Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, first let me express my deep condolences and sympathy to the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) on his funeral speech. It is always a sad occasion when a Member who thought he had such a bright and promising political career has had it prematurely brought to an end by the actions of his own Government. Those of us in the House who have seen this happen on occasions from time to time can only express our deep understanding of the predicament of the Hon. Member and others who have built their careers on the untimely and unwise foundation of relying upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to say what he intends and to follow through on that. Surely by now many Canadians are worrying that that is a very slim and unreliable reed upon which to build any sense of expectation of the future. We can only say we admire the way in which the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke has gone down with his sinking ship with brave words flying and his facts totally out of whack.

This is an important debate, Mr. Speaker. It is an opportunity for us to come to grips with some of the most important issues facing Canada. In one unfortunate way the shoe industry is serving as the example which should give warning to all other industrial sectors on what to expect from the Government when it comes to the crucial issue of how they will be treated when it comes to matters dealing with an effective trade policy.

The fundamental defence that we have heard in the House from the Minister and others reminds one of what certain people used to say. When the then Leader of the Opposition made his famous statement, his declaration of Sherbrooke, that under no circumstances, under no possible conceivable future circumstances would he ever change his mind, he said: "We did not know that the Liberals at the time were going to start a study."

Anyone who had known anything about the industry at that time would have known there were a series of inquiries concerning the competitiveness of the footwear and textiles industries which proceeded on an almost periodic basis to assess the current state of those industries. No one says that one has to listen to the recommendations of a study. I know the Minister has made some sort of legal argument about it, but it is absolutely fallacious. There is no requirement to agree with recommendations. The Government simply takes studies as good advice if it so desires.

What I find interesting is that the Government did not take the advice of the import tribunal. It took part of the advice. It took the advice which said to get rid of the quotas. The Government totally ignored all of the advice and all of the recommendations which said what measures the Government should take to assist the shoe industry to modernize and to assist workers to gain some protection.

I think the Minister is an honourable man as are all Members in this House. He should cease and desist trying to use that explanation. If he is going to stand in this House, as he did in Question Period and during this debate and say that the import tribunal made him do it, that he was compelled by the logic of its argument, then I want to know why the Minister left out so much of the tribunal's conclusions and recommendations. Why has the Minister and his Government so totally ignored the proposals made for development of a proprer industrial program, and to provide alternatives for the workers? Why did the Government leave out the kind of major labour market-place programs that are required to deal with workers' needs? Why did the Government, in effect, eliminate a substantial part of the findings of the report and simply go to chopping quotas?

I think we know the answers. The one side of those recommendations fits with the Government's peculiar ideology and with the necessity of satisfying pressures from the Americans and the Europeans. We have come to understand that about the Government. We know what stimulates its sense of action and direction. When the President of the United States says jump, the immediate response is to ask "How high?".

When it comes to the question of dealing with the responsibility of a federal Government to respond to industrial or economic problems and to use the resources, the planning and the facilities of the federal Government to assist and facilitate adjustment, the Government relies on the "market-place theology". The Government starts to say: "My goodness, we cannot have the Government intervene", unless it happens to be Domtar, Petromont or Hyundai. All of a sudden the Government finds some convenient excuse to forget those principles in the market-place and immediately comes up with the cash, the bail-outs and the big grants. I say that because some of the Members at least used to have a great time when in opposition with self-righteous indignation at our Government's attempt to help industry. There is only one difference, Mr. Speaker, ours worked. Theirs do not seem to. We had the example of Chrysler. The Government has the example of the Canadian Commercial Bank. One succeeded in preserving jobs. The other has succeeded in almost bringing the banking industry to its knees. Of course, we can make comparisons in other areas.

The fact is the Government is dissembling very seriously on this issue and that is the reason for today's debate. That is why it is important for us to consider what is the responsibility of a Government when it says it is removing a form of protection from industry. What responsibility does the Government have to assist that industrial sector and the workers in it to meet competition?

Last week when the statement was made, we heard a number of protestations, some even from Members of the New Democratic Party who have that wonderful capacity to have nothing but the best answers because they have never had to implement them.

Mr. Riis: Just wait.

Mr. Axworthy: I want to talk for a moment about the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. In some ways that is at the crux of this debate. It was brought into effect after the application of the quotas in 1980 as a joint initiative by the private sector and the Government of Canada to provide for a series of supports to industry to facilitate its modernization. It was an interesting model, one which has been examined and followed by many other countries.

For those former professors who have lectured on questions of industrial readjustment, they might want to go back and read some of the reviews of those examinations that have appeared in a number of fairly learned journals in Great Britain, Europe and in the United States. That particular Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was a co-operative partnership between members of the industry, some very senior business people, along with key federal departments who were to start planning the development and the reorganization of industries facing competition of low labour industries from offshore.

We recognized at the time that it was a problem, and at the time our position was that there should be a two-pronged approach: to continue protection and at the same time, and running parallel, to put into place the type of co-operative assistance that would allow the industries to reach a certain stage of maturity and self-sufficiency and strength such that they could meet the competition.

We recognized that in some according to old industrial standards they could not meet the competition, but that, through a combination of new design and marketing initiatives, Canadian industry, whether it be the textile industry or footwear, could find niches in the global market; that it could find certain areas in which, through the input of information and the input of intelligence and the input of highly skilled manpower, it would be able to fashion services and commodities and products that would have sales appeal. But, Mr. Speaker, that takes time. It is not something that happens overnight.

The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Langdon) says: "Well, it can be done in two years and we can wrap it up and all go home". The fact is, it is something that takes a period of time to achieve. The Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was established to allow the time for those industries, in conjunction with that private sector/government agency, to intervene, to invest, and to develop.

This Government has now had 14 months in office. It knew it was going to have to make a decision on the quotas at some point in time. It has had 14 months to take the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board and improve upon it, to augment it and change it, as recommended in this report, a report in which the Canadian Import Tribunal states that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board should have its funds increased and its powers augmented. The Government has now had 14 months to either act on that recommendation or to come up with its own industrial plan for the shoe industry.

Why is this Government now talking about planning? Why is it now saying that it will give grants of $100,000 for industrial adjustment services? Having been responsible for that program, I can tell you that this grant system is nothing more than a placebo. It is a way of simply bringing workers together to find a temporary solution to their unemployment.

The Government has had 14 months to prepare for its decision with regard to the alternative to take in respect of this industry, a decision which should have, as its central objective, the capacity and the ability of this industry to survive in terms of the international competititon it faces. Absolutely nothing has been done. There has been no planning; there has been no preparation. Indeed, this Government went one step beyond in getting rid of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. This Government got elected because they were so much smarter than we were. That being so, why didn't they—

An Hon. Member: You said it!

Mr. Axworthy: —why didn't they replace the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board with something that was better?

An Hon. Member: You said it!

Mr. Axworthy: I am simply repeating what you have said. What I want to know is, where is the proof of it? Where is the proof of your ingenuity and your innovation? Where is the new industrial strategy for shoes and for textiles? Where in the process is the Minister of DRIE in terms of the development of an effective industrial strategy for these so-called sunset industries?

He doesn't have one. The Government doesn't have one. It now comes to a point where it imposes this kind of a Draconian decision on that industry and then leaves that whole sector hanging out to dry, just as it has left the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke hanging out to dry. Neither the industry nor the Member for Sherbrooke will survive. The workers will remember. They know when they have been had. They know when they have been had by this Prime Minister.

There would have been a higher level of tolerance and understanding had this Government at least tried to help. When the shoe manufacturers came to the Minister several months ago with a proposal for a new investment of $70 million in new plant and production methods—and investment that would have led to the creation of new jobs and the creation of new products—did the Government of the day take up that offer and agree to sit down to discuss it? Did it say: "We know that we have a lot of pressure from the Americans and from the Europeans and that we have to come to an answer. We realize that there has to be some modernization of plant, so let's sit down and work something out. If you are prepared to put your money up, maybe we can match it".

Was there that type of consultation with the industry? Was there any attempt to work out a plan of survival, a plan of new development? Again, nothing happened. So, why should it come as a surprise that there is indignation? Why should it come as a surprise when we have been treated to 14 months of inaction, 14 months of a lack of preparation and planning? Of course, this is something that is happening in the entire area of trade. Where are the advisory committees that we were promised seven or eight months ago, whether they be related to textiles, or lumber, or steel? Where are the meetings we were promised in these sectors?

I have met with representatives from these sectors and on asking how the meetings were going, I have been told that they have not yet been invited to any meetings. They do not know what is going on. Because they have not been consulted, they cannot say what the negotiations are going to be like.

Consultation was promised. Advisory committees were promised. Instead, what we got was a temporary, part-time, partially loyal negotiator, an individual who says he will do the job "after four" once he has taken care of his other interests.

In the meantime, as we heard from the statements earlier today, the Americans are already proposing a whole series of very serious negotiations in respect of lumber and publishing. The Americans want to get down to the hard facts. Contrary to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said earlier, they are putting forth the resolution of the disputes in these areas as a precondition to there being any general discussions on trade. I have rechecked the statements from the Washington news reports, and certainly the American trade representative is saying that these issues have to be resolved before the general talks begin.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not—

Mr. Axworthy: I will send you the quotes. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will take a lesson in speed reading so that he will be able to keep abreast of all of the dispatches coming in. I am sure he must be behind.

The fact of the matter is that the Government is not coming to grips with the needs of our domestic industries. Our industries are apprehensive. They do not know what investment plans to make. I have spoken to several major industrial groups, all of whom say that they are being left in limbo.

The brewery industry employs tens of thousands of people across this country, and it is an industry that has invested some $3 billion to $4 billion in plants in the last several years. That industry has now stopped absolutely all of its investment plans. It recognizes that in the event that there is a free trade agreement entered into, it will be virtually wiped out right across the country. As a result, it has put a halt to its investment plans. Because it simply does not know what will happen, hundreds of millions of dollars are being held back from investment.

That is the kind of problem we are facing. This Government has designed a communications strategy to make sure that Canadians do not know what is going on. Its aim is to keep people in the dark. The strategy is: "Don't let on what we are up to".

I want to come back to how the example of the shoe industry argues against that approach. We have kept the shoe workers and the shoe manufacturers in the dark for 14 months. They made their offer; they made their proposal. They said: "We want to get to the table to see whether or not something can be worked out". However, they were given no assistance in doing that. Now we are faced with the spectre of having the same kind of indifference being applied to countless other industrial sectors across Canada as we get into the serious negotiation on free trade.

The Minister has used the report of the Canadian Import Tribunal as his defence. Did he read the supplementary report that was prepared as part of that report by the Employment and Immigration Commission, a report which points out that the prospect for the re-employment of many of the workers in that industry is virtually nil given an unemployment rate of 10 per cent or better?

At present we have an unemployment rate of 10.3, 10.6 per cent. It was the view of that commission that the only prospect for the re-employment of the thousands of workers in that industry would be in the situation where the unemployment rate was somewhere around the level of 7 per cent or 8 per cent. Well, I would say to the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke, who quickly scooted out of the House—he is so deeply interested in this debate that he didn't hang around—that the fact of the matter is that the responsibility for reinvestment in that sector, in that region, rests with the Government.

Even if it had been the position of the Government that it no longer wished to protect the shoe industry, it should have at least sat down with the people involved to help them plan for alternative employment. The unemployment rates in many of those regions are not in the range of 10 per cent, the national average, but more in the range of 15 per cent or 20 per cent. We will place a number of workers into a larger pool of unemployed in which their chances of survival are negligible.

What does the Government have to offer? What is its response to this? What was the benificent contribution it made to that sector? It said it would give the workers industrial adjustment services. It said that civil servants from Employment and Immigration would open offices in the regions and talk to the people about how they can get early retirement or how they can leave the regions and perhaps find employment elsewhere. That was the answer of the Government. That is simply not good enough. It is not good enough for the shoe workers and it is not good enough for the hundreds of thousands of workers who will be affected by proposed trade negotiations. Surely we must be able to learn at least one lesson from this. Surely we must learn that it is time the Government got busy and did its job.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have three sets of comments to make and questions to ask the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member was absolutely correct in identifying the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board and its work with the industry as being the crux of the issue. However, I think there is a question which must be posed first and that is why did it take from 1977 when shoe quotas were first imposed until 1982 for the CIRB to effectively begin to play a significant role in helping the industry to modernize? Why did it take so long for the previous Government to act? In fact, why did it take so long for previous Governments to act? The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) led a Government during that period of time as well. Why did it take so long for it to be recognized that the future for workers in those industries required active, direct intervention by Government in close co-operation with the private sector?

Second, why was it that the quota system which was put into effect in 1981-82 was itself so faulty? The Canadian Import Tribunal Report is absolutely damning in its clear indication that the vast majority of benefits from that quota system did not go to the manufacturing companies that were expected to gain the benefit in order to invest and produce more and to recover and become a key part of Canada's industrial structure. Why is it that when the Canada Import Tribunal did an analysis, it found that something like 20 per cent at maximum of the benefit of those quotas actually went to the manufacturing companies with the great bulk of the rest of the benefit going to the retailers and the importers? Surely that was not what we wanted.

Finally, why was it that the lessons of worker adjustment experiences of which the Member has spoken so eloquently today as they affected the footwear industry were not creatively applied across the country? For instance, why was ILAP, the program of industrial labour adjustment benefits for older workers of my community, eliminated as of March 1984? Why was there no establishment of a comprehensive system of industrial adjustment assistance for older workers which would cover everyone affected by job loss in major industries throughout the country? Why did that not become a centrepiece of the attempt to make our industrial economy a more efficient, effective and humane part of Canadian society?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's questions. I believe they are proper and I welcome the chance to respond to them because I think it is useful to look at the answers to those questions.

Let me deal first with the question regarding the application of an industrial adjustment program in 1982 as opposed to immediately in 1977. In 1977, when the quotas were brought in for reasons about which we all know, the assumption was that the industry itself would undertake its own modernization. That was the premise upon which the initial quotas were established. As it was discovered in the practice of that particular exercise, many of the industries did not have the capital base upon which they could get the kind of assistance they needed. They did not have the equity leverage and in many cases did not have the planning capacity. Many of these were small firms which existed in a fairly limited industrial system. They did not have the capacity to anticipate or deal with modernization.

When the quotas were re-examined in 1980, it became clear that Government would have to play a stronger role. We spent several months, as I know because I was involved in the negotiations, with both industrial and labour representatives to come up with what was considered to be the most effective kind of a system. It was out of that that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board was born. It was brought into effect by 1981, members were appointed to the board and Mr. Desmarais was made the chairman.

The idea at the time, as the Hon. Member probably knows, was that we were trying two different models at the same time, the Industrial Renewal Board and ILAP. One was a community-based initiative that was Government directed and the other, through CIRB, was more private-sector directed. We learned from the experiences of 1977 and on that we could not rely upon the self-renewal of the industry but that we had to give it a helping hand from a new kind of agency. That was the reason for the change-over. I think we can still learn from the model of CIRB. Had we been re-elected, there were things about it that we would have improved upon substantially as well.

Regarding the question of the impact of the quotas themselves, I agree fully with the Hon. Member's assessment. They were not nearly as effective as they could have been. My own judgment at the time was and still is that part of our problem is the fragmentation in the administration of trade policy. Regulatory agencies are responsible to one Minister, National Revenue implements the customs duties and the Department of Finance has its own form of macabre intervention in these matters. Now the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) reports to yet another Minister. I think there is a problem in implementation with having a Department like National Revenue which has a somewhat different orientation than a Department which would try to use import-export policy as part of a larger industrial package. The Department of National Revenue sees it as more of a revenue-gaining exercise and does not apply it very effectively.

A very important study which the Hon. Member may have read was done by the Institute for Research and Public Policy. That study examined that problem and pointed in particular to the solution to the problem of import quotas being a more coherent administration of the entire program.

The third question was why we did not build upon the ILAP experience. Under the reorganization of the Department of Industrial Economic Expansion, the Government brought in the IRDP program and the IRDA Program, programs which had very different funding bases and provided the industrial grant-loan system that could be used for ILAP. Because they were much more varied and richer than ILAP, they were seen as a replacement for it. The labour-adjustment side was maintained but the instructions to the Departments involved were that where there was a case of major adjustment required, they would combine the programs under the IRDP program with the labour-adjustment programs administered by the Employment and Immigration and Labour Departments. In effect, there was a continuing level. However, as we well know, at this point in time it is impossible to implement that because under the changes brought about in last November's statement many of the positive parts of the IRDP which would allow a community to reinvest into industry or to carry out the type of work which was envisioned under the original IRDP were eliminated.

I thank the Hon. Member. I know that my time has expired. Not only did the Government get rid of the CIRB program but it totally emasculated the IRDP, which could have been used as part of an industrial adjustment system in communities where it was needed. In a sense, the Government took two programs and put them out of commission. This left the federal Government totally without any type of arsenal of weapons to bring to bear on the type of changes about which we are talking.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) mentioned that I was out of the House. I had to leave on an urgent matter. However, I caught a glimpse of the Hon. Member on television while he was mentioning that if we wanted to recycle these workers the level of unemployment would have to be around 7 per cent or 8 per cent. I find that to be a pertinent point. In the riding of Sherbrooke it was always around 12 per cent and 15 per cent before the election and for a couple of years prior. However, since September of 1984 I wish to give the Hon. Member the good news. It is 8 per cent now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: The bad news is that it had nothing to do with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry would like to respond I will give him the 30 seconds which remain.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than delighted to respond. I think the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke needs one small lesson in economics. It is called time lag.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The Conservatives laugh. That is because they simply show their ignorance. The fact of the matter is that in any form of an economic cycle the type of momentum and force bringing about changes starts many months before. I agree that at this point in time the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke and his constituency may be finally gaining the results of the type of good investments made by the previous Liberal Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the time allotted for questions and coments has now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) said he was anxious to see if members would be here to vote tonight. I am glad he said that he had to leave on an urgent matter. He was alluding to the possibility that some members might not be here to vote according to waht they said. That's what he meant. But, Mr. Speaker, this is rather important, because if there are members who are not here to vote, it is because they have to, like him, to be elsewhere.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments. On debate, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Today, Mr. Speaker, we are considering the question of shoe imports and the decision of the Conservative Government to do away with quotas in that industry, which is tantamount to dropping that important industry itself.

First of all, it is a question of the credibility of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). When he was in Sherbrooke he promised he would maintain quotas in the footwear, textile and clothing industries. In so many words, the Prime Minister said he was not in favour of free trade in those sectors. Now he claims he did not make a firm commitment respecting footwear, but that is not true. He did make promises concerning shoes, textiles and clothing.

Earlier today his Minister said in the debate that the promise had been made before the elections were called. So he went on to suggest that those were not election promises. Mr. Speaker, I would counter that, as far as everybody is concerned, it is altogether unreasonable that a promise made before the election would indeed be broken by the Prime Minister himself. It is a promise and the voters, men and women alike, expect the Government to live up to it.

The problem in this industry is more acute in Montreal and in my Toronto riding of Broadview-Greenwood but it exists throughout Canada.

When a plant loses its customers and shuts down, there is no easy solution. It is a tragedy for all workers because most of them simply cannot find other jobs. For management it is not easy to transform a factory, particularly a shoe factory, into some other kind of manufacture.

When the Government announced its policy designed to end quotas it assured us that consumers would stand to benefit. Well, that is not clear because, under abstract conditions, one is hard pressed to figure out how prices will fluctuate in any sector.

In any event we can always question the morality of dumping. When a country sells its products below cost, that is called dumping. When it pays its workers very low wages like about $1 per day, when it bans all unions and does not insist on healthy working conditions, this is immoral. And Canadian workers cannot compete with such conditions.

We have to maintain and improve our quota system. We in the NDP, are convinced that the quotas can help the industry giving it time to modernize so as to be able to compete on the international market. To achieve that modernization the industry needs time. The restructuration and modernization process has already started. Unfortunately, things have progressed slowly. The Government's support for this industry before 1981 was very limited, about $2.7 millions. As of 1981, the Canadian Import Tribunal allocated more money, that is $14.1 millions. But, of this amount, only $2.2 millions have been paid. This shows that the companies are at the beginning of the modernization process and that to restructure the industry will require more time.

The quota system is not problem free. The Canadian Import Tribunal notices that only 6 per cent of the benefits go to the manufacturers. The quotas were mainly to the benefit of importers and big retailers to the detriment of small retailers.

There is no quotas for plastic shoes which have been imported in extremely large quantities.

In general, imports have increased by 23 per cent between 1980 and 1984, because of the loopholes. We have to plug these loopholes and improve the quota system to make sure that the benefits go to the manufacturers and the retailers which sell Canadian shoes.

If we simply lift the quotas, the industry will be destroyed and the workers will lose their jobs. Moreover, we will waste the initial investment. We should not abandon this industry but promote the modernization process, and especially we must make sure that the workers male and female, and their families keep their jobs.

[English]

This morning the Minister suggested that the program of quotas had actually worked and that that was why it was being discontinued. He suggested that in the area of men's footwear, where the program is being discontinued, the quotas had had an effect and modernization had taken place. He said that they were able to compete and that the problem existed only in the area of women's and children's footwear. However, a closer look at the figures suggests otherwise. Of the nine companies receiving grants under the support program, seven were grants to companies producing women's and children's footwear and a couple of them were for women's footwear only. If the Minister's contentions were correct, then this list would have been of companies producing men's footwear. It would have been these worthy companies which got the grants, the grants which helped them to do the modernization necessary and were no longer needed. The logic is certainly very attractive. It just happens that the facts do not match up to the logic.

• (1720)

The report of the Canadian Import Tribunal itself, which is supposed to have been the basis for the Government's policy, in fact supports the argument that the New Democratic Party makes. The Tribunal has noted that there was no indication that a major restructuring had taken place. It shows how imports in the United States have zoomed up with the dropping of quotas. The job loss in Canada would have been very much worse than it has been—and it has been bad all over Canada—where there is an industry of this sort. It certainly has happened in my riding and I know our colleagues in Quebec are very concerned about job loss there.

There is a lesson, I believe, in the failure of the program to do the job. It is a lesson on how to approach job creation. The Liberal approach was obviously not adequate. It had a program of throwing money at the companies but obviously the money was not properly spent. Most of it was not spent at all. Modernization did not start. Simply introducing a program and hoping for the best is not enough. It has to be a rational program. It has to be worked at. There has to be adequate time. Other countries which have done this kind of economic planning have put their money where it could be used, into modernization, and have had far better results than this program. A very modest program it was, but even so, it has simply not been used the way it could be.

The Conservative solution of simply giving up, of being prepared not to have any domestic industry at all, I feel is unacceptable. It is a solution the Conservatives like because it suits an abstract political philosophy. It is deregulation. It is free trade. It suits the Conservatives political ideology but it is not good for the people of Canada and it is certainly going to be very disheartening for people who have lost jobs and those who risk losing the jobs they have. We say that political philosophy is not important. It must serve the people and must not be a principle upon which everything else can be ignored. The lives of families, of communities, of people, should not be ignored for the sake of this abstract principle. It is hard to judge other people's motives, but it is very much a matter of concern in this period in which free trade is being discussed. The country's willingness to take all of these risks for the sake of a political principle, its willingness to go along with the United States on free trade, is something which is of very great concern to us.

We say there is a far better solution. It is not to give up and abandon people, their families and communities. It is to make the program work. It is to encourage modernization, to plan carefully and to keep the protection going as long as it is needed while this modernization does take place. We are confident our people can cope and compete. There is no reason why Canadians cannot make footwear which competes in the world markets. There is no reason why we cannot have a decent textile industry. We believe it should and can be done. We call upon the Government to bring in a decent program which will put people and jobs first, a program which will work for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments.

Pursuant to Standing Order 13(3) it would be my duty to interrupt the House proceedings at six o'clock in order to dispose of the deferred division of Friday last on Bill C-66. However, in view of the short extension of this day's sitting due to ministerial statements, I would propose to the House to continue debate on the opposition motion until 6.04 p.m., at which time the House would proceed to the division on the said motion, followed by the deferred division on Bill C-66. Is it agreed?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take it we are not creating a precedent here because the symbolic four minutes which were added to today's orders could be 40 minutes or, for that matter, an hour. I just want to make sure we protect our position that statements in the House which are added to our time will not in the future be added in this same manner.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just happened to catch the proceedings on television so I rushed in to the Chamber to say with respect to the proposal for today, it seems to be sensible. We have a procedural situation and it strikes me that your approach, Mr. Speaker, has the great advantage of logic and reason to it so I think we would accept that suggestion.

With respect to the comment made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) with respect to the proceedings at the end of the day, or the Adjournment Debate, so called, I will be glad to discuss the matter with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the point of the provision in the rules was that we wanted to ensure that there was no diminution of private Members' rights with respect to the Adjournment Debate, particularly in those circumstances where there are ministerial statements. We bent over backwards procedurally to ensure that whenever there are statements, they would not in any way negatively impact upon the right of the private Member to ask for an elaboration on Question Period answers about which they were not satisfied. That was the genesis of the present rule. That is why we have the late night show situation in this particular set of circumstances. But we will, of course, continue to consult and I will be glad to receive the recommendations of the Hon. Member. We agree to your proposal, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the votes today and I will continue my discussions with the distinguished Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier with respect to late night shows.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The unanimous consent is only for today's business, then. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to join in the debate today which so greatly affects all Canadians. Jobs are really what we are all after and it is ironic hearing my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), speak of how the quotas have not adversely affected Canadians. I would like to recount that in an eight-year period there was an additional cost of some $500 million which the average consumer had to spend. So there is a dramatic effect.

I think we should also want to reflect that if our trading partners exercise their legally recognized rights of retaliation under the GATT, there will be job loss in a lot of sectors. The impact of import quotas on footwear cannot be considered in complete isolation of the impact they have on other sectors of the economy. The fact is, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) said in the House, continuation of import quotas on all types of footwear would have seriously affected Canadian interest and Canadian jobs in other sectors unrelated to the footwear industry. If there are any doubts about this, ask the petrochemical producers in Ontario and Alberta, craft paper companies in British Columbia, steel producers in southern Ontario or companies producing sewing machine needles and car radios in both Quebec and Ontario. If there are any further doubts, ask the many highly successful companies producing fur garments in Montreal and elsewhere in Canada, along with the thousands of people across this country whose main source of income is tied directly to the fur industry. All of these companies have at least two things in common. First, they have been very successful in exporting their products outside of Canada, including to the European Economic Community. Second, earlier this year the European Economic Community threatened to withdraw concessions or, in more blunt terms, to retaliate against up to $150 million worth of exports of their products. The EEC threatened to raise tariffs to prohibitive levels on Canadian petrochemical products, steel products, craft paper, fur garments, sewing machine needles and car radios.

We managed to stave off this threat of retaliation only by agreeing to forego duties on a wide range of products imported from Europe. This agreement, which was concluded only a few days before the EEC was about to implement its threat of retaliation, cost the Treasury some $12 million. However, this was not the first compensation agreement concluded with the EEC. Two other agreements were concluded in response to earlier measures taken on footwear imports to Canada. In total, over $13 million in duty were foregone on products from the EEC and over $25 million globally have been paid in compensation in response to import quotas on footwear. In other words, the opposition Parties are attempting to ignore the fact that in order to benefit from exports to other countries, Canada must permit imports from those countries. The Opposition is also attempting to ignore the fact that quotas in one sector can cost jobs in other sectors. This attempt to ignore the facts will be recognized for what it is by the Canadian people.

For the past eight years Canada has justified the imposition of footwear import quotas internationally under the safeguard provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These provisions enable Canada to take quota action or other safeguard measures in situations where imports are causing or threatening serious injury to domestic producers. Under the GATT provisions these measures are intended to be temporary in nature for the extent and time necessary to prevent or remedy injury. Since footwear quotas were first imposed eight years ago our trading partners have alleged that eight years of footwear quotas are not temporary in nature and that such lengthy imposition of quotas is contrary to Canada's obligations under GATT. As well, in the absence of a finding by the Canadian Import tribunal of injury or threat of injury caused by imports in four of five sectors of the footwear industry, we would be hard put to convince our trading partners that any extension of quotas in these categories would be justified under the provisions of GATT.

The Opposition appears to ignore the fact that exporting countries also have rights under GATT. It enables our trading partners with substantial interests as exporters, affected by safeguard action, to either claim compensation for impairment of access or, in the event a satisfactory agreement and compensation cannot be concluded, to take retaliatory action. In requesting compensation from Canada, therefore, the European Economic Community has been operating within its rights under GATT. The EEC has not been alone, however, in condemning the length of time that import quotas have been placed on footwear and the negative impact of quotas on their exports to Canada. Import quotas on footwear have been a serious irritant with many of our friends in the less industrialized world who have found it difficult to expand their sales to Canada. The issue of footwear import quotas has come up frequently in our discussions with other countries. Countries such as South Korea, Brazil, India and many others have identified footwear import quotas as an irritant in our bilateral trade relations with these countries. Although the Liberals and NDP profess to be concerned about the plight of Third World countries, I note that today they are attempting to ignore the impact quotas have on the development prospects in lesser developed countries. I will stress, however, that Canada will vigorously defend internationally its right to extend import quotas on those classes of footwear on which the tribunal found injury or threat of injury in the absence of special measures of protection. We will point out to them that the tribunal has just completed its most comprehensive inquiry to date into the footwear industry. We will also note that the tribunal received extensive submissions and held public hearings so that all parties could make their points of view known. As a result of this comprehensive review, first initiated in Junme of 1984, the tribunal concluded that women's and girls' footwear production remains vulnerable to injury from imports. We will note that the tribunal recommended that import quotas be maintained only with respect to this one sector of the industry.

In talking with our trading partners we have the tribunal's very detailed rationale for extending footwear quotas on Women's and girls' footwear. The tribunal believes that producers of women's footwear remain vulnerable and that many of these producers could not compete successfully in the absence of special measures of protection. In the case of women's footwear the substitutability factor is of great significance. While women's leather fashion and comfort footwear produced in Canada are, in the view of the tribunal, able to compete with imports of leather product, principally coming from Europe, the fact that non-leather product is, in the view of the final purchaser, largely substitutable for leather creates a degree of competition from non-leather imports which the domestic producer of leather product may not be altogether able to meet. There is, moreover, significant production of women's non-leather as well as leather in Canada. Because of this substitutability, the impact of the removal of quotas on the women's footwear sector as a whole would be unfavourable. However, it is not clear that it would be universally adverse. The analysis regarding optimum size and regarding profitability by size and location bear upon this point. Some parts of the sector would be vulnerable. Some may experience difficulties. The rest are capable of competing successfully.

I say once again that we will vigorously defend our right to extend quotas on women's and girls' footwear, pointing to the tribunal's inquiry. Nevertheless, as I indicated earlier, our trading partners have rights under GATT. We anticipate difficult negotiations ahead once again with the European Economic Community. However, we are confident that, backed with the findings of the tribunal, the steps Canada has taken to lift the quotas on four out of five sectors on Novemebr 30, 1985, along with the phase-out provisions for the quotas on women's and girls' footwear, that a satisfactory solution can be reached with the EEC.

Quotas are only one of several factors which affect the competitiveness of the domestic footwear industry. Other factors include the level of import tariffs, forign exchange rates, and the impact of disruptive imports caused by dumping or subsidization practices. Let's look at the tariff protection the entire footwear industry will continue to receive. The bulk of footwear enters into Canada at a rate of duty of slightly over 23 per cent. There are no general preferential tariffs applied on the bulk of footwear imports into Canada. The average tariff applied by Canada on imports of manufactured goods is 9 per cent. Internationally, the EEC applies an average tariff of 8 per cent on footwear imports, whereas in the United States it is 10 per cent. Therefore, the Candian industry receives a lot of protection under the Canadian tariff, both in relative and absolute terms. The tribunal also notes that the competitiveness of Canadian footwear with imports is affected both by the lvel of exchange rate and the level of inflation in Canada compared with that in the major footwear exporting countries. Since 1980 the tribunal notes that Canadian footwear has declined in competitiveness with imports from some countries, while at the same time increasing its competitiveness against imports from other countries. In particular it notes that the Canadian product appears to have increased its competitiveness agaisnt imports from Hong Kong and Brazil based on exchange rate changes and rates of inflation. The industry will continue to have recourse to the Special Import Measures Act with respect to subsidized or dumped imports of goods into Canada. In fact, the tribunal notes in its report:

> During the course of this inquiry the tribunal became aware of a variety of government assistance programs made available to producers in a number of exporting countries.

They go on to say they are fully confident that the provisions of the Special Import Measures Act are fully adequate to address any future problems which may arise where dumping or subsidization appears to exist. This is an important point. To the extent that the Canadian industry is concerned about disruptive imports of footwear into Canada, it is important that it seeks recourse through the legally established measures provided under the Special Import Measures Act. The Canadian industry will therefore continue to benefit from a lot of protection against imports. Quotas will apply for the next three years on women's and girls' footwear. Tariff rates of around 23 per cent will prevail on the bulk of footwear coming into Canada, and the industry will continue to have recourse to the provisions of the Special Import Measures Act. The Government recognizes, however, that the lifting of quotas will give rise to a moderate surge of imports but the market should stabilize within 12 to 18 months. Some of the surge will be due to pent up demand for lower priced shoes. Some of it will be due to the fact that there will be a number of new importers. Some of it will be caused by what we expect will be an inclination by retailers to experiment by importing new items. To mitigate any effects the sruge may have, we will be conducting consultations with the countries which are Canada's principal footwear suppliers. As the Minister for International Trade said in the House, we will put them on notice that their long-term interest in the Canadian market would best be served by a prudent and gradual approach to sales. Canadian importers who have been known to bring in footwear for the sole purpose of establishing a high base for the allocation of import quotas will be made aware that such practices will not be rewarded in the future.

Let us look at the significance of abolition of footwear quotas from the perspective of the Third World. Canada has, in good times and bad, under all recent governments, avowed to help the Third World face the great challenges it does, to help Third World countries help themselves and to become more self-reliant in the world of today. While Canada has been generous in the provision of official development assistance, such assistance alone is not enough to enable these countries to survive in the world, to grow, and to become more self-reliant. These countries must receive private capital to develop their industries and be given trade opportunities to allow these industries to grow and realize their full potential. It is only if industrial development and exports from the Third World are encouraged today that these countries will have a chance to join the trading nations of the world and be future partners for Canada in the world of tomorrow.

Footwear manufacturing is a growing area of potential exports from the Third World to the north. According to UNIDO Industry and Development Global Report 1985 the south's exports of footwear to the north—Canada included—increased from $.5 billion (U.S.) in 1970 to $1.5 billion (U.S.) in 1979 but then began to face import restrictions of various kinds.

Canada and other donors have provided billions of dollars of official development assistance as well as generous export credits to help Third World countries. Does it make sense, when the results of such assistance begin to emerge, to cut these short? Over the years since Canada began its international development assistance program it has, for example, provided more than $7 million to south Korea, more than $43 million to Brazil, more than $23 million to the Philippines, more than $46 million to Malaysia, and more than $68 million to Thailand, not to mention the more than $1.5 billion to India.

It is purely a coincidence that these are some of the countries that are emerging from the shadow of desperation in their recent pasts to become our potential, if not actual, markets of the future. Is it not a little short-sighted to consider, perhaps unwittingly, that we should retain footwear quotas that can only but alienate countries such as these which are also now the leading footwear producers in the Third World?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Government has concluded that the further granting of import relief to the entire footwear industry would be in neither the industry's nor the country's economic interest. If we are to export we must also import. It has become abundantly clear that import quotas can threaten jobs through retaliatory measures on the part of our trading partners. The international costs associated with the imposition of import quotas, however, is only one dimension of this issue. There are many others. However, it should be kept in mind that the Government's decision is consistent with the findings of the Canadian Import Tribunal which has conducted its most comprehensive inquiry to date into this industry. The tribunal is an independent body that has considerable expertise in conducting inquiries into imports into Canada. It is particularly familiar with the footwear industry, having conducted three previous inquiries into this industry. This was the fourth and, by far, the most comprehensive inquiry that the tribunal has undertaken to date.

I, therefore, am somewhat surprised that the Liberals, who appointed the members of the tribunal, set its terms of reference and have cited, with approval, extracts of the tribunal's report, are now attempting to ignore the tribunal's recommendations and conclusions. I am also rather surprised, Mr. Speaker, that members of the New Democratic Party are not prepared to take fully into consideration the interests of 25 million Canadian consumers, particularly low-income earners, in maintaining a viable and competitive Canadian footwear industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest and attention to the very academic and philosophical speech of my colleague across the floor. I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I would probably have appreciated the meaning and content of his presentation had it been made in a university environment.

But that is not the problem, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that women and men who have been working for 10, 15 or 20 years in the footwear industry will lose their jobs in the months ahead. That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. And none of the speakers across the aisle has really explained how those so-called avant-garde measures will be implemented.

How would those people get another job and if they did, in what areas? My colleague opposite said a moment ago that the Liberal Government itself had commissioned this tribunal to study the situation but I will remind him, Mr. Speaker, that under the previous Government, the same tribunal made recommendations at one time and the Liberal Government of the day had the courage to make a decision not on the basis of philosophical or economic interests, but taking into account what Canada needs at the present time, namely jobs. I want to ask you this: What do you tell those men and women who, because of this devasting move, will lose their jobs—

Mr. La Salle: It has not been proven yet.

Mr. Tardif: —in about a year or a year and a half? The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has a word to say. I believed him to be a strong supporter of the footwear industry. I am surprised that he does not have more to say in this regard. Answer my question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

[English]

Mr. Weiner: I will tell you how I will respond to my constituents and the citizens of Quebec and Canada. Three hundred thousand new jobs have been created this year and over 51,000 are in Quebec. Retail sales are up 8 per cent. New manufacturing orders are up 10 per cent. Look at the confidence in the country. Consumer spending is up. Retail sales in August were up 13 per cent as compared to a year ago. Motor vehicle sales are up 27 per cent. In my own community, Dollard des Ormeaux, building permits are going like hotcakes. In the first seven months of 1985 the value of building permits was up by 17 per cent, manufacturing orders were way up and planned capital investment in manufacturing was up.

That is what I am prepared to say. The Government is going to continue creating jobs and ensuring that we put Canadians back to work.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member. During his comments he lectured members of my Party suggesting that we are not interested in the consumers because we asked questions about what the Government is proposing to do and that we are not interested in the welfare of people in Third World countries. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. Our Party has always—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Been on every side of every question.

Mr. Orlikow: —supported programs to help people in the underdeveloped countries. We are, of course, aware of the extra cost to consumers.

I could support what the Government is proposing if I did not know what is actually happening in the real world. In the real world in all of the industrialized countries the shoe, clothing, and textile industries have been partially destroyed by increasing exports from countries in which the wage rates are a fraction of what they have been in the industrialized countries. The process of destroying those industries in continuing.

It may be, in a very theoretical way, that that is something which we cannot stop. However, if there is going to be a marked reduction in the number of people in Canada working in the shoe, clothing, and textile industries, I want to remind the Hon. Member that a substantial majority of the people who will lose their jobs live and work in his Province of Quebec. They are not all in Montreal. Many of them live and work in towns and cities in Quebec in which the shoe, clothing or textile industry is the only industry. What I have indicated to the Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) has been happening and will continue to happen. A city like Montreal, which the Hon. Member represents, or a city like Winnipeg which I represent, have a variety of industries to which people can move when a particular industry fails.

I am sure that in the next year we will be dealing with the same problems in the clothing industry and textile industry. What plans does the Government have for new industries for those companies which will have to shut down because they cannot compete with imports from low-wage countries? What plans does it have for new companies or for retraining workers?

If the Government could show us that it has an industrial strategy that will deal with these problems, then we would not need this debate and could agree with what the Government is proposing.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I have had the honour and privilege to serve as Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For much of this year we have been concerned with Canadians who were threatened by protectionist measures in the United States. We heard from berry producers, the steel industry, the lumber industry and hog producers. Jobs in those industries were being threatened in Canada and in each instance we ran to Washington to beg for special measures.

If we are to be logical and rational, we must do something that will open those markets rather than close them. If those protectionist measures are implemented there, tens of thousands of jbos will be lost in this country. While we are asking for freer access to a market that we consider critical, it would be illogical to close ourselves to the rest of the world.

A plan has been put into effect to ease any suffering in one industry towns. That plan is contained in the report and the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) have alluded to it. That plan will be effective and continue to produce employment in our communities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North has the floor.

Mr. Gagliano: At the beginning of his remarks, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner) mentioned that the Conservative Government had almost given in to the threats of the United States or the European Economic Community, or was afraid of them, and that it was for this reason among others that it had failed to maintain these quotas. I would like to know what the Member has to say about the fact that in this same promise that several Members read today, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that he would not give in to the pressures of the Common Market and the United States to reduce the quotas on imports of shoes and textile products in Canada. Also, the Hon. Member mentioned that he was very concerned about under-developed countries and that this action to remove the quotas on imports of shoes here in Canada would have helped these countries. Does he have as priority to safeguard the jobs of Canadians instead of the jobs abroad?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, since I did not get an answer to my question, I will continue debate on this very important motion. I certainly do not intend to read the Prime Minister's promise, as I think we have already done so on a number of occasions, but I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the people of the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou are asking themselves today, after this about-face of the Prime Minister, and they are asking me: Is the Prime Minister a man of his word? On May 4, he said he was not going to remove the quotas, and now a year later, he is lifting them. It is not the first time he has made an about-face, Mr. Speaker. We saw this at the very beginning of his term, when he challenged the universality of social programs. He had said it was "a sacred trust", but nevertheless, he decided to challenge universality.

The House will recall the Budget brought down in May 1985, and the demonstration held by senior citizens. We had to bring our senior citizens here to Ottawa to make the Government understand that it should not de-index their pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, during the summer of 1984, when the Government promised Canadians the moon and whatever else it could promise them, it really intended to keep its promises. I think Canadians have been duped by all these promises.

Mr. Speaker, another promise was made when the Prime Minister said that once he had formed his Government, he was going to cut the paper burden that Canadian businesses had to deal with. And right away, in his first message on the state of the economy, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said he intended to look into the added value tax system. In fact, it is systems like these that have at least tripled our bureaucracy and the amount of paperwork that has to be done.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at Europe, we see that over there, the system penalizes not just small businesses but all other businesses as well. It is a very complex system, a system that also tends to take money out of the pockets of the low- and middle-income consumer. However, the Government is not concerned about its promises, and according to some businessmen, some pressure groups are convinced that in time, the Minister of Finance will be announcing his new tax system.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we must ask ourselves: If footwear quotas are lifted, what is going to happen to the textile industry? The problem is exactly the same! Nevertheless, questions have been asked and the matter is being considered. Only today, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) said they were looking into all this and that they would be making a decision. Considering the decision they made on the shoe industry, after giving us the same story, it is pretty obvious they will make the same decision to lift quotas, this time on textiles.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of jobs are at stake. We are not just talking about shoes and textiles but about jobs, and especially in the province of Quebec. We have a problem with Montreal East and now we will add other areas in Quebec which are affected by this decision on quotas in the footwear industry, and later we will add those in the textile industry, What is going to happen? Quebec will be completely shut down in the same way as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) shut down Shefferville.

An Hon. Member: No, no.

Mr. Gagliano: But that is what will happen. My hon. colleague does not like it. But this is reality. The Parliamentary Secretary said earlier that 302,000 jobs were created.

How come then that we lose 5,000 jobs in Montreal East? How come that 20,000 jobs are in jeopardy in the footwear industry and that 40,000 jobs will also be in jeopardy in the textile industry? Are you going to tell us the same old story?

Nobody believes you when you say that. The proof is there. According to the polls published last week, 52 per cent of the Canadian people do not trust the present government. Why? After only one year. What will they say after four years?

Mr. Speaker, during Question Period we saw the Prime Minister hide behind the Antidumping Tribunal. He said: we have not changed, I did not break my promise. We had a report from the Antidumping Tribunal and we implemented their recommendations. But it is ridiculous to see a government let an antidumping tribunal tell it what to do. The Government did not have the courage to make its own decisions and to say after having analyzed the situation: Are we going to maintain quotas or are we going to remove them because we think this is what we should do? Of course not. The Prime Minister defends himself saying: I did not deny anything. I kept my word. I hid behind a report.

One only has to read the report to realize that it contains various options and that the quota system could indeed have been maintained.

Because I have a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a letter which several Hon. Members have received also. I would like everybody to know the tragedy which Canadians, Quebecers especially, are going through because of this decision by a Conservative Government. It is a letter from the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada.

Dear Mr. Gagliano,

As you know, before the end of November 1985—

This letter was written before the Government announced its decision.

—the Government will make a decision which will mean the life or death of the footwear industry in Canada.

If the Canadian Government decided to extend the quota system for a minimum period of five years, thereby ensuring the industry only 50 per cent of the Canadian market, it would get the support——of most members of the three federal parties;

—of the Quebec and Ontario Governments;
—of workers and trade unions;
—of manufacturers, tanners and suppliers;
—of the vast majority of the 4,500 small independent retailers;

Because, Mr. Speaker, these quotas do not affect only footwear manufacturers, but also retailers and even importers as well. Because, beginning December 1, there will be war, once these quotas are lifted.

—and especially—

I continue reading, Mr. Speaker.

—of 8 out of 10 Canadians (National Survey—Decima Research).

This decision which the Government is legally empowered to make would not only protect existing jobs but create 6,000 new ones, as well as encourage investment in the new technology.

If, unfortunately, the Government accepted the contradictory and unrealistic findings of the tribunal and followed the ill-advised recommendations of International Trade officials, it would mean the death of our industry and 20,000 lost jobs.

20,000 families are anxiously waiting for the Federal Government to make a decision concerning the footwear import quotas.

We are counting on your full support to convince the Government.

It is too late, Mr. Speaker, the Government has made its decision and, as the letter said, has signed the death sentence of the footwear industry in Canada as well as decreed the laying-off of 20,000 Canadian workers.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member proposed that we should ignore the report of the tribunal which his Party established.

Mr. Allmand: Like you with the Abella Report.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Would the Hon. Member tell us why the Liberals set up that tribunal if they intended to ignore it. Who were they trying to fool?

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying that we ignored the report. Of course we are not telling you to ignore the report, but there were two versions in that report. If he were to read it closely he would know there was the version of the manufacturers, but it was more difficult to find the version of the importers.

As a Government you have to ask yourselves some questions. Why did some of the interested parties in the industry—importers, exporters, retailers—not even bother to appear before the tribunal and state their case? How is it that after reading the whole report one reaches the logical conclusion that quotas should be maintained? All of a sudden—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 6.04 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply in accordance with Standing Order 63(9).

The question is the following one: Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe), seconded by Mr. Gauthier moved that this House regrets that the Prime Minister has once again broken an election campaign promise, this time by failing to maintain quotas on imports of shoes and by compounding this betrayal by failing to make adequate provision for the thousands of workers whose jobs are adversely affected. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members haven risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Tardif, Richmond-Wolfe) which was negatived on the following division:

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REORGANIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, November 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) that Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if there could be a disposition on the part of the House today to have the vote just taken with respect to the Supply Motion apply to the third reading of the Bill in question, although I suppose if I do not say this my hon. friend will insist the result be reversed.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if that is acceptable, I would like to declare my interest in abstaining with respect to the vote.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the same applies for me. If the vote were to be taken I would abstain because I have a declared interest in the Bill.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn) which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING. (B) ANTI-SMOKING ADVERTISING CONTRACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the questions I have raised which we are dealing with today—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Apparently, I have received a notice of a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault). Is it relating to the vote?

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege I want to raise relates to an incident which occurred in the House today, and I would like to give notice to the Chair that, if need be, I intend to raise a question of privilege tomorrow. The matter I want to draw to the attention of the Chair is that, during the debate this afternoon, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest), the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, took the floor on the motion under consideration by the House. I would ask the Chair to ensure whether that was in keeping with the current practice established here—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's point. I am in two difficulties. First, because the moment the vote was taken we were in fact after six o'clock and therefore in the Adjournment Debate. Therefore, I am in some technical difficulty in recognizing the Hon. Member on a question of privilege, although I did. Second, in a matter such as this I think the correct procedure is for the Hon. Member to give me notice in writing of his question of privilege. We will deal with it in that manner.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, the House seldom has the opportunity to deal with a life and death issue such as the one I have been raising, that is the matter of 35,000 Canadians who die every year as a result of tobacco smoking, the opportunity we have to reduce the problem, if not eliminate it, and the very particular question as to what we are doing as a society to encourage tobacco smoking through advertising.

The two questions I raised on November 19 dealt with the issue of cigarette advertising. First, I raised the general issue of policy, that is, the advisibility of advertising at all a product which is dangerous, as dangerous as tobacco cigarettes are. In reply to my question the Minister referred to other options to consider as well. He said:

> I want to assure the Hon. Member that other policies on convincing Canadians that smoking is detrimental to their health will be forthcoming.

I wonder how vigorous these policies are with a Government which has been so backward in dealing with this issue. I should add that preceding Liberal Governments have been exceedingly backward as well.

Let us look at the facts. The Government has come up with a $1 million counter-advertising program to encourage young people not to start smoking. At the same time the manufacturers are spending at least $90 million to encourage young people, in particular, to smoke. Of that $90 million, we are paying half as taxpayers. That is $45 million of the taxpayers' money in foregone tax revenues going to promote a product which is dangerous to health.

What does this advertising do? Most of it is lifestyle advertising, if not all of it. It associates smoking with fresh air, health, success, friends and popularity. It preys on young people's uncertainties and anxieties. It offers easy solutions to the questions of acceptance and personality. Yet 35,000 Canadian die every year and, among them, 5,000 who are not even smokers themselves but who are passive smokers. We are not acting to protect these people.

The issue of advertising also raises the question of sponsorships because, increasingly, the advertising companies are trying to associate the arts and sports with their diabolical product. Let me point to one instance. On the weekend I attended at the Royal Ontario Museum for an extremely important exhibition on the Jewish legacy, the cultural artifacts of Jewish culture in Czechoslovakia which were gathered together by the Nazis. This exhibition is a memorial to the Holocaust. It was sponsored by a tobacco company, Phillip Morris. The film which announced and presented this extremely important material about a very disastrous period of human history was announced by the Phillip Morris Company. Yet the tobacco companies have been responsible for more deaths than the Nazis killed Jews during World War II. This is the terrible irony. The tobacco companies are trying to use culture to make their product seem to be one of life and vitality. It is unconscionable that companies which promote death and illness should be allowed to get away with that. What hypocrisy it is that the sports and the arts should be used in this fashion.

I would like to refer to the more particular question of the ad agency, McKim Advertising, which has received the Government's contract to do the English advertising in its counter-smoking campaign. This is the same company which does the advertising for Imperial Tobacco. This, in short, is the same company which makes far more of its money promoting and encouraging young people to take up smoking.

The Minister came up with the rather sheepish excuse that the choice of the company had been made on the advice of six civil servants in his Department. He did not mention that the list from which those six civil servants made their selection consisted only of accepted Conservative advertising firms and that that particular advertising firm has had the Conservative business in the province of Manitoba. So we have a clear conflict of interest situation and the Minister's response to that is totally inadequate.

Studies show that smoking among children is still on the increase. Yet in other countries which have banned advertising, smoking among children is decreasing. Norway has a particularly good program, on which we might look at. It has a total ban on advertising of smoking and there has been a real decrease in the number of young people who take up smoking. I regret to say that there has not been a decrease in the number of adult smokers. But the rate there is roughly half the rate of Canadian smokers.

Canadians would do well to realize how important this problem is. We have the highest rate of smokers in the industrial world. We are the fourth highest in smokers in the world. That means we have a proportionate amount of illness, disease and death as the result of smoking.

I, therefore, call upon the Government to be realistic and come forward with a strong program to counter tobacco smoking. I particularly urge the Government to institute a ban on cigarette advertising which could be phased in over a two-year period and then to get rid of it absolutely.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Government of Canada, the Provinces and the Territories, supported by seven non-governmental health organizations, have just approved a national program to fight tobacco smoking, to try and convince Canadians to stop or not to start smoking.

In January of this year, a federal-provincial task force was set up to develop a new national program. An invitation was also sent to non-governmental agencies that had come out against tobacco smoking. A national steering committee was formed, whose mandate included the three following objectives: First, to protect the health and rights of non-smokers; second, to help non-smokers remain so; and third, to encourage and help smokers to drop the habit.

To achieve these objectives, the committee adopted a nine-point strategy: To actively pursue the advertising campaign against smoking among the young; to promote actively health education in the schools and encourage students not to start smoking; to act through the community to show young people that the non-smoker is in; to provide effective and on-going programs to help smokers who want to stop smoking; to support the creation of special programs for high-risk groups; to make group programs more accessible to smokers who need a more sustained form of assistance; to support all available means to promote the advisory role of health professionals in dealing with smokers; to encourage the voluntary adoption of guidelines against tobacco smoking in public establishments, buildings and places; and to set up a follow-up mechamism for projecting and measuring results.

The program was inaugurated on October 22 of this year, in Ottawa and in the provincial and territorial capitals, by launching a series of televised messages addressed to young people.

The advertising portion of the campaign was designed by two advertising agencies: McKim for the English language campaign and Le groupe Marketel for the French campaign.

McKim Advertising in Winnipeg was chosen from a group of four advertising agencies designated by the Cabinet Committee on Communications. A jury of six public servants, including four from the Department, made the selection. The jury responsible for selecting the agency was aware of the fact that McKim's office in Montreal had the Imperial Tobacco account, worth about $2 million, and that there might be a conflict of interests. The jury asked for, and received from McKim the assurance, that their office operated entirely independently and autonomously, and that no conflict of interest existed.

McKim should be congragulated on having accepted this anti-smoking campaign contract in view of the potential risks as far as its well-paid contract with Imperial Tobacco is concerned.

I believe that McKim is doing an excellent job in this campaign. The Department has received favourable comments from professional groups, non-government organizations, the medias and the Departments of Health of the provinces and territories.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ST. CLAIR RIVER—CONTROL OF INDUSTRIAL POLLUTION. (B) PROVINCIAL ENVIRONMENTAL SECURITY FUND

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on November 18 I asked a couple of questions of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) concerning pollution in the St. Clair River which, as we all know, is of enormous concern to the people all the way down to Windsor who take their water from that river. It is also of enormous concern to my colleague from Windsor West.

Tonight I seek from the Government some assurance that it will not pursue a policy of believing that pollution can be resolved by diluting or dissolving the substances in our rivers and lakes, but that it will take a position which will go to the root of the problem for the sake of millions of Canadians and Americans whose health depends on the quality of water.

For too long, Mr. Speaker, we have depended on the hope that nature would somehow take care of the substances we are discharging into our waterways and that dissolution would be the answer. For decades we have relied on that principle only to discover, in recent years, that it does not work. In fact, substances find their way into rivers and beds of rivers and lakes, and eventually through evaporation of water bodies or other processes the chemical substances find their way into our food chain and endanger our health.

