are established of the kind mentioned in these bills.

We have no objection to their solicitation of traffic, and believe that they are acting wisely as trustees for that property, which belongs to the Dominion government; but we do claim, as I stated before that a similar body should be constituted—

Note the words "similar body".

—for the port of Halifax and not with any idea of taking traffic away from Montreal or any other port, but rather in the hope that it will at least offset the competition of these other ports which are being developed by the aid of government money.

I am further instructed, Mr. Chairman, to place the board of trade on record that should you see fit to recommend that such an organization for the proper development of this port and the solicitation of traffic through this port be created, the endeavours of the organization to build up the port at Halfax will receive the utmost support of the Halifax Board of Trade.

It is as a result of those representations that the commission recommended what it did. Let me go a step further. My hon. friends seem to think that, a statutory commission having been appointed in accordance with the recommendation of the Duncan report, that is not enough. A statutory commission involves of course the financial arrangements which are generally made with regard to harbour commissions. Can anybody believe that if those gentlemen of the Duncan commission had intended the harbour commissions to be established at St. John and Halifax to be something totally different from those established at Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver, they would not have had the clearness of expression to say so? Does anybody think we would have to read whole paragraphs in order to endeavour to deduce something that was not in the words themselves? Those gentlemen, in submitting their recommendations, expressed themselves plainly and clearly. They say: Having considered the harbour commission of Montreal, we recommend statutory commissions, and we say that having regard to the experience of Montreal those statutory commissions will benefit Halifax and St. John. I take issue with anybody who says that the government is not carrying out to the full the recommendations of the Duncan report when it establishes the harbour commissions as they are being established by these measures.

Mr. MacNUTT: Why did the people of Halifax, irrespective of party, oppose this commission for fully a year or more?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend's question is based on a wrong assumption. A portion of the people of Halifax worried over the appointment of the commission. The city council were divided ten to five, I think, but that is not all the people of Halifax by any means. I think the people were a little fearful, as the hon. senior member for Halifax has said, that there might be results seriously detrimental to the port. I felt that the only thing the government could do after receiving all representations was the bold and courageous thing, namely, to go ahead and carry out the recommendations of the Duncan commission. We have already done that and what we are trying to do now is to provide the financial arrangements in connection with the matter.

What is the benefit of a commission? It is to do away with the idea that the hon. senior member for Halifax suggested, namely, that this whole port is going to be run by the railways. I say that advisedly. My hon. friend says that the development that was made there was made by the railway authorities. We have there railway interests, steamship interests, city interests and commercial interests, and the harbour commission is a trustee for all those interests, so to administer the port that all interests are served; that primarily there is a continuous program of development instead of having one day the board of trade suggest something, another day the railways, another day the city council and another day the people on the waterfront. The harbour commission will co-ordinate the efforts and ideas of all these interests down there in order to see that there is some continuity of administration. That is the benefit that is being received in the other ports of the Dominion and the whole question after all is one of financing.

It has been suggested that these two harbour commissions should be made advances in some different way from that adopted in the case of other harbour commissions in the Dominion of Canada. Let me remind the committee that when my hon. friend the leader of the opposition uses the words "imposing a burden" on the port of Halifax or the port of St. John, I am afraid he has not regard for the history of harbour commissions all over this country. No greater burden is intended to be imposed on these ports having regard to the service provided. The government, it seems to me, would be committing suicide and defeating the very object for which these commissions are appointed if they did something which would impose the port charges which would hurt the business of the port.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is what you are doing.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend, may I say with all respect, does not understand the constitution or the working of a harbour commission.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think I do.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. There is no suggestion in this bill that there shall be any increase in the port charges.

Mr. BENNETT: Who said there was?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend the member for Pictou just a moment ago said, "That is what you are doing," and I thought that is what he meant.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. RALSTON: I have no doubt that that is what he meant.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what he said.

Mr. RALSTON: What I am arguing is that there is no suggestion in this bill at all about increasing the charges.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course there is not.

Mr. RALSTON: I am glad to have that admission, because my hon. friend is the one who spoke so frequently of imposing a burden on the port.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that as the interest charges are increased, the burden on the port is increased if the charges are earned.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has made speeches to the effect that the interest charges should not be paid by the port. That is exactly the point he has taken, and he has also taken the position that the interest charges already incurred by these commissions should not be paid. That is the position he took yesterday. Only a few days ago it was a somewhat different position, when he was suggesting that these ports ought to be established on a business basis, and that there should be an issue of bonds to represent the old indebtedness, so that these amounts would have to be paid.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I said at all. Just turn it up in Hansard.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can turn it up. My hon. friend's statement, and I am within the judgment of this house and of Hansard, was to the effect that there should be an issue of bonds to take care of and to cover the previous deficits, if we may call them that, and to put the port on a business basis.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not so.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre dealt with the matter also, and stated that these things should be put on a business basis, and that we should see that these harbours could earn interest on the money advanced. That is not the history of port development in Canada. The history of port development in Canada is this: What the government has done has been to receive the reports of the harbour commissioners who have been administering the ports, to examine in detail what their proposals are, and to give them, by bill, the money necessary to the carrying out of these projects for the benefit of the port; and then to ask them so far as possible to pay interest on the money advanced. But no government has ever been foolish enough to ask them to increase the tolls beyond the point which the traffic will bear or in any way to stifle or impair the business of the port. No government would be foolish enough to do that, and my hon. friend need have no fear whatever on that ground. The point is, just as in the case of the railways, that the tolls chargeable in connection with the harbour dues and port business generally are what the traffic will reasonably bear, and any government or any commission which goes beyond that and attempts to impose tolls which are too high having regard to the purpose for which the harbour is being used and the service afforded, will defeat the very objects for which the commission is established, just as the railway will defeat its object if it imposes too high charges, because it means that the traffic will not be forthcoming. That has been the history of harbour commissions up to the present.

What has been done is that the harbour commissions which have received advances have issued their bonds and have turned them over to the federal government. Those bonds represent the advances which have been made. That is, I think—and I am not prepared at this date to say it is wrong—a good way to ensure careful and prudent administration, in order that you may segregate the amount of money which has been actually advanced to the commission, in order that they may know how much money is coming from the federal treasury, and in order that the federal system of bookkeeping may be such that there will be no difficulty whatever in ear-marking particular funds going to the development of that port. Further than that this government has not gone, and further than that previous governments did not go. All they have done is to see to it that the tolls imposed have been fair.

[Mr. Bennett.]

May I say one thing further? It requires the initiative of the harbour commission to fix tolls in connection with port dues and harbour charges. The commission must first recommend that the government increase the tolls. All the governmet can do is to approve or disapprove; and if the government propose to change them they have to go back to the harbour commission, and the harbour commission must concur. We can scarcely imagine men who are residents of the city of Halifax, and who have the stake in the city which I have mentioned, needlessly or improperly endeavouring to impose on shipping using the port tolls which that shipping should not bear. If the revenue from tolls fairly chargeable is not sufficient then other means will have to be found to provide the necessary money. The harbour commission may say, "We cannot pay the interest;" and I have never heard of any foreclosure proceedings against a harbour because interest has not been paid; but the issuing of these bonds has been found convenient to earmark and segregate the money which has been advanced.

So far as the financing is concerned, I think we are talking about a distinction without a difference. It seems to me that with the assurance given by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with regard to accounting and audit, there is very little difference between one system and the other, except that under the system which now prevails you have an actual piece of paper issued by the harbour commission and handed over to the treasury in order that there may be a definite indication of exactly how much money has been received by the port and what expenditures have been made there by the Dominion.

The other night my hon. friend the leader of the opposition referred to the free port of Hamburg, and he suggested that the tolls at that port and at the port of London were very low because of competition. I do not expect to live long enough to see the port charges of Halifax as high as those of the free port of Hamburg. I have obtained a list of these charges, with the Canadian equivalent of the German currency, but I will not take the trouble to read the figures. I will content myself by giving the committee a description of the various dues and other charges: Quay dues on vessels, quay dues on cargo, harbour dues, delivery charges, acceptance charges, storage charges, weighing dues, crane dues, clearance fee, warehouse charges, dock labourers' wages and stevedoring. All of these tolls are charged at the port of Hamburg which has been so often referred to as a free port. I thought my hon. friend said the other night, but I see by Hansard that I was mistaken, that this port ought to be like Hamburg—a free port. My hon. friend knows, and I presume this committee knows, that the sense in which Hamburg is a "free" port is that a certain portion of the harbour is segregated from the rest and constitutes a sort of bonded warehouse where men may hold and store their goods and sell them without paying any duty unless they are sent into Germany. Speaking from the point of view of Halifax alone, I think it would be a very fine thing if we could have such an arrangement, but I seriously question whether it would be so regarded by the manufacturers of Canada who support my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: They support the hon. gentleman.

Mr. RALSTON: I think there would be very strong objection against any suggestion that the port of Halifax or any other Canadian port be made a "free" port like Hamburg.

Fears have been expressed with respect to what may happen at the port of Halifax. The fact that only a small amount of money is being asked for this year is to me a matter of satisfaction, for it shows that the harbour commission is going slow; they are making a thorough study of the situation in an endeavour to find out what facilities can best be improved, and are determined not to ask for further advances until they know how the money should be spent to the best advantage. That is the view they have taken after a thorough investigation, and I think it will commend itself to this committee.

I do not believe there is a single port in Canada where the suggestion would be accepted to go back to the old system. We find that every port under a commission has increased its business. With all due deference to the agencies which have been at work in the port of Halifax in times past—I do not disparage their work in the slightest—I think the time has come not simply for the city of Halifax, not simply for the province of Nova Scotia, but for the benefit of the Dominion itself to take a courageous and a long view, and—if my hon. friend thinks of it in that way—to take some risks; but I do not believe there are any. In my view we should see that the two essentials emphasized by Mr. Cornell are present in the administration by the harbour commission: first, to do their utmost to provide the port with ample facilities for the business which may come to it, developed from year to year along the lines of a well-considered program; and, secondly, to do their utmost to solicit business for the port, to bring together the man who has the goods and the man who has the ships and encourage them in the habit of trading in and out of that magnificent harbour. That is the future job of the harbour commission which has been appointed. I believe the prospects are bright, notwithstanding the fears which have been expressed by my hon. friends opposite. I join with all they have said in hoping that the charges in connection with the port will be just as low as possible. I do believe that the harbour commissioners are level-headed, sound and cautious, and at the same time courageous, and that they will endeavour to do their very utmost for the benefit of the port. If they do adjust charges, I am confident that that adjustment will be made along sound lines. In short, Mr. Chairman, I am certain that no one in this house will have reason to complain that the facilities or the business of the port have been injured by the appointment of the commission or by the legislation which has been passed, but that on the contrary my hope is that there will be a distinct advancement in keeping with the great natural advantages and the national importance of the port of Halifax.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): If I understand rightly, tolls which at present are not in force, are to be levied on shipping?

Mr. RALSTON: No one has suggested that.

Mr. CANTLEY: What did you say? You said that, surely.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I understood the minister to say distinctly that the creation of the harbour commission of Halifax would not impose any additional burden on shipping or the trade of the port that did not previously exist. That is his statement as I understood it.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will find my statement in Hansard.

Mr. CANTLEY: You made your statement a short time ago, and should be able to remember what you said. If that is not it, you will be good enough to deny it now.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend remembers what I said.

Mr. CANTLEY: And I have stated it. I want the hon. minister to say if the statement is not correct, as I understand it. Up to the present time all freight arriving at the port of Halifax in steamers or otherwise coming to the docks pays no toll. The toll, as has already been explained by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) is absorbed by the railway on both inward and outward freight. That has been the practice for many years, going back further than either the minister or I can remember. Will that condition prevail in the future? The minister certainly knows that it will not. All traffic entering the port of Halifax and departing therefrom will have to pay tolls. What tolls are paid now by steamers entering the port? Pilotage is paid, a contribution to the sick mariners' fund is paid, but no wharfage, side or top.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would you be good enough to show me?

Mr. RALSTON: Side wharfage is paid.

Mr. CANTLEY: Not where freight is delivered to the Canadian National Railway. How are you going to make these interest payments? The proposal of the government is not what the people of the maritime provinces, and particularly the people of Halifax, understood it to be. The minister quoted what the Duncan commission recommended. Take the port of Montreal: forty-six million dollars or more was expended on work in connection with that port before the Montreal harbour commission was organized. Millions were expended in the port of Quebec before 1913, absorbed entirely by the Dominion of Canada as a whole; and when that was done a commission was appointed.

Mr. VENIOT: Not at all.

Mr. CANTLEY: Oh yes; that is the fact. Now what we had a right to expect was, in the language of the report, that the port of Halifax should be developed as the Canadian canal system has been developed at a cost of $200,000,000 and more to the country, and operated absolutely free from any toll. Halifax is a great national port—the greatest national port in the Dominion, as was amply demonstrated during the war.

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to canals, wharfage charges are made.

Mr. CANTLEY: I said nothing about wharfage charges on canals. I said that they were operated entirely free to shipping passing through them.

Mr. VENIOT: If they go to the wharves they have to pay tolls.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not going to be put off with anything like that. The canals are operated free.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: Where does the Welland canal exact tolls in connection with wharves?

Mr. RALSTON: Is my hon. friend opposed to the appointment of a commission?

Mr. CANTLEY: I am opposed to appointing a commission such as you are appointing, operating as you propose to have it operated. I want a commission, if a commission is appointed—

Mr. RALSTON: You don't want a commission at all.

Mr. CANTLEY: Hold your horses. If the harbours were developed as it was proposed by the Duncan commission they should be developed, then they might well be under the control of a commission and administered free of dock and wharfage rates and tolls as the canals are administered.

Mr. RALSTON: Are the railways administered free? They are joined in the report, you know.

Mr. CANTLEY: You will not get me into a hole of that kind. We are not discussing railways. We want a harbour in Halifax administered as the canal system is administered.

Mr. VENIOT: The Duncan report says "railways and canals".

Mr. CANTLEY: It makes no difference what you say the report says. I know what the people of the maritime provinces understood the Duncan commission to recommend. The harbour was to be developed and extended as the canal system has been developed and extended. I am speaking at the moment and hon. gentlemen can speak when I am through. It is now six o'clock and I will reserve the rest of what I have to say until we resume.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CANTLEY: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was dealing with the statement which has been made by the hon. the Minister of National Defence that this bill imposes no additional burden upon the trade of the port. I do not think there is any question at all as to the facts of the matter; they are that the commission has power to set such rates as they choose by by-law, they have power to pass by-laws and regulations in regard to rates. In the general act regarding the rates to be charged on the government piers throughout the whole Dominion there appears a schedule of rates, but section 3 of that act provides:

> Nothing in this act shall apply to the harbours of Toronto, Quebec, Montreal, Halifax, Pictou, or St. John, these harbours were specifically exempt from tolls.

In that connection I might say that at one time the port of Pictou was under a commission; I was a commissioner for some years on two separate occasions. The scale of fees necessary to keep the port developments in proper working order and to maintain wharves and docks was so high that trade was discouraged, and the income was not sufficient to keep up the machinery of the port. So it was decided to do away with the harbour commission, which was done on the recommendation of the commissioners themselves, as the older members of the house will no doubt remember.

Until this commission was created at Halifax the harbour dues as far as docks were concerned were absorbed by the railway; local shipments coming from the West Indies, for example and going into warehouse in the city had to pay top wharfage or side wharfage, because that material did not go over the railway. For this reason the city of Halifax, as far as its private business was concerned, did not participate in the relief afforded incoming and outgoing freight at that port. I should like to point out that Halifax harbour is the largest, the safest and the most important on the entire Atlantic coasts of this continent; as far as area is concerned, as far as safety of approach, depth of water, lighting and everything pertaining to a great harbour are concerned, Halifax has no equal on the Atlantic coast. It should be, and by nature is destined to be, the great gateway of this country of Canada. That was amply demonstrated during the war, and as I pointed out before, the difficulty in this country, and I suppose in all countries, is that as soon as the war is over we forget what our necessities were in connection with the war and minimize the importance of what is most vital to the material interests and safety of the country.

As I attempted to show before six o'clock, there is no question in my mind as to what the Duncan commission had in view and intended to express. I spent practically all one night with Sir Andrew Rae Duncan in the Halifax hotel before the report was completed, and a large portion of that time was devoted to the question of the position of the port of Halifax and how it should be developed and administered. I would not say I am more qualified than any other man to say what was in the mind of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan in connection with this matter, but I think I am justified in stating that I know what was then his opinion and what it was he at least intended to recommend. He intended that the ports of Halifax and St. John should be developed at the national expense. I am not speaking for St. John at the moment, because except in a general way I know nothing about that port, but so far as Halifax is concerned the view taken by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan was that it should be developed at the national expense, just as the canal system of this country was developed and as the St. Lawrence waterway immediately adjacent to the ports of Quebec and Montreal were developed.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not interrupt the minister, and I am not going to be interrupted now, if he will excuse me. We spent $47,000,000 on one portion of the St. Lawrence waterway before it was turned over to the commission, and all we ask is that one tithe of that amount be spent in the development of the port of Halifax. Then you can turn it over to the commission under the terms specified by the Duncan commission, namely for the purely administrative work which it was intended to do. If we look at the schedule attached to the bill to which I have already referred we see that if those rates were put in effect our friends from Annapolis would pay three cents on every barrel of apples shipped abroad from Halifax. That is only one item, but that item might run into say thirty thousand dollars per year to be paid by the apple growers of the Annapolis Valley. The schedule extends to scores of items.

The minister made some reference to the port of Hamburg, and to a large extent he was quite correct. Hamburg is not a free port from the point of view of its being free from harbour dues. Hamburg is as we know one of the finest ports in Europe. I am fairly familiar with what the free port of Hamburg means; I have seen it and have spent some time in the free area. The minister has intimated that perhaps no man on this side of the house would be in favour of a free port at Halifax. I would. What does the "free port of Hamburg" mean? Simply this, that a very considerable area within the port comprises a free zone into which I can take my vessel and warehouse the cargo for a considerable time. I can bring other cargoes there from other parts of the world; I can reassort those cargoes and after thus reassorting goods from my own and other cargoes, all warehoused within the free area, make up a cargo for any port in the world, having the advantage of a warehouse where no duty is paid and from which I can reship those reassembled cargoes in various parcels. A free port of that kind would be of very great advantage to the port of Halifax and to the maritimes—indeed to all of eastern Canada.

There is another phase of the free port of Hamburg, namely that goods can be taken into that port and be there reassembled and remanufactured. I am free to say that the manufacturing phase of the free port of Hamburg has not developed to the extent that was expected, and from that point of view it is not the success hoped for; but a considerable amount of remanufacturing is done in the free zone. At Halifax, for example, our automobile trade could bring together parts from this country, from the United States or anywhere else, reassemble those parts in the free zone and export them wherever they pleased. Those are outstanding features of a free port, and such a free port in Halifax, therefore, I submit would be of considerable advantage not only to Nova Scotia but to the whole of Canada. It would be impossible to establish it on the St. Lawrence, due to the impossibility of winter navigation. Now I would like to point out to the house on what we base—

Mr. VENIOT: Before my hon. friend leaves that, would he favour the port of Halifax as a free port for coal?

Mr. CANTLEY: There is no meaning in the phrase "a free port for coal."

Mr. VENIOT: Why?

Mr. RALSTON: Does it not mean that American coal can go in and be reshipped without duty?

Mr. CANTLEY: Are you going to manufacture it in the free zone? With all deference to the minister, I say there is nothing in the suggestion of a free port for coal, unless you are bringing that coal into the free zone.

Mr. RALSTON: That is what we are talking about.

Mr. CANTLEY: And putting up coke ovens and manufacturing the coal into coke and gas. May I ask him how he would dispose of the gas and where he would propose to export the coke?

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend was speaking of a free port of Halifax, and I was asking whether he was objecting to free coal in the free port of Halifax.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will not object to free coal in the free port of Halifax, as the Postmaster General's suggestion is ridiculous. Now I go back to the time of confederation, and what was told us then? That Halifax was to be the great national port of this continent so far as the British flag flew over it. How far have we fallen short of that? I ask any man in the house who is familiar with the events of the last forty, fifty or sixty years in this country, how much has been done for the port of Halifax?

An hon. MEMBER: We have spent large sums of money.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will admit that we have spent large sums on the railway terminals at the port of Halifax. The Prime Minister spoke of that yesterday. It may be debatable whether the railway terminals should be located as they are. I am not going into that, but that is a development which was essential to the Intercolonial railway and to the railway system of to-day. What could be done during the war years—

Mr. DIONNE: Will the hon. member permit a question? How long is the wharf at Halifax? Is it 100 feet, or 900?

Mr. CANTLEY: Twenty-four hundred feet. Mr. Chairman, with these interruptions I may close, except that I wish again to point out to the minister who preceded me that we view with all earnestness the essential facts in connection with this matter of harbour development. His bill does not give us what we expected to get; it imposes obligations which were not intended to be imposed by the Duncan commission. The minister suggests that no additional imposts were made. I think I have shown conclusively that they are, and that they are inescapable. Sir Andrew Rae Duncan refers to another phase if the matter, where he says:

> The experience of the late war is fresh enough in mind to illustrate one phase of the national viewpoint and national necessity.

What will the harbour commission contribute to making a port that will meet the national necessity? How is it possible to create the additional machinery and plant necessary at that port and to maintain them entirely, pay the interest on the bonds, provide for the necessary sinking fund, properly equip the port—and it is admitted now that the ports are not properly equipped—without imposing corresponding tolls on the business? And how is it possible to do that without adding to the expenses of the port?

Mr. RALSTON: Nobody has asked that that be done.

Mr. CANTLEY: The idea behind the Duncan commission report is that the development of the port of Halifax should be carried out, and it must be made practically a free port, by virtue of which all developments must be at the national expense, and the interest on the cost must be borne by the nation as a whole.

Now, what has happened within the last three weeks or a month? It is understood that the Public Works department had been asked by the Railway department or somebody else to take over these docks at Halifax, and why? So that the railway will be relieved of the cost of maintenance of the docks and wharves and I admire the dexterity and foresight of the minister who arranged it. That will be absorbed by the Public Works department. I would have no quarrel at all with that if it stopped there, but the next proposal will be that after taking those docks away from the railways they will be given to the Public Works department and then transferred to the harbour commission.

Mr. RALSTON: They are transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, not to the commission. My hon. friend ought to look and see.

Mr. CANTLEY: Be it Public Works or Marine and Fisheries, is the commission not to have control of all the docks in Halifax?

Mr. RALSTON: The commission has control, but the commission is administrative. My hon. friend misses the point.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not care what the minister may suggest; they are going to pay the bills in the future.

Mr. RALSTON: It is not intended that they should pay the bills, and no commission yet has done so.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am sorry I cannot take my hon. friend's word for that. He will not always be in his present position.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can take my word for what has happened in the past, namely, that no commission in Canada has yet paid the bills.

Mr. CANTLEY: I did not suggest they did. Next year's crop of wheat is not grown yet; but when the commission gets into operation and administers the port, it will take over the wharves and collect tolls on goods landed on and over them.

Mr. VENIOT: The commission will not assume the liabilities.

Mr. CANTLEY: What liabilities? My hon. friend cannot get around the matter in that way. I know what I am talking about and so does the minister, but he will not admit it and speak accordingly.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will not admit what is the fact.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister wants me to admit something which is entirely untrue and which of course I am not prepared to admit.

Mr. RALSTON: That is not the case.

Mr. CANTLEY: The fact is that by this bill we are not given what we were told we would receive. There is ample evidence of that and time will prove the truth of my assertion. I know there is very little use in appealing to this government to do other than they are doing. We register our protest but such consequences will follow as a result from all acts which are unfair. In short, the government have failed to live up in their entirety to the proposals which indicated what we in the maritime provinces understood we were to get.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of National Defence this afternoon delivered a carefully prepared address with respect to the situation in Halifax. With regard to the extracts which he read from Sir Andrew Rae Duncan's report I can only say that it appears to me that if he had read a little longer and a little more fully, he would not have arrived at the conclusions at which he did. The report of the commission certainly contemplated that a statutory commission should be appointed to administer two harbours, one at St. John and the other at Halifax. It did not in terms state that the commission should be a commission under the existing laws with respect to harbour commissions. There is with respect to harbour commissions a law under which the port of Montreal is organized and operated. There is a similar law under which the port of Quebec is operated. There is a similar law with respect to the harbour of Vancouver. There is also one with respect to the harbour at Chicoutimi—or is it Bagotville— and there is similar legislation with respect to the harbours of Halifax and St. John. My conclusion is that the commission meant by the Duncan report was a commission created by this parliament especially for those two harbours of Halifax and St. John. That conclusion, if it were a court of law in which one were arguing the case, is abundantly clear from the language that is employed, because Sir Andrew Duncan refers to the fact that he visited the harbour of Montreal and observed the way in which that harbour was being operated but he does not suggest in terms that the commission should be that form of commission. He says that it should be a statutory commission and then he refers to the purposes for which it was to be organized. It was to be organized, first, to administer the harbour and, second, to make the merits of the harbour known so as to develop its trade. He says at page 30 of the report:

> It is not possible, within a short space of time, to make good the leeway which delayed attention has created. But we must not, on the other hand, underestimate the rapidity with which development of traffic can be expedited through the development of facilities for handling the traffic (including requisite cold storage), and through making known, by all the sources that are open to the energetic administration of harbour commissions, in the shipping exchanges of the world, and to shippers, the facilities that are offered at any given port. It would be a function of the harbour commission to survey and study the possibility of developing the export trade of the maritime provinces. In the recommendation we make as to a public commission, we do not have in mind maritime province trade standing by itself. We have also in mind the development of that trade as a factor in the development of the port, co-ordinated with the very substantial nucleus of shipping traffic that already attaches to the ports of Halifax and St. John, and co-ordinated also with the other factors which the commission's organization would influence and direct. These include the wider export (including grain shipments) and import traffic that can be organized all the year round if the full advantage is to accrue to Canada from such arrangements as lie at the foundation of their policy in regard to trade through Canadian ports, railways, trade treaties, British preference provisions, and immigration.

Those were the two fundamental principles that were in the mind of the Duncan commission as expressed in the report itself. I think it must be abundantly clear that it was never in the mind of the Duncan commission that a body should be set up which would borrow money upon which interest had to be paid and in respect to which tolls would have to be collected, but rather that the port should be developed as a national undertaking. The language I have just read is susceptible of only that conclusion; it is a burden to be placed upon the Canadian people as a whole and not upon the mere shippers of the ports of Halifax and St. John. It points out at some length the difficulty in organizing a port and expanding its trade where there has been the delay that has characterized the ports of St. John and Halifax. If that report means anything, it means that there has been great delay in developing these ports; that is what it says in its terms.

How were these ports developed? The port of St. John was developed by money put up by the citizens of St. John plus appropriations of public money from year to year for the purpose of building breakwaters and carrying on dredging operations.

Mr. ROBB: Mostly plus.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, a very substantial sum was plus, and a large part of that was probably minus, as perhaps the minister will agree, so far as ultimate gain to the port itself was concerned, because tidal conditions in connection with the development of the port of St. John—and I do not know whether they will be overcome now—made it one of the most difficult ports of America in which to carry on dredging operations successfully and to build breakwaters that would withstand the enormous seas that sweep from the bay of Fundy into that harbour when certain winds prevail. But let me come to the point. What clearly must have been in the mind of the Duncan commission was that we would develop these ports in the manner I have indicated, as a national undertaking, as it says, depending not upon the traffic of the communities themselves but upon the large traffic that might be developed by a vigorous and energetic harbour commission, a body not only administering the affairs of the port but developing its trade by means such as have been employed by the harbour authorities of Liverpool or, in more recent years, the harbour authorities at Southampton, to say nothing of the development of the port of London under Lord Devonport. That was clearly in the mind of whoever wrote the report. The development of trade and the directing of the attention of the world to the facilities that exist are emphasized.

Halifax has been one of the most efficiently operated ports in America. Its piers are so located, its facilities are so good, that it can handle certain kinds of traffic faster than any other port on the continent. It is favourably located for particular kinds of traffic. There are no cranes in Halifax, as in the great ports of continental Europe for taking care of heavy traffic. The handling of that form of traffic has not yet developed in the port of Halifax, but for the purposes of a steamship of anything up to 600 or even 700 feet in length going into one of the slips at the port of Halifax, there is probably no finer harbour anywhere. It has deep water, concrete wharves, good sheds, facilities of every kind for taking care of the class of traffic other than that handled by cranes.

In St. John, owing to the abrogation of the traffic agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the old government railways after 1921, when Mr. Graham declined to renew it, great impetus was given to the harbour of St. John as the winter port of Canada, especially having regard to through traffic on the Canadian Pacific railway. Unfortunately in many respects it became necessary for this country, because of the default of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to take over that system, and that meant that we ourselves were developing at the harbour of Portland a port that was a rival both of St. John and of Halifax. That was one of the results of the country being compelled, by reason of the falling down of the Grand Trunk in its obligations, to take over the line that runs into Portland. Everyone knows that in Portland we have very valuable terminal facilities, costing many millions, which were built by the Grand Trunk and assisted to some extent by the community in which they are located. At one time, perhaps not since the Minister of Railways has held that portfolio, it was thought desirable to have these sold to the state of Maine or to the city of Portland itself. But leaving that aside, the fact is that you have there a port which is a competitor of our two Canadian winter ports, one the port of Halifax and the other the port of St. John. That is one of the complaints made by the people in the maritime provinces, that Portland is a competing port of Halifax and St. John. To meet that we are going to have a statutory commission. I do not disagree entirely with what was said by the Minister of National Defence this afternoon that form seems to be the difficulty between us. We are agreed that it is to be a statutory commission, but I submit that it was a special commission that was contemplated in the report of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan. My friend the Minister of National Defence says: No, it is the ordinary commission organized under the general harbour commission law that we now have in Canada, with the same provisions that apply to the port of Vancouver or any of the other ports I have mentioned. Assume that we have a statutory commission—and my hon. friend is right when he assumes that we have; for it is a commission operating under the provisions of the general harbour commission law; I think that is a fair way to put it. But we raise the further point that in view of the findings made by the audit board with respect to the harbour of Quebec, that St. John harbour last year had an operating profit of $40,000 after paying interest on its investment from a gross revenue of $257,000—

Mr. VENIOT: And sinking fund too.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and taking care of all the charges incident thereto—they had an operating profit of $39,000, to be exact, upon a gross revenue of $257,000. It is quite obvious, and here is the point upon which the Minister of National Defence and I and those associated with me disagree, that the condition that has developed at the harbour of Quebec is bound to develop at these two other ports if they carry on the trade that is so essential to competition with our own railway-owned port of Portland, and with the port of Boston and the port of New York. No man who has sailed out of St. John harbour and out of Halifax harbour into the north Atlantic in winter, and has travelled on the old Allan line out of Portland in days gone by, and who has proceeded out of the ports of Boston and New York, and has noted the vast improvements in recent years that have taken place in those American harbours, can fail for a moment to realize that if we are to develop and hold traffic for the ports of Halifax and St. John we must be able to offer facilities at least equal to those of any other port on the north Atlantic.

Now the moment you borrow $5,000,000 for the port of St. John—for it is borrowed, mark you—it involves the promise to pay; and when the Minister of National Defence says that a burden is not thereby being placed on the port, he must know that when either Halifax or St. John borrow money from the government and give a promise to pay, it assumes an obligation represented by debentures and bonds, to which are attached coupons, which are promises to pay interest. That is the point I endeavoured to make the other day. Every time, then, that the harbour commission of St. John borrows money from the Dominion government and gives its promise to pay, it has assumed an obligation, and no man would be more ready to admit that than my friend the Minister of Finance. That is the case with Quebec harbour. It has outstanding obligations, promises to pay, which for reasons that have been indicated it has not met. Halifax is to borrow $500,000 for this year. That means that the Halifax harbour commission has promised to pay $25,000 in interest to the Dominion government, as well as sinking fund. It means more. When, three years hence, the harbour of St. John has completed its present program, it has promised to pay to the Canadian people $250,000 per annum, plus sinking fund. Now, sir, I put it to you and to every member of this house whether this is anything more than mere camouflage. If what the minister says is true, that there is no obligation to be incurred, let us say so in terms in the statute itself, and say we are granting this money to develop that harbour; let us do it direct and say we are giving, not lending, the money to develop that harbour. But, on the other hand, if we are merely swapping pieces of paper with ourselves, creating by a statute a body having power to issue promises to pay, which body will with our permission and sanction issue its promises to pay to us, which we will hold in the treasury, and when the interest comes due, and they find themselves unable to meet it, we shall have to find the money ourselves—that, it seems to me, is nothing but duplicity. It is for that reason—the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not unmindful of it—that we appeal to the government not to put these burdens upon these ports. What is it but a burden? What is it but an obligation? If I exact, as a condition of my lending to my hon. friend yonder a sum of money, his promissory note, has he not assumed an obligation?

Mr. DUNNING: I would have to pay it, too.

Mr. BENNETT: I am happy to say that my friend is in the fortunate position of being able to pay any promisory note he may make. But let us go a step further. I advance him $500,000 and he gives me his promissory note, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, payable say half-yearly. Will anyone say that the minister has not incurred an obligation, a liability, and that his fortune up to $500,000 is not liable for the repayment of that obligation? In this case—

Mr. DUNNING: Suppose I could not pay the interest, what would you do about it? I assure you I could not.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend suggests, suppose he could not pay the annual interest. It would put him in the position of being a defaulting debtor who might be made bankrupt; or I could put him in the position, if he had given a mortgage, of losing his property—foreclose and take the property in satisfaction of his obligation. Is that the sort of thing we want to do with these ports, having regard to the report of the Duncan commission? I submit it is not. That is the whole story, and the whole difference between us.

Let us make ourselves clear in this regard. On the one hand, we are all agreed that these ports must be assisted; we are all agreed that the port of St. John should have five million dollars within a period of three years to carry out the contemplated plan in connection with the first unit of its development; we are all agreed that the harbour of Halifax should have half a million dollars to take care of its present necessities as indicated by the minister for the present year. The government asks us to insist that these two ports shall give us promises to pay these sums of money in a term of years, to be fixed by the government. We say that will involve, if it involves anything, the imposition of tolls for services rendered; for that is the only way by which the respective harbour commissions could obtain revenue, unless we give them the money to pay the liability. If my friend has no money, except what his colleague the Minister of Finance gives him, with which to meet the interest charges which he owes me, or the obligations under the note that I have mentioned, the position is clear. All the harbour of Halifax and all the harbour of St. John have from which to derive their respective revenues is service. Each has to sell the space on the wharves—the top service, and each has the side service with respect to its berths. In addition to that it may collect certain other dues with respect to its facilities.

Mr. DUNNING: Grain elevators.

Mr. BENNETT: I thank my hon. friend: grain elevators. Those are the services each has to sell. Now, if it is meant seriously that they shall pay the annual interest, they can get the wherewithal to do so only by imposing charges for all the services they have to sell. I do not think that point needs to be laboured with this committee. But if on the other hand we frankly recognize that it is not intended to deal with the matter in that way, then we say: Here is the money to provide these facilities under the supervision of this parliament, under the supervision, as I said the other day,—I think the minister agrees with me—of the best expert advice that can be given with respect to these two ports. Then we are on common ground and we have done the very thing which I submit is contemplated by the Duncan report.

In my opinion it is not important to consider whether this report used one word or another. I am not attaching any particular significance to the specific use of a certain word here or there. What I am anxious about is that we should treat these two ports as great national ports—national in the sense of serving Canada as a whole, not the maritime provinces in particular—and by their utilization in this national way bring about that increased prosperity of the maritime provinces which their geographical position should ensure, and which is demanded in the interests of the Dominion as a whole. That is our position with respect to it.

Although the government has a sufficient majority with which to put this legislation through, I cannot think from what my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said, that he is not fully cognizant of the difficulties of the existing situation, and I accommodate myself largely to these measures because of the observations that he has made, because of the studies that he is instituting because of the reports that he will receive, because of the expert attention which is to be given to the matter by men under his direction, and because of the undertakings that have been given with regard to checks upon the expenditures. I do not expect interest will be paid by these ports upon the advances to be made if they are to do what we want them to do. Indeed I do not wish them to pay interest if they are to do what we expect them to do, because I know that with the competition from the north Atlantic ports to the south they will not be in a position to meet the interest charges. Because of these facts, I am content to limit my opposition to these observations rather than to divide the house on a matter of this kind.

There is one point with respect to which I think the government might have taken a position entirely different from that which it has taken. Page 31 of the report says that these commissions should be:

> constituted of business and experienced persons.

I listened to what the hon. Minister of National Defence said to-day, I listened to what the hon. Postmaster General said the other day, and I impose but one single question upon them and upon this house: Would any corporation in the Dominion employ the men forming the personnel of those commissions for that purpose?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: You can go from one end of this country to the other and fail to find any corporation in Canada that would employ those men for that purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: The corporation of the city of Halifax employed one of them as mayor and as controller.

Mr. BENNETT: That but proves the very point I am making. Corporations do not employ men with qualifications as mayors to carry on their business. That is the answer.

Mr. RALSTON: Another one has been managing director of a corporation for twenty years.

Mr. BENNETT: That is all the more reason why he has not time to give to the duties of a harbour commissioner.

Mr. VENIOT: No; you are talking about ability.

Mr. BENNETT: No, I am talking about the words used in the Duncan report, "business and experienced persons". What does experience mean here? It means knowledge derived from past practice in this particular work. Did any one of them have any experience in running steamers in and out of Halifax?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, in and out of St. John.

Mr. BENNETT: I am speaking of Halifax; I will come to St. John. Did any one of the three mentioned by the minister this afternoon have experience in managing a harbour? What is their experience? The Minister of Finance may have had experience, but he has not had experience in the practice of law. The Minister of Railways and Canals has had experience in the grain business, but that does not fit him—although he may think so—to run a railway. The Postmaster General may have had experience in dismissing postmasters, but that does not qualify him at all to be a minister of finance.

Mr. VENIOT: What experience has the hon. gentleman had in running harbours to place him in a position to criticize those appointments?

Mr. BENNETT: That is not an unfair question. I was born by the sea.

Mr. VENIOT: So was I. My hon. friend should not have left the maritimes so early in life. Has he gained the necessary experience in the west to manage harbours?

Mr. BENNETT: From my youth up I have been interested in matters affecting the sea.

Mr. VENIOT: So have I all my life.

Mr. BENNETT: And I have made it my business to learn something about great ports and harbours. But the answer I would make to the hon. gentleman is this: I am not offering myself as a harbour commissioner, either for St. John or Halifax.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. BENNETT: It is my privilege to say I will listen to the hon. member.

Mr. GOTT: Let the Prime Minister speak over there.

Mr. BENNETT: Ask your question.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I was just going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that following out logically the position which the hon. gentleman has taken—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): —would he be qualified some day to be Prime Minister of this country?

Mr. BENNETT: In much the same way as his leader qualified in the United States, I suppose. The language of the report was that they were to be experienced persons, and experienced persons in relation to harbours must have been men who had some knowledge with respect to the matters with which they would have to deal. That is my point. And I did impose this test, and this only: Would a great corporation employ these gentlemen for that purpose? That was the test I imposed, and it is not an unfair one. This afternoon the Minister of National Defence said that it was not a drawback which should prevent a person from finding service under the crown on a commission that he happened to be of a particular party in politics. I agree with him, wholly. But, where you have a national port, I do suggest that it would have been the proper thing to have at least insisted that the considerations prevailing in making the appointments were purely of a business character. And surely no three men would be selected in either Halifax or St. John, men experienced in business, one of whom would not have been a Conservative.

Mr. RALSTON: There could not have been three experienced Liberals?

Mr. BENNETT: Three men representative of business—because business is not so one-sided that, if you selected the men for the qualities of experience and knowledge, one of them would not be a Conservative. Furthermore, and I repeat this, the tendency has been to treat these matters as purely political, with the result that you have patronage, with all its attendant evils, in the administration of the commission. I pointed out therefore that the time had come when we should try to get away from a state of affairs such as that. It was not worthy of the Minister of National Defence to compare the appointment of men on a commission of this character to the appointment in 1926 as a returning officer, of a man who had been a candidate in 1921.

Mr. RALSTON: Why not?

Mr. BENNETT: Why not?

Mr. RALSTON: Isn't the position of the returning officer a judicial one?

Mr. BENNETT: It is both administrative and judicial.

Mr. RALSTON: And does my hon. friend suggest that by 1926 he had lost the stripes and spots which he bore in 1921?

Mr. BENNETT: Not in the least; but I say that he had been five years removed from an election. In the appointment of the tariff commission, however, hon. gentlemen saw fit to place a defeated candidate at the head of the greatest and most important commission —a gentleman who is avowedly a candidate for the next election. He was defeated as a candidate in a constituency largely industrial, and hon. gentlemen put him at the head of a tariff commission of such importance. It seems to me that this but indicates what is in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite when dealing with this problem.

I submit that the harbour commissions of St. John and Halifax, in view of the fact that the government has accepted the Duncan commission's report, should be lifted out of party politics, and that there should be secured the services of men who are not of one political party. That is all our suggestion was. Now, my hon. friend may properly say that you cannot expect this; he may contend that it is not reasonable, human nature being what it is, inasmuch as the supporters of the government would demand that these positions be given them and them only. I pointed out however that this was the very thing that had been happening all these years in Canada and that the time had come, with this report in their hands, when the government might hope to avail themselves of the wide knowledge and experience of men on either side of politics, one of whom at least should be a Conservative and who, surely, would be able to bring to the discharge of his duties that measure of impartiality and that recognition of unity of purpose on the part of the nation itself which would accomplish the ends contemplated in the report. Such an appointment, we contend, should be free from the taint of purely party considerations of patronage. I realize the influences that operate in such cases and I thoroughly appreciate them. I quite agree with what the minister says as to the weaknesses of human nature and the proneness of men to wish to support their own friends. And that is but a reflection of the political condition in Canada. But here you have the report of a non-political body with respect to two great harbours like St. John and Halifax, urging that they be treated somewhat differently from other ports because they belong to the people of Canada as a whole and not to the Liberal party nor to the Conservative party. That is our point.

Mr. RALSTON: The same with respect to a returning officer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: No wonder hon. gentlemen over yonder laugh. It is vastly amazing to think that the Minister of National Defence should suggest that the appointment of a man who, for a few hours or perhaps days, discharges duties under heavy penalties if he abuses the powers conferred upon him, being subject to fines and imprisonment in the penitentiary if he violates the provisions of the statute, can be compared with the appointment of men on a harbour commission. In the one case you have a man who happened to be a candidate in an election in 1921, appointed in 1926 as a returning officer, and in the other case you have the selection of three active partisans to discharge duties on a commission with respect to a great national port. And the Minister of National Defence suggests that there is an analogy between the two.

Mr. RALSTON: Two of the three never even ran at an election.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not necessary to run in an election in order to be an active partisan.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought that was the thing that tainted this man and which he had got rid of after five years.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the minister is not so small-minded as all that, although there is striking evidence in connection with certain operations in Halifax that he is. Any man who suggests as an analogy the selection of three partisan Liberals to manage a national port, a port owned equally by all Canadians, Liberals or Conservatives, and the appointment as a returning officer in 1926 of a man who happened to be a candidate in an election in 1921, is going far afield indeed for his analogy. That is all I say on that point. It is the sort of thing one expects to hear from some people but not from members of the legal profession.

That is the position we take with respect to these two harbours, about which there need be no misapprehension. Largely because of what has been stated by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) as to the position which will be occupied in the future with relation to these ports by the commissioners, we are content to express our position and avoid a recurrence of what has taken place in the past in some of the Canadian ports. Surely the minister must know the conditions that have obtained in some of them—conditions, I said the other day frankly, under both political parties. It is in the hope of lifting these ports, as national ports, out of that condition that we made the suggestion which we did, as to the appointment of at least one of these men not reflecting the mind of the party in power. For if that condition continues and there is a change, out they go, just as occurred in Montreal in 1911, although it is true some resigned. Such a situation is one that cannot make for the advantage and benefit of Canadian national ports. It is for the very reason that these ports have come to be regarded as being owned by political parties and their friends that we have had the situation which has prevailed in Canada, as disclosed in the records of parliament the last few days, showing increasing deficits with respect to harbour administration. That is what we are trying to prevent, and it is to that end that we made the suggestions which we do as to the manner in which these ports should be dealt with.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I would not have referred to this matter had it not been suggested by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), who referred to the selection of a defeated candidate as a returning officer. May I call his attention to the fact that, contrary to precedent, the sheriff of the county in an important election in Halifax not many years ago—a sheriff who had always acted well and faithfully and to the satisfaction of the electorate generally and who, I may say, is a Liberal—was thrown overboard and a defeated candidate appointed, a man who had been for a number of years a supporter of the Murray government. This man was always a strong Liberal and was chosen as presiding officer at that election.

Mr. VENIOT: I should not like to allow the debate to close without saying a few words, not on the merits of the development of the port of Halifax especially, but in order to direct the attention of the house to what I consider the unfair interpretation which the leader of the opposition has been trying to place on the Duncan report. The hon. gentleman told the house that we on this side, by introducing legislation with regard to the development of these harbours, were doing nothing more or less than practising deception and camouflage. I do not think for one moment that the leader of the opposition desired to practice deception and camouflage upon this house when he undertook to-night to read from the Duncan report words which might leave the impression that the Duncan commission desired and in fact recommended that Halifax and St. John be made national harbours in the sense that the harbours should be developed entirely at the expense of the Dominion. If the leader of the opposition had wished to be fair he would have read from page 29. From page 30 he read the following:

It would be a function of the harbour commission to survey and study the possibility of developing the export trade of the maritime provinces.

My hon. friend concluded from that statement that the Duncan commission did not intend that the harbour commission should have anything to do with the development of the facilities of Halifax and St. John.

Mr. BENNETT: I particularly pointed out that one of the functions of the commission was to develop the port. I will not permit the hon. gentleman to make that statement unchallenged.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman only read from page 30, and he cannot find those words on that page.

Mr. BENNETT: I will not permit the hon. gentleman to say I said something which I did not say. I stated that there were two functions of that commission; I named them, and one was to develop the port.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman read these words:

It would be a function of the harbour commission to survey and study the possibility of developing the export trade of the maritime provinces.

He particularly directed the attention of this house to page 30; he read from no other page.

Mr. ERNST: But he said so.

[Mr. W. A. Black.]

Mr. VENIOT: If the hon. gentleman will just pay attention to himself I will do the talking. Had the leader of the opposition read from page 29 he would have found the proper words:

We recommend that, in respect of each of these two harbours, the federal government should establish a statutory harbour commission, whose business it would be to see that the port facilities are developed on such a scale as will gradually—but by no means slowly—create channels through which trade can expand both winter and summer.

The Duncan report definitely recommends that a commission shall be appointed to see to the development of the ports of St. John and Halifax.

Mr. ERNST: A statutory commission.

Mr. VENIOT: It could not be otherwise than statutory; with all his legal knowledge the hon. gentleman should know that. If there is anyone in this house who attempts to show his legal knowledge more than my hon. friend does, I should like to know who it is.

Mr. BENNETT: The Postmaster General.

Mr. VENIOT: The Postmaster General is not a lawyer, but he would consider himself a very poor one if he did not know as much law as some of those who pretend to speak from the legal point of view here to-night.

Let me go one step further. Again I do not wish to imply that the leader of the opposition did so wittingly, but he did deceive the house when he hesitated and did not read the second last paragraph on page 30. If you read that paragraph you can come to no other conclusion than that the Duncan commission desired that the harbours of St. John and Halifax should be dealt with as the harbour of Montreal is dealt with. Why do I say that? Because the Duncan commission commends the development of the harbour of Montreal in these words:

...and particularly at Montreal where port development has reached a very high level indeed...

That development reached such a high level under the administration of a harbour commission.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, before there was a harbour commission.

Mr. VENIOT: The development referred to has taken place only under the Montreal harbour commission. The development to which my hon. friend refers is not within the harbour of Montreal, and it was not done under a commission; my hon. friend criticized it because of that fact.

Now let me deal with one other point. The leader of the opposition claims that because we are lending a certain amount of money to the harbour commissions of St. John and Halifax we are thereby imposing a burden upon these harbours.

An hon. MEMBER: Sure.

Mr. VENIOT: But my hon. friend and the gentleman who said "sure" forget that if you secure development of the facilities necessary to care for the trade which will come to these ports, you will increase the volume of business and therefore increase the revenue without raising the dues in the ports. The port of St. John has been increasing its traffic annually, not only in grain, but in mixed exports, but notwithstanding the fact that the dues have been lowered from six cents to one cent a bushel, for top and side wharf dues the revenues of the port have gone up, the dues paid by shipping have been lessened and the business has been increasing. If you give to St. John and Halifax the facilities necessary to meet the large increase of business which will go through those ports you will impose no extra burden upon the shipping interests. You will increase the revenuse without imposing extra fees, and in increasing the revenues you will place these ports in a position to pay interest at a proper time on the investment made by the commissions.

The leader of the opposition referred to the experience of certain gentlemen in this house, and he took the liberty to refer to the experience I have had in dismissing postmasters.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. VENIOT: Let me tell my hon. friend that perhaps I have had more experience in dismissing postmasters than he has had, but I am only following in his footsteps. I have a record which shows that the leader of the opposition took delight some years ago in ordering the dismissal of certain postmasters in the county which he represents, distinctly stating in his letters to the then postmaster general that he did so because they were Liberals.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman having referred to a document, by the rules of the house he is now compelled to lay it on the table. I should like to see it.

Mr. VENIOT: I will produce the document with pleasure, and will lay it on the table of the house when I take up my estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: Now is the time to do it.

Mr. VENIOT: I will do it to-morrow; I will bring the original here, so that the hon. gentleman will be satisfied.

Mr. BENNETT: And what is more, there is no doubt that the government of 1911 laid down the rule that if any defeated candidate or member of the house made a report over his signature, the minister might act upon it. That rule was adopted by this house when Sir Wilfrid Laurier led the opposition.

Mr. DUNNING: Then why complain about the operation of the rule to-day?

Mr. BENNETT: Because it is not being followed.

Mr. VENIOT: This discussion has gone far afield, and the leader of the opposition can blame only himself for my reference to this matter to-night.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): What about Gaspe last year?

Mr. VENIOT: I will answer my hon. friend when the time comes. I had not intended to refer to this matter to-night; I was going to reserve it for when my estimates came up, so that I would be able to show the hon. gentleman his own signature on letters asking that this very thing be done for which he blames me now.

Now, another point. The leader of the opposition referred to the political aspect of these harbour commissions. It is true that the harbour commission of St. John is composed of three Liberals. It is also true that the junior member for the city of St. John (Mr. Bell) in his speech the night before last supporting the appropriation of $5,000,000 for St. John harbour, stated that they were three honest, able, executive men, and that St. John was proud of them.

Mr. JONES: Did he say that they had any experience?

Mr. VENIOT: No, he did not say that, but the hon. gentleman will say that there is one man who knows more about the harbour of St. John than perhaps all the other citizens of St. John put together—

Mr. JONES: Who is he?

Mr. VENIOT: William E. Scully; and the hon. gentleman will not deny it if he wants to be fair. Everybody knows that no man in St. John to-day has had more experience pertaining to the harbour business of St. John than has W. E. Scully.

Mr. JONES: What about the chairman?

Mr. VENIOT: The chairman is a business man of the highest standing in St. John. He has been one of the leading men in helping to plan the development of that harbour and to put forward its claims, on delegations appearing before the government, to the rights that have so long been denied the port of St. John.

Mr. JONES: Who denied them?

Mr. VENIOT: Your government and this government both. I do not give credit to one more than to another, because neither Conservative nor Liberal governments since 1867 have treated St. John or the other harbours as they should have been treated.

Mr. McGIBBON: They are surely coming into their own now, are they not?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, since the Liberal government, in the present legislation, are doing what hon. members on the other side do not want us to do.

Now, as to the political complexion of the gentlemen composing the commission of the harbour of St. John, I believe the hon. members from the city of St. John will bear me out when I say that the St. John board of trade, which is supposed to be a non-political body, is composed largely of followers of the Conservative party.

Mr. JONES: No, that is not so.

Mr. VENIOT: What do you know about it? I had a delegation wait upon me in the city of Ottawa last winter when the harbour commission bill was before the House of Commons, asking me if I would accept from them a recommendation for the appointment of members to that board. I told them that I was prepared to allow them to make recommendations, and I would decide myself whether or not I should accept them. They submitted to me three names, and the three names were those of Liberals.

An hon. MEMBER: No chance for anybody else.

Mr. VENIOT: The members of the board of trade who waited upon me were not Liberals, but Conservatives. They submitted to me the names of Alexander Patterson, W. E. Scully and the Hon. W. E. Foster. Of the three names submitted to me I accepted two, and I picked out the third myself in the person of Colonel Alexander McMillan, of the city of St. John. When those men were appointed, the newspapers in the city of St. John, which are none too friendly to the Postmaster General or to the government of the day, came out with commendatory articles complimenting the government of the day on the nomination of three such capable business men as those named on my recommendation. I want to say plainly, because I want it to be distinctly understood, that in naming commissions or other bodies I am not going to take from any of the Conservative party my advice as to their political complexion, and in that respect I am only following the practice adopted by the Conservative party themselves when they were in power.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, I was not here this afternoon when this discusssion commenced; consequently I may be among those who rush in where angels fear to tread. But after listening to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Veniot) I am sure I shall not be absolutely alone if I do happen to be considered as coming within that class.

Mr. VENIOT: Neither of us would make a good angel.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): With one thing that has been said I heartily agree, and that is that both governments for a number of years have been denying justice to the maritime provinces. That observation strikes me as particularly appropriate when I hear people talking about the harbours of Montreal, Quebec, St. John and Halifax, representing as I do a harbour that is naturally of far greater strategic importance than any of them and that has been denied justice during all these years. We know and we have heard of the millions of money that have been spent in Montreal. Every year since I have been here a bill has come down to borrow so many more millions for Montreal. This year we are giving $8,000,000 more to Quebec. For a number of years the island of Cape Breton has been denied the benefits of its proved advantages simply because financial prestige and financial influence has been strong enough to centre the developments at the two ports of Montreal and Quebec. Some twenty years ago an experiment was made by which Atlantic boats landed mails and passengers at Sydney harbour, with the result that they were landed in New York and in Montreal twenty-four hours ahead of mails and passengers carried by the same boats to Montreal or Quebec. The time will come when what our friends down in the corner call economic pressure will compel the appropriation of the sums necessary to the development of those ports which are geographically best situated to meet the demands of transatlantic travel.

From the discussion that has taken place since I came into the chamber I am somewhat in doubt as to just what is the present position of this matter. The question as I understand it is this: that we are lending to the harbour commission at Halifax the sum of half a million dollars and in return for that we are getting their promissory note. Do I understand the Postmaster General or the Minister of National Defence to say that the traffic which goes through that port will not have to pay interest on that money? If that be the case then I am in favour of the proposal; but I cannot see how under present circumstances, with the development of the port in the hands of the commission, they are ever going to develop traffic enough to pay the additional cost.

There was some difference of opinion as to what this recommendation in the Duncan report meant. There was a keen difference of opinion in the city of Halifax itself and I remember reading discussions that took place there, among members of the board of trade and other representative business bodies, whether or not they would accept this recommendation. Many leading business men were strongly in favour of the view expressed by the leader of the opposition, namely, that the port of Halifax should be built up as a national port; and on the other hand we must admit that there was among those who wished to secure positions, a keen desire that a commission should be appointed and that the commission should receive salaries. I understand that a free port, a nationalized port, is one in which no tolls are imposed on traffic going through it.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend know of any port in the world in which tolls are not charged on traffic passing through it?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I would say that certain tolls must be charged.

Mr. RALSTON: Certainly.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): But the point I am making is this: As I understand the contention of the Postmaster General, and possibly that of the Minister of National Defence, it is that the additional tolls necessarily imposed through the creation of this commission will not entail any further impost on the traffic going through that port. Is that correct or not? There is no getting away from the fact that the government is making on the traffic that is going through Halifax an impost that will cripple that port. We are now appointing a commission of three persons. They will necessarily have a staff, the expenses of which will run into $12,000, $15,000 or $20,000 a year. In addition to that there are interest charges amounting to $25,000 a year, and a sinking fund; so that I venture to say that the traffic going into Halifax harbour will have to bear an additional impost of at least $50,000 a year. I should like to have some member on the government side explain where the extra traffic is to come from that will keep the tolls at the present level. If the government can do that, I am quite prepared to support this legislation; otherwise I think the position taken by the leader of the opposition will commend itself to the good judgment of the people of Halifax.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister tell the committee just what this amount of $500,000 is to be expended for?

Mr. CARDIN: The items are as follows:

Improvements and additional equipment to wharves, piers and sheds.	$290,000
Improvement to elevator system, including conveyor galleries..	60,000
Additional port equipment, including a locomotive crane and a fuel oil bunkering plant..	150,000
Total..	$500,000

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give some indication as to what is to be turned over to the harbour commission, or will anything be turned over to it?

Mr. CARDIN: So far no existing facilities in the harbour of Halifax have been turned over to the commission. The facilities are the property of the Canadian National Railways and the commission is negotiating with the board of directors of the Canadian National in regard to acquiring the facilities which the Canadian National is using at the present time. The Canadian National estimate the facilities which are going to be turned over to the commission at $12,722,617. There is also the grain elevator system, valued at $1,000,000, and the site, valued at $46,000. It appears, therefore, that the facilities which are to be handed over to the harbour commission are valued at a little over $13,000,000.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Do I understand from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the items he has mentioned are to be paid for by the government? Or are they to be paid for by a toll placed upon the traffic now passing through the port of Halifax free of any such impost?

Mr. CARDIN: That depends upon the terms of the transaction. As I said, the Halifax harbour commission is negotiating with the Canadian National and the latter will probably ask for compensation. But I should be inclined to say that the commission will not be asked to pay any interest on the amount necessary for the purchase of those facilities from the Canadian National.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): That is, those expenditures will fall upon the traffic moving through the port?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Who meets them? The government?

Mr. CARDIN: The government will have to supply the necessary money for those expenditures when the facilities are turned over to the commission. But as I said, it is not expected that the commission will have to pay any interest on that amount, so that when the facilities are transferred to the commission they will not have to impose any dues to pay for them.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): We are thankful to get the money free of interest, but it seems the most extraordinary proposition ever laid before any body of people that you are lending money on bonds and saying: You will not have to pay interest on them.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not saying that.

Mr CANTLEY: The minister referred to a new coal bunkering crane. Where is it proposed to put that?

Mr. CARDIN: Probably on the docks which are at present occupied and used by the Canadian National.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister describe again the type of crane?

Mr. CARDIN: The additional port equipment includes a locomotive crane and fuel oil bunkering plant.

Mr. CANTLEY: The crane is to replace the bunkering crane that was formerly on pier 9, a crane that is capable of doing—I will be conservative—ten to twenty times as much as the crane to which the minister refers. That is the first step that is to be taken to improve the facilities of the port of Halifax under this commission.

Mr. CARDIN: We cannot start to improve very materially the facilities of the harbour of Halifax until we have acquired the facilities which already exist there. The first step is to take over those facilities, and then the necessary means will have to be taken to improve them. The commissioners have a program for the expenditure of $3,000,000, which will probably be submitted to parliament next session, but this program cannot be undertaken before they have acquired the property which is at present under the control of the Canadian National.

Mr. CANTLEY: On pier 9 there was erected a bunkering crane which bunkered thousands of vessels during the war. That crane was allowed to blow down within the last twelve or fifteen months. It should have been replaced; it could have been re-erected at a moderate expense. Instead of that our friends propose to supply a locomotive crane costing five or six or ten thousand dollars—whether new or second-hand I do not know, but it will be entirely inadequate for the purpose for which the original crane on pier 9 was used. That is the first thing that Halifax is going to get from this precious commission. I commend that to the minister's attention.

Mr. GARDINER: When these facilities are acquired from the Canadian National system, is it the intention of the government to turn them over to the commission without any capital or interest charges?

Mr. CARDIN: That would be my view.

Mr. DUNNING: The properties in question belong not to the Canadian National Railways but to the Canadian government railways, which are operated by the Canadian National. It is part of the Intercolonial system, which simplifies the transaction very much.

Mr. GARDINER: I take it, then, that part of the old Intercolonial is still a part of the property of the government. I think the government should treat Halifax in the same generous way in which they have treated St. John. Has the minister any information as to the amount of grain that passed through the elevator at Halifax during the past year and the year previous? I should like to know whether or not the movement is increasing.

Mr. CARDIN: In 1925-26 the amount was 1,032,624 bushels, and in 1926-27, 1,070,099 bushels.

Mr. GARDINER: Not much of an improvement.

Mr. CARDIN: I have not the figures for this year.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the elevator capacity at Halifax for handling grain?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to say, because that elevator was built through the agency of the Department of Trade and Commerce. But I am informed that there is an increased capacity.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is 1,200,000 bushels.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the minister say that there was a plan with respect to Halifax harbour involving a larger sum than $500,000?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What sum is involved?

Mr. CARDIN: $3,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Over a period of years?

Mr. CARDIN: It is the proposal which is supposed to come next year after the present facilities have been acquired, and after the commission has had an opportunity of studying the whole problem and making recommendations for improvements.

Mr. BENNETT: Has the minister the details of that proposal? If so, perhaps he would outline it briefly.

Mr. CARDIN: The program includes a cold storage plant, additional shed at ocean terminals, addition to elevator and conveyors, fuel oil bunkering plant, marine leg at elevator, and a mobile crane.

Bill reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

APPLICATION OF MONEYS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 220, to amend the Railway Act.

He said: Perhaps if I make a short general statement as to the purport of the bill the house will accept the principle and discussion can with greater facility take place in committee.

The grade crossing fund administered by the board of railway commissioners has not been used throughout Canada to the extent which is considered by the government to be desirable. After a careful study of the reasons why this fund is not of greater use for the purpose for which is was created, the government reached the conclusion that several limitations in the existing law operated to bring about that result. One of the limitations is to the effect that the fund shall not be applied to a crossing of more than four tracks. Another limits to $25,000 the maximum amount which may be granted under the existing law to any one crossing. Another limitation has to do with crossings which have come into existence since 1909, to which, under the present law, the grade crossing fund cannot be applied.

Mr. BENNETT: It has not been applied?

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps that would be a more correct way of putting it. The amending bill eliminates the restriction to crossings of four tracks and less, and leaves that to the discretion of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The amending bill also provides for a 40 per cent grant to be made by the Board of Railway Commissioners out of the fund with respect to crossings costing in the aggregate up to $100,000; over $100,000 in total cost the contribution from the fund may be 40 per cent, but not to exceed $100,000. By these provisions the government hopes to insure a wider use of the grade crossing fund than has been possible under the existing legislation. I have some information here with respect to the use which has been made of the fund.

Mr. BENNETT: From year to year?

Mr. DUNNING: Not from year to year, no. The total number of crossings which have been affected by the fund since its inception in 1909 is 520. But in this connection it should be stated that with respect to 44 of the 520 the grade crossing fund has been used on two or more occasions. That will give the house an idea of the extent to which the fund has contributed to making more safe railway crossings throughout the country. I think all will agree that this result over a period of almost nineteen years is not attacking the problem as vigorously as we should desire.

Mr. BENNETT: What was the total sum expended?

Mr. DUNNING: From April 1, 1909, to March 31 last the total expended out of the fund was $1,368,354. I think those are all the particulars I need give at this stage. When the bill is in committee and members have before them the legislation as proposed, and on the opposite page the legislation as it exists, it will be possible more intelligently to deal with the questions which may arise as to details. In proposing the second reading I am merely asking the house to accept the principle that the grade crossing fund should be more widely utilized. This will be rendered possible by removing the limit on the number of crossings and by increasing the amount which the board may grant with respect to any individual crossing.

Mr. SPENCER: How much has parliament voted to this fund?

Mr. DUNNING: I omitted to mention that. Parliament votes $200,000 each year under a provision in the Railway Act. This statutory provision expires in 1929. My hon. friend will notice that by the amending bill I am not proposing to extend that period. I thought it wise to get one year's experience of how the new amendments work before proposing to the house any extension of the statutory period, provided for first in 1909 for ten years, and in 1919 for an additional ten years.

Mr. MANION: How much does the fund amount to now?

Mr. DUNNING: I should explain that prior to 1919 the fund was actually allowed to accumulate, and there still remains an unexpended balance in the fund, accumulated up to 1919, of $631,645. Since that time the statutory votes have not been physically set aside, the principle adopted being to expend out of the fund accumulated up to 1919. The total available under the statutory provision, including that balance, is $2,631,645. This is available for the railway commission to order grants, to be applied under the grade crossing statute.

Mr. MANION: That is made up of the balances that would have been laid aside had you accumulated them in one fund?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MANION: It is callable by the railway commission?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. EVANS: What is the nature of the crossings dealt with?

Mr. DUNNING: Any crossing of a railway over a highway, or of a highway over a railway—any kind of grade separation is contemplated by the legislation.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at length with respect to these proposals, beyond pointing out that when the legislation was initiated it was for the purpose of taking care of small country level crossings.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. BENNETT: It was not contemplated that large and rich communities should be assisted by the fund. I recall that the late Judge Mabee when chief commissioner of the railway board was very careful to see that only the smaller communities that could not afford the luxury of large expenditures with respect to grade separation were assisted out of the grade crossing fund. I have never been able to understand why this fund has not been availed of to the extent that it should be. Hardly a month goes by that we do not see in the newspapers accounts of fatal level crossing accidents. From what the minister says there must be at least half a million dollars out of the fund available, earmarked by the country, in addition to the statutory votes which would have been available had the board been requested to take action. I recall only one case in which the late Chief Commisioner Mabee recommended that money should be made available from the fund to assist a small country community in Alberta to provide a subway as against a level crossing. It will be recalled by hon. members that automatic bell signals have been installed at some of these level crossings. I fear the existing legislation may be used to divert this sum between now and 1929, when the present legislation expires, to large undertakings involving contributions of $40,000 or $100,000 from the fund. I cannot think the country understands that the fund is available. Only some five hundred odd cases have been dealt with in a period of nearly nineteen years, or about thirty a year, and the total sum expended amounts, as the minister has just said, to less than a million and a half dollars.

Mr. DUNNING: $1,300,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to know whether any large expenditures are contemplated such as I have referred to. I think the fund should be used in providing protection or separation of crossings in small communities where fatal accidents occur far too frequently.

Mr. DUNNING: I will deal with that feature when the bill is in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought we should have some assurance that the minister has no specific cases in mind in putting through legislation for the purpose of assisting the larger communities, but that we could make it our business to say to the smaller communities interested that they could have a portion of the fund for their purposes. I know that there are portions of Alberta in the constituency of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) in which a substantial number of level crossings might be greatly aided by this fund. This is the only observation that I have to make with respect to this experiment—because it is only an experiment, inasmuch as the legislation expires in 1929.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Railway grade crossing fund.

Mr. DUNNING: The point raised by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)—the point with which as minister I am most concerned—is the endeavour to work out something which would enable the legislation to be really effective for the purpose for which it was originally designed. There is one possible explanation as to why the grade crossing fund has not been more widely utilized by the smaller municipal communities, and that is the fact, as a reference to section 262 will show, that the principle is laid down that in connection with crossings which came into existence after 1909 the railway company assumes the whole of the responsibility except where a highway comes into existence after the railway is built. That brings about the condition that the grade crossing fund really is not made to apply in very many cases to railway crossings which came into existence after 1909. There is in the present statute, however, an exception—that the railway companies may enter into agreements with the municipality. The bill now before the committee proposes that in cases where crossings came into existence even after 1909, in the event of the railway company making an agreement with the municipality, the grade crossing fund may in future contribute towards the cost of such crossings. That is quite a broadening of the application of the fund as compared with the former condition referred to by the leader of the opposition. In western Canada, in the locality to which my hon. friend refers particularly, there are of course a very large number of crossings which came into existence after 1909. In fact, one might almost say that the majority of the crossings in western Canada came into existence after that date.

Mr. BENNETT: Not dangerous level crossings where there are old trails.

Mr. DUNNING: But in many cases new villages have sprung up and grown into towns since 1909, and crossings which at first were not considered by anyone to carry any considerable element of danger are now subject to increased traffic. The increase in traffic, and the change in character of the traffic, have altered completely the whole problem during the course of the years since 1909. In future, then, under the legislation now proposed, in any case in connection with crossings constructed since 1909, in which the railway company and the municipality come to any agreement, the Board of Railway Commissioners may make a contribution from the grade crossing fund. This formerly was not possible.

With regard to the large communities, I know the leader of the opposition will be surprised when I tell him that even under the existing statute the major contributions in the past two or three years have been to the city of Toronto, even with the $25,000 limitation and the 40 per cent limitation as well. A considerable number of grade separations have taken place in the city of Toronto during the past few years, and that city has been wise enough to take advantage of the $25,000 per crossing. Some of the municipalities have also taken advantage of it, although not to the extent that we could desire. There is of course another reason, which hon. gentlemen representing rural communities particularly in the west will appreciate, why even with the $25,000 limitation it has not been possible for rural municipalities to avail themselves of this legislation to any considerable degree. That reason is this: that even one subway in a municipality represents, for a rural community, a very large contribution, notwithstanding that 40 per cent of the cost is borne by the grade crossing fund and another proportion by the railway itself. Add to this the further fact, to which I have referred, that crossings built since 1909 have not up to now received any benefit from the fund, and you will probably have an explanation as to why the fund has not been utilized to a greater extent.

There is another limitation to which I referred on the second reading—a limitation which it is difficult for me to understand. I refer to the four-track limitation. Even out in the country, or adjacent to villages, there are very many places where more than four tracks are involved in a very dangerous level crossing and which at the present time could not under any circumstances benefit from the grade crossing fund. I am proposing in the bill to eliminate that four-track limitation and to leave it to the good judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners as to whether in any particular case six or eight or any number of tracks shall be considered by them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise at this stage not so much to criticize the bill as to suggest to the minister that if he is broadening the operation of the fund to the extent he indicates, then within a year or two there will be no fund left. This is a danger which I am rather inclined to think he has overlooked. With regard to these small rural communities, is not this fund intended to provide them with warnings like automatic bells, gates and so forth?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then if, within a year or so, the fund were used up and these small towns were without any supply of proper warning signals, they might find themselves in a different situation. To the various reasons given by the minister for the restricted use of the fund by western municipalities in the past, I may add that of ignorance of its being available. In my opinion most of them were not aware of the existence of the fund. The secretary of a municipality may have received a copy of the act and filed it away, and when any railway crossing problem arose no one in the council ever dreamed of such a fund as this. It could not therefore be taken advantage of. If the existence of the fund and its availability were made known to the municipalities in the constituency of my hon. friend from Macleod, or in Peace River and other places where there are crossing problems, I have no doubt the minister would find the raids on the fund a good deal more frequent than they are at the present time. I would ask the minister, particularly with regard to the increasing of the amount from $25,000 to $100,000 and the broadening of the application of the act to include six, eight and ten lines of tracks, involving the larger communities, whether he does not think that within a short time the fund will be consumed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under the statute is there not a constant building up of this fund?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that is the point.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why has it been allowed to drop?

Mr. DUNNING: I will try to deal with those two points together. On the second reading of the bill I mentioned that until 1909 the actual deposition of the money was carried on. There was at that time a considerable accrual in the fund, and the government of the day decided that nothing more should be allowed to accumulate until the then existing fund was used. That fund has lasted until to-day, and $600,000 still remains. However, I should point out to my hon. friend from Lincoln that the $600,000 actually in the fund does not represent the limit of what is available. Under the law $2,600,000 is available, representing in addition to the $600,000 remaining some $2,000,000 of accruals since that time, which the Minister of Finance would be called upon by the Board of Railway Commissioners to pay.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Under the statute.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. Now with reference to the point made by my hon. friend from Bow River, I think the chief reason is not so much that suggestion of ignorance to which he referred, because the railways themselves are very much alive to it. Whenever a grade crossing problem arises in any section of the country the first thing the railways do is find out whether by any chance the grade crossing fund could be made applicable. The reason is that it is limited to crossings constructed prior to 1909, and the great change which will take place is to make available the grade crossing fund to crossings constructed after 1909 but only in cases where the municipality agrees to contribute. We are not in any sense removing the responsibility which rests upon the railway in cases where the railway is junior to the highway or upon the highway where it is junior to the railway, but by this bill we are saying that if the two agree to do the job, they may get a contribution from the grade crossing fund. In that way I am hoping to make it applicable to a much larger number of the crossings which have come into existence since 1909.

Mr. CANTLEY: If the minister will look into the history of this legislation I think he will find that with reference to four-track crossings the underlying idea is that when the railway occupies the space of four tracks it should look after the crossing. We have crossings over six, eight or ten tracks, and in those cases manifestly the railway should protect the crossings. When there is only a single or double track the case is a little different. I am quite sure that is the underlying principle, and I think upon reflection the minister will agree with me. As far as the accumulation of that fund is concerned, I am afraid the difficulty is that we have not been advertising it; many sections of the country are not aware that these contributions may be made. I think there are hundreds of crossings throughout the country in connection with which the municipalities would take advantage of that legislation if they were aware of it.

Mr. DUNNING: There is one point which will perhaps clarify for my hon. friend what I have in mind. There are very many crossings in the country of four tracks or more where the railway is senior to the highway; that is to say, the railway was there first, and in such a case it is a general principle of law that the highway must pay for the crossing. When the highway is there first it is a general principle of law that the railway must pay for the crossing, and in the newer sections of the country in particular there are cases in connection with rapidly extending cities or towns which are entered by country roads where crossings have been made necessary by developments which have taken place since the construction of the railway. In those cases the railways urge the old principle that he who is there first has rights which come first. It is true that the railway commission have very wide powers, and I am not laying down this principle of seniority as an absolutely fixed principle, but in general it is well known that he who is there first has rights for which he who comes second must pay if he desires to cross.

Mr. CANTLEY: Let us finish this out. What the minister suggests is true; in many cases the railway was there first, but perhaps with only a single track. Due to the growth of the town and of the railway accommodation necessary to meet that growth, the tracks have been extended to two, four, six, eight, or perhaps ten. I submit to the minister that these conditions should be met by new regulations.

Mr. GEARY: Apparently the minister is not aware of the practice of the board of railway commissioners. As far as seniority goes, when the seniority belongs to the highway the board of railway commissioners laid down the principle long ago that this does not apply. They are inclined to apply it when the railway is senior, but where the municipality with its highway is senior you get very little comfort from the present board of railway commissioners. There is no question about that at all. As I understood it, the bill which the minister is now introducing in place of the old regulation provides that in cases of crossings which have come into existence since 1909, where there is an agreement under which the municipality undertakes to pay a share of the cost of construction, a contribution may be made from the grade crossing fund.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: I think upon a little reflection the minister will see that that is not fair. A crossing which existed in 1909 later requires protection; travel either over the railway or the highway has increased so much that protection becomes necessary. It has been the policy of the railway commission for many years to be very niggardly in ordering contributions from the fund, with the result that the fund has accumulated, but of late years they have seen a little more reason and contributions have been larger and more frequent. However, this situation arises: The road allowance has been crossed by the railway since 1909; that road allowance may not be paved and may not be even a road. In very few cases is there an agreement between the municipality and the railway as to the future protection of that crossing when protection becomes necessary, so your bill would apply in only a very few cases. That some crossing, which has come into existence since 1909, later becomes a crossing where danger exists; the road becomes paved and travelled; the automobile traffic makes it a road which must be protected. In such a case you are going to prevent the board from making any contribution from the grade crossing fund under the terms of the bill, because it says that you can make a contribution only where there was an agreement between the railway and the municipality at the time whereby the municipality agreed to assume a share of the cost of protection.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think that is right.

Mr. GEARY: That was the way the resolution read.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not so in the bill; the resolution was necessarily a condensation of the bill. With reference to that point I would say that in the first place I did have in mind presenting to the house the suggestion that the grade crossing fund might be made to contribute to any crossing whether it was constructed prior to 1909 or since, and I expected to meet the contention, which would have been sound, that thereby we would be relieving the railway companies of a responsibility which is now theirs under the existing law. Under the present law the railway companies are held to be responsible, subject only to these variations which have to do with the question of which is senior, the highway or the railway. I thought it would be broadening matters considerably if in connection with crossings built after 1909, wherever an agreement, say, is made now between the railway and the municipality, not having been entered into when the crossing was built, we should permit the grade crossing fund to contribute. If we broadened it to apply to all crossings I can assure the committee we would need a much larger contribution to the grade crossing fund than parliament has been making up to the present time. A statement was made as to the likelihood of the fund disappearing in a very short time as a result of these amendments. I would say in reply to that that this fund was instituted for the purpose of building grade crossings, and whereas parliament intended that $4,000,000 should have been expended to date in this work, as an actual fact only $1,300,000 has been expended. Parliament has been setting money aside not for the purpose of accumulating a fund but in order to help solve the grade crossing problem, which has become more acute from year to year. Municipalities have not been taking advantage of the fund, but these provisions are designed quite frankly to bring about a spending of the money for the purposes for which the grade crosing fund was created. Perhaps the criticism is sound that the raising of the limit to $100,000 is too much. But I have had many consultations with the Board of Railway Commissioners during this year regarding the matter, and this is the outcome of a careful examination made not only by myself and the officials of the department but also by the Board of Railway Commissioners and their staff. May I remind the committee that I made that examination as the result of a debate which took place in this house last year and in the course of which complaint was made on all sides that the grade crossing fund was not being made use of. I undertook that during the recess there an examination would be made by the Department of Railways as to the reasons, and undertook to come down this session with legislation which would tend to broaden the operation of the grade crossing fund and if possible increase its use. This is the result of the undertaking I gave to the house a year ago in this regard, and it is the best thought of myself as well as of those who have been most closely connected with the administration of the law, and who are decidedly in favour of a solution of the level crossing difficulty. Important labour bodies, including the locomotive and train men, have taken a very keen interest in this legislation; they have studied it and have intimated to me that in their view a decided improvement can be brought about by the distribution of the fund under the terms of the bill now before the committee.

Mr. GEARY: Clause 1 of the bill enacts a new section 262. At the end of the first page these words occur:

> The board shall not apply any moneys out of the railway grade crossing fund towards the cost of the actual construction work, for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of any existing crossing (railway crossing of a highway or highway crossing of a railway), at rail level, constructed after the first day of April, one thousand nine hundred and nine, unless and except an agreement, approved of by the board, has been entered into between the company and a municipal or other corporation or person by which agreement the municipal or other corporation or person has agreed with the company to bear a portion of the cost of the actual construction work for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of such crossing

Now the minister will see that that is exactly what I said. Suppose a crossing has come into existence since the first day of April, 1909, affecting probably not a made road but a laid out road; in not one case out of a thousand, I have no doubt, has the railway agreed to contribute to the construction of that crossing.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend refer to an agreement made when the railway was built?

Mr. GEARY: Yes, that is my point. A railway runs its line across a road allowance. When the time comes for the protection of that crossing, what the minister says is that at that time the municipality and the railway shall get together and make an agreement whereby the municipality agree to pay some part of the cost. If they do make an arrangement of that sort and the allocation of the cost then comes before the railway board, the board may order a contribution to the fund. But can you imagine any such case arising? By this bill a municapility may be driven into making an agreement in regard to a crossing in a case where it expects that being senior and the law being in its favour it can escape making a contribution. The minister has said that the municipality cannot receive a contribution unless it makes an agreement to contribute, while it hopes at the same time that it shall not be called upon to make a contribution.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely my hon. friend has not read the existing law. Section 260, which is not affected by the present bill says:

In any case where a railway is constructed after the nineteenth day of May, one thousand nine hundred and nine, the company shall, at its own cost and expense, unless and except as otherwise provided by agreement, approved by the board, between the company and a municipal or other corporation or person, provide, subject to the order of the board, all protection, safety and convenience for the public in respect of any crossing of a highway by the railway.

Therefore the present law is that the onus is entirely on the railway company with respect to crossings coming into existence after 1909, but they may make an agreement with the municipality. I did not think parliament would want to get into the position of relieving the railways of any portion of that liability under section 260, but I did and I do think parliament would agree, in case a municipality deems it important enough in its own interest to agree to pay some part of such a crossing, that the grade crossing fund might properly be asked to contribute. I should point out that at present no contribution from the grade crossing fund is possible with respect to any crossing built after 1909. If I understand my hon. friend's view correctly, he would have that condition continued and the responsibility left wholly upon the railway companies.

Mr. GEARY: No, left on the railway board to order a contribution, with a fund out of which a contribution could be made by the Dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend then advocates that the responsibility should be removed from the railway companies—

Mr. GEARY: No.

Mr. DUNNING: —to the extent that even in a case where the municipality is contributing nothing, where the railway company is discharging merely its legal liability under section 260, he would have the state contribute to the railway company for the purpose of constructing the crossing.

Mr. GEARY: No, because it will be found that, despite section 260, protection is rarely ordered in respect of crossings constructed since 1909. That is the point I am making.

Mr. COOTE: What action will be necessary by a municipality to secure a grant from this fund for the creation of a subway or elevated crossing or for the erection of any other method of protection at a crossing, in regard to crossings both before and after, but principally before, 1909?

Mr. DUNNING: I fear that in answering these questions I shall come under the lash of the leader of the opposition for posing as an authority. Least of all do I desire to pose as a legal authority in matters of this sort or, indeed, of any sort. I know a member of the legal profession is an expert in connection with all other professions and I am not a member of that distinguished body. I can answer only as a layman and, of course, as the minister responsible for the bill. I hope my hon. friend will not take any legal advice I may give him as being necessarily sound; but I would say that a letter from any municipality to the Board of Railway Commissioners would bring back definite information as to the method to be pursued, having regard to the circumstances surrunding the particular crossing—for instance, whether it came into existence before 1909 and whether the railway or the highway was there first. When I say "highway" I do not mean a constructed highway but a road allowance dedicated and set aside as a highway. All these things could be developed; but in general one might say that at the present time where a crossing has come into existence prior to 1909, the first motion on the part of a municipality would be to apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners for an order compelling the railway company to undertake the necessary grade separation or other protection. That would be the procedure prior to 1909, but I presume the municipality will have a lawyer and can get advice from someone more reliable than myself in matter of legal opinion.

Mr. COOTE: I am much obliged for the opinion. In case the railway commission decided that some protection should be provided, what share, if any, would the municipality be called upon to contribute in regard to a crossing in existence prior to 1909? Does the act state that?

Mr. DUNNING: No; that is within the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners. I had a review made of cases that have come before the board in order to endeavour so far as I could to establish some general principle, but there was so much variation in the conditions prevailing as to make it impossible to say, as a result of that study, that a certain definite principle was applied. In general, however, the railway commission say that the cost shall be assessed against the junior party to such crossing, but this rule is subject to variation where the necessity for the protection work is largely due to the increased traffic of the senior party over the crossing. That enters into the calculation and into the judgments that have been given in this regard. I take that to mean this in a specific case: Suppose you have a road allowance in existence prior to 1909, and a railway in existence over it prior to 1909, but in 1909 the road allowance was not used at all; it was not a highway. Only recently, by reason of growth of traffic, has it become an effective source of danger. That factor is taken into account by the board in its determinations in relation to crossings in existence before 1909. It must be remembered that after 1909 section 260 governs the situation.

Mr. COOTE: I ask the question for this reason: There are quite a number of crossings that are really dangerous, some of them on highways to which the Dominion government has contributed. The municipalities, if they knew of the existence of this legislation and the possibility of having some contribution made, would at least be interested in the matter, and I am endeavouring to get from the minister some information which will be of assistance to them. Could the minister tell us—and if he cannot tell us he can say where we can get the information—what different types of protection may be erected at grade crossings, that is, gates and bell installations. He might also state whether these gates are automatic or whether they must have a man to operate them.

Mr. DUNNING: Subsection (4) of section 1 of this bill reads:

> In this section "crossing" means any railway crossing of a highway, or any highway crossing of a railway, at rail level, and every manner of construction of the railway or of the highway by the elevation or the depression of the one above or below the other, or by the diversion of the one or the other and any other work ordered by the board to be provided as one work of protection, safety and convenience for the public in respect of one or more railways of as many tracks crossing or so crossed as in the discretion of the board determined.

That means, first, a subway; second, a bridge; third, the elimination of a square corner which crosses the railway twice by providing a road diversion along the railway; fourth, any other works for the protection of a railway crossing, for instance, gates, signals, and so forth.

Mr. EVANS: I am glad this question has come up in parliament this year. Level crossings constitute a tremendous problem, and if we are going to solve it by the construction of subways only, an immense amount of money and a great deal of time will be required, while tragedies will be going on in the meantime. It may be said that on the prairies the problem is not so acute because you can see a train in the distance, yet many tragedies occur there. It is quite often the case that a man who is drifting at an angle of sixty degrees or so to a railway has his fur collar drawn up over his ears and he cannot hear or see the train coming. I have known of serious accidents occurring from that very cause. I think we should give some consideration to the means of making these crossings throughout the country safe. It might be made the subject of research by scientific men. If it is a bell that is needed, that does not cost so much, but we should find out what is the best means at the least cost. Not only are lives lost, but I understand from engineers with whom I have been in conversation that after one or two such accidents they are hardly fit for the control of their train in the future. I have been told also by conductors and engineers that quite often a motorist will hit the second or third car, because so many people do the wrong thing when suddenly faced with danger. It seems to me that either a bell or a red light or both should be installed at practically every crossing. I do not think any provincial highway should be built without providing safe crossings, or having at least some warning device. This subject might well be placed before the research council with a view to finding out the very best means of making level crossings safe, and of having this fund applied to that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to subscribe to and endorse what my hon. friend from Rosetown has said. It is a problem that we must face sooner or later in the prairie provinces at any rate. While the most of our country there is level, a very slight difference in the elevation of the land will sometimes make a great difference in visibility. Just last week there was a very serious accident at Clair, in my constituency. An automobile was struck by a Canadian National train; one woman was instantly killed, the baby died in hospital two hours later, and the man is now lying in hospital and not expected to recover. While it is open prairie country at this place, the railway track is probably seven feet above the level of the ordinary land, and the person approaching the crossing finds his view more or less obscured by box cars standing on the siding. I can quite understand, because I have travelled over that road myself, how anyone might easily miss seeing the train at the crossing. To instal even an electric bell is quite an expense and quite a problem for the ordinary rural municipality. Even the cost of upkeep of some of these devices, I presume, would be quite considerable, and where the railway winds in and out, sometimes crossing the highway two or three times within a mile, it is indeed a problem. But sooner or later we must face this whole problem and try to find some appliance which will give the proper warning and be so reasonably cheap that the ordinary rural municipality can shoulder its share of the expense.

Mr. FRASER: I am thinking of an entirely different situation in British Columbia. Since 1909 both the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern have been built through that province. Heretofore we have not come under the operation of the act, but now it is proposed to bring under the operation of the act, to a certain extent, the railways constructed before 1909.

Mr. DUNNING: Wherever an agreement exists. In the case of British Columbia the province could enter into an agreement.

Mr. FRASER: Throughout the length of these railways there are no municipalities. It is all unorganizezd districts, and the province takes charge of the road work. I understand the minister to say that the province can enter into an arrangement to secure assistance from this fund?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Could recourse be had to the fund in the case of the building of new roads in these unorganized districts?

Mr. DUNNING: New crossings of highways?

Mr. FRASER: Yes. In my district a large program of construction is going on at the present time, with the roads paralleling and sometimes crossing the two railways I have mentioned. There may be quite a number of cases of that kind throughout the province, and I was wondering if the government of British Columbia could have recourse to the grade crossing fund in connection with crossings over these new highways.

Mr. DUNNING: If there was a sharing agreement between the authority, which in that case would be the province, and the railway, I would say yes, unquestionably. Of course, in the case mentioned by my hon. friend the highway would be junior to the railway and I could not attempt to say exactly how the board of railway commissioners would view the relationship of the province or the municipality, as the case may be, to the railway. But it is certain that under this legislation, if an agreement came into existence, they would be able to obtain the benefit of the fund.

Mr. FRASER: The province has never made application to get assistance from this fund?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that it is not in existence until we pass the bill.

Mr. FRASER: The fund has been in operation for quite a number of years, because the Canadian Pacific Railway was in operation before 1909, and all crossings on the Canadian Pacific would be entitled to the benefit of this fund.

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the details before me, but looking over the five hundred odd cases I find there were cases in British Columbia. As to what authority made the application through the eighteen years, I cannot say.

Mr. FRASER: But there were applications?

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly, and contributions have been made with regard to crossings in British Columbia. I do not think there is a province in the Dominion that has not received some assistance from the fund during its operation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the sole decision as to whether the safety device to be provided shall be a light or a bell or a subway rest with the board of railway commissioners?

Mr. DUNNING: My own interpretation of the statute—and again I speak with all deference to the lawyers present—would be that the board has the jurisdiction.

Mr. GEARY: That is the practice.

Mr. DUNNING: It is the practice to submit to the judgment of the board as to the type of device to be installed.

Mr. BENNETT: On the report of their engineers.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No matter what safety devices are provided, if it is a level crossing accidents will happen. The only safe crossing is the subway.

Mr. DUNNING: Or the bridge.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Why not have a greater number of them provided along the old highways crossing the old Grand Trunk? Is it a matter of economy? Should not the consideration of safety be the biggest factor in the decision?

Mr. DUNNING: That opens up a very real and a very wide question, the whole question of providing for safety at crossings, having regard to the tremendously changed conditions in recent years with respect to vehicular traffic. So serious has the problem become in the United States that in several of the states hundreds of millions of dollars have been expended by the state in order to deal with it.

Mr. BENNETT: Especially in the middle west.

Mr. DUNNING: Especially in the states of the middle west, which are perhaps more analogous in topography to our own western country. I can assure the house that this is but a very small start on the railway crossing problem in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Like the beautification of Ottawa.

Mr. DUNNING: With reference to what my hon. friend so properly suggested just a moment ago, and also the members for Rosetown and Mackenzie, I should state this. The member for Kingston touched upon it when he said, no matter what form of protection you have, short of grade separation, you are going to have accidents. That is borne out by the fact that last year in Canada seventy-five automobiles hit the sides of moving trains—the sides; they ran into the trains instead of the trains running into them. Several of those accidents were fatal. I have not at hand information as to the number of gates that were carried away by motors, but several hundred cases occurred last year. That illustrates the point made by the member for Kingston, that so far as our present knowledge goes it appears that nothing is effective except complete grade separation. But I do think we are making a real advance in the use of this fund as now proposed. After all, it is intended as an encouragement to the parties responsible, the railways on the one hand and the municipalities on the other, by way of contribution from the fund accumulated to develop further works of every kind by way of protection or grade separation.

But I must say that the observation of my hon. friend from Kingston conflicts with the opinion expressed by the leader of the opposition at the opening of this discussion, that it is desirable to apply the assistance of this fund to as many crossings as possible in country districts. That protection of course in most cases takes the form of gates, lights or bells, instead of grade separation. I am personally of the view, having regard to the experience we are having at the present time, that the more of this fund we devote to actual grade separation the better, even if as the years go by we have to ask parliament to put up a more substantial contribution in order to enable the work to be continued. In Nova Scotia and some other of the eastern provinces very valuable work is being done in the form of road diversion; that is, where the railway cuts across a winding road twice in a short distance one of the crossings is eliminated by diverting the road. This work is being studied both by the railway engineers and the technical men of the railway commission as a means of dealing with the situation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Occasionally the danger at a level crossing is increased by obstructing the view. I know a case where a lumber company put up a house at the corner of a very dangerous crossing. Is this covered by the bill?

Mr. DUNNING: Section 258 of the Railway Act, not touched by this bill, reads as follows:

> The board shall, without limiting any general power elsewhere conferred, have power, for the purpose of diminishing the danger at any highway crossing with any railway heretofore or hereafter constructed, to order
> (a) that any trees, buildings, earth or other obstruction to the view, which may be upon the railway, or the highway or any trees on any adjoining lands, shall be removed;
> (b) that nothing obstructing the view shall be placed at such crossing or nearer thereto than the board designates;
> and for any such purpose the board shall have power to authorize or direct the expropriation of any land, the acquirement of any easement and the doing of anything deemed necessary, and shall have power to fix and order payment of such compensation as it deems just.

It would appear that the board has power to deal with obstruction of view either on the railway or the highway.

Mr. GEARY: At the expense of the crossing.

Mr. DUNNING: Section 258 does not say so. It gives the board power to order.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Two cases have come to my knowledge where a coroner's jury drew the matter to the attention of somebody, but nothing was done. In one of those cases another accident has since happened.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the onus would be on the municipalities to take action; they are the bodies most intimately concerned.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister take this into consideration? Prima facie, any crossing coming into existence after 1909, as the minister has indicated, is at the expense of the railway. This proposed section is entirely in ease of the railway. If the crossing requires protection, by separation or otherwise, the board should order the protection and put the cost on the railway, where it belongs under section 260. Now you are tempting the railway board to resist the demand of a municipality for protection at a crossing by saying to them: We can give you a contribution towards this protection out of the grade crossing fund, but you must first go to the railway and make an agreement whereby you will assume a portion of the cost; whereas under the law you are not bound to contribute anything towards that cost.

Mr. DUNNING: Since we have got to understand what was in each other's mind I have been thinking of that. The answer is simply this: There are of course cases since 1909, as I mentioned before, where, while the highway is senior so far as dedication is concerned, yet it is in fact junior so far as use is concerned.

Mr. GEARY: Trust the railway board to get out of recognizing any seniority for a municipality.

Mr. DUNNING: In such cases the railway board cannot order the municipality to pay anything under the existing law. Neither has the board power to contribute anything towards the protection of such a crossing; but the board may, and in operation frequently does, vary the general rule to the extent of not making an order against the railway company where it appears to the board that there should be some responsibility upon the municipality owing to the circumstances. I am informed that that has been the view of each succeeding chairman of the board with respect to variations which necessarily occur in the administration of this act over so wide a territory and so many thousand miles of railway.

Mr. MILLAR: Are any figures available to indicate whether or not accidents are more numerous at double-track than at single-track crossings? I recall a terrible accident that took place because the driver of a car containing some five or six people believed he was approaching a single-track crossing. There were two freight trains passing, one going east, the other west. He waited until the westbound train had passed and then drove his car on the track just in front of the eastbound freight. The engine of the train travelling east had blown the whistle but the two engines were close together and in that way the accident occurred, causing the loss of three lives, I believe.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not aware of any statistics which indicate a distinction between double track and single track crossings. I can inquire and let my hon. friend know.

Mr. VENIOT: In provinces where municipalities have nothing to do with highways, clear of cities and towns, what is the form of co-operation?

Mr. DUNNING: The province has charge.

Mr. KAISER: In all these cases where accidents have occurred and crossings are dangerous there is one outstanding difficulty: who shall make application to the railway board? The municipalities hesitate because they are under the impression that if they ask for protection the board will take the view that they should pay in proportion to the degree in which they require the protection. In my opinion there should be some automatic means by which the more dangerous crossings where accidents occur shall be taken care of. I have in mind two or three crossings in my own constituency where accidents have occurred not once but repeatedly. The municipality is afraid to go before the board for fear the board will ask it to pay more than it should. I contend that where an inquest has taken place the findings of the coroner should be forwarded to the board and some investigation automatically ensue, to determine to what extent such a crossing is dangerous and what should be done in the circumstances.

Mr. DUNNING: That suggestion is in practice now; the railway commission investigates every accident of that description. But as to evolving any automatic method whereby the proportion of cost could be predetermined, without such judicial hearing as the board brings to bear, I am afraid my hon. friend is setting me a task I cannot accomplish. I do not think it would be possible. I believe the judicial hearing before the board is the only way of determining the matter. The circumstances vary so widely from one end of Canada to the other that I do not think any rule could be laid down. But it is an absurdity to presume, as some municipalities de presume, according to my hon. friend, that the board will be influenced in the amount they assess against the municipality by the fact that the municipality has applied for the crossing. I do not think there is any foundation at all for that impression. While I recognize that my hon. friend has knowledge of the particular case to which he has referred. I can only assure him that there is no foundation whatever for any such idea.

Mr. KAISER: It has prevailed in two cases I know of. In one instance—the crossing at the Grand Trunk Railway station going out of Oshawa—the question has been discussed for three or four years of providing a subway. The railway is endeavouring to get the municipality to make the application, and vice versa.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Do I understand the minister to say that this is available in a case where a provincial highway crosses a railway?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, on the same terms as any other crossing.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): In the older provinces the old act would apply to most crossings.

Mr. DUNNING: To quite a proportion.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I have in mind a crossing on provincial highway number two in Ontario, the main highway from Toronto to Windsor, where last fall there was a serious accident. The municipality tried to get a subway and it seemed that the railway board were reluctant about granting it. Every few years there is a serious accident there. Nearly every year someone is injured and probably every three or four years someone is killed at that crossing. The crossing was straightened this year and a warning bell put in. It does seem to me that on a provincial highway, where the traffic is as great as that, some pressure should be brought to bear to have a subway provided. I know that this municipality is very much disappointed that a subway has not been secured, because the traffic is very dense on that particular highway. It is one of the most heavily travelled highways in Ontario.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the railway resist it?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I could not say.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister give the number of applications made, and state what has been done?

Mr. DUNNING: I have given that information twice already.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But the minister must admit that along the Grand Trunk alone there are dozens of highways on which people are killed every summer, and nothing is done.

Mr. DUNNING: I must say that this legislation, no matter how we shape it, cannot possibly eliminate all level crossings, and wherever there is a level crossing someone will be killed sooner or later. That is axiomatic. I cannot promise that this is any more than it purports to be, an effort to make more elastic certain provisions which have been in the law for eighteen years, and to enable money to be expended which up to now the law has not been sufficiently elastic to permit to be spent for the purpose intended. I am not in a position as minister to discuss individual cases. I do not know the circumstances referred to by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Fansher), but he might himself find out, from the records in the office of the Board of Railway Commissioners, just why it was in that particular case that an order was not made. The information is public and is readily available to him. If the board set out to order a subway at every crossing in Canada where a fatal accident has occurred, they would soon break our railways. The railways could not stand the cost.

Mr. KAISER: Are all accidents reported to the board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. KAISER: What is the use of getting the reports unless something is done?

Mr. DUNNING: They investigate every case. That is the law.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. DUNNING: Report progress, Mr. Chairman; the clock is striking eleven. I shall have to bring the matter back again.

Progress reported.

At 11 o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

SICKNESS AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE

Mr. F. W. HAY (North Perth) presented the sixth report of the selecting standing committee on banking and commerce, as follows:

In obedience to an order of the house dated 27th March, 1928, your committee have considered the following resolution of the house, viz:

"That the select standing committee on banking and commerce be instructed to investigate and report on the operations of companies carrying on sickness and accident insurance business in Canada."

and herewith submit a copy of the evidence taken in respect thereto.

It is expected that the Insurance Act will be amended next session. Your committee, therefore, recommend that the superintendent of insurance be instructed to draft amendments in keeping with the facts adduced, for incorporation in a general amending act to the Insurance Act.

MONTREAL UNDERGROUND TERMINAL

Mr. E. C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga) moved:

That the petition of Seraphim Ouimet and others, praying for an act of incorporation under the name of the Montreal Underground Terminal Company, presented this day, be referred to the select standing committee on standing orders, for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing order 92 in relation thereto.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I shall submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I would point out that the time for the presenting of petitions has already elapsed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Goodison, seconded by Mr. Smith (Stormont) that the following bills be now read a first and second time, and referred to the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills:

Bill No. 232, for the relief of Richard Thomas Bell.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 233, for the relief of Albert Cheney.—Mr. White (Mount Royal).

Bill No. 234, for the relief of Katharine Adriance Burruss Christie.—Mr. Wilson (Wentworth).

Bill No. 235, for the relief of Nellie Cohen.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 236, for the relief of Louis Cowell.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 237, for the relief of Wesley Thornton Davidson.—Mr. Harris.

Bill No. 238, for the relief of Orfie Earl Dingman.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 239, for the relief of Edith Alice Douglas.—Mr. Pettit.

Bill No. 240, for the relief of Radford Alonzo Dunfield.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 241, for the relief of Reuben James Fenton.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 242, for the relief of Jane Annie Field.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 243, for the relief of Charles Edward Frank.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 244, for the relief of Bernice Gatehouse.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 245, for the relief of Harriet Elizabeth Roussie Gray.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 246, for the relief of Thomas Haggith.—Mr. Kay.

Bill No. 247, for the relief of Ellen May Collison Keene.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 248, for the relief of Henry Peet.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 249, for the relief of Leon Proulx.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 250, for the relief of Dorothea Wilhelmina Reynolds.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 251, for the relief of Violet Robinson.—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 252, for the relief of Susan Amelia Saunders.—Mr. Lang.

Bill No. 253, for the relief of Agnes Georgiana Smith.—Mr. Geary.

Bill No. 254, for the relief of Walter Edgar Soule.—Mr. Thorson.

Bill No. 255, for the relief of Phoebe Ellen Stevens.—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 256, for the relief of Thomas William Storey.—Mr. Bothwell.

Bill No. 257, for the relief of Samuel Wellington Thompson.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 258, for the relief of John Edwin Timson.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

Bill No. 259, for the relief of Jennie Campbell.—Mr. Geary.

Motion agreed to, on division.

COCHRANE POSTMASTER—CORRESPONDENCE TABLED

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): On motions, I wish to bring up the question of the letter which was referred to by me last night in discussing the matter of harbour commissions. I stated that that letter had been written by the hon. the present leader of the opposition, and he demanded that I produce the letter.

Mr. BENNETT: I said, lay it on the table. The rules require it.

Mr. VENIOT: I am going to do that if the hon. gentleman will just give me time. I have before me the original file, and I also have a copy of the letter. As I understand that, under the order of motions, when motions or requests are made for papers, it is generally copies that are produced, and as I do not wish the original file to go out of my possession, I am going to lay on the table a copy of that letter, which reads as follows:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, April 3, 1912.

The Honourable L. P. PELLETIER, K.C.,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. PELLETIER,

Please appoint Andrew Chapman Postmaster at Cochrane, Alberta, in the place and stead of Fisher, the present incumbent, who has been an active partisan, being, in fact, the brother of the Speaker of the Liberal legislature of Alberta, under whose auspices the office is being conducted.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd) R. B. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any trouble about that?

Mr. VENIOT: No trouble about it.

OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Referring to the answer given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) yesterday, in reply to a question regarding the grant to the Olympic games, I notice that the sum of $26,000 was paid to the committee last year, and that no accounting is made to the government, or expected by them, of how this money is expended. I would ask the Minister of Finance if he would be good enough to have inquiries made as to what proportion of this grant is going to be given towards assisting the New Westminster lacrosse team to go to Amsterdam.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave yesterday referred to the grant voted by parliament last year. The same procedure is followed as in regard to grants to the Boy Scouts, Girl Guides and other organizations; my hon. friend will notice several in the miscellaneous items of the estimates. But I shall now direct the attention of the treasurer of the Canadian Olympic committee, to whom the money was paid, that members of parliament desire details of the expenditure. This information I will table as soon as I receive it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: We want to see that lacrosse is properly taken care of.

Mr. ROBB: That is reasonable.

GREENLY ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE

SUGGESTED SALARY INCREASE OF KEEPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the government to the fact that the lighthouse keepers on Greenly island who entertained the trans-Atlantic fliers are being paid only $2,100 a year, out of which three families have to subsist. Will not the government now consider granting them a little higher salary?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think my hon. friend may assume that his suggestion will receive every consideration.

[Mr. Veniot.]