In the case of the St. Clair River we have heard abou the spill at Dow Chemicals. I want to ensure that the Government knows that that is not the only company operating along that river. There are some 15 plants located adjacent to the river including companies like Suncor, Esso and Petrosar. It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that some of these companies have direct sewer discharges into the St. Clair River. That means there is no intermittent discharging location such as a pond or other controlled area where the waters which are discharged by the plants can be analyzed before they are finally discharged into the river. Therefore, there is potential for pollution of the river which must be corrected.

In Sarnia and other places we must put into place preventive measures which will ensure that whatever is discharged into the river, whether or not by way of accident, is not toxic to the health of humans and the habitat. In order to do that we must improve our treatment and pretreatment of substances that are to be discharged. We are presently doing that only partially and only on certain sites where the industry is very modern and of recent construction.

I would feel much better, as I am sure every individual in Canada would, if we were to adopt a practice of anticipation and prevention of damage by ensuring that what is discharged into our waters and the air have no toxic or negative effects on our health. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come to change our attitude toward the environment. The experience in Sarnia is one which teaches us that we must make this change in our way of thinking. The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the toxic substances which we discharge do not disappear into water and air. They become part of the habitat and have long-term effects which we may regret a generation later.

Tonight I seek from the Government an assurance that rather than continuing to search for answers in the nature of curing and reacting to the damage after the fact, it will, jointly with industries and the communities affected, put into place measures which will anticipate and prevent spills of this nature from happening in the future for the protection of the health of large numbers of people whose water quality depends on that of the Great Lakes. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary is in a position to give us this reassurance.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the recent spill of perchloroethylene into the St. Clair River and the subsequent public attention it has engendered on the pollution of that river underscores the importance that citizens place on environmental protection. It is that same public concern which stimulated governments to sign the 1972 and 1978 Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreements. Under those agreements successive administrations of federal and provincial governments have striven to strenghten pollution control measures with measureable results.

But it is recognized that much remains to be done, especially with regard to the control of toxic substances. In recognition of this need, governments around the Great Lakes are focussing attention on the "hot spots"; those problem areas in which environmental quality is degraded and requires special remedial action. Currently the International Joint Commission has identified 21 such areas in the United States; 12 in Canada, in addition to the 5 interconnecting channels including the St. Clair River.

In 1983 Canada and Ontario decided to join the U.S. agencies in undertaking a detailed study of the Detroit, St. Clair and St. Marys Rivers. The intent of the massive interagency study is to detail environmental conditions and pollution sources, to provide the scientific and technical basis for the development of specific remedial action plans for these areas. These plans are to be submitted to the International Joint Commission for review and the Commission will monitor the rate and effectiveness of the measures implemented under the plan. This action is currently under way at a total cost of some $8 million and will continue and be accelerated as required.

In addition to this major initiative, on November 1, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) directed Environment Canada to undertake a short-term investigation to detail the extent and probable sources of the tarry substance, which is the current focus of public concern. That investigation is also underway and its results will be announced shortly, probably in mid-December. To the extent that further immediate action can be taken, such measures will be implemented. The nature of these cannot be determined until the results of the study are in hand.

As is well known, pollution control is just as essential as it is costly. But it would be foolhardy to discuss cost before the immediate extent and sources of pollution are known and documented.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Murphy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before we consider Bill C-74 I would like to inform the House that I do not intend to move Motions Nos. 1 and 7 standing in my name since the Government has now introduced amendments fulfilling the needs which I expressed in committee.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, there were seven motions, but there are now five at the report stage of Bill C-74 on the Order Paper. I have looked at them all and have found that some are out of order for various reasons. Motions Nos. 1 and 7 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) have now been withdrawn, therefore I need make no comment with regard to them. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 are in order and will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) give the Chair some procedural difficulty in that they appear to go beyond the scope of the Bill. It is my intention, however, to hear procedural arguments as to their acceptability when they are called. Motion No. 6 is in order and will be debated and voted on separately. Accordingly, I now propose to go to Motion No. 2.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-74, be amended in Clause 2

(a) by striking out lines 10 to 13 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"number assigned to that province on the date of coming into force of this subsection, there shall be".

(b) by striking out lines 17 to 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"number of members as were assigned on that date."

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify something. I take it that Motions Nos. 1 and 7 have been withdrawn by unanimous consent, or is it required?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He ruled them out of order.

Mr. Speaker: In fact, the Hon. Member in whose name they stood on the Order Paper has indicated that he has no intention of moving them. There is then no way for them to come before the House because he has chosen not to move them. Does that deal with the point of order of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks with respect to this particular amendment. At the outset I would like to say that I appreciate very much the position taken by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). He is always vigilant and always prepared to pursue his particular point of view. I would just like to remind the House that at the outset of the clause-by-clause discussions I had, on the basis of the evidence that had been presented to the committee and on the basis of representations received from members of the committee, given my undertaking to make certain amendments to this legislation which I thought would respond to some of the concerns that had been expressed. Due to the fact that there was an element of expenditure involved, it was necessary to obtain a Royal recommendation which is the reason this is being dealt with at report stage as opposed to having been dealt with in committee.

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, I undertook to propose an amendment at report stage and told Members at that time that I would give serious consideration to adopting the wording proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill. Motion No. 2 fulfills the undertaking which I gave to the committee. The motion, if adopted, would ensure that no province would lose any seats from its present representation in the House. At the same time it eliminates Rule 3 from Clause 2 which provided for growing provinces to receive only one-half of the increase in the number of seats to which they would otherwise have been entitled.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, you have dealt with Motion No. 3 in the name of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) which seeks to accomplish essentially the same goal as Motion No. 2. However, it leaves out an important safeguard which I think is essential if we are to ensure fair representation in the future. In view of the fact that there are transitory migration patterns within a province or between provinces, it seems only reasonable to ensure that, in removing the cap on the growth of representation, we allow a mechanism for such transitory shifts to have only a temporary effect on the representation. I do not anticipate that the provisions of Rule 2 will very often operate to reduce the number of seats given to any province, however, it seems to me to be an essential safeguard.

I may say, in closing, that the effect of deleting Rule 3 and the changes proposed in Clause 6 of the Bill will, in large measure, provide the commissions with the tools to carry out the intentions of the two motions previously ruled out of order by the Chair concerning the interests of northern Ontario constituencies. In Ontario the average population per riding in 1988 will be 87,122. The application of 25 per cent will allow that number to decrease to 65,342. The average population of northern Ontario ridings in 1981 was 70,109.

Therefore, within this new framework the amendment that I am proposing will, in effect, accomplish the objectives that people in Ontario would want to have accomplished. That is to say, it will increase, to the full extent, the number of seats that Ontario will have according to population growth. There will be no limit on that. There is also a new provision which will mandate commissions to pay attention to the issue of manageable geographic size. There are two elements which will ensure, in remote northern areas, that there is a fair opportunity for constituencies of geographically manageable sized. Of course, this applies in northern Quebec, northern Ontario and the northern parts of the western provinces as well.

As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, during the committee's consideration of the Bill I undertook to obtain expert legislation drafting advice with respect to a motion which the committee endorsed but which I felt was defective as to form. I received such advice and Motion No. 6 is the result. I might add that this amendment imposes, for the first time, a duty upon the commissions to consider "community of interest or community of identity" as well as "the geographic size of large, rural or northern districts". I am indebted to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), who participated in the committee debates and supported the concept which is now included in this legislation. The commissions may not evade their responsibility to take such factors into account in redrawing the boundaries.

This is a new and powerful instrument by which Parliament is, in effect, saying that there are very important matters to consider in establishing new constituency boundaries other than those which relate strictly to representation by population within each of the provinces.

We will all watch with great interest, because we are all affected in one way or another, the way in which the commissions carry out their important new duty. I suggest to Hon. Members that, with the help of suggestions from Members on all sides of the House, we have taken a balanced and reasonable approach through which we will accomplish the objectives of limiting the extent of growth of the House of Commons to keep it within a reasonable size. Yet, through the provisions of this Bill we have allowed for full consideration to be given to provinces in which there is growth. For the first time we have addressed, in a very reasonable way, the question of obligating the commissions to consider "community of interest or community of identity". We also addressed the question of manageable geographic size for constituencies in our country, without departing in any substantial way from the currently understood concept of representation by population. This was one concern that was expressed and I believe we have been able to derive creative ways to deal with it, through amendments to this legislation, with the assistance of the committee.

Let me conclude by thanking the members of the committee for the way they conducted themselves in the hearings and for the interest which they brought to this particular legislation. I should point out that in dealing with this Bill we used the mechanism for consulting Members of Parliament as much as possible on two different occasions. First, we presented the draft legislation to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections last June to allow the committee members in the preliminary opportunity to consider the legislation before the principle of the Bill was debated. I hope we will continue to use that mechanism with other legislation after we proceed with the amendments to our Standing Orders as a result of reform of the House of Commons.

I hope that device will be used more often to allow parliamentarians from all sides of the House to address the early stages of legislation rather than having to deal with the principle of completed legislation before going to the committee stage. In many cases it is not possible to have an initial study of legislation, but in this case I thought it was appropriate. It is the kind of legislation that certainly recommended itself to study before being brought in in its final form. Again, I thank Hon. Members for their assistance in this pursuit and commend the amendments standing in my name for unanimous acceptance by the House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's statement today illustrated some of the problems with the original Bill. Many witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee indicated that Rule 3 was unacceptable and would face many court challenges. That rule would put a cap on the number of seats for provinces like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia and would only entitle them to half the additional Members to which they would be entitled pursuant to straight representation by population.

I commend the Minister's decision to remove Rule 3 in Clause 2 of the Bill since it would have been subject to court challenges. Essentially, Motion No. 3 standing in my name would have removed Rule 3.

Incidentally, the Speaker did not rule against Motion No. 5 standing in my name. He wanted to hear arguments about it, and unless the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) knows something that we do not, Motion No. 5 has not been ruled out of order by the Speaker.

The President of the Privy Council is aware that this procedure, which will require the establishment of new commissions, a total redistribution commission hearing, and advertising and reprocessing through the House, will cost the country some $5 million or $6 million. However, all that is required to complete the existing redistribution is a couple of hours of debate to hear the objections to the existing redistribution program.

Furthermore, we do not know the effective date of this Bill. It is like shooting an arrow into the air and wondering where it will fall. It is likely that this redistribution will come into effect in the summer of 1988. If an election is called for the spring of 1988, it will be held according to the existing boundaries. If it is called in the fall of 1988, it will take into account the new boundaries. How does the House Leader propose to remedy this undesirable situation in which the boundaries could be changed during the summer months when people are on holidays? According to the timetable set out by the Chief Electoral Officer, this Bill, if it is approved by the House of Commons and the Senate, will result in a change of boundaries during the summer months of 1988. If the Government so dares, that is the most likely year for a general election.

Whereas there would have been an increase of 10 seats for the Province of Ontario according to the existing redistribution plan, if Motion No. 1 is carried there will be an increase of four seats. Of course, that has the effect of reducing the number of seats by six from the number in the existing redistribution law and will have a devastating impact on northern Ontario since it could well result in the loss of one or two seats.

In 1977 the Commission removed one seat from northern Ontario which covers 88 per cent of the land mass of the Province of Ontario. The Minister will recall that there was long litigation in which tens of thousands of dollars were spent by the municipalities in northwestern Ontario in an attempt to stop that redistribution and the loss of representation. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), on a recent visit to Elliott Lake, said that he wanted to see greater representation from northern Ontario. The impact of this Bill is that we will lose at least one seat and perhaps two seats, depending on how the commission makes its decision. That is why I introduced Motion No. 5. Basically, it describes the geographical area of northern Ontario and asks that it continue to be represented by 11 seats, which would come out of Ontario's allocation of the proposed 99 seats. That is a very fair and equitable arrangement because Ontario is a geographically distinct region representing 88 per cent of the land mass of Canada. Assigning 11 seats in the Ontario allocation does not harm other provinces and will give that distinct geographical location more adequate representation.

With regard to the principle that we are applying to Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Newfoundland where we are providing a floor based on the amount of representation in the thirty-third Parliament, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon sees that as a fair and equitable arrangement for provinces like Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Thus, I am sure, in his sense of equity and fairness he will want to support Motion No. 5 when we get to that motion later this day.

I would like to question the President of the Privy Council. In Motion No. 2 he uses the words "coming into force of this subsection". Whether or not the Government will make a commitment that that subsection will be proclaimed simultaneously with the rest of the Bill because if that subsection were not to be proclaimed, as I understand the legislation, you would end up without the grandfather clause relating to minimum representation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry but I must interrupt the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the President of the Privy Council, the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for making the amendments he has. I made similar amendments both in committee and I was ready to make the same type of amendments at report stage, but he has gone along with the direction that I and the New Democratic Party caucus believe is necessary to improve the legislation. In his kind words, the Government House Leader said that I was diligent in my work. I am not sure other committee members would use that same word in describing my work, but I appreciate the kind words.

Despite the fact that we support the two amendments before us in the name of the President of the Privy Council, we still have some concerns for the Bill.

First, I want to talk about some of the things with which we do agree. I think there is some need to be concerned about the actual size of the House and the costs that will accrue to the House as a result. At the same time, in recognition of our Constitution we have at present and our history, a certain number of seats are guaranteed to some of the less populated provinces. The formula with which the Government originally came up put a very heavy penalty on growing provinces. The Government devised a formula according to which, after a quotient of the average seat population in the country was taken, the provinces with growing populations would be entitled to only half of the increase to which they would be entitled by dividing the population of that province by the quotient. This was blatantly unfair. It created a situation where Alberta, Ontario and B.C. would have larger and larger populations in each of their ridings with the passage of time, which would not be the case in other provinces. In other words, the brunt of the Government restraint action was falling on the three provinces with the fastest growing population.

By making the amendment before us at the present time in Motion No. 2, we go a long way toward solving that problem, especially with regard to the commissions and the new redistribution that will take place based on 1981 populations. For example, British Columbia, which would have received five new seats under the legislation passed in 1974, will now receive four seats. That provides adequate protection for people in B.C. as far as any new boundaries that come up as a result of the 1981 census are concerned.

In the long run, in terms of what might happen after the 1991 census, the 2001 census and the 2011 census, that same fairness will be diminished. That is a problem I see with the legislation. However, I do recognize what happens in this House. Almost every new Government has brought in a piece of legislation to change the distribution of seats in the House of Commons. We passed legislation in 1974 and we are passing legislation now to do that. If there are problems in the future, whichever Party forms the Government after 1988-89 will recognize them as being the result of the legislation before us presently.

I will not deal with Motion No. 6 now but will do so when we come to it, Mr. Speaker.

One of the main arguments the Government used in saying that we did not want to see the membership of the House increased to 310 seats in 1981, to 343 in 1991 and to 369 as a result of the census in 2001 was the need to control the costs of the House of Commons.

In making his presentation before committee, the Government House Leader indicated that it would be better if we looked at the McGrath committee's report, the committee which reported on the reform of the House of Commons. He said that a better utilization of the resources we had for the House which would have to be used to pay for the increased costs as a result of a larger House, would be to give it to the present as well as the new Members of the House who would be here as a result of redistribution. In other words, present Members of the House would be given better resources to do their jobs. This is in line with the recommendations of the McGrath committee, which I support, but I am not sure that that is what will happen.

The new Government has been sitting for over a year now and we are still waiting for some increase in our principal budgets. We are still waiting for some indication that the resources will be available to Members of Parliament to take on the ever-growing responsibilities that we are being given as we move into a system which I think is the system we want. Members of Parliament will be more responsible and will be in a situation to make amendments in committees which will be accepted by the Government. Members of Parliament will be more responsible in terms of dealing with government expenditures, something about which the Auditor General reminded us so effectively in the last few weeks.

I would like to see, along with the passage of this legislation, that we have some commitment from the Government that the resources for the House of Commons are not spent on increasing enormously the number of Members in the House. Those resources should be spent on existing Members to make it possible for us to do a better job in terms of research, looking at the statement of the Auditor General, looking at the expenses of Parliament, proposing legislation ourselves and investigating and amending government legislation. Those resources should actually come, not just be talked about in a general way.

In summary, the amendments of the Government have helped improve the legislation in many ways. Actually, it is much stronger than the legislation which was passed in 1974, in terms of looking after the problems of community of interest and of ridings of large geographic size. However, I cannot fully support it because in the long run, based on the 1991 census and following ones, we run the risk of not protecting the interests of provinces with fast growing populations.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in a position to give a commitment whereby—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) goes any further, I should like to remind him that this is not a question and answer period. If the Hon. Member for Davenport has a question which he would like to put to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), perhaps he could mention it and the President of the Privy Council, if he wishes, could answer the question when he addresses another motion.

Mr. Caccia: I will abide by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and put it in the form of a concern, to which eventually the President of the Privy Council could respond at the right moment.

I should like to express some thoughts with regard to Clause 2. I fully subscribe to the principles which are being applied in northern Ontario and the importance of defending the democratic process, taking into account distances and sparsely populated areas. At the same time, when it comes to Metropolitan Toronto, we have the opposite situation where we have high densities in smaller areas. In addition, we have an ongoing dynamic of a population which includes people who are not citizens but are in the process of becoming Canadian citizens, therefore increasing the numbers of electors.

I express more than just the hope that the increase in seats in Ontario will mean an increase in Metro Toronto, so as to take into account the population, as well as the dynamic to which I have referred, as part of a feature which is typical of a large metropolitan area, as is the case in Metro Toronto. I suspect that the same would apply to Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

I am sure the President of the Privy Council is aware of these facts, but I wanted to ensure that they were on the record. I look forward to his comments at the appropriate moment.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I come from a region of the country where there are considerable distances between communities. My part of the country in northern Ontario is experiencing, at the moment, a declining population. I suggest to the Government that we do not need less representation from northern Ontario. Because of its many problems, we need to ensure that we maintain the present level of representation.

I know that the argument will be that Ontario's representation in the House is being increased by four Members. When they get through with the readjustment in Ontario, it may very well be that northern Ontario could lose up to two seats. In fact, not only would there be a loss of two seats, but the realignment of the remaining population would increase the geographic distances even more.

When the last Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission undertook a study, lo and behold, it came into the Sudbury basin and moved communities like Garson and Wanapitei into the riding of Timiskaming, and yet the distance between the centre of the Timiskaming riding and Garson was over 150 miles.

I have no problem with southern Ontario getting more seats, but surely any Member from Toronto can stand on the tallest building there and literally see all his constituents. That cannot be done in northern Ontario. In just the same way as the Government is guaranteeing that provinces will not have fewer seats, I hope that it addresses the whole anomaly within regions which are clearly defined. Northern Ontario is clearly defined; it is all those parts of Ontario which are called "districts". The Government should ensure that those particular areas do not get any fewer seats than they already have.

The problems facing northern Ontario are very serious and grave ones. It is built upon a hinterland economy. It is in decline in mining and lumber. It does not need fewer voices in the House of Commons. It needs at least the same number to make arguments for the correction of its problems. God knows that electing more Tories in northern Ontario will not resolve the problem.

Mrs. McDougall: Yes, it will.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, it will not. It never has. It has never resolved any of the problems in the provinces, and it certainly will not resolve the problems in northern Ontario. I hope the Government and its House Leader will listen to the reasonable amendment in Motion No. 4, standing in my name. I hope it is allowed to go through and the Bill amended accordingly.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in the debate on the redistribution Bill. I speak, as did the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), ultimately on behalf of constituents, as well as the Members who will be representing those constituents in northern Ontario. I echo the earlier comments of the Hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who appreciated the work of the committee and the motions the Minister brought forward which provided some recognition of regional factors and of the necessity of thinking about more than just the absolute number of people who are resident in an area.

My seat in Thunder Bay-Nipigon is one of several in northwestern Ontario. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt speaks with close experience of the situation in northeastern Ontario. We in northwestern Ontario have our own experience of distance.

I should like to take a few moments to travel some of those roads with Hon. Members as a way of underscoring the importance of ensuring that it is possible for Hon. Members to be in touch with their constituents and, in an even more important way, for constituents to have ready access to their Members when the sizes of ridings grow. My riding includes small communities which can only be reached by road in any feasible or economic way. One could try flying into some of them, but if the Exchequer of the country had to pay for my chartered flights, all of us would be unhappy about the way in which public funds were being spent. If, however, I make trips to small communities like Armstrong and Aroland by car, I have to spend hours on the road to do so. I will see very few people in relation to the amount of time I have spent on the road.

The people who are resident in these communities have the same difficulties with travelling and even greater difficulties in financing trips to have direct access to me as their Members of Parliament. That is an indication of the kinds of costs that can be imposed even with the existing system of representation. If we face loss of seats in northern Ontario, and I hesitate even to say that, we are going to find ourselves with longer distances to travel, greater costs to be borne and still more limited access to our constituents.

More and more Members will be facing the kinds of difficulties faced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). He represents an enormous riding that has to be reached in good part by air. Only by getting around in that way can he hope to see his constituents. For that matter, on the provincial scene, the Member of the provincial legislature for Lake Nipigon presently faces such a situation. The motion, which emphasizes the importance of recognizing community of interest, community of identity and a manageable geographic size, Motion No. 6 in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), is of enormous importance in helping us to deal with those situations and in empowering boundaries commissions to recognize these things.

My provincial colleague who represents Lake Nipigon has a great deal of difficulty in getting around his riding, a riding which stretches from 150 miles west of the City of Thunder Bay through the city to communities on highways west of the City of Thunder Bay and up the Trans-Canada Highway. His riding includes all kinds of communities to the north of the City of Thunder Bay and of course the heartland of the riding is centred around Lake Nipigon itself and to the north and northeast of Manitouwadge. When contemplating the time he spends on the road and the thousands of kilometres he puts on his automobile yearly in order to get around his riding, I must admire his pluck in having run for the position and his success in winning it. I wish him well. I trust that he will do as well in representing his riding as did Jim Stokes, once Speaker of the provincial House and the present Member's predecessor in that riding. However, the last thing I would ever want to have to undertake is the kind of travelling that Jim Pouliot now has as his lot as Member of the provincial legislature for Lake Nipigon.

That kind of situation really underscores the necessity of recognizing community of interest, community of identity and manageable geographic area. In geographic area, northern Ontario encompasses 88 per cent of the province. If we maintain 11 seats in a province that will be allotted 99 seats in the Canadian Parliament, more than four-fifths of the geographic area of the province will be represented by only one-eleventh of the province's Members. It seems to me that that is a reasonable proportion, recognizing the geographical challenges that we face.

As my friend, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, said, a Member of Parliament representing a riding in Toronto may have a great many constituents, but that Member, if he or she could see through walls, would be able to see all of his or her constituents. Certainly such a Member could cast his or her eye about and see well beyond the boundaries of the constituency. It is easy to get about in those circumstances. One could surely walk across one's constituency without even having to take advantage of the Toronto public transit system. That offers opportunities for contact and a very limited loss of time in travelling from office to constituents. Those are factors which make the task of the urban Member of Parliament, even if his or her riding is growing rapidly, a more manageable challenge than the challenge we who represent this very large part of the Province of Ontario face.

I am very grateful for the efforts the committee has made. I appreciate the work of my friend, the Hon. Member for Churchill, on the committee. I appreciate the responsiveness of the committee membership and of the President of the Privy Council in bringing forward these motions. I look forward to the sensitivity and care with which the boundaries commission for Ontario will consider the question of how the people of northern Ontario may be properly represented in the Canadian Parliament.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by indicating that I am in the rather fortunate position of being the only Member of Parliament from northern Ontario who represents an urban riding. While I heard the very eloquent speeches made by my colleagues from northern Ontario who are members both of the NDP and of the Liberal Party, I must confess that I am fortunate in the sense that I do not have to deal with all the problems they do in order to represent my constituents properly. However, I will say that as a resident of northern Ontario, I feel very strongly about the intent of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Frankly, neither Member would care to make debating points here on the floor of the House of Commons as long as the Government listens to the intent of both amendments; namely, to make sure that, when the electoral boundaries are changed and the number of seats in the House of Commons is increased, 11 seats remain for the geographic area known as northern Ontario.

The Hon. Member for Algoma, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) have indicated the difficulty they face in getting around their ridings in northern Ontario. I can speak from experience in that when I had the fortune to represent the regional municipality of Sudbury as the chairman of that larger centre, I often travelled to Toronto to indicate to the provincial Government the necessity of making sure that we retained the same number of MLAs. The Province of Ontario has guaranteed that the numbers will remain, and I see no reason why the federal Government should not indicate its support for the basic principle that there is more than representation by population at stake in this issue.

I have often said that northern Ontario has 10 per cent of the population of the province but 80 per cent of the land mass. If a Member is to serve his constituents properly, the rule of thumb of representation by population must have some flexibility. Otherwise the Members who represent northern Ontario are not going to be effective in representing their constituents' interests.

I recall very well the debate which occurred during the previous Parliament. At that time, the Government wished to change some of the boundaries for the ridings in northern Ontario. One of the astounding proposals made by the commission was that the Town of Nickel Centre which sat in the middle of the riding of Nickel Belt was to be taken from that riding and given to the riding of Timiskaming. Everyone in the House knows that that would have meant that the Member of Parliament for Timiskaming would visit the Town of Nickel Centre, a town with a population of 10,000 or 11,000, perhaps only once every two years. The only ridings in this country which would be comparable in terms of area to those in northern Ontario would be those in northern Quebec and the Territories.

In addition, all of us, whether we are of Conservative, Liberal or NDP persuasion, have cried foul for many years about the way in which the national air carriers and railway services have been delivered into the northern parts of Ontario. Therefore, it is even more important, given the track record of Governments and their failures, to commit themselves to a reasonable standard of service with respect to transportation facilities in northern Ontario. It is more important for the Government to recognize the fundamental right to maintain 11 electoral districts in northern Ontario. If the Government does not maintain them then the people who will suffer under this type of change will be the people who live in the North.

I do not make my remarks to take away from some of the arguments which have been made in the House with respect to the need for additional representation in southern Ontario. That has abolutely nothing to do with the argument. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt said it well when he indicated that it is one thing for a Member of Parliament to fly from Ottawa in one hour, land at Pearson International Airport and in a very concentrated way service a riding such as Scarborough which has approximately 155,000 to 175,000 constituents. I do not take away from the workload of that Member of Parliament. However, it is a far cry from the physical necessity of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, or for the Hon. Member for Algoma to fly from Ottawa via Toronto, land in his home constituency of Sudbury or Sault Ste Marie and then start off in an automobile trek to cover up to several thousand square miles in order to service his constituents properly.

I make this impassioned plea to the Government to listen well to the words of all three political Parties which represent northern Ontario to ensure that we are guaranteed these 11 seats. If that can be done, then I say with honesty that the people of northern Ontario will applaud the Government regardless of its political stripe.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments with respect to the question of representation in the context with which the amendments have been laid out. My comments are to reinforce the comments made with respect to the necessity of recognizing special cases for remote and northern areas. The coast of British Columbia, northern British Columbia, the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and Atlantic Canada are all areas of the country in which it is extremely important for representation to have an impact on the Government of Canada. In this regard I ask Hon. Members to consider the question of fisheries. In Canada, the bulk of our fisheries is conducted in two areas of the country which a small number of Members of Parliament represent when compared with central Canada. It is something in the order of 20 Members of Parliament versus 210. In order for important issues in the country to make an impact, the question of protecting representation in rural and remote areas is extremely important.

The second point with which I would like to deal is the question of Schedule III ridings. I take my own riding as an example, but certainly I could use as an example the ridings of other Members of Parliament who are faced with this task. The riding of Comox-Powell River which I represent consists of 30,000 square miles of the coast of British Columbia. There are more than 120,000 people in the riding. My riding, compared with Prince Edward Island, is five times bigger with virtually the same population. While Prince Edward Island is guaranteed four Members of Parliament and ministerial representation in Cabinet, the Comox-Powell River area has one Member of Parliament. There are no government offices to speak of in my riding. They are in the major centres but, in my cases, they may be 300 miles away from the people who need them. Contact is impossible. If a constituent is dealing with a regional or district office it will be seen that they are located only in Vancouver or Victoria and are only accessible by long distance telephone calls. They are impossible for constituents to visit. The upshot of all this is that the Member of Parliament becomes the key point of contact for the federal Government. The task is extremely difficult.

The riding of Vancouver Quadra, which is represented by the Leader of the Official Opposition, is 30 square blocks of Vancouver in which one constituency assistant in one office can handle the bulk of the work. The difficulty facing those who represent large Schedule III ridings is that it is impossible to obtain government services in a reasonable manner for constituents. It is difficult for a single Member of Parliament to try to handle a large population and a difficult piece of geography. Again, there are no highways, no regular air service and no regular and effective marine transportation. The Government has to consider special measures in terms of obtaining fair and effective representation for the people who live in those areas and the issues which affect their lives.

Another aspect of this complex problem is that if one takes the 30 square blocks of Vancouver Quadra one will see that there are not complex issues such as those dealing with search and rescue along 300 miles of the coast of British Columbia. That riding does not have a large number of native bands in remote areas which face extremely difficult problems. The fishing industry is not carried on in that particular area. Again, marine and air transportation are not major factors in the day-to-day lives of the people who live in Vancouver Quadra when compared with the lives of those who live in the ridings of Skeena, the Northwest Territories, the Yukon or, for that matter, Comox-Powell River. It is extremely important for those people to have adequate representation. Again, I use the comparison of Comox-Powell River and Prince Edward Island where we are looking at a ratio of four to one with all the anciliary services which are provided to a Member of Parliament.

The last point I would like to make is with respect to my concern that aboriginal people are not guaranteed representation in the House of Commons. The area I represent, the riding of Skeena and many of the Schedule III ridings in the northern parts of our country, have large representations of aboriginal people. They are not guaranteed seats in the House of Commons. Their perspective of viewing the nation, its development and the major issues which face it are unique and extremely important. They are becoming more and more important each day. We may not have been faced with the crises of Lyell Island, Meares Island and those which continue in different geographic locations if we had been able to guarantee and at least address the problem. It is a problem. There has to be a guarantee with respect to representation of aboriginal people in the House of Commons.

With that final comment I will conclude my remarks. I hope that some of the suggestions made here and the problems outlined do not fall upon deaf ears.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a few comments on Bill C-74.

Not long ago, I represented a riding that came very close to disappearing from the electoral map, as a result of a decision to realign the boundaries of electoral districts.

I think that basically, in a debate like the one we are having today, we should ask ourselves exactly what kind of role a Member of Parliament is supposed to play. What are a Member's responsibilities?

A Member of Parliament is of course a legislator, but a Member is also a liaison officer and a communicator. I think we must not lose sight of this very fundamental role the Member is expected to play. I think that if we accept the premise that a Member's role lies in liaison and in communicating, legislating changes in electoral boundaries would appear to be very unfair or at least create an imbalance which I find totally unacceptable.

Take my riding, for instance. I represent a district located between the urban areas of Drummondville, Sherbrooke, Victoriaville and Thetford Mines. Although the population density is very low, the surface area of this district is quite large. And there are the usual daily problems. People are having trouble with the system, with unemployment insurance, and they wonder which office is going to be able to solve their problem. In many cases, people are not quite sure whether they should go to the office in Thetford or Sherbrooke or Victoriaville.

Here, Mr. Speaker, the Member has a responsibility to provide information and act as a guide in order to show people how to access all the services offered by the Government, and heaven knows there are a lot.

The purpose of the legislation as such, and in fact any measures aimed at reducing expenditures, would appear to be both acceptable and praiseworthy, and I think that as the elected representatives of our constituents, we ought to support and encourage such measures.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the Government through its departments spends several hundred million dollars annually to get its message across to Canadians and to be as close to the people of this country as it possibly can. Unfortunately, every day we are forced to admit that this superhuman effort that is costing us millions and billions of dollars is missing the mark and failing to produce the expected results. Now, under our democratic system, the opportunity is there to use as liaison officers our Members of Parliament who have a genuine role to play in informing their constituents about the Government apparatus.

Mr. Speaker, I submit, with respect, that the Bill before the House today, or rather the amendments, appear to place constraints on this vital and fundamental role of the Member of Paliament, and it does so in the following way, and I will give an example. Technically speaking, in large cities with what could be called a homogeneous population, we could have 200,000, 250,000 or even 300,000 people represented by a single Member, who would be able to perform his duties as a Member to the satisfaction of all concerned because the problems of these constituents are comparable and similar, so that the information they need does not have to be extremely diverse, and so the Member would be able to perform his duties quite adequately. However, there are ridings where because of the vast territory involved and many different problems that may arise, depending where one lives in the riding, a very small constituency nevertheless requires that a Member work full time if he takes his responsibilities seriously.

Mr. Speaker, as a country reaches a certain stage and under a democratic system, I believe there is a cost we must be prepared to pay. I think that we cannot have a real democracy unless we are going to pay that cost, whatever it may be, and I think an exercise like this one should be considered not just in the light of economics but also in the light of the democratic system we have in this country, and our basic emphasis, our basic motivation should in this case be the fact that Canadian citizens deserve adequate representation instead of the consideration that this might cost us an astronomical sum of money.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that under a previous proposition the Province of Quebec would have been represented by 79 Members. Had things been left as they were Quebec would have elected 79 Members of Parliament. If the Bill under consideration were to be enforced as is, the end result would be that Quebec would only have 74 Members. Since existing rules provide that a province may not have fewer Members than it already has, the number of representatives looking after the interests of Quebecers would remain at 75. However acceptable it may be, the population will keep increasing and it would be better to have 79 Members, that is four more. With four more Members, Quebecers would have easier access to the Government process and would be able to contact more Members to obtain various information.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think we should lend a sympathetic ear to those who advocate savings. Still I want to reemphasize a significant aspect, namely the fact that every year the Government spends hundreds of millions of dollars to communicate with the Canadian public, yet we have right here an institution or a system which enables us to feel the pulse of Canadians through Hon. Members who were elected in full confidence and who are in a better position than anybody else to appreciate the problems facing their constituents. Not only should we enlarge the representation, but we should also make sure it is an ongoing process Mr. Speaker, consideration must be given to saving taxpayers' dollars and to improving communications through Members of Parliament. Given the choice, I would be in favour of electing more Members so that the lines of communication between Canadian men and women and their government would be more open than they are now.

To my mind, the kind of savings that might result from this measure are not really worthwhile because the various departments already spend a lot of money to achieve similar objectives.

That is the contribution I wanted to make in this debate.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few moments to give my observations on what I have been listening to the better part of the debate this morning. What I think the speakers are simply saying is that their constituencies are unique. I would be the first to agree with them that every constituency in Canada is unique in its size, population, travel route or whatever. I am not persuaded, however, by the last speaker who said that if he had more representation he would be able to give better representation to the province of Quebec. The Hon. Member for Churchil (Mr. Murphy) talked about northern Manitoba and northern Ontario, claiming that greater representation in numbers would lead to better representation. I would submit that a fundamental question is being lost in the debate. What Members of Parliament ought to be considering is not how many of us there are or whether or not we should grow every 10 years according to the census, but rather what is the appropriate size for the best decision making?

The course we have followed in the history of the Parliament of Canada is that after every census the size of the House of Commons becomes larger. I am one who believes that that route will ultimately destroy Parliament. It means that we will have more and more government by Cabinet and less and less government persuaded by parliamentarians who are private Members. By increasing the size of the House of Commons, we do not increase the length of the day or the week and, therefore, each Hon. Member's opportunity to participate in questions or in speeches is diminished. If we add more Members on the basis that more Members give better representation, I think we deceive ourselves and denude Parliament. Each Member has less opportunity, not more. What our regions, districts and constituencies need is effective, powerful Members who can come here and have a fair chance to do their work.

We have heard today about the difficulties involved in big constituencies. No one knows those difficulties more than I do. My riding is 220 miles by 180 miles and contains 113 individual communities. I run the wheels off a vehicle every two years. But I would not give up that constituency for one in the City of Toronto which is six blocks by 10 blocks. The reason is the stability of the population in a rural ranching riding. When a rancher and his wife retire, their sons and daughters take over. That is stability. As well, urban constituencies have to take ethnic considerations into account. I know of one constituency which has to have translation facilities in order to communicate with some 13 different ethnic groups. Therefore, the first principle we need to accept is that every riding is unique. To say that we need a larger House of Commons is the wrong way to go because I do not believe it leads to better representation. What we as Members of Parliament need is a budget which will allow us to serve us the ethnic needs, if that is the problem in the riding; transportation costs, when that is the problem in the riding; or translation services, if that is the problem, whatever the case might be.

I sat beside the Hon. Member from Mississauga one day when he was signing books and books of certificates for new Canadians. What amazed me was that he finished signing just one book of these certificates and I realized that that was the number I would do in my constituency in a year. This reflects the uniqueness of all the different constituencies. Therefore, for someone to stand up and claim that our ridings are unique and therefore we need more Members is a claim that falls on deaf ears. What we need is to have a Member manage his budget in a way which will be most helpful in allowing him to represent effectively the people who elected him. He must be accountable for that money. The record of how the money is spent should be published three or four times a year so that constituents can determine whether or not their Member is spending public funds in a worth while and worthy manner.

In conclusion, I believe the House of Commons is probably already too large and the optimum size should be somewhat smaller. To anyone from the other side of the House wants to volunteer to give up his or her seat I would say that a smaller Parliament would lead to more effective debate, a stronger Parliament and less domination by Cabinet, because each of us would be more effective rather than less, as is the case, I believe very strongly, in Great Britain. There are some 600 Members there who pack the House of Commons so tightly that they all cannot sit in the House at the same time. They do not stand in their place for votes, they file by the Speaker as they leave the Chamber saying yea or nay. Bigger does not mean better. What we really want to do is to make each individual Member more effective. We cannot use the argument of individual uniqueness for increasing the representation in the House because every Member could make that case.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, there are many ironies in politics, many things which are very ironic about the actions of this Government, but this Bill has to represent one of the greatest ironies. In the last election the Conservative Party proposed to give a voice to western Canada. With this Bill it is taking away seats and taking away that voice from western Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Read the Bill, David. You might come to the opposite conclusion.

Mr. Berger: Over the last four or five years, and even longer, we have heard about western alienation. We know that many western separatist movements were started. We know, of course, of the battles waged by the western Premiers to have their interests represented in national decisions. The basis of all these complaints is power. Even today with this Tory Government and its strong representation from western Canada, people in the West complain that decisions are made according to the interests of central Canada. One has just to look at the arthmetic. In the current Parliament there are 282 seats with some 75 seats in Quebec and 95 in Ontario for a total of 170. It does not take a genius to figure out that the Conservative Party at present has much greater representation in Ontario and Quebec and that it can make decisions in the interests of these two provinces and really ignore the rest of the country.

Under the current legislation, passed by a Liberal Government, Alberta would have some 27 seats in the next election. Under the Bill proposed today by the Conservative Party, moved by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), Alberta will only have 25 seats. British Columbia would have had 33 seats and will now have only 31. That is fewer seats than there are in Calgary and Edmonton, thanks to the Conservative Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, when is the Government going to tell Canadians the truth about unemployment in Canada? It continues to boast smugly that jobs are being created, but it is not stating how many good jobs are being lost. It is not saying that full-time jobs with benefits are being replaced by part-time jobs without benefits. It is not saying that the number of Canadians who are unemployed for more than a year and are without the benefit of unemployment insurance is double the number who were in that situation in 1982, and four times the number in 1981.

The Government will not say that most of the provinces, the trade union movements and many national organizations have serious reservations about the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Gallup poll published on September 23 indicated that 66 per cent of Canadians thought that unemployment should be the Government's top priority. This indicates that Canadians have no confidence that the Government's Budget and economic policy will do the job. That is why the Conservative Party has lost 18 per cent in the polls and why 52 per cent of Canadians are not satisfied with the Conservative Government's performance.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be attending a federal-provincial conference in Halifax later this week. That will be an opportunity for him to reconsider the Government's unemployment policies and finally do something meaningful about this most serious issue.

PUBLICATIONS CANADA

MAIL RETURNED TO SENDERS—"ADDRESS UNKNOWN"

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned and my concern is growing daily about the course the Government has charted and the confidence that Canadians have in the direction that has been set. During a recent visit to my constituency it became clear that my concern is shared by others, including many young Canadians.

A number of students in Miss Peschik's grade five class in Chase, British Columbia, were studying Canada and the Canadian Government. It was not clear to them just what direction the Government was taking on a number of issues so a number of the students, including young Richard Velestuk, sent requests for Government publications to Publications Canada located here in the nation's capital—or so they were led to believe. In each case the self-addressed request cards, printed and supplied by Publications Canada of the Government of Canada, were returned to the students with the ominous message: "Addressee moved, address unknown" stamped on the front.

I was pleased that Richard and his classmates saw fit to bring this matter to my attention but, frankly, I am worried about the kind of signal that the Government has sent to this class of young Canadians. What does this say to these young Canadians about the Government's ability to manage its responsibilities and obligations to the citizens of the country? Where is the Government going? This class of young Canadians might reasonably be expected to ask themselves where the country is going, or where it has gone. Should it not, at least, leave a forwarding address?

AIR TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF TAX CEILING REMOVAL

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, there is a 9 per cent tax on airline tickets bought in Canada for travel within Canada. Effective September 1, 1985, the $30 ceiling on this Canadian air transportation tax was removed. This removal greatly affects western Canadians. By way of example, Toronto represents the largest point of origin or destination to and from my Province of Saskatchewan. The removal of the ceiling adds between $20 and $24 to each return ticket between Saskatchewan and Toronto. With the removal of the ceiling the basis for the tax becomes distance related—the longter the haul, the greater the tax.

The removal of the ceiling is inequitable because those Canadians living in more remote areas bear all of the increase, while commuters in the corridors between Montreal, Toronto, and Ottawa are not in any way affected.

Deficit reduction is very necessary and this measure would generate some $55 million annually. I suggest, however, that those in the more remote areas ought not to bear the entire increase. The additional revenue can be gathered through a global flat tax or by other means. Access to transportation is surely one of the great links in our chain of national unity.

● (1405)

With respect, the removal of the ceiling on the Canadian air transportation tax should be re-examined with a view to restoring regional equity, thus recognizing the historical and geographical travel requirements of all Canadians.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN REAL ESTATE SALES

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): According to the Canadian Real Estate Association, Mr. Speaker, the residential real estate market in Canada improved considerably last month, chalking up the best figures ever recorded in any month of October.

The survey was based on operations through the multiple listing service, a collective marketing system used by most of the 112 real estate agencies in Canada.

Last month's house sales in 25 Canadian metropolitan areas exceeded by some 2,000 the number of units sold throughout Canada in October 1984.

More than 200,000 houses were bought through the MLS this year, and 1985 will prove to be the best year ever in terms of residential real estate transactions in Canada.

Sales during each month of 1985 were better than those in each corresponding month in 1984, including the month of October. MLS house sales in Canadian urban areas rose by 39.5 per cent over those of 1984.

CREA President David Hawkins has indicated that lower interest rates, stabilizing prices and favourable economic prospects have contributed to rising real estate transactions. Mr. Hawkins went on to say that "the real estate industry is not the only one to benefit from such buoyant market conditions because, when house sales are good, business improves as well for electrical appliances manufacturers, surveyors, decorators, moving companies and many other Canadians".

NATIONAL PARKS

CELEBRATION OF CENTENNIAL—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in two days we will celebrate 100 years of national parks in Canada in an atmosphere of retreat. The Government has cut $30 million from the Parks Canada capital budget. It is sitting on a marine park policy which was ready to go in the summer of 1984.

The Government has not built on what it found. Even Ellesmere Park, ready to go since September, 1984, is waiting for action. Nothing has been done about declaring the Bruce Peninsula a national park. Nothing has been done to give goals and scope to Canada's second century in parks.

Nothing has been done to establish a parks capital acquisition fund in order to ensure the continued growth of our national parks system. The Government has failed to provide leadership in resolving the issues surrounding the four mountain parks in the Rocky Mountains—where it all started.

The Government deserves little thanks for the way it has handled Canada's national parks in its celebration of the centennial thus far. There has been a lot of public relations but no substance.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

SIZE OF FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government plans to advance by one year its scheme to cut $400 million in federal transfer payments to the provinces. If this plan becomes a reality, it would fly in the face of the promise for full reinstatement of such money made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign.

I would like to read from page 98 of the Progressive Conservative campaign handbook. It says: "We would return to the 1977 funding formula . . . for post-secondary education".

No doubt the Premiers are becoming increasingly concerned about the effect that these cuts will have on the provinces. The Quebec and Atlantic Premiers have joined Manitoba and are starting to let their true feelings be known, much to the chagrin of the Prime Minister.

The Premiers and their Finance Ministers, as well as other Canadians, are beginning to realize that the Government does not consult with anybody but a polling firm. In fact, amending this legislation before its expiry period in April, 1986, instead of April, 1987, is being done without provincial consensus. It is a major unilateral action by the Conservative Government.

May I remind the Prime Minister that his Government was elected on a promise of greater agreement and co-operation with the provinces? I call upon the Government, in its meeting with the Premiers in Halifax later this week, to live up to its promises to Canadian students, to live up to its promises to people who are concerned about medicare services, and withdraw the proposal to reduce funding from medicare and post-secondary education.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF LIBERATION OF HONG KONG VETERANS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it was stated by the Liberal Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) that a journey of remembrance by a group of veterans to visit Canadian war graves is "a pure unadulterated junket". I am truly sorry that I find it necessary to stand in the House to protest that statement most vehemently. How soon we forget.

The purpose of the journey is to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of the Hong Kong prisoner of war camps. Many Canadians were incarcerated there amid difficult conditions. Many gave five years of their lives so that those who came after might enjoy the freedoms which they purchased at a very high price.

Those young Canadians, mostly in their twenties, sacrificed their youth, their health, and in many cases their lives to purchase the freedoms we enjoy. Their graves are scattered throughout the Far East, in Hong Kong, in Burma, in Singapore, and in other Far East areas. Young soldiers, airmen, seamen from Canada and allied nations, lie in many foreign fields.

We are told by the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques that a visit of remembrance to the gravesides by their fellow veterans is a junket, Mr. Speaker. How soon we forget. There may be trips that enter that category. This is not one of them. There is no apology needed for this fitting commemoration of our war dead.

It is true that there will be a bugler and a piper along, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the ways we honor our war dead buried in foreign lands.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Desjardins).

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ATTITUDE OF CERTAIN MEMBERS TO HYUNDAI COMPANY DECISION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Last weekend, Mr. Speaker, many of my fellow citizens told me they were indignant at the contemptuous behaviour of Quebec Liberal Members of Parliament concerning Hyundai's decision to build a plant in Bromont, Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, what a pitiful performance by federal MPs—led by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre)—who resorted to indecent and vulgar language to criticize our Government's constructive approach in preparing and finalizing this project.

Mr. Speaker, what an commendable way to welcome a company that will create more than 1,200 permanent jobs for Canadians!

Such outrageous behaviour on the part of Members opposite obviously shows they are jealous and envious of our Government's achievements, for they were always advocating confrontation and never cared much about job creation.

So much political partisanship proves that Quebec Liberal MPs are doing their best to remain on the Opposition benches for quite some time.

Quebecers have had enough of those lesser politicians who turn this venerable institution into a huge circus with their sordid game of upmanship.

Henceforth Quebecers will know that they can rely on the dedication and talent of Quebec Conservative Members to serve their interests well.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO AMERICAN AMBASSADOR

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the recent remarks made by the American Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Thomas Niles, are certainly disturbing. What is more disturbing is the position of the Canadian Government.

In Halifax, Ambassador Niles told the media that the United States wants to talk about the commercial implications of regional development programs as part of the so-called free trade talks. It is becoming more obvious every day that this set of negotiations is viewed by the Government of the United States as an avenue to reshape Canada in a manner more to its liking. What is even more disconcerting is the fact that the more the Canadian Government declares certain topics to be off limits in these talks, the more the United States insists they are up for discussion. Perhaps this shows how little regard the American administration has for this supposed firmness of the position of the Canadian Government.

The Ambassador softened the blow somewhat by saying that the United States will restrict itself to discussing aspects of regional development only, which, in the minds of Americans, destroy trade patterns, keeping in mind that many in the United States believe that all trade patterns in North America should be north to south. Such a position is tantamount to demanding that Canada's regions in the east and west become virtual satellites of the United States.

I urge the Government to stand firm for all of Canada and not permit the less developed regions of the country to become pawns in what is turning out to be a very mismatched chess game.

ABORTION

CONTINUANCE OF TORONTO CLINIC

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, again I am speaking out about the miscarriage of justice perpetrated by the Attorney General of Ontario in allowing Dr. Morgentaler and his associates to continue to murder helpless unborn children at their human slaughter house in Toronto.

The Attorney General has allowed this to happen even though he has appealed the acquittal on an earlier charge of performing abortions on demand.

Each day of delay in settling this matter means that more and more unborn babies have met and will meet a premature and agonizing death.

To compound the matter, the Attorney General of Ontario has issued instructions to the police forces not to interfere in any way to stop this slaughter.

● (1415)

Dr. Morgentaler and his associates are thumbing their noses at the Criminal Code of Canada, which specifically does not allow abortions to be performed on demand. The Attorney General of Ontario is ignoring the law by refusing to exercise his authority to stop any further abortions taking place during the appeal period, as he has the legal right to do.

It is time for the federal Government to intervene by whatever measures necessary to demand that the Attorney General of Ontario stop pussyfooting around, get off his but, show some leadership, uphold the law, and close down once and for all Dr. Morgentaler's wholesale murder factory.

TERRORISM

CANADIAN VICTIMS OF EGYPTIAN AIRLINER HIJACKING—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE IN RETURNING BODIES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday, in the House, he said that he and the Prime Minister had been in touch with the family of the tragic victims of the Egyptian airliner hijacking to offer all co-operation of the Government of Canada. However today, according to the press, as of last night at least the Government was refusing to make a military plane available to bring the remains of the victims back to Canada. Will the Minister say now that such a plane will be sent to Malta immediately to bring back the remains, consistent with what he said to the House yesterday on this important matter?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reports cited by the Hon. House Leader of the Opposition are false. The Government and I have been in touch directly with both the Uffelman family and with Mr. Leonard. They have both expressed their appreciation of the full co-operation of the Department of External Affairs. We have indicated to them that we will bring the bodies of the two tragic victims home, naturally at the expense of the Government of Canada. We will do that in the most expeditious way. It looks at the moment as though the quickest way would be via commercial air connections, but we will remain in the closest possible consultation with the family. I must say that I particularly regret that their sense of tragedy was added to by these inaccurate and sensational reports in the press.

USE OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE AIRCRAFT REQUESTED

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain why a Department of National Defence plane could not be used, in view of the fact that there are planes of a transport nature going back and forth to Europe? Would that not be the simples and quickest way, under the circumstances?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely the case that under the circumstances it would not be the simplest or the quickest way.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today there were reports of studies released by the Ontario Government showing that in that province alone some 281,000 jobs are endangered by a comprehensive trade agreement. We know that the Government has conducted its trade discussions under a cloak of secrecy and has refused to reveal any information. In light of these very disturbing facts, is the Government now prepared to release all information which it has on the economic impact of its proposed trade deal with the Americans, prior to the federal-provincial conference? Will the Prime Minister agree with Premier Peterson that a national data bank should be established to ensure that all regions have a full understanding of the particular problems associated with this agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to express the appreciation of the Government of Canada to the Government of Ontario for undertaking these kinds of studies. That is precisely the kind of extensive, detailed, data-oriented studies which we have been carrying on. We are delighted to see that the Government of Ontario is also doing that. There will continue to be the fullest possible exchange of information between the Governments involved. There will be discussion on Thursday, during the First Ministers' Conference, of the steps we will be taking to continue to ensure the fullest possible participation of the provinces in any trade negotiations which might ensue with the United States.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate the credit to the Ontario Government for not only doing the studies but for making them public, something the Government of Canada has refused to do with its studies. When will the Government provide Canadians with a proper and comprehensive assessment of what will be the job impact and the job losses in various sectors, so that there will be a basis for proper negotiation and that the provincial Governments, as well as all other Canadians, will not be held in the dark and hostage to the kinds of proposals being put forward by the Government?

● (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there may be some danger, if anyone listens to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, that Canadians will be held hostage to nonsense. I think the facts speak for themselves about the degree to which this process has been accompanied by extensive consultation across the country and extensive involvement of the provinces to a degree that, indeed, has not before been paralleled in our country. That is the way we have started and that is the way we intend to continue to proceed.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LOGGING ON LYELL ISLAND, B.C.—INTERVENTION BY PRIME MINISTER REQUESTED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development sent a telegram yesterday to the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia. The Prime Minister will also probably know that as of the time of Question Period today, no reply was sent back by the Attorney General of British Columbia. Considering that the situation of the Haida people and the entire community of Lyell Island remains extremely serious, will the Prime Minister himself now take direct action by contacting the Premier of the Province of British Columbia to ask the Premier to join with all other participants, including the federal Government, in reaching a negotiated settlement of this very important matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend is a little late. I have already spoken with the Premier of British Columbia. We hope to find an appropriate time to meet in Halifax during the First Ministers' Conference. As I have indicated, I will raise not only my concerns and those expressed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but those of other Members of the House as well.

DISCUSSION AGENDA INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Prime Minister for taking that action. In his conversation with the Premier of British Columbia, did the Prime Minister raise the question of the subject matter of the discussions? Is it now the intention that the Government of British Columbia will put on the agenda for discussion the Haida claim as well as the specific and immediate circumstances of Lyell Island?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend is aware of the complexity and the sensitivity of this issue. It is important, pursuant to what the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been attempting to do, that I follow through with the Premier, which I have done. Hopefully we will have a discussion in Halifax which will be beneficial.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REPORT ON OUTCOME OF TALKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, could Members of the House also assume that after that conversation that takes place on this very basic matter, the Prime Minister will report back to the House on this matter as well as other matters on which he may wish to report to us following the First Ministers' Conference?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly let my hon. friend know about any relevant developments in this matter and others as well.

FINANCE

INQUIRY IF MINISTER AUTHORIZED ATTENDANCE OF DEPUTY MINISTER AT DINNER FOR BUSINESSMEN BEHIND CLOSED DOORS IN MONTREAL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister inform the House whether he personally authorized Mr. Hartt, his own Deputy Minister, a non partisan senior official, to attend a private businessmen's dinner in Montreal in order to explain the Government's financial policy?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing unusual about the dinner that Mr. Hartt attended. It was a—

Ms. Copps: I'm organizing one right now.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was a matter of a dinner that was not partisan in nature at all. It is consistent with the attempt of the Government to discuss with some of the business leaders the policies of the Department of Finance, and to develop a greater degree of understanding of the policies of the Department of Finance.