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to inquire of the right hon. Prime Minister whether or not application has been made by the Beauharnois power interests to have determined the principles upon which the waters of the St. Lawrence are to be diverted from their present channel into a canal.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not know of such an application, but I should not like my reply to be regarded as final.

HALIFAX HARBOUR COMMISSION

LOAN OF $500,000 FOR TERMINAL FACILITIES

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the third reading of Bill No. 217 to provide for a loan to the Halifax harbour commissioners.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I desire formally to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether or not the undertaking which he was good enough to give the other evening with respect to the Quebec harbour commission bill will apply to this measure and as well to the St. John measure.

Mr. CARDIN: Absolutely.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

TORONTO TERMINALS RAILWAY

The house resumed from April 20 consideration in committee of Bill No. 204 respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company—Mr. Dunning—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING: I think, Mr. Chairman, the committee had practically completed its consideration of this bill, which contains only one section, and which has already been passed upon by the special committee having to do with railways and shipping. I think we may regard section 1 as carried.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

APPLICATION OF MONEYS FROM GRADE CROSSING FUND

The house resumed from April 26 consideration in committee of Bill No. 220 to amend the Railway Act—Mr. Dunning—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On Section 1—Railway grade crossing fund.

Mr. DUNNING: We were still on section 1 when the house adjourned last night, Mr. Chairman. I think probably the discussion had proceeded not as far as the members of the committee desired. I shall be glad to deal with any further questions which may arise.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Does this bill contain any provision that would debar small towns or municipalities from making applications in the future for railway crossings?

Mr. DUNNING: Absolutely no. The intention of the amending bill is, as I explained last night, entirely in the opposite direction. There is certainly no greater restriction; on the contrary there is greater freedom to make application.

Mr. BOYS: Is it the intention that this should apply to maintenance as well as construction in the first instance?

Mr. DUNNING: The section reads "not including that of maintenance."

Mr. BOYS: This situation sometimes arises: there is a separation of grades, and perhaps under the terms of the agreement between the municipality and the railway company an overhead bridge is constructed. Twenty years later—as in the case I have in mind—it may be necessary to make substantial repairs. Why should there not be some allowance out of the fund to take care of such a situation? In the case to which I am referring the municipality is paying 50 per cent and the railway 50 per cent of the cost of separation. It seems to me that that would be an appropriate case for, say, a 40 per cent allowance from this fund, the balance to be borne equally by the railway and the municipality. If the legislation does not so apply—and I may say frankly that I understand it does not—does not the minister think it is a matter that might well receive consideration? I have thought the matter over, and I can see no reason why the fund should not apply to such a case.

Mr. DUNNING: As I intimated last night, I want to make more elastic the conditions under which the grade crossing fund is administered, in order to widen the use for which it was created. I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that grade separation is the real object in view. As long as there are so many thousands of dangerous crossings throughout the country to be dealt with, I am afraid that to so change the law as to make it apply to maintenance as well as construction would be going too far, having regard to the amount which parliament is annually voting for the fund at the present time. However, I should like to call attention to this: It is evident from the history of the fund that more than one contribution has been ordered with respect to the same crossing. Out of 520 crossings dealt with since the inception of the grade crossing fund, some 44 have been dealt with by more than one grant. I am advised that that second grant does not in any sense involve what my hon. friend has just pointed out, repairs to an existing structure, but rather a change in the character of the protection afforded. That is to say, there might be in the first place a wig-wag, for which ten years later gates might be substituted. I believe both the present statute and the amending bill would permit that.

Mr. BOYS: That is really construction.

Mr. DUNNING: That is really construction, but I do not believe that either the present act or the amending bill would permit maintenance charges, such as replanking a bridge, and so forth, to be entertained. Much as I sympathize with the position outlined by my hon. friend, I suggest we had better not widen the legislation to that extent. If the municipality is fortunate enough to have received, together with the railway company, a contribution to the extent of 40 per cent of the original cost, it is not so much of a burden to keep the structure in reasonable repair.

Mr. BOYS: Unfortunately that is not so in the case I have in mind, because the bridge in question was constructed before this fund was available. There has been no contribution whatever in connection with the construction, but it was thought proper, having in view the public safety, that the grade should be separated. It was separated and now the time for repair has arisen. Naturally therefore I was anxious to have the fund made applicable to a case of that kind. I can understand however that if it is not applicable to maintenance in any case it could not be made applicable here even if there was no allowance originally made for construction.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is there any provision for the deviation of a road to avoid a railway crossing altogether? I have in mind the approach to a town in my riding. Parry Sound, where there are seven crossings within a very short distance, all dangerous. I believe that if this act provided for a case of that kind a deviation could be made to avoid most of the crossings.

Mr. DUNNING: In the past, as I explained last evening, the fund has been used for the purpose of diversion, such as my hon. friend refers to, and the definitions contained in this amending section in no way alter that condition. In this section "crossing" means any railway crossing on a highway, or any highway crossing on a railway at rail level, and every manner of construction of the railway or of the highway, by elevation or depression of the one above or below the other, or by diversion of one or the other, and so forth.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is all right.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. ARTHURS: I understand the proportion contributed by the Dominion is 40 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Not exceeding 40 per cent.

Mr. ARTHURS: In any case where there might be two or three high bridges, or viaducts, required, and a deviation of the road might eliminate this necessity, would the minister be prepared to say that they should then limit themselves to 40 per cent on the deviation?

Mr. DUNNING: That raises a question which has occurred more or less frequently under the existing law, for the reason that there was a limitation on the number of crossings within one municipality to which the board might apply the funds in any one year. But that limitation has been removed. There is somewhere provision for the declaration by the board that the work is one work of safety. I cannot put my finger on the exact phraseology, but if my hon. friend will read the bill he will find somewhere that it is provided that any work may be declared by the board to be a single work of protection.

Mr. ARTHURS: The point I am trying to make is that a deviation might obviate three or four crossings.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, so long as the work is declared to be one work.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Will the bill make it compulsory for a municipality to make alterations intended in this legislation?

Mr. DUNNING: There is no compulsion involved in the bill. The power of the board remains exactly the same in that regard as it is to-day.

Mr. McGIBBON: How are the proportions arrived at which are contributed respectively by the municipality, the province and the railways? Is it by agreement?

Mr. DUNNING: That is within the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and dependent upon the circumstances of the particular case, having regard to the date at which the crossing came into existence and having regard also to which is senior, the railway or the highway. Many considerations are involved and they vary in particular cases. It is not possible to read through the board's rulings in various cases and arrive at anything which may be said to be an absolutely fixed principle applicable in all cases. This is one of the matters which the board must analyse in relation to the circumstances surrounding the particular crossing under review.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is subject to the railway board?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does not the minister think that there should be some rule established whereby, when the highway is senior to the railway, the railway company should be required to pay the whole cost of providing protection at the crossing, subject of course to any allowance being made out of the fund?

Mr. DUNNING: That point was dealt with last evening, and I can only refer my hon. friend to section 260 of the act. In any case where a railway has been constructed after the nineteenth day of May, 1909, the railway company shall at its own cost and expense, unless as otherwise provided by agreement, approved by the board, between the company and the municipal or other corporation or person, provide, subject to the order of the board, protection, safety and convenience for the public in crossing a highway by a railway. That is to say, in respect of all crossings which came into existence since 1909, the railway company is prima facie responsible for the protection there required. This is subject to exceptions, such for example as where a roadway was in existence on paper in 1909—that is to say, it was dedicated as a roadway—

Mr. BENNETT: A road allowance.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, a road allowance, as we call it in the west. In a subsequent year that road allowance is used and the railway company makes representations to the board that traffic has arisen in connection with that particular crossing which was not there and not contemplated when the railway was built. In such cases the board has not rigidly applied the rule that the railway must pay. The other rule then comes into operation, as to which is senior in point of fact and of operation. Another difficulty which I find in some cases, regardless of the time of construction of the crossing, is where the need for protection arises by reason of increased traffic over either the highway or the railway. In many instances the need arises through increased railway traffic not comtemplated when the crossing was instituted.

Mr. BENNETT: Broad street at Regina, for instance.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, Broad street at Regina is an excellent instance in point. It was increased traffic on the railway in that case which made necessary the work of protection, and in consequence the railway had to pay very much more than the proportion it would otherwise have been called upon to contribute. Then you have the possible case where the railway traffic remains substantially the same but where the highway traffic, due to the building, let us say, of a trunk highway, has increased materially.

Mr. BENNETT: As at Albert street, west of Regina.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that would be an instance. In that case the railway board takes into account the relations between the parties and adjudicates. In general I think it may be said that the administration by the Board of Railway Commissioners, under its successive chairmen, of this particular section of the law, has been about as satisfactory as such a piece of legislation in operation could be. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) suggests some general rule. I can assure him that if he reads through the acts and gets an idea of the very varied circumstances which obtain between crossings in different parts of Canada, he will find it as difficult as I do to attempt to apply any rigid general rule.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I have read through the cases, and in fact have taken part in some of them. I have found that generally the board will say, "Well, yes, we will give you the protection at this crossing but you will have to share the cost equally with the railway or you will have to pay all the expenses." That happens even when the highway is senior to the railway by a number of years, and it seems to me that some provision should be made whereby the board cannot give a ruling of that kind. I will admit that the Board of Railway Commissioners is an impartial body and tries to do its best, but at the same time it has come to be pretty much a board which stands for the protection of the railway companies, as far as I can see, more than for the protection of the public as it used to be. Consequently I suggest that the minister might consider the advisability of bringing in some legislation which would cover the matter in so many words, in order to leave no discretion to the Board of Railway Commissioners in dealing with that particular subject.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I cannot make my friend that promise; my study of this matter convinces me that such positiveness would tend to make an already difficult situation rather worse. Of course I appreciate the fact that in cases before the board the party who does not succeed is like the unsuccessful party in an ordinary lawsuit; usually he is not satisfied, and that is equally true of the railway companies. They have come to me and pointed out where grave injustices have been done to them in certain cases, but after balancing things up I think the board has administered this measure about as well as we could expect it to be looked after.

Mr. McQUARRIE: If they slowed down the trains at crossings it would be an entirely different matter, but as a general rule they do not do so. They go across the highways at a rather excessive speed in many cases, and that is where the difficulty arises. Possibly they could be compelled to moderate their speed if the matter were taken to court, but that is always a hazardous proceeding. As a general rule the danger exists because the railway operates trains along tracks which cross highways; the danger does not come from pedestrians or motorists running into trains.

Mr. DUNNING: Last night I gave the figures for last year; seventy-four motor cars ran into the sides of moving trains.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why did they do that? The trains must have been going too fast. That is the very point, but in any event it seems to me that the lives of motorists and pedestrians should be taken care of at these crossings to a greater extent than is the case at present. I know it is absolutely impossible to prevent some of these motorists from getting into accidents; I quite appreciate that fact, but the way it appeals to me is that the crossing is dangerous because of the operation of the railway trains. Therefore the railway companies should be compelled to provide the necessary signals and to take the necessary precautions to minimize the number of accidents in cases where the highway is senior to the railway.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister has informed the house that in connection with crossings constructed before 1909 the onus is upon the railway to provide the protection necessary for the safety of the public. I believe I am right in that?

Mr. DUNNING: Subject to the exception which I read.

Mr. ARTHURS: As a general principle that is true. On the other hand, the present act allows the Board of Railway Commissioners to give 40 per cent of the cost of improving the protection at railway crossings, and no more than 40 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: That does not apply to crossings constructed since 1909.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am not referring to those at the moment. I would like to ask the minister whether a deviation would be allowed for, and to what extent, by his department. In my riding I have a municipality which contains seven railway crossings within a distance of about three miles, all built subsequent to the highway which they cross. Manifestly it would be impossible for a small municipality to pay even 40 per cent of the cost of protecting those seven crossings.

Mr. DUNNING: The highway was there first?

Mr. ARTHURS: Yes, and I would suggest that the act be broadened out to take care of special cases of this kind where a railway, through the agency of its surveyors, has crossed a highway repeatedly within a very short distance. To some extent the municipality should be assisted in a special way.

Mr. DUNNING: I will not presume to give legal advice, but I am reasonably sure that such cases are already within the competence of the railway board. I am satisfied that that is the law, subject to the opinions of my legal friends.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to ask the minister a question, and I hope he will pardon me for doing so, because probably I should know all about it. However, I have not had time to study this bill. I understand that the grant is $200,000 a year?

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will that be sufficient to take care of the applications?

Mr. DUNNING: No; I would hope not. I will explain that to my hon. friend when he finishes his question.

Mr. McGIBBON: The point I wish to make is that we should enlarge the grant so that these death-traps throughout the country might be eliminated as quickly as possible, having in view the rapid increase in motor traffic.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I should have gone more fully over the discussion which took place last evening. The fact is that the fund has not been expended. In practice the provisions of the law have not proven sufficiently elastic for those interested to avail themselves of the assistance granted, with the result that there is still in the fund over $600,000 which was placed there prior to 1919 as earmarked money. In addition to that there is available, under statute, the accumulation of $200,000 for each year since 1919, making a total of about $2,600,000 available to the board. So we are in this position: Under the provisions of the law as it has existed we have only succeeded in spending about $1,300,000 in eighteen years, whereas parliament has provided $3,800,000 during that period. The whole object of this amending legislation, with its increase in the maximum from $25,000 to $100,000 for an individual crossing and the other loosening provisions, if I might so term them, is to make it possible for the fund to be used more generally for the purpose for which it was assigned. I might point out further to my hon. friend that in respect of the annual appropriation by parliament, under the original legislation of 1909 the annual statutory contribution of $200,000 applied for ten years. In 1919 that statutory appropriation was renewed for a further ten years, which means that it will expire in 1929. I am not in this bill proposing any extension of that, in the hope that during the year which is coming we shall get experience of the working of these amendments and have thereby a better idea of what to propose to parliament with respect to future grants. I may say that I do not hope, as I explained last night, that the grade crossing fund in anything like the proporions financially which we contribute to it annually will eliminate the level crossing difficulty in Canada. We must recognize that every level crossing of a highway by a railway or vice versa is a place where a fatality is liable to occur sooner or later.

Mr. BENNETT: How many thousands are there?

Mr. DUNNING: Tens of thousands of level crossings. I mentioned last night that in the United States some of the states are to-day spending up to hundreds of millions in protection and grade separation work, in co-operation with the railways; and it has been freely stated before the Interstate Commerce Commission that to apply rigidly the law as it exists in that country with respect to protection and grade separation would bankrupt the railways of the United States; that is to apply literally the true spirt of the law in forcing grade separation generally in every case. It has become an increasing problem, and of course the railways take the ground that the problem has assumed its more serious aspect largely on account of the development of another type of traffic which in fact competes with the railways and has the effect of reducing their revenues. For instance, my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) suggested a minute ago that railway trains might slow up when approaching a crossing and make crossings more safe. But looking at the competition which is against them, it would mean that they would slow up in competition wth the trucks, making themselves more subject to competiton by backing down as it were in favour of their competitors.

I do not pretend for a moment that the amendments before the house will remedy anything; really the fund is intended as an inducement to those parties who are interested, municipalities, provinces and railways, to deal with the question, the inducement being a contribution from a fund provided by the federal treasury for the purpose. Up to the present, as I have said, it has not been made use of to the extent desired, and these provisions are introduced with the idea of creating a greater utility

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear the minister say that he wishes this accumulated fund to be used, and that these amendments have been introduced to make it more available. To my mind however it has accumulated largely because of the action of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. BENNETT: That is true.

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): If they had been a little more lenient in their rulings in regard to grade crossings, I think this fund would have been entirely used up and perhaps more would have been required. To my mind we may amend this present act, pass these amendments which I think are all right, but we will still have a deterrent in the Board of Railway Commissioners and this fund will not be made available as it should be. I cited a case last evening of a crossing on a provincial highway in the province of Ontario, one of the most densely travelled roads in the province.

Mr. BENNETT: Which was senior, the railway or the highway?

Mr. FANSHER (East Lambton): The highway was senior. There a grade crossing is still maintained, with a wigwag and a bell, whereas the local municipality really wanted a subway. I think it might not be out of the way for this house to take into consideration at some time that at least on our provincial highways we should have separated crossings, either subways or overhead bridges, especially on the main tourist roads and over the main lines of railways. Then something should be done to induce the Board of Railway Commissioners to be a little more lenient in their rulings in regard to these grade crossings; if that were brought about this fund would be used up.

Mr. BENNETT: I confess I am not able to understand why the application in the case mentioned by the hon. member for Lambton should not have been acceded to. When he says the highway was senior to the railway, it is even less capable of being explained. I fancy the minister is much in the same position as I am in respect to the reason for it. I only recall one case after this fund was first made available in which I heard an order made by the board that a portion of the cost of the separation of the grades should be borne out of this fund.

The whole effect of this act probably is to enable two or three communities to deal with a situation with which otherwise they could not deal; and in addition we have enabled the fund possibly between now and May, 1929, to be used to an extent that it has not been used. Knowing how earnest and zealous the hon. member for Lambton is for his constituency, I have no doubt that his municipality will make an early application to the board. I am sure that this house will be very interested in learning why the municipality controlling the highway, being senior, is not given relief. The real fact is that the lawyers for the railways have succeeded in inducing the board to believe that the present protection is adequate.

Mr. DUNNING: That is about the story, on the facts, as we hear them in the house.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the minister is this applicable to any crossing, or are there any restrictions?

Mr. DUNNING: No restrictions.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no restrictions.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, I must admit that in this bill the minister has gone pretty far, but he has not yet gone far enough to look after the wishes of the public. A too great economy will operate adversely to the public interest. It will not save one life in the Dominion of Canada. They have first a little bell, then a light, and then a light a hundred yards or so away from the crossing; and then the next thing will be that perhaps the light will be extended a hundred yards further; and that is all that will be done. As I said last night, there is only one solution of this problem, and that is to get away from the grade crossing; there is no way in this bill to secure the safety of the public. I quite admit that there are cases where the public are to blame; but there is the crossing and there is the danger light, and not only can a reckless driver risk his own life but, on the way, he picks up one or two innocent passengers who are very often sacrificed. The minister or somebody should go another step further and say that where more than one accident has happened grade separation must follow. On these highways they have had not only accidents once a year but once a month, and some drastic action should be taken.

Mr. DUNNING: What drastic action?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Force a bridge or an underground passageway.

Mr. DUNNING: We have many branch lines of railway on which trains run only three times a week, and yet in the papers we will find that those trains hit a motorist or a motorist hits a train. If you adopt a fixed rule that wherever an accident occurs a bridge or a subway should be built, that will be placing our reliance upon the driver of the automobile. He is not, as the figures show, at all times a particularly reliable individual. I appreciate fully the objective of my hon. friend but he sees where it would land us. The adoption of a fixed rule would mean the building of unnecessary protection if grade separation were involved following every accident in every case.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister must admit that I used the word "highway". I was not referring to these little feeders.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I have not made myself clear. I was referring to branch line railways which are crossed by a main highway, where there is plenty of highway traffic but an infrequent train service. In fact railway men tell me that they are more subject to crossing accidents at a crossing on a railroad which is not very often used by trains than they are in cases where the trains are running with considerable regularity. The reason for that is that people become accustomed to speeding across such a crossing; they say: It is only a branch line; there is no train to-day or no train this week. That is how a great number of the accidents occur and the adoption of any fixed rule seems to be impossible. I am sure the Board of Railway Commissioners will take cognizance not only of this legislation but of the expressions of view by hon. members with respect to the spirit in which we desire this legislation to be administered. Much as I desire to lay down some fixed rule, I find some objection such as that which I have just mentioned, to every suggestion which comes forward along that line.

Mr. ARTHURS: I should like to suggest to the minister that in addition to protecting the public against railways built since 1909, we should have a differential in favour of a municipality where a railway has a crossing which is obstructed either by nature or in some other way, and it is difficult for the public to have a view of the railway either to the right or to the left.

Mr. DUNNING: That was also dealt with last night. Section 258 of the present act gives the railway commission the fullest possible power in relation to anything of any nature which obstructs the view.

Mr. ARTHURS: Only up to forty per cent of the liability.

Mr. DUNNING: The grade fund is not usable with respect to the removal of obstructions of view. It is only available with respect to the construction of the actual work of protecting the crossing. But the board has very full and wide powers with respect to the removal of any obstruction to the view of a person approaching the crossing, no matter what the cause of the obstruction of view may be.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Where a railway has not only its main track but sidings across a highway close to a town and a dangerous condition exists, is there legislation to compel the railway to provide protection at such places? In my town there are four crossings within a mile and on every one of them a number of people have been killed.

Within the last five or six years at least eight people have been killed on those four crossings and yet nothing has been done either by the municipality or by the railway to protect the public.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no compulsion on anybody. The Railway Act provides the machinery through which anyone interested may take action, but it in no way compels any of the bodies concerned to act, that is by way of motion. There is, of course, machinery whereby the railway commission can compel the railway company to do such and such. As regards the initiation of the motion to bring about some protection, surely in a case such as that referred to by my hon. friend there must be sufficient people interested in the municipality concerned to ensure that the municipality would apply to the board for whatever protection they deemed necessary in the circumstances. If there is not that, I am afraid there is in the law nothing which would compel them so to do.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): On more than one occasion a conference has been had between the municipality and the railway company but there seems to be no provision by which any of these improvements can be enforced. Apparently it is entirely a question of two or three people who are interested coming to some agreement and as a consequence nothing has ever been done. I know on two occasions there have been conferences between the municipality of the town or the township and the railway, and yet nothing has come of them.

Mr. DUNNING: While a friendly conference is of course always desirable preceding any attempt at litigation—and as a matter of fact an application to the board is litigation—there is provision in the law for bringing a matter of this kind to the attention of the board. Section 257 of the present Railway Act reads:

> Where a railway is already constructed upon, along or across any highway, the board may of its own motion, or upon complaint or application, by or on behalf of the crown, or any municipal or other corporation, or any person aggrieved, order the company to submit to the board, within a specified time, a plan—

And so forth. There is the widest kind of provision for application to the commission. In fact under that section my hon. friend could himself make an application to the board with respect to those dangerous crossings.

Mr. BENNETT: In fact the section that the minister has just read was inserted to meet the very situation to which the hon. member for Halton has referred. It used to be that no one except the municipality and the railway might deal with these matters, and if my memory serves me aright the board when Mr. Justice Mabee was chairman, instructed their engineers, whenever reports of accidents came to them, to see what action should be taken. From that there was an extension of the power and it is not infrequently that members of parliament write to the board asking them to make an inspection and to see what action may be taken to protect human life at dangerous crossings. I know that because of my experience in another capacity something over ten year ago. The whole purpose for which this money was voted by parliament was to meet cases where municipalities and railways could not agree and where it would be too great a hardship to ask the municipality to do all the work. It was to cover the cost up to forty per cent so that in some cases the burden was only ten per cent on the municipality, fifty per cent on the railway and the remaining forty per cent was taken out of this fund.

Mr. CANTLEY: In view of the fact that economy seems to control the application of the remedy to this level crossing problem, does the minister not think it advisable to make provision that a larger proportion of the cost be defrayed out of this fund?

Mr. DUNNING: That is what the bill provides.

Mr. CANTLEY: What proportion?

Mr. DUNNING: The provision in the existing law is forty per cent with a maximum of $25,000. The provision in this bill is forty per cent in cases where the work to be done costs less than $100,000, and forty per cent with a limit of $100,000 in all cases where the cost exceeds $100,000. It is a quadrupling of the possible contribution in the particular case.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would the minister consider, where the cost is less than $100,000, increasing the contribution from forty per cent to fifty, sixty, or seventy per cent? The fund is accumulating; we are not spending it, and people are being killed. My point is that we should get some action. At the rate we are going, it will be the middle of eternity before anything worth while is done.

Mr. DUNNING: I can best answer my hon. friend by referring him to the leader of the opposition, who very wisely said, in his first remarks upon this subject yesterday, that the objective of the grade crossing fund was not the giving of large sums by way of federal assistance to large works, but rather the providing of works of protection of one kind or another in the great number of cases throughout the country that are outside the cities altogether. I am already increasing the limit, and if the percentage were to be increased, that would, of course, tend still further to segregate the expenditure out of this fund to the larger works in the larger centres, and I arrived at the conclusion to retain the forty per cent in its relation to $100,000 as it previously existed in relation to $25,000, as being a pretty substanial step forward which would result in the fund being used to a greater extent. I think my hon. friend might consent to allow this to be tried for one year, so that we may see to what extent the fund will be depleted. I am reasonably sure that it will go down very rapidly.

Mr. BENNETT: There will be no money left next year.

Mr. DUNNING: Not after we apply the provisions of this legislation.

Mr. CANTLEY: What I had in mind was that the percentage might be greater than 40 per cent, say 50 or 70 per cent, in the case of works where the cost was comparatively small, not exceeding perhaps $25,000. I am not referring to crossings in towns, but out on the main highways.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved the second reading of Bill No. 205, respecting the Departments of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee theron, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister will recall that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark) and some of his associates who are absent from the city are greatly interested in the question of the name, and possibly the minister would not object if later on they might make their suggestions as to the name during the further progress of the bill through the house, and that it will not be taken that we have finally disposed of section 1. I have no desire to delay the legislation, but I should like to reserve that right for them.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Since the resolution was under discussion, it was decided to leave the question of the name until we came into committee, but I have since had consultations with various people who are interested in the title of the department. I am most anxious that all should be satisfied, but, of course, there may still be disagreement. I think, however, that the proposed title, "The Department of Pensions and National Health" will properly designate the activities of the department, and what I would suggest is that we pass this section, and then later on we can go back into committee or upon the third reading we can have a discussion of the title.

Mr. BENNETT: That was all I wished to direct the minister's attention to.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister spoke to me about this bill, but since then I have heard a little criticism that the proposed name of the new department, "Department of Pensions and National Health," might suggest that it was taking over the control of pensions and would interfere with the time-honoured custom of having the pensions branch independent. I do not think that is the minister's intention, but there is a little criticism and perhaps a little misinterpretation in that regard.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that when we deal with the Pension Act that misconception will disappear. The pension commission will remain as they are at present, independent, but it is true that this department, in the course of its administrative work, will pay the cheques after the adjudication has been made.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 6, subsection 1, paragraph (b)—Selection and employment of staff.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the discretion with respect to employment, should all the positions mentioned be excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act? The old act excluded employees that might be required from time to time. Now excluded we have:

> Part time professional officers, or part or full time employees whose compensation is determined by rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed.

Is it desirable to take these matters entirely out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are certain employees in and about our hospitals—attendants, engineers, carpenters, dietitians—that would not be considered permanent but part time or full time employees. They would be paid the prevailing rate. Provision is made later in the bill to take care of those who become permanently attached.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite realize that, but as subsection (b) reads, it provides:

> for the selection and employment of such part time professional officers or part or full time employees whose compensation may be paid. That certainly would look towards permanent positions. That is why I am directing attention to the amendment. I quite agree that if you hire a man for a day's work it is not a matter for the Civil Service Commission at all; but when it comes to full time employment, I see no reason why you should exclude the operations of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There are certain classes of employees that I do not think we wish to engage permanently. Take your attendants in the hospitals, their positions change very rapidly, as no doubt my hon. friend who has had experience knows. Then it is debatable whether your nursing staff should be made permanent; they change from time to time of their own will or from necessity. Those employed as carpenters, engineers or firemen would be considered part time employees, or what are known as prevailing rate employees. The same principle applies in other departments of government.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so; but this substitutes for the section printed on the opposite side of the bill something different in principle:

> and the creation for this purpose of appropriate positions,

That puts in the hands of the minister the power to create a full time position and disregard the Civil Service Commission; whereas the section that is being repealed provides:

> that the employees selected and employed under the authority of the said regulations shall, as far as practicable, be classified by the minister in accordance with the schedules of classes of positions set forth in the civil service classification, and shall be paid such rates of salary as are thereby described, and the said regulations shall, as regards salary increases, leave of absence, promotions and resignations, conform as nearly as practicable to the regulations made under the Civil Service Act, 1918.

The effect of the amendment is disastrous to the minister—not my hon. friend, but the minister who happens to be in charge of the department—because under subsection (c) he will be creating the appropriate positions and making appointments without regard to the Civil Service Act; whereas working side by side with the people so appointed will be those selected under the Civil Service Act at rates of pay provided by the Civil Service Commission. That, I think, is exactly what we are endeavouring to prevent. Before the minister asks us to adopt subsection (c) I suggest that he consider whether we are not making a retrograde step in replacing the relevant subsection in the old act by this subsection, which introduces patronage in its most vicious form with respect to a matter which should not be dealt with in that way.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is hardly the situation. As a matter of fact the positions under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment at the present time are outside the Civil Service Commission, and the appointments have been made by the governor-in-council on the advice of the minister. But we are preparing, through this legislation, to bring a portion at least of the service into permanency and under the Civil Service Commission. However, it has been felt that certain services are being rendered in the department with respect to which it would be very difficult to make permanent appointments; in fact it would not be good for the service. In the application of the present act the practices and usage of the Civil Service Commission have been followed by the department. Our classification is very much along the line of that of the Civil Service Commission, and the rates of pay are very much the same. This condition will continue under the new method. This is merely providing for a certain class which it would not seem wise to bring into the service permanently, and separate it from the class that eventually will be brought in permanently.

Mr. BOYS: I desire to support what my hon. leader has just said. One of the subsections is as follows:

> for the selection and employment of such part time professional officers, or part or full time employees,

If the words, "or full", were not there I not think the section would be open to criticism. Let me read the passage with those words left out:

> for the selection and employment of such part time professional officers or part time employees,

Worded that way there can be no doubt that it could not be suggested for a moment that any employee could be regarded as permanent; but the moment you introduce the words, "or full time", the employee could be appointed as permanent, although I am not assuming for a moment that the minister intends the section to bear this meaning. Therefore I would suggest that if he insert the word "temporary" before the word "employees" the situation might be met. May I read the subsection thus amended:

for the selection and employment of such part time professional officers, or part or full time temporary employees.

I think that would remove any thought that the minister, with the approval of the governor-in-council, is assuming the right to appoint permanent employees.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will allow me to read the section as it was before, I think he will see that what is being done here is rather restrictive of the minister's power than an extension of it.

Mr. BOYS: May I say to my hon. friend that while we might interpret it now with the first draft before us, in the future nobody will be in that favourable position.

Mr. RALSTON: Not the first draft, but the act we are amending.

Mr. BOYS: You do not have even that before you after the consolidation of the statutes.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend misunderstands me. I am not using the previous act as a means of interpretation, but I am pointing out that the bill now before the house is more restrictive of the powers of the minister than is the previous act. My hon. friend quite properly pointed out that not only part time but full time employees are included in the present bill.

Mr. BOYS: Who may be appointed by the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: Under regulations. This is a section regarding regulations. Full time employees are limited to those—whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed.

Under the old act there was no provision at all, as to either part time or full time; the minister had power to pass regulations authorizing the selection and employment of officers, clerks and employees. There were therefore both part and full time employees under one regulation. Now they are separated into part time employees and full time employees. I take it that the reference to employees whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed is to more or less casual labourers, transients, mechanics and so forth. This bill limits the minister as compared with the existing act.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. BOYS: The minister suggests that this language—

whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed—would indicate that they are not to be permanent. Is that the point?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. BOYS: Then I have missed the point. I would say that when a full time employee is to be appointed this section merely indicates what he is to get; and having got it I suppose he continues to receive that compensation until perhaps he applies for an increase. If that is not the case then I have missed the point.

Mr. RALSTON: The provision to which my hon. friend refers, regarding part time and full time employees, is no wider than the act as it stands. The act which is being amended contains neither the adjective "part" nor the adjective "full" time; it uses simply the word "employees". This would permit the minister to employ persons either for an indefinite length of time or permanently. Full time employees under the present bill are only those whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister read the latter part of the old section, the first portion of which he has quoted.

Mr. RALSTON: I am trying first to answer my hon. friend (Mr. Boys). He suggests that the words "part time" and "full time" in some way or other extend the power of the minister. "Part time" and "full time", taken separately with this clause, limit rather than extend the power of the minister. But even if the language does not limit his power it goes no further than the present act.

Mr. STEVENS: It does.

Mr. BOYS: If my hon. friend could convince a judge in that manner, I should be glad to have him as my advocate in the first civil case I had.

Mr. RALSTON: I am sure I could convince my hon. friend.

Mr. BOYS: The minister points out that because of the existing act he does not think the bill we are about to pass has the effect and force we are contending for. Why therefore bother to discuss the present law? Let us take what the house is trying to pass and endeavour to construe it.

Mr. RALSTON: I thought that was what my hon. friend was basing his argument upon. I thought he was arguing that the present bill extended the old act.

Mr. BOYS: That may be the effect, but that is not my argument. I am endeavouring to ascertain the meaning of the legislation offered this committee, and in a word my point is this: the moment you insert the words "or full time employees", giving the minister power to appoint any full time employee, such an employee might remain indefinitely and would therefore become permanent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If he were satisfactory.

Mr. BOYS: But that is not what the minister intends, I am told. If that is so, why not put the matter beyond peradventure? If the minister can think of a better word I have no desire to press my suggestion. But if you say "or part or full time temporary employees" you exclude the thought of permanency, while at the same time the minister would have full power to appoint any employee, but only for temporary service.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister might well make an explanation when he is dealing with two branches which will come under him and one of which up to the present time has been under the Civil Service Act. How is he going to distinguish between these two? He may take over a clerk from the Department of Health, who is under the Civil Service Act; and he may get another clerk from the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, not under the act. In other words, the minister, in this bill is not making one change, except that he will have the appointment of every clerk and official who is under the Health Department. Notwithstanding the few words added in the section, he is going to have the appointment of every clerk and official in that department as well as in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I cannot see where he has made any change.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If my hon. friend will consult the bill he will find in the section with which we are dealing that the officers are under the department administering soldier affairs, while in part two he will find that the officers to be appointed in the health section are to be appointed under the Civil Service Act. I cannot see any objection to the word "temporary"—temporary employees—if it is considered necessary. Those I have in mind, and who were contemplated by the draughtsman, are part time professional officers scattered throughout the country, probably medical men who give certain services to the returned men or pensioners, and who are receiving a partial or part time fee. I do not think anyone would suggest that these part time individuals should be considered permanent; they change from time to time. Then the full time employees—those whom my hon. friend designates full time "temporary" employees—are the class of men who work around the institutions, particularly in connection with hospitals, such as cooks, assistant cooks, ward attendants and so forth. It would not be wise to place them in the permanent class. It is not for me to say whether the term "full time temporary employees" is suitable or not. Personally I can see no great objection to it.

Mr. BOYS: My hon. friend seems to agree with the idea I have expressed, and his only fear is that the word I have suggested may not be the best. If he can suggest anything wrong with it, I will not press it, although it seems to me to meet the situation.

Mr. BRADY: In the minister's interpretation of the words "full time," has he really the idea that these are permanent employees? Is the word "permanent" applicable to full time? Would it not be better to designate the class whom he wishes to have looked after under the term "full time"? The expressions "full time" and "permanency" are not by any means synonymous. There is a great difference between them.

Mr. RALSTON: I was just discussing this with the minister, and he tells me that the Department of Justice drew the bill and have gone over it with a great deal of care. As I have tried to point out to the committee, I am sure it does not extend the power of the minister beyond what it is now, and in fact with all due deference to my hon. friend I am sure that power is limited. That being so, it is not thought advisable to insert some word or some adjective without consulting the Department of Justice.

Mr. BOYS: If it were not for what has already happened I might be impressed by the suggestion that this draft has passed the scrutiny of certain officers of the Department of Justice, but not long ago a bill was introduced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in which the same situation arose. That bill also had passed the scrutiny of departmental officials, but an amendment was suggested which may have been adopted; if it has not been accepted I think it will be, and it is possible that in the scrutiny of this bill this point has not been considered by the officers of the department. It does not make much difference to me; my purpose is simply this: I do not believe the minister should have the power which he receives under this section, and to be fair to him he does not pretend to seek such power. All I want to do is to have it put beyond question, and it seems to me that what I am suggesting would achieve that end. However, why not let this subsection stand and if there is any objection to the word I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well; I would suggest that we let subsection (b) stand and proceed with the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In the meantime would the minister make it more clear just what change is taking place in this act through these amendments with respect to the control by the minister or by the governor in council over the appointment of the personnel of this department? As I understand it, because of the alleged temporary nature of the department, under the old legislation every single member of the personnel was excluded from the operations of the Civil Service Act. I would like the minister to tell us what change he is making and whom he is bringing under the operations of the Civil Service Act now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We are of the opinion that the time has arrived when this department should be amalgamated with the Department of Health, and following that amalgamation and re-organization in the course of a little time we should be able definitely to define those positions which we consider as necessary to carry on the functions of the department, and which should be considered as permanent at least during the lifetime of this generation. This class of which we are speaking never will be considered permanent, but during the summer the executive officers, some of the clerical staff and others of the professional staff will be classified, and next May they will become permanent. During the interval there will be a selection of those who are to become permanent, because section 16 provides that in May, 1929, the Civil Service Act, which has been held in abeyance, will function.

Mr. STEVENS: Where does that appear?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In section 16 on page 7. I would suggest that we pass from subsection (b) to the next subsection.

Mr. STEVENS: And subsection (b) will stand?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In defining the outside service, does the minister mean that all the present outside service, or at least those connected with the hospitals, will be what are called full time temporary employees? The minister mentioned carpenters and plumbers who might be working around the hospital, and also referred to dieticians. I imagine that a dietician would be considered permanent, whereas a carpenter or plumber would be needed only from time to time. There is no such thing in a hospital as a full time carpenter, but a dietician is an important member of a hospital staff.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A dietician would be a full time professional officer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to make it quite clear to the minister that in allowing this subsection to stand at this stage, before the debate has been concluded, he may be making a mistake. I do not object to the subsection standing, but there is a good deal more information which we might secure and there may be a good deal of criticism to be offered, which might help the minister in making what alterations he may have in mind. We do not want to be prejudiced in any way; we would not want anyone to say that we allowed this subsection to stand without criticism.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We will allow it to stand until we are in committee again.

Paragraph (b) stands.

Paragraph (c), (d) and (e) agreed to.

Paragraph (f): Reciprocal and other arrangements with other governments.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think this subsection was before the special committee, and it was inserted in the bill subject to any recommendations or amendments which might be proposed by that committee.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe that is right.

Subsection (f) agreed to.

On section 6, subsection 1, paragraph (g)—Sheltered employment of ex-members of forces, etc.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. Under this act, are you going to take the responsibility for the burying of those in destitute circumstances?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course there is the Last Post fund.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They are most interested in the non-pensioned soldier who may die. The pensioner will have burial under the provisions which exist. The Last Post fund is an outside organization which is supported by a grant from the government from time to time.

Mr. GARDINER: It might come under this, if you do not mention the pensioner.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It might.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister in respect to clause (g), will that not apply to persons who are in destitute circumstances and yet require medical attention?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think the section definitely provides for employment for ex-service men who are not pensioners.

Mr. GARDINER: No, medical attention.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it does not. They are supposed to be pensioners. The only treatment provided there was:

> The treatment of former members of the forces classified as wholly incurable or chronically recurrent cases needing institutional care; for the provision of measures of unemployment relief to ex-members of the forces and their dependents, and for the payment of compensation in respect of industrial accidents; the whole subject to such appropriations as parliament may provide.

Treatment to-day in our institutions is confined really to those who are pensioners. It is true that by regulations the governor in council can extend and give treatment to those who are indigent and require such treatment. We did that in regard to a certain class last summer, and those orders were placed upon the table. We found throughout Canada a number of cases of ex-service men who had contracted certain diseases overseas, who were totally disabled and in poor circumstances, and provision was made for that class last year. But generally speaking a man to be entitled to treatment in our hospitals must have been considered by the pension board eligible for pension, and therefore eligible for treatment.

Mr. BRADY: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that we have many cases in Canada in which returned men require hospital treatment; where it cannot be claimed that their trouble is attributable to war service. I would like to see the minister at this session of parliament make some provision for that class. I quite understand that you must be very careful in dealing with such cases, but I know many to which such consideration should be given irrespective of the fact that their condition is not attributable to war service. In my opinion this country should give them medical treatment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I believe extensive recommendations have been given to the committee which is dealing with soldier affairs. I think the soldier body has gone into that very thoroughly. At any rate, the governor in council has power to make provision for medical treatment.

Mr. BRADY: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to quite a large number of cases of returned soldiers who allowed a period of years to pass by, after they returned from the front, without bothering any of the pension boards. Now we find that often for five or six years there is no medical history whatsoever for these unfortunate people; and the result is that when their cases are brought up for consideration they can get no relief. I think that in this bill we should consider carefully those men who, after their return, had courage and grit enough, not to worry the pension board but to go right into work. After five or six years they are broken down, and their cases are really often worse than those presented to the pension board. When these cases come before the board, as many will, I would like the minister, to see that they receive such consideration as will result in relief being given. On that point I would like to draw the attention of the minister to this. It is a pity that a great number of the returned soldiers, ignorant of the methods of obtaining relief, have to come to the ordinary member of parliament, who is placed under great difficulties in obtaining the knowledge necessary to present to the board of pension commissioners the cases of these men; and I think, sir, in the department that has to do with returned soldiers there should be some particular person set apart, whose duty it should be to go to the aid of these men, and thus save them trouble, anxiety and loss.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In reply to my hon. friend, it is true that many of the returned men are experiencing difficulties on account of their medical file or sheet not showing that they had had treatment over a period of years. It requires very considerable investigation to secure that evidence but it is necessary that some evidence be obtained. I know from the work of the pension board that inquiries of that character are going on from day to day, and in order to assist the soldier in his inquiries and in preparing his case, the government has provided in each and every province what is known as a soldiers' adviser, who goes from one place to another, meets the soldier groups or the individual soldier and gets in contact with their cases, prepares them for the pension board and the appeal board, and in fact deals with many of their affairs. These advisers are nominated by the soldier organizations, being selected from among their number on account of their qualifications or supposed qualifications. The nominations are sent to the minister, and the selection of the soldiers themselves is the one who is appointed. These men are scattered throughout Canada. The service of the advisers costs about $33,000 or $34,000 and in addition to that there is the stenographic staff.

Mr. BRADY: How many advisers are there in British Columbia?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There is one in Vancouver city covering the mainland of the province of British Columbia and one in Victoria covering Vancouver island. There is one in Alberta, one in Saskatchewan, one in Manitoba, two or three in Ontario, two in Quebec, one in New Brunswick, one in Nova Scotia, and one in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BRADY: As this is such an important matter and northern and central British Columbia comprise such an immense area, would it not be advisable to have an adviser for that portion of the province situated at some central point such as Prince Rupert or Smithers? The soldiers have so much land in the north country that they would have to come hundreds of miles to a central point and these unfortunate people do not know how to get in touch with the advisers.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Where the work is accumulating and not being dealt with rapidly, we may increase the number or appoint men temporarily to relieve the situation. There is something in what the hon. member says with regard to the western provinces. The distances are great; the men are spread throughout the community, and it takes time to deal with the different cases. Although we have an excellent man in Manitoba, he has found his work has got behind and it has been necessary for the department to give assistance to bring his work up to date.

Mr. EVANS: Somehow the system is not very effective after all, and I think it is three years ago now since I brought this matter to the attention of the minister. I know of cases that, we are all satisfied, are due to war experience, where men have not yet been able to get on the pension list. In my constituency there was one one man who was suffering when he returned, but although I brought his case repeatedly before the minister and the pension board and although he is totally disabled, he is unable to get any relief from the board. The last I knew of him was that he was in a hospital in Winnipeg. Who is paying the hospital authorities I do not know. That is only one case and there are others. I have always taken the ground in this house that as regards anyone who has seen active service at the front and who has been disabled, this country is under obligation to provide and care for him when he is in want. I think the act should be made a little more elastic so as to cover these cases and so that the benefit of the doubt will all be given to the returned soldier. These men are suffering daily, feeling that they are humiliated by receiving charity.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The matters referred to by my hon. friend would more properly come under the Pension Act which is now being reviewed by a special committee of the house. That committee has heard evidence and expressions of opinion similar to that expressed by my hon. friend, and no doubt it will give careful consideration to such representations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I recall aright, there was brought to our attention in one of the committees this morning the case of a man who is not able to establish clearly that his impairment of health was directly due to war service. He is being assisted during the winter months for a short time, but after that he is thrown on public charity and the city of Winnipeg has to maintain him. In cases of that kind I think the least we can do for a man who has served at the front is to see he is taken care of. In this particular instance he is perhaps a little below the average mental standard so that there is all the more need for some care to be exercised during the whole of the year. Again I would plead that the regulations should be broadened out to take care of this class of case.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I believe the question was already asked by an hon. member on this side in regard to provision being made for the burial of a deceased returned man, but I did not catch the answer. Is there any such provision in this bill or any other to take care of the burial expenses of a returned man who is in destitute circumstances?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Paragraph (g) of clause 6 in the thirty-seventh line reads:

For providing burial expenses for ex-members of the forces who die in destitute circumstances.

That covers the case.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I understood the minister to say that that referred to those who are pensioned. Does that cover every case of destitution, because if it does it leaves the minister and the department open to many requests and there is no use for the last post fund?

Mr. RALSTON: The clause is one providing for regulations which may cover these cases.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Is this the first provision that has been made for such cases or has there been heretofore any such provision?

Mr. RALSTON: It is the same section.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I know of a case that happened within a few miles of my town of a returned man who had taken up land under the soldier settlement board and who had a good prospective crop on the quarter-section but who before the crop was harvested, took ill and died. He had no money in hand or in sight except what would be realized from the crop and the people of the community had to go around and raise funds to cover his burial expenses. I was asked some time ago to ascertain whether there was provision in the act to take care of such cases.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This clause will empower the government to make provision for every ex-service man in destitute circumstances. The policy of the government to date has been to bury those who die of pensionable disabilities providing it is necessary to do so. In addition to that we have been supporting what is known as the Last Post fund. That is an organization throughout Canada which has been doing excellent work by providing funds for burial expenses in the locality where the death may occur. We have been supporting that organization by a grant to the executive and in addition last year by supplementing their expenditures where they failed to secure sufficient funds for the work which they were doing.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I also remind the hon. member that he has the word of the Prime Minister that he would like to know of any such case that was unprovided for under the Last Post fund?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true.

Mr. ESLING: In the event of the death of an ex-service man in destitute circumstances, to whom is application made for burial expenses?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Ordinarily it would be through the local branch of the Last Post fund in the various provinces.

Mr. ESLING: Would that necessarily be to the headquarters at Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would come from the local branch to the provincial headquarters, and from there to the central organization. There would be no difficulty; it is working very well.

Mr. ESLING: Does the soldiers' adviser make periodical trips throughout the province or must all communications be addressed to him at Vancouver?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Usually I think the communications have been sent in to his residence, but if it is found that there is a large number of claims outstanding in any one district, and a request is made that the adviser should go in there, and the department think it advisable even though it is a considerable distance from his home, if the service to be rendered justifies it, he would be sent in there and his expenses paid. But I do not think the soldiers' adviser has been travelling very far from his centre.

Mr. ESLING: I am sure he has not. British Columbia is a pretty vast territory, and does not the minister think it advisable to suggest that the soldiers' adviser make periodical trips to the various branches of the legion, where he could receive complaints and applications? I say that because I have no less than one dozen different matters which have been brought to my attention from returned men, and I have been in correspondence with the service bureau here, and I must say that I have had excellent service, but it does occur to me that if the soldiers' adviser would go into the interior of the province of British Columbia, he could get into closer touch with the men and ascertain from the applicants just what the basis of their claims was.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If it is found that there is a large number of applications from, say, the Kootenay district, Rossland, Nelson, Trail, and so on, there would be no difficulty in arranging to have the soldiers' adviser make the trip in there. The whole service is guided by the number of applications that have to be considered by the pension board or by the appeal board, and if it was shown that there was a large number of applicants in the Kootenay district, for instance, who could conveniently be seen by the adviser going in there, I do not see any objection to that; in fact, I would be quite anxious that he should do so.

Mr. ESLING: The members from British Columbia must have received numerous communications from returned men throughout the province, from scattered districts, and it would seem to me very desirable that the adviser should visit the different districts. There are many of the men who do not know that there is such an adviser.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the minister's interpretation of the following paragraph in paragraph (g) of section 6:

> for the treatment of former members of the forces classified as wholly incurable or chronically recurrent cases needing institutional care.

How broad is that?

Mr. RALSTON: I noticed that myself. The first part of the paragraph provides generally for the treatment of everybody, and these words seem to refer particularly to those who need institutional care, those whose disease is wholly incurable or chronically recurrent. But if my hon. friend will look at section 5, he will see that it gives the minister power in reference to any matters assigned to him relating in any way to the care, treatment or re-establishment in civil life of all persons—my hon. friend will note that it says, "of all"—who since the first day of August, 1914, served in the naval, military or air forces. Then section 6 (a) provides for the control and management of any hospital, workshop, home, school, or other institution, owned, acquired, or used by His Majesty for the training, care or treatment of any person at all, not simply those mentioned in paragraph (g).

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Section 6 simply states that, subject to the approval of the governor in council, the minister may make such regulations as he may deem necessary and advisable. Then paragraph (g) provides:

> For providing burial expenses for ex-members of the force who die in destitute circumstances.

But there is no provision in the act to take care of such cases as I mentioned. The minister may make provision for taking care of them, but I would like to have something definite from the minister whether he thinks provision should be made for such cases, and to what extent such provision should be made.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have stated the practice that is being followed at the present time in regard to these cases. There have been representations made recently to the committee that is now sitting on soldier questions, but whether they will make further recommendations or not, I am not sure. With regard to the case my hon. friend speaks of, I expect that the soldier settler was not a pensioner, because I think that the men selected to go on the land were selected on account of their physical fitness and because it was thought they would best succeed as farmers. So I do not think that he would be a pensioner, and under those circumstances the case would probably be met by the Last Post fund, to which the government subscribes and which it supplements.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: No. In the case I mentioned the man was not a pensioner, I believe. He had purchased land from the soldier settlement board and had a good prospective crop, but it was still standing, and the soldier settlement board commandeered all the crop, and all the machinery, and all the movable assets that this settler had. There was nothing whatsoever left to pay his funeral expenses, and the undertaker would not undertake the funeral expenses until they were guaranteed to him, and the expenses had to be raised by public subscription in that community. It appears to me that that is a disgraceful situation, and if our statutes are so framed that an ex-service man cannot have a decent burial, there is certainly something wrong with the statutes. I would like to emphasize to the minister the need of having something definite and specific to take care of such cases.

Mr. McQUARRIE: May I inquire of the minister whether the services of the soldiers' adviser at Vancouver, for instance, would be available to soldiers who bring appeals from the revaluation of their land. That is a question which is causing a good deal of uneasiness in British Columbia. I understand that there will be quite a large number of these appeals, because the soldier settlers are not satisfied as a general thing with the decisions which have been given lately. Now, for the ordinary man to appeal to the exchequer court presents many difficulties, and a great many of these men are not in a position to pay for legal expenses. Neither are they capable of paying their expenses to Ottawa to appear before the exchequer court. If hearings could be held in an informal manner near their places of residence, returned men might conduct their cases in person. It seems to me advisable that they should have the privilege of using the soldiers' adviser to help them on the appeal. I think this adviser would do his best for them, although he is retained by the department.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me, the soldiers' advisers, as my colleague has said, are appointed on the recommendation of the soldiers' organizations; they are really the servants of the soldiers.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I am glad to hear that. The minister probably knows how many appeals there will be, although this matter does not come in his department. I have had correspondence with the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) on the subject. He has been kind enough to answer certain questions which I put to him from the secretary of one of the returned men's organizations in Langley municipality. But the fact remains that at present there does not seem to be any provision at all to take care of these returned men who appeal from decisions in reference to the valuation of their land. At the risk of repeating myself, I suggest that the minister and his colleagues should take into consideration the advisability of allowing these men to have the advantage of the services of the soldiers' adviser.

Mr. ESLING: Will not the minister consider having the soldiers' adviser make these trips? May I ask the name of the gentleman?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to make inquiries and consider the advisability of the soldiers' adviser making trips into the interior. The name of the adviser on the mainland is Captain Ian Mackenzie. My hon. friend speaks of the utilization of the soldiers' adviser to assist the soldier settler in his claim. That is a new phase. Heretofore the soldiers' advisers have been appointed to advise and assist ex-members of the force in matters pertaining to their re-establishment, care and treatment and pensions. His suggestion may be worthy of consideration.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That would come within his jurisdiction, it seems to me.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It may be.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think it is unfortunate that this discussion should be taking place while the special committee is sitting. As to care and treatment, I do not think the minister can assure the member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) that that includes everybody, notwithstanding what the Minister of National Defence has said, because the clause he took up deals with the matters which shall be referred to him, and he knows that up to the present time the care and treatment of those not pensionable does not come under him. It seems to me that the settlers' case which has been mentioned should not be allowed to drop. When the time comes the hon. member should take it up with the minister in charge of the soldier settlement board and insist that they look after the burial in such cases. They took every cent that he had saved during the war and invested it in his farm; in fact, they cleaned him out. The hon. member should insist that from this day forward the soldier settlement board see to it that no ex-service man doing settlement duty, in the unfortunate event of death, be neglected and his burial left to the charity of other people.

Mr. FORKE: I did intend to ask the member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) for a little more information in regard to the case he brought to our notice. On the facts as presented by him it is a deplorable case. Did the man die on his farm, or had everything been sold before his death?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The settler to whom I referred enlisted with the first contingent, served throughout the war, and came back unwounded and unpensionable. He bought a quarter-section of land under the soldier settlement board, put nearly the whole of it under cultivation, and had a good prospective crop; but he took sick and died, I think in July or August, before the crop was harvested. I believe he did owe some dues to the settlement board because of the bad times. They took possession of his stock, crop, machinery and everything he had, as well as the land. The poor fellow left no money behind and was buried by some charitable persons.

Mr. FORKE: All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that this should not have happened. And it would not have happened had I received any information in regard to the matter. My instructions to all the staff of the soldier settlement board, from the superintendent down to the supervisors, are that the soldier shall have the best treatment we can give him, that whenever doubt exists he is to be given the benefit of the doubt, and that if there is any possibility of his being able to make good ten years from now he shall not lose his farm. I think that satisfied soldier settlers five or ten years from now are of much greater value to the country than any monetary collection that can be made at the present time. I will make inquiries into this particular case and find out just what has happened. Somebody will get into trouble over it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In fairness to the minister, I must state that this case happened before he took charge of the department. I am not charging him with any dereliction of duty whatever.

Mr. FORKE: But it might happen, and I know nothing of it.

Subsection (1) of section 6 agreed to.

On subsection (2)—Regulations to be laid before parliament.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not familiar with the facts of the case presented by the hon. member for Kindersley, but I do not think he is contending that had the officials of the soldier settlement board been appealed to they would have refused to advance the funeral expenses. I think his contention is that under the bill we are discussing somebody should be in a position to put up the necessary money at such a time.

Mr. BRADY: In paragraph (g), subsection 1 of section 6, there is a very important provision, that the minister may make regulations for the provision of measures of unemployment relief to ex-members of the forces and their dependants. Considering the many cases that are arising, and that exist at the present time, of unemployment among returned soldiers, I should like to know exactly what will be the measures of unemployment relief. Will these men be given jobs through the provincial governments, or will the relief be given in terms of financial aid, and for what period? This is a rather broad provision; it is a far-reaching statement covering a great extent of unemployment; because many returned soldiers to-day are badly in need of relief. One case came to my notice the other day of a returned man who has been incapaciated and is unfit to work. He has six children and his wife is supporting them and him as well. He cannot get employment; his case is chronic. I desire to know what may be expected when cases of this character are presented for relief.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the larger centres where the provincial government maintains labour bureaus with a view to assisting the labourer in securing employment, the Dominion Labour department have what is known as the handicap section where the returned soldier who is handicapped by disability or disease may make application. It is the duty of these officers to try to locate the individual in some industry in that vicinity. That work is going on throughout Canada. In addition to that we have what is known as sheltered unemployment in our vetcraft shops. This is limited employment. At the present time between 245 and 250 men, considered ordinarily as unemployable in the labour market, are provided for in this way. We have had also in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver committees who have been carrying on similar work, endeavouring through their individual efforts or jointly to induce employers of labour to provide employment for those who are disabled among the returned soldiers. Again, the government is assisting industrialists to employ the partly disabled soldier, and has for some time now been providing for the payment of compensation in connection with industrial accidents. That is to say, we arrange with the various compensation boards to provide for the insurance and payment necessary to carry these men under the boards, relieving the manufacturer in this respect. The government has carried on this activity in all the provinces, the expenditure last year having been $75,000. This has made it possible for many men to secure employment in the various industries, inasmuch as we have been absorbing that cost.

Mr. GARDINER: The Minister of National Defence drew my attention to section 5. I would ask him whether he thinks that in this particular section there will be sufficient power to take care of the cases I have already mentioned. I am keenly interested in the matter, and I desire some definite information as to whether these people will secure adequate treatment.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would rather wait for the recommendation which will be brought down by those who have been investigating the matter. I know they have had it under discussion and I should prefer to wait for that recommendation rather than state anything at the present time. Later on there will be an opportunity to discuss this phase of the problem. The section permits our making regulations in the matter, but I have no doubt we shall receive recommendations from the committee who have been dealing with soldier affairs.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the minister mean that he wants this bill passed and that when the recommendations come from the special committee on pensions he will then answer the hon. member's question?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be in a better position then to answer it.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It is sufficient to say at the moment that there can be no such care or treatment as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) indicates.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And cannot be.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It can be done by regulation.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But there are no regulations by which it can be done. I will ask the minister to allow paragraphs (g) and (b) to stand over in order that hon. members who are attending the special committee—I admit I ought to be there myself—may be given an opportunity to discuss them.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Is there any objection to passing the section?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are at present in attendance at the special committee, which has been sitting since four o'clock, a number of members who are interested in this bill.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): You want paragraph (g) to stand?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Yes, and (b) as well.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In that case we will withhold paragraphs (g) and (b) and proceed to the next section.

Section stands.

On section 7—Official soldiers' adviser.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No doubt a suggestion will come from the special committee in this regard, but I think the minister should extend the application of this section. In some cases the official adviser is a lawyer, while in others he is not. I might refer to Mr. Askwith, the official adviser for Ontario, who has done good work. He is handicapped—

Mr. RALSTON: Is he a lawyer?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No. He is handicapped in this way: seventy-five or ninety per cent of his cases are purely medical, and he has a decision of one group of medical men on the pension board giving their opinion. You have also a second group representing the federal board. Unless he goes outside and secures someone to act gratuitously, he has nobody to advise him. I submit that he should be permitted to bring in a medical officer to assist him when these cases are heard before the federal appeal board.

Mr. RALSTON: It would seem to prove that he should be a doctor instead of a lawyer.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Legally he is in a good way to present his case, but when the case comes up against a medical decision he needs medical advice.

Mr. BRADY: The adviser may not be a doctor; in fact perhaps it would be advisable if he were not. In investigating a case would he have the privilege of taking that man to a doctor, after securing his story and personal history, so that all the facts in connection with that ex-soldier would be complete?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That would depend upon the history of the individual. If a man came in off the street who had had no sickness or disability overseas, that case would be treated in a different manner. Supposing a man walked into the office of the soldiers' adviser and asked for a pension; the adviser would ask why he wanted a pension and the man might say he was not feeling well. The adviser would inquire whether he had an injury, sickness or disease overseas; if the answer was in the negative that man would be required to present some history to indicate that he had had some illness or injury following his service, and that he had been treated at some point by a physician for the trouble of which he complained. If he could get a certificate from an outside physician setting forth certain conditions from which he was suffering which would indicate that his disability was due to overseas service, that would be a fair case to be taken up with the pension commissioners by the soldiers' adviser. Once it was decided that this man had a good case, the necessary observation and examination would be given as a matter of course.

Mr. BRADY: And if a medical examination were held would that be free?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It would be made by the officers of the department.

Mr. ESLING: Did not the minister say a moment ago that the soldiers' adviser was nominated by the soldiers themselves?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ESLING: And following that nomination you appoint him? In this act it is provided only that the minister shall appoint him.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In the event of a vacancy in a certain area the practice followed is to have the soldier organizations, through their executives, recommend at least four or five persons whom they consider competent, and from those persons recommended one is selected by the minister and recommended to council.

Mr. BRADY: I regret to prolong this discussion, but I should like to make one other point. I believe it is essential that these advisers be appointed, but at the same time I know there are terrific fights going on at present throughout Canada for every paltry post office job; applicants are pulling each other to pieces, so when the minister considers these four or five recommendations which may be presented to him I hope the mere fact of his being a Liberal will not be considered as the major qualification.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The welfare of the soldiers is the thing we keep in mind.

Mr. ESLING: Does not the minister think it would be in the best interests of all returned men if these soldiers' advisers had no other duties? If the adviser is to be appointed by the minister to look after the needs of all returned men in his district, would it not be better to pay him a salary for that purpose, and to make sure that he does nothing else? If a lawyer or a doctor is appointed he will be disposed to look after his own practice and to give as little attention as possible to the returned men, because he will receive his salary from the government anyway. I think it would be well to appoint these advisers solely for the purpose of going through their districts and ascertaining just what are the requirements of the returned men in the various localities.

One of the greatest needs of the returned men to-day is someone to advise them what to do in this, that or the other case. Just before coming here I learned of a returned man who made application for a revaluation of his land. He said he received a questionnaire which was so intricate that he could not possibly fill it out, and as a result he simply threw it aside and abandoned all idea of trying to secure a revaluation. I contend that a soldier's adviser should be appointed for the purpose of keeping ex-service men posted on matters of this kind, and also to help them in any way they may desire.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understood the minister to say in answer to the hon. member for Acadia that a certain section would depend for its interpretation upon the recommendations of the pension committee. Is it the intention to amend this act after the report of that committee is presented to the house?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. KENNEDY: Then how can we deal with the matter intelligently if we pass the act now?

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid my hon. friend misunderstood something I said. This is an enabling section conferring upon the department and the minister power to do certain things. The only way in which the recommendations of the committee would affect the section referred to would be to indicate the action which should be taken under the powers conferred by this act. I think we are all satisfied that the act is wide enough.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On section 14—Appointment, classification and salaries of staff.

Mr. STEVENS: I want to call the attention of the minister to a point in this section which is a bit obscure to me. He may be able to enlighten me, but at the moment it does not appear to me to be correct. I refer to that portion of the section included in lines 25, 26 and 27, which provides for the carrying of the members of the staff of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment into the new orientation of the two departments. The closing two lines of the first paragraph are:

—and shall thereafter become subject in all respects to the Civil Service Act.

But in the clause preceding those two lines are words to this effect:

—be thereby appointed to the Department of Pensions and National Health at the salaries and in the classification fixed under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act,

In other words, while you are carrying this staff forward into the new department and placing them under the Civil Service Act, you are fixing their classification and salaries as under the old act, thus putting them more or less into conflict with the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Commission system. Would it not be fairer, and in order to avoid complaints in the future would it not be more desirable to say that you carry them into the new department and place them under the Civil Service Act both as regards salary and classification? It might be thought advisable in some individual case, but in the main it is an unwise principle to introduce into the civil service a department the salaries and classifications of which are different from those in other departments. That is really what you are doing; you are perpetuating a difference. Wherever you interfere with the general system of the civil service you introduce more or less confusion and make it more difficult for the Civil Service Commission to discharge its already complicated and difficult duties. I suggest to the minister that those words could be deleted without destroying the effect of the section. There would then be no violation of the principle of the civil service.

Mr. RALSTON: I think you ought to preserve the salaries. Probably the classification might be made to conform.

Mr. STEVENS: The Prime Minister has no doubt given a great deal of study to this abstract principle. I ask him, is it not desirable that we should seek to bring about in the civil service a condition under which those giving like service shall receive the same salaries? Here we have a department which was outside of the civil service, and some of its officers, undoubtedly are on a different scale as to salary from others doing similar work in other departments. My idea is, as far as possible, to bring them into conformity and uniformity as far as the Civil Service Act is concerned.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think that is really the object of those who drafted this act and made their representations to the Justice department. The practice in the department has been to have the grading of position and salary follow very closely that of the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Commission. In fact that has been one of the grievances of the officers in the department, that they were classified in grade and in salary as civil servants but did not enjoy the other benefits that accrue to civil servants. I understand my hon. friend means that to take these varied classes, which probably might be out of line with the present civil service, and bring them in by order in council might upset and disjoint the service and result in unfairness. But my understanding is that there is no such danger, that the classification has been along the line of the civil service requirements, and that salaries have been paid somewhat along that line. We are leaving over subsections (b) and (g) of section 6, and it is understood that we will be going into committee again the first of the week. The members interested will not be here to-night?

Mr. STEVENS: No, I think not.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Those hon. members who are now attending the committee will probably be here this evening, and I suggest that section 14 stand for the present.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister should let it stand over until next week. I understand they are working on the preparation of their report, and undoubtedly much of what we have been discussing this afternoon will be there dealt with. It would be better to defer the matter until the report is brought in.

Section stands.

Section 15 agreed to.

On section 16—Chap. 90 and chap. 187 of R.S., 1927 repealed.

Mr. STEVENS: Section 16 repeals the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act, which is quite proper and necessary in order to make it harmonize with this act. But it has an exception:

> Except paragraph (b) of subsection two of section five thereof which shall continue in force until the thirty-first day of May, 1929,

Can the minister tell me just what is the effect of that?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It means that the officers and employees will until the thirty-first of May, 1929, have the same relationship to the department that they now hold. By that time it is anticipated that the organization will be complete and we shall be able to designate definitely those officers who will come in and be part of the civil service.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand.

Section agreed to.

Mr. ESLING: What is the salary of the present soldier advisers?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In Toronto I believe we are paying $3,600 a year, and I think the same in Winnipeg. In Vancouver we are paying $1,800, and in Victoria the same. It varies according to the work and the locality.

Mr. STEVENS: I think you are wrong about Vancouver; I think the soldiers' adviser there is getting $3,600.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): A year ago it was $1,800.

Progress reported.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from April 23, consideration in committee of Bill No. 191, to amend the Criminal Code—Mr. Lapointe—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

Mr. STEVENS: It is almost six o'clock. We cannot very well deal with this now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The bill has already been in committee and a full discussion has taken place on it.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not present on that occasion. Frankly I am not in a position to say whether or not my honoured leader has anything more to say on this bill. I know that he has been very much interested in it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the bill was in committee on Monday last, the leader of the opposition during the afternoon asked me to wait until the evening because some hon. members opposite who wanted to speak were not present. During the evening those hon. members were present and took part in the discussion. The hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) was speaking when eleven o'clock came. I think the subject has been fully debated; the bill has already passed the house five times, and this is the sixth occasion of its introduction.

Mr. STEVENS: Passed always after very bitter opposition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It went through without opposition last year, to meet afterwards the same fate in the senate that it had met in previous years.

Mr. STEVENS: I am a little weary of debating this matter from year to year, but I have not changed my views. I stated on previous occasions that personally I would be quite willing to see some portions of the act repealed, but that there were some portions which should not be repealed. I have taken that stand on each occasion the bill has been before the house and I see no reason for changing my opinion. Naturally I do not wish to go over the debate annually, but I should not like the impression to go out, from what the minister has just said, that the house has passed this bill year after year agreeing to the principle. It has never been passed without pretty strong opposition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There has always been opposition.

Mr. STEVENS: There has always been a sharp cleavage of opinion in the house in regard to the matter, and that cleavage of opinion exists to-day. It may be that hon. members are weary of repeating their arguments each year and therefore do not desire to delay the house further, knowing, no doubt, that a division would simply mean the carrying of the measure. Personally I have no desire to delay it. I have not had an opportunity of talking to my leader in regard to his views on the subject and I am sorry he is not present now.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He was present on Monday last.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. STEVENS: It is unfortunate that the matter was not cleared up then.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Eleven o'clock intervened.

Mr. STEVENS: It is now six o'clock.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We will wait until eight o'clock anyway.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

LAVEANIA MAUD KELLY

The house in committee on Bill No. 80, for the relief of Laveania Maud Kelly—Mr. Stewart (Leeds)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a large number of divorce bills on the order paper. Is it the desire of the committee that we should now proceed with these other divorce bills?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

The CHAIRMAN: Unanimous consent is required.

Bill reported.

Mr. SMOKE (for Mr. Stewart, Leeds) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Before that motion is carried, I should like to state as briefly as I may why I have felt constrained to speak to these divorce bills. I should like to make it very clear that it is not my purpose to take up each of these bills in turn. I do not wish to adopt any blocking tactics. I wish, however, to call attention to the impossible situation in which this house finds itself, and, if possible, to secure some definite action. I should like to make it clear that I am not taking this action because of this particular bill or any other bill that may come before us; that is, I have no personal opinion on any of these bills, but rather, there is a principle at stake, and I must protest at some one stage, and it just happens that my protest comes when this particular bill is before us.

Since I made my protest the other evening I have been rather surprised at the large number of people who have endorsed the action which I have taken, including members on both sides of the house and a considerable number of people throughout the country, and I feel sure that the time has arrived when we can be confident of public support in altering the manner in which we are dealing with these divorce cases.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) states that I am in favour of divorce. I should like to make myself clear on that point. I am in favour of divorce in certain circumstances and under certain conditions, and only in certain circumstances and under certain conditions. The Minister of Justice the other night suggested that I was delaying the passage of these bills. If he is so much opposed to divorce I should think he would rejoice and congratulate and assist me in so delaying the passing of these bills.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not objecting to your action.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggest to the Minister of Justice that to the extent to which he is facilitating the passage of these bills his position is quite inconsistent with his statement that he is opposed to divorce. He is facilitating, and steadily facilitating, the passage of these bills, and urging us to facilitate their passage, even although he says he is opposed to the principle of divorce.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, to move to-night, in accordance with my previous motion, two amendments to two of these bills. Were I intent on merely blocking I would move amendments, as I have the right to do, to every one of the seventy-five or one hundred bills we have before us. It is not my intention so to do, but simply to pick out one or two in order that we may decide upon some principle.

I should like to emphasize that we have the right to determine the conditions upon which divorce should be granted, and further, if those conditions are made rigid enough, I am inclined to think that we may not have quite so many divorce bills before us in the future. In any case we shall be carrying out the principle of granting divorce only under conditions which will entail the least public evil. Without delaying the house any further, and in order to test the house on the important question whether or not we are to set up a divorce court where these matters can be decided in a far more effective manner than they can possibly be in this parliament, I beg to move seconded by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps):

That the house do now proceed to order No. 31, being the second reading of bill No. 27 (Letter A of the senate), intituled: "An act to provide in the province of Ontario for the dissolution and annulment of marriage."

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last I stated some of my objections—

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is not debatable.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Surely my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) does not want this important bill to be taken up tonight without previous notice to anybody, and with such a slim attendance in the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Most decidedly, because I have tried repeatedly to induce the government to consent to taking up this bill, and the government has refused to do so. It seems to me, therefore, that the only recourse left to me is to take advantage of the rules of the house under which a private member is given certain privileges, and under which the house itself is given certain powers. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that under the ordinary forms of procedure we are in danger of being dominated by the government. There are however certain privileges and rights guaranteed to private members and to the house at large, and therefore I move this resolution.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: To the motion, that Bill No. 80, letter K of the senate, be given third reading, Mr. Woodsworth moves:

That the house do now proceed to order No. 31, being the second reading of bill No. 27 (letter A of the senate) intituled: "An act to provide in the province of Ontario for the dissolution and annulment of marriage."

The hon. gentleman, I suppose, is proceeding under standing order 48, which reads:

When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order—

I think the motion of the hon. gentleman is in order. The question is on his motion.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And is not debatable.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: And is not debatable.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Woodsworth) which was negatived on the following division.

ARTHUR JOHN EVANS

The house in committee on Bill No. 81, for the relief of Arthur John Evans—Mr. Harris—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported.

The CHAIRMAN: Would it now serve the purpose of the committee to take all these unopposed divorce bills together?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have a motion to move with reference to Bill No. 84, order No. 42.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Garland) moves that Bill No. 81 be reported.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to move, with reference to Bill No. 84—

Mr. DUNNING: I move that all of the divorce bills, save Bill No. 84 be taken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would ask that the committee go only as far as order No. 42, that is Bill No. 84.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that the hon. member desires to say something on Bill No. 84.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Would it meet his purpose if we reported the other unopposed bills, allowing that one to stand for the present?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have also something to say in connection with another bill further down on the order paper.

The CHAIRMAN: Will the hon. member give the number of the other bill?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to discuss Nos. 84 and 150. So far as I am concerned the others may go.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall I report these bills, with the exception of those noted?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

WINIFRED OSBORNE GIMBLETT

The house in committee on Bill No. 84, for the relief of Winifred Osborne Gimblett. —Mr. Garland (Carleton)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make it clear that I am dealing with this bill as a sort of test case. There is a very large number of these bills on the order paper; I had no opportunity of reading the evidence relating to these scores of bills, and as I glanced through the bills I took this one as the first that occurred to me as seeming to answer the purpose I had in view. I have no idea that the people involved here are in any worse case than a large number of the others who may be affected by similar bills on the order paper, and I have not intended in bringing forward this motion to give them preferential treatment. This is the motion of which I have given notice:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it as follows:—

(1) That section one of the bill be amended by adding the following words thereto:

"and the said Winnifred Osborne Sinclair shall have the custody of their child and the said William Henry Gimblett shall pay annually to Winnifred Osborne Sinclair, for her support and maintenance, the sum of five hundred dollars, so long as she remains unmarried; and the sum of two hundred dollars annually for the support and education of their child."

(2) That section two of the bill be amended by adding the following words thereto:

"Provided that this right shall be exercised only upon condition that she shall be previously examined by competent medical authority and pronounced free of venereal disease, and that William Henry Gimblett may marry again only upon the same condition."

Mr. Speaker, I notice that in the petition presented the following complaints were made:

That after her said marriage your petitioner lived and cohabited with the said William Henry Gimblett at the said city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, and that there is now living issue of the said marriage one child, viz: William Henry Victor Gimblett, born on the 16th day of November, 1924.

That in the year 1926, the said William Henry Gimblett committed adultery with various women whose names are unknown to your petitioner, but, as the result of such illicit intercourse, the said William Henry Gimblett contracted a loathsome sexual disease which he communicated to your petitioner, from which your petitioner is now suffering, and for which your petitioner is now receiving medical treatment.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if this house is to continue the practice of granting divorce we ought to take all the circumstances into consideration. This woman has a child by the man from whom she seeks to obtain a divorce. That child, now something over four years of age, ought to remain in her custody. There is nothing in the bill which definitely determines the custody of the child. Further than that, if the woman has been so wronged the least we can do is to see that she be given something to maintain her during the years that she may remain unmarried. I have arbitrarily placed this at $500 a year. It is quite obvious that with no evidence before us as to the circumstances of either of them it is impossible to determine with any accuracy how much is needed; so I set a perfectly arbitrary figure. In the same way I have placed the maintenance of the child at $200, again an arbitrary figure but not an unreasonable one. In a proper divorce court there would be provision as to the manner in which these sums should be paid, and further than that, there would be penalties for their non-payment. It seems to me that the best course at this time would be to put the motion in the form I have suggested, without going into details, because we are here simply determining upon a principle. I will appeal to the members of this house that if a man has in this way wronged a woman, if he has left this child unprovided for, if he has actually passed disease on to his wife, the least we can do is to require that he shall pay a sum sufficient to maintain his wife and his child. That seems to be a reasonable thing. As it is now we give to her the right to marry again, and inferentially we give him the right to marry again, but we make no provision for her maintenance, and I think it is only a fair thing that we should do so.

Moreover, according to the evidence presented, the man was diseased and the woman is now suffering from the disease communicated to her. Are we going to tell her that she has a right to marry again in the diseased condition, and worse, that the man has the opportunity of marrying again?

I was very glad to have my attention directed to the fact that there is now being considered by the senate a bill, letter D, to make venereal disease an impediment to marriage. I want to congratulate the hon. senators for considering such a bill as that. Whether we do that in a general way or not, it seems to me that the least we can do is to insist upon it in this case, where we already have the situation clearly before us in the evidence. I make this motion in the interest of the public and in the interest of the parties concerned.

An hon. MEMBER: It is nine o'clock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted we now revert to government orders.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 191, to amend the criminal code.—Mr. Lapointe.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Unlawful associations. Publishing seditious books, etc.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not propose again to go over the ground that has been so often gone over before, but it does not follow that because legislation is not used it is therefore bad. There are in the criminal code not many but some sections that have never been used, with respect to which offences have not arisen. This section was inserted in order to meet an extraordinary situation which we hope will not again obtain in this country, but it might obtain; it might prevail, and when it does, the section should be in the code to be used.

I will make only one suggestion to the minister, namely, that the section might well be revised, if there is any doubt about the matter, to make it clear that it has no application to labour unions. In days of unrest, disquietude and uncertainty to have in the criminal code a section to which recourse may be had in the event of the occasion arising, can never be a bad thing. I believe the statute was originally drawn by one who is not now a member of this house, and that he said that to make it abundantly clear that labour unions were not included would not be a very difficult task. I do not like the idea of repealing this statute in its entirety, an idea which is attributable not to any fear of the statute but rather to the undertaking which was given some two years ago that the statute would be repealed and which was embodied in a letter given by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and read in the house so that it might be recorded in Hansard. But for that, I fancy the necessity for repeal of the measure would not be so apparent nor the reasons so urgent to bring about the end which is now sought.

Section agreed to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move to amend Bill No. 191 by adding thereto the following sections:

2. The said act is amended by inserting after section 133 thereof the following:

133 A.

No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith,—

(a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mistaken in his measures; or

(b) to point out errors or defects in the government or constitution of the United Kingdom or of any part of it or of Canada or of any province thereof or in either house of parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada or in any legislature or in the administration of justice; or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure by lawful means the alteration of any matter in the state; or

(c) to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred and illwill between different classes of His Majesty's subjects.

3. Section 134 of the said act is amended by striking out the words "twenty years" before the word imprisonment in the second line of the section and by inserting the words "two years" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will explain just what this means.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The purpose of the amendment is to restore that part of the criminal code relating to sedition as it was prior to 1919. Those provisions have also been voted by the house five times.

Mr. BENNETT: This section?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this amendment the act as it was in 1919?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes—"two years".

Mr. BENNETT: There is only one observation I have to make and that is with respect to paragraph (b):

> No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith to point out errors or defects. . . in the administration of justice.

That is a very broad way in which to express the matter, and certainly some of the prosecutions that have taken place in Great Britain could not be maintained in the light of that section. To prove bad faith is almost always impossible. Perhaps the minister knows from experience the crown officers have always said that the question of proving good or bad faith is one of those matters that are so difficult, it is almost hopeless to expect to succeed. Bad faith is a state of mind, and to prove a state of mind can usually be done only by expressions. If a man then says: The expressions I used were only for the purpose of directing attention to something in order that it might be remedied, in most instances you would say that is good faith; whereas he may have in fact the worst of bad faith in connection with the matter. I cannot but think the observations I made a few moments ago apply with even greater force to this. If in the light of knowledge and experience it is thought desirable to strengthen the hands of the law, not necessarily by bringing men within the purview of it but by declaring that under certain circumstances an offence is being committed, that provision may never be called into use; but while it is there the effect is salutary and you have in your hands a weapon that will enable the officers of the law to maintain peace, order and good government in the country when they are being threatened. That is why the legislation was enacted, and that is why it should remain on the statute book. If there be in the measure any ambiguity by which labour unions may be thought to be affected, that should be removed, but we should not reenact the old law simply because of promises that have been made.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not agree that the change was made in the light of knowledge and experience. As I said the other day, the change was made in a moment of panic. The three readings of the bill took place one afternoon inside of half an hour. I admit of course there was unrest at the time; but we cannot say that this was a very well-considered piece of legislation, and the fact that the statute has never served any purpose, because no proceeding has ever been instituted under it, shows it is not necessary to have it on the statute book. As regards the wording of the amendment, it is exactly what it was in the criminal code of Canada prior to 1919. After all I do not think we should be much in favour of limitation of free speech, provided that it is done in a constitutional way and merely as a matter of criticism against the government.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree as to that.

Mr. McGIBBON: I should like to remind the Minister of Justice that he himself was a consenting party to the passing of this act, and the members behind him were also consenting parties.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not remember.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, he was. I was in the house at the time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I cannot say no, but perhaps I have since seen the error of my ways.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is remarkable that the same light that came over Saul of Tarsus should come over the Minister of Justice and his followers, especially at a time when political exigencies demanded that he secure support from certain quarters. I should like to ask the minister to-day, disregarding the political necessity that called forth this promise from the government, what demand there is behind this legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My friend was not here the other night when we discussed this matter. As I said at the time, all the labour unions in Canada and all the men who have had anything to do with the labour movement in this country have been asking since 1919 for the repeal of this legislation. They have come in delegations—

Mr. McGIBBON: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Do not say no. I have been a minister since 1921, and I know that along with other members of the government I have received every year delegations representative of labour, asking for the repeal of this legislation. They think that it is a danger to the working of the labour unions. They set forth, and I think they are right in doing so, that the common law concerning sedition is quite sufficient to provide for any prosecution of seditious libel, seditious utterance, or seditious conspiracy.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister has admitted that it has created no hardship, and surely he should be the last man to remove anything from the statute book which, while working no hardship, creates respect for law and order. If it has done no harm it may do some good in preserving respect for law and order in this country, which is something every law-abiding citizen desires to see. I cannot see how the minister can have had such a change of heart since he and his whole party were a party to putting this on the statute books in 1919. But ever since they have been trying to kick it out and get rid of it, just because my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre demands that that be done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not at all.

Mr. McGIBBON: That was the genesis of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think a similar bill was introduced before my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre was a member of this house.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, it was following a letter from him that the government promised to repeal this legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. Similar legislation was introduced before he was a member of this house, I believe.

Mr. McGIBBON: The government did not agree to repeal it before he demanded it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh yes, we did.

Mr. HEAPS: Now that the minister has admitted seeing the light—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not admit having seen the light because I do not agree that I have supported the legislation. I was not a member of the government that passed it.

Mr. HEAPS: I am sorry that the Conservative party has not yet seen the light on this matter. The question has been asked, who is asking for the repeal of this particular legislation? I would like to know who ever asked for this legislation in 1919.

Mr. BENNETT: Parliament, unanimously.

Mr. HEAPS: Who came to parliament and asked for it in 1919?

Mr. BENNETT: The Prime Minister.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know who was Prime Minister then. I do not know whether Sir Robert Borden was in the house at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. HEAPS: The Acting Prime Minister may have asked for it, but there was no organization that came to parliament and asked for it. It was put on the statute book possibly at the mere whim of the then Prime Minister or Acting Prime Minister. But in this case, behind parliament there is the whole labour movement asking for the repeal of this legislation, and a great many people outside.

Mr. STEVENS: The section has been passed, and my hon. friend is only obstructing the passing of the bill.

Mr. HEAPS: I am not obstructing it. The obstruction comes from hon. gentlemen to my right on this side of the house, and from another house very closely associated with the minority in this house.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a statement the hon. gentleman has no right to make. The rules of this house are clear on that.

Mr. HEAPS: If the rules of the house debar me from making that statement, I am sorry that I made it, but I would make it outside.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, and that is why sections like this are in the code.

Mr. HEAPS: The labour unions have asked for the repeal of this legislation. I believe it has been stated in this house that the British law has not been used since it was put on the statute books, and I think it has been argued that it should be there in case of emergency. Now if there was an emergency in this country in 1919, and the old law was able to convict, why was this law necessary at all? That is something I should like to hear from members of the legal profession. I should like them to tell us a little more about that, but they deal only in generalities.

This law dealing with sedition does not at all create any respect for law and order; it has just the very opposite effect. I could go into the library of any hon. gentleman who has spoken on this question and I could find there seditious literature within the meaning of this act. I could take the Bible in their homes and find passages in it which would be construed as being absolutely sedititous under this section of the criminal code.

Mr. STEVENS: That is nonsense.

Mr. HEAPS: If it was desired I could point to passages in the Bible that would be considered absolutely seditious under this section of the criminal code. That being the case, how can any person in this house argue that a law of this kind creates respect for law? It has the very opposite effect. If you want to create respect for law, the laws must be just in their character. I claim that this is a most unjust law, and that it operates unfairly and harshly on a section of the people of this country. I think the best thing you can do to create respect for law in this country is to repeal this law, which passed this house, I understand, in the space of twenty minutes. I would ask any hon. member of this house who wants the people of Canada to have respect for law in this country, how he can expect them to have respect for the law when a bill is given three readings and becomes the law of this land in the space of twenty minutes? We are supposed to be a deliberative assembly, and to give time and consideration to important questions.

Mr. BENNETT: That shows there was no opposition to it.

Mr. HEAPS: It shows a good deal more than that. It shows that it was railroaded through this house.

Mr. PRESTON: It could not be if there was opposition to it.

Mr. HEAPS: I am inclined to think from the knowledge that has come to me from sources which I believe to be fairly reliable, that my latter contention may be the more correct of the two. I understand that at the time this law was passed, assurances were given to certain members of this house, that there was nothing of an important character in it. On account of those promises, the then leader of the opposition, a gentleman who is not now a member of this house—

Mr. McGIBBON: To whom is my hon. friend referring?

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. D. D. McKenzie.

Mr. McGIBBON: My hon. friend mentions the dead, of course.

Mr. HEAPS: I believe the fact is on record —and during the election of 1921 the same statement was made by that gentleman in Nova Scotia—that he let the bill go through on certain assurances given to him by the then leader of this house. I mention that only to show the methods that were used to pass this legislation. If hon. gentlemen desire to see respect for law in this country, they should see to it that laws are put on the statute book that the people of this country can respect.

Mr. STEVENS: As a matter of fact, my hon. friend's somewhat for him, moderate tirade is wholly unjustifiable. We have already passed this section, and I submit that he and others were out of order in discussing it. But if there is to be allowed a discussion in which the motives of those who were present when this law was passed, are to be called in question, we have at least the right to say a word or two in justification of our action.

The amendment was not railroaded through the house at all. I was in the house at the time, and I recall the circumstances perfectly well. There was unanimity of opinion in this house that it was absolutely necessary that there should be some amendment to the criminal code to make it possible to deal with a situation that had never occurred in Canada before, a situation which had up to that time seemed impossible to occur in a country such as this, but which did arise entirely out of the new revolutionary methods obtaining in certain parts of Europe and Asia.

The question whether or not this legislation was carefully considered is not open to dispute. The legislation was most carefully drafted, after very thorough consideration by the law officers of the crown, and in the face of conditions which made perfectly clear the nature of the legislation that was required to deal with the situation. It was not a question of theory, of carrying out anybody's ideals, whims or wishes; it was legislation carefully drafted and prepared after careful consideration by those competent to do so. It was then brought to the house, fully explained, and accepted by the house without a single word of opposition as far as I recollect, and I am certain I am correct in saying this.

It does not follow that this or that member must be saddled with the full responsibility of that measure. I am not aware of anyone repudiating responsibility for it. The point is that it was accepted by the house. Now it is wholly unfair and inaccurate to say that the bill was railroaded through the house on the strength of certain assurances, as my hon. friend says. I submit that he has nothing whatsoever to back up his statement that assurances were given either to the late D. D. McKenzie, who was then temporary leader of the opposition, or to any other member of the house. I was then and have been since in close contact with the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was at that time more or less active in the drafting of the legislation, and I have never on any occasion heard him mention directly or indirectly that any such undertaking was given, and I am pretty certain he would have told some of us if that had been the case. That statement has never been made before when the matter was being discussed and particularly when the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen was in the house and well able to look after himself.

Mr. HEAPS: The statement I referred to was made by the late Mr. McKenzie himself.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. McKenzie has been out of the house for nearly eight years. He is now dead, and we have no chance of discussing the matter with him. I sat with Mr. McKenzie while he was a member from 1911 to 1921, and I knew him well enough to be certain that he would not object to that legislation were he here to-night. In my estimation it is not in violation of Mr. McKenzie's attitude towards such questions.

Mr. HEAPS: He certainly objected to it in 1921 when the elections took place in Nova Scotia.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend would do much better if he would bring the record. However, I am not going to enter into a discussion on that point; it is not relevant, and has no force. Let us look at the legislation itself. Before reading this clause I shall repeat what I said two years ago and on several other occasions. It is perhaps reasonable that there should be some modification or change of this legislation. I told my hon. friend the Minister of Justice two years ago, and I tell him again to-night, that as far as I am concerned I should be quite willing to sit down with him and study certain amendments to this legislation; but I am opposed to repealing it en bloc. Let us consider the real point in the legislation. Section 98, subsection 1, of the criminal code, which it is sought to repeal by this bill, reads as follows:

> Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

I submit to hon. members that such a measure ought to be on the statute book after the experience we have had in several sections of the country. The first principle of any government is to offer security to life and property within the state. One of the first things an unorganized group of individuals would be called upon to do would be to organize themselves and to appoint some of their number to exercise this power. So the clause simply declares illegal any group of persons who desire by force, violence or physical injury to person or property to undermine the authority of government. I submit that we have no right to remove a clause of that kind from the statute book. I am free to admit that in the subsequent clauses it may be that there are some points upon which there could be a disagreement of view, and the repeal or change or modification of which we might justly consider. I have no objection to approaching it in that way, but I do object to the real point of this legislation being tampered with.

Now, I have said this and much more on previous occasions, and I do feel that it is entirely wrong for my hon. friend to rise in his place and single out the Conservative party, intimating that they have in some invidious way secured the passage of legislation that is inimical to the welfare of any number of citizens of this country.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is a compliment to be singled out like that.

Mr. STEVENS: Possibly. I repeat that the legislation was passed after being carefully drafted, and personally I hope that the amendment fails. Unfortunately it is pretty clear that the committee will carry it, but there should be no reflections cast on those who may not agree with the majority decision.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has said that this bill was put through the house with great rapidity. I find that on May 1 1919, the then Solicitor General, the Hon Hugh Guthrie, moved:

> That Messrs. Guthrie, Tweedie, McIntosh, Allan, Thomson, Boys, Douglas, Jacobs, Murphy, Ross, Archambault and Copp, be appointed a special committee to consider and report upon the law relating to sedition and seditious propaganda, and on any changes in the law which may be considered necessary to meet the existing conditions, and that the said committee have power to sit while the house is in session.

Mr. Speaker said:

> This motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

And the house gave its consent, Mr. Guthrie having stated that in England a committee had been appointed to consider the English law upon the subject. I find that on June 10—not twenty minutes, but six weeks later—Mr. Guthrie at the opening of the house moved the adoption of the report of the committee. He set out the facts and law at some length, and I find in the course of his observations he said:

> At the same time the greatest care will have to be exercised that there be no unnecessary interference with, nor curtailment of the sacred right of free speech.

Mr. Ernest Lapointe, whom I take to be the same hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Justice, said "hear, hear," and Mr. Guthrie concluded his remarks, indicating what the findings of the committee were. Whereupon the Hon. Charles Murphy said that there seemed to be a very earnest desire on the part of members to protect the rights of labour unions. He added:

> Judging by the manner in which the house received the hon. gentleman's reference to the subject of free speech and the rights of organized labour, I take it that there is, at the present time, in any event, a unanimous opinion in this house that free speech and the rights of organized labour should not be interfered with. However that may be, such was the opinion that prevailed in the committee of which I was a member, and the report from which—not from the whole of which, however,—is now before the house.

Then he said:

> There was in the committee a very sharp division of opinion as to the necessity of amending the criminal code, and there was a further division of opinion whether, in the event of the committee being of opinion that the criminal code with reference to sedition and seditious propaganda should be amended—in view of the numerous strikes and the general unrest throughout the country—this was the proper time to make such a report to the house and to induce a discussion of matters that would inevitably be discussed by reason of that report and of any action that might follow the introduction of that report.

He concluded his observations by saying that the minority report was not brought in, nor did they propose to move in that direction. He reserved anything further he might have to say on the subject until a future occasion, if the report of the committee should be concurred in and legislation based upon it introduced in the house. "Motion agreed to and report concurred in."

I have not before me the Hansard in which there appeared the report of the introduction of the bill, but that is the report on which the bill was based, a report unanimously concurred in, to which no amendment was moved The committee was moved on the first of May and the report brought down on June 10. So much for the hon. gentleman's accuracy with respect to the report.

Mr. HEAPS: How long did it take the bill to go through the house?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: The point is that the bill was not based upon anyone's caprice. It was a bill reported by a committee that took six weeks to consider it. It was not a bill that originated in the mind of the Acting Prime Minister. I was not a member of that parliament, but I know that it was not one of those bills which are brought before the house suddenly in a panic. On the contrary, it was a bill which in terms was considered by a very select committee of the house, a representative committee on which there were eminent lawyers and laymen as well. As I say, they made their report on June 10, the committee having been appointed on May first.

Under these circumstances, I am sure, the hon. gentleman will desire to withdraw the observations he made as to the panicky character of this legislation. As to the bill, I have not been able to put my hand on the Hansard reporting its introduction, but I have sent for it and if I have an opportunity later on I shall direct the attention of the house to it. The fact is that the bill did pass through the house in a very short time. Why? Because a committee had spent all the time dealing with it and had given it very thorough consideration. Indeed, it was based upon a report which received far more consideration, far more time and attention, than have been devoted to any legislation passing through this house this session. At that time apprehension was expressed whether the language employed was sufficiently clear to protect the interests of trade unions, and since that time on many occasions it has been pointed out that it is capable of being construed in a manner which would be injurious to those interests. But no case has arisen in which this fear is justified. The fact that the legislation stands in the form in which it is, after having been considered for weeks by a very representative committee, and the further fact that no cases have arisen under it that have impinged upon the rights of these unions, such as the Solicitor General had in mind when he made his motion to adopt the report of the committee, is in itself some evidence that if for a period of ten years that condition has prevailed, the same condition may be expected in the next ten years. The purposes for which the legislation was enacted are the purposes indicated in the report and in the speech of the Solicitor General. It is legislation which is intended to protect the people of this country, if occasion should arise. That is what most penal legislation is for. Under the circumstances I cannot see why the course taken by the Minister of Justice should not have been the proper course, of amending the legislation to meet any doubt which there might be that, as the Hon. Mr. Murphy pointed out at that time, the interests of the labour unions might be impaired and their rights impinged upon so far as free speech was concerned. Not having been in the house and not being therefore quite familiar with the matter, I have ventured to send for the Hansard report and I shall quote from it. I see that my friend the Minister of Justice has the report.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is not correct when he says that this bill was submitted to a committee.

Mr. BENNETT: It was based upon the report of the committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Quite so. A committee was appointed for the purpose of studying and considering the laws concerning sedition. Apparently this committee reported, and when the report was presented to the house Mr. Murphy, who was a member of the committee, said:

> Because of that view prevailing, there was on the day of the last sitting of the committee a majority of the committee in the room at a certain time actually opposed to the bringing in of the report. The others who remained until the conclusion of the sitting did not submit a minority report,—

Saying that it would do more harm than good.

Mr. BENNETT: The discussion would.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Murphy proved a prophet. He went on:

> The others who remained until the conclusion of the sitting did not submit a minority report, for the reason that they wished to avoid the very discussion which has been evoked here this afternoon, and such further discussion as may take place. Having informed the house of the division of opinion that prevailed in the committee, and as to the points on which that division of opinion existed, I shall reserve anything further I may have to say on the subject until a future occasion, if the report of the committee is concurred in and legislation based upon it is introduced in the house.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was introduced subsequently and passed the house in a very short time. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) seems to think that if this section disappears from the criminal code there will be nothing to protect society against sedition. That is absolutely wrong. If my hon. friend reads the speech of the Solicitor General of that day, the present member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), he will see that the committee thought this might be a wise addition to the provisions of the criminal code. The code provides for the punishment of sedition, and the common law applies to everything that may be considered seditious. The laws of the country as they stood at the time were sufficient, but it was thought by the committee that it might be advisable to have this special section added. As I have said, however, this section has never been invoked; it has never served any purpose whatever except to irritate the labour people of Canada and to give them a grievance, inasmuch as they think it is specially directed against the activities of their union. We do not think that it is necessary to keep this section in the criminal code. I agree with the decision of the British parliament and of the Canadian parliament as well, both of which take the view that the common law is sufficient in matters of sedition, and that it is not advisable to adopt in that respect the report of the commissioners who were entrusted with the task of codifying the criminal code, both in England and in this country. Parliament, after a long discussion, took the attitude that the common law was better than any section which might be added by the commissioners. I do not think myself that parliament in 1919 was as wise as that parliament which at a prior date decided not to change the provisions of the common law in this regard.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): During this discussion a great deal has been said about labour, and I should like to make just one remark in that connection. Frequently the impression has been given that labour is more seditious than other sections of the community. As a matter of fact a great deal that is said on occasion by some labour men is very freely stated by other members of the community. For example take the statement, "No nation ever became truly great save by successful sedition and revolution." I wonder if the leader of the opposition would agree with that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: I would wholly disagree with the statement.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to hear it. According to the Manitoba Free Press of April 24, that was said at the annual St. George's night dinner. The president of the organization, Mr. Jackson Dodds, O.B.E., presided as chairman; music was furnished during and after the dinner by the regimental band of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, and the speaker was Mr. R. B. Graham, K.C., whom I believe to be crown prosecutor in Winnipeg. He was proposing the toast to England at this dinner which was held at the Royal Alexander hotel on April 23. I notice that a little later in the evening a toast was proposed to Canada by Sir James Aikins, who apparently let these sentiments pass without criticism. I will just read this paragraph as it is reported in the Free Press. Mr. Graham may of course have been misreported though the statement appears in quotation marks.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Perhaps I should point out to the hon. gentleman that while the motion for third reading of the bill is debatable, his remarks should be relevant.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I submit that what I am saying is not irrelevant; I want to read a paragraph to illustrate the fact that again and again statements have been made which imply that labour is more seditious than other sections of the community.

Mr. STEVENS: To whom does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That implication has been left in these debates several times during the last five or six years.

Mr. STEVENS: Never.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman repudiate that suggestion, and I should be very happy to take back my words. However, this legislation was passed in the first instance in order that certain labour elements in this country might be curbed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. STEVENS: The people guilty of what is set forth here should be curbed; that is all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I will finish my remarks, if I may. I submit that such statements as these, if given in any labour union room or in any socialist hall, would very easily come under the provisions of the act which we are repealing. This is the paragraph I should liked to read.

> No nation ever became truly great save by successful sedition and revolution. The lamp and the torch and the tumult have overcome tyranny. The signature of King John was placed to the Magna Charta, wrenched from him by the nobles; revolution led King Charles to the block; the corn law riots—these were crimes against the law and seditious, but no one hangs his head in shame because of them. "Liberty, equality, fraternity," were no mere catchwords as in the French revolution, but the expression of the earnest striving for the substance that lies behind the words.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I am not arguing for a revolution; I am not arguing for sedition, but I do submit that a certain section of this community which I have the honour to represent, the labouring people, may rightfully resent the constant implication that they need to be very carefully watched and that there must be laws enacted in order that they may not express themselves in some wrongful fashion.

That is all I wish to say at this stage, and I should not have done so had the question not arisen with regard to the occasion when this act which is being repealed was placed on the statute book. There was a great deal of misrepresentation with regard to the whole situation prevailing at that time. I am not blaming the members of the house for acting as they did; probably they acted according to the information which they possessed, but I am inclined to think that some of us who were a little nearer to the scene of action had a more intimate knowledge of what was going on. I am inclined to think that if there was too great exuberance on the part of labour, there was also a certain panic on the part of other people, and I also believe that if labour exercised any governmental authority, some of the business men's organizations exercised governmental authority to a much greater extent. These are things of the past; all I want to make clear is that the labouring people of this country are just as law-abiding as any other section of the community, and if there was any violation of peace, law and good government at the time this statute was passed, it was not on the part of labour but on the part of some other sections of the community. I do not intend to say more than to enter my protest against any imputation as to the loyalty of labour.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, as one who has persistently opposed the repeal of this legislation, and since my hon. friend has not been more specific in stating to whom he refers, I must necessarily consider that he refers to me at least in part.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I made no reference to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. STEVENS: I have persistently resisted the repeal of this legislation, perhaps more than anyone else, and I have done so for the reason which I intimated a moment ago. I believe that any persons who by force, violence or physical injury and so on seek to undermine or disturb the foundations of government in this country merit criminal action being taken against them. That is my point, and I do not care whether they are labourites, capitalists, industrialists, farmers or any one else. From that position I will not retire. On the other hand, I resent the suggestion of my hon. friend, who claims to speak for labour in Canada, that in taking the position we do we are branding labour as being more seditious than others. I have been in intimate touch with labour much longer, I think, than he has; I know the feeling and the heart of labour throughout this country just as thoroughly as he does, and I have the greatest sympathy with them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They have asked to have this rescinded.

Mr. STEVENS: Labour organizations may have, but I do not know that labour does. My hon. friend speaks with too much assurance. He refers to brief extracts from a speech made by a gentleman in Winnipeg. I do not know that I agree with the gentleman, but his language referring to a successful revolution referred to King John, who, it may be recalled, was guilty of a wholesale violation of the principles of government of the country over which he was king. The preamble of the very Magna Charta to which he refers states that this is a recital of the ancient rights and usages of the people, and they forced John to recognize that. In regard to King Charles whose head was cut off, he was guilty of imposing taxation—this was his chief offence—without the consent of parliament or of the people.

Mr. HEAPS: Supposing Charles had been successful, what would have happened then?

Mr. STEVENS: I am saying that the gentleman whose remarks were quoted—and his language was rather loose—referred to well-known incidents in history. Later the same gentleman used this language, which is enlightening:

> "England", he continued, "is not only a land of glory in the past, but a land of hope in the future, and Englishmen's ability to cope with an emergency, such as the general strike, leaves no room for doubt that they can cope with any emergency which may arise."

Mr. HEAPS: There was no emergency on the occasion of the strike in Great Britain.

Mr. STEVENS: But they passed legislation very much the same as that which we passed, and it is still upon the statute books of England. That legislation, found necessary with reference to conditions which then existed, was not dissimilar, I say, to the legislation to which we refer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is not as drastic as this.

Mr. STEVENS: I remember a review of that legislation in England, and it was much more drastic than this.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When was that?

Mr. STEVENS: Within three years. The point is this—and I say this in answer to both my hon. friends from Winnipeg—that labour as exemplified in recognized labour organizations, such as railway trainmen's associations, the typographical union and such like, are not in sympthy with the movement which directed forces in Winnipeg and in Calgary and in Vancouver, out of which this legislation arose, namely, the One Big Union.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Still they are asking for the repeal of this legislation.

Mr. STEVENS: That may be, but they are not in sympathy with the movement to which I have referred.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They were in the strike in Winnipeg.

Mr. STEVENS: Only a small section, and they were led away. It is a very long, a very intricate and a very sorrowful story; and these same labour organizations have since many times repudiated the principles of the so-called O.B.U. The point of the matter is that the O.B.U went out of existence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The O.B.U. was not in existence at the time of the strike in Winnipeg. The strike there was called by the president and secretary of the labour group in Winnipeg.

Mr. STEVENS: It was the same group that started afterwards in Vancouver; I know practically all of them. Some of them are there now, but most of them are scattered, and they never were the true exponents of labour. They did play here and there upon passion or prejudice, in many cases upon the sense of injustice under which certain labour groups were suffering, and by that means stirred up sedition, rebellion and attacks upon orderly government. They certainly did that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman is going a long way towards justifying my charges of a few minutes ago.