Ms. Copps: And its loopholes.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As well, it is consistent with a range of dinner meetings which Mr. Hartt has had, and proposes to continue to have that will move in this same direction.

POLITICAL CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The dinner in question was hosted by the Progressive Conservative Party's chief fund raiser.

[English]

Will the Minister or the Prime Minister agree to extend the same courtesy to the chief fund raiser of the New Democratic Party who might like to invite Mr. Hartt to a closed door dinner session to ask questions in order to obtain a better idea of government policy? Will the same courtesy be extended to the fund raiser for the Liberal Party? Will Mr. Hartt be asked if he might undertake to accept such invitations if they are forthcoming?

An Hon. Member: If they aren't Senators!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hartt was brought up in a good Liberal household. His father was a Member of Parliament. He has helped the Leader of the Opposition from time to time in his capacity as a candidate. He is also doing great service to his country by serving a Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Hartt has demonstrated, over time, a very even-handed approach to the people with whom he wishes to meet. I am sure that if there are further requests, even from Liberal Senators, that Mr. Hartt would be pleased to respond.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree the Government needs all the help it can get.

PREPARATION OF BUDGET

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the other point I would like to raise in terms of this consultation is that we read, and perhaps the Minister can confirm, that he has commissioned a number of polls in order to get a few ideas for his forthcoming Budget. Will the Minister tell us whether or not this is true? Will he undertake to make public the results of these polls since they are being paid for by the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been certain speculation on this matter. We have been very open with practically all of the information requests which have been received by the Department of Finance. Something in the order of 85 per cent of the requests have been approved by the Department of Finance under the access to information legislation. We will continue to be forthcoming in our approach, as I have been in the wide range of consultations with a broad range of Canadians on matters relating to the Budget.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF GOVERNMENT STUDIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In my hand I have a list of all 42 studies conducted by the federal Government on Canada-U.S. trade negotiations. Given that the Ontario Government has now released its studies indicating large job threats, will the Government release these studies and permit Canadians to carry forward this debate with the complete assurance that everything is being made open and up front to all Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for repeating the question of his soul-mate from Windsor which was raised and answered earlier today.

Mr. Broadbent: Howard McCurdy asked a question?

Mr. Axworthy: Do you want to rearrange that a little bit?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. These fellows all look and sound the same to me. I apologize for that.

Mr. Axworthy: You are as confused on this as you are on the trade issue. Confusion reigns, obviously.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry speaks of confusion. His is contagious.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Axworthy: This is the way to conduct negotiations.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is Tom when we need him?

Mr. Axworthy: We are waiting for the answer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tom's brother's confusion is contagious.

The Government of Canada has co-operated extensively with the provinces in terms of the exchange of information. As I said earlier, I welcome the decision of the Government of Ontario to undertake these types of studies. I hope other provincial Governments will also do that. There will be discussions on Thursday at the First Ministers' Conference with respect to the degree and the means by which the provinces can be fully involved in any negotiations which might ensue. That will naturally deal with the question of the degree of the exchange of information.

● (1430)

Mr. Langdon: I think the Minister is perhaps at a loss for words because the details of his studies have finally leaked out.

AUTOPACT INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister confirm, despite promises to the contrary in this House of Commons, that one study which the federal Government has commissioned, by C.D. Arthur & Associates, is to "prepare an assessment of the issues involved in folding the Autopact into a new trade agreement"?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will put the answer in two tranches. First, I have replied with respect to the position of the Government regarding the Autopact earlier in the House, I believe in answer to a question put by the Hon. Member. Second, with regard to the Hon. Member's specific question about a particular study, I will have to see what is the subject matter of that particular study and I will, naturally, advise the Hon. Member of the subject matter.

NATIONAL TRAINING ACT

PURCHASE OF JOB TRAINING FROM PROVINCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We know that several provinces are angry and feel deceived with the federal Government's decision to cut by 50 per cent its purchase of job training from the provinces and that the provinces intend to raise this at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax later this week. Considering the rhetoric of the Prime Minister on many occasions that he supports job training, would he make a commitment today, before he goes to Halifax, to cancel those cuts in job training and maintain federal Government budgets and provincial participation at the same level as last year? Would the Prime Minister make that commitment before he goes to Halifax?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the House will be aware, the agreements under the National Training Act will expire on March 31 of next year. Negotiations are now under way with the provinces and I can advise the Hon. Member that there are a number of proposals on the table. My provincial counterparts and I will be meeting again in mid-December to continue these discussions.

Mr. Allmand: As far as I know the conference in Halifax is a First Minister's Conference and the Prime Minister is responsible for the policy of the Government. It is that kind of evasion in answering which is the reason that 52 per cent of Canadians—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Allmand: —disapprove of the Government's performance.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): And 77 per cent voted against you.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF PURCHASE LEVEL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): I am asking the Prime Minister if he will cancel the proposed cuts in the purchase of job training from the provinces and maintain those programs at the same level as last year, as many provinces want? Will he do that before he goes to Halifax?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the emphasis of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is on training.

Mr. Allmand: Nobody believes you.

Miss MacDonald: And there will be more money spent on training by this Government than there has ever been in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Fifty per cent cut-backs.

Miss MacDonald: I just want the Hon. Member to be aware of the new opportunities which this offers for Canadians—

Mr. Allmand: Convince the provinces of that.

Miss MacDonald: —and he should not always take a negative attitude toward such opportunities.

Oral Questions

LUMBER EXPORTS—THREAT FROM UNITED STATES PROTECTIONIST LEGISLATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for External Affairs. It concerns lumber exports to the United States. Recently in Brockville the Minister stated publicly that U.S. protectionist legislation such as the Gibbons Bill could cost Canadians 60,000 jobs, at least 30,000 of which would be lost in British Columbia. I might add that these are figures his own staff suggested I avoid using.

Would the Minister explain to the House why he has steadfastly refused to put in place a more substantial lobbying effort in the United States to balance the protectionist views with those of U.S. consumers who have a stated preference for using Canadian SPF lumber?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): First, the Hon. Member will learn as he spends more time in the House that one shouldn't always accept the advice of staff.

Mr. Broadbent: Ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: Especially on travel itineraries.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not many of us have had quite the size of staff to reject advice from as has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member will know, because we have exchanged correspondence on the matter, that there has in fact been a very substantial program mounted by the Government of Canada, using our consulates and our embassies in the United States. There has been contact with a number of congressional groups and interest groups associated with consumers of lumber in the United States, and some 400 publications. That has resulted in considerable support in the United States for the Canadian position in any disagreements we might have with the United States on lumber questions.

Mr. Fulton: I won't comment on the Minister's staff, Mr. Speaker.

PROPOSED UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Senior U.S. Government officials continue to call for voluntary restrictions on softwood exports to the United States, export taxes, and taxes on reforestation. I am sure the Minister knows that these matters are before the U. S. Cabinet this afternoon.

Would the Minister advise the House on his position regarding such restrictions and tell us whether he is prepared in any way to consider U. S. protectionist proposals against our largest free trading industry as a pre-condition to free trade talks with the U.S.?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in no way.

MEDICAL CARE

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax later this week. How can Canadians trust the Government's commitment to the standard of medicare when its own Minister of National Health and Welfare in a speech yesterday indicated that medical costs had to be curbed, and the Minister of Finance concurred with that feeling earlier this year when, in his Budget, he slashed $2 billion in transfer payments to provinces for the establishment and funding of medicare? Is this part of the Tories' hidden agenda to dismantle medicare?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first the Hon. Member is dead wrong. The increases which will be provided by this Government both to post-secondary education and medicare are, and will be, substantial during the five-year period about which we are talking. There is no suggestion of a cut. There will be substantial increases.

The Hon. Member should get that through his head because the rest of his question is totally false when he says that is his understanding.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, how can Canadians trust that statement by the Minister of Finance—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: —when, in his own budget documents tabled on the night of May 23, he indicated to Canadians that there would be no cuts in transfer payments for post-secondary education and medicare and it took a leaked document by his own Department to show the truth to Canadians that he intends to cut not just $2 billion—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Frith: —but cumulatively $5 billion over the next four years?

An Hon. Member: Deny that.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Again, Mr. Speaker, the point the Hon. Member doesn't understand—and I don't think he will ever get it through his head—is the fact that there will be substantial increases in post-secondary education and health care. The increases will be faster than the rate of inflation, faster than the rate of all other Government spending, and much much faster than the rate of Government program spending—

Ms. Copps: You won't be around to see it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —all of which are designed to ensure that we can continue to have a first rate health system and a frist rate post-secondary education system in this country.

An Hon. Member: Another broken promise.

HEALTH

POSSIBLE USE OF DEPO-PROVERA AS CONTRACEPTIVE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the possibility of his Department giving approval to the use of Depo-Provera for use as a female contraceptive. In view of the fact that some 13 national organizations have come together, along with a host of community organizations, in opposition to the use of this contraceptive, will the Minister assure the House that there will be full public hearings held across the country with respect to the concerns of those organizations, and many other Canadians, about the possible dangers of this contraceptive so that those groups can have full public input into that decision?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member, and the House, that there is a regulatory process. I have heard much in this House that Ministers are to be very careful about interfering in the regulatory process. I say to the Hon. Member that I have not had, as Minister, a report from the appropriate committee, nor a recommendation from the appropriate committee, nor a recommended decision from the appropriate committee. But I have gone one step further. I have discussed the matter of whether or not we could have the input. I have said to the Hon. Member, and I have said to the public through the media yesterday, that if there are groups which would like to meet with officials as they go through the regulatory process, that could be arranged.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, that simply is not good enough. There is a place for the public to have input on decisions which will adversely affect a large number of Canadians. Will the Minister not reconsider that decision and agree that full public hearings are required where the public can examine a decision which can adversely affect the lives not only of mothers and children but future generations?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is good enough, because it is exactly what he asked us to do. It is good enough because if there is to be public input it can come through the regulatory process. I am going to keep the regulatory process sacrosanct, as I think he has generally asked me to do.

The second point is that no decision has been made and no recommendation received. The appropriate time for that kind of input is exactly the time I suggested to him.

The last point I want to make is that he should not, and I hope he does not, make the argument that this Minister or his Department has compromised on health and safety or that there will be any such compromise.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

AID FOR NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMAN FOLLOWING DONATION OF KIDNEY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands-Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment. Yesterday she indicated to the House that special efforts would be made to ensure support for Harvey Hawkins, the Newfoundland man who is recovering in hospital after donating a kidney to his younger sister. Can the Minister provide any new information on the success of those efforts?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned yesterday that I had been in touch with the provincial Governments concerned. I can advise the House that yesterday Mr. Hawkins received assistance under the Canada Assistance Plan and provincial plans which is at least equal to the amount he would have received from unemployment insurance. As well, arrangements have been made for his family to be brought to Toronto to be with him. I am sure that we all agree on wishing Mr. Hawkins a speedy recovery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

GRANT AWARDED TO LOBSTER COMPANY PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I remind him that on September 9 he said that the ultimate responsibility for the conflict of interest guidelines rested with him. A grant worth millions of dollars was awarded to Clearwater Lobster Ltd. last week, or John Risley, depending on whose press release one reads. The Minister of Supply and Services has been a director and the secretary of the company, as well as being the company's lawyer, has owned shares in the company, and his son is employed by the company. In view of that would the Prime Minister not agree that there is at least a possible breach of the principles of the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in detail last week. I am surprised that the Hon. Member persists in levelling those false allegations across the floor of the House after last week's explanation to him. I am as much surprised by that as I am by journalists who make that kind of accusation against a Minister and yet refuse to apologize when the facts they base their allegations on are proven to be utterly false.

BENEFITS RECEIVED BY COMPANY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in view of the fact that the Prime Minister does not want to answer. Could he tell us which of those things we have said today are false when they have all been admitted? Could he also tell us why it is this company has received benefits twice since this Government has been in office and at least once before under a previous Conservative Government—three times in the two short periods of time the Tories were in office? Is it only a coincidence that Tories are giving other Tories these kinds of grants?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Hon. Member almost made a mistake and used the word "Liberal" instead of "Tory" in the utter garbage which constitutes the preamble and the question. However, that is in keeping with the reputation he has in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The question has been answered and answered fully.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING—REPORTED CASE OF SASKATOON DISCOUNTER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the discussions he had before he brought forward his proposals to deal with tax discounting was he made aware by officials of his Department of the tax discounter in Saskatoon who sought to borrow $1 million from a bank, at 12 per cent interest, in order to relend the money at real interest rates of up to 180 per cent to people who wanted their tax refunds? If he was, what can he do to ensure that low-income Canadians can borrow at commercial interest rates using their income tax returns as collateral?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think that last week we announced a policy that contains a number of provisions that should be encouraging for Canadians, and especially for Canadians on low incomes.

REQUEST THAT TAXPAYERS HAVE ACCESS TO BANK INTEREST RATE CHARGES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as far as I can tell, the only people who are made happy by the Minister's announcement are the tax discounters. Would he not agree that consumers would welcome a meaningful choice, which the Minister talks about so frequently, between paying a tax discounter a 100 per cent interest rate and getting a legitimate financial institution to lend them money at 12 per cent?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, with this policy we ensured that the discounting service would remain available to Canadians while at the same time introducing measures to discourage abuse, thereby protecting consumers, and again, consumers on low incomes who need this kind of service.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—RELEASE OF WATER TEST RESULTS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The entire community of Sarnia-Lambton would like to set the record straight. All municipalities, industries, and citizens totally support the ongoing scientific tests and evaluations of the St. Clair River bed. Can the Minister assure the citizens of Sarnia-Lambton that he will make every effort to ensure that the progress reports of these scientific evaluations will be communicated in a scientific manner, which will avoid the possibility that this information can be misconstrued or inaccurately reported by others?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, that is pretty well the policy my Department and I have adopted and followed. Indeed, on seven separate occasions we provided technical briefings to the media and through them to the public, and we released detailed information, both scientific and general. That is in addition to numerous informal efforts toward the end identified by the Hon. Member. The rest, of course, is up to the media and the public. However, I think in general there has been fairness and balance in the response by the public and the media to a very difficult and complex scientific issue.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

INQUIRY CONCERNING INDUSTRIES TO WHICH SAINT-LÉONARD-ANJOU WORKERS MAY MOVE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Workers in the shoe industry in Quebec were shocked at the statement made by the Minister for International Trade who made it clear they could leave the industry. Where does the Right Hon. Prime Minister want to send the 1,000 workers in the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, whose jobs can now be added to the 5,000 jobs lost in Montreal East?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to reply to the Hon. Member. At no time did I ever make such a statement, nor would this Government ever suggest that. I would remind the House that the tribunal found that in those areas where quotas were removed no further protection was required. In the event there was any minimal loss of jobs, the Government has set up an excellent safety net of measures to protect and assist workers in the event of any job loss.

INQUIRY WHY MINISTER DID NOT LISTEN TO CANADIANS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I would ask the Minister to read his own comments in the newspaper La Presse. Furthermore, I would like to know why he failed to listen to the eight out of ten Canadians who want quotas, in order to create 6,000 new jobs and at the same time safeguard 20,000 existing jobs. Are foreign interests going to prevail over jobs for Canadians?

● (1450)

[English]

Ms. Copps: Foreign interests over Canadian interests.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sheila, your microphone is off.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I certainly had some trouble with the translation that I received of this question. I can certainly assure the Hon. Member that foreign interests are not taking over any aspects of our shoe industry. The tribunal found that our industry is quite competitive. I have the greatest faith that those industries and the people who work in them can compete with anybody in the world, given the chance.

Mr. Broadbent: All the people in the industries disagree with you.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On a couple of occasions already the Prime Minister made a commitment to a parliamentary review of order in council appointments. Is he aware that the press has indicated that a short list of candidates for president of Canada Post is now in his office? Would he take the opportunity to use this as a test case for parliamentary review of Order in Council appointments and refer the short list to the Committee on Transport?

Miss MacDonald: Are you applying?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity which the question raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James gives me to remind the House that the Government, in its progressive way, is coming forward with something which previous Governments had not thought appropriate. That is, after the beginning of the new year we want to institute the recommendation of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, which was chaired by the distinguished Member for St. John's East, which sets out the procedure which will be followed with respect to Order in Council appointments.

Mr. Boudria: That's enough.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Government is going further than the recommendations in that report. All Order in Council appointments will be made available for scrutiny by a House of Commons committee.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW PRIOR TO APPOINTMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the problems within the Post Office have been very difficult for Governments to come to grips with, does the Prime Minister recognize that a parliamentary review might be of assistance in finding a competent president for Canada Post? Will he also resist the pressure to make a patronage appointment? Will he take action now by referring this Order in Council appointment to the parliamentary Committee on Transport rather than simply satisfying himself with platitudes and putting it off until the future?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, after what the NDP has just done in Manitoba on patronage it takes an awful lot of nerve for an NDPer to ask that question. "NDP Minister's Brother Heads Manitoba Agency". How do you like that for scandalous patronage? An NDP candidate should be ashamed of himself for even raising it.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

An Hon. Member: Socialists are so pure.

Mr. Frith: There's no room at the trough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We hear anti-patronage comments coming from the Grits, of all people. There ought to be a bolt of lightning to strike them all right on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Mulroney: They are giving a brand new meaning to "temerity". You can be sure that if we wanted to do a favour to a friend, we would not make him chairman of Canada Post.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: You should appoint an NDP.

Mr. Deans: Don't you dare appoint a New Democrat.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What's Howard Pawley doing after the next election?

Mr. Deans: Running the Government of Manitoba.

Mr. de Jong: That statement is going to haunt you.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF LIBERATION OF HONG KONG VETERANS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The Minister will know that it was reported in the press that the Member for Saint-Jacques said that the pilgrimage the Minister is leading to the Far East later this week is "a pure, unadulterated junket". Would the Minister be kind enough to advise the House of the real purpose of this visit?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this pilgrimage is to pay homage to the more than 1,000 Canadians who gave their lives for their country in the Far East during the Second World War. The delegation will travel to Hong Kong, Burma, Singapore, and Tokyo, and will attend remembrance ceremonies at the cemeteries where our war dead are buried.

It has been claimed that this pilgrimage is nothing more than a junket. That is an insult to the memory of those who gave their lives for their country, and to the widows and mothers who lost loved ones in this theatre of war.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHEESE PRODUCERS—ALLEGED THEFT OF IMPORT CERTIFICATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He is, no doubt, aware of the theft by a Government employee of import certificates for cheese which, according to the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, has cost producers over $5.6 million in the past year. Is the Government prepared to reimburse these producers for this loss of income since it was caused by a government error?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I wonder whether this is the proper forum in which to raise it, but I am aware of the situation. I checked on the matter in the latter part of last week and can only say at this point that it is under investigation.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us why, when the Government makes a mistake as it did in the case of EEC imports of beef or, in this case, certificates for cheese imports, it always requires that the farmers pay the cost rather than the Government itself which made the error in the first place?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should utilize this opportunity to set the record straight. The Hon. Member makes some suggestion that we made a mistake with regard to EEC imports. The fact of the matter is that it was his Government which made the mistake. We took the action, and he should check his facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR RELATIONS

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—WORK PERFORMED BY CREWS OF FOREIGN SHIPS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and is with regard to a situation which is presently occurring in Saint John, New Brunswick. Will the Minister take steps now to inform the port authorities and the stevedoring companies in Saint John, New Brunswick, that it is illegal for the crews of foreign ships to do on-shore work in Canada without authorized work permits?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, because I always pay such very proper atttention to the representations which the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt makes, I will undertake to investigate that matter immediately.

Ms. Jewett: What's going on here?

Mr. Riis: What have you been doing, John?

Mr. Axworthy: That's the kiss of death.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this situation is occurring during lunch hours and breaks when Canadian workers should be doing the work, would the Minister send an instructive letter to individual ships in dock indicating that they are not to have the crews of foreign ships doing such on-shore work?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would do me the courtesy of giving me, in writing, all the details which he has just enunciated.

SHIPBUILDING

CN MARINE—PROPOSED PURCHASE OF SHIPS FOR EAST COAST SERVICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will realize that the Canadian shipbuilding industry is in perhaps its worst slump in 40 years. I understand there is a proposal before him at the present time which would allow CN Marine to purchase offshore two ships for the East Coast. Will the Minister indicate to the House if he will allow this to take place in view of the fact that thousands of Canadians in the shipbuilding yards across the country are unemployed? Will he assure us that Canadian workers will be given the preference rather than foreign shipbuilding companies?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that Transport Canada has in excess of 20 vessels being built in Canadian shipyards, which constitutes roughly 95 per cent of the shipyard building activity. There will be further work with respect to the refits.

I think the Hon. Member is also aware that I have a mandate to provide services at the lowest possible cost. These are the factors that will be taken into consideration in reaching a final decision with respect to the acquisition of the two vessels in question.

PRIVILEGE

PROPRIETY OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE PARTICIPATING IN DEBATE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this morning I gave the Chair notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege in connection with the participation in debate in this Chamber yesterday by the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest). I intend to show, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke acted in a manner that is contrary to the usual behaviour of a Presiding Officer, who is expected to show complete impartiality. In my opinion, he failed to do so, by the very fact of taking part in debate in the House. Furthermore, I intend to show that his comments were partisan and therefore unworthy of an Acting Speaker of the House of Commons.

By his actions he breached the privilege of all Members of this House who, on the basis of the Standing Orders and parliamentary tradition, have every right to expect the Presiding Officer to observe absolutely strict impartiality.

First of all, if we consider his participation in debate, according to tradition a Presiding Officer may not take part in debate in the House. This is clearly established by parliamentary jurisprudence, and I want to quote from Beauchesne's, Citation 117, which deals with the Speaker as Presiding Officer of the House of Commons. Citation 117 of Beauchesne's, Fifth Edition, page 38, reads as follows, and I quote:

The chief characteristics attached to the office of Speaker in the House of Commons are authority and impartiality.

Further on in the same paragraph it says, and I quote:

Confidence in the impartiality of the Speaker is an indispensable condition of the successful working of procedure, and many conventions exist which have as their object, not only to ensure the impartiality of the Speaker but also, to ensure that his impartiality is generally recognized. He takes no part in debate in the House. He votes only when the voices are equal—

I also would like to bring to the attention of—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. When a matter is being raised that is not a point of order but a question of privilege, which is a very serious claim, I believe he knows that it is my practice to ask the Member to give, very early, the case of privilege that is being claimed.

I believe the Hon. Member knows full well that it is improper at this time to argue the case that one would like to argue if the matter were before the House. Presumably, at this time one is simply trying to put the matter which I must decide is a prima facie question of privilege, without comment about the behaviour or actions of any Member.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I indicated right at the beginning . . . There is a lot of noise in the House. I admit it is difficult for you to hear me, but right at the beginning of my remarks I indicated the two points on which I rest my argument to the effect that, in his capacity as Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke has breached the privileges of Hon. Members.

I said he did so, first by taking part in a partisan debate on the floor of the House and, second, by making remarks—and I should want to quote them, otherwise Your Honour will find it hard to appreciate the crux of the problem—which were clearly partisan with respect to some Members of this House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that he may not make any comment whatsoever about the behaviour or activity of any Member, save on a substantive charge.

I take it that the Hon. Member wishes to rise on a question of privilege to present a case to me with regard to the general capacity of a deputy Speaker to participate in debate.

If the Hon. Member is attempting to raise a question of privilege about what another Member said in the House, then he is beginning to comment about another Member. He knows that I would have to find him out of order when making any comment about a Member and I must ask him to stay with the generalities of his question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, let me try it in another way and in the other language. I believe it is a basic principle of any Member of the House to make sure that an occupant of the Chair is impartial. If I am not able to demonstrate that this principle has been breached, what am I trying to do here? The privilege of Members has been breached.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to help the Hon. Member, not be difficult. The Hon. Member may have an opinion and wish to make a charge about what another Member has done. He may do that with any Member. However, I believe he knows our practice with regard to the route one takes for making that allegation.

I take it that he wishes to raise a question of privilege as to whether a Deputy Speaker may participate in any debate in any way. I understand that that is the only issue he would want to raise under a question of privilege in order to make a prima facie case that there may or may not be a question of privilege.

However, if his concern is with the content or behaviour of a particular Member and not with the general application, I suggest that he is verging on the area of comment about a Member that would make it more than a question of privilege.

I am prepared to hear his question of privilege but I believe he knows that I cannot hear it in the context of a personal comment on the behaviour of another Member.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I thought that I was remaining general by quoting parliamentary jurisprudence. That is where I was stopped, with all due respect. I was proposing, after quoting jurisprudence, to explain to the Chair how an Hon. Member has gone contrary to this jurisprudence. I would then let Your Honour judge whether there was a prima facie case of a breach of privilege. If Your Honour were to agree, I have a motion which I would then like to move.

In my opinion, that appears to be the normal procedure for dealing with these cases. I would ask for the indulgence of the Chair because my comments will only take one or two minutes more. I believe I would be able to shed some light on what I am attempting to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was about to prove that, in light of parliamentary case-law, Acting Speakers who replace Your Honour in the Chair must also abide by the rules of impartiality.

For your information, I should like to quote Citation 133 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

Deputy Speakers have not taken a consistent position with respect to attendance at their political party's functions. During divisions they have voted but—

—and I draw your attention to this sentence—

—but have not attempted to participate otherwise in the debates of the House.

● (1510)

[English]

Now I would like to add, Mr. Speaker, that we inherited this legacy from the mother of Parliament and that the same policy has been adhered to in England. For example, let me quote from Erskine May's Twentieth Edition, page 240. It refers to the Chairman of Ways and Means, which is the equivalent of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in this Chamber. It reads:

> The Chairman of Ways and Means during his occupation of that office follows the same tradition of abstention from Party controversy as the Speaker.

[Translation]

Now, if you want me to get down to the point, the fact is that there was flagrant abuse in taking part in the debate, in the sense that extremely partisan remarks were made, and it seems to me to be the thrust of my argument. I would like to draw Your Honour's attention to what the Hon. Member said in words and sentences in the course of his remarks.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think I know the point the Hon. Member is trying to make.

I think I understand fairly well the point he wants me to consider. But if he wants me to include in my . . . I think he has made an argument concerning our traditions, what he thinks are our traditions, respecting the appropriateness of an Acting Speaker taking part in debates.

[English]

If he goes further now into a comment about what the Member said, then the Member is entering into the area of comment about another Member—

An Hon. Member: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Yes he is, I suggest.

Mr. Gauthier: Impartiality.

Mr. Speaker: Let me put to the Hon. Member that if he believes something was said yesterday which affects the impartiality of the Chair, in his view, and he is then saying that that would become a question of privilege, it would not.

Ms. Copps: What would it be?

Mr. Speaker: Any Member of this House may speak from his seat in the House in any way he or she chooses. I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member takes this matter seriously and I believe the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest), and other Members take these questions seriously, but if the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques is trying to base a question of privilege on the existence of an intervention, then I need to hear how he proposes I should consider that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have read the jurisprudence related to impartiality, Mr. Speaker. I think it has been established, and I think all Hon. Members recognize that as a start. Now I think I have to go into some detail to explain that one Hon. Member was not impartial. We are not talking about an ordinary Hon. Member; we are talking about an Hon. Member who is a presiding officer. That is the point. Otherwise debate is debate, and I understand that. We are talking about a presiding officer and that is my point. I think I have been clear from the beginning.

Mr. Speaker: Let me see if I can help the Hon. Member. What he is raising is not a question of privilege. He is making an objection to an intervention having been made. If he feels very strongly on that subject, he has other recourses that are open to him, notably some form of substantive motion, if that is his choice.

It is clear from the record, from our history, that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke is by no means the first Deputy Speaker to rise in his place and speak in this House.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What did he say though?

Mr. Speaker: In fact, Deputy Speaker Lamoureux did speak once when he was Deputy Speaker. Clearly it cannot be the content of a Member's speech that gives rise, by its very existence, to a question of privilege from another Hon. Member.

Our history and traditions are very clear that if a Member wishes to make a comment in any way about what another Member has done, then that reference must be by substantive motion, not by raising a question of privilege. I think if the Hon. Member looks at the citations on that, he will find that that goes back to Speaker Michener, Speaker Lamoureux and Speaker Jerome. I want to be very clear about this. There is not, in my view, in our precedents a question of privilege here.

On the issue of the right of a deputy Speaker to speak as a Member, there is no question about our rules speaking strongly about what the Speaker may or may not do. But the rules are silent on what a deputy Speaker may do. Assistant deputy Speakers have spoken in the past, and this deputy Speaker also chose to speak. I am subject to some pretty severe constraints as the Hon. Member knows, and must be.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that the House may wish to consider whether it wants in future to change the constraints or to create constraints that apply to deputy Speakers, then the House would be free to do that, but I can find no rule, that I know of, that would prevent a Member of the House, having been asked to be a deputy, deputy, deputy Speaker, from speaking. Whether one should or should not do so is a question of judgment that various deputy Speakers have exercised in various ways.

If the Hon. Member wants to pursue the matter, either the subject of the impartiality of the Chair or that of the conduct of another Member, either of those matters have to be pursued by a substantive motion. I think the Hon. Member knows that.

I am saying this because I think the Hon. Member knows from our practices that I need to hear some foundation for a question of privilege. I am trying to say that so far I have not heard it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Member who has been speaking has a motion to propose.

Mr. Speaker: He only gets to propose the motion if I find there is a prima facie case of privilege.

I should not be doing this here, perhaps, but the Hon. Member has another route. If he has a motion he wishes to move, he is presumably asking me to find a prima facie case of privilege, thus allowing him to put his motion now, ahead of other business. That is what is done when one seeks something through the Chair. I cannot find, on the argument that has been made, prima facie grounds of privilege that would warrant putting the matter to the House at this time.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I understand you are saying that where there is a question of the impartiality of the occupant of the Chair, there is another route to be followed and, therefore, you are not saying that this route cannot be followed in the case of the deputy Speaker in question.

Mr. Speaker: I am trying to be as clear as I can be. Whenever the question that is being raised is the conduct of a Member of the House in his capacity as a Member or in any other capacity as a presiding officer, our traditions have been that privilege is not the route by which that motion can be put. Is that clear to Hon. Members? In other words, if the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has a substantive charge he wishes to make about or against the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke, the only route that I know by which he can do that is through a substantive motion on notice. That is the only way that I know in which he can do it. It has been ruled many times not to be admissible through a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I get the impression that, although I quoted the Standing Orders at length, Your Honour does not seem prepared to acknowledge that we are dealing with a prima facie case of privilege.

An Hon. Member on my left is telling me: Sit down, that's enough nonsense from you! That is an interesting comment, Mr. Speaker, particularly as we are talking about the basic principles of this institution and the privileges of Hon. Members. I consider that I was not given the opportunity to express everything I have to say, for I was upbraided a few times. Therefore I will not say anything more about the remarks of the Hon. Member, but I will stop right here and ask Your Honour to rule whether or not, in your Honour's opinion, there was a breach of privilege. Should Your Honour agree, I have a motion here which I am prepared to—

Mr. Speaker: Let me be as clear as I can be: No, there is no question of privilege in my view. Perhaps there is a question of convention. There may be some question or some comment with regard to our practices and our conventions, but on the basis of what has been put to me, I can find neither a question of privilege nor a point of order.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the name of all Hon. Members of the House, we must address the Chair in the position it occupies. From now on, Hon. Members will address the Chair in the position it indeed occupies. If he happens to be the assistant deputy chairman of committees, we will address him as such, not as president, chairman or "Mr. Speaker".

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member intends or means no disrepect by that comment. It can be our practice, as it is in Westminster, to refer to the occupant of the chair as the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker or whatever office he or she holds in this chair. Maybe I am indulging myself a little when I say that I certainly think it would be helpful over time if the House were to consider some of these questions with regard to all occupants of the deputy Speaker positions. I frankly think they are put in a difficult position because there is no clarity in our rules with regard to what it is they are entitled to do. I am not one of them and have never been one of them, but I am quite properly bound by the rules not to speak. That is both a protection for the House and a protection for me.

Mr. Gauthier: I agree with that.

Mr. Speaker: If the House wishes to do something further which would protect the deputy Speakers, both for their sake and for the House, that may be something the House would wish to do. However, until the House speaks on that matter, it seems to me that it would not be fair, if I may now go a little further, to say, without some comment from the House, that a Member of the House looses his or her right to be a Member of the House simply by agreeing to take on an office. Therefore, let me leave it at that, if I may.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I draw to your attention and to that of the House the Standing Order which says that when a Deputy Speaker or an assistant deputy Speaker is in the chair, that individual sits in the chair with all the powers and authority of the Speaker himself or herself. In fact, Hansard does not even identify exactly who is in the chair. Therefore, I think it follows that the Standing Orders, at least by implication, impose upon the occupant of the chair, even if that person is not the Speaker, the same standards of impartiality and, above all, the appearance of impartiality which is imposed upon yourself. It is our submission that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) has not lived up to that high standard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Now the Hon. Member is seeking through a point of order to make an allegation. I repeat, if the Hon. Member wishes to pursue that, he knows his rights and responsibilities in doing that. Everybody who sits in this chair becomes imbued with the responsibilities and the rights of the Speaker and, therefore, certainly has the obligation to be impartial. Everybody who has occupied the chair in a deputy Speaker capacity, Liberal, Conservative, NDP or ordinary Member, has done a service to the House.

Let me say to the Hon. Member that it is only I myself who when he leaves this chair remains, outside the confines of this structure, the Speaker as referred to in the Standing Orders. I, therefore, remind the Hon. Member of what I said just a few minutes ago and suggest that he may want to consider something else.

ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE ON CHILD CARE—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address the House this afternoon on the establishment of a parliamentary task force on child care. The necessary technical motions will be moved at the appropriate time by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

The Government formally announced its intention to establish such a parliamentary task force in the Speech from the Throne last November. Over past months, the Government has given very serious thought to the role of this task force and the complex questions which it will be asked to confront. I am pleased that we are now in a position to proceed with this inquiry into the issue of child care and the changing needs of Canadian families.

In general, the purpose of the parliamentary task force is to seek public input and to make recommendations on the issue of child care as it relates to families in Canada. This inquiry is a vital step in the development of directions for child care, because currently there is limited consensus on this issue among Canadians. It is generally recognized that the changing circumstances of many families, including the growing number of two-earner couples and the increased incidence of single mothers, has raised concerns about the issue of child care and the appropriate role of the federal Government in this area. However, there is no agreement among Canadians about what should be done to meet the changing needs of families and children with respect to child care. Accordingly, this parliamentary inquiry will offer an important opportunity to examine the issue of child care with a view to pursuing a national consensus.

As we will see from the terms of reference, we are asking the inquiry to look at the care of children in a broad context, which includes consideration of the child care requirements of all children, not just children with working parents. Thus, the members of the task force and other participants are encouraged to go beyond the narrow issues which are frequently associated with daycare services. Rather than focusing the inquiry on an analysis of existing child care or related programs, the terms of reference invite participants to undertake a fresh review of the questions associated with child care and to put forward innovative alternatives for reform.

We are launching this task force in response to public concerns that the needs of families and children are changing. These concerns and the pressures for reform are frequently summarized under the three themes of affordability, quality and availability.

In addressing concerns with respect to affordability, I would hope the task force can highlight and resolve some of the basic questions about the costs of child care and how these costs should be shared, for example, among families, employers, Governments and other groups that have an interest and responsibility in respect of child care. Also, there is the important question of whether the future direction of child care is to be developed as an issue concerning the children of working women only, or whether it should also relate to the children of mothers who forgo employment earnings to provide full-time parental care for their young children.

The second theme, that of quality in child care, highlights concerns about the well-being and protection of children in non-parental arrangements. In particular, there is the difficult issue of what constitutes quality care in general and in the case of a particular child. Also, there is the question of whether or not it is appropriate or desirable for Government initiatives to encourage the use of one type of care over other types of arrangements.

Third, the theme of availability focuses attention on the factors affecting the ability of the supply of child care services to meet demand. To some, this theme highlights concerns about the situation of latchkey children and the special problems of families in rural locations. It also raises questions about the Government's role in expanding the supply of child care services directly, relative to other sources of supply, including employers and community groups.

In general, the consideration of these and other concerns and questions are central to the development of an agreement or a consensus on future directions and alternatives for a child care policy.

Clearly, the task force on child care is being asked to consider a very complex issue. Therefore, we have given careful consideration to the details contained in its terms of reference. As you may note, Mr. Speaker, the inquiry has been asked to develop its conclusions and recommendations within a broad framework with particular reference to a variety of factors such as the preferences of parents in providing care for their children and the economic implications of child care.

The task force has also been instructed to address the relationship between child care needs and the special needs and requirements of various families. These special circumstances include such factors as marital status, disability and the economic position of the family. However, the terms of reference are sufficienty flexible to enable the members of the task force to add other criteria which they determine to be relevant to the issue of child care.

In addition, the members of the task force are specifically instructed to take account of the shared interest and responsibility in this area among families, communities, the private sector and the public sector. Of particular relevance here is the role and views of provincial Governments. The provincial delivery of child care services is clearly an important consideration in the development of federal alternatives in the area of child care, a consideration which the task force will have to recognize and address. I have had discussions with my provincial counterparts and I feel that it is important that the point be stressed that the task force is looking forward to receiving ideas that will come from the public and from those members who will be charged with a difficult task keeping in mind as well the role the provinces play in this important field.

To enhance the efforts already undertaken in the child care debate, the parliamentary task force has also been requested to give consideration to the report and the studies of the ministerial task force chaired by Dr. Katie Cooke which should be reporting shortly to my colleague, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean). Although the Cooke task force was instructed to focus on the specific issues of child care services and parental leave, its analysis is expected to provide a useful input into the work of the parliamentary task force.

To ensure that the parliamentary task force is well informed, the inquiry will have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff. The members of the task force can draw upon existing studies and reports as well as initiate further research and analysis which will assist them in fulfilling their mandate. However, one of the most important functions of the parliamentary task force will involve its ability to undertake public hearings and consultations on the issue of child care. I sincerely hope that many Canadians will participate by considering this very important social issue and informing the task force of their views.

As you may note from the terms of reference, Mr. Speaker, the task force is being asked to report to Parliament within a year. Because of the scope and complexity of this issue, I believe that this length of time will be absolutely necessary to the achievement of a comprehensive and balanced study. I fully expect that the coming year will be a very busy time for each of the members of this inquiry.

In conclusion, I would like to urge all Members of the House to support this proposal to establish a parliamentary task force on child care. I am confident that with these terms of reference, this inquiry will be able to provide valuable conclusions and recommendations regarding the future of child care.

Finally, much has been said both in the House and in public regarding the appropriate responses in modern society to support for the role of the family. We know that in many cases, families have changed from their traditional roles and traditional make-ups. It will be important for the task force to analyse the role of the traditional family as well as the changes to the traditional family in modern society.

As the family is strengthened and as the role of the family is officially recognized by the Government not only in words but in reports to the House and the Minister, I think it is absolutely essential that we send to the public signals that this is happening. All of us who deal with social policy can recognize very clearly that the very best support system and the very best assurance that children will grow up to be full-fledged members of society is the maintenance of the cornerstone of society, the family. I welcome the comments of other Members of the House and hope that within a year's time, the House will benefit from their views and the future of Canada's families will be guaranteed.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that at last, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has announced the creation of a task force on child care. However, I may add it was high time the task force materialized for, as the Minister pointed out earlier, and rightly so, the task force was first announced in the Throne Speech in November 1984.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed high time, because on March 8 of this year, in answer to a query from my hon. friend from Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) about when the child care task force would be established, the Minister of State for Immigration and Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) said that the order and terms of reference of the task force on child care would be announced in a matter of weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I think that from now on, when we hear it will take a matter of weeks, we can assume it will take quite some time. Today, the Progressive Conservative Government has announced the creation of a task force on child care, but I may point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the various parties concerned in this area are very anxious to read Katie Cooke's recommendations on the same subject.

I think it is too bad the Minister did not send us the task force's order of reference along with his speech, which would have made it easier for me to comment on the Minister's statement. I therefore intend to speak to the principles set forth in the speech we have just heard.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare defined the terms of reference of the task force in very broad terms, and that is as it should be. It is time we considered child care as an issue that concerns society as a whole, and not just the women in society. I was also pleased to hear the Minister say that the role of the family and not just the traditional family would be examined, and I wish to congratulate the Minister on this departure from the usual approach.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare also noted . . . I would like to point out to the Minister that he used sexist terms when talking about children who needed day care. He indicated that one of the issues was whether day care services would be open to children of women working outside the home, or to children of mothers working at home. Non-sexist language should have been used, Mr. Speaker! They should have said: available to children of parents who work outside the home, or to children whose parents work at home.

In his statement the Minister implied that there is no consensus in Canada on the question of day care services. Well, I am not sure that there is no consensus on that question.

According to a poll made public last April most Canadians believe that day care services should be the shared responsibility of Governments and families, but others think that the Governments should not have anything to do with such services.

The same poll revealed that 50 per cent of the Progressive Conservative Members believe that the federal Government should not get involved in that field.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will be able to make them change their mind.

I am expected to state our position on matters of principle, Mr. Speaker, but since I am not familiar with the task force mandate I can say it is true that the needs of families have changed a lot. It is also true that the families themselves have changed lot.

Mr. Speaker, if indeed the task force will seek to determine the responsibilities of families, communities as well as those of the private and public sectors, may I simply point out that the responsibilities of companies will have to be wider than those they have been given by the Progressive Conservative Government in terms of employment equity.

The Progressive Conservative Government has emphasized the voluntary approach in matters of employment equity. However, I want to warn the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that men and women who are concerned about the problem of child care will not be satisfied with a voluntary approach.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is fond of consultation, but it tends to listen to social groups only when their opinion coincides with the Government's.

We have seen what happened to de-indexation of family allowances and the prostitution Bill. Although the majority of the witnesses spoke out against the Bill, the Conservative Government had no hesitation in adopting it.

As for this public consultation, I can only hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will take the broad view and that the Government will really listen to what the parties concerned with this sector have to say. I would like the Government to launch an advertising campaign that would accurately reflect the Minister's desire to have many Canadians participate in this exercise. Without their participation, I believe we will just have a useless task force, lacking any real contact with families who have to deal with child care problems.

I also want to say I think it is too bad Katie Cooke's recommendations have yet to be released. It seems as though the Conservative Government is cleverly setting up a task force on child care because it does not want to implement the Cooke report's many recommendations.

We realize that a study, commission or task force is an excellent way to procrastinate and buy time, especially when, as in the present situation, the results of a task force like Katie Cooke's must be released and the last thing the Government wants to do is to act on its recommendations. So it just orders another study.

I would also like to draw the attention of the House to several recommendations made by the Subcommittee on Equality Rights. A number of the report's recommendations concern day care centres. So the question arises why another task force is being set up, since the recommendations are already there.

Mr. Speaker, this criticism should be understood in the context of the activities of the Conservative Government. Since September 1984, one can hardly say that issues concerning the status of women have been a priority.

I think this is obvious, considering that a year has elapsed between the announcement that a child care task force would be created and its actual creation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that this kind of delay is no longer acceptable and that from now on, action will have to follow hard on the heels of a statement of intent.

Finally, I would like to know when the committee will take up its duties.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to clear up what may well be a misunderstanding. I thought I heard the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) indicate that she had not seen the terms of reference. I want to make clear, at least in my case, that the draft terms of reference were provided to us, and I thought to both Parties, about a week ago. It could well be that there has been a communications problem. I just do not want to leave the wrong impression in the presentation which is being made. However, I do want to say a word or two about the setting up of the task force.

I am sure that all Members of the House will recall that in August of 1984 the then Leaders of the three political Parties, being in somewhat different positions but nevertheless Leaders of the three political Parties, met in debate. This was a debate which was sponsored by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. In that debate they were asked the following question:

What steps would you take to ensure that quality universally-accessible child care is available in Canada?

My Leader responded as follows:

Day care is a social responsibility like medicare and education and should be available to all. There must be an increase in the number of day care spaces to ensure women have equal access to employment opportunities, training and retraining.

The NDP endorsed the program of the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association, which is consistent with long-standing NDP policy, at a meeting with the Association's executive in Ottawa in May. We would appoint a Parliamentary Task Force to develop a comprehensive plan for implementing universal day care and introduce a Child Care Financing Program as a transitional measure. The Financing Program would include:

a) a direct grant of $5.00 per day to each licensed day care space; and

b) a child care resourses fund based on a formula of $25.00 per day for every child under 13. It is to be expended by the provinces and the territories for the creation of new public child care facilities and programs.

The Child Care Financing Program would cost $300 million. It is estimated that the program would create 50,000 new jobs and at the same time improve accessibility to quality care for our children.

That was the position in 1984 and, of course, it remains the position of my Party. Therefore, we are pleased that the Government has moved now to establish the task force, albeit somewhat later than we had anticipated and hoped. I might add that is in keeping with the commitment made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in response to the same question when he said:

I will establish a Parliamentary Task Force with a short but clear mandate to examine the provision of quality child care throughout Canada.

I might add it is consistent with the position taken by the then Prime Minister, the present Leader of the Official Opposition, when he said:

—I would push for an indepth study into the inadequacies of child care services—

What we have before us is something with which the overwhelming majority of Members of Parliament in 1984 and, I think, in 1985 agree. As I said, I add the caveat that there has been a time lag which I regret. I am sure the Minister would agree that he too regrets the time which has been taken in establishing this task force. Nevertheless, it is now here and the work which it has to do is vitally important work. It must be done quickly and with care. However, it is necessary to ensure that the end result brings about a policy from the Government which will in fact provide quality day care—and I stress the term quality because without that word what might well emerge could be totally unsatisfactory.

We are pleased that the task force is getting under way because the situation as it now exists is a serious one. In 1983 there were 956,000 children under the age of six and 1.3 million children between the ages of six and 12 with mothers in the labour force. Yet, in 1983 there were only 139,070 licensed group and family home care spaces in the entire country. One need not be a genius to see that the number of day care spaces available when measured against the number of children was woefully inadequate. The vast majority of Canadian women of child-bearing age participate in the paid workforce. In 1983 fully 69 per cent of all women between the ages of 20 and 44 worked outside the home. It is projected that by 1990 over 75 per cent of women aged 24 to 54 will be in the official workforce. The situation we will have in Canada, and I do not think that anyone will dispute this, will be one in which both parents of children will be out in the workforce. There will be an absolute necessity for the provision of care for those children who, out of necessity, will be left otherwise to fend for themselves or will be put into inadequate facilities. By the end of this century women's labour force participation is expected to equal that of men's. Of all of the women who are now working, 60 per cent are married. I think it is fair to say, therefore, that if they were to lose their jobs—and one can never predict such things—one half of those families would fall below the poverty line. I want to suggest that we are pleased that the reference was made by the Minister that consideration must be given—I hope the word "must" is the appropriate operative word—to the report and studies of the Government task force which was so ably chaired by Dr. Katie Cooke. The recommendations of that task force could well form the basis for much of what could and should be done by Government.

I think the terms of reference, at least those from which I have been working, are broad enough to allow for the kind of comprehensive review we believe is necessary. I want to suggest to the committe that it not be restricted in its mandate by the exclusion of any reference to certain matters which are of importance in this vital area. For example, as I mentioned earlier, there is no mention of quality day care. I think the Minister would agree with me that that is what we are talking about. We are not talking about some inferior day care facility which does not begin to meet the need. There is no explicit recommendation or reference in the draft terms of reference which sets out the principle of federal Government leadership, but we hope the committee will in fact see the vital role of the federal Government in developing a child care policy which flows out of necessity from any review of the need of quality child care. In addition to that, we suggest the committee look at the whole question of direct federal funding.

We do not deny that it is desirable that the provinces participate and I expect they will. I think we all expect that. Nevertheless, that should not be an inhibitive in the review undertaken by the committee and the recommendations it makes with regard to adequate expenditures to meet the existing and long-term needs. Although this might be somewhat at odds with the view of the Government with respect to the development of child care, we must be cautious that we recognize that tax dollars are scarce and, therefore, should not be used to subsidize the fore profit sector, if you will, which does, from time to time, grow up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) but I would like to remind him that the Minister spoke for a period of 10 minutes. The Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) spoke for eight minutes. Convention dictates that the Hon. Member also limit his remarks to the same time frame. I will permit the Hon. Member to wind up very rapidly.

Mr. Deans: I am certainly grateful to you for that permission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I said "very rapidly".

Mr. Deans: Given that this is what I consider to be a vitally important task force which is to be given a very serious mandate, I would not have thought that I would have any difficulty getting my views on the record. However, I will do the best I can to wind this up as quickly as I humanly can, I can assure you. I want to make sure that the fore profit potential is kept in mind and that the scarce resources are allocated to provide the maximum child care possible.

I am getting little signals which I can hardly understand. I am having a tough day, Mr. Speaker. I hurt my back this morning and I am suffering considerably. Any further aggravation will cause me great pain.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I want to quickly set out some points which I hope the committee will remember in its establishment of a national child care policy. Child care should be universal. The highest quality child care services should be mandatory. There should be licensing and regulating provisions to guarantee that. The affordability of child care must be kept in mind and it must not be unavailable simply because of lack of income on the part of families, particularly low income families. The parental role must always be paramount. Parents should have an active and significant role in determining the child care environment.

I am just about finished. I only have about 10 seconds if you will just sit back and relax.

With respect to the whole question of sponsorship, child care services should, to the extent that it is humanly possible, be non-profit operations in order to maximize the benefits and the working conditions for those who work in child care should be such as to guarantee salaries and benefits which meet their education and commitment.

With those few comments, I will conclude by saying that I would like to see the committee get on with this work and I thank the Minister for having brought the terms of reference forward.

TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to explain to Hon. Members how this Government intends to make our transportation system more accessible to the disabled. In fact, we intend to achieve this objective by means of a range of specific and positive measures.

[English]

It is indeed a pleasure to rise in this House to describe the Government's commitment to improve accessibility to our transportation system for disabled persons.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides that all persons are equal before the law. This implies that the disabled must have reasonable access to facilities and services provided by the Government of Canada.

[English]

Prior to forming the Government, the Progressive Conservative Party pledged itself to three major goals for disabled persons; to remove barriers to their participation in economic and social opportunities; to support self reliance by disabled persons and enhance their capacity to contribute to their communities and, finally, to work toward implementing the recommendation contained in the Obstacles Report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Disabled Persons.

Today, I would like to describe what we intend to do about transportation to make this sector accessible to the disabled. Our Government will be taking steps in a number of areas. First of all, a comprehensive plan for training and development of all public transportation employees in federally regulated sectors; then, defining the type of measures required to respond to the needs of disabled travellers, whereby provincial governments will be urged to ensure that provincial bus companies develop plans for adapting equipment and services and submit these as soon as possible; encouraging the negotiation of reciprocal agreements on paratransit services; co-operating closely with the Canadian Human Rights Commission and agencies representing the disabled, the private sector and other levels of government, with a view to increasing accessibility; retrofitting of terminals and facilities regulated by Transport Canada so that they provide the same level of services to the disabled; co-operating closely with carriers to ensure effective communication; taking appropriate action to provide for a reasonable level of service for the disabled on all transport modes.

● (1600)

These commitments will form the basis of a new policy on transportation of disabled persons which I intend to announce in the near future. This Government is sensitive to the needs of disabled persons in the area of transportation and has reviewed the issues in detail.

[Translation]

Already aware of the needs of the disabled and the problems they face in the area of transportation, the Government has consulted with disabled persons and their representatives in order to acquire a clear understanding of the problems they have to deal with. Today, we are acting in response to recommendations made in the many studies that have been carried out in the past. It is now time to act.

Last June, my predecessor set up a committee to advise the Government on what can be done to make our transportation system accessible. Our objective is, first of all, to eliminate physical barriers and to help change people's attitudes to the problems facing disabled persons when they want to travel from one place to another.

[English]

This Government recognizes that our Charter of Rights and Freedoms promises equal protection and equal benefit under the law and protects disabled persons from systemic discrimination. To comply with the Charter's requirement and ensure reasonable access to Canada's transportation system for disabled persons, our Government is finalizing accessibility standards and guidelines for the air, rail and marine modes.

Furthermore, research and pilot projects are being developed to reduce physical barriers to travelling by the disabled. In terms of accessibility, VIA Rail is proceeding with a retrofit of its cars, while the retrofit of ferry terminals is continuing.

Together with the provinces, we have set up a standing committee on the transportation of disabled persons, and its terms of reference include examining complex issues such as national reciprocity in paratransit services and land transportation to and from airports.

The Canadian Transport Commission is developing a multimode card to identify disabled persons who must travel accompanied.

A new, fully accessible bus, the first in North America, has been put into service as part of a three-year pilot project in Newfoundland. Accessibility Guidelines for travel by interprovincial bus lines have been developed by the Minister of Transport and his provincial counterparts. Their collaboration and support have been invaluable. We believe that carriers will conform with these guidelines, and we hope that specific accessibility standards will be set in the months to come.

During Expo 86, our Department will host an international conference to be attended by experts from the public, private and academic sectors. The purpose of this conference is to create an international forum for the exchange of information on questions concerning the disabled.

Furthermore, in response to a recommendation made at the first meeting of my action committee last August, we have set up four task forces whose members include disabled persons and representatives from the transportation sector, industry and government. They are being asked to submit proposals for dealing with the problems facing the disabled in the following areas: standards of access to national air services, airport services and facilities, communications, and finally, bus services.

[English]

The Department has initiated work to complete an inventory of existing equipment available in terminals and on board vehicles for visual, hearing and developmentally-impaired travellers so as to identify areas which need further improvement. We are carefully reviewing the report of the parliamentary committee on equality of rights recently tabled before the House. Their praise for the establishment of our implementation committee is very encouraging.

Thanks to a multi-million dollar program, we intend to improve technology for vehicles and other transport modes and show how facilities and services can be made more accessible. We hope that in this way, we can help people acquire a better understanding of the needs of the disabled.

[English]

Today I am also pleased to announce that this Government has selected over 25 communities across Canada which will be receiving grants to acquire much needed specially equipped vehicles. Specific details will be announced in the near future.

[Translation]

This Government is anxious to work together with Canadians in order to bring about the desired changes, and it has therefore set up a program to assist small communities where operating a mini bus service might not be feasible. The program is intended to improve the mobility of the disabled by helping set up a volunteer service.

[English]

Two demonstration projects testing this new mobility concept are being staged in New Brunswick. Along with the capital grants mentioned previously, they will combine to significantly improve personal mobility and reduce the isolation of disabled Canadians who reside in small communities across this country. All these initiatives and activities have been accomplished through the co-operation and support of many individuals, groups and organizations. Their diligence and thoughtful advice, coupled with this Government's firm commitment, will result in greater accessibility to our transportation system for disabled Canadians.

I know that all the Members of this House support these measures. In the months to come, I expect to see a host of new initiatives and policies that will help us move ahead towards achieving our objective: a transportation system that is safe, reliable and equitable—in other words, accessible to all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as the Official Opposition critic dealing with policies and regulations regarding the handicapped, it is my privilege to comment on the statement just made by the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). Along with other Members of the House, I congratulate her on any new steps she may have taken in the ongoing process of establishing equal opportunities for the handicapped to have full access to transportation, and for the elimination of physical and attitudinal barriers to travel. However, I gather that some Members of the Standing Committee on Transport, which is touring the country and taking evidence, are puzzled as to why the Minister did not wait to make her statement until tomorrow when they would be back in Ottawa and able to be present.

I said that I welcomed any signs of progress and I have listened carefully to her statement. Mr. Speaker, I had to listen carefully because, regrettably, there is precious little in her statement that shows progress or that is new since either the press release of her immediate predecessor six months ago or since the progress report made by the last Liberal Government in 1983 entitled Surmounting Obstacles. The Minister said that now is the time for action and then she proceeded to give us 10 action steps. However, of the 10 steps she cited, eight of them appeared in her predecesor's news release of six months ago and she has repeated them almost word for word. Of the two items that are new, neither of them are action oriented but are announcements of more committees and conferences, important though they are. Basically there is no new action at all except with regard to the announcement of 25 communities which will later learn what will be coming to them.

Regrettably, what we heard was not a statement by a Minister to bring some new developments to the attention of the House, but just one more in a long series of attempts by the Government to try to take something which was an initiative undertaken during the last Liberal Government, dress it up in a Tory blue wrapper and call it, as she has done, a new policy. It is too bad that they do not leave well enough alone, give credit where credit is due and get on with new and further action. It seems that the Conservatives just cannot bring themselves to lead, to set the example and to act. All they can do is to lick the bullet—they just cannot bring themselves to bite it.

As far back as 1980 the Parliament of Canada established a special committee on the disabled and the handicapped to review the scope of federal programs in the area of disability. In 1981 it made its report called Obstacles which contained 130 recommendations to improve the status of disabled and handicapped Canadians. Action progress was monitored by this committee and subsequent reports showed that by 1983 the Government had dealt with two-thirds of the recommendations and with three-quarters of those dealing with transportation.

While the Canadian Government did much in the past to deal with such matters within its jurisdiction, and should have done even more, the fact is that the real door to equality for the handicapped was thrown open by the passage of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by the last Liberal Government. That, Mr. Speaker, is what will ultimately force all those who provide public service to give equal access to the handicapped and that is what will propel the Government to some action.

Thanks to the Charter, thanks to the courts, thanks to a decision by a Saskatchewan court last June, and thanks to the Supreme Court for its decision not to allow an appeal, a key principle in this regard was established. Now the handicapped across Canada can demand that appropriate measures be taken to ensure that equal access becomes a reality. Because of the Charter the courts say that identical treatment is not necessarily equal treatment and, therefore, special steps must be taken in any public place to give equal access to the handicapped. It is because of the Charter that the Government must be made to act. It must not be allowed to wait for the courts to settle every case. It must be forced to be bold, to make regulations and to pass laws.

The Minister talked about "developing a detailed strategy" in her blueprint for action, "clarification of procedures", "encouraging negotiation", "working in a spirit of consensus and co-operation", "appointing task forces", and "finalizing guidelines". That is hardly what we would call the language of resolute and vigorous action, Mr. Speaker. What is more, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) has not announced any minimum standards. She has not announced any timetable. She has not announced any figures showing financial commitment. She has only recycled an old press release.

Laurie Beachell, National Co-ordinator for the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, COPOH, says that instead of vague guidelines detailed standards are needed to force compliance. David Blaker, Executive Director of the Advocacy Research Centre for the Handicapped in Toronto, says that they need to be made law. We still do not hear from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government that they will bring in standards, regulations and laws because they do not believe in that sort of thing. Why did the Government not bring in an immediate response to the equality rights report and fulfil recommendations 48 and 49 of that report? That could have been done today. The Government does not want to regulate. It prefers to deregulate.

It is precisely because the Tories lick the bullet instead of biting it that today, tomorrow and, regrettably, for some time to come, many disabled people will be refused transportation and will be discriminated against. If they want justice, it looks as if they cannot turn to the Government for it but will have to turn to the courts and call on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to uphold their rights. Thank God for the Charter.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as my Party's critic for those Canadians who are disabled and handicapped, as a member of the special House of Commons Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped which existed in the last Parliament, and also as a member of the Standing Committee on the Disabled and Handicapped I would like to say a few words about what the Minister has said. I read through the Minister's remarks which she very kindly provided to me yesterday. At the outset it was my intention to give her a bit of a hard time. However, the Minister has only held that position of responsibility for several months and I have, therefore, decided to be a little bit charitable. However, I will be less so to the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) because I listened very carefully to the remarks which he just concluded. I must confess to becoming a bit agitated as I listened to them.

As I pointed out, I was a member of the special committee on the disabled which was formed by the last Government after the 1980 election. Our mandate was to draw up a report and make recommendations in preparation for the International Year of the Disabled. While it is true, Mr. Speaker, that that committee made 130 recommendations to the Government, it is not factual to say that the previous Government implemented two-thirds of those recommendations. In fact, I want to point out to the House that that committee on the disabled summoned many Ministers from the previous Government before it to give a report on what they had done and what progress they had made toward implementing the recommendations of the report.

To say the very least, Mr. Speaker, the previous Government did not go much farther than making the precincts of Parliament accessible to the disabled. The only other thing it did was to give assurances that either the Minister or the Minister's Department were examining the committee's recommendations with a view to implementing them. I would be very happy to receive evidence to the contrary, but in my experience the previous Government did even less than the present Government is doing, and it is not doing all that much. I want to make that clear. I cannot sit in the House and listen to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence and not say something about them because what he has told the House is flim-flam. The previous Government did not do what the Member suggested that it did and I regret that very much.

Mr. de Corneille: Were you on the committee that wrote the Obstacles Report?

Mr. Young: The Hon. Member asked me if I was on the committee. If he listened to my opening remarks he would have heard me say that I was not only a member of the special committee on the disabled and the handicapped, which wrote the Obstacles Report, I was a member of the committee that brought subsequent reports.

Mr. de Corneille: Did you sign your name to that?

Mr. Young: Of course, I signed my name to that. I think the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence should get straight in his mind which reports he is talking about. I am talking about the committee reports.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) was not interrupted by the Hon. Member who is speaking now. The Member for Eglinton-Lawrence is heckling him and I think he should listen to what the Member is saying. I would ask that the Chair insist upon that.

Mr. Young: Excellent suggestion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Chair tries to be patient with all Members of the House and reminds everyone that heckling consumes time. Perhaps the Member for Beaches may choose not to answer questions put to him.

Mr. Young: I do not mind answering questions, Mr. Speaker, if they warrant a response. I would simply point out to the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence that the report he is referring to was not a report written by that special committee. It is a report written by the Liberal Government in response to the Obstacles Report. That special committee tore that response to shreds. We called witnesses before the committee. They were people who were disabled consumers. We asked them for their response to the Government's response to our report. In nearly every instance, the response we received from organizations like the Canadian Council of the Deaf, COPOH and a host of other disabled consumer organizations was that the Government did not do what it said it did.

The Government gave a response that was based more on a public relations exercise than in responding in real terms to the recommendations in that report. That is all I want to say on that subject because when we enter into debate in this House we should be concerned with facts, not on what someone would like to believe happened.

Let me deal with the Minister's statement. As I pointed out, the Minister is relatively new in that portfolio and I want to be charitable. I will say that at least the Minister made a report to the House, which previous Ministers have not done. I appreciate that response, rather than those we received from the previous Government. I appreciate the Minister giving us the opportunity to speak in the House on a matter of grave concern to a large percentage of the Canadian population who are disabled or handicapped. Ten per cent may be considered a rather conservative number but at least 10 per cent of the Canadian population are considered to be disabled or handicapped.

Transportation is very much a key to allowing disabled Canadians to participate fully in the mainstream of Canadian life. Employment is the number one key to making a disabled person a fully functional and integrated member of Canadian society but there is not much sense talking about creating jobs for disabled individuals unless we can provide the means for getting those people from their home to their workplace and back again. I am afraid that the Minister's proposals will not achieve that goal.

Unfortunately, today the Minister only gave more suggestions for study, apart from a couple of areas. I commend the Minister for setting up the pilot project in Newfoundland. That was a key demand from COPOH during the election campaign. The Government promised to do something about it and I am glad it has acted.

However, there are many other areas that should have been addressed more progressively and with greater leadership than what the Minister has done today. For example, there is absolutely no question that the disabled have not yet realized equality in transportation. Last weekend the executive of COPOH met in the City of Ottawa. At least two disabled members of that executive had difficulty with their air transportation. Air Canada gave one member, who came from Cape Breton to Ottawa, a hard time about getting on the aircraft simply because that person was disabled.

In the time I have remaining, I want to point out to the Minister that she did not talk about taxi service. There is absolutely nothing that requires a taxi service from an airport, which is regulated and licensed by the federal Government, to accommodate the needs of a disabled person. I would ask her to take that into consideration in her statement to the House.

We welcome the suggestion by the Minister that there will be an international conference in Vancouver next year. I do not know whether it is simply an oversight by the Minister, but she said that the groups that will be involved in that international conference will be experts from Government, industry and the academic community. I want to suggest strongly to the Minister that there are no other people who are more expert in this field than the disabled. They must be involved in that conference. That was the whole purpose of the International Year of the Disabled. They are the experts.

In conclusion, I ask the Minister to consider that very seriously and come back to the House to give us the assurance that the disabled will be involved in that conference.

PETITIONS

INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and responsibility to present a petition from residents of British Columbia who are very concerned about the existence of the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range in Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They are concerned that the American Government policy of not declaring whether their vessels have nuclear weapons applies to Canada. They urge the House to call for a full public inquiry, with powers to investigate those concerns, before the present agreement on the test range is renegotiated.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two groups of petitions. The first is from residents of Alberta who are expressing the same concerns as my colleague. They feel that there is a need for a public inquiry into the test range at Nanoose. They state that the inquiry should make recommendations before the agreement is renegotiated.

Child Care

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): My second set of petitions is from a group from the Prince Albert constituency in Saskatchewan who call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 150 residents of the City of Thunder Bay, primarily from my riding, who continue to protest the decision of the Government to deindex the universal family allowance and make other cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits. They see this as an unfair attack on women and families with children which will have the effect, by 1990, of making the poorest families worse off than they would be if indexation was continued. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate or to maintain the well-established indexation of family allowance.

ESTABLISHMENT AND ORDER OF REFERENCE OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual consultations between the Parties and we have heard the statement of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with respect to the task force on child care.

The order of reference to which the Minister referred I now have. The agreement between the Parties was that the order of reference be now presented and passed without debate. I will read into the record the order of reference as follows:

That a special committee of the House of Commons, to be composed of seven Members of Parliament, to be appointed to act as a parliamentary task force on child care. The task force shall examine and report on the future of child care in Canada in the context of the changing needs of the Canadian family in today's society with particular reference to the following:

(1) The requirements of children for care in parental or non-parental arrangements and the preferences of parents in this regard;

(2) The role of the federal Government in child care in light of the shared responsibility for child care among parents, the private sector, the voluntary sector and governments;

(3) Alternatives for future action by the federal Government: The alternatives proposed should take into account factors such as:

(a) The special circumstances of various families; including, although not exclusively, such factors as: marital status of parents, and economic circumstances of families, location, cultural background, disability of parent(s) or child.

(b) The financial implications for the Government of any initiatives which may be proposed including tax measures or other fiscal arrangements.

That the Special Committee, in carrying out its review, shall have all the powers given to Standing Committees by section 10(a) of Standing Order 70;

That the Special Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

Order Paper Questions

That the Special Committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada to hold hearings and receive the views and representations from interested groups and individuals and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Special Committee;

[English]

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the special committee is completed, that the committee shall report its finding by depositing its report with the Clerk of the House and that it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table; that membership changes shall be made pursuant to Standing Order 70(6)(B).

That the special committee shall report no later than one year following the adoption of this Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that Question No. 471 will be answered today.

[Text]

CALIBRATION OF TANK TRUCK

Question No. 471—Mr. Brisco:

1. In (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984 (e) 1985 to date, how many times did the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs calibrate or measure the capacity of the gasoline tank truck of the PetroCan bulk dealer in Trail, British Columbia?

2. Were there any discrepancies noted in any one year and, if so, what was the meaning or interpretation and nature of the discrepancies?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): 1. (a) None. (b) None. (c) None. (d) Once. (e) None.

2. Yes. While the meter was found to be correct, each of the four compartments of the truck contained slightly less than the calibrations indicated on the markers located in the compartments. Repairs were made to the unit which was subsequently recalibrated and reverified as correct by the inspector.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) had the floor. As the Hon. Member is not present, is there another Hon. Member who wishes to enter the debate?

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. It is a pleasure for me to speak on the Bill today as its subject matter is especially important in my constituency of Mississauga North.

At last official count in the 1981 census, Mississauga North, with over 140,000 voters, was the second most populated riding in Canada. Indeed, between 1976 and 1981, total population in my riding increased by 39.1 per cent, nearly nine times the provincial growth rate of 4.4 per cent. During this same period, the population of voting age grew by 47.9 per cent compared with the Ontario figure of 9.9 per cent.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Mississauga North continues to grow in this same fashion, and it would come as no surprise to me if our upcoming census shows Mississauga North to be the most populated riding in Canada. While I would enjoy the opportunity to speak at further length about the reasons for and the advantages of such tremendous growth, I will save bragging about my riding for another opportunity, and come immediately to the matter at hand, Bill C-74.

This Bill is not one that has commanded a great deal of attention in the media. It seems our friends in the media have other priorities. It is my belief, however, that this is a very important piece of legislation which will shape the nature of the House of Commons, and even influence parliamentary procedure. The Bill guarantees that the House will retain its particular character. The Bill ensures that Members will not lose the influence they have, and it ensures that the Canadian parliamentary tradition will be effectively continued. It ensures the preservation of a system which is unique to Canada, while it accounts for growth and change in this still young nation. All said, Bill C-74 has not received its due share of public attention.

The ideas contained in the Bill are well founded in Canadian history, yet the impetus for this legislation comes from a modern day Government. In September, 1984, we were given a mandate for positive change. Our Government proposes changes in this Bill which have arisen from broad consultation, changes which will prevent unchecked, costly growth of Parliament.

Representation by population, or "rep by pop" as it is more commonly known, is an idea which has been central to Canadian parliamentary tradition. The necessity for fair and adequate regional representation has as well been a serious consideration for every Canadian Government dealing with this matter. Our first federal Government—and I remind the House that it was a Conservative Government—successfully dealt with all these considerations in 1867. In 1975, the previous Government amended the Constitution Act, 1867, so that the number of Members of Parliament allotted to each province would be adjusted after each decennial census. Over the years, these adjustments have meant that the House of Commons is now filled to near capacity. Indeed, I would venture that the unchecked growth of the House would require the conversion of the opposition lobby to government benches. With the amount of activity, or might I say inactivity, in the opposition lobby, it might be put to better use if we converted it to government benches.

Rather than allowing the House to grow at an uncontrollable level, our Government has introduced a Bill which addresses the two important considerations of representation by population and fair regional representation. The Bill also means that the growth of the House will be restricted. In the next election, we propose the addition of 13 seats, bringing the number to 295. Thereafter, increases will be smaller. In 1991, we recommend 296 seats, and for the year 2001, we propose a House of 298 seats.

There has been some criticism of the Bill. However, it is my opinion that the Bill could not be more fair. The procedure for drafting the legislation was fair. We consulted all concerned parties to elicit public opinion. We published a White Paper on redistribution in June, 1985, which was subsequently referred for consideration to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. After careful consideration of the amendments contained in the White Paper, the committee reported favourably. The Bill is fair because it ensures that provinces with stable or declining populations will not lose seats in the House. In the Canadian system, the loss of seats has always engendered great concern. Since the Bill contains the proviso that a province will not lose its present number of seats, the necessity of fair and equitable representation is addressed.

The Bill is fair because it provides for more seats in areas of tremendous population growth, while it ensures that transitory population trends are not permanently reflected in the composition of the House. Our theory for redistribution is careful in accounting for transitory growth trends.

However, it is also important that the Bill is fair to Canadian taxpayers. Based upon 1984 figures, in the first redistribution after the Bill's passage, and even after accounting for the cost of the electoral boundaries readjustment commissions, it is estimated that Canadian taxpayers will save approximately $1 million. Indeed, if the previous legislation was to be left unaltered, the cost of Parliament would skyrocket. While we recognize the value of our own staff and of the House of Commons support staff, we all realize their and our expense. Under the terms of the existing legislation, the House would have 369 seats in the year 2001. Without doubt that would be an expensive proposition.

The Bill gives us the best of all worlds—areas of great population growth will enjoy increased representation in the House, unchecked growth of the House is restricted, and we save valuable tax dollars.

Finally, one of the unique and outstanding features of the Bill is the way in which it reforms certain procedures of the electoral boundaries readjustment commissions. For example, the Bill permits, for the first time ever, Member of Parliament representation on the boundaries readjustment commissions. Second, the Bill allows realistic time limits for the work of the commissions. The Chief Electoral Officer has indicated that he needs 30 months to report on boundaries readjustment. If the Bill goes through, he shall have his 30 months.

This brings me to my concluding point—urgency of passage. Time seems to fly more quickly in the political arena and, before we know it, another general election will be upon us. In order for the boundaries readjustment commissions to do a thorough job, and in order for the Chief Electoral Officer to prepare his report, the legislation must pass at the earliest possible opportunity. I am confident of the co-operation of the House in this respect.

In closing, it is my firm belief that this is a fair and just Bill. The Bill addresses the unique Canadian concerns of representation by population and regional representation. It ensures that the fundamental nature of the House of Commons is not altered. Most important, the Bill allows the population of Canada to be reflected in Parliament, while it ensures the continued effectiveness of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before putting the question to the House, I should like to draw its attention to a point of clarification as to Motions Nos. 2 and 3. Motion No. 2 seeks to delete lines 17 to 34 of Clause 2 of Bill 74 and to add some words, compared with Motion No. 3, presented by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), which seeks to delete lines 19 to 34, also of Clause 2. By voting on Motion No. 2, we therefore would not have to deal further with Motion No. 3, having settled the matter for all practical purposes.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We will now move to Motion No. 4. Earlier this day the Chair indicated that we would hear procedural argument on this motion. Therefore, the Chair will hear the arguments before the motion is moved.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my amendment reads as follows:

That Bill C-74, be amended in Clause 2 by striking line 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

4. Among the number of members assigned to Ontario, there shall be assigned a minimum of 11 members to northern Ontario."

When I drafted my amendment, I asked myself what was the principle in the Bill. I wanted to ensure that the amendment was in line with the intent of the Bill—first, that it did not contravene the intent of the Bill and, second, that it did not go beyond what the Bill intended to do.

The purpose of the Bill is to establish for the next federal election electoral boundaries. Generally speaking, the Bill wants to restructure the electoral boundaries map of Canada so that some provinces would get additional seats. Indeed, the Province of Ontario will end up with four more seats, the Province of British Columbia will end up with two more seats, and the remaining provinces will have the same number of seats as they presently have. My amendment does not interfere with the 99 seats which have been allotted to Ontario in the legislation. It indicates that that part of Ontario that is known as northern Ontario geographically and in common practice would maintain the 11 seats which that part of Ontario presently holds. We do not seek to add a greater number of seats to the Province of Ontario. We do not seek to reduce the number of seats in any other province. My amendment simply indicates that the 11 ridings in northern Ontario will be maintained.

I would suggest that this amendment falls well within the purpose and intent of the Bill. The intent of the Bill is to establish ridings which would return Members to the House of Commons at the next federal election. My amendment does not go beyond that principle. The principle of my amendment deals with the situation as it exists in the Province of Ontario. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that my amendment is therefore in order.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the debate with regard to the procedural acceptability of Motion No. 4. This morning the Chair indicated that it would like to hear arguments with regard to Motions Nos. 4 and 5. It seems to me that Motion No. 4 put by the Hon. Member is very similar to my Motion No. 5 except that Motion No. 5 sets out the exact geographic locations involved in northern Ontario and the 11 seats that exist there. As well, it sets out the procedure for redistributing those seats within the geographical area of northern Ontario.

I would argue that these motions are in order. Motion No. 4 simply seeks to amend one clause of Bill C-74. It essentially applies the same principle to a large geographic area in northern Ontario which represents 80 per cent of the land mass of the Province of Ontario as is applied to Saskatchewan and other provinces which are provided with a floor for representation under Rule 2 of which we have just approved.

The principle of Motion No. 5 is essentially the same one that was adopted by the Electoral Boundaries Commission which identified northern Ontario as a geographical location and accepted the present number of Members. The Commission adopted a population average of 70,000 for the area as opposed to the 81,000 which has been adopted for the rest of the province. The amendment simply applies to redistribution within the Province of Ontario and does not infringe upon any redistribution taking place in other provinces. I would argue that Motions Nos. 4 and 5 are procedurally acceptable.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think my actions with respect to this Bill have demonstrated the fact that I am prepared to listen to reasonable suggestions for amendments. The motions I have put before the House at report stage reflect that.

I have listened with great interest to the representations made vis-à-vis the attempt to bring forward amendments at this stage of the Bill. I think the Bill already addresses the concerns that have been expressed in the amendments brought forward by Hon. Members. However, that is not why I am rising now.

I do not think that there is any question that these amendments are clearly out of order according to the rulings in Beauchesne's. Let me express why this is the case. In the first place, the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) must be rejected because its wording is too vague. The Hon. Member refers to an area described as northern Ontario. Depending on whether one lives in Barrie, North Toronto or London, one's perspective of northern Ontario may include quite a variety of places and descriptions. The vague description of northern Ontario is not a clearly defined geographical area. Therefore—

Mr. Rodriguez: Wait till I send this out to those Tory ridings.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am speaking in technical terms. We all know that northern Ontario is an important part of the country. However, the fact is that it is not a legally defined geographic entity in any official atlas and therefore is incapable of definition.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) identified certain areas in northern Ontario which would be entitled to a certain number of seats. However, both amendments, as Your Honour pointed out at the beginning of debate on report stage, are out of order since they depart entirely from the principle set down in this legislation.

Let me simply remind Your Honour of the fact that the principle of this Bill and the Act which is being amended by this legislation was not that we in Parliament define the location or number of seats within any province. Rather, that responsibility has been delegated to electoral commissions. These two amendments purport to take away that responsibility which is delegated under Section 13 of the parent Act, an Act which is not before the House. That is the principle under which the legislation operates. There are delegations of authority to the Electoral Commissions in each province.

In this case, the amendments purport or attempt to create different rules for the Province of Ontario than those that exist for any other province. The changes proposed to this legislation create one set of rules for all provinces across the country. There is delegation of responsibility within each province to the electoral commissions. However, these amendments would significantly depart from that principle by designating certain things for northern Ontario or for electoral districts in northern Ontario.

If accepted by Your Honour, these amendments would be contrary to the purpose of this Bill which provides rules to apply generally to all provinces. Therefore, on the face of it, notwithstanding the merits of the case, they clearly depart from the principles of the Bill before us today.

You will of course, Mr. Speaker, be aware of Citation 773.(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which indicates that an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the Bill, beyond its scope or governed by or dependent upon amendments already negatived. In conclusion, quite apart from the fact that we have dealt with the principles and objections that are contained within these suggested amendments, these amendments are clearly outside the scope of the legislation and contrary to the principles of the legislation. I would have to argue strongly with you, Mr. Speaker, that they are not in order. Having said that, however, there is no problem because the amendments I have brought forward are, in fact, dealt with and there will be equity for northern Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): After hearing the procedural arguments of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) as to the acceptability of Motion No. 4, and even though there is some doubt in the mind of the Chair as to its procedural acceptability, it is the Chair's position that the doubt should be to the benefit of the Hon. Member. The same remarks apply to Motion No. 5 put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Having said that, the motions will be allowed to go forward, although I must indicate to the House that they will be debated together and voted on separately. Therefore, I will put the motions to the House.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-74, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 34 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"of one, one other member.

4. Among the number of members assigned to Ontario, there shall be assigned a minimum of eleven members to Northern Ontario."

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That bill C-74, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 2 the following:

"4. Notwithstanding rules 1, 2 and 3, and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, in dividing Ontario into electoral districts under that Act following the completion of the 1981 decennial census, the electoral boundaries commission for Ontario for the census

(a) shall consider the aggregate territorial area of the electoral districts described in paragraphs 1 (Algoma), 9 (Cochrane-Superior), 34 (Kenora-Rainy River), 49 (Nickel Belt), 50 (Nipissing), 69 (Sault Ste. Marie), 77 (Sudbury), 78 (Thunder Bay-Atikokan), 79 (Thunder Bay-Nipigon), 80 (Timiskaming) and 81 (Timmins-Chapleau), of the part of the 1976 Schedule relating to the Province of Ontario;

(b) shall divide that area into eleven electoral districts in accordance with the rules provided by section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act; and

(c) shall, in accordance with the rules provided by section 13 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, divide the remaining territory of Ontario into the number of electoral districts that equals the difference obtained when the number eleven is substracted from the number of members assigned to Ontario under subsection 51(1) of the Constitution Act, 1867, as amended by the Constitution Act (No. 2), 1974."

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on the fine, impartial wisdom of your ruling. There is a reason for moving the amendment which calls for a guarantee that the 11 seats in northern Ontario remain when the electoral boundaries map is drawn for the Province of Ontario.

Geographically, northern Ontario is a huge land mass with very little population. As a matter of fact the population has been declining. The experience in the past has been that when electoral boundaries maps are drawn and the hearings are held the commissioners are dealing with numbers. They have a floor and a ceiling. They have to create ridings between that floor and that ceiling to match the population of northern Ontario. As a result, we could have communities which are up to 800 to 900 miles apart falling within the same riding. The last time the electoral boundaries committee met to look at the electoral boundaries in Ontario there was a proposal with respect to the boundaries of the riding of Timiskaming coming into the riding of Nickel Belt and removing the community of Nickel Centre out of Nickel Belt and connecting it up to Timiskaming. This is a situation in which there was no historical or cultural relationship. There are great distances between the communities in the southern part of the riding compared with the northern part of the riding.

Not only would it be difficult for a Member of Parliament to serve such a riding, it would be difficult for his or her constituents to communicate effectively with the Member of Parliament. Indeed, I could get on to my bias and my horse and ride it. The fact is that the population in northern Ontario is declining. The decline closely parallels the decline in the resource sector. In fact, we have consistently argued that instead of reducing the number of voices in the legislatures, both provincial and federal, we should have more voices to balance the geographic and regional disparities which exist in that part of the province.

I am absolutely positive that if the commissioners were to look at the census figures at the present moment they would see that northern Ontario would suffer a loss of seats. I am absolutely sure of that. In fact, to do that would force the commissioners to look at wiping out a riding and bringing in groups from greater and greater distances to make up the nine or ten seats. I do not think that is fair to northern Ontario. The arguments end up like a dog trying to catch its tail. People say that if we can get more people to live in northern Ontario then we could have more seats. We have also heard that if we had more people living in the North we would have more industry. We know that is simply the old chicken and egg argument. It does not cut ice with us because we have experienced this. It seems to me we cannot apply a straight "rep by pop" application to northern Ontario. We have to look at the situation in terms of serving the people. That is what we have to look at—the quality of the service to the people. In fact, we have made these exceptions in the past.

I see the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) moving his head from right to left. We have made these types of exceptions. If one were to look at it one would see that Canada is a study in exceptions. If representation by population were considered for Prince Edward Island then it ought not to have the number of seats which it now has. That includes all of the Atlantic region. However, because the Fathers of Confederation recognized that there were these anomalies in the country, and therefore the need to recognize those differences and to make sure the representation in the House reflected that, we do have a type of guarantee for parts of the country such as Prince Edward Island and other parts of Atlantic Canada. That is fair.

I argue in favour of the amendment which is before the House. It is only fair to the people of northern Ontario who are taxpayers and who deserve the same quality of service which a constituent living in downtown Toronto, the Beaches or some other southern riding deserves. It would not be a weakening of the electoral boundaries to guarantee northern Ontario its 11 seats. It seems to me it is a guarantee of participation in the democratic process.

I recommend the amendment to Members of the House. I am sure the Conservative Members who represent three ridings in northern Ontario would argue for the support of this amendment if they were here. I believe the three ridings are Timiskaming, Timmins-Chapleau and Nipissing. I ask these Members to try to impose this mesasure upon the Conservative Government. However, I am sure that when it comes time to vote they will want to vote it down. I wish to send this message out to all corners of northern Ontario. I want them to know that the Conservative Government is not prepared to give them a fair voice in this House. Those Hon. Members would be prepared to vote the amendments down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, the vote will come and we will see how you are going to vote. We are going to send back a copy of Hansard on that day to folks living in those ridings you presently hold so they will be able to see how fair the Tories are. I ask Hon. Members opposite, I appeal to their sense of fair play, to support this amendment. If they do not, then they will vote against it to their everlasting sorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Those Hon. Members laugh. They think it is funny.

Mr. St. Germain: Even your own people think it is funny.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are cases where a person who lives 300 miles away from his Member of Parliament, has a problem, and wants to see his Member of Parliament. The Member of Parliament is very busy but that person wants to have access to him. That is when the application will strike home. That is when the practical application of the Tories' denial of northern Ontario maintaining its 11 seats will strike home. The proof will be in the eating of this pudding.

I call upon Hon. Members of the Conservative Party not to be stampeded by their House Leader. I urge them to stand up for northern Ontario. Give us the guarantee of 11 seats. It doesn't take anything away from them but it allows the people of northern Ontario to have fair representation in the House of Commons.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I believe your ruling was excellent. It was fair and well reasoned. It was an important decision for the Chair in this House of Commons with regard to Bill C-74, the Electoral Boundaries Redistribution Bill. I think it is absolutely essential that these amendments which were put forward with respect to northern Ontario are accepted by the House of Commons because this Bill is really designed to restrict the growth of the House of Commons.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: It will in effect reduce the numbers of Members who will be provided to Ontario by six. It is interesting to hear Members opposite from the western provinces arguing for reduced representation. If the Hon. Member opposite who just spoke from his seat had really argued for the benefit of Alberta, he would have stated as soon as this Bill was introduced that it was unfair to Alberta because it reduced the representation to which Alberta was entitled.

Mr. Malone: So what?

Mr. Foster: The Hon. Member says: "So what?" Does he not want to see Alberta have its proper representation? I certainly want to see northern Ontario have its proper representation because northern Ontario is a distinct geographical unit of some 88 per cent of the land mass of the province of Ontario. My constituency, which is of medium size by many standards, still encompasses 13,000 square miles and is over 500 miles long. Other constituencies such as Cochrane Superior, Kenora-Rainy River and Timiskaming are even larger. Those areas of Ontario want and deserve adequate representation in the form of at least 11 Members of Parliament.

I hope that Members opposite from northern Ontario—the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais), the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher) and the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha)—will come forward and lend their support. We are not doing anything in these amendments to take away from representation in other provinces. We are just saying that out of the 99 Members of Parliament, in the allocation of Ontario there should be at least 11 seats, one ninth, from northern Ontario. We have 88 per cent of the land mass but our population is not nearly as dense as it is, for example in Toronto.

These amendments provide that there will be at least 11 Members of Parliament to be a strong voice from the north in the Parliament of Canada. I think there is a precedent for this in the Ontario legislature brought in by the previous Conservative Government. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon, who is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), is a great admirer and adherent of that former Tory Government. It provided 16 seats in the provincial legislature out of 124 or 125 Members. Surely, that precedent is a good one to follow in the Parliament of Canada. We are a distinct geographical area within the province of Ontario and these amendments do not in any way infringe on the electoral arrangements in other provinces. They simply ask for an adequate representation in the Parliament of Canada for northern Ontario within the Ontario allocation.

I think as time goes on, Mr. Speaker, this will be proved to be very wise because constituents demand more services from Members. They want to see their Members of Parliament at community functions. They want to be able to deal on a personal level with Members of Parliament. A reduction in the number of Members from northern Ontario would make this task, which is already difficult, almost impossible.

If we examine the Bill as it was put forward by the President of the Privy Council, we see that the population rises from some 81,000 as proposed in the existing amalgam program to 87,000. This new average population in Ontario will keep rising with each redistribution in the future and it is obvious that the Bill before the House today, Bill C-74, will reduce by six Members the representation as proposed in the existing redistribution legislation. It is impossible to believe that at least one or two Members either in this redistribution or in the next will not be lost from northern Ontario.

I submit that one Member of Parliament can easily look after 80,000 or 90,000 people in Metropolitan Toronto where there are constituencies of a couple of square miles as opposed to the ridings in northern Ontario which have as a minimum, something like 13,000 square miles, as in the case of Algoma. I certainly hope that Hon. Members opposite, including the President of the Privy Council who is a gentleman, scholar and a great Parliamentarian, will see the fairness of this amendment because he grasped the principle and applied it to his own province of Saskatchewan. He said: "We want to have a floor under the representation from the province of Saskatchewan", and he has provided that floor with Rule No. 2 and it provides for 14 Members of Parliament from the province of Saskatchewan with a population of 968,000. This amendment does not demand the kind of fairness which our side is prepared to provide to Saskatchewan.

Because the population of northern Ontario is something around 800,000, we would certainly be entitled to more than 11 seats, perhaps, but we are asking the President of the Privy Council to provide the same fairness for northern Ontario as he has provided for the province of Saskatchewan and his own constituency. There again, you are dealing with very large spaces but not nearly as large a constituency as we see in northern Ontario. Yet this Bill provides a grandfather clause which in effect adds three seats to the number Saskatchewan would otherwise be eligible for. The same thing applies in Manitoba where the population is almost exactly one million people. That works out to 11.7 Members. The Bill provides a floor by adding two more so that Manitoba gets 14 Members even though it has only about 200,000 more people than northern Ontario.

In the interest of fairness, not just for the western provinces as provided by the grandfather clause, I hope the Minister will want to apply the same principle to northern Ontario. He can come to northern Ontario and talk to the people in Sault Ste. Marie, the constituency of the Minister for International. Trade He can talk to the constituents of the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming and the Hon. Member for Nipissing. Ask them whether or not there should be a floor. I am sure the Minister would be persuaded that these amendments set out a fair and equitable and just regime for an important area of our country. Northern Ontario has provided great Members of Parliament in the past. It has sent us a former Prime Minister, Lester Pearson, as well as great Speakers and cabinet Ministers. Last but not least it has also provided great private Members like those here who support this resolution this afternoon. I hope we have persuaded the Minister to give leadership to the private Members on his side so that he will lend his support to at least Motion No. 5 and perhaps Motion No. 4 as well. I hope we have persuaded the Minister to see the fairness of this amendment just as he saw its principle applied to his home province of Saskatchewan in the Bill now before the House.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) for introducing Motion No. 5. In principle Bill C-74 has a great deal to commend it. I particularly want to congratulate the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for improving the methodology of drawing constituency boundaries and giving the commissions much more latitude to take into account a community of interests and geographic size. Nevertheless, a special case can be made for the northern part of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Malone: Or anybody.

Mr. Penner: No. That is where you are wrong. There is the voice of Toronto.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: He is from Alberta.

Mr. Penner: I want to tell the Government House Leader that that is exactly the problem we have had in northern Ontario. The Toronto attitude is northern Ontario is nothing but the poor backyard, the hinterland of the province. They go in and grab the resources, take them somewhere else, move the money back and forth from hand to hand, institution to institution, and that is it. That is why we are making a plea for northern Ontario as a special case. It is not true that every province has a northern part which is precisely the same as Ontario. First of all, Ontario is one of the biggest provinces. Most of the province is in the North. For a long time northern Ontario has had special status in many respects. If anyone here happens to follow a national sport called curling, they will know that each province enters its own team in national competition called the Briar. Northern Ontario has always had its own curling team in the Briar and, more often than not, and my colleagues from the North can correct me, we have taken the Briar. Because it is the dominant part of the province, northern Ontario requires special protection under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act so that eventually we are not left with only three or four seats under redistribution.

We in northern Ontario have come to see the importance of federalism. On many occasions, when the voice of the North could not be heard in Toronto, we knew it could always be heard in this House. That is why you will find the strongest proponents of a strong federal system residing in northern Ontario. Let me go one step further and remind the House that what the Hon. Member for Algoma has done today is not some innovation which has never been heard of before. You will recall the election of 1979, if you want to call it that. It was kind of an abortive election because we were back at the polls again in 1980. However, that election was fought with new boundaries. Prior to that time, when the redistribution process had been completed, it was discovered that northern Ontario was going to lose part of its representation. One of the very large constituencies at that time was called Thunder Bay. That is not to be confused, I say to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), with the riding he now represents. It was at that time an entirely rural constituency. No part of the city was included. It was one of the largest constituencies in the country. As a result of redistribution, that constituency was done away with entirely. The House was quick to observe that a very grave injustice had been done to that great region of the country. In its wisdom the House sought to redress that grievance. One of the outstanding Government Members at that time, the late R. K. Andras, sensed the mood of the House. He knew this was the place where these injustices had to be corrected. Although the parliamentary timetable was completely filled up in the time leading up to the end of that session, he used political judgment and influence to convince the House Leader of the time to squeeze out a bit of time in which to redress this grievance of the people of northern Ontario. A Government Bill was introduced which was very similar in scope to the motion introduced today by the Hon. Member for Algoma. It was to give northern Ontario a floor representation. It did not ask for anything unreasonable, only to retain the level of representation which they had at that time.

The people of the north, in so many ways, regard themselves as being like a province. It is true that it is a region, but anyone who knows the spirit of northern Ontario knows that the people feel very much as though they are a province. In fact, there have been very vigorous movements in northern Ontario to actually create a Province of Northern Ontario. The name "Aurora" was once suggested. There was once a political party formed led by Mr. Ed Deibel from the community of North Bay who proposed that there be a province formed, not separate from Confederation, but separate from the grasping hands of Toronto which wanted to take all of our riches and give us the dregs after they were through consuming the resources of the north.

There is a sense that we are a province. At that time we were asking for the same deal which the Province of Saskatchewan has in that it is guaranteed a floor. Although Saskatchewan is a full-fledged province in Confederation, we thought it was reasonable that we have the same thing. The late Hon. R. K. Andras, an outstanding Member of Parliament from Port Arthur, whose political leadership we miss, strengthened the political process in northern Ontario. He was so successful that at one time the Liberals held every seat across the north. That shows the kind of influence that that man had in northern Ontario and in the national life of the country.

Mr. Boudria: It will be like that after the next election, too.

Mr. Penner: He introduced a Government Bill into the House. As I explained before, he had only a limited amount of time because the timetable was so full. We debated the Bill that afternoon and almost got it passed. It only required unanimous consent. Although the Members from Toronto were reluctant to agree, even they went along. Finally, only one lone Member, whose name and place of origin I will not mention, withheld consent. He is no longer here because he lost his seat in the infamous election of 1979. It could not have happened to a nicer guy. Because he withheld consent, the Bill did not pass and northern Ontario had to face a very serious disruption in the way in which it was represented in the House of Commons.

The Member for Algoma now wants to redress that grievance. He wants to correct something which should have been corrected in 1978. It failed only by the voice of one single Member, now departed from these august chambers. However, we are going to correct the injustice now. I am sure that Members opposite will help us. They will see that this is right. I know that the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) cannot help but support this. I want to commend, once more, the Member for Algoma for giving this kind of leadership to the rest of us in northern Ontario.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, I intervened in debate this morning. I want to tell you how pleased many of us on this side of the House were with the way in which you rendered your decision to allow both of these amendments to stand. I indicated this morning the importance of these amendments to northern Ontario. I also indicated why we in northern Ontario feel very strongly about the need for maintaining the present number of seats in order that we can do the work for our constituents in northern Ontario.

To digress somewhat from the remarks of the previous speaker, there are certain issues in our lives which transcend political philosophies and political parties. Frankly, I believe that this is one of those occasions. I would like to salute not only the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), but also the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who put forward an amendment to ensure that the representatives of constituencies in northern Ontario, regardless of which political Party they represent, will be able to represent the people of northern Ontario. The degree of representation in northern Ontario is very important to all residents there. The test of the Conservative Government will be the decision made by the representatives of the Conservative Party who represent the constituencies of Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins-Chapleau and Timiskaming. We on this side of the House want to see whether they will represent the interests of their constituencies by voting with us, rather than with the Government, to ensure that the number of constituency bases remains the same in northern Ontario.

The Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) has been very eloquent this afternoon in his praise of previous Members of Parliament who represented constituencies in northern Ontario. He mentioned the late R. K. Andras who represented the riding of Thunder Bay. As well, the late C. D. Howe represented that area of northwestern Ontario for years in the House of Commons. We have had a history of very strong representatives from northern Ontario. It would be a mistake for the House of Commons to eliminate a seat in northern Ontario simply through the pursuit of representation by population.

As I indicated this morning, Mr. Speaker, I am fortunate in that I represent the only urban riding in northern Ontario. My job is easier in terms of the amount of travel that I have to do. I can represent my constituency of Sudbury by simply flying into one urban centre. Of the 11 constituencies in northern Ontario, I am the only one to be so fortunate. The other 10 Members of Parliament from northern Ontario have to travel through connecting airports to finally reach the geographic centre of their constituencies. From that point they have to travel by car, float plane, or train in order to service the interests of their constituents.

Whether we accept the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt or that put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma, it matters little. The important factor is that we retain the same number of constituencies in northern Ontario. I am sure that I speak for all of my colleagues on this side of the House when I say that we would welcome an intervention by the Conservative Members of Parliament who represent the constituencies of Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins-Chapleau, and Timiskaming. We would like them to stand up this afternoon and defend the interests of the constituents of northern Ontario. I hope that they will find it within the realm of possibility to vote against the Government's proposal. You know as well as I, Mr. Speaker, that in the quest for reform of the House of Commons it is very important to allow individual Members of Parliament to have a free vote. They should not be pressured by the Government or the Government House Leader. I am sure that he is not going to put the twist on their elbows, Mr. Speaker. Surely he would not do that.

There is only one Minister in the Government who represents the interests of northern Ontario, that is the Minister of international Trade (Mr. Kelleher). The Minister, who represents the constituency of Sault Ste. Marie, has not been in the House to defend the interests of the constituents of northern Ontario.

Mr. Boudria: Shame.

Mr. Frith: I think it is encumbent upon—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I must call the Member to order and remind all Members of the House that it is not permitted to remark on the presence or absence of other Members within the Chamber.

• (1740)

Mr. Frith: I will accept that ruling from you, Mr. Speaker. But, my heavens, I think it is rather telling that that Member would be missing on an important afternoon—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Frith: —when we are debating the future of the northern Ontario constituency base. I will accept your ruling and simply indicate that this is a typical case which we have witnessed time after time. The Government back-benchers who are elected by their constituents to represent their interests have been amazingly silent. Why should we from northern Ontario express any more surprise this afternoon? The back-benchers in the Conservative Party have been silent on issues of family allowance and the deindexation of senior citizen pensions. While a Minister of the Crown or a Parliamentary Secretary from the Government may not support these amendments, surely one could hope that the two other individuals who are not in Cabinet or Parliamentary Secretaries could indicate on the floor of the House this afternoon their support for the two amendments put forward by the Member for Nickel Belt and the Member for Algoma so that we could prevent this kind of disembowelling, if I may say so, of the interests of the constituents of northern Ontario.

I am sure that once I sit down, other Members on this side of the House will indicate their support for these two amendments. However, it will come as no surprise to me that once again there will be the typical silence from Government back-benchers.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to have this opportunity to join in the debate on this important matter. I want to recognize the insight and wisdom of the Speaker in ruling that the motions put forward by the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) are in order. I want to recognize in particular the foresight of my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt, who is the dean of the northern Ontario caucus of the NDP, in putting this motion forward. Let me also recognize the support for regional realities in our province and country as displayed by the Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) when he seconded the motion of my colleague from Nickel Belt.

Other Members have addressed the importance of recognizing the extent of the geography of northern Ontario and having it properly recognized and represented in the House of Commons. This was referred to eloquently by the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) in particular, who suffered cruelly in the redistribution of 1977. Of course, I might be of two minds about his praise for the Hon. Robert Andras, my worthy predecessor in what is now Thunder Bay-Nipigon. I am grateful that he was not running in the 1984 election, or things might have turned out somewhat different. Nonetheless, I want to recognize the efforts that have been made in maintaining representation for northern Ontario.

It was stated this morning that the part of the province north of the French River constitutes almost 88 per cent of the province. To have such a great geographic mass represented by only one-ninth of the Members of Parliament surely is a mean enough position to be in. I believe that our motion to maintain 11 Members in future Parliaments is surely appropriate to the geographic extent.

With respect to the sports history referred to by the Member for Cochrane-Superior, relating to the province of northern Ontario as recognized by the curlers of this country, I might note that it was not always that way. I believe it was approximately 1947 when the curlers in the City of Port Arthur and Fort William at the time and Sudbury looked at the situation carefully. The Sudbury curlers recognized the travel barriers they faced in going to Toronto to take part in provincial matches.

While that may have been manageable, the Lakehead curlers faced a different challenge. They were often in the Manitoba Briar playdowns and running into difficulties taking part in the semifinals in the City of Winnipeg. As the Hon. Member observed, they were fine curlers from northern Ontario and often represented Manitoba in the national Briar. Therefore, it proved to be desirable in these circumstances to create the province of northern Ontario and allow the curlers from that area of the province to compete in their own provincial playdown to send a team to the Briar. As the Hon. Member stated, we have done very well. We are certainly proud of Al Hackner and his succession of rinks. We look forward to their winning the Briar and going to the Silver Broom once again this year.

We have seen the good sense that curlers have expressed in years past. We have seen the good sense which Members of Parliament are evincing this afternoon and have evinced in the past about the importance of providing adequate recognition for the northern part of the province. I appreciate this opportunity to emphasize the importance of this issue, without reiterating the arguments about the challenges facing Members because of the extent of that area.

However, in conclusion I should explain that we are not only talking about the difficulties facing Members in travelling throughout their constituencies. We are also concerned about the difficulties facing constituents in contacting their Members of Parliament in order to maintain that personal contact with MPs which Canadians deserve. It is extraordinarily difficult to maintain that contact in our ridings and a reduction in that representation will be costly to the Canadian taxpayers in travel costs for MPs. It will also be difficult for constituents to have the kind of representation they want in northern Ontario. This motion is a stout declaration of the need for democracy and proper representation for the people of northern Ontario. I call on all Members to vote for these motions.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about this Bill. Those who are watching may be under the impression that the Bill concerns the Briar and curling in Canada. Nothing could be further from the subject of this Bill and I know Your Honour is listening with great interest to the relevance in the debate today.

I suggest there is no Government that has been more sensitive to the needs, hope and aspirations of northern Ontario than the Government of which I have the privilege of serving. It is because of the representations made by Members in our caucus who are from northern Ontario that I and the Government have been persuaded to bring in the legislation which we see today. It does more for northern Ontario than virtually any other part of Canada.

This legislation opens more doors than any other legislation introduced by the previous administration. The Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) will be the first to stand in praise of this legislation because it is fair. It does not isolate northern Ontario or the Province of Ontario, but introduces rules which have a common application throughout the country. We have provisions in legislation which, for the first time, mandate the Electoral Boundaries Commission in each province to look at the question of geography manageability in terms of determining the constituencies in each province. Our course of action was not to say that northern Quebec, northern Ontario, northern Manitoba, northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta, northern British Columbia or indeed any province shall have x number of seats. This legislation has been a response to the legitimate concerns of people who live in large, sparsely populated areas.

We have come up with a set of rules that apply across the country which will allow the electoral boundaries commissioners to come to conclusions—

Mr. Rodriguez: We have been that route before.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am disappointed at the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I sat in absolute silence and astonishment, mainly absolute silence when he spoke, because I thought it was important in this House to respect people who put points of view forward. I am putting forward what I think is a very reasoned point of view—

Mr. Blaikie: You are a statesman, are you?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —for people in northern Ontario and across the country. I know the people of northern Ontario would not want to be singled out, by having a law that, say, comes out of Toronto. They want a law with equity and fairness across the board. I am glad to have the deputy whip of the Liberal Party here in support of the proposition that I am bringing forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here is a man with common sense and exceptional perspicuity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is in the provisions brought forward in the Bill a more than adequate response to concerns expressed by Members such as the Hon. Member for Algoma and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Prud'homme: Where?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Quite apart from the fact that we have addressed ourselves to the procedural matter, which is now a matter of record and you have made your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we also have an additional amendment taking off any cap on the number of seats and the representation available in growing provinces. This impacts in a very positive way on the Province of Ontario, Ontario being one of the major beneficiaries when it comes to the amendments brought forward.

We have the combination of allowing the full number of seats to flow to a growing province and a mandate to the Electoral Boundaries Commission that the commissioners must take into account the whole question of geographic manageability. What could be more fair and even-handed? Because I received such excellent representations from my colleagues in northern Ontario I was persuaded the amendments should be brought forward. We have addressed the issue.

I appeal to opposition Members. I know during the course of debate within committee that this matter was discussed at some length. I had the opportunity when I was there to deal with the matter with the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). We looked at various ways to deal with the problem of sparsely populated areas in provinces.

The principle that I want in this Bill is one to which I alluded in the procedural argument. I do not want us to depart from the very good principle of having independent commissions sitting down, and looking at the demographics in each province to determine on the basis of the guidelines we have established that certain boundaries are appropriate within a province. I do not want to substitute the wisdom of the Government of the day, as it were, for the independent commissions by saying that we are going to declare boundaries should be such and such. The difficulty and the principle involved is one which I think we have all accepted, that the independent commission is the route to go.

If we are going to have a situation where the Government of the day determines boundaries which, with the greatest respect, is what is being suggested here, notwithstanding the ebb and flow of population, a special rule for a particular part will—

Mr. Penner: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. Rodriguez: And Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say the principle here is the allocation in each province and it is a matter that is within the discretion and certain guidelines of the Commission. That is an important principle, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member will know that when he says Saskatchewan has a set of rules, I am sure he would want to have those rules apply to his own province, not to have exceptional rules for the Province of Ontario. That is, unfortunately, the result of the suggestion he makes in the course of debate.

Mr. Penner: That is wrong.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say that because I have great respect for the Hon. Member. He has traditionally spoken on behalf of his part of the province, northern Ontario, with great effect. I know that his sense of fairness will dictate his understanding of my position that I think the rules should apply right across the board to all provinces. We should not start saying that Ontario is a special situation. The next thing we will make Saskatchewan a special situation. I know people in Saskatchewan would not want to have a different rule than the one that applies across the board to other provinces. That is what motivates me in this legislation.

We have addressed this matter in the amendments we have brought forward, and it would be outside of the principle that I think we have accepted universally, regardless of Party, that the Electoral Boundaries Commission should have that independence and not be dictated to by any Government of this day or of a future day. They should have that independence. Regretfully I have to say the amendments are not acceptable from the Government's point of view.

We are addressing, and I think we will accomplish the results of what the Hon. Member for Algoma and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt have suggested. More important, we want to make sure that what is done is done on a sound principle, a principle from which we will not deviate.

I simply say to Hon. Members that the suggestion is very tempting that we should have a particular set of rules for the Province of Ontario, but I ask Members to take that proposition forward at a time in the future. We could say: "Here is the principle now. We made this arrangement that Ontario in this case is a special instance and in terms of electoral boundaries"—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is a dangerous precedent. I commend opposition to this matter to all Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): I appreciate this opportunity to speak on this very important matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: I understood that the Minister spoke for the full length of time. Would you not alternate Parties? How would you decide, Sir?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) points out that maybe the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) exceeded his time. He did not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It may have seemed a long time to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis as often is the case in this House depending on which side one sits and on who is speaking.

I indicated that the Parliamentary Secretary was going to speak. We are trying to alternate in terms of numbers and speakers from all Parties. Members on the Government side have not spoken as often as Members of both opposition Parties in this debate up until now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: Call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is not yet six o'clock. May I remind Members that they should reserve their manifestations of joy when they are deserved.

• (1800)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I find that every time I rise to speak, it is an emotional thing with the Opposition. I appreciate the opportunity to address some very well reasoned words to the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I appreciate that it is an important matter which the Chair feels should be decided by the House. I think we are ready to do that, at some point later on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

It being six o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved that Bill C-252, an Act to amend the House of Commons Act (estimates), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to thank my colleagues who will speak on the Bill as well this evening. As we all know, the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now over an hour late. I appreciate those Hon. Members taking the time to stay and support the particular Bill. Also, at the outset, I want to say that Bill C-252 concerns the position of the Administrator of the House, not especially the person of the Administrator of the House.

The purpose of my Bill is very simple. It is outlined in the opening pages of the Bill under "explanatory notes". The purpose is to add the Administrator to those officers of the House of Commons who are responsible for preparing the estimates of the sums required for the House. The administration of the House of Commons has evolved from its inception in 1867. However, there are in fact a number of the 1867 rules still in effect. There were very few changes and no studies to speak of until 1964. The study which took place that year made, among others, three statements worth repeating. The first was:

> The Clerk has had to spend a disproportionately large amount of his time in dealing with administrative and personnel matters.

The second was:

> The study brought to light some 170 specific problems in the administration of the House of Commons.

Finally, and I quote again:

> What is clearly needed is a revised structure which includes positions for administrators who have the time, the skill, and the authority to deal effectively with administrative and personnel problems.

For reasons which are slightly obscure now, this last recommendation was never carried out.

In 1975, a report entitled: The State of Administration in the Canadian House of Commons had the following to say:

> If we look at the changes which have taken place in the administration of the House of Commons since 1867, we see that very few major changes have been introduced.

Let me now read a few quotes from the report of the Auditor General undertaken in 1979 and reported in 1980. Speaking of the heavy responsibilities of the then Clerk, Mr. Alistair Fraser, the report said that he had to spend "a disproportionately large amount of time on administrative and personnel matters". The report went on to outline, as a major deficiency, "the lack of a clear separation between the mainstreams of activities in the House—procedural duties and administrative responsibilities—resulting in the absence of clearly defined administrative mandates, organizational relationships and delegations of authority". The last quote from the same report, where the Auditor General's major recommendation to solve one of the fundamental problems identified in 1964 but left unresolved, was to "establish the position of Administrator to co-ordinate and direct the administrative functions of the House of Commons".