Mr. STEVENS: I say without hesitation that the O.B.U. organization was not representative of labour in this country. The O.B.U. undoubtedly did seek to lead many groups in this country, composed largely of honest labour men, aside and apart from the true course which organized labour takes. The proof of it rests in this, that since that time organized labour throughout Canada, as organized labour in England, has repudiated the extremist and the revolutionary element in their party. Take the labour party in England to-day, and there is where you get perhaps as fine an illustration as you can find of organized labour. In every congress of recent years of the labour party, and also of the labour organizations in England, they have repudiated and successfully voted down the communistic, the extremely radical, and what we term the bolshevik element.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They had a general strike in England.

Mr. STEVENS: And it was acknowledged by labour to be one of the worst things ever attempted in England. I am reminded just here that they put through the legislation immediately afterwards.

Mr. HEAPS: And the Conservative party as a result is going out of business.

Mr. STEVENS: As a matter of fact one very striking development in England during the last six months or a year is that the labour party has lost a very great deal of its strength.

Mr. HEAPS: I am speaking politically now.

Mr. STEVENS: And I am speaking politically now. It has lost its strength.

An hon. MEMBER: The Liberal party has gone out of business there.

Mr. STEVENS: Out of this trouble and this turmoil both in Canada and in England this fact has emerged, that the Labour party itself—that is, the political organization known as the Labour party in England, and the labour organizations of Canada represented by well recognized labour unions and associations—have repudiated and abandoned the revolutionary, the radical methods, the methods that involved the use of force, violence and physical injury such as are referred to here. They have come to the conclusion that by these processes they cannot hope to win anything in the way of good for their interests.

It may be asked why we need any such legislation as this. In normal times, no, you do not need it. That is, I think, admitted. Then it is said: Well, we are a democratic people; if the majority want a certain thing, why should they not have it? The history of revolution by violence in any country has disclosed that it is not representative of the will of the majority of the people, not even of the so-called element which may have brought on the revolution, but that it is usually the result of a carefully and intensively organized minority group. In the case, for instance, of Russia it consisted of a group of less than 100,000 persons out of 180,000,000, and even for some years after the successful second revolution in Russia, known as the Third Internationale revolution, it was stated on the best authority that the actual membership of the revolutionary party did not exceed half a million people out of 180,000,000. But they were organized, and what did they do? They seized not only the right to govern, a thing not disputed in this country if attained by constitutional methods, but the power to govern, and they exercised it by force.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the speaker whether under the old czarist regime the people had not been persistently denied the right to govern, to have a Duma and so on?

Mr. STEVENS: Nobody who knows anything about history denies that. But what I say is that it has been demonstrated the world over, in the history of every country, the history of Rome, the history of almost every great empire, that revolution by force is not the expression of the will of the people but simply the seizure of power by well-organized minority groups. That is exactly what occurred in Winnipeg, where a small well-organized group of revolutionaries seized the power of government. They attempted the same thing in Vancouver and they failed, but in Seattle and Winnipeg they succeeded for a short time. In the city of Seattle they exercised absolute power for some three days, and it was only when they were driven out by force that they gave up the struggle.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a good thing the hon. member for Vancouver Centre does not represent Winnipeg, or he would learn what the citizens at large think about his statement.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not concerned with what they or anyone else think about it, nor with what they say.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not so much what they think of the statement itself as of the accuracy of it.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not concerned with what they think of the accuracy of it.

Mr. HEAPS: Is the hon. member not concerned about the accuracy of his statement?

Mr. STEVENS: I know it is accurate. The very gentlemen with whom my hon. friends are associated, a mere handful, improperly assumed that power, not by the use of the ballot, not with the concurrence of the majority of the people or any opportunity for them to say whether they wanted it or not; they simply seized and exercised power by force and imposed themselves upon the people. They attempted the same thing in the city of Vancouver, where they tied up some works for about ten days, but they made an utter fiasco of the affair. Why? Because the citizens of Vancouver as a whole repudiated and resisted the movement.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Just the same as they did in Winnipeg.

Mr. STEVENS: Just the same. Again I say to the Minister of Justice and to the government that I resist the repeal of this legislation in so far as it deals with this type of violence. I think this legislation ought to be on the statute book. I am willing to sit in with anybody in order to scan the legislation carefully, because there may be in it certain passages or clauses which might properly be repealed, modified or changed—and I admit I cited them, I think, two years ago when this question was before the house. But I am opposed to abandoning the principle of the legislation.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in this most extraordinary debate. It seems to be a debate between the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) as to whether the Conservative party or the Labour party is the least revolutionary. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre assures us that the Labour party is not revolutionary, not nearly as revolutionary as certain lawyers in Winnipeg. That comes to me as a great surprise. I imagine, if we analyse the revolutions of history, we shall discover that they came just as epidemics of typhoid might come.

Mr. BENNETT: From bad water.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes, from bad water. Typhoid comes from bad water and bad sewage. Similarly revolution comes when there is bad government, economic or social or political oppression, and no law placed on the statute books of any country in the world will prevent a revolution arising if the necessary oppression or the condition which breeds revolution is produced. When you come to look at the matter in that regard, I imagine the labour people of any country are far more likely to be revolutionary than the bankers' association. The bankers' association are perfectly satisfied with the present system and conditions because they are getting their bread buttered on both sides. But when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tells us that the labour people are less revolutionary than the bankers' association, I am glad to know that because it means that conditions for labour in Canada must be excellent.

That is all I wish to say, beyond this one thing: that the legislation under discussion is in my opinion of the nature of oppression. I do not doubt the sincerity of the people who placed it on the statute book. The hon. gentlemen who were responsible for the legislation were responsible for the government of the country at that time. I have no criticism to offer in that respect, but I believe the legislation itself is of the nature of oppression and that it would do more towards bringing about than preventing a revolution.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, before this discussion closes I wish to add a word. The legislation we are repealing I have never considered necessary, and I deem it superfluous in any country where democracy is practised without partiality. In its essence legislation of this kind carries with it the implication of lawlessness on the part of some class or other. Whom does it implicate in this case? It implicates a class who have been under the domination of some other class and who have realized their helplessness to exact a square deal in any other way than by revolution. Parliament has a sovereign power to enforce law; but we may well ask: what is law? Law is the juridical sanction which is given to the will of the ruling class or the class which happens to be in power at the time. I believe the juridical sanction has been given for many years by parliament to laws which have been unjust to the workers and primary producers.

I say again that the sovereign power of parliament has been used for many years to enforce the juridical sanction of a code of legislation in accordance with the will of a powerful political-commercial or political-financial group in this house. I was amazed, nay, I was startled by the words of the leader of the opposition on one occasion since I came to parliament, and that was when we sent the soldiers presumably to enforce law in Nova Scotia but in reality to protect the so-considered rights and property of a tyrannical body which was oppressing its men. The leader of the opposition upbraided the Minister of Militia across the floor of this house in 1923 and said: "You have gathered up the militia all the way from Winnipeg and sent them east, and now what protection has western Canada?" There was trouble at Powell River at that time. I understand,

Mr. Speaker, that we were then relying on force in this house rather than a square deal to preserve the peace and good government of this country. In the last few years we have tyrannically applied this force to our own shame, I say, and Canada may well be ashamed of the extent to which we have applied that force. Legislation of this kind will be needed so long as parliament as a body fails to protect the rights of the workers and the primary producers. Wage earners and labourers never strike until they realize their helplessness in getting a square deal by other means, and revolution has never taken place in any country except under those conditions.

My hon. friend has mentioned Russia. Russia is an exact case in point where the workers of a country have risen in their might because of untoward conditions under which they have been compelled to labour. It is within my own memory when conditions prevailed in that country under which no human being could live in any respectable way. I can remember when an order was issued by the czar himself, because of the condition of the peasants who occupied the land in that country, permitting them to go into the forests and pick up the dry branches that had fallen that they might use them for fuel, and gather up the fallen leaves for fodder. That was the condition which prevailed for many years in that country, and when at last the people rose we raised our hands in horror and called them bolshevik and Red. But revolutions never occur in any country until the people realize their helplessness to obtain a square deal in any other way. It is for parliament, therefore, and the country to study these conditions, to examine with care the road we are travelling, and, if all is not right, to take whatever steps may be necessary in the light of justice and reason.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): But for the observations that were made to-night by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) as to the circumstances under which this measure was originally passed, I should not on the third reading of the bill make any further observations. The hon. gentleman says that this bill was passed in 1919 as the result of a sudden panic, and after only twenty minutes consideration. My memory was not quite that, although I was not in the house at the time, and so I ventured to send to the library and get Hansard. The record shows that on the 1st day of May, 1919, a committee of this house under the chairmanship of the then Solicitor General, the Hon. Hugh Guthrie, was appointed to consider the whole question with respect to sedition. Upon that committee there were many members of the Liberal party, the Union government then being in power.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There were very few Liberals in the house at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: But the present Minister of Justice was one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Not on the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not on the committee, but the Hon. Charles Murphy was on the committee, as well as Mr. Copp, the ex-Secretary of State. That committee made a report, but not until the 10th day of June. Their findings were not unanimous, but they made no minority report; no amendment was moved, and the report was unanimously adopted by the House of Commons. Then what happened? On the 27th of June, seventeen days after the report had been made and adopted, the Hon. Arthur Meighen, Acting Minister of Justice, moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 160, to amend the criminal code. Mr. McKenzie, then leading the Liberal party, asked him to explain, and Mr. Meighen made half a column of explanation. Mr. Murphy stated what his position had been, and then at page 4135 of Hansard, the motion is stated to have been agreed to and the bill read the first time.

I find that the bill was read the second time on the 1st of July. Page 4355 of Hansard shows that on motion of the Hon. Arthur Meighen, then Acting Minister of Justice, bill No. 160, to amend the criminal code, was read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Boivin in the chair. Mr. Meighen explained that the bill was taken from the report of the committee except with a slight variation with respect to justice, instead of justices, of the peace. Then there followed a discussion in which Mr. Jacobs and Mr. McMaster participated, and finally, Mr. Meighen having made further explanations, Mr. Guthrie having made some, and Mr. Bureau having participated in the debate, we find that the bill was adopted. It was not, however, given its third reading that day.

Mr. HEAPS: Did the hon. gentleman state that the bill was read on the 6th day of June? Were there not two different bills?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say anything about the 6th of June. I said that the committee was appointed on the 1st of May, that on the 10th of June it made its report, that on the 27th of June a bill based on the report of the committee was introduced and given a first reading, and that on the 1st of July the bill was given its second reading. There was not any twenty minutes hurry to get it through and read a third time that day, because according to Hansard, page 4380, on motion of the Hon. Arthur Meighen, Acting Minister of Justice, Bill No. 160, to amend the criminal code, was read the third time and passed, the date being the 2nd day of July. That is, between the 1st of May, when the committee was first appointed, and the 2nd day of July, when the bill received its third reading and was passed, not on division, but without a question being raised against it, a period of two months had elapsed—not twenty minutes.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the hon. gentleman state that that bill amending the criminal code had reference to sedition, to what we are dealing with here?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely. This is the very bill we are talking about. Now, we go a step further. The bill could not become law until it had gone to the senate. On the 5th of July the bill came back from the senate, and page 4660 of Hansard shows that the house proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 160, to amend the criminal code. Mr. Meighen explained the differences between the amendments made by the senate and the bill as it left the House of Commons, and then at page 4661 of Hasard, we find these words:

Motion agreed to, and concurred in.

The motion being that the senate amendments be concurred in. The bill did not then become law; it had to receive the royal assent. The royal assent was given to the bill when the house prorogued on the 7th of July, 1919.

It is just such statements, Mr. Speaker, as were made by the hon. member for North Winnipeg to-night that are responsible for the conditions aimed at by this legislation. I have no doubt that he has endeavoured to inflame the minds of labour men by inducing them to believe that this parliament did something in twenty minutes which it should have taken them two months to do, and which this parliament actually took over two months to do. It is just as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has pointed out: you arouse the animosities and prejudices and suspicions of groups of men by intimating that this parliament, reflecting the mind of plutocrats and others, has been endeavouring to crush free speech amongst the labour men of the country, when the very report made by the committee and the observations of those in charge of the legislation show that the facts were directly the opposite. I join with my friend from Vancouver Centre in stating that in all this country there is no group of men more desirous of the enforcement of law and order than those organized under labour unions, for their very freedom of speech and continuance in useful existence depends upon their having the unfailing support of law and order. They must have order that they may pursue their vocations; they must have the protection of the law because under our institutions every man stands on an equality before the law: they must have those things if they are to prosper and maintain their families.

When the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) referred to what took place in 1923 as to the raising of troops, I wondered if he had reference to observations I had made as leader of the opposition. I had no memory of having done so. I was not sitting in the house at that time, but I doubt not it will be found that the then leader of the opposition by his observations intended to ensure peace, order, good government, prosperity, happiness —all of which spring from a just and proper observance of law and recognition of the equality of every man under the law. That is the important thing to remember—the equality of all men under the law, rich or poor, high or low. In this country so far, despite the attempts made at times to induce people to believe that it is otherwise, I have seen no instance in which I could not say truly that I believe in the administration of our criminal law every man stands on an equal footing—something which does not obtain in certain other countries.

I have never seen a more striking illustration than that afforded by the observations of the hon. member for North Winnipeg in his attempt to have the house believe that in a moment of panic parliament rushed through in twenty minutes this legislation that is now being repealed. I believed it until I found that over two months elapsed from the time the motion was made for the appointment of the special committee until it made its report on the 10th of June and the bill was finally passed into law early in July. It is just such statements as that which arouse and inflame the minds of those who look to the member for North Winnipeg and others for leadership. Instead of accurate statements they receive misstatements, which lead them into conditions that imperil their liberty and bring discredit upon their organizations. That is the position we have before us to-night. That is why upon the third reading of this bill I have taken the trouble to direct the attention of the house to every stage of the measure from the time the special committee was appointed until the bill received the royal assent. Had it not been that I sent to the library for Hansard, the statement would have gone on record that this bill, supposedly a panic measure, was passed in twenty minutes by parliament because it was believed there was red revolution in the streets of Winnipeg. That was not the fact.

I do not propose further to trespass on the time of the house, but I conceive it to be a public duty to frown down any effort made to induce large bodies of our people to believe that this is the way parliament acts. This is what arouses unrest and hatred, instead of peace, unity and high desire to promote the interests of one another that usually characterize Canadian citizens whether they be found in parliament or elsewhere. I resent any effort to mislead the people in the way to which I have alluded.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 192, respecting interprovincial and international traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. BENNETT: I congratulate the Minister of Justice on bringing forward this legislation. The provinces have long sought it. It will enable them beyond question to make effective their legislation, removing any doubt of the constitutionality of the statutes passed by the various provinces that have dealt with the liquor problem through government control. That is what is intended I understand, although the Nadan decision cleared the air.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes; and it applies to two provinces which did not come under the old law.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Importation into province forbidden, etc.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have two amendments to offer to section 3. First, by inserting after the word "railway" in the third line of paragraph (a) of subsection (2), the words:

including any necessary transfer by truck or railway car to a ship, or vice versa,

The subsection will then read:

The provisions of subsection one of this section shall not apply to

(a) the carriage or transportation of intoxicating liquor into and through a province by means only of a common carrier by water or by railway, including any necessary transfer by truck or railway car to a ship, or vice versa, if, during the time the intoxicating liquor is being so carried or transported, the package or vessel containing the intoxicating liquor is not opened or broken or any of the intoxicating liquor drunk or used therefrom.

This is to cover cases where the railway has to transfer the liquor to a ship.

Mr. BENNETT: Where there are no interchange facilities.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. The other amendment is to add a new subsection to section 3, as follows:

The transfer from one distillery to another of any spirits or liquor which is permitted by any act or regulation lawfully in force, or by special permit of the Department of National Revenue.

This is suggested by the Department of National Revenue.

Amendments agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Prosecution in place where liquor imported.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is it the intention of the department to leave the enforcement of this provision entirely to the provincial officials, or does the Dominion government intend to assume some responsibility? I notice here that no prosecution can be entered without the consent of the attorney general of the province. In any case where there is complaint in Manitoba, say, in regard to liquor being shipped into that province from Saskatchewan, I presume the Manitoba police will be empowered to deal with those who receive liquor in Manitoba. But the punishment of those shipping the liquor will evidently be left to the other province. It seems to me it would be difficult in these cases to get the provincial authorities to act. The logical thing would be for the federal authorities to take the responsibility.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The same provision appeared in part IV of the Canada Temperance Act, which had the effect of supplementing the legislation of every province in regard to the prevention of liquor importations, and the provinces themselves have asked that this provision should be made, I do not think there will be any difficulty.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It seems to me that this is only one step in the direction of the objective we all have in view, namely, the better enforcement of the liquor laws. Where there are such enormous profits as in the liquor business you will always have great difficulty in enforcing the law, and now that nearly all the provinces have public control of the sale of liquor, it would be only logical for the Dominion government to nationalize the manufacture of liquor. This may seem rather drastic, but I have in mind bringing before this parliament next session a resolution on this question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does the hon. member suggest that we engage in the trade of distillers?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes; nationalize the manufacture. If you did that you would not increase the evil any more than the provincial governments to-day are increasing the evil by selling liquor, and you would curtail to a considerable extent the lawlessness which now surrounds the whole traffic. Anyone who has read the report of the royal commission that recently examined into the action of the brewers will be impressed with the fact that it is almost impossible for the authorities to enforce the law. What with the falsification of reports, and the illegal shipment of liquor here and there, the authorities are powerless to deal with the situation. I know the Minister of Justice and other members of the government will hesitate to take a step so drastic as nationalizing the breweries, but it is my conviction that this is the only way you will ever get to the root of the evil.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. BENNETT: The provinces have approved of this?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It embodies their wishes?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 194, to amend the Canadian National Railway Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the amendments?

Mr. DUNNING: I have carefully examined the amendments, and had them examined by the legal officers of the department, and I can assure the committee that they are to the same effect precisely as the bill which left the house to go to the senate. The change is really a matter of construction of phraseology and has no bearing on the intention we had in passing the measure.

Mr. POULIOT: I suppose the railway commission will have full jurisdiction over construction, operation and maintenance, except in cases of expropriation?

Mr. DUNNING: Construction, maintenance and operation, excepting provisions relating to the location of lines of railway, the making and filing of plans and profiles, other than highway and railway crossing plans, and the expropriation provision. That is all.

Mr. POULIOT: It includes railway stations, fences and ditches.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no doubt.

Mr. BENNETT: And fences?

Mr. DUNNING: He said fences.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 187, to amend the Immigration Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Persons deemed to belong to prohibited classes.

Mr. FORKE: This bill is designed to make deportation for certain causes dependent upon conviction in Canada under part II of the criminal code relating to offences against public order, rather than upon a bearing before a board of inquiry condemning certain offences under section 41 of the Immigration

Act. Proceedings for the deportation of such undesirable classes are provided by sections 40, 42 and 43 of the act, and under these sections deportation may be carried out. It is considered that the provisions of section 41 are unnecessary, as section 40 and part II of the criminal code cover the case. Section 41 of the Immigration act reads:

Every person who

(a) by word or act in Canada seeks to overthrow by force or violence the government of or constituted law and authority in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or Canada, or any of the provinces of Canada, or the government of any other of His Majesty's dominions, colonies, possessions or dependencies, or advocates the assassination of any official of any of the said governments or of any foreign government, or who in Canada defends or suggests the unlawful destruction of property or by word or act creates or attempts to create any riot or public disorder in Canada; or

(b) without lawful authority assumes any powers of government in Canada or in any part thereof; or

(c) by common repute belongs to or is suspected of belonging any secret society or organization which extorts money from or in anyway attempts to control any resident of Canada by force or by threat of bodily harm, or by blackmail; or

(d) is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining or teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government; shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to belong to the prohibited or undesirable classes, and shall be liable to deportation in the manner provided by this act, and it shall be the duty of any officer becoming cognizant thereof and of the clerk, secretary or other official of any municipality in Canada wherein any such person may be, forthwith to send a written complaint to the minister, giving full particulars: Provided, that this section shall not apply to any person who is a British subject, either by reason of birth in Canada, or by reason of naturalization in Canada.

This amendment to the Immigration Act has been before the house four times, I believe, and has been adopted each time. I might point out that the crimes or misdemeanors mentioned in this section are pretty well taken care of by the criminal code and also by section 3, subsection (n) and (o) of the Immigration Act. Those sections refer particularly to immigrants newly coming to Canada who are dealt with at the port of debarkation. This matter has been debated in this house so often that I believe every hon. member is pretty well aware of the arguments which can be advanced for and against the amendment. You will notice that this does not apply to anyone who is a British subject by reason of birth or naturalization in Canada. It means that under this section no immigrant coming from England, no matter how long he may have been in Canada, can claim a trial by a judge and jury for treason or any of the misdemeanors mentioned; no matter how long he may have been in Canada he is still liable to deportation. When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre mentioned Mr. Jackson Dodds, who is a very estimable and highly respected citizen of Winnipeg, it just struck me that he would come under this section and would be liable to deportation should he be found guilty of using any language which might be thought treasonable.

Mr. BENNETT: He only presided at the banquet; Mr. Graham used the language.

Mr. FORKE: That is so, but it did strike me that if Mr. Dodds had made those statements he would have been liable for deportation if the circumstances corresponded to those which existed at the time this section was placed in the Immigration Act.

I think this amendment should appeal to the sense of fair play of all the members of this house. British immigrants have been treated so well and so generously by native-born Canadians that I think as a matter of fair play they should be treated in this regard as well as we treat an immigrant coming from Central Europe. Just the other evening the hon. member for Comox-Alberni brought a lady to my room in a very indignant frame of mind. She had resided in Canada for sixteen years, and upon going home for a visit to England had overstayed the one year period during which British immigrants may remain abroad without notice to the Department of Immigration. When an immigrant overstays that limit he loses his domicile and can only return to Canada as an immigrant. That is another thing that I would like to see remedied. This lady found herself in that position, and she was very indignant that she, a good citizen of British Columbia, should be treated as an immigrant when she wanted to return to Canada. She also told me it was quite common talk in her locality in England that if a British immigrant came to Canada and committed any crime, immediately he would be deported back to England no matter how long he had stayed in this country. I know this is entirely wrong; that only applies where certain crimes have been committed, but hon. gentlemen will appreciate the effect such a story might have. I hear a great deal these days about the Department of Immigration not being as anxious as it should be to secure British immigrants.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. FORKE: The leader of the opposition says "hear, hear;" I hope he does not think the Minister of Immigration is guilty of that fault. However, hon. members will quite appreciate that a rumour of that kind will have its effect upon English people who may desire to come to Canada. This lady said she had been in Canada sixteen years; she was a good Canadian; this was her country, and she could not understand any law which would make a distinction between her and a native born Canadian. An alien coming from continental Europe enjoys privileges that are not enjoyed by British subjects.

The name of Hon. D. D. McKenzie has been mentioned to-night, but I do not think I can agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said about that gentleman. I remember a conversation which I had with him a number of years ago, with regard to this section of the Immigration Act; while I did not feel very strongly about it I thought it rather cast a reflection upon British immigrants. I remember that Mr. McKenzie, in his inimitable way, said to me, "Oh, don't be afraid, Mr. Forke; we will never deport you." In that sentence he put me in an entirely different class from native-born Canadians; and I think that is the real difficulty. It is largely a matter of sentiment, because I do not believe it likely that any reputable citizen coming to Canada from Great Britain and living in this country will be deported; but sentiment, Mr. Chairman, is a very powerful thing and has very great influence. The act as it stands puts it in the hands of the minister or his officers, without trial, to deport anyone on mere suspicion of sedition. That is to say, a board of inquiry of the immigration officials can deport anyone who is suspected of treason, without trial. As a matter of fair play I think anyone who has come to Canada, who has been a good citizen, who has lived here for years, who has done his part in the developing of the country, participated in its interests and activities, is at least entitled to trial by a judge and jury, and then if found guilty he may be deported to the country from which he came.

I do not know that it is necessary to make any lengthy speech on this subject. It is perfectly evident what is involved in the elimination of this section from the Immigration Act. I would appeal to the hon. members on the other side to look upon this matter in a broad way—I will not say in a charitable way, but from a sense of even-handed justice. I know that no hon. member on that side wishes to cast any slur upon immigrants from Great Britain, but it does seem peculiar that a man can come to Canada and marry a Canadian girl, and his children will have privileges which he does not enjoy. The sense of fair play in the thing appeals to me, and I ask that this section be taken out of the Immigration Act.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How many men or women have been deported under this provision?

Mr. FORKE: I do not know that any have been deported, but it casts a stigma upon men and women who may have been in this country for forty years, and who are in this respect not on an equality with those who have come here and have received Canadian citizenship. It is not a matter of suffering, but it is a matter of sentiment; and sentiment is sometimes stronger than law. I am not making any complaint. I have every reason to be thankful and proud of the privileges which I have enjoyed as a British immigrant, and I have found the Canadian people warmhearted and ready to extend to all British immigrants kind treatment. I would appeal to the house to remove this stigma, because it is a stigma on British immigrants.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister has referred to one matter which I think should engage the attention of parliament, and when this bill is before the house it should possibly be determined by an amendment. He referred to a lady who had lived in Canada for some sixteen years, but who, having been absent in Great Britain on a visit, when she came back to this country found that she was treated as an immigrant.

Mr. FORKE: Because she had been in England more than a year.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me state what I conceive the law would be. The domicile of a person is not necessarily his residence. Domicile consists of two factors, namely, the anima, the state of mind or intention—I will not use the legal word—of the person, plus the fact of residence. Any person who comes into Canada from any other country with the intention of making this country his or her home, and who resides here for even a short time, is in law domiciled in Canada. So that when this lady went to England and stayed there for fifteen or eighteen months, the question as to what her intentions were would become of paramount importance. If her intention was still to make her home in Canada, when she came back to resume her residence in the country that she had chosen as her home by intention, her domicile was still Canadian.

Mr. DUNNING: If she had declared her intention of returning to Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: There is the difficultv. The question has frequently engaged the attention of the courts, in connection with succession duties. An outstanding case is the Widmer case. A very rich American who had for many years resided in Great Britain, and had very large sums of money in the Bank of England, died, and his estate was taxed for succession duty by the British authorities. It was contended that he had never lost his domicile. The decision ultimately was that there was no evidence to show that he had ever expressed an intention to make England his permanent home, although he had resided there. There was no such expression of intention as would indicate the two factors had combined, namely, the intention to make his home in England, and the residence in pursuance of his intention. His property in Great Britain therefore, was not taxable as though he were a domiciled Englishman. I contend that our statute should be changed; we should say that any person domiciled in Canada may return to Canada at any time. For why should a domiciled Canadian be shut out of this country? My hon. friend from Battle River (Mr. Spencer) I daresay has in mind the case of one of his constituents, a man from England who went over to England and lived there, and then found he could not get back into Canada because in the meantime he had suffered ill health and was not in perfect physical condition. I regard that as a very serious situation. The minister should consider whether there should not be an amendment added declaring clearly that a domiciled Canadian cannot be kept out of Canada. If the Minister of Railways and Canals were to go to England for fifteen months and then come back, the Minister of Immigration would have to issue a permit for him to enter Canada. My friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) would be in exactly the same position.

Mr. DUNNING: Worse than that, both of us can be deported without trial.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no doubt that if the hon. gentleman spoke his mind they both would be deported.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, April 30, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Third and fourth (final) reports of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems.—Mr. Power.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

PRINTING OF PAPERS TABLED RESPECTING DIVERSION OF WATER

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved:

That 500 copies in English and 250 copies in French of that portion of the return tabled on April 19 respecting diversion of water at Chicago, not already in print, be printed forthwith, and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It does occur to me, Mr. Speaker, that if only those portions that are already in print—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): All but those already in print.

Mr. BENNETT: A number of the documents attached to the report are already in print, and they should be treated as a whole.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If my hon. friend will let this motion stand I will consider what he says.

Motion stands.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

MOTION THAT BILL BE GIVEN PRECEDENCE

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River) moved:

That all unopposed private bills placed on the order paper for consideration from 8 to 9 p.m. on Tuesday, the 1st of May, 1928, be then given precedence over other bills.

My purpose in moving this motion, Mr. Speaker, is to enable the house to pass—without prejudice to other private bills—bill No. 57, which stands as order No. 56 under private bills. It is "an act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company." I am asking the house to table this course because of a telegram I have received from the Department of Railways and Telephones in Alberta, reading as follows:

Please advise when sanction of E D and B C legislation authorising extensions of main line and Grande Prairie branch may be expected. Very essential that construction of Grande Prairie branch extension be started at once in order that grading be completed before winter owing to advanced state of settlement in locality to be served by proposed railway extension. In public interest that railway facilities be provided early as possible. Wire reply.

(Signed) JNO CALLAGHAN.

I may say that an early start on this railway will make a difference of a season and accommodate settlers who are now living from thirty to seventy miles from railway facilities and raising from a million to a million and a quarter bushels of grain. Consequently the Alberta government, having made an appropriation for this railway extension, are anxious to start work as quickly as possible.

The bill finds itself in its present position through a collision with the rules, which apparently none of us thought of when we asked on April 17 that it stand. When the bill was in committee a mistake was discovered in the wording of a certain amendment. Let me illustrate my point by quoting from Hansard of that date:

Mr. Dunning: Perhaps the hon. member for Peace River would consent to leave the bill in committee in order that he may determine what amendment should be made.

Mr. Cahill: If the figures are not right there must have been an error on my part in putting them down. In that case I hardly think it necessary to give notice of an amendment.

Mr. Kennedy: I am quite certain that in subsection (a) the words should be seventy-eight or seventy-nine. And in subsection (b) seventy-seven or seventy-eight.

Mr. Dunning: If my hon. friend is prepared to move an amendment now, in view of the fact that apparently there is a clerical error in the record we may dispense with the usual notice. In any event the mistake must be corrected by some formal action on the part of this committee. I suggest to my hon. friend that he leave the bill in committee in order to enable him to confirm his impression, or he may move the necessary substitution now.

Therefore I would ask the house to agree to this motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can my hon. friend tell us what bills on the list of private bills are the unopposed bills to which he refers?

Mr. KENNEDY: I think that would be quite simple. We could start in and if any bill is opposed simply let it stand. It would mean very little delay for opposed bills.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): But a bill cannot be called unless it is to be unopposed. By what standard are we to judge it is unopposed; who will tell us that there will be no opposition in order that the bill may be called?

Mr. KENNEDY: The opposition will develop as we go along. If it is impossible to proceed under the rules, have the government any objection to this bill being read tomorrow?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no reason why one private bill should be given preference over any other. The government is anxious that all of these bills should be reached, and if hon. gentlemen will co-operate with us we will do our utmost to expedite the final disposition of all the private bills. I do not think we can single out one particular bill and at the same time disregard all the others.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, this bill would have gone through the house the other night except for a clerical error—purely unintentional—on the part of the chairman of the railway committee. At the time he admitted that it was his error. Therefore I think this bill is in an entirely different category from the other private bills.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion is not wholly unreasonable in view of what has transpired in this particular case. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was not in the house the other evening when the bill was being considered. It would have gone to its third reading, but the figures indicating a township seemed to be uncertain, and the minister then in charge of the house suggested that the bill stand. By standing it lost its place. It is a public measure in the sense that it is desired by the province of Alberta. Under the circumstances it seems to me we might let the bill go through. I think Hansard shows that the minister said he would suggest the measure stand.

Mr. DUNNING: No. I was the minister concerned and I will deal with it in a moment.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) read it.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry my hon. friend apparently did not hear Hansard correctly. What I suggested to the hon. member for Peace River was that, if he was certain enough of the figures which required to be put in, notice could be waived and the figures changed then and there.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: But in the interests of accuracy he might desire the bill to remain in committee, in which case I was agreeable, as Minister of Railways, dealing with these matters.

Mr. BENNETT: That is quite right.

Mr. DUNNING: But it is not quite fair to take the view that the government requested that the bill stand. There was certainly no such intention.

Mr. BENNETT: What happened was that the hon. member for Peace River was not prepared to take the responsibility for saying, "Change the figures", until he had had an oportunity to verify them by reference to the proper authorities.

Mr. DUNNING: Right.

Mr. BENNETT: And the Minister of Railway said that if that was the situation perhaps the hon. gentleman would be well advised to let it stand.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. BENNETT: Under those circumstances, and having regard to the public character of the measure, I should fancy that the house might, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) who after all, is in control of the chamber—does not think otherwise, adopt the motion that the house proceed to the consideration of that bill on private members' day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Of that particular bill.

Mr. BENNET: To meet the hon. member's view, at eight o'clock to-morrow evening a motion could be made that the house consider that bill, which would have been disposed of but for the unfortunate circumstance to which I have alluded.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I was in the house at the time, but I did not recognize at the moment the fact that it was with reference to that particular discussion that this motion was being put. Certainly, if the house is agreeable to accepting this motion unanimously, the government, in view of the circumstances that have been mentioned, would have no objection to that procedure being adopted in respect of the bill in question. I can see no real objection to considering the bill under these circumstances. It was simply due to this clerical error at the time that it was held up, and I suggest that my hon. friend withdraw his motion, on the understanding that when the house meets at eight o'clock to-morrow evening a motion will be made to consider it.

Mr. KENNEDY: If this bill is considered to-morrow night I am willing to withdraw the motion.

Sir EUGENE FISET: This, I submit, is not fair to those hon. members who also have private bills awaiting the consideration of the house. We have had to wait two days in succession—a Friday and a Tuesday—for private bills to come up. They have been held up. These private bills have had no oportunity of being considered by the house.

I remember perfectly well the incident that occurred the other evening, and the hon. member who said "Stand" was the hon. gentleman himself. Why therefore should we be deprived of our rights at the present time? I may point out that there is an important bill of mine first on the order paper for consideration of the house to-morrow evening at eight o'clock. Why should I give way, notwithstanding the rules of the house, when my bill stands first for consideration? I do not see any reason and I protest.

Mr. L. J. LADNER (South Vancouver): I rise to supplement the views of the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset). There are on the order paper other bills which, to a number of us, are just as important as the measure in which the hon. member who is moving this motion is interested. I do not see why there should be a departure from the ordinary rules and orders in dealing with these bills as a class by singling out one particular bill in order to accommodate some hon. member. I suggest that the proper procedure would be to segregate the divorce bills from the other bills and, if you are going to give special attention to any one, then consider those measures, other than divorce bills in their order.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think the hon. member for Rimouski, and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, are quite correct in their premises in this matter. There is no special privilege asked for this bill. What really happened was this: there was an error in the work of the King's Printer in regard to a numeral. When the bill came before the house the minister in charge did not know whether it was correct or whether the statement of those in this corner was right. It was found that the position taken by us in this corner was the correct one. Through no fault of ours but by reason of an error on the part of the King's Printer, or whoever prints these bills, and possibly at least on the part of the chairman of the railway committee, the bill has been unfairly put at the foot of the list. Had the bill been properly printed it would have gone through the house without question the other night. It is not unfair therefore to suggest that in view of most peculiar and unusual circumstances such as these the public interest could be better served if the house were considerate, in this particular instance at any rate. I agree absolutely with the hon. member for Rimouski on principle as regards the consideration of these bills. I do not think that any bill should be given precedence over others, and for that reason I voted the other night against the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I did not consider it fair by a motion, after we had amended the rules of the house, deliberately to move that one particular bill be given prior consideration. This however is not a parallel case. In this instance an error has occurred inadvertently, and as everyone recognizes the purely technical character of the objection, I think the house should be willing to adopt at least the peaceful attitude suggested by the government.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Once again I want to protest against this procedure. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has read the house a lesson, but I was here the other night and I heard the minister remark that the bill was, practically speaking, through. The hon. member interested in the bill was the one who said, "Stand". He insisted that the bill should stand.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was here; I know what was said.

Mr. BENNETT: He said that if there was any doubt as to the correctness of the description, it had better stand.

Sir EUGENE FISET: My hon. friend did not hear exactly what was said. I myself suggested that this was simply a printer's error and, I added, "The bill is through; let it go through". The hon. member then said "Stand".

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): I was in the house at the time the question came up and there is no doubt at all in my mind that the bill fathered by the hon. member for Peace River would have been carried had it not been for certain numbers in regard to certain townships and so on, in dispute as between the Minister of Railways and—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Minister of Railways was not disputing it.

Mr. ARTHURS: The Minister of Railways said he was.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. ARTHURS: Very well. At any rate it was in dispute as regards the numbers of certain townships, and that was the only reason for deferring the bill. The hon. member for Peace River is at the present moment trying to have the bill given precedence over othr bills, although he did not make this request in the first place. I think the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) would be well advised to accept a fair request of this kind; otherwise, if this house is disposed to dispute any bill, it might be disposed to dispute that of the hon. member for Rimouski, and another hang-up would occur.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): If I may be permitted to clarify the situation with respect to this bill, it was a private bill with which the government had nothing to do. It went to the railway committee in the usual way and there, following a discussion, was amended in ink by the chairman in connection with certain numerals. When the bill returned there was some question as to whether the numerals describing certain townships were correct or not, and I think the hon. member for Peace River himself raised the question.

Mr. MANION: Were they correct?

Mr. DUNNING: I could have no knowledge as to whether they were correct or not; the bill was not a government measure. The numerals in question have since been determined not to have been correct. The chairman of the railway committee, who is not present to-day, stated on that occasion that if there was an error doubtless it could be attributed to him. To avoid the necessity for formal notice, he was willing to take the responsibility of having made a clerical error himself, and under those circumstances I suggested that if the hon. member for Peace River was sure enough of the correct numerals, we might decide to let the bill go through without the customary notice of motion for an amendment to a private bill. In the interests of accuracy, my hon. friend from Peace River being Scotch, and desiring to be absolutely sure, he decided, and properly, to let the bill stand. As to its coming up again first to-morrow night, I of course have no objection. If the same attitude is taken towards this bill as is taken towards other private bills by hon. members in the opposite corner of the house and by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church), those who object can easily talk for the full hour to-morrow night. I distinctly remember that on two occasions the hon. member for Toronto Northwest announced that he was going to talk the full hour.

Mr. BENNETT: He is only allowed to speak for forty minutes.

Mr. DUNNING: He definitely stated that he was going to talk it out, so that unless there is practically unanimous consent to enable my hon. friend to go on, nothing the government can do to-morrow night can affect the issue. Personally I am desirous of seeing this bill out of the way, and it would have been out of the way only for this little clerical error. I will do all I can and I am sure the government will do everything possible to expedite the passage of this bill, but other members have their rights and if hon. members in that corner insist on exercising their rights, as they do quite properly, they cannot object if other members on this side of the house or across the way who are interested in private bills exercise their rights in like manner.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Since I appear—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has already spoken; we are not in committee of the whole now.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Since I appear to be the only member who has entered a protest, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like to suggest a solution to the whole difficulty. Why could we not start sitting on Wednesday nights from now on, to take up private bills on those nights and get rid of them?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: What is the pleasure of the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that my hon. friend has agreed to withdraw his motion on the understanding that when the house meets to-morrow evening to consider private bills a motion will be made to have the bill in which he is interested given precedence, and the government will support that motion. Of course, the decision rests with the house.

Mr. KENNEDY: Then I will withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

3. Sarnia, 160,963 tons; Niagara frontier, 146,410 tons.

4. This property came to Canadian National Railways upon acquisition of the Grand Trunk. The question of its disposal to others has not been considered.

HALIFAX COLD STORAGE PLANT

Mr. SHORT:

1. Does the property on which the proposed new cold storage plant is to be erected at Halifax, Nova Scotia, by private enterprise, belong to the Canadian National Railways or to the crown?

2. Did the Canadian National Railways, or the crown lease this property to the cold storage company; if so, at what price, also terms of lease?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Land acquired by the crown for ocean terminals.

2. 7.253 acres of land and land covered by water leased by Department of Railways and Canals to Victor Montague Drury, for cold and dry storage purposes, from April 6, 1927, to April 5, 2026, at rental of one hundred dollars per annum.

CARILLONNEUR—PERCIVAL PRICE

Mr. SPENCER:

1. Is one Percival Price employed by the government? If so, in what capacity and at what salary?

2. What specific services does he perform for this salary?
3. Is it the intention of the government to permit this employee to take two months' leave of absence before he has been employed twelve months?
4. If so, will the same privileges be extended to scientists and research workers in other departments who have given faithful service for many years and whose work would be benefited by a trip to Europe?
5. In the absence of said employee does the government intend to permit the substitution of alien labour in this connection?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. (a) Yes. (b) Carillonneur. (c) $3,000 per annum.

2. Giving formal public recitals upon the carillon of the Peace tower at such times as are required by the Department of Public Works, these performances entailing in preparation the actual arranging and writing out in manuscript form of the music rendered, as there is no music published for the instrument and hardly any two carillons are of similar registration and voicing; the inspecting and supervising of the making of adjustments and minor repairs to the carillon; and attending to the correspondence (extra-departmental) regarding the carillon.

3. Yes.

4. This is the only position of its kind in the service and cannot be compared with any other but only to conditions attaching to other carillonneurs.

5. If a substitute is required it may be necessary to procure one outside of Canada, as there may be no other carillonneur sufficiently trained available.

3. What amount of said grant in each year was spent on Olympic contestants (a) on rowing, (b) on hockey, (c) track, (d) lacrosse, (e) other branches of sport?
4. How many (a) contestants, and (b) non-contestants, were there at each Olympic who had their expenses or part thereof paid, and the names of non-contestants receiving expenses, and amounts in each case?
5. Is there any audit of these accounts by the Auditor General? If not, why?
6. How many took part overseas at these games on behalf of Canada, and what events were won at each Olympic?
7. What portion of these various grants was spent (a) in Canada in training; (b) overseas, in each case?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for Mr. Robb):

1. 1920 (Antwerp), $15,000; 1924 (Paris), $25,000; 1928 (Amsterdam), $26,000. Payments were made to the Canadian Olympic Committee.

2 and 5. The assistance given was by way of contribution. The government did not control or audit the expenditure.

3, 4, 6 and 7. No information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL MINES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the attention of the government been called to a sworn statement at Washington, D.C., made by Oliver K. Eaton, attorney for the Mine Workers' Union, before Congress to the following fact, that Sir Henry Thornton and the Canadian National Railways owns coal mines in Western Virginia"?
2. If so, where are these mines located, when were they purchased, and for what purpose?

Mr. DUNNING: In connection with this question I call attention to the fact that a similar question has been answered before to-day, and question No. 3 on the order paper to-day also deals with the same matter. I suggest that it is not reasonable to keep answering the same question three or four times.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Question dropped.

DUMPING DUTY ON FRUIT AND VEGETABLES

Mr. GOTT:

1. Has order in council No. 1088 been rescinded and cancelled?
2. When was same rescinded and cancelled?
3. When did the rescission and cancellation become effective?
4. Has the tariff board made any recommendation regarding protection for early Canadian fruit and vegetable growers, seasonable or otherwise?
5. If so, what was the substance of such recommendation?
6. Is the government aware that resolutions are being passed by boards of trade, town and city councils, chapters of the Daughters of the Empire, and other bodies, protesting against the government's action in rescinding order in council 1088?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Yes.
2. March 19, 1928.
3. March 19, 1928.
4. The subject is under enquiry.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

EMPLOYMENT OF LAW FIRMS—CITY OF QUEBEC

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Have any lawyers or law firms been employed by the Dominion government, or any departments thereof, in the city of Quebec during the fiscal year 1926-27?

2. If so: (a) by what departments; (b) who are those lawyers or firms; (c) what were the nature and extent of the services rendered; (d) what remuneration was paid in each case?

ASSISTANCE TO IMMIGRANTS

Mr. HOCKEN:

1. Does the Canadian government bring in immigrants from the British isles and foreign countries, and supply them with free land for settlement?

2. If not, on what terms do immigrants receive such lands?

3. Is any monetary assistance afforded said immigrants other than land settlement inducements, and if so, what are they?

4. Are like inducements, if any, as regards free land and other assistance offered to Canadians?

5. If not, why not?

CIVIL SERVICE— DISMISSALS

Mr. KAISER:

1. How many members of the civil service in 1927 were dismissed for cause?

2. How many of such persons were contributing to the superannuation fund?

3. How many were refunded their contribution?

4. How many were refused such refund by the treasury board?

5. How many cases are now pending decision?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR TO NOEL CHASSE

Mr. STEVENS:

For a return of copies of all correspondence, memoranda, decisions and recommendations, passing between the Department of National Revenue and the Civil Service Commission and any and all other parties relating to the appointment of a law officer or solicitor to the department in the place of Noel Chasse, deceased.

DISMISSAL OF P. A. SAULNIER

Mr. SHORT:

For a copy of all documents, correspondence and orders in council relating to the dismissal of P. A. Saulnier, late customs sub-collector at Church Point, Digby county, Nova Scotia, and to the appointment of his successor in said office.

DISMISSAL OF H. S. DOWNIE

Mr. SHORT:

For a copy of all documents, correspondence and orders in council relating to the dismissal of H. S. Downie, returned soldier, late national revenue collector at Margaretsville, Annapolis county, Nova Scotia, and the appointment of his successor in said office.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LANDS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, agreements and all other documents relating to the sale of the Canadian National Railways' old belt line lands in the Humber valley, Toronto, including all correspondence with the late Sir Adam Beck and the hydro for purchase thereof, and in 1928 with any other person or persons for the recent sale of this valuable radial right of way for $18,000 without public tender when the Canadian National Railways all along refused to sell the same to the hydro and city for radial purposes.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I would point out that this resolution contains matter which should not be contained in a motion of this kind; the last two lines contain statements and what might be called arguments. I know nothing of the matters involved, but I do not think it is within the right of any hon. member under the rules of the house to include statements such as are contained in the last two lines of this motion in a matter of this kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Stands.

DISMISSAL OF FRANK AMAS

Mr. STEVENS:

For a copy of correspondence regarding the dismissal of Frank Amas of Qu'Appelle from the meterological service, together with a copy of all charges made against the said Frank Amas, if any, and a copy of the proceedings of the investigation, if any, in connection with the said charges, and a copy of the recommendation for dismissal, if any. Also copy of all correspondence relating to the appointment of John Miller of Qu'Appelle to the position of observer in the place of Frank Amas. Also a statement setting forth the age, capacity and training of the said John Miller for the appointment.

ICE BREAKING—FORT WILLIAM AND PORT ARTHUR

Mr. COWAN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, applications, telegrams, in connection with the contract for ice breaking in the harbours of Port Arthur and Fort William, dated the 1st day of October, 1923, and made by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and also for a copy of the advertising for tenders, tenders, and the contract itself.

DISMISSAL OF HOWARD ROBAR

Mr. ERNST:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents relating to the dismissal of Howard Robar as postmaster at North River in the county of Lunenburg, and the appointment of his successor.

[Mr. Short.]

NEW GERMANY—NORTH RIVER MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. ERNST:

For a copy of all correspondence, tenders and other documents relating to the current contract for the mail route from New Germany to North River in the county of Lunenburg.

Mr. ERNST: I would ask leave to withdraw this motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Motion withdrawn.

BARSS CORNER—NEW GERMANY MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. ERNST:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, tenders, letters and other documents relating to the current contract for the mail route between Barss Corner and New Germany in the county of Lunenburg.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture when I may expect a reply to my question passed as an order for a return on the 14th March, regarding certain employees of the Department of Agriculture.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I will have the matter looked after as soon as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having reference to the discussions which we have had from time to time about private bills, I suggest to the house that it would possibly facilitate what all of us have in mind in the matter of the expedition of public business, if we were from now on to take Wednesday evening for the purpose of private legislation and give private bills priority on Wednesday after eight o'clock. If there is no opposition to that suggestion, I will have the motion presented in a formal way on Wednesday. In the meantime this intimation may be taken as a notice of motion.

Mr. BENNETT: You mean Wednesday afternoon?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Wednesday evening—the house to sit on Wednesday evening.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not prepared for that at the moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It may be taken as a notice of motion to be considered Wednesday.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, many of the members of the house have made engagements for this first Wednesday evening.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from April 27 consideration in committee of Bill No. 187, to amend the Immigration Act—Mr. Forke—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1—Persons deemed to belong to prohibited classes.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks with regard to this bill, notwithstanding the fact that it has been before the house on numerous occasions. I object to section 41 of the Immigration Act as it now stands and I do so on two grounds: first, it discriminates, in my opinion very unfairly, against British subjects who were born outside of Canada; in the second place, the legislation is unnecessary in view of the other provisions of the Immigration Act and in view of the provisions of the criminal code and the common law with regard to sedition.

The discrimination, I think, is admitted. The section as it stands places British subjects who were born outside of Canada in an inferior position to aliens who have become naturalized as British subjects in Canada Section 3 of the Immigration Act specifies the classes of persons who are to be regarded as undesirable or prohibited classes. Section 41, which we are now discussing, refers to several classes of offences and provides that the persons who commit those offences shall be deemed to come within the undesirable classes. Section 42 provides for the method of deportation of those who are, under the provisions of the Act, deemed to be undesirable. Section 41 of the act has an important proviso at the end thereof, which I propose to read:

> Provided, that this section shall not apply to any person who is a British subject, either by reason of birth in Canada, or by reason of naturalization in Canada.

Thus it happens that a British subject who comes to Canada is not exempted from the provisions of this act because he cannot be naturalized in Canada. He is a British subject by virtue of his having become such somewhere outside of Canada. So that the section as it reads does not apply to persons who are born in Canada or to aliens who have become naturalized as British subjects in Canada, but it does extend to British subjects who come to Canada from some other part of the empire. It would apply, for example, to anyone who was born in England or Scotland or any other of the British dominions. British subjects born outside of Canada can never become exempt from the provisions of this section; so that it follows that a naturalized alien may commit any of the offences described in section 41, and he is not deemed to be an undesirable and he cannot be deported; but persons who happen to have been born in England or Scotland who do commit any of the offences described in section 41 are deemed to be undesirable and are subject to deportation. An alien may become naturalized, if I remember the provisions of the Naturalization Act correctly, after five years residence in Canada. He then under the provisions of the Immigration Act is exempt from deportation; but a British subject born outside of Canada cannot never get complete exemption from deportation, no matter how long he resides in Canada. So that you have this situation; even if a naturalized alien commits one of the offences referred to in section 41 and is convicted of that offence after full trial by a jury, he cannot be deported; but a British subject born outside of Canada may commit one of the less important offences referred to in section 41 and he can be deported without any trial, on the mere say-so of a single officer of the department. That is a discrimination which ought not to exist in any British statute. The statute as it stands discriminates in this manner against a British subject born outside of Canada, and I think the legal effect of the section is beyond dispute. I will go further and say that the change in the law was deliberately made to make this discrimination possible; it was intended specifically for British subjects born outside of Canada and for no one else.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why?

Mr. THORSON: I will ask the committee to follow me carefully with regard to the history of the passage of this legislation through the house and in the comparison which I make between the section as it now stands and the state of the law as it existed prior to the enactment of this section. In the discussion of last year a comparison was made between the state of the law as it is now under the provisions of this section and as it was in 1910 when the Immigration Act was first passed. I do not think that is the comparison which ought to be made. I think the comparison ought to be made between the section as it now stands and the section that was passed in the same session of parliament, because in the session of 1919 two bills were brought in to amend the Immigration Act.

One of them, which appears in the statutes of 1919 as chapter 25, comprised twenty-six sections including an amendment to section 41. In the same session another bill was introduced which appears as chapter 26 of the statutes of 1919 and it includes only one section, the one which we are now discussing.

The first bill to amend the Immigration Act was comprehensive in its nature and it subjected the Immigration Act to a careful and thorough revision. It was introduced into the house and received first reading on the 7th April, 1919. It received second reading and went into committee on the 29th April. It received third reading on the 12th May. In the senate it received first reading on the 15th May, second reading on the 16th May and third reading on the 4th June. The senate reported the bill with an amendment which I will not discuss but which does not deal with the points which we have under consideration. The senate amendment was concurred in on the 5th June and on the 6th June the bill received royal assent. The section of which we now complain was not included in that bill. The present section 41 was introduced into the House of Commons on the 6th June fifteen minutes before the house was summoned to appear before the senate to hear the royal assent being given to the bills which had passed both houses of parliament prior to that time. It was introduced, received first and second readings, passed through the committee stage and received third reading, all in fifteen minutes.

Mr ARTHURS: When?

Mr. THORSON: On the 6th June.

Mr. ARTHURS: What year?

Mr. THORSON: 1919. I make that statement advisedly because I have taken the trouble to make some arithmetical calculations. The total debate in the House of Commons comprised less than four columns of Hansard. If hon. members will compute on an average the number of pages used in the course of a day, I think I am safe in saying that these four columns of Hansard consumed less than fifteen minutes of the time of the house. The bill was then sent to the senate. Everyone knows the length of time which it takes for members of the House of Commons to proceed to the senate chamber. In the course of that time the bill had received first, second and third readings by the senate and was ready for royal assent immediately after the bill that had passed, in a regular, methodical manner, through both houses of parliament. As the debate in the senate took up two columns of Hansard I estimate that if the debate in the House of Commons lasted fifteen minutes, the debate in the senate took half that time. Why this unseemly haste, in connection with the passing of this bill? On Friday of last week the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) received a severe castigation from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). There are two bills which have associated themselves in the minds of the labour leaders of this country, namely, the bill to amend the criminal code, which received third reading last Friday, and the present bill. Those two bills have been, perhaps in error, placed together in the discussion. The hon. member for North Winnipeg stated that the bill to amend the criminal code had been railroaded through the House of Commons. He was in error with regard to that statement. If he had made it in regard to section 41 of the Immigration Act, his statement would have been correct because that bill was railroaded through the house. Why all this unseemly haste in bringing this section into effect in view of the deliberate revision of the Immigration Act which had taken place during the same session?

Mr. MANION: Just as a matter of information, will the hon. member explain what he means by "railroaded through the House of Commons?"

Mr. THORSON: I think the term has a fairly well-known meaning. What was the reason for this unseemly haste in bringing this bill into legislative effect, that is within half an hour of its first introduction into the house? I think I am conservative in making that estimate of time. It was law half an hour after it was first introduced into the House of Commons. In Hansard, page 3211, of the 1919 debates, Hon. J. A. Calder, Minister of Immigration, in introducing the bill said:

> In the bill which was before this house amending the Immigration Act certain persons who advocated the overthrow of government, the destruction of property, and so on, by violence, were within the prohibited classes. The matter has been inquired into further and the law officers of the crown have advised that the section as it stands does not really cover all that was intended.

What was intended? I have made the statement that the intention of the amendment was to discriminate against British subjects born outside of Canada, and to enable their deportation without a trial. That is what was intended.

What reasons were given in the House of Commons for the enactment of this measure? The leader of the opposition, Mr. D. D. McKenzie, asked in the course of the debate, "How does the new clause differ from the old?" The hon. member for Gaspe, Mr.

Lemieux, later in the course of the debate asked, "Would the minister point out where it differs as he goes along?" To which, Mr. Calder replied, "It is not the easiest thing in the world to do." Then Mr. Calder indicated certain respects in which the bill differed from the bill previously introduced and concurred in by both houses of parliament dealing with section 41, and he indicated every difference except the difference that is the real difference, the difference of which we are complaining. In order to make that point perfectly clear, it is necessary for me to refer to the state of the law as it existed prior to the passing of this act of which we are complaining. Section 41 as passed previously in the same session commences in this manner:

Whenever any person, other than a Canadian citizen advocates in Canada the overthrow by force—

I shall not read the balance. The importance of what I am saying apears from the words which I have just quoted, namely: "Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen" commits the following offences he shall be considered an undesirable. That is, anybody who was a Canadian citizen, no matter how he got his Canadian citizenship, was exempted from deportation under the provisions of the act as it stood prior to the enactment of this section. But the new section 41 commences in this manner: "Every person who commits" the following offences is an undesirable, and it concludes with the proviso:

Provided, that this section shall not apply to any person who is a British subject, either by reason of birth in Canada, or by reason of naturalization in Canada.

So that the effect of removing the opening words of the old section, "whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen," and the tacking on of the proviso of the new section, is to make a discrimination against British subjects who were born outside of Canada.

Mr. ARTHURS: May I ask whether the hon. gentleman would be in favour of the substitution of section 41 as it stood before being amended by this act?

Mr. THORSON: I shall deal with that point a little later. The words "Canadian citizen" as used in the Immigration Act have a special significance. The term is defined in paragraph (f) of section 2 of the Immigration Act, as follows:

"Canadian citizen" means—
1. a person born in Canada who has not become an alien;
2. a British subject who has Canadian domicile; or,
3. a person naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile.

That is, it has a special meaning as it is used in the Immigration Act. The word "domicile" is defined also.

Mr. ARTHURS: Would the hon. gentleman allow me to repeat my question? In view of his explanation of what constitutes a Canadian citizen, would he be in favour of substituting the original section 41 for the section which is now under discussion?

Mr. THORSON: I have already stated, and in this I think I have the support of the hon. leader of the opposition, that section 41 is of no value in view of the other provisions of the Immigration Act and of the code. I shall come back to that in a moment.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is no answer to the question.

Mr. THORSON: I do not propose to be diverted from my line of discussion. The word "domicile" is also defined in the act, in paragraph (d) of section 2, as follows:

"domicile" means the place in which a person has his home, or in which he resides, or to which he returns as his place of permanent abode, and does not mean the place where he resides for a mere special or temporary purpose;
(i) Canadian domicile can only be acquired, for the purposes of this act, by a person having his domicile for at least five years in Canada after having been landed therein within the meaning of this act;

So that Canadian domicile has a special meaning under this act and must not be confused with the ordinary meaning attached to the word domicile. Therefore, under the old law, a British subject born outside of Canada who had lived in Canada and acquired Canadian domicile, by virtue of his acquisition of Canadian domicile became a Canadian citizen and was exempted from deportation. Now under the new law he is expressly discriminated against because under section 41 every person who commits any of the offences therein mentioned is classed as an undesirable and is liable to deportation without trial; but there is a proviso that the section does not apply to British subjects who are such by virtue of birth in Canada or by reason of naturalization in Canada. In other words, the British subject born outside of Canada remains constantly liable to deportation, and under another section of the act he can never acquire Canadian domicile in order to exempt himself from deportation under section 41.

I make the statement that in the course of the debate in the House of Commons when this section was being discussed, all the differences were pointed out to the house except the important and major difference, but the purpose of the amending act was clearly indicated in the debate which took place in the senate. I therefore make the statement that legislation of this sort which so unjustly discriminates against one class of British subject is iniquitous legislation and ought not to be tolerated for one moment on the statute books of this parliament.

I think no one will deny that as section 41 now stands there is this discrimination. I would go further and say that section 41 is not needed in view of the other provisions of the Immigration Act and the provisions of the criminal code. Sections 3 and 40 of the Immigration Act sufficiently provide for some of the offences described in section 41. The other offences are, I think, amply provided for by the criminal code. I do not seek to minimize or in any way condone the seriousness of the offences referred to in section 41, but I say advisedly, after careful consideration, that section 41 is not necessary in view of the provisions which we already have in the Immigration Act and in the criminal code. So that the only purpose of maintaining section 41 is to continue the discrimination against British subjects born outside of Canada.

I make that statement with a large measure of support from no less a lawyer than the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). He has spoken twice on this subject in previous sessions. In 1926, when a private member, he agreed with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that if section 40 of the Immigration Act were retained—and there is no suggestion that it be not—then section 41 was valueless and of no importance. So there may be no question of this, let me quote this most important statement. It will be found at page 4120 of Hansard of June 7, 1926:

Mr. Lapointe: But we must keep the bill in order to repeal section 41. I am quite willing to agree with the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) to allow the bill to read:

"Section 41 of the Immigration Act, chapter 27 of the Statutes of 1910, as enacted by chapter 26 of the statutes of 1919, is repealed."

The rest is certainly covered by section 40.

Mr. Bennett: That is my view.

Earlier in the debate the hon. member for West Calgary said:

Then section 41 is of no value at all, or it should be linked up in some way with section 40.

Mr. Cannon: Section 40 covers the case.

Mr. Lapointe: I agree that section 40 would cover the case, and the only purpose of the bill would be to repeal section 41.

Mr. Bennett: The new section is of no value at all.

Speaking again on this subject last session the language of the hon. member for West Calgary was somewhat different. At page 2103 of Hansard of April 27, 1927, I find the following:

I do say, sir, that the maintaining of that section upon our statute books was never more necessary than it is to-day.

The same section that was absolutely valueless the year before!

Mr. BENNETT: That is a mistake. I was referring to the section as a whole, not a part of it.

Mr. THORSON: I have no doubt that my hon. friend will be quite able to look after himself when his turn comes.

Mr. BENNETT: Deal with the whole of it.

Mr. THORSON: I will continue the quotation from the point where I was interrupted:

Having regard for what is going on to-day in China, having regard to the deliberate concerted effort that is being made to destroy the British Empire, openly vaunted by a certain class of people in the world who are teaching sedition in the worst form and endeavouring in every way possible to bring about the destruction of the empire, this statute should remain just where it is in order that if the occasion necessitates we may use it, and use it effectively.

The same statute that in his opinion was valueless the year before. Then at page 2104 he says:

Deportation is not punishment.

Well, I should like to know what could be more drastic punishment than the deportation of a British subject born outside of Canada who has lived here for twenty years, whose roots have been torn up from the soil of Great Britain and planted here. Yet the hon. gentleman says that deportation in such a case is not punishment.

The criminal law is in operation for the punishment of the offender, and for deterring others; it is to punish those who violate our laws. But deportation is to send out of our country undesirable citizens, and when this house votes to repeal a section such as that, indirectly it says that it is satisfied that that class of person is not an undesirable person. To retain the section cannot do harm; it may do good. It cannot interefere with liberty, because it does not deal with British subjects.

In fairness to the hon. member I may say that I think he read the section with which we are now dealing a little too rapidly, for he stated several times that section 41 as it now stands did not apply to British subjects. I also wish to say that he corrected that statement later on in the course of the debate. I quote from Hansard at page 2110 of April 8, 1927:

Mr. Bennett: Rising to a question of privilege, I have to thank my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) for having drawn my attention to the fact that I used the words "British subject" erroneously. I was speaking very rapidly.—

Mr. HEAPS: That is how he spoke on Friday night.

Mr. THORSON:

—I was speaking very rapidly and should have employed the expression "Canadian citizen" instead of which I erroneously used the term "British citizen or subject" and did so quite frequently.

Mr. Forke: You used the term "British subject" several times.

Mr. Bennett: I know I did, but I did so erroneously, and I now desire to make a correction.

Perhaps a certain latitude ought to be allowed to private members of the opposition This year, however, the hon. member for West Calgary occupies an important position as the head of a great party. Perhaps in view of the statements made by him in 1926 that the section was valueless, and in 1927 that it was most important that it should be retained, he will communicate to this house his present views on this subject now that he is the leader of the Conservative party.

In support of my contention that the legislation is not only discriminatory against British subjects born outside of Canada, but is also of no value having regard to the existing law, I repeat that section 3 of the Immigration Act is very wide in its extent. Section 40 is wide in its extent and the provisions of the criminal law with regard to sedition are generously very broad indeed. Section 132 of the criminal code has been frequently referred to in the course of the discussion on this subject:

Seditious words are words expressive of a seditious intention.

(2) A seditious libel is a libel expressive of a seditious intention.

(3) A seditious conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to carry into execution a seditious intention.

Then 134 provides for the punishment of sedition. But the expression "seditious intention" is nowhere defined in the criminal code, and therefore we have to go back to the English common law, which is the law of this country except in so far as it has been changed by statute. As I say, the definition of seditious intention appears nowhere in the criminal code. When it was intended in England to draft a code of English criminal law section 102 was drawn up, but it never became law. It did, however, contain a clause defining seditious intention. I cite now Crankshaw's Criminal Code at page 142:

A seditious intention is an intention to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the person of Her Majesty, or the government and constitution of the United Kingdom or of any part of it as by law established, or either house of parliament, or the administration of justice; or to excite Her Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure, otherwise than by lawful means, the alteration of any matter—

Any matter.

—in church or state by law established; or to raise discontent or disaffection amongst Her Majesty's subjects; or to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of such subjects.

Anyone who has made a special study of the subject of sedition, as it was my unfortunate duty to do upon one occasion, will know the wide extent of that definition of seditious intention. That definition drafted by the English commissioners never became law, but it was admitted to be a very fair presentation of the common law affecting seditious intention.

I therefore make the statement in conclusion that this section as it stands now is unjust in that it discriminates unfairly against British subjects born outside Canada. It is also unnecessary in view of the legislation already existing. I therefore appeal to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to assist in the repeal of this iniquitous law. It is a monstrosity that bears the obvious signs of its hysterical birth. There ought not to be in this country any legislation that effects or makes possible discrimination of this sort. Canadian citizenship ought to mean the same for all Canadian citizens. Canadian citizenship is something that ought to be valued, and we ought to place all persons who are British subjects on the same footing, whether they are British subjects born in Canada or British subjects born outside Canada, whether they are British subjects by virtue of birth or by naturalization. When we hand an alien a certificate of naturalization we say to him, "You have served five years of probation in this country and we deem you a fit person to enjoy the rights and privileges of British citizenship now conferred upon you". Let us place all British subjects in this country upon an equality. We cannot do so without repealing this section. I therefore again appeal to the leader of the opposition to assist the house in bringing about that repeal. He now occupies an important position and irresponsible utterances do not come well from him.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend (Mr. Thorson) has quoted at some length from previous discussions. I am not going to go into great detail, but I must say that he was most unhappy in his last attempt to castigate my hon. friend and leader (Mr. Bennett) for inconsistency. The least he could have done, in honouring the house with his address, was to have quoted correctly from the records of the house.

Mr. THORSON: To what does my hon. friend refer?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. leader in 1926, instead of intimating, as suggested, that this legislation was not needed and was useless, clearly pointed out in a discussion, carried on largely between himself and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), that this section 41, went further than part II of the criminal code to which reference has been made. I will not read at any great length, but there are one or two quotations which I desire to make in order to clear the matter up. I am quoting from Hansard of 1926, page 4114:

Mr. Bennett:—

Directing his observation to the Minister of Justice.

—If my hon. friend will analyse the provisions of part II of the code, in the light of the provisions in section 41, he will have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that there are, in that section, offences whch are not contained in part II of the criminal code.

Later on he had this to say:

This is not the day to relax the arm of the law; this is not the day to lessen the authority of our officials to bring to account men who are deliberately endeavouring to destroy our institutions,

And so forth.

Mr. THORSON: May I ask a question?

Mr. STEVENS: Just a moment; let me conclude the quotation:

At the moment I am concerned with men who are circulating seditious literature and who are carrying on an active propaganda against organized government in the provinces and in this Dominion, and my regret is that in part II of the code there is no section that meets the cases mentioned in section 41.

In other words, my leader was discussing with the Minister of Justice the inadequacy of part II of the code in dealing with the very points that were dealt with in section 41. And that has been our point all through in regard to this legislation. The hon. member says that this legislation was railroaded through the house in 1919. Again he quoted one or two portions of Hansard, which I have in my hand, to give to the house a fair presentation of the facts. What are the facts? During the session of 1919 the house passed an amendment to the Immigration Act. I have not the details before me—

Mr. THORSON: I gave them.

Mr. STEVENS: No, you did not mention them.

Mr. THORSON: I gave all the dates.

Mr. STEVENS: I will give the dates the hon. member gave and deal with them differently. The act was passed through the house and accepted apparently by both houses. And by the way, this went concurrently with the amendment to the code which took from May first to July seventh before it finally passed. It was in a sense concurrent legislation. In June of that year, however, it was found by the officers of the crown that the amendment passed was not sufficient to cover the case as indicated in the criminal code. On June 6, therefore, Mr. Calder, then Minister of Immigration, came before the house with a bill to amend the act already passed at that session. Mr. Calder said:

In the bill which was before this house amending the Immigration Act certain persons who advocated the overthrow of government, the destruction of property, and so on, by violence were in the prohibited classes. The matter has been inquired into further and the law officers of the crown have advised that the section as it stands does not really cover all that was intended.

Then Mr. D. D. McKenzie, leader of the opposition, said:

I have no desire to obstruct the minister but would he say in what form this legislation comes before the house?

The hon. gentleman discreetly avoided an answer, and Sir Robert Borden, who was Prime Minister at the time, said:

It can only be done by the unanimous consent of the house.

To that statement Mr. McKenzie replied:

I did not hear the minister ask the unanimous consent of the house.

Then Mr. Calder moved for leave to introduce the bill; he moved first reading, second reading and third reading and it was passed by the house and sent to the senate. Each of these moves had to be and was made with unanimous consent after Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister, intimated to the house that unanimous consent was required.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Was the bill printed and in the hands of the members at the time?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not know; my hon. friend can assume that it was not, but it does not alter the fact that unanimous consent was given. That bill was passed to amend a piece of legislation which had been previously considered together with another piece of legislation which took two months and one week to consider, and it was read three times with unanimous consent during that sitting of the house, after some considerable discussion. Had one member of the house objected, the whole business wolud have stoped; the bill could not have moved at all. My hon. friend says it took only fifteen minutes; that may be so, but there was considerable discussion. This bill repealed a section which was previously passed during that session, and I think that fairly disposes of any suggestion that this legislation was railroaded either in the amendment to the Immigration Act or the amendment to the criminal code, as we pointed out very clearly on Friday night.

Now let us come to the point. I happen to belong to that benighted class of persons born in England. Some gentlemen who were not born in England seem to be intensely solicitous for some of us who were born there. I was born in England, and I am mighty proud of it. I came to this country forty-one years ago, and I am going to have something to say to the minister about how he treats those people who were born in England and who have lived a number of years in this country, when they go to the motherland for a visit, and try to return to Canada. Now I want the house to remember that we are not dealing with law-abiding citizens, persons seeking to make an honest living here and who have a right to claim a square deal from the people of Canada. We are dealing with those who, by word or act in Canada, seek to overthrow by force or violence the government or the constituted law and authority of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, of Canada, and so forth. We are not interfering in any way with the law-abiding citizens of this country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Who is to decide whether or not the charges against these people are true? That is the very point; they are not to receive trial by jury. Surely the hon. gentleman will admit that even such a man accused of breaking the law should have the right to trial by jury.

Mr. STEVENS: There comes a time—and few people know it better than does my hon. friend—when by virtue of insurrection, rebellion, violence and seizing control of the machinery of government in a locality or in a country as a whole, or attempting to do so, the ordinary functions of the administration of law cannot be applied. For instance, if the offences cited here are dealt with months later there may be an opportunity for the normal functioning of the processes of law, but when a group of men seek by violence to overthrow the constituted authority, under this section the government of the day have the right to deport such persons.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: When they are only charged with the offence?

Mr. STEVENS: That may be, but you have at least this much trial; their cases are reviewed by the officers of the government, and that is at least a measure of trial.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why not apply it to Russia as well as to Canada?

Mr. STEVENS: Now I am going to turn to the attitude adopted by the minister toward law-abiding citizens of the present day. There is no trial by jury; it is done according to the whims of himself and his officers. I have been referring to a very extreme case, that of persons seeking to overthrow the government by force. It is all very well for my hon. friend to suggest that such persons should have the advantage of all the intricacies of legal procedure, but we know from experience in this country—although fortunately we have had few experiences—and we know from the history of other countries that to deal with such people requires somewhat drastic measures. As far as Canada is concerned, the test of this is the fact that it has not been used; there has been no need to use it at all, but its presence on our statutes is an excellent deterrent.

Now take one of these persons born in England who comes to Canada and lives here for say forty-one years, as I have done. That person goes back to England for a visit and remains only a few weeks, not a year as the minister stated previously. Then he comes to the ticket office of the Canadian National Railways, or some other transportation company, and is told that he must fill out this form in order to get back to his family, his business and the country where he has lived for so many years. This form is not issued under the statute, and is not something with which parliament can deal; it is an arbitrary form issued by the minister under his authority, and his officers are instructed that a person who refuses to fill out this form or to comply with its provisions shall not be admitted to Canada. In all there are twenty-six questions; some of them I will not read. There are questions covering the name, age, place of birth, nationality and so on. Then one is asked, "Have you ever been refused admission to or deported from Canada? Do you intend to reside permanently in Canada? Can you read? What language? By whom was passage paid? Religion." It is not enough to say you are a Protestant; you must state whether you are Wesleyan, Church of England, Roman Catholic, and so on. "What trade or occupation did you follow in your own country? What occupation do you intend to follow in Canada? If destined to relative, friend or employer, state which and give full name and address. If not joining any person, give address in Canada to which you are going. Give full name, relationship and full address of your nearest relative in the country from which you came?"

I happen to have, I suppose, thirty or forty relatives over there and I could not for the life of me tell you which is my nearest relative; I have a few cousins, aunts, and so forth. "If your wife and children are to follow you, give names and ages." And then it goes on, "Have you or your family ever been mentally defective, physically defective, or tubercular?" And then, "If in possession of passport, give place of issue and the date" and so on. And then the last question, "What money in possession of passenger?"—how much money you have in your pocket. That was a list of questions which was presented to me and which I had to fill out before I could buy a ticket to return to Canada.

Mr. FORKE: You did not make a statement that you were a returning Canadian, when asked those questions?

Mr. STEVENS: I certainly did. I said, I have been forty-one years in Canada and I have been a member of parliament for many years, and why have I to fill out these questions? And he said, I am sorry, sir, but you have to fill out the questions.

Mr. FORKE: Then the officer did not do his duty.

Mr. STEVENS: He was a Canadian officer. I had to fill them out.

Mr. FORKE: You would be glad to fill them out.

Mr. STEVENS: Not only did I have to fill them out for myself, but for my wife and my son, who left England three weeks before I did, as I was detained; I had to fill them out before I could get a ticket for her. She has been in Canada longer than I have, ever since she was a year and a half old.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What is the objection to filling it out?

Mr. STEVENS: After I had answered these questions, I wrote across the top of it that I considered these questions ludicrous and absurd.

Mr. FORKE: I will make the statement here that the only requirement for an Englishman to come here is good health.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not the case.

Mr. RINFRET: That is the case.

Mr. DUNNING: We should have order. I am rising to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has the floor and cannot be interrupted.

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order. My point of order is not against the member but to the whole discussion. The bill relates to a certain, specific matter of deportation; I do not think it is sufficiently broad to permit a general discussion upon immigration and the conditions surrounding it.

Mr. STEVENS: Upon the point of order, if you intend to rule on it, we are dealing with the repeal of a section of the Immigration Act which calls for the deportation of certain persons, to the character of whom I have referred. I now bring in this as an illustration of the inconsistency of the position, that while some are proposing the repeal of an act which deals with criminals and insurrectionists and seditionists, under the regulations of the act bona fide citizens of Canada are forced to answer questions and meet with obstacles to re-enter Canada which are absurd; and I am going to carry it a step further and say this, that the presentation of this form and others which I have not under my hand—there are four or five of them—together with the necessity for photographs being taken—it did not go to the length of finger prints, but at all events photographs had to be attached, plus an examination by a a strange doctor in a fixed place—is doing more to interfere with Britsh immigration to Canada than does any other thing, and certainly more than the presence of section 41 in the Immigration Act. That is the gravamen of my argument, and I desire just to complete it. If the chairman is going to rule upon my discussion of this question—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The rules of the house are well known, but here is what subsection 2 of standing order 58 says:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Of course an illustration is allowed, but it must always be remembered that the question of relevancy applies.

Mr. STEVENS: I entirely agree with your ruling, Mr. Chairman. The point I am endeavouring to make is particularly in response to the argument made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) and it is this. When some hon. gentlemen exercise themselves to a point of impassioned appeal in defence of Englishmen, if you like, who seek to overthrow by force or violence the law and constituted authority of this country—

Mr. THORSON: I protest against that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEVENS: Excuse me, my hon. friend is not going to make an argument; he may make a statement if he likes.

Mr. THORSON: I rise to a point of order. I ask the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to withdraw that statement.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not a point of order. I know my rights in this house.

Mr. DUNNING: If the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre says that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is attributing to him statements which he did not make, he has a right so to state.

Mr. THORSON: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has attributed to me words which I never uttered. The hon. member says that I am solicitous for Englishmen who have committed certain offences. I made no such statement. I made—

Mr. STEVENS: That is all Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is not entitled to make a speech.

Mr. THORSON: I stated first of all that the bill was discriminatory.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 103, paragraph 313, it is pointed out that the rule is that a statement by an hon. member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted. The statement of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre must be accepted.

Mr. STEVENS: My point is this—

Mr. THORSON: I ask that the hon. member withdraw his statement that there was approval by me of Englishmen who have committed offences. I expressed no such approval.

Mr. STEVENS: The chariman is quite able, I am sure, to keep me in order, and he knows me quite long enough—

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend say that he did not make this statement?

Mr. STEVENS: I made no such statement.

Mr. THORSON: Will the chairman say whether I did or did not make such a statement?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre having made a statement, and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre having made a statement, both statements must be accepted. The debate will proceed.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me try and make this as impersonal as I can.

Mr. RINFRET: You may make it worse.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I am going to make it as nearly as I can according to the facts. We have on the statute book a certain law providing that persons who seek to overthrow by force or violence the government and statute law and authority of this country may be deported. I said that this applied to Englishmen,—I used that word because I happen to be an Englishman. It applies to Englishmen who are now resident in Canada. I said this: There are some who are apparently solicitous for those who are guilty of this offence and they are seeking to repeal this law so that no disability in regard to deportation under the act shall rest upon such persons.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They will be subject to deportation if they are convicted of a criminal offence.

Mr. STEVENS: I am talking about treatment under this act—

Mr. DUNNING: Treatment is a good word.

Mr. STEVENS: —and I say that the same government which is supporting the repeal of this legislation allows its Minister of Immigration to issue regulations placing impediments and obstacles in the way of British immigrants coming into Canada and, furthermore, obstacles which are little less than offensive and insulting to an Englishman who visits the old country and who seeks to return to Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not better to keep out a criminal Englishman than to have to deport him afterwards?

Mr. STEVENS: I suppose my hon. friend thinks that is clever.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am answering the hon. member's own question.

Mr. STEVENS: The law provides for keeping out criminals, but if a man enters this country and later develops his criminality, he is liable to deportation under section 41.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If he is convicted properly.

Mr. STEVENS: I say that under these regulations together with others that are still more arbitrary, we are placing in the way of legitimate immigration, impediments which I think are unwarranted and should not be tolerated. Let me illustrate in this way what I mean. I know of a farmer near Leeds, England, who sold his farm a few months ago for £5,000. He had five sons born on the farm, every one of them young lads, the oldest being twenty-one and the youngest eleven, a daughter and his wife. He wanted to start every one of them up on a farm in Canada. This is not an Englishman who knew nothing about farming; he, his father and his grandfather were farmers; he had approximately $25,000 in cash and he wanted to come to Canada. I am taking this case from the officers of the Department of Immigration. What was he faced with? First he was shown the document which I hold in my hand and which he had to sign. Then he was told that he must go to a certain place on a certain date and subject himself, his sons, his daughter and his wife to a medical examination by an absolutely strange doctor. He asked if they would accept the certificate of his family doctor, but, no, they would not accept it. In this case it happened that the immigration office was in a public-house. There are twelve places where they are in publichouses.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I rise to a point of order. I think the hon. member is absolutely out of order.

Mr. STEVENS: The farmer took the stand that it was not a reasonable thing to request of him. In addition to that, he had to submit—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Chairman, I submit the hon. member is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): We are discussing the question of immigration.

Mr. DUNNING: No, we are not.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): We are discussing the question of deportation of immigrants. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre knows of course that the rule of relevancy applies. By way of relevancy he may refer to other cases dealing with immigration.

Mr. DUNNING: I submit, on the point of order, there is a proper place for the house to discuss this matter and that is on the estimates of the Department of Immigration. I for one should be delighted to discuss the matter there, but I do not think it is fair nor within the rules of the house to have attention diverted from the specific and only point which is contained within this legislation and which has to do solely with the deportation of British subjects born outside of Canada. If we can on that one point discuss the whole subject of immigration, then there is no use in anyone rising to a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking to the point of order, I think it is quite clear from what was said by the minister himself the other evening, that the question of deportation involves the question of immigration. You have to get your citizen into the country before you can deport him. In dealing with the right of deportation we are dealing with the right to send out of the country those whom the country has brought in. The hon. member is discussing circumstances under which some people who are brought in, are subsequently taken out.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to raise a point of order from another angle. This matter is now before a select standing committee of the house and we would be glad to hear the hon. member before that committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I was going to submit the very point of order which the Minister of the Interior has just mentioned. The whole subject of immigration has been referred to a committee of this house, and it should not be discussed here while the bill is before the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Why was this bill not referred?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is another matter altogether. It is to repeal a statute specifically concerning deportation, and the discussion should be restricted to that statute.

Mr. STEVENS: I will restrict myself to it. If the house is, as I said a moment ago, going to be solicitous for the welfare or the wishes or desires of those who seek to overthrow by force or violence the government, to come into this country—

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend has no right to say that. I am not any more solicitous for those who commit such acts than my hon. friend is.

Mr. STEVENS: Then why repeal the section?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I want to give everybody in this country the right of a trial for any alleged offence.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The point of order must be settled. The rule of relevancy applies and I am somewhat of the opinion expressed by the Minister of the Interior that, as the matter of immigration has been referred to a committee which will have to report back to the house, an opportunity will then be given to the house to discuss the whole question of immigration.

Mr. STEVENS: I have finished with that portion of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I hope the hon. member will limit himself to what is now before the committee.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This bill ought to go before the select standing committee also.

Mr. STEVENS: My illustration, although somewhat interrupted and disjointed, has at least borne in upon the minds of hon. members the necessity for some consideration of the matter. The Minister of Justice interjected a moment ago that his point was that no one should be deported except after trial before the courts of the country. Why, there are dozens and dozens of cases, including the McConachie baby case, deported on what authority?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am referring to people who are charged with crimes, not to cases like the McConachie one.

Mr. STEVENS: I am referring to people charged with crimes. The other day there was a case in Vancouver where it was said that a man was charged with a crime. I know nothing about the man; he may have been good or bad; but he was carrying on some profession there which was perfectly honest. Someone said that about eight or ten years ago he had been charged with some crime in the United States, although he had never been convicted, and he was picked up by the immigration authorities for deportation. There was no charge that he had committed any offence in Canada, nor that he had uttered sedition nor sought to overthrow the government of this country. There was simply a statement that he had been charged with a crime in some other country, and he was picked up by the immigration authorities.

Mr. FORKE: Because he had never landed in Canada. He was not here legally.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister said: He had never landed in Canada. He was in Vanvouver.

Mr. FORKE: I said legally. He had not entered Canada legally.

Mr. STEVENS: Here we have an illustration of the minister's lack of knowledge of the law. I am not blaming him because I am not a lawyer and neither is he. His position, however, is rather weak. Why did the man enter Canada illegally? What was the illegality of his presence in Canada? Because he was supposed, according to another person's statement—and no trial was held—to have been charged with an illegal act in the United States.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. STEVENS: I am saying that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is making a statement that is entirely apart from the fact.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister know the case I am talking about?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister said that the man landed in Canada illegally, and for that reason he may be deported.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister decides that this individual was in Canada illegally.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know the case, but if my hon. friend will allow me to make a statement—

Mr. STEVENS: The minister says he does not know the case, but he is going to explain it.

Mr. FORKE: If he was over here illegally—

Mr. STEVENS: To whom is the minister referring?

Mr. FORKE: —he probably slipped over the border, the same as some Canadians do going the other way.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister know whom he is talking about?

Mr. FORKE: No, but I know—

Mr. STEVENS: The minister says he does not know whom he is talking about.

Mr. FORKE: I know that he would not be deported if he were here legally.

Mr. STEVENS: If the minister will please take his seat, I will go on.

The CHAIRMAN: These interruptions are taking up the time of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. He has the floor.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister says he does not know the case, and yet he says the man was illegally in Canada. I am telling the house the facts of the case. Here was a man from the United States who came to Canada and was carrying on here a perfectly legitimate business. An individual informed the immigration authorities that this man had been charged with—he was not convicted—an offence in the United States, and the minister's officers come along and pick him up and take him down to the detention sheds for deportation without a trial.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is now going beyond the facts.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I am not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He would not be deported without a trial.

Mr. STEVENS: The answer to the minister is the answer that the poor fellow gave when he was in gaol. They told him, "They cannot put you in gaol for this," and he said, "Why the answer is, I am in gaol now."

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend well knows that he would not be sent out of the country without being given a trial.

Mr. DUNNING: Was he deported?

Mr. STEVENS: As far as I know, yes.

Mr. DUNNING: As far as you know.

Mr. STEVENS: I think under this forty minute rule, Mr. Chairman, one should at least be permitted to state his case. My point is this, that under the Immigration Act we have a score of different reasons why a man may be deported. He can be deported for various things—an offence in another country—and I know many of them who have been picked up—

Mr. DUNNING: Can we have the name of the individual who, my hon. friend says, was deported under the circumstances which he has just related?

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of Immigration knows the case; ask him.

Mr. DUNNING: Let us have the name.

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of Immigration says he knows the case; ask him. If he says that what I state is wrong—

Mr. DUNNING: Give us the name.

Mr. STEVENS: Another thing is this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: You are the very one who said names should not be mentioned the other day.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend give the name to the minister privately, if the man would be injured by giving it publicly?

Mr. FORKE: Does not the hon. member think it is only decent, when he makes a charge, to give me the name, so that I can have a report made on the case?

Mr. STEVENS: I am making no charge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that interruptions of this kind are not conducive to orderly debate. One should at least have the opportunity to present his case without ribald "oh, ohs," from that section of the house. My argument is that in the repeal of this legislation we are dealing with perhaps one of the most difficult phases of administration that it is possible for us to consider. We have had one experience in Canada, the only one, I think, in the last forty or fifty years, where certain groups of individuals sought by violence to secure control of constituted authority in this country. Canada prides itself, and very properly so, upon its system of government and upon its constitution, and yet the constituted authorities upon that occasion found it impossible to deal with the situation which arose, and so this legislation was passed, not ill-advisedly, not railroaded through the house, but the corollary to this amendment took two months and a week to get through in the session before this particular amendment was made, and later on this amendment was introduced into the house and unanimously accepted by the house without a protesting voice. Since that date not a single complaint regarding the application of this law has been made. Only a political cry has been set up by certain individuals, to gain a little political advantage, for the repeal of this section, and two years ago, when a bargain was made between the Prime Minister and the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre, who at that time was sitting on the other side of the house—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask that the hon. member retract that statement. It is absolutely untrue.

Mr. STEVENS: A letter passed between the Prime Minister and the hon. gentleman—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I ask that that statement be retracted, Mr. Chairman. I repeat it is absolutely untrue.

Mr. STEVENS: If the hon. gentleman says that there was no bargain or understanding with the Prime Minister, I am quite willing to accept his word, as he is entitled to have done, speaking from his place in the house, but I was referring to a letter which was written by the Prime Minister to the hon. gentleman, and which was read by the hon. gentleman himself into the record.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What did the letter say?

Mr. STEVENS: I have not got it under my hand, but my hon. friend will not deny reading that letter to the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I read it, I will not deny it.

Mr. STEVENS: You received it and read it into the record.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There was no bargain in that letter.

The CHAIRMAN: The forty minutes is up but in view of the interruptions, perhaps the hon. gentleman should be allowed more time.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not get through my argument, but I shall bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUNNING: As another individual who is affected by this law in the same manner as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, who has just spoken, I desire to say a few words along the same lines that I followed on a former occasion.

While my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre is, like myself an Englishman resident many years in this country, and like myself, subject to the provisions of this law, his view of it is different from mine, just in the same manner as his political principles differ from mine. His view is essentially the Tory view of this class of legislation, and mine, I hope, is essentially the Liberal view.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DUNNING: Broadly the question resolves itself into one of the most fundamental questions of government: Shall a man who is charged with a crime be given a trial or not? Shall Canadian citizens stand equal before the law? That is the question, and I submit that those of us who come from the old land have exactly, or should have exactly the same rights before the law of this country as those who come from other lands, and it is on that particular ground of principle that I am against any legislation of this sort. Perhaps I can best illustrate my point by making a comparison from within the walls of this house.

I have a very high respect for my hon. friend the member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich). He comes from another land. He comes of a different race from mine, a different race from that of almost all of us. He is to-day a Canadian citizen by naturalization. I am a British subject, born in England, and resident in Canada. I believed that we were both Canadian citizens with equal rights before the law, but this legislation does not treat us equally. Let me follow my illustration further. The hon. member for Vegreville and I, having common principles, as we have on many matters, go out and address a public meeting. Some individual at that meeting has the idea that we are advocating the overthrow of government by force and violence, and a charge is laid against both of us. What is the treatment accorded under this law? Under this law as it now stands, an immigration inspector puts his hand on my shoulder and kicks me out of the country without a trial, but my hon. friend from Vegreville, charged with the very same offence, must be charged under the criminal code and receive a fair trial. I am asking for the British-born subject the same treatment—

Mr. THORSON: And the hon. member for Vegreville could not be deported if found guilty.

Mr. DUNNING: No. He must be punished in this country, because there is no place to deport him to. He has lost his previous nationality in accepting Canadian nationality. But I may be torn away from my family and my possessions in this country and sent back home at the whim of a bureaucrat—an immigration inspector. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre actually defends that procedure and accuses us who seek to wipe it out of championing the cause of those who would upset government in this country by violence. No, Mr. Chairman, the principle is far more vital than that. The principle gets down to the very roots of our freedom, as to whether men who are charged with crime shall be equal before the law, shall all be treated before the same courts in the same way, or whether there shall be an arbitrary authority set up, no matter what it is, that can say to one man: "You get out of the country; leave your family and your possessions behind you; you are guilty;" and to the other man: "You go before the court and we will prove whether you are innocent or guilty." It is on the matter of principle that I stand in connection with this law.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it not the fact that previous to this law you could not deport a Britisher who talked sedition, while you could deport a Frenchman, an Italian or any alien; and that what this law did was to put them on an equality, not an inequality?

Mr. DUNNING: No. it is not a fact as relating to British subjects.

Mr. McGIBBON: I beg your pardon, I think you will find it is.

Mr. DUNNING: Until this law was passed a British subject born in England was treated the same way in this country with respect to this class of offences as any other British subject. With respect to aliens, they could always be deported, but even then only after conviction for an offence. I am in the judgment of the lawyers of the house in saying that this is the only case where a man charged with a criminal offence in this country can be deported without trial. I should like any lawyer in this house to name another circumstance under which any man charged with crime in Canada can be deported without trial, be he a British subject or an alien.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely you know better than that.

Mr. DUNNING: There may be other classes of offences for which people may be deported; for instance, if they got into the country illegally in the first place, or are medically unfit. I am not discussing such cases. Personally I know of no case at all similar to this one. Even so, I prefer to limit my claim to those who are British subjects and simply to plead for equal treatment, no matter where they may happen to have been born. After all, is it so creditable to have been born in this country? I am inclined to think there is more merit in having had the courage to leave one's native country and come here than there is in the mere accident of birth in this country. Why should we treat differently before the law British subjects, whether born in Canada, in England or elsewhere in the British Empire? We are not defending those who commit offences. But my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre asks us to adopt the principle that a man is to be presumed guilty without trial—

Mr. BENNETT: No such thing.

Mr. DUNNING: —on the determination of a bureaucratic official. British law presumes that men are innocent until they are proven guilty, and all I ask for British people in this country is that they be given a chance before a jury of their peers to defend themselves, that they are proven criminal in the regular courts before they are turned out of this country.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know whether to be more appalled at the absolute lack of knowledge of the minister who has just taken his seat (Mr. Dunning) or with his effrontery in making statements such as he has made.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I ask for the withdrawal of that word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I think the word "effrontery" might be modified.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I will say "courage".

Mr. DUNNING: I will admit that my hon. friend is an excellent judge of effrontery.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman transgresses the rule that he has invoked. This is his idea of parliamentary procedure. I suppose he is subject to exactly the same observation which you made in respect of myself, Mr. Chairman. Will you be good enough to make it?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The same rule applies.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: If it is unparliamentary to say that my hon. friend is an excellent judge of effrontery, I have pleasure in withdrawing the expression, and would say that he is an excellent judge of courage.

Mr. BENNETT: Now that the minister has admitted that I am an excellent judge of that courage which he has just displayed, may I venture to direct the attention of the committee to the fact that ever since we have had an immigration law it has contained a provision whereby immigrants who are guilty of criminal offences may be deported without trial? I wonder if this is not known to hon. members.

Mr. DUNNING: Proven guilty?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to see the section. If it were so I would urge its repeal.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the hon. gentleman wanted to change the whole foundation of our law. That is one of the difficulties of speaking without knowledge.

Mr. DUNNING: We will find that out later.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us look at the Immigration Act itself. But before I read it I may make this observation. The right of every country to determine who shall be its citizens has always been admitted in international law as one of the proudest of a nation's privileges. No one has been more insistent than the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson) in claiming that we are a nation, that we have the right to determine our own affairs as suits us best, and that with respect to determining who shall come within our borders and who shall go out we are the only judges, and that this question should be determined according to the exigencies of the moment and the necessities of the case.

Mr. DUNNING: By this parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: This parliament should determine. Now, let me quote the Immigration Act itself. Hon. members will find that section 3 specifies the classes of persons that are prohibited from entering Canada. Then I turn to section 40, a section that has been much discussed in this house during the debates that have taken place in connection with the repeal of section 41. Section 40, chapter 93 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, reads as follows:

Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen or person having Canadian domicile, shall be found an inmate of or connected with the management of a house of prostitution or practising prostitution, or who shall receive, share in, or derive benefit from any part of the earnings of any prostitute or who manages or is employed by, in, or in connection with any house of prostitution or music or dance hall or other place of amusement or resort habitually frequented by prostitutes, or where prostitutes gather, or who in any way assists any prostitute or protects or promises to protect from arrest any prostitute or who shall import or attempt to import any person for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or who has been convicted—

"Or," mark you, not "and."

—or who has been convicted of a criminal offence in Canada or who admits the commission prior to landing or entry to Canada, of a crime involving moral turpitude, or who has become a professional beggar or a public charge or practices polygamy, or has become an inmate of a penitentiary, gaol, reformatory, prison, asylum or hospital for the insane or the mentally deficient, or an inmate of a public charitable institution, or enters or remains in Canada contrary to any provision of this act, it shall be the duty of any officer cognizant thereof, and the duty of the clerk, secretary or other official of any municipality in Canada wherein such person may be, to forthwith send a written complaint thereof to the minister, giving full particulars.

There is the position with respect to that.

Mr. DUNNING: Am I not domiciled in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I will read you what domiciled is in a moment. I want to leave the word domicile alone for the time being and to show that parliament found it desirable to confer large powers on the immigration authorities to deport certain prohibited and undesirable classes of persons, regardless of whether or not they were convicted of offences, for the reasons mentioned by the minister in the early part of the session, and which the then Minister of the Interior referred to in 1926. This parliament has always claimed the right to place in the hands of its officials certain powers with respect to removing from the country those classes of people that were regarded as undesirable.

Mr. FORKE: Immigrants.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. FORKE: The clause you read deals especially with immigrants.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us take the minister's interpretation—immigrants whom we turn out of the country. The Minister of Health (Mr. King, Kootenay) the other day read the prohibited classes and I will not take the time now to give them again. Suppose anyone in that class came to the country: what would happen? Is there any trial? Was there a trial in the case of the McConachie child?

Mr. FORKE: The cases are not parallel at all.

Mr. BENNETT: The point which I am making the minister has not yet appreciated. It is this: Under the provisions of the statute powers are given to the officials of the department to deport from this country men and women who, though they have not been convicted of any crime, are found to be within the prohibited or undesirable classes.

Mr. FORKE: But who are not Canadians.

Mr. BENNETT: The authorities themselves have the right to order such deportation. The question whether or not they are Canadians does not arise.

Mr. FORKE: Yes, it does.

Mr. BENNETT: My point is that parliament has claimed the right to determine who shall come within the borders of Canada, and under what conditions people shall be deported. And that power is not limited to the deportation of persons convicted of any crime. The prohibited classes, as mentioned in the section, were given the other day by the Minister of Health. Section 3 gives one class and section 40 the other; and one of the classes embraces those who have been convicted of any crime. With respect to them the crime need not necessarily have been committed in Canada; if any such person has been convicted of a crime in any other country we may exclude him from this Dominion. That is the provision of the law. In the United States and in other countries as well, to whose shores people are invited, it has been deemed wise—and it is not an unreasonable thing—to vest in certain officials the power to send out of the country certain undesirable persons who have come in. I would remind the minister and this committee that 95 per cent of all deportations that have taken place in Canada have been deportations made at the whim of Canadian officials. I say whim; let us call it a judicial whim, if you like. But the fact is that these deportations have been made by the officials of this country without regard at all to the courts of the land.

Mr. DUNNING: But not in connection with matters that could come before the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: Every one of those to whom I have reference comes within the class of persons committing what are offences under the code.

Mr. DUNNING: Being in an insane asylum or a charitable institution is not an offence.

Mr. BENNETT: No. But inmates of the other institutions are all persons who have committed criminal offences. And what is more, the prohibited class involves criminal cases. In other words, this parliament has claimed from time immemorial, and properly so, the right to exclude from Canada men and women who, in the opinion of the public of this country, ought not to be here; and the officials of the department—not the minister himself, except in so far as he signs his name to the deportation order—have determined the question without reference to the courts of Canada.

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend's argument is perfectly sound so long as he is dealing with immigrants. There is no mistake that these powers are given in these cases. But section 41 deals with people like the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) and myself.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure—

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich), for example—this is merely by way of illustration—may commit any crime under the sun and he will be tried and punished under the laws of Canada. No immigration official can deport him. He has passed out of the immigrant class and is now in the Canadian citizen class. But the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) and I have never ceased to be of that class so far as section 41 is concerned, and that is where the injustice and the wrong exist. All these laws are for the protection of the country against undesirable immigrants, and the officials can stop them at the border and turn them back.

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to say again that the minister and I are at one; there is no confusion of thought with respect to the matter. I was dealing with immigrants, and so was he. I was pointing out that this country had always retained the power, in its officials, to deport without recourse to the courts or trial by jury; and I made the statement that 95 per cent of all cases that have ever been dealt with in this country have been deportations made by the officials without convictions in the courts of Canada. I wish to impress that point upon the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like my hon. friend to advance some proof regarding that 95 per cent. The statement is a sweeping one.

Mr. BENNETT: All I can say is that in the records of the department that statement appears many times and has never been denied in this house. It is shown that there are not 5 per cent of these cases in which a conviction in the courts of Canada is the basis of deportation.

Mr. DUNNING: If you include all the medical and mental reasons.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am doing; I am taking the whole list of deportations.

Mr. DUNNING: That is to say, there may be 80 per cent that would never have committed any offences for which they could have been brought to court.

Mr. BENNETT: The statement I am making is that, of all deportations from Canada, not 5 per cent, so far as I can gather from the records that have been drawn to my attention, were based on convictions in the courts of this country.

Mr. DUNNING: That might be true, because the reason for deportation might have nothing at all to do with any offence.

Mr. THORSON: The leader of the opposition has stated the powers of parliament in this matter. May I ask whether these powers do not continue beyond the time during which you might call a person, strictly speaking, an immigrant? That power of deportation without trial lies with the department for the period of five years of residence or until the naturalization of the alien.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am coming to.

Mr. THORSON: So that the minister has the power to deport without trial so long as the newcomer has not acquired Canadian citizenship within the meaning of the act. Does the leader of the opposition agree with that interpretation of the act?

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. Obviously there must come a time when a limitation will be imposed by parliament upon its right, or upon the right of its officials, to deport, and that limitation has been fixed in the case of aliens at naturalization. My hon. friend has referred to the period of five years. It used to be a shorter time but under the statute at present, as he knows, the limitation has been fixed at five years for the reason that within five years the immigrant may obtain naturalization. And once he has obtained naturalization you cannot deport him, for the palpable reason that he no longer has any country to which he may be deported. It therefore follows that our powers with respect to deportation are exhausted when the immigrant becomes a naturalized Canadian citizen.

Mr. THORSON: Unless he loses his naturalization.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not discussing exceptions; he may lose his naturalization afterwards and be again subject to deportation. I am at the moment dealing with the broad principle that we have imposed a restriction on the exercise of our powers; that is to say, they must be exercised within five years. At the end of that period if the immigrant has become a naturalized Canadian—and it is to be assumed that he will become naturalized if he remains in the country for that length of time—these powers are no longer exercisable for the obvious reason, as I have said, that the immigrant has no country to which he can be deported, unless by his own conduct another condition has arisen to which I need not now refer. There is another point. What about the British subject who comes to this country and is a Canadian citizen ipso facto?

Mr. THORSON: He is not a Canadian citizen within the act.

Mr. BENNETT: He is a Canadian citizen within a year. His name goes on the voters' list and he votes; he participates in government. Why? Because we are a part of one empire. That is the reason. We have no right to say that he is not a British subject, and our constitutional powers would not enable us to say to him, "You shall leave the country", unless we place upon the law some artificial restriction with respect to his rights as a British subject. Parliament has said a very simple thing; under the test imposed by parliament in 1919 they merely said, "Was he born here or was he not?" In the one case he had to live here five years and become naturalized; then the power of parliament was gone, because the man was a naturalized Canadian and could not be deported for the simple reason that he had no other country to which he could go. The Britisher who comes to this country has the right to participate in the government of the country, with all the rights and privileges which belong to such participation, within a short time after his arrival, but he cannot become naturalized; he cannot become a Canadian citizen in the sense that an alien becomes a Canadian citizen, but there is a provision in the act in respect to domicile which was read by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson). Under that provision a Canadian citizen means a British subject who has Canadian domicile, and a Canadian domicile can only be acquired for the purposes of the Immigration Act by a person having his domicile in Canada for at least five years after having been allowed to enter the country. Clearly that does not apply to a British subject.

Mr. FORKE: I may be wrong, but I think it does apply to a British subject.

Mr. THORSON: Does the leader of the opposition say that that does not apply to a British subject?

Mr. BENNETT: Not as it applies to an alien, but for the purposes of the Immigration Act. I will read the section:

"Domicile" means the place in which a person has his home, or in which he resides, or to which he returns as his place of permanent abode, and does not mean the place where he resides for a mere special or temporary purpose;

(i) Canadian domicile can only be acquired, for the purposes of this act, by a person having his domicile for at least five years in Canada after having been landed therein within the meaning of this act:

Mr. THORSON: Does the hon. gentleman say this would not apply to a British subject?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it does, but I am coming to the point I want to make with respect to another point brought out by my hon. friend.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the leader of the opposition mind reading the classes of persons who cannot establish domicile under any circumstances?

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to deal with that later, but I can do it now. Without going into the details at length, I think it is covered by this observation: The question of domicile is a matter of intention and fact, and the question of citizenship involves the law of nationality to this extent, that the British subject who comes into Canada is a Canadian citizen by virtue of his birth.

Mr. ADSHEAD: After twelve months.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. Now let us go a step further. We have our immigrant here, coming to us from England; he has exercised all the rights and privileges of a Canadian after he has been here twelve months. We have brought in a foreigner who becomes naturalized at the end of five years; then he cannot be deported. How are we going to deal with that class of immigrant about which my friend the minister is so insistent? As he has said he is an immigrant; my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre is an immigrant, and now we are dealing with immigrants. The difficulty is that the house is confusing the two things. We are dealing only with immigrants, people who come from outside countries to Canada. Such a person does not cease to be an immigrant because he came from another section of the British Empire; he is as much an immigrant coming from London as a person coming from Poland. In law there is no distinction in the use of the word immigrant as between the person coming from any part of the British Empire and the person coming from outside the British Empire. Clearly both persons are immigrants and as the minister has said this section deals with immigrants and no other class of persons.