Although I will be quoting further from these and other reports to support my Bill, I want to ask Members in the House to hark back to the statements attributed to the former Speaker Lloyd Francis last July, regarding the former administration of the House of Commons. Mr. Francis, in my opinion, did not intend that those comments become public then and, also in my opinion, they would probably have been better left unsaid. However, notwithstanding that, I can tell the House that leaving aside the more spectacular quotes which reached the press, the situation was far worse than outlined. Just as it was inappropriate that the details be divulged last July, nothing would be gained from my reciting them now.

In an earlier political life, I had undertaken a major change of staff and direction in the City of Belleville, in the late 1950s and early 1960s. I had some idea of the problems which could be encountered, and I was part of the Management and Members' Services Committee which requested the then Speaker, Mr. Jerome, undertake an in-depth study of the management of the House of Commons. The decision to ask the Auditor General to do the study was that of the Speaker, but his support came from the Members' Services Committee in 1978.

I am sure that all will recall the seriously confused political situation which existed in Canada during that short period of time. The Progressive Conservative Government, under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), lasted only nine months. During that time, Mr. Speaker Jerome accepted the interim report of the Auditor General. In his comments to the House, he said:

> To my knowledge, no Speaker has ever been chosen on the basis of administrative expertise—neither has the Clerk of the House nor the Sergeant-at-Arms with whom the Speaker shares these duties—and yet, we have neither comptroller nor professional administrator within the ranks of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker Jerome then undertook to put in place an interim Administrator to begin the clean-up, and he accepted full responsibility for doing so. On behalf of the Government of the day, the late Hon. Walter Baker said:

> I say on behalf of the Government that we support the action you have taken with respect to this matter.

That Government was, as I said, short-lived, and Speaker Sauvé, in the chair of the thirty-second Parliament, set out to continue the work started by Speaker Jerome. She undertook to change the person of the Administrator who, like his predecessor, faced enormous obstacles. Employees viewed him as an external factor unnecessarily disrupting their lives, and Members quickly sided with employees whom they had known for many years. However, with the full support of the Speaker and the Clerk of the day, together with knowledgeable Members of Parliament, the job was undertaken.

Let me now look at some of the results. During that period of time, some 376 administrative positions were eliminated and 94 new ones created. However, during the period, not a single full-time employee of the House was fired or laid off in the effort to reduce costs. Of the 94 new ones, a breakdown should be helpful—personnel, which had been terribly neglected over the years, received 29; the Table Research Branch, 16; computer and electronic services, 27; and miscellaneous, 22, including the Clerk, three, the Administrator, five and the Sergeant-at-Arms, 6. As important, or perhaps more so, is the fact that in the five years from 1980 to 1985, over 500 competitions took place, something that had never happened in the House of Commons previously. As a result of the competitions, 232 employees on staff were promoted and another 241 were promoted or reclassified as a result of ongoing personnel changes.

At the height of the time when questions were being raised about the ethics and the propriety of having an Administrator in the House of Commons, in 1983, the Auditor General undertook a comprehensive follow-up audit of the 1980 report. He said:

The House of Commons now has a comprehensive and well organized financial management operation; excellent briefing materials are provided to members and timely and practical financial reports are given to both Members and House managers. We receive positive feed-back from operating managers on the assistance and support provided by the Comptroller's office.

In short, the staff were even then settling down to enjoy the benefits of good administration, and I think it is fair to say that the majority of Members who pay attention to the administrative system that provides their support services are happy with the results.

Budgets for the operation of the House of Commons during this period when the new Administrator was beginning his duties reflected the expertise of his office. Despite the fact that Members were receiving more and better services than ever before, the annual increase in the budget set aside for the House of Commons was 5 per cent or less. Even though with rampant inflation Government Departments were increasing budgets by 15 per cent to 20 per cent, the House of Commons budget fell below the inflation rate by a large measure.

To outline now all the improved benefits which Members received during this period would take more time than I have at my disposal. Suffice it to say that over 80 per cent of the requests made by the Members' Services Committee were accommodated within the lessened budget. I could also spend more than the time allotted to me discussing and describing the OASIS local area network which has put Members in the position of having the finest electronic support program of any legislature in the world. All of this was accomplished in the period of time I mentioned of lower budgets and clearer administrative services.

While there are always new ideas to be presented for the consideration of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services and the Board of Internal Economy, either for the administration of the House or for the services offered to Members, the major reforms recommended by the Auditor General in 1980 are now in place. Most in fact have been in place for a number of years and people have adjusted to and now approve of them. Most have no wish to return to the good old days, particularly if they experienced them firsthand. The Chairman of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), reflected the view of many of his colleagues when he declared the following:

We are now the best paid and supported Parliament in the western world.

To a degree, we have broken new ground in the administration of the House of Commons in Canada, but not entirely. The Province of Ontario has had a similar administrative organization since 1976. Australia has had a similar arrangement since 1954. In New Zealand, a Bill has recently passed establishing the position of general manager to be responsible for administrative services. Two quotes from the Hansard of the New Zealand House during the debate on that Bill might be of interest. I quote the following from New Zealand Hansard:

The rationale behind those changes is to allow the Clerk of the House to concentrate on the smooth running of the House and the important constitutional functions that devolve on the Clerk's office in Parliament. The Clerk's counterpart on the administrative side will exercise a full-time managerial function—thus improving the support services provided to Members of Parliament.

I go on to quote from the New Zealand Hansard:

There is a great deal more administration in this building than there was formerly and I think it is fair to say—without casting any adverse reflections on anyone who has been responsible in the past—that there has been a lack of management services here that needs to be remedied.

Finally, a few years ago the British House had placed before it a recommendation that all the administration be put under the supervision of the Clerk. It is interesting to note that a committee of Members of the British House of Commons rejected that recommendation saying that the plan was simply not workable and would destroy the ability of the Clerk to perform his procedural duties.

In closing, let me say that in the last five years the need to add the position of the Administrator to the Standing Orders and the House of Commons Act has been supported by three Speakers—I cannot, of course, ask the current Speaker to offer an opinion regarding a matter before the House—three Attorneys General, two Clerks and most MPs who have any knowledge of the administration of the House of Commons. This form of administration is either in place or is being carried out in other legislative bodies throughout the western world. The fact of the Administrator in the Canadian House of Commons has existed since 1980. The time has come to include that fact in legislation.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-252 this afternoon. I intend to speak against the Bill. I think it is a bad Bill and that it is wrong. I intend to talk it out if I have the opportunity to do so. I intend to talk against it and defeat it. I would filibuster it if it were possible.

Mr. Malone: That sounds like you.

Mr. Boudria: I say this as a Member of the House of Commons and as a former employee of the House of Commons. Those Members who are concerned with how Parliament should work should, in my view, all be greatly concerned and should all work to defeat this particular Bill.

Mr. Malone: Sounds like a Liberal.

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member is right. I do sound like a Liberal. I believe that Parliament is supreme. I believe that Parliament should be supreme and that no structure should ever exist to take anything away from the supremacy of Parliament. The Hon. Member across the way would like to say that that is a Liberal principle. I would not have taken that credit myself, but now that he has said it, I will accept it on behalf of myself and hopefully some of my colleagues.

The whole principle of the supremacy of Parliament came to light very recently in a very particular way during discussions on Bill C-45, an Act to grant certain rights and privileges to the employees of this institution. It became quite evident that the majority of Members did not want to give the right to strike to the employees of the House of Commons because it was the view of some that by giving them that right, people outside the Chamber would be able to dictate whether or not Parliament could function. In other words, they argued that it took away from the supremacy of Parliament. I do not happen to think that that was a very legitimate concern at that time because we could designate certain employees as essential and proceed without the rest thus giving them their full rights. However, we are still in the process of debating that particular legislation. It was a concern that was expressed by a great many Members of the House.

I am of the belief that the senior servants of the House should report to the Clerk and that the Clerk should report to the Speaker. With that structure, it is my view that the servants of the House are the employees of the House and not the masters of the House. I believe that it is important for us as legislators to considre that. I will not claim that I am the author of that maxim. However, let me cite Citation No. 13 from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

(1) Within the ambit of its own rules, the House itself may proceed as it chooses; it is a common practice for the House to ignore its own rules by unanimous consent. Thus, bills may be passed through all their stages in one day, or the House may decide to alter its normal order of business or its adjournment hour as it sees fit.

(2) The House is perfectly able to give consent to set aside its Standing Orders and to give its unanimous consent to waive procedural requirements and precedents concerning notice and things of that sort.

In other words, the House and only the House can be the master of the House of Commons.

Let me continue by quoting from Erskine May. At page 207 it states:

The law of Parliament provides the framework for, and determines the nature of, Parliamentary procedure, which consists of the rules and arrangements made by either House for discharging its constitutional functions within that framework.

The principal distinction for practical purposes between parliamentary law and procedure is that any change in the law of Parliament can only be effected by statute, whereas either House is free to modify its own procedure by its independent action; and that for the regulation of procedure recourse is not had to statute except for the purpose of effecting similar procedural changes in both Houses, or of co-ordinating the rules of procedure to changes in the law of Parliament.

In other words, it is an indication that Parliament has to be supreme.

There is another reason for the House not giving consideration to Bill C-252. I fundamentally disagree with the Hon. Member who proposes the Bill who said that it has wide support and has had wide support from Members in the past.

Mr. Ellis: I said from knowledgeable Members.

Mr. Boudria: I refer the Hon. Member to the Third Report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons which the Hon. Member quoted himself. Even if the Hon. Member disagrees with what I have to say today I hope he will consider the opinions which were unanimously adopted by the House in order for the House to function. I would like to quote from Chapter VIII of the report under the title Administrative Reform which states:

We believe the legitimate right of members to control the House of Commons should be reinforced. For this reason our First Report proposed a Board of Internal Economy.

Further on, in the same chapter the report states:

Members must not only run the House, they must feel that they are in charge. We place a high priority on restoring the pre-eminence of the House of Commons and of proceedings in the Chamber.

What we glean from the report is that the role of Members in giving direction to the House and how it is to be run should be increased and not decreased.

As I indicated earlier on I think that there should be only one senior officer of the House and that should be the Clerk of the House. I would like to read further from the report in this regard which states:

The role of the Clerk of the House of Commons should be one of leadership and inspiration for all employees of the House. For this reason the Clerk of the House must be, and be seen to be, the principal permanent officer of the House, accountable to it, and its bodies, for operations of the House of Commons.

The committee recommends that the role of the Clerk should be one of leadership. That means first—in charge.

I am sure all Hon. Members have noted by now that, indeed, the committee said something in its report quite different from what we heard earlier today. The special committee also suggested that the role of the Board of Internal Economy be increased. It suggested that the board should be structured having the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, two members of the Queen's Privy Council, the Leader of the Opposition or his nominee and two other ordinary Members sit on the board. I presume the Hon. Member opposite agrees with this recommendation since he voted for it when Bill C-63 was adopted on June 27, 1985. There was provision in that Bill for an independent secretariat for the Board of Internal Economy. This would ensure that the Board of Internal Economy would be run as a management team and that its decisions would not be influenced in any way by any forces other than those of the Members of the House of Commons. This is why there was provision for a secretariat. As far as I know, the structure is not yet in place. If we have time this afternoon to debate anything it should be the establishment of just that.

I am worried about any Bill which wants us to go in the opposite direction to that suggested by the Special Committee on Reform. Notwithstanding the fact that there may well be a need for someone to administer the House, I do not believe we should be structuring anything so as to afford the House and its principal officer three Deputy Ministers. If having a triumverate to run a ministry, or any place, was in order then why is it Ministers have only one Deputy Minister and not three? Ministers have much larger departments than that of the Speaker of the House of Commons. It is well known that there should be one Deputy Minister, one person in charge who reports to the elected officials. That is the way all Government departments are structured. Therefore, I believe that strengthening the principle advocated in the Third Report of the Special Committee with respect to the senior person, the person in the role of leadership, being the Clerk of the House reporting to the Speaker of the House should be followed. That structure was recommended and unanimously adopted. It is the proper way for us to go. To move in a diametrically opposite direction at this time for whatever reason is totally unjustified.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder what we have to gain by putting the kind of structure in place proposed by the Hon. Member in his Bill. It certainly is not because a parliamentary committee recommended a similar formula, and it certainly is not because a number of reports have indicated that we are to have three, what I would consider to be assistant deputy ministers, to run the House of Commons.

If the Hon. Member cannot find any better support for his proposal than the references he gave us earlier today, well, Mr. Speaker, I must say I still abide by my initial decision to vote against his proposal and talk out the Bill.

[English]

The Hon. Member has indicated to us how some services on Parliament Hill have tremendously improved. Those were the words he used. Some services may have improved. I have two television sets in my office. Like most people I can only watch one at a time. However, there are two there because that is the way the system works. One wonders whether or not some improvements are necessary. I have a machine in my constituency office with a little printer on it which types out press releases if I so desire. Again, I am sure it is very useful although I have never used it.

On the other hand, we have a structure which in my view is very cumbersome. Notwithstanding the fact that we had to improve certain items, we have destroyed many things in our quest for improvement. The Hon. Member opposite says that no employees were fired in the process of improving the House. I am not sure what is meant by "fired" in his terms. But let me say to you, Mr. Speaker, that many employees left not of their own accord. Perhaps people would not call that "firing" necessarily, but some employees who would have preferred to stay, are no longer here. I will put it in those terms.

We have all these gadgets, the so-called improvements, including these excellent briefing materials which the Hon. Member opposite described for us earlier. Yet I asked a messenger in my office to bring a cardboard box to my car so I could bring it to my constituency office, only to be told that because of all these regulations he could only go as far as the door. I had to go outside and get my car from the parking lot and bring it back to the door so he could put the box into the car. I answered very properly that if I had to go outside to get my car, I might just as well bring the box with me and, therefore, I did not need the messenger. The messenger explained to me, and of course I believe him because I know it is true, that this is the way the system works. These are the guidelines with which people in this building have to live. My request did not qualify under a number or kind of delivery.

As much as our system is apparently so improved, and I do not doubt in certain ways it may be better than it was before, let us not believe that everything which has been done in those so-called improvements has been good for the staff or even for Hon. Members of the House of Commons.

To change something means that it is changed, but it does not necessarily mean that it is better. To make the changes advocated in this Bill to amend the House of Commons Act is certainly just one of those examples. It is a change for the purpose of making a change, with plenty of proof that nothing or very little could be better and, in my view, far more could be worse than what it is now.

I ask all Hon. Members to seriously consider the implications of effectively placing another person at a deputy minister level in this House of Commons. I think there should be only one. There are presently two. We should not have three.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have read the legislation introduced by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis). I have had the opportunity to examine it for some time now. I do not see it as the almost Machiavellian plot which the previous speaker from the Liberal Party seemed to indicate. I think there are some matters which have been in dispute over the years in this House of Commons. There have been questions about the administration of the House of Commons and as someone who has sat on the Committee of Management and Members' Services for the last year, I can say that I certainly have had the opportunity to disagree with the administrator just as I have had occasion to disagree with the decisions of the Sergeant-at-Arms and occasionally with the Clerks who have decided against me on some occasions in the past. I do not mean to indicate that that is a particular reason for being either in favour of or against this particular legislation.

I do not want to see us with three Deputy Ministers, but I do not think that is the main point behind this particular legislation. I suspect that if we are dealing with staffing levels and things of that nature, it can be dealt with in committee and discussed in terms of setting the budgets for the House itself.

My particular reason for liking the legislation before us and for wanting us to view it in more depth in a legislative committee—which is what would happen if the Government were in a position to allow this to go to committee—is that I think it recognizes the de facto situation in the House of Commons at the present time.

All three Parties on the Committee of Management and Members' Services expect the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Administrator and, on occasion, the Clerk to come before it. So there is that recognition that there are three distinct roles within the administration of the House of Commons. For that matter, many of the things the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party brought up in his speech are under the direct responsibility of the Administrator at the present time. I would think it only reasonable that the person who is directly responsible should be preparing those estimates for us.

I do not believe we have to go through a list of whether the telephones work or whether one Hon. Member happens to need a computer in his office as opposed to someone who comes from a riding which is, in my case, 2,000 miles away. The ability to get hard copy material back and forth from my riding office is an advantage to me, but I really do not think that type of, if I may call it, petty argument is really necessary to bring before this House. Each riding is different. That is something we spent the whole day talking about. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) rose earlier on a previous Bill and made that very plain. What someone in the environs of Ottawa may need is obviously different from what someone in northern Ontario, Winnipeg, or northern Manitoba would need, and definitely different from the needs of someone representing a constituency in Alberta or British Columbia.

I believe that in looking at this legislation we should not be bringing those types of matters to bear. Instead, we should be looking at how we want the House to be administered and what controls we want over the House. We should also be looking at what is the exact role of the Board of Internal Economy. That is something which can be considered in dealing with this legislation in committee. That is one of the reasons I would like to see this legislation go forward.

I will not be speaking very long on the legislation as it is specifically before us. I do want to say something in reaction to the Hon. Member who introduced the legislation. I must say that there were parts of his speech with which I was in disagreement. There are still a number of problems in the House of Commons.

Another piece of legislation with which we are dealing at this time is Bill C-45, regarding the collective bargaining rights of people who work on the Hill. Many Hon. Members who are presently in the House were involved in debate on this Bill and it has been brought out that there are a number of problems which still exist. There are a number of problems dealing with classification, staffing levels and hiring procedures. Those problems still exist. But that is not the particular subject of this legislation. That is something which we in this House have to deal with and, hopefully, the Government will be moving forward to help us in that endeavour.

With those few words, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I would like this legislation sent to a committee where we can study it in more depth.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill C-252 introduced by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis). First let me say that I will not be supporting the Bill in principle. I would like to point out, however, that I do not feel it is a bad Bill. The only thing I question is the timing of it.

I would like to speak today about basically three points; the effects which the McGrath Committee Report on Parliamentary Reform will have on this particular House and how we should be looking at that as Parliamentarians after the great amount of effort and dedication was put into this report. I would also like to speak about the Board of Internal Economy, of which I have been privileged to become one of the commissioners. I would also like to discuss Bill C-63.

Bill C-252, as presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings, recommends that we bring about change. There is nothing wrong with change, but change for the sake of change becomes very dangerous when dealing with this institution. I do not believe that he brought this Bill in merely for the sake of change. I am sure he brought it in to bring about improvements in the administration of this House. I want to focus on the improved conditions that we on Parliament Hill have provided for the staff, who are of prime importance for MPs and to the ultimate benefit of the taxpayer, the people we serve.

I agree with the Hon. Member that we must maintain a high standard of integrity. We also must maintain a high standard of performance. That can only be attained by having the tools to work with. On June 27, 1985, this Government presented Bill C-63 to this House. That Bill did not make the changes recommended here today. I do not know why it was not discussed at that time. However, Bill C-63 is excellent legislation. It gave us a new Board of Internal Economy which encompasses all Parties in the House and allows private Members to participate in the decision-making process regarding Parliament Hill. Prior to this, the Board was composed of the Speaker and two Members, generally Privy Counsellors. With the inception of the Board—

Mr. Ellis: Four Members.

Mr. St. Germain: I am informed that there were four Members on the Board previously. However, private Members were not represented. Since the inception of certain recommendations from the McGrath Report every Member in this House has a voice on this issue. It also gave Members the opportunity to raise questions concerning the management of the House through a designated member of the Board. That is a great improvement. It allows Members to participate in the day-to-day operations of Parliament Hill.

The Board was also to establish a secretariat. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) made mention of the fact that we had not as yet named a secretariat. I want to point out that we are working in that direction but we have not as yet met often enough to resolve the question of the direction in which we should be going with the administration or financial management of this institution. We have met on merely three occasions. However, I can assure all Members that a secretariat will be chosen and it will be answerable to Members in this House. We as a Board of Internal Economy will provide the guidance required for our staff, whether they be administrative or anything else, because ultimately they answer to us.

This House commissioned the McGrath committee report concerning parliamentary reform. As I pointed out, they covered numerous aspects of the operations of Parliament Hill as well as procedures in the House. I honestly believe that we must give this report full consideration before we enter into further legislative or administrative changes. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister has said on so many occasions, it is a tremendous report in all aspects. It not only makes numerous excellent recommendations but, more importantly, it represents all Members of the House.

I honestly believe as well that were we to allow this Bill to proceed we would virtually usurp the power of the new Board of Internal Economy established by this House. I am not saying that it will not happen that the Board may deem it suitable to make certain recommendations in line with what the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings has put forward, but I would not want to be too hasty in going in that particular direction.

The Board is in its infancy. We are discussing numerous aspects of change which would improve the plight of a number of groups in this operation. Having been a Member and president of a trade union, I feel it is important that each Member of our staff be given full consideration and as many rights as humanly possible, while at the same time maintaining the high standards which have always existed in Parliament.

The new legislative committees we have established are, as well, something which the Board is studying. Here again we have something in its infancy, something very new to Parliament, and this, along with other innovations, should be dealt with in an orderly fashion, one by one. I know that the administration aspect will be dealt with as fairly and judiciously as possible.

There are other Members who wish to speak on this subject. Without a doubt, I, as a Commissioner of the Board of Internal Economy and Member of Parliament, feel that we cannot stand still. We must continue to try to focus our attention on improving conditions for Members of Parliament and for all of those who work on Parliament Hill. The eventual outcome will be a benefit to all Canadians, not only to those of us here, but to those whom we serve.

I would like to conclude my remarks by asking the House to consider delaying, for a short period of time, its decision on this very important matter and to allow those of us who have been designated to consider improvement to the financial and administrative aspects of the House, and to look at the entire program we must deal with on the Hill, prior to coming forward with changed legislation of this nature.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have looked with great care at Bill C-252 in the name of the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), who is Vice-Chairman of the Management and Members' Services Committee. I must say that on the surface the Bill appears to be quite inoffensive, even innocuous. All it is asking is that the administrator be allowed to prepare, table, and defend his own estimates. However, there is a subtlety in this Bill which has been alluded to by my hon. friend for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), and by my hon. friend on the Government side who has just spoken. The subtlety is that the Bill is creating a new officer of the House, a third officer of the House in addition to the two who have traditionally been in charge; namely, the Clerk of the House and the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. Prud'homme: It's about time.

Mr. Penner: The Chairman of the Management and Members' Services Committee is here and has kindly allowed me to use up the remaining time. He indicated to me that if he were speaking on this Bill he would probably be in favour of it, but with reservations. I suppose that is not a bad position to be in. I would put my emphasis, Your Honour, on the reservations. To agree to a piece of legislation which creates a third officer of the House with equal rank to the Clerk of the House, that officer being the administrator, runs directly counter to a truly splendid and outstanding report, the McGrath committee report which I think is going to be a hallmark of reform for many generations of parliamentarians.

Recommendation 8.2 of this report reads:

> We recommend that the Clerk of the House of Commons have ultimate responsibility for the administration of the House.

Having been an alternate member of that reform committee and having enjoyed my association with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and with the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings, I certainly stand by that recommendation.

The report notes that the Clerk of the House has concentrated more and more of his time on procedural matters. It goes on to say that we understand the need for such expertise in the House but that the role of the Clerk of the House of Commons must be one of leadership and inspiration for all employees of the House. For this reason, the report says that he must be seen as the principal and permanent officer of the House.

The role of the Clerk of the House of Commons has traditionally been that of the chief permanent officer. It is said, for example, that he is learned and highly specialized. He is an expert in legislative procedure but, traditionally, he has wide experience in parliamentary administration.

Mr. Ellis: He had absolutely none, you dunderhead.

Mr. Penner: If the Hon. Member will relax for a moment before he gets his dander too high, he will appreciate what they have done in Great Britain to deal with this matter. In Great Britain they have recongized as well that the Clerk of the House has more and more responsibilities for procedural matters. They have not, therefore, decided to create a third permanent officer or, as my hon. friend for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell indicated, another deputy minister. In the British House of Commons they have created a department of administration. The department of administration is headed by a clerk administrator who is directly responsible to the Clerk of the House. He is the man who looks after all of the administrative details, but he is not an independent, separate figure running an administrative department apart from the authority of the Clerk himself.

I suppose some Hon. Members would argue that we ought to have a third permanent position, another officer in the House of Commons. We have the Clerk and the Segeant-at-Arms, so why do we not have a third?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, why?

Mr. Penner: The Sergeant-at-Arms has, of course, a long and traditional role in the House of Commons extending back a very, very long way, to the time of King Richard II of England who decided that the Speaker needed someone to protect him. The Sergeant-at-Arms originally was a body guard to the Speaker. Later when that responsibility was no longer required, his functions became those of one who looked after the precincts of the House and ensured that there were good housekeeping procedures and proper security in place. That is a long-standing traditional post.

No one is arguing against good administration. I think the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings jumped to the conclusion that in opposing his Bill we are against good administration of the House of Commons. Of course we are not. We want effective, efficient and cost effective administration. No one is arguing that at all.

However, the big danger which lurks in the Hon. Member's legislation is that, more and more, the House of Commons is going to become just another department of government. It can never be that. The purpose of Parliament is to be the watchdog over the Government of Canada and we need our allies. Our allies are the Auditor General, the Clerk at the table, the Sergeant-at-Arms and all of those attributes which make our watchdog role as efficient as it can possibly be.

The danger in Bill C-252 is that it sets up a separate administrative structure quite apart from the House of Commons, operating at arm's length. As a result, the teamwork which ought to exist with the Speaker, the Clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms and the subsidiary figure who is responsible for administration, can be broken down. The McGrath committee report drew attention to that danger. No less a person than the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who was the vice-chairman of the reform committee, indicated at one of those meetings that his feeling was that parliamentarians would be better served if there were a number of people who were not necessarily competing against one another to serve parliamentarians, but complementing one another.

I think the great fear among parliamentarians about a separate administrative arrangement is that it will increasingly become the tail that wags the dog. It will become the force that directs the work of parliamentarians.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell was quite correct in drawing attention to the fact that the House of Commons must be in the charge of the Members themselves, and we cannot set up a separate administrative unit that begins to direct and control them. The McGrath Committee Report drew clear attention to that. If time permits me, at page 50 it said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Penner: You are telling me that I do not have time to put this on the record. Let me conclude by saying that the House of Commons must always be in charge of its own affairs. Those who work with the Members must be the servants of the House, never its masters.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—TREATMENT OF VISITORS AT EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 I put a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) relating to some treatment that has been extended to incoming passengers at the Edmonton International Airport by the Customs and Immigration officials. At that time the Minister indicated to me that he would look into the matter to see if there was a way to improve upon the treatment extended not only to Canadians but to other tourists as well.

At the outset, let me indicate to you that I do not intend to take my entire time to make a presentation. It is my hope that we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary about how we can improve the situation at the airport.

I have several reasons for raising this concern. I have had representations from my constituents with regard to treatment that has been afforded to them. Individuals on the Council of the City of Edmonton have raised this concern. Furthermore, provincial Ministers of the Crown from the Province of Alberta have shared a similar concern about the poor treatment extended not only to Canadians but to visitors to Canada.

I acknowledge the difficulty that these officials have in performing their tasks, but it is essential that these officers convey a positive and good attitude to fellow Canadians and convey a warm atmosphere to tourists who come here on a regular basis. The tourism industry is very important not only to our country, but to our province and our city. I know that the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) have looked into this matter. I hope that the response we will receive will indicate that the situation will improve.

In fairness to the Customs officials, let me indicate that once this issue received some media attention I received calls from individuals who have been very impressed by the courteous manner in which they have been treated. Obviously there are two sides to this issue. I only want to stress that it is essential that we as Canadians always extend a warm hand of friendship to whomever visits our country.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to the Hon. Member's concerns regarding the treatment of tourists and visitors to Canada by Customs officers at the Edmonton International Airport. I can advise the Hon. Member that the Department of National Revenue shares his concern about the importance of tourism to the Canadian economy and that the role which Customs officers play in welcoming visitors to Canada is indeed important.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been aware of the situation for some time, and assures us that this kind of treatment vis-à-vis travellers will not be tolerated, not in Edmonton and not at any other point of entry in this country.

Last June, senior officials from the Department were sent to examine the situation at the Edmonton International Airport.

After their visit, a series of measures were put in place. These measures deal with the training of officers in the kind of attitude and behaviour expected of them, their regulations and interaction with travellersand especially the public's perception of the role of a customs officer. In addition, a number of measures are being considered, and some have already been implemented, to make customs officers adopt a more positive and sensitive attitude, covering areas such as multiculturalism, conflict resolution, neutralizing delicate situations, interview techniques, interprovincial communications on the job, and so on.

A three-day experiment will be held in Edmonton in November, to analyze the kind of problems encountered at high risk and high volume offices. Customs officers have now received more training in connection with their responsibilities under the Immigration Act. Furthermore, useful discussions have been held with provincial representatives, and recommendations for simplifying certain customs procedures have been submitted to them. We are now awaiting their reply.

[English]

Officials are continuing to monitor customs activities closely at the Edmonton airport. The Minister is confident that the action taken by his officials at Edmonton will ensure that a courteous and professional welcome is extended to all persons entering Canada, which Canadians have come to expect of the Customs service.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the 1985 Auditor General's Report supports the fact that Customs and Excise is working toward providing a more efficient and courteous service to the public.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—EXTRADITION OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on November 7, 1985 during Question Period I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) about the cases of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler, two Americans who are currently being held in custody in Canada.

You will recall that in the case of Charles Ng, he was apprehended in one of our western cities and charged with armed robbery as well as with attempted murder. Then it came to light that he was the subject of a search across North America, and perhaps world-wide. He was wanted for questioning in connection with some mass murders in the state of California.

You will recall, Sir, that there were some particularly grizzly murders in the state of California and Charles Ng, although he had not been charged with these offences, was wanted for questioning in connection with them.

That raised great concerns on the part of my constituents, and I know on the part of all Canadians. I had letters, telephone calls and personal inquiries in large numbers from people who were most concerned that an American citizen who allegedly had committed extremely serious crimes in the United States for which there was capital punishment should be here in Canada; we should be shipping him back to the United States as quickly as possible.

Those fears were compounded because shortly after that another case came to light, that of Joseph Kindler. This man had been convicted in the United States of capital offences, had escaped custody and had come to Canada. That, on top of the Charles Ng case, really got Canadian people extremely upset and excited about what was going on in this country.

On the surface, those cases have some similarity. There was the whole matter of extradition of people who had allegedly committed crimes in the United States and were now in custody in Canada. However, there were in fact some differences between the two cases.

In the case of Charles Ng, as I indicated, at the time he was apprehended in this country he had not been charged with any offences in the United States. At that time the Americans had not made any request for extradition. Since then, of course, a number of charges have been laid in the State of California against Charles Ng. In fact, I think there are between eight to ten separate charges of murder outstanding, as well as other charges, in connection with the case.

To the best of my knowledge, and on November 7 the Minister indicated in response to my question that at that time the State of California and the United States had not made a formal request for the extradition of Charles Ng. I am hoping tonight, for one thing, that we can learn from the Parliamentary Secretary what is the state of affairs now and whether there has been a request for extradition of Charles Ng. We realize that there can be no extradition until there is a request.

In the case of Joseph Kindler, however, it was very different. There had been a request for extradition. Joseph Kindler had made an application to the courts in this country to stave off that request. As I understand it, his application was based strictly upon the point that he would be facing capital punishment in the United States, that he was not facing capital punishment here and that it would be unfair, improper and unjust under our Charter of Rights for us to send him back to the United States where he would be facing a death penalty sentence. That case, as I understand it again from the Minister, has been proceeded on and now is awaiting written argument from Mr. Kindler's lawyer being presented to the Minister, all the court proceedings having been dismissed. Then the Minister indicated that probably there would be an oral hearing in front of him as well, and that it would be after that that he would be making a decision as to what to do in the case of Mr. Kindler.

Both those cases are of extremely serious concern to Canadians. They are concerned, first of all, because there is a feeling that it is unfair and improper that someone should be able to come up here and get away from American justice just because he or she faces a death penalty in the United States and does not face one here. Of course there is also a broader concern that Canada could very well become a haven for fugitives from American justice or for fugitives from foreign justice around the world. If we look at some of the acts of terrorism in various countries around the world where people face the death penalty, theoretically, if Mr. Ng and Mr. Kindler were allowed to escape the situation and use Canada as a shelter, we could very well become the repository for all sorts of international terrorists and fugitives from every corner and cranny of the world.

Those are the basic concerns of Canadians. I think it broadens into their general concern about the issue of capital punishment. We have had expressions of extreme concern for many years about the reinstatement of capital punishment in Canada. It seems to me that the cases of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler highlight that concern very sharply.

I hope we hear from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight an update of the situation of Charles Ng. Hopefully we will send him back to the United States to face justice there just as quickly as possible. Also I hope we will hear an update on the case of Joseph Kindler. Hopefully we will send him back to the United States for his Christmas dinner. I do not think any Canadian wants to see him around any longer than he has to be.

I would also like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary about just where we stand on the entire question of a free debate on capital punishment. That is really the key and underlying issue in all of these cases. I am looking forward to the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary regarding all of these items.

Mr. Bernard Valcourt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the concern he has expressed. I certainly agree that many Canadian citizens are also concerned about the points which he has made here today.

The Hon. Member properly pointed out that he brought up the question on November 17. It was again raised on November 19 by the Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy). At that time, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) advised the House that in the case of Charles Ng, no request had yet been received from the United States for his extradition. That situation has not changed as of yet. No procedure has been begun asking for extradition.

In the case of Joseph Kindler, as the Minister pointed out to the Hon. Member for Calgary East on November 19, the only change in that situation has been the extension given to the solicitors of Mr. Ng to prepare their submission to the Minister. The Hon. Member will recall that the Minister stated that the position of that individual was that his extradition to the United States should be asserted with conditions. In order to properly prepare their case and make it to the Minister, his solicitors needed further time.

I am certain that although Canadians may be very concerned about criminals from other countries being in Canada, they are not so concerned that they will deprive these individuals of the right to be heard. I believe the Minister has to be commended for this, and we understand that this is what guided him in the granting of this extension.

As the Hon. Member will certainly understand, I cannot give him the assurance that Mr. Kindler will be returned home for Christmas. However, it is my understanding that the Minister will not unduly delay any decision in that case. As for the other case, there is no change of status.

The Hon. Member also requested that I address the question of when we will have a debate in this House on the issue of capital punishment. I am afraid that I can only reiterate an answer which has already been given, that such a debate will take place during this Government's first mandate. However, it does not stand as an urgent priority at this time.

VISIBLE MINORITIES—JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this opportunity to say a little more about a question I asked many months ago. On May 23, I asked the then Minister of State for Multiculturalism about the Government's plans regarding redress for Japanese Canadians and specifically redress for the great injustice which was done them in the 1940s when they were dispossessed, resettled in the interior and faced, even after the Second World War had ended, the discriminatory actions of the Canadian Government.

At the time I specifically asked the Minister if he actually believes that the Opposition's failure to agree to an imposed settlement prevented him from negotiating with the National Association of Japanese-Canadians. That question elicited the following key statement from the Minister:

> Mr. Speaker, we never refer to anything we are doing in terms of our conversations as negotiations with the Japanese-Canadians.

He added some observations to that which I need not get into.

I have waited patiently on this matter because I wanted to give the Government the opportunity to resolve the matter. As well, I was aware that the National Association of Japanese Canadians was involved in its own program to demonstrate the extent of losses that were suffered. Even at this point I may say that the association is still involved in a program which, over the next few months, will provide an unprecedented description, an accounting, of the losses which Japanese Canadians suffered in a material way. By that means the incredible psychic and social costs which were inflicted upon them at the time will be underscored.

It seems to me appropriate this evening to investigate this matter a little further and place some principles on the record. We have a new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). He has had some three months in office. In the last couple of weeks there have been some very disturbing indications of the position which the Government may come to with respect to this matter, particularly indications which were provided in a press release from the City of Ottawa on November 17, following the meeting of the Canadian Multiculturalism Council which is advisory to the Minister. The council suggested that the redress policy should include among its points a settlement which is symbolic in terms of monetary award, and that it should be directed more toward the prevention of future wrongs upon any ethnocultural groups rather than a correction of past injustices. It went on to suggest that the establishment of a multicultural foundation with a mandate to foster understanding and friendship among ethnocultural communities might be such an expression.

That statement raised the gravest concerns in my mind about the Government's will to move on the indications which it gave, first of all as the opposition Party in June of 1984, and then from the Minister's office in December of 1984. After all, it was the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who questioned Mr. Trudeau, the then Prime Minister, about this matter. It was he who aroused hopes for the first time in decades that if he became Prime Minister he would have the will to do something about it.

On December 15 the Multiculturalism Directorate suggested in a release that there had been agreement between the Minister and the National Association of Japanese Canadians to negotiate something. Sadly enough that promise of December 15, 1984 was turned into an attempt at an imposed settlement before January had ended. It included a refusal to negotiate with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Part of my unhappiness about this matter—I might even say my umbrage at what has developed—is the fact that the Prime Minister has been capable of maligning the Opposition by his description of those events. Upon assuming office he said in a letter to a private citizen:

> —my Government took the initiative in addressing the concerns of the Japanese-Canadian community that the injustices inflicted—

He states further:

> After extensive consultation with the community, the matter was brought before Parliament on January 28 in the form of an all-Party resolution. As you may know, we were disappointed in our hope that the opposition parties would forgo partisan considerations and demonstrate the resolution's wide support among Canadians by giving unanimous consent to its passage.

That sentence is most interestingly worded. How could our consent here to an all-Party resolution indicate wide-spread support for it? Surely a redress proposal needs to have the support of the Japanese Canadian community. That was exactly what the Government had refused to do earlier in January of 1985.

It is then in this context of refusal to negotiate and the rejection of compensation for individuals that we stand. It is in this context that I want to say categorically that it seems to me inconceivable that we could have the arbitrary and dictatorial actions of Government in the 1940s during and after the Second World War redressed by the arbitrary action of a Government in 1985 or 1986. It seems to me absolutely imperative that if there is to be a proper settlement it will have to be negotiated with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

It seems to me imperative, then, that there be substantial discussions on the details of redress settlement. It is imperative that a parliamentary statement which will have the support of all Parties be developed in just such negotiations with the National Association of Japanese Canadians. It is imperative that this recognize the unjust actions of the Government of Canada in the 1940s. There has to be an agreement, too on the substance of redress. It is conceivable that that might find an institutional form. But I do not think we should rule out the possibility that individuals deserve compensation.

On a concluding note, it seems to me imperative that this same redress settlement include recognition that there were abuses flowing not just from the War Measures Act but in the area of citizenship and in the area of the exclusion of persons from British Columbia well after the war. A redress agreement has to include recognition of all of these elements and cannot be satisfactory to the Canadian people any more than to the National Association of Japanese Canadians unless it includes these.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Let me just begin my response to the Hon. Member by saying that he should be applauding, and, indeed, every Hon. Member of the Opposition should be applauding this Government's initiative, because for 42 or 43 years no national Government took the initiative to begin discussions, acknowledging that a bad problem, an unforgettable problem, took place some 42 or 43 years before. In fact, the commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Opposition, and since becoming Prime Minister, is a commitment which we are following, namely, that this Government will acknowledge these wrongs for the first time in 43 years. There will be a form of apology and there is going to be a fair redress package. In fact, some measures, such as the War Measures Act, are already being amended in such a way as to satisfy those people who were hurt by those actions in the early 1940s.

No other Government took that initiative. In fact, the previous administration under Prime Minister Trudeau very clearly said that Government should not get involved in a redress package, and that the Liberal Government would not get so involved in any way, shape or form.

What I have begun to do in my three months as Minister responsible for multiculturalism is to bring within the scope of discussions across the country not only the National Association of Japanese Canadians but all other interested parties, including the Japanese Canadian Redress Association of Survivors, which is an interested group of survivors from those years, and the Canadian Multicultural Council. I would think the Hon. Member should find the statement from the CMC a very positive one and one which is making an input toward my deliberations. My provincial counterparts and all other interested parties across the country are included in the discussions. I have continually had discussions with them in the past three months building on the foundation which my predecessor had achieved in the previous year. I believe that this is not simply a Japanese Canadian problem. This is a Canadian problem. We must try to get as much input from as broad a section of Canadians as possible.

When I have finally compiled this type of input which I require to make a recommendation, then I will do so to Cabinet. It will include an acknowledgement, as the Prime Minister has promised, and an apology of some form, and it will include a fair redress package, fair to the Canadian public and to Canada as a whole.

The main purpose of this is to make sure that this type of atrocity which happened 42 or 43 years ago will never happen in this country again. I take pride in the fact that the Prime Minister took the initiative on behalf of the Government of Canada, for the first time in 42 or 43 years, to deal with this matter. I look forward to having input from as broad a range of Canadians as possible so that we can develop the fairest possible package for Canadians as a whole.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

COST OF TOOTHPASTE POLL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the people of Canada discovered that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spent their hard-earned tax dollars to discover what he was supposed to do as the Minister of Finance. He conducted a public opinion poll to find out what his job was. Today, of course, Canadians discovered an even more astounding revelation. They discovered that Crest Toothpaste is indeed toothpaste. For all of us who thought all this time that Crest Toothpaste was foot-powder or shaving cream, we need not worry any more because we know that, indeed, Crest Toothpaste is toothpaste.

It cost $50,000 of taxpayers' money to make this brilliant discovery on the part of the Minister of Finance. Having made that discovery, the Minister of Finance tells us that, indeed, it cannot be used as a precedent to determine that most Canadians know that toothpaste is toothpaste. The only thing we know is that the 500 people who were interviewed were of that opinion, and not necessarily everyone else.

My constituents who are unemployed could tell you, Mr. Speaker, no charge, that Crest Toothpaste is indeed toothpaste. There is no doubt about it on their part. Therefore I encourage the Government to spend the taxpayers' money in a more productive way. If it ever wants advice in the future on whether or not toothpaste is toothpaste, or whether foot-powder is foot-powder, or anything else, it could consult the opposition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CN MARINE

PROCUREMENT OF FERRIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) appears to be losing the battle with CN Marine. A year ago the Minister of Transport promised there would be an additional three new vessels on the Gulf service and one new vessel on the Newfoundland-Labrador coastal service, vessels of the latest state of the art. He declared that this would have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, would create jobs.

In the last weeks the Minister of Transport has been backing away from this splendid pledge. My questions and those of both Government and official Opposition Members about a second Caribou-style ferry have led the Minister to talk about cost. CN Marine is clearly arguing it can buy more cheaply abroad than it can in Canada, and the Minister is being pressed to forget his promises of November 14, 1984.

The Clark Government broke promises to the Canadian shipbuilding industry in 1979 by allowing CN Marine to buy abroad. The Conservatives forgot then that Canadian shipbuilding pays big in wages and in purchase of materials. They forgot that Government gets a good chunk of these expenditures in taxes.

I challenge the Government to recognize these economic and fiscal realities and enable the Minister of Transport to keep his year-old promise of work for Canadian shipyards and their workers. To think only of the initial cost of purchasing a second-hand vessel, while ignoring the economic spinoffs and tax revenues that Government receives from Canadian shipbuilding, is what we are coming to expect from the Government. It's a shame that such shortsightedness will leave the Minister of Transport holding a tattered promise.

SPACE RESEARCH

TELESAT CANADA COMPETITIONS WON BY JEAN-FRANÇOIS DESCHÊNES AND DANIEL REY, CHARLEBOIS SECONDARY SCHOOL STUDENTS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, last night, with a hundred people from the National Capital Region, including senior management of the National Research Council and Telesat Canada, the staff of L'École secondaire Charlebois, the students and also some very proud parents, I witnessed the twenty-third launching of a space shuttle, telecast live from Cape Canaveral.

[English]

As with Marc Garneau, our first Canadian astronaut over a year ago, who also attended, the shuttle Atlantis carried another Canadian first into outer space. Jean-François Deschênes and Daniel Rey, two Charlebois graduates under the supervision of their teacher, John Audcent, won a national competition out of 290 entries sponsored by Telesat Canada in 1983 to place an experiment aboard the shuttle. Their experiment will test whether mirrors made in the near zero gravity of space have a smoother reflective surface than mirrors made on earth.

To quote the principal of the school, Mr. Jean-Marc Major: "This is a unique opportunity to show students across Canada that dreams can become reality."

[English]

Success in this experiment may not only give Canadians and the world a new way to look at ourselves, but will be a true reflection of the potential of our young scientific minds. I ask the House to join me in congratulating these two young Canadians on this historic achievement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR PROVISION OF SERVICE TO NEW HOME OWNERS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the recent housing construction boom in Kitchener and Waterloo has created a class of home owners who have fallen victim to Canada Post's freeze on extending home delivery. This freeze applies to new subdivisions and even to new homes recently added to streets which have always received home delivery.

Some of these homeowners must now use neighbourhood group boxes. Others, lacking even this necessity, must drive to their nearest post office and wait in long lines at inconvenient hours, often during work, in order to collect their mail. Furthermore, I am told that Canada Post proposes to continue this trend as cost saving measure.

While the end may be laudable, the means is unjustifiable. Perhaps a modest reduction in petty grievances, days absent, and strike activity amongst Canada Post personnel, coupled with an increase in their efficiency and productivity, would achieve the same end without forfeiting service. Therefore I call upon the Government to ensure that Canada Post provides all new home owners with the same level of service presently accorded their fellow taxpayers elsewhere.

Let me add that I welcome the Marchment Committee's report on the mandate and productivity of Canada Post Corporation. I trust that this report will act as an impetus for Canada Post to work toward a level of service with which its Canadian consumers can be satisfied and in which its employees can take pride.

SPORTS

FIELD HOCKEY—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF ARTIFICIAL TURF FACILITY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, only a few weeks ago the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) blatantly interfered in the internal affairs of the National Women's Field Hockey Association over the selection of its national coach. The incident has left many serious and permanent scars. Now the Minister has dealt another more serious blow to the field hockey movement.

It has been learned that the Conservative Government will not honour a $1.3 million commitment made by the previous Liberal Government toward the establishment of an artificial turf installation at the University of British Columbia. This would have provided amateur sports with a permanent and much needed training centre. The previous Government was prepared to recognize the need for such a world class facility. The Conservative Government, however, seems to be completely indifferent. To make matters worse, on November 7, over CBC radio, the Minister promised to keep all sports commitments made by the previous Government.

As a result of Tory double-talk, Canada was forced to relinquish the hosting of the women's World Cup tournament scheduled to take place in Vancouver next year. This is a serious embarrassment in the eyes of the international sports community. In addition, of course, our amateur athletes will lose out on a very necessary and competent training centre. I therefore call upon that Government and that Minister to honour the former Government's financial commitment and be sensitive to the deficiency of such facilities available to our amateur sports and amateur athletes across the country.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE—CANCELLATION OF ONTARIO LEGISLATOR'S ACCOUNT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on October 19, and again on November 2, Ontario NDP David Reville took part in demonstrations in Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce banks on behalf of striking CIBC workers. The bank retaliated by writing to tell him it was closing his accounts and calling in his mortgage. Although the bank has now backtracked on its action against Reville, this demonstrates the abuse of power that bank workers endure on a regular basis. It also demonstrates the power that banks have at their disposal and which they are not above exercising.

The treatment of bank workers and bank customers comes under federal legislation. The banks have used their power in an abusive manner in the past and it is time the Government moved not only to protect the workers but the customers. I might add that the power of banks in single industry towns with only one or two banks is ominous, and something has to be done to protect their customers.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

CARRIERS' DIFFICULTY IN SECURING INSURANCE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to keep our environment clean and prevent spills of toxic or polluting substances, not only have we been imposing more and more restrictions on the users and transporters of these substances, but we are also in our laws imposing penalties, especially fines, of ever-increasing severity when dangerous or unsightly substances are intentionally or even accidentally discharged into the environment. One result of this policy is that transporters and users of these substances, which might be as common as fuel oil, are finding it prohibitively difficult to obtain environmental insurance for their operations which are often essential to our industrial activity and domestic well-being.

Underwriters are refusing to insure, or they are charging such heavy premiums that the effect is the same. In the Northwest Territories, where, because of the lack of roads, it is necessary to truck petroleum products over frozen lakes and rivers, this problem is doubly severe.

Let us therefore remember that there must always be a balance between protecting the environment and those human activities without which we could not enjoy the good things of modern life.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, since the 1984 election, one of our main concerns, as Members of the Quebec caucus, has been to create jobs for Quebecers.

You are probably wondering why Liberal Members from Quebec are so upset about our successes in this area. They are upset because between February 1980 and September 1984, a period of 55 months, 37,000 new jobs were created under the previous Liberal administration. This is an average of 673 jobs per month.

However, since Quebecers elected a Progressive Conservative Government fourteen months ago, more than 89,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec, an average of 6,846 per month. You heard me correctly, Mr. Speaker: 6,846 per month. Ten times the Liberal average! That is real leadership, performance and efficiency. No wonder the Liberals are embarrassed! If I were in their shoes, I would be positively red-faced. We are now creating more jobs with Hyundai and other companies, and they are still complaining. To the workers of Quebec, I say that they will be able to exercise their own judgment in three years' time.

Mr. Speaker, I visit my riding regularly. People are happy and they are working. We have created jobs and we will continue to do so, and that is our mission as Conservatives.

SPACE RESEARCH

HOPE CREATED AMONG YOUNG STUDENTS FOLLOWING TELESAT CANADA COMPETITION WON BY JEAN-FRANÇOIS DESCHÊNES AND DANIEL REY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in 1983, Telesat Canada sponsored a national competition to stimulate the interest of secondary school students in space. Students were asked to design an original experiment that would be taken aboard one of the NASA space shuttles on its orbit around the earth.

With their project "For a better mirror", two young francophones, Jean-François Deschênes and Daniel Rey, students at L'École secondaire Charlebois in Ottawa at the time, won a chance to have their experiment carried out on board the space shuttle Atlantis, which was launched yesterday.

These young scientists saw their participation in the shuttle launching at Cape Canaveral as the culmination of their project, and the people of Ottawa and all Canadians were proud and honoured to celebrate this remarkable event in Canadian history.

Mr. Speaker, the achievements of Jean-François Deschênes and Daniel Rey are to be praised since these two students have succeeded in stimulating, encouraging and giving hope to our young Canadian science students. Canada has had the privilege of having an astronaut among its citizens. Our country now has the pleasure of seeing its first space scientists personified in these two students. As for our first space shuttle, Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting!

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS TO U.S.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Despite his assurances to the House on Monday and yesterday, there has apparently been an official request from the United States Government that we reopen, with that country, the issue of our softwood lumber exports to the United States as a precondition to general discussions on freer trade with that country.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs repeat the assurance that he gave to my colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Gary, on Monday, that in no case would there be a linkage between those two issues and that the Government of Canada will refuse to reopen negotiations affecting softwood lumber exports from British Columbia and other provinces to the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Yeutter has been in touch with me personally several times during the past week, and again last evening. He advised me that indeed the United States would like to have some talks with Canada on the lumber issue. He personally assured me that in no way whatsoever will these discussions be tied in as a precondition to the Canada-U.S. talks. We are not held hostage to these talks. There is no time limit for their completion, and they have nothing whatsoever to do with the Canada-U.S. talks. These talks will stand on their own merits.

ROLE OF UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suspect the Hon. Minister is being somewhat naive in his approach to this issue. Mr. Yeutter, of course, has to seek congressional approval before general trade negotiations can begin with his country. There are members of Congress in both Houses who seek to impose a condition upon the U.S. Government to settle this so-called irritant for them of the export of softwood lumber to their country from Canada.

We have received categorical assurances from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that there will be no linkage. Why would Mr. Yeutter be approaching Congress and yielding to it on this subject if this were not going to be a precondition to general negotiations with Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again I advise the hon. gentleman that these talks are not a precondition. As far as the Government is concerned, Mr. Yeutter and the Americans are honourable people and we have no reason to disbelieve them. The Government approaches them as neighbours, good trading partners and friends, which is something the former Government never did and which led to the deterioration of the relationship between our countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the House will want to recall those words and the words of the Minister's colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, if there is a congressional condition put upon our negotiations with that country.

● (1420)

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT STUDY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Apparently there is a series of secret documents affecting sectors of our economy that are vulnerable to negotiations with the United States. Will the Minister publish the document relating to the forest industry? Either that document exists and the Government is not coming clean, or, if it does not exist, the Government is not doing its homework. Will the Government produce that document so we can begin to know what is on the table and what is not on the table, who will be heard, and who will not be heard?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, naturally, documents have been prepared, and naturally there has been close discussion with the provinces which are involved and, and in some cases, with the industry that is involved. With regard to the findings of any studies that we might undertake, there is the closest possible co-operation in any talks that we might have, whether they are in the context of negotiations with the United States or on the quite separate and unrelated question of discussions that might affect timber that are being circulated between federal and provincial Governments.

I think that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should stop trying to stir fear and should come into the House of Commons with some real questions other than these rather reckless fishing expeditions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE—CANCELLATION OF DEMONSTRATORS' ACCOUNTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. A few days ago a member of the Ontario provincial Legislature and four other individuals had their banking arrangements with the Commerce Bank cancelled, solely because they exercised their democractic rights to participate in a demonstration.

Will the Minister undertake to ensure immediately that such similar abuses of power will not happen again? Will she also require that the bank concerned give a full apology to the individuals concerned and reinstate their banking arrangements?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to indicate my concern about this both publicly and privately. When I ascertain the total facts of the case I will be discussing it with the bank.

VISA LABOUR RELATIONS DISPUTE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Labour, to whom I wrote about this matter three weeks ago. Since the dispute with Visa is becoming increasingly bitter, will the Minister intervene to bring about a settlement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware, as are other Members of the House, that Labour Canada is monitoring the situation. Labour Canada mediators and conciliators are available at request from either party for intervention and we are there to help. However, we can only help if a request comes forward from individual parties.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—NEGOTIATOR'S VIEWS ON WATER EXPORTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It deals with the concern over the appointment of Mr. Reisman as negotiator for Canada in the free trade negotiations with the United States.

Will the Minister indicate to the House whether he is aware that Mr. Reisman is an enthusiastic proponent of the Grand Canal scheme and the export of water and that he has said on occasion that he believes the export of water, in this way is a possible key to a trade agreement with the United States? If so, will the Minister take this opportunity to tell the House and the Canadian people, as well as Mr. Reisman, through the House, that Canada's water is not on the table in the upcoming negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the positions taken by Mr. Reisman on this question. I am also aware of the answer that was given by the Minister of the Environment, in the House, when he made it clear that those are separate questions, that they are not related.

I take this opportunity, since it appears that we must put things in Hansard twice to draw them to the attention of the New Democratic Party, to say that the question of Canada's water is not involved in these negotiations.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if that is in fact the position of the Government, in telling Mr. Reisman that, will the Government be as forthright with respect to other matters of concern to Canadians about what is on the table? If the Government can be forthright in this instance, why can it not be forthright with respect to culture, the Autopact, and other issues about which it should be honest with the Canadian people?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if we are speaking about points in time, the Hon. Member is backward because I have already conveyed that view to Mr. Reisman and he understands, as he understands that his role in these negotiations is to carry out the policy of the Government of Canada—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whatever that is.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —which will be developing the trading mandate, monitoring the negotiations and instructing him as to what he should be saying.

• (1425)

With regard to openness, there has never been a negotiation undertaken by a Government of Canada that has involved more extensive consultation than the consultations that have evolved as we prepare for potential negotiations with the United States.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We are obviously pleased to hear his confirmation today that water will not be part of the negotiating agenda with the United States on comprehensive free trade.

If that is the case, I would like to ask the Minister whether he is prepared at the same time to state categorically some other issues which are causing great anxiety among Canadians that should not be on the table and say that the Government will not put forward or accept any negotiation relating to Canadian content, ownership of the Canadian publishing industry, Bill C-58, or the issues related to the ownership problems for Canadian magazines? Are those off the table as well as the isue of Canadian water?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not make the statement with regard to water now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The statement with regard to water was made in this House some weeks ago. It is time Hon. Members woke up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO HIGH COMMISSIONER TO BRITAIN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister has succeeded in confusing himself and everybody else.

I want to ask the Minister a related question. In a report from London, our High Commissioner, Roy McMurtry, a gentleman well known to the Minister, was quoted publicly as supporting a takeover of Copp Clark of Canada by the British publisher, Longman's.

Why does he tolerate senior diplomatic representatives deliberately contradicting a stated Government policy concerning Canadian ownership? Is he prepared to rebuke Mr. McMurtry, or is Mr. McMurtry simply forecasting a proposed change in Canadian policy?

Mr. Crosbie: Let's get Tom back.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the backbench of the Liberal Party could do considerably better than that in putting questions in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The backbench over there can do better too.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The views expressed by Mr. McMurtry were personal views. I have written him today—

Mr. Axworthy: He is a representative of this Government.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Does the Hon. Member want to continue the debate from his seat, or has he the courage to stand up?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: He speaks for you. Why do you not answer the question? All right, okay.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr.Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should pay due regard to the people in the backbenches on his side of the House as well.

The Minister has said, both today and in the past, that Canada's water is not on the negotiating table. Since he is prepared to do that for water, and since he met leaders of Canada's cultural industries last night and they made the request that our cultural industries not be on the table, why does he not show the same concern for Canada's cultural industries as he does for water, and say to the Americans that they are not negotiable?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, if he wants to make inquiries of the people who were at the meeting will find that while there was a disagreement about what should be negotiated there was a very real welcoming on the part of the Canadian artistic community and the Canadian cultural industries. Instead of being used as a political football for partisan gain, they were, in fact, being consulted directly by the Government of Canada as they have never been before.

Mr. Deans: And ignored.

JOB IMPACT STUDIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are tired of simply being consulted. They want to be listened to, for example.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Because data have been made available by the Government of Ontario showing that up to 281,000 jobs could be threatened in the Province of Ontario alone by entering into a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States, let me ask a simple question of the Minister.

• (1430)

Has the federal Government, in its responsibility, made studies of the job impact of free trade and, if so, will it make those studies available to the people of Canada so that we will know what we are getting into?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course the Government of Canada is carrying out studies into the implications of any trade negotiations into which we might enter. Those studies, many of them, have already been made available to most of the provinces—

An Hon. Member: Most of the provinces?

Mr. Deans: What about us?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Most of the studies have been made available to the provinces and to others with whom we are working in the negotiation.

Ms. Copps: What about us?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Some of those studies will become public in the normal course of events.

An Hon. Member: Leaked.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No. They will become public by the deliberate decision of the Government in due course—

Mr. Rodriguez: In due course.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —because the Government has started the practice of carrying out the most extensive kind of consultation prior to negotiations which has ever been seen in our country before. We intend to continue that way.

Mr. Chrétien: No respect for Parliament.

REQUEST THAT STUDIES BE RELEASED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada heard rhetoric before the election about consultation and they want—

Mr. Crosbie: That is all they ever heard from you.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister's colleague says: "That is all they ever heard".

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): From you.

Mr. Broadbent: That is all they are getting right now from the Government. That is the problem. They have had consultation, but if it is to be relevant to decision-making, does the Minister not agree that they should have studies, in particular job impact studies, at which they can look before the Government reaches a decision? If he agrees with that, why does he not make them available?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, not long ago, said that the people of Canada want to be not simply consulted but listened to. I remember very well the position which the Leader of the New Democratic Party took on the constitutional question when most Canadian people who voted for him wanted him to stand up on behalf of a federal Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Instead, he caved in because of an intellectual agreement which he made with the then Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We are carrying forward not simply extensive consultations. We are, as we demonstrated yesterday, working closely with the people who are directly concerned, to ensure that any negotiations which ensue will be in the interests of the country.

FINANCE

ATTENDANCE OF DEPUTY MINISTER AT BUSINESSMEN'S DINNER

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure he would agree that it would be quite improper to use senior public servants for partisan political purposes. Does he not consider it improper that the people invited to meet with Mr. Hartt, the Deputy Minister of Finance, were all members of the $1,000 PC exclusive club?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question was answered fully and completely yesterday by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Repeat it again.

PARTICIPATING DINERS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the question was not answered yesterday. The question was put in the context of the answer of a general consultation which was presumably available to many members of the public. However, it turns out—and I suggest that the Deputy Prime Minister should satisfy himself on this—that these were all members of a very exclusive group of PC contributors. Would he confirm that to the House at the first opportunity and ensure that it will not happen again?

Mr. Chrétien: And release the list of the names.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Release the list of the names!

Some Hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, it was the same—

An Hon. Member: Take your time, Erik.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Maybe they will buy a book.

Mr. Nielsen: Straight From The Heart.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It was the same question and the same answer. The Minister of Finance answered the question yesterday fully and completely, and I do not want to take up the time of the House by rereading it from Hansard.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTOPACT'S FUTURE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This week Simon Reisman has been reported in The Financial Post as telling a Cleveland symposium this year that he no longer believed the Autopact was necessary, and that he had fought in 1971 to have Cabinet end the safeguards which protect Canadian jobs. How can Canadian auto communities have any confidence in the Government's promises, when yesterday secret studies leaked out which indicated that the ending of the pact was being considered, and today it has become clear that the chief negotiator in our trade negotiations is prepared to give up these crucial safeguards which protect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if there was a question there, I missed it.

Mr. Deans: You missed it, because there was a question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Oh, there was a question.

Mr. Deans: Try listening.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The House Leader of the NDP assures me that there was a question. I presume, given the standards of the NDP, that it was the repetition of a question. I presume it was about the Autopact. The Government has given its assurances on the Autopact. They stand.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATOR BE DISMISSED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Given Mr. Reisman's statements, given the provincial opposition which has been expressed to Mr. Reisman, given these heretic views—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, the Hon. Member was quite long the first time. Could he just come to his question?

Mr. Langdon: Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs now prepared to dismiss this chief trade negotiator whose views are so out of touch with the realities of our country and the hopes of our community?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first tactic of NDP Members was to seek to have us publish our negotiating position to the United States so that we would be sure to lose in the negotiations. That is how they first began to serve Canada. Their second position, now that we have appointed a distinguished and competent Canadian to serve as our negotiator, is to seek every opportunity on the floor of the House to blackguard the reputation of that individual. I think that that shows a very distorted view of the responsibility of Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

AIR SAFETY

INQUIRY INTO AIR-INDIA DISASTER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Does he agree with me that light should be shed on the Air India tragedy? Does he agree that the responsibility for the breach of security in relation to the incident should be made public and thoroughly investigated? Could he explain to the House why the lawyer representing the Canadian Government at the inquiry seems to take a position that he wants to cover up something?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member would want me to comment upon the proceedings currently going on in New Delhi which are taking into account all the facts associated with the Air-India incident. Surely the Hon. Member would want to wait until that report is finalized. When it is finalized, we can look at it and act accordingly.

AIRPORT SECURITY MEASURES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain why the lawyer representing the Government—in fact, he is representing the Ministry—is asking the inquiry not to go into the details about security at Canadian airports? Is it because the security measures announced by the Minister last June are not yet in force, and is it because there is a great lack of security at our airports?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that security in our airports has been beefed up considerably. An additional $6 million has been allocated. Some 27 new X-ray machines have been put in place to check baggage. Some 26 explosive vapour detectors are either in service or on order. We are really trying to reverse the concerted effort of the previous Government to reduce the amount of moneys spent on safety and security at our airports which occurred over the last five or six years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In response to the previous question—

• (1440)

Mr. Mazankowski: You spent all your money on your staff.

Mr. Axworthy: Nonsense. Not as much as you are spending right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: You spent $1,057,000 on consulting contracts.

Mr. Axworthy: Let's ask about the Via Rail task force.

Mr. Crosbie: Largest staff in history.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order on both sides, please. The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In response to the last question asked of him, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that his Department did not want to publish its position on free trade because it might lose. Is that the same rationale the federal Government is using in its progress report on federal-provincial relations when there has not been one word on what the federal Government is doing to transfer payments to the provinces?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me answer that since the premise of the question was based upon a clear distortion of what I said. The Hon. Member's accusation is as inaccurate as his preamble.

Mr. Blaikie: I wish I could learn repartee like that.

Mr. Broadbent: Attaboy!

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I am only inaccurate when I quote the words of the former Prime Minister. My question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Why has there not been one word on transfer payments in the document published by the federal Government, when almost every Premier has said that that is a crucial issue?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Again, let me assure the Hon. Member, whose arithmetic is almost as thick as his head—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: He doesn't have two black eyes.

Mr. Oberle: Quit giving these fellows compliments, Barb.

Mrs. McDougall: The House has been assured time after time that there will be an increase in payments to the provinces, an increase that is faster than the rate of inflation and will meet the needs, given the negotiations and discussions that are ongoing between the Minister of Finance and the provinces. Those payments will continue to increase.

TAXATION

TAX REFORM—GOVERNMENT PRIORITY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Finance but in his absence I would like to direct it to the Minister of State for Finance. it concerns tax reform. Many Canadians are disappointed,, disillusioned, and confused at our current tax system. It is too complex, it is unfair in a number of respects, and it is being abused by a number of individuals and corporations. Does the Government still consider tax reform a high priority? Second, if it does, when will we see a major comprehensive initiative in this regard?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think our comprehensive view of the subject can be seen in the steps that we have taken so far, including the Ways and Means Motion introduced by the Minister of Finance yesterday designed to deal with the tax arrangements around trusts with regard to Genstar. The SRTCs were removed. We will be introducing the minimum tax legislation. We do not regard tax reform as a one-shot effort. It is a constant process and there will be more coming.

SHIPBUILDING

PROCUREMENT OF CN MARINE FERRIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday he quite rightly stated that Transport Canada is responsible for approximately 95 per cent of the work in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. He forgot to tell Canadians that that was as a result of the Special Recovery Program of the previous administration. I, on behalf of the workers of the shipbuilding industry, seek a commitment from the Minister of Transport that he will not allow CN Marine to purchase two ships offshore or to build two ships offshore but that they will be built or purchased in Canadian yards.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when one recognizes that the Canadian shipbuilding industry must rely upon the Government of Canada for 95 per cent of its work, that might suggest that perhaps it is being less than competitive in some of its transactions. I think we should clearly recognize that fact.

As I said to the Hon. Member yesterday, as Minister of Transport I also have an obligation to ensure that we provide the necessary transportation services in a safe and efficient manner at the lowest possible cost. All of these things will be taken into consideration during the evaluation process that is currently under way.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister must know that every other industrialized country in the world has a subsidy program for its shipbuilding industry. Why should Canada be different? Will the Minister please explain to the House and to the shipbuilding industry why it has taken in excess of 400 days for the Government and the Minsiter's colleagues to come to the House of Commons with a shipbuilding policy? Why the delay?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that if there was a lack of a shipbuilding policy it was probably due to the inaction of the Government of which he was a member and a supporter. There is no question about that. The Hon. Member is asking me to enunciate a shipbuilding policy and that is something that—

Mr. Dingwall: You promised one a year ago. Where is it?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dingwall: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a question that would be more appropriately addressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister who is replying on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I believe that is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the spring the Government promised that Phase 2 of Sysco would be ready soon. In September the Government indicated that an answer would be given by the end of October. It is now almost the end of November. Will the Minister take this opportunity to tell the people of Cape Breton when they can expect a decision on the modernization of Sysco?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, the Minister in charge of that aspect is unavoidably absent from the House. I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and make sure that the Minister responds to it.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, that answer is not appropriate for the Association of Mayors and Wardens of Cape Breton and it is not appropriate for the unemployed of Cape Breton. Does the Minister think that it is right and just for the unemployed of Cape Breton, an area with the highest unemployment rate in the country, to wait until the Minister has been rehabilitated? Does she not think that it is appropriate for the Cabinet to make that collective decision and let the people of Cape Breton know now?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the people of Cape Breton are well aware that the Minister responsible has done more for Cape Breton than any Liberal Minister has for generations. The Hon. Member asked if it is well worth waiting. I would suggest that it is well worth waiting for the Minister to return to the House to answer the question.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT FACILITIES

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the Minister knows, we are inviting the world to visit Vancouver and Expo during 1986. I hope some of our U.S. friends who are watching Question Period this week will take us up on this invitation.

Some concerns have been expressed about the adequacy of services at the Vancouver International Airport to deal with the growing passenger loads expected during Expo '86. Could the Minister advise what efforts he is making to ensure that physical changes are made? Has he, or will he, meet with his colleagues responsible for immigration and for customs to ensure that appropriate and co-ordinated procedures—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Collins: —are put in place to meet the needs and make sure that visitors are left with a positive impression when they arrive in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a number of initiatives have been undertaken. Some $17.7 million worth of capital improvements has been earmarked for the Vancouver International Airport.

• (1450)

Mr. Rossi: That is the same answer you gave her at lunch.

Mr. Mazankowski: Improvements have been made to accesses, such as the on and off ramps associated with the Laing Bridge. The capacity of the Canadian Inspection Services will be increased by 50 per cent. There are to be additional public elevators and accesses for the disabled—a whole host of things.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Minister might like to continue this later.

AID FOR NEWFOUNDLAND KIDNEY DONOR

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to a statement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the House yesterday concerning the Harvey Hawkins case. She said:

—arrangements have been made for his family to be brought to Toronto to be with him.

That would certainly have been a compassionate move if it were not for the fact that his family has been in Toronto for the past three weeks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: Will the Minister inform the House which family she is talking about and for whom she made arrangements two days ago to be brought to Toronto to be with him?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member was not here he obviously did not hear the whole statement. As I mentioned yesterday, arrangements had been made. I may say that the arrangements to bring his wife and children to Toronto were made by a private donor, someone who assisted them to come.

Mr. Gauthier: Some one who had heart.

Miss MacDonald: The arrangements for his parents to come to Toronto were made by the Government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker: Perhaps the arrangements made two days ago can now be cancelled.

INCOME ASSISTANCE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, during her statement yesterday the Minister also said that the provincial Governments and the Canada Assistance Plan would provide payments at least equal to the amount he would have received on unemployment insurance while he is sick. Does the Minister not realize that the maximum amount that he and his family will qualify for when he returns to Newfoundland to recuperate will be in the area of $400? Who will make up the difference? Who will pay the money? Has the Minister again misled the House?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, seldom have I seen a more shameful exploitation of the difficulties of a family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: Who planted the question yesterday?

Miss MacDonald: Here is an individual who, in fact, made a very courageous move. We made the effort to be in contact with the provincial Governments of both the Province of Ontario and the Province of Newfoundland in order to assist him through this very difficult time. As I said yesterday, the amount of income he will be receiving under the Canada Assistance Plan and the provincial plans will be equal to, and I could say more than, he would be receiving through the unemployment insurance plan. I regret that I cannot say what those amounts are since they are confidential under our legislation.

MORGUARD BANK—OFFER TO PURCHASE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday we learned from sources in Los Angeles that the Canadian subsidiary of an American bank, the Security Pacific National Corp. of California, has decided to purchase the western-based Morguard Bank. Did the Minister approve this transaction or does she intend to approve of it? Why is it that we have to wait for American sources to tell us what is going on in the Canadian banking industry?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the announcement was made from an American source because this is a merger among consenting adults in the private sector.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: It was their announcement. I think the Hon. Member should be delighted with the announcement which is an expression of confidence in the banking institutions of western Canada.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will touch that line.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a very serious situation. Never before has there been a need for Canadian regional financial institutions to be so sensitive to the economic needs of the regions of Canada. Is this an indication of what is likely to come as we enter into the free trade era where large American banks and financial institutions will be coming and gobbling up some of our more stable and secure Canadian banks, particularly small regional financial institutions?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this is not a case of the gobbling up of an institution. This is a strengthening of two existing Canadian institutions whereby there will be a Vancouver head office with a Toronto branch, whereby the bank will be managed by western Canadian management, and whereby the middle market of western Canada will be better served.

Mr. Broadbent: You can sell the whole country that way.

Mrs. McDougall: I think this is something about which the Hon. Member should be very pleased.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDED STIFFENING OF CRIMINAL CODE POLLUTION PENALTIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is for his Parliamentary Secretary. The Law Reform Commission of Canada has recommended that the Criminal Code be amended by including crimes against the environment, and also by having penalties which are not just fines but orders for restitution and jail terms. Can the Parliamentary Secretary advise us if the Department of the Environment agrees with these recommendations? Will his Minister be urging the Government to adopt them?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I can advise him that the report of the Law Reform Commission on the environment has been received. It is being given careful attention by both the Department and the Minister. We will be able to provide a response in the reasonably near future which I hope will be in keeping with the hopes of the Hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY IF MINISTER AND DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE WILL MEET WITH CONFEDERATION OF FAMILY ORGANIZATIONS AND QUEBEC FAMILY COALITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The day before yesterday, the Minister of Finance and his Deputy Minister, Mr. Hartt, attended a privileged gathering of people who had contributed $1,000 or more to the treasury of the Progressive Conservative Party. Could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the Minister of Finance and his Deputy Minister, Mr. Hartt, would agree to meet the members of the Confédération des organismes familiaux and the Coalition des familles du Québec who are opposed to de-indexation of family allowances? The Deputy Prime Minister knows as well as I do that these people cannot afford to contribute $1,000, but would he agree to attend a $4 or $5 dinner?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, they seem to be insisting. As reported at page 8814 Hansard for November 26 the Minister of Finance stated:

> It was a matter of a dinner that was not partisan in nature at all. It is consistent with the attempt of the Government to discuss with some of the business leaders the policies of the Department of Finance, and to develop a greater degree of understanding of the policies of the Department of Finance.

He continued:

> —it is consistent with a range of dinner meetings which Mr. Hartt has had, and proposes to continue to have, that will move in this same direction.

INQUIRY IF ORDINARY CITIZENS WILL HAVE SAME PRIVILEGES AS BUSINESSMEN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister did not get my point. If businessmen can express their views on the Government's policies, could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that ordinary citizens like members of the Confédération des organismes familiaux will have the same privilege at a $5 dinner instead of a $1,000 dinner? Does the Deputy Prime Minister go along with that?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think what is eating the Hon. Member is the fact that they could not get 37 people together for a dinner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF HOLIDAY PAY ON LONGSHOREMEN'S BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the Minister agree that the Government's decision to include holiday pay in the recent changes to legislation with respect to unemployment insurance payments detrimentally affects and hits construction workers and longshoremen hardest? Will she order a review to determine the effect of the change and take whatever action is necessary to correct it?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have met with representatives of the construction trades, longshoremen, and stevedores. I understand the difficulties which they have expressed with regard to holiday pay and, in particular, with regard to holiday pay under trust funds. As a result of that, I have written to Claude Forget, the Commissioner of the Inquiry into Unemployment Insurance, asking him to review specifically this particular aspect of payments.

TRANSPORT

REPRESENTATION OF THE DISABLED AT INTERNATIONAL SEMINAR

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Transport. I wonder if the Minister could advise the House whether she has reconsidered her decision and would now agree to include disabled groups as experts in the conference she is going to convene next year to discuss issues affecting the disabled population in Canada?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question and for advising me of this matter. I explained just before Question Period that it was an oversight that disabled persons were not included in the groups which would meet during the international seminar which will be held at Expo. It was in the previous text but I just didn't mention the disabled persons. However, obviously they will be in the middle and very importantly so, of everything we do and will do in relation to them.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to begin by saying that in keeping with this Government's long-standing commitment to support and give assistance to the agricultural industry across this country, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to announce the federal Government's decision to commit up to $150 million toward the Crop Disaster Assistance Program in order to assist crop producers in the southern Prairies and the Peace River region.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: This program will complement the efforts being made by the provincial Governments of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to relieve the financial crisis in western Canadian agriculture.

Our plan is to make a yield deficiency payment to farmers in the areas where cumulative crop losses, primarily due to drought, have been the worst over the past three years. These areas would be determined based on crop insurance records and county or rural municipality yield records. We expect that some 30,000 farmers would be eligible for a share of this assistance. Administrative details, including where farmers can get application forms, will be announced in the very near future. I can assure Hon. Members that these farmers will be dealt with with dispatch.

Of the federal Government's $150 million contribution, $95 million will be provided this fall and the remaining $55 million will be paid in April in time for next year's seeding.

As Hon. Members of the House know, our Government has been and continues to be extremely concerned about the impact of successive droughts on prairie grain and livestock farmers. In fact, in the fall of 1984, we provided a $30 million federal contribution to help livestock producers retain their breeding herds over the winter. Subsequent to that, we made a $123 million final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. In addition, we amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to make an interim payment prior to seeding this spring and that contribution amounted to $450 million.

Recently, my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), made an announcement of the final payment under the Act of an additional $72 million. Incidentally, those cheques are now in the hands of western farmers.

We again responded to the plight of the prairie livestock producers with a $48 million federal drought assistance package announced in August. We recently announced interest free cash advances of up to $3,000 per producer to assist in drying tough or damp grain. As well, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board earlier indicated we would be prepared to make cash advances for unharvested crops, and today I want to assure all farmers that these advances will in fact be offered to those who are unable to harvest their grain.

While the crop insurance under the Western Grain Stabilization Program has paid out nearly $2 billion in the past two crop years, the successive years of drought, severe grasshopper infestations, poor harvest weather and low commodity prices have left a great many farmers with insufficient cash flow to meet their expenses and to continue to produce crops. The $150 million program we are announcing today will provide immediate relief and we will continue our efforts to develop a long term approach to emergency funding.

There is no question about the fact that there are many western farmers, good farmers, who, through no fault of their own, need special assistance measures at this time. That is what we are providing today. But we all appreciate that ad hoc measures and programs are not an ideal solution. It is disruptive to producers to live with the uncertainty of not knowing what back-up assistance they will receive when natural disasters occur. Nor is it easy for the federal Government to take on substantial new financial commitments which have not been previously budgeted. That is why we are viewing the Crop Disaster Assistance Program as a field test for a permanent emergency assistance program which could be offered to farmers as a complement or extension to the current Crop Insurance Program. I believe it is incumbent on us to revise the Crop Insurance Program to allow producers some additional protection. We hope to be able to work out these details with the provinces in time for the 1986 crop year.

The federal Government now contributes over $200 million annually to the Crop Insurance Program across Canada and I believe about $160 million of that is directed to western Canada.

I would also at this time like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: —and in addition to the Parliamentary Secretary, I want to thank all the Members of the federal-provincial task group which he chaired for their very valuable assistance in advising the Government on the drought problems in western Canada. I believe all Hon. Members of this House recognize the personal commitment and, indeed, without exaggeration, the hundreds of man-hours which the Hon. Member for Assiniboia dedicated to this work. The Crop Disaster Assistance Program I am announcing today has been made possible in no small measure by the Hon. Member's unceasing efforts to assist western farmers.

This program should help farmers in the drought area overcome the economic hardship which prolonged periods of drought have created. This is important to all Canadians since prairie grain and oilseed production is worth about $7.5 billion a year at the farm gate and provides the base for an estimated $35 billion a year in economic activity. This tremendous agricultural resource must be protected during these difficult times so that it may continue to enrich Canadians for generations to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had the hallelujah chorus lined up behind him this afternoon as he made his announcement. We are pleased to see that the Minister finally made the announcement. We wish that he had made it back on September 10 when this House commenced its fall sitting because the situation on the Prairies was desperate. That has been apparent since mid-July. I know the Minister visited Assiniboia and other places, as did I and many other Members of this House back in July. We saw a crop three or four inches high and absolutely devoid of any seed. We have seen the situation exacerbated over the fall months with young farmers losing their farms and being refused welfare. We are also glad that he reversed himself on the position he took on December 19, 1984 when he said that never again would a Conservative Government make a payment of this type for crop disaster. However, this decision could just as easily have been made in early September. The cheques could have been in the farmers' hands by now. Given that the mechanics involved in paying this money, the application forms and the criteria, have not even been worked out, very few payments will be made before January of next year. At that, only about two-thirds of the payment will be made, with the rest being paid next May or later on.

Some may think that an announcement of $150 million for crop disaster assistance in western Canada is a great deal of money. However, when we look at the disaster itself involving $2 billion to $3 billion, it does not look very large. We are dealing here with a massive disaster. In Saskatchewan alone it is estimated that 8.2 million acres were affected by severe drought, with 6.3 million acres less severely affected, and some 14,000 farmers severely affected. As one of the people from the Wheat Pool said, this seems to be less than a token gesture because, unfortunately, the Minister has not announced what the maximum benefit will be. It is probably so small that he was afraid to put it in the announcement because of the derision he would face from the thousands of farmers facing the most serious financial difficulty in the history of this country.

Using the Minister's own figures of 30,000 farmers who will benefit, and assuming that the average farm is 1,000 acres, we come up with a figure of $5 per acre. That is about what it costs to spray one application of pesticide to control the grasshoppers which infected many of these areas last summer. Some farmers had to make two or three applications and even then lost their crop because of the drought. Compare this amount of $5 per acre average to the amount recommended by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool which represents some 60,000 farmers. They recommended a maximum of $50 per acre or 10 times what the Minister appears to have offered today. Compare the amount the Government was prepared to spend with the bank failures which has cost us at least $1 billion. Compare this amount offered today with the assistance provided by the Province of Alberta, a total of $800 million this year. Last weekend that province announced a special program involving $200 million to assist these people. However, the federal Minister announces today immediate assistance of $95 million, or less than half, with additional funding next spring of $55 million. Obviously this, when put in its true perspective, is incredibly small.

The Minister spent most of his time today talking about crop insurance and western grain stabilization payments which had been made. I appreciate his applauding these programs which were put in place by a Liberal Government, but these are insurance programs. You pay your premium and if you have a loss, you get the benefit. Therefore, he should not be talking about these programs as if they involved some benevolence on the part of the Government itself.

The Minister also paid great tribute to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), for all the work he has done. I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would table his report. I cannot believe that he recommended this level of assistance. I am sure it must have been two or three times this amount, and to be paid immediately, not in January or May or whenever.

In light of falling land prices, low commodity prices, international predatory pricing by the EEC and the United States, there is great concern in western Canada about the Government's commitment to agriculture. This statement today, although providing some small relief, will not lift that concern.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this announcement today finally lets farmers in western Canada know where they stand with this Government. The statement is nine pages long, but the Minister said it all in the first line. He is saying that his Government has now decided to commit up to $150 million towards crop disaster relief in the drought affected areas of western Canada. The rest tells us nothing. He says the program complements the efforts made by the provincial Government, but I think that is what a lot of producers are going to be wondering and worrying about.

The political attitude that the Minister seems to be taking is borrowed to some extent from that of the first Prime Minister of this country who was called colloquially "Old Tomorrow". Our "New Tomorrow" works by delay, delay, delay. This is a sort of follow-up on an infamous politician from my Province of Saskatchewan whose call words are deny, deny, deny. He is providing bits of policy as he goes along with a peekaboo approach to agricultural policy. Even though the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) began his consultations on August 9, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) delayed making any announcement on a cattle payment until after the provinces had acted. Saskatchewan residents will recall that a week later the Government of Saskatchewan said that there would be $60 per head available to people who kept their cows over the winter. The federal Government then announced a $30 payment, which came very close to what the group bargaining on behalf of farmers had asked for. They had asked for $100 a head and everyone felt reasonably good about having achieved close to 90 per cent success. They then discovered that the $30 was not additional to the provincial program but was simply complementary to it, and it was eaten up by the provincial Government on the way through the delivery system as the full $30 stayed in provincial hands.

Mr. Gustafson: That was your statement, not ours.

Mr. Althouse: The producers understood from the statement that was made by Ottawa that they would be getting an additional $30. Today they expect to be getting something in the order of $50. They were firm on that figure which was taken into negotiations with the Member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Wise: Never, never.

Mr. Althouse: That program would have cost in excess of $500,000, so we can be pretty certain that what is being offered here is something less than a third of what was put on the table by the farmers. We are not told what that amounts to on a per acre basis. With only a mere three and a half months to put the program together we could not expect the Minister and his people to put together a firm proposal. It has been before Cabinet for more than five weeks—seven weeks if you count from the time that the Member for Assiniboia made his statement in Regina. After all of that time they have not put a program together. We are told that it will "complement" the best efforts of the provinces.

Mr. Gustafson: It is well received by the farmers.

Mr. Althouse: It does not say that it will supplement the best efforts of the provinces. A supplemental program would have been additional to that. What does "complementary" mean? Does it mean it is going to be eaten up in the same way as the livestock program was eaten up? Why did the Minister not make that clear in the succeeding eight pages instead of talking about other programs which have nothing to do with the original announcement and nothing to do with drought assistance? This is just filler to use up the time of the House and the press.

Mr. Wise: Do you have something against the PFRA, Vic?

Mr. Althouse: The Minister mentioned something about the PFRA. That was one of the things he did not mention in his nine-page statement. Perhaps he is going to supplement that, too, and there will be a policy statement in coming weeks about the PFRA or the PFAA.

The delay has allowed the Minister to follow the same route as he took with the cattle payment. He waited so long that the provinces started to put forward acreage proposals of their own. In Saskatchewan there has been a proposal of $25 per acre and of a loan at 6 per cent over three years for up to 1,200 acres. I am not sure whether some of this money will be used to pay the cost of that. That is not clear. I hope the Minister will clarify that when he leaves the Chamber. The rules of the House no longer permit us to get such answers.

On page 6 of his statement the Minister went to great pains to point out why he backed off from his position of last December 21 when he made a pay-out to farmers in northeastern Saskatchewan who had been flooded. He said at that time that that would be the last of the ad hoc programs. He said that after December 21, 1984, crop insurance would be expected to cover these types of things and that if producers did not have crop insurance they would not be covered. At least he saw the problem with that when faced with a disaster such as that which occurred in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta this year and he has backed off, to a very small extend, and has announced another ad hoc program. However, listen to the way he describes it. He said: "It is disruptive to producers to live with the uncertainty of not knowing what back-up assistance they will receive when natural disasters befall them". That is very true. He continues: "Nor is it easy for the federal Government to take on substantial new commitments that have not been previously budgeted". Substantial new commitments? One hundred and fifty million dollars is a substantial amount of money, but not compared to the substantial commitments we made to the banks or compared to some of the tax remissions we gave oil companies. In those cases decisions were made over a weekend to spend billions of dollars, yet farmers waited three and a half months to get $150 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today, as Minister of State for Science and Technology, to table the new long-range plan of the National Research Council of Canada called A Practical Perspective. This plan began to take shape under the direction of my predecessor, the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) after last November's economic statement and took further direction from the full Budget of last May.

The NRC is the Government of Canada's principal agency for new research and development. Over the years it has adapted well to Canada's R and D needs. Today A Practical Perspective details the NRC's adjustment to our most pressing problems. We all know of the huge national debt and unemployment in all sectors. The country needs economic stimulus which creates jobs and I believe that a wise use of scarce resources in the science and technology fields holds the best promise for future growth and stability in the job market.

Unfortunately, we now find ourselves in a squeeze. Just when we need to develop new technologies we also need to limit our spending. Unless the Government keeps to its own Budget, it may worsen the very problems it tries to solve. We must solve our R and D problems with brain power since we cannot solve them through brute financial force. The National Research Council already knows this. A Practical Perspective is a deliberate reorientation by the NRC and it is consonant with government policy. It has new ideas and new directions, but none require a budget over that which has already been considered by Cabinet. The plan has my support and, I am sure, that of my colleagues in Cabinet.

Over the next year the NRC will increase its work in generic research, which work has practical applications in more than a single sector. The NRC will increase its focus on technology transfer and diffusion, an area in which the NRC already leads the nation's research organizations. Only last month the NRC shared the Award of Excellence Gold Medal for Technology Transfer with Lumonics Inc. Some years ago the NRC made basic breakthroughs in understanding high-powered lasers. Lumonics, now one of the world's most successful laser manufacturers, then put those basic principles to use. This followed last year's success when the NRC shared another gold medal with Sciex Inc., a Toronto-based maker of mass spectrometers.

All research and development is an exercise in risk. In fact, there is only one certainty in R and D: not performing it is the worst thing a country can do in today's environment. However, for R and D to succeed it needs more than good ideas. It must also have an established long-term scientific expertise or infrastructure. I believe that the percentage of the Gross National Product which Canada spends on R and D is far too low, but in the present tight fiscal situation we must ensure that what is spent is put to optimum use. Quality more than quantity must be our guide. I think that the country has yet to extract full value from the R and D results it has already produced. Therefore, in the short term our task is to use more effectively the resources we already have.

R and D is complicated, not only in what it studies, but in how it is done. It involves our industry, our financial and business institutions, our universities and all tiers of Government. We feel its effects in our living standard, our unemployment rate and our trade balance. R and D is so vital that it must be managed properly. This is not to say there is no more room in Canada for pure research that seeks to satisfy human curiosity. But Government research laboratories must be relevant to the industry's needs in the short term. Their programs must be sensitive to the market. The plan given to us by the National Research Council will continue to give Canada its vital base for long-term research. But for the next few years, it will put more emphasis on development and diffusion, the "D", so to speak, in R and D.

We must not aim merely at yet another stockpile of new data. Any knowledge must quickly get to those who can turn it into economic growth and prosperity. Government alone cannot and should not do all the research that this country needs. However, we do want to create a climate that favours someone doing it. To create this climate, Government must find the right mix of markets, basic knowledge, locale, national needs, and most important, people. It should identify opportunities for Canada in emerging research fields. It should get Canada into the new technologies as early as possible and so pave the way for industry later to reap advantages.

As an example, let me mention Canadarm. None of its spectacular success would have been possible unless the National Research Council had a basis of expertise and had already proven able to manage advanced aerospace projects. NRC is now seeing to it that Canadarm technology finds wider use on earth, in such practical fields as machine visions and robotics. This one advanced technology may one day let us venture safely not just into space, but beneath the seas and mountains, into nuclear reactors and toward next decade's automated factories as well. The money we invested in Canadarm will certainly come back to us greatly multiplied over the next 20 years.

The same pay-off also happens elsewhere. Government investment in telecommunications and satellite development has put Canada on the leading edge of these technologies. Our space industry has found a lucrative niche in international markets. In fact, it sells more than its national Government spends on its entire space program, a claim that few nations can make.

The Government will do more than encourage and sustain R and D; however, we will perform R and D directly, ourselves. Our Government laboratories exist to do long-term research on Canada's national priorities. This long-term work is a kind of unseen wealth. With it in our national bank account, Canada has the basis to exploit lucrative new technologies as they appear on the horizon and will not have to start from scratch each time.

In turn, the National Research Council is indispensable to Canada's long-term R and D. It covers many disciplines and research approaches from hard technology transfer to the curiosity that gives rise to new discoveries. Some work represents both fields. For example, current NRC research in a field called "micro-propagation of conifers" promises to give us forests full of "alpha trees" that are straight, tall, healthy, quick-growing, and resistant to threats as diverse as insects and acid rain—a concern that is dear to our hearts.

There are many other major programs being planned or already under way at the National Research Council. One of these will make it easier for us to live and work in our cold oceans. Another will explore the powerful new techniques called biotechnology. Yet another will uncover useful new materials and ways of using them. The list goes on. The National Research Council laboratories are there for the nation; for business people to test products and for Government, university and industrial researchers to unlock the doors of new goods and services. Many NRC laboratories are there because they would be too costly for any single company to build and maintain. However, once in place for every company in Canada, they have proven indispensable.

Another aspect of R and D that is sometimes taken for granted is up-to-date scientific and technical information. The National Research Council distributes this to all Canadians through its national science library, because technical information cannot give full value until it is in the hands of those who can apply it. The idea holds true for every other aspect of R and D as well. It is at the centre of the National Research Council's new plan. This is why the NRC has recently built up the programs of its industry development office. The strength and effectiveness of these programs comes from the full resources of the NRC's hundreds of scientific and technical personnel. As Canadian corporations know, these programs deliver not just the latest technology but help in funding in-house research projects as well. The National Research Council's industrial programs offer advice on problems from small-scale production lines to the largest projects in our country.

The programs work because people can reach them. There are now over 160 NRC technology advisers in major centres in our country. Each adviser puts industrial clients in touch with the full range of federal programs and services. Each can approve most industry assistance projects with minimum delay. Over the next two years, the National Research Council will broaden and improve these successful programs. Special funds will cover the cost of studies to measure how well a proposed product might do and how best to market it. Through these programs, as well as its actual research, the National Research Council will reach every technical and business audience in Canada. It will lead and co-ordinate the effort of Canadian R and D, building the team spirit that is vital to our success.

Leadership is now the most challenging task for Canadian R and D, but also offers the greatest rewards. It involves bringing together those who actually do R and D; the universities, the provincial research organizations, the federal laboratories and industry. It must include the users and the supporters of research and development; the policy makers, the venture capitalists and other investors, the business managers, the whole Canadian workforce. All these groups stand to profit from a strong national research and development program. None can afford to work in isolation from the other any longer.

Since Parliament founded the National Research Council in 1916, it has grown from 9 advisers to 3,000 scientists, technologists, managers and support staff. These men and women link many times their number in members of Canada's scientific and technical community. For example, over 100 professionals from all fields serve as members of the NRC's various associated and advisory committees. Even more people in Canada's industrial sector rely on NRC programs for financial and technical assistance.

The National Research Council will continue to build on the respect it has earned as a leader of Canada's research and development community. It will work even harder and bring together the producers and end users of the research data. The National Research Council's regional offices will be points of contact where key people can meet. The NRC will establish a Technology Assessment Office helping Canadians to keep up with new technology beyond our borders. The NRC's associate committees will let Canada's scientists, technologists and industrialists have a direct say in national R and D policy. In short, the National Research Council will continue to be the breeding ground for excellence in Canadian science, technology and commerce. This is its natural role both in history and today.

I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the many people in the National Research Council who have served us so well over the last 70 years. Of course, I want to congratulate them for the preparation of this document in helping us to achieve the objectives that we have set.

It is my pleasure to table the document from the NRC which is entitled A Practical Perspective. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you seek unanimous consent to return to Tabling of Documents in order to permit me to table these documents under Standing Order 47(2) in both official languages.

● (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is there unanimous consent to revert to Tabling of Documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, pursuant to Standing Order 47(2), to table a document called A Practical Perspective, the NRC Plan 1986-1990 in both official languages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister on his appointment to this vital portfolio and to wish him well in his endeavours. I want to thank him also for the courtesy he extended to me by sending a copy of the plan and his statement yesterday which enabled me to prepare my remarks.

I might say at the outset that I know he is not responsible for the plan because it was printed before he was named Minister. I hope he will perhaps take into consideration some of my remarks today in seeking to improve the plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment today on the new plan for the National Research Council. It is a plan we have been expecting for some time, and it contains a number of interesting proposals with respect to innovation in Canada's private sector.

[English]

I cannot help but feel that it is the plan of an agency in trouble, an agency whose status has yet to be resolved by its political masters. Nowhere in the plan, Mr. Speaker, nor in the Minister's statement, is there a reference to the Nielsen task force and the recommendations that were tabled with the Budget last May.

The activities and recommendations of the task force and, in particular, the secretive manner in which it has conducted its work, have raised deep concerns and frustrations in the scientific community across Canada. Scientists need to have adequate resources and a positive climate in which to work. I sincerely hope that the new Minister will clear the air as soon as possible regarding the status of the Nielsen task force.

Second, when one looks at the single page in the plan devoted to funding, it is apparent that the plan can only be viewed as a plan of austerity. There is no increase in the NRC's budget in 1986, the first year of the plan and only a 2 per cent increase in 1987. Spending levels for years three, four and five are yet to be determined. It is a five-year plan which is a two-year plan. There seems to be no provision for an increase to keep pace with inflation, which means that spending will actually decline in the next two years. This decline comes from a Government and a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that promised increased spending on research and development.

From where will the money come to support the new initiatives, Mr. Speaker? What will be cut? There is not a word about this either in the plan or in the Minister's statement. Where is the money for Science Place Canada in Winnipeg or for the biotechnology centre in Montreal?

Mr. Speaker, where is the money for the Institut d'optique in Quebec City?

Today I spoke to a reporter from Quebec who told me that the project was at a standstill.

[English]

The Government, Mr. Speaker, has been playing games with Canadians. It has been talking about involving the private sector and the provinces but it has not yet put a penny on the table for these important projects.

I would like to contrast this plan with NRC's long-range plan presented in 1979. In the plan called The Urgent Investment the president stated at the time that the NRC had "an major role to play" in meeting the goal of spending 1.5 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product on research and development. The President of the NRC stated that the immediate and central target of the Council was to stimulate the technology-intensive industrial sector to increase its contribution to the gross domestic product from $20 billion at that time in 1979 to $40 billion by 1990. Exports should increase had this plan been carried out and imports reduced, with a net effect of up to $12 billion on our balance of payments. Additional employment of 650,000 jobs should result, said the President of the National Research Council in 1979. Boy, could we use those 650,000 jobs. The achievement of this target, concluded the President of the NRC, would have significant effects on some of Canada's economic problems.

To achieve this objective, the NRC's expenditures under its long-range plan in 1979 would have increased to $1.25 billion by 1990 under the preferred alternative presented by the Council. There was a second and a third alternative, albeit less ambitious than the first. The NRC observed, in particular, that the third alternative assumes the gloomy view that the economic and other objectives of the NRC long-term plan must be significantly reduced.

Under the Liberal Government, Mr. Speaker, great progress had been made in achieving the preferred objective. Expenditures in 1984-85 reached $501 million. We know what has happened since the day the Conservatives were elected. Since that election, that sorry day last September, significant cuts have been made in NRC's budget so that the Government's Estimates for spending this year, in 1985-86, are below the level of the gloomy third alternative of the previous long-range plan. With a record like this, is it surprising that there is such widespread disappointment in the Government's record concerning research and development?

Yesterday I read that the President of MacDonald Dettwiler, one of Canada's most important and dynamic high-tech companies, said that he would like to hear the Prime Minister make a firm statement that science and technology is important to the Government and the country. He said—and this is most important because we have heard a lot of blarney for the last number of years—that he would like the Prime Minister to put his money where his mouth is.

Another question which is unanswered in the plan or in the statement of the Minister is the budget proposal to consolidate NRC's Industrial Research Assistance Program with the innovation section of the Industrial and Regional Development Program administered by the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion. Is the responsibility for this plan to be transferred to the NRC or to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion? If there is to be a transfer to the NRC, how much is to be transferred? Will additional resources be provided to the NRC for the basic research which supports the IRAP? There is no indication in the Minister's statement or in the plan about these vital questions.

There is nothing either about the external review proposed by the Wright task force. True, the NRC proposes an expansion of its associated committees and boards on which there are outside representatives. I do not fault the Minister for this, perhaps it is the fault of the previous Minister. However, the Minister has not said whether he agrees with the advice which the previous Minister asked for and received from the NRC, namely, that an arm's length agency should conduct an external review.

I also note that there is only one strong statement in the plan about basic research. That contrasts with the many strong statements about basic research in the original long-range plan tabled in 1979. A single page, which seems unrelated to the rest of the document, deals with basic research. On page 55 we find the heading: "One Analysis". The heading itself suggests that it does not belong, that it is not in keeping with the rest of the plan. The person who undertook the analysis for the NRC was a member of the Council, a D. J. Doyle of Doyletech Corporation. The conclusion of his study indicated the following:

—that Canada would best be served by an NRC that had greater funding and a larger proportion of its efforts devoted to long-term basic research. Doyle's argument was that a long-term commitment to basic research provides the continuity, breadth of vision, and forecasting ability that leads to the generation of new technologies. A single-minded devotion to short-term exploitation of technological knowledge imposes a restricted view.

It seems clear that Mr. Doyle disagrees with the basic orientation of the plan, namely, an increased focus on applied research. There is nothing wrong with that, as long as resources are provided for the additional applied research, as long as resources are provided for the additional efforts to be made in development, and as long as basic research does not suffer. The only conclusion to be reached is that basic research will suffer from the Government's emphasis upon applied research and development.

I have been warned time and time again by scientists in universities and the private sector that Canada must contribute to the general advancement of knowledge in the world, or we will be shut out by our competitors and forced to buy their discoveries on their terms, after they have taken the first steps in exploiting the commercial potential of the discoveries. This is the kind of world into which the Government is blindly leading us.

Mr. Speaker, it is highly irresponsible of the Government to leave the National Research Council more or less in limbo and fail to give it the resources it needs to carry out the urgent investments proposed in 1979.

For a year and a half, Government cutbacks and the work of the task force headed by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) have given rise to considerable uncertainty about the future of the NRC's programs.

We must put an end to this uncertainty and do so quickly, if we want a climate that is conducive to research in Canada.

[English]

This plan is nothing other than a disappointment. It does not answer many important and serious questions. It leaves a cloud hanging over the NRC. It is not the kind of bold blueprint for the future which our country desperately needs.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate my long-time colleague from British Columbia on becoming the new Minister of Science and Technology. I know him well. I wish him well. I am sure he will be a very competent Minister. I am sure the House wishes him the best. In some ways I feel a little sorry for him today because he is the delivery boy for the former Minister. The statement before the House is not something upon which we can judge the present Minister. It is not a reflection of his ideas. It is a reflection of the ideas of the former Minister. He has had to come to the House with the former Minister's bad news and ideas, ideas which have seen many cut-backs in and a wrong orientation toward the NRC. I would hope—and this is my one wish for today—that the new Minister will be a better advocate of the scientific community and the aspirations of that community than was the former Minister, who underwent much criticism from scientists from one part of the country to the other. I wish him well and look forward to some innovative ideas in the future.

The most important sector in the country—and we often tend to overlook it—is the scientific sector involved in research and development. In the world of the future, what we do in terms of scientific research and development will be very important for jobs in the country, for the standard of living of our people and for the whole future of Canada.

Many years ago it was said that the muscular power and the financial power of people were important. I suggest that today knowledge is the most important. Knowledge is power. Countries, sectors and communities with knowledge are the ones which will have power and influence in the world of the future. That in itself is very, very important.

Today we have had the tabling of a new five-year plan for the National Research Council. It is a second five-year plan. It is a lot less comprehensive in nature and in terms of details, as anyone can see by reading through it, than the original plan of some five years or six years ago. The old plan was more detailed. We can see this from its sheer volume. It contained many more statistics, details and idealistic ideas on where we wanted to go. We have had first year and second year reports on it. The second five-year plan does not contain the same detailed information.

During the 1984 election campaign—and this is something which the new Minister understands very well—his Party and his Leader promised to double Canadian spending on research and development over the next five years. That was a doubling in five years, from 1984-85 to 1989-90. That was a promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and now the Minister has the difficult mandate of fulfilling it. In the statement before us today there is no reference to that promise. Instead of a fulfillment of the particular promise, we see a cut-back in spending at the National Research Council. In year one, 1986, according to the plan, there will be a zero increase in the budget. In 1987, year two, there will be an increase of 2 per cent. This means that in 1986 because of inflation, there will be a cut-back of 4 per cent or 5 per cent. In 1987, because of an increase of only 2 per cent in spending, there will be another cut-back, since inflation is likely to be more than 2 per cent. In years three, four and five, 1988, 1989 and 1990, the increases are to be determined.

Perhaps we can hope that the Minister, in the cabinet room, carries a big stick and is able to get a bit of money out of those tightwads, the Minister responsible for finance, to finance scientific research and development as they should be financed. In that I wish him well.

Certainly the previous Minister failed. Last November, in the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), there was a cut-back in spending of $70 million for the NRC. In fiscal year 1985-86, its budget is to be $419.1 million, whereas in 1984-85, its budget was $478.2 million.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign, the Prime Minister promised to double spending on research and development in Canada. This was a very important promise involving a very important sector. However, as I said earlier, in November 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cut $70 million from the NRC's budget. I think the science sector is so important it cannot afford budgetary cutbacks of $70 million per year.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's science sector holds the future of this country, of our young people, and of agriculture, fisheries, forestry and our natural resources. It is vitally important.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the new Minister the best of luck.

• (1600)

However, there have been cut-backs. The Energy Division itself which is responsible for alternative energy research has been cut, as has been the Environmental Secretariat. Also dumped was a manufacturing technology centre in Winnipeg even though the construction of the building had already begun.

The National Research Council's five-year plan does not anticipate any increase in spending because of inflation and actual roll-back over the next few years. In the five-year plan for 1980 to 1985, the first produced by the current President, Mr. Kerwin, a very large role was envisaged for the NRC in both basic and applied research.

The old five-year plan presented three funding options. The first option proposed a greatly enhanced role for the NRC and very hefty spending increases by the Government of Canada. Naturally, funding was not found to be anywhere near as much as was needed and the option was dropped. The third option, the low cost option, was not even realized by the NRC. The NRC did, however, receive budgetary increases from the previous Government in the last few years.

It can be said that the NRC engages in two different kinds of research although the distinction between basic research and applied research is often blurred. Scientists often say that basic research is pure scientific inquiry. Its results may never prove to have a commercial application and often a commercial application, if there is one, may take years to have effect on the economy. On the other hand, applied research, at least at the NRC, has a close relationship to industry. Basic research at the NRC has always been short changed, although Option 1 of the 1985 year plan would have greatly enhanced this endeavour. Applied research has for some time predominated at the NRC to the extent that some 90 per cent of its research activity has been closely tied with industry.

The second five-year plan being unveiled today will take the NRC even further down the path of industrial research at the expense of basic research. It is this trend that disturbs many Canadian scientists. As I said before, the plan is not that detailed in terms of numbers but one could quote from the plan the intentions of the council to go more and more down the path of more basic research.

No doubt private sector technological leaders will be very pleased. What happened to the Tory belief in the discipline of the market-place? It would seem that there are very few risks to be faced by these companies. The taxpayers will be picking up the tab. Will this be a replay of the old Liberal research and development tax credits about which members of this Government complained when they were in opposition?

By diminishing even more the role of basic research, can we expect the slack to be taken up elsewhere? Canadian universities have done much of the basic research in recent years and have done well despite a shortage of money. Many of those universities have been struggling with cut-backs brought on by provincial Governments and by a federal Government determined to reduce its share of post-secondary funding. Some predict that basic research will suffer even more. Furthermore, Canada does not have outstanding research institutions whose research capabilities match those of MIT or CalTech.

In the 1980 five-year plan, the NRC dreamed of making a greater contribution to the world's pool of scientific knowledge. The thrust of the new five-year plan will not allow the NRC to be a greater contributor to this pool of knowledge. As the Council's President Mr. Kerwin, says, the NRC will not abandon its essential role of developing expertise for the nation by encouraging long-term research. What he does not say is that this role is already very small and we cannot expect it to grow.

I am sure many Members of the House know that Canada does less than 4 per cent of the scientific research and development in the world. With the budget restrictions and cut-backs, that percentage is shrinking at an ever-expanding rate.

One of the problems in not contributing to the pool of scientific knowledge is that Canada will be left further and further behind because of the cut-backs. We already purchase a considerable amount of technology developed elsewhere. One of the reasons for that is that so much of Canada's economy is foreign-owned. There are many branch plants in this country. If we do not enhance our basic research at a world class research station like the NRC, we will surely have to buy even more technology from elsewhere in the future. We should also worry about the brain drain. Many world class Canadian scientists may take their skills and experience to an environment that welcomes them and their families.

One should support applied research for the benefits it can deliver. Many jobs are created directly, and of course there is much spinoff. Canada's R and D performance is not exactly stalwart when compared to that of other countries. As noted before, the lack of emphasis on basic research support is shameful.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I do have a tremendous concern about the general cut-backs in the funds given to research and development and the trend lines one sees when looking back over the last number of years.

And in the R and D sector, Mr. Speaker, both private and public spending as a percentage of our Gross National Product has gone down. In 1981, for instance, 1.6 per cent of our GNP was spent on research and development. In 1985, this was 1.3 per cent, which means a drop from 1.6 to 1.3.

Federal participation is going down as well. Twenty years ago, between 1963 and 1967, 47 per cent of total funding in the R and D sector came from the federal Government. In 1983, the last figure I have here, it was only 38 per cent, so that the federal contribution went down from 47 to 38 per cent.

[English]

With those kinds of figures, we can see very, very clearly that we are spending less and less on research and development, both as a percentage of the funding that comes from the federal Government and the funding of research all together. I think that is not a very good signal for the future of Canada, for jobs in the year 2000 and beyond and for our standard of living. I plead with the new Minister to use whatever clout he has to get a bigger share of that budget dedicated toward getting the NRC back to doing some good long-term research that will pay dividends for Canada in the years that lie ahead.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of western Canada who are concerned about the Government's decision to deindex family allowances. They are calling upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to give second thought to the unfair tax increases that were imposed in the last federal Budget.

POSTAL SERVICE IN NEPEAN, ONT.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the City of Nepean who live in a new sub-division at Knoxdale and Woodrofe Avenues. Since February of this year, those living in this sub-division have received no postal service, not even community mail boxes.

Mr. McDermid: Where?

Mr. Keeper: In Nepean.

Mr. McDermid: You should come to Brampton.

Mr. Keeper: I hear from the other side of the House that the same deplorable situation exists in Brampton. The purpose of this petition is to bring this matter to the attention of the House and the Government.

This community receives no postal service, but a nearby sub-division has already been given postal service even though it was built at approximately the same time. The petitioners from the City of Nepean who live in the new sub-division call upon the Government to instruct Canada Post to provide immediately community mail boses to the Knoxdale sub-division and that Canada Post be required to replace community mail boses with door-to-door delivery service in all new sub-divisions.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on the second reading of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. These include the Canada Pension Plan Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Act.

This Bill contains measures proposed in two notices of Ways and Means motions tabled in the House earlier this year, one a general Ways and Means motion tabled on May 23 and the other a detailed notice of a Ways and Means motion tabled on November 21.

The Bill represents a substantial and integral component of the Government's program to secure durable economic renewal for Canadians. Members will recall that we established the broad framework for that strategy in November of last year. Since then we have moved clearly and consistently to develop and implement specific initiatives—the building blocks for durable economic renewal.