Mr. THORSON: I am sorry to interrupt so often, but I would like to ask another question for the purpose of securing information. Am I correct in stating that under the law as it existed previous to the present section 41, once a stranger came to Canada and acquired Canadian citizenship within the meaning of the Immigration Act, whether he was a British subject or an alien, he was then free from deportation no matter what offence he committed and no matter whether or not he received a trial?

Mr. BENNETT: I am just going to read the section; I think my legal friends will agree that I have fairly stated the situation to this moment. It will be remembered that in 1919 we amended the Immigration Act of 1910; that was the first amendment. What did we enact? In 1919 the statutes of 1910 were amended, and the section which was amended read as follows:

Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen advocates in Canada the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Great Britain or Canada, or other British dominion, colony, possession or dependency, or the overthrow by force or violence of constituted law and authority, or the assassination of any official of the government of Great Britain or Canada or other British dominion, colony, possession or dependency, or of any foreign government, or shall by word or act create or attempt to create riot or public disorder in Canada, or shall by common repute belong to or be suspected of belonging to any secret society or organization which extorts money from or in any way attempts to control, any resident of Canada, by force, or threat of bodily harm, or by blackmail; such person for the purposes of this act shall be considered and classed as an undesirable immigrant, and it shall be the duty of any officer becoming cognizant thereof, and the duty of the clerk, secretary or other official of any municicpality in Canada wherein such person may be, to forthwith send a written complaint thereof to the minister or superintendent of immigration, giving full particulars.

As perhaps the house will remember, the statute of 1910 was amended in the early part of 1919, and if my friend from Winnipeg had directed his attention to what took place in 1926 perhaps he would not have made the observations he did make with respect to my position then. In 1926 the government of the day introduced a bill to deal with the immigration statute; they did not ask to repeal it and leave no substitute, but they provided that it should be repealed and that the section which I have just read should be enacted in its place. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not remember that, because he was not then in the house. I hold in my hand the bills of 1926; I sent to the library for them when my friend was speaking, because I realized that I was then dealing with a bill different in terms from the bill now before the house, and different also from the bill of 1927. Bill 91 of 1926, to amend the Immigration Act, read:

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Section forty-one of the Immigration Act, chapter twenty-seven of the statutes of 1910, as enacted by chapter twenty-six of the statutes of 1919, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

41. Whenever any alien advocates in Canada the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Great Britain or Canada, or other British dominion, colony, possession or dependency, or the overthrow by force or violence of constituted law and authority, or assassination, or shall by word or act create or attempt to create riot or public disorder in Canada, or shall by common repute belong to or be suspected of belonging to any secret society or organization which extorts money from, or in any way attempts to control any resident of Canada by force or threat of bodily harm, or by blackmail; such person for the purposes of this act shall be considered and classed as an undesirable immigrant, and it shall be the duty of any officer becoming cognizant thereof, and the duty of the clerk, secretary or other official of any municipality in Canada wherein such person may be, to forthwith send a written complaint thereof to the Minister of Immigration giving full particulars.

What was to be substituted for the section to be repealed was the act of 1910. Under the leadership of the present Prime Minister the parliament of Canada proposed to repeal section 41 of the act as we now have it and to substitute the section which was in the act in 1910, which section provides for deportation without trial by jury. That section was enacted by a Liberal government presided over by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a government which the Minister of Railways this afternoon said expressed the pure views of Liberalism. That government propose to deport these people from this country without trial by jury, without trial by jury of his peers—and the hon. gentleman thinks he has none.

I should like to direct his attention again to the sections which I have just read—my friend from Winnipeg South Centre will find them in the bills of 1926. Provision is made therein for the report to the minister with respect to any person who attempts the overthrow of government by force and violence; the overthrow by force or statute law; who makes a threat of assassination; who by word or act creates or attempts to create disorder or riot in Canada—no trial by jury—or who by common repute is suspected of belonging to any disloyal association which seeks to extort money—such person shall be classed as an undesirable immigrant and it shall be the duty of the official to report him. And that involves a duty upon the part of the minister to deport him, because it is the duty of the minister to deport every such case. Or perhaps my hon. friend means that, being associated with ministers who do not do their duty, he does not have to do this.

Mr. DUNNING: May I draw your attention to the fact that my hon. friend is quoting from something which is not now the law?

Mr. BENNETT: I read the statute of 1910.

Mr. THORSON: The statute of 1910 did not apply to any persons with Canadian citizenship, within the meaning of the Immigration Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend does not expect me to say that the Minister of Railways and Canals is an alien within that act. My hon. friend has stated that I did not quote from the statute but from a bill. I quoted from a bill which was intended to be substituted—

Mr. DUNNING: And which was not in existence in 1926, and was not intended to be law.

Mr. BENNETT: In 1926 the government intended to restore the act of 1910. Its failure to become law was due to the dissolution of parliament.

Mr. DUNNING: In this case it applied not to British subjects but only to aliens. You keep putting us in the same class, as if we were aliens, and that is what I object to. I am not an alien.

Mr. BENNETT: In consequence of the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, I refer him to the Immigration Act enacted by the Liberal government of 1910, being chapter 27—

Mr. DUNNING: And dealing with aliens.

Mr. BENNETT: And being chapter 27 of the statutes of 1910, which provides for the deportation of undesirables without trial by jury.

Mr. DUNNING: Of aliens.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. I said without trial by a jury of his peers. The section from chapter 27 of 1910, to which I have referred, is a reproduction of section 41 proposed in 1926. There is the section, the same section, and this is the way it reads: "Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen advocates in Canada overthrow by force—"

Mr. THORSON: "Other than a Canadian citizen".

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I am coming to. The section which was in 1926 introduced by the acting minister was "whenever any alien advocates",—an "alien" and a "person other than a Canadian citizen" we will take to be the same thing for the purpose of this discussion. In 1919 a situation developed in Winnipeg which necessitated prompt action on the part of this parliament. And when the member for Winnipeg says the bill was railroaded through, he knows perfectly well that Sir Robert Borden pointed out that it could only be done by the unanimous consent of the house. In 1919 neither the leader of the Liberal party nor my friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who was then in the house, rose in his place and objected to that bill being put through its several stages as indicated.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hope I was not there that afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: If my friend is now so wise that he did not protest against it, perhaps it is an indication of the truth of the statement that knowledge comes but wisdom lingers.

In 1919 it became necessary to deal with a serious and difficult situation, which involved, as my friend from Winnipeg has said, many problems, the national system and national position with regard to our statue in the British Empire. There were men who were in the same class, who were all British immigrants. It gets back to this wild cry about the Britisher and the love for him which so suddenly arises. The fact is that we were dealing with immigrants and none else; we had to deal with the British immigrant as well as with the foreign immigrant, and how could we deal with him? The British immigrant was not a Canadian citizen; he came in here, and as Paul says, "I was born a Roman citizen" so he said, when he came to Canada, he was born a British subject; but he was an immigrant, and because he was an immigrant he stood in exactly the same position before the law as a Pole or a Hottentot.

Mr. FORKE: You mean before this law was passed.

Mr. BENNETT: No, before the law now existing. He stands in exactly the same position here. He has come into this country as an immigrant, and one of the chances he has taken is that legislation which deals with other immigrants shall deal with him. If he places himself in the position of endeavouring to destroy constituted government and authority in this country, he still has a country back to which we can send him, the country from which he came.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The other immigrant had a chance for a trial.

Mr. BENNETT: The other immigrant had a chance for a trial unless he had become a British subject. That involves the subject with which the Prime Minister has had to deal at the British conferences. How can a person who comes to this country from other parts of the British Empire become distinctively a Canadian citizen, apart from his place of birth? And because there was no provison in our law to deal with that situation, what happened? The parliament of Canada unanimously in the House of Commons passed a bill, placed this law upon the statute book of this country, by which they said that immigrants who came from the British Empire and those who came from other parts of the world and are not naturalized Canadians occupy the same position under the law. That is all.

Mr. DUNNING: They said more than that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is something they did say.

Mr. HEAPS: After twenty minutes consideration, they did all that.

Mr. BENNETT: I can say to the hon. gentleman, what is five minutes among gentlemen? At any rate this house put through a supply bill the other day, to take care of the salaries of the civil servants, and it did not take long. I am only pointing out that by unanimous consent of parliament legislation need not take as long as fifteen minutes; a bill may pass through three readings in this house in ten minutes or even less. And I find that the hon. the Minister of Justice was in the house that day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was I?

Mr. BENNETT: The records show that he was.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It may be. I said that I hoped I was not. I do not know.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: I find that on June 6, amongst those who were dealing with other matters was Mr. Ernest Lapointe of Kamouraska, who rose on the orders of the day to make a few very delightful observations in regard to a conference which he suggested between employers and employees. Shortly after that the legislation to which I referred was taken up.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I may have been away from the chamber for twenty minutes.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, we will say that peradventure the hon. gentleman was away for fifteen minutes, and they happened to be the fifteen minutes during which this bill was engaging the attention of the house. At least that is what he hopes and what I am not able to disprove.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does my hon. friend give him no hope of conversion? That is what they want.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for East Calgary sees how the bright light of power and office has changed the attitude of mind of the Minister of Justice in view of the letter which was written by his leader to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and to which I have had occasion more than once to refer in this house. In the hectic days of the life of the administration of which my hon. friend was so distinguished a member, his leader under date of January 28, 1926, wrote to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as follows:

DEAR MR. WOODSWORTH:

Replying to the letter received from Mr. Heaps and yourself, dated January 7, in which you ask whether it is the intention of the government to introduce at this session legislation with regard to: (a) provision for the unemployed; and (b) old age pensions, I would refer you, respecting provision for the unemployed, to the answer given in the House of Commons to-day by the Hon. Ernest Lapointe on behalf of the government in reply to a question by yourself—

I suppose that was not arranged?

Mr. LAPOINTE: What is wrong about it?

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing in the world.

—and which indicated the government's intention of carrying out with respect to emergency relief the practice adopted in co-operation with provinces and municipalities in the years immediately following the war. In answer to a question from Mr. Neill, Mr. Lapointe further intimated that it was the intention of the government to introduce at this session legislation with respect to old age pensions.

You will observe that the statement made by Mr. Lapointe was in accordance with the intimation which I gave to Mr. Heaps and yourself at the time of our interview, following the receipt of the communication herein referred to.

With respect to amendments to: (a) the Immigration Act; (b) the Naturalization Act; and (c) the Criminal Code, which were referred to at the time of our interview, I would say that having since taken up the proposed amendments with the ministers concerned, I feel I am in a position to assure you that legislation on those matters will also be introduced in the course of the present session.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

An hon. MEMBER: What is wrong with that?

Mr. BENNETT: Not a thing in the world. Then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps the hon. member would like to read the reply of his then leader to a similar letter sent by my colleague and myself to him.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely. I have it before me, but it is so vastly different from the one I have just read that I think it might be well for me to read the language of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as reported at page 561 of Hansard of January 29, 1926. This is what the hon. member said:

So long as the government is prepared to bring down legislation which commends itself to our judgment we must continue to support it, and this attitude will therefore determine our action on the amendment now before the house and on the vote which must subsequently be taken.

Is that a bargain or not? That is the hon. gentleman's own statement.

Mr. DUNNING: Is not that the position of every member?

Mr. BENNETT: That is both an acceptance and a threat. If that is not a bargain, what is?

Mr. DUNNING: I submit that is the position of every member in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: If that be so, then some hon. gentlemen will find it difficult to reconcile it with their duty to their constituents.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the hon. member should read Mr. Meighen's letter.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member would prefer to have it read, I should be glad to read it, because it was the words and language of one who was not making bargains. Let me read it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Before that is read, may I again assert that there is no bargain? I ask that the expression be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman has misapprehended my point. I have read his language, not mine, and having read the letter and his statement in the house to the government I say that nothing is clearer than that that constitutes an acceptance, and the terms of the acceptance are mentioned. Whenever you have an offer and an acceptance, that constitutes a bargain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I again assert that at the time spoken of, there was no bargain between the government and the Labour group in the house, and I ask that the term be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to the point of order I want to make myself abundantly clear. I read the letter of the 28th January, 1926, and now I again read these words in order that there may be no misapprehension:

So long as the government is prepared to bring down legislation which commends itself to our judgment we must continue to support it, and this attitude will therefore determine our action on the amendment now before the house and on the vote which must subsequently be taken.

That is the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre after he had read the letter written by himself and his colleague to the Prime Minister, the answer of the Prime Minister, the letter to Mr. Meighen and Mr. Meighen's answer Then he stated exactly what he was going to do. I have not read it all. This is in part what he said:

In view of the measures that have been proposed what is our position? It would seem as if this legislation merits our support; I could put it even more strongly—commands our support. We have said that we would deal with legislation as it came to us, and the government is evidently prepared to meet our views along this line. I would also like to state, much along the lines of the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), that we hold ourselves at liberty to discuss freely the legislation as it is brought down. We feel that as Independent members we must be true to our constituents and true to our highest conceptions of what is best for Canada. So long as the government—

Then follows the statement as to how they proposed to act upon the amendment which threatened the life of the administration itself. Perhaps my hon. friend would prefer the word "agreement."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There was absolutely no agreement.

Mr. BENNETT: I am reading only what the document says.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There was absolutely no agreement. My position then was precisely what it is to-day. I read my position into Hansard; I have absolutely no reason for being ashamed of it or hiding it or altering it, and I ask that the word "bargain" or "agreement" be retracted. There was none such. I was free at any moment to determine any measure on its merits and to vote for or against the government.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps I should have supplemented my statement of the hon. gentleman's position with a few other observations which will show conclusively what the arrangement was. May I be permitted to read these words:

> Now with regard to this debate, when the former amendment was before the house I think the position of our Labour party was fairly clearly defined.

Mr. DUNNING: What is the hon. member reading from now?

Mr. BENNETT: The speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the 29th January, 1926, when he read the letters:

> We took the ground that the government had a perfect right to meet parliament. Further than that we thought it would be a serious mistake if the precedent would be established that the largest group, even if it were a minority, had the right to form a government. I believe the vote on the first amendment was a decided victory for minorities in this country. We stated at that time that we would wait until the legislative proposals were brought down. These are now before us and I must confess that the speech from the throne gives us little indication that the government has been preparing to give very much attention to the needs of industrial workers. I think my colleague, in his speech the other evening, stated very clearly the feeling we have in this matter. However, in the last few days the government has made certain important announcements with regard to policies directly affecting a great many people whom we represent that we feel that our position has to be decidedly modified. I think perhaps the general attitude of labour with regard to the speech from the throne might very well be indicated by an extract from an editorial which appears in the current number of the Congress Journal.

Then follows what I have already read, the letter of the Prime Minister and the hon. gentleman's statement that so long as such and such is done, we will do so and so, and our vote on the amendment will be determined. If the hon. member prefers the word "agreement" to the word "bargain," I am content. But according to the use of the English language an offer and an acceptance constitutes a bargain, an agreement, and in this instance we have the offer of the Prime Minister stating his proposal to enact certain legislation.

Mr. DUNNING: That was not an offer.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. BENNETT: It was so regarded—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I again state that there was no offer made. There was a statement made as to what the government proposed to do, and we stated then what was a reasonable proposition, that if the government proposed to act in that way we would endeavour to support the government; but there was no bargain about it, no agreement, no offer and no acceptance. It was an intimation of what the government proposed to do, and a statement on our part as to what, under the circumstances, our action would be. Again I would ask that the word "bargain" or "agreement" be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a well-known rule that the word of an hon. gentleman as to a matter affecting himself must be accepted, and no one knows that better than the hon. leader of the opposition. I cannot think that he is not at liberty to draw his own conclusions as to the letters which he has read, but if the statement attributed to the hon. leader of the opposition was made, I think it should be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT: You will observe, Mr. Chairman, that I was only drawing the inference that that constituted a bargain. That is the argument I have been endeavouring to advance, that it constituted a bargain between the two.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is imputing motives.

Mr. BENNETT: I was very careful not to.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend has no right to impute motives and then try to justify them in his argument, especially motives questioning the honour of an hon. gentleman, because after all the implications of the word "bargain" are well understood.

Mr. BENNETT: If I had said a corrupt bargain—

Mr. POULIOT: It was a bonne entente.

Mr. BENNETT: It must be remembered that the word "bargain" standing by itself means just what I have said.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely my hon. friend did not intend to pay a compliment to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he used that word.

Mr. BENNETT: May I say to the Minister of Justice that I used it in much the same sense as it was used by the hon. member for Southeast Grey in a speech she made outside of this house. She said that man's necessity is man's opportunity, and the necessity of the government at that day compelled them to accept at the hands of one or two people just such legislation as they demanded they should have. That is the sense in which I used it, not imputing motives at all, but it was their desire to crystallize into legislative form their beliefs as to what was best for the country. That is all, and I assure my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre that I have never in my life imputed any dishonourable motives to him because I believe him to be sincere in everything he advocates. I disagree with him profoundly, but I have talked with him, and both in public and private I will bear tribute to the sincerity of his motives. But I still think he is wrong in the conclusions he draws, and in that I am sure that I am not unassociated with those who are sitting opposite to me in this house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite appreciate what the hon. gentleman has said. But it is not a question of motive; it is a question of fact. The hon. gentleman has drawn the inference that there was a bargain, and I say, with all deference to him, that his inference was wrong. I ask, therefore, that the word be withdrawn.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering Bill 187, to amend the Immigration Act. The discussion is on section 1, persons deemed to belong to prohibited classes.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, as the committee rose we were discussing a question of order raised by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). Perhaps it will satisfy all the purposes I had in mind if I say there was no bargain other than that to which I referred on the records of the House of Commons. The hon. member quite appreciates that I was not casting any reflection upon him in the matter.

There is just one other point I desire to deal with—that raised by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), when he intimated that the making of a report did not signify that action would necessarily be taken. Section 42 of the Immigration Act deals with that situation:

> Upon receiving a complaint from any officer, or from any clerk or secretary or other official of a municipality, whether directly or through the superintendent of Immigration, against any person alleged to belong to any prohibited or undesirable class, the minister may order such person to be taken into custody and detained at an immigrant station for examination and an investigation of the facts alleged in the said complaint to be made by a board of inquiry or by an officer acting as such. Such board of inquiry or officer shall have the same powers and privileges, and shall follow the same procedure, as if the person against whom complaint is made were being examined before landing as provided in section 33, of this act; and similarly the person against whom complaint is made shall have the same rights and privileges as he would have if seeking to land in Canada.
> 2. If upon investigation of the facts such board of inquiry or examining officer is satisfied that such person belongs to any of the prohibited or undesirable classes mentioned in sections 40 and 41 of this act, such person shall be deported forthwith, as provided for in section 33 of this act, subject, however, to such right of appeal as he may have to the minister.
> 3. The governor in council may, at any time, order any such person found by a board of inquiry or examining officer to belong to any of the undesirable classes referred to in section 41 of this act to leave Canada within a specified period. Such order may be in the form D in the schedule to this act, and shall be in force as soon as it is served upon such person, or is left for him by any officer at the last known place of abode or address of such person.

There are other subsections, but I need not quote them now.

Mr. DUNNING: That applies to aliens.

Mr. BENNETT: No, to everybody. It follows section 41 as it now reads. That is the point I am making. It refers in terms to all persons subject to deportation. I mention that in order that there may be no misapprehension as to the scope and authority of the section to which I refer.

There is one other fact which I think has been overlooked and which I venture to bring to the attention of my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson). Section 41, which is now sought to be repealed, contains this proviso:

> Provided that this section shall not apply to any person who is a British subject, either by reason of birth in Canada, or by reason of naturalisation in Canada.

That is the proviso to which so much objection is taken. May I point out to him and other hon. members that that applies to immigrants from Australia or New Zealand or Newfoundland or India or South Africa, and to endeavour to limit the scope and operation of the section to those who come from the British Isles is manifestly wrong.

Mr. THORSON: I did not so limit the scope of the section.

Mr. BENNETT: It was just the inference drawn by the minister speaking in relation to the matter, when my friend from Vancouver Centre was dealing with that phase of it. This section in terms applies to the seditionist whether he be from India, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand—in fact to any person who comes within the description of "British subject" regardless of what part of the empire he may come from. I desire to make that clear. Let me summarize this and I have concluded for the moment. First, this country claims a right to deport, for causes that may be determined by parliament, any immigrant who may come within its borders. An immigrant may come from one of two places—outside of or within the British Empire. For the purposes of this act the person who comes from without the British Empire is treated as being in exactly the same position as the person who comes from within; they stand upon parity.

Mr. DUNNING: But not deportable.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, exactly. The immigrant who comes from without the British Empire and the immigrant who comes from within stand upon a parity. I know what my hon. friend is going to say, but perhaps he will wait until he hears my next sentence. There is no power to deport a Canadian. Therefore, with respect to naturalized aliens this section has no application; but inasmuch as a British subject, whether he come from England, or India or Australia or New Zealand, is at the end of five years undeportable by reason of the limitation imposed by the statute, for I apprehend that the terms of the section are not sufficient to afford the minister power after five years—

Mr. FORKE: There is nothing in the act to bear that out.

Mr. BENNETT: I read it with that limitation imposed.

Mr. FORKE: Where do you find it in the act?

Mr. BENNETT: The section that deals with the limitation of five years. It used to be three, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If my hon. friend is right, there was no necessity to change the act in 1919. It was changed for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: It was changed for this purpose—I am sorry to be drawn away from my summary.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not intend to interrupt my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: It is all right. The change was made for the purpose of asserting the autonomous right of Canada to deal with immigrants of all countries on the same basis; but inasmuch as you could not convert a native born British subject into a Canadian citizen by any naturalization statute as you could the foreigner, because the British subject could not avail himself of the Naturalization Act, it followed—

Mr. THORSON: Surely a British subject born outside of Canada could acquire that special Canadian citizenship referred to in the Immigration Act by acquiring Canadian domicile, which he could do under the old act after five years. Then he was a Canadian citizen within the Immigration Act, and was not liable to deportation.

Mr. BENNETT: But the language is "British subject", and I am dealing with the language as it stood. A British subject is a Canadian citizen, at any rate as soon as he comes within the country.

Mr. THORSON: But not within the meaning of the Immigration Act.

Mr. BENNETT: He is within the meaning of the Naturalization Act. I wish to make that clear.

Mr. THORSON: But that is the distinction: he is not a Canadian citizen within the meaning of the Immigration Act.

Mr. BENNETT: I want to make it clear if I can—subject to these observations—that here was a class of immigrants that had to be dealt with. If you concede the right of the Canadian parliament to enact laws for the deportation of immigrants without trial —which has always been the law under the Immigration Act—for offences which are regarded as of a character to make them subject to a deportation order, you find there was a class that could not be dealt with by deportation unless this section were here. A man might come from India and preach open sedition against India, Australia, or the British Empire as a whole, he might say that the time had come when it should be broken up, and under this section we deport him. But if that section were not there he could not be deported.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes, if he were convicted under the criminal code.

Mr. BENNETT: I say he is not deportable until he is convicted.

Mr. DUNNING: Why should he be? He is not guilty until found so.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the Immigration Act was first passed, we have said: We are going to deport undesirables after investigation by a board of inquiry. Every other nation does the same.

An hon. MEMBER: Against citizens?

Mr. BENNETT: Citizens of what?

Mr. FORKE: Of the country.

Mr. BENNETT: But these are not citizens of the country; that is the point.

Mr. FORKE: Has my hon. friend looked into section 3, subsections (n) and (o), dealing with that class of people?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre read it to-day. That was a class of immigrants who had to be dealt with in some way, and this country asserted its sovereign power. We said that it made no difference whether they came from India or from the Philippine islands; whether they came from India or from Poland; whether they came from South Africa or from Poland; whether they came from Great Britain or from Russia: for the purposes of this act we were going to treat them all the same. But because there was no provision for Canadian citizenship, in the sense in which that term is used in the Naturalization Act, a British subject who came from India could not be naturalized, having his rights here as such, and therefore we could not report him unless we specially provided in the statute for so doing.

Mr. DUNNING: Or prove him guilty of his offence.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend overlooks the fact that Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1910 put on the statute book section 42 which provides for deportation, without conviction, of any alien—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Alien, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: —who preaches sedition in this country. But the alien preaching sedition in Canada was in no different position from that of the man who came from India to preach sedition, except that the man from India or from Australia, say, had the advantage of this fact, that he could at once participate in the government of the country, or at least within a year, and did not have to be naturalized.

Mr. THORSON: That is the distinction between the two.

Mr. BENNETT: This country put them on a parity in 1919.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. FORKE: Why the necessity for the 1919 act?

Mr. BENNETT: That was what it was done for.

Mr. DUNNING: If it was so before, why pass the act?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say it was so before.

Mr. DUNNING: That is my hon. friend's whole argument.

Mr. BENNETT: Dear! oh, dear! We extended the class of subjects to which deportation was applicable. Let me put the matter clearly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the hon. member a question? As a specific example of what this matter involves, my colleague was born in England, had been ten years in Canada, was an alderman of Winnipeg, and was arrested under this act. Was he or was he not a Canadian citizen?

Mr. BENNETT: He was not deported; presumably he was a Canadian citizen.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: He was liable to deportation.

Mr. BENNETT: He could not have been, because presumably he was naturalized.

Mr. DUNNING: He was not naturalized; he was British-born.

Mr. BENNETT: Then, under the terms of this act, if to the satisfaction of a board of inquiry it was established that he had preached sedition, he stood in the same position as the man from Poland, say.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and liable under this act to be deprived of all rights to trial.

Mr. BENNETT: But all these immigrants subject to deportation for causes named are subject to deportation without trial.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But if the Pole has become naturalized you cannot deport him.

Mr. THORSON: Under the previous law, after the British subject born outside of Canada had remained five years in Canada he would have acquired Canadian domicile, and by virtue of that domicile he would have become a Canadian citizen within the special meaning given that term in the Immigration Act. Thereafter, no matter what offence he might have committed, he could not have been deported.

Mr. BENNETT: That begs the question.

Mr. THORSON: Under the present act he can be deported.

Mr. BENNETT: That begs the question. The issue, which is a simple one, is this: The parliament of Canada in 1919, for reasons which it considered sound, and with the approval of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and of the Liberal party, unanimously enacted this statute. The statute is now sought to be repealed. Has anyone been injured under it? Has any wrong been done? Is it desirable to remove from the statute book a provision which parliament in 1919 deemed desirable? Let us get down to that question. My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre suggested that in 1926 I dealt with the question in one way, and in 1927 in another. I turned up the record and this is the position I took: in both cases I declared that it was not desirable to repeal the statute. Although it might work a hardship there had been no cases under it, so far as I could see; and it was meant only for that class of immigrants who openly and notoriously preached sedition in this country. I went further. The statute of 1926 had substituted another section, and the discussion between the Minister of Justice and myself was a discussion as to what the meaning was if it should be passed in the form in which it was proposed. I held that it meant nothing if the contention he put forward was correct. But upon the question as to the desirability of repealing the statute, hon. members will find that my observations were practically the same in both cases, except for one circumstance. I happened to be on the train a few days previously, in one case, and I referred to certain articles that had appeared in the newspapers with reference to the preaching of sedition in one of our towns—naming the place—from which seditious literature was being disseminated. That fact I alluded to. But with respect to the question itself, my remarks were the same on both occasions. The committee will recall, however, that in 1926 an endeavour was made to substitute a new section for that which was being repealed; whereas in the present instance it is not proposed to make any substitution at all.

Now let me conclude; I was about to summarize my observations when the minister asked me a question. It is conceded to be the right of all free people to determine who shall come within their boundaries.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: The Canadian people, in parliament assembled, have determined that certain classes may be deported without trial.

[Mr. Thorson.]

That has been so ever since the law was passed, and in 1910 Sir Wilfrid Laurier revised the whole Immigration Act, once more recognizing that principle. In 1919 parliament extended the law in its application to the number of persons who should come under it, including those who preached and taught sedition. That was the extension of the provision embracing those who could be deported without trial. That was all.

Mr. DUNNING: It was much more than that.

Mr. BENNETT: It merely extended the class.

Mr. DUNNING: It was much wider than my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. BENNETT: It extended the class to all persons who were not Canadians; it included the alien immigrant who had not become naturalized and who therefore had to go, if he came within the terms of the law. And the British subject, whether he came from Hong Kong, from New Zealand or from Great Britain, was also subject to deportation if he come within the terms of the statute. That is all; nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. BROWN: That is the thing we object to.

Mr. BENNETT: That is precisely what the statute says; provided that it shall not apply to two classes, the British subject who was born in this country and who was given a status at once, and the naturalized Canadian. These could not be deported, and that for the reasons given this afternoon by the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: You claim that people born in Great Britain never become Canadians.

Mr. BENNETT: Not at all. The minister has overlooked the fact that this parliament in 1919 unanimously asserted its sovereign right to determine that immigrants, regardless of where they came from, might be deported; and parliament declined, the Minister of Justice and many other members of the Liberal party within sound of my voice on the other side declined, to make a distinction for that purpose between immigrants, whether they came from a foreign country or from some other part of the British Empire.

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty minutes before the governor general came in.

Mr. BENNETT: That happens in all parliaments.

Mr. HEAPS: According to my hon. friend a person born in Great Britain is subject to deportation though he has been here forty years.

Mr. BENNETT: If there is no limitation in the act there should be one.

An hon. MEMBER: The old law stated that.

Mr. BENNETT: The old law did not in terms; it did only by inference with respect to the alien who becomes naturalized, because the term is five years. It was only three years before, and the definition of citizenship extended the term to five years. I have always been in favour of a limitation with respect to all these matters. There is a limitation in the criminal code, and there should be a limitation of the time within which people may be deported by order in council. I have no doubt as to that; it is one of the matters I was discussing with one of my friends the other day, and if there is no clear limitation in the statute it would be quite right to impose it. However, I desire to press upon the committee the fact that this was an extraordinary enactment to meet extraordinary conditions—which may or may not ever again arise in Canada. When you have a combination of people who wish to destroy government and constituted authority you must have upon the statute books laws which will enable you to meet such a situation. Those who live within the law never need be afraid of it; there have been laws on the statute books of England since 900, continuously in force since the time of Alfred, and laws only apply to those who come within them. Laws are made for the purpose of dealing with those who come within their terms, and when an extraordinary situation arises—

Mr. DUNNING: Mainly one English law which permits a man to be condemned for a criminal offence without trial.

Mr. BENNETT: They have the same law providing for deportation from their country that we have in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: Quote it.

Mr. BENNETT: I saw men deported from England myself.

Mr. DUNNING: British subjects?

Mr. BENNETT: I am not talking about British subjects at the moment; I am talking about immigrants. My hon. friend is trying to draw a distinction between two classes of immigrants.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is a Canadian deportable from England?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot answer that question; I simply stated that I knew of people being deported from England.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister referred to British subjects.

Mr. BENNETT: Not until later. Let us have no misapprehension about this. The power of deportation belongs to every sovereign people and is exercised everywhere. Canadians have been sent back from Australia, and last year we sent back to China several people who came from Hong Kong. The difficulty is that some of the committee are thinking only of the British Isles instead of British subjects as a whole.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question? What distinction does my hon. friend make between a British subject and a Canadian subject?

Mr. BENNETT: The distinction is that we are treating all immigrants alike regardless of where they came from. If they came from England they are British immigrants and if they came from the British Empire they are immigrants from the British Empire; they may be white or black, but as far as our power as a parliament is concerned they are on an equality and we have the same right to deport one as the other. Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1910 provided that aliens could be deported without trial, and if it is sound to deport aliens without trial, then those who come into this country and enjoy citizenship because they were born somewhere else should be subject to the same provisions as those who are not naturalized. Otherwise you would encourage one class to preach sedition who could not be dealt with except through trial by jury, while the other class could be deported without trial.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what we are doing now.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we are not doing now.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, all right.

Mr. BENNETT: It is all right; I am satisfied that hon. gentlemen think it desirable to try to obtain favour from certain classes in the community by saying, "Look at this and that", but the real truth is that this country should treat alike all immigrants who have not become naturalized Canadians or who have not attained the status of Canadians. If we are to deal with the question properly we should define the conditions under which British subjects coming from other parts of the empire may attain the status of Canadians.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is what we want.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we want.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot be a member of this parliament without being a Canadian citizen.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if the hon. gentleman realizes that the oath he takes is taken as a British subject?

Mr. DUNNING: But how do I vote, if not by virtue of my Canadian citizenship.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I hold in my hand the statutes of 1910, to which my hon. friend has referred. Sections 40 and 41 of chapter 27 of that statute deal with the deportation of prohibited and undesirable classes. In section 40 it was enacted that whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen, within three years after landing in Canada, was convicted of a criminal offence—

Mr. DUNNING: Convicted!

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. It is the following section with which I wish to deal more particularly. Section 41 of the act of 1910 was replaced by the present section 41 which it is now sought to repeal, and it provided that whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen advocated in Canada the overthrow by force or violence of government or constituted authority, and so on, then the complaint must be laid against him and an investigation held, after which he might be deported. I desire to call the attention of the committee first to the words of section 40:

Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen—

I would also point to the words of section 41:

Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen—

Who was a Canadian citizen under the act of 1910? That act provides that a Canadian citizen is:

(1) A person born in Canada who has not become an alien;
(2) A British subject who has Canadian domicile;
(3) A person naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile;

So there were three classes of Canadian citizens, first those born in Canada, then those British subjects born outside of Canada who had acquired Canadian domicile, which at that time was three years and is now five years; and finally, persons naturalized under the laws of Canada. In 1919 this section 41 which it is now sought to repeal was replaced by a section which enacted that every person who by word or act in Canada sought to overthrow by force or violence government or constituted authority, or who belonged or was suspected of belonging to societies of a certain class, and so on, might be deported. But there was an exception, which provided that the section would not apply to any person who was a British subject either by reason of birth in Canada or by reason of naturalization in Canada. Under the old section 41 no Canadian citizen could be so deported; as my hon. friend said, this applied only to aliens. A Canadian citizen could not be deported and could not be treated as a person desiring to overthrow government by violence and so on unless he was convicted after a fair trial. As I have said, in 1919 this section was replaced, and under that amendment only two classes of Canadian citizens became exempt from that provision, those born in Canada and those aliens who became naturalized in Canada. The second class of Canadian citizens, namely British subjects born outside of Canada who had acquired Canadian domicile by a residence of five years in Canada, were placed in the same situation as aliens, as men who never had been naturalized and who could be deported by a board of investigation without any trial. That is why this section is so objectionable. I certainly agree with my hon. friend when he says that every country must be mistress of her own citizenship, and must determine who are the people who may become citizens of that particular country I certainly agree with my hon. friend, and that is why we have provisions in our Immigration Act which permit the government of Canada or the Department of Immigration to prevent the entry into Canada of people who are undesirable either by reason of bad health or otherwise. But a man who has been admitted to Canada and has become a Canadian citizen under the law—because the law states that after a domicile of five years he is a Canadian citizen in every respect—must be treated as any other Canadian citizen and must not be deported without being convicted of the offence with which he is charged. Certainly it seems so unfair that one class of Canadian citizen should be considered as inferior to another that merely to set forth the case should be sufficient to convince everybody of the existence of an anomaly. A country cannot be half slave and half free. Surely half of our Canadian citizenship cannot be enjoying certain privileges that are denied to the other half. Canadians are all equal, and that is why we are asking for the repeal of that section—in order that those of our citizens who, being British subjects born outside of Canada, have acquired the full right of Canadian citizenship by domicile in this country, should not be made, under this exceptional class, subject to deportation without due form of law.

Mr. THORSON: I am sorry to take up more of the time of the committee, but I feel I cannot allow certain suggestions made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to go unchallenged.

I was a little surprised at the statement of the law given to the committee by the hon. leader of the opposition. The Minister of Justice has fully set forth the law as it is now and as it was prior to the enactment of this particular section. Prior to the enactment of the section which we are now discussing, no person could be deported at all, whether he had been convicted or not, after he had acquired Canadian citizenship. There has been a good deal of confusion in the discussion because of the different meanings in law of the expression "Canadian citizenship," "Canadian citizenship" is used in the Immigration Act in a special sense. It has nothing to do with conferring rights to vote or the right to take part in the nation's business. The Minister of Railways and Canals does not get his right to sit in this house by virtue of the Canadian citizenship which is referred to in the Immigration Act. In the Immigration Act, as the Minister of Justice has explained, "Canadian citizen" means a person born in Canada who has not become an alien, a British subject who has Canadian domicile—which he can get after five years' residence in Canada—or an alien naturalized under the law of Canada. Under the law as it existed prior to the enactment of this section which we are now considering, once a man had obtained Canadian citizenship within the meaning of the term in the Immigration Act, he could not be deported no matter what offence he commtted. Under the present section, however, a British subject born outside of Canada, no matter in what part of the British dominions, can never acquire Canadian citizenship within that special meaning of the term in order to exempt himself from the provisions of section 41; that was the important change that was made in this legislation that was rushed through the house in the speedy manner which I described this afternoon.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre suggested that I had not placed all the facts before the house when I commented upon the speedy manner in which this legislation was put through. I made the statement that this legislation was railroaded through. I was met with the reply that the unanimous consent of the house was asked and given to the reading of this bill in the manner in which it was read. Consent cannot be said to be real unless made with knowledge of the facts. The Minister of Immigration, who introduced this bill, mentioned certain changes that had been made, certain differences between the bill that was being introduced and the bill which had previously passed both houses of parliament. I have indicated, I think, very clearly the main difference between the two bills; that difference was never indicated to the house; every other difference except this important one that we have been discussing for the past several hours was indicated to the house, but this material change was not made known to the house. The Minister of Immigration said, at page 3213 of Hansard under date of June 6, 1919:

> While there is some material difference between the two sections still the main purpose of the section is as it was expressed in the section as originally introduced to the house.

I think that I indicated previously that every person under the previous law who had acquired Canadian citizenship was exempt from deportation. Now, British subjects born outside of Canada can never obtain exemption from deportation. That was the essential difference made in the new section, and that difference was never revealed to the house. I challenge any member on the other side of the house to show where that difference was made clear. I do not believe that the house would have consented to the passing of that act into law if that important change had been brought to its attention. It was not, I say, brought to its attention, and therefore I think I am justified in the statement that this section was railroaded through the house. The house was misled as to the important and radical change that was being made. It was misled as to the purpose of the section. Anyone reading the short debate in the senate will readily see what was the real purpose of the change.

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on the statements made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in regard to the difficulty he experienced on his return to Canada on the occasion to which he referred. Members of parliament who have not had some difficulties in this connection may not understand the tremendous pressure that comes from all sides on the part of undesirable people who want to get into Canada. Whatever trouble we may have in getting the right people, those whom we want, there is no difficulty in getting the sort of people we do not want. This explains to some extent at least why difficulty is experienced by would-be immigrants when they are trying to get into Canada. I might mention the case of one who originally came to this country as an immigrant from Great Britain and who took a trip abroad last summer. On his return all he had to say to the immigration officials was that he was a returning Canadian and there was no further trouble. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre must have been more suspicious-looking than this man if they asked him so many questions before they would allow him to return.

Mr. STEVENS: What date was that?

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) told me that that was his experience last summer.

Mr. STEVENS: These regulations were promulgated in January.

Mr. FORKE: I do not want to make any apology for the department in regard to these questions. They may be right or they may be wrong. It takes time to secure the best regulations. I mention that only to show that the regulations are framed to prevent so far as possible the necessity for deporting undesirables, because there is no greater tragedy than that of having to tell people, once they have come to the shores of Canada, that they cannot be allowed to enter. Unless our immigration officials put some questions to a person who is coming to Canada, how are they to know whether he is a returning Canadian or an immigrant? If any mistakes occur, if needless questions are being asked, I shall be only too glad to have them eliminated.

Mr. STEVENS: The questions are an insult.

Mr. FORKE: That may be. I looked over those questions, and perhaps the dramatic manner in which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre read them put a different appearance on them, because I could not see anything very serious in them. Only five of the questions had to be answered by the hon. member. He said that he had to answer nine.

Mr. STEVENS: There were twenty-six to be answered. The minister is not stating what is in accordance with the regulations.

Mr. FORKE: I have the document under my hand.

Mr. STEVENS: So have I.

[Mr. Forke.]

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member did not need to answer all the questions.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I did. I had to answer every one.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member answered them but he did not need to.

Mr. STEVENS: Why?

Mr. FORKE: Because they were not necessary in his case.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister show me on this document where that is stated?

Mr. FORKE: I have not the hon. member's document, but I have under my hand the ship's document and there is no such thing as twenty-six questions on it. I will let any hon. member see it.

Mr. STEVENS: That is not the document I have. That is another document altogether.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member has not the proper document.

Mr. STEVENS: I am talking about the document which I had to fill out.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who gave it to the hon. member?

Mr. STEVENS: The Canadian National Railways.

Mr. FORKE: At that time the Canadian National were probably very glad to get the hon. member to fill out all those questions. I know something about the whole transaction and there was a determined effort on the part of certain interests to make the thing appear as ridiculous as possible. They were certainly anxious to get the people to fill out as many questions as possible. As a returning Canadian the hon. member was required to answer only five questions so far as the Immigration department is concerned. I say that to make the matter clear. I think the house will believe me when I say that as Minister of Immigration I want to make all the success I can of my department. Things may have happened that ought not to have happened. If there have been mistakes; if I were convinced that the hon. member had more questions to answer than were necessary, I would be anxious to have the matter remedied immediately and I should like to find out what really happened.

Mr. STEVENS: Let me tell the minister frankly that I protested against having to fill out this document. I had to fill it out both for my wife and for myself, although we came back on different dates.

Mr. FORKE: I cannot understand that, because no more questions are asked of a returning Canadian than of a Canadian going to Great Britain and the position with regard to the photograph is exactly the same. It is very difficult to know just what sort of questions should be asked. Immigration officials and transportation officials do not know the difference between one man and another, and consequently some questions which may seem ridiculous when asked of one man may be necessary in another case. The questions are framed with the intention of carrying out the regulations in the best possible way.

Regarding the argument that has been made by the leader of the opposition to-night, I agree with him in many respects, and I do not think we differ very much. If deportations could not take place after Canadian domicile had been secured, I do not think this debate would have been necessary. We all agree with that. His argument is all along the line of deporting immigrants and no one has ever contended that the Department of Immigration should not have the power to deport undesirable immigrants. I hope the house will take my remarks in the spirit in which they are uttered because I am anxious to have regulations that will be in the best interests of Canada and if any mistakes have been made I am only too anxious to have them remedied as quickly as possible.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may ask the house to return for a few minutes to the matter under discussion I should like to make some remarks before the measure is proceeded with. As I listened to the involved and lengthy statement of the law as given by the leader of the opposition I was reminded of some words of Disraeli, who said:

> The legal mind chiefly displayed itself in illustrating the obvious, explaining the evident and expatiating on the commonplace.

I am inclined to think most of the members knew more about this before the discussion started than they do now. The leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre both made a strong point the other night that the sedition act had received a great deal of consideration and therefore should remain on the statute books. I do not see that they have made out a very good case for legislation that was passed through both houses in about half an hour. That has not been over-emphasized to-day. In fact the other evening the leader of the opposition dealt most unmercifully with my colleague because he had suggested that the sedition act was passed in a hurry through the house. There is not the slightest doubt that he made a mistake; that he confused these two acts which have been very closely associated ever since they were given royal assent at the same time and while they have been discussed in this house year after year. My colleague unfortunately made a mistake in regard to the two acts, but personally I felt very sorry that the leader of the opposition gave the impression that he did so in order to mislead the house—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —and further that he went up and down the country claiming that this was the way in which legislation was dealt with in parliament. As a matter of fact the legislation that we are dealing with to-night was passed through this house in 1919 in twenty minutes.

Mr. DUNNING: And without explanation as to what it really meant.

Mr. BENNETT: And unanimously.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am suggesting half an hour for the two houses. There is no doubt that that is the way the legislation was passed through the house so that a great deal that the leader of the opposition said the other day goes by the board, does not apply. I do not think even he could contend that a matter which came up in the most incidental fashion, whether or not the house was fully cognizant of all the circumstances, and which was simply passed through as hurriedly as they could put through the three readings, received adequate attention at the hands of the house. We must admit that it was panicky legislation, and now after nine years have passed we might very well ask ourselves whether or not it is wise to let such legislation remain on the statute books. If we look back at the documents of those times we shall find that Sir Robert Borden, who was leading the house, was discussing some matter with regard to the war purchasing commission, and in the midst of a sentence he broke off to say this:

> My colleague the Minister of Immigration tells me that there is a very important bill to which the attention of the house should be directed at once with a view to its being assented to this afternoon. I would therefore ask that this debate be adjourned to be resumed again this day if the house will consent.

And the motion was agreed to, and the debate adjourned. The house went immediately into a discussion of this Immigration Act amendment, which, by the way, was not the minor amendment that I think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre would have us believe, but was a distinct bill.

Mr. STEVENS: An amendment to a previous bill in the same session which had been already considered.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But a distinct bill, and this new bill was considered for only these few minutes.

The leaders of the opposition wanted to tell us that the reason for the passage of this bill was that we should not relinquish our rights to deport people who came here from South Africa or Australia or China or India. Well, the conversations which went on at the time clearly indicated that that was distinctly not the purpose of the introduction of this measure. Let me read a sentence or two:

It will be obvious that we could not deport a Canadian citizen, because there is no place to deport him to. We do not deport British subjects who are such by naturalization, but we propose—

Listen to this:

—but we propose to bring in an amendment to the Naturalization Act by which we shall denaturalize undesirables regardless of the country from which they come, thus permitting deportation within the limit of time prescribed by the statute.

That was said by an hon. gentleman in the other house, where the bill originated. I think we can understand the spirit that characterized the putting of this legislation on the statute book. It was found, as was very clearly shown by the correspondence between the Minister of Justice and the authorities in Winnipeg, that the desire was to deal with certain British-born subjects. As was then stated so clearly in the senate:

The truth is, if you look at the names of the persons who are leading in these demonstrations in Winnipeg, they are not foreign names; they are all British and American.

And the idea was to deal with these Britishers whom they could not deal with under the existing legislation. Further, in order that there should be no possibility of escape, this legislation was made retroactive. Mr. Lemieux noticed that at the time and said:

My hon. friend seems to be passing retroactive legislation. If a man has entertained the views which are to be condemned since 1910, he is presumed to come within the prohibited classes. A man might have entertained these views in 1910, and since that time his views might have undergone a change, and he might have become a new man.

Surely we cannot advocate retroactive legislation of that nature. But Mr. Calder merely brushed that aside with the remark, "That is only prima facie. He can prove the contrary."

I should like for a moment to call attention to one or two of the clauses of this act which is to be repealed. Paragraph (b) of section 41 defiines as an undesirable one who:

(b) without lawful authority assumes any powers of government in Canada or in any part thereof.

The strikers at that time had undoubtedly considerable power in their hands. By a vote given by the trades and labour council, nearly all the workingmen in Winnipeg had laid down their tools, and nearly all the services of the city were at a standstill. It was said that because these men had assumed authority over their fellow strikers, therefore they had assumed governmental authority. That was the point at issue. The strikers were accused of having assumed governmental authority. Possibly their authority was a good deal greater than at ordinary time. It might be argued that it was greater than any ordinary body of citizens ought to have, but if it was, there was also an extra governmental authority in the board of trade rooms, where the business men of the city had undertaken to do just as far-reaching things as the workers had agreed to do in the trades and labour temple. In the meantime the civic authorities did not know what to do in that novel situation. The provincial government people were doing what they could to bring about a reconciliation between these two opposing forces in the industrial world, and in the very midst of that situation the federal authorities entered, and in my judgment blundered egregiously by passing legislation of this kind and threatening to deport those strike leaders. They were going to deport them on the ground that they were assuming governmental powers. You can understand what was the feeling among these men, ordinary workingmen of the city of Winnipeg, many of whom had been in the city for five, ten, fifteen or twenty years, when they were suddenly faced with the possibility of being thrust out of the country because they were said to be assuming more than ordinary authority, and this legislation undoubtedly was specially designed to meet that situation and to break that strike. That was its purpose. I think anyone who reads the telegrams which were put on the record two years ago by the present Minister of Labour will be fully convinced that that was the purpose of this legislation.

Further, this legislation has the same phrasing as the act dealing with sedition. Let me read this clause. Anyone is considered to be undesirable who:

(c) by common repute belongs to or is suspected of belonging to any secret society or organization, and so on. That is my objection—"or is suspected of" belonging to any organization. Suspicion becomes the ground of action. Merely because the immigration authorities suspect that somebody belongs to an illegal society, they can have an investigation within their own rooms, and have the suspect shipped abroad.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre said that no one had ever been deported under this act. No, but an effort was made to deport. An investigation was held concerning certain individuals, but the evidence was so flimsy, and the feeling throughout the country so strong, that the authorities dare not—I speak advisedly; I think the whole circumstances warrant me in saying this—that the authorities dare not proceed under this act. I hold in my hand a copy of the editorial page of the Manitoba Free Press of June 20, 1919, and it shows undoubtedly that the idea was to deport these men summarily under this act.

In an interjection I suggested the case of my colleague here, a man born in England, a workingman in the city of Winnipeg, an alderman of that city. He had the misfortune, shall I say, to have been born in England, and some of those in authority who were closely in touch with the employers in Winnipeg at that time had the right to ship him back to England without trial. That is what was intended to be done. In a telegram that I myself read in this house two years ago, and which some hon. members may remember, Mr. Meighen actually said that these men, although he had his doubts as to whether their arrest and detention at Stony Mountain was legal, now that the arrests had been made, should be immediately deported, and further that they could regularize that action afterwards. That was the attitude.

I will give another instance, the case of a man who is now the leader in the Labour group in the provincial house at Winnipeg, an alderman at that time, who was arrested and was to be deported with the others. Although he had been many years in the city and was well known he was to shipped out without trial. I will give another case. A minister in good standing at the time, in the Methodist church William Ivens, was editing the labour paper. His house was entered at midnight, and with others he was placed in a high-powered car and taken away to Stony Mountain penitentiary. He with these others was to be shipped out of the country without any trial whatever. Can any hon. gentleman justify that kind of thing? I fail to see on what grounds justification can be offered.

If it is possible to get away from some of these legal subtleties—I would say legal quibbles—I may be allowed to suggest one or two of the outstanding questions to be decided in connection with this legislation. I will admit that its ostensible purpose was to keep out undesirable immigrants, but its real purpose was to punish certain individuals who were already in the country. Many of them, had been here for five, ten and fifteen years, and in the opinion of those who sought the legislation they could not be punished in any other way. So a conspiracy—I think it was nothing less—was formed to take away the right of the British born to trial by jury and ship these men out without trial. I may say that there was such a protest from all over this country and from Great Britain as well that that purpose was not carried out.

Mr. BENNETT: "Conspiracy" is a little strong. The present Minister of Justice was one of the members of this house who acquiesced in the legislation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not defending the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BENNETT: I say conspiracy is not a parliamentary word.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think that is pretty much in the category of "bargain"; is it not? That is my inference.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I wish to resent the inference that the silence of the Liberal party on that occasion constituted a conspiracy.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A conspiracy of silence.

Mr. THORSON: There can be no conspiracy without knowledge.

Mr. STEVENS: Then there must have been a unanimity of ignorance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Again let me say that we who for some years have urged the removal of this clause have had to suffer some very unjust imputations. Personally I have no objection to deporting undesirables. If we have undesirables in the Dominion, whether they are English or alien, I have no objection to deporting them; but I would insist that they be not deported without trial; which is another matter. I know perfectly well that there are certain classes of people who within a few days or weeks after their arrival are found to be undesirable. The leader of the opposition has read a long list of classes, such as the feeble-minded, prostitutes, and others of that type, obviously undesirable, members of which might be deported without trial. Well, if investigation made immediately after their arrival shows they are of that class, I presume we are all quite willing that they should be shipped out. But I submit that this kind of alleged crime is in a different category, this is a political crime, a crime that is committed after the people have attempted to become domiciled—although indeed they cannot establish domicile if they come within this class. Surely a curious arrangement! So I wish to make it very clear that in urging the repeal of this legislation we are not trying to prevent the deportation of undesirables. I would go further and say that if people guilty of the crimes enumerated in this section are given a fair trial, and found guilty, I would not object to their being deported; but we are insisting that they be given a fair trial, and surely not even my Conservative friends will deny that to be a reasonable position for us to take. We have been accused of trying to shelter criminals. We are not trying to shelter criminals, not even this class of people, but we are saying it must be clearly demonstrated that they are guilty of the crimes with which they are charged.

Now, who are these criminals? That brings us back to the whole Winnipeg situation, and before I sit down I should like to say a word with reference to it, because I am convinced that members on both sides of the house have been misled in regard to this strike and the labour movement. As is well known, in 1918 and 1919 there was a good deal of unrest all over the world. Nearly all of us immediately after the war were looking to reconstruction—that was the word in everybody's mouth—and labour as well as other classes of the community were discussing it. There had been the great turmoil in Russia, and while a good many Canadian workmen did not wish to see the Russian experiment repeated in this country, there is no doubt they were greatly interested in what had taken place over there and frequently discussed it at their meetings. That frightened a good many business men, and I know a report was presented by the commissioner of the mounted police to the government of the day outlining the situation amongst the labour people. From all I know of that report and of the people who made the investigation, I am quite convinced that it was entirely misleading. The investigators jumped at conclusions—they knew so little of what was really the mind of the labour people. Undoubtedly labour all over the world had been advocating a radical change in our economic structure. We all know that the great change when we passed from hand to machine work is referred to by historians as the industrial revolution. Most of the workers believe that before very long the tools of production must be owned in some way collectively in order that every man may have a better chance than he has to-day, and this change is commonly known in labour and socialist circles the world over as the coming "economic revolution." And so, as soon as these investigators—ignorant men—heard this term, "economic revolution," they immediately jumped to the conclusion that the workingmen wanted to have a violent political revolution here in Canada. I do not intend to discuss that in detail, but I would say this: in all the investigations which were made in 1919 there was not discovered a single gun in the hands of any workingman. Now, if the workers were going to overthrow the government of this country by force, surely they would have had three or four guns somewhere among them; but, I repeat, there was not one. And yet so hysterical were a good many of the officials at that time that they believed there was to be an overthrow of the government of Canada by force! At the very time despatches of that kind were going out from the city of Winnipeg—and from them you would imagine that the streets were running in blood—at that very time the provincial government officials were sitting down with the workingmen carefully negotiating schedules. I think my friend from Winnipeg South Centre, who spoke this afternoon, will bear out my statements. As a matter of fact he himself, as he intimated to-day, was engaged in the prosecution; that was part of his legal work at that time. He was in close touch with what took place, and hence I am very glad to find that he is among those who are moving for the repeal of this legislation.

What about the Winnipeg strike, which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) characterizes as an unprecedented situation that called forth this extraordinary act? What about it? We in the west—and even the hon. member for West Calgary will sympathize with me on this particular point—have always rather felt that the east was going a little more slowly than we wanted to go, and so back in 1918 the labour people met in convention in eastern Canada, and it was decided that the next year there would be a western convention of the western delegates of the Trades and Labour Congress. They held a meeting in Calgary to consider how they could evolve a more effective kind of labour organization. Some of them suggested that they should have something in the form of what they called a One Big Union, so that instead of being divided into a great many little cliques and crafts they should get together in one effective body. The bankers had one bankers' association, and the manufacturers had one association, whether their members were engaged in boot or furniture manufacture or in milling.

Mr. STEVENS: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that the meeting in Calgary of the so-called O.B.U. was under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; I want to make that clear. I said that the delegates who were present at Quebec in 1918—the delegates of the labour congress—decided that the western delegates of that organization should meet in conference at Calgary.

Mr. STEVENS: Was that with the consent of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No. There is little done in the west that meets with the approval of the east; I am afraid this is true in some other matters as well. I do not want to give the impression that this convention had the approval of the congress, but the western representatives of the Trades and Labour Congress thought they wanted a more effective labour organization in the west than the east would stand for, and so they had this meeting in Calgary. They said: "We are divided into a great many little organizations. Let us get together into one effective organization." And they called it the One Big Union. I will not discuss the merits of the organization; the advocates may have been right or they may have been wrong, but that was their opinion at that time. They said, "We are not sure whether the rank and file of the labour people want to have this. We will therefore take a vote of the members of the unions throughout the west". Remember, there was at this time no one big union in existence; it was simply a proposal. The leaders said they would take a vote on this among the trade unionists throughout western Canada.

In the meantime there arose trouble in the city of Winnipeg between the ironmasters at the head of the contract shops and the men in their employ. The men wanted to join with the employees in similar trades in the railway shops. The ironmasters said, "We are willing to deal with our own men, but we refuse to deal with an organization that includes both mechanics in the contract shops and mechanics in the railway shops". There was a great deal of controversy over this, and the matter was referred to the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg, a body affiliated with and under the jurisdiction of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. The Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg discussed the situation and voted that they would go out on a general sympathetic strike. That strike was called on May fifteenth. It was so complete that it surprised even the workers themselves. Actually it not only paralyzed the activities of the city of Winnipeg, but threw into hysterics the business and professional people of the city. They thought that it was a revolution. That is the situation that prevailed at that time; that, in brief, is how it came about. The statement was made the other day by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) that it was a One Big Union strike. As a matter of fact the vote had not yet been taken as to whether or not there was to be a One Big Union. There is no doubt that many of the leading spirits in the strike were in favour of that form of organization. I do not deny that at all. But the vote had not been taken and the organization known as the One Big Union did not come into existence until the strike was all over. The strike order, as a matter of fact, was signed by the president and the secretary of the Trades and Labour Council of Winnipeg. That is the background in outline of the Winnipeg strike.

I do not want to enter into the merits of the strike. A strike is a very serious thing, and this strike was a serious thing for Winnipeg. I would say this however: A great many of the citizens, because they did not understand anything about the labour movement, were altogether unfit to judge of the real factors that were at work. I myself have been accused of having been in the strike. I had nothing to do with it until it was half over. When I arrived in Winnipeg it was the third week of the strike and I did not take any very active interest in things until this legislation was passed and the leaders of the strike were summarily arrested, with the idea that they were to be deported. Then I took the attitude which I take now, that this was outrageous legislation and that these arrests were absolutely unjustifiable. The workers at that time were accused of being seditious; some of them were sent to gaol for a year as guilty of seditious conspiracy. Let me say, however, that three of these men were elected to the legislature of Manitoba while they were still in gaol. The day after they were released from gaol they walked over from the gaol to take their places in the provincial legislature. That was the verdict, not of twelve men, but of the city of Winnipeg; and I think that I would rather take the verdict of the voting population than the verdict of twelve men, especially twelve men selected as those jurymen were. Another labour man who was then a member of the provincial house, Mr. F. J. Dixon, was tried and acquitted, and he was re-elected by the most overwhelming majority that any man has ever received at the hands of the city of Winnipeg.

I know there are two classes still in Winnipeg, one being the employers who believe that revolution was successfully checkmated, although I would say that the great majority of the citizens at this time are willing to forget all this trouble. They say that it belongs to the past and it should be allowed to remain there. Some of us would gladly forget it if you could have removed from our statute books those measures which may make it possible to arrest men under similar circumstances at some future time. That is why we have kept the matter alive. We do not want to resurrect the events of eight or nine years ago, but we do believe that it is in the interests of British justice in this country, in the interests of fair play to the labour men, that discriminatory legislation of this character should no longer remain on the statute books. I have gone into this matter because there has been so much misrepresentation with regard to the whole situation, and especially with regard to the part that some of us have tried to play in bringing about a repeal of this law.

One word more. A great many people are afraid of the menace of communism, and they are talking very wildly about it, even in the city of Ottawa. They are for example confusing the communist party and the One Big Union. If they would read the journals of those two branches of the labour movement they would find them bitterly attacking each other, and they would see that these two organizations consider themselves sworn enemies. Yet there are those in this parliament, who should know better, who will deliberately make statements that confuse the public mind by suggesting that these two organizations are identical. Such statements are grotesquely untrue, as anyone at all in touch with the labour movement knows very well.

I ventured to dissent the other night from what some of the hon. members said on the ground that I refused to admit that the labour people as a class were less loyal than other people; I believe that our labour people are just as good citizens as any other class in this country. I can quite understand that there are those who are getting along very well in this country and who are quite contented with the general status quo. I am not at all sure from what I see of things that the bankers want any great change; I do not know that those who have high tariffs at present desire any particular change; I am not sure that some of the railway companies want a change. Naturally the people who want changes are those who feel the ill effects of the present system. I do object that they should be declared disloyal because they want to bring about these changes. Personally I have never advocated force as a means of bringing about political changes, although others have done so. This government rests upon force; we were told during the war that the only way to overcome our enemies was by means of force. I quoted a passage from a newspaper the other evening in which a gentleman speaking before the St. George's Society in Winnipeg said that force was the only way in which all great reforms had come about in Great Britain. That is common talk, and you cannot wonder that the rank and file of the labour people have followed that teaching and are coming to believe that the only way in which they can gain their ends is by means of force. As I say, I have never taken that view. I do not believe in force to-day as the means of settling international disputes, and I do not believe in force as a means of settling our industrial disputes. I would rather make an appeal to reason, but I know some of our labour people do not hold this view, just as some members of this parliament do not have this view. That is my position, but holding that position I would still say that when there are organizations in this country which are trying to bring about changes to better their conditions, we should surround them with every safeguard in order that they might have the utmost freedom of expression and organization so that they may use what are considered legitimate ways to bring about the desired ends.

In closing, I would say that if you want to create rebellion, then bring in more repressive measures and grind down the people still further. I think none of us wants to do that. Since 1919 industrial commissions have urged time and again that certain changes should be brought about in Canada to better the conditions of the working class, but nothing has been done along the lines suggested; we are meeting in parliament after parliament, and are doing practically nothing. Is it any wonder that fiery spirits among the labour people get disgusted with the slow constitutional means, and that occasionally a man gets upon the platform and says something which may be construed as being seditious? Let me say that if we are to preserve this country and all that is best in it we must see to it that the common people are given the very fullest opportunities possible. I am very glad that this house has at last come to the point where the majority are willing to remove a piece of legislation which has been a source of irritation and which the labour people feel has been a rank injustice.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I would just like to point out to the house that in 1919 the amendment was first introduced on April 7. I have it under my hand at the moment, and it was discussed again on April 29; again on May 1; again on May 9, and again on May 12, when it was passed.

Mr. THORSON: That was not the bill which we are now discussing.

Mr. STEVENS: The amendment to the Immigration Act to which this bill was merely an amendment, passed in the same session.

Mr. THORSON: The section we are discussing was brought in as a separate bill on June 6.

Mr. STEVENS: I have it right here. The original bill amending the Immigration Act included the section which this bill amended later in the session, in June. It was introduced on April 7 and discussed on the dates which I have mentioned. Later the Minister of Immigration came to the house—.

Mr. THORSON: But, Mr. Speaker,—.

Mr. STEVENS: Just a moment; the hon. member has been on his feet a good many times this afternoon and evening.

Mr. THORSON: What was the number of the bill introduced on April 7? The bill introduced on June 6 was No. 132 and was a different bill from that introduced on April 7.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has the floor and should be heard.

Mr. STEVENS: The bill was discussed on the date I have mentioned and received its third reading on May 12. Then the Minister of Immigration found that section 41 did not quite meet the situation, and he introduced another bill on June 6 which passed through this house by unanimous consent and received third reading on the same day.

Mr. THORSON: A separate bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Explain.

Mr. RINFRET: The object of this bill is to repeal certain sections of the Naturalization Act whereby applicants for naturalization must appear before the courts of the country and go through a certain procedure before the Secretary of State can finally decide on their applications. This bill has been before the house on several occasions, but has not been very fully discussed, and I think it would be proper, in moving the second reading of the bill, that I should crave the indulgence of the house to bring forward certain facts, documents and arguments which will explain the situation. Perhaps as a preface to my explanation it might be of interest briefly to outline the beginnings of naturalization in this country in so far as the principle of recognition of attained British citizenship is concerned.

Under the French regime, nationality was acquired through individual letters of denization issued by the king. Under the British regime, royal letters patent were also necessary to confer British nationality; and that condition obtained for quite a time. But in Quebec, it seems, according to a letter from Murray, of 1765, that it was sufficient to secure the prerogatives of a British subject, to take the oaths of allegiance and have one's name written in the register kept for the purpose. Evidently this procedure, while conferring certain privileges, did not secure naturalization, which remained a matter reserved to the home government. In the instructions to Lord Dorchester as governor of Lower Canada, 16th September, 1791, clause 17, the king declares "that you do not upon any pretence whatsoever give your assent to any bill or bills that may hereafter be passed by the legislative council and assembly of the province under your government for the naturalization of aliens." This shows that the British government at the time was reserving such bills for the royal assent.

In 1793 an act was passed by the legislature of Lower Canada establishing regulations respecting aliens and obliging them to secure certificates for the time of their residence in Canada. It contained no regulation as to their naturalization. The above act expired in 1795, but was continued to the 7th of May, 1796. It was always necessary to get full naturalization to secure royal letters patent.

I do not think I need go into the matter so extensively as to mention the different acts that were passed in 1817, in 1826, and in 1828, either in Lower or Upper Canada; suffice it to say that during that time all these legislative enactments could not confer anything like naturalization as we understand it to-day, as this was strictly reserved to the British parliament.

In 1844 the British parliament had to deal with the question, a more modern interpretation of the rights and privileges of British subjects being necessary owing to the development of foreign travel, due to the rapid expansion of transportation facilities and the large number seeking British citizenship. Complications apparently arose, and in 1847 the British parliament took cognizance of the colonial measures as being repugnant to the legislation of the home authorities of 1844, especially in regard to the recognition of British citizenship abroad. The principle was definitely and clearly enunciated that any rights of citizenship conferred by the colonies were confined absolutely to the territorial domain of the colony concerned. From this on a certain degree of friction developed as discontent became general over the dual status of naturalized colonials. This dual citizenship did not bother those who remained in the colony, but once a man went abroad he was faced with the situation of being liable for the exactions and laws of his own native country and had no right to the protection of the British flag.

Considerable correspondence was conducted between the colonies and the home authorities, but the British parliament clung to its original position until about 1870, when an act was passed permitting conventions with the various countries arranging for mutual recognition of the right of their citizens to change their allegiance. A minute of council in 1880 reveals a request from the home authorities, suggesting a period of five years residence as a prelude to a treaty between the British parliament and the government of the British dominions. This was agreed to in so far as passports were concerned, the three year term being retained for civil rights within Canada.

The British authorities, I may explain, went part way in providing a palliative measure by arranging with the consular service to issue passports providing the term of residence abroad did not exceed one year. The principle was thus clearly defined that imperial legislation was supreme even after 1867, when, by the British North America Act Canada was given the right to legislate for the naturalization of aliens. This condition of affairs continued, and it was not until the imperial conference of 1911 that an agreement was reached to establish a citizenship recognizable everywhere. At this conference was urged the recognition of the principle: A British subject anywhere, a British subject everywhere. This view triumphed after a lengthy debate, the British authorities remaining firm in their adherence to the five year term, which was accepted by the dominions. Previously Canada had had a three year term only.

As a prelude to this new understanding, the British parliament passed an act which became the model for the dominions' legislation. The right was reserved at the conference for the dominions to retain full control of local regulations aside from the five years' résidence clause, which was made imperative. The British parliament endowed the Secretary of State for Home Affairs with power to grant naturalization, and this method of imposing responsibility on a minister was followed by all the other dominions, with the exception of Canada.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, it would be worth while for me to present these facts in concise form in order that the house may understand the evolution of the granting of naturalization certificates in this country. As I have said, before 1911 naturalization in this country obtained only for local territory and could not in any way confer British citizenship or recognition; and it was only after the conference of 1911 that the British government, in conference with representatives of the different dominions, agreed on certain regulations whereby every dominion would be placed in a position to confer naturalization that would obtain throughout the British Empire. And it was after that conference and in accordance with that principle that in 1914 the then Borden government, through the Hon. Mr. Doherty, presented to this house the bill which became the act under which we are at present working. The essential feature of that bill was, as I have said, to make it possible to confer in this country naturalization that would obtain throughout the British Empire. Among the qualifications necessary to obtain such naturalization was included the residential clause of five years, which was a new feature in our Canadian legislation. It also contained that very important feature which was new: it granted, after the courts had passed upon the application, discretion to the Secretary of State to refuse naturalization notwithstanding their decision.

The act of 1914 gave to the Secretary of State, under a section which I will read in a moment, absolute discretion to grant or to refuse a certificate of naturalization, but it stipulated that the application could not reach the Secretary of State unless a court of this country had pronounced in favour of it. I contend that when we adopted that dual system in 1914, we were doing something different from what existed in the mother country at that time and from what existed in every other British dominion.

In 1919 certain amendments were proposed; but as they have no bearing on the question which is now before the house, I am merely mentioning the fact. In 1920 the Canadian parliament reverted to the bill of 1914 and we have now in the revised statutes of to-day an act embodying the conditions adopted in 1914 and revived in 1920. If an applicant now desires to obtain naturalization, the procedure is to apply to the department; but before the department of the Secretary of State can pass upon the application it must be submitted to a court, and only when the court has decided whether or not the applicant has the necessary requirements for naturalization can the Secretary of State exercise his discretion. What is proposed by this bill is to do away with the reference to the courts, to do away with the system which has been modelled more or less on the United States system, and to adopt the British system endowing the Secretary of State with full responsibility and discretion as is the case in every other dominion of the empire.

As I have said, this bill has already been before the house several times and I do not think it has yet received proper treatment. It has either been discarded or discussed very rapidly, and I think we owe it to the house and to the principle of the measure to consider it very thoroughly during the course of the present session. By this bill we are seeking to amend our regulations so as to conform to the statutes of the imperial parliament and the other dominions. I do not think it will be necessary for me to indicate the system followed in the other dominions, although I shall do so with pleasure in committee if hon. members so desire. I have the facts before me but I believe it would only prolong my explanation if I placed them on Hansard now.

Mr. MANION: What was the system in Canada before 1914?

Mr. RINFRET: I have just said that then the courts were dealing altogether with the matter but they could not confer anything but local citizenship. It was not in their power nor in the power of the government or parliament at that time to confer imperial citizenship in Canada. It was only after the conference of 1911 that the British government and representatives of the different dominions agreed as to certain qualifications that would make it possible for every dominion to confer citizenship and naturalization that would obtain throughout the empire and that would be recognized throughout the world as British citizenship.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is any time limit prescribed in this measure? I notice that all the provisions are repealed. Is there any provision for posting applications in the office of the clerk of the court or anywhere else?

Mr. RINFRET: Perhaps my hon. friend will bear with me and I will gradually come to all these matters. I am now endeavouring to explain why we are repealing these sections and in due course I will explain what will take place if the house consents to their repeal.

Mr. KAISER: In what way would we differ from Australia? I can see the great difference between naturalization in England and in Canada. We are a country receiving vast numbers of immigrants whereas in the older countries such a condition does not exist, and we might therefore have to resort to different methods from those employed in the older countries.

Mr. RINFRET: It had been my desire that we should go into committee at once. This would have permitted replies to all these specific questions, but I understand the leader of the opposition because he objects to the principle of the bill or for some other reason, insisted that we should have a discussion on the second reading. Of course my hon. friends will understand that, speaking on the second reading of the bill, I am not in a position to deal with all these points which can be elucidated when we reach the committee stage. But I may tell my hon. friend, as regards the point which he has just raised, that the situation is this. Every dominion retains the control of its local regulations, but there are certain requirements for British citizenship which are being recognized everywhere. As regards the discretion of the Secretary of State in granting certificates, I have just said that this Dominion is the only one where this is prefaced by a reference to the court. In all the other dominions the Secretary of State has the fullest discretion as to granting certificates. That is the case in Australia, South Africa, and so on.

Mr. LADNER: Is it not true that the authority still remains with the Secretary of State? All the courts do is to inquire into the fitness of the candidate for citizenship. They hear the evidence in order to find out whether the man is a fit and proper person to receive the citizenship of this country. Having established the proof in that regard, the judge makes a finding and then the Secretary of State still exercises his right to grant or to refuse a certificate. I think that is the practice.

Mr. RINFRET: That is the very point I am going to argue. At present if the court refuses to recommend a certificate, the Secretary of State may not, and according to the interpretation of the act, shall not grant a certificate. He has no discretion when the court refuses to recommend the granting of a certificate.

Mr. LADNER: Does the hon. member think the Secretary of State, who has not seen nor heard the applicant, should have power to grant the certificate?

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will bear with me, that is the whole purpose of the bill, I will endeavour to explain why that discretion should be given to the Secretary of State. The purpose of these amendments is to make it easier for applicants to obtain naturalization papers. I want to explain what I mean by the word "easier". By that I do not mean for one moment that the requirements will be any less exacting, or that the qualifications will be lowered in any way, but we want to establish a procedure whereby every applicant can more easily show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State and of the government that he possesses the necessary qualifications. It is represented that the present system places difficulties of every kind in the way of applicants. Courts sit at very infrequent intervals, and sometimes at long distances from where the applicants reside, and it makes it very hard for some of them to appear personally before the court, or to be properly represented, which can only be the case under certain circumstances. It discourages applications for naturalization in a great many instances. I know that every western member of this parliament, and even some members from the province of Quebec, in parts remote from the big centres, will vouch for what I am saying. That is one of the objections that was raised when this bill was before this house on a previous occasion. I wish to repeat that it is not for one moment intended to make it any easier to obtain a naturalization certificate in the sense that the applicant will not be required to have as firm and strong qualifications, but rather we want to make it easier for every desirable applicant properly to establish his right to a naturalization certificate, which is a very different thing.

We also want to simplify the legal processes; we want to bring about uniformity in administration. At present the requirements for obtaining a certificate, which are to be found in section 4 of the revised statute, are as follows:

> The minister may grant a certificate of naturalization to an alien who makes an application for the purpose, and satisfies the minister
> (a) that he has either resided in His Majesty's dominions for a period of not less than five years in the manner required by this section, or been in the service of the crown for not less than five years, within the last eight years before the application; and
> (b) that he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or French languages, and,
> (c) that he intends if his application is granted either to reside in His Majesty's dominions or to enter or continue in the service of the crown.

I point out at once that certain of these qualifications are of such a nature that they may easily be established, provided that the applicant is acting in good faith. As to whether the applicant has resided for five years within the British Empire, or has resided one year in Canada as required by the act, it is quite immaterial whether that be established before a tribunal or before the department, but when it comes to paragraph (b), to ascertaining whether he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language, that is very much a matter of appreciation, a matter of policy, I should say, rather than a matter of law. I submit that there is nothing in the act to help any judge to decide what is the exact meaning of that provision, "that he is of good character," and is a fit subject for naturalization, and it is therefore very much a matter of policy either for this parliament to pronounce upon, or for this government to take the responsibility for, just as in the same manner it belongs to parliament and to the government to decide whether or not an alien is a fit subject to be accepted as an immigrant. That is exactly why we desire to repeal these clauses under which it is provided that an applicant must refer his case to the courts. We have had ample proof during the experimental working of this act that there are not, perhaps, two judges in this country who interpret the act in the same way. They have their own opinion as to naturalization; they have their own feeling as to what constitutes a fit subject for naturalization; they have their own appreciation of what constitutes an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language. So that we have a system under which you may be granted a certificate of naturalization in a certain part of the country, and be met with a very different reception if you apply for it somewhere else. That, I submit is a most undesirable situation.

Mr. KAISER: What steps would the Secretary of State take in order to satisfy himself that the applicant was a fit subject for naturalization? Would he set up a tribune of his own?

Mr. RINFRET: That is exactly what I am trying to explain. Rather than leave it to the different judges of the country to give to this act an interpretation which is not uniform, but which is flexible and varies according to the temperament and judgment of the judge, it is desirable that the process of naturalization in this country should issue from one source, that source being the Secretary of State, representing the government of Canada, and responsible to the parliament of Canada. My argument is that the determination of the qualifications for British citizenship in this country is not a matter that should be scattered to the four winds, but rather that it should issue from the one source.

If the house will turn to subsection 3 of section 4, they will find that in 1914 it had been intended to give to the Secretary of State the absolute discretion which we now ask for. Subsection 3, which in my opinion and in the opinion of the department and of a number of legal authorities contains the basic principle of the Naturalization Act as we have it today, reads as follows:

> The grant of a certificate of naturalization to any such alien shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister, and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.

Such was the clause which was proposed in 1914, and which was adopted by this house after a considerable discussion. But is it not evident, and is it not according to what took place in other parts of the empire, that it was the purpose of the bill and the intention of the government of the day, and of parliament which approved the bill, to grant to the Secretary of State the fullest discretion in the matter of naturalization? Look again at the section, which says that it "shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister, and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision." That is the clause to which this parliament assented in 1914.

It is true that the same bill did retain the reference to the courts which had existed previously, but if you turn to the explanation of the bill which was given by the Hon. Mr. Doherty, then Minister of Justice, which you will find at page 3250 of volume IV of Hansard of the session of 1914, you will find that he explained it thus:

> Perhaps it will be well to point out some of the material differences between the requirements of our existing law and the requirements of this bill. The period of residence differs in term, and differs also with regard to the place in which it must have been passed. The requirement as regards the period of time is that it shall be five years, but that it is sufficient that the last of the five years shall have been passed within the Dominion of Canada, provided the other four years were passed within the British posessions. There are requirements of adequate knowledge of the languages official in the country; in Canada the French and the English languages. The certificates under this legislation are to be issued by the Secretary of State. They are not to emanate directly from the court, but under the sections, which deal with the procedure there, the courts are to be resorted to for the purpose of establishing before them compliance with the essential conditions.

Is it not plain from this explanation that the government was under the impression, and so advised parliament, that the only course the courts could take after the passing of the bill would be to ascertain as to whether there had been essential compliance with those specific requirements, which were mere facts and could be just as well established before the courts as before the department? But as I pointed out a moment ago, that is not what has happened, and the practice of submitting the matter to the courts has not resulted in that unanimity of procedure which should prevail in so important a matter; in short, applicants for naturalization are not treated alike, the practice varying in the different courts. This in my opinion is the main reason why we should amend the act as I have suggested.

I have touched also on the point of simplifying the procedure and making it easier for people to submit their applications for naturalization. Every hon. member conversant with conditions obtaining in large sections of the country knows very well that it is difficult, if not almost impossible, for many applicants either to reach the court or to submit their applications, with the result that undue and undesirable delays occur. In the time at my disposal it would be impossible for me to give in detail the variety of rules obtaining in the courts to which I have just referred, but, as I have said, anyone may go to the department and peruse the files, which reveal the most astounding discrepancies, discrepancies which in some instances confer citizenship on those not qualified to receive it, and in other cases impose very unfair restrictions on deserving applicants.

One of the most serious grievances in so far as the courts are concerned is that the applicant is compelled to travel long distances, entailing absence from home for one or two days at considerable expense, and quite frequently after going to all this expense and trouble he finds that the court has been postponed or that the naturalization cases have been traversed to the next sitting. This may seem unimportant, but it has the undesirable effect of discouraging applicants to take out naturalization papers. I think it will be generally agreed that when a man has passed the various immigration tests and has fulfilled the requirements of the act as to residence, character and knowledge of one of the official languages, we should make the certificate of naturalization available to him at the least expense and with the least difficulty.

Perhaps I may give a few examples from the extensive file that I have under my hand in order that hon. members may be advised of the discrepancies which I have mentioned. It is represented to the department that many applicants residing at great distances from courts complain of having to go several times to these courts, thus being put to considerable expense. This complaint is very general from all parts of the country, and I have already referred to it. It is also pointed out that owing to the rare visits of the judge in some districts applications have to wait many months before being heard, and on that account applicants are often called to appear at very inopportune times when they are busy at home with the harvest, trapping, or other occupations. Frequently their applications are rejected when they are unable to attend for these reasons, and they are obliged to begin anew their application at additional expense. This discourages them and some do not proceed further. It is also pointed out that if a judge cannot attend as expected or advertised at the place where application is to be made, applicants are required to travel long distances with their witnesses to meet the judge and have their applications heard at another point rather than wait a year. Through the incompetence of some clerks applications which should not be received are accepted, and finally rejected by the courts or the Secretary of State. Applicants thereby incur expense which would have been avoided had they been properly advised in the first instance. In a number of cases applications are lost and considerable delay results.

As regards the interpretation of the act, I could quote a number of cases, but perhaps it will suffice if I read a memorandum received from the Hon. R. M. Meredith, Chief Justice of the high court division of the supreme court of Ontario, which presents the case in a very convincing way. This document in itself has much intrinsic value, but it has also behind it the very great prestige and authority of a judge who has on very many occasions pronounced himself in regard to naturalization cases, and who is a perfectly competent authority to speak about the present system. Even if so far my speech had failed to convince the house, I have no doubt this memorandum will do better than I have been able to do myself. Here is what he says:

In the matter of five applications for naturalization under the provisions of the Naturalization Act, 1914.

That which seems to me to be a very unsatisfactory state of the law and practice respecting the naturalization, in Canada, of aliens, impels me to say these things in dealing with and disposing of these applications, which were made at the last Halton autumn assizes;

The act, which is now chapter 138 of the revised statutes of Canada, confers on the Secretary of State the powers and the duty to grant or refuse a certificate of naturalization, upon an application to him—section 4—and after an application to the judge, court, authority or person mentioned in section 22—section 27.

On application to the secretary, naturalization may be granted on proof of the statutory requirements set out in section 4; namely five years' residence, good character and "an adequate knowledge of either the English or French languages"—the plural number of this word being obviously a clerical mistake for the singular—and intention "to reside in His Majesty's dominions or enter or continue in the service of the crown".

The judges, courts and authorities or persons mentioned in section 22 have now no power to grant naturalization. They have the power and duty to hear and adjudicate upon applications for naturalization conferred on them; but their decision in favour of applicants may in the "absolute discretion" of the Secretary of State be in effect overruled in a refusal to issue a certificate of naturalization.

Whilst, on the other hand there does not appear to be anything in the way of an overruling in effect by him of a judge's or court's decision against an applicant by the simple process of granting another application to him directly under section 4. Nor does there seem to be anything to prevent an applicant, whose application has failed when made to a judge or court or authority or person, applying again and again to other judges, courts, authorities or persons; subsection 2 of section 2 of the act does not seem, directly or indirectly, to create a local jurisdiction.

One of the first substantial difficulties met with in the administration of the act is this: judges, courts, etc. must decide "that the alien is a fit and proper person to be naturalized and possesses the proper qualifications" before they can find in favour of applicants: sections 22 and 26: whilst upon an application to the secretary under section 4 all that is required is that the application satisfy him that he has the statutory qualifications which I have before mentioned. But the "absolute discretion" of the secretary under section 4 subsection 3 gives him the fullest power to refuse any application to him.

So that it is manifest that on every application, such as those I am dealing with, I must find that the applicant not only possesses the required qualification—which I take to mean those set out in section 4—but also is a fit and proper person to be naturalized.

Who is a fit and proper person to be naturalized? Nothing in the act gives any answer to this question. It is not a question of law, nor one of mere commonsense; it is really a question of policy of the country in which naturalization is sought: and as this Dominion has put the matter so completely in the discretion of its secretary of state; sections 4 and 27 of the act, it seemed to me both natural and proper to look to him for knowledge: but so far that looking by me has been in vain. Nor can I find anything that has been said or done by any other judge or any court, authority or person throwing light on the subject, helpful to me. Then unaided in those ways, what am I to decide on the question whether these applicants are "fit and proper persons" to be naturalized under the act, assuming that they possess, as they may, "the required qualifications" expressed in the act? They are all illiterate, illiterate in the language of their native land, and much more in the language of this province or either of the languages of the Dominion. Nearly all of them work in gangs of men, of their own native language, in brick yards or in other similar employments and generally live in buildings of their employer used in connection with and near to the work in which they are employed; but nothing has been said or discovered against their characters as men in such a condition in life. In early days in this country they would gladly have been naturalized here; as also in the United States of America doubtless, the paramount desire, if not the only one, being, then, to increase the population. But changed times have greatly changed needs and desires in this respect in the United States of America, and here too in a lesser degree, but yet a great change and one much affected too by the experiences and the effect of the most recent great war.

To reach a right conclusion upon this question, it is necessary to bear in mind always the effect of naturalization such as that sought: beside making, as far as this Dominion can, the alien a British subject with all that that means, these things may be mentioned, not all but some of the more important: it gives to the person one of the qualifications to become lawmakers in this Dominion, in the senate, the House of Commons, the provincial legislatures, and the lesser law making councils; a right to vote; a qualification as juror, so that the man may adjudge among his fellow men even in questions of life or death; and a right to fill some public offices; and it prevents expulsion from Canada—deportation, as it is called. It may be said that "deportation" after-five years residence in Canada, or its equivalent, could not be effected; but cases of which I have knowledge show that even fourteen years is not considered a bar by some who exercise the power to deport.

If I acted upon my own views as to what aliens are fit and proper persons to be made British subjects, I should decide against all of the applicants, deeming that the least illiterate of them is not yet qualified.

But for two reasons my decision is to be the other way:

1. Because I have no doubt that a great majority of the hundreds of persons, clothed with the same authority which I am exercising, would so decide in like cases that come before them. As far as I have been able to discover, the general practice seems to be to decide in favour of the applicant when his papers show compliance with the expressed qualifications provided for in the act. And it is of the utmost importance that the law should be administered evenly: that the country should not be open to the reproach: Your laws are uneven.

2. And because, if the decision were against the applicants, that would probably end the matter, though it should not, for they might make another application, to the secretary direct or to some other judge or court or authority or person having power under the act.

Deciding, as I do, and giving, as I am, my reason for such decision, and making it, in so far as I can, part of that decision, it puts upon the secretary the necessity of either issuing, or refusing to issue, certificates of naturalization, and to that extent disclosing a policy applicable to such applications; and so it may prove to be a step at least towards uniformity in the administration of the law of naturalization in Canada.

This is a long document, Mr. Speaker, but I consider it most interesting and convincing. Chief Justice Meredith, in this statement, is practically recommending himself the very thing we want to achieve by amending the act as we now propose. He has seen the situation very clearly; if the idea which prevailed in 1914 were followed out, it should rest with the court merely to see that the applicant complies with requirements of the law which are facts. As Mr. Justice Meredith puts it, at present the judges also decide as to who is a fit person for naturalization, as to what degree a man seeking naturalization should possess a knowledge of either French, or English, and as to the character of the applicant. As the learned judge points out, this is not a matter of law; the judge cannot find in the law any enlightenment upon these points; and he cannot receive any help even by applying to the department. He must resort to his own opinions and feelings, and desiring uniformity in the interpretation of the act the judge has decided, without regard to what he thinks about it as an individual, to leave the decisions to the Secretary of State.

That is the decision at which this most learned judge of a very high court in Ontario has arrived. He has not waited for parliament to amend the law as we propose to do; he has done his own amending as to his pronouncements in the granting of naturalization. He has taken the stand that it is not a matter of law so much as a matter of policy, realizing that judges all over the country will decide these points according to their own inclinations. He has declared that so far as he is concerned he is not going to resist any more applications of that kind, in order that they may reach the Secretary of State for decision. I think this is a most important document, and I am quite willing to stand by it in presenting this bill to the house

My hon. friends have put questions as to what will take place if these sections are repealed. I may say that inasmuch as after the court has rendered its decision the Secretary of State still has the discretion to either refuse or grant the certificate, right along we have been conducting our own inquiries in each of the cases presented to the courts. Every one of these cases is now investigated by the department by various methods, either through inquiries made by the mounted police, through arrangements which we have made with homestead inspectors, the records of the immigration department or in other ways at our disposal. This is done in order that we may satisfy ourselves as to the qualifications of the applicants. If this act passed it would simply mean that the applicant would fill out a form, which is quite extensive and covers the whole field of investigation. This form, which is made under oath, is sent to the department, but at present we cannot act upon that application for at least three months, waiting for the decision of the court. If this bill passes the Department of State will be in a position to deal with every case as it comes along and to give every case that degree of attention which it does require in order to make sure of the requirements of the different applicants.

Then there is another feature of the bill, although perhaps this is not quite so important: if this amendment carries it will give the state quite an important revenue. At present every applicant must pay $5 before filing his papers, but that is paid to the clerk of the court and only in important centres such as Toronto and Montreal, where the revenues of the clerk exceed $2,000, is any return made to the Department of State. In other cases the amount paid goes to the clerk of the court as a fee for the performance of his work, and this branch of the public service, although it exacts quite a substantial sum of money from such applicants, brings practically no revenue at all to the department. We estimate that if the applications were sent direct, the revenues of the branch probably would cover the cost of the administration and would amount to over $50,000 a year.

I do not know that I should deal with the matter at greater length now. I realize that I have spoken at considerable length. However, I should like to sum up my remarks thus: I claim that the absolute power of granting these certificates should rest with the government through the Secretary of State, and that this is the basic principle of our own act. This is the system followed in Great Britain and in every British dominion. When an immigrant has entered this country according to the regulations of the Department of Immigration and has resided in Canada legally and peacefully for five years, or for one year in Canada and four years in the British Empire, he should be granted a certificate. Uniformity in decision and a greater facility in procedure should be allowed to any such person desiring to become a British citizen. Naturalization is primarily a matter of policy which should rest with the government, and the department would derive an important revenue from the change.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I commend this bill to the attention of the house and feel assured that it will receive the approval of parliament.

Mr. MANION: Just before the minister closes I should like to ask him a question. Under the new system how long would it take for naturalization papers to go through?

Mr. RINFRET: There would be no definite time; that would rest with the department.

Mr. MANION: It could be done immediately?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. I thank my hon. friend for this question, because in a certain number of cases it has proven a great inconvenience that the department has been unable to grant a certificate to qualified persons simply because of the delay of three months which is provided in the present act, and because of the necessity of referring the matter to the courts.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): The minister has made a long explanation of this bill, but I regret to say that he has not brought conviction to my mind. For years this question of naturalization has been a difficult one in this country. Before this last act of 1914, naturalization as granted in Canada carried force in Canada only. Any person naturalized in Canada was no longer a British subject legally when he left this country. That was a condition of affairs that was not satisfactory to anybody, and there was a great deal of agitation about it for a long term of years, as the hon. gentleman will remember. I heard it discussed in this house a good many times. At the imperial conference the matter was brought up from time to time when all the representatives of the dominions were there with those of the mother country, and finally, after a great deal of discussion, they all agreed on a bill of this kind, which if passed by the different dominions and accepted by them would enable the dominions to grant British naturalization which would carry the world over. That was accepted by Canada, and this act of 1914 was passed for that purpose.

To my mind this British naturalization is a very valuable privilege for anybody to have. It carries with it the right to protection all over the world as a British citizen, and it is something that ought not to be lightly given. It is true that the minister has the final say in regard to granting these certificates, but he has stated that he wants to follow the practice in Britain. How can anybody compare the situation in Great Britain in this regard with the situation in Canada? Great Britain is a small country, comparatively easy of access in all its parts; distances are not great. Canada is spread over this whole continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Somebody in authority must see these applicants individually and personally, in order to determine whether they are fit and proper persons to become naturalized British subjects. It cannot be done by correspondence. It cannot be done by writing to homestead inspectors. It has to be done by someone of real authority, a person who is used to judging character, to judging men; before them these applicants must appear in order that we may be sure that they are fit and proper persons to be naturalized. I quite admit what the minister says about differences of opinion, perhaps, as to exactly what is necessary in order that a person may be regarded as a fit and proper person to be naturalized, but he cannot possibly administer this question in the way that he proposes unless he surrounds himself with a bodyguard of men who can go out into the country and see these applicants; and the men he would have to use for that purpose must be well educated men, men who would command large salaries.

The minister when he was speaking seemed to have it in his mind that perhaps these sections regarding the necessity of going before a judge were not in the act of 1914, and then he said that some of them were. As a matter of fact, if my memory serves me correctly, in the act of 1914 it was provided that the applicant should go to a judge or to a court.

Mr. RINFRET: If the hon. member will allow me, I did not intend to give the impression that these clauses were not in the act of 1914. What I tried to express was the fact that these clauses were not fully appreciated, as experience has shown.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so, but they have been in there since we had the power to give complete British naturalization; they were not put in afterwards. In the original act, under which we had the power to naturalize British subjects all over the world, these clauses appeared and they have been there ever since. I take the point most strongly that every applicant must appear personally before someone in authority, otherwise it is utterly impossible to say whether or not an applicant should be naturalized. I would ask the minister, before whom should an applicant more properly come than before a judge? True, there may be cases in which it is difficult for the man personally to appear before the judge, but section 25 gives the judge discretion. It says that the applicant shall personally appear before the court for examination unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that he is prevented from so appearing by some good and sufficient cause. In other words, if the judge has evidence from reputable people which satisfies him that this man is for some good reason unable to attend, the judge may go through the evidence and make his report without the man personally appearing. But I feel sure that except in cases of that kind where the judge thinks it is not necessary, it is absolutely imperative that the applicant should appear personally before someone in authority.

The minister has said that the department carry on investigation themselves. He does not mean, I take it, that they do that in all cases. I should be very much astonished to hear that the Department of the Secretary of State did not accept, in almost all cases, the report made by the judge. The judge sees the man personally and talks to him; in the first place he finds out whether the applicant has an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language. That is of course a basic necessity; no man can become a naturalized British subject unless he has a knowledge of either English or French. That is in the statute, and even if the minister persuades parliament to repeal these other sections, that one will remain. I would ask the minister, is it possible for him to obtain this information by correspondence? The minister says that in some cases he takes the matter up through a member of the mounted police or one of the homestead inspectors. Now, as far as I am concerned, I object most decidedly to an important question of this kind being settled by homestead inspectors. Some of whom would be all right, but many of them are not fitted to decide the questions involved in the granting to these people of British citizenship which is available to them all over the world.

Mr. RINFRET: I suppose my hon. friend realizes that the very basis of the application is the affidavit of the applicant himself.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: He has to appear in person. We have known cases where a false affidavit has been made.

Mr. RINFRET: Then we can revoke the certificate.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so, but in that case it is far better that it should never have been granted. If the applicant appears in person before the judge, nothing of that kind will happen. The personal equation cannot be overlooked. We all know a judge can readily decide about a man's character and fitness to become a British subject by meeting him, talking with him face to face and asking him all the questions he desires. The judges all approach this matter with the feeling that they will grant the certificate if at all possible.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish they did.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They all approach it with the idea that if the application is in order they will send in a favourable report to the Secretary of State. It is impossible to imagine that any of our judges would deal with any of these applications in any other way, and the minister still retains authority to refuse them.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did the hon. member not hear the memorandum from Mr. Justice Meredith that was just read? He said he thought they should all be disfranchised.

Mr. BENNETT: Because they did not understand either English or French, and the statute says that they should.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The statute states that no man can be naturalized unless he has an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language.

Mr. DUNNING: What does that mean?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If I were sitting as a judge to listen to these men I would very quickly make up my mind as to what I thought was an adequate knowledge of French or English for that purpose.

Mr. RINFRET: Could my hon. friend make up his mind as Secretary of State? He has filled that position.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Assuredly.

Mr. RINFRET: That would be only one mind, not a thousand.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Unfortunately the Secretary of State is not the man who will make up his mind in regard to it, even if this measure passes. Has he so little to do that he can go and see all these applicants himself? If he does that, we shall not object to the measure; but he is going to allow his mind to be made up for him by somebody else. As I said before he will have to have a large staff and he must have somebody who will go out and interview each one of these men separately. So that when the minister asks me if, as secretary of state, I could make up my mind on the point better than anybody else, I would say to him: Yes, if the man were here and I were talking to him I should be quite willing to deal with the question myself. But the minister cannot do that; the minister will have placed before him a pile of papers with the name of the applicant, and some of his officials will have recommended the application or said that the certificate should not be granted. How many times will the Secretary of State delve into the whole question himself independently of his officials? I question very much whether he will find time to deal with any of them in that way.

The minister has said that one of the weighty reasons why these sections should be repealed is because applications go astray and that delay is occasioned in consequence. May I ask the minister whether it is not just as likely that an application sent to Ottawa would go astray as an application sent to one of the judges? I cannot see that the Postmaster General would not take the same precautions to have mail delivered to judges as he would to have mail delivered to the Secretary of State. I admit there will be cases where there is delay, with consequent disappointment to the applicant; but that cannot happen very often now, and even if these sections are repealed it will still happen occasionally.

The Prime Minister has asked me about the memorandum from Mr. Justice Meredith. I am not a lawyer, and I am going to leave it to one of the lawyers in the house to comment on the memorandum and to answer it. It seems to me it is just as much in favour of the present act as it is in favour of the intention of my hon. friend But I will not go into the question myself. There are some things about the present act that I like very much. In the first place section 23 reads:

> The application shall be delivered at the office of the clerk or other proper officer of the court during office hours, and such application shall be posted by such clerk or other proper officer in a conspicuous place in his office, continuously for a period of at least three months before the application is heard by the court.

The delay is very necessary in order that everybody may know that the man has made an application for naturalization. I remember a case where people objected to a man being naturalized, and unless a notice was posted up and an opportunity given to people interested to object, how is it possible to put into effect section 24, which reads:

> At any time after the filing of any such application and previous to the hearing of the application, any person objecting to the naturalization of the alien may file in court an opposition in which shall be stated the grounds of his objection.

Does the minister think that is not a salutary clause? Surely the neighbours, the people who know the man well, are able to judge whether he should properly be naturalized or not, and if there is any feeling amongst the people in the community who know him that he should not be naturalized, an opportunity should be given to them to appear before the judge and to state their reasons.

The minister says that if these sections are repealed the department will make a good deal of revenue. I fancy that the clerks of the courts need the revenue they get for this service more than my hon. friend's department. Moreover, I take issue with him as to the revenue being sufficient to provide the expenses of administration; if his proposed bill becomes law. I predict that he will have to insert in the estimates an item to carry on this work. That is to say—and I come back to what I started with—he will have to increase his staff; there will have to be provision in the estimates for more assistance and more expenses for people going about this country to interview these men, unless he intends to act on the correspondence he receives and not to have anybody interview them personally. If he does not have them interviewed personally he will make many mistakes and many people will be naturalized in this country who ought not to be.

I feel strongly that British naturalization, good throughout the world, is a most valuable privilege and should be hedged around with all reasonable precautions to ensure that certificates are not granted to undesirable people. The minister says: Oh, we have the power to revoke them. I know that, and occasionally one has to be revoked, but to revoke a certificate is a very serious step to take. It is far better that the investigation be made beforehand so that certificates will not be granted to people who will make undesirable citizens. Therefore I urge the minister to reconsider the matter. So far as I know the present act, on the whole, has worked well. There may have been a few cases where some hardship has resulted, but it is a great deal better to have delayed the naturalization papers of a few who perhaps are not entitled to naturalization than to have a lot of people naturalized who ought never to be naturalized.

Motion agreed to, on division; bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon. Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Application to court and issue of certificate.

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly was my intention to speak on the second reading of this measure. The objection to it is an objection in principle, and, particularly in view of the fact that the bill contains only one section, it should have been far better to divide the house on the second reading. It is true that the opportunity will be afforded to us on the third reading; we can move the six months' hoist then as readily as we could have moved an amendment on the second reading. There was no such urgent necessity as seemed to be apparent of declaring the second reading carried, when some of us had made up our minds to speak on the motion for the second reading; however, that is not a matter of very great importance.

Naturalization with some people in Canada has been treated as a joke. I can recall my early days in western Canada, before the statute was amended, when it was only necessary to made a declaration before a justice of the peace or a commissioner for taking affidavits, and a long line of people would gather before the court. Sometimes only the certificate would be read, and then naturalization would be granted upon the payment of a fee of $2. Under these conditions naturalization became a sort of by-word and reproach. Men were gotten together in a political hall on a given night, they took the declaration and signed the papers; the papers were put before a judge, and times without number it has been discovered that the affidavits were false and the declarations wholly erroneous.

In 1914, following the imperial conference of 1911, the British parliament passed a statute with respect to naturalization. It was a matter that had engaged the attention of Sir Wilfrid Laurier for many years, and if those who are anxious to pursue the history of the subject will read what was said by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on many occasions, they will ascertain why. Up until 1914, when this parliament passed the present Naturalization Act, it was possible to confer Canadian citizenship only upon those who were naturalized. That Canadian citizenship ceased when the person to whom it was granted passed beyond the three mile limit and was no longer within the territorial jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. It was that objection, of course, that was urged by the Americans who came to settle here. It was said that they had lost their own citizenship; they passed out of the three mile limit, and then the question was, what citizenship did they possess? It was contended by some that their American citizenship was renewed.

Then you had the immigrant that came to us from Europe. He came from communities where they had compulsory military service, and I recall many of the difficulties that arose, after the war broke out, in connection with that particular matter. Under the laws of some of the kingdoms of Europe it is provided that notwithstanding the fact that its nationals may obtain naturalization under such conditions as it was granted in this country prior to 1914, they still were within the reach of the army of the country whence they came. The result was that some who went from this country the possessors of Canadian naturalization certificates found themselves, as soon as they arrived in the land whence they originally came, subject to compulsory military service and compelled to undergo training as required by the law of that country.

This matter, of course, engaged the attention of our statesmen for a number of years. It was the subject of much discussion at many imperial conferences, and finally in 1911 it was decided at the conference that the subject matter should be dealt with in a manner that would permit any person who was naturalized in any one of the king's dominions to obtain thereby naturalization throughout the British Empire; in other words, he became a British subject throughout the world. He was no longer a Canadian citizen. He obtained all the rights, all the privileges, all the claims, if he were naturalized in Canada, as though he were born within the sound of Bow Bells. There was no distinction between the two. That was a very, very great advance. It carried with it enormous obligations on the part of the British government; for while we were obtaining all the benefits, we were at the time providing no machinery for the protection of the citizen. Our flag did not carry protection upon the high seas. Nothing of that sort, so far as we were concerned, was being put forward. It therefore became essential that an agreement be arrived at whereby the mother statute—if I might use a term which, while not very elegant, adequately expresses the meaning—should be passed by the British parliament, and that the parliaments of the self-governing dominions would pass a statute practically similar in terms, so far as essentials were concerned, but varying in the regulations by which naturaliazation was made effective. The parliament of Great Britain therefore passed in 1914 the statute which I have under my hand.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

On motion of Mr. Young (Saskatoon), seconded by Mr. McLean (Melfort), the following bills were read the first and second times, on division:

Bill No. 260, for the relief of Annie Pearl Appel.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 261, for the relief of Dorothy Catalina Day Armstrong.—Mr. McPhee.

Bill No. 262, for the relief of Louise Morris Hays Grier.

Bill No. 263, for the relief of Thelma Katherine Halliday.—Mr. Thorson.

Bill No. 264, for the relief of Marion Jarvis Lewis.—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 265, for the relief of Annie Moore.—Mr. Casselman.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 1, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE BILLS—ORDER OF PRECEDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I notice that the government have decided to give a particular private bill precedence over the others to-night. This is contrary to the rules of the house. I desire to ask what they propose to do in regard to order No. 28 with reference to Bill No. 63, which deals with telephone and telegraph companies. This is one of the most important public bills on the order paper. There is also another important bill respecting lapsed policies under the Insurance Act. These are bills involving public policy and should have precedence. They have been on the order paper for some considerable time and have not been advanced. They affect the body politic of the whole Dominion and should be given some consideration.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I do not think any bill can have precedence over others unless by unanimous consent. All that was said yesterday with respect to the bill in which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) is interested was that owing to the special circumstances surrounding it the government would not oppose a request from him that the bill be proceeded with first to-night. That, however, is as far as we can go.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): About five or six weeks ago I placed on the order paper a question relating to the alienation of lands in the west and the authority therefor. I desire to know from the Minister of the Interior when I may expect an answer. I may say that the question was passed as an order for return.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I will inquire and give my hon. friend an answer to-morrow.