The Bill represents a substantial and integral component of the Government's program to secure durable economic renewal for Canadians.

Members will recall that we established the broad framework for that strategy in November of last year. Since then we have moved clearly and consistently to develop and implement specific initiatives—the building blocks for durable economic renewal.

[English]

We know the policies of the Government are already bringing about very positive and encouraging results. For example, the inflation rate is the lowest since 1971. The prime rate is down 3.6 per cent from where it was a year ago when we launched our initiatives for economic renewal. Also, bank rates and mortgage rates are at the lowest levels they have been in seven years. These indicators are indeed important building blocks in the Government's strategy to bring lasting economic prosperity to the people of the country.

I wish to point out to Members opposite that with interest rates at the levels I have just mentioned this means the average Canadian farmer or business person with liabilities of $100,000 will save $3,000 a year. With mortgage rates at today's levels, it means a young Canadian couple buying their very first home with a $50,000 mortgage will pay $8,000 less over a five-year term and save $125 per month.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: I might add that this young couple will have a far better chance of owning their first home because since the Government came to office a year ago I know the House will be pleased to note that new housing starts are up by almost 50 per cent.

The renewal strategy is designed to create steady and sustained improvement in the basic conditions for economic growth. This growth will be powered by the dynamism of the private sector and supported by a federal Government which recognizes not only its responsibilities but its proper limitations as an economic regulator and participant.

The Bill proposes to continue our strategy for far-reaching and wide-ranging economic renewal. Therefore, it is appropriate to review briefly the cornerstones of the strategy. First, the Government is determined to reduce the federal deficit and bring the growth of the public debt under control. By putting our fiscal house in order we are ensuring that the private sector has the scope for revitalized growth. I am pleased to report that our rigorous yet responsible efforts to date have made positive headway with the debt problem. We are presently seeing the slowest growth in Government spending in 17 years and apart from servicing the national debt Government spending is rising by only 2 per cent. The deficit is $500 million lower now than it was a year ago. This is an achievement which no Liberal Government could muster in the last 15 years.

The Government is cutting $4 billion this year, $6.1 billion next year and by 1990 the national debt will be $75 billion lower because we are working deligently to ensure Government works efficiently and without waste. We will continue to build on this success.

A second cornerstone of our renewal strategy is the direct encouragement of private initiative as the key to productive growth and job creation. Since we established our framework for economic renewal last November, we have also moved clearly and consistently to develop and implement specific initiatives that bring employment opportunities for Canadians. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), has worked closely with our provinces and with the private sector to develop a strategy of jobs for Canadians. We have seen the national unemployment rate decline 1.3 per cent and the youth unemployment rate drop by 2 per cent since September 1984, and we have seen 333,000 jobs created within the private sector since September 1984. Our policies and commitment are fostering higher investment, greater innovation, increased international competitiveness and a positive climate for the birth and growth of new enterprise. The clear signals we have given the private sector and initiatives we have taken to date have already borne fruit in the form of greater private sector activity and improving economic performance in almost all sectors of our economy.

Third, we are improving the efficiency and effectiveness of Government by cutting waste, by removing obstacles to economic growth and by making better use of scarce and precious resources. We are ensuring that Government assumes a less intrusive place in the lives of Canadians.

Finally, we are bringing about all these vital changes in a manner that is as fair as humanly possible. In acting to improve the climate in which our private sector in Canada can excel, we are building on the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is the essence and the character of our Canadian people. The Bill we are considering today is firmly and squarely based on three cornerstones of our economic renewal strategy.

The Bill will implement many significant measures that my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), introduced in this Government's first full Budget. These measures have attracted widespread support and are eagerly awaited by Canadians. The Bill that we are considering amends the Income Tax Act in significant ways. Measures contained in the Bill include: a lifetime $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for individuals—and that includes small capital gains as well; capital tax on larger financial institutions; modifications to the rules governing investment in small business by pension and other retirement income plans; rules to prevent taxpayers from splitting income among family members just to reduce tax; and changes to review Revenue Canada's powers to audit and examine taxpayers' books and records, including its powers of search and seizure. These measures touch on a wide variety of issues including tax fairness, fiscal responsibility, taxpayers' rights and efficiency of government programs.

I have indicated that this Bill provides for a maximum half-million dollar personal lifetime capital gains exemption. This is perhaps the most significant measure in this Bill and is one which changes both the direction and character of the Canadian tax system in a positive way. The capital gains exemption recognizes that the Canadian economy can be dynamic and productive when the successes Canadians achieve are rewarded.

Canada has been described as a nation of savers. With measures such as the lifetime personal capital gains exemption, Canada will, I believe, become known as a nation of aggressive entrepreneurs who reap the rewards of their success and hard work from a thriving and prosperous economy.

I spoke also today of tax fairness. This Bill contains measures which will prevent the use of income-splitting trusts to gain tax advantage. It is high time that the tax law is amended to correct this defect which has allowed those most able to hire tax advisers to take advantage of the tax system. I am pleased to note, as well, that this Bill promotes fairness in the tax administration. New measures defining the powers of search and seizure will ensure that the administration of the tax law complies with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We recognize that small business is the engine of economic growth. This Bill contains innovative measures allowing small businesses to tap into new sources of equity investment. These measures, which allow access by small businesses to funds of retirement savings plans and pension plans, will benefit both pension plan administrators and small businesses. They are progressive ideas whose time has come.

This Government recognizes as well the importance of consultations in developing and refining policy initiatives. As evidence of this, I would point to the announcements already made regarding adjustments to budget proposals. This Bill provides for these as well as other modifications made in the detailed Ways and Means motions tabled last week.

The May Budget proposed that, as a result of the introduction of the capital gains exemption, capital losses incurred after 1984 would be deductible only from future capital gains. This Bill, however, allows net capital losses realized before the May Budget to be deducted from other sources of income to the extent of $2,000 per year. This, in effect, continues the pre-Budget treatment for capital losses realized before the Budget.

The lifetime capital gains exemption is a generous measure and is intended to encourage risk-taking by Canadians. It is not intended to diminish the fairness of the tax system by allowing transactions which, in effect, convert normal income into capital gains. Accordingly, various specific anti-avoidance rules have been added. These rules will counter the conversion of business or property income into exempt capital gains and the conversion of corporate capital gains into exempt capital gains of individuals.

In addition, special rules have been introduced to prevent the flow of capital gains, through conduits such as mutual funds, to individuals, and to prevent taxpayers from deferring gains through option agreements so as to avoid the transitional phase-in of the capital gains exemption. A specific anti-avoidance provision has also been introduced to prevent the shifting of exempt capital gains from one person to another through the use of stock dividends, generally in private family corporate arrangements.

Two modifications have been made to the May Budget proposals with respect to investment tax credits. First, I know that Hon. Members will welcome the fact that the Cape Breton investment tax credit rate has been increased from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. Second, those taxpayers who do contract work for other taxpayers will not be entitled to investment tax credits on their contract work effective for contracts after November 21, 1985. This will not in any way affect research and development companies in Canada carrying on research and development work on their own account or through contractors. It will, however, stop the double claiming of incentives.

The May Budget proposed a capital tax to be levied on large financial institutions. To confine its application to the very largest banks and trust companies, the threshold for this tax has been increased to $300 million of capital employed in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this Bill provides for a new direction for the Canadian income tax system. It provides for new measures such as the $500,000 lifetime maximum personal capital gains exemption to encourage small and medium size investors, small businessmen, farmers and all Canadians to invest their savings in productive economic activity and to take the risks that our business climate needs. The Bill also improves the fairness of the tax system by removing some of the unintended ways in which advantage may be taken of the system. Finally, this Bill removes the controversial scientific research tax credit and replaces it with a refundable mechanism which is less open to abuse but which will continue to encourage legitimate research and development.

This Bill increases the effectiveness of Government programs by reducing the basis for investment tax credits where other grants or assistance have been received or expenditures made. This Bill increases the fairness of the tax system by introducing change of control rules to prevent unacceptable sales of unused tax credits. These changes are long overdue and we know that Canadians share our objective and desire to improve the economy. We know Canadians are willing to share some of these burdens so that we all share in the triumphs and in the forthcoming prosperity.

I do want to share with you as well some of the comments that my colleague, the Minister of Finance and I have received since we introduced this Budget. We have been told that it was the most encouraging Budget in the past decade. Canadians have written and telephoned to tell us the measures to encourage investment in small and medium-sized business are good for them and good for Canada. Canadians wrote to say that the capital gains tax exemption is a clear message to invest.

This is a major Bill. It is a complex Bill. However, such complexity is unavoidable where measures such as those contained in the Bill affect the fundamental principles of our tax system and where we are unwinding some of the problems we faced in the tax system before. The new direction this Bill provides and the benefits Canadians will gain more than justify these changes. I recommend Bill C-84 to this House. I look forward to speedy passage of these measures because they are so instrumental to economic renewal and prosperity in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before giving the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) the floor,

I would like to advise the House that owing to the two Ministers' statements we have had today, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 64 minutes. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to say that the Minister had the courtesy to warn me she would have to leave the House before the end of my speech or comments.

[English]

You said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister was ahead of her time. As I reflected on that I thought she must be talking about some other Budget, perhaps one in the future; certainly not this Budget or the tax Bill which has been presented to us in this House. The Minister made a number of references to the Government's record. I cannot help but note en passant, with all the objectivity I can muster, that the low interest rates and low mortgage rates to which she refers, the new housing starts which she is so proud of, are all the result of previous Liberal Budgets.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: They have nothing whatever to do, not even remotely, with any policies introduced by this Government since it assumed office in September of 1984.

Mr. Gormley: How can you say that with a straight face?

Mr. Johnston: I see the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) expressing some cynicism about that remark.

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Mr. Johnston: However, anyone who knows anything about Budgets in the Canadian economy will recognize that the period in which this Budget will have an impact will be next year and the year after. The Government has done nothing to bring about the positive results to which the Minister made reference.

The Minister also referred to the issue of economic recovery, the importance of reducing the deficit and putting our fiscal house in order. Pardon me if I have trouble suppressing a grin when I hear that coming from a Minister who has presided over the failure of two chartered banks at a cost of as much as $2.8 billion.

Mr. Andre: That had nothing to do with the Liberal Budget?

Mr. McDermid: Oh, yes!

Mr. Johnston: She has the extraordinary gall to come in here and talk about putting our fiscal house in order.

Then she offered us a number of quite remarkable statements. She talked about clear messages which this Government is delivering to the Canadian public and the private sector; like, for example, a $1.5 million advertising budget to convince people to stop smoking and $97 million to support tobacco growers. These are the kind of clear signals which the Government sends to the Canadian people.

Then she talks about compassion, tolerance and justice. It is wonderful rhetoric and she may well have these sentiments herself, but they certainly were not to be found in the Budget tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last May. Of course he recognized, along with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and others, that deindexation of Old Age Security had to be withdrawn along with the absolutely unacceptable taxes on certain health products. These are examples of the sentiments of compassion, tolerance and justice to which the Minister referred. She also talked about the widespread support for this Budget. I do not know what kind of mail Conservative Members are getting, but we on this side of the House certainly have been hearing an awful lot which I would not interpret as widespread support. I will deal in a moment with some of those people who are complaining quite legitimately.

The Minister also tells us that the Government has taken steps to reduce tax avoidance such as family members being able to take advantage of transfers and trusts in order to split income. However, she is a Member of a Government which, at the same time, approved a tax ruling concerning Olympia & York which will cost taxpayers approximately $1 billion, almost the full budget for social housing costs in this country last year. Then we have the case of Genstar and others as well. All of this could add up, I suggest, to as much as $2 billion. Throw in another $2.8 billion for the banks and another $500 million for ice-breakers, and we have the kind of fiscal constraint which this Government pretends to be practising. It is too bad that the actions do not match the rhetoric.

Then the Minister tries to tell us about a capital gains exemption which will do all kinds of wonderful things. I see the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), here. I see the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) here. I see a number of Members who know better but they will not say anything. They know it is one of the stupidest tax provisions to ever be introduced in the history of income tax legislation. This is true for so many reasons, technical and equitable, that it boggles the mind.

She talks about small business being able to tap new sources of funds. Yes, I believe that is important and I must say that I am pleased the Government at least sought to tap these sources of funds, things like RRSPs and pension plans. However, once again it is the wrong approach to try and induce plans to invest in Canadian small business in order to free up money to invest elsewhere.

Let me try to be constructive, Mr. Speaker. I threw those comments out because it is difficult to sit in my seat and listen to the stream of self-congratulations coming from the Minister. That being said, let us try this afternoon to put some of the partisanship behind us and invite Members of the House to discharge their responsibilities to their constituents. We all want to have a better and more equitable tax system. We are all here to achieve that end.

We waited nine months for the Budget to appear. Now, we have waited almost six months for the tax Bill to appear. One would have hoped that the fundamental flaws in the Budget could have been addressed during the intervening period. Well, they have not been. Unfortunately, as we all know, you cannot make a silk purse from a sow's ear. Nevertheless, the Budget could have been dramatically improved through some sensible modifications in the Bill which the Minister put before us. That has not taken place. She did tell us, of course, that the tax credit in Cape Breton has been increased from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. If that is going to make a major difference in Cape Breton, so be it. I do not think it will make any contribution whatsoever.

In any event, the Budget was unfair. Members on all sides of the House recognize that. It widens the gap between the rich and the poor in the country. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Budget remains unfair. The Budget suggested that there would be complex provisions introduced into the Income Tax Act. We have seen complex provisions introduced into the Income Tax Act through this tax Bill. I am glad to see that we now have the wisdom of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) because I know he will be able to make a contribution to this discussion in Cabinet and in caucus to try to bring some common sense to this piece of legislation before it is too late.

Notwithstanding what the Minister has said, we know that the Budget is economically unsound. We on this side of the House are not alone in saying that. Economists are saying it and the Institute for Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto has said it. In fact, some of the internal departmental analyses which have leaked out in one manner or another have also said it. Most important of all, instead of sending a clear message, the message is very ambiguous. There is almost no coherent thread of thought running through the various measures found in the various statutes to which the Minister made reference. Everyone knows that this is a bad Budget and the Government now has to put its best face on it. Having retreated—thank God—on a number of issues, it does not now want to retreat any further. However, retreat it must, because if it does not retreat now it will have to retreat in the next Budget at a cost of much time and expense in the private sector as well as in the House, in committee, and in various Departments.

Tax, of course, is a very complicated matter. I confess to you, Mr. Speaker, that I wish the Liberal Government had done a lot more to improve the taxation system in the country. There was a tax reform initiative by a Conservative Government in 1962; the Carter Commission. The Liberal Government followed that. I was not here at the time that the tax reform Bill was introduced in 1971. Frankly, I thought that was a bad piece of legislation and I still think so. Now, instead of taking advantage of the golden opportunity of having 211 seats in the house to bring forward sensible tax reform and give Canadians the kind of coherent, fair and equitable tax system which would contribute to economic growth and which they deserve, our tory friends are in the process of making the situation even worse.

I would like to refer to a statement made by the Carter Commission with respect to what a tax system should achieve. I would then like to measure certain components in the budget and in the tax bill against the system as described. Carter said:

> A tax system can be judged from different points of view. Is the system fair? Does it contribute as much as possible to the growth and stability of the economy? Are the rights and liberty of the individual protected? Does it help strengthen the federation? These questions reflect not only the many facets of taxation but also what we believe to be the principal objectives that Canadians wish to realize through their tax system. They want equity, more goods and services, full employment without inflation, a free society and a strong, independent federation.

Although these words were written almost 20 years ago, I suggest that Canadians feel the same way about their tax system today as they did then. They have been hoping, somewhat futilely, for the kinds of changes that are essential to give them the tax system which they deserve.

Does this tax Bill contribute as much as possible to the growth and stability of the economy? The Budget extracts billions of dollars from consumers, ordinary men and women, middle and lower income Canadians. They are being asked to foot this tax Bill. Drawing upon the famous document which is the estimates of the Department of Finance, if we take out the tax loss from the capital gains tax exemption, of which the Minister and the Government appear to be so proud, we find that direct tax on persons in the year 1990-91 will have increased by $5.2 billion. Can anyone in any of the Parties which sit in the House suggest that this will contribute to the growth and stability of the economy? Add to that the indirect taxes. Again I am going to take out the oil export charge because I do not think it is appropriate. No one knows where that tax falls. If we take that out and add the additional fuel taxes which are to come into effect in January to help replace the revenue lost by backing off from the deindexation of Old Age Security, we find that an additional $4.6 billion will be paid. Excluding corporate taxes and other taxes which are passed on, direct taxes on persons and indirect taxes which individuals have to bear, all of which are regressive, will amount to a grand total of almost $10 billion by 1990-91. The Minister is telling us that that will contribute to the growth and stability of the economy. It certainly does not meet the test which was laid down by Carter in his statement delivered in 1967 which I read to you a moment ago.

The impact of these various taxes is only beginning to be understood. We know what the impact is likely to be in the construction industry. Is the Government listening to the construction industry? Is the Government paying attention to the impact that this may have on the housing starts of which the Minister is so proud? Does anyone know what is going to happen to the trucking industry when a tax is put on distance in the country, which tax must be borne by the receiver of produce, whether food or clothing?

Mr. Blenkarn: We are talking about the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Johnston: That is not in Mississauga South, but especially in the remote areas of the country.

Mr. Blenkarn: That's the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Johnston: Exactly, it is all part of the Budget.

Mr. Blenkarn: You have your speeches mixed up.

Mr. Johnston: That is a typical example, this time from the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, of the failure to understand that the tax Bills have to be taken as a whole. There is no one tax Bill which can be read without another. I am coming to that point. If the Member will pay attention he may learn a little about the problems with the tax system, which problems he should be taking before his committee for study. The fact of the matter is that these are the numbers and the Minister says that this Budget will contribute to the growth and stability of the economy. I do not know if the Member was here for the Minister's speech. As Members may or may not know, there are three sources of taxation. There are taxes on income, which are normally progressive in this country. There are taxes on consumption which are inevitably regressive under our system. Those are the taxes to which I just referred. Finally, there are taxes on capital. In Canada, I believe we have never successfully found the appropriate balance between these three sources of taxes.

Of course, the mosts visible tax is on income. Taxes on consumption are much less visible and the Government has tried to get away with a great amount of apparently invisible taxation. Retail sales taxes are more visible because they are applied to the retail level.

The manufacturer's sales tax and the customs tariffs are regressive. They fall equally upon the rich consumer of goods and the poor consumer of goods. There will be a change in the capital tax because the threshold has been raised. However, I have often argued in the House that a capital tax applied to a corporation is not paid by the corporation. Since it must be paid by someone else, I am not sure in any of these cases where that tax will fall. That tax is levied under Part VI of the proposed Bill.

That brings me to the issue of transparency to which we must pay close attention. It is necessary for us to know who is actually stuck with the tax bill. For example, the Government has applied a sales tax to pet food in the Budget. That tax is to be borne by the pet owner. However, when a tax is put on the profits of a company which manufactures pet food, it may be borne in part by the pet owner, the shareholder and by the employees who receive less wages. The fact is that is has to be passed on somewhere. This is where the problem of less transparency arises especially with respect to corporate taxes which many people, especially my friends in the NDP, regard as some sort of panacea to taxation. However, corporations do not pay taxes. As a matter of fact, I have heard that when the United States Treasury hires new tax experts fresh from university, the first question they are asked is who pays the corporate tax. If the person has an answer they are not hired.

Transparency of taxes is essential. I can go to any restaurant in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto where people are dining in a luxurious restaurant. Who is paying the bill if it is tax deductible? Is it the partners, the shareholders or the Government? I suggest that nine times out of ten it is not the person dining. This introduces inflation into our system and makes many of the services unattainable by ordinary Canadians.

Canadians are tired of being screwed by the tax system. The Government is squandering its opportunity to do something about it. It has produced an inequitable Bill that is complex and simply builds on a system which is already inadequate. My friends opposite know that.

They know perfectly well this is a very bad Budget and that the Bill before the House is unsatisfactory. But they are going to vote for the Bill just the same because of the tradition of party discipline.

[English]

I am convinced that our electors including those represented by 211 Tory Members, roughly 75 per cent of the population or 18 million people, expect more from them than to simply stand up and vote for this Bill with all of its obvious flaws simply because the Minister of Finance and the Government do not want to reconsider this legislation. It makes a mockery of the process if we are trapped into an attempt to fight a Bill that has irresistible momentum because of 211 Members.

It is true that the Government backed off on the pension question last spring and reconsidered other matters, but it was not as a result of Members of the House who were able to bring pressure to bear on the Government. It was not as a result of what happened on the back-benches. The opposition, playing its role by raising the issues, had to have the support of Canadians. It was referred to by some as "grey power", when that group of Canadians came here to say that pension deindexation was unacceptable. When it became apparent that votes were at stake, the Government reacted. That is not what should happen. Common sense should make us react. We have enough collective brain power in the House of Commons to improve this legislation but I fear, having listened to the Minister, that it will be very difficult to make that change.

We were sent here to do a job for the people of Canada. I suggest that we cannot let this notion of party discipline allows us to railroad a piece of legislation through that is obviously as bad as this. While I do not believe Canadians have the respect they should for this place, how can they have that respect when they know that this is becoming a House of voting robots.

Mr. McDermid: You let us improve the National Energy Program when you were in power.

Mr. Johnston: The Member for Brampton-Georgetown is criticizing our attitudes in the past and what was or was not accomplished by us. I accept that. I recognize that criticism and I am not happy about all of the legislation that has gone through the House in the past, under whatever Government.

A committee has come forward with some good recommendations and I think the time has come for change. Canadians want a change. Canadians voted for change but it is not happening. All 211 Tory Members will get up to vote for this Bill which is so obviously wrong in so many respects. While portions of the Bill have been changed, much work remains to be done in order to have legislation which provides economic growth, equity and satisfies Canadians that parliamentarians are providing true input into legislation.

Let us use the capital gains tax provision as an example of what is wrong with this Bill. The Minister praised this provision, saying that it would encourage investment and so on. Beginning in 1985, Canadians will be exempt progressively from paying tax on $500,000 of capital gains over their lifetime. This provision was said to be designed especially with a view to encouraging investment in small-and medium-sized businesses. The Member for Mississauga South agrees with that, as do other Members of the House.

We have been told, and I agree from my own study of the matter, that jobs—

—the jobs will be created in small- and medium-sized businesses across Canada.

So it makes very goods sense to try and attract investment to this sector.

[English]

That being said, what about the provision? The provision effectively applies to all capital property. There are a couple of exceptions with respect to employees' stock options and so on. We have heard that this capital property can include condominiums in Florida, yachts in the Caribbean, stamps, coins, jewellery, foreign securities or any assests on a world-wide basis. This is intended to encourage investment in the small and medium-sized business sector.

Mr. Gormley: Lots of farmers. Lots of fishermen.

Mr. Johnston: The Member to my right is being provocative. I think that a little ad libbing and a little fun in the House is sometimes good.

Mr. Gormley: A little truth wouldn't hurt.

Mr. Johnston: He is a sensible person. He knows that the way this provision is drafted is dumb. It is stupid. It does not bring money to the small and medium-sized business sector. The Minister has stated that people are excited about this formula and will invest. However, that is not what I hear. I am told they want to dispose of their assets quickly, take their money and run because they know this provision will not be in effect for very long. It fails the very basic test of economic growth and economic stimulation, which is fundamental. But it also miserably fails the test of equity.

We know from statistics that 4 per cent of Canadian taxpayers have income in excess of $50,000. We also know that 63 per cent of all capital gains go to those people with $50,000 and over. There is no equity. It does not accomplish its purpose in terms of creating investment in the small and medium-sized business sector. What does it do, Mr. Speaker? It costs one hell of a lot of money, money that could be better spent elsewhere.

If we look again at the Department of Finance's numbers which, I understand, are probably being revised because they are understated, we see from this document that was released, leaked, whatever on or about budget night, that in 1985-86—by those conservative estimates—it was going to cost $300 million, next year $600 million and by 1990-91, $1.25 billion. I repeat for those members who are getting used to these big numbers being thrown around in their caucuses, $1.25 billion. I suppose $1.2 billion does not sound much beside $2.8 billion but it is a lot of money. I suggest too that that money is not going into any productive pursuits whatever. That money is being blown. Yet we hear at the same time the importance of deficit reduction, about the banks, the ice-breakers, the tax rulings, and here we have $1.25 billion blown by this provision in the Budget with no focus and no job creation that is guaranteed at all.

I said I would not go on long this afternoon because my colleagues will be following up themes in this Budget, if there are themes. There are certainly no coherent themes, but my colleague will be following up themes of waste, of complexity of inequity and so on.

I want to leave my fellow parliamentarians with one thought. I want to come back to it once again because I feel it is terribly important. I hope, I have always hoped, and I hope people in this Chamber share my hope that we will some day discharge those responsibilities which our electors have given to us here on the floor of the House of Commons. I do not think any of us can be satisfied we are discharging our responsibilities if we allow this tax Bill to pass in the form presented to us by the Minister.

I hope, and I see my friend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that he in his role as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance will make every effort to ensure that an opportunity is given to Members to make sensible amendments, to hear witnesses and to have a full understanding why the capital gains tax exemption is bad law. Do not take my word for it, but the word of people in the private sector—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Johnston: —take the word of the people in the investment community if you like. Listen to those people who recognize it is not a benefit accruing to Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Order.

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) is of the opinion that I will be the chairman of a committee reviewing this Bill. I wish it were so. Unfortunately, his Party and the New Democratic Party did not make an arrangement with the House Leader to have this transferred to the House accounts committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Blenkarn: Consequently I will not be the chairman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. We have difficulty with discipline today.

Mr. Johnston: I am sorry to hear what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has said. I think we should have the opportunity in that committee to examine this Bill in some depth. Perhaps it is not irretrievable. Perhaps it is possible to make some arrangements. I have spoken to my own House Leader about it. I am not sure where that dialogue has moved in terms of the various House Leaders. Perhaps the critic for the New Democratic Party will have a comment to make during the course of his remarks.

Let me conclude by saying to you, Mr. Speaker, and not pleading, but appealing to the good sense of Members of this House that we accept our responsibilities, that we work together to try to make this an acceptable Bill that will be more equitable and will make more of a contribution to sustain economic growth and build an economy that will provide the jobs we so desperately need.

We do not see it in the Bill at the present time. I hope we will be able to see some glimmer of that, at least, when the Bill is finally adopted on third reading.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I almost have tears in my eyes. I guess it is appropriate to have tears in one's eyes to rise on Bill C-84. We have 235 pages of revisions to the Income Tax Act of Canada. I do not know how many Members of Parliament have had an opportunity to look through these 235 pages. Quite frankly, I would be surprised if anyone has. Let us assume that two, three or five people in the House have actually sat down and attempted to go through this document.

We get into discussion in the hallways and in the coffee shops on Parliament Hill but it is time that we stop the nonsense of Bills containing 235 pages. Here we are discussing in principle Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and Related Statutes, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. We are amending all kinds of things in all kinds of ways and nobody knows what it is all about.

We have had a chance to look at some of the highlights. Normally if the Finance Department were serious about having Members of Parliament and others analyse what the Department is doing, it would have sent out an explanation paper as it has in the past to explain what on earth all this legalese gobbledegook means.

The Government tabled an explanation document yesterday, but we are talking about 235 pages of tax changes. This is now like a tragic comedy. I think it is time, and I suspect Members of the House will agree, that we stop this. When we are dealing with such a complicated matter that has horrendous implications a Bill like this should be sent to the appropriate committee well in advance for discussion, so we can hear witnesses and experts in the various sectors. It should be analysed for a number of weeks, a number of months if necessary so we can understand what the Government of Canada is doing.

There are hundreds of Finance Department officials sitting somewhere in mystical offices near Parliament Hill, who, I guess, all year long with furled brows and pens, draft changes to the Income Tax Act based on suggestions by Members of Parliament, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and perhaps others. No one knows who these people are, what they are doing and why they are doing it.

Here in the last dying days before the Christmas recess we as parliamentarians are asked to rule and to decide on this incredible range of implications that will touch the lives of every Canadian for decades to come. It is not being done with proper analysis or with proper study. In fact it is not being done properly. Quite frankly, the process is totally unacceptable. I know the Government's Finance Committee Chairman will rise in his place shortly. I hope he will have something to say about this meaningless and silly process which is continually perpetuated year after year. It has to be changed, and that initiative for change has to come from the Government. It ought to come from the Minister of Finance, but I am not sure whether we have one any more. At least it could come from the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I appeal to him to use his good offices in order to try to bring some sense into the process so that we can at least deal with this Bill as responsible and sensible parliamentarians, as opposed to being forced into this charade.

When we talk about changing the Income Tax Act of Canada, it has to be discussed within some kind of context. We will not simply be making a few changes to a few pages in the Act. There is a number of processes going on at the same time. Another set of tax regulations is also being changed in the excise tax Bill which is presently before the House.

The Government has decided in its wisdom that it should now place a special sales tax on all transactions which take place in the country. It wants to add another 1 per cent to the sales tax, one of the most regressive and punitive taxes which a country can have or a Government can impose. However, that is what the Government is doing. When one buys a set of winter tires, whether one is from a poor family or an extremely wealthy family, one pays the same sales tax. That is a very regressive, unfair, inappropriate, callous and uncaring action to be taking. As well, there will be increased taxes on diesel fuel, aviation fuel and gasoline per se. As many Hon. Members have indicated over past days, it is really a tax on distance. It adds one cent per mile to the costs faced by truckers. Every commodity transported in the country will cost consumers more. The trucker or someone will have to take less profit. By and large it will be passed along to consumers. This discriminates against northern Canadians who have to fly in all their goods. With an increase in aviation fuel, it will cost them much more to live. Western Canadians who have to transport goods over vast distances will be paying more for their goods. It is discriminatory against them as well. The same could be said about people living in Atlantic Canada.

The Government decided to impose more taxes upon construction materials, affecting the people who build the country. They are the ones who build our houses and buildings. They create and leave clear evidence of what they contributed to society. Construction materials will be taxed.

Mr. Orlikow: It is already in difficulty.

Mr. Riis: Yes, that industry is already in difficulty. It provides employment and assists many other sectors, it is in difficulty at the present time, and now the Government is imposing a further levy.

Mr. McDermid: We cannot get bricklayers in our community.

Mr. Riis: I ask my hon. friend to travel to western Canada and ask about how healthy that industry is. He will get an ear full, because it is an industry which is on its knees today in western Canada. To impose a tax on construction materials is a very regressive step for the Government of Canada to take at this time.

Also the Government will impose taxes on pop, chocolate bars and all sorts of other confectionary items, as well as on dog food, cat food, canary food and goldfish food, and on pharmaceutical supplies. The list goes on and on, but I will not take up the valuable time of the House to indicate all the new taxes which will be imposed. That is the context within which we are discussing changes to the Income Tax Act today.

As a result of these taxes which I have just mentioned, as well as a few others, $2.5 billion per year will be extracted from the pockets of ordinary citizens and put into the coffers of Ottawa. Why is there this tax grab? Why is the Government so bloody desperate to cause hardship for the average Canadian household? Why does it want to bleed away $2.5 billion in increased excise taxes? I will tell the House why. If the Government bails out a bank for $1 billion, $2 billion or nearly $3 billion, if it gives a tax remission to Syncrude which might amount to $1 billion, if it gives another $1 billion to O&Y, if it makes a tax ruling on Genstar for tens of millions of dollars or perhaps more, and if it gives vast amounts of moneys to selective corporations, it has to come up with money from some place.

Therefore, the Government of Canada makes a desperate grab for money out of the pockets, wallets and purses of Canadians who can least afford any increase in taxation, let alone an increase on all these particular items. We will have to wait and see, but I know that those minions in the Department of Finance are drafting legislation for value added taxes. They have their forms put together. They have their papers drafted. They are talking to people across the country. We have been getting dribs and drabs of information in this regard. I do not know how many of us in the House care one hoot about giving serious consideration to a value added tax, which will result in billions and billions of extra tax dollars coming into the Ottawa Treasury from the taxpayers of Canada.

We do not really know what is going on. We do not know what finance people are doing in the back rooms, drafting up new ways of gouging the people of Canada. Government Members have to accept their responsibility. It is time that we pulled off the veils and opened up the doors of that place to find out what is going on in our tax system. I appeal to Hon. Members on the government benches to give the Finance Committee a special reference to look into the whole tax business and to stop perpetuating this continual hardship on people for questionable reasons and because of questionable motivation. What we are seeing here is really quite scandalous. There are incredible implications as the tax system is changed and altered. Quite frankly, there are some good changes. I have to be fair and responsible and say that there are some good tax changes, but most of them are not good. Most of the major boondoggles in the system do not appear here. They have not been touched; the Government has not laid a hand on them. By and large, this will make the Income Tax Act of Canada more biased, more unfair and less equitable than ever before. It will be biased in favour of certain wealthy Canadians and certain large corporations. That is what is being done. Let there be no doubt about it.

The problem is that our tax system is a voluntary compliance system. It relies upon Canadians being honest on their tax forms. It relies upon Canadians listing their incomes and paying a reasonable tax. However, when people are reminded day in and day out of the unfairness, bias and discriminatory aspects of the tax system, they lose faith. They have lost faith in the system, which consequently encourages more and more honest, law-abiding Canadians to seek out ways and means of avoiding or deferring tax.

Just this morning I read an article in the newspaper. I should like to refer to it for the particular benefit of Liberal colleagues to my right who brought in a tax loophole just before they left office whereby people could purchase luxury yachts and houseboats and almost get them free. It indicates that $165,000 can be deducted as a result of Canada's last great tax break, but that it has to be done quickly because it will finish by the end of December. It indicates that if one's annual taxable income is over $70,000—and that is a very select group of Canadians—one can deduct up to $165,000 over the next four years and own an income producing hard asset with 100 per cent borrowed funds. It goes on to indicate all other advantages attached to buying a nice big yacht. We can thank the Liberals for introducing that loophole and thank the Minister of Finance for having the sense to close it off just after Christmas. There again, they can rush in and take advantage of that one.

I just noticed another little advertisement in this morning's paper. It talks about tax sheltered real estate here in the nation's capital. For a down payment in 1985, projected reduction in taxable income for the next number of years will total something in the neighbourhood of about $30,000 if one puts down $1,000 and arranges one's funds in a certain way. That is not a bad deal. These little notices have appeared in today's paper. In the next little while, they will start to flood into the newspapers as people adjust and become creative in their accounting before the year end in order to take advantage of all these loopholes.

Mr. McDermid: Are you going to get in on that one?

Mr. Riis: Perhaps you can get in on it before it is too late.

We do our best to remind people that there are still many, many Canadians who are upper-income earners or are wealthy and who year after year do not pay any income tax. They do not pay $1,000, $100, or $1, they pay no income tax year after year.

The other day, I received a letter from a constituent who said he was really interested in all this unfairness. He asked me to give him a list of all the loopholes these people used. He said that he was in the $100,000 per year bracket and wanted to know these things.

The other day, in a comment to an Ottawa Citizen reporter, a Revenue Canada official had this to say:

> A Revenue Canada official said the deductions that allow high-income earners to pay no income tax are available to anyone in theory but in practice only to those who are able to "arrange their affairs" in the right way.

He went on to say that the 178 people earning more than $250,000 who paid no income tax used the following deductions: the dividend tax credit on 50 per cent of dividends paid by Canadian corporations, interest dividends and capital gains deductions, charitable donations, interest and carrying charges on borrowed investment funds, petroleum exploration venture investments and the Canadian motion picture film investment. They also claimed deductions for Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance contributions, Registered Pension Plans, et cetera. This gentleman was kind enough to list for this reporter's benefit some of the more obvious and popular loopholes that people who were making $250,000 per year were using to pay not one single penny in income tax.

Another group composed of 176 Canadians made $100,000 in the last tax year. They paid no income tax, not one single penny. There were more than 8,000 people whose income was in excess of $50,000 per year who paid no income tax. The numbers are getting larger and larger each year. I have been commenting on this for nearly six years. At first the numbers were small and I was just making the point that we needed some kind of change to the tax system. The situation is getting more interesting and more unbelievable as the years pass. Every year the numbers are infalted. Why is this? Because more and more loopholes are provided in the tax system. More and more opportunities for those who can use creative accounting techniques are now available in the tax system.

As we perpetuate a system that is now understood by everyone to be grossly unfair, biased and discriminatory against ordinary Canadians, more and more people do not pay taxes at all. Ordinary law abiding Canadians decide that if everyone else is taking advantage of loopholes of which they cannot take advantage, they will do a little bartering and will use cash for transactions. The tax man will not know about that. More and more of the economy moves underground all the time. People estimate that between $30 billion and $50 billion worth of transactions per year are operating underground, unknown to the tax man. This means that the entire tax system begins to crumble. If ordinary Canadians have no faith in the tax system, it bodes very poorly for the future of Canada.

Ordinary Canadians look not only at the upper-income earners who do not pay tax but at those incredibly large corporate citizens. The small business people, the farmers, the fishermen and the corner store operators are struglling just to make ends meet these days.

Mr. McDermid: How many farmers paid income tax?

Mr. Riis: Farmers as well. They pay all of the taxes. They have to fill out all of the forms and even collect taxes in areas which impose sales taxes. Then these ordinary Canadians read articles hidden in the back pages of the newspapers indicating that companies like the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal, Shell Oil, Hudson's Bay and Genstar, companies that are making profits in the hundreds of millions of dollars, pay no corporate income tax at all. These companies are not so fortunate year after year. Sometimes they get caught out and have to pay a little bit in corporate income tax. When those companies pay no income tax in certain years while the struggling entrepreneur pays every year, something is desperately wrong with our system.

The other day, a friend of mine, a rancher, and I were sitting in a restaurant. It was not a fancy restaurant but more of a run of the mill restaurant. A number of business people were sitting at the table beside us. Both tables finished at about the same time and we were both deciding who should pay for the cheque. We overheard the conversation at the next table. One of them said: "I'll take the cheque, don't worry. It will go on my expense account". What is available to a certain select group of people in society is not necessarily available to others. I am not saying that that is not good. I am simply saying that it discriminates against the people who work in certain kinds of occupations.

Shucks, let us move right into the capital gains tax area. When Carter held a tax commission a few years ago, he said that it was time we called a buck a buck. He said that if we make a dollar, we should pay a fair tax on that dollar. This Government does not believe in that philosophy, it believes that the system should treat differently those folks who make money as a result of obtaining capital gains. That would include people who sell condominiums in Maui, buy and sell luxury yachts in the Caribbean or do other interesting things outside of Canada. If those people make money from those transactions, they do not pay any income tax whatsoever. Why on earth does the Government think this is a great bloody idea? The Government tells those who make money through investments and receive capital gains by doing work outside the country that they do not have to pay any income tax at all and that over the years they can accumulate up to $500,000. What does it tell the poor guy who is on the fish boat, the person in the coal mine and the person struggling to make a living when they find out that these folks do not pay any income tax because they have white collar jobs?

For certain areas of agriculture, the capital gains tax exemption makes sense. It makes sense for certain small businesses. I will listen carefully to my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who will speak next. I will ask him to do me the favour of explaining why someone who is selling a condominium in Jamaica, Miami or Maui should not pay income tax on the money he or she derives from that transaction. I for the life of me cannot figure that out.

If the Government is interested in helping Canadians and wants to have a capital gains tax exemption, why should it not at least restrict it to operations within Canada? If we are interested in creating jobs and helping people to reinvest, let us at least ask people to reinvest in our own country. I will be looking forward to hearing my friend explain that one a little later.

We have a system which treats certain kinds of income differently from other kinds of income. If that is not discriminatory, I do not know what is. That is like saying we will immediately favour people who derive their incomes from selling dividends, or from capital gains, or whatever, and we will discriminate against the people who are the real hard working Canadians who normally pay their taxes at source. It is a very unfair situation. I suppose the Minister of Finance is living out his goal. Not many months ago in a speech to the Canadian Economics Association in Montreal he said: "No matter how we define the term Canada has an acute shortage of rich people." He is doing his best to assist those who are nearly there by bringing in a whole new set of tax loopholes which will again assist the very wealthy in our country.

Mr. St. Germain: He wants to make more poor ones rich. He wants to build up the poor; you want to tear down the rich.

Mr. Riis: One of the things the Government has held up as a major initiative is with respect to capital gains exemptions. I wish to remind my hon. friend opposite that when we look at the number of tax filers, let us say in the $50,000 range, they amount to a very small percentage of all taxpayers. Yet, they account for nearly 65 per cent of the total benefits accruing under the capital gains provision. It is clear that this particular item which the Government holds up as a major initiative will help a select number of Canadians. Of course, it will cost us. In other words, when one does not pay tax on capital gains it will cost the people of Canada. It will cost the people of Canada $1 billion over the next two years. That is contained in the Government's own fiscal plan. We know who will make up the difference. I know that you are a very knowledgeable and wise man, Mr. Speaker, and that you know when these folks are not paying their $1 billion that the ordinary Canadian must pay more than they should to make up the difference. Yes, they sell Texas oil wells and condos in Maui.

There is something good in the tax paper, that is, the proposal to allow a tax credit of $700 to accrue to an individual investing in a labour-sponsored venture capital organization. It is designed to assist small and medium-sized businesses. That is a positive initiative. Some 20 per cent or $700, which ever is less, will be allowed as a tax credit. That is an encouraging development, particularly with respect to the development of venture capital.

I do have some concerns with the Bill. I am concerned about the increase in the Registered Retirement Savings Plan and the registered pension plan regarding non-taxable contribution limits. The new limits will be increased to $7,500 next year, $9,500 the year after, $11,500 the year after that, and up to $15,500 by the year 1990. What does this mean? It means that if a person has $15,000 in loose change at the end of the year he can put it into a retirement pension plan and not pay any tax on it. I ask Hon. Members: How many people at the end of the year end up with $15,000 in change which they can invest in a retirement pension plan? That is what is provided here. How many people can really take advantage of this great provision? Quite frankly, the people who will take advantage of it are those people who do not need it.

Mr. St. Germain: Small-businessmen and women.

Mr. Riis: I do not know many small-businessmen in my constituency who have $15,000 lying around which they can invest directly into retirement savings plans at this point in time.

I would like to consider a few other aspects of the Bill. Today, we are just talking about the principle of the Bill; we are not getting into a thorough point-by-point analysis of the Bill. That will come somewhat later. There is a proposal with respect to investment in small business by pension plans. The proposal is that pension funds be allowed to establish small business investment corporations to direct funds into the small business sector. Let us consider the definition of the small business sector. I see that the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) is in the House. A small business is defined as a company with assets up to $35 million. That is a fairly small company! I do not know if these are the types of companies which really need assistance at this point in time. They have other sources of capital upon which they can draw, ample sources. The family-structured businesses, the very small businesses which are trying to open up new areas, new ventures and which are trying new ideas will not qualify. There are some difficulties with respect to the Bill. It states that as an incentive pension funds will be allowed to invest $3 outside of Canada for every $1 which is invested in this type of venture. That is a peculiar way to show a commitment to assisting and developing activity here in our own country.

I now wish to tak about the deindexing of personal exemptions and tax brackets. We know what happened when the Government tried this same thing on OAS. It saw the illogic of such an approach and it backed off. I am pleased the Government did that. However, it is now going to eliminate the full indexation for the basic personal exemption on the tax form and the personal tax brackets. These exemptions will trip in only for increases above 3 per cent. What this means is that individuals will be paying more tax each year. They will not be able to deduct as much from their taxable incomes as their incomes increase from year to year. They will be pushed into higher tax brackets, even if their real income does not change a bit. This will cost Canadians about $650 million. Who are these taxpayers? These are ordinary Canadians who will, once again, have to pay an extra $650 million over the next two years as a result of this deindexation proposal.

The $50 tax reduction used to reduce taxable income has been eliminated. That is another $600 million out of the taxpayers' pockets. The ones who will feel this most acutely, and let there be no question about it, will be the low and middle-income Canadians. They will be the ones who will feel this proposal. If a person is in the $200,000 a year bracket he will not worry much about his ability to deduct $50 off his taxable income.

I would now like to deal with the temporary surtax on upper income earners. When one looks at all of the so-called fairness provisions introduced by the Minister today one will see that they are all temporary. All of the ones which will hit normal, ordinary middle and low-income Canadians are permanent. However, the corporate changes, the 5 per cent corporate surtax, that is temporary. It will be off in a few months. The temporary tax on the large financial institutions is a temporary tax. I am sure they will have trouble affording that 1 per cent!

There is a provision for the extension of the Small Business Bond Program. It was a nice gesture. I have yet to find a single person who has ever found a small business bond out there. Again, it is temporary. So these so-called extra charges for the corporate sector and on the banks are all temporary. They will be off in a few more months while the punitive ones for ordinary Canadians are on forever.

The Minister of Finance in a speech to the Canadian Tax Foundation had this to say:

> Our recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent ... When the benefits from special tax incentives are added together we are looking, in some instances, at an extraordinarily generous level of assistance.

In plain language that means we are trying our best to provide more and more corporate loopholes so that the large corporate sector will pay less and less tax. That is what the Minister is really saying. Of course, when the large corporations pay less the small businesses have to pay more. When the upper income earners pay less, or pay nothing, then the ordinary Canadian taxpayer has to pay more and more and more. They have had it. The ordinary Canadian taxpayers cannot pay any more. They are being gouged because the tax system is unfair.

Let us take a look at some of the child benefits. I think this is one of the more interesting aspects of Bill C-84 as it refers to the children of Canada.

Mr. Rompkey: It was not even mentioned by the Minister.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend from Newfoundland indicates that when the Minister of State for Finance made her comments about this very complicated legislation she failed to mention any of the benefits for children. I suspect that might portray a good deal more than what many of us may think.

This particular proposal is concerned with a gradual reduction in the regressive child tax exemptions while the child tax credit is being increased. Of course, the family allowance is being deindexed from the cost of living. We in this Party are strongly opposed to the deindexing of the family allowance. As for the other changes, the National Council on Welfare has observed something which I think is worth restating for Members of the House. I know that most Members will have been informed of this particular reaction of the National Council on Welfare to the May Budget. It had this to say, and I quote:

> After the various changes are phased in—raising the child tax credit, lowering the turnover point for the child tax credit ... reducing the children's exemption to the annual family allowance, and partically deindexing all child benefits—even the poorest parents will receive less than they would from the existing child benefits scheme.

This is a thoughtful statement which really deserves the reflection of all Members of the House. Time and time again various Members have stood and said: "In the end the poor families are going to get a benefit, after all of these various programs are phased in". That is not the case at all. Again, the low and middle income families will be getting short shrift.

The Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs after its hearings and the Government's consultation paper on child and elderly benefits concluded that any change in child benefits would result in substantially higher benefits for lower income families and benefits comparable to existing ones for middle income families. In other words, any changes must improve the situation for lower income families and not touch what is going on now for those families with middle incomes. However, Bill C-84 will produce very small improvements in child benefits for the poorest of families and progressively greater losses for all other Canadian families.

In summary, I think it is fair to say that once again we are presented with a set of major changes to our tax system, dramatic changes, which by and large tend to build in more discrimination than ever before. These are changes which make our tax system more biased than ever in favour of the large corporate sector and upper-income earners. I appeal to my colleagues. This silly process through which we are moving today, and in the subsequent days between now and Christmas when the Government hopes to have Bill C-84 passed through all stages, should stop in the future. We should take this matter much more seriously than we have up to this point. I am criticizing the present Government as well as the past Government for rushing legislation through and for asking Members of Parliament who are all serious about the implications of such drastic and dramatic legislation, to pass the legislation before we have an opportunity to digest and understand it.

As a last ditch effort, however, this will be referred to a legislative committee and I am hopeful that the members of that committee will see fit to welcome and to incorporate amendments to Bill C-84 in order to make it fair, more equitable and just so that we can start building in a small way, at least, confidence in the tax system of this country. If we fail to do that, if this Bill is not significantly altered in its composition, we will build in more cynicism and convince more and more Canadians that the tax system is unfair and biased. We will drive more and more honest law-abiding Canadian citizens into seeking out more and more ways to avoid paying tax. We will be moving more and more money underground, resulting in fewer and fewer taxes which will mean, as an immediate reaction, the need to raise taxes again for those people which Government can most easily grab from, the ordinary Canadian citizen.

We have a real opportunity here to move and reverse this process. We have an opportunity to move this process to one which would be much more progressive. I look forward to hearing some comments from my learned friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, as to ways and means of improving what has to be not only a silly piece of legislation but an extremely silly process.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I ran in the election campaign of 1979. The Marxist-Leninist candidate who ran against me had signs posted across Mississauga which said: "Make the rich pay". As I listened to my friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I wondered what political Party he belongs to.

Some Hon. Members: The same one.

Mr. Blenkarn: He said something about all of these people who are going to make a fortune buying and selling condominiums in Jamaica. The Hon. Member does not know anyone buying and selling condominiums in Jamaica. The only Canadians I know who ever bought anything in Jamaica lost their shirt.

An Hon. Member: Or their wardrobe.

Mr. Blenkarn: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a hoax. That Party is trying to portray to the people of this country that somehow this Government is going to help people make a fortune buying and selling condominiums. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) says it would be in Florida. Do you know anyone, Mr. Speaker, who has made a fortune buying and selling condominiums in Florida? The whole purpose of the capital gains allowance is to make this country grow and I will be dealing with that later. It is unfortunate that the opposition should spend most of its time dealing with the principles of Bill C-80, now in committee, when not one Member of the opposition was there to deal with the difficult problems of an excise tax Bill. Those Members of the Opposition come into the House and talk about pet food, construction companies, ashphalt problems and steel construction, but they don't even bother going to the committee meetings.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount complains that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall)—who had to leave earlier—left. But what does he do? He makes a speech and runs.

Mr. St. Germain: Shame!

Mr. Blenkarn: Surely we are entitled in this House to some sensible and honest opinion on a very, very complicated matter, that is amendments to the Income Tax Act. It is not the time for rhetoric. It is time to deal sensibly with this Bill. This Bill has two principal thrusts. First, it is the question of fairness. This Bill could easily be categorized as the "loophole closing Bill". Hon. Members will recall the income tax provisions put through with respect to ISIP only two years ago by the Liberal Government. That was a wonderful scheme. The Government made it possible for people to make a pot-full in wheeling and dealing in share options. They cannot do it any more because this Bill closes that loophole. The Liberal Government made it possible for people to wheel and deal in scientific tax credits. There is some provision for research, but those things cannot be dealt with the way they were before. One really has to do the research and after one does the research, and after one does the development and after it is approved, one will get some financial backing from the Government in terms of a tax credit. That is the way it should have been in the first place and that is the way this Bill is changing things, by closing loopholes. We ought to be given the credit for that, but what do we hear from the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount? We hear conversation about pet food which is not even in the Bill. He ought to be ashamed of himself and he ought to be here tonight to stand up after I have finished speaking and ask me questions about pet food, then perhaps we could talk about income tax.

Let me now talk about fairness and the right, if you are forced to move because of your job, to deduct something in terms of the cost of additional interest you may have to pay on a mortgage up to $25,000. That was fairness taken out by a former Liberal Government. That is fairness put back in. We have the right to better RRSP and pension deductions. That is fairness put in to make sure that people can provide for their own retirement. We now have rights for artists. Do you know what the Liberal Government did to our arts community, Mr. Speaker? It assessed artists on an accrual basis. It said their art was worth so much because they wanted to sell it for so much and therefore they must pay tax on it. If you cannot sell your art, too bad! We had artists in British Columbia threatening to burn their work rather than pay the tax. This Bill puts them on a cash basis and we should be congratulated for that. Fairness is what this Bill is about. This Bill eliminates that fancy income splitting rule provided for in past legislation, and that is fairness. I could go on and on about the fairness of this Bill. That is why it is important to this country. However, do we hear anything about that from the other side? Not on your life!

This Bill is also about growth. A great deal has been said by the other side concerning the capital gains tax exemption. I am told this is a terrible rip-off of the national treasury. Well, did our friends on the other side bother doing any elementary research? The other day we all received the 1984 taxation statistics from Revenue Canada. Those statistics show that taxable capital gains amounted to $2.2 billion. From that you have to deduct capital losses which leaves about $2 billion in taxable capital gains. At a 30 per cent tax rate the total tax, both federal and provincial, for that year was about $600 million. That is not just federal tax, that is federal and provincial. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap knows that this Bill gives farmers the right to make $500,000 in capital gains tax free when they want to retire and sell their farm. That is fairness, honesty and decency. He will remember hearing from departmental officials that the total revenue for all Governments, federal and provincial, from corporate and personal capital gains taxes in 1982 was less than $1 billion.

This Bill phases in the capital gains tax exemption over the next few years. It limits the taxable income saving to $250,000. Remember, you do not pay in tax 100 cents of every taxable dollar. If you invested and followed the very strict rules concerning calculation of capital gains, at a 50 per cent tax rate every year, and no one pays at that rate every year of their life, you could conceivably save $125,000 in income taxes. You might. If everything worked well for you. However, very few taxpayers pay that kind of a rate. So what are we really talking about? Very little. What kind of a tax break? Not much. What we are doing, however, is encouraging people to make this country grow. We are encouraging entrepreneurship, the kind of thing we must have in Canada. We are a developing country. We are not a fully-developed nation. We have frontiers everywhere in this country. Every day, even in my City of Mississauga, new streets are being opened up, new buildings built, and new enterprises started. We need people to do that, to employ our kids and the immigrants who come to Canada because we have the greatest country in the world. Well, we will only have the greatest country in the world if we build it.

I want to say to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap who is worrying and crying and saying, let the rich pay, that unfortunately we do not have enough rich in this country.

Mr. Orlikow: We have too many poor.

Mr. Blenkarn: I do not know 32,000 millionaires but the total wealth of those 32,000 millionaires would be required just to cover last year's deficit. All Members of this House put together do not know 32,000 millionaires. We do not have enough wealthy people, but this Bill does not create wealthy people. It creates national wealth. It creates jobs, opportunities, growth, and that is what it is all about.

Members opposite said that because we eliminated RHOSPs, we were stopping people from saving money to buy a home. However, we are forcing that money back into the mainstream of the economy today. That is important because when we put savings back into the economy it can be used for new investment. The same thing applies to investment tax credits. There is an investment tax credit of 60 per cent for investment in Cape Breton. Every day we hear Members on the other side tell us about the terrible problems they have there. We are saying to people that if they want to invest in Cape Breton not only do they get a 60 per cent tax credit, but, by George, if they make a capital gain they will not pay tax on it either. That is the kind of attitude and those are the kinds of incentives we should have because investment will then take place. We believe that. We honestly believe that Canadians will show faith in Canada. It is too bad that Members on the other side of this House have not shown some faith in Canada.