ASBESTOS CORPORATION

THREATENED LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I was going to ask whether the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie King) has been directed to threatened proceedings against the Asbestos Corporation of Canada and the United States, whether there was any correspondence, and what action it is proposed to take. I see the right hon. gentleman is not present. I merely mention the matter and will let it stand until he is in his place.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will call my right hon. friend's attention to the question.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from April 30 consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act—Mr. Rinfret—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Application to court and issue of certificate.

Mr. BENNETT: Last evening I was discussing this measure and I had briefly referred to the circumstances that led up to the passing of the legislation in 1914. Possibly I should have pointed out that in 1914 we enacted a statute which was drafted by the draftsman of the British parliament. During the progress of the discussion at that time the matter was considered in detail and certain observations were made as to the drafting of the measure, whereupon Mr. Borden, now Sir Robert Borden, directed the attention of the house to the fact to which I have just alluded, namely, that the measure had been drafted in Great Britain. The reason was obvious. This is a very serious obligation imposed upon the British Empire, and as the taxpayer in Great Britain is so much concerned, inasmuch as he largely makes possible the maintenance of the fleet that insures the safety of our citizens on the high seas, the drafting of the bill became a matter of paramount importance. When the measure was introduced in the legislature of each of the various self-governing communities composing the empire it was the same in terms, except for such variations only as might be essential in view of the conditions under which these respective communities live.

The Naturalization Act divides itself into two branches: first there is the question of principle under which naturalization may be granted; and secondly the act relates to procedure. Those who are interested in the matter will find in our revised statutes the act set out as it now exists. In 1919 we made some amendments to the statute. It is unnecessary to do more than point out that we have set up conditions under which naturalization may be granted. These conditions I will refer to for the reason that it becomes important to consider them in the light of what was done by the other communities of the empire, and in view also of the observations made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), which I regret to say he must have made inadvertently, because a mere casual observation of the legislation of other portions of the empire will show that the hon. gentleman is wholly wrong.

The statute in question is now chapter 138 of the Act respecting British Nationality, Naturalization and Aliens. The section relating to the question of principle is section 4:

> The minister may grant a certificate of naturalization to an alien who makes an application for the purpose, and satisfies the minister—
> (a) That he has either resided in His Majesty's dominions for a period of not less than five years in the manner required by this section, or been in the service of the crown for not less than five years, within the last eight years before the application; and
> (b) that he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or French languages; and
> (c) that he intends if his application is granted either to reside in His Majesty's dominions or to enter or continue in the service of the crown.

Then follows the provision respecting residence required. It is residence in Canada for not less than one year immediately preceding the application, and previous residence, either in Canada or in some other part of His Majesty's dominions, for a period of four years within the last eight years before the application.

> The grant of a certificate of naturalization to any such alien shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister, and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.
> (4) A certificate of naturalization shall not take effect until the applicant has taken the oath of allegiance.
> (5) In the case of a woman who was a British subject previously to her marriage to an alien and whose husband has died, or whose marriage has been dissolved, the requirements of this section as to residence shall not apply, and the minister may, in any other special case, if he thinks fit, grant a certificate of naturalization, although the four years' residence or five years' service has not been within the last eight years before the application.
> (6) For the purposes of this section a period spent in the service of the crown may, if the minister thinks fit, be treated as equivalent to a period of residence in Canada.

This embodies the amendments of 1914, enacted after the outbreak of the war, and also those of 1920, which I think many hon members will recall. It is the principle upon which naturalization is granted to an alien in this country, conferring upon him the status of a British subject throughout the world, with all the immunities, the rights and the powers that belong to such a subject. Now comes the next question—the conditions under which this privilege may be granted. There is a provision dealing with procedure and evidence, commencing at section 22 and including the following sections down to section 28. The section, I have read having settled the principle, we now apply procedure and evidence and these matters are dealt with as follows:

> 22. An alien desiring to be naturalized shall apply for a decision establishing that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act to any judge of any superior court or to any judge of any circuit, district or county court, and in the province of Ontario the court of general sessions of the peace, and in the Northwest Territories to such authorities or persons as the governor in council may prescribe.
> 23. The application shall be delivered at the office of the clerk or other proper officer of the court during office hours, and such application shall be posted by such clerk or other proper officer in a conspicuous place in his office, continuously for a period of at least three months before the application is heard by the court.

That is the second provision, with respect to procedure. To continue:

> 24. At any time after the filing of such application and previous to the hearing of the application, any person objecting to the naturalization of the alien may file in court an opposition in which shall be stated the grounds of his objection.
> 25. The applicant shall produce to the court such evidence, that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act, as the court may require, and shall also personally appear before the court for examination unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that he is prevented from so appearing by some good and sufficient cause.
> 26. If the court decides that the alien is a fit and proper person to be naturalized and possesses the required qualifications, a certified copy of such decision shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the minister together with the application and such other papers, documents and reports as may be required by any regulation made hereunder.
> 27. The minister may thereupon in his absolute discretion issue a certificate of naturalization and shall send the same to the clerk of the court to whom the application for naturalization was made.
> (2) Upon the applicant taking and subscribing the oath of allegiance, which may be so taken and subscribed by any person duly authorized to administer judicial oaths by the laws of the province in which the applicant resides, the clerk shall deliver the certificate to the applicant.

Those are the conditions as to procedure under which the principles to which I have referred are made applicable. It was suggested that this appearing in court was a difficult matter. I dealt with that in 1914, and if any hon. gentlemen are curious and desire to see what is the law in the United States, if they are not bored by reading my observations at that time they will find that applicants must appear in open court, supported by two witnesses in open court, who must give evidence as to their character and their fitness to become American citizens, and the applicant must publicly renounce his allegiance to his former sovereign and former country. Further than that, in open court he must take an oath that he does believe in organized government and that he is not a member of any organization or society which has in mind the destruction of governments. Those are parts of the conditions which are imposed in the United States.

We have imposed less onerous conditions in Canada, under the sections which I have just read and which it is now proposed to repeal. There is not another word substituted; there is not another suggestion made to take the place of these sections. We are just leaving it in the hands of the Secretary of State with the power to make regulations, and I say to him if he had taken the trouble to read the laws of the other parts of the British Empire he would not have said what he did last evening. Canada is not the only country which has made these provisions with respect to procedure, and first we will consider the nearby country of Newfoundland. They passed the same statute; they had to deal with the same matter, and what action did they take? In 1915, having enacted the substantial provisions with respect to principle to which I have just alluded, we find them further providing for these cases. The first sections only deal with the manner in which they may be dealt with, and I will not read them again. Section 19 of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1915 of Newfoundland reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations generally for carrying into effect the objects of this act, and in particular with respect to the following matters:
> (a) The form and registration of certificates of naturalization granted by the Colonial Secretary;
> (b) The form and registration of declarations of alienage and declarations of resumption or retention of British nationality;
> (c) The time within which the oath of allegiance is to be taken. . . .

And so on. Then there is a provision with respect to proof of certificates and with respect to the evidence of declarations. In other words, the colony of Newfoundland dealt with the matter of procedure through the regulations which might be made by the colonial secretary or the governor in council.

Mr. RINFRET: Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt? That will be exactly the situation in Canada if this bill passes.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, in part; I am coming to that. Now let us consider New Zealand. That country passed a statute in 1923, after the war, to amend and consolidate the former legislation, and that statute embodies certain provisions now found in our revised statutes. They have the same provisions with respect to the principle which we now have in Canada, and then comes section 4 of their act:

> When any alien friend—

That is different from our statute.

> —residing in New Zealand desires to be naturalized as a British subject in New Zealand, he may present to the minister an application in writing signed by him, setting forth—
> (a) His name, age, birthplace, residence, occupation, and nationality:
> (b) The length of his residence in New Zealand and his desire to settle therein either permanently or for a limited period, stating such limited period (if any):
> (c) A request that a certificate of naturalization may be granted to him.
> (2) Every such application shall be verified by a statutory declaration subscribed by the applicant.

Then section 5 continues:

> (1) If the minister is satisfied—
> (a) That the applicant has either resided within New Zealand for a period not less than the prescribed time or has been in the service of the crown in any part of His Majesty's dominions for not less than five years within the last eight years; and
> (b) That the applicant is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of the English language; and
> (c) That the applicant intends, if his application is granted, to continue to reside in His Majesty's dominions, or to enter, or continue in, the service of the crown; and
> (d) That in all other respects the applicant is a person fit to hold and exercise the rights of a British subject in New Zealand—the minister may grant a certificate of naturalization to the applicant.
> (2) The grant of a certificate of naturalization to any such alien shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister, and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will allow me, all these dispositions will remain in the law when we have repealed the sections referring the cases to the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to just what my hon. friend is leaving out; I am pointing out that we are leaving to regulation what is now a matter of statute in part in the other British communities. Further, we are doing what is not being done in any other part of this empire. It is true that there is a broad power in our section 28 which I mentioned with respect to regulations; that section was drafted in Great Britain and sent to Canada and all the other self-governing communities throughout the world where our empire extends. That is the position, and with the reason for the absolute discretion resting with the minister I shall presently deal, but it is not a political discretion. To that I shall also refer.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not so intended.

Mr. BENNETT: It should not be, but it will be; we have had some experience in these things.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not think any Secretary of State from either side of the house would so act.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not mention the Secretary of State. While I am on the subject of New Zealand and Australia, I would mention that a representative of New Zealand was here the other day, and he explained to us that the population of New Zealand is between 95 per cent and 100 per cent British, and that in Australia the population is over 90 per cent of British origin. That is the reason why I dealt with those two countries first, because they are exactly similar to Great Britain; they have a solid British population with only one language to consider, and the conditions under which naturalization certificates are to be granted are vastly different from those which obtain in this country, to which we have invited hundreds of thousands of people of practically every race in the world.

Now let me go to the Union of South Africa. I was very curious about that country, because there they have two languages also. I have in my hand a copy of the statutes of South Africa, which are printed in English on one page and in Dutch on the other page.. I now read from the act of 1910, the first act with respect to aliens, because as you will remember they passed their act before we passed ours. This act was to consolidate and amend the laws with respect to naturalization, and I would like the Secretary of State to listen to section 4 of that act:

> Every applicant for naturalization shall:—
> (a) publish in the Gazette a notice, in the prescribed form, of his intention to apply for a certificate of naturalization in the union; and
> (b) produce, in support of his application, proof that he has so published such a notice, together with a certificate signed by a magistrate, justice of the peace, or field cornet, stating that the applicant is personally known to the person so signing and that to the best of that person's knowledge and belief the applicant is of good character and repute and possesses the qualifications for naturalization prescribed by this act;
> (c) furnish such further evidence as the minister may require of his service under the crown or (as the case may be) of the period of residence prescribed in the last preceding section as a qualification for naturalization, and of his intention to reside in the union; and
> (d) furnish such evidence as the minister may require as to the name, sex, age, and place of birth of each of his minor children (if any) who, at the time of his application, are—
> (i) resident with him in the union;
> (ii) not resident in the union.
> 5. The minister, upon receipt of the particulars prescribed in the last preceding section, shall take the applicant's case into consideration and may, with or without assigning any reason, grant or refuse his application as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.

I read that because it is one of the standard sections that appeared in all the naturalization acts as drafted by the parliamentary draftsman. Then follow the usual sections with respect to the certifying of the necessary documents.

Mr. DUNNING: What is the langugae qualification there?

Mr. BENNETT: It is any langugage which is the official language in the state, I think.

Mr. RINFRET: I am sure my hon. friend will admit that this is subject to regulations. The principle of the bill now is that the Secretary of State shall have the discretion of granting or refusing a certificate; and I am sure that obtains in every dominion in the British Empire.

Mr. BENNETT: I have mentioned that, and I say that is the understanding under which this arrangement was arrived at; but I am now stating what are the provisions of the statute in South Africa with respect to the matter, and how proceedings are regulated. There are two questions, one of principle, with which I submit we may not deal without breaking our bargain with Great Britain; and the other the question of procedure, and I am pointing out the requirement of procedure in South Africa which I have just read to the house.

My hon. friend the Minister of Railways has asked me with respect to the language question.

Mr. DUNNING: I am asking you that because it raises another very interesting question with regard to naturalization. My impression is that in South Africa the Dutch language as well as the English language would qualify.

Mr. BENNETT: The statutes themselves are printed, one page in Dutch and the other in English; I have made that clear.

Mr. DUNNING: I am pointing out that a worldwide British naturalization would be granted to a man who could speak only Dutch, in South Africa, but he could not be naturalized in Canada, while in Canada a gentleman who could speak only French may be naturalized but could not be naturalized in South Africa.

Mr. BENNETT: Any more senseless remark I have never heard.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend would only have patience, instead of getting out of temper and describing an hon. gentleman in the terms that he has used, he would have seen in a moment the point which I was trying to make. What we are dealing with after all is British Empire naturalization, and the man who cannot speak—

Mr. BENNETT: Will the hon. gentleman possess his soul in patience?

Mr. DUNNING: Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order on the use of the word "senseless."

Mr. BENNETT: There is no question of order, Mr. Chairman. This hon. gentleman has a habit of butting into discussions.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. leader of the opposition has the floor, but the hon. Minister of Railways raises a point—

Mr. DUNNING: I am awaiting your ruling, Mr. Chairman, as to the use of the word "senseless." Is it in order?

The CHAIRMAN: If the word is applied to the hon. gentleman—

Mr. BENNETT: I said his observations.

Mr. DUNNING: All right, my time will come.

Mr. McPHEE: Mr. Chairman, I have followed the hon. gentleman very carefully and may I ask a question: In Australia, New Zealand, Newfoundland and South Africa are applications for naturalization referred to the courts?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: There is not much sense of humour in that.

Mr. BENNETT: Apparently, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of gentlemen who do not desire to follow this question. This is beyond all odds the most important domestic question with which this parliament will deal. I invite gentlemen who are interested in it and will take the history of western Canada as an example, to look at the observations which I made in 1914, which were unchallenged and which were regarded at that time by both parties as being sound on a question which engaged the attention of Canadian clubs and other organizations; when all that had to be done was to sign a document before a commissioner or a justice of the peace and post it up; and I saw one member of a legislature who was elected by sixteen men, none of whom was able to understand practically a single word in the English or the French language, who could only speak Italian and had to do it through an interpreter. I am only mentioning that to show the seriousness of the matter with which we are dealing.

Now I will deal further with the South African statute. The South African statute to which I refer was that of 1910, which was amended after the war, in 1926; and the South African statute has at least some analogy to the conditions we have here, because they have at least two official languages there, and we have two here. The first section provides that the named persons shall be deemed natural born British subjects. Then follow the provisions for the naturalization of aliens, and subsection (b) of section 2 reads as follows:

> That he is of good character and able to read and write—

I hope the hon. gentleman will follow this:

> —either of the official languages of the union, to the satisfaction of the minister.

That is the position and it is contained in the last of the South African acts, namely, that of 1926.

The next question which arises in regard to South Africa is: How does the minister satisfy himself upon that point? I find that section 19 of the act deals with the matter in the following terms:

> Every applicant for naturalization shall—
> (a) not less than one month before he makes application for naturalization to the minister, publish in the Gazette in both the official languages and in one English and one Dutch newspaper circulating in the district in which he resides, a notice, in the prescribed form, of his intention to apply under this act for a certificate of naturalization; and
> (b) produce, in support of his application, proof that he has so published such notices together with a certificate signed by a magistrate, or justice of the peace, stating that the person so signing has satisfied himself by inquiries instituted by him that the applicant is of good character and repute and possesses the qualifications for naturalization prescribed by this act;

(c) furnish such further evidence as the minister may require of his service under the crown or (as the case may be) the period of his residence prescribed in section two as a qualification for naturalization and of his intention to reside in the union; and

(d) furnish such evidence as the minister may require as to the name, sex, age, and place of birth of each of his minor children (if any) who, at the time of his application, are—

(i) resident with him in the union;

(ii) not resident in the union.

(2) Any person may on payment of the prescribed fee inspect any document produced under subsection 1 of this section.

Then follows section 20, which states:

Any person may make representations to the minister with regard to any person who has applied or has advertised his intention to apply for naturalization.

(2) The representations shall be in the form of an affidavit.

(3) The contents of any affidavit filed with the minister in pursuance of this section shall not be disclosed to any person other than for the purpose of legal proceedings for any false statement made in the affidavit.

Then follow sections 21 and 22, dealing with the evidence of declarations and certificates of naturalization. Then there follows this further provision in section 27:

(1) The minister shall—

(a) enrol as of record the issue of all certificates of naturalization granted under this act;

(b) cancel all certificates of naturalization which have been revoked and publish in the Gazette a list of such revocations with such details as may be prescribed;

(c) cause to be made indices of all the certificates of naturalization (whether granted under this act or any prior law) and permit any person at all reasonable times to inspect the indices and to make copies of such certificates, on payment of the prescribed fee;

(d) In the months of January and July in every year, publish in the Gazette a return of all persons to whom certificates of naturalization have been granted during the preceding half-year, and in that return show, in respect of each person—

(i) his name in full;

(ii) his birthplace;

(iii) his nationality prior to the grant of the certificate of naturalization;

(iv) his occupation;

(v) the date of the issue of the certificate of naturalization.

I point these out because they are the provisions in the statute of South Africa where they have two official languages, the Dutch and the English, and where the minister may not grant an applicant a certificate of naturalization unless and until the formalities which I have cited have been observed. They are not regulations that may be changed by order in council but regulations that are part of the statutory law of the country and that are not left to either the whim or the caprice of ministers or governments. That is the position with respect to South Africa.

In the commonwealth of Australia there are with respect to naturalization provisions much the same in terms as those which exist in New Zealand except that, the law having been consolidated in 1920, they are somewhat more ample than they are in this country, or, in fact, than in some others. Division 3 relates to procedure and evidence and this is the way in which they deal with the matter in Australia under section 25 of the act and not by regulations. Section 25 reads:

(1) An applicant for a certificate of naturalization shall produce in support of his application his own statutory declaration stating his name, age, birthplace, occupation and residence, the length of his residence in the British Empire or the period within the eight years preceding the date of his application during which he has been in the service of the crown, and such other particulars as are prescribed and that he intends to settle in the British Empire or to enter or continue in the service of the crown.

(2) In addition to compliance with the preceding provisions of this section an applicant shall—

(a) advertise in the manner prescribed his intention to seek naturalization and produce to the minister newspapers containing copies of the prescribed advertisement; and

(b) produce certificates of character from three natural-born British subjects, two of whom are householders and one of whom is a justice of the peace, a postmaster, a teacher of a state school or an officer of the police force of the commonwealth or a state.

(3) Any person may on payment of the prescribed fee, inspect any certificate produced in pursuance of the last preceding subsection.

Then there are the same provisions as in South Africa with respect to the right of any person to make declarations in opposition to the application for naturalization. The statute was amended later by striking out the words "justice of the peace", but I do not concede that to be of importance to the discussion that we are now having. In 1922 there were certain other amendments that do not touch this point.

What have we? We have first of all an agreement by Great Britain as to naturalization and we were to pass a standard bill throughout the British Empire with respect to principle, the procedure being left largely, if not entirely, to the local authorities except that the several bills seem to have been drafted by the parliamentary draftsman in Great Britain. I have read to the committee the provisions in South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Newfoundland. When we in Canada came to consider this matter we did not do so in a hurry nor without careful consideration of what was involved. When Mr. Doherty, the then Minister of Justice, moved the first reading of his bill in the House of Commons on the 22nd May, 1914, he explained the circumstances with great fullness to the house. The then leader of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, made some observations, and during the course of the debate I thought it desirable to mention what had been going on in western Canada with respect to naturalization and the pressure that was being brought to bear upon public men to ensure a better law and a more wholesome observance of the law as it then stood. For instance, I then placed upon Hansard the circumstances under which naturalization was granted in the United States and the words of the statute are worth while considering. They are these:

> That every final hearing upon such petitions shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose, and upon such final hearing of such petition the applicant and witnesses shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court.

Not only the applicant but the witnesses have to be examined under oath. In the United States the provision with respect to language deals only with the English language, they having but one official language. The provision is this:

> That no alien shall hereafter be naturalized or admitted as a citizen of the United States who cannot speak the English language: Provided, that this requirement shall not apply to aliens—

—under certain circumstances that have no bearing on this discussion. The bill passed its second reading, was considered in committee and then came up for third reading in the house. When it came up for third reading on June 4 —and I direct the attention of the Secretary of State to the words of the great leader of the Liberal party in connection with this matter—Sir Wilfrid Laurier moved the following amendment:

> That this bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house with instructions that they have power to amend it by striking out subsections 3 and 5 of section 2.

He argued that they should be struck out because they gave too wide powers to the Secretary of State and these are his words which I commend to the minister at this time:

> We have given the courts of law the power to determine that question, and we have provided that the applicant must come before the court and give evidence of his character; that the judge may, if not satisfied with the proof placed before him, ask for further evidence, and that there may be a trial before the judge as to whether or not the applicant is a fit and proper person to be a British subject.

Further he said:

> The judge determines the question, and then the matter is not finally disposed of, but is referred to the Secretary of State, who, purely arbitrarily, without giving any reasons, but simply of his own will, may or may not grant a certificate. Such a disposition is absolutely repugnant to the spirit of our institutions.

Those are the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. RINFRET: Did that speech convince my hon. friend at the time and did he vote for Sir Wilfrid Laurier's amendment?

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly did not for reasons I can explain to the minister so easily that there will be no difficulty in his understanding this, that the bill in that regard was a standard bill and at the conference that took place in England Mr. Churchill and Sir John Simon stated the position in these words. Mr. Churchill said:

> The grant of nationality is in every case discretionary and this discretion should be exercised by those responsible in the area in which the applicant has spent the last twelve months.

This is what Sir John Simon said:

> It is essential to the scheme which the Home Secretary has referred to, that the grant of an imperial certificate should be a matter of discretion, and that that discretion should be exercised, not in all cases by the home government, of course, but by the authority which has the local opportunity of judging of the man's personal qualities and credentials during the last year of his five years. That seems to me to be essential to the scheme.

Therefore the scheme went by the board unless it were adopted as a whole, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier was so taken with the explanation that was given that the amendment of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was negatived on division without any vote being recorded. The point to which I direct attention is that the Liberal party of that day set its face steadily against bureaucracy and centralization, against the usurpation of power by a minister in regard to matters that concern the whole body politic of this country, and where the exercise of that power improperly would involve very serious consequences to the country. I could have read further, but I have read just that to show what the leader of the opposition at that time said.

But let us go further. Let us look into this matter from the other angle. I have stated the principle and I have stated the procedure of the various countries, but let us ask what we are now doing, because that is the important thing. What we are now doing is at variance with what has been done in communities similarly situated to ours. But we go further than that. This entrusts to the minister, by any machinery that he at his whim may set up, the determination of the fitness of a man to become a British subject. That is what is does in terms. Why abolish the judicial proceedings? Why abolish the judges? It is said that it means great cost and expense, but what is that compared with the cost and expense in the United States, or in South Africa? What is the cost compared with the priceless boon that is being conferred upon these people by giving them British ctizenship? We have courts in this country, and I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to know that in all the western country, about which they are so solicitous, the county court judges hold their courts in practically every small community of western Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh no.

Mr. BENNETT: The local government can easily provide that. They do in Alberta. It is only the local government that has authority in that matter, and it has been a Liberal local government in Saskatchewan ever since 1905. If they have not these facilities there it is the fault of the local government, not of this parliament. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) shakes his head. He knows perfectly well that the only authority that may determine the place of the sittings of the court is the provincial government, and if they have not these facilities in his part of the country, it is because they have not been given to the people by the local government. But in Alberta, in every small community, the district courts meet from time to time for the purpose of enabling litigants to dispose of small suits up to $600, and will any man in this house say that you can travel a considerable distance to deal with a $100 suit, and not regard it important enough to travel that distance to become a British subject? That is the question.

Let me go further. Think what it means to Great Britain. We are not paying the piper. We are not maintaining a fleet on the high seas that polices the world. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) is not interested in that. They are paying it over yonder, and we owe to them a duty to see to it that we protect this naturalization of ours in every way and manner in which it is possible to do so, in order that the responsibility upon Great Britain may not be greater than it is.

[Mr. Bennett.]

I will tell hon. gentlemen of something I have seen with my own eyes and heard with my own ears. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Glen) and my hon. friend from Yorkton are both members of the same profession to which I belong, and I ask them if during the last ten years they have not been in courts of law in this country in which cases were being carried on in which neither party could give his story in either the English or the French language.

Some hon. MEMBERS: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. BENNETT: I thought they would say that. Do they realize that this statute says that a certificate of naturalization shall not be granted to any alien unless he possesses an adequate knowledge of either the English or French language? What has that got to do with it? Simply this, that wherever you see in this country British subjects who have no adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language, you know perfectly well that naturalization has been granted in some wrong and improper manner.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would they necessarily have to be British subjects if they appeared in a suit in a court of law?

Mr. BENNETT: I am unable to understand the question.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I will explain it. The leader of the opposition appealed to two hon. gentlemen on this side belonging to the bar and cited cases in court where the principals could not state their case in either English or French at least leaving us to assume that they must be Canadian citizens, and that somebody had been derelict in his duty in granting naturalization to these people without their possessing an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language.

Mr. BENNETT: We will add to it that they were British subjects.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is different.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the point I am making, and if there is any misunderstanding about that, I will remove it at once.

Mr. THORSON: For information, may I ask if the term "Canadian citizen" is used anywhere in the Naturalization Act?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre has more time to go over the act than I have, and can find that out for himself.

Let us go a step further. What are you doing in this statute? Perhaps to the hon.

gentleman it means nothing, it is perhaps a huge joke that you naturalize by the hundred people who have no adequate knowledge of either the English or French language. I have been in communities where people had citizenship papers and could not speak either the English or the French language.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will allow me, is not that evident proof that in such cases the courts did not act properly? That is just what we claim.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: If hon. gentlemen will just wait a moment, they will not cheer. They were cases under the old act which made no provision for a knowledge of either the English or French language.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why cite those cases at all, then?

Mr. BENNETT: To show what this act means to this country. Great Britain and ourselves made the agreement we did to bring about a uniform law, and in those countries where there was only one official language, the language was to be English, and in those countries where there were two official languages, it could be either English or another official language; but prior to 1914 there were no provisions with respect to any tongue whatsoever, and my hon. friends know that it was a crying scandal in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and partly in Manitoba, where thousands of men were naturalized by being huddled together in a group, and someone going in to them with a paper and asking them to sign their names—

Mr. THORSON: That was under the Roblin government.

Mr. BENNETT: That shows the type of mind of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. He says it was under the Roblin government. What did they have to do with naturalization? Surely he knows better than that.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Their friends, the government of the day in Ottawa, had something to do with it.

Mr. BENNETT: From 1911 to 1914 the old statute prevailed, but in 1914 the new act was enacted. Fourteen years have elapsed since then, and wherever you find a naturalization certificate in the possession of a man under the age of thirty-five in this country—they had to be twenty-one years old to be naturalized, and fourteen years have elapsed since—someone has failed in his duty if that man does not possess an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language. What have we seen prior to that time? Prior to 1914 we have seen men huddled together in a group, names signed, a person, usually some heeler, appointed a notary public, a commissioner of oaths or justice of the peace for the purpose, and going in and signing a certificate that these men were of good character, although he had never seen them before, they having been just rushed up to sign the necessary documents, and then certificates were granted—they called them citizenship papers. I have seen these papers with my own eyes in the possession of men in court who were unable to speak either the English or the French language, and who could only communicate through an interpreter. It was to stop that sort of thing that this statute was passed, to compel them to have an adequate knowledge of either the English or the French language before they could receive a certificate of naturalization, a certificate, mark you, that gave them British citizenship not merely in Canada, not merely within the three-mile limit, but within every part of the world.

What did we witness during the war? I wonder if hon. gentlemen recall in their own communities what I have seen in mine? I received a letter from a soldier at the front who had seen as a prisoner of war, one who had been a German barber in the city of Calgary a few months before. This man was a naturalized Canadian. Does that mean anything? That is the very sort of thing we want to prevent. He was a German citizen. The moment he got outside the three-mile limit he was no longer a British subject.

Mr. JACOBS: It shows that the hon. member for West Calgary must have had a very close shave.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be as amusing as that to the hon. gentleman; it is not to me. I believe it strikes at the very foundation of the life of this country. I ventured to say so in 1914, and I have a stronger view now than I had then, for I have watched the administration of this law. Let me go one step further. There was a well-known citizen of one of our communities who was naturalized, and yet he was captured within the German lines. On the bodies of some of those who unfortunately met their death in the war there was found evidence of their having been in Canada not very long before.

In 1914 we endeavoured to meet a new situation by this legislation, and we provided the machinery which Sir Wilfrid Laurier said had been in use in this country from the very inception of our form of naturalization. He put it in this way:

When we adopted the law of naturalization, we did not copy the British precedent. We did not provide that the Secretary of State should arbitrarily have the power which is given to the Home Office in Great Britain; but we provided that the decision of the judge should be final and should not be revised by anyone. I have not heard that any complication has arisen; or that it has ever been felt that there was in Canada any necessity, as there appears to be in Great Britain, for the Secretary of State to be given such power as this.

But he added:

If there is reason for such legislation, it must be that the government of Great Britain have found it necessary, in order to avoid diplomatic complications, to reserve that power.

And after the explanation of Mr. Doherty, the third reading of the bill was given on division, Sir Wilfrid being satisfied by the statement made with respect to the diplomatic obligations that were involved in connection with this imperial citizenship.

Now I ask the minister this question. We have passed principle, we have passed procedure as it is in other countries. What does he propose? He proposes to do one of two things. His amendment provides that the minister must be satisfied. Therefore the minister himself must go and find out personally, or he must delegate the power to someone else; there is no alternative. He is not going to wander over this country and examine each applicant for naturalization to see if he has an adequate knowledge of English or French; he cannot do it personally; therefore he is going to delegate that power to someone. Who is this to be? That is the problem. In times past that power has been delegated to our judges, and to them only, for this reason: there is the machinery—the clerks, the place where notices can be given, the boards on which they can be displayed. In South Africa and other countries these notices are published in the official gazette; here they are posted on a board in the clerk's office. Again I ask, to whom is he going to delegate that power. Yesterday he said: to homestead inspectors or the mounted police. They are already used by the minister for certain work. But to whom is he going to delegate the power to determine whether these applicants for naturalization have an adequate knowledge of English or French? He read from a letter written by Chief Justice Meredith, who points out that the Secretary of State has given no lead as to how these matters should be determined, and each judge must determine them for himself. That is so. There is no uniformity decision in matters of judicial discretion. It has been laid down by all the great law lords that while judicial discretion is hedged around by certain rules, and there is no such thing as a casual or whimsical expression of discretion, yet the judicial discretion of one judge may not be the judicial discretion of another. In this case, for instance, one judge might regard a sufficient knowledge of English or French as being indicated by a casual conversation, while another might say: I want you to answer certain questions.

Do hon. gentlemen realize the implications of this measure? We have provided that the Secretary of State shall be satisfied, and up to this moment we have said that the power is judicial and not political. But a homestead inspector is a political appointee. There was a day in the province of Alberta when homestead inspectors went out to alien settlements holding in the one hand a recommendation for a patent for 160 acres of land and in the other an application for naturalization. That day is not so long past, and I speak of what I know; it ended in 1911. Then the war came on and now homestead inspectors are appointed under the Civil Service Commission; but everyone knows that the condition to which I have referred did prevail prior to 1911. There were communities of new immigrants in those days, they had been here some three years, and that is the condtion that prevailed. The two things went side by side.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Did that condition cease in 1911?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say very much about that except in my own community.

Mr. DUNNING: It operated in 1926.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Railways says it operated in 1926.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend put on special homestead inspectors in 1926 and paid them for two months.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad that has been mentioned. I was Acting Minister of the Interior at the time, and found that a number of special homestead inspectors had been appointed by the minister. I continued them.

Mr. DUNNING: By what minister?

Mr. BENNETT: By the Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior. What is more, I can give the names if the hon. gentleman will allow me sufficient time. The superintendent, was a man named Cuttle, I think.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. BENNETT: One of them went down to Moose Jaw, I suppose that is what the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) wishes to ask about.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No, I am going to ask about six, not one.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be there were six. If my memory serves me right, three had been appointed by the minister, and they were continued because they said there were arrears of work that had to be overtaken in connection with homestead patents. But they could not carry naturalization certificates in one pocket and recommendations for patents in the other. That is the point. When the Minister of Railways says the same thing happened in 1926 he is stating what is incorrect, and he must know it to be incorrect.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I challenge him to name any case where a homestead inspector went into any community with certificates of naturalization in one hand and recommendations for patents in the other.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend a moment before was speaking about a homestead inspector having it in his power to make a recommendation as to whether or not an individual should get 160 acres of land. I say that men were put on specially in 1926, when my hon. friends were in power, in order to exercise that power to the full for political purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: Once more the Minister of Railways does the same old trick. He heard my statement perfectly well, that prior to 1911 homestead inspectors went into settlements of aliens with applications for naturalization in one hand and in the other recommendations for patents for homesteads, and he said the same thing prevailed in 1926. I say no; they had no power after 1914 to do that.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I asked if that condition continued after 1911 till 1914, and the hon. leader of the opposition was dealing with my question in relation to his own district. It was then that the Minister of Railways got into the discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend spoke of the condition in Moose Jaw. The three men who were temporarily appointed in Moose Jaw were dismissed, and six new men were put on in their place. One of them never made a report on any homestead entry throughout the whole time he was supposed to be engaged on such work; instead, he used the money to travel around constituencies in southern Saskatchewan for political purposes.

Mr. BENNETT: All right. Now having heard the question of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, it reminds me of the mounted police brought from Toronto to Regina in 1925 to vote for the government.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What about the mounted police sent from Regina to the Klondike?

Mr. BENNETT: An officer was sent from Regina to the Klondike upon the recommendation of Commissioner Starnes. It is there in black and white and I saw it with my own eyes.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Were there any others?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say; I do not know. Let us get down to the Naturalization Act again. I confess to having a great interest in this matter. Prior to 1911 I travelled considerably throughout western Canada to ascertain what had been done under our Naturalization Act. I did not confine myself to the province of Alberta; I went to Saskatchewan. I went into districts that had been settled by men who came from lands outside the British Empire and I found that these men had been naturalized. I found also that they had no knowledge of either English or French. I was quite anxious about the act of 1914, and I am free to say that I discussed the matter not only with my own party leaders but with other gentlemen who were vastly more interested in the welfare of Canada and of the British Empire than they were in the political fortunes of their own party. And there are, strange as it may sound, such gentlemen on the Liberal side in this country. They were vastly more interested, I say, in this matter than they were in their own political welfare, and so when the question came before the House of Commons embodying this legislation that had been decided upon, Sir Wilfrid Laurier congratulated the then Minister of Justice. Mark you, Sir Wilfrid Laurier who was dealing with the matter, after the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty had made his speech, following that gentleman immediately, pointed out that the matter had been engaging the attention of successive governments and that he was very glad that they had been able to get the legislation through. Mr. Martin—later Chief Justice Martin—also spoke after Mr. Macdonald of Pictou had addressed the house. Let me quote the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

> I am sorry that I was called away during the very interesting address of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, and that, therefore, I missed part of what he said. The chief object of this bill is to deal with the effect of the certificate of naturalization which is given in any one of the dominions of the empire. At present we have the power to grant naturalization letters to an alien, but the effect of them is limited to our own country. This has always been considered to be a very serious objection to the law. A very obvious illustration, one which has been quoted more than once in this house—

Here he discussed the case of a man who gets married, and proceeds:

> That is very important legislation, which has been in contemplation for many years, and I am very glad that my hon. friend has at last achieved the making of these provisions.

These were the views of the great Liberal leader of that time in connection with this legislation. Again, I was going to ask the one question which I think must appeal to the Secretary of State: How is he to be informed in order to exercise his discretion? It is admitted that he can do it only in one of two ways, either directly by going himself, or indirectly by sending someone else. And whom have we sent heretofore? The judges of the country.

Mr. McPHEE: How is the Secretary of State in South Africa or New Zealand or Australia informed?

Mr. BENNETT: I am suggesting that there is another way of doing it, namely, by the production of evidence from two witnesses, naming and describing them in terms. But we thought it easier and simpler, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier recognized, that the judges should determine whether or not the conditions imposed by the statute had been observed. What are these qualifications? They are these three—let hon. members bear them in mind: residence, character, language. Residence of five years, good character, and, lastly, an adequate knowledge of either English or French.

Mr. McPHEE: These remain in the act.

Mr. BENNETT: But how does the Secretary of State satisfy himself in the matter? Can any homestead inspector or any member of the mounted police satisfy himself, as well as a judge can, of the question of residence?

Mr. McPHEE: An affidavit does it.

Mr. BENNETT: No; the man must appear in person before the judge.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. JACOBS: Sometimes they say that truth can be found even in an affidavit.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not practised among the class of persons to whom that remark applies. The man, I say, appears in person; that is the essential thing. In South Africa, my hon. friend from Yorkton says, he does not apear in person; in the gazette notice is given to the world, and two persons by affidavit give their evidence, and in addition to that there is another certificate required. Thereafter the minister may act. At the present time in Canada what happens? The judge makes his report. If hon. gentlemen have ever attended a court in this country and witnessed naturalization proceedings they will appreciate the importance of the question. Hon. gentlemen of the legal profession have no doubt done so.

Mr. JACOBS: It is a most perfunctory thing. The evidence is supplied by the mounted police, and it can be supplied under the new legislation. The party can go before a mounted police officer and make affidavit, and the officer can find out whether he can speak English or French. The whole thing is sent to the Secretary of State, avoiding the cost of appearance before the court.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend says that the applicant goes before the mounted police. Is it any more difficult to go before a judge?

Mr. JACOBS: The mounted police officer visits him at his house.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is a peripatetic court that visits the applicant?

Mr. JACOBS: Precisely. That is what is done, in Montreal at any rate.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot think that in Montreal the Secretary of State is issuing certificates in regard to which there is no judicial recommendation.

Mr. JACOBS: Not at all. But I say that the information which the judge obtains is obtained largely from the mounted police.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, as to character.

Mr. JACOBS: The man appears before the judge, who looks at him. How can the judge tell what kind of character he has by merely looking at him?

Mr. BENNETT: If this is to be an experience meeting I will give my experience. Within the last eighteen months I have witnessed the proceedings with respect to an application. The man appeared in court, having given his notice. It took place in the supreme court. The judge tested his ability to speak in either English or French, putting various questions to him. He admitted that he knew no French, stating where he had come from. The judge then tested his knowledge of English. He went further. He inquired as to the man's attitude towards government: he asked him whether he knew anything of the Bolshevik movement, the man having come from Russia. Certain other questions were also asked as to what the man read, his literature, the documents he had been receiving, what people had visited him, and so forth. The judge took a great deal of pains in the matter. He then had evidence given, by affidavits, it is true, although the parties were there to be called, if necessary, as to character. Then the question of residence was considered, evidence being given not only by the man himself but, as well, by others. The judge made his report. It was quite apparent that the applicant in one case—there were several of them—had no knowledge of English or French and the judge declined to make the recommendation. That is my recollection of what occurred.

Mr. JACOBS: How could the judge converse with him?

Mr. BENNETT: The court interpreter was there.

Mr. JACOBS: That gave the thing away at once.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, this idea of railroading British citizens through—using the term railroading in the sense in which it was employed by an hon. gentleman in this house yesterday—is something to be deprecated. Hon. gentlemen may regard this matter lightly as something to be treated casually. For my part it is the most serious question we have considered this session or shall have considered for years to come. That at any rate is my personal view. The hon. member (Mr. Jacobs) may be fortunate in coming from a city, but I put this to him: If British citizenship is worth anything why should not the man in Montreal be prepared to go to the court?

Mr. JACOBS: Why have two forums? Either go before a judge and get naturalized or obtain naturalization from the Secretary of State. But why two jurisdictions?

Mr. BENNETT: The Secretary of State can grant it only if he refers the matter to a judge. But at his discretion, in extraordinary cases, he may grant it without such a reference. And it may be that cases which so eminent a lawyer as my hon. friend urges the Secretary of State to treat as extraordinary are so treated. But that comes back to the point I am making, that the matter becomes a political question, which it ought not to be. The hon. member has proved it now, in his own experience.

Mr. JACOBS: I may tell my hon. friend that when I sat on the other side of the house I used practically the same arguments as he is now advancing, though not so volubly. I pointed out that I had no confidence in the Secretary of State under any Conservative government, and consequently I would vote against the legislation. Since that time I have changed my mind.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I must say that since the hon. gentleman is so frank I am satisfied when the people of this country read his observations they will be a unit in opposition to this present legislation.

Mr. JACOBS: I think I owe it to my hon. friend to say that.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot think my hon. friend owes it to himself or to the Secretary of State to say it, because I cannot think it highly creditable to either. But let us go a step further. The hon. gentleman has said that he is going to substitute homestead inspectors or mounted police or some other source of information for the courts. If he is not going to do it himself who is going to do it for him?

Mr. RINFRET: Since my hon. friend did not speak on the second reading, I was endeavouring to let him present his argument as much as possible in an orderly manner and without interruption. If it is so desired, later on I will explain fully the machinery of the department, but I would remind my hon. friend that now in every case the Secretary of State makes inquiry, and it has often happened that, although the courts have recommended a certificate, or in the language of Chief Justice Meredith have not thought it their duty to oppose an application, on our own information we have refused to grant the certificate. In many cases we have proved harder to satisfy than the courts as to the qualifications of applicants, and my hon. friend from Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) made a good point a moment ago when he said that when the court desires to have a naturalization case heard, it appeals to us for evidence. We produce our own evidence before the court, which is a rather extraordinary proceeding, but I would point out that in a number of cases the courts have railroaded through twenty-five or fifty naturalization cases in a few moments, simply disregarding the hearing of them because they take it for granted that we will inquire into them and do our own work.

Mr. BENNETT: The judges of the community where I live do not treat these cases in that way, but it is possible that my hon. friend is right, so I must accept his statement.

My position is simply this, and I have concluded: You have your principle, which is universal throughout the empire, varied only by the offijcial languages of the country in which the application is made. You have your procedure, which varies from declarations and affidavits to notices in gazettes and newspapers supported by witnesses in courts or by declarations, but in any event evidence which satisfies the minister and upon which he acts. Heretofore in this country we have said that the evidence upon which the minister must act is the judicial report plus independent inquiries. We are now abrogating the provisions with respect to judicial inquiries; we are wiping them out entirely and making it unnecessary for the applicant to attend in court. We are doing away with the publicity which attaches to that appearance in court, and I would remind hon. gentlemen that in the United States a great deal of importance is attached to that appearance. If any hon. members have seen an application for naturalization in an United States court they will remember the ceremony which is gone through, the reverence and love for the flag, teaching Americanism right on the threshold of the application. The way in which this is done is most astounding; the flag is sometimes produced and an explanation is given by the judge; there is the appearance of the applicant and of the two witnesses. Then in the morning papers there will be a heading, "New citizens made", with a full announcement of the proceedings.

As the bill now before us stands, practically all the safeguards which exist in other countries are done away with, because in most the procedure is provided by statute as distinguished from the mere whim of the minister. My friend the Secretary of State has commanded the confidence of the hon. member for Cartier, but it is not the individual of whom we are speaking; it is the office as such. With the pressure of business and with the other difficulties in the way, how is the minister able to review these matters? Very often it gets down to being done by some clerk, who produces the file and says, "It is all ready to sign" and the minister signs it. I ask the minister here and now how many of these files he has read through since assuming office; if he has read them through, he is the only minister to have done so within my knowledge. What happens at present is that the testimony is placed on file together with the judicial report, but as it is intended to amend the act that will be the case no longer. Some clerk will determine the question of naturalization in this country by reading those reports. What usually happens is that the judge may recommend that a man should not become naturalized, in which case the application is not granted. Or perhaps the judge recommends that a man should become naturalized; this recommendation is supported by testimony from the police and other officials stating that his character is all right, and that ends the whole matter. The second essential, a knowledge of French or English, is where most applications fall down; there has been no adequate inquiry with respect to that matter. Hon. members will remember the letter from Chief Justice Meredith, in which he said these men were illiterate and had no knowledge of our language at all. He is an eminent judge and his duty was clear; he should have said, "No, I cannot recommend this application because there has not been compliance with one of the three conditions." Each of these requirements is equally important; it must be remembered that there is no distinction between them. Whenever anyone meets a man or woman—not so much in the case of women, who do not become naturalized so frequently—under thirty-five years of age, or for the sake of argument we will say thirty-seven or forty years of age, who has become naturalized but who cannot speak either English or French, then the law has been disregarded. You cannot get away from that fact; the law has been disregarded, and because of that fact I have ventured to bring this matter so strongly before the committee. I say this is not the time to relax the safeguards which we have had set up as matters of procedure ever since, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, we have dealt with naturalization at all, in order that each one of these requirements should be dealt with in accordance with the demand made by Chief Justice Meredith when he said, "I sought for guidance from the Secretary of State, but I did not get it." That is the way he put it, as the minister will remember. Chief Justice Meredith asked for some ruling as to what principle should govern in settling these matters, and the ruling is so simple; the Secretary of State should send a circular to all judges stating that under the provisions of the act they are called upon to determine whether or not the applicant has complied with the three conditions by which he may obtain British citizenship: First, has he resided five years in Canada, as provided by the statute; second, has he an adequate knowledge of the English or French language, and third, has he a good character? If the judge cannot report upon these questions it is his duty to sit until he is able to secure such evidence as may be necessary to enable him to make a proper recommendation.

Mr. DUNNING: I would like to say a word at this stage with reference to the point of order which I raised some time ago, and in so doing I would refer to rule 297. In explanation I would say that my request to my hon. friend for information while he was reading was made courteously and was not intended to embarrass him in any way. I simply put the question as a matter of information for myself. As usual, my hon. friend was posing as a great authority on the subject under discussion, and on this subject I accept him as an authority although I do not take him at his own valuation very often. When he was reading with reference to the law of South Africa I asked him as to what were the language qualifications there demanded, and I assumed that he would inform me that a knowledge of the Dutch language would be a qualification. As I said a moment later, my mind was running upon the peculiar anomaly which arises there in connection with British citizenship.

Mr. McGIBBON: I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend is referring to a point which he raised and which has been settled by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): I assume that the Minister of Railways is not really discussing the point of order but is taking part in the debate on the bill before the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: I intend to refer to the rule which I quoted, but I am now making an explanation of the circumstances which caused the point of order to be raised, and I think I am entitled to do so.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman wishes me to give a decision on the point of order I would direct his attention to the fact that I was not in the chair at the time the incident occurred and have no knowledge of it.

Mr. DUNNING: I assure you I shall not embarrass you, Mr. Chairman. I asked the hon. leader of the opposition if he would please explain the language qualifications in the South African law, because that does raise one factor in connection with British citizenship, or rather the status of a British subject, that in South Africa a man who can speak only Dutch may become a British subject, but the same man could not become a British subject in Canada under our law; and conversely a man who in Canada could speak only the French language can, under our law, become a British subject with citizenship throughout the empire, but the same man could not be naturalized in South Africa. That is what my hon. friend described as a senseless observation on my part. I just call that to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, and then refer you to rule 297 in which the following words appear:

> The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged, misrepresenting the language of another, or accusing him, in his turn, of misrepresentation, charging him with falsehood or deceit; or contemptuous or insulting language of any kind; all these are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference.

Mr. Chairman, you were not in the chair; I shall not press the point of order. If my hon. friend the leader of the opposition regards his treatment of me in that instance as courteous, I leave it entirely with him; only I do point this out, that he may, if he wishes, adopt the bullying tactics of a prosecuting counsel toward those on his own side, but we on our side intend to stand up for ourselves and take advantage of all the rights we have as members of this house.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like to say a few words in regard to this bill. It seems to me that it will not appeal to the people of British Columbia, neither will it appeal to the government of British Columbia which of course is of Liberal character at the present time.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. member pretend to speak for the British Columbia government?

Mr. McQUARRIE: Well, I think I have grounds for saying what I have already stated.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. gentleman mean the McBride government?

Mr. McQUARRIE: As I see it now, this bill will place in the hands of the Secretary of State, or perhaps in the hands of some deputy of his, the right to give naturalizations which are at present being refused on the recommendation of the judges of the courts of British Columbia. I do not care to go into details, but I make this general statement that certain judges of the courts of British Columbia have refused to recommend the naturalization of certain Japanese applicants, on the grounds stated by them in their reports to the Secretary of State.

I have here a return which was brought down the other day by the Prime Minister.

sessional paper No. 219, a return to an address to the House of Commons dated the 12th March, 1928; and in this return I find a letter from the Attorney General of the province of British Columbia to the Secretary of State, in which he discusses at some length problems relating to Japanese in Canada, and among other things he says this:

> Some of the judges of this province have in the case of applications of Japanese subjects for naturalization refused to recommend such applications. This attitude on the part of these judges has the approval of the government of this province and for the reasons, inter alia, stated by this province at the recent Dominion-provincial conference, I understood from you that your judgment was not favourably considering the applications of Japanese for naturalization and had not been doing so for some time. I would like to have an official statement on this point.

Now, as I understand it, the Under Secretary of State has taken the very opposite stand, and has stated in no uncertain manner his objection to the course followed by certain of the county court judges in British Columbia on this subject. The attorney general goes on to say:

> It has been stated, and I am inclined to think correctly, that Japanese are still surreptitiously coming into this province, in particular I have been advised that they come into the province at out-of-the-way points on the coastline from small Japanese vessels coming to our coast. You will understand the difficulty of detecting any such silent invasion. It is extremely hard for the white man to distinguish one Japanese from another. There is to the white man a very great similarity in their individual appearance.
> I have good reason for belief that there has been a traffic among Japanese in naturalization certificates; in fact it is openly stated that a Japanese who has been naturalized in this country never dies. What is meant is that his certificate is simpy handed on and it is wellnigh impossible under the present system to detect the illicit use of such certificates. I have long been of the opinion that your department should give serious consideration to a new system in the issuing of naturalization certificates. I cannot see why any applicant for citizenship in our country should refuse, for instance, to attach his finger print to a copy of the naturalization certificate to be filed with your department at Ottawa and to the original certificate to be delivered to him. It would be necessary that the finger print should be attached to a filed copy, as otherwise the print on the copy given to the person naturalized could be blurred or smudged so as to render it difficult to use it for identification purposes. I am of the opinion too that no applicant for naturalization in this province should object to the attaching of the photograph of himself in a non-detachable way to the original certificate and to the copy on file with your department. It is true that finger prints and photographs are frequently thought of together in connection with police identification work, but in so important a matter as the naturalization of an alien why should the adopting country hesitate for a moment to take the most careful precautions to ensure that the privileges which it is extending will not be violated? Mere sensitiveness is not a sufficient excuse for the adopting country to open the door to fraud. Not alone that, but the safeguards I have suggested are obviously in the interest of the new naturalized persons. In what I have said in this connection I would like it clearly understood that I am not derogating from the position of this province with respect to the naturalization of Japanese. The safeguards that I urge should in my opinion be made applicable in every case of naturalization.

[Mr. McQuarrie.]

Now I think that it is clear from the contents of that letter that the government of the province of British Columbia will not be very well satisfied if any of the safeguards surrounding the granting of naturalization, particularly to the oriental, are removed.

The judges in British Columbia, so far as I am aware, are very careful in hearing applications for naturalization. They insist on seeing the individual, and I think it is very necessary that the applicant should appear in person before someone who is going to recommend or decline to recommend his naturalization. What will happen if this bill goes through? The Under Secretary of State will issue the naturalization certificate; it will no doubt be signed by the Secretary of State or some higher authority, but to all intents and purposes the certificates will be issued by the Under Secretary of State who is in Ottawa. What does he know about an applicant who resides in British Columbia or in any of the other provinces, or anywhere not close to Ottawa? He knows nothing about him and apparently no provision is made which, in my opinion, will take the place of the investigation which is now made by county court judges in connection with these applications.

The matter of identification is important and that subject has been discussed in this house on previous occasions. It was recommended by several members on this side that there should be some method of positively identifying holders of naturalization certificates. That is important in all cases, but more particularly is it so in the case of orientals, because the ordinary white man cannot tell one Chinese from another or one Japanese from another.

Mr. JACOBS: How can the judges tell? Have they taken a special course in that regard?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I do not say that they can always tell, but my hon. friend will remember that the judges are hearing original applications. Why my hon. friend should raise that point in connection with the judges is more than I can understand. The Attorney General of British Columbia suggested finger prints and photographs. A photograph is not a positive identification in every instance, but a finger print is, and if these naturalization certificates had the finger prints of the applicants on them there would never be any chance of dispute, when a man was found with that certificate in his possession, whether he was the man to whom the certificate had been granted or not. I know the objection raised to that course, I think in particular by the Chinese consul general. He said: Why, you will place us in the criminal class; finger prints are taken when a man is arrested and if you insist on having finger prints on naturalization certificates, that is a reflection upon the orientals. That is not our stand at all. We say: Let the finger prints be put on the naturalization certificate in every case, whether oriental or otherwise, and then you will always have such a positive identification there will be no opportunity for dispute. The finger print system has become a science and once you have a man's finger print you may be sure of his identity. It would be a great mistake to do away with the application and hearing before a county court judge, because if that were done the whole thing would become a mere matter of form; certificates of naturalization would go through as a matter of course unless some reason was urged against the issuance of them, and in most cases there would be no opportunity at all for filing objections. It would therefore be a great mistake to pass this bill and I entirely agree with the views which have been expressed by my honourable leader.

Mr. JACOBS: I am in favour of the legislation as proposed by the Secretary of State. I cannot say that even the eloquent remarks of the leader of the opposition have convinced me that he is correct. My chief objection to the act as it now stands is that there are two jurisdictions to which an applicant must resort, that is to say, the court and the Secretary of State as a sort of court of appeal. That does not seem to me to be good sense. The Secretary of State as representing the government declares what their policy is with regard to naturalization. That must always be a matter of governmental policy. As I understand it the purpose of having a judge pass upon the application is purely that of identification. I assume that if this bill is enacted into law we are not going to abolish identification altogether and that there will be someone who will take the place of the judge on this question of identification.

Mr. BOYS: Why does my hon. friend suggest that appearance before a judge is just for identification?

Mr. JACOBS: What else is it for?

Mr. BOYS: The judge examines the applicant most carefully. I have been present over and over again at sessions in my constituency and have heard the examinations.

Mr. JACOBS: What does he pass upon—character, ability to talk either of the two languages, and residence? Any official of the government can pass upon that as well as a judge and he will do it in exactly the same way.

Mr. BOYS: I asked my hon. friend why he confined the matter to identification? In my constituency a judge puts an applicant through an examination lasting from ten to fifteen minutes and at the end of that time the judge will certainly know whether he has an adequate knowledge of English or French as the case may be. He also questions him most carefully as to residence, how long he has been in a certain place, his business and so on. I do not recall a single case—and I have seen more than a hundred—where the questioning of the judge has taken less than ten to fifteen minutes and with the applicant appear two persons resident in his town who also give evidence as to his character, his sojourn in the place he is supposed to come from, his knowledge of language and so forth.

Mr. JACOBS: Is it necessary to have a knowledge of law and to be on the bench in order to ascertain those facts?

Mr. BOYS: I am not suggesting that. I am merely saying that the judge is an impartial tribunal who ought to be able to do and who, I think, practically always does justice to the case.

Mr. JACOBS: No person is suggesting that the judge is not impartial in these cases, but I think the procedure is quite unnecessary. At present, as my hon. friend perhaps knows—I do not know whether it applies in his constituency—in the city from which I come practically all the information is handed in by the mounted police who are in charge of that department.

Mr. BOYS: We have nothing of the kind.

Mr. JACOBS: Probably because in a small town every person knows every person else, but in a large city of more than a million people the situation is quite different. The party appears before a judge and produces some proof as to his residence, if that is necessary. Then there is some proof as to character. I do not care how despicable a man may be he will always get a couple of people, if it be only his wife and son, to testify that his character is good. Then there is the final question about his ability to speak English or French. I know the leader of the opposition insisted strongly upon knowledge of one of the languages being a sine que non, that without it no person could become a British citizen.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that the statute so states.

Mr. JACOBS: I agree with my hon. friend, that is the statute. On the other hand, I suppose it is quite apparent to my hon. friend and the members of this house, that probably four-fifths of the population of the British Empire can speak neither English nor French. I merely mention this to illustrate the unwisdom of a provision of this kind.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): And yet they all full British subjects?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, they are British subjects in every part of the world.

Mr. MANION: We are dealing with Canada, not with India.

Mr. JACOBS: We are not dealing with Canada because when we give a man a certificate of naturalization it applies throughout the whole British Empire. He can say, "Civis Britannicus sum," which perhaps means more and carries more weight to-day than the old Roman, "Civis Romanus sum." As I said before, the whole thing is a question of procedure. We are even with this contemplated change within the four corners of our agreement with the British government with regard to conferring British citizenship throughout the world upon any person to whom we grant naturalization. Our citizenship applies to all parts of the British Empire. We are not changing that in any way; that is to say, the British government, the home government, is not objecting to the change which is suggested here.

As my hon. friend the leader of the opposition was forced to admit, it is not necessary in all the other countries of the British Empire that the applicant must appear before a judge. He cites the case of Newfoundland, New Zealand, and other outposts of the empire, and suggested that we should govern ourselves by the law of Newfoundland or that of New Zealand. I think that we are intelligent enough, and have astuteness enough, to make our own laws for our own people. This particular law which we enacted seven or eight years ago has not been working as well as it should, according to the report of the Secretary of State, and he has been asking for a change. I would be one of the first to rush to the rescue of the British Empire, as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has done to-day, if I felt that the British Empire was in danger through our making this change in the law, and it is because I do not feel that it is in danger that I willingly support this bill.

As I interjected when the leader of the opposition was speaking at one time, when I was on the other side of the house I objected to the Secretary of State having anything at all to do with the granting or refusal to grant a certificate of British citizenship. I said that that power could be used as a political instrument, and that before an election the Secretary of State might have piled before him hundreds and perhaps thousands of applications, to which he would refuse to affix his signature if he felt that they came from people in certain districts who would be likely to vote against the government of which he was a member, and I said at the time that I had no confidence in the hybrid government which was then in power. But, Mr. Chairman, I have travelled farther and seen more since that time, and I have now reason to believe that no Secretary of State would undertake to do anything of that kind, whether Liberal, Conservative or Unionist, or even Progressive.

Mr. MANION: There is no greater faith, no not in Israel.

Mr. JACOBS: There is some little faith left in Israel. It shows that sometimes association with the Gentile makes you have a little more confidence in him than you had before. For all these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to give this law a trial. If it is going to work the terrible havoc which the leader of the opposition predicts it will, we can amend the law. Parliament which creates a law can amend it. We are here for that purpose. If we were not amending laws here year after year, we would only need to come here once every four years to do the work of parliament, but by coming every year and amending the laws we passed the year before, we do something to earn our indemnity. I have no fear at all for the safety of this country if this law is passed, and I think we ought to give it a trial. If we find next year or the year after that it is not working out as it should, I am sufficiently candid to get up and admit my mistake, as I do now with regard to my action eight or nine years ago, and be ready to vote for the restoration of our present law, which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition thinks is the palladium of our liberty.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then you will be able to make your old speech over again.

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, and embellish it a little, so that my hon. friend will be able to appreciate its literary value.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You can change every week.

Mr. GEARY: The hon. member for Cartier has just cited the laws of the outposts of the empire, as he called them, of Newfoundland and New Zealand, to strengthen his argument that it is not really necessary for the applicant to go before a judge, and yet in the same breath he said that we should make laws for ourselves and not concern ourselves with what was done in the other dominions. That is precisely what we did when this act was passed in 1914. We expressly put upon that statute the procedure which should be followed before the application came to the minister for his certificate of naturalization.

The Secretary of State seems to hold the view that he may grant a certificate of naturalization directly under section 4, but that contention, I think, cannot possibly hold. Section 4 gives the qualifications which one must have before he can be granted naturalization papers, and sections 22 to 28, which are now sought to be repealed, say that the minister may grant naturalization only after a certain procedure has been followed. So no application can be made direct to the minister under section 4; it must go through the procedure authorized by the statute, that is, through the court, and from the court to the minister himself. The hon. Secretary of State says that he does not like that double jurisdiction. I should think that in an important matter of this kind, the double or checking jurisdiction of the minister, super-imposed upon the court order, is a very good thing; in fact, the minister has told us already that he has had occasion to apply that provision with very good results, and it is a very useful provision that the minister have the final say as to whether a naturalization certificate shall be granted, no matter what the court has said.

The Secretary of State has said that the intention was to give him this power, but that parliament by putting in this procedure had taken away the power from him. That cannot be. This procedure is too explicit; these provisions mean exactly what they say. The provision that the minister may grant the naturalization certificate in his own discretion is contained in section 4, it is true, but when you come to section 27, you will find that that same provision as to the minister's absolute discretion is contained in the procedure sections. So it was never intended by our statute to do otherwise than to say, in conformity with the general agreement between the dominions of the empire and the mother country, the Secretary of State in each dominion shall actually issue the certificate of naturalization, thus standing by our bargain with the other dominions. But this parliament in 1914 said: That is not to be the sole test, but the procedure that we are now outlining in the statute is to be carried through, and carried through expressly. The Secretary of State may issue a certificate only when an application therefor has gone through the prescribed channel.

The question arises, what are we going to substitute for that, and there I think the Secretary of State is in difficulty. He has nebulous ideas about how the matter is to be carried out, but I judge that he will issue a questionnaire or have agents of some sort, scattered all over this dominion who will collect the information and give a certificate, the information being returned to the Secretary of State. Now can that be as good as having that information gathered and adjudicated upon by the judiciary of the country? We have a judiciary which is held in respect from east to west, and we have placed this particular question in their hands; but now the Secretary of State seeks to substitute local people, homestead inspectors, for instance, and I do not know what other classes, to deal with naturalization. I do not see how that can possibly be a change for the better.

I think there is some merit in the point mentioned by the minister, that there is a certain amount of inconvenience, particularly in the west, on the part of applicants for naturalization getting in touch with the proper officials, but surely those who have charge of the administration of the act, can facilitate applicants getting to the judge or the judge to them. It is a matter of detail and, to my mind, not of sufficient importance to offset the obligation that is upon us so to legislate that the right of British citizenship shall mean something to the person to whom it is granted, and shall be safeguarded most carefully. It entails a responsibility on him to whom it is granted, but particularly on ourselves and on Great Britain, for we have to look to Great Britain for the protection of our citizens abroad. Therefore we should not load this obligation on to the mother country without exercising the greatest possible care.

In the city from which I come many persons apply for naturalization. So far we have had no difficulty, and I think the law has worked out pretty well. By far the majority of those who seek naturalization are of the Jewish faith. Many thousands are settled in Toronto and form no small part of our citizenship. They are shrewd, industrious, careful people. They have an instinct for commercial life, and they make their money and spend it in this country. They are never a charge upon our public institutions. That the Naturalization Act has worked out very satisfactorily can be proved by this one fact, I think. When in 1914 the call came for volunteers to fight for the country of their adoption, a very large proportion of young Jewish men, whose parents came originally from the central parts of Europe, rallied to the colours, and the troops sent out from Toronto and other Canadian points contained a very fair proportion of these young men. They went over and did their bit for the country of which they had become citizens under this law.

Mr. JACOBS: Does that surprise my hon. friend?

Mr. GEARY: Not a bit. Equally with my hon. friend from Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) I have had the advantage of knowing those citizens very well, and being aware of their sentiments I was not a bit surprised by their patriotic stand. As the naturalization law has worked quite satisfactorily since its enactment fourteen years ago, and evidently has not resulted in the exclusion of any who are worthy to become citizens of this country, I see no reason for changing it now, especially by substituting for the judiciary men possessed of no judicial attainments, and upon whose judgment the Secretary of State must in the end rely, to some extent at least.

I do not hesitate for a moment to disagree with the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. I have disagreed with him—not always successfully—before this. I do not think any difficulty confronts a judge in deciding who is fit to be given naturalization papers. This simply means that the applicant must be a fit subject for naturalization, according to the regulations laid down in section four of the act. These require the judge to satisfy himself as to the applicant's length of residence in the country, his good character and his ability to express himself in one of the two official languages. So I think the Chief Justice was rather looking for trouble when he laid emphasis on this point.

On the whole, Mr. Chairman, I think the statute was drawn deliberately, with full knowledge of the procedure in the other dominions. It was the sense of the parliament of the day, it has worked well, and I cannot see that the proposed change is necessary; for there is always a danger in placing any such power in the hands of a minister of the government. If any other concrete difficulty had been raised, than that of distance, that is, the difficulty of an applicant appearing before a judge with his papers, I should not have given my views on the proposed amendment without a good deal more consideration. But the minister with his facility in the English language has given us a very lucid expression of his views, and the difficulty which he has pointed out fails to convince me as a sufficient reason for altering the statute. It is a difficulty that arises more particularly in the western provinces, and, in my opinion, can be overcome quite readily without any such drastic amendments as those now before us. The present procedure has worked out satisfactorily, and it does not seem to me that what the minister proposes to substitute will effect any improvement.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Mr. Chairman, I am rather in favour of the idea of giving people greater opportunity to become naturalized; I am not altogether in favour of applicants having to appear before the judiciary; but there is a phase of the speech of the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) in which I cannot concur. Last night he said, as reported at page 2538 of Hansard:

> —at present we cannot act upon the application for at least three months.

When the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) asked whether under the proposed change naturalization could take place immediately, the Secretary of State answered yes, and that it had proven rather awkward for the department when they were unable to naturalize applicants immediately. I take the ground, Mr. Chairman, that at least three months ought to elapse between the application for naturalization and its being granted. When the Secretary of State assumes that he ought to be able to grant naturalization immediately in certain circumstances, that to my mind at once opens the door for a repetition of what has happened on previous occasions just before an election. We have had officers of the different parties seek out settlers and induce them to become naturalized in order to get their votes at pending elections. I do not wish to imply that the present Secretary of State would resort to such practices, but when election time comes around no doubt pressure would be brought to bear, and he would probably have to yield and think that under the circumstances he might exercise the power to grant naturalization papers immediately.

In the main I would be inclined to support this bill, but I cannot do so unless it is provided that naturalization shall not take place until after a certain specified time. Furthermore, when it is essential that naturalization be granted immediately, I think it ought to be done by order of the governor in council, and not by the Secretary of State, for the reasons I have already stated. I hope he will take this into consideration. I think I am not alone in the view that there ought to be a time limit within which naturalization shall not be granted, and unless such a provision is incorporated in this bill, I am afraid I cannot support it.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Adshead) has to my mind touched upon what is perhaps the weakest point in the whole legislation as proposed to-day. The Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), in bringing in the proposed amendment to the act, emphasized the fact that we are basing this law upon the naturalization laws as they exist in other parts of the British Empire. I do not think that we need necessarily copy other portions of the empire, particularly when conditions differ, as they do differ so radically, in different sections of the British Empire. For example, England at the present time is a free trade, or practically, a free trade country; and even the Liberal party in Canada does not advocate free trade on the ground that England has adopted that policy. Similarly, in different parts of the British Empire to-day, conditions are so radically different in regard to the constituent elements of population that, in my opinion, it is unnecessary that our various laws should be identical in the various parts of the commonwealth.

I made it my business this morning to look up some facts touching the subject under discussion, particularly with reference to persons, in the different parts of the empire, who speak neither English nor French—taking English and French in Canada, or English and Dutch in the case of South Africa, although I did not get any details with respect to the latter country. It will illustrate my point better than any words of mine can do, and disclose the situation exactly as it is, if I submit certain figures I have been able to obtain. I take the figures with regard to Australia and Canada. In New South Wales the population in 1921 numbered 2,101,000. Of that population the English speaking proportion totalled 2,082,000, or 98 per cent. The whole population of Australia, including New South Wales, for the same year, is given as 5,435,000; and to my surprise the proportion of non-British—persons born neither in Australia nor in any other part of the empire—is given as 50,000—in fact, to be precise, 45,000 odd. In other words, the population of Australia, taken as a whole, is given as 99 per cent British and only about 1 per cent speaking other languages.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would those two sets of figures agree? The 2 per cent in the case of New South Wales would be 40,000, and the total for Australia is only 50,000, including the 40,000 non-British in New South Wales.

Mr. MANION: In New South Wales the number of non-British is 19,000, and for all Australia—I am not giving the figures to the last decimal—50,000 including the 19,000.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I understood you to say 98 per cent.

Mr. MANION: I gave that figure, though I think it is higher than that. It probably works out at 99 per cent. I took their own figures from the Statesmen's Year Book, which is a good enough authority for most of us. The total for all Australia, of British born, is 99 per cent. Taking Canada on the other hand we find that the population in this country in 1921 was 8,788,000, and of these the English, Scotch, Irish and French numbered 7,279,000. This I figured out to be, roundly, 83 per cent of the total. The others are largely Europeans, with a few Japanese and Chinese included, numbering 1,508,000, or 17 per cent. In other words, while only 1 per cent of the population of Australia is non-British we have in Canada a non-British element to the extent of 17 per cent—quite a marked difference. Because of this difference, and the difference in conditions, I say again that we need not of necessity frame our law to conform exactly to the law of Australia, for example. I might have taken similar figures in regard to Great Britain, but unfortunately I had not the opportunity to do so. I may say, however, that the non-British population there is also very low.

To illustrate the point further. In Canada in 1926 we gave naturalization papers to 16,917 persons, according to the report of the Secretary of State for 1927, which would cover the previous year. That is to say, naturalization was granted in Canada in the year mentioned to practically 17,000 persons. In Australia in that same year, in place of 16,917, we find that only 1,123 naturalization papers were granted, and this for the natural reason that there is a very much smaller percentage in that country of those requiring naturalization. Perhaps I had better give the figures for Australia, to show how few get naturalization there. The figures are:

Year	Number
1922	1,353
1923	920
1924	964
1925	868
1926	1,123

Let me give some more figures to illustrate the difference in conditions as between Australia and this country. Immigration to Australia in the year 1926 totalled 105,918, and of that number 90,562, or 87 per cent, were British. Unfortunately I had not time enough to look up the figures in regard to Canada, but my recollection is that our immigration in that year would include only about 35 per cent British. There is a very small immigration into this country from France and that would be included in the 35 per cent. I fancy I am close enough, for the purpose of my illustration, when I say that about one-third of our immigration—taking the 35 per cent as a rough estimate—comprises people of British origin.

I do not wish to be misquoted or misunderstood in this matter. I have great respect—indeed, if I may say so, even affection—for these new Canadians who are coming to our country. I have lived all my life in a section where there are thousands of these "new" Canadians. This is an expression which a friend of mine uses and I rather like it. These people who come from different parts of Europe to live amongst us are admirable and in most cases their children have become very good Canadians. I have practised for upwards of twenty years among them in my profession, and many of them are friends of mine. In fact, I have a large number of friends of all nationalities—Italians, Slovaks, Greeks, Finlanders, Ukrainians, Jews, Hungarians and others from continental Europe. I repeat, they are people for whom I have a very great respect and a real friendship. And, I may add, most of them when they become naturalized vote for me. So that I am not complaining—

Mr. JACOBS: Does that account for your affection?

Mr. MANION: Partly, I admit. Possibly I might not respect them quite so much if they did not. They have demonstrated a good brand of intelligence in voting as they do. But there is this to be remembered—and I say it after emphasizing my genuine friendship for these people; for this is not a political subject, as I have said on many occasions on different platforms. It is essential in this country of ours, that if people are to know our customs, to understand our laws and to vote intelligently they should be able to speak either English or French, one of the two official languages of Canada. I submit, therefore, that it is unwise to make naturalization so easy—as this proposed legislation would undoubtedly tend to do—as to remove the incentive for strangers from Europe and elsewhere to endeavour to acquire a knowledge of either English or French, which is imperative before they can become really good citizens. It is only common sense to expect that people coming to Canada should, before they are given the right to take part in the election of representatives, know something of one of the official languages of the country. They should at least have gained some facility in either English or French in order to understand our laws and to judge intelligently of the questions upon which they are to vote.

I also feel that it is a great privilege and even a blessing to be a Canadian citizen; I sometimes point out to my boys that one of the things for which they can feel grateful, although they had no control over it, is that they were born on the northern half of this continent. I believe it is a real blessing to any young man to know that he was born in Canada. I say this with no disrespect to those great cultured, classical countries of Europe, but I do feel that our opportunities, our broad-minded citizenship, our great advantages in every way, our resources and so on, with all the chances for a young man to go ahead, should make him grateful for having been born in Canada. In the same way I think those who receive naturalization papers in this country have something for which they should be grateful, and they should not raise any particular objection if they have to go tc some little trouble to secure those papers. As a matter of fact, I do not find that they raise objections. I have thousands of people from continenal Europe in my city, and although once in a while I have received a complaint from someone who applied a long time ago for naturalization and has not received his papers, generally speaking when I have taken it up with this government or with previous governments I have found that if a man has a right to become naturalized he generally gets his papers without much troube; he makes his application before a judge and usually it is granted.

The Secretary of State pointed out that this act gives him absolute discretion in the issuing of these certificates, but I would suggest that he also had that absolute discretion under the present act. I will just read three lines of section 27 of the present act:

> The minister may thereupon in his absolute discretion issue a certificate of naturalization and shall send the same to the clerk of the court to whom the application for naturalization was made.

So I submit that this will not give the Secretary of State any greater discretion, but it will give him more power. I think his discretion remains the same, but in my opinion his power becomes too absolute.

Mr. RINFRET: There might be a doubt in interpreting the section which my hon. friend has just read, but the interpretation of the Department of Justice and the rule uniformly followed in the department since 1914 is that the word "thereupon" means that the Secretary of State can exercise his discretion only if he has received a favourable report from the court. In other words, he has not discretion to consider an application when a favourable report has not been made by the court.

Mr. MANION: I do not think he should be given that discretion. If the judges of our land are not dependable in a matter of this kind they are not dependable at all, because after all they have very serious matters with which to deal in the courts, and this is a question with which they should deal conscientiously. I do not believe the Secretary of State, either the Secretary of State of to-day or a secretary of state of the future from this side of the house, should be given discretion to lay aside the ruling of a judge who has had the case before him, who has met this man and discussed with him in one of the two languages of our country matters which would prove the ability of the man to speak or read intelligently of the affairs of our country.

Mr. CAHAN: Has my hon. friend noticed subsection 3 of section 4?

Mr. MANION: I will read this subsection, to which my attention has been drawn:

> The grant of a certificate of naturalization to any such alien shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister, and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.

That simply emphasizes the point I was making. However, to carry on with my argument, I do not know of any reason why there should not be a reasonable delay in granting naturalization to any new citizen of our country. I looked up the United States law to-day, and I found that in that country an alien must declare under oath, before the courts, his intention to become a United States citizen two years before he is permitted to become a citizen. If the United States are so particular that they place a man on probation for two years, surely we should be reasonably careful.

Mr. JACOBS: The applicant must apply within three years of his entering the country, and at the end of five years he gets his papers.

Mr. MANION: But if, during those two years, he should turn out to be a criminal or unsuitable for citizenship for one reason or another, the opportunity to lay that fact before the proper officials in the United States is much greater than in Canada, particularly under this proposed amendment.

Mr. JACOBS: Supposing he committed a crime after the three year period; how could you safeguard against that?

Mr. MANION: I do not follow my hon. friend. Does he mean if the applicant committed a crime during the two years of probation?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Then they would probably refuse him citizenship, and quite rightly so. The hon. gentleman who preceded me emphasized what I think is the weak point in the whole proposition, and that is the point to which I object: We are putting in the hands of the Secretary of State, whether of this government or of some future government, powers which would permit him to go very far. I am going to speak quite frankly; these powers would give him the opportunity, before an election for example, to enfranchise for political purposes, thousands of voters in this country who probably should not be enfranchised, if he were unscrupulous enough to do so, and he could probably decide a number of seats in that way. That is the danger of the whole proposition, and personally I do not want to put that power in the hands of my friend the present Secretary of State, nor do I want to put it in the hands of a Secretary of State from the Conservative party or from the Progressive party, with all due respect to their probity. I wanted to make this clear, because this is the weakness I see in the whole thing. Last night, when the minister sat down, I asked him a question, and the following remarks were made:

> Mr. Manion: Just before the minister closes I should like to ask him a question. Under the new system how long would it take for naturalization papers to go through?
> Mr. Rinfret: There would be no definite time; that would rest with the department.
> Mr. Manion: It could be done immediately?
> Mr. Rinfret: Yes. I thank my hon. friend for this question, because in a certain number of cases it has proven a great inconvenience that the department has been unable to grant a certificate to qualified persons simply because of the delay of three months which is provided in the present act, and because of the necessity of referring the matter to the courts.

The minister made that very clear, and it is just what I thought he would say. By the proposed amendment, upon receiving a hurried application from any constituency in this country—from the constituency of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier, for example, although knowing him as well as I do and having such a high respect for him I am sure he would not do anything of the kind—the Secretary of State could immediately issue a certificate. I submit that he should not have that right.

Mr. JACOBS: My hon. friend has singled me out, but I would point out to him that by speaking of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier he might very well mean his friend Mr. Patenaude, who was candidate in the constituency of Jacques Cartier.

Mr. MANION: He is not the member for Jacques Cartier, unfortunately. However, I did refer in a jocular way to my hon. friend—

Mr. JACOBS: I can quite understand how that rankles in the mind of my hon. friend.

Mr. MANION: I apologize to my hon. friend, as he is the member for Cartier not Jacques Cartier. But I think there will be no mistake as to who was meant. At any rate, I repeat that any member of this house or any candidate for membership in this house might apply for the naturalization of a group of new arrivals in this country just before election time, and I do not believe the power to immediately grant those certificates should be put in the hands of any Secretary of State, whether he is a Conservative, a Liberal or a Progressive. I do not believe human nature is so perfect that, on many occasions under the pressure of candidates running in a tight constituency, the secretary of state of one party or another would not, to put it mildly, stretch a point to grant naturalization. I well remember evil conditions in a certain district in this country, which I do not wish to name because I have no desire to reflect on someone who is gone. In that district there existed the condition described by my hon. leader this afternoon. Years ago when I was a boy I saw hundreds of men who could not speak the English language being naturalized just before an election and given a vote—for no other purpose than that of voting for the gentleman who was a candidate of the government then in power, and who counted upon getting a majority from them to take him back into office.

I do not think it is just to any secretary of state to give him this power. I warn the minister that if this act goes through and he is Secretary of State when the next election comes round he will be driven absolutely crazy by the demands of candidates in various sections of this country to naturalize large numbers of people who cannot speak the English language, or the French language, people who at the time should not get naturalization papers. Suppose, for example, in a certain constituency, say in my own—and I do not pretend to be any better than anybody else—I am running in a tight election, and there are thousands in that constituency who have come from continental Europe. The larger number of them, we will say, cannot when they first come here speak the English language. Suppose I am unscrupulous enough to have my agent go to them and say: There is a large number of your people here; if you will vote right I will see that you get your naturalization papers at once and it will cost you nothing. Suppose that proposition is put up to a few hundred of them. We get a lot of people in our country who do not understand the language, and the proposition may be explained to them by an interpreter who gives it whatever colouring he pleases. Does my hon. friend think many of them would not accept the suggestion and do that without being dishonest? They have got away from war-ridden Europe, and most of them—those who have not gone across to the states—do want to become Canadians. There are advantages in having Canadian citizenship, and they would largely accept, with no ill feeling; and the only thing that they would be taught by my agent, in all probability, if I were unscrupulous enough to do such a thing, would be where they were to put the cross on the ballot. I repeat that I do not believe that power should be given to any secretary of state. We should leave the law as it is, so that the applicant for naturalization must go through the courts as he has to do now, without any great trouble. He pays, of course, a small fee.

I may add that I have had no complaints among the thousands of Europeans whom I have in my constituency. I looked, while listening to my leader, through the list of the nearly 17,000 who according to this report were granted naturalization in the last year, and I find on nearly every page someone from my own city of Fort William. I did not even know that they were getting it. In an odd case I have been approached to help them through, because for some reason they had been held up by the courts. Generally I have told them to go and see a lawyer and he would help to get it through. Perhaps a couple of hundred or possibly twice that number in this list were from my own city of Fort William. I repeat that I wish to protest as strongly as I can against changing this law and putting it in the hands of a secretary of state, whether this secretary of state or another, to grant just before an election naturalization to hundreds of thousands of people who perhaps should not be enfranchised. I submit that if that is done, if the law is changed, then within a few years, perhaps in the lifetime of the present Secretary of State or of myself, we will have a scandal which will equal that of the customs scandal of a few years ago. I hope that the Secretary of State and his government will reconsider the whole matter and leave in the courts the duty of handling it, as the courts are a fair and non-political forum.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have frequently complained to the house and to the minister about the difficulty, the trouble and expense to which my constituents have been put in order to get naturalization. Perhaps I might explain that my district is a new one; the northern part of it is poorly served with railway facilities. These people going to the judicial centres must travel on a train which runs only three times a week. If they remain over one day at the judicial centre, they will miss the train back, and in most cases that means five days away from home and a good deal of trouble and expense.

It may be asserted that a Canadian certificate of naturalization is something which should be prized so highly that it is well worth all this trouble and expense, but the outlay of $25, $30 or $40, which it means to these people, is a great deal more than most of us here would consider. The class of whom I refer are people from the continent of Europe who have come in there without a dollar and have settled on the poorer bush homesteads, they are not people who handle very much money, and the expenditure of $25 or $30 means as much to them as perhaps a thousand dollars would to the average man within the sound of my voice. Most of them have not sufficient food or clothing in their houses, and nothing in the way of comfort, and this expenditure is something which they cannot well afford. My objection is not particularly to the fact that they must appear before a judge. In all these years, with all the complaints I have heard from these people, I have never heard one of them complain of the fact that they have been obliged to appear before a judge. I think they are satisfied so far as that is concerned, but the difficulty is in getting to the judge; and frequently, in addition to what I have already said, when they get there they find the court is postponed or their own case is set back for another hearing, and they must repeat their journey two or three times in succession until their application is finally passed or rejected, as the case may be.

Mr. LADNER: May I ask the hon. gentleman if there would not be the same procedure and delays if it were being done through the Department of the Secretary of State? Somebody has to be there to meet them and ask them questions, and they have to meet somewhere.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not know what the Secretary of State has in mind, but I think the suggestion of the mounted police going out and meeting these people would do away with a good deal of trouble. If my hon. friend will allow me to proceed, I think I can make my meaning clear in a moment. I have discussed this at intervals with the Secretary of State, who is making an honest endeavour to get around the difficulty. The fact has been referred to that the judges meet at various local points, and that is true; and in many of the parts where most of my people live the judge will come probably one day a year. In the village in which I reside, the judge comes but one day a year. If we could have these outstanding applications examined at that point, or at these different points on the day on which the judge is there, there would be no difficulty at all, and I would have no objection to the present law. That is what I have tried to secure and what I have discussed frequently with the Secretary of State and with the Under Secretary of State. Indeed I discussed the matter with a member of the bench and I was told that no provision is made for the extra expenses of judges and that in most cases this would necessitate a judge remaining over another day. In my particular village the judge comes in on one train which gets there in the evening, holds court at night, finishes up his cases and goes back to the judicial centre the next morning. He will not remain over the next day because that would mean two days on account of the train service and ordinarily he refuses to examine these parties in the list of cases on his docket. I suggested to the minister that the department should provide the necessary expenses to enable the judge to remain over another day, but it was pointed out to me again that the judges are under the control of the provincial authorities and that this was something over which the Department of Secretary of State had no jurisdiction whatever.

Those are many of the difficulties that I have met in trying to get some arrangement that would be satisfactory to the people of my district. Perhaps the grievance is more a question of administration than one of legislation and I think it can easily be remedied. An hon. member suggests to me that the difficulty might be met by a change in the law in regard to rural districts; that is, to provide some other machinery than the court for examinations in the rural districts and to leave the law as it stands in regard to the cities. Naturally there is no expense or no difficulty for anyone applying for Canadian naturalization to appear before a judge in a city. The difficulty is, as I stated, in these remote rural districts where a trip of five or six days, perhaps repated two or three and sometimes four times, is involved. What happens very frequently when an outsider finds himself up against so many difficulties is that he simply drops the matter altogether and does not bother about it further, and it is desirable for us to induce these people to become naturalized Canadian citizens.

A constituent of mine pointed out to me the difficulty that he was up against. I think I read his letter in the house four or five years ago. He said: "I am making an honest attempt to become a naturalized Canadian citizen. I realize at the same time that the moment I take out papers of naturalization I am taking the resposibility on myself and putting the responsibility on my children, because if another war breaks out my boys are liable to be conscripted but my neighbours"—and he mentioned several—"have not bothered about the matter." In the last war these people, although they have been resident in Canada for many years, were not subject to the conscription law simply because they had not bothered to take out naturalization certificates. I am just pointing out what one of these aliens thought about the matter. He was only endeavouring to do his duty in taking out Canadian papers and it appeared to him that we were putting many stumbling blocks and difficulties in his way.

Further, I am not in favour of the present measure that we are discussing. I agree almost entirely with what the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) has said; I can see the same objection, but I ask the committee to give some sympathetic consideration to those people who live in remote districts, who handle only a matter of a few dollars in a year and to whom twenty-five or thirty dollars of an expenditure means a great deal when they are short of the very necessities of life in their own homes. If some extension of funds can be made to the judges to enable them to stop over another day at these local points throughout the judicial district, the objection will be met. Those people, as I say, have no objection to the present system so far as going before a judge is concerned. I have not heard a single complaint about that. Any man who goes to the trouble of making an application for naturalization is naturally prepared to go to some further trouble. He knows that the must comply with certain conditions in order to secure Canadian citizenship; but as I pointed out, the difficulties are frequently so great that he gives up in disgust.

Another source of a good deal of grievance is that applicants are frequently called upon to attend court in judicial centres during the threshing season. I have found that in dozens and dozens of cases men have been summoned to appear before a judge right in the middle of threshing when they cannot possibly go. The result is that the application is cancelled, the five dollar fee is lost, and they must make out a new set of papers, pay a new fee, and go through all routine again. Therefore there are many difficulties that we ought to relieve them of so far as possible.

I agree with what the hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) has said about the political influence to which the minister will be subjected if we allow this bill to go through in its present form. There should be some time limit during which notices should be filed in the office of the county court clerk, the post office, the provincial gazette, the local paper or somewhere else before the application can be considered; otherwise, as hon. members have said, you will simply leave the door open and subject the minister to all kinds of political influences on the eve of an election. While I have every confidence in the integrity and honesty of the present minister, if he will not give in to that sort of pressure he is more than human, he is a different type of man from the rest of us. It is not fair to the house to leave any minister subject to that pressure; it is not fair to the minister to leave the door open to subject himself or any succeeding minister to that kind of pressure, and I appeal to him to make some changes in the legislation to meet the objections which I have stated and to provide that the application shall be left on file for some reasonable time before it can be dealt with. I think the suggestion that was made by the leader of the opposition, copied from the system in use in South Africa, was a very good one, namely, that the application should be advertised in a local paper for a matter of three or four or six months and that copies of that paper must be produced before a certificate of naturalization is granted. I appeal to the minister to take some of these matters into consideration and to alter the present legislation to meet these objections without making it as drastic in its application as the proposed amendment now before the committee.

Mr. CHURCH: I fail to see where the government has any mandate to bring in this particular legislation. I come from a district where there are six county court judges who administer the Naturalization Act well. The judges are making an application as a body for an increase in salary and in the special committee dealing with the matter further the county court judges who come from the west speak in high terms of the present statute and its administration. For instance, Judge Jackson says that it is one of the most important parts of the judicial duties to examine applicants who come before him for naturalization and to find out if they have proper ideals of citizenship. A person may become a British subject in two ways: first, by birth, and second, by naturalization. Ever since confederation the question of naturalization has caused a great deal of trouble in parliament. As I say the government has no mandate on this particular question and no complaints have been made that the act is not working out satisfactorily. It seems to me that this is a nice little gesture to certain interests in the west and that the present change is more a matter of politics and political expediency than of policy or laws. The present act as a matter of policy is an essential.' The Anglican church and the Presbyterian church represent a large body of opinion in this country. I cannot speak for them but I wish to refer to what has been said by them at their various synods and assembles. The Anglicans at the general synod at Kingston were alarmed at the aggression of foreigners in Canada and the catering to them by governments. They are beginning to doubt in view of the alarming immigration figures, whether Canada is going to continue to be a British country. Look at the situation in the United States. When President Harding found by the last census that the United States had only about 53 or 54 per cent of American-born citizens, they decided to close their doors to immigration from continental Europe, and they established their quota system, and that is what Canada will come to sooner or later. This country is at the parting of the ways to-day, with the repeal of the sedition clause in the criminal code and this repeal now.

This is a political bill, Mr. Chairman, and it was never intended to be anything else. It is a nice gesture to the foreign element who go to the west and vote there. The government is not concerned over our citizenship; it may be good, bad or indifferent. What the government is interested in is how many votes they will get out of this particular bill. We have a great many foreigners in the city from which I come, and the number is continually growing through new arrivals. The two great railways are bringing foreigners into Toronto under no known law of immigration and under the new anti-immigration law. There are a large number of applications for naturalization in the county of York every time the court of sessions meets. They have five or six county court judges, and the applicants appear before them, witnesses can be heard, and the applicants examined, if necessary, to find out whether they appreciate our citizenship and would make good citizens, and after the judge has determined upon the fitness of the applicant, a certificate is issued, and naturalization papers are granted by the government. That system has worked well, but now it is proposed in the twinkling of an eye to change all that, and to centralize all this work in the city of Ottawa in the Secretary of State's office where no doubt the minister will gather around him a large number of government officials appointed by the Liberal party, who will see that these certificates are issued at so much per head. We know that in order to get a job to-day, even though you are a returned soldier, you have to join the Liberal ward association and pay a dollar. Is that going to be the process here, and also to obtain naturalization papers under the proposed act?

I do not wish to criticize a young minister but I fear that his department will become a huge political machine, especially around election time, for coining out these certificates of naturalization irrespective of the fitness of the applicant. The minister last night read the history of naturalization the world over from time immemorial, referring to the French system, the English system, the system in the United States and in Australia. Let me tell him that the position he gave last night as that of the United States is not the position in the United States to-day at all. The United States are tightening up their restrictions all along the line, in immigration, naturalization and colonization. They have their quota system of immigration, and they are tightening up their naturalization system, putting the brakes on and stiffening the regulations all along the line. No matter what country you come from, once you enter the United States, you have to become an American citizen. There is only one flag and only one school there. We have to admire the American people for knowing how to make people become American citizens and respect the law and flag and their institutions. There is no catering there to the foreign way of things.

The minister also referred to Australia. I should like to refer to a speech made by the Prime Minister of Australia, in which he said that Australia is going to be kept a white man's country, that their conditions are different from those in the United States and Canada, and that they are not going to open the flood gates to European immigration. As a result of that policy on the part of Australia, Canada is losing the British immigrant. They are going to Australia and New Zealand, which are doing all the window-dressing in the old country to-day and getting the vast bulk of all immigration from the land.

Naturalization is a very live question, Mr. Chairman, and it is closely allied to the question of immigration, and the question of sedition which we were discussing the other night in this house. I am very sorry that parliament saw fit to remove the provision we had on the statute book with regard to sedition. There is a large body of public opinion in this country that is opposed to any changes being made in that act, and I know that many Liberals as well were opposed to repealing that provision.

This bill we have before us will mean that all the work of naturalization will be centered in the city of Ottawa, and the Secretary of State will have power to decide who shall become naturalized and who shall not. It will simply mean the building up of a huge political machine for the issuing of certificates of naturalization, just as the customs service was a political machine in the old days. Agents of the government in all the large centres from Vancouver to the Atlantic seaboard will be issuing certificates of naturalization in a haphazard way just before election time, with no regard for maintaining our citizenship at its present standard, and we will have instead of county court administration as now, a political administration. I should like to refer to an article that was written to the Toronto Globe yesterday by a great bishop of the Anglican church, who would no doubt be criticized here because he stands four-square for the British Empire. I refer to Bishop Lloyd, of Saskatoon. He protests against any change being made in this act. Then, in addition, we have the opinion of the county court judges that the present act is working admirably and should not be removed from the statute books, especially at this time owing to the unrest in the country, and with so many foreigners entering Canada. If Canada is going to remain a British country, we want a British immigration policy, and we should not be wiping off the statute book acts that are for the preservation and protection of our citizenship. If Canada is not going to continue to be a British country, let us know. I wish to protest against the repeal of the provision regarding sedition, and protest also against repealing these sections of the Naturalization Act which have worked out admirably.

Furthermore, it will cost hundreds and thousands of dollars to enforce this act, and in the end it will be a mere farce, because certificates will be handed out just as they used to hand out script years ago, and the result will be that the quality of our citizenship will be lowered. Coming from a city in which there is a large number of foreigners, applying for naturalization at the general sessions for York where the Naturalization Act is working out very well, according to the opinion of the county court judges, I protest against the changes that are being made in this bill.

Mr. LADNER: This measure is so important and so far-reaching in its effects, not only upon the present population of Canada, but upon the many thousands who are coming and will come into this country, that it warrants the close scrutiny and study of every member of this house. Not only that, the measure is of such a nature that I think it warrants the condemnation of every member of this house. I have a very considerable respect and regard for the ability and sincerity of the hon. minister who introduced this measure, but in considering a measure of this kind we must have regard to its effect upon the community as a whole. After all, the real point of contention in the bill is the elimination of the courts from deciding upon the qualifications of an applicant for citizenship, and replacing that authority with agents appointed by the Secretary of State, who will be empowered to determine the qualifications of the applicants for citizenship. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is the pith of this measure.

What are the reasons for this proposed change? Where is the public demand for such a fundamental departure from our course of procedure in relation to naturalization? Throughout his whole speech the Secretary of State has not indicated that there is any such demand. His chief arguments are centred around the inconvenience to which some applicants for naturalization are subjected. The minister informs us that representations have been made to him in this respect. I have read his speech carefully and annotated his arguments and reasons for this proposed change. They are six in number. First, the distance from the court of the applicant, and his expense in getting there. That condition prevails only in a very small portion of the Dominion, relatively speaking. I venture to say that if the figures were available it would be found that fully 95 per cent of those applying for citizenship are not handicapped by that difficulty. Second, the sudden adjournment of the court and the necessity of the applicant's returning in order to renew his application. I submit in all fairness that this is an exceptional case. It is not usual for our courts to adjourn suddenly when there is still business to be attended to. Third, the courts sit too infrequently, and attendance has to be made at inopportune times, when the applicants are harvesting or trapping. Again I say those occasions are very limited. The great majority of our courts sit at regular intervals, applicants are given ample notice in advance, and can arrange their affairs so as to be present. Fourth, the lack of uniformity of procedure and unanimity of judgment in determining the qualifications of applicants. With respect to this point, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can complete my remarks between now and six o'clock.

At six o'clock the Deputy Speaker resumed the chair, and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the house to move the following motion:

That Bill No. 57, an act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, placed on the order paper for consideration from 8 to 9 p.m. on Tuesday, the first day of May, 1928, be given precedence over other bills.

Mr. CHURCH: There must be unanimous consent in order to have this motion entertained. I object; there are other bills more important than this one.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion can, of course, be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is therefore no point in putting the motion.

OLIVE DRUKER

The house in committee on Bill No. 150 for the relief of Olive Druker—Mr. Anderson (Toronto)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CHURCH: I move that the bill be reported.

The CHAIRMAN: In this case there is a proposed amendment. The hon. member's motion cannot therefore be entertained.

On section 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it at this stage, Mr. Chairman, that I move my amendment? I think it is on the third reading.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I object to the passing of this bill. On the third reading I desire to move an amendment.

Bill reported.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Mr. Anderson moves that Bill No. 150, for the relief of Olive Druker, be now read the third time.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): In accordance with a notice of motion given the other day I move the following amendment:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it as follows:—

1. That section one of the bill be amended by adding the following words thereto:—

"and the said Olive Hawkes shall have the custody of their child, and the said Maurice Druker shall pay annually to Olive Hawkes, for her support and maintenance, the sum of five hundred dollars, so long as she remains unmarried; and the sum of two hundred dollars annually for the support and education of their child."

2. That the following section be added to the said bill:—

"3. The said Maurice Druker shall not have the right to marry again, and if he goes through any form of marriage, he shall be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment, and such marriage shall be null and void."

The other evening I stated my purpose in selecting several of these bills for discussion. In this particular case I am quite willing that the applicant should be granted the divorce, but my purpose is to impress upon the house the necessity of establishing a divorce court in which such matters can be properly attended to. I think it is abundantly evident, from the proceedings of the last few private members' days, that we are not treating these divorce cases in the manner in which they ought to be treated. In order to indicate some of the principles which it would seem to me should be considered in a case of this kind, I chose two test cases. One, introduced the other evening, was a case in which there was involved the custody of the child as well as alimony to the woman; and also in which both individuals were diseased, and I urged that they should not be given the right to marry again so long as this diseased condition continued.

We have in this particular bill still another condition by reason of which I urge that the man should not be granted the right to remarry. I may say that since bringing up this matter in the house I have received a considerable number of communications on the subject. I should like to read a paragraph or so to indicate the state of public opinion in this regard. I quote first from a letter received from a lawyer in western Ontario:

> The House of Commons seems to have got the idea that the Ontario divorce court bill sponsored by Mr. A. N. Smith in the commons, is merely a bill for the relief of the senate. In fact it is for the relief of hundreds of people who are too poor to ever get their troubles to the senate. There is a most pitiful cry of the poor of this province for this relief, a low almost inarticulate cry, as is usual with the cry of the poor, for that chance of re-establishing homes which the people of the western provinces have.

I have another letter from a poor woman in Detroit who had read in the newspapers concerning the action taken in this house. From this letter I will extract one paragraph.

> I see that you are asking that a man should be made to support his wife and children, also that he be a fit man to marry again. I am a Toronto girl, born and raised there; if there had been such a law I would not be the unhappy woman I am to-day.

Cases of this kind could be multiplied, and I know that every one of these cases means a tragedy in the home life of some couple.

It has been said that an amendment such as I am introducing might be considered ultra vires, but I would point out that the British North America Act very clearly gives to the Dominion parliament control over marriage and divorce, and I take it that that would apply to everything pertaining to marriage and divorce. Further when divorces were first granted in Canada provision was made for the custody of the children and for the payment of alimony, and as far as I have been able to learn the constitutionality of such action never has been challenged. The other evening I read from the Campbell case of 1879, and to-night I venture to repeat one of the paragraphs from the argument by Senator Miller:

> Under the British North America Act the legislation in regard to civil rights is given exclusively to the local legislatures, but it cannot be controverted, I think, that when the parliament of Canada has exclusive power to deal with any subject of legislation, that so far as it is necessary to deal with civil rights in connection with such legislation, we have the undoubted power to deal with them, where this parliament has the right to legislate on any subject it must be considered that we have the power to legislate regarding all matters incident to that subject.

I do not wish to develop the legal argument any further; I do not think it necessary. Again, however, it has been claimed by some that the action contemplated in my amendment would be outside the terms of the petition, and that therefore it should not be accepted by this house. I would point out that the last paragraph of the petition carries a standard clause, as follows:

> Wherefore your petitioner humbly prays that your honourable house may be pleased to pass an act dissolving the said marriage between your petitioner and the said Maurice Druker and enabling your petitioner to marry again, and granting your petitioner such further and other relief in the premises as to your honourable house may seem meet.

So if we chose to provide for the custody of the child or if we chose to order the payment of alimony undoubtedly these matters come within the terms of the petition. Aside from that, however, I urge that we have the right to grant divorce on whatever terms are considered advisable by this parliament. There is no limitation to our powers in that regard. It would require a very strong argument indeed to prove that we have no such right.

With regard to this particular case I would point out that the courts of Ontario have already granted the custody of the child as well as alimony, so it might be claimed it is not necessary that we should take action in this regard. However, this case suits me all the better because the courts of Ontario have taken action along these lines, as after all I am introducing this amendment to determine the principle at stake. As I said the other evening, if this amendment had been drawn with legal care perhaps we should have inserted a provision as to how the money should be paid; perhaps we should have included penalties for the non-payment of the money. Undoubtedly we should have been able to go more fully into the question as to whether or not these sums suggested are sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the wife and child. I said the other evening that the figures which I suggested were quite arbitrary, because it is quite obvious that we have not before us in this committee or in the house sufficient evidence concerning all the circumstances of the case to know how much should be set aside for the maintenance of the wife and child. Again that is simply an illustration of the necessity for this sort of thing being attended to by a court, where full investigation could be made with regard to all these matters.

There is a second part to my amendment. I am trying to make provision for the wife and child, and I am also suggesting that the man be not given the right to marry again. I know that the bill before us explicitly gives the woman the right to marry again, and as I said earlier I am quite willing that this should be done. It does seem to me, however, that with this evidence before us we must hesitate to inferentially give this man the right to marry again. In the preamble of this bill as passed by the senate I read the following:

> Whereas Olive Druker, residing at the city of London, England, wife of Maurice Druker, manager, who is domiciled in Canada and formerly resided at the city of London, in the province of Ontario, has by her petition alleged that they were married on the sixteenth day of September, A.D. 1924, at the city of London, England, she then being Olive Hawkes, a spinster; and whereas by her petition she has prayed that, because of sodomy committed by him since then, their marriage be dissolved; and whereas the said marriage and the said sodomy have been proved by evidence adduced and it is expedient that the prayer of her petition be granted: Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

We have that preamble before us as the basis on which we are granting this woman a divorce, and I submit that we should hesitate to grant the privilege of remarriage to a man who has so cruelly mistreated his wife and who has committed a crime for which he is liable to life imprisonment. Are we going to tell this man he can go scot free and leave him in a position to abuse another wife? I would hope that the time might come when, in cases of sexual perversion of this kind, there might be some sort of surgical operation, which will provide for such cases better than we are able to do under our present legislation, but until such time arrives I submit that we are hardly justified in turning such a man loose. So without arguing the case at greater length, I would urge, that in this bill we incorporate each of the provisions, to which I have referred, namely, that the wife be given custody of the child, that alimony be provided for her and maintenance for her child, and that the man be refused the right to marry again.

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): Although this bill is in my name, I am only sponsoring it for the solicitor in charge for the petitioner, but as the matter is entrusted to me I think it is only fair that something should be said on her behalf here. One has only to read the petition and, if one is so disposed, the evidence which has been sent to us from the senate, to see the nature of the offence and I feel justified in thinking that the senate committee has reported properly. The offence is a crime which, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, is punishable by life imprisonment, and accompanying that crime were other offences against the criminal code, also adultery practices.

This petition is offered on behalf of the wife, who desires to have the marriage bond dissolved because of those crimes and offences against the marital bond. The amendments, it seems to me, are intended to make the granting of that divorce conditional. We must not forget that the remedy here is asked for by the wife, the injured person, not by the one who committed the wrong. Whether parliament would be justified in carrying a penalty to the one who does the wrong is another matter, and it appears to me that the amendment is one that should be dealt with by parliament in a separate bill that might be made applicable to every divorce application which comes before parliament. All that the petitioner asks for is the dissolution of the marriage tie. The senate committee, I submit, found in favour of her application, and they recommend that the bill be passed. The evidence shows that the petitioner and her witnesses proved, not only the crimes alleged but also that the respondent had deprived her of moneys that she had of her own before marriage, and that she holds a judgment against her husband for the amount involved in that respect. The evidence further shows that she proceeded in the courts of Ontario and obtained a judgment for alimony, not of $500, as this amendment would say, but of $250 a month or $3,000 a year. Furthermore, the evidence also establishes that at the time that judgment was signed, in October last, she was entitled to $1,500 by way of arrears of alimony, and that judgment has not been purged by payment. Further than that, I have before me a copy of an order made in the supreme court of Ontario on the 22nd of December last, by which she is awarded the custody of the child, which is under three years of age. I might say also that the husband had converted some of his wife's goods and chattels, to the amount of some $7,000, and she has a judgment for that in the courts of Ontario. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but she has proceeded in the courts of Michigan and she has there obtained judgment for the value of the goods that he converted, and she also has proceeded to obtain a confirmation in the American courts of the judgment that she holds in Ontario for alimony, and also for the custody of the child.

I think it should be pointed out here, in view of what has been said by the hon. member, that the application did not go by default; the respondent appeared before the senate committee and gave sworn evidence, yet he did not in one word attempt to deny the bestiality of the crimes which she had testified to; all he did was oppose the petition on the ground that he was an American citizen, or that he was domiciled in the United States. It was also brought out that he has not become an American citizen but that he has filed papers looking to the acquirement of citizenship in the United States.

It may be noted that the first part of the amendment which was moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre has already been satisfied by the courts of Ontario and Michigan. That is, the petitioner has already got what this amendment would like to give her in that respect. As to the moneys due her from her husband, she has failed to realize on the judgment obtained; they are of no use, because the officers of the court have not been able to implement them. The fact that he has applied for citizenship in the United States indicates that he does not intend to make this country his domicile, and the last part of the amendment would apply only if he remained in Canada. Our law is not enforceable in the United States; it is enforceable only in Canada. If he married again he would be responsible, probably, to the extent of the penalty prescribed by the amendment, but it is quite evident that he intends to live in the United States, not in Canada. He is permanently employed in the country to the south, being in business in the city of Detroit. So that the adoption of this proposed amendment would really be an ineffective measure; I do not think the bill dissolving the marriage should be burdened by this amendment, because of its ineffectiveness in Canada owing to his being in another country.

[Mr. A. J. Anderson.]

I feel very much the same as the member for Winnipeg North Centre, that these cases should be tried in the courts of Ontario, but that is a matter dealt with by another bill. If such a law were in force to-day I have no doubt that the courts of Ontario would give the wife in this case all the remedies that she desires. The courts of Ontario, as those of other provinces, have power to grant alimony and determine the custody of the children, and that sort of thing. Why is it necessary for us to legislate further in that regard?

On the question of the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, I am not going to offer any extended remarks. The British North America Act says that the federal parliament can legislate with regard to marriage and divorce, and the provinces in respect to the solemnization of marriage. It might be argued that if this amendment passed we should be declaring that the respondent is ineligible for marriage, and as something which precedes another marriage it might be determined possibly under the question of solemnization. The Ontario law already provides for something of the same kind in the case of infants; it prescribes that infants may not marry without the consent of their parents, and so on. If the province has power to prescribe even to the extent of who shall marry, it could easily be argued that if we in our legislation prohibit this man from marrying again, we are attempting to do something that is within the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario.

I submit that the amendment should be voted down and that the bill should be allowed to pass as it stands. What is included in the amendment should be brought before the house in a separate bill so that it may be applicable to all divorces granted by parliament. It is for parliament to decide whether or not conditions of that character should be before the courts in determining the question of divorce, but in this case there is no reason at all for such an amendment. This woman is without doubt entitled to a divorce; the amendment only complicates the matter, and I doubt very much whether we have power to punish the man and whether, if we endeavoured to do so, such punishment would be effective.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): This subject has been brought before the house a number of times by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). As it has not been my privilege to be present at any time during the discussion, perhaps I might be permitted to say a word or two on the matter. The duty has been delegated to me of representing the private bills committee on the senate committee on divorce. It is not altogether a pleasant duty and I am not going to say that I have adequately discharged it, but on various occasions I have attended meetings of the senate committee and I have watched the proceedings. If I read Hansard aright, when this matter was under discussion before, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) referred to the way in which cases were submitted before that committee and I wish very heartily to endorse the testimony which they gave at that time. It is a great mistake that the opinion should be allowed to go out to the country that these matters are not considered seriously by parliament. The fact that these discussions have taken place in the house will tend to increase throughout Canada the opinion that we are dealing with these matters in a careless, haphazard fashion. That is not the case. As I have said, in the discharge of the duty imposed upon me by the private bills committee, I have on various occasions attended meetings of the senate committee. I have been greatly impressed by the care that has been exercised by the senators in coming to conclusions and regarding the character of the evidence which they are prepared to accept. As we know, there is only one ground on which divorce is granted by that committee and a petition is granted not simply because that offence is suspected but because it is proven by incontrovertible evidence. Therefore when these bills come before the house, supposing that they may go through in a somewhat formal manner, perhaps those not acquainted with the previous procedure may think proper consideration has not been given to them. That is not the case. Those cases are well considered; in the great majority of them no defence is offered and the respondent does not appear because the case is too conclusive against him and judgment, I find, is invariably rendered in accordance with the evidence. If we are to consider the bills in this house in the same manner and with the same degree of care that they are considered in the senate, it will be necessary for us to have all the evidence adduced before the private bills committee and again brought up in the house, and I ask hon. gentlemen: Is it desirable that that should be done? I say most emphatically that it is not desirable.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): May I remind the house that the senate is asking to be relieved of the duty and responsibility of passing upon these bills and, indeed, of handling the question of divorce at all?

Mr. BROWN: I was not discussing that question.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I further point out that before the senate committee nothing is taken into consideration except the question whether or not a divorce shall be granted? There is on the order paper, under the heading of "Public Bills and Orders," Bill No. 27, which proposes to deal with the matter. On Tuesday last in discussing the situation I criticized the rules of the house as they stand to-day and I pointed out the difficulty that a private member has to contend with in order to get a decision of parliament on a bill which he introduces. The Prime Minister in reply to my remarks pointed out that when these rules were introduced they were accepted unanimously by the house and that by my passive acquiescence at least I had given my consent to the rules. Theoretically of course that is correct.

Mr. NEILL: It is not correct that they were accepted unanimously.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is what the Prime Minister said. I was just replying to his remarks. Theoretically when a member does not object to a particular measure it follows that he approves of it. In reality that is not so, because if we were each and everyone to state our objections to every measure before the house and to force a vote upon it—

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hon. gentleman's remarks are not relevant to the matter before the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May I point out that on Tuesday last, the 23rd April, I was interrupted on a point of order by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) when I was discussing this very point and the Speaker ruled that I was in order. Therefore I presume I may be allowed to finish my remarks. I will make them as brief as possible.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely my hon. friend is not in order in discussing a subject which is on the order paper under another number?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was not discussing that other bill at all. Perhaps I might read the Speaker's remarks.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: In referring to a previous debate on the same subject this session, the hon. gentleman is certainly not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL: This is not the same question. I just wish to say that the difficulty that has arisen can be avoided by a simple amendment to the rules. The reason why I did not object to the rules when they were brought in last year was because I considered they were a compromise.

Amendment (Mr. Woodsworth) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

INTERPROVINCIAL AND JAMES BAY RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 69, respecting the Interprovincial and James Bay Railway Company—Mr. Parent—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for commencement and completion.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that this railway goes into the Rouyn district, where there are already two railways. I would ask the Minister of Railways, if he is supporting this bill, to give us his reasons why a third railway should be allowed to go into that district and compete with the other two. Is there not going to be a duplication of railways in that district if this bill goes through?

Mr. DUNNING: This is a private bill. Before the railway committee, when this and one other railway bill were under consideration, I pointed out as nearly as I could the situation which would exist in the district in question. The representatives of the railway companies interested also addressed the committee, and all expressed themselves as quite satisfied with what was being done with respect to both of the charters under consideration. Apparently the committee was satisfied that there was plenty of room in that district for the railways in question, and they agreed to report the bill without amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot but think that we should be very careful about a matter of this kind. This is territory in which we are spending large sums of money. We own the terminals at Hudson bay, and we own at present the only line of railway that reaches the Hudson bay. The minister pointed out the other day, very properly, in connection with a railway in northern Alberta, if my memory serves me, that the territory was being invaded by a private line which, if successful, would be able to take away traffic from the government road. Should we not decline absolutely to grant charters to private enterprises where the effect will be in any way to lessen and impair the possibility of our own line earning money, and should we not rather extend branch lines into that territory for the purpose of preserving it for our own railway? In other words, if we must pay the deficits, and we must, let us be very astute to see that so far as possible every bit of territory that is contiguous to our line may be served by profitable branch lines for the protection of our own property.

Mr. EVANS: If I remember rightly, it was pointed out in the committee that this line parallels the line under another charter which has already been granted, and the question was if they would not both be going through the same territory if both went round the one side of a certain lake. I think we should be careful in granting these charters, particularly to companies of this kind, which is not either of the two great national companies, the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific. It seems to me that we are fast creating another railway situation which in a few years is going to land us in a worse position than the one from which we have been trying to extricate ourselves in the last nine or ten years. We are paralleling lines all over this country, and here in this new district we are granting a charter to a new railway company altogether which is going to parallel the line and interfere with the earnings of the Canadian National Railway. We are doing this in many places throughout the Dominion to-day, and I think this parliament should be very careful to see that we do not create a situation which gives rise to a worse railway problem than the one we are now trying to find a solution for. This railway is certainly endeavouring to be first to get into this mining district. Whether it is for the purpose of developing a certain company's mine or not, I do not know, but this makes the third railway in that district, and I repeat, it is invading Canadian National territory and going to interfere with the earnings of our national railway.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I heartily concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Rosetown. It seems remarkable to me that we should permit another railway to build into what is distinctly Canadian National territory. I thought that the railway committee had laid it down as a principle that none of these smaller railway companies would be allowed to build into territory which should be served by one of the two big companies, the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific. I realize that we can hardly lay down the principle that the two existing lines shall have a monopoly of railway business in this country, but—

Mr. DUNNING: May I interject that this is owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they have had a charter through there for many years. I think in fairness to them I should say that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was just going to say that I think in most cases we should give the preference to one or other of the existing lines. When the Canadian Pacific railway builds a piece of line, we know it is not going to be left on our doorstep, but that may happen when a smaller company builds it.

NIPISSING CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 46, respecting the Nipissing Central Railway Company—Mr. Lang—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time for completion.

Mr. CHURCH: I see no reason why parliament should give an extension every five years to this railway. They have already had five extensions from this parliament. Who are these people? The bill doesn't say who they are. This is a very important territory surrounding the towns of Latchford and New Liskeard, and the railway is to run through the townships of Coleman, Bucke, Dymond, Harris and Casey to a point on or near Blanche river, thence in a northerly direction to a point at or near Windigo lake, thence northeasterly to a point on the line of the National Transcontinental at or near the Matagami river. They received their charter in 1907, by chapter 112, and it was renewed in 1908 by chapter 135; they came back five years later, in 1913, for a further extension, by chapter 160; they were back again in another five years, in 1918, for a further extension, by chapter 56, and back again in 1923, for a further extension, by chapter 80, and now in 1928, another five years, they are back again for another extension. Five years seems to be the psychological moment for them to come back and ask for an extension, with every new parliament. Where is all this going to end? Some of the most important mining districts in Canada to-day are in the territory which this railway is to run through, and I maintain that the territory, no matter who owns this railway, should be served by the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, which is not asking for any subsidy or extension from this legislature.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me, the Nipissing Central railway is owned by the Ontario government, and it is the Ontario government which is asking for this extension of time.

Mr. CHURCH: Even if it is owned by the Ontario government they should set an example and carry out their contract and develop the district instead of asking for an extension of time every five years. As I have said, the bill does not say who the owners are.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 71, to incorporate the St. Lawrence River Bridge Company—Mr. Smith (Stormont)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. CHURCH: This bill should not be allowed to pass in its present form, Mr. Chairman, in view of the action taken by Governor Smith of the state of New York. He has laid down the principle that such international bridges should be built by the state or federal government or by the municipal authority. This parliament has jurisdiction over bridges that are international, interprovincial or that affect navigation.

What is the policy of the government of Canada in regard to this and the other bridge bills? We have three of these bridge bills, one at Sarnia, two or three at Niagara, and two on the St. Lawrence. We are told that the St. Lawrence river question cannot be discussed at the present time because it is on the way to the privy council, but navigation is also affected by this particular private bill. So the issues involved in the reference to the supreme court are relevant to this bill. The interests of navigation are paramount to any private bill or interests. I protest against this policy. The preamble recites:

Whereas a petition has been presented praying that the persons hereinafter mentioned may be incorporated for the purpose of constructing and operating a bridge for railway and general traffic purposes across the St. Lawrence river from the town of Brockville in the province of Ontario, to a point at or near Morristown, in the state of New York—

Section 1 discloses the personnel of those who have been incorporated to build the proposed bridge. They are:

The Right Honourable George Perry Graham, senator, and James Gill Gardner, manufacturer, both of the town of Brockville, in the province of Ontario.

The latter gentleman is one of the directors of the national railways. In fact, several gentlemen connected with the national railways are behind these bridge bills. The other day an engineer of this railway was a promoter of the Sarnia bridge bill. I contend that if anybody should build bridges it is the Canadian National Railways, but the management say they have nothing to do with such projects. It is well known that a large part of the earnings of the road is being diverted by motor busses and motor trucks engaged in local business. This business should be developed near these bridges by the railway management as a feeder to the main line. Another of the incorporators is William Arthur McLean, of the city of Toronto, consulting engineer. For a number of years he was with the highways branch of the Public Works department of Ontario. We seem to be continually playing the game of bridge both inside and ouside of this building; everybody is playing bridge, it seems, this session. When we ask in the railway committee what is the policy of the government in regard to any private bill for a railway or a bridge, and the Minister of Railways is not present, we are told they have no particular policy. Wherever there is a potential gold mine in the way of traffic the national railways have no money to spend; but wherever there is going to be a deficit, such as the branch line business or a hotel venture in Halifax, or an hotel in Paris, they are ready to spend money like water. This bridge should be built by the people and for the people, or by the two governments or the municipal authority. In other words, the national railways should preserve the territory to be served by this bridge as a feeder for their main line. What did Hon. Alfred Smith, governor of New York, say as to his policy with respect to this bridge? I quote:

"Such bridges should be built by the state or states or by one or more governmental subdivisions or by a public municipal authority similar to the port authority," the governor declared in his blanket veto of the three measures. "If such a bridge is to be built over international waters it should be constructed jointly by the United States in conjunction with the Canadian government or by the state of New York in conjunction with the Canadian province affected."

Such projects, the governor felt could be financed at lower cost by the state or federal governments, while, he added, "they are in their very nature public; to authorize privately-owned toll bridges is a step as backward as to authorize privately-owned highways, under the wording of these acts, the franchise is practically made perpetual."

"If it pays private corporations to erect these bridges," the governor's memorandum continued, "it will certainly pay the state to do it. If tolls are to be charged, the state should be the recipient of the tolls, and they should not be in excess of what is required to operate and maintain property, pay the interest on the bonds and make the necessary annual contributions to the sinking fund for their retirement."

These are Hon. Mr. Smith's views for the state of New York—public ownership for this bridge between the two countries.

An hon. MEMBER: Nine o'clock.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hour for private bills having been exhausted, the house will resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider government order No. 11.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act—Mr. Rinfret—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. LADNER: When the committee rose at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I had not finished my remarks, but the Secretary of State has a statement to make, and I will proceed after he has concluded.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not rise to discuss at any length the remarks made by other hon. gentlemen. I stated the case rather fully last night on the second reading of the bill and many of the remarks that have since followed have answered one another. I believe that opportunity should be given every hon. member interested in the bill to present his views as best he sees fit. I do desire, however, to move an amendment to the section now under consideration and that is my purpose in rising at the moment.

Last night, on the second reading of the bill, I endeavoured to indicate the principle underlying the bill, which is to repeal those clauses whereby an applicant is required to go before the courts, and instead to give to the Secretary of State full discretion to consider, either favourably or unfavourably, any application for naturalization. This, I pointed out, is the principle which obtains in Great Britain and in other British dominions as well. The discussion that has taken place since has not disproved that position, but it has been shown by other hon. gentlemen that there might be this difference between the bill as now proposed and the acts in the different dominions: that whilst in this country, if the bill remained in its present form, regulations would issue from the department, in other dominions some of the regulations are made statutory. I appreciate that difference and that is why I am now bringing in this amendment.

I had intended in committee explaining the procedure that would be followed by the department, should this bill be adopted. The applicant would have to send his application to the Secretary of State on a prescribed form, as is done now; and that form is quite expansive, covering all the requirements of the act and also affording an opportunity for ample information on every point involved. The form is sworn by the applicant before a justice of the peace, a commissioner of the superior court, or other person competent for the purpose, and it is intended not only to retain that regulation but, if necessary, to add to the references that will be required to accompany it. It was also the intention of the department, through regulations, to have the fullest investigation conducted into all the facts of every individual case and to give, as is done in other dominions, some degree of publicity to the request for a certificate.

I intimated to the hon. member for Fort William that in the present bill it would be possible in certain cases for the Secretary of State to grant a certificate immediately, without any delay at all. I will say frankly that such was the intention, for this reason: In certain cases where the applicants were well known to the department, and when it was quite easy to verify their application, it would have been desirable that the certificate be granted at once. And I had in mind only exceptional cases of that character. But it was clearly my intention, through regulations, to institute the most severe investigation in every case. But it is impossible to conduct any such investigation except in a period of at least thirty or forty days. I will admit also that from the discussion which has taken place in the house, and from the view generally expressed on all sides, the discretion of the Secretary of State, possibly, should not be made too wide. I have been convinced that it might be better to lose sight of these exceptional cases and to provide for a compulsory delay, and that is the object of the amendment which I now wish to propose. In this amendment it will be stipulated that the applicant shall apply to the Secretary of State on a prescribed form; that the application shall be posted in the post office nearest to the residence of the applicant; and that a compulsory delay of not less than sixty days shall take place before the certificate is granted. All these stipulations were contemplated in the regulations which the department, through myself, would have submitted in the committee stage. I am, however, quite willing to make them statutory, in my great desire if possible to bring about an understanding in regard to this bill. I believe that the amendment which I shall submit to the committee will be acceptable, and that the trend of opposition which has been advanced against the bill will in very large measure disappear. I therefore move:

That the following be inserted after the word "repealed", and the following section be substituted therefor:

22. An alien desiring to be naturalized shall make application therefor in the prescribed form and forward his application to the minister. The minister shall then send notice of such application to the postmaster at the post office nearest to the place of residence of the applicant, and such postmaster shall thereupon post such notice in a prominent place in the said post office and advise the minister thereof. Such posting shall be made at least sixty days before the issue of the certificate of naturalization.

Mr. ARTHURS: What does the hon. gentleman expect to gain by this procedure?

Mr. LADNER: The proposed amendment is undoubtedly a step in the right direction, but it does not go very far; the minister ought to take a leap. He remarks that the trend of the opposition will likely disappear in view of this amendment. Well, in my judgment, after listening to the remarks that have been made, the minister has not touched the real point of objection on the part of a large number of those who oppose the bill. The real point of the objection—in fact, the essential feature of the entire bill—is the step now proposed of taking from the courts the decision as to the fitness and the qualifications of the applicant for citizenship and giving that authority exclusively to the Secretary of State—and I am not at all referring to the minister personally. That in my judgment is the issue before parliament; that is the question which the government should properly review.

Before six o'clock I had summarized the minister's objections to the present law. I believe the objections which he raised were first the distance of the applicant from the court and the expense of attending court, then the fact that courts sometimes adjourn, requiring the applicant to return; the courts are said to sit too infrequently, and the attendance of the applicant is required at inopportune times such as harvesting and trapping. With these points I dealt in my remarks before six o'clock, but the minister stated another objection when he referred to the delay in dealing with the application, and also to the fact that sometimes the clerks of the courts, through their incompetency, receive applications which should not be received, and in that way applicants are sometimes brought to the court only to be sent back home after having gone to some expense. I submit that each of these objections is an exception to the general rule; they are not things which ordinarily happen. Thousands of applications are put through in this country and in 95 per cent or 98 per cent of the cases they go through in the ordinary way with the facilities of the court conveniently at hand, and with a judgment by the court which is fair and reasonable.

I should like to direct the attention of the government to the increase of our population and its racial origin, because in framing laws of this kind I submit we must look to the future. In 1871 Canada had a population of about 3,485,000 people, while by 1921 that population had grown to about 8,788,000, and to-day it is in the neighbourhood of 9,500,000. In 1871 of our then population 60.5 per cent were British, and by 1921 that percentage had fallen to 55.3, the French portion of the population of Canada amounted to 31.2 per cent in 1871, and that figure was reduced by 1921 to 28 per cent. In 1871 the foreign portion of our population totalled 8.3 per cent, but by 1921 it had grown to 16.7 per cent; in other words, while the percentage of the population composed of the two great races decreased, the foreign population increased by more than 100 per cent. It may be argued that 16 per cent is not a large figure as compared with 28 per cent, and it is not my intention to speak of the foreign population with any disrespect. I quote these figures for the purpose of indicating to the government the need of carefully safeguarding the granting of citizenship to this ever-increasing number of foreigners who come from all parts of the globe. It is easy to conceive that within the next fifty years the foreign population may constitute the majority of the people of Canada; we have only to look at the records of the United States following the civil war to see the tremendous immigration which took place into that country. Therefore I contend that in admitting people of foreign origin to citizenship we should surround that procedure with every safeguard.

What are the considerations which come to the minds of the people of Canada, and which should be submitted to the members of this house? We know that the character of the applicants and their loyalty to Canada are important matters, and in admitting foreigners to Canada citizenship we must have regard necessarily to those peculiar characteristics of the different races, which are liable to leave in their minds a feeling of loyalty to their own countries rather than to Canada. The minister now proposes to take away from the courts the duty of determining the fitness of applicants for citizenship, but during the past centuries we have developed through our courts that magnificent institution known as British jurisprudence and British ideals of justice. British justice, as we call it, is one of the great features of present-day civilization, and it has arisen very largely through the judgment and character of those who have occupied judicial positions. Now I put this to the government and to the members of this house: If the members of our judiciary have been able to build up such an institution, which has redounded to the advantage of the British people in such a way, surely they are capable of the very finest conception of citizenship.

The word "citizenship" involves a great man considerations which I will not go into now, but if the Secretary of State is to exercise the functions now discharged by the judiciary in determining the fitness of applicants for citizenship, how will he go about it? I ask hon. members to direct their minds to the regulations which the minister may have in mind; we have had some indication of the method by which he proposes to carry out this undertaking. He cannot examine all these applicants himself, but according to the proposed amendment he intends to have a long form filled out, which will be sent first to Ottawa and then to the postmaster nearest the residence of the applicant. As yet it has not been indicated to us that some responsible officer of the government or some member of the judiciary will look that applicant squarely in the eye and size him up as witnesses are sized up on the witness stand; it has not been shown that he will be asked questions and examined in such a way as to get the benefit of a personal contact without which it is impossible really to judge the character of a man.

Mr. RINFRET: I suppose my hon. friend realizes that what he now suggests is not done in any part of the British Empire except Canada?

Mr. LADNER: I am not discussing that; perhaps we have a system which is superior to that in use in other portions of the British Empire, and we have problems which are more difficult. I have seen Americans come before the courts in Vancouver; Canadian citizenship is highly cherished by them and is carefully safeguarded by the courts. The applicants appear before a judge, who asks a number of questions which help to indicate the character of the man, because we do not want crooks or bad characters in this country. The judges ask their questions in an endeavour to ascertain whether, in case of an emergency, the applicant would remain loyal to Canada rather than to the country of his origin, and in asking these questions the judge, with his trained mind, can determine accurately and clearly whether or not the applicant is a fit and proper person to become a Canadian citizen.

Now let us consider what the Secretary of State proposes. He must work through some agency, and he tells us that he proposes to hold a severe investigation into all the facts of the matter. By what process is that investigation to be carried out? The Secretary of State must rely upon some individual; he must send out a mounted policeman, a homestead inspector or perhaps some appointee of the department. Is there an hon. member of this house who will say that any of those individuals has the competency, the judgment or the ability to determine upon the fitness of an applicant, as compared with a judge? I do not see how the government can justify their action in that respect. They are lowering the standard of citizenship by creating inferior judges to determine the fitness of applicants for naturalization certificates.

Mr. McPHEE: Is my hon. friend not aware that under the act as it stands the investigations are being carried out by the mounted police?

Mr. LADNER: That may be so, under the direction of the court, but the act requires the applicant to appear before the court on three months' notice, and the great proportion of applicants do actually so appear.

I will not take up further time, Mr. Chairman, but in my judgment this proposal is one of the most far-reaching that we have had before parliament for some considerable time, and I repeat that neither the minister nor anybody on the government side has advanced a single sound argument against the present system. Every contention they make is based upon the exceptions which occur, such for example as the court adjourning from some uncertain reason, or the difficulty encountered in some remote section of the country where the court does not sit more than once or twice in a year. But the great majority of applicants are handled with despatch, and the court deals with them under a system which works smoothly and efficiently. The result is a standard of citizenship in this country which we cannot possibly have under the system now proposed by the government, namely, the sending out of agents on behalf of the government to go out and examine these people. I should like to ask the minister now whether he will deny this assertion, that the judiciary, the members of the court, are far better qualified, with their training, their experience, and their independent position, to judge of the fitness and quality of the applicants than any agents which he may send out, homestead agents or mounted police or other police officers.

Mr. RINFRET: Some of the judges have said that they are not. I cited yesterday one communication from the Hon. Chief Justice Meredith. It is a matter of policy and interpretation, and there is nothing in the law or the act that can lead to the formation of a judgment on the cases which come before them.

Mr. LADNER: I might say to the minister that the letter of the learned judge merely states in effect that the statute does not describe what constitutes fitness, that he must take the responsibility, and that in carrying out the law he would prefer that the statute indicate what fitness is. Now, when the minister repeals those sections and leaves the remainder of the act the way he does, the point is not covered at all; he merely transfers to some representative of his the responsibility of judging as to the fitness of the applicant.

Mr. RINFRET: The responsibility therefore is with the Secretary of State, and that is where it belongs, because it is a matter of policy and is for the government to determine. I have in my hand a letter from another learned judge, and I will, if my hon. friend wishes it, place it on record. It is as follows:

Court of King's Bench, Winnipeg.
19th October, 1927.

The Honourable,
The Secretary of State,
Ottawa.

Re Naturalizations

SIR:—

Sitting as a judge in open court this morning, two applications for naturalization came before me, one by a man named Hylko Sikorski, and the other from a man by the name of Frank Skibitzky. Sikorski has been in Manitoba since 1911 and can neither speak, write nor read English. He apparently has homesteaded land and is desirous of obtaining naturalization solely for the purpose of enabling him to secure his patent. The same remarks hold good as to the other man, and I find attached to the application in the Skibitzky case a letter from the Under Secretary of State to the assistant clerk of the court of King's bench here, asking that the attention of the presiding judge should be called to the applicant's lack of qualification in the matter of speaking our language.

I would be glad to know for what reason these applications come before the judges of our court. It is a purely formal matter. We look at the man, ask him a few questions, but rely upon the written application, which, if it complies with the law, we have no course but to confirm, a proceeding which can be as well done by the clerk of the court who takes the applications as by a judge. I know of no reason which would justify a judge in refusing to confirm the application simply because the applicant was unable to read or write or speak the English language.

Please advise me if there are any grounds upon which a judge, under the act, may exercise a discretion in accepting or rejecting the applicants of this kind.

Yours very truly,

J. P. CURRAN,
Judge K.B., Manitoba.

Mr. ARTHURS: Would the minister regard him as a proper man to be a judge in such a case, when he does not know that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: The Conservative government appointed him.

Mr. RINFRET: The point I make is that in the opinion of the judge the appearance before him is a formal matter, and he appeals to the department to help him.

Mr. ARTHURS: He does not know his duty if he says that and the man can neither read nor write.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister agree with the contention of the judge there? Does he think the judge should hesitate for one second about granting citizenship to a man who cannot understand either the English or the French language?

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Mr. RINFRET: Does my hon. friend believe that as Secretary of State I would not refuse a certificate under such circumstances? That is not the point at all. The point is to show that the reference to the courts is a mere formal matter and is of no use whatever, in the opinion of some judges.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, the minister is absolutely wrong. He is relying upon the opinion of a certain judge who does not know the law which he is trying to administer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. RINFRET: I read yesterday the opinion of a very learned judge. It is urged now that the letter of Mr. Justice Meredith does not mean what it says. I want to show from letters of other judges that that opinion is rather common among judges in this land. Here is a letter from Mr. Justice Galt, as follows:

Court of King's Bench, Winnipeg.
September 16, 1924.

The Hon., the Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Re Naturalization Act

SIR:—

As the law now stands, all candidates for naturalization have to come before a judge of the King's Bench here; and our instructions from the department are, practically, to pass on the applications to the department for final decision.

We have little or no discretion, but just put a few formal questions, the answers to which we have no means of verifying. The work is purely ministerial, and could be performed just as well by the official who takes the original application. A lot of valuable time is thus wasted in court, and no object gained, except to comply with the act. Might I respectfully suggest an amendment of the law in this particular?

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. C. GALT.

This is another example of a judge who admits that this procedure is altogether useless and leads nowhere. The purpose of the bill is to give to the Secretary of State under certain regulations, some of which I have now placed on the statute by an amendment, others that will be brought down by the department in the ordinary way, full discretion as it exists in every other British dominion and in Great Britain. This is the only country in which an applicant must first refer his case to the court and in which the discretion of the Secretary of State is limited to pronouncing on cases regarding which the court has reported favourably.

Mr. BOYS: As I understand the minister's suggestion from that quotation, one of the reasons for the changes is that the judges have not time to hear these cases. In the first place I should be surprised to learn that the judge must be a judge of the supreme court. I do not profess to have a technical knowledge of the act but so far as I know a county court judge may perform the service under the act. Therefore I do not see why it is suggested that the case must come before a judge of the king's bench. If it is to be argued before the committee that the judges of the courts of Canada have not time to do this work when there are at least five hundred courts in the Dominion, how in the name of goodness is one man, the minister, to have time to do it?

Mr. RINFRET: I have explained and I will explain again that all the applications come to the department in any case and in these very letters it is stated that the judges come to us for information. We have a whole organization to look into such cases.

Mr. BOYS: In the one case the minister assumes responsibility after a certificate by a competent authority and after a thorough investigation. In the other he assumes the whole responsibility. In the one case one man is doing the work for the whole of Canada, and what is the position in the other? While I am guessing at the number, there are certainly more than seventy-five and there may be a hundred courts in Ontario alone, and I think I am within the mark when I say that there are from four to five hundred in Canada. If the judges have not time to do the work, how can the minister do it and do it thoroughly?

Mr. RINFRET: The comment regarding the time feature is only one of the comments made by the judges. The main point in all these letters is that there is in the act nothing to enable the judges to interpret the requirements as stipulated in the act. This is not a matter of law in their mind. This is a matter of policy for the government to determine, very much so as in regard to the qualifications required from immigrants before they enter the country. The main point is that the government of Canada with a uniform system, and not the judges according to their own feelings, are to determine whether or not a person is fit to be granted naturalization.

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not think the minister has informed the committee as to who has asked for this legislation. Are the judges responsible for it?

Mr. RINFRET: I think I have said that also. Complaints have been received from remote parts of the country where applicants find it so hard to go before the courts that in most cases they are discouraged from doing so. It has been argued this afternoon that naturalization is a precious gift and that we should be very careful in granting it. I do not dissociate myself altogether from that point of view, but I wish to argue also that not only is it desirable but it is the duty of the government when persons have entered the country according to the immigration laws, have resided here the required time, and are qualified for naturalization, that we should make it as easy as we can for them to establish the requirement and to become Canadian citizens.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister think that if they cannot speak English or French they should be naturalized?

Mr. RINFRET: After this act has been passed no applicant will be naturalized unless it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State that he can speak either French or English. I will add this, that there are many judges sitting in our courts who are not competent to decide whether an applicant speaks French or not, because they do not speak it themselves.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is an easy remark to make, and it may be true; but at the same time the minister is basing his whole argument on the opinion of one judge who wants to be relieved of a couple of cases where according to the minister's own statement they cannot speak either French or English. I do not see any demand for this legislation. There is certainly none in the province I represent and I do not think there is any from any right-minded citizen in Canada. Let me read the legislation that is proposed to be repealed. The first section simply defines clerks of the courts; it is immaterial. Let us take sections 22 to 27 inclusive, which are to be repealed by this legislation: Section 22 reads:

> An alien desiring to be naturalized shall apply for a decision establishing that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act to any judge of any superior court or to any judge of any circuit, district or county court, and in the province of Ontario the court of general sessions of the peace and in the Northwest territories to such authorities or persons as the governor in council may prescribe.

Is there any objection to that? That is being repealed. Section 23 reads:

> The application shall be delivered at the office of the clerk or other proper office of the court during office hours, and such application shall be posted by such clerk or other proper officer in a conspicuous place in his office, continuously for a period of at least three months before the application is heard by the court.

The minister has not yet said what he proposes to substitute for that. He says that proper notice will be given, but he does not give any decision as to how that notice shall be given. Section 23 applies only to the notice which shall be given to the public as to the application of any alien for naturalization. Section 24 refers to opposition to an application, and I understand from the remarks of the minister that so far no provision has been made for this under the legislation as proposed by him, so that under the bill before us there is no opportunity for anybody to oppose an application for naturalization.

Mr. RINFRET: There is nothing to prevent anyone from opposing it. The notice is posted in the post office for months.

Mr. ARTHURS: Under section 24 there is a direct invitation by law regarding opposition to the naturalization of any alien, and the minister is repealing that invitation. In regard to the proof of qualification the evidence is brought in the first place before the court, and the man must appear personally in court. After that, under the present act, the minister has an oportunity to investigate the case; and I can say this much for the minister and for the administration, that I believe they have pursued the right course, namely, that regardless of whether the judge has passed upon an application or not, they have in the majority of cases sent the mounted police to investigate the circumstances. That is all they propose to do in the future, and that is what they are doing now under the present act. The minister will confirm what I say. He cannot deny it. He knows that every application is followed up by the mounted police and is confirmed before he grants a certificate. Is that not the case?

Mr. RINFRET: I more than know it; I have stated it many times.

Mr. ARTHURS: I know the minister said that it would occur under the amending bill if passed, but it is done at present, so he is adding nothing to the law as it exists.

Mr. RINFRET: We do not desire to add anything.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, but the minister is taking away a great many precautions.

Mr. RINFRET: Not precautions, but certain matters of procedure which do not prevail anywhere except in Canada.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Mr. ARTHURS: They prevail in Canada and we want them to continue to prevail, because they are proper safeguards. I do not think the minister should ask for any more discretion than is given him in section 27 of the present act, which reads, in part, "the minister may thereupon in his absolute discretion" decide whether this man shall or shall not be granted a certificate of naturalization. What more can the minister ask for? I grant you that the minister has covered himself with all sorts of virtues. He sends out the mounted police and has investigations made, and he promises this house that he will do the same thing in the future, except that there will not be the safeguards that are contained in this act.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend unduly, but he has been putting questions to me, and that is my reason for rising. The word "thereupon" is essential in the clause from which my hon. friend has just quoted. It means that the minister has absolute discretion only after the cases have been reported on favourably by the court. They are reported on favourably or not reported at all, so the minister has discretion only after a favourable decision of the court.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does the minister want to grant naturalization to somebody of whom the courts do not approve?

Mr. RINFRET: No, but I want to do away with the reference to the courts.

Mr. ARTHURS: The only case the minister can decide is one that has been reported on favourably by the court.

Mr. RINFRET: That is what we want to change.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It seems to me that the proposed change in the legislation boils itself down to this, that certain persons named by the minister are to be substituted to do what is now being done by the judges. I believe that is a retrogade step, a step in the wrong direction, and I desire to place myself on record against it. The getting of immigrants into this country is more than a question of numbers. It is a question as well of the advisability and the possibility of mixing old world and new world cultural characteristics. That should be safeguarded to the fullest possible extent. Our situation in Canada is not the same, for instance, as that of Australia or New Zealand, where the population is nearly all of one race and of one tongue. We have two dominating and principal races in this country and surely the idea that was in the minds of those who first framed this Naturalization Act, in requiring that the immigrant be conversant with either the French or the English language, was a wise one; surely it was a proper move, and one that was intended to back up and support the two principal races in this country on whose shoulders rests, and must rest, the responsibility for the future progress and development of the Dominion of Canada.

It would be unreasonable for us as native-born Canadians to expect from the stranger within our gates, the foreign immigrant, the same regard for British institutions and for the soil of Canada as we have who were born and raised in this country. But if we are to do our duty to our country we must, it seems to me, impress upon the stranger within our gates the advisability of perpetuating British ideals and British institutions, and when a man is seeking his certificate of naturalization, which is a very serious and important matter, it seems to me that to send him before a judge for whom he has respect is to place his Canadian citizenship in a dignified position. Surely no person can contend that it would be better to delegate the powers now exercised by the courts to a policeman or to some agent of the government, no matter who he might be. It may be true, as the minister has said, that certain judges have objected along certain lines, but the regulations which will be provided for the guidance of those who are to enforce this act will be no more specific to those who have not had the advantage of a legal training than they are at the present time for the judges of the land. A policeman or an agent appointed by the government will certainly be no better qualified to form an opinion as to the desirablity of granting a certificate of naturalization than one of the judges of our courts. I regard this proposal as a step absolutely in the wrong direction. All over this country we feel that the judges are men who through their training as well as their position are the most competent to take upon themselves this responsibility, and whether correctly or not, and I am disposed to say correctly, we regard our judges as outside of politics. No matter how many political strings they may have pulled to get a judgeship, once they are appointed to the bench we regard them as having no partisan bias, and that I believe is generally true.

I am not interested at all in the argument which has been advanced by the minister, and quite sincerely I believe, with regard to the unnecessary expense and inconvenience to which certain foreigners are put in order to obtain their naturalization certificate. I believe that the strangers within our gates, immigrants from foreign lands, who have lived in the west or in any other part of Canada for the number of years required under the statute before they can obtain their certificate, have been here long enough to be impressed with the fact, or at all events we should have impressed upon them the fact, that this is their country, and I believe that in the vast majority of cases, yes, I will say in almost ninety per cent of the cases, they want to get their citizenship papers. In the great majority of cases the foreigner who has lived in this country for a number of years, and who has succeeded far better in this country than he ever did in the country of his origin, is very proud to regard this as his land, and he will not be stopped from obtaining his certificate by the matter of a few dollars or a little temporary inconvenience to which he is put in obtaining a citienship which he values, and has the right to value, very highly. We have in this country, and are bound to have for many years to come, people from all parts of the world, and especially since the war, who have been trying to get away from those war-torn countries of Europe and the conditions under which they lived there, conditions in some cases little better than slavery. In the main, I think, these immigrants are endeavouring to make good in this country, and I believe the majority of them are coming to regard Canada as their country. They will not be retarded, therefore, or discouraged from obtaining the rank and dignity of citizenship by the little inconvenience of travelling a few miles or spending a few dollars in order to appear before one of the judges of our land in order that their papers of citizenship may be made out.

What better off are they if they have to depend upon the judgment of one man, we will say? It is utterly impossible, and I know this is as obvious to the minister as it is to every other member of the house, for the minister or any one person occupying the position of Secretary of State to pass personally upon all these cases. In the last analysis he must delegate his authority to agents, who, acting for him and on his behalf, must inspect and question applicants for naturalization as the judges do now. I do not think anyone will attempt to argue that any persons to be named as such agents, mounted police, homestead inspectors or others, could perform the functions now discharged by our judges any better or with greater dignity and impressiveness, so far as the immigrant is concerned.

I see in this proposal a very clear indication of a coming election. Already we have a small army of government officials watching every hen that lays an egg and marking it as first, second, or third grade; we have another small army of officials with regard to vegetables, another with regard to roots, and another with regard to hay and straw; and now, if this bill passes, we are to have still another army of government agents. Before the next election they will go out and impress upon the foreigner who is seeking naturalization the advisability in his own interests of supporting the government of the day, in return for which he will be given his naturalization papers—perhaps without any cost to himself. I see no justification whatever for the proposed change, and I can only conclude that back of it is the desire to give the minister authority to appoint another army of agents to do what is now being done so satisfactorily by the judges, who are non-partisan. The minister himself cannot possibly exercise this power in person, and he cannot assure us that those to whom he proposes to delegate it will exercise it without partisanship.

But I can readily understand why the government is seeking in this way to bolster up its waning fortunes. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has the doubtful distinction of being the only prime minister since confederation who has attained office without a majority of the votes of the people. He has fought three elections, and in none has his government ever had the support of a majority of the electorate. That, of course, must be ever-present in the minds of himself and his supporters. Hence the desire to reinforce themselves in the next general election by passing legislation from time to time for the appointment of an army of agents in the persons of egg, vegetable, root, hay and straw inspectors, and now an army of naturalization agents.

The principle of this bill is wrong. It is a retrograde step. There has been no demand from the press, from the judiciary or from the public, except in one or two isolated cases where an immigrant who wanted to secure citizenship papers has got someone to tell the government that an agent should be appointed to go to his home and relieve him of all worry and responsibility in obtaining naturalization. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, if the Dominion has the advantages which we claim for it it should not be necessary for us to spend tens of millions of dollars on immigration. But we have gone out into the highways and byways and fairly dragged in immigrants, and afterwards we have had almost to put shackles on them to keep them here. We are cheapening this country by our over-anxiety with respect to immigration, and I think we are cheapening it still further when we give the foreigner who has come here the impression that naturalization is something of very little account after all, and that he can go before any Tom, Dick or Harry and at no personal trouble or expense become a citizen of this great Dominion.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the discussion, but I have not yet had an answer from the Secretary of State to the question as to who will conduct the investigation at his instance after the application for naturalization has been received. The member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) states that the mounted police will do this, but I should like to get the information straight from the Secretary of State himself.

Mr. McPHEE: I said at the present time the investigations are being made by the mounted police.

Mr. EVANS: Let the minister answer, please.

Mr. McPHEE: The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) referred to the statement made by me.

Mr. STEVENS: He said he wanted to hear from the Secretary of State.

Mr. RINFRET: I have already stated several times that every means of inquiry that is now in use is at the command of the department of the Secretary of State. Only a few minutes ago when moving my amendment I indicated what would be the procedure if this bill goes through. An applicant for naturalization will have to file with the Secretary of State a form, filled out by him under oath, giving all particulars in accordance with the requirements of the law. Those particulars will then be investigated by the Secretary of State.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: By whom?

Mr. RINFRET: Through an officer of the mounted police or an inspector of homesteads or any other officer at the command of the department. The application will also be posted in the nearby post office, where it can be seen by everyone knowing the applicant, and it will be possible for any such person having any objection to the application being granted to make representations to the department. After sixty days the Secretary of State will be in a position to pronounce on the application; or he may require further information until to his satisfaction the applicant has complied with all the necessary requirements. And once more I repeat that, although this may seem most extraordinary to my hon. friends opposite, it is the procedure and the principle applied not only in Great Britain, but in every other dominion of the empire.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the minister propose to have someone see the applicants personally?

Mr. RINFRET: These applicants will be seen either by an officer of the mounted police, or by an inspector, or by someone else.

Mr. ARTHURS: Are they not seen in that way now?

Mr. RINFRET: In some cases.

Mr. ARTHURS: In all cases; and then they appear before a judge.

Mr. RINFRET: I have tried to make it clear that the judges themselves admit that such appearance is a useless formality.

Mr. McGIBBON: What judges have said so?

Mr. RINFRET: I have given the names of two.

Mr. EVANS: I must say that the amendment which the minister moved a little while ago gets rid of a good deal of my objection to the bill. But surely he must have thought out some mode of procedure as to who will conduct the investigation, and he should give it straight to the committee. As the bill stands this is left wide open—just as a system of patronage would be in the appointment of postmasters or any other officials—to whoever has the gift of patronage in the riding. That is what it looks like to me, and I cannot understand the reticence of the Secretary of State on this point. I want it cleared up.

Mr. STEVENS: As my hon. leader (Mr. Bennett) observed this afternoon, this is perhaps the most important piece of legislation that has come before this house during the present session. I had intended discussing the question on the second reading of the bill when, through an oversight, it was referred to the committee. I will therefore take this opportunity of making such observations as I have to offer. I may as well come directly to the point raised by the hon. member for Rosetown and which has already been discussed in some measure. It is this: that by this legislation we are taking the question of naturalization out of the hands of the court and placing it exclusively in the hands of the Secretary of State. The question is propounded: What means does the Secretary of State propose to take to ascertain how these 16,917 applicants in one year may be properly examined so that he may give a fair decision in regard to their fitness for naturalization? That is the question. Hon. members may as well get clearly in their minds the fact that last year there were 16,917 applicants, practically 17,000. If we have got some idea of the magnitude of that task, which I think is readily appreciated, then we must realize that it is impossible for the Secretary of State and even for a substantial corps of officers in Ottawa to scrutinize this number of applications. The Secretary of State will not do it; he knows he will not do it. The Secretary of State cannot do it; physically or mentally it is impossible. Let us therefore at once dismiss it from our minds as an impossibility. Who then will do the work? Who are the people that will do it? At the present time it is done by one or other of some three or four hundred judges in Canada.

When this matter was brought up a few years ago, and it was proposed to give to the courts the authority to decide the question, I remember it was the particular appeal to this house of gentlemen in the party now represented by the Progressive group, and by others as well, that we should place it under the jurisdiction of the judges of Canada. It was pointed out that the two old parties, by habit and custom, had the inclination to inject politics into matters of this kind. That was the argument that was advanced, and as a matter of fact we agreed with it. This act was then brought into force.

Now what is the position taken by the minister? He has read three letters from judges indicating certain defects in or impediments to the present method. In the first place let me say this to the minister—and I say it without any desire to reflect upon the courts, because I am one who at all times, in the house and out of it, has stood for the preservation of the dignity and the integrity of the courts of this country. I will take second place to no one in that regard. But I believe there is a tendency on the part of some judges to look upon this phase of their work as incidental and not primary. Let me analyse briefly Chief Justice Meredith's letter or document which was placed on Hansard yesterday. I shall do so briefly, but I think it will lend a different complexion to the argument that judges are opposed to the present method. And I invite the Secretary of State to interrupt me if I put a wrong construction on any of these quotations. Certainly I have no desire to do so. In the first place, Chief Justice Meredith points out that the power is in the hands of the Secretary of State to grant or to refuse a certificate. He lays that down as the premises or basis of his discussion. He goes further: he says that the judges have now no power to grant naturalization. In other words, he indicates that the judge's power is limited to merely examining and reporting and not to granting. Then he points out that there rests in the Secretary of State the absolute discretion regarding the refusal to issue a naturalization certificate; and he proceeds:

> Nor does there seem to be anything to prevent an applicant, whose application has failed when made to a judge or court or authority or person, applying again—

To secure a certificate by any other means. The Secretary of State properly pointed out a moment ago that his discretion was limited to refusing applications that were passed on to him, but that he had no discretion to grant an application that had been refused by the court. That, he suggests, is one of the disabilities under the act. Let us examine that point briefly to see what force there is in the argument. Let us grant for the sake of argument that, perchance, some individuals worthy of naturalization are refused by a judge. Let us grant that for the sake of argument. We are sorry for such a person as an individual, if the case comes to our notice; anyone would be. But we are dealing with 17,000 cases; let us not forget that. Now is it a mater of prime concern that there may be some error or some alleged wrong in a few cases, or is it more important that we as a parliament should consider the safeguarding of 17,000 cases? That is the point which we must consider. I admit that whether it be on a question of naturalization or in matters of procedure from day to day, in the adjudication of cases in the courts, there are undoubtedly some instances in which full and complete justice is not done. But we do know from experience that, in the main, the judges of this country give fair decisions on matters that come before them. There is a point which possibly we might consider in this regard—I am not advancing this as desirable, but I say that it is open to consideration—namely, whether or not an individual who has been refused approval of his application by the judge should have some recourse. I am not saying that it is not desirable; it is worthy of examination. Now, Chief Justice Meredith asks the question:

> Who is a fit and proper person to be naturalized? It is really a question of policy.

The minister paused there when quoting from Chief Justice Meredith, indicating that it is a question of policy that may be determined by any judge. But Chief Justice Meredith does not say that. He says:

> It is really a question of policy of the country.

Then he observes to the Secretary of State, addressing him with all respect: "You have not given to us"—the judges—"any lead as to what the policy of the country is."

Reading this report of Chief Justice Meredith's, I gather that he does not refer to the policy of the government but to the policy of parliament, as representing the whole Dominion of Canada, suggesting that it is the duty of parliament to come to some decision regarding the general policy to be applied to the granting of naturalization in Canada. I pause to examine that suggestion, which I think is a good one. I take the stand, first, that we have a dual duty to immigrants coming to Canada. Our first duty when an immigrant lands in the country is to see that he has a square deal, has the protection of the laws of the country, of which he is ignorant, and is given an opportunity to establish himself. That is our first duty. Our second duty to the immigrant is, in my estimation, to see that he is offered a reasonable opportunity to be informed in his civic duties in a strange land. Then I say we owe a duty to ourselves to see that no one receives a naturalization certificate who does not demonstrate that he is gratified to receive it. Now I cite the letter which my hon. friend mentioned a moment ago from a judge in Winnipeg. He complained about these two individuals, but I see no reason for his complaint; the statute is clear and he should not need to look for guidance other than that which he could find in subsection (b) of section 4 of part II of this act, which states:

> . . . . that he is of good character and has an adequate knowledge of either the English or French languages. . . .

That is statutory; it is not optional with the judge and it does not matter what his opinion of those individuals might be. The statute says that an applicant must have a knowledge of either the French or the English language. Some hon. gentleman might say "But these two men were farmers who had homesteaded and who had been in this country since 1911." Let us examine that for a moment: Here were two men who had been in this country since 1911; they had completed their homestead obligations and yet, after sixteen years, they had not acquired a knowledge of either the English or the French language; in this case I presume it would be the English language. I submit that if these two men, or men like them, did not take sufficient interest in the affairs of Canada and in the privileges of citizenship to acquire even an elementary knowledge of the English or the French language, they are not entitled to citizenship, and the judge had no occasion to be mystified or puzzled in that regard.

Then Chief Justice Meredith of Ontario, referring to the privileges of citizenship, said:

> Besides making, as far as this Dominion can, the alien a British subject with all that that means, these things may be mentioned, not all but some of the more important: it gives to the person one of the qualifications to become law-makers in this Dominion, in the senate, the House of Commons, the provincial legislatures, and the lesser law-making councils; a right to vote; a qualification as juror, so that the man may adjudge among his fellow men even in questions of life or death; and a right to fill some public offices; and it prevents expulsion from Canada—deportation, as it is called.

The learned judge says these are some of the privileges enjoyed by a naturalized citizen, and the whole gravamen of the argument of Mr. Justice Meredith was mildly to chide the minister, not personally but as the present occupant of the position, for not giving a sufficient lead to the judiciary of Canada in order that there might be a fairly uniform estimate of what constitutes a sufficiently good character to qualify for naturalization. That sums up the case presented by the judges, and I would like to summarize that feature of it. First, it shows an inclination not to do this work because it is of a secondary character, and secondly it shows the lack of a lead from headquarters regarding a uniform classification of the qualifications necessary.

What does the minister propose? He suggests that we repeal these sections, that we take this power entirely away from the courts and place it under his own absolute control. I should like to make a few arguments or suggestions to the minister now. Already the question has been asked as to how the minister will satisfy himself; I have intimated that it will be impossible for him to do so personally, so we will let that point go. Now I ask him if he will accept recommendations from let us say the mayor of a town, the reeve of a district, or the postmaster of the vicinity? Will he accept recommendations from political friends? I do not say that offensively, because I apply exactly the same argument to whoever may be in office. Will the minister who occupies for the time being the position of Secretary of State accept recommendations from his political friends? I think the answer must be in the affirmative, whatever party is in power. I think we all understand human nature well enough to know that if from any one of the 245 ridings of Canada there is presented to the minister a list of applications for naturalization supported by gentlemen who are known to the minister, he might very well say, "Why should we not accept these applications? We know the men who are recommending them and we have confidence in them." That is the natural answer. But let us carry it one step further. Let us eliminate for the moment any member of this house, or any lady or gentleman who has been a candidate for office; let us say those persons will offer sound advice. Are they the persons who will necessarily support these applications? They are not; it goes down the line to the ordinary party worker of whatever party it may be, and this applies to my friends of the Progressive group just as it applies to the old historic parties. They will not deny this; if they happened to be in office and the party organizers or workers came forward with recommendations for naturalization, I submit that the minister would find it very difficult to refuse them, and that would apply to all parties. The minister says he has a method by which he can control this matter, but we should like to hear that definitely described in order that we may satisfy ourselves that it is surrounded by safeguards which cannot be broken through. I submit to the minister, as one having had a good deal of experience in political matters, that it cannot be done, and I say that in all earnestness. I recall a time before this act was passed, in 1910 or 1911, when one group of 120 Italians were naturalized simply by an individual getting their applications. I do not say that simply because it was done by my opponents, but they were all naturalized en bloc. That is not right.

Mr. RINFRET: Their applications were passed upon by the court, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. STEVENS: They never appeared before the court; under the old act they could become naturalized in that way, and I want to point out to the minister that that sort of thing is not right no matter by whom it is practised. That is the reason why some of us at least are exceedingly anxious that the courts shall be the medium through which this work shall be carried out.

Now I wish very briefly to analyze the amendment of the minister, because he advances it as a solution of the very problem which I am now discussing. Before doing so, however, just as an aside I should like to draw the attention of the chairman to the fact that this bill should be reprinted with this new provision, in order that we may get the full effect of it. Now let us examine this amendment, which simply says that when the applications are received by the minister they shall be sent to the postmaster of the district in which the applicant lives. I happen to have in my hand the Postmaster General's report. There are 12,440 post offices and postmasters in Canada. I have not had time to count them, but of that number nearly one half are what they call non-accounting post offices, that is minor post offices. I venture the assertion that 25 per cent of these will be found either in private homes or in little stores in outlying places where the postmaster has a revenue of a few dollars a year, and where the post office is maintained merely for the convenience of our frontier, isolated districts. Just here I wish to pay this tribute to these postmasters: woefully underpaid as we know them to be, they are rendering to the country a very excellent service; there is no question of that. But is it reasonable to expect that a postmaster getting a small revenue, as I know some of them do—many of them get but $14, $22, $36, $41, $61 a year, and so on, a mere bagatelle; they are not keeping the post office for the money there is in it, because the revenue they get does not pay them for the rent of the place—I ask you, in those hundreds of cases is it reasonable to expect that the postmaster is going to attend earnestly and intelligently to the enforcement of this act? The minister proposes that when he receives an application he will send it back to the post office nearest the district where the applicant lives. I submit that the great proportion of the naturalization applications will come from the western section of Canada, and the newer districts of the western section, where the post offices are of the lesser type to which I have referred; and so the minister is going to send the application back to the postmaster of that district. At once I submit that it is unreasonable to expect that that postmaster will render a reasonable service; it will not be done, and it is not reasonable that we should ask it to be done. That is my first point. Then my second point is this—

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Does the hon. member suggest that to post a notice is a hardship on any of these men who give such excellent service at such a low price?

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member for Saskatoon is speaking ironically, but I am quite sincere in this. I submit that it is not reasonable to expect that the postmaster with a post office in his home in a remote district—and there are hundreds of them—is going to render the service required of him in respect to this Act.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend will realize that the smaller the post office the less the population around it, and the fewer the applications which will come from that part of the country.

Mr. STEVENS: That does not follow. I have already indicated that it is from the districts with the smaller population that the larger number of applications will come. It is to the newer districts, where they can get cheap land, that the immigrants are going. The postmaster is to post this notice in a prominent place. I ask again, who is going to check up to see whether the posting is done, and say whether for sixty days the application has been so posted? And now I point out another difficulty. Here is a district in western Canada—or in old Ontario, if you like, I do not care where you take it; a county town in Ontario, a railway or elevator town on the prairies—where there are a store, an elevator and a hotel, and that is where the county court judge will come from time to time and hold his sittings. That is the place to which the people from the outlying districts come every week or two to buy their groceries and whatever other goods or commodities they may desire, and that is the best place to post the notice—where citizens who know the district and have a fair opportunity to judge may see the posting. But the minister wants to have the posting done at isolated post offices, where very few will see it, there is the least likelihood of its coming to the notice of anyone fitted to judge. On the other hand, if it were to go to the county town, to the municipal or township centre, to the post office or judge's court there, then there would be reasonable opportunity of its being seen. All that, however, is wiped out, and the minister substitutes for it this proposal.

I come to another point. I do not wish to be offensive, but I am going to state it to my hon. friend the Postmaster General. During the past few years the Postmaster General has discharged 400 postmasters throughout Canada—

Mr. VENIOT: You are making a mistake, sir—421.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not for a moment bringing into question his reasons, or the fact that these postmasters were dismissed; the point is that they were relieved of their positions. Is it not again a reasonable deduction that if the practice of discharging a postmaster for political offences is to be followed and recognized in this country, to place the administration of the Naturalization Act under the postmasters in outlying districts will open the way for the exercise of undue influence, to put it mildly?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

An hon. MEMBER: Everybody is not dishonest.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman made the statement that 400 postmasters were dismissed, and I stated that the number was 421, to make it correct. The hon. gentleman draws the inference that the 421 were dismissed for political reasons. Some of them were, certainly, but not all the 421. I do not want that to be misunderstood.

Mr. STEVENS: Possibly not; I am quite willing to take the minister's word. I am going to state the fact to the house, and the members can judge for themselves. I am not going to press it, but the point I desire to make is that to place this very important duty in the hands of postmasters, the great majority of whom in the rural and outlying districts are men, and very often women, who receive a mere pittance and give only a very small portion of their time to the work, is not to have the investigation with respect to naturalization carried out as it should be.

Under section 24, which the minister proposes to repeal, anyone desiring to make or offer opposition to an application must appear before the judge and file or make his opposition there. Now that is a fair and reasonable safeguard to the applicant. Let me put it a little differently. An applicant comes before a judge of the county court. He claims a right to naturalization, and he proves his case. The notice is posted for three months, and then if someone in the neighbourhood says: I object to this man being given a certificate of naturalization, he must appear before the local judge and file or make his opposition there. That safeguard to the applicant the minister does away with, and what does he substitute for it? The application is made to the minister, it is sent to a remote post office or to some post office, and there it is posted. I may write to the minister, or anybody may write to the minister, a friend may write him and secretly, without going before any public tribunal at all, object to the applicant being given naturalization. One might object to a whole batch of applications. What safeguard is there for the applicant? None whatever except the personal good faith of the minister. I have already pointed out that the personal good faith of the minister is impossible, because last year 17,000 applications were filed. The system proposed by the minister is not comparable in thoroughness or in the elements of justice with the system that he proposes to repeal. The minister intimates that in repealing the three months' notice he is going to substitute for it a sixty days' notice posting in the post office. I have already sufficiently analysed that to show that the latter is not comparable with the former. In the first instance the application is posted up by the clerk of the court. In the latter it is posted up in a post office in a more or less remote district. Under the present law the clerk of the court exercises a very large measure of jurisdiction, shall I say, over the technique of the application. The judge does not attend to the posting; the clerk of the court attends to that. A man comes in, fills in his application before the clerk of the court and it is pinned on to the board where notices of that character are exposed to public view. But under the proposed law there is no officer to fill out the application. The application will be filled out by whom? Nobody knows. By the mounted police? It is not likely that we are going to have a whole corps of mounted police throughout this country going around soliciting people to become naturalized. By homestead inspectors? Surely they have jobs to keep them busy. Are the postmasters going to do this? Certainly not. There is no one cited in the new system who will do it. The minister might say; Well, under section 28 I am going to exercise the power to make regulations. This matter is so serious and important that the committee has a right to know every detail of the proposed modus operandi. No more precious gift can this country bestow upon a newcomer than that of citizenship; and furthermore, as my leader pointed out very clearly this afternoon, we are conferring not only Canadian citizenship, which is a matter entirely within our own jurisdiction, but, under a joint agreement with the other sections of the empire, imperial citizenship as well.

I do not intend to proceed further with the argument. I have presented these views largely because I have for many years been deeply impressed with the necessity in Canada of so framing our regulations and laws in connection with naturalization that when those who are naturalized receive the rights of citizenship they will appreciate the fact that they are becoming citizens of one of the greatest countries in the world, a country in which citizenship should be most highly prized.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not intend to speak on this bill in committee, but some statements made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre lead me to ask a question or two in order that I may see whether or not I understood him aright. In connection with the pittance received by postmasters, referring to the list he held in his hand he mentioned $15, $21, $40, and so on, as the revenue the postmaster gets. That is not the pay the postmaster receives; that is the revenue of the office. If the revenue is only $10, the postmaster gets his minimum just the same, which would be $60—

Mr. STEVENS: Sixty dollars a year?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, but the hon. member left the impression that in one case he got $15, in another $21, and in another $40. The minimum is $60 up to a revenue of $120, and for any revenue from $120 up to a certain other figure, $500 or $600, fifty per cent is added to the minimum.

Mr. SPENCER: How long has the minimum been $60? It used to be a good deal less than that.

Mr. VENIOT: It has been $60 for years.

Mr. SPENCER: In the early days the minimum was $30.

Mr. VENIOT: That makes no difference. It is $60 now and it has been for at least the last ten or fifteen years. So that the postmaster is getting a little more than my hon. friend would have the committee believe.

While I am on my feet, let me point out that under the present law the notice must be posted only in one place, namely, in the office of the clerk of the court, and the applicant for naturalization may live seventy-five miles away from the seat of the court. In such a case who is there seventy-five miles away from the court who will see the notice in order to raise an objection? Under the proposed amendment the notice is posted in the post office of the locality where the applicant lives, and his neighbours will have an opportunity of finding out what is being done. That is the advantage under the amendment. My hon. friend saw that advantage, but it suited his case not to point it out.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. McGIBBON: Is the minister not aware that hundreds of these country post offices really do not have such a thing as an office; that they hand the mail through a wicket in a door to the person outside?

Mr. VENIOT: During the last two years in my tour from the Atlantic to the Pacific I have visited a great many post offices.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. VENIOT: I made the tour in the discharge of my duty and I visited many of the offices.

An hon. MEMBER: That accounts for the casualties.

Mr. VENIOT: And there will be more if some of them continue to do as they have been doing in the past, stealing the public money. That is how many of the casualties occur. As regards the country post offices with the small revenues as stated by my hon. friend, there are not as many as he would lead the committee to believe. There are about four thousand post offices with a revenue of less than $150 a year, about two thousand with a revenue between $150 and $400 a year, about three thousand with a revenue between $400 and $1,000, and in the remainder the revenue is above $1,000. I just wish to make that correction, because I felt that the hon. gentleman was leaving the wrong impression on the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: After listening to the excellent speech delivered by the Secretary of State last night I did not think it would be necessary for me to supplement his remarks by any of my own; but I have been privileged to live for nearly fifty years in the west under two systems of naturalization and I have had an opportunity of judging the merits of each system. Prior to 1914 the method was very simple. The leader of the opposition says that it was capable of abuse, but I do not know anything that cannot be abused if you want to abuse it. We had a system there which was very, very simple and easy to understand. Of course if anybody wanted to abuse it, it could be abused just like anything else. I have made out hundreds of these applications myself and sent them to the court, where they were examined and posted, and then sent on to Ottawa before the certificates were finally issued. Then we had another system that we tried out, and the effect of it was to throw such restrictions around the naturalization of new settlers that many of the settlers have remained disfranchised to this day. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. We have been eating it a few years now, and we know what the results are, Mr. Chairman, we all know what the effect of disfranchising the Uitlanders in South Africa was, and we can imagine the feeling of those who believe that they are eligible for naturalization, and yet are prevented from obtaining it by one kind of restriction and another, although we are professing to extend to them the right hand of citizenship. What have been those restrictions? Instead of sending the document to the courts, as in the early days, and having them established there, they had to go themselves in person to the courts. It became a new species of sport, running down a judge and never knowing where and when you were going to find him.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the sort of thing the Minister of Justice laughs at.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know what I am talking about. My hon. friend said that he knew what he was talking about when there was all this kind of slippery work going on—

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman desires to infer that I had anything to do with the crooked work, he will withdraw that statement at once.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I said nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman said that he was familiar with it, that he was associated—

Mr. BENNETT: I can say that the party the minister belongs to benefited by it in Saskatchewan in 1905.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That has always been a sore point with my hon. friend. We got there in 1905, and we are there yet.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is you would like to remain there by the same methods.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend does not need to talk about methods.

Mr. McGIBBON: You are where you are because of Athabaska.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Hon. gentlemen can picture the difficulty of many of our new settlers in hunting for a judge. Whether he lives along the same line of railway as the settler or across country, the fact remains that many of our judges are so inaccessible, especially in those districts where you find the pioneers, in the frontier districts, that these settlers are to all intents and purposes disfranchised. Now is that wise? You can talk until you are black in the face about the theory of it, but I am giving the practical side of it, and if we are going to build up a contented country and give to our new settlers the privilege of citizenship that we promised them, we should not put obstructions in their way. That is all there is to it.

The tendency of the Conservative party, since ever I knew it, always has been just a little restrictive about the franchise, and I can remember the time when it was not only restrictive, but in 1917 it was actually selective. Having regard to that well-known predisposition of my hon. friends opposite, we should not be surprised at the attitude they are taking to-day, because they are only running true to form. I would have been astonished had they taken any other course. On the other hand, it may be that the Liberal party has been a little too lenient, if you like, but if we are to err, is not that the proper side on which to err, in the interests of peace and good government and the encouragement of people to come here? We are not going to get settlers to come here if you disfranchise them that way, and in many other ways that I do not need to refer to now. That is one of the deterrents to immigration, for settlers to find out that they are not treated as citizens when they should be so treated. I am giving the facts, Mr. Chairman, as I know them to be, and every resident in the west knows them to be the facts, and knows that many people in the west who are really eligible to vote are not enfranchised, and will not be, until they are given better facilities for finding the court and the judge where they can make out the necessary documents before getting the certificate.

Another point. On the frontier, where our new settlers are, is not the place where you find the judges. They are in our larger towns and cities, in the centres of civilization, while our immigrants are away on the frontier, not only one hundred or one hundred and fifty but sometimes over two hundred miles away. What is the use of telling that man about the advantages of naturalization and being a citizen of Canada, when the judge is practically inaccessible to him? I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the new law should be changed in this respect. We have tried the two methods and have seen how they work out. If my hon. friends opposite have any other reason why they do not want to extend the franchise to these new settlers, they should advance a better reason than they have given to the house to-night. I am in favour of this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is an entirely new measure. It is different from and at variance with the bill as introduced, and the bill should be reprinted before we go further. The bill is not out of committee, and we do not purpose that it shall leave the committee to-night. The measure that was originally introduced was a measure to repeal certain sections. The measure now before the house is to set up a new method by which notice may be given. That is the bill that we are asked to report, and no notice was given of this amendment. There was sent across to me this evening, after the minister had spoken, a section that in my judgment is at variance, as I read it, with some other sections of the bill which are not repealed. Has the Minister of Justice considered the relation of this section to other sections of the bill?

The minister has not yet told this house the one thing we have insisted upon knowing, and which we purpose to know some time before this house prorogues. How does he intend to obtain the knowledge that will enable him to exercise his discretion? That question has been asked over and over and over again. At present it is obtained by a judge. The minister says that he is not going to do it himself; therefore he must delegate the power. To whom is he going to delegate it? We have asked for that information. No minister will deny that it is a reasonable request, least of all the Minister of Justice. There is the present provision, and you are going to do it some other way. What is that other way? The posting which the Postmaster General and the Minister of Agriculture referred to has reference only to the notice, which is but one feature of the transaction. It is only to the notice to the world—we will use the broad term—which comes about by posting it in post offices. But how does the minister propose to satisfy himself upon these three points, the standard points fixed by convention with Great Britain, and which are in operation in every part of the king's dominions so far as the self-governing communities are concerned: (a) residence; (b) character; (c) adequacy of knowledge of either the English or the French language? How does he intend to satisfy himself on those points, having regard to the fact that there was (a) a judicial inquiry and (b) a supplementary inquiry by the officers of the department under the Secretary of State involving, if you will, homestead inspectors, mounted police and others, to whom the facts were sent in order that they might verify them. I repeat, how does the minister propose to deal with it?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RINFRET: I have tried to explain that several times.

Mr. BENNETT: I think you have not yet.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend has just stated my reply in putting his question, that now there are two inquiries. Well, the one conducted by the department is going to be maintained. We have to find out that the applicant has met all the requirements. He will fill in a very extensive form, as I have already stated, covering all the information required under the act.

Mr. BENNETT: The same form as you have now?

Mr. RINFRET: Yes. That will be sworn to as it is now. When it reaches the department we are in a position, through the Immigation department, to satisfy ourselves as to the residence requirement. The other two points as to character and knowledge of one of the official languages—the two points on which some of the learned judges have stated clearly that they cannot pronounce—we will have to investigate as we do now, either through the mounted police or the homestead inspectors or by officers of the department. This is being done now; every case that comes from the courts is investigated in that way by the department. Until satisfied through that inquiry, for which we have the full machinery, the Secretary of State will not grant a certificate. Perhaps I have not sufficiently emphasized this point. In case of a certificate being granted under the present system, or under the system that will be in effect after the passage of this bill, there is always power to cancel it if it is discovered later on that the facts have not been properly brought to the attention of the department. So after all there is no great change proposed as to the way in which the department will require the necessary information. It is the necessary information that is now required. What we object to now is that we can only apply this procedure in cases where the courts have reported favourably. In a certain number of cases we have evidence before us that the courts were wrong. Thereupon the applicants may go before another judge.

Mr. CAHAN: Under the statute at present an application is made to a court, and the judge decides whether or not it shall be granted. I understand, of course, that the Secretary of State may not accept the decision for other reasons, but under the law the judge decides whether the applicant is qualified. Now, in my constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George, where hundreds of such applications are made from time to time, if a judge of the superior court of the district of Montreal, after investigation and having had the applicant before him, declares that all the conditions of the law have been complied with, does the Secretary of State personally make a further investigation before granting his certificate?

Mr. RINFRET: Certainly the department does.

Mr. CAHAN: What does the department inquire into—as to whether the applicant is qualified under the act after the judge has declared him qualified?

Mr. RINFRET: In a number of cases the information gathered by the department is brought before the court to enable the judge to arrive at his decision.

Mr. CAHAN: That is another thing.

Mr. BOYS: Do I understand the minister to say that in every case after an investigation is made and a report sent to the department by a judge, he or someone in his department institutes a separate inquiry? If he says that —and I so understood him—when the committee meets again I wish he would tell me of a solitary inquiry made in the county of Simcoe—and I refer to it as a county about which I know something—by the department after a report by the judge.

Mr. RINFRET: In not a single case has a certificate been granted where there was not an individual file of information concerning the applicant.

Mr. BOYS: I appreciate that an application must be made, and that it is sent down here. But I feel sure the minister stated that the department itself made an independent investigation in every case. I am not saying it is not so, but I never heard of it in my county, and I do not believe it has been the practice there. If the minister did say so and intends to stick to it, when the bill is next before us I would ask him to name one case in the county of Simcoe where there has been a separate inquiry made by the department. It should not take a clerk more than ten minutes to produce the information if it is available.

Mr. BENNETT: The Minister of Agriculture addressed himself to the question of voting. We are not dealing with voting. Voting is not an attribute of citizenship. A man may be a British subject and still not have a right to vote. The privy council decided that in the Tommy Homma case, where a Japanese who had been naturalized claimed the right to vote, notwithstanding the fact that the province of British Columbia had decleared by legislation that he could not vote. Citizenship and franchise are not the same things, and we have been endeavouring in this discussion to deal with the question of citizenship and not of voting. If there are inconveniences in connection with voting, they can easily be remedied by the applicant who desires to vote coming within the law. We are endeavouring to assert what Sir Wilfrid Laurier asserted, that the basis of naturalization in Canada has been a judicial inquiry. That is what he said in his speech on the Naturalization Act. I have not the time to determine when the first naturalization statute was passed, but I do say this, that until the introduction of this bill the Liberal party had expressed itself in the house as being in favour of a judicial investigation in regard to naturalization. Is it possible that all these sixty years of history in connection with the matter should be undone? It is not a question of Conservatism or Toryism. It is purely a question that affects this whole country regardless of party, and when the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) desires to compare the position of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal some years ago with the position that prevails in Canada to-day, I find it a little difficult to follow him—a difficulty that I should think must be felt by most hon. members. We have a Franchise Act that confers the right to vote on all British subjects under certain conditions of residence. Whether a man becomes a British subject or not he himself must determine; and if in the province of Saskatchewan there are difficulties about the courts, I desire to tell him that there is not a single constituency in Alberta, whether on the frontier or otherwise, where there are not district courts to which all persons may resort with respect to claims up to $600, and the judges in those courts have jurisdiction with respect to naturalization. In the province—

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Second report of select standing committee on standing orders.—Mr. Morin (St Hyacinthe).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That notwithstanding section 2 of standing order 6, on and after May 2nd, the house shall sit at eight o'clock, on Wednesday evenings and that on the first two Wednesday evenings the house is in session, private bills shall have precedence over all other business until disposed of.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I greatly regret that I cannot agree to this motion, although I suppose that is not of very much importance. Quite a number of members not only on this but on the other side of the house, in view of the fact that notice was not given until after the beginning of the week, made engagements for this evening of a long-standing character, one of which was to pay honour and tribute to that distinguished colleague of the Prime Minister who attaches to his name the title of Minister of Labour. That is my recollection of the circumstances, and in view of these facts I think the Prime Minister should substitute the word "nine" for the word "two" in this motion. I know he is anxious to dispose of public business; we are in the same position, but in view of the circumstances which I have mentioned I trust he may be induced to let this motion go until next Wednesday evening.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend's request is quite reasonable, and with the consent of the house I will be very happy to have the motion read "Wednesday, May 9" instead of "Wednesday, May 2."

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Has the right hon. Prime Minister considered placing some part of these Wednesday evenings, should private bills be disposed of, at the disposal of the house to take up public bills and orders?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will follow right on if we get through private bills.

Mr. GEARY: That is understood?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, for the first two Wednesday evenings.

Motion as amended agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

PRINTING OF PAPERS TABLED RESPECTING DIVERSION OF WATER

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): On Monday last I moved that the report and the correspondence between the government of Canada and the government of the United States with respect to the Chicago diversion be printed, but when questioned as to whether that included all the exchanges, I was unable to answer definitely. I have inquired since, and find that that motion did not include all the exchanges. I would therefore move the following motion to amend the motion I then made:

That 500 copies in English and 250 copies in French of that portion of the return tabled on April 19, 1928, respecting the diversion of water at Chicago, which includes the interchange of notes between the governments of Canada and the United States, be printed forthwith, and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask what is included in this present motion? For instance, the earlier documents brought down have been printed, but they are not available; it is impossible to obtain copies of them although I have applied to the printing bureau and to the distribution office.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This covers the reprint of all those documents, so we will have everything together.

Motion agreed to.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

MOTION THAT BILL BE GIVEN PRECEDENCE

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River) moved:

That Bill No. 57, an act respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, placed on the order paper for consideration from 8 to 9 p.m. on Friday, the fourth day of May, 1928, be given precedence over other bills.

I gave the explanation of this motion some days ago, and do not think it is necessary to go into the matter further at present.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): This motion will require unanimous consent of the house, and I object to it.

Mr. KENNEDY: I believe unanimous consent is not required for this motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That is so. What is the pleasure of the house?

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Kennedy) which was agreed to on the following division:

QUESTIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL SILVER FOX BREEDERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Has the Minister of Agriculture approved of an amendment to the constitution of an association called Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders Association closing that association's register on January 15, 1926, against all male silver foxes including thoroughbreds born in Canada except those the sire and dam of which are registered in the Canadian national record for foxes?

2. Has the attention of the Minister of Agriculture been called to the fact that prior to the closing of such register, application to register thoroughbred silver foxes in Yukon had been received by Canadian national live stock records and such application was shut out by the closing of the register?

Mr. MOTHERWELL:

1. Yes, the stud book of the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders Association closed on January 15, 1926, as far as foundation stock is concerned. After that date all foxes registered have to be by registered parents except in the case of a wild silver female accepted under inspection for grading up purposes.

2. Yes. This matter was brought to the attention of the department by Mr. George Black, M.P. (Yukon). A tentative arrangement was made for an officer to be sent to the Yukon to look over these foxes and register those, if any, that were up to a certain standard and whose breeding could be traced.

An effort was made to secure the services of an inspector to go there, but the job was refused by certain inspectors, and although one inspector finally agreed to go, he asked such a high rate of pay that the department considered it would not be justified in sending him at that time. Since then, as fox inspection has passed out of the hands of the department and been taken over by the Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders Association, no further action has been taken in the matter.

LAPSED INSURANCE POLICIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What amount of life insurance during the past three years has been confiscated by insurance companies under the control of this government on account of lapsed policies?
2. Is any return made to the Finance department thereof or the superintendent of insurance?
3. What percentage of insurance written in each year lapses?

Mr. ROBB:

1. The amount of life insurance in Canada lapsed in accordance with the terms of the policies for the past three years is shown in the following statement:

Year	Gross face value amount issued	Gross face value amount lapsed	Percentage lapsed of issued
1925. . . .	$807,079,035	$255,111,942	31.61%
1926. . . .	909,279,187	257,522,843	28.32%
1927. . . .	955,010,607	284,481,784	29.79%

2. Yes.
3. Answered by No. 1.

MR. WILLIAM URQUHART

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

1. What office or appointment does William Urquhart of West Bay or Dundee, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, hold in the Department of National Revenue?
2. What is his age?
3. When was he appointed?
4. What is the amount of his annual salary?
5. What are his duties?
6. Is he assigned to any special territory? If so, what territory?
7. How many seizures has he made, and what was the quantity and value of liquor seized in each instance?
8. What is the total amount of fines collected through his seizures?
9. Is he regarded by the department as an active, zealous and energetic officer?
10. On whose recommendation was he appointed to his present position?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. EULER:

1. Nil.
2. Forty.
3. Appointed June 1, 1927. Services terminated October 12, 1927.
4. $100 per month while in the service.
5. Enforcement of customs and excise laws while in the service.
6. Stationed at West Bay, N.S., and patrolled the district in the immediate vicinity while in the service.

7 and 8. 4. 66¼ gallons rum, duty paid value, $1,030.46—liquor forfeited and destroyed—fine $325.

One automobile—appraised value $300—goods forfeited—sold—proceeds of sale, $65.

Two bottles of whiskey—duty paid value, $2.50—liquor forfeited and destroyed.

2½ flasks of rum—appraised value $1—liquor on hand pending prosecution.

9 and 10. Answered by No. 1.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

Mr. WILSON (Wentworth):

1. What offices were occupied by the Ottawa Improvement Commission during the year 1926 and a portion of 1927, and what rental was paid for the said offices?
2. Who were the owners of the said offices so occupied?
3. Did the commission move its offices during the year 1927?
4. Where are the present offices located?
5. What is the rental of the present offices?
6. Are the present offices held under lease? If so, what is the term of the said lease?
7. Who are the owners of the building in which the present offices are located?

Mr. ROBB:

1. Fraser building, 53 Queen street; $800 a year.
2. Fraser & Company.
3. Yes, in order to secure more adequate accommodation.
4. Ottawa Electric building, 56 Sparks St.
5. $2,950 a year.
6. Yes; five years.
7. Ottawa Electric Company.

JERSEY COVE WHARF

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria):

1. Who was foreman in charge of the building of the wharf at Jersey Cove, Victoria county, Cape Breton?
2. What are the names of those hired to work on this construction and the respective amounts paid each person?
3. What are the names of persons or firms supplying material and the amount paid in each cae?

UNCLAIMED BANK BALANCES

Mr. SPENCER:

Referring to the answer respecting unclaimed bank balances on Hansard, page 1559, what part of the amount of $2,756,745.83, being unclaimed balances in the banks of the Dominion of Canada as at the 31st December, 1927, was on savings deposits?

Mr. ROBB: No information. This data is not furnished under the returns required by the Bank Act.

HUDSON BAY SUPPLIES

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. What was the total expenditure at Halifax last year on the supplies for Hudson bay?
2. What firms supplied the goods?
3. Were the goods supplied by tender, and, if so, what are the names of firms who tendered and prices quoted by each?
4. How many men from Halifax were engaged in construction work? Who engaged them, and on what basis?
5. What was the total amount paid for construction and the name of the contractor?
6. Was construction work done by tender, and, if so, what are the names of parties tendering and amount of each tender?

Mr. DUNNING: I would appreciate it if my hon. friend would clarify this question somewhat. Earlier in the session some confusion arose through members speaking of the Hudson bay when they meant the Hudson strait and vice versa. The two places are a considerable distance apart and the Department of Marine and Fisheries is doing the navigation work in the strait, while the Department of Railways and Canals is doing the work at Churchill in the bay. I gather from my hon. friend's question that he probably wants information with respect to both separately. If he will clarify this question along that line I will see that the information, so far as my department is affected, is secured.

SUB-CHASER BAROFF

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. When was the customs preventive sub-chaser Baroff built?
2. Where was she built?
3. In what service was the Baroff engaged before being acquired by the customs department?
4. From whom did the government purchase the Baroff?
5. Where was she at the time of purchase?
6. What amount did the government pay for the Baroff?
7. Did the seller receive the full price at time of sale or was he paid in instalments?
8. Did the government advance any moneys before the Baroff was finally taken over?
9. Has the Baroff made any captures since being acquired by the government?
10. If so, what vessels and what amount of cargo was seized and of what value?
11. Where is the Baroff operating now?
12. How many months was she in service last year, or since being acquired?

Mr. EULER:

1. 1918.
2. College Point, New York, U.S.A.
3. No information.
4. F. W. Dickie & Company, Limited.
5. St. John, N.B.
6. $37,500.

(Note.—the Baroff was completely refitted with all new machinery (3 100 H.P. Diesel engines) heating system, wireless, searchlight, galley equipment, life-boats under agreement of purchase.)

7. Paid in instalments.
8. Progress payments made as work proceeded in connection with the installation of new machinery and fitting out boat for patrol duty.

9. No.

10. Answered by No. 9.

11. Left Halifax on April 30 for her base at Gaspe, P.Q.

(Note.—Baroff operates almost exclusively in the bay of Chaleur.)

12. Commenced patrol duty in bay of Chaleur, August 21, 1927, and continued until freeze-up, 29th November, 1927, when she returned to Halifax to winter quarters.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Did the government authorize the commissioners appointed to revise the Statutes of Canada, Revised Statutes 1927, to insert in the Revised Statutes: (a) any amendments not enacted by parliament; (b) amendments altering the meaning and effect of statutes and not enacted by parliament?

2. If so, by what statute, order in council, direction of minister, or other means was such authority given?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

MONTREAL PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. What buildings are rented, in whole or in part, by the Dominion government in the city of Montreal?

2. What rental is paid per annum in each case?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CHARTERED BANK MERGERS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, applications, telegrams, and all other documents during the past year, relating to any application for the merger of any Canadian chartered bank with any other existing Canadian, or the merger or proposed merger of any existing Canadian bank with any American bank.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all letters, orders in council, telegrams, correspondence, and all other documents between the government of Canada and (a) the government of Ontario, and (b) the government of the province of Quebec during the past year, regarding improvements of the St. Lawrence waterways from the navigation and power, or other standpoints. Also copies of all correspondence and other documents regarding the application of the Ontario government to erect a storage dam at or near Morrisburg in the province of Ontario, for power purposes.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS

Mr. CAHAN:

For a return showing the names and addresses of all lighthouse keepers in Canada to whom medals have been awarded since January 1, 1913, stating the services for which the same were awarded.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—OFFICES

Mr. CHURCH:

For a return showing the various times and dates during the past four years of the vacation of the Canadian National railway and telegraph offices at King and Yonge streets, Toronto, and their removal to King and Toronto streets; the expenditures made on renovations at both places named herein by each said change; the amount spent on repairs each time at both places, and the loss of business to the system attending.

OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMMISSION

Mr. WILSON (Wentworth):

For a statement showing the number of meetings held by the Ottawa Improvement Commission during the years 1926, 1927, and to date in 1928 and what commissioners were present at each of the said meetings, together with a copy of the minutes of the said commission for the period.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LANDS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, agreements and all other documents relating to the sale of the Canadian National Railways' old belt line lands in the Humber valley, Toronto, including all correspondence with the late Sir Adam Beck and the hydro for purchase thereof, and in 1928 with any other person or persons for the recent sale of this valuable radial right of way for $18,000 without public tender.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, may I point out again here that this resolution contains allegations, and I have no means of telling whether they are correct or not. Surely it is not in order to make allegations in a motion for return. I would be glad to put the matter in the usual course for answer, but I wish to point out that I am in no sense agreeing with the allegations made and I question whether the motion in its present form complies with this rule.

Mr. CHURCH: At the time the Hydro Electric Power Commission wanted these lands the railway would not sell them. They declined to sell the lands. The Minister of Railways and Canals has a copy of all the correspondence. If this motion cannot be complied with there will be another way to get it.

Mr. DUNNING: The point is whether a motion for the return of documents is in order when it contains allegations, no matter whether the allegations are true or not. If such a motion is in order, all sorts of statements and allegations can be made on a motion for a return, and inferentially assented to by the house when passed. My hon. friend may be perfectly certain as to his statements, as far as he is concerned, but he certainly does not want the house to adopt a motion which inferentially agrees with these statements, even if true. The documents themselves will show whether the statements are correct. It is not in order to embody such statements in a motion for a return.

Mr. CHURCH: That will be satisfactory. I only want a return of the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: As it now reads, there are no allegations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is an allegation as to the sale without public tender. We do not know whether that is so or not.

Mr. BENNETT: I see what you mean. My hon. friend is right in that.

Motion agreed to.

CONTRACTS FOR ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of the existing contract (a) between the government and the Ottawa Electric Company on which the government pays $86,524.31 annually, and (b) a copy of a contract between the government and the Hydro Electric Commission on which the government pays for electric light and power $38,964.36, annually, with rates paid for direct current in each case.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there may be such a contract or such contracts in existence, but it is impossible to say offhand that there are any. The government is quite prepared to bring down any contract between the government and the Ottawa Electric Company which the hon. member may wish to see; but I do not think I can say in advance that the particular figures set out are correct.

Mr. CHURCH: I simply wanted a copy of the rates charged the government for direct current by the Ottawa Electric Company and the Hydro Electric Power Commission. I do not want to cause the government any trouble. I would like to know the rates charged in each case if there is no public objection. The figures in the motion were given in an answer the other day by the government to the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Carried with the limitation placed on the motion by the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he is prepared to give the same treatment to the bill, order No. 28, page 16 of the orders of the day, the second reading of the Bill No. 63, to amend the Railway Act, standing in the name of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) an act relating to all of Canada, as he has given to the bill of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my hon. friend that it was the house which gave the permission and not the government.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY AND ASBESTOS CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. BENNETT: May I ask the Prime Minister if he is now in a position to answer the questions which I asked the other day in respect to the Beauharnois power canal, and also the one I asked yesterday with respect to the Asbestos Corporation of Canada and litigation in the United States.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must apologize to my hon. friend; I had overlooked these matters. I will look into them and give an answer soon.

ALBERTA COAL TRANSPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. BENNETT: I would ask the minister whether the provisions of the order in council as to the removal of coal from Alberta are now effective.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The order was effective from the 15th, I understand, by order of the railway commission.

Mr. BENNETT: There was some difficulty.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They may be having a great many difficulties, but as far as I know they are getting them straightened out.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from May 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act—Mr. Rinfret—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose I was endeavouring to direct attention to the fact that the submissions we have made to the committee were that under the provisions of the statute in some of the British possessions regulations are made by the governor in council to carry into effect the provisions of the statute, but that in other countries, notably in South Africa, instead of the regulations being made by the governor in council, and subject to being rescinded at will by the governor in council, substantive provisions were introduced into the statute itself.

Last evening the Secretary of State was good enough to suggest that an amendment might be made, which amendment deals only with the question of notice. Now, having conceded the point that the giving of notice should not be done by order in council, I think the Secretary of State must be logical and introduce an amendment to indicate how he is to apprise himself as minister whether or not there has been a compliance by the applicant with the provisions of the statute with respect to residence, character, and adequate knowledge of the English or French language. If it is necessary to add to this bill a provision with respect to the posting of notice in the post office, much more is it necessary that the essential provisions which are standard throughout the empire should in some measure be dealt with in the bill so far as compliance with them is concerned. In other words, since we have now by this amendment sought to provide the means by which notice shall be given to the world, namely, by the posting in the post office of a notice, which will be torn down the day after it is put up, and which is exactly the thing they refused to do in South Africa and in other communities, where they provide that the notice shall be printed in the Gazette or in a newspaper circulating in the district where the applicant resides—if it is necessary to provide in the bill for the mere posting of the notice in a country post office where it will disappear twenty minutes after it is put up—

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Why would it?

Mr. BENNETT: Because in these small country post offices that is the fate of all notices.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Except the notices that are protected by the statute, by the Post Office Act itself.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman from Weyburn has had much more experience than I, and therefore I accept his view with respect to the matter. I can only say, having some knowledge of the fate of notices of that character, that they do not continue long in place, and we had a noteworthy example of that when we had a provision in the old electoral act under which the lists were hung up at given points, and they disappeared sometimes twenty-four hours, sometimes thirty-six and sometimes forty-eight hours after being hung up.

The point I make is that we have dealt now with only one feature, namely, the question of notice, and since we have thought it desirable to deal by legislative enactment with the question of notice, much more is it necessary that we should deal in the statute itself with the method by which the minister is to become apprised whether or not the applicant has met the standard requirements of the act. I asked the minister last evening, I ask him to-day, and I suppose we will have to continue to ask him, by what means he proposes to make known to himself as minister, in his judicial or executive capacity, whether or not these provisions have been complied with.

Recall, Mr. Chairman, that in the early discussion of this measure the minister desired to have uniformity. That was one of the words he used. He said that judicial discretion had been exercised in different ways throughout Canada, and that now he desired uniformity. Is he to get uniformity from a homestead inspector in Saskatchewan, from a mounted policeman in New Brunswick, and from other agents in other provinces? There are nine provinces in this confederation, nine provinces in which there can be naturalization, and by what method, I ask, through what means, does the minister propose to satisfy himself, as the high executive official empowered to discharge a very great duty, as was pointed out both by Mr. Churchill and Sir John Simon, with respect to the naturalization of a person within the king's dominions throughout this empire—how does the minister propose to make known to himself whether that person named John Smith resided in Canada during the period in question? He has answered that question. He has answered it, in my judgment, in accordance with the principles that prevail in the United States. He has stated that he proposes to have those documents transmitted to the Department of Immigration, and to have them indicate whether or not there is a verification in their records of the statements made by the applicant as to the ship on which he arrived, or the train on which he came and where he crossed the border, so that a check up can be made by the department of the allegations made in the application. That is what they do in the United States, only there it is provided by statute that these documents shall be transmitted to the Department of Trade and Commerce or to the Department of Labour—I think it is both—for the purpose of having the statements verified.

I now come to the second point. How is the minister to satisfy himself that the applicant has an adequate knowledge of the English or French language? That is my difficulty. How is he going to do it? That problem I find engaged the attention of our legislators in the early days, and we concluded, with our limited form of naturalization, that instead of it being done as might have been suggested then in another way, that the responsibility should be placed upon the judges. I do submit to the Secretary of State and to the Prime Minister that this is a very difficult problem. If we take this responsibility away from the judges—I confess that I have thought of every means suggested by the minister; I have thought it over during the night—I can only point out that inasmuch as uniformity is desired, judicial decisions are the nearest approach that we can get to it in this country. The minister points out that that is not very good, but that is the nearest approach that we can get to uniformity. What are the reasons urged against it?

The reasons that are urged against it are that it puts the applicant to the inconvenience of travelling a certain distance to meet the judges. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place, but perhaps it is just as well that he is not. When he made light of the whole proceedings last evening, and said that it meant they were going to have a new game called chasing the judge, that was so unworthy of a minister of the crown in dealing with a matter of this kind that in the subsequent observations I made I passed it by. It is degrading to this parliament that the matter should thus be treated, because when the minister spoke of this as a new game of chasing the judge, he knew, as all members know, that there are court houses in which the judges sit, and that there are provided by the provinces buildings for that purpose, and that in the gazettes and newspapers of the provinces there are indicated the days and dates and the places at which the courts will sit. I pointed out, in answer to an interjection by my hon. friend from Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) yesterday, that the provincial governments determine where the courts shall sit, and if any inconvenience is being worked by reason of this provision, the provincial government can remedy that overnight. It can provide for a sitting of the district court at any particular point, and as I say, in the province of Alberta does so. I do not know that Alberta is at all exceptional as compared with the other western provinces in that respect, but in the province of Alberta the government gets the best information it can obtain, and then says that there shall be sittings of the district court at designated small communities, such as Olds, Okotoks and other points that perhaps mean nothing to the hon. gentlemen opposite, but they are the names of the places at which the courts will sit. Therefore the applicant is enabled to know where he will find the judge. He has the right to go to the clerk of the court and ask him; he has the right to go to the process issuer and ask him, and the sittings of the court are as provided, not by this government, for there is no responsibility upon this parliament in respect to the matter—all that this parliament has to do is to provide the judges, and the judges have cast upon them by statute the duty, and that duty they must discharge. That is part of the judicial duties imposed upon them by a statute of the parliament of Canada. The imposition of that judicial duty by statute of this parliament still leaves open to the provincial authorities the determination of the points at which the courts shall sit, and the days on which the courts shall be opened.

Mr. McPHEE: The provincial governments have nothing to do with naturalization. They only regulate the terms of the court for civil proceedings.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. member for Yorkton does not mean that seriously. There is not a naturalization court that sits as such at all. It is at a meeting of the civil court, when it is sitting, that the naturalization applications are presented, and my hon. friend, of course, knows that. There never has been, and there never will be, a naturalization court as such. What happens is that when the civil court, or it might be the criminal assize court, is opened, all those who desire to obtain naturalization have a right to appear and present their applications, and the court considers them as a matter of course. There are no special sittings of the court to deal with naturalization, although the provincial governments might arrange for special sittings at which only naturalization applications would be considered. Some of the western provinces impose upon the judges special duties with respect to provincial legislation, tax returns and matters of that kind. This parliament from time to time imposes upon the judges very onerous and special duties; and this whole problem can be solved without any difficulty by merely appointing through the provincial government a day and a place for the court sittings. For instance, away up in the Great Slave lake country it became essential for a judge to hold court. The supreme court or district court judge goes out and holds court, notice of which has been given, and at the sitting anything which may be heard by a judge exercising such jurisdiction may be presented. Objection has been taken by some friends opposite who do not practise law to my statement of what the law is, so I shall modify it in this way. I submit to the committee that when the judge opens his court every matter prescribed by statute for his consideration may be legally and properly brought before him.

Next I come to the question of character and the question of language. I am satisfied with the answer that my friend the Secretary of State has given with respect to the first question, namely, that of residence, and the checking it up through the records of other departments. But on the other two points how is he to satisfy himself? Let us treat this matter as reasonable men. There are nine provinces. Uniformity is desired. Who does it in New Brunswick, in Nova Scotia, in Prince Edward Island, in Quebec, in Ontario, in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan, in Alberta, in British Columbia?—not the same type of person. You can have no uniformity as you have under judicial decisions—such as it is. It is well said by the minister that the exercise of judicial discretion may not be the same in British Columbia as in Prince Edward Island, but it does not follow that the judicial discretion thus exercised is erroneous. In either case it may be correct. As pointed out by Chief Justice Meredith, the difficulty lies in the fact that the department of the Secretary of State has not indicated the principles which should govern with respect to it.

I do not wish to traverse this ground again, but once more I ask—and I think it will be admitted by the right hon. gentleman who leads this house (Mr. Mackenzie King) that when we are eliminating a judicial inquiry we are as a committee entitled to know what is to be substituted for it, once more I ask: What inquiry is to be substituted for it? Because it is admitted that the Secretary of State cannot do it directly; therefore he has to do it through some agency. What agency is it to be? How is it to operate? Who is the agent? Those are all the questions we ask. This amendment deals only with one phase of the many regulations that have to be made, namely, that of notice. Before the bill is passed we must deal with those phases to which I have directed attention.

There are other matters to which I might refer. For instance, last evening the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) discussed this from the standpoint of voting. An obvious and reasonable retort might be made, but I refrain. I do consider this matter far beyond any controversy that might be entered into with any gentleman opposite with respect to any question of voting. In my judgment it is most important in view of the fact that we are bringing into this country increasing numbers of aliens. The figures presented by my friend from Vancouver abundantly establish this fact. Therefore more and more must recourse be had to this statute for the purpose of enabling those who so desire to become British subjects. And the term, "British subject" means so much that in view of the agreement we entered into when we established this standard of qualification, we cannot afford to depart from it in the sense of making it impossible for us as members of parliament to say how the minister is to be satisfied. And this parliament has the right to know. I will accept the minister's answer in respect to the first point. As to the two points to which I have now directed his attention, I should like to ask him—he has the figures before him I trust—how many applications for naturalization have been granted by the minister himself during the last twelve months without reference to the courts at all? Have there been any?

Mr. RINFRET: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I would think not. But I gathered from my hon. and learned friend from Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) that it was much easier for him to apply direct to the Secretary of State than through the medium of the judges.

Mr. JACOBS: Not at all. My hon. friend must have misunderstood me.

Mr. BENNETT: He put it that way; I do not think he so intended. I made a retort at the time which when I read it in Hansard indicated, it seemed to me, that possibly he did not mean it in the sense expressed. He said there were dual methods, and he preferred to go to the Secretary of State direct.

Mr. JACOBS: No. I said there were two methods: that the party applying could go before a judge and then have his certificate vised, you might say, by the Secretary of State; or the Secretary of State could use his own discretion without regard to the court and issue the certificate.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust my hon. and learned friend will be good enough to look at the statute carefully, when I think he will find that the observations made by my friend from Toronto Northeast, sufficiently indicates that that is not the class of case intended. Let me illustrate in this way. When the act first came into force there were three cases in which certificates of naturalization were granted: one to the late Sir William Van Horne, the second to the late Lord Shaughnessy, and the third to my hon. friend who sits to my right (Sir George Perley). The Secretary of State granted those certificates at once without any judicial inquiry because there is a provision in the act to cover such cases. As my friend will recall, there is a special section to remove doubts. But I put this matter not only to the Secretary of State but to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). After all, he is vitally interested in it. We have here one of his colleagues exercising practically a judicial function. In the exercise of it he must be satisfied by the evidence, and that evidence he himself cannot gather. Then the committee is asking to be informed as to how that evidence is to be gathered. I am assuming the statutory requirement with respect to the judges is repealed; there is no judicial inquiry; this bill becomes into force, and I ask him to make it clear to this committee how the Secretary of State is going to satisfy himself so that he may exercise the discretion granted to him under the statute in the manner the law contemplated with respect to character and adequacy of knowledge of English or French.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate we have listened to a considerable number of objections to the bill with which I do not intend to deal at length. There is flying around Canada in connection with questions of this kind a great deal of old straw, and if any useful purpose could be served by threshing it out I guess we could all engage in it. I would draw attention to the statement made yesterday by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) with regard to myself, to the effect that the member for Melfort was not interested in the fleet on the high seas. I cannot for the life of me think what he meant by that, but to my mind the member for Melfort is just as much interested in it as the member for Calgary or the representative of any other constituency. I repeat, I do not know what he referred to, but whatever it may mean I repudiate it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I notice that raises a laugh, but sometimes he who laughs last laughs longest. Undoubtedly this measure has been needed for many years. I happen to have at least a little evidence of that under my hand at the moment. One letter came to me yesterday with reference to the question of naturalization, and another letter some time previously in connection with the same matter. Before that also I received a communication. The letter I got yesterday is from a gentleman whom I know well, a man who has been a resident of Canada for a good many years. I hold in my hand the original discharge certificate of this man who served as a sergeant in France during the war. He took the oath of allegiance and naturally he assumed, as many others have done, that thereby he became a Canadian citizen and a British subject. And he acted on that assumption for a number of years. The time came when he wanted to establish beyond any doubt that he was a Canadian citizen, and on indicating the circumstances which in his opinion entitled him to Canadian citizenship, he was informed that under the law he was not a Canadian citizen, and that he must go through the formalities prescribed before he could become naturalized. And this notwithstanding the number of years he had served the country in France. Not knowing what else to do he writes me on the subject, inquiring what I can do in the matter, and enclosing five dollars, which he understands is the requisite fee. The letter he mailed from a point 100 miles away from a court house. I will admit that he could go to a judge and ascertain when he might be heard, and I have no doubt the judge would accord him a courteous hearing. But consider the trouble, the delay, the inconvenience and the humiliation to which he is put under these circumstances.

I have here two telegrams from men of the same type. The first man has a name as British, as Canadian as is my own name or the names of many other hon. gentlemen. He is not of foreign extraction; he is of British blood. But he happened to have been born in the United States. The other man's name is equally British. He, too, was born in the United States but he served in the Canadian army, and of course he took it for granted that he was a Canadian citizen. To his surprise, however—he lives in far northern Saskatchewan—he discovered last year that he had not the status of a British subject, and this discovery was quite embarrassing to him. He is now in the same difficulty as is the applicant to whom I have already referred. He has to travel to the court nearest his residence—not in Saskatchewan but in Manitoba—and this is the statement he makes in his telegram:

Re naturalization application, am filing this application to-day. Court sessions June—

I may observe by the way that this is dated April 23.

Court sessions June and September. September too late, June too early according to three months' posting regulations. Wire collect if anything can be done to enable Smith to appear before judge in June and finish up.

It will cost this man a great deal of money to obtain something which he certainly deserves to have. I do not think that any hon. member in this chamber will suggest for a moment that he is not entitled to Canadian citizenship under the circumstances I have indicated. A man who has served in the army and fought for the empire should be entitled to all the rights of a British subject.

I have another application which came to me a short time ago from a man who writes from Lac du Brochet, which, as the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) observed a little while ago, may mean nothing to the majority of hon. members, being a point away up in northern Manitoba. This man writes:

I have enclosed herewith an application for naturalization on his behalf. This man is a trapper, located in northern Manitoba, near the Northwest Territory boundary line. He was advised to take the matter up with you as it is impossible for him to get out to civilization so as to make personal application for his papers. I can see no reason why this man should not receive his citizenship papers but I understood it was customary for a man to go before a judge in person.

This is signed by a police magistrate in that district. Now, it may be said that these three cases are exceptional. Well, they may be exceptional in degree, but there are many other cases more or less on a par with them. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell) yesterday stated that a good many people in the northern part of his district were at a great disadvantage and considerable inconvenience, being obliged to go long distances by rail, stopping over many times; and finding it impossible to get the matter disposed of on the first occasion, and possibly after a second or a third attempt, they come to the conclusion that it is just as well to leave things as they are. I can thoroughly endorse that. Many men in western Canada to-day who would like to be naturalized and are entitled to the privilege find too many obstacles placed in their path, so that it is extremely difficult for them to obtain their Canadian citizenship. They are Canadians in sentiment as well as in interest, and they have Canadian families growing up. In many cases the children were born in this country. Sometimes the parents, not having been naturalized, feel that they cannot take that pride which they should in living in this country. It is not a matter, on their part, of wishing to avoid the responsibilities of citizenship; as one hon. member observed yesterday, these people very often are hard up financially. It is no easy matter for a man who is not very well off to spend $25, $40, $60 or $100 in order to take witnesses to a court in a matter of this kind. Furthermore—I have known this practice to prevail, and I could get evidence to back me up on the point—many judges insist that persons applying for naturalization shall attend a central court.

Mr. BENNETT: They cannot do that under the statute.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am not casting any reflection on the judges. But who regulates the judges?

Mr. BENNETT: The law does.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): How can the law regulate a judge who writes to the Secretary of State saying, "I should like you to interpret this law; I do not know what it means."

Mr. BENNETT: The statute provides that the governor in council shall make regulations.

Mr. HOCKEN: You want a new judge.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): No, we do not want a new judge, but a great deal of the law of this country, like that of Great Britain, is judge-made law. I am sure my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) will agree with that. A great deal of the law is judge-made. The judges are building up the body of the law, and I am not objecting to that. But what I am pointing out is that many of the judges do insist that applicants shall come to a central court. Now, take a constituency like the one I have the honour to represent. The settled portion, so far as matters relating to naturalization are concerned, covers a territory approximately 200 miles from east to west and 500 miles from north to south. The letters I have dealt with come from men—at least two of them do—living approximately 700 miles north of the American boundary. One judicial district covers an area of 20,000 square miles, and it is true the judge goes into thickly settled country, up and down the lines of railway. To my knowledge, it has never happened that he has left a settled portion of the country and gone to another part, off the railroad. In fact districts served by many scores of miles of railroad often have no occasion to hold courts. These people are told to come to a central point, and when they get there they find other cases, perhaps more important than theirs, ahead of them and they have to wait. The judge perhaps receives various calls and the applicants are obliged to return. It is not fair. In the old days, about which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) spoke, when thousands of aliens were being naturalized in Canada, the result on the whole was good, as was evidenced clearly when the war struck this country. These people who had been naturalized but a short time before stood loyal and true to British and Canadian institutions; they were just as loyal as any other Canadians. If hon. gentlemen had had the pleasure and privilege which I enjoyed last year, on the first of July, they would appreciate the situation, and I fancy that their conception of this whole matter would be different. I met school children who had travelled twenty miles over roads that were not very good, and they displayed the greatest pride and enthusiasm in Canadian institutions, Canadian laws and everything British. It is a crime to put any obstacle in the way of the naturalization of such people. The majority of these people were naturalized under the old law. I will admit that in some cases the provisions of the law were not absolutely lived up to. But that is true of every other law that I have ever heard of. We have various laws against one crime and another, but these laws are not all observed in their entirety.

One point to which I take exception so far as Saskatchewan is concerned has reference to what the leader of the opposition said yesterday:

> And my hon. friends know that it was a crying scandal in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and partly in Manitoba, where thousands of men were naturalized by being huddled together in a group, and someone going in to them with a paper and asking them to sign their names—

In the twenty-five years that I have lived in western Canada I have not witnessed anything of that description nor have I heard of it. Thousands of people gathered in a group?

Mr. BENNETT: Not thousands of people in one group.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is what Hansard says and I think Hansard is right.

Mr. BENNETT: Read it carefully.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I will read it again carefully:

> My hon. friends know that it was a crying scandal in Saskatchewan and Alberta, and partly in Manitoba, where thousands of men were naturalized by being huddled together in a group, and someone going in to them with a paper and asking them to sign their names—

Mr. HEAPS: That is only an inaccurate statement by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman knows very well that it was not meant that these men were all in one group.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I appreciate that, and I would be the last to blame the hon. leader of the opposition for seriously making that statement, but unfortunately it has gone on Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: No one reads it that way.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The language is perfectly plain, and if anyone doubts my reading of it it will be found at page 2551 of Hansard. Possibly I am in the unfortunate position of not having an adequate knowledge of the English language and so not understanding these words, but there is the statement. I will admit that in the past mistakes may have been made and crimes committed under the law, but I think it is a very serious thing to say that because mistakes were made we are going to continue a practice which makes it extremely difficult to obtain naturalization, to which many men are entitled. I have been advised by a gentleman who is in a position to know pretty well what is going on in western Canada that the strongest argument against the present system is that it places the right to naturalization on a basis of cost. Even that would not be so bad but for the fact that the very organization of judicial districts makes that basis of cost unequal and almost prohibitive to many men who want to become naturalized. It is not that they are unwilling to spend the necessary money and time, but they have not the money to spend.

I noticed some of the objections made by various speakers; I am not going to take up much time with them, as I said before, but the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) stated that people who know a man are well able to judge whether or not he should be naturalized. I quite agree with that remark, but I would disagree if the statement were made that a judge, simply by asking a few questions of an applicant coming before him, is better able to form an opinion of the qualifications possessed by that man than the neighbours among whom he lives from day to day and year to year and who know his character perfectly. Many men can go into a court room and make a fair appearance; they may be able to impress a judge who is not acquainted with them, but it might be harder to produce that impression in their own district if an inquiry were held there.

Then the leader of the opposition brought up one or two points with which I should like to deal. First I should like to know what he understands by an "adequate knowledge of the English language," which was one of the main points with which he dealt both yesterday and to-day. In my opinion it is very difficult, if not impossible, to clearly define the meaning of the word "adequate" as it is contained in this act.

Mr. JACOBS: May I suggest that perhaps it is the ability to conceal one's thoughts?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Sometimes the need is for ability to control one's facial expression rather than one's tongue; that is good philosophy in certain enterprises, at any rate. The question of inadequate knowledge of the English language is one which is hard to define; for instance, take an aged couple living in Canada, with children growing up and going to school. They have resided in Canada for quite a long time and have property interests which require that they become naturalized, as in the case of homesteaders. They have quite an adequate knowledge of the English language for their own use, and for the transaction of their own local business; they have children going to school who are able to help them write their letters, and some of them write comparatively fine letters. They are able to get along all right in the ordinary way, but when they come into court one judge might rule that they have an adequate knowledge of English while another might hold the opposite opinion and consider their knowledge to be grossly inadequate. I will admit that the knowledge of English necessary on the part of a man going into professional or business life must be greater than that of a man completing work on his homestead and living out the last few years of his life. It has been said that anyone wishing to obtain the privileges of citizenship certainly should learn the English language; in certain circumstances I believe that is a duty incumbent upon such people, but in many cases it is hard for them to do so. Rightly or wrongly—and I am not discussing that question at the moment—they have been placed in districts where it is very difficult for old people to learn English; many of the newcomers to our country are more anxious to learn our language than those who have been here a long time. I should like hon. members of this house who have tried to learn a language other than their own to tell us just how hard it is. In this house we have two official languages, English and French, and I am sorry to admit that very few members speak the second of these two languages. If it were so easy for these poor foreign immigrants coming to Canada to learn our language I imagine many of our statesmen and members of parliament would learn the alternate language in this house, because that would be an accomplishment of which they might well be proud.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then would the hon. gentleman advocate doing away with the language qualification?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): No, I am not suggesting that; I am dealing with the difficulty of interpreting the word "adequate".

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is no more difficult for a judge to do so than for an agent appointed by the department.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is so, but we have had statements from three learned judges, and I think it is rather a peculiar coincidence that two if not all three of these judges were apointed to the bench by my hon. friends opposite. These three judges say they find great difficulty in interpreting this law, and they ask the Secretary of State to clarify it for them. The judges are on the bench to interpret the laws which are passed by this parliament, and they should not find it necessary to ask for instruction.

Another point which was brought up yesterday was the lack of ceremony obtaining in these applications for naturalization. In that connection I would just say that if the ceremonious proceedings which are followed in the United States to-day, and which have been followed for a good many years, do not produce any higher type of citizenship than that which has been shown in some of their congested cities, I prefer the Canadian procedure. Furthermore, I cannot understand why so many hon. members of this house are so anxious to go to the United States for examples and precepts rather than to Great Britain, and why they should desire to follow the United States rather than the different British dominions. I do not think the lack of ceremony in the conduct of our affairs makes any difference at all. Many of our people are not accustomed to court houses; they look upon them as places where law-breakers and wrong-doers are dealt with. When they find themselves in a court house to ask for something which the law says they have a right to obtain if they fulfil certain conditions, they are in a state of mental turmoil. I would even go further than that; many people who have an adequate knowledge of the English language for their ordinary business affairs, people who should be naturalized provided they can show a good character and a sufficient residence in the country, find it very difficult when in court to understand the learned judge who may be questioning them at the time. I will illustrate that fact by a personal reference. During the past few days I have been attending the meetings of a committee of this house; I have listened to very learned gentlemen give their evidence, men who have a thorough knowledge of the English language, perhaps much more adequate than that which I possess, and I must admit that I had to pay the closest attention and to concentrate to the best of my ability in order to understand what they were saying. I think almost every hon. member of the house has had a similar experience. I have been with men from another part of the empire; I have associated with them and spent nights in the same—

An hon. MEMBER: Bar room?

Mr. LADNER: May I ask if the hon. gentleman is referring to Scotch witnesses?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I think the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) knows that the Scotch tongue is pretty well understood wherever you may go in this country, but I was not referring to Scotchmen. I have associated with men from other parts of the empire at different times and have found it extremely hard to understand their speech as they went along, yet we ask these aliens, who may be semi-illiterate in the use of English, if I may use that expression, to go into a court room and fluently answer questions propounded to them by a judge whose accent may be such as they have never heard before. We find further that men have been refused naturalization in Canada because they could not answer such questions as, What is the constitution of Canada? Who is the premier of Prince Edward Island? Who is the lieutenant governor of British Columbia? Questions which many of the hon. members of this house could not answer offhand, and I am putting myself in the same class as other hon. members.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a foolish question.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): But there is nothing against it in the law. An hon. member the other day said some of these people came to him for advice and that he told them to go and see a lawyer. But I tell the hon. member that there are many people in outlying districts who cannot afford to see a lawyer. I am not speaking for people in cities and large towns where a judge is sitting periodically and regularly in chambers and it is easy for them to come to that place. I am speaking for those who often make a real sacrifice, and cannot afford it, in order to get their naturalization certificates. In view of the opinion of the learned judges quoted, I think the least we can do is to make a change which will make the procedure much simpler.

The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) the other day, seeing he has asked a question of me now, I will deal with one remark of his—made the extraordinary statement that I think very few Canadians will agree with, namely that the high standing of the judiciary in this country has had the result of a high class of citizenship being built up. I think he was putting the cart before the horse, and that the high class of citizenship results in the high class of the judiciary. But the high class of citizenship must come first.

Mr. LADNER: I should like to correct the hon. gentleman. From my recollection of what I said, I must conclude that he has misunderstood my remark. The point of it was that the judiciary were better fitted by their training to consider and determine the application for naturalization than would be the police officers or representatives of the Department of the Secretary of State scattered throughout the whole country. That was the point of my remark.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I do not know very much about the intentions of the hon. gentleman, but I remember what I heard, and that was that the high class of the judiciary was responsible for the building up of a high class citizenship. It is the other way about entirely.

The leader of the opposition is very much afraid that in the very small post offices these notices will be torn down as soon as they are put up. I think that is unfair. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre said that many of the postmasters receive only $14 and upwards.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that they would be torn down by the postmasters.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In very many districts the postmaster is a man of more than average intelligence, one who takes pride in his office and keeps the post office for community service rather than for gain. I am quite sure that those notices may be seen, and a notice posted in a country post office will be seen and read by more people during the sixty days or three months which have to run than will a corresponding notice hung up on the wall of a court room office. I am speaking of what I know. I have seen similar notices hanging up in country post offices. For instance, a man's homestead entry is due to be cancelled, and the notice goes to the country post office and is hung up on the wall; and I have never had any complaint about the notice being torn down and the man affected not getting an opportunity to know about it.

Another thing. I have been in court houses, fortunately not very often, and have seen notices for naturalization posted there. They are not strung around the walls, because it would be impossible to find space for that kind of thing; but they are hung up on top of one another, and very few people get an opportunity to know of them at all. Certainly the people in the locality where the man lives who is making application do not get to know of it. Were the application posted in the post office in his district, nearest where he lives, the people there could be invited to communicate with the Secretary of State at Ottawa if they had any objection to the man being naturalized, and I think it would help a good deal.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not desire to interrupt my hon. friend during the progress of his observations, which dealt only with the question of notice. But how does the hon. gentleman suggest we should deal with the other two questions, those of character and language?—because those are standard qualifications.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In our country at the present time the mounted police, among other duties, do visit and make investigations. They visit the homes and take note of the character of the people. The fact that a man has lived for years in a community without getting into trouble is a fairly good recommendation in itself. The matter of the language is hard to deal with uniformly; but if a mounted policeman is able to call at the home of a man who is asking for naturalization, and asks regarding the best road to town, or, where is the nearest gas filling station on the way to town, or other such usual questions, it is a fair approach to getting information on the subject. It is true that the mounted police in the old days did not use gasoline, but they do to-day; and there are many ways in which they can get information. I have no knowledge of the regulations which the minister has in his mind; but in sparsely settled parts of the country, such as in this case which I mentioned a while ago where a letter came from Lac du Brochet, where a man purporting to be a police magistrate enclosed an application form for some other man, different conditions prevail from those in well settled districts. Even in remote localities there are usually local improvement or municipality officers, ministers of the gospel and other neighbours of the applicant who can give the police a good deal of information as to the adequacy of knowledge of the English language possessed by the man, and his character, and so on, and in that way the police would be able to get a good deal of help.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Chairman, I doubt if any applicant has ever been refused naturalization because of being unable to answer a question as to who is the lieutenant governor of Prince Edward Island or any other such catch question. I do not think the county court judges or other judges charged with the administration of this act make a practice of asking any such foolish questions. I have seen naturalization proceedings in various courts in Canada, but I have never seen any such proceeding as the hon. member for Melfort suggests might take place.

The only reason advanced by the Secretary of State for the necessity of the proposed amendment to the present Naturalization Act is that in some places applicants are somewhat inconvenienced by the requirements of the present act. Complying with all law and regulations ordinarily must entail certain inconvenience to some people, and a greater degree of inconvenience on some than on others; but the inconvenience of attending before a court can be largely minimized or even done away with by regulating the sittings of the courts. It may be said that the authority for regulating the sittings of courts lies in the provincial governments; but after all the Dominion government pays, and the authority that pays can regulate. There is no doubt that the provincial authorities would join in the regulation of the sittings of the courts, and most of the inconvenience could thus be obviated. There is an incident to which I should like to call the attention of the committee and which arose not very long ago in the administration of the Naturalization Act. This is reported in the Morning Star, a Liberal newspaper published at Vancouver, under date of January 12 last. It appears under the heading of a despatch from Ottawa, as follows:

"Action of Judge Grant of Vancouver, in refusing to recommend several Japanese applicants for Canadian citizenship, taking the stand that Japanese were not assimilable into the Anglo-Saxon race, was a violation of the provisions of the Naturalization Act; and in so doing the Vancouver judge exceeded his duties as these are governed by the act."

This was the comment to-day of high officials of the Department of the Secretary of State, when attention was drawn to the Vancouver despatch quoting Judge Grant's decision. It was pointed out that the Naturalization Act of Canada lays down no requirements from an applicant as to whether his racial origin is of a nature that would make him assimilable or not.

It was further declared by the officials here that the act stated plainly that grant of a certificate of naturalization was in the absolute discretion of the Secretary of State. A judge's report, the officials declared, should be based upon inquiries into the applicant's fitness and qualifications as these were governed by the act; it should deal with facts and not opinions.

Then the article continues:

As far as the Naturalization Act is concerned, it throws upon judge before whom applicants appear the duty of deciding whether such applicant is a fit and proper person to be given a certificate of naturalization. Judge David Grant made this statement Wednesday night in reply to the foregoing despatch, adding that he has never hesitated to pass upon persons who come before him.

As a matter of fact the act as it stands to-day gives judges discretion in deciding whether or not an applicant is a fit and proper person to be naturalized and if for no other reason than that the act as it now stands gives the judge that discretion, it should be left as it is. We have in the Dominion of Canada at least one judge who is Canadian enough and courageous enough to decline to recommend an oriental as a fit subject for naturalization in this country, and I think the majority of the people will agree with his decision on that point.

Mr. RINFRET: Is there in the statute anything directing the judge to act like that, or is that not rather a matter of policy that should be left to the government to decide?

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Section 26 provides:

If the court decides that the alien is a fit and proper person to be naturalized and possesses the required qualifications a certified copy of such decision shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary of State of Canada together with the application and such other papers, documents and reports as may be required by any regulation made hereunder.

The wording is:

If the court decides that the alien is a fit and proper person to be naturalized.

Surely that is as broad a discretion as anyone could have. The judge decides whether the man is a fit and proper person, and the fact that he will never make a proper citizen of this country is sufficient to justify any judge in declining to recommend an oriental for naturalization. They cannot be assimilated into our nationality, and Japan does not extend to us equal privileges in the way of naturalization. The law in Japan requires that an applicant shall, as a consequence of acquiring Japanese nationality, lose his original nationality. Our Naturalization Act does not require anything of that kind. In fact Japanese, notwithstanding the fact that they may go through the form of naturalization in Canada are not released by the Japanese government from their allegiance to Japan. The Japanese government never regard them as aliens; they are still subject and liable to the kingdom of Japan. For that, if for no other reason, we should not change our Naturalization Act. If the evidently inspired despatch from Ottawa expresses the policy of the Secretary of State in regard to naturalization of orientals, there would be no check on them at all. If it is left to the Secretary of State to say whether or not an oriental should be naturalized, his opinion and that of the department is that a judge has no right to refuse such naturalization. I believe the Canadian people as a whole will say that the judges are right and that orientals are not fit and should not be allowed to be naturalized in this country. They are not assimilable here because they cannot properly and successfully intermarry with Canadians. Is there a member in this house that would like to see his son or his daughter intermarry with an oriental? Certainly not. That means that they are not assimilable; they are not fit and proper persons to be citizens of this country, and probably no oriental would want to see his children intermarry with ours. That is a feature of the act that is of value to the Dominion of Canada. I will go this far, that if the government will by a definite statutory provision prohibit the naturalization of orientals in this country I for one will be prepared to support the legislation.

I do not think the amendment suggested by the minister improves his bill as originally introduced. It may be that the posting up of notices in post offices will give notice to more people interested in an application for naturalization than the present system of posting the notice in the office of the clerk of the court. If that is so I would say that that requirement should be added to the present one and that the applicant should be required not only to have a notice posted up in the office of the clerk of the court but to have a notice posted up in the post office; but we should not remove any safeguards which the act at present provides.

Mr. CAHAN: There is just one phase of the bill now before the house to which I should like to direct the attention of the government. Prior to 1914, naturalization in Canada and in all the other British dominions, in fact in all the possessions of the crown throughout the world, was a matter of purely local jurisdiction. Prior to 1914 in this country application was first made to the clerk of the court. It was supported by affidavit, passed upon pro forma, and a certificate issued to the applicant making him, if you please, a Canadian citizen and entitling him within the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament to the rights and privileges of a Canadian citizen. Prior to that time we had had arising from time to time in Canada a constitutional discussion which is symbolic of the discussions that have occurred since the late imperial conference, and indicative of the class of discussions which are bound to arise in the future in regard to a number of subjects which are within the legislative jurisdiction of this parliament but yet are within the legal legislative jurisdicton of the parliament of Great Britain and also within the legislative jurisdictions of the other dominions, as regards all their citizens and property rights within those dominions.

After the British North America Act was passed providing in section 91, subsection 25 that the parliament of Canada should have legislative jurisdiction with regard to naturalization and aliens, I remember very well that the question then arose of the necessity of preserving the autonomy of Canada in respect of all legislation respecting the naturalization of aliens within the jurisdiction of the Canadian parliament. No doubt after the British North America Act of 1867 was passed, there was the legal right on the part of the imperial parliament, so-called, to legislate that British subjects naturalized under the laws of Great Britain or under the laws of other British dominions should have the rights of British subjects and Canadian citizens within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. But by conceding to the parliament of Canada, under the section of the British North America Act which I have just quoted, the exclusive right to legislate with regard to the naturalization of aliens, the parliament of Great Britain, in a constitutional sense, placed it beyond the constitutional right and power of the parliament of Great Britain to legislate upon that subject by the enactment of statutes which would apply within the territorial jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. These discussions proceeded from year to year until the imperial conference of 1911. It was then decided that some way out of the difficulty should be found by mutual agreement between the parliaments of the dominions and the parliament of Great Britain, and that it must be found by such a compromise as would not impose upon Canada, an autonomous dominion, imperial legislation without the consent of the parliament of Canada.

That compromise was framed by the drafting of the imperial act of 1914. That imperial act for the first time made provision that an alien who had become by naturalization a Canadian citizen might also have the rights and privileges of a British citizen throughout the empire. I remember many instances happening which showed how necessary it was that naturalized aliens should have those rights. I remember the case of a young child of German parentage coming with his parents to British Honduras, receiving his education in the schools of British Honduras, becoming a member of the legislature of that colony, and subsequently becoming the acting governor of the colony, a man of the utmost probity and ability. He happened to pass across the border into a neighbouring state, and there he was seized upon and placed in gaol, and upon his appeal to the British government for the assistance of British diplomacy, under the circumstances, this man, who had been the representative of the sovereign in his own colony, was refused by the British government the right to ask for their intercession in the premises because, although a British citizen within the territory of British Honduras, he was not a British subject and a British citizen outside of that territory. That and many other similar instances led the imperial conference of 1902 to discuss the matter. Later it was considered at the imperial conference of 1907, and again at the imperial conference of 1911, in which the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier participated. That conference of 1911, while protesting against the proposed legislation as laid before it at that date, under which imperial legislation with respect to naturalization would apply to the dominions, nevertheless agreed—by mutual agreement between the dominions, each legislature in its own behalf insisting upon its own autonomy—that the alien who obtained Canadian citizenship, for instance, within Canada, should have the right of British citizenship throughout the empire. That compromise was embodied in the act of 1914 of the British parliament, which was thereafter adopted by each of the parliaments of the British dominions. So that our autonomy was not interfered with in any way, but these several dominions, by agreement among themselves, by associating together and adopting the same stipulations, agreed, so long as those same conditions might exist, that we in Canada by conferring Canadian naturalization upon any alien would at the same time give to that alien the rights of a British citizen in Australia, the rights of a British citizen in South Africa, the rights of a British citizen in Great Britain and in all her colonies and possessions. Therefore, at the present moment it seems to me that we should not depart in any way, except under absolute necessity, from the agreement which the associated dominions and Great Britain then came to, which was embodied in the imperial act of 1914, and in the bill submitted to this parliament in 1914; because we are now entering upon the consideration of a large sphere of subjects of inter-imperial interest, in which such association and such general agreement must be arrived at in order to ensure the continued association of the dominions, and the maintenance of the rights of citizens of one dominion within the territory of another as well as within Great Britain.

If we were merely legislating to-day with regard to the naturalization of aliens in Canada, certain considerations would apply. It may be necessary, in order that naturalized citizens may have the right to land titles, perhaps to the franchise and other local privileges, that we should again maintain in a separate classification those who are admitted to Canadian citizenship but who are not admitted to British citizenship throughout the dominions of the empire. But when we amend this act in the form in which the present proposed amendments are brought down we are not only legislating for the admission of aliens domiciled or resident in Canada to the rights of Canadian citizenship within the territorial limits of Canada, but we are legislating, under the reciprocal agreement with Great Britain and the reciprocal legislation passed by the dominions since 1914, to admit those naturalized aliens, domiciled and resident in Canada, into British citizenship, into Australian citizenship, into citizenship in the South African state, into citizenship in Newfoundland and in every other dominion or colony.

If you will look at the statistics you will find that I am within the limit, I think, when I say that the aliens admitted to citizenship in Canada annually aggregate in number about four times the number of aliens admitted to British citizenship throughout all the rest of the British Empire. The reason was explained by one of my hon. friends in the debate of yesterday, that very few aliens go in to take up their residence in Australia, or in South Africa or in New Zealand. But in Canada we are offering very great inducements to immigrants from foreign states. We are putting forth efforts in that direction which are unequalled by all the other British dominions. Therefore it behooves us, I think, to consider not only that we are admitting these aliens as Canadian citizens, but that under a reciprocal arrangement made with the sister dominions and Great Britain we are admitting them to rights and privileges, which are highly prized by many of us, of British citizenship throughout the whole British Empire. Consequently we should proceed with a certain degree of care and circumspection.

It seems to me as the debate proceeded that the difficulties to which the hon. Secretary of State referred, and which apply almost exclusively to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, might be remedied if the justices of a lower class in those provinces, especially in the remote sections, were permitted to make the examinations and reports now made by the judges of a higher court. I do not know sufficiently the local arrangements in those provinces, but I understand there are district magistrates in almost every remote community, and if not there are at least justices of the peace, two of whom might act, and who under the criminal jurisdiction now exercise large powers in those remote districts. While I grant that every opportunity should be given to those residing there to become Canadian citizens and British subjects, I think the difficulties mentioned by the Secretary of State might be obviated in the manner I have suggested.

I remember the debate that took place in 1914, because as a student of this matter from early days I took a great interest in those negotiations. In Great Britain the power to refuse a certificate to an applicant for naturalization, which has vested in the Home Secretary since 1844, was exercised, as one hon. gentleman said, for diplomatic purposes. Very few people have been naturalized in Great Britain. From the earliest times up to 1844, when the king in the exercise of his prerogative could accept the allegiance of a foreigner and grant him naturalization, the status of a British subject was regarded as a very high and unusual privilege. In 1844 Great Britain, with that diplomatic subtlety for which she is distinguished, vested in the Home Secretary the absolute right of refusal to grant naturalization, so that the government, without enacting invidious distinctions as between aliens, might through the exercise of this discretion by the Home Secretary, effect its purpose without giving any excuse for its action.

Now, the imperial act of 1914, the framework of which to a large extent was in accordance with the suggestions made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the colonial conference of 1911, sought to maintain and preserve the autonomy of this country. This framework was agreed upon in negotiations between Canada, Great Britain and the other dominions, and the form in which it was submitted to this parliament in 1914 reserved to the Secretary of State of Canada the right to refuse naturalization to any alien. But that right was so vested for a particular purpose—so that the government through him might refuse to certain alien races the right to become naturalized Canadian citizens, without making invidious distinctions by statute which might prove irritating to other races in various parts of the world with whom we must preserve at least a certain degree of amity. But that statute of 1914 did provide for a preliminary examination into the qualifications of the applicant by a judge, who decided whether the applicant was a fit and proper person to become a Canadian citizen and a British subject. This removed from a political authority such as the Secretary of State and placed under a judicial tribunal the duty of investigating and the right of deciding whether applications for naturalization should be granted.

I do not wish to go into this at length but if my hon. friends will look at the debates of May, 1914, and particularly at pages 4146, 4179 and 4181, they will find that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made the strongest possible pronouncement against the Secretary of State, under the draft bill then before the house, exercising any discretion whatever in the matter, except that diplomatic discretion which it was deemed necessary to vest in him, in case certain exceptional difficulties arose, to refuse naturalization, and so avoid diplomatic conversations with foreign states. For instance, with regard to the exercise of those powers by the Secretary of State, Sir Wilfrid said:

> If a man applies to a judge for a certificate, and a neighbour comes and says that he is not of good character, that he is a fugitive from justice, or has been liable to police punishment, the judge is bound to take cognizance of those matters and refuse the certificate. But what we object to is the vesting of such a discretion in a man who is not a judicial officer, but who has political responsibility only. I quite conceive there are many occasions when a discretionary power has to be exercised by the Secretary of State, but the possession of such power is always liable to very serious abuses.

He made an even stronger statement at page 4179. In moving to strike out the clause of the bill of 1914 which gave this discretion to the Secretary of State, the clause which now appears in the act, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

> In other words—
> After quoting the section.
> —you provide machinery for aliens who desire to become citizens, but when the alien passes through that machinery, when he has gone before the judge and has the judge's decision that naturalization should be granted him, the Secretary of State may, without reason given and without possibility of appeal, deny him that privilege. The reasons given for this by the Minister of Justice yesterday do not seem to me to be adequate. I understand him to say that there may be cases in which, for reasons which cannot be told, it may be conducive to the public welfare that a man should not be given naturalization.

That was the class of cases to which the Minister of Justice of that day, Hon. Mr. Doherty, had referred. There might be a Japanese, a Chinese, a Hottentot or a person of some other nationality who might qualify under the statute, and who might be able to speak either English or French; moreover, he might have had residence in this country for a term of years, yet it might be advisable in the public interest to exclude him. Sir Wilfrid goes on to say:

> In other words, you re-establish in the hands of the Secretary of State the power which at one time was held by the King of England but which no longer exists. I do not know any justification for that. This section provides that a man must be of good character in order to be naturalized and when he establishes his good character before the judge I do not see why he should not be naturalized.

And then, referring again to the same subject, Sir Wilfrid at page 4181 says, as to the powers of the Secretary of State:

> He can do as was done for some time in England before the law of 1844 passed, when naturalization would be granted to some rich Jew, to a foreign prince, or to an important personage from a foreign country. But it will not be King George IV as it was in the days of old—it will be King Louis Coderre—

Referring to the then Secretary of State.

> —who will grant the naturalization to anybody he pleases. I move that this section be also struck out.

Now, lying at the basis of that whole discussion was the apprehension on the part of Sir Wilfrid that if the entire machinery of investigating applications for naturalization in Canada were placed within the control of the head of a political department it would give rise to the suspicion and the fear that from time to time the political heads would use that power for strictly partisan purposes. If you read these debates you will see that Sir Wilfrid, of all men, insisted that there should be a judicial inquiry. He interpreted the law as it then passed to mean that the procedure enacted by the 1914 act was binding upon the Secretary of State, and that, preliminary to the exercise of any discretion by the Secretary of State, there would be findings and decisions by a judge, after due inquiry in which all parties would be heard. And he felt that that judicial inquiry, to a very considerable extent, withdrew from the political head, the Secretary of State, the exercise of his discretion of admitting all foreigners who claimed qualification under the act. But it did not take from the Secretary of State the power to refuse, for high motives of political policy, the admission of some who may have been qualified under the act, and who may have been passed by the judge of the court to which application was first made.

Then, in order to remove similar apprehensions to-day, in order that my hon. friends opposite may adhere to the policy so clearly announced by their esteemed leader in past days, it seems to me that they might attain that which they desire to attain, they might remove those difficulties which are now obvious in certain unsettled parts of the provinces of the middle west, by authorizing some minor judicial authority to undertake a judicial inquiry in those remote districts, and at the same time place it, at least apparently, beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State to admit thousands of people wholesale on his mere ipse dixit, and upon an inquiry made by him alone.

There is no difficulty in a city like Montreal. I do not know the statistics, but I venture the suggestion that in the city of Montreal we admit as many aliens to citizenship within a year—on the average—as are admitted in either of the provinces of the middle west. While I have the greatest confidence in the Secretary of State I should not like, when I am running an election in my own constituency, if ever I should again run an election in St. Lawrence-St. George, to have the Secretary of State, thirty or sixty days before the election, admit a thousand or two persons there, on his own ipse dixit, thus increasing the electoral lists of the St. Lawrence or the St. George subdivisions. A judicial inquiry such as is prescribed gives all confidence to the other dominions that we are living up to the very essence of the agreement which was made between the associated dominions and Great Britain in 1914.

Mr. JACOBS: In what other country of the British Empire is a judicial inquiry insisted upon?

Mr. CAHAN: In no other country. In Canada we have insisted upon it simply because we in Canada are admitting, year by year, to Canadian and British citizenship, four times as many people as are admitted by Great Britain and all the other dominions together. Admissions are very few and exceptional in Great Britain to-day in proportion to its population.

Mr. JACOBS: But is it a question of numbers?

Mr. CAHAN: It is a question of numbers, because the fact that 17,000 are admitted on the average each year to Canada—this has been the average in recent years—precludes any satisfactory inquiry being made by the Secretary of State as an officer of the government. But the judicial inquiry does distribute among the courts of the country the duty and responsibility of investigating applications. Look at the sections of our act which it is proposed to repeal at the present time. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I think, in the discussions that took place on the subject, regarded them as the safeguard of the system, giving confidence to the people in this country that aliens were not being improperly admitted wholesale. Prior to our act of 1914, the act in the revised statutes of 1906 as amended by the subsequent act of 1907 did not state in such clear and positive terms that the judge of the court should investigate and make a decision. At that time in Canada there was a great deal of dissatisfaction in both political parties with the way in which that act was being administered, and it was then felt that a larger duty should be placed upon the judge. Therefore section 22 of the act of 1914 provides:

> An alien desiring to be naturalized shall apply for a decision establishing that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act to any judge. . . .

And so on. That placed upon the judge the duty of ascertaining from the evidence before him not only the qualifications under certain sections of the act but the general fitness of the applicant to be naturalized under the provisions of the act. Then section 25 said:

> The applicant shall produce to the court such evidence, that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act, as the court may require. . . .

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend know that that evidence is produced by the department of the Secretary of State?

Mr. CAHAN: I have seen many of these cases. I am not in any position to make this statement with the accuracy of the Secretary of State, but in hundreds of cases of naturalization in our Montreal courts the Secretary of State never hears of them until after the decision of the judge is given, and of course I am dealing with the Secretary of State personally in that case.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will allow me, that is the very point I was trying to make last night. I repeat what I then said, that in every case a copy of the application sent to the court is at once sent to the department, and the department immediately starts an investigation.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. CAHAN: I am glad to hear that, but I am sure that in many cases these investigations prove most futile. I have seen applications made by the score to the judges of our courts in Montreal when the only evidence before the court was the application itself and such witnesses as the applicant produced to give evidence as to his qualifications and fitness. I have been present in court many times, but as far as I remember attention never was called to any special report from the department of the Secretary of State dealing with the matter, as being evidence pertinent to the inquiry which the judge was conducting. That is as far as I go. Of course I know that the Secretary of State receives a copy of these applications but I did not know that in every case he immediately began an inquiry. I am sure that is a new method which perhaps my hon. friend has inaugurated.

Mr. RINFRET: No, that has been the practice of the department right along. When the department receives the report from the court, by the inquiry which has been conducted by the department itself we are in a position to pronounce on the case.

Mr. CAHAN: I understand. Have I the correct interpretation of my hon. friend's statement when I say that the inquiry which is started by the minister is not really for the purpose of submitting evidence to the judge but for the purpose of enabling the minister to exercise his ministerial discretion when the report of the judge reaches him?

Mr. RINFRET: That is the point exactly.

Mr. CAHAN: Then I undertand the case, and we are not apart at all. I have always understood that, but my point is that the wide discretion given to the minister under the act as a matter of public policy was given to him not that he should take the place of the judge, not that he should make an inquiry similar to the judicial inquiry which takes place before the judge but to enable him as a high officer of the crown, exercising the ancient prerogative right of the crown to admit aliens to allegiance, to determine whether there were objections of high policy to the admission to British citizenship of certain peoples whom we have not been wont to admit to citizenships in this country although they may be able to speak English or French and may possess the residence qualification. Now the minister is changing the whole policy, apparently; instead of retaining the exercise of that high discretion as a part of the prerogative right of the crown, he is making himself and his appointees the instruments of inquiry and investigation, and is usurping to that extent the functions which have been previously exercised by the courts of the land.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): The hon. gentleman's time is up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has been urging that we in Canada should live up to the agreement made with the other British countries. I do not believe there is anything in the proposed legislation which would tend to violate that agreement. It is now proposed merely to change the method by which we ascertain whether or not a man is qualified for naturalization, and notwithstanding some statements which have been made the hon. gentleman must admit that the method existing in other British dominions is that of investigation by the department of the Secretary of State, so in adopting legislation of this character in reality we are falling in line with the methods used in other British dominions and in the motherland as well.

The hon. member suggests that on account of the differences existing in Canada we should have another method, and I quite agree that possibly this may be so. I believe we should consider these matters on their merits as they apply to Canada, rather than consider conditions which exist with regard to the Hottentots or some other race in another part of the world. In fact, I find it a little difficult to get back to the actual realities in Canada after having listened for forty minutes to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

The hon. gentleman has been talking about diplomatic considerations, and has been explaining to us how a man who could qualify under the statute might not be allowed to become naturalized because of matters of high political policy. That might be in accordance with diplomatie practice, but I would rather be inclined to urge that individuals who can qualify under our statutes by all means should be permitted to enjoy the rights which are there provided. I think we have found ourselves in all kinds of trouble through these devious methods of preventing people from getting what they have every right to expect. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has gone back to 1844 and has dealt with the question of how a foreign prince might have bestowed upon him the high privilege of becoming a British subject. I submit that we are a long way from England in 1844.

We are receiving hundreds of thousands of immigrants. We are spending millions of dollars in trying to bring immigrants in. We are offering them inducements to come, in the way of free homesteads. Our regulations, however, provide for naturalization, and I submit we are not keeping faith with those whom we are inviting to come to this country unless we make it possible for them to qualify in order that they may receive free homesteads and in order that they may enter into the full rights of Canadian citizenship.

I quite admit that our naturalization must be safeguarded, but I am firmly convinced that there is more danger of shutting people out from naturalization than there is of admitting too many of them to naturalization. We have definite rules and statutes governing the classes of people who are to be admitted to naturalization. We are not discussing these at the present time; we are discussing merely the most desirable method by which such naturalization may be granted. Let us consider the actual situation in respect to these hundreds of thousands of people who are coming to our shores. If we deny them naturalization we postpone for them any opportunity of participating in our common political life. Sometimes there are those in this house who object to what is known in industrial circles as "direct action"; they say that these men ought never to strike. They say that these men who are out of work ought never to parade. If you deny to them the rights of citizenship, if you deny to them the right of endeavouring to bring about desired reforms by means of constitutional action, can you wonder that sometimes they are driven to take unconstitutional action? Surely we must admit that the strongest safeguard we can have in this country—if we believe in democracy at all—is to have the freest participation by all in our common national life, and if we deny to these people who come to our shores—people who are not criminals by any means, people who come from countries which are just as high in the political scale as our own—if we deny to them the right to participate in our national life we are only laying up to ourselves trouble in the years to come. We must not be placed in the position of urging people to come in, of promising certain things when they do come, and then failing to keep faith with them. We do so at our risk.

I am not quite sure whether or not this proposed legislation is for the best, but I do know that the present arrangement is not at all satisfactory. I suppose we should not discuss here some of the questions that do not immediately come up for consideration. The language question has been already referred to, and with regard to that I should like to say that, while I suppose it is a good thing for us to insist, in a general way, that immigrants should learn English or French, there are a good many people coming here who are well educated, but do not know and have no opportunity to learn English or French and I do not think we should be too rigid about those matters. Take one class of people, the Icelanders; they are years and years ahead of us in political consciousness and political education. For a thousand years they have had democratic political institutions. I know some of the men who have come to this country in mature life who find it extremely difficult, when placed in remote places in the west, to learn the English language. I think it is a great hardship to prevent such people acquiring citizenship. I had an instance come to my knowledge in this connection, where an elderly Icelandic woman, who is well educated in her own language, has not been able to become naturalized; she is now seventy years of age and yet she is prevented from receiving an old age pension because of lack of naturalization. I think that is a great hardship. She has done much pioneer work in the west. I think it is stupid, if not indeed cruel, to prevent her being naturalized because of some technical requirement.

It has been stated that our practice is uniform, because in every case the judges have to deal with this matter. I would suggest that the lack of uniformity is one of the reasons why some of us would like to see the act changed. Judges have been very arbitrary, in some cases that I have known, in refusing to grant naturalization certificates. They themselves, in my judgment are prejudiced. They have the right to their own opinions, but they are personally very much prejudiced against certain types of foreigners; in some cases it is against orientals, in others it is against Greeks and Italians, and they have absolutely refused to grant naturalization to people of these nationalities. I cannot think that is a good thing. I number among my own friends people of these nationalities, people who stand just as high in the social scale as people we meet in this parliament. Why should they be refused naturalization because some ignorant judge, and there are some such, or some prejudiced judge, and there are some such, has decided not to admit foreigners? If we ask aliens to come to this country we must be prepared to go through with the undertaking and see that they are incorporated into the life of this country.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

It has been suggested that complaints come only from a few districts. Personally I have comparatively few newly arrived foreigners in my own constituency, but during the last few years I have had the opportunity of lecturing to labour groups pretty much across Canada, and from Glace Bay, Montreal, Toronto, Fort William, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, all through the Crowsnest right through to Vancouver, I have had the frequent experience that men of foreign extraction would come to me after my lecture and say, How can we become Canadian citizens? We have been here five, ten or fifteen years but we have no opportunity of becoming Canadian citizens. I have made inquiries in some cases, and it is true that some of these men have had police records; and I have lived long enough among the immigrants to know that it is very easy for a foreigner to acquire a police record. He may have broken a municipal ordinance—and it is very easy for a new arrival to break one of these ordinances —and then he acquires a police record. Or one of them may have taken part in a strike and some charge have been laid against him, and although that took place ten, fifteen or twenty years ago it has been recorded against him and prevents him becoming a Canadian citizen. I have investigated some of these cases and have found that they stand high in the local community; I could produce certificates from reputable citizens of all classes in the community, that these immigrants are in every way qualified for naturalization, but nothing can be done under the existing arrangements. That means that there is a bitter feeling growing up on the part of thousands of people who otherwise might become good Canadian citizens.

I venture to suggest to the minister an amendment that I think would be desirable if legislation such as he proposes is to be carried. There might be a danger that the Secretary of State might act in an arbitrary manner, not merely that he might be willing to naturalize thousands of people, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has suggested, but on the other hand that he might be inclined to deny citizenship to others who have a perfect right to it. Therefore I would suggest that provision should be made in his bill for some sort of a court of appeal. If the Department of the Secretary of State, because of an adverse report concerning a man, refuses to grant naturalization, I would say that if the man himself or anyone opposed to the man's naturalization wants to appeal against the decision there should be some place where such an appeal could be heard. It might be an appeal to the Secretary of State himself who might send out a commissioner to hold some sort of public investigation. Edmonton, Saskatoon and other cities in the west are a long way from Ottawa and you cannot expect the ordinary citizen, whether he be a workingman or a farmer, to come down to Ottawa. If he has to employ the services of a lawyer that means a considerable expense. He ought to have the right of stating his case before a final decision by the Secretary of State. It might be that a minor official has made a mistake. Surely the man ought to have the right to appeal to a commissioner or judge who might be sent out or selected in the district to hold a public hearing. In that way the interests of the public as a whole would be safeguarded. Such an appeal should be granted either when the complaint came from the man who felt that he was not being given a fair chance or from the community who felt that the department of the Secretary of State had made a mistake.

At the present time investigations are made by the mounted police, and so far as I can see the proposal is that that duty will still be expected of them. Personally I want to enter a protest against that procedure. To a great many people the police are people who come to protect their homes, but to other classes in the community they are officials who may be coming to cause their arrest. Away out on the plains of Saskatchewan when a policeman appears at the home of a private individual the opinion generally gets abroad that there is something wrong at that home; that the officer is there to investigate; that the settler may be suspected of bootlegging or something of that kind, and people do not like that. Some hon. member says: "No." I know enough about the prairies to know that is a very common sentiment among certain classes of most reputable people. I believe the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean) said that some people had the same feeling about going to the courts. Ordinary people do not go to the courts unless they are forced to go there in connection with some trouble. It may be all very well for lawyers to sit here and say that the courts are the great safeguard of our liberties. The courts are very profitable for them; they enjoy being around the courts, but for many people the courts mean places in which they are mulcted of their hard-earned money. A court means a place where they may get into trouble and which they want to avoid as far as possible.

I would suggest that citizenship is not in the nature of a crime. I hope the time will come when the duty of policemen will not be largely to suppress crime but rather to do everything possible in the interest of the public. When I see a policeman doing point duty, safeguarding little children as they cross the street, I see exemplified the ideal with regard to a police force which I should like to have generally adopted. But I conceive that is not the ideal most people have to-day with regard to the police and under existing circumstances it would seem to be wise that someone other than a policeman should be used to make these investigations. If a person has a criminal record, by all means have a policeman investigate; but if there is no criminal record and if Canadian citizenship is a high estate to which the applicant seeks to secure admission, the least we can do is to send to him someone who will not in any way be associated in his mind with crime.

I offer what may seem a very idealistic suggestion, but I have sometimes wondered whether it might not be well to have a little more ceremony connected with the admission to citizenship. I have sometimes considered whether we might not add real value to Dominion day if we would arrange that aliens might be admitted to full citizenship, say, on Dominion day, or on some other fixed day when some little ceremonial could be connected with the matter. In that way naturalization would not be granted in a corner after investigation by a policeman as to whether or not the man was guilty of anything, but the new citizen would be made to feel that he was getting something worth while. I am suggesting Dominion day because it is the national holiday. We should say to these people: We grant you this Canadian citizenship; and we might give them some little token in the way of a card or a medal or something of that kind that would remind them of the occasion.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They receive their papers.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not very much in favour myself, of ceremonial, but it is a big thing for an alien to have all the rights of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. BENNETT: British citizenship.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: British citizenship, and while this may seem a little idealistic it might result in a great deal of good especially amongst people who come from countries where ceremonial is very common and where the populace revels in anything that involves a pageant.

I would however return to my main contention that the Secretary of State might consider the bringing in of some amendment by which an appeal could be made to his department and an investigation held in the locality where the applicant himself or the objectors to the application might appear to state his or their side of the case.

Mr. ADSHEAD: As one who homesteaded thirty years ago I must differ somewhat from the leader of the Labour party when he says that a mounted policeman is regarded by citizens as a man who is investigating a crime, and that if a policeman visists a home everybody thinks there must be something wrong with that home, or the policeman would not go there.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I spoke particularly about Saskatchewan.

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to that libel on Saskatchewan I may say that the police have many times been dispensers of various forms of relief. They have been very welcome too and no such slur has been cast upon households which they have visited.

Mr. ADSHEAD: During the days of my homesteading in the district in which I laboured we were very glad to see the mounted policeman come along. He was our friend; he would inquire if there was any difficulty and he always helped us out. My purpose however in rising is to make a plea for the alien homesteader. I would not do away with the provision that the man, before he votes, must know the English language; but it is a hardship to an alien, after he is brought into this country, goes on the land, plugs away for five years, builds a house, stable and barns, grubs the roots out of the land and brings it into cultivation, to be told that before he can get his patent or deed for his land he must do something else, he must learn another language. That is not fair. After he has fulfilled his homestead duties you should give him his patent in order that he may be able to carry on. If he has not his deed he cannot mortgage his land, and he cannot come in under the Farm Loans Act. You tie him up, although he has earned and well earned that property. I think this restriction might very well be taken out of the Naturalization Act and put instead into the Elections Act, where you could provide that before a man should be entitled to vote he must be able to read and write one of the two official languages, and that should apply to Canadian settlers as well as to aliens. I have known Canadians many a time, when I was in business in Ontario, who could not sign a receipt and had to mark a cross. I think the same qualifications for exercising the franchise should apply to Canadians as well as aliens, much more so in the case of the Canadian, who should be better able to read and write the English language than an alien. So I think we might very well consider in this act the granting of naturalization to aliens who have fulfilled their homestead duties and are of good character, and leave the question of being able to read and write the English language to be dealt with in the Elections Act. Then you do away with the discrimination, and you say to the settler, as you ought to do: After you have fulfilled your homestead duties, if you are of good character, we will grant you your patent and naturalization. I know that men who have lived in the frontier districts will endorse this statement, that the first five years are the hardest on the homestead. During the first five years of my life on the homestead I was fully occupied with my homestead duties, and if I had been told that I had not only to live on the homestead and fence and break thirty or forty acres, and have so many cattle, and build a house and barn, but must in addition learn the German language, I would have said: Take back your homestead, because learning a new language would have been harder to me than all the other work, and by the way, we did not say to these aliens when they came here from Hungary or Iceland or Norway: We will grant you a patent after you have finished your homestead duties and made a good citizen of yourself, and in addition you must learn a foreign language. That language qualification was not mentioned when they came here, and it is not fair to bring it up now.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I would like to answer a remark made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), Mr. Chairman, and then I would ask you to call it six o'clock. The hon. member spoke of the feeling of the people of Saskatchewan towards the mounted police. As one born in that province and having lived there all my life, perhaps I can speak with some authority as to how our people feel about the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, now the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I do not think there is any class of citizen in the whole of Canada that is more looked up to by our western people than the Northwest mounted police ever since they were organized in 1872. When a policeman comes to their doors, it is never thought by anyone that it is because of some wrong-doing that has been done, but it was the natural thing for these policemen to call at the homes of all the homesteaders in turn, to see if everything was going well with the homesteader, and if everything was not going well it was the duty of the policeman to report accordingly, and see that help was brought, doctors, nurses, and any other assistance that might be required, and that assistance was supplied by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police so far as possible. Therefore, I do not think that anybody upon the prairies is at all adverse to having one of the riders of the plains come to his door. I have never seen one that objected. On the contrary, the policeman is always welcomed and invited in for a meal, and although the settler has the right to charge the man for a meal, in very few cases is that ever done. The people of Saskatchewan are proud of the Northwest mounted police, and they know that any job they are put at by the Secretary of State or by any department of the government will be looked after, and looked after well, by that splendid body of men.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 3, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Seventh report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

Seventh and eighth reports of the select standing commitee on banking and commerce. —Mr. Hay.

PENSIONS AND SOLDIER PROBLEMS

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South) moved that the fourth and final report of the special committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems be concurred in.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Perhaps I had better make a statement with reference to this report. It is now in six parts, four of them containing draft bills with respect to pensions, land settlement, canteen funds and insurance respectively. It is the intention of the government to introduce at this session of the house legislation based upon the bills that are recommended by the committee. The bills as recommended by the committee will be referred immediately to the law officers of the crown in order that they may be drafted in accordance with the rules which govern in these matters so that they may contain the proper safeguards.

Mr. McGIBBON: When may we expect the bills?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should hope that the resolutions might appear on the order paper immediately and that the bills would be introduced at once.

Motion agreed to.

MR. W. E. WHITE

Mr. FRASER:

1. Has W. E. White, fire ranger, of Chase, British Columbia, been dismissed by the government?

2. If so, on what date?

3. What is the reason of his dismissal?

4. How long had he been in the employ of the government?

5. Were his services as fire ranger satisfactory to the department officials?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

1. Yes.

2. June 30, 1927.

3. Active political partisanship.

4. During fire seasons since 1914.

5. No complaints about his service were received by officials of the department.

BEDFORD BASIN POWDER MAGAZINE

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. Who is the contractor erecting the powder magazine at Bedford basin, Halifax?

2. What is the contract price?

3. How many tenders were received?

4. What were the figures of each tender?

Mr. RALSTON:

The Department of National Defence is now preparing to call for tenders for a portion of the work of constructing this magazine.

The last contract was awarded to Messrs. A. S. MacMillan and C. A. MacNearney, Halifax, N.S., for the sum of $107,900. Two tenders were received, viz:—Messrs. MacMillan and MacNearney, $107,900; Standard Construction Co., Ltd., $109,556.

BRIGDEN, ONT. POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MANION:

1. Regarding the appointment of William MacDonald to the postmastership of Brigden, Ontario, why was the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission not favoured?

2. Who did the Civil Service Commission recommend for this position?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Because it was considered that the appointment of the applicant first selected by the Civil Service Commission would not be in the best interest of the public service.

2. First, John William Such; second, William Howard MacDonald.

HOME BREW LICENSES

Mr. CHARTERS:

How many home brew licenses were issued in the province of Ontario by the Dominion government for the calendar years 1925, 1926, 1927?

Mr. EULER: Licenses are not issued in the province of Ontario giving them the right to manufacture beer or liquor to be consumed at their homes. Under the provisions of Section 195 of the Excise Act nothing further is required than notification of possession of utensils for brewing and of intention to brew.

To prepare a statement giving the number of such notices will require considerable time and correspondence and the inquiry should be made a return.

FREIGHT RATES ON AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS

Mr. EVANS:

1. What is the freight rate—per 100 pounds, carload lots on agricultural implements—(a) from Toronto to Saskatoon over the Canadian Pacific railway and Canadian National railways; (b) from Toronto to Winnipeg; (c) from Toronto to Montreal; (d) from Hamilton to Saskatoon, Winnipeg and Montreal?

2. Are the freight rates over Canadian Pacific railway and Canadian National railways the same in all cases between any two given points?

3. What is the freight rate—per 100 pounds—from Chicago to Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Montreal, respectively?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. The freight rate per 100 pounds in carload lots of agricultural implements from Toronto to Saskatoon is 139½ cents, to Winnipeg 82½ cents, and to Montreal 37½ cents. From Hamilton to Saskatoon 139½ cents, to Winnipeg 82½ cents and to Montreal 40 cents. These rates apply either via the Canadian Pacific railway or the Canadian National railways.

2. When both the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian National railways operate between two points the rates are generally the same.

3. The rate on agricultural implements in carloads from Chicago to Winipeg is 81½ cents per 100 pounds, to Saskatoon, 135½ cents per 100 pounds, and to Montreal, 56½ cents.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—INTERIOR ALTERATIONS

Mr. KAY:

1. What officer or committee is authorized to make changes or alterations in the construction of the interior of the House of Commons building?

2. Who authorized the conversion of the committee room on the fourth floor into offices for the Minister of Public Works?

3. Who authorized the reduction in the area of the cafeteria on the fifth floor, in order to make an office, and: (a) at whose request was this done; (b) was the restaurant committee consulted?

4. Are any other changes in offices or rooms contemplated at the present time, and if so, what are they?

5. Will the members of the House of Commons be consulted before any changes are made in future?

Mr. SPEAKER:

1. The Privy Council in consultation with the chief whip.

2. The Privy Council in consultation with the chief whip.

3. Answered by No. 2 (a) no special request was made, (b) yes.

4. No.

5. Yes.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION—EXPROPRIATIONS

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton):

1. What price was paid by the government for the property bounded on the north by Wellington street, east by the post office, west by Elgin street, and south by Sparks street, and from whom purchased?

2. What legal fees were paid in connection with the acquiring of this property?

3. What was the cost of the tearing down of buildings on the said property?

4. What commissions, if any, were paid in connection with the acquisition of this property, and to whom paid?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. (a) Price to be fixed by Exchequer court. (b) Ottawa Electric Company Limited. W. J. Irvine, Estate of C. W. Bangs, Matthewman Estate.

2. $843.55.

3. The buildings were torn down by contract, the contractors paying $8,311 to the government for the buildings.

4. T. Foley, $3.250; C. W. Ross, $3,250: on account services as valuators of property.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

TEXTILE IMPORTS

Mr. EDWARDS (South Waterloo):

1. What was the value in dollars of the textile goods imported during the years 1925, 1926, and 1927, from: (a) Czechoslovakia; (b) Esthonia; (c) Hungary; (d) Latvia; (e) Lithuania; (f) Portugal; (g) Roumania and the Serb, Croat, and Slovene kingdom?

2. What is the itemized list of such imports, showing values?

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend on April 27 asked the following question:

Whether or not application has been made by the Beauharnois power interests to have determined the principles upon which the waters of the St. Lawrence are to be diverted from their present channel into a canal.

I replied on that date that I did not know of such an application but that I should not wish my reply to be regarded as final. When my hon. friend asked the question I did not know just what he meant by the word "principles," whether he was referring to legal principles or engineering principles.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Did I use the word "principles" at all?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The question reads:

. . . . to have determined the principles upon which the waters of the St. Lawrence are to diverted.

I do not know whether my hon. friend refers to legal principles or engineering principles.

Mr. BENNETT: I attach no importance to the word "principles." If the question reads 'upon what conditions," that will be quite satisfactory. What I desired to know was whether the question of the diversion of the water was to be referred to the International Joint Commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly the reply that was given in the house on March 22 to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ryckman) answers the question my hon. friend has in mind. The answer was given by the Secretary of State to this effect:

Applications have been received of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and are of date March 17, 1927, and January 17, 1928.

Preliminary plans have been submitted to the Department of Public Works and to the Department of Railways and Canals.

That I think is all that I can state to my hon. friend beyond this, that I am informed that no further communications have been received from the Beauharnois interests.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say to the Prime Minister that my question was whether or not an application had been made to the International Joint Commission as distinguished from the government, or referred by the government to that tribunal. That was what the question had reference to and not to the question asked by the hon. member for East Toronto.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That does not appear according to the question.

Mr. BENNETT: Does it not refer to the International Joint Commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No reference is made to the commission.

Mr. BENNETT: I used the words "International Joint Commission" in my reference. I did not look at Hansard afterwards.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That evidently missed the reporter. I am not aware of any reference having been made but I will make inquiries.

ASBESTOS CORPORATION

THREATENED LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The day before yesterday my hon. friend asked the following question:

I was going to ask whether the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Mackenzie King) has been directed to threatened proceedings against the Asbestos Corporation of Canada and the United States, whether there was any correspondence, and what action it was proposed to take.

I am advised that a formal communication has been received by the Department of External Affairs from the solicitors of the Asbestos Corporation of Canada giving particulars as to a pending suit in the United States, but that this communication does not request any formal action on the part of the government. I might say, however, that there appear to be some important matters to be considered in connection with this litigation and the Departments of Justice and External Affairs are conferring on the question at the present time.

ALLEGED POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

APPOINTMENT OF MR. CHARLES CROCKETT COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I asked for information in regard to the commission appointing Charles Crockett, of New Glasgow, a commissioner to investigate charges of political partisanship against government employees in the province of Nova Scotia; also the names, evidence and report of the commissioner in each case, and so on. May I ask the minister in charge when I may expect a reply to this question, as it is now six weeks since the question was asked?

Right Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In respect to the return asked for, I am sorry that I did not catch at the time what my hon. friend said, but whichever minister is concerned, I will direct his attention to it, and ask that the return be brought down as soon as possible.

MUSKOKA LAKES MAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I would like to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that summer service on the Muskoka lakes will not be started until the 15th instant. In view of the importance of the service, I would like to ask if it could not be started on the 5th.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Muskoka regarding the mail service to the summer resorts of that district—

Mr. McGIBBON: There are a lot of villages as well as summer resorts.

Mr. VENIOT: It is a mail service which commences at the opening and ceases at the close of navigation as carried on by the steamship company. These facts have been brought to my attention: Last year navigation opened on the first of May. Our contract calls for the payment of fifty dollars a day to the steamer which performs the service. I considered last year that there was not a sufficient quantity of mail matter to warrant the payment of fifty dollars a day before some time later in May. I had an investigation made and a check placed upon the mail matter received during that period, especially at those summer resorts, and that check bore out that contention. This year I had another check made and I found that the only mail service required there between the first of May and the fifteenth was for attendants who are getting the summer resort houses and other equipment ready for tourists.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that there are a lot of business places there.

Mr. VENIOT: The service to those business places is not hampered at all by the fact that the summer service will not begin until the 15th May. I may say that the decision has been taken that the usual summer service will not begin until the 15th May, and I do not intend to change the decision.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): The hon. member from Muskoka is not the only person interested in this question. There are in Parry Sound, not tourist resorts, but permanent villages that demand the service from the opening of navigation, whatever date that may be, whether it is the 15th of April or the 15th of May, and they have a perfect right to that. The minister has not taken these people into account, but is talking of the tourist and summer residents who may be there only from June to September.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Speaker, I may answer that I have taken the reports of the officials of my department after a thorough investigation, and if I cannot depend upon those reports I cannot depend upon the word of anybody else.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

DRAFT OF MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I sent a note to the right hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking whether or not the Secretary of State of the United States had forwarded a copy of his note on the outlawry of war, sent to Great Britain, and whether the Prime Minister has had notice of that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend was kind enough to advise me in advance of his intention to ask a question on this subject on the orders of the day.

On April 13 the United States ambassadors in London, Berlin, Rome and Tokyo delivered notes stating that the government of the United States was prepared to conclude with the British, German, Italian and Japanese governments a single multilateral treaty, open to subsequent adherence by any or all governments, binding the parties thereto not to resort to war with one another. Copies were also transmitted of a preliminary draft of a treaty which the government of the United States would be prepared to sign.

The government of France, with which the United States had originally discussed the question of the renunciation of war, has indicated its views in an alternative draft.

We were informed by the British government that the United States note had been received and the French note was expected shortly, and that copies of these documents and the view of the British government would be communicated shortly. This further information has not yet been received.

Meanwhile the correspondence between the United States and France, and the draft treaties submitted by both countries as made public are being carefully considered from the standpoint of possible Dominion participation.

Mr. BENNETT: But the note was not sent to our minister or to our government by the Secretary of State of the United States?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, only to those I have mentioned. I understand that our minister at Washington did forward to us a copy of the document sent to London.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, some time ago an order of the house passed for a return of certain documents relating to applications for the construction of a dam between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis. The return has not been brought down, and I would like to direct the attention of the government to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend may rely upon his request receiving attention.

[Mr. Bennett.]

CIVIL SERVICE

RECLASSIFICATION OF OFFICIALS IN POSTAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I would like to read a telegram which I have just received, from the Civil Service Association at the head of the lakes:

> Kindly advise if any action will be forthcoming this session in regard to promised re-classification of postal service salaries.

Mr. VENIOT: I would say, in reply to the hon. member, that it was only this morning that we received the decision of the Civil Service Commission, not to make any reclassification of those services this year. The Post Office department laid the matter before the Civil Service Commission some months ago, we ourselves having no power to classify, and the commission dealt with the matter and gave us their decision this morning.

Mr. MANION: Might I just ask the minister if the department is bound to take the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. VENIOT: If we do not, the Auditor General will not pay the additional amount.

Mr. MANION: The reason I asked the question is that I have just received a reply to a question on to-day's order paper showing that the Civil Service Commission recommended a returned soldier for a job, and my hon. friend and his department refused to accept him.

Mr. VENIOT: Under the act the Postmaster General has the power to refuse to accept the certificate of the commission, but the act does not give him power to classify the employees.

ALBERTA COAL TRANSPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I was going to ask the Minister of the Interior whether or not any action had been taken to expedite the operation of the order in council for the movement of coal from Alberta to Ontario. The railways appear to have taken the position that the charge of $6.75 does not include inter-line haul and switching charges. The matter was referred to the railway commission, but no judgment has been given, and the movement is to that extent being impeded. Can the government do anything in the matter?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): The order in council was turned over to the Board of Railway Commissioners for administration. The question which my hon. friend mentions has arisen, and they have asked for a conference with the fuel board on the matter. The discussions are now going on, and I expect that a decision will be arrived at in a day or two.

Mr. BENNETT: In the meantime the movement is impeded.

OLD AGE PENSIONS—YUKON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGE BLACK (Yukon): Some time ago an order of the house was passed for a copy of the agreement between the government of Canada and the administration of the Yukon with respect to old age pensions. When may we expect that agreement to be tabled?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): I intended to say to my hon. friend, but overlooked it, that I should be glad to show him a copy of the document in my office. The agreement has not yet been completed, and it is not really an agreement until it has been completed. I shall be glad, however, to let the hon. member see it at any time.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I understood the minister to say on a former occasion, when the motion was being considered, that the agreement was complete except for the affixing of the seal of the Yukon, and he agreed to produce it without the seal. It would not take fifteen minutes to make a copy of the agreement. It did not take the minister fifteen minutes to give notice to the press that he had signed it.

Mr. BENNETT: A member of parliament is not compelled to run around the departments to see documents.

Mr. HEENAN: It would not be right for the minister to bring down the document until it is completed.

Mr. BENNETT: If he can give it to the newspapers, he can give it to parliament.

Mr. HEENAN: The newspapers said that the commissioner for the Yukon had completed his part, but the agreement has not yet been fully completed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—St. John quarantine station —Partridge island—repairs and improvements, $13,600.

Mr. HANSON: I would ask the minister if this is the only vote for any public building in the whole province of New Brunswick for the present year.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): This is all in the main estimates.

Mr. HANSON: Surely the minister has had requests for other public buildings in the province of New Brunswick. I should like to ask the minister for a statement at the outset as to the policy of the government with respect to this very important matter.

There is in my constituency the town of McAdam, with a population of 2,500. It is a border port of entry for the province of New Brunswick and the neighbouring state of Maine. The Department of Customs maintains a large staff there, some eight or ten officers, who are on duty for twenty-four hours during the day. The Immigration department and the Post Office department both have offices there, and these various offices are housed in quarters rented from the Canadian Pacific Railway and other people. The post office is quartered in a shack. McAdam is an important railway junction, and I understand that the people of that community have been asking for a public building. They have not approached me, but I myself have been interested in the matter. The public revenue returns from that town are very important, the customs revenue being at least $40,000, and the postal revenue at least $5,000 per annum. It is important that the government services there should be properly housed. McAdam is a Canadian Pacific Railway town, a very important junction for trains from the north, east, south and west. It is not a divisional point, but it is the point at which all repairs on the Atlantic division are made. The principal industry in the town is the Canadian Pacific Railway shops. I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to look into the situation at McAdam with a view to the proper housing of the public services at that point. I am sure that if he does he will find that the remarks I am making are borne out by the facts, and that we should have a proper Dominion government building for the public services there. It is the first point at which the American tourist touches Canadian soil, and when he asks where the customs house is so he may pass his baggage, or where the post office is located, it is really a shame that he should be directed to such quarters. The Customs department are paying a good rental to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the quarters now occupied, but they are wholly inadequate for the business of the port. This state of affairs should be remedied. I would ask the minister to be good enough to look into the matter and give me an answer at a later stage when his estimates are under discussion. I am sure he will find that this is one of the most progressive little towns in New Brunswick and that it is entitled to proper facilities for the conduct of the public business.

Item agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally — Dominion public buildings — improvements, repairs, etc., $43,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What are the details?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the usual annual vote for works of improvement, repairs and renewals throughout the province.

Mr. GRIMMER: Will the minister explain the delay in making improvements to the post office at St. Stephen? Four or five years ago the government took the matter into consideration and at that time were fully aware that the building was altogether inadequate to carry on the public business satisfactorily. Tenders have been called for alterations, but although this has been the annual procedure for five years past, nothing whatever has been done to improve the accommodation. A gentleman who is supposed to control the county patronage has sought to excuse the delay by stating that in the fall it is too late and in the spring it is too early to make the necessary alterations; but the people of the locality cannot see why work of this character—inside work—should not be undertaken at any season of the year. The government is well aware that since the inauguration of the parcels post the accommodation at this point is altogether inadequate. Perhaps the minister will state why these much-needed alterations have not been taken in hand.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not in mind the case mentioned by my hon. friend, but I shall be glad to ascertain the reasons for the delay.

Mr. HANSON: I can confirm what the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Grimmer) has said. St. Stephen is the principal town in the county, and manufacturing is carried there extensively. It is a border town and an important customs port. The customs staff occupy the second floor of the public building. It is a nice substantial building, but it was built more than forty years ago and has become inadequate for the business of the community. Four or five years ago the government did undertake to increase the capacity of the building, but nothing has been done in the meantime, and we have never been able to get a satisfactory reason for the delay. I am sure the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) is fully acquainted with the local condition and, if appealed to, will tell his colleague that there ought to be increased postal accommodation at St. Stephen. I ask the minister to let the item stand so that he may have ample opportunity to collect the necessary data.

Mr. GRIMMER: I also should like this item to stand until the minister has made inquiries. The increased accommodation to which I have referred is absolutely necessary to carry on the public business.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This building, in common with many other public buildings, I have no doubt has become inadequate for the business of to-day. As was intimated when these estimates were under discussion on a previous occasion, the policy of the department has been to undertake no new work that could be postponed. No doubt some time in the future we shall have to undertake an extensive program of public buildings at a good many places that are not now adequately provided for. I am quite prepared to accept the statements made by my hon. friends, but I do not think it is necessary that this item should stand. Later on when we are dealing with Dominion buildings generally I shall be quite willing for them to bring up the question again.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite satisfied with the minister's policy to delay the erection of needed public buildings for the conduct of the country's business when I recall that two years ago we voted a very substantial sum of money, just on the eve of an election, to provide a public building at the little village of Kensington, in the county of Prince, Prince Edward Island, where the postal revenue in twenty years would not be as much as the revenue of the St. Stephen post office in one year. Furthermore, I am reminded that quite recently we have voted a very large sum of money to level buildings in Ottawa in order to beautify the capital, and now we have the confession of the minister that there is no money available to improve the postal and customs facilities at a border point like St. Stephen where the present facilities are absolutely inadequate. He has only to refer to his colleague the Postmaster General to ascertain that this further accommodation is essential to the proper conduct of the country's business. We are not asking for a new post office. We are only asking that the present building be extended to give more floor space. That is all that is necessary and the expense involved would not be large. I am satisfied that $10,000 would probably be quite sufficient. That is only a guess on my part but I am sure that a modest expenditure would suffice to put that building into proper shape to carry on the public business, as it cannot to-day. It is idle to talk to me about not having any money to spend on these buildings, after the spectacle we have had of voting money for Ottawa. I am sure the government will hear from the country about that matter if they refuse localities such as St. Stephen, McAdam Junction and other places I might mention, the necessary small votes to enable them to carry on the public business adequately and to house public officials satisfactorily. I wish I had a photograph of the post office at McAdam Junction to exhibit here to-day. I have no doubt the Postmaster General would blush, as would also the Minister of Public Works if they could get an idea of the state of affairs there at the present time.

I am not quite satisfied to let this item go through unless I have a promise that the situation will be taken care of in the supplementary estimates. If the minister will go after the thing properly and get satisfactory data from the Postmaster General or from the district superintendent in St. John, he will realize how urgently this work is needed. Why there has been a delay of four or five years, and the repeated calling of tenders that have never been recognized, has always been a mystery to me. I do not suggest that there is anything political about it; so far as I know there is not. The town of St. Stephen is Conservative, always has been and always will be. There will never be any question about the government getting or losing votes by reason of anything they may do in that town. The town will vote against this government whenever the opportunity may arise.

An hon. MEMBER: That may be the reason.

Mr. HANSON: That should not be the reason, and I am sure the minister would never take such a stand. I want to impress upon him the necessity of increasing the postal facilities at that point. I have not beside me at the moment anything to show the revenue from the post office at St. Stephen, but it must be large for a town of that size and the magnitude of the business done.

Mr. VENIOT: $17,000.

Mr. HANSON: Then the customs revenue at that port must be many times $17,000 per annum because the importations must be large. I would ask the minister to let this item stand over until he has time to make the necessary inquiries. I am not blaming him; probably he has had no notice of our intention to point out these facts. It is only fair to him that he should be made aware of the situation. The minister is courteous to me and I want to be fair to him. I will therefore ask him to let the item stand over until he has the necessary information, and we can return to the subject later. I appeal to him to consider as favourably as possible the placing of a vote in the supplementary estimates in order to have the work done once for all, so as to stop the present state of affairs, of calling for tenders and then disregarding them.

Mr. GRIMMER: This is nothing new; the department and the government are well aware of the facts. It was the department that contemplated making the alterations in the first place. They sent engineers down there and had plans and specifications prepared, which were approved by the government. They are on file in the department to-day. The people were led to believe that the work would begin away back in 1923 or 1924 and they have been looking forward to these alterations. They cannot understand the attitude of the government in calling for tenders and, when two or three tenders are sent in, not recognizing any. The government understand the situation thoroughly; they are perfectly well aware of the facts. Why should not something be done in this matter? That is all we ask. Give us some information as to when the work will be proceeded with. If the government are not in a position to make a definite statement at the present time I would request that the item remain over until that information is available, so that we may have something specific to tell the people who are looking forward to this work being done. If the government do not intend having the work done why do they not say so, and the people will endeavour to make the best of the situation. But why continue to tell them each year, as has been done for the last five years, that the work will begin in the spring and tenders called for? As a matter of fact it makes no difference when the work is done because it is inside of building; and where there are not enough boxes to supply the people who are willing to pay for them. And the government know this. I ask that the item stand over until we have further information.

Mr. PRICE: I would also respectfully ask the minister to let the item stand. With regard to the Moncton post office, is it the intention of the government to do anything during the coming year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to the Moncton post office, I may tell my hon. friend it is in the same category as a number of other places under consideration. I cannot go further than that at the present time. As regards the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Hanson), I have no doubt the place he mentions enjoys all the advantages to which he has referred, although I doubt whether it suffers from the disadvantages he suggests, to the extent implied at any rate. I do not think it is as hopeless politically as he says. I want to assure him that before the supplementary estimates are brought down I will look into the matters touched upon by himself and the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Grimmer), as well as the situation at Moncton. I recall the circumstances in connection with Moncton, but offhand I cannot recollect them so far as the other two places are concerned. I hope my hon. friends will realize that I am quite serious when I say that all these matters are receiving the best consideration we can give them at the present time, and will continue to receive that consideration between now and the time the supplementaries are brought down.

Mr. HANSON: I thank the minister for the undertaking he has given as regards McAdam Junction. But with regard to St. Stephen, the deputy minister is here and he knows all about the matter. He knows that tenders have been called for and have never been awarded. He can tell the minister and the minister can inform us why the situation in St. Stephen has not been taken care of. I am sure the Postmaster General will at once admit that the facilities at St. Stephen are wholly inadequate. True, he has no say as regards the housing facilities for the post office; that is under the Public Works department. But why have these tenders not been acted upon, particularly when it was on the initiative of the department that they were called for in the first place? I for one am willing to give the minister every reasonable opportunity to get any information which he has not at the moment, but I certainly think this item should stand over until that information is obtained. I do not want the minister to think that I am trying to obstruct his estimates; I never do that sort of thing. But this is the only item from New Brunswick on which we can discuss this matter, and I do think we should have the information before the item goes through.

A word about the Moncton post office. I remember in 1921 when the promise was definitely made by the party now on the treasury benches. In the election of that year, in the month of September—I can almost give the day—the present Senator Copp promised a new post office at Moncton. Seven years have gone by; the site has been purchased for a very considerable sum from a friend of the government, and a house occupies that location at present. The grounds are there, the beautiful location is there, and the house was rented for $40 a month to a friend of the government. Moncton is a very important centre; it is the hub of the maritime provinces. The postal revenues from that city are very large in comparison with other cities in the maritime provinces; they are much larger per capita than any other city, due to the fact that Eaton's have a very large distributing centre there. There is no question about it; Moncton is entitled to the post office. I quite realize that this building will have to be very substantial and rather costly; that may be one reason why progress has not been made, but I do not understand why nothing has been done in view of the promise which was made to the people of Moncton by the Liberal candidate in the election of 1921, in the presence of the present Prime Minister.

Mr. PRICE: I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to let this item stand for the present.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not want to take an arbitrary position, but item 132, which probably will not be reached for some time, covers public buildings generally, and I would be quite willing to consider the recommendations of my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen when that item is being considered; perhaps in the meantime I may be able to secure the information required. Just while I am on my feet, I would like to refer to the action of the department in calling for tenders and then not letting a contract, which was referred to by one of my hon. friends. I know of only two reasons why contracts have not been let since I have been connected with the department. If after the tenders were called for some changes were brought about possibly in connection with the size of the building, as occurred in one case, or if the tenders received were beyond the estimate of the architect of the department, probably a contract would not be made. In a number of cases where the estimates ran from $12,000 to $15,000 and the tenders received were for amounts considerably in excess of those sums, contracts have not been awarded, but I do not know of other reasons.

Mr. HANSON: What was the situation with regard to St. Stephen? That is what we want to know, and that is why I am asking the minister to let the item stand. I think if he would give us the information we would be willing to let the item go through, on his undertaking to look into this matter in the meantime.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would it meet the wishes of my hon. friend to pass this item and consider the matter again under item 132?

Mr. HANSON: I do not think that would be the appropriate item; I think the minister should accede to my request. I do not intend that as a threat, but it is simply a courteous request. I think the minister will be well advised to do as we ask.

Mr. GRIMMER: I would ask the minister if he has the estimates of the engineers under his hand, together with information regarding the tenders received during the last four years? Is there any difference between the tenders received in 1924 and those received in 1927; are they smaller or larger? Could the minister give us that information?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Surely my hon. friend does not expect me to have that information now, when this matter does not come up under the item we are considering. Do I understand my hon. friend to ask if I now have a recollection as to the terms of the tenders in these particular cases? If so, my answer is no, because this happened before I was connected with the department.

Mr. GRIMMER: Then in a case of this kind, where the minister has not the information under his hand, is not able to say what were the estimates of the engineers and has no idea of the terms of the tenders received during the last four years, I think the item should stand until we obtain some definite information. Certain improvements were to be made in connection with this office; engineers were sent there to secure the necessary information, and the plans and specifications are on file together with the tenders received. Now we cannot get any information as to what were the amounts of the tenders or the estimates, so I think the item should stand until we can get that information.

Mr. PRICE: I very much regret that the minister cannot see his way clear to let this item stand. This is an old story; for the last five or six years we have been endeavouring to get a post office in the city of Moncton, which turns into the exchequer of this country a net revenue of about $400,000 per annum. This is nothing more or less than a political move; it is simply a matter of politics. This city, one of the finest in Canada, is permitted to carry on with a service which is very inferior, housed in a building which really could not pass the examination of the board of health. Yet the minister is not willing to allow this item to stand until further consideration can be given to the public buildings in the county of Westmorland. It is all very well to say that you have no money to spend for a post office for the city of Moncton, which stands fifth or sixth among all post offices in Canada with regard to the revenue turned in to the government, although it has only a population of about 22,000 people; the government seem to have plenty of money to spend in connection with the Federal District Commission. We have $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 available to beautify this city of Ottawa, and a great deal more for public parks, but when it comes to the public buildings throughout the country the government absolutely fall down, especially in constituencies which happen to be represented by members opposed to the present administration. This matter has been taken up on the floor of the house time after time, and it must be very clear to the electors of the country that the government do not intend to do anything in constituencies which are represented by members who are opposed to the government. The only exceptions have been the harbours of St. John and Halifax, and then the government made comparisons between these open harbours and others which are frozen up for six months every year. I do not understand why the government will not look to the necessities of the public works of the country; the breakwaters in my constituency are very inadequate, particularly at Cape Bauld, as has been pointed out repeatedly both to the present minister and to his predecessor. I protest against the small amount allowed for public buildings in the province of New Brunswick; the government have alloted only $13,600 to that province although they can find plenty of money for the Federal District Commission to spend in order to cut through a business section of the city and destroy buildings which cost many thousands of dollars for a boulevard to allow the erection of a monument to the Prime Minister of the country. Again I want to say that I regret very much that the minister will not allow this matter to stand until further details can be brought to his attention which I feel sure will influence him to change his decision and place a sufficient sum in the estimates to make sure that the province of New Brunswick may be better looked after.

Mr. MORRISSY: The only thing I can see in the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Price) is his regret that he does not exercise the same privileges in the Post Office department that he exercises in the Department of Railways and Canals with regard to the appointment of officials in the city of Moncton and in the county of Westmorland. Furthermore, let me say to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) who asks the Postmaster General why so many postmasters were dismissed in the constituency that I have the honour to represent, Northumberland county, in which the hon. leader of the opposition got his first insight into politics on the Miramichi river, that I assume all responsibility for the dismissal of those postmasters. I did so following the example of the Hon. J. B. M. Baxter, because he put out every road supervisor and every scaler in the county of Northumberland.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, I very respectfully ask the minister to allow this item to stand until we get the information, and then we will get it through perhaps in three minutes. He will not be losing any time if he complies with the request.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will consider it under item 132.

Mr. HANSON: I would ask that item 125 stand. We are entitled to have it stand, and I would make this request as courteously as I can.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I would say that it is very hard to resist the hon. member for York-Sunbury when he asks in this way.

[Mr. Price.]

I cannot see the difference between it and item 132, which we will consider later on, when I would have had the opportunity of looking up the files and obtaining the information. I am going to show myself a little more reasonable than the hon. member when I say I will agree to let it stand and consider it later on.

Item stands.

Quebec public works—chargeable to income, $1,304,647.

Mr. QUINN: Mr. Chairman, I notice in this vote an item of $150,000 for Quebec city. I am not criticizing or opposing that vote, but I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if his attention has ever been drawn to the condition of the Halifax citadel. The masonry walls have tumbled down and the whole fort is in a disgraceful condition. The slopes of the hill have become such an eyesore, that the citizens of Halifax, in co-operation with the Service Club, have this year undertaken to plant shrubs and trees on the slope. The condition of the moat and the walls inside is disgraceful. I realize it is too late now to have that matter investigated thoroughly and to have a vote in the estimates of this year; but might I ask the Minister of Public Works if he will confer with his colleague the Minister of National Defence with a view to having the condition of the citadel of Halifax investigated, and then place an item in the estimates for the next session of parliament.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might say to my hon. friend that the citadel of Halifax is entirely under the jurisdiction of my hon. colleague the Minister of National Defence. I do not see him in his seat at the moment, but I will be very glad to call to his attention representations made by my hon. friend the member for Halifax.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, if anything is to be done with any of these ancient fortifications, I think the government should establish a policy as to them. There are three important ones, Halifax, Quebec and Kingston; and it is very difficult for us to sit quietly in our seats and see this amount of money spent on one of them without asking the government to state its policy as to the other two. I do not believe they should be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Defence; they should come under the Department of Public Works. If the department considers one of them, I think the minister should establish a policy applicable to all three.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, the item has to do with the province of Quebec. What is the postal revenue at Baie St. Paul? How much of the vote of 1927-28 has been spent, and for what purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The expenditure to March 31, 1928, is $14,639.

Mr. ARTHURS: For what purpose—site, et cetera?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Paid for the site, $4,000; that was in the previous year. The expenditure for the year ending March 31, 1928, was $14,639. The balance required, $9,000, is for the completion of the contract, for the erection of the building, for the installation of fittings, lock boxes, sidewalks, and so on, and it is apportioned as follows—

Mr. ARTHURS: I do not want that and I did not ask for it; I want the population and revenue.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population is 2,291. The postal revenue is $3,465.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that all the revenue from that particular office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is all the postal revenue.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is that all the revenue to the government from that town or that office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I presume so.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom to take up votes of this kind item by item. I understand you now put the large item which includes the smaller items. I submit that is not in accordance with the usual practice and is objectionable. We should take up the individual items as they appear in the resolution.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am quite agreeable. I think the usual practice is to call the large item and then, if anybody so desires, to take it up item by item.

The CHAIRMAN: The vote is all one resolution. Is it the desire of the committee to take this up item by item?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Chicoutimi public building—addition, $3,500.

Mr. ARTHURS: I ask the same information regarding this office, namely, the population of the town and the revenues either postal or from any other part of the public service.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population of Chicoutimi is 10,158.

Mr. ARTHURS: At what period?

Mr. ELLIOTT: 1927.

Mr. ARTHURS: What was it in 1921?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was 8,937. It had grown from 3,826 in 1901. It is a rapidly growing town. In 1926-27 the postal revenue was $28,348 and the customs revenue $108,611.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Has the minister taken into consideration the question of a public building at Beauport, which comprises six parishes and quite a large population. A site was bought in 1913 for the erection of a public building at that point. I understand tenders were called for and I have asked the minister and the government to provide the necessary amount for a building. I should like to know from the minister what has been done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite agree with my hon. friend that he has made frequent and urgent requests for a public building at that point, but no decision has been reached as yet. The matter is in the same category with a number of others and I am sorry I cannot give my hon. friend any definite answer.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The minister informed me some time ago that he would recommend to council the insertion of the amount in the supplementary estimates. I have been told the same thing for many years. Owing to the fact that large amounts of money are being spent for public buildings, and considering the great importance of Beauport, I think the people there should be granted their request. If we take into consideration the eight or nine million dollars voted for the embellishment of Ottawa, there seems to be a good deal of money available and a small amount such as we are asking for should not be refused. I understand the estimate for a public building at Beauport is only $9,200. Therefore I would ask the minister to consider the request seriously and to see if possible that the proper amount is inserted in the supplementary estimates so that we may go ahead with the building.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to ask the minister in connection with applications coming before him for public buildings if there is any general rule or basis on which he decides that a public building is or is not required at a certain point, or if the decision to build a public building at one point and not at another is simply a question of choice by the minister?

Mr. ELLIOTT: When an application comes in for a public building—and many of them have come in during the time I have been in charge of the department—we endeavour to secure all information possible. If after considering all the information, we come to the conclusion that some other expenditure is more urgent and that the erection of the building in question can be postponed for a time, in all probability the application is not granted. When the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lavigueur) mentions that I said to him that I would recommend a public building, I do not want to contradict him, but he must have misunderstood the interview because I never undertake to recommend anything in connection with public buildings. I know the people with whom I have to deal, namely, the treasury board and council, are not favourable to erecting any public buildings which are not absolutely necessary and for that reason I am careful about making any commitments. We are endeavouring to construct only such public buildings as are absolutely necessary. That is the best answer I can give my hon. friend.

Mr. ARTHURS: Does the minister mean that he does not make any recommendations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not promise to make any recommendations.

Mr. ARTHURS: The minister does make recommendations regarding public buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Occasionally.

Mr. ARTHURS: In considering these recommendations, does he take the files of the past or only those immediately before him from friends on his own side of the house?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I look into the files of the past. I never take the files of the future. I endeavour to go over the files as closely as I can. I do not just get the purport of my hon. friend's suggestion that I take only files relating to friends of the government. Is that what my hon. friend said?

Mr. ARTHURS: Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I read the other files.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister reads the titles of the other files.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I read the other files pretty carefully.

[Mr. Kennedy.]

Mr. ARTHURS: Will the minister state how many items are included in the present estimate which have been put forward in previous years by members opposed to the government?

Mr. STEVENS: How many escape the minister's scrutiny?

Mr. ELLIOTT: When my hon. friend looks over the estimates under consideration, I do not think he will find much in the remark he has made. If he will take note of the ridings for which money is being granted, I think he will see that political considerations have not governed.

Mr. BOYS: The minister has just informed the committee that he has received many applications; that they are all considered on their merits, and then either granted or refused as the case may be. Do I understand that that has reference to applications which are made verbally, as well as to applications which are made in writing? I would like to ascertain from the minister whether it would give him or the officers of his department much trouble to give the committee some idea of the number of applications which have been made since he has been minister, together with the amount of each proposed building. I do not think that would entail very much work, and the information would be very interesting. I do not care whether it is given under this item or under the general vote, but I certainly would like to have that information if I can get it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think perhaps I can give a reasonably accurate answer. Within the last year we have considered applications which either have come in or were in the department already for public buildings running to well over one hundred, and in amount running to something over $5,000,000. That is only approximate.

Mr. BOYS: What I would like to get would be a statement indicating the cities and towns and villages whence these applications came, and the amount of money involved in each. I learn now that there are only about one hundred, and of necessity it is not going to take a clerk in the department very long just to give that additional information as to the place and the amount involved.

Mr. KENNEDY: I take it from the minister's answer to my last question that these are expenditures which in his judgment are absolutely necessary.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I take the responsibility for these expenditures.

Mr. KENNEDY: I also take it that in his judgment these expenditures are more necessary than other expenditures that have been asked for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: More necessary than the expenditures which have been refused.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is just a question, then, of the minister's judgment. There does not appear to be any general rule, and the matter is left to the judgment of the minister after all the facts have been submitted to him. Is that the case?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BOYS: I noticed that the minister listened very attentively to me, but he has not said whether or not he will let me have the information I asked for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will have no difficulty in supplying my hon. friend with a list of I think over one hundred applications for public buildings, together with a reasonable estimate of the cost, but where we have not seriously considered the granting of the application, I would not be able to give the architect's estimate of the cost. I think, however, I could give an approximate estimate.

Mr. BOYS: I would be quite content to have the ones which have received serious consideration, and I understand that the one hundred to which the minister refers are the ones that have received serious consideration. Am I right in that? Are those one hundred applications cases where the application has been seriously considered but refused?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not say refused. They are under consideration at the present time.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is one hundred the limit? Why not all of them? Why should the minister pick out one hundred?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend had listened to me, he would know perfectly well that I did not limit myself to one hundred, nor to the amount of $5,000,000, but I am satisfied that the applications will run to that number, and the amount involved to $5,000,000.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I would like to ask the minister if it is not a fact that all the applications he receives in his department have come through his engineers, with their recommendations?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MANION: I remember some years ago —I mention this as a matter of information —taking up the case of Fort Frances, which was in the constituency I then represented. The department, away back in 1911 or 1912, had purchased at Fort Frances a site for a public building and the people were naturally anxious to have the building erected. I remember taking up the matter with the Department of Public Works, and I was informed that throughout Canada at that time—this was since the war—there were about ninety or one hundred places where sites had been previously purchased by the government of the day with the intention of putting up public buildings, but then the war came and delayed construction. I think probably during the war there was a good excuse for not going on with these public buildings, and probably there is yet, but I would point out that if public buildings are to be built throughout the country, these places where sites have been already purchased and are now standing idle, should receive consideration. I remember distinctly sometime between 1917 and 1921 the Minister of Public Works, or perhaps it was the Postmaster General, telling me that one hundred sites had been purchased for public buildings but our government of that day did not see their way clear to proceed with the work, and I remember taking the attitude that so long as it was the general rule that none of these places should get a public building, there could be no complaint from Fort Frances. I took that attitude on the platform in Fort Frances during the election, but I said that if public buildings were to be erected, all should be treated in the same way.

Mr. ARTHURS: I take the same attitude as the hon. member for Fort William. There are many cases where money was voted for public buildings and sites purchased immediately preceding the war, and in many cases the appropriation would be revoted the next year. Many of these sites were in highly industrial towns, with large public revenues, and in my opinion they should take precedence over places like the two mentioned by the minister in the province of Quebec, and over many more which I shall ask for information about later on, where the postal revenue amounts on the average to only one dollar per head. I have in my riding a town whose postal revenue averages $15,000 or $16,000 per annum, and whose customs revenue during the last twelve or fourteen years has averaged close to $500,000. The town has various other government services, and a site has been purchased, but there is no evidence that the government is willing to undertake the putting up of a public building.

Mr. EVANS: What is the public building that is to be erected at Limoilou, Quebec?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a revote of $4,500 to complete the payments for the building, which has already been erected. Limoilou is practically a part of the city of Quebec, and a very rapidly growing district.

Mr. ARTHURS: The whole amount is a revote.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, we recognize two things with respect to these appropriations. First, that the government has supreme control in determining (a) the community in which public moneys are to be expended, and (b) the extent to which those moneys shall be expended. In selecting their own favourites, constituencies that return their supporters, they indicate the common humanity of all members of this house. And in determining how much money shall be spent they usually have regard to the ability of the representative to extract money from the exchequer. If a member is sufficiently strong to get the government to build a $25,000 building in a community where a $10,000 building would do, he usually gets a $25,000 building; and if he cannot get the $25,000 expenditure he is satisfied with the $10,000.

Now, we take the position that some regard should be had to the necessities of the public service. It cannot possibly be that the only communities in which there is any necessity for the expenditure of public moneys are in constituencies which are represented by supporters of the administration. That must be clear. It is also true that in recent years representations have been made to the government by members on this side of the house that would involve the expenditure of very much larger sums than appear in the estimates. The question the minister has to decide is whether those representations have behind them any sound basis of fact, or whether they are merely made for the purpose of members appearing to be doing their duty by their constituencies; for most members are very insistent in their demands that something should be done for their localities. The question to be determined is whether or not these representations are based on a clear appreciation of the real necessities of the public service, or are merely made to enable the member to point to a page in Hansard where his remarks are recorded. I think the Minister of Public Works, a very old and adroit and experienced politician, is well aware of the fact that both cases are always coming before him. A member who has a doubtful seat desires to be sure of his re-election, and he insists upon having money expended for purposes that cannot possibly be justified by the necessities of the case compared with what is being done in other parts of Canada.

This is a large country and there are many communities in which public money should be expended; the minister cannot provide for all of them; but if we find him providing a public building in a small community already very well served, while a large community supplying substantial revenues is obliged to carry on the public service with inadequate facilities, then we know that the consideration governing the minister's decision is mostly political. For instance, if thousands of dollars is spent on a wharf to serve one small industry located on a river where an occasional boat is apt to run into a mud bank before it reaches the wharf for, say, a cargo of salt —we will take that merely as an illustration— then we know the considerations that govern are not solely in the public interest. In 1925 I was driven in an automobile through some small communities in Ontario, and I recall very distinctly one place that was provided with a public building, certainly most beautiful to look upon, but I could not find there was very much local revenue to justify its erection; but the member had been a very firm and ardent supporter of the administration since 1921, and his devotion to a great cause could not be lightly overlooked.

In the west we have several communities that are contributing very large revenues to the exchequer. Everyone will admit that upon the success of the farming operations in western Canada—the creation of new wealth—to no inconsiderable extent rests the prosperity of the two great eastern provinces. Take, for instance, the community in which I live. Last year the minister saw the site for a post office that was bought prior to the war. It is in the centre of the city. Two, if not three of the lots were contributed by the citizens when the town was first laid out. A high building was erected upon it with not much floor space—a post office requires a great deal of floor space. Between 1911 and 1913 the site was acquired for something over a couple of hundred thousand dollars. It is a very large site, because, as I have said, a post office requires plenty of floor space, having regard to the business transacted at that centre. The old building was removed and the cellar partly excavated. The $250,000 that was in the estimates the year the war broke out was not revoted, and of course no one expected anything would be done until after the war. Since that time there have been repeated partial promises—I do not say undertakings in any sense—that this matter would be dealt with, and the board of trade and other public bodies had occasion to bring it to the attention not only of the Minister of Public Works but of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways when they visited the community. The location is on the principal thoroughfare of the city. While the government could not be expected to provide for the new building in a single year, because I dare say it will involve the expenditure of a million dollars, $250,000 annually for four years would be sufficient to provide the accommodation. General plans were prepared, but nothing further was done. At present premises are occupied at a rent, mark you, that would more than pay interest and sinking fund upon the investment I have mentioned for putting up a new building that would house all the departments of the federal public service. That is a case which, I submit, should be dealt with. There are other similar cases throughout the Dominion.

I appreciate the difficulties of the minister. He has to make selections, and, being only human, he cannot resist the pressure of his political friends. But while I do not expect him to do that, I think it is not unreasonable to ask that the public service itself should be looked after. The other day the Postmaster General pointed out with respect to the situation at Le Pas that steps had been taken, very properly, to provide a public building because it was a new community transacting considerable business out of which the country was deriving substantial revenues. But surely the fact that communities which are supplying large customs and postal revenues do not for the moment return supporters of the administration, should not be a reason for their demands for public buildings being entirely overlooked. Now, if for ten long years since the war the community that I mention has been compelled to carry on under the conditions described, has not the time come when proper accommodation should be provided? What I have said of that community is true of some of the towns on the Pacific slope, and in the interior. An extension to the post office at Edmonton was started last year. Tenders were called for public buildings at other places in the west, but since the war expenditures for this purpose have been very limited, and those new buildings that have been constructed have not always been needed to meet the demands of the public service, but rather have been provided for the reasons that I have mentioned. The minister, I know, may have the best intentions in the world, and it well may be that when his recommendations reach council those who look over them may say: Why should a public building be built in the constituency of A; why should that Conservative riding have any money spent in it? There are members of council who would look at it in that way. Then again there is a second difficulty to overcome, and that is the opposition of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance says, "We cannot provide further moneys this year for this particular service". That being so, and since you have to cut down the amount that is to be expended, it is those communities that support the administration that are remembered, while the others are blotted out from the book of remembrance. That is the situation in relation to these matters. Certainly if you left the question to business men they would never think of leaving two or three communities I know of in western Canada in their present condition so far as public buildings are concerned.

In Ottawa you pay in rentals at the present time over $700,000. That, I think, is approximately the amount. Then you pay for light and heat. That represents interest and at least a reasonable sinking fund, having regard to modern construction, of $15,000,000. Why have we not spent $15,000,000 and stopped paying rentals, so that at the end of twenty-five or thirty years we might own these buildings and be no longer under the necessity of paying further rent? Why not establish a policy in this regard? The same thing might be done in Calgary. If we borrowed under a special form of security this could be done. You might call it a public works four and a half per cent sinking bond, continue paying rents, as you are now doing, to be used to pay interest and sinking fund on the securities for the next twenty-five years or so, and at the end of that period you would have paid off the securities and would own the property. The country would then be free from rentals for the future. This should have been done long ago; everyone realizes that. But it has not been done. Is there any reason why such a policy should not be adopted?

You have laid in this city the cornerstone of a building to commemorate the sixtieth anniversary of confederation—and this anniversary, by the way, seems to have afforded an opportunity for the conception of many monuments in the way of buildings and other works. The cornerstone of this particular building is there. The land on which the building will be erected we have owned since before the war—a long stretch of property. Certain buildings are still there, and in the ten years that have elapsed since the war we have squandered more money than would have sufficed to put up proper buildings. Now if the difficulty is as great as is suggested, with respect to taking the money out of current revenue—and it may be considerable—I would point out that some years ago I suggested to the Minister of Finance, as I do again to-day, a simple method of dealing with the matter. How are great business enterprises dealing with a similar situation? The day before yesterday you saw the issue of certain securities, $16,000,000 of preferred shares, by a great industrial enterprise in Canada. They contained sinking fund provisions. Certainly some issued the same day, with respect to preferred shares—I am not saying which I have in mind at the moment, for I may be confused—did contain a provision of that character. Another enterprise the other day issued bonds for $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, five and a half per cent, which also contained a sinking fund provision. Now with this $700,000 which is paid here in rentals—it is, I think, nearer $750,000; the deputy minister can tell the minister—you can go to any trust company in this country and they will lend you about $15,000,000, taking the securities from you, and taking your rental; and after a period of time, I should say approximately twenty-three years, doing it by mental arithmetic at the moment, you will be able to retire the loan and have acquired the property, having paid no higher rental in the meantime. Certainly you will not pay less. At any rate, you will not have paid a dollar more and by that time you will have owned the buildings. But instead of pursuing such a policy we are going on in the same old way. And what is true in Ottawa is true in the city in which I live. There they are paying thousands of dollars in rents—the exact figure I obtained from the deputy minister two years ago, and I will not state it at the moment because it may not now be correct. With that money, why not arrange with some trust company in Canada or in the United States to finance the matter in the way I have suggested? The companies in the United States would tumble over one another for the opportunity to do it. They would take that money per annum for the next twenty-three years, put up the buildings, expend a million and a quarter, and consider themselves well repaid.

Take the structures which the banks are building. Does anyone realize how these buildings are being put up? Some of my hon. friends no doubt think that the banks put up these buildings out of profits. That is not so. These great buildings are the properties of realty companies, which are owned by the banks. This is not so with respect to all banks, but I am speaking in a broad way. The realty company owns the lot, and the building is erected. It issues its bonds, which are bought by the great insurance companies—six millions, five millions, four millions, or whatever it may be. They have a trust deed, the bank rents the property on a proper rental basis, paying the money into the realty company as though it were renting the building from a stranger, and at the end of the period the bank owns the building because it owns the company, the rentals paid by the bank and other tenants of the building being sufficient to pay interest and sinking fund on the bonds.

If the banks do this—and it is the only way in which they could acquire the magnificent structures which they possess, inasmuch as they could not build them out of profits—why should not the country conduct its business on a similar basis, having a reasonable regard for the experience of others? Then you come to the railways, in the matter of equipment. The day was when the first transcontinental railway in this country used to buy its equipment every year on the theory that out of revenues a car going out of commission had to be replaced. That day has gone. What happens now? Instead of paying for their equipment all at once, they purchase, we will say from the Baldwin Locomotive Company, if it is in the United States, or the American Locomotive Company or Kingston Locomotive Works if in Canada, assuming that they do not build in their own shops. Any hon. gentleman, when passing from the car at the rear of the train to the door of the station, will observe on most locomotives a little plate upon which there is a number indicating, something by inscription, that the particular locomotive is covered by an equipment trust mortgage. Every year they pay a certain sum of money and at the end of a fixed period the locomotive is paid for in full. Equipment securities have a high value on the markets in New York. Part of the money for equipment trust obligations of the Canadian National lines, the Canadian people paid last year, which is usually paid out of revenues, was paid out of a loan which the national railways obtained, in respect of which the government of the country gave its guarantee.

Now if as a matter of business, in other walks of life, this procedure which I have briefly outlined is followed, why should we not do it in respect of these great public buildings? There is the site to which I have already alluded: no building is on it, no taxes are paid, and we own the land. Nothing is done about it. If the Minister of Railways were dealing with the matter as his friends in the grain business in Saskatchewan are dealing with their problems, he would issue securities as they do. They issue securities in connection with elevators. How are the terminals built in Vancouver? They sell their securities in the way I have indicated. A short statute passed at this session, providing for this special form of loan, would give this country these public buildings, which would be far more advantageous than this piecemeal nibbling at it. Every busines man in the country would be grateful to the administration for adopting business principles in connection with these public matters, and such a policy would leave more money available for the pressing necessities of the smaller communities. And that is an important phase of the subject. I urge the minister and the administration to give this matter their serious consideration. It is true that some of us would probably suffer and our communities might be overlooked, but we could afford to have them overlooked temporarily if we knew that ultimately they would be reached by some process such as I have suggested, which would put the business of the country on a proper basis.

The time has gone by when we should continue to play with the matter. We on this side can do but one thing: we can ask for explanations as to these expenditures, and inquire what population is to be served and what the revenues are to be and whether or not it is in the public interest that the money should be expended. We can put on Hansard our views on the various items, but we cannot effect any change, although we may move to reduce any item. We might move to reduce the item, but we know perfectly well that the majority of the government is sufficient in strength and availibility to vote down any suggestion we might make in that regard. We might make suggestions that other communities be looked after, and all that will be done is that the evidence will be gathered together so that in the next election hon. gentlemen opposite will say, "Look at them; they are extravagant. They say we should spend more money instead of less." That is the way we are dealing with these things, and is it not time we should cease?

Just one thing more while I am on my feet, because I do not propose personally to discuss these estimates in detail. We have in Ottawa a supreme court building with a library the value of which has been estimated by a gentleman who seemed reasonably proficient in matters of that kind, at not less than $450,000. Part of that library is contained in steel stacks, surrounded by highly shellacked white pine, which is most inflammable. Some of these books are absolutely irreplaceable, because the editions are exhausted and we could not buy further copies regardless of the amount of money we might care to spend. In the meantime we have plenty of money for other things, but the supreme court building remains as it is. I apprehend that the supreme court probably will be included in that long row of buildings which is to be built eventually, but in the meantime there it is. What a reflection it is upon us as business people! In what I am saying I am not trying to attach all the blame to this administration, but what a reflection that is upon us as a people and upon parliament! We have offered these suggestions to my hon. friend in the most kindly manner, and with no hope of making political capital out of them. As far as we are concerned we will receive no benefit from so doing; instead we may alienate some of our friends in Ottawa, yet we must face this condition and unless we do so it seems to me we are recreant to the duty imposed upon us. I am talking now just as I would talk if I were attending a meeting of a board of directors and discussing a business matter; if my friend the Minister of Public Works were there together with my friend the Minister of Railways, advised by the Attorney General, and if we were a business corporation, we would do just as I suggest. We would make the best possible terms with the financial houses to take our securities; we would put up our buildings, pay our interest, set aside every year the amount of money we would otherwise pay for rent; we would amortize the securities and own the buildings. Is it unreasonable if I ask the Minister of Public Works to deal with these matters during his brief tenure of office in such a way that his successor may find what he himself did not find, that is, the business of the department placed upon a sound, economic and common-sense basis? My hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) would deal with it in that way if he were dealing with a cheese factory; why cannot we follow that method in carrying on the business of the country? My hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) would deal with it in that way, and every day business men are following the same practice. We are not doing so, but I think we should ascertain if it cannot be done.

Mr. LANCTOT: In answer to my hon. friend I will tell him that I do not need to do that, because I have no public building in my riding.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no desire to delay the passing of these estimates, but I do think I should express my appreciation and I think the appreciation of every other hon. member for the very helpful suggestions which have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite and for the manner in which they have been made. I cannot entirely agree with the first part of the remarks of the leader of the opposition, but I very sincerely appreciate the tone of his criticism, if it can be so called, as well as that of the other hon. gentlemen who have expressed themselves on this subject this afternoon.

The suggestion has been made that these estimates are prepared with some political end in view, and at the risk of having to meet my hon. friends on this side of the house from Quebec at six o'clock, I am going to refer hon. members of the house to the vote which we are considering now. We are dealing with an amount of $1,304,647, and in this vote are included a number of separate items. I hope all my hon. friends have copies of the estimates before them; if they will look at the vote they will see that it covers buildings in the province of Quebec. I think it is a fine thing for the country, if I may say so, that in votes for the province of Quebec no man even on the other side of the house will expect to find a great many items covering ridings represented by gentlemen across the way. However, I believe there are three Quebec ridings represented by hon. gentlemen opposite, and hon. gentlemen will notice that included in this vote is a Montreal postal terminal building.

Mr. KAISER: The minister should not reduce our numbers; we have four members from Quebec.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I apologize to my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: And 260,000 people voted for us.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend will look at the amounts being spent in Quebec, he will find that a postal terminal building costing $650,000 is to be constructed in the riding of St. Antoine.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course that is where the building must be.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is where the government intend to construct it.

Mr. MANION: We hope the rest of the people of Quebec will profit by this lesson.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think all the people throughout Canada profit by the actions of this government. Then, in the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George $14,005 is being spent, and an armoury costing $13,000 is to be constructed in the constituency of Mount Royal.

Mr. ARTHURS: How did the hon. gentleman square himself with the hon. member for Southeast Grey?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will just have to do the best I can, that is all. However, of a total amount of $1,304,647 which is being spent in the sixty-five ridings of Quebec, about $677,000 or more than half is being spent in three ridings represented by hon. gentlemen opposite. Of course I do not mean to say that these items were included because these constituencies were represented by these three gentlemen.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to make that perfectly clear to my hon. friends from Quebec. These items were included because they were in line with the policy which this department is trying to pursue; they were necessary for carrying on the business of the country. I think these figures are the best answer to the criticism that these estimates have been prepared for the sake of helping our friends in certain political ridings. So much for that; I do not think this argument can be readily controverted, because the figures speak for themselves. Coming to what my hon. friend said with regard to the city of Calgary, it is quite true that a site for a building was purchased—a site which I examined when I had the opportunity of paying a visit to that very delightful city last fall. The site is well located for the building.

Mr. BENNETT: Everything except the building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Except the building. And I think my hon. friend was well within the mark when he said it cost $200,000; my recollection is that that site cost in 1914 about $340,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: $312,465.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, I am very close to it. The city of Calgary is one of the places doing a large business—

Mr. BENNETT: My memory is that a plan of expropriation was filed on the property.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1913, I think it was; it was not adjusted until the latter part of the year or the beginning of the next year.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is right, just before the war.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I took occasion to inquire as to the revenue from the post office, the customs and government services generally and there is no doubt that it is one of the towns whose revenues are growing rapidly.

Mr. BENNETT: Cities.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I beg the pardon of my hon. friend from the city. The revenues are growing very rapidly; but I took occasion to go to the post office, where the clerks and the postmaster and all the rest of the people performing the government services there are housed, and I inquired from the postmaster himself, and it was quite apparent that they were comfortably and commodiously located. There is no doubt about that. We could not perhaps nearly so well omit Calgary from our consideration at the present time, if they were located as some of the other services have been. If my hon. friend goes around through the offices and asks the postmaster or the assistants, I believe they will all tell him that they are well housed.

Mr. BENNETT: Except that they are not all under the one roof. They are scattered all over the community as they are in Ottawa.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not very convenient, but they are well accommodated at the present time; and there are so many places where the services are not so well accommodated that I do not think my hon. friend will find anything unfair in deferring the building of the post office at Calgary until some of these other places have been dealt with.

Now with regard to the policy of erecting public buildings. Allusion has been made to the confederation block, and while it does not arise directly under this item, I perhaps might refer to it. That is a building which when completed we hope will be a credit to the city and to the Dominion. It is a building that will cost in the vicinity of $3,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the first of a series, the one we have started. Considering the size and character of this building my hon. friends, if they inquire from any architect, will, I think admit that there has been no delay in the preparation of plans and details and the laying out of the building. I may tell my hon. friend that we expect to advertise immediately; if the advertisement is not already in the papers it will be within the next week; the plans and specifications and everything have been prepared.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the first unit?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the first unit.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Who is the architect?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Department of Public Works architect.

Mr. ADSHEAD: For what building, may I ask?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The first of the units for the confederation block. I am very glad to have had the views of my hon. friends in regard to the policy to be adopted in the future. With many of the things that they have said I think it is difficult to disagree. The government has certain advantages, that is, it escapes taxes which the people who rent these buildings have to pay. I was not altogether correct in answering my hon. friend in regard to our being free from taxes down here where we propose to erect this building. We have a number of the buildings now on the site leased. Once we lease a building to someone who is not in the government service and get a rental for it, we become liable for taxes; and it is only that portion of that property that has been liable for taxes in the past. I think the government ought to consider very seriously, in view of the great increase in business since most of the buildings now housing public services were constructed, whether or not at some time in the not distant future they should attempt to embark upon a fairly extensive policy of building. I think it is helpful to have suggestions from the other side of the house. I want to say that I appreciate the manner in which they have been given, and I want to assure the house that this matter is receiving very serious consideration not only from my officials in the department, but from myself.

I might just call attention to the fact that wisely, I think, our predecessors in office decided to defer until the war was over and for a period after the war the construction of buildings which they undertook in 1914. I have no doubt that all the members of this house are fairly familiar with the fact that in the year 1914 for public works in Canada the sum of $27,991,000 was actually expended. That was the last normal year before the war. Public works are facilities for carrying on the trade of the country and must always bear a certain relation to that trade. The total trade of the country at that time was $1,074,000,000. It was $2,353,000,000 for the year ending 31st March last. Wisely or unwisely the government only saw its way clear to spend on public works $17,000,000. They considered that a reduction of taxation and of debt was so imperative that they could not well go on with public buildings, except those that were absolutely necessary. Then there is the other theory, and perhaps both governments were wrong in regard to that. The expenses of construction it was thought were abnormaly high after the war. I think the government which was in power at the end of the war thought that those expenses would be reduced very materially before now. I know that the present government were of that opinion, and thought it was wise to defer the construction of public buildings until the cost of building had reached a lower level. It has not decreased as was expected, and accordingly rents have not decreased, but they have increased. I think they have increased more than they should have increased but it is a fact that they have increased. But it is very helpful to the department to have the expressions of opinion given in the way these expressions have been given indicating what our hon. friends in all sections of the house think is a wise policy to adopt in the public interest at the present time.

I do not think there is anything further I can say, except again to assure my hon. friends that we have not reached the period in connection with the finances of the country when we can afford to play politics to the extent that some hon. gentlemen have suggested.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say a few words in regard to the building at Baie St. Paul which was spoken of a few minutes ago? If I remember well, the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) asked some questions as to the population and revenue of that place. I hold in my hand the report of the Postmaster General for the year ended 31st March, 1927, and I find that the revenue is $3,465.53. Moreover this place serves a district which comprises a much larger population. The people of at least seven parishes come to Baie St. Paul for their mail and many rural services emanate from that point.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The service is not very great if the revenue is only about $3,400.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is a divisional point and it serves for the delivery of mail for other parishes. It has been pointed out that there was so much congestion in years past that this item had been long contemplated. For the last twenty-five years at least the federal government has been more or less sponging on the city council or the town council in having a small place where the work of the post office was carried on and it is considered a disgrace that the post office should be given such poor facilities. All the people who know the district, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and others who have visited it, are well aware that what I say is correct.

Mr. ARTHURS: I was not objecting at all to the appropriation for Baie St. Paul and I have no intention of objecting to a vote of that kind. I was simply asking for information as to population and the revenue from the post office. What I intend to say later on has no relation to my hon. friend's remarks. He is quite right in protecting the community of Baie St. Paul, and I have the same right regarding any district or town about which I may speak in future. Baie St. Paul is only one of many places which are similarly situated with larger populations round about. I should like similar information as to population and so forth in connection with Kenogami.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I did not expect at this time that the question of the Calgary post office was coming up. I thought it would be discussed under the particular item; but since the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Public Works have discussed the question at considerable length, I think I should be allowed the privilege of continuing the discussion so that I need not take the matter up again.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Is it the desire of the committee that we should consider the estimate item by item?

Mr. CHAPLIN: We have already decided that.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Then this discussion is out of order.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then the other discussion was also out of order.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As regards Kenogami the postal revenue for 1926-27 was $8,106, and the population is 2,557, according to the 1921 census, the last that we have.

Mr. GARDINER: What item are we dealing with now?

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $102,000.

Mr. GARDINER: May we have the details of that?

Mr. ARTHURS: And the details regarding Limoilou.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps I had better give them one at a time. My hon. friend asked for the general details in regard to the amount of $102,000. That is the amount that has been spent annually for a number of years for improvements and repairs in connection with Dominion public buildings in the province of Quebec, including those in the city of Montreal. Perhaps while I am on my feet I had better answer with regard to Limoilou. Limoilou is practically part of the city of Quebec at the present time. This building is in a rapidly growing part of the city.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the population?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is practically part of the city. There are fifty-six industrial establishments, six religious institutions, 152 stores and 3,200 residential buildings served by this building. I have not the population of this part separately, but it is a rapidly growing suburb of Quebec.

Mr. ARTHURS: I should like a few details regarding the way in which the item of $102,000 was spent last year for improvements and repairs to Dominion public buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount spent last year is $101,985, made up as follows:

Actonvale, post office, $1,323.44; Arthabaska, post office, $656.90; Aylmer, post office, $74.82; Berthierville, post office, $335.84; Buckingham, post office, $193.19; Cap de la Madeleine, Fortin building (post office), $16.50; Chicoutimi, post office, etc., $117.55; Coaticook, post office, etc., $2,172.82; Cookshire, post office, $342.70; Drummondville, post office, etc., $94.51; Dundee, custom house, $144.45; East Angus, post office, $267.10; Farnham, post office, $746.79; Gaspe, Carter building (post office, etc.), $38.20; Granby, post office, $540.16; Grand Mere, Banque Nationale building (post office), $2; Hull, post office, $1,937.74; Iberville, post office, $40.05; Joliette, post office, etc., $714.88; Jonquieres, post office, $139.52; Knowlton, post office, etc., $223.07; Lachine, post office, $110.54; Lachute, post office, $146.75; Lac Megantic, post office, $339.38; La Malbaie, post office, $108.22; La Prairie, post office, $90.06; L'Assomption, post office, $735.08; Levis, post office, etc., $352.33; Longueuil, post office, $96.83; Loretteville, post office, $127.78; Louiseville, post office, $208.95; Magog, post office, $201.42; Maniwaki, post office, $72.65; Marieville, post office, $62; Matane, post office, $82.12; Mont Joli, Levesque building (post office), $4.30; Montmagny, post office, $605.93; Montreal, Ames building (D.S.C.R. etc.), $152.50; Montreal, custom house (old), $1,979.94; Montreal, custom house (canal office), $16.65; Montreal, examining warehouse (new), $7,544.14; Montreal, examining warehouse (old), $537.08; Montreal, forest products laboratory, $99.60; Montreal, Gazette building temporary E.W. (old), $1,502.54; Montreal, generally, $5,546.78; Montreal, old inland revenue building (P.W.O.), $1,108.48; Montreal, post office, etc., $14,526.61; Montreal, postal station A, $459.60; Montreal, postal station B, $179.52; Montreal, postal station C, $1,113.74; Montreal, postal station D, $486.73; Montreal, postal station E, $246.09; Montreal, postal station F, $247.35; Montreal, postal station L (Westmount), $3,121.13; Montreal, postal station G, etc., $175.35; Montreal, postal station H, etc., $650.75; Montreal, postal station N, La Patrie building, $110; Montreal, Labelle building postal station N, etc., $6,184; Montreal, postal station O (St. Laurent), $2,002.73; Montreal, postal station R, $103.93; Montreal, postal station S, $2,577.76; Montreal, postal station Delorimier, 1023-25 Mount Royal ave., $9.71; Montreal, postal station Hochelaga, $75.02; Montreal, postal station Notre Dame de Grace, 5633 Sherbrooke street, $136.89; Montreal, postal station St. Henri, $1,374.45; Montreal, postal station Verdun, $26; Nicolet, post office, etc., $109.43; Pierreville, post office, $45.39; Plessisville, post office, $627.12; Quebec, Carrel building (Seeds branch), 55 cents; Quebec, Citadel, Governor General's quarters, $26.32; Quebec, city, generally, $199.69; Quebec, custom house, etc., $1,641.73; Quebec, examining warehouse, $454.99; Quebec, marine agency, King's wharf, $1,904.15; Quebec, Molson's Bank building (old), $73.57; Quebec, Oliver building (R.C.N.V.R.), $54.50; Quebec, post office, etc. (main), $4,099.18; Quebec, postal station B, $22.70; Quebec, postal station St. Roch, $242.66; Quebec, postal station St. Sauveur, $805.97; Richmond, post office, $669.28; Rigaud, post office, $1,196.80; Rimouski, post office, etc., $270.33; Riviere du Loup, post office, $406.50; Roberval, post office, $101.72; Rock Island, post office, $343.48; Ste. Agathe des Monts, post office, $103.15; Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Pilon building (post office), $11.80; St. Gabriel de Brandon, post office, $212.70; St. Hyacinthe, custom and excise building, $593.59; St. Hyacinthe, post office, etc., $1,109.78; St. Jean, custom house, $177.70; St. Jean, post office, $954.44; St. Jerome, post office, etc., $172.19; St. Joseph de Beauce, Cliche building (post office), $3; St. Lambert, post office, $301.20; Ste. Therese, post office, $70.55; St. Tite, L'Heureux building (post office), $12.65; Shawinigan Falls, post office, $103.09; Shawville, post office, $64.80; Sherbrooke, Gregoire building W. & M. O. 130 Wellington street, $374.50; Sherbrooke, post office, etc., $5,381.60; Sorel, post office, $1,067.41; Terrebonne, post office, etc., $210.05; Thetford Mines, post office, $143.70; Trois Rivieres, drill hall, $5,034.77; Valleyfield, post office, $3,900.22; Victoriaville, post office, $365.80; Minor offices throughout Quebec province, $213.80; Generally, $2,344.98—Total, $101,985.17.

That has been practically the annual expenditure for the last three years.

Mr. ARTHURS: Was any of this work done by contract, and if so, for what amounts? Naturally we would suppose that contracts would be let for anything over $5,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that most of this work was done by day labour.

Mr. ARTHURS: Regardless of the amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: This doing of work by day labour is an old, I was going to say, controversy. As a matter of fact, parliament for many years agreed that all work over $5,000 should be done by contract; indeed, I believe there is a statutory provision to that effect, and it says that works under $5,000 "may"—not "shall"—be done by day labour if in the opinion of the minister it is in the interest of the country to do so. Would the minister please give us the contracts in regard to five of the places he mentioned, and which I noted down, although I may not have the exact amounts: Sherbrooke, $5,381;Three Rivers, $5,034; Montreal examining warehouse, $7,500; Montreal post office, $14,000; Labelle, $6,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to obtain for my hon. friend the details he has asked for.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a very large item, and we ought to have that explanation. I think the Minister of Justice and other members of the government will appreciate what I am saying. The item amounts to $102,000. We are not complaining about that, but as we are voting this in a lump sum, and it has all been spent, I understand, except $15, we ought to have an explanation. Perhaps the best thing would be to let this item stand and take up the others, and the minister can give us an explanation as to these other large items where, under the statute, the work should be done by contract.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: If it is considered, by reason of any special circumstances, that the work can be more advantageously performed by day labour, we are not limited to the amount of $5,000. I think the Sherbrooke post office and the work at Three Rivers were both done by day labour.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there anything in the Ontario vote for a building for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics? It is now in a wooden ramshackle building, and the floors, as I said last year, are more like the waves of the ocean than anything else. Thousands of priceless documents are housed there which should really be in a fireproof building. Is it the intention of the government to put up such a building?

Item stands.

Drummondville public building — addition, $5,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is this for the completion of the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for fittings and lock boxes, $3,750; repairs to concrete retaining wall, $190; iron fence, $290; granite steps, $390; contingencies, $318.

Item agreed to.

Maisonneuve—public building, $125,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is this for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a revote.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I see it is a revote, but the amount has been revoted for several years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to provide for the purchase price of the old city hall in Montreal. Apparently they were unable to get the transfer completed before, and the money had to be revoted.

Item agreed to.

Mont Laurier—public building, $3,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: What is the population and revenue of this place?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1921 the population was 1,813, and the postal revenue $15,145.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How is the item made up?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To complete the contract, $1,000; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; contingencies and inspection, $1,000.

Item agreed to.

Montreal—postal terminal building, $650,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: This is a large item and requires some explanation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is required towards the construction of a postal terminal building for the handling of the mails in connection with the railway terminals at Montreal. At the present time the mails are taken from the railway terminals to the general post office for sortation, and are then returned to the railway terminals for transmission to their destination. The city collections are taken to the post office for sortation, and the outgoing mail is then transferred to the railway station. Foreign mail is taken to postal station "A" for sortation. The general post office is well located and equipped for handing the mail of the financial and business district of Montreal, but is not suited for the sorting, and to overcome the present inadequacy and difficulty it is proposed to erect a building in the vicinity of the railway terminals.

Mr. ARTHURS: Where will it be located? I thought the site for the terminals had not yet been decided upon.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the vicinity of the Bonaventure and Windsor stations.

Mr. FRASER: I have before me the Auditor General's report of last year, and I find in part V, section 14, the following:

Montreal postal station site, corner Prince Arthur and Clark streets, to cancel agreement of sale, etc.:—H. Auerbach, in trust for the Montreal Joint Board of Amalgamated Clothing Workers, $5,000.

What is the explanation of this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no knowledge of it personally, but I am advised that it was proposed to construct a building on the site; then it was decided not to do so and the land was sold for that price.

Mr. FRASER: This is a payment of money.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The purchasers did not proceed and were paid back their deposit. We still have the site.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the site for the postal terminal building been purchased?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Has the site for this building been purchased?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This item of $650,000 is just for the building; no part of the money is to be used in purchasing the site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it is towards site and building.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This is supposed to include the site and the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not all. The intention is to construct a building that eventually will cost a million and a half. This is the start.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is exactly what I wanted to get at. The item may be all right, but such a large sum should not go through in too short a space of time, for it gives the appearance of undignified haste and would leave us open to the criticism of being indifferent to the voting of large sums.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Taken in connection with the expenditure for tearing down city blocks in Ottawa and for other purposes, it creates a bad impression throughout the country. I understand from the minister that this is only the start of an expenditure which roughly will total a million and a half. Does not the minister think we are pretty safe in following past experience and doubling the estimate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not in this department.

Mr. FRASER: I understood the minister to say that he had not yet purchased the site. What does this item mean in the Auditor General's report?

Montreal, towards purchase of Lavut building for postal station "G":—(Purchase price, $62,500, and $25,000 mortgage assumed, interest at 7 per cent: balance still due, $10,300 and $25,000 mortgage) Royal Trust Co., trustee for London and Scottish Assurance Corp., fourth annual payment out of five, $10,300.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is a small postal station.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the fourth item later in that reference.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What does the minister estimate the site will cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is pretty difficult to say at the present time.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is the site selected?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Have there been any negotiations for the purchase of a site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister stated that this is a third of the ultimate expenditure. Does the same remark apply to some of the other items we have passed? If so, it is very misleading.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, most of the items referred to are final.

Mr. GARDINER: Where it is proposed to make expenditures to this extent, and further expenditures will be necessary to complete the building, the minister should inform us of the total cost.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will.

Mr. GEARY: Does the minister intend to have this building erected in conjunction with one of the terminal stations of the railways?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is not the intention.

Mr. GEARY: That is the usual practice, is it not?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. It is intended to get the buildings as near the station as possible for sorting purposes.

Mr. GEARY: You have not selected the site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CANTLEY: In view of the fact that the terminal station has not been determined on, it seems to me the minister does not know where he will spend this $650,000. We have great difficulty in getting very small amounts when the need is admitted and the plans for the buildings have been completed for years. The minister asks us to vote him $650,000, although he does not know where the building will be located and he has not bought the land; in fact there is no definite basis for the vote. I think he had better leave it over for another year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend knew the condition he would not suggest letting this vote stand over for another year. I might read him part of the memorandum submitted by the postal department for these facilities, which are greatly needed:

> To place the large mail-handling area of the city of Montreal in a position to cope with the increase in mailing, it was necessary to consider the form of relief that would provide the most efficient service at this time. It was therefore decided to build a main transfer building located contiguous to the railway station.

I do not imagine my hon. friends will think it advisable to be told exactly what property the department has in mind.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CANTLEY: Where is the railway terminal to be?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the vicinity of Windsor and Bonaventure stations.

Mr. CANTLEY: I know it is in the city of Montreal somewhere; but I do not think the site is determined on yet.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is. It will be in that particular vicinity. I cannot give any more definite information at the present time.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Has the minister any options on any property there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then the voting of this $650,000 now is by way of informing all the real estate agents and property owners to get busy.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will keep it general enough so that no particular lot will be designated, and I do not think any harm will be done. We cannot buy the site until we have the money.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): But you are getting money for the building before you have bought the land.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can throw a little light on this vote because I have assisted in choosing the site. The site is on the street opposite Bonaventure station down towards the lower part of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: St. James street.

Mr. VENIOT: It is situated in such a way that when the projected terminal of the Canadian National Railways is built and the change is made in the Canadian Pacific Railway terminal, we anticipate this will be central to them and will give the necessary accommodation that we require in Montreal for the handling of the large quantity of mail going through there, which is increasing daily. Construction will be on the same lines as the terminals of Toronto, the only difference being that the new building will be put up and we shall not be compelled to buy a building and make the numerous changes which we had to carry out in Toronto in order to give us proper accommodation and a suitable location.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Did I understand the minister to say that he had assisted in the selection of the site?

Mr. VENIOT: I assisted in the selection of the site extension and I wish to say that we now own the property there. It is not sufficient for the whole of the building, but sufficient to begin the work and give us the accommodation at the commencement of the season. We own quite a large property on this site now, and the additional sum required to purchase the rest of the property sufficient for the construction of this building should be voted. I do not think it would be right to ask us to make this information public because we shall have to arbitrate on the remainder of the property contiguous to the site we require.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I understood the Minister of Public Works to say the site had not been selected.

Mr. VENIOT: The Minister of Public Works does not select sites for post offices.

Mr. McQUARRIE: He said—

Mr. VENIOT: If it has been the practice in the past under former governments to have sites for post offices selected independently of the Post Office Department, that practice will not continue. The Canadian National used to do that in the past, looking after mail terminals in their stations, but that is not so now. Their engineers are practical men so far as railway matters are concerned, but they are not practical in the handling of mails and in the preparing of plans for mail terminals. That work to-day falls to the engineers of the Post Office department.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am sure there is one gentleman in the house who will appreciate what I said a little while ago on the inadvisability of rushing through these large items with undue haste. The Minister of Public Works is indebted to us on this side of the house for supplying him with a bit of information which he said himself he did not have when he rose to ask for this amount of money. We have at least obtained the information that the site has been selected; we had that from the Postmaster General. That is news to the Minister of Public Works. All he has to do now is to put up the building. I was wondering why they would ask for money to put up a building without a place on which to put it. The Minister of Public Works could not inform us on that very important particular; he did not know. But we have it from the Postmaster General that he has taken part in selecting the site and apparently the Minister of Public Works did not know about it.

Mr. VENIOT: I may add for the information of my hon. friend that besides assisting in the selection of the site we submitted these items afterwards to the Minister of Public Works. The site, in the selection of which I assisted, was the extension. The first site which was chosen and purchased, and is now owned by the Department of Public Works, was chosen and purchased by my hon. friends opposite—the old Carslake hotel.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Minister of Public Works will be glad to know about it. Apparently he did not know. Here we have a minister getting up and asking the committee to vote $650,000 to put up a building and he does not know where it will be, while the Postmaster General has been informed all the time that a part of this was purchased years ago. All this is news to me and apparently it is news to the Postmaster General's colleague, the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MANION: May I ask the Postmaster General a question? He said that he helped to choose the site. How did he come to be called in by the previous government?

Mr. VENIOT: I can easily answer that. If my hon. friend had been paying attention to what I said—

Mr. MANION: I always do.

Mr. STEVENS: We have to.

Mr. VENIOT: I said I assisted in the selection as regards the extension. I used the word "extension"; Hansard will show it.

Mr. MANION: You can extend only what you already have.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. gentleman asked a question and I was trying to answer it. That extension is now a part of the site chosen by our friends when in power.

Mr. MANION: I was at one time Postmaster General and I was wondering how I had been overlooked.

Mr. VENIOT: My hon. friend was there so short a time that he knew nothing about it.

Mr. MANION: I was there a short time, it is true, but I do not see why my hon. friend should be called in over my head.

Mr. VENIOT: I certainly would not attempt to go over the head of the hon. gentleman; the task would be too difficult.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Minister of Public Works, from his want of knowledge, has also been there a very short time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to say for the information of my hon. friend from Frontenac that the selection of the site for the building we put up is made by the Department of Public Works. The Postmaster General or someone else may have in mind, perhaps the very best site in the world, a site which he thinks is the proper one, and we are glad to have his recommendations and any other information we may have on the subject. But the site is not acquired, so far as this department is concerned, until we select it. I might add for the benefit of my genial friend from Frontenac that I have here a map showing the property which is owned at the present time as well as the property suggested by the Post Office department, and which is probably the proper site. So far as this department is concerned, if that addition cannot be purchased at a price that is reasonable, either it will be expropriated or the building will go up somewhere else.

Mr. GEARY: Who selected the site immediately adjacent to the site already selected?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I say again that the Minister of Public Works is under a debt of gratitude to me—

Mr. ELLIOT: I always am.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —and to others as well, and I hope he will not forget that debt.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Never.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I could not for the life of me accept the statement of the Postmaster General that he selected this site. I remember fourteen years ago going with a representative of the Department of Public Works to select a site for a post office in the village of Sydenham. I was there in a sort of advisory capacity, but it was the Public Works department that selected the site. My impression always has been, the Postmaster General to the contrary notwithstanding, that these sites were selected and purchased by the Public Works department. In this regard the Postmaster General is in about the same position as anyone else: he may offer suggestions or advice, but he cannot issue any commands. He has represented himself in this house as the big Poo-Bah in connection with these buildings; but after all he is only in the position of anyone else who may offer a little advice or some suggestions. But the Minister of Public Works is the all-powerful man who really does the purchasing, the Postmaster General sitting by, thinking he is running the whole show.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Montreal—Craig street drill hall—government's share of cost of local improvements, $1,742.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This item should carry, especially because it is in Montreal and it is for drill purposes. I respectfully suggest that the Minister of Public Works take the Postmaster General down there and put him through a series of drills before he brings on his estimates.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is it the policy of the Dominion government to pay for local improvements in front of properties owned by the government, not only in Montreal but in other places as well?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That has been the practice.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—postal station in Outremont division, $53,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the history of this property? Evidently this is a revote. What was the amount of contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The revote is $30,000. The site has been purchased.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much was spent last year out of the $50,000 then voted.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Up to March 31, $20,507 had been spent.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Was that for the site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The site cost $19,200, which is included in that amount.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And $53,000 will complete it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, it will complete everything.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—towards purchase of Lavut building for postal station "G", $14,005.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the item to which reference was made a moment ago, covering one payment on the purchase of a building for postal station "G".

Item agreed to.

Quebec citadel—Governor General's quarters —additions, alterations and improvements, $150,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the explanation with regard to this amount? We voted $100,000 last year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount of $150,000 is required to complete the remodelling and refurnishing of the quarters of the Governor General in the Quebec citadel. The work is of a miscellaneous character and consists of the entire renovation of the existing building, which was erected about a century ago and was in a very bad state of repair, part of it practically gone to decay. The work to be undertaken during the year is of two kinds: Renovation and alterations such as renewal of floors, window panes, sashes, doors, alterations to stairs, new plumbing, new roofing, alterations to the heating plant, painting and replastering. This is estimated to cost $80,000.

Mr. GEARY: Outside of that the building is all right?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Outside of that the building is as good as any building a hundred years old. The balance of the amount, $70,000, is for furnishing such as carpets, draperies, furniture and so on. It means almost a complete refurnishing of the quarters.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Where did former governors general go?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To the same place.

Mr. CANNON: But not since 1915 or 1916.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Quebec citadel—Governor General's quarters —additions, alterations and improvements, $150,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was asking the minister for some information in respect to this vote. Was the money spent that was voted last year, and what commitments, if any, have we in respect of this vote of $150,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The money voted last year is practically all spent. Certain further work has been proceeded with, on account of its being urgent, and the desire to have the alterations and improvements completed by next June.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then part of the money which we propose to vote now has been already spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are practically committed to it, subject to its being voted by the house.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not know just what sort of bug gets into the minds of ministers when they set out to spend money on a proposition of this kind. We have one official residence for the governor general; now we are to have another house at Quebec, and I hear rumours around the house that there is one proposed on the west coast, at Vancouver or somewhere in British Columbia. Where is this thing going to end? For my part I have not spoken to the ministers regarding any appropriation in my county, neither last year nor the year before, although I could point out to many places both in my county and in the adjoining county where it is necessary to spend money. Although there are hundreds of constituencies where the expenditure of money is necessary in the interests of the public service, we are met here with an unnecessary and unwarranted expenditure, and I for one object to it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to add my protest against the expenditure for this purpose. I quite concede that something should be done to maintain the citadel at Quebec. I remember a few years ago visiting it and noting with some regret that the old walls were in a very bad condition. I was shown the governor general's room there, and undoubtedly it was not a fit place in which to place the governor general. But why is it necessary to erect new residence for him at the citadel? There is a chateau there in which he can be very well provided for. He has his own private cars—about which perhaps we may have an opportunity of hearing something a little bit later—and in these very frequently he can remain with a good deal of comfort. It seems to me we are simply copying some of the least desirable practices of Great Britain, where the king has castles and houses here and there across the country. The governor general will more and more, become, as I understand it from the constitutional standpoint, purely the representative of the king in Canada, and I do not see why we should attempt to provide for a style of living, in respect to the governor general's quarters that is not in conformity with the ideals of the vast majority of the Canadian people. We do not need to set up a kind of semi-feudalism in this country. As has been said, there are a very large number of perfectly legitimate expenditures of which we stand in great need. I fancy we shall be told before very long that we cannot possibly put into operation such a scheme as unemployment insurance because we have not the funds at our disposal. We are told again and again that certain items are being cut down—items which are very necessary, involving expenditures which would really help the people—because we must preserve the treasury against the raids being made upon it. In the face of all this it seems to me it is absolutely unjustifiable for us to vote such a large sum for what is after all quite an unnecesary purpose and a purpose which is not in harmony with the best thinking of our Canadian people. I want to add my protest against such a vote.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give the committee the information as to what the expenditure is for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will give it again; perhaps my hon. friend was not in the chamber when I gave it. The amount asked is for work on the building, renewals and alterations, such as window frames, sashes, doors, alterations to the stairs, new roofing, alterations to heating, painting and replastering. To complete the alterations, covering practically everything connected with the building, it is estimated that $80,000 will be required. The remaining $70,000 is for furnishings, such as carpets, draperies, furniture and fittings, for the existing building.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that complete the furnishings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is hoped so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Just before six o'clock the minister assured us that his department made no mistakes in estimating. I am sure we were under the impression last year that $100,000 would complete this work, so that there is a slight error, to the extent of 150 per cent, in the estimate of cost. Now there is a little doubt as to whether or not even this further appropriation will complete the work. I have no objection to this vote if it is absolutely necessary, but I think the money is being spent on a pretence, because I am sure the governor general will not spend a week at the citadel. It is simply to make it a sightseeing place in Quebec and a means of renewing part of the old fortifications. As I said this afternoon, there are two other places nearly as old as Quebec and unless the minister comes forward with a scheme which will prevent the destruction going on in those places, we shall have to make a stronger opposition to this next year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is wrong in his assumption, because I know it is the intention of His Excellency the Governor General to spend in Quebec a part of the year both in summer and in winter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There are other capitals.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I did not rise for the purpose of saying that; I wish merely to read to the committee the comment last year of the then leader of the opposition when this appropriation came before the house. These are as his words as reported on page 1113 in Hansard of last year:

> Mr. Guthrie: I agree with the minister in regard to this vote. I think we ought to preserve this historic monument of past days for it is something in which every citizen of Canada should take a just pride. I have not visited the citadel since the Duke of Devonshire was here as Governor General, and even at that time the whole premises were sadly out of repair. If nothing has been done in the intervening years the place must be in a very dilapidated condition to-day. Possibly the amount asked for, $100,000, is large, but having regard to the fact that this is one of the outstanding historic sites in Canada I believe that the people of the country desire to have it maintained in a condition befitting our wealth and consequence in this land. While I am disposed to criticize much of the outlay proposed in these estimates, while I do oppose political expenditures throughout the country on post offices and other buildings for which there is no need at the present time, I am inclined to commend this vote, and I hope that the money we are now granting will place the Quebec citadel in proper shape, not only for the comfort of Their Excellencies, but also as a monument in which the Dominion at large is interested.

After such nice words I am not surprised that the Minister of Public Works was keen to go on with the work.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that the remarks just read by the minister constitute one of the severest criticisms that could be made of this government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend has a queer way of appreciating things.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The hon. member spoke last year as leader of the opposition and even then he thought $100,000 was an extravagant expenditure. The government are now asking for an additional $150,000 to do practically the same work over again. It seems to me that the citadel must be deteriorating very fast when the government have to come to parliament each year asking for a certain amount. How much is it going to cost for the upkeep of the citadel year after year? How much will the furniture and all the furbelows cost and what will be the cost in the way of people to look after the place? I object to our having two or three places for our very much respected Governor General. We have one place of residence now and a great deal of money has been spent on it. While money is needed elsewhere throughout the country I object strongly to this expenditure.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Do any of the other British dominions provide two homes for their governors general?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say very frankly I have not visited the homes of governors general in any of the other countries, but my information is that in India, at any rate, where Their Excellencies were at one time, there is more than one place of residence.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why should we follow India's example?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are following Canada in this respect. This is not something new. We have had the two residences for Their Excellencies for many years. We are simply putting back into repair one of the residences.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there anything of the old citadel left?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, the walls. But there is no question that the building that was erected more than a century ago at great expense is in a very worn and decayed condition. We are not starting out on something new. When the war was on, repairs were required and it was not considered that was the proper time to make them. The condition became so bad during the period of the war that the place could not be occupied. Things were just allowed to drift along and the time came when the government had to decide whether or not that the great old historic landmark, a beautiful building constructed at great expense years ago, having been kept up for a number of years as a residence for a part of the year at any rate of the governor general, should be permitted to fall into decay and lost to the people of Canada as an historic landmark. The government believed it was not advisable to allow it to deteriorate. I do not want to refer to the wishes of any of the parties concerned; but the government, considering all the circumstances, believe this was an expenditure not only that they were justified in making, but that under the circumstances they could not avoid making. They felt it was their duty to see that the old citadel was not allowed to be lost to the people of this country.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have no objection to keeping the old citadel of Quebec as an historic landmark; but will all deference to Their Excellencies, who are very popular and whom I would not wish to see suffer any discomfort, I must say that they have one good home provided for them in Ottawa, and I think it is going beyond our province to supply two homes for them when we cannot afford it and when no other dominion is doing likewise.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems a most extraordinary thing that, as the minister has really admitted, because Their Excellencies lived in India and had more than one home there, we should afford them more than one home in Canada. If anyone will consider the conditions of the ordinary peasants and workers of India and compare them with what we have here, I should say it is a great deal better that we should maintain decent standards for all the people of Canada than that we should take India as our example. It is a most extraordinary thing that, as the minister has really admitted just now, this is being done because of the personal ideas of Their Excellencies who at present occupy the position at Rideau Hall. If we are going to have a governor general's residence in Quebec there is every reason why we should have a governor general's residence in each of the other provinces. The minister is endeavouring to confuse the committee between the question of maintaining an historic landmark and that of providing a sort of vice-regal residence that will be occupied for a few weeks in the year. Do we need curtains, carpets and elaborate furniture in order to maintain an historic landmark? Do we need the very heavy expenditure, that will be necessary for the upkeep of this place? We have almost reached the limit along this line, and speaking for my constituents and for a large number of people with whom I am in close contact across the country and whom I am trying to represent, I want again to protest against this expenditure and to suggest that instead of expending the money in this way, we should vote it for some purposes that are really necessary for the welfare of the people at large.

Mr. CANTLEY: When this matter was before the house a year ago the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) made a very moving appeal in regard to the restoration of the walls of the citadel of Quebec. Partly as a result of that appeal we agreed to an amount of $100,000 being appropriated on that occasion. Now, if the minister would be good enough to speak a little louder, because as a rule the recording angel could not hear what he says, much less we on this side—

Mr. ERNST: He does not want the recording angel to hear him.

Mr. STEVENS: Use Gabriel's trumpet.

Mr. CANTLEY: I ask the minister what proportion of the amount voted last year was spent on the walls of the citadel at Quebec.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I explained before my hon. friend came in that all the amount had been spent, or commitments made for its expenditure.

Mr. CANTLEY: For what purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: For the building in connection with the citadel, and for quarters for the servants of the Governor General.

Mr. CANTLEY: The understanding last year was that the major portion of this amount should be expended on the walls of the citadel.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No. I have last year's debates in my hand; I will send the volume over to my hon. friend, and he will see that he is wrong.

Mr. CANTLEY: The understanding was that it was to be spent on the restoration of the walls of the citadel, rather than on the governor general's quarters. If we are going to restore fortifications, we have fortifications at Halifax, to which reference was made today by the junior member for Halifax, and I submit that the fortifications there are just as important and have just as great an historic interest as the fortification at Quebec. If we are going to have the governor general residing a portion of each year in different provinces, I think it is just as important that he should visit the "bluenoses" as the people of Quebec. We have at Halifax the Admiralty House, which has not been kept up for some considerable time. If you spent a quarter of a million dollars on the citadel building, that sum is a great deal more than the whole fortification works at Quebec cost when first built. As a resident of Nova Scotia I claim that justice be done us in this as in other matters which we have brought to the attention of the house.

Mr. BOURASSA: Last year I reminded, not the Minister of Public Works particularly, but the government, of the state of the walls of the citadel. I am more interested in the preservation of the citadel wall than in the embellishment of that horrible thing which is called the governor general's residence in the citadel, and which has no value of any kind whatsoever, neither historical nor architectural. It is the ugliest thing that could be imagined. It desecrates the citadel and honours neither the governor general nor the people of Canada. It seems to me that small repairs to the amount of a few thousand dollars would be sufficient to keep that horrid thing in proper condition for the lodging of Their Excellencies for three or perhaps six weeks of the year, if they happened to be there. As far as the citadel itself is concerned, every time I am at Quebec, if it is fine weather, I take pleasure in going round the citadel, climbing the stairs from Dufferin terrace, walking round the walls, and coming back by the plains of Abraham, or going round the other way. The last time I was there I noticed that the walls, which were beginning to tumble down two years ago, were tumbling down still further. Nothing was done last year to save them. Not one cent of the $100,000 voted last year for the embellishment of that ugly thing which will never be capable of embellishment was used for the maintenance of what is really beautiful and historic in the citadel. I would ask the government to do something more for the maintenance of the citadel, and all that it carries with it of valuable remembrance of the past, and to devote a little less to the upkeep of that gubernatorial—I do not know what to call it—it is certainly not a palace—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mansion.

Mr. BOURASSA: If it is suggested that it is a proper thing to supply some lodgment for Their Excellencies when they come to the province of Quebec, I entirely agree with the members from the other provinces who have spoken, that the governor general should be supplied with a residence in each province. That might become a little costly. It seems to me that the governor general might well reside in the various houses or mansions that are at the disposal of the lieutenant governors of the provinces. I do not think the governor general should feel humbled or that his dignity or office would be lowered in any way by the fact that he lodged under the same roof as the lieutenant governor.

While I am on my feet I wish to make good a promise that I made to my good friends of Cape Breton when travelling through that very fine part of the province of Nova Scotia last summer. I revisited Louisburg after an interval of some thirty years, and I found there a notice to the public, asking them to do their share in maintaining that historic spot, but, of course, the people who pass there are not very many. It seems to me that the government and parliament of Canada, representing the whole people, should do something for what remains of Louisburg, and I would say the same for Amherst and Beausejour. They are all historic spots, though perhaps not to the same extent as Quebec, but much of historic value attaches to them all. I was amazed to compare what remains of Louisburg to-day with what I saw there thirty years ago. I drove there from Sydney thirty years ago—there was then no railway on the island of Cape Breton,—and it was a delight to enjoy the spectacle of the rocks stretching out into the sea on that bright summer morning. With proper guidance you could follow the traces of the old town and see what remained of the foundations of the governor general's residence, the old church, and so forth, but all that is fast disappearing. The earth and refuse and manure from the animals passing by has covered up practically all that remains, except the powder magazine. The burying places of both the English, the French and the Bostonese are in a terrible state of abandonment, and I suggest that the members representing that part of Canada do their little bit in attracting the attention of parliament and the government to the necessity of preserving this historic spot.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is being done.

Mr. BOURASSA: I am glad to hear it. I hope some intelligent work will be done with regard to Louisburg. It would be futile, I think, to attempt to rebuild any of the old buildings on a large scale, but at least the ground could be cleared, and what remains of the old foundations could be preserved so that one passing through the streets of the old town could recall its history. To a certain extent, all things being relative, it would be like passing through the ruins of Pompeii. It has the advantage of being outside the new town so that it can be preserved in a decent state, and its historic features will be of interest to tourists and stimulate in the youth of the district a desire to acquaint themselves with the history of their country. There is now a considerable foreign population in that part of the country working in the mines and other local industries, and by preserving these ruins we may also do useful work in arousing in them a desire to study the past of their adopted country.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac) : Mr. Chairman, for the first time—and perhaps for the last—I find myself in agreement with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I do not think there is any difference of opinion in this house as to the advisability and propriety of maintaining these old historic landmarks in Quebec, Louisburg, Halifax and Kingston. I think we all agree that they should be maintained because of their historic associations. But I am absolutely opposed to spending public money to provide half a dozen residences for the governor general, no matter who he may be. I do not think it is necessary; such expenditure is a waste of money. I believe there is in the city of Winnipeg a group of rooms in the Royal Alexandra hotel, called the royal suite, which apparently was good enough for His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales when he was in that city.

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is the matter? Already we have a lieutenant governor's residence in each provincial capital, where I dare say His Excellency would be very welcome indeed for a few days' stay, and in addition he has his own palatial private car. Therefore I submit that to spend a quarter of million dollars on furniture, carpets and that sort of thing—with another residence for His Excellency contemplated on the Pacific coast—is a criminal waste of money in view of the many necessary public works throughout the country which are being left in abeyance. If the minister will tell us how much of this $150,000 is required for real repair work to maintain the Quebec citadel as an historic landmark, I shall be prepared to vote for that portion of the item; but since he has told us that at least $70,000 or $80,000 is to provide for carpets and furniture, I must vote against that expenditure. I think he ought to inform us how much more money is required, in addition to the $100,000 voted last year, which was voted, not with the primary object of establishing another residence for His Excellency but to maintain an historic landmark. Let him divide this amount between what is really required for putting the citadel in proper condition to maintain it as a national monument and what is required to furnish the governor general's quarters. I am prepared to make a motion just as soon as the minister gives us that information.

Mr. KAISER: I am pleased, Mr. Chairman, to see the member for Labelle and the member for Frontenac agreeing for once, and I rise to support them both, for this reason. Like the member for Labelle, I promised some friends of mine that at this session I would draw the attention of parliament and of the country to the condition of the Louisburg ruins. I had the pleasure of visiting that old landmark about two days ahead of the hon. member for Labelle last summer. Three things there very much surprised me: first, the many historic points of absorbing interest that were neglected; second, the very beautiful shaft erected on the site, which I expected would be inscribed with a brief account of the once magnificent fortress. Instead I found the shaft had been placed there by the American Historical Society to perpetuate the colonial historic associations of Louisburg. Third, I saw an endeavour to restore some parts of the old fort, but I found that this work had been undertaken by an American resident who, unfortunately, died before he was able to complete his plans. I am in thorough accord with the view that we should maintain our historic landmarks, and if any of this money is to be spent on such restoration I am sure it will meet with the approval of the country as a whole; but I do not think we are in a position to spend a quarter of a million dollars just to make a summer residence for the governor general.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Stevens:

That the vote for Quebec citadel, governor general's quarters, be reduced by $70,000, stated to be the cost of the furnishings.

Mr. STEVENS: Just a word, Mr. Chairman, in support of my action in seconding the motion. I take second place to no one in providing suitable accommodation for His Excellency the Governor General. But last year we were asked for $100,000, and in harmony with the views expressed by the then leader of the opposition the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), I supported the vote, on the understanding that it was for the purpose primarily of preserving or restoring that historic spot, including provision for certain accommodation. But we had no idea that it would cost any more than $100,000. Now we are asked to vote another $150,000 for this work, which we were informed last year would be completed with the expenditure of the amount then voted. The statement has been made, in support of this vote, that it is required for the preservation of the walls of this historic site. And then we are told that $70,000 is to be spent in curtains, carpets and furnishings. We certainly are not going to preserve the walls of that place by spending $70,000 on lace curtains and fancy carpets. To me the thing is preposterous in the present circumstances, and I take pleasure in seconding the motion of the hon. member for Lincoln that the vote be reduced by $70,000.

Mr. HEAPS: When this vote was before the house last year, the Minister of Public Works made the following statement:

This vote is required for the remodelling of the Governor General's quarters in the Quebec citadel. The improvements embrace works of a miscellaneous character consisting of the remodelling and renovating of the quarters and the erection of a permanent addition for servants' quarters, kitchen and so forth. The work, it is estimated, will cost approximately, $100,000.

This was the estimate which the minister gave to the house last year. On a subsequent occasion in the same debate he was asked by myself how this money was to be apportioned, how much was to go towards repairs of the historic part of the work and how much towards the governor general's residence. He replied:

I am unable to give very definite details. The architect has been over the building but I may frankly tell my hon. friend that at this time of year it is quite difficult to estimate what it will cost to preserve a considerable portion of the existing structure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will the hon. member read the rest of the paragraph?

Mr. HEAPS: I quote further:

This vote is merely an estimate. The full amount will, however, be required and before the department is able to put the premises in that permanent shape which we desire, I rather think the amount will be exceeded. An attempt is being made to render the place habitable, as it is not now, both for winter and summer. Furthermore, a good deal of furnishing will be required as well as inside fittings. This is the estimate which the architect, after a careful survey of the whole place, was able to submit to us.

I had no idea a year ago that the minister would come back at this session and ask for an extra $150,000. Had the estimate been exceeded by 25 per cent, one could understand it. However, I desire to know from the minister how the $100,000 has been spent. How much has gone to the governor general's residence and how much has been spent in repairs to the historic part of the citadel? Also, how much of the present amount is to be spent exclusively on furnishings for His Excelency's residence? The minister might tell us at the same time what it costs to maintain the residence annually.

Mr. ARTHURS: I have no brief for or against His Excellency, nor have I any desire to restrict the number of residences he may or may not have. Last year we were asked to vote a sum of approximately $100,000 for the betterment of the battlefield memorial at Quebec. That was under the guise of a vote similar to this, and the defence put forward by the government was that the money was largely for the purpose of preserving historic memorials in the city of Quebec. We have this year, on page 60 of the estimates, a vote of $180,000 for battlefield memorials; the amount last year was $200,000. A bill has been introduced this session granting to the government permission to spend $75,000 per annum for ten years, or $750,000, in addition to the grants I have previously mentioned, in relation to the battlefield memorials. There is no question in my mind as regards the right or the wrong of this vote. We have no desire on this side of the house—certainly I have none personally—to do anything that would detract from the memorials which we should preserve in this country. But I have a decided opposition to spending $100,000, voted last year, and $150,000 this year, in addition to various sums in the future under the guise—and I say this purposely, under the guise—of providing a residence for His Excellency in the province of Quebec. If this money were for the purpose of a residence in that province, then each province should be given exactly the same treatment. But the fact is that this is simply for the purpose of having the vote passed more easily through the house. I for one am prepared to vote against any estimate of this kind, especially in view of the fact that we have provided, as I have said, $75,000 per annum for ten years, and that there is a vote of $180,000 in the estimates this year, in addition to the $200,000 last year for battlefield memorials. While there are so many places where the expenditure of public money is necessary, I am prepared to vote against this or any other item of a similar character.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I am really surprised to hear the hon. gentleman state that he will vote against this estimate for repairs to the citadel of Quebec.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is not correct; I am not prepared to vote against that and I never said I was. I am prepared to vote against any vote of money to establish a residence for His Excellency in Quebec or anywhere else.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: My hon. friend knows that this amount is to repair the governor general's quarters at Quebec.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, it is not; the $70,000 is for carpets.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The vote is $150,000.

Mr. ERNST: There is $70,000 for furniture.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: That is to rehabilitate the residence of the Governor General in the citadel of Quebec.

Mr. ARTHURS: What about last year's vote?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: This is to complete the work. May I point out to my hon. friends opposite that the residence which we are discussing is the place where the Prince of Wales lodges when he is in Quebec; it is the place where King George himself put up when in Quebec in 1908. If there is any property that should be maintained by this country it is the citadel and the fortifications of Quebec. But it is always the same: every time money is asked for Quebec an objection is raised. What about the $9,000,000 for Ottawa? What about the $100,000,000 for Toronto?

Mr. ARTHURS: One hundred millions?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Yes, if you take the whole amount voted for Toronto. This session we are to vote $10,500,000 for Toronto, but hon. gentlemen opposite do not say so much about votes for Toronto or for Ottawa. I am not prepared to say that the amount voted for Ottawa was not justified, but there was no great opposition to it.

Mr. ARTHURS: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is entirely out of order.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I want to say that every time an amount is requested for the city of Quebec hon. gentlemen opposite raise objections.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The hon. gentleman cannot mention a single instance where objection has not been taken to votes provided for the city of Quebec.

Mr. CANNON: The discussion which has taken place so far has disclosed the fact that members of the committee are at least unanimous on one point, that is, that our historical monuments throughout the country should be maintained. There has been no dissenting voice to that suggestion, so the question which I would like to bring before the committee is whether this vote is really for the maintenance of a historical monument or whether, as some hon. members have contended, it is giving way in a too generous spirit to extravagant and altogether unnecessary expenditures. What is the Quebec citadel?

It is a work which was erected by the imperial authorities over one hundred years ago at a total cost of over $40,000,000. It is a very considerable piece of work, judging from the cost and considering the value of money over a hundred years ago. The citadel comprises not only that part of the structure which overlooks the harbour of Quebec but also the series of walls which surround the inner or older part of our city. Ever since its erection the citadel has been the headquarters of the representative in Canada of His Majesty the King.

Mr. ARTHURS: No, no.

Mr. CANNON: It has. If the hon. gentlemen who have visited Quebec will recall, the quarters of the governor general are not a separate building from the citadel as the hon. member for Labelle has intimated, but are a part of the citadel itself.

Mr. BOURASSA: That is not so.

Mr. CANNON: The quarters of the governor general are that part of the citadel beginning at the quarters now occupied by the 22nd battalion on to the bastion which overlooks the river, but these quarters do not comprise a separate structure or building; they are not distinct from the citadel but are part and parcel of the citadel itself.

Mr. ARTHURS: If the hon. gentleman would answer a question I would ask whether these quarters were prepared for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON: Certainly they were.

Mr. ARTHURS: A hundred years ago?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly.

Mr. ARTHURS: We had no governor general a hundred years ago not until thirty years later.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Where does my hon. friend get his history?

Mr. CANNON: In answer to my hon. friend I would say that that part of the citadel always has been used as the headquarters of the representative in Canada of His Majesty the King.

Mr. ARTHURS: That is not what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. CANNON: Those are the facts, and to show just what kind of historical monument this is I would remind hon. gentlemen that when you enter the quarters of the governor general you see on all the fireplaces the arms of England. You will also notice the date and the fact that William IV was king of England at the time this building was constructed. These being the facts, can we pretend on the one hand that we are in favour of maintaining the historical monuments of Canada while we support an amendment designed to eliminate an expenditure for the maintenance of such a monument as the Quebec citadel? That is the whole question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is not the question.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The question is as to the carpets and curtains.

Mr. CANNON: I am coming to that, if my hon. friend will allow me to explain my position. This question has been often asked of my colleague the Minister of Public Works: "How much of that money has been expended in repairing the walls and how much has been expended for the embellishment of the quarters of the governor general?" It is impossible to put the quarters of His Excellency the Governor General in proper shape without repairing the walls, because the quarters are enclosed by those very walls.

Mr. BOURASSA: If the hon. gentleman will allow me, the walls which are tumbling down are five hundred feet from the quarters of the governor general.

Mr. CANNON: Not at all.

Mr. BOURASSA: I saw them last fall.

Mr. CANNON: Not at all.

Mr. BOURASSA: The walls on St. Louis street were tumbling down last year; I called the matter to the attention of the government and I went there again last fall and saw them in the same condition.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend is not discussing the question at all. He talks about walls on St. Louis street, but I am talking about the walls of the citadel where the quarters of the governor general are located. My hon. friend cannot take one section of the walls and leave aside the other section in order to build up his case. I am talking of the walls as a whole.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I would suggest that some of these curtains be hung over the holes in the wall.

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will permit, I will continue to discuss this question seriously. I was trying to show the committee that the walls which have been mentioned and which every member of the committee desires to see maintained and kept in proper condition, are the very walls which enclose the quarters now being repaired. How can it be contended that this expenditure is simply to provide quarters for the governor general when it provides for repairing and maintaining the old walls?

Mr. ARTHURS: No one claims that.

Mr. CANNON: That was claimed by the hon. member for Labelle a few moments ago. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me touch another aspect of this question. Why did the governor general choose to live in Quebec for a certain period during the year, ever since we have had British rule? For the very excellent reason that this country is peopled by two different races, and that Quebec is historically and traditionally the capital of French Canada. It is true we have a federal capital, Ottawa; but so far as the oldest section of Canada is concerned, its capital is Quebec. In recognition of this ethnical fact, in order to promote the very highest object that any man in public life may have, namely the union of the two races in this country, the British governors chose to come to Quebec in order to keep as closely as possible in touch with French Canada. They did that up to 1915 or 1916, when conditions in the citadel were such that it was impossible for the representative of the king any longer to grace with his presence our city of Quebec. This government has decided to revive an old tradition and to allow the representative of our king in Canada to come into the city of Quebec for certain periods during the year. The only way to do that is to restore the old quarters and to allow Their Excellencies to live on the citadel, as has been done by all governors general for a hundred years past.

Coming to the last argument put forward by my hon. friend, they talk of carpets, of laces, and of extravagance. I am astounded at hearing such remarks coming from Tory lips. We are living in a period where appeals to demagogy are very often heard. Social unrest is frequently produced by appeals such as those we have heard in this house with regard to laces, curtains, extravagance. Tonight we talk about laces, curtains and extravagance in very exalted quarters, and my hon. friends opposite are those who are responsible for this appeal. On the other hand they are always eager to rise when any attack along the same line is made against people who sometimes are not as worthy of defence, namely, the capitalists of this country. They are willing to have as high a tariff as possible in order to allow the capitalists to reap as large a profit as they possibly can. That is their policy; that is what they call their national policy. But when we suggest that we revive an old tradition, that we continue a movement to promote union in Canada, their answer is "curtains, laces, extravagance."

Coming from the province of Quebec, I may tell these gentlemen that although we have been accused at times of not representing as high an ideal of British traditions as they do, we are not afraid of expenditures when it comes to giving to the representatives of His Majesty proper accommodation. Our province is a model to every other province in Canada in that regard. Our lieutenant-governor lives at Spencerwood, and our provincial government votes every year over forty thousand dollars, sometimes a hundred thousand, to see to it that the lieutenant-governor of Quebec is enabled to occupy his very high position in a becoming manner. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that this committee will also come to the conclusion that our Canada is big enough, large enough a country, to see to it that proper accommodation is provided for the representative of His Majesty in Canada.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was not the city of Ottawa chosen as the capital of Canada because it was contiguous to the sections occupied by both races?

Mr. CANNON: Yes, to a great extent because it was the centre of the country. But as I stated before, although Ottawa is the federal capital, Quebec will always remain the capital of French Canada.

Mr. POWER: I understand that before I entered the chamber this evening reference was made to certain remarks which I had made in support of the vote last year. According to my information it was said that there had been an atempt on my part to deceive the house by stating that the amounts voted were for the purpose of repairing the ancient walls, in which the older members of this house know I have taken considerable interest for some years. I have taken the trouble to look up the record, and I find that I stated my position in words which are found at page 1114 of Hansard of 1926-27. After referring to the walls and to the sympathetic attention which this house had always given to any request to have them repaired, I stated with reference to this vote:

> With regard to this particular vote, in so far as it will help to build up the walls near where the governor general's quarters are, it has my hearty support and endorsement. In order that the house may know that there is nothing political in this, I may say that the citadel is situated in my constituency, and I never knew until the estimates came down that there was any question of having a vote to repair the governor general's quarters.

That was absolutely true, and I repeat the story told the house last year with respect to that. Then I went on to say:

I have made no representations to the Minister of National Defence or any minister with reference to this matter, but I may say that the repairs had been asked for by His Excellency, Lord Byng, and by other governors general. Moreover it is, I understand, the intention of the government and of Their Excellencies to receive the Prince of Wales at the Quebec citadel next summer when he comes to Canada, and it is only fitting that the quarters should be put into proper repair and made fit to receive the Prince.

Mr. ERNST: That was done.

Mr. POWER: No, it was not. The committee will understand that last year no attempt was made on my part to deceive any member. I stated my position quite frankly and to a large extent that is my position to-day. I am supporting this appropriation because I understand the estimate first provided was not sufficient to carry out the work intended. Whatever may be said with reference thereto by other members, I can assure the committee that the governor general's quarters are part and parcel of the ancient citadel. Those of us who have been to Quebec and have come up the river have seen the citadel frowning over the river St. Lawrence. It is that portion in which the governor general's quarters are situated.

Mr. CHAPLIN: We would rather see it smile.

Mr. POWER: More than likely the hon. member would. If he will come to Quebec I shall not be on the citadel but I shall be on the wharf and I shall meet him with a smile and a long one—quite a few smiles. As I was saying, this was part and parcel of the old citadel. The outer walls are falling on the terrace known as the Lord Grey terrace. It is true, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) says, that the inner walls and the walls of the moats are perhaps in a more dangerous condition, but I think he will also tell the committee that he may have noticed scaffolding on the outer walls where repairs were actually going on last year. I am particularly interested, quite apart from the historic standpoint, in that the portion of my constituency which gives me the largest majority is situated immediately beneath the citadel and if the walls fall down I shall lose a great deal of my majority. I have made repeated representations to the government to see to it that my majority is not wiped out by a landslide, and I am in hopes that within a very short time steps will be taken to ensure that that portion of the cliff and citadel do not fall down. This amount, however, is being expended to a large extent in repairing the walls.

With reference to the interior I understand the reluctance which hon. gentlemen opposite and indeed hon. gentlemen in all parts of the house have to voting money for interior fittings; but as has been explained by the Solicitor General the quarters are part and parcel of the citadel, and I do not think any member would wish us, in repairing the outer walls, to leave the inside an empty shell. If we are to do something with the inside of it, would there be anything better than to continue the tradition of housing the governor general of the country therein? Hon. members will understand that if we are to expend money on the walls, we must also see to it that there is something inside. As has been explained by the Solicitor General, the governors of this country, long before confederation, long before the start of the British regime, since the early days of the colony, have resided in Quebec. The earlier governors resided in the Chateau St. Louis on the site of which the famous Chateau Frontenac has been erected. Later the governors were commanders in chief of the garrison and they were quartered with the troops in the citadel. It is only fair, it is only reasonable, if we intend to maintain the traditions of the past, that we should so maintain them as to make these ancient historic places comfortable to the uses to which they were put in past years. For that reason I think members should without too much difficulty be enabled to make up their minds to vote again for the estimate.

With regard to laces and so forth, I want to be quite frank with the committee. When I supported this vote last year I had no idea that this amount was to be expended for such uses as this. But it has been shown by the minister and by other speakers that if we are to house the governor general, we must house him in a manner befitting his position and dignity. Personally I would not need $70,000 worth of furniture in a house and I do not know any hon. member who would require as much as that. But education and my experience on the few occasions when I have visited vice-regal residence lead me to believe it is the common thing in such places and forms, so to speak, part of the position.

Mr. ARTHURS: Not $70,000 for a year.

Mr. POWER: I quite understand that $70,000 for a year would be a great deal of money. My hon. friend is mistaken. The amount of $70,000 is not per annum. Let us hope with this amount the furniture purchased will be of such a nature that it will last for a considerable number of years. The hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) suggests that it should last for another century. If it does —and I have no doubt that is what is in the mind of the Minister of Public Works—no doubt a hundred years hence those who follow us will be protesting in the same way as hon. members are to-night against an expenditure of such an amount of money as $70,000 for furniture.

I commend the vote to hon. members, first, on the ground that we cannot dissociate from the citadel and from the walls themselves the quarters of the governors within them, and, second, that as we are to house the governor, whether it be in Quebec or in Ottawa, we must see to it that the furnishings and the interior of the building are so arranged that he can receive in a manner befitting his dignity and proper to the governor of a country like ours the distinguished visitors whom he often has to receive.

Mr. HEAPS: A few moments ago I asked the minister if he would give the committee some idea as to the annual upkeep of the governor general's quarters in the citadel of Quebec, what the amount of $100,000 voted last year was spent on in connection with making the place habitable for the governor general, and also what the present item of $150,000 is for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to the probable cost of upkeep in the future, it is quite impossible to give an accurate estimate. One can judge only from what has happened in the past. Up to 1871 the imperial government had maintained this structure, but the Canadian government took it over in that year. From 1871 up to about fifteen years ago we spent money upon it from time to time, but about then the expenditures practically ceased From December 2, 1871, up until twelve years ago we had expended $269,929.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That was up until twelve years ago?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is nearly fifteen years now. There has been no expenditure since the outbreak of the war. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has stated that the cost of this whole structure was in the vicinity of $40,000,000. That is the best estimate we can obtain. It is impossible to consider the governor general's quarters apart from the citadel itself. A point that I think is being lost sight of by my hon. friends is that this is not an innovation by any means; it is not a new form of expenditure. Until circumstances during the war made it impossible to continue the expenditures, these expenditures were always made, and of course now we have to make good the great depreciation that took place during the years in which the building was allowed practically to fall into decay. That is the position with which we are now confronted. I just want to say, as one coming from a province other than that in which this expenditure is to be made, that surely we are not in the present condition of affairs going to take a backward step in so far as providing accommodation of this kind in our neighbouring province is concerned.

I want for a moment to direct the attention of the committee to the position in which we would find ourselves if the motion moved by my hon. friend were to carry. The money that we have expended has been spent on building and structural repairs. An additional amount is required. I think my hon. friends will agree that it was made perfectly clear by me last year that the amount then voted was only an estimate, because it was impossible to tell at that time what the condition of the building was. As they took up the floors and certain repairs were made, it was found that in many cases the condition was even worse than had been expected, and that, of course, necessitated larger expenditures. The amount that is now required is what we are asking for here. The principle of maintaining a residence for the governor general at the city of Quebec was settled last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, that priciple was accepted practically unanimously by the house last year.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was. There was no vote on it, and the discussion which took place was all along that line.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The vote last year was just for repairs.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite wrong. It was for remodelling, renovating and rebuilding, and to provide for a permanent addition for servants' quarters. Will any hon. gentleman say that after the expenditure of $100,000 we should stop short of making the necessary repairs to bring this building into a habitable condition, and into such a state of perfection as will make it a suitable residence for the representative of the sovereign in this country? Once the repairs are made, will anyone say that the motion of my hon. friend that we do not furnish these quarters, after we have built the house, is a reasonable proposition?

Mr. SPENCE: What furnishings are there now?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are the old furnishings, a number of which have practically fallen apart and are of practically no use. It means renewal of the furniture. The motion before the house means that we can go on and complete the building, but not furnish it after it is built, and I would urge upon the committee that we do not place ourselves in any such position as that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How long is it since the governor general stayed there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think 1915 was the last year he resided there.

Mr. HANSON: How many weeks in the year did the governor general reside there when he did go there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It varied.

Mr. HANSON: About two weeks in the year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not a great portion of the year; that is quite right.

Mr. HANSON: Two weeks per annum—$70,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to give the house all the information we have. I have given this matter very careful consideration. I hope that I am as economically inclined as any member of this committee, and with perhaps a little more intimate knowledge of the circumstances than any other member of the committee, I have come to the conclusion that this is the only thing we can do if we are to maintain the position which I am sure all hon. members are anxious that we should maintain for the representative of the sovereign in this country. I submit to my hon. friend that it is not desirable to build a house and then leave it absolutely unfurnished, and I urge upon him not to press his motion.

[Mr. W. R. Fansher.]

Mr. SPENCE: The minister said that if this money was spent it would bring the citadel to a state of perfection. Will he give the committee the assurance that he will not come back next year and ask for another $150,000? Have you seen the citadel yourself? Do you know what you are talking about? Hon. members come here and tell this committee what other people have told them. They know nothing of the situation themselves, and they try to fool the committee. That is all they are trying to do. Let the minister give this committee the assurance—we have confidence in him—that he will not come back again next year for another vote for this purpose. If he will give us a positive statement of that kind he will get some support, but you cannot get any the way you are going. We are not opposed to this vote at all because it is for Quebec. We are all proud of the city of Quebec, and we would be glad to vote money for the citadel if we knew that it would be spent in the right way, but we do not know anything about it. There is nothing but deception everywhere.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) a moment ago asked what was the last time the governor general's quarters at Quebec had been occupied by the representative of the crown in this country. The answer already given is I believe, correct: it was in 1915 during the regime of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught. That was I understand the last occasion on which the governor general made Quebec his headquarters for any considerable part of the year. Prior to that time it had been the custom, running back many years beyond the days of confederation, for the representative of the crown to spend part of his time at what we, of this Dominion, speak of at times as the ancient capital. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught discontinued the customary visits to Quebec because of the war and the conditions arising therefrom throughout the country.

When His Excellency Lord Byng came to Canada he wished as the representative of the crown, to resume the practice of visiting Quebec during part of the year and residing at the citadel. I recall very well the conversation I had with His Excellency in regard to his visit there. Lord Byng said to me at the time that he much regretted having to give up the custom that all his predecessors had followed, for the reason that the quarters of the governor general at the citadel had fallen into such disrepair during the time of the war and the years succeeding that they were no longer habitable. He made special reference to the difficulty of finding suitable quarters for the servants. He remarked that if he were to visit Quebec as his predecessors had done it would be necessary to have the governor generals quarters at the citadel considerably refitted, new quarters built for the servants, and the house in part refurnished. His Excellency said he thought that as the country had just come out of the war, and there were many obligations with respect to re-establishing our returned men, and the like, it would not do for him to urge on the government to make those expenditures at that time. But he expressed the hope that postponement would not in any way militate against the old custom being continued in the future of having the king's representative spend part of the year in Quebec. Owing to the representations made in that particular the government did not ask the house at that time for the necessary moneys to put the citadel in proper repair. At the same time the members for Quebec were repeatedly directing the attention, not only of the government, but of this house, to the extent to which the historic walls of the citadel were being allowed to fall into disrepair and the degree to which the citadel as an historic monument was being more and more impaired.

Shortly after His Excellency Lord Willingdon reached Canada he said to me, speaking as the representative of the king, that it was his hope and his desire that he might be able as speedily as possible to take up quarters again at Quebec during the summer and also during the winter. I explained to His Excellency that this would involve considerable expenditure—

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I think there is a well-defined practice not to bring the representative of the crown into discussions of this kind. The rule is very clear that the Prime Minister of all men should not mention what was said to him by the representative of the crown. He will recall what happened to Mr. Lowe, afterwards Lord Sherbrooke, and the view taken by Mr. Gladstone as to the absolute and wholly erroneous practice from the standpoint of order of introducing the name of the sovereign into any discussion at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have considered, Mr. Chairman, this phase quite as carefully as my hon. friend has. There is a great difference between bringing the name of His Majesty into controversy in the House of Commons and the making known the wish of His Majesty, or His Majesty's representative, with respect to what pertains to his own immediate household.

Mr. BENNETT: No. The Prime Minister will recall the difficulty Mr. Lowe got into was through bringing into debate the name of the sovereign, charging that Mr. Disraeli did a certain thing at the instance of Her Majesty. Mr. Disraeli went to the queen and got her permission before he even introduced her name into debate. Now the Prime Minister is telling of conversations which he had with His Excellency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not saying that the government is doing this at the request of the Governor General. I am pointing out to the house exactly the position in which with respect to Quebec the crown's representative in this country has been placed, and I am giving to the house the authortative source of my information in that particular.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as the opposition is concerned, I protest in the name of the House of Commons against dragging the name of the sovereign's representative into debate, in view of what took place at the imperial conference as to the position of the governor general, who acts only on the advice of his ministers, and can effect no matter touching the Canadian people unless he is so advised by the government of the day. I protest it is wrong not only from the standpoint of the constitution but from the standpoint of the Canadian people.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I am not dragging the name of His Majesty's representative into this discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You are.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen opposite apparently feel that the government is not to be allowed even to mention the name of the residence of the governor general or His Majesty's representative, because it involves mentioning his name.

Mr. STEVENS: Nobody suggested that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I again say to the house that the government takes full responsibility for what it is asking the house at the present time to do with respect to making the citadel suitable quarters during part of the year for the representative of the king in Canada. His Majesty's representative has expressed a wish to reside there part of the year. I submit there is nothing unconstitutional in allowing the house to know what the representative of the crown has expressed a wish to do. If in the discharge of his responsible duties as the representative of the crown no latitude is to be given to His Excellency to make known his wishes through his responsible ministers, I fail to see how the house in a matter of this kind can get the information which is so essential to enable it to vote.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the Prime Minister think then that it would be permissible and proper for us to criticize the language or expressed wish of His Excellency in criticizing this item?

An hon. MEMBER: That is what you have been doing.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No; and we would have been called to order if we had attempted to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend may criticize anything I have said if he wishes, and I will take full responsiblity for all that I have said. In that way we will avoid the possible conflict which my hon. friend has in mind. What I wish to make perfectly clear to the house with respect to this vote is that not only does the government take responsibility for seeking to arrange to have suitable headquarters for the king's representative in this country at Quebec, but that in so doing it is furthering what I have already said is the desire of the sovereign's representative himself with respect to his relation to the people of this country. As I have intimated, to all intents and purposes the quarters of the governor general at Quebec have not been officially occupied since 1915. Every hon. member knows that when a house is left unoccupied for the most part over a period of ten or fifteen years, particularly when it has been years before since it was in a fit and proper condition, you cannot make it habitable, and particularly you cannot make it suitable for the residence of the representative of the crown without some expenditure on furnishings and equipment, to say nothing of extensive repairs. Hon. members know that the cost of material, the cost of labour, the cost of furniture, the cost of furnishings have all increased enormously in the last few years, and any figures that may be quoted with respect to these expenditures, in comparison with earlier years, are very far from representing the true position.

The government have gone carefully into the probable expenditures with the chief architect of the Public Works department, and we have intimated that we desire that nothing of an extravagant character be done. More than that, we have indicated that we wish everything to be done as economically as it can possibly be done, having regard to what in the circumstances is fitting and adequate. I believe that if hon. gentlemen will take that fact into consideration, and also the fact that the citadel at Quebec is after all not only the greatest historical monument on this continent, but, as I believe, an historical monument of greater significance to the British Empire as a whole than any monument existing anywhere else in the world, they will feel that what we are asking for at the present time is wholly right and proper and should be voted without a division in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not propose to discuss the merits of this item in view of what has been said by the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman has stated in his place in parliament, as the first minister of the country and as being in control of this chamber, that he now expresses the wish of His Excellency—those are the words he used in one instance—and his desire, to quote his other expression. In other words, in introducing His Excellency's name into a controversial matter—and it is now a matter of controversy, an amendment having been moved before the Prime Minister delivered his speech—the right hon. gentleman is endeavouring to influence the mind of the committee by stating that it is the wish or the desire of His Excellency that this should be done. We on this side of the house will therefore place ourselves against the wish of His Excellency, against the desire of His Excellency; and we protest against the Prime Minister introducing His Excellency's name and endeavouring to influence us in the discharge of our public duties by a speech such as that to which we have just listened.

Mr. EVANS: The time has come when this country and this parliament must decide whether we want to preserve these old national heirlooms or not. Throughout the British Isles numbers of old castles are falling into ruin and no attempt is being made to preserve them in a modern way. It seems to me that if this great heirloom in Quebec is modernized it ceases there and then to be a link with the past. I view this vote as an act of extravagance on the part of the government, and I must say I cannot support it. We have been told of the great prosperity in this country; that fact has been impressed upon us ever since we have come to Ottawa this session. It seems to me that we have simply run mad in our expenditures this year. For the concentration of wealth and industry and acts of extravagance I do not think there has been any parliament since confederation that has indulged itself as this one has done. A vote of $10,000,000 for one city in one year is rather too much. The other day we were called upon to support a vote to beautify this city in the interests of national culture. I hesitated to get up to oppose this vote, being afraid that I might be deemed to show a want of culture. Let me say that to me culture does not consist in lavish extravagance. I can remember out west not so many years ago when some of the churches were built of sod, and in one particular case the old superintendent, who was one of the greatest of the nation builders of Canada, insisted on a Gothic window even in that church, because he said it made it look like a church. And the settlers were only too glad to have it so. There was more evidence of culture there than there is in any lavish expenditure of this kind for beautifying a city on so large a scale. If it is to cost so many millions to maintain this old heirloom at Quebec, I think we had better let it go right here and now. I think I can see the end pretty well, placing burdens as we are on the taxpayers of this country. I can see the exit of the old settler from western Canada, the settler who wants to live and not merely to exist. He will have to say goodbye to his home, which will be taken over by the sheepskin coated peasant of central Europe, whom we are so frantically seeking now to take the place of the farmer in the west. I say again I am opposed to this vote. I do not see that we have suffered at all in prestige either in the British Empire or anywhere else through any lack of a residence at this old place during the last twelve years. Ottawa is our capital now, and I think that is quite enough to maintain as it is. I am strenuously opposed to this vote.

Mr. MANION: In view of the debate that took place a moment ago regarding the use of the governor general's name, I desire to put on record what May has to say, at page 320 of the thirteenth edition:

> The irregular use of the king's name to influence a decision of the house is unconstitutional in principle and inconsistent with the independence of parliament. Where the crown has a distinct interest in a measure, there is an authorized mode of communicating His Majesty's recommendation or consent, through one of his ministers (see page 598): but His Majesty cannot be supposed to have a private opinion, apart from that of his responsible advisers; and any attempt to use his name in debate to influence the judgment of parliament, would be immediately checked and censured. On the 12th November, 1640, it was moved that some course might be taken for preventing the inconvenience of His Majesty being informed of anything that is in agitation in the house before it is determined; and on the 16th December, 1641, the Lords and Commons tendered to Charles I a remonstrance to that effect. On the 17th December, 1783, the Commons resolved—
> "That it is now necessary to declare, that to report any opinion or pretended opinion of His Majesty, upon any bill or other proceeding depending in either house of parliament, with a view to influence the votes of the members, is a high crime and misdemeanour, derogatory to the honour of the crown, a breach of the fundamental privileges of parliament, and subversive of the constitution of this country."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps the committee will permit me to continue where my hon. friend left off. Following exactly from where my hon. friend quoted, May has the following to say:

> On the 26th February, 1808, in the debate on Mr. Canning's motion for papers relating to Denmark, Mr. Tierney said, "The right hon. gentleman had forfeited the good opinion of the country, the house, and, as I believe, of his sovereign". This the Speaker held to be such an introduction into debate of the personal opinion of the sovereign, respecting the conduct of a member of the house, as justified Mr. Tierney's being called to order. On the 19th March, 1812, complaints were made in the House of Lords of the use of the Prince Regent's name in debate.

Then May continues:

> The rule, however, must not be construed so as to exclude a statement of facts by a minister in which the sovereign's name may be concerned.

I contend that the statement I made to the house was a statement of fact to the effect that the representative of the crown desired to reside in Quebec part of the year in accordance with the custom of his predecessors. That is the reference and the extent to which in this connection I brought in the name of the representative of the crown. From that point on, with respect to this vote, I made no reference whatever to His Excellency; I only spoke of what the government is seeking to do, that is, to make the quarters at Quebec suitable for the representative of His Majesty. If hon. gentlemen consider the rules as laid down in May they will find that I was wholly within the rules in making the statement of fact which I did make in this connection.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to carry the controversy further; the remarks of my right hon. friend and myself will speak for themselves. So long as the Prime Minister simply gave it as the opinion of the government that these repairs should be made for the proper convenience of His Excellency I think he was absolutely on solid ground, but the moment he began quoting a conversation between His Excellency and himself he was quoting the opinions of the representative of the sovereign to influence a vote of this house.

Mr. KAISER: Why was the conversation delayed so long?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GARDINER: I have always held a very high regard for the Prime Minister's knowledge of constitutional procedure, but I would remind him of some things which happened in 1926. He will remember that memorable occasion when he resigned his position because the governor general of the day did not accept his advice, and following that resignation this country got into more or less of a squabble over the question of constitutional procedure. On many occasions the Prime Minister stated that it was the duty of the government to advise the representative of the king, but to-night it has been contended that the Prime Minister has been advised by the representative of the king.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Mr. GARDINER: Under these circumstances I submit that it is very improper for the Prime Minister to use a conversation which took place between His Excellency and himself for the purpose of influencing this vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that he has drawn an entirely erroneous impression from my remarks, as I think he will see when he reads them over carefully. There is a very great difference between the representative of the crown expressing a wish which he regards as important in relation to his own office as the representative of the sovereign in this country and that wish being communicated as a statement of fact to the house, and whether or not, for the purpose of making certain quarters suitable for the governor general to occupy, a particular vote shall be passed by this house. With respect to the latter, the government take the whole responsibility; His Excellency never advised that quarters should be provided at Quebec but merely expressed the wish that during part of the year he might reside there. The government have to take the responsibility as to whether or not it is desirable that that wish shall be complied with, and what provision may accordingly be necessary. Quite apart from any wish having been expressed, even if such had not been the case, I would have felt it desirable that these quarters should be provided as formerly and that the ancient custom should be continued.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The interesting feature of this item which we are discussing and of the debate which has taken place is that hon. gentlemen opposite stand revealed as the upholders of tradition and precedent, and the Prime Minister's words to-night are in striking contrast to the speeches he makes throughout the country, particularly in western Canada. This is a new country; we have very heavy liabilities, and it seems absurd that we should spend about $250,000 for the purpose of providing a seasonal residence for His Excellency. Let me just compare this amount with some other votes which are found in the estimates. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 60 they will find the following:

Grant to the Canadian Council on Child Welfare, $5,000.
Grant to the Canadian Dental Hygiene Council, $5,000.
Grant to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, $10,000.
Grant to the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, $25,000.

I am sure that when the people who are spending a great deal of effort and time in these different organizations, doing a great deal in the public interest, compare this item with the meagre sums they receive by way of assistance in their work, they will not look upon this vote with any great favour. I am sure the house was not very much impressed by the camouflage, if I may call it such, of the Solicitor General when he attempted to bring in the racial issue in connection with this vote.

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order. If the statement that I made use of camouflage had been made by any other hon. gentleman than the hon. member for Mackenzie I would insist upon my point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was just going to say, when I was interrupted, that I had too high an opinion of the good sense of the French-speaking people of Canada to believe that they would take an attack on this vote as an affront to their race. I have many French people in my own constituency, and I believe if they were here to-night each one would vote as I propose to vote in connection with this particular item. In connection with this matter I would take the opinion of the hon. member for Labelle as readily as I would take that of the Solicitor General as representing the opinion of the people of French Canada. The words of the Solicitor General remind me of an expression used by the late President Wilson, which was something like this:

—the devious use of words by which a horse chestnut is made to appear as a chestnut horse.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat astonished to note the hostile attitude of my friends sitting on the opposite side of the house over this item of $150,000, of which $70,000 is for a suitable residence for His Excellency the Governor General. I am the more so astonished because, this afternoon their leader (Mr. Bennett), made it sufficiently clear to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott), that the postmaster at Calgary was not suitably lodged and that the sum of $1,000,000 would have to be spent to give him comfortable quarters. We, from Quebec, resent this hostile attitude taken at present by the opposition and which might result —what we would sincerely regret—in depriving us each year of the traditional visit of His Excellency the Governor General. Nevertheless, the discussion we have had to-night clearly indicates that the British flag which floats over the Quebec citadel encloses in its folds as much patriotism as that of the flag which floats over Toronto or Calgary.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister a question in regard to furnishing these quarters. Can he tell us how many rooms are to be furnished with this $70,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It includes furnishing, carpeting and curtaining practically the whole of the premises.

Mr. COOTE: I understand the minister does not know how many rooms?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I cannot give that.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Chaplin) negatived: yeas, 64; nays, 75.

Item agreed to.

Quebec — Savard Park hospital — repairs, alterations and additions, $75,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give us an explanation of this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount of $75,000 is required for the repairs of Savard Park hospital and additions to the building. The proposed work consists of repairs, alterations, improvements and so on in the existing building, amounting to $7,000; and the construction of an additional hospital unit, $68,000.

Mr. FRASER: Who controls this hospital?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Department of Health. They have requested the extra unit.

Mr. FRASER: What is the hospital for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is used in connection with immigration work.

Mr. SPENCER: Does this amount cover all the necessary expenses, or will this only partly do the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This covers everything.

Item agreed to.

St. Jacques L'Achigan public building, $9,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the population of this place, and what is the revenue?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population in 1921 was 1,714, and the postal revenue, $2,107.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There was a vote last year of $21,000. Has that money all been spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And $9,000 is estimated to complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is to say, in a town or village of 1,700 people a public building is put up at a cost of $30,000, the revenue, as given by the minister, being less than $2,000 a year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, a little over $2,100.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What does the minister himself think of this expenditure? What does he think of the policy of spending that much money in a place of that size?

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin), I must say that over and above the annual revenue that the Post Office Department receives from the Saint-Jacques l'Archi-gan post office and which amounts to about $2,000, the excise branch collects from this municipality many thousands of dollars yearly. I wish to further add that in this public building to be used as a post office, some space also will be occupied by the Customs and Excise department.

I may say that the revenue from this building for the government of Canada should be about $10,000 or $12,000 a year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I did not ask the hon. gentleman what the revenue was, although he appears to know more about it than the minister. I should like to get a reply from the minister.

Mr. SEGUIN: There is an excise office in this same building; the revenue from the post office only has been given. The total revenue would come from both excise and post office.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In view of the report that was made by the customs commission regarding the desirability of doing away with customs houses in a great many outlying places, what does the minister say about this expenditure?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is excise. It is in a tobacco district.

Mr. SEGUIN: This place produced more tobacco than the whole of the rest of the province of Quebec.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If the revenue is only $12,000 and they produce more tobacco than all the rest of the province of Quebec, I ask the minister whether it is necessary to have a building of this extent and cost in a village of that kind?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In the opinion of the minister it is necessary or it would not be in the estimates. The item is not new. It was inserted in the estimates for 1914-15 and carried until 1917-18, when it was dropped on account of war conditions. Under both governments apparently it was thought to be necessary or it would not have been placed in the estimates.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are hundreds of just such cases throughout the country.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not where conditions are as they are in this case. The site was purchased years ago, the government committed to the work, and it was considered advisable and necessary to make the expenditure.

[Mr. Seguin.]

Mr. LUCAS: What are the conditions peculiar to this place, apart from the population and the revenue that have been given, that make a public building of this character necessary?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no other accommodation available that is suitable for the needs of the public. That is the main consideration, and apparently governments of both political complexions have for years thought it desirable to erect a building there. We could not get properly housed in anything that was available and we felt we should erect a building of our own.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This building is evidently not being erected for post office purposes, because it is inconceivable that the government would spend money to put up a post office in a place where the post office revenue is only $2,100, while there are throughout the country hundreds of places where the revenue is three, five and ten times that amount and there is no accommodation at all. Therefore we must consider that it is being erected on account of the excise collected on tobacco grown in that particular district. It seems to me that if we take the revenue into consideration the estimate is greater than is warranted. I believe millions upon millions of dollars of the money of Canada have been wrongfully expended on public buildings of this kind; scores and hundreds of buildings have been erected in this or that constituency at a cost of two, three, four, or five times the amount really required to meet the needs of the people concerned. Why? Because an individual has had sufficient pull with the government. For years the question has been not of what is required but of to what extent the political favourites of the government can pull the leg of the minister and for how much money. In many cases throughout Canada, therefore, we have post office buildings erected at a cost of $50,000 or $100,000 where one costing half that amount would amply fulfil the needs of the district. Since I have been in parliament there has not been any system based on population and revenue to guide governments in the erection of public buildings; consequently in many places buildings have been erected at entirely too high a cost, while in others the people have received no consideration whatever and cannot secure the much needed accommodation. The minister says that the site for this building was purchased years ago. There are many hon. members who can tell him a similar story and who can point to sites that were bought before the war. Nevertheless through all these years we have had to put up with very inadequate accommodation, and we have always been met with the cry, not that the building was not needed, not that better accommodation was not urgently required, but that the money was not available. I want once more to impress upon the minister and the government that they will have to get some other kind of argument or excuse than that to present to the committee, in view of the fact that they apparently have plenty of money to spend on embassies at Washington, Tokyo and Paris, and millions to devote to tearing down whole city blocks in Ottawa—certainly not a matter of urgent necessity,—while in various parts of the country the people are struggling along without any accommodation worthy of the name. The government is following a wrong course. Regardless of what side of politics we are on or what party we are affiliated with, hon. members have been extremely patient, appreciating to the full the obligations upon the government arising out of the war and the post-war years. But it seems to me that the government is not giving the members or their constituencies the consideration they deserve in spending money lavishly on such things as the purchase of the Russell block for about a million and a quarter dollars and the tearing down of perfectly good buildings merely in order to gratify the personal whim of the Prime Minister, who wants to erect a monument to his name in the shape of a public park in this city.

Item agreed to.

Waterloo public building, $22,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain the item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for the erection of a public building in Waterloo for postal purposes. The probable total cost will be $22,000. An order in council was passed in September last granting authority to purchase a site and the town council, the local board of trade and other organizations urged upon the government the necessity of proceeding to provide the accommodation. The postal revenue is $6,356, and the population is a little over 2,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How much has already been spent on this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $7,804 to the 31st of March of this year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And $22,000 more will complete it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The original estimate for the building was how much?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the estimate. We are just starting the building now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: But more than $7,000 have been spent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was for the site.

Mr. GARDINER: Will that come out of this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was spent out of last year's vote, before the end of the fiscal year.

Item agreed to.

Westmount—armoury, $13,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required to pay the Westmount armoury association the instalments due for the year 1928-29 for armoury accommodation at Westmount. There are two instalments of $6,312.15 due on June 8 and December 8, 1928, respectively, under an agreement dated May 25, 1925, between the Westmount armoury association and the Department of Public Works, whereby the association undertook the financing of the construction of an armoury, and the Dominion government undertook to pay an amount not exceeding $13,000 for twenty years.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the original cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $175,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the government entering upon a policy of renting buildings for armouries? Has not the policy been to provide armouries out of public funds?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the usual policy to build them ourselves, but occasionally there is an opportunity like this of obtaining the building more cheaply.

Mr. GARDINER: Will these amounts pay for the building, or are they only rentals?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The armoury will become the property of the government after twenty payments. It is like a rental-purchase.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that the whole of vote 126 is not carried. One item stands.

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): Yes, one item stands.

Ontario — Dominion public buildings — improvements, repairs, etc., $115,000.

Mr. MANION: I wish to refer to an unfortunate situation that exists in one of the public buildings at Fort William. I have had it drawn to my attention on a number of occasions by the people of Fort William and by those who are affected by the conditions which have prevailed. It is seventeen years since any improvement or enlargement was made to the post office, and yet the business has increased very greatly since that time. The revenue from the post office, according to the last report, is between $72,000 and $73,000 per annum. As to the ability of the officials in the post office to carry on under the conditions prevailing, while I do not wish to quote them unnecessarily or to bring them into the discussion in any way that would do them harm, I have gone out of my way to ask their opinion and they are agreed that the post office really requires some form of enlargement in order to cope with the business that has to be done. Since 1911, when, so far as I can find out, the last improvement was made, the population has greatly increased, the mails have doubled, c.o.d. and parcel post have been added, I believe, and there is required additional accommodation for parcel post packages, extra wickets, and more lobby space, because at Christmas it is practically impossible to cope with the heavy business owing to the crowding. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee further. I understand that the minister is familiar with the situation; it has been taken up with him by the board of trade, I believe, or the city council, and I am bringing it to his attention now simply for the sake of the service. Indeed, that is the only ground upon which I would dare to press any expenditure of any kind. But due to the long time since any enlargement has been made to the post office at Fort William, and to the very real need of additional accommodation due on account of the overcrowding which the people using the post office have to endure, I would ask the minister to give this matter his attention at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Representations have been made in the matter; my attention was personally drawn to it when I was in Fort William last fall, and it was suggested that further accommodation be provided. The matter is now under consideration, I can assure my hon. friend.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is this just a vote to cover contingencies? If so, would the minister give details of the expenditure last year?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: This has been an annual vote for a number of years. The expenditure in 1922-23 was $109,000; 1923-24, $102,000; 1924-25, $97,000; 1925-26, $103,000; 1926-27, $114,993.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What buildings does it cover?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have a long list here, which includes examining warehouses, the office of the assistant receiver general, various postal stations in Toronto—

Mr. McQUARRIE: I do not want the whole list.

Mr. KAISER: This is a general vote, but has the minister in mind any particular places where he is going to expend this money? If so, I should like to draw to his attention the condition in the post office in the city of Oshawa. In the first place, let me say that the customs house accommodation in the city of Oshawa is entirely inadequate to serve the needs of the people. A customs revenue of $12,000,000 is collected annually in Oshawa, and the government has not provided its officials with proper accommodation for carrying on their work. The same is true of the post office. I have no doubt that the postmaster who has recently been appointed is endeavouring to do his best, but under the conditions that obtain there it is impossible for the best service to be given, and there are bound to be difficulties all over the district where mails are distributed. I would respectfully urge upon the minister the necessity of affording relief and providing the necessary accommodation and equipment there to serve that large district.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am aware that the conditions in Oshawa are much as my hon. friend indicates. Business there has increased very greatly, and I shall be glad to give consideration to the matter that he mentions. I might add that this amount is not allotted to any particular place, but is used where repairs for buildings are found necessary. There has been spent in Ontario annually for the last number of years a sum running from $112,000 to $115,000 to keep the government buildings in a state of reasonable repair.

Mr. KAISER: Will the minister look into the claim which the city of Oshawa has against the department for arrears of local improvement tax, amounting to $87.35? I see no reason why he should not attend to this gigantic matter and get it off our hands.

Item agreed to.

Durham—public building, $4,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to complete a public building. It includes fittings and lock boxes, $2,300; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; superintendence and contingencies, $700.

Mr. LUCAS: What are the population and revenue of this town?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population is 1,640; the revenue, $5,684.

Mr. LUCAS: Is this recommended by the Post Office department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. This is an excerpt from the report of the chief post office superintendent made in 1920: Population 1,640; four industrial concerns employing about 300 hands; two banks; sixteen stores. The post office is located in a building, one of a block of stores. The floor space is 650 square feet, of which the public lobby comprises 350 square feet, leaving a working space of only 300 square feet. The carriers working in the office are not separated from the rest of the staff. It is recommended that more space be provided.

Item agreed to.

London—tractor for postal purposes, $1,350.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that the usual price for a tractor?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Niagara Falls—public building, $100,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The existing building was partly destroyed by fire on November 9, 1927. A larger building is necesary to provide accommodation for the post office and customs. The present property is not large enough to give the desired accommodation, and it may be necessary to purchase a new site and erect a new building. In either case $100,000 is necessary for a beginning. There is nothing political in the vote.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa departmental buildings—fittings, etc., $60,000.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister will remember that I put a question on the order paper about three weeks ago with respect to the lighting of this and the other public buildings in Ottawa. I find that for the year 1927-28 the government paid to the privately-owned corporation for electrical energy $86,524.31, and to the publicly-owned utility $38,964.86. In other words, considerably more than twice the amount was paid to the privately-owned corporation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What was the quantity of current used?

Mr. HEAPS: I am going to ask the minister for that information. I think when there is a publicly-owned utility able to supply light and power for the buildings the government ought to give it the preference, particularly in Ontario. I do not know whether the minister has information as to the amount of energy supplied to the government buildings by both the privately-owned and the publicly-owned utility, and the price paid to each. If he has not that information available to-night, I hope he will be able to bring it down when we take up a vote of a similar character on another occasion.

Mr. ELLIOTT: An answer to a similar question was given a few days ago. The hon. member has the figures of what has been paid to the two companies. One is a local company; the other provincial. One pays taxes to the city; the other does not. One has a stand-by power plant which can be used in cases of emergency; the other has not. I am not able to give my hon. friend information as to the amount of current, but I shall be glad to obtain it for him. The prices paid to each company are the same.

Mr. HEAPS: Why should not the government patronize a publicly-owned utility?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We patronize it to a certain extent.

Mr. HEAPS: But why to such a small extent compared to the privately-owned company? That the latter pays taxes is not a very good reason for this discrimination, especially in view of the fact that the government itself does not pay any taxes to the city of Ottawa.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The local concern does not get all the business, but we thought it was entitled to its share. I do not think it would be fair to give everything to the provincial concern that has the local business in the heart of the city, when the local concern is supplying light on the outskirts where the service is a little more costly on account of distance. After careful consideration of all the circumstances it was thought to be a fair division between the two concerns.

Mr. GEARY: The hydro is a local concern.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It does not pay taxes here.

An hon. MEMBER: It is municipally owned.

Mr. ADSHEAD: This is one of the votes where the Public Works department probably has erred in the wrong direction. Last year

I drew the minister's attention to the condition of the building occupied by the Bureau of Statistics. I was there to-day, and I found it in a most deplorable condition. If a fire occurred many priceless documents would be destroyed. I hope he will do something to protect those documents instead of leaving them in this ramshackle place, which is nothing better than a fire trap and a discredit to Ottawa or any other place.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What my hon. friend says is true; the predicament we should be in if a fire unfortunately occurred in the building now housing the statistical branch has been a matter of serious concern for some time. Steps are being rapidly taken with a view to having at an early date the branch located in a building which will provide suitable accommodation and will be at the same time absolutely fireproof.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How long will that be?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are hoping that it will be within sixty days.

Mr. MALONEY: Where is the new location?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no hesitation in stating where it will be, if an appropriation which I am going to ask the house to pass in the supplementary estimates is made for the purchase of a property known as the New Edinburgh mills. One of the buildings on that property will house the statistical branch.

Mr. MALONEY: I understand it is a saw mill.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the city just on the other side of Earnscliffe, if my hon. friend knows where that is.

Mr. STEVENS: At the mouth of the Rideau river.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Immediately east of Dalhousie street.

Mr. COOTE: Would it not be nearly two miles from the parliament buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. COOTE: At any rate it is a long way for members to go for information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is it not a fact that the government own property in the neighbourhood of the building in which the statistical branch is now located?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why on earth move them a mile and a half away, or even half a mile? It will be inconvenient for those who have to use the branch.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The building on the other property we can use right away.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Is it proposed to use that building temporarily or permanently?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We shall fix it up with a view to utilizing it probably for many years.

Mr. STEVENS: It will cost a lot of money to repair it and put it into proper shape.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will cost about one year's rental; that is the estimate.

Mr. GARDINER: Have you not better accommodation in the Daly building if you cleaned up the mess that is there? Could you not put the bureau there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is filled to overflowing now.

Mr. MALONEY: Do you propose to house these people in that old saw mill?

Mr. STEVENS: That is it—the New Edinburgh saw mill.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They call it new, but it is a little old.

Mr. COOTE: Is it proposed to erect a departmental building in Ottawa this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Does that come under some other item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, on page 30.

Mr. COOTE: Is it to be erected where the cornerstone stands at the present time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister do something to improve the ventilation in this chamber? The air in the chamber is very bad to-night, and it is the same practically every night. Coming in from the fresh air which one gets at the front door one at once realizes how far this chamber is from perfection. The atmosphere is certainly not what it should be, and the ventilation could unquestionably be improved. Will the minister have his engineers look into the matter, giving them definite instructions to improve the ventilation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The matter is by no means new. Within the last week I have taken it up with some of the engineers. When the building was erected they thought they had the most modern system of ventilation obtainable, and perhaps they have. But I am told that in a building occupied, as this chamber is, during a great part of the day, it is almost impossible to devise a system which will properly ventilate the place and at the same time avoid draughts. On this side of the chamber at certain times in the day we can feel a draught at our backs when the ventilators are open. I have recently asked the engineers to investigate the matter to see whether something cannot be done.

Mr. GEARY: I suppose you would like to turn the draught over here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That might have some advantages. Really, after all is said and done the system is perhaps about as good as we can get it.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not good enough.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am bound to say it is not absolutely satisfactory.

Mr. COOTE: I can assure the minister there is something wrong with the system in the building as a whole. I know that in some of the lavatories upstairs more than half the time the air, instead of being drawn from the lavatory through the ventilator, comes through the ventilator into the lavatory. There is obviously something wrong with a system when it works backwards in that way. The sergeant-at-arms is acquainted with the situation and on many occasions he has sent someone to correct it. I do not know how it is done. It will work all right for a day or a day and a half, but the next time you go back you find the current of air reversed in the manner I have indicated.

Mr. STIRLING: It would not be so unbearable of an evening here if the air were not heated so much. Is the minister aware that this evening, for the third time this week, the thermometer has been 74½? The difference between 64 and 74 seems to make all the difference between reasonable comfort and absolute misery.

Mr. MALONEY: In addition to the vitiated state of the atmosphere there is another—a worse—feature. I refer to the acoustic properties of the chamber. Here is a room which has cost the country many thousands of dollars and I doubt whether there is in Canada another room of its size where a voice carries a shorter distance than it does in this chamber.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. MALONEY: The day has come when our voice should be heard. The day has come also when we must provide accommodation for a library of parliament. At the present time we have a building allocated for this purpose, a building which has been filling rapidly and is now taxed almost to capacity. I offer this suggestion to the minister for his consideration: convert this chamber into a real library and convert the present library into a chamber, after the style of the old amphitheatre, where the boys will have to stand up on a pedestal before the crowd and say what they know. That would give us a chance to make our voices heard.

Mr. KENNEDY: I do not want to see the Bureau of Statistics removed from a position a few hundred yards distant to a place a few miles away from the House of Commons without making a protest. I know of no department that means more to us than the Bureau of Statistics. We are always dealing with figures and facts from which we make our own deductions and it is quite important that we should be able to keep in touch with the bureau. It is true that we shall be able to do so by telephone or by letter, but some of us find it much more convenient to discuss matters personally with someone who is conversant with the facts, and to get our information at firsthand in that way. If the bureau is moved out two miles, which I think is about the distance, it will be almost impossible for members to take the time to go there to discuss matters with the officials who have the desired facts. I do not see why it would not be possible to rush the construction of this departmental building in order to have the bureau located within a reasonable distance of the House of Commons.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The present building must be moved away before the departmental building can be erected, because the latter will be constructed partly on the present site of the statistical branch.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that, but I also understood the minister to say that they were fixing up this building in New Edinburgh to provide for the accommodation of the bureau for a number of years, so to all intents and purposes this will be its permanent location.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That will be so for a number of years, at any rate.

Mr. KENNEDY: I am very much dissatisfied with that arrangement; I think it is wrong.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister inform the committee who owns the building which it is proposed to buy?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Gatineau Power Company.

Mr. SPENCER: Who are the people behind the Gatineau Power Company?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The International Paper Company.

Mr. SPOTTON: I hesitate to add to the discomfort of the Minister of Public Works, and I am not going to discuss this particular item. However, all these items have been rolling through and I have not noticed any appropriation for a post office in the village of Brussels in the riding of North Huron, which was most urgently needed in the first few weeks of September last. I am not accusing the Minister of Public Works of promising this post office, but I did call upon him and upon the Prime Minister through the press to say to the people in my riding that money would be provided where needed regardless of any political consideration. A number of years ago the government purchased a site in Brussels on which stood a building unfit even for a common livery stable.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can my hon. friend tell me the year?

Mr. SPOTTON: It was ten or twelve years ago.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The government were not so careful then.

Mr. SPOTTON: Quite so, and we will just drop it at that for the present. At any rate, the government of Canada thought this village needed a post office, and during the first few weeks of September 1927 most hon. gentlemen opposite were fully convinced of that fact, although I am not charging the Minister of Public Works with making any such statement. However, he did not slap any of his confreres on the wrist when they promised it. We already own this site, in a prosperous section of this province and surely we could complete that project before we start to tear down public buildings in Ottawa, and before we erect other buildings all over the country. According to press reports men have been going to such places as the village of Arthur and the town of Southampton to look for sites for public buildings, but I find that in Brussels, where a post office is expected, where the goods were delivered, and, where a post office is needed, we own a site containing a ramshackle building, and I can find nothing in the estimates to construct this post office. The Minister of Finance says that we have emerged from poverty into prosperity; the treasury of Canada is heaped up, pressed down and flowing over, and I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works, in this great period of prosperity when we are buying buildings costing a million and a quarter to tear down, when we may expect him to take into consideration the completion of this work which was started by the government some years ago. I believe the revenue from this village is good; every person representing the government early in September was convinced that a post office was urgently needed and that if the proper thing were done a post office would be erected. The village of Brussels did the fit and proper thing; I am not twitting the government nor am I holding a post mortem in this chamber, but the fact is that an urgent canvass was made; a minister of the crown visited that village on election morning, got the factions together and a post office was definitely promised. If necessary I can bring affidavits from a few hundred men, regardless of their political affiliations, stating that that is the fact. I do not accuse the Minister of Public Works of making any public promises in my riding; he made no statement in connection with public buildings, but I think before we spend money so recklessly and extravagantly in buying buildings like the Russell house at one million and a quarter dollars only to wreck them, the good citizens of North Huron should be considered and an amount should be placed in the supplementary estimates for a public building in the village of Brussels.

The province of Ontario is being penalized. During the war a previous government voted $336,000 annually for agricultural education, but, now that the war is over even though the treasury is overflowing that amount is cut off, and we are told that the contribution for technical education is to cease. I would ask the Minister of Public Works to take this matter into his serious consideration.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.