I have to make clear as well that there have been circumstances in the past where the Government of Canada has been a bit heavy-handed in the collection of taxes. It has broken into people's houses without notice. It has taken people's property without a court order. This Bill corrects that situation and brings the Income Tax Act into line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That is an important matter which was raised by Members of this Party while we were in Opposition. Members of this Party travelled from coast to coast in Canada to deal with that issue. We talked to people about the unfairness of the system. That unfairness, that brutal attitude, has been changed, not only in legislation, but in the administration of revenue collection.

I make no bones about it, Sir, but this Bill also increases taxation. It eliminates or reduces the indexation on personal exemptions. In future we will have to absorb the first 3 per cent of inflation. This Bill puts a surtax on high personal income earners.

Mr. Riis: For how long?

Mr. Blenkarn: I am surprised that the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap did not say "shame" at that. This Bill puts a surtax on corporations.

Mr. Riis: For a few weeks.

Mr. Blenkarn: He has not said "shame" on that either. It puts an extra tax on the big banks and big trust companies. We have to do that because we do not have scads of money. He said that this was a desperate grab for money. Well, it is a bit desperate. We do have to do something about a deficit that threatens to destroy the prosperity, life, and future of Canadians. We all have to pay our share. That means that high income earners will have to pay a surtax. That means the banks will have to pay an extra charge. That means the corporations will have to pay more. That means that all of us will have to absorb some of that inflation because we are the cause of inflation. We ask for more than we are prepared to put in. We are going to have to discipline ourselves to ensure that we have no inflation in our economy. Thank goodness, over the past year we wound down on inflation. We are coming to grips with that economic concern but it is not gone yet. This reduction in tax allowance will, to some extent, cut back on inflationary demands.

I commend this Bill to the House. I think it is important, as the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, that the Bill be examined in detail by committee. I think it is important that Members of Parliament go over the Bill clause by clause with the assistance of competent people who understand the complexities of various parts of the Income Tax Act who can help Members understand in detail what we are doing. I hope that this Bill goes to the committee on finance, but if it must go to a legislative committee, so be it. It is an important piece of legislation. It does require detailed work and it does require that Members of the House pay attention to their responsibilities in committee and do some work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) began his speech by telling us that the Marxist-Leninists had slogan to the effect of "make the rich pay". He associated my colleague, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) with that kind of thing because he was critical of the $500,000 capital gains exemption which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposed.

It just happens, Mr. Speaker, that The Financial Post of November 30 came today. On the front page of The Financial Post which is certainly not a very radical or a Marxist-Leninist newspaper, there is an article headlined: "Gains tax exemption hits heavy weather". The article reads in part:

> William Lawlor, national tax partner with Ernst & Whinney, sparked the debate—which has spilled over into hallways and hospitality suites—by saying the exemption "will have a disastrous effect structurally on the tax system."

Who is William Lawlor, Mr. Speaker? He is a former official in the Department of Finance's tax policy division and a technical adviser to the Conservative task force on Revenue Canada in 1984. By quoting from the article I will list for the Member for Mississauga South some of the criticisms and observations about this capital gains exemption which Mr. Lawlor makes. I will put them on the record and perhaps the Hon. Member for Mississauga South can deal with them because they come from a much more respectable and business-oriented point of view. Mr. Lawlor said:

> Its scope is too broad. Although many would support lower taxes from the sale of Canadian common stock, practitioners fail to see how tax-free gains on the disposition of jewellery, summer cottages, or Florida condominiums provide much benefit for the economy.

The article continues:

> The exemption destroys the neutrality which has existed between the taxation of dividends and capital gains.
> Lawlor says this neutrality is vital to the successful integration of corporate and personal income taxes.

It goes on:

> Individuals' tax returns will become much more complicated because of Ottawa's need to monitor the extent to which they have used up their lifetime gains exemption.
> The exemption runs directly counter to the spirit and intent of another Mulroney government proposal, the minimum income tax.
> This, to be launched in 1986, will reduce the impact of various tax shelter deductions claimed by well-off individuals.

I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would deal with some of these criticisms and objections to the $500,000 exemption on capital gains which comes from a source to which I think he would have to pay a great deal of respect.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to read Mr. Lawlor's dissertation, but there is no question that we have some concerns with respect to the neutrality problem. Those concerns are addressed in part in the rather complicated provisions that deal with ensuring that a person does not convert, improperly, what would otherwise be income into a capital gain. I think that if Mr. Lawlor would analyse the Bill rather than just writing articles, he might have a little different attitude. I hope that the Member will be on the committee. Perhaps he can ask the committee to bring Mr. Lawlor forward as a witness because I think we would all like to hear his views.

With respect to the minimum tax matter, that, of course, will be dealt with by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). However, a great deal of the problem in connection with the minimum tax is eliminated by this Bill because, as I pointed out in my first remarks, this Bill materially cuts out the more heinous of the loopholes which existed in the Income Tax Act. Therefore, the effect is very much to reduce the need for minimum tax provisions and, therefore, the number of people who would be caught in a minimum tax position.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the view with respect to jewellery is most interesting. I do not know of anyone who recently purchased jewellery at a jewellery store and was able to make a capital gain on it. Perhaps my friend does. When I am winding up an estate or something of that nature I am usually surprised at how little you can get for the stuff. I do not know of anyone who has made any money on Florida real estate and condominiums, but perhaps Members of the New Democratic Party do. I usually find that Florida real estate has a very high capital cost or depreciation allowance in it. My own experience as a lawyer in winding up affairs for people usually indicated that on the death of a person the real estate had a realizable value of less than one-third what was paid for it. However, it is conceivable that someone may have made a gain. I think we all ought to realize that these humorous suggestions of people making money offshore with all sorts of wheeling and dealing in yachts and the rest make interesting telling, but really are not factual.

Mr. Orlikow: Will the Hon. Member comment on Mr. Lawlor's suggestion with regard to the capital gains proposal that instead of what the Government is doing, it narrow the eligible assets for the exemption to shares of Canadian public and private companies and farmland in Canada which is actively worked by the taxpayer or his family? Would he agree that the 5 per cent surtax on income tax will not bring in any money from the more than 8,000 Canadians who have incomes of $50,000 or more and paid no income tax?

Mr. Blenkarn: My only comment about people who have all this income and pay no tax is that it has always struck me that you pay no tax because you have no taxable income. If we want to make sure that people have taxable income, we amend the Income Tax Act to make sure they are hooked. That is what this Bill does.

With respect to narrowing the base and those things on which capital gains can be realized, the Member did not include small business. He did not include construction activity and property of that nature.

We had very extensive hearings in the Finance Committee with respect to capital gains tax relief on farmland. It is virtually impossible in this country to determine what is farmland and what is land held for some other purpose. I suggest to the Member that we have analysed that. This Bill deals with it effectively.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he can possibly feel comfortable with a Bill whose purpose is clearly to take money from poor families and give it to the rich?

Let me explain. In this Bill and the changes it makes in the child tax credit system, we see the Government has decided that a middle-income family with a salary of $26,000 is now considered as a wealthy family, since the ceiling has been dropped to $23,000. Furthermore, the Government has even de-indexed the child tax credit for the poorest families, while the rich get a capital gains tax exemption of up to half a million.

How can the Hon. Member take pride in this measure?

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: If the Hon. Member cares to read the "blues", perhaps he can read my remarks. Unfortunately, the Member was not here when the remarks were made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Budget measures in Bill C-84 include some which can be readily supported. For example, there is some modest assistance to the disabled, coming from the groundwork of the last Parliament's special committee on the disabled and handicapped. There is also assistance to artists, again based on recommendations of a committee that sat in the last Parliament, the subcommittee on taxation of visual performing artists and writers.

However, these are overshadowed by two poorly conceived and patently unfair Budget measures. The $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption will reward a wealthy minority without any requirement for benefit to the Canadian economy while the deindexation of the personal income tax system will take progressively larger tax bites from low and middle income earners who are least able to afford it.

The capital gains tax exemption is a no-strings gift, with 63 per cent of the benefit going to the 4 per cent of Canadian taxpayers earning over $50,000 a year. The measure is complex and cumbersome to administer and, despite the Government's assumption, there is no evidence that Canadian businesses will benefit since any investment anywhere in the world qualifies for the exemption. There is no requirement that it create one single Canadian job.

On the other hand, the deindexation of the Canadian personal income tax system means a steep tax increase for the majority of Canadians who cannot afford to invest much of anything. Over the next four years, those with an annual income of $15,000 will have a cumulative tax increase of 36 per cent, while those earning $100,000 a year will have an increase of only 4 per cent. Deindexation, coupled with the Budget's move to increase sales and excise taxes on a wide range of consumer goods, puts an inordinately heavy burden on low and middle income earners. They are the very people who would strengthen economic growth through consumer spending were it not for the dampening effect of these inequitable proposals.

What deindexation means is that full indexation of the basic personal tax exemption, set at $4,140 for this year, is to be ended. Instead of keeping pace with inflation, the basic exemption will be indexed only to increases in the consumer price index exceeding 3 per cent. Of course, this effectively amounts to a tax increase because as a person's exemptions decrease, the taxable income increases and he or she is pushed into higher tax brackets. Therefore, a person on a fixed income or whose salary remains virtually unchanged will pay more and more tax due to deindexation of the personal tax exemption.

Deindexation has been described by some as a sneaky and clandestine tax increase. The language may sound harsh, but I fear that it is accurate. The sneaky aspect of this measure comes with the cumulative effect it will have. In its first year, deindexation of the personal tax exemption is expected to yield $570 million. However, by 1990-91, it will extract eight times this amount, or $4.4 billion from taxpayers. This amount will be extracted mainly from low and middle-income earners because the affluent will be able to use the capital gains tax exemption to reduce their personal taxes.

There is a double whammy effect for taxpayers from the deindexation. Since provincial personal income taxes are a percentage of the federal basic income tax, Canadians will end up paying more provincial taxes. For every extra $2 Ottawa collects, the provinces will get $1. The combined federal-provincial personal income tax increase in 1990-91 will exceed $4.8 billion. Deindexation will also have the effect of adding on to the income tax rolls, those people who are not currently paying tax because their incomes are too low. If their incomes manage to keep pace with inflation while exemptions and tax brackets remain stable, they will find themselves having to pay income tax.

For those individuals and families of modest means, the deindexation proposal is harsh. Clearly, the Government knows this. The Budget did not contain any long-term projections of the billions of dollars it expects to get through deindexation, although such forecasting is a normal part of all Budget planning and is normally available in Budget documents. However, it was not available in this Budget.

The Government was not proud of what it was doing and was not prepared to be open with taxpayers about the cost five years from now. However, the insidious effect of deindexation is such that by 1990, a family earning $15,000 a year will pay 36 per cent more in taxes. A family with a total income of $30,000 annually will have by 1990 a 16 per cent increase while the minority with $100,000 annual income will have an increase of only 4 per cent.

Another measure that has been called unfair and sneaky is the elimination of the $50 tax reduction as of the 1986 tax year. This was a tax break that primarily benefited low and middle income earners for whom $50 is not a small sum. Eliminating it will bring the Government $650 million. Singles with annual incomes under $30,000 will pay $50 more tax, while couples with incomes under $40,000 will pay $100 more tax.

In sharp contrast to these measures, which whittle away small amounts from each of the large number of low and middle-income Canadians, is the generous treatment given to the affluent by means of the capital gains tax exemption. The Budget proposes a change in capital gains exemption so as to give individuals a lifetime tax exemption of $500,000 for gains realized after 1984. The Government's stated hope is that this measure will encourage investment in Canadian businesses. There are no requirements to enforce that in the Bill before us.

The capital gains tax exemption will be an important influence on who pays and who benefits from the tax measures in the Budget. Starting at an income level of $50,000, the income tax load begins to diminish considerably because of the capital gains tax exemption. Obviously it is affluent Canadians who are best able to take advantage of this tax break and to plan their affairs so as to take advantage of it. The affluent are a minority in Canada. Based on 1982 statistics, only 4 per cent of Canadians have incomes of $50,000 or more, yet about 63 per cent of the benefits of the capital gains tax exemption can be expected to accrue to this 4 per cent. Capital gains tax exemption is expected to save investors $1.25 billion a year by 1990. It means that Canada will tax its wealthy more lightly than any other industrialized country. Affluent Canadians will be paying for the same increases in sales tax, excise tax and deindexation as low and middle-income earners, but the affluent will have the option of offsetting this many times over through the capital gains tax exemption.

The capital gains tax exemption clearly favours the affluent on the assumption that their investment will contribute to economic growth. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence that this will happen. The capital gains tax exemption is not targeted to Canadian investment. In fact, it is completely open. There is no requirement that it create a single Canadian job. Not only is this proposal unfair to the majority of Canadian taxpayers, but it makes no sense economically.

In the six months since the Budget was introduced, the Government seems to have quailed in the face of criticisms of the proposed capital gains tax exemption. The Government has remained silent on the issue, failing to produce any further information for practitioners in the financial community. The latter says the measure is complex, cumbersome to administer, an interesting observation that reminds us the proposal came from a Government that promised tax simplification.

We will not consolidate economic recovery or promote growth without consumer demand. I suggest that business needs customers more than it needs tax incentives, but prospects for a consumer-led recovery are seriously impaired by this Budget.

The heavy burden imposed by this Budget's tax increases and deindexation will drastically reduce consumer expenditure. Low and middle-income earners, who have to spend most of their disposable income on the necessities of life, will have less to spend because they will be paying more in taxes. These Budget measures are not such as to create a favourable climate for economic growth. Regressive tax and expenditure measures will take billions out of the economy, out of consumers pockets at a time when consumption is key to sustaining economic recovery.

In 1990, Budget measures will extract over $4 billion in income tax, over $2.6 billion in sales and excise taxes. The Government appears to be banking heavily on a rise in confidence to spur economic growth yet the Budget measures do little to help and a great deal to hurt confidence.

Taxpayers were promised a tough but fair Budget. If a family of four with a $20,000 income loses over $900 by 1990 due to the many taxes and reduced inflation protection imposed by this Budget, that is tough for families, but is it fair? If three-quarters of a million Canadians fall below the poverty line by 1990, that is tough for disadvantaged Canadians, but is it fair?

It is no wonder that confidence is wanting when the Government promised fairness and then proceeds to implement a barrage of new taxes, increasing taxes while stripping protection against inflation from low and middle-income earners, the very people who would otherwise because of their large number be at the forefront of a consumer-led recovery.

The prospects for economic growth out of this Budget are not encouraging. This is bad news for the unemployed who have been waiting a long time for the jobs, jobs, jobs to materialize. There has been some job creation in the last year, but mainly part-time jobs without standard pay and benefits. There has not been a concomitant increase in permanent full-time jobs. What are the unemployed to make of a budget that ignores them completely and, which we are told, is meant to reward achievement not subsidize effort?

For all those who are victims of this Budget, low and middle-income earners and families, pensioners, people hoping to purchase homes, consumers, the unemployed for all those who may be striving or on their way to achieving what they want from life, this Budget is saying: "There are no breaks for you. We will reward the well-to-do". Most of the population which is not in any such privileged position will pay the price. While we are discussing Budget measures in this Bill here in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the provincial Finance Ministers are preparing to start meetings in Halifax tomorrow to deal with the Government of Canada's plan to renegotiate Established Programs Financing and some transfer payments.

The May Budget papers indicate that the Minister of Finance is looking for $2 billion in savings in 1990 to 1991. That figure hides greater cuts. Cutting back on support for health and post-secondary education to achieve the $2 billion target in 1990 means the Government also makes cuts in the intervening years, and the reduction over five years could be nearer $6 billion. The Government was elected on a promise that it would create jobs. Thousands of jobs, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said.

Mr. Mazankowski: Three hundred and thirty-three thousand, it is.

Miss Nicholson: But the best way to stay employed is still via education. In 1984, the unemployment rate for the entire labour force, that is everyone from age 15 to 63 either working or actively seeking work was 11.3 per cent. However, it was 5.3 per cent for university graduates. Unemployment rates today for those without post-secondary education are twice as high as for those with university degrees or community college diplomas. This is most noticeable among the young. As people grow older, sometimes experience is equated with post-secondary education. However, for the young, where unemployment is highest, there is a very definite correlation between education and escaping the worst ravages of unemployment. Yet, the Government proposes to reduce funds for post-secondary education at that same time as it takes money out of the hands of low and middle-income families. This Budget makes it harder for parents and students alike to meet their goals of a better education and better job opportunities.

The Government says that it is focusing on rewarding achievement, but it is making achievement more difficult to come by.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I have a lot of respect for the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). I have worked with her on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, but I find it very surprising that she would rise in the House today and not assume some of the responsibility for what is being cast on Canadians now. It was her Party and the group with which she participated that led to the problems and to the action we have had to take.

She spoke about increasing taxes. I can assure the House and all Canadians that the last thing in the world we would want to do is raise taxes if we had an alternative. However, that Government, that group of individuals, that Liberal Party, went on a $200 billion spending binge at the expense of Canadians. That is what we are facing today. It is a sorry situation.

Also she talked about jobs and said that we were elected on the promise to create jobs. We have created jobs. We have created 33,000 jobs for Canadians. We intend to create thousands more and we will. Canadians have confidence in the Government of Canada which they did not have under the previous Liberal administration. Her Government, through the national energy policy, virtually devastated western Canada, the part of Canada which I represent. We have changed that national energy policy.

She also spoke about the taxation that came about because of the regressive steps they took when in Government, such as providing massive loopholes under SRTCs and PIP grants under the national energy policy.

I have only one question. How can the Hon. Member possibly stand in the House and be critical when we are trying to service the debt which was incurred on behalf of every Canadian by her administration? I repeat that I have respect and know she was not part of the Cabinet at that particular time. However, she was part of that Government and she must assume responsibility. I would like to have her reaction as to how she expects us as Canadians to repay that $200 billion debt incurred under her administration?

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's questions, because I know that he asks them not out of the desire to have a partisan advantage but out of genuine conviction. There are different points of view. My point of view and my explanation of the issues which he mentioned will be quite different from his, but it is a matter of two honestly held points of view.

The Hon. Member said that he considered the Liberal Government to be a spendthrift Government, in effect. As I see it, the last Liberal Government helped to protect Canada by reasonably prudent measures against the effects of the most damaging world-wide recession which had been known in many years. The increase in the deficit was primarily a result of the recession. It was primarily loss of revenue because of high unemployment, loss of people's personal income tax, loss of corporate taxes when business was in trouble, and of course the enormous increase in unemployment insurance. This harrowing recession was one the whole world went through. In fact, Canada survived it better than many other countries.

On the question of employment, the Hon. Member pointed to the number of jobs which are now being created. Yes, indeed, as we are coming out of recession more jobs are being created. However, I repeat that I find it worrisome that the increase in jobs is in part-time jobs, not in full-time jobs. In Ontario alone, in the last year, about 10,000 jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector. I do not point the finger at former Governments or present Governments for that, but it is an issue which affects us all as Canadians. It is part of the very rapid change in the world with which we have to deal.

Likewise with the NEP, it is a program about which people feel very strongly. I am sure we will never agree on that. However, I will say that there were certain advantages to the NEP, which I think will become more apparent over time. The failure of the NEP was a result of the collapse in world demand and world prices. The NEP had been postulated on the assumption that demand and prices for oil would remain high. The Hon. Member is quite right if he says that the last liberal Government did not anticipate a collapse in both demand and prices. No one else read it very well. Many other countries and many private sector forecasters did not read it right either.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments relating to proverty and the increase in poverty. A report was released just a few weeks ago on poverty which pointed a finger at the causes of the increase in poverty being unemployment, and that the unemployment created during the regime of the last Government, of which the Hon. Member was a supporter, was increased and exacerbated as a result of its high interest rate policy. In fact, the report indicated that the recession in Canada was made much worse as a result of the high interest rate policy, which the report described as an improper, incorrect and wrong policy, than it was in other parts of the world.

The Hon. Member referred to the fact that there was a world-wide recession and that Canada survived it much better than did other countries. However, according to the report on poverty, the main cause of poverty was unemployment, unemployment which was increased by the iniquitously high interest rate policy of the Liberal Government. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that those interest rates reached over 20 per cent. It was as a result of that policy that there was the increase in poverty in Canada. As the Hon. Member also mentioned, we are now beginning to come out of the recession as a result of the policies of the present Government. As a result of those policies, we are seeing a fall in unemployment and interest rates. All of that will have the effect of decreasing poverty in Canada. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on those facts, bearing in mind the recent report on which she relied when she indicated that poverty was increasing.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I would differ with the Hon. Member when he says the previous Government had a high interest rate policy. I would say that there were high interest rates; it was not a matter of a deliberate policy.

I can certainly remember that while many people recommended that Canada have an independent interest rate policy, I never heard that suggestion from members of the Hon. Member's Party. The argument that was always made was that we could not separate our economy from that of the United States, and that if we paid lower interest rates than the Americans we would see a massive outflow of capital. That, I believe, was also the position taken by the brief Conservative administration of 1979.

High interest rates were set in the United States and were followed in this country. While there were certainly, from time to time, suggestions that Canada could somehow insulate itself against the U.S. by having a separate policy for interest rates, I did not hear those suggestions being taken very seriously.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in connection with Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

This is the main Bill being brought forward by the Government to implement the provisions of the Budget brought down on May 23 of this year. There have been other Bills presented to the House already and there will be further Bills presented to the House. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we have already dealt with an excise tax Bill, a Bill which made changes in the sales taxes and in the taxes on alcohol and tobacco among other things. Many of the comments we have heard this afternoon have been relevant to the excise tax Bill rather than to the Bill to amend the Income Tax Act which is before us this afternoon.

In addition to those two Bills, the family allowance Bill provided for changes to the family allowance system. That, too, was brought forward to help implement the Budget provisions. The family allowance Bill was one part of a three-part package of changes referred to in the Budget affecting family benefits.

I was rather pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicate that part of today's Bill dealt with changes to the family benefit package. That is the first time I have heard any Hon. Member from the opposition side indicate that there were other parts of the family benefit package other than the family allowance Bill which was before the House earlier and will be coming back shortly for third reading.

Bill C-84 contains the other two parts of the family allowance package. This Bill provides for the increase in the Child Tax Credits. It will increase the current 1985 base of $384 per year to $454 per year in 1986, $489 per year in 1987 and $524 per year in 1988. All of those increases to the Child Tax Credit provision apply to people who earn incomes under $23,500 per year and, of course, the increases are reduced as one's income climbs.

The third part of this over-all package of family benefit changes is also contained in this Bill, and that is the child tax exemption. This Bill reduces the child tax exemptions in the Income Tax Act. They will stay constant in 1985-86 at $710; in 1987 they will go down to $560 and in 1988 they will go down to $470 for families with children under the age of 18.

The combined effect of the changes to the family allowance system, the changes in the Child Tax Credit and the changes in the child tax exemptions under the Income Tax Act will be that lower income families will receive higher family benefits than families with higher incomes. That is a change from the situation as it exists right now. At this time, a family with an income of $30,000 per year gets more benefits under the three-part family benefit package than a family earning only $10,000 per year. In fact, this Bill will ensure that lower-income families will receive more benefits than higher income families. That is one of the great benefits of this Bill, a benefit to which our friends in the Opposition have not referred. They have not referred to it because this Bill actually provides greater fairness for lower-income families than was the case under the legislation in effect under the former Government.

The second aspect of this Bill on which I would like to comment is its fairness to middle-income earners. I notice that members of the Opposition seem to be getting restless. I can understand their restlessness. They are upset that they did not introduce changes like this.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell the whole story.

Mr. Redway: They are very jealous that these changes that will create more fairness for lower-income families and middle-income families were not introduced by them long ago.

Middle-income earning families are interested in seeing a general fairness in our tax system. They are interested in seeing an elimination of the tax loopholes about which the NDP like to talk. In fact, this Bill does just that. A vast number of those loopholes are being done away with by this Bill. One such loophole is the Investment Tax Credit. Among other things, that loophole provides for the carrying forward and carrying back of business losses from other years. The provision in this Bill will limit and restrict the carry-over provisions of those business losses. That provision plugs one of the loopholes to which members of the Opposition have referred.

There now exist tax shelters for the purchase of yachts and for the purchase of or investment in hotels. There are tax shelters for investment in recreational vehicles. All of these are being eliminated under this particular Bill. These are matters which I am sure members of the Opposition are envious of and wished they had thought of and eliminated when they were in power.

Next, there is the question of income splitting. This is a practice which has been engaged in for many, many years whereby high income families lend money, either at no interest or at low interest rates, to other members of their families in order to get around the attribution rules in the Income Tax Act. If they were to give that money away, or if they were to give investments away, the income produced from that money and those investments would be taxable in the hands of the person who gave the money or investments away. However, the courts have held that while one cannot get around the income tax attribution rules by giving away money and investments, one can get around them by loaning the money either interest-free or with a low interest rate. This Bill plugs that loophole as well. There is another loophole which members of the Opposition wished they had plugged. They had 20 years to do it and they did not.

Next, there are increases in taxation on high income people. In fact, there is provision for a surtax of 5 per cent on people with tax payable from $6,000 to $15,000. That impacts on people with an over-all income of about $40,000.

In addition to that, there is a 10 per cent surtax on those income earners who have an income tax payable of $15,000 or more. This measure impacts on people with incomes in excess of $60,000. This is something else which I am sure members of the Opposition wished they had put into effect while they were in government.

In addition, there are further tax increases on those who have not been paying their fair share. In fact, there is a surtax on corporations. It is a 5 per cent surtax on federal income tax payable to be effective in the coming year under the provisions of this legislation. This additional tax will impact on some 60,000 corporations.

In addition, there is another tax, a capital tax on larger financial institutions. There is a 1 per cent capital tax on institutions, banks and similar institutions with capital in excess of $300 million.

There are a variety of new special taxes on high income people and high income corporations which will generate new taxes while at the same creating an element of fairness. This is an element which was lacking under the tax provisions put in place by the former Government, tax provisions which have been in place for some 20 years.

In addition, there is another aspect of the Bill which has been greatly criticized by members of the Opposition for some reason or another. I refer to the provisions in the Bill which are aimed at trying to stimulate economic growth and job creation in the country. The particular one of greater interest is the one concerning the capital gains tax exemption. I am referring to the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption. We have heard a great deal of criticism with respect to this measure from members of the Opposition. However, they were present when the Finance Committee of the House examined this piece of legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). For questions?

Mr. Prud'homme: I could raise a point of order under Standing Order 6, but I will refrain, for the very simple reason that I think some serious consideration is necessary, and I am referring to parliamentary reform, because I think all this is really getting out of hand. I am not referring to my hon. friend, obviously, but really, the fact that we are still in the House at 6:55 p.m. as a result of a New Standing Order . . . I think that when we ask to have the Standing Orders of the House "changed back", Hon. Members will realize that this evening we could have abused the Standing Orders, which of course we will not do, but I think this should serve as fair warning for the future!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for York East.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the Hon. Member's point of order, I have heard a great deal of criticism this afternoon with respect to the provisions dealing with the capital gains tax exemption. These provisions are specifically aimed at stimulating the economy and creating jobs. We have heard from members of the Opposition from time to time that they believe one way we can stimulate the economy is through tax cuts. Here is a tax cut which we feel confident will generate a great many jobs. However, for some reason or other, members of the Opposition continue to criticize this provision, probably because they wish that they had implemented it while they were in Government.

Another provision of the Bill aimed at creating jobs is the provision allowing pension funds to invest in small businesses. This, combined with the capital gains tax exemption, is aimed at stimulating the economy and creating jobs. That is exactly what they will do.

Of course, there are many other aspects of Government policy, Government agreements and Government legislation which have been introduced to stimulate the economy, measures such as the Atlantic Accord, the Western Accord and the Canadian Jobs Strategy. All of these provisions were aimed at stimulating the economy. They go hand-in-hand with the provisions of the Bill, provisions such as the capital gains tax exemption. These provisions will allow pension funds to invest in small businesses.

All in all, there are three very beneficial provisions in this legislation to which members of the Opposition have not referred at all this afternoon. This Bill is an Income Tax Act amendment. However, we all know that there are provisions in the Bill which will increase taxes. Nobody likes to see taxes increase—not you, Mr. Speaker, and not any Member of the House. Certainly, no one across the country likes to see taxes increased.

However, at the same time, Canadians are realists. They realize that when there is a deficit of some $35 billion in the current fiscal year someone has to pay for it. As well, they realize that if they are earning 65 cents a week and they spend $1 a week they have to go out and borrow the extra 35 cents. When they realize that part of that 35 cents, in fact about 23 cents, is being spent to pay for the interest on money they have borrowed in order to spend that extra $1 each week they realize that cannot go on for very long. It cannot go on for long in their own households, just as it cannot go on for long in the country. So they are realistic enough to know that tax increases provided for in this Bill will benefit them, their children and their grandchildren, whether they like and enjoy the tax increases or not. They do not, and we understand that.

The Bill really has three provisions, as far as I am concerned, which the people of Canada are looking for in a Bill dealing with income tax. The first is the provision of fairness to low income earners. I am referring to the provisions relating to family benefits, changes to the child tax credits, changes to child tax exemptions under the Income Tax Act and changes to the Family Allowance Act. All of these changes create more fairness for low income people in the country.

They are looking as well for fairness for middle income people. They want to make sure that there is going to be a fair tax system in place with no loophole from which other people can benefit and they cannot. This Bill does just that. It closes up some of those tax loopholes, eliminating the whole question of income splitting. They are also looking forward to the minimum tax law provisions which we expect to have in about two weeks' time. This Bill does provide fairness to middle income families. It does create a fairer tax system than we have had before.

Finally, Canadians are looking for an Income Tax Act which will help to stimulate the economy and create jobs, and that also is right here in this Bill. This Bill contains the three main features for which Canadians are looking and I hope that the House will consider it quickly and pass it before the Christmas break.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member attended a number of the Committee's sessions, I would like to ask him two questions, one about the deficit and the other about changes in the income support program for families with children.

As far as the deficit is concerned, I imagine everyone is in favour of reducing the deficit but we do not all agree on how it should be done. As for the example the Hon. Member gave of someone who has only 65 cents and spends a dollar, how can the Hon. Member justify his Government's spending one billion dollars to bail out the rich who have $60,000 or more in their accounts?

How can the Hon. Member justify the two billion dollars' worth of income tax exemptions, and so forth, granted to the oil multinationals? How can the Hon. Member justify wasting $56 million just to change the colour of our military uniforms? How can the Hon. Member justify spending $100 million a year, $400 million to send an additional 1,000 soldiers to Lahr in Germany? Instead of spending their salaries in Canada, in Quebec or in one of the other provinces, these soldiers are going to spend their money in Europe and automatically create jobs. If we must reduce the deficit, how can the Hon. Member approve his Government's granting $800 million worth of tax shelters to the Reichmann brothers in the Gulf deal?

Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is honest and that he is an administrator, so as an administrator, how can he tolerate a situation where we have a high deficit and his Government is wasting taxpayers' money in such a dumb and dishonest fashion?

My second question was about changes in income support for families with children. The Hon. Member will recall that the figures I am about to quote were released by the Department of National Health and Welfare and have been confirmed. The figures clearly show that the Government will recover $15 million at the expense of families with children in 1985-86 alone, and $80 million in 1986-87—

An Hon. Member: Enough, enough!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, would you call the Hon. Member to order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That will not be necessary since it is 7:04 p.m., and this House therefore stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.04 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, November 27, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall, (for the Minister of Finance), that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: At the time of adjournment last night there were six minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr Redway). The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) had the floor and had finished a comment. Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for York East in response.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, at yesterday's adjournment the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) had put to me two questions, one concerning the deficit and one concerning the possible reduction in social expenditures. I would like to start off by commenting with respect to his question concerning the deficit.

He raised a number of issues with respect to the deficit, including the banks, the remission of taxes for Dome, the question of uniforms for the Armed Forces, the question of additional funds for our NATO forces in Europe, and the question of the Olympia & York-Gulf Oil transaction. The Opposition cannot have it both ways on the question of the deficit, but unfortunately it seems to want to have it both ways. Concerning the bank situation, the Hon. Member is aware that not only were there funds from large corporations and banks in the CCB and Northland Banks, but there were also millions and millions of dollars on deposit from pension funds such as the Canadian National Railways pension fund and the Air Canada pension fund. Money belonging to credit unions, charities and trade unions, with which the Hon. Member has been associated in the past, were and are also on deposit in the two banks concerned. Had the Government failed to come to the assistance of these depositors we would have heard from the Hon. Member and his associates a great clamour that the Government was completely unsympathetic and lacking in compassion, that it was abandoning poor depositors and pensioners and workers who had their life savings tied up in these banks. It is in this respect that the Opposition has been trying to have it both ways.

As far as the question of uniforms is concerned, the uniforms of the Armed Forces have to be replaced in any event, so it is clear that there would be expenditures in this regard one way or another as long as we have Armed Forces. Sometimes one wonders if the Opposition, when it was the Government, wanted to have any Armed Forces at all in this country. So far as the additional expenditures on our forces in NATO are concerned, that of course is in connection with an international commitment which Canada made to the other NATO countries. This Government has been living up to that when the former Government did not.

As far as the question of tax remissions is concerned, that of course was done in conjunction with commitments made by the Hon. Member's Party when it was the Government of this country. As far as any interpretation of the Income Tax Act in connection with the Reichmann and Gulf deal is concerned, that, too, is as a result of the laws with respect to the Income Tax Act which were put in place by the former Government.

In all of these cases it seems to me that the Opposition is trying to have it both ways. It is trying to blame the Government for all of these things, but if the Government had taken exactly the opposite position, the Opposition would still be blaming the Government, only for different reasons. We would still be hearing long and loud complaints.

With regard to the issue of income support for families, the Hon. Member is well aware that the combination of these amendments to the Income Tax Act and the amendments which were made to the Family Allowances Act is increasing benefits for lower income families and decreasing benefits for higher income families.

With regard to over-all expenditures, the Hon. Member is well aware that total expenditures in the social spending envelope for family allowances, child tax credits, pensions, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and spouse's allowances is going up and will continue to go up. In fact, more money is being spent this year than has been spent in the past in the social spending envelope and that trend will continue.

The Hon. Member is well aware that since the Government took office in September of 1984 the programs in this area have been increased. In fact, we introduced the spouse's allowance. My friend was very critical of the spouse's allowance because it did not go far enough. He cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. The Government is acting responsibly in light of the Budget to help lower income families in the country and to ensure that our income tax laws are fairer for all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to make a short reply.

Mr. Malépart: Just a short question, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member says we cannot have it both ways, but neither can he. He referred to legislation that allowed the Reichmann brothers to have their $800 million, but it was his Government that promised changes would be made. Why does it respect a previous commitment by the Liberals which gives the rich . . . and why does it ignore legislation passed by the Liberals that gave poor and low and middle income families . . .

I think the Hon. Member will have to admit there is a contradiction here. And what about our commitments to NATO? This Government made commitments to Canadians, and it would have been better if the Government had met those commitments first, and then, when the economy improves, consider meeting its commitments to NATO.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, that is exactly what the Bill is doing. It is helping lower income Canadians.

Mr. Gauthier: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I do not like to intervene, but there were six minutes left in the Member's time for questions and comments. You told the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that he could only make a short response because of the shortness of time. You cannot now allow the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) to ask other questions or make other comments.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in the preamble to his comments the Hon. Member indicated that he wanted to ask me a further question and I was responding to that question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. We are starting a wonderful day here, this Thursday, November 28. I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has said. We started this day with six minutes remaining in the time of the Hon. Member for questions and comments.

Mr. Gauthier: It's over now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York East did continue a little longer than I had expected him to, but I always feel that there should be a rebuttal by the Hon. Member. I do not intend to allow the Hon. Member for York East to carry on. I am sure that we can now say that questions and comments are terminated. I will recognize the next speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I am very disappointed, and I am sure all Members of this House who speak to this Bill have the same feeling.

This Bill follows a series of other Bills presented by the Government which clearly shows that the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is aimed at helping rich families in Canada, at reducing the incomes of middle and low income families and at doing nothing at all for the poorest families.

I see the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), a Minister without portfolio, who is reacting—

Mr. Desrosiers: More insults—

Mr. Malépart: —and my hon. friend from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) who also has a few comments to make. Mr. Speaker, if they would take the trouble to look at the consequences of the proposed changes to the tax system for the child tax credit and the tax advantages provided to the rich under this legislation, they might change their tune, and rise in the House to—I am not saying to criticize the Government, I would not go that far—but to ask their Government to make certain improvements and thus truly defend the interests of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, we remember the commitments the Prime Minister made in Quebec during the election campaign. In Sherbrooke it seems the Prime Minister made more promises he did not intend to keep than anywhere else. Remember his promise to senior citizens about de-indexation, his promise to reinstate full indexation of Old Age Security pensions. Remember what was said by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister and all Progressive Conservative Members here in the House, when the Minister decided to de-index Old Age Security pensions. All Conservative Members in the House said it was a good decision. And remember their about-face!

I see the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, who wants me to mention the fact that he disagreed with his Government on this decision, and the Hon. Member for Abitibi, not the one here in the House but the other one, the really good Member from that area, also stood up for the interests of senior citizens at the time, and the Prime Minister was obliged to admit he had made a very serious mistake. The words Mrs.

Solange Denis spoke to the Prime Minister will go down in history: "You cheated us, Charlie Brown!"

Mr. Speaker, that was the first blunder by this Prime Minister and this Government.

The next attack came in another Bill related to the one now before the House. It was when the Government decided to take advantage of the illnesses of Canadians to reduce its deficit and levied a 10 per cent tax on 5,000 types of medication, 5,000 products that are not luxury items but essential to the survival of many Canadians and to help alleviate pain.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, as was the case with our senior citizens, the Liberals got to work. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) asked his team to join patients' rights associations in putting pressure on the Government, on the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, in the absence of such pressure or action on the part of the Progressive Conservative Members, to make the Government backtrack on this decision and at least consider . . . and withdraw its 10 per cent tax in the case of the seriously ill, those suffering from diabetes and heart or respiratory disease.

At the time we also made representations on behalf of people suffering from arthritis-related illnesses and other conditions. Mr. Speaker, all the Government Members were saying: Everybody agrees this Budget is perfect. Again they lost face when the Minister of Finance, since this time the Prime Minister was too ashamed to admit he had been wrong, the Minister of Finance,—before the House resumed sitting because he knew perfectly well what he could expect if he did not backtrack in the case of diabetics,—again admitted it was a mistake, and that unfortunately Government Members were not defending the interests of the general public. Mr. Speaker, they are entitled to defend the interests of the wealthy. It is their right. This is what they have decided to do; they have made their choice. As for us, Liberals, we have decided to defend the rights of all Canadians, as the Leader of the Official Opposition and his Liberal team have clearly shown. The Minister of Finance had to admit that he was reversing his stand on this issue also. When all the Conservative Members had stated in their newsletters that senior citizens accepted deindexation and that the sick were willing to pay a 10 per cent tax and when these mailers had been distributed in Quebec constituencies, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance suddenly backed down.

Mr. Speaker, the other Member for Abitibi has defended senior citizens. He is the one Conservative who does represent the region well and we should pay tribute to him.

As concerns the 10 per cent tax, the Prime Minister and the Government have backed down on about 20 products out of a total of 5,000. People with arthritis have to pay an additional 10 per cent in Canada. At this time of year, people have colds, and most of you here have had young children and know that children get frostbite. You need ointments to relieve the pain, but the Government has decided to impose a 10 per cent tax on these items. The colder it gets, the more Canadian men and women will get colds. The Government will collect 10 per cent on all cold remedies, and will then say that it is a humane government. As for me, Mr. Speaker, I say what the Canadian public as a whole thinks it is a heartless Government.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is really the limit. It takes the cake. The concept of giving everything to the wealthy is now sanctioned. Let us look at the capital gains tax exemption. What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? We all know from experience that people who are eligible for the capital gains tax exemption already have assets and money to buy something. Obviously, the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians will not be the ones to have access to the capital gains tax exemption. Neither will the millions of senior citizens who receive the Old Age Security pension. They will be entitled to it, but they do not have the money. Low and middle income families who are entitled to the tax credit will not use the capital gains tax exemption either. This provision will help a small gang of Conservatives. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker. The Government says that this will create jobs. Nonsense! What this means is that a wealthy Canadian who bought, supposedly as a business expense which would be tax deductible, a cottage in the Eastern Townships, where the Prime Minister made his many promises and misled the population, which cottage was worth $50,000 five years ago and is now worth $100,000, now decides to retire and to sell this cottage for $100,000. He will make a substantial profit. He then takes this money, since he has retired, and buys a condominium in Florida. With the blessing of this Conservative government and thanks to taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, this Canadian will have saved enormous amounts to retire in Florida, and he will spend his money and create jobs in Florida, without creating a single job in Quebec and in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government had implemented this capital gains tax exemption for our farmers, or for those who sell something and buy back something else to create jobs in Canada, I would have applauded its action. It would have been a good decision. The Conservatives said: We are for freedom, we are for the freedom of businessmen; businessmen should be able to do what they want.

However, when it comes to the social programs aimed at families, namely the child tax credit and family allowances, the Government says that families are getting too much.

The Conservative Member who spoke before me said so. It is a fact that there have been cutbacks. He cannot deny it as these are the Department's own figures which were quoted in committee. It is true that an amount of $15 million has been cut from family allowances. This has been established. It is also true that, next year, the cuts will amount to $80 million and that they will have reached $140 million in 1987-88, and so on up to $1 billion, just for family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, the small cheque that Canadian mothers receive every month is very much needed, even in well off families. The husband can be rich, but so conservative and so much the ruler of the household that he keeps all the money and goes out on his own, while his wife must make do with a very small budget and the family allowances to clothe the children. This happens in Canada, we should not be afraid to say it. We should not be ashamed of the truth.

Some say: "These people are getting too much, we should lower their benefits", or "This is not going to create employment, we should not give money to these people". It is better to give to the rich. True enough, conservatives have the right to defend the rich. It is their right. However, come the next elections, voters will remember it. I don't think that there is a single riding where rich people outnumber middle income Canadians, and these are the ones who will remember.

I already experienced a Government which had a tremendous majority, similar to your 211 seats. It was not long before that party moved to the other side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the child tax credit. Here is another initiative for the rich. The conservatives say: "We have to let them plan for a better retirement by giving them some tax breaks immediately. If we want the guy who makes $100,000 or $150,000 a year to prepare for a comfortable retirement, we have to raise the ceiling on contributions so that he can invest for his old age. Conservatives have to plan ahead, because someone who is used to live in luxury must, when he or she retires, be able to continue to afford a yatch, a cottage, trips to Florida or California, that is to say keep his or her status, to quote the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). For these people, status is very important, and it has to be planned for. That is why we give them more tax breaks.

Naturally, these breaks are given to everybody, but when you have to pay the rent, buy the food, educate the children, and so on, on $20,000 a year, even if the Government lets you save for your retirement, you have nothing left to save at the end of the month. Consequently, you cannot plan your retirement.

But that is nothing to worry about as far as the Conservatives are concerned. Perhaps a good many Conservative Members do not have any idea what the family income tax credit is all about, but it relates to the income of two people, say two people each earning $15,000 a year, which amounts to $30,000 all told. Anyone earning $15,000 a year is not wealthy. It has to be the employee and not the boss, and more often than not he is being exploited.

Mr. Speaker, the Government realizes that a man and his wife who each get $15,000 a year are left with $26,000 after taxes. Well, $26,000 a year is a lot of money, too much money: how can lowly workers possibly earn that much in a year? It is dangerous because they might end up having tastes similar to those of rich people.

The Liberal Government used to allow tax credits on incomes up to $26,000, but the Conservatives think it is way too much, a real scandal, so they plan to cut it down because workers might begin to behave as if they were the employer. So they reduce the limit to $23,000 a year.

The result of all this, Mr. Speaker, is that a family whose income was $26,000 last year and was entitled to the full child tax credit will now get $125 less for each child. The Conservative Government, with the unflinching support of all its members, has decided that any worker who earns $26,000 a year is rich enough. He does not have to worry about capital gains, he is not in that league. He is told the exemption is for him, but there is nothing he can do, there is no way he can save that much to plan for retirement. So there is no problem.

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of impact this Bill will have. One has to look at it objectively and carefully. That is what we find, the consequences of the whole Conservative philosophy.

Mr. Speaker, there is another question we have to ask ourselves, and it may have to do with the misjudgement of all Governments, no matter what their political persuasion is. Is that a normal situation? Well, the Progressive Conservatives begin to panic. Obviously the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has to be in on this: it is not about to champion the cause of poor Canadians. No, Sir! Those people are paid by the rich, so they make a flat statement: Unemployment insurance is costing a bundle, Mr. Speaker, it does not make sense!

Mr. Speaker, we have to put up with the kind of Prime Minister we have—thank God, he is not my Prime Minister, I never voted for that man—a Prime Minister who has fooled the people and said in his wisdom that indeed jobless Canadians draw $162 a week in unemployment benefits, what a scandal, perhaps that is too much, let us appoint a committee. We will appoint a chairman at $1,000 a day and a few members at $500 a day each to find out whether $162 unemployment insurance benefits might not be too much.

They are prepared to pay someone $1,000 a day to study the situation, no sweat. An economist to boot, a fortune teller, no less. Well now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Forget, the man who was appointed, may be a close friend, but it is the same thing in every field. What the Conservatives are doing is beyond the limits of common sense. Does it make any sense that somebody should be paid $1,000 a day to find out whether $162 weekly unemployment insurance benefits might be overly generous? And now they are going to push this through with their Conservative majority. Well, Mr. Speaker, we will have something to say about that. Then there will be someone to say: Why not round off the figure taking off $2—imagine the saving, $2 multiplied by so much—and come with a nice round figure of $160. That is still more than enough. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of impact this budget has.

Let's talk about the deficit. The Hon. Member is blaming everything on us. He seems to forget that the election is over, that people do not want to hear about what happened in the past. Instead, they want to assess what the Conservatives are doing right now because they made so many great promises they did not keep. No wonder the Prime Minister is losing all credibility according to the opinion polls. This Government has lost all credibility. Mr. Speaker, hang in a little bit more. We still have three more years to go. We don't want to have an election right away, we would win. Patience! We want people to see the true colours of this Government.

About the deficit, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and all the Conservative members say that it's outrageous. However, the first thing they do, their first commitment, the first promise they keep, is to spend $56 million to change the colour of army uniforms. Not because soldiers needed new pants, Mr. Speaker, they had some of a different colour. It's only because the Prime Minister wanted to see the army in blue. All soldiers were already issued uniforms. What they wanted was a pay increase, Mr. Speaker, not blue pants. In Quebec, we already had the story of Vautrin's pants. Now, Mulroney will be tagged with the blue pants for the Army. This will go down in history.

Ms. Copps: He's got no pants himself.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I did not say "Mulroney". I said "le gouvernement "mal runné"".

• (1130)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been here for a few years. He must realize that it is the Right Hon. Prime Minister and not Mr. "Whoever".

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a distinction. I often say in French that the Government is "mal runné". It does not mean "Mulroney" but "badly run". Right. I simply wanted to make the point that in English, "mal runné" means "badly run". That is the French equivalent.

To return to the deficit, Mr. Speaker, the Government . . . Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Members are starting to wake up. It took a little time, but they are starting to wake up. There, the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) is waking up. In any case—

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the deficit is a very serious matter and the Canadian people . . . First of all, the Government spent $56 million to provide the military with uniforms of a different color.

And second, because he is a proud man, the Prime Minister had to spend $400 million more to send 1,000 more soldiers to Europe. Our soldiers are going to spend their pay in Germany. We know that there are various establishments over there where they can spend their money. So they will help strenghten the German economy. They are certainly not going to help the Quebec or Canadian economy where they used to be stationed.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the Government is saying: I have to fulfill my commitments. But its commitments to the Canadian people, do they not count? It could have waited until the economy had improved before sending them over. There is not going to be a war tomorrow. Although the Russians and the Americans are getting along fine, we are sending 1,000 soldiers more—

As I see that my time is about to expire, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude on this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The debate is over. Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a very good speech and dealt with all the problems, but there is another phenomenon of the budget which I should like to address. A few days or weeks ago, a Deputy Minister of Finance had a private meeting with business people of the Progressive Conservative persuasion who paid $1,000 each—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member please address the Chair?

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member if he could enlighten us about this double standard of the Government, because the Deputy Prime Minister stated yesterday in the House that he did not see anything wrong with a Deputy Minister of Finance meeting business people of the Progressive Conservative persuasion who had paid $1,000 to discuss budgetary issues, although he was not willing to meet mothers and heads of single families, nor groups of workers from Quebec. He was not willing to meet them—

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the point which the Hon. Member is trying to make is in any way connected to the remarks which the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has made. I therefore question its relevancy.

Ms. Copps: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker. The point of the matter is to ask—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) will let me recognize her. I am trying to get the relevancy here myself. I would ask the Hon. Member again to address the Chair please and I would ask her to make a simple comment and then ask a simple question so that there can be time for two or three other people to ask questions.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, does the Member not believe it is an absolute double standard, absolute hypocrisy, on the part of this Government to be prepared to turn a blind eye to a Deputy Minister of Finance having a private meeting with business people of the Progessive Conservative persuasion who paid $1,000 to the Progressive Conservative Party? Why will he have a meeting with them and not have a meeting with the workers from the east end of Montreal who are losing their jobs by the thousands? Does he not believe that that is hypocrisy?

Mr. Beatty: That is a tough and searching question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A short reply, please.

• (1140)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I think that the question is perfectly relevant, because I have established in my remarks that ... and I blame neither the Progressive Conservative Party Members nor the Prime Minister for deciding to defend the wealthy, but the demonstration was made in Montreal ... it was a meeting of privileged people who could pay $1,000 and I am sure that the representations which the Minister of Finance and his Deputy Minister have heard came from a group of people who are able to give $1,000 to the electoral fund of their party. However, they refuse, as they did before in the case of the budget, to meet all these Quebecers who have joined forces to fight against the Government's decision to de-index family allowances.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party or rather the Prime Minister has decided, as he has every right to, to protect wealthy Canadians, and this was made clear at the Montreal meeting, but the important thing is to let the population know where the real concerns of those people lie so it can make its own judgment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I just have one comment to make about unemployment insurance for the benefit of our friend the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). He referred earlier to Mr. Forget who is reviewing the whole unemployment system. I think he was being unfair when he said that we were questioning the payments of a meagre $167 a month to young people.

You must know that Mr. Forget was at one time a Minister in a Quebec Liberal government. So I think you should have a little more faith in him. As you can see, we did not appoint a Conservative. We appointed in Mr. Forget a competent man, and I suggest you should have a little more faith in his work.

For your information, a preliminary inquiry was conducted last September into unemployment insurance, and Canadians who are listening will be interested to learn the results from one Montreal office out of 26. There is evidence that the Canadian Government is being cheated out of $8 million dollars a year. Facts such as those get uncovered now that Conservatives are in office. The Liberals who held power for a hundred years never did anything to protect the unfortunate who needed greater unemployment allowances. We, on the contrary, are now revising the present system so as to allow more money to the needy and prevent those cheaters from appropriating Canadian taxpayers' money.

I have something else to tell my friend the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, about military uniforms, that our listeners should know. The uniforms had to be ordered anyway. Members of the army, navy or air force must get new uniforms sooner or later. Whatever the Government decided about the colour did not make any difference, because the uniforms cost the same whether they are blue, white or khaki. We have seen demagoguery in action this morning, Mr. Speaker.

Members of the Opposition were the first to criticize the success the Canadian Government had in bringing Hyundai to Quebec. They should be ashamed of themselves!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I should like in the first place to comment on the three points raised by my colleague and neighbour from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). Firstly, I should like to plead the falsity of what he said. He surely tripped over something as it happens sometimes when discussing the new colour of our soldiers' pants. They were all khaki for all of them. Secondly, as far as Mr. Claude Forget is concerned, as I said, he is a personal friend, but it is the policy of all governments to pay comparable salaries whenm appointing someone to consider a special issue. Thirdly, what annoys me about my friend from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve—and this goes to show that he has become a diehard Tory—is that he finds it shameful that $8 million should be stolen from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. However, he fails to find it disgraceful when he sees the rich cheating with the income tax. When the rich are concerned, there is nothing disgraceful. But when people who are starving or are needy ... they have to eat, and raise their families ... those Tories, and he is one of them, have the gall to rise and say: The poor families, the young people who get only $156, it is a shame. These people have to steal to eat. Governments are to blame for that. However, when a rich man or a multinational corporation is guilty of tax evasion, when a dealer is guilty of false advertising, nothing is said. The Tories remain silent.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a short comment and put a question to my colleague. Firstly, I would like to congratulate him for his excellent speech today. I would also like to ask him whether he is aware that the Tory Government spent public funds twice since last week, at least that is what we have been told. Firstly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spent money asking the Canadian people what he was supposed to do as Minister of Finance and, secondly, the Government also asked—at a cost of $50,000—about Crest toothpaste. Does the Hon. Member think that this is the way the Tory Government should spend public funds?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, my colleague clearly indicates once again how stupidly the Government spends public funds. Whether the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party is in power, it is still money contributed by the taxpayers.

There is another matter which my colleague should remember. It cost the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) $1,000 per minute to ask Canadians to do the opposite and to have his picture on television.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we should not forget the $1 billion spent to save rich people when banks we know about went bankrupt. Those who had invested $60,000 and over in those banks were aware of the rules. And when we are told: Well, there were companies and pension funds... However, the Caisse de dépôts et placements had purchased some shares with funds belonging to Quebec pensioners. The Conservative Members do not care about that and these pensioners will not get their money back.

I note that the time allotted to me has come to an end, Mr. Speaker. This only shows that the Tory Members are looking after the rich people, and they have the right to do so. However, we are going to defend the interests of all low and medium income earners.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. We shall resume debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if Canadians want to know what the Government of Canada proposes to do for them in the way of providing necessary services, they have to look at the Estimates tabled by the Government. If they want to see how the Government proposes to raise the money to pay for these services, they will have to look at the various tax which the Government imposes such as income taxes, corporation taxes, sales taxes, excise taxes, and so on. We have seen for the past 25 or more years a desire, first on the part of Liberal Governments and now on that of the Conservative Government, to change the system we had in the 1940s and 1950s in which corporation taxes provided about the same amount of revenue to the Government as did personal income taxes. The percentage which corporations pay now, as compared to the percentage paid on personal income tax, is very small and I will put some figures on the record in a few moments. Changes in our Income Tax Act have permitted a very substantial number of individual Canadians and corporations in the highest income brackets to pay less and less and, in thousands of cases, no income tax at all.

It is not surprising that when groups and individuals look at the proposals contained in the Budget Speech last May by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), they react from their own point of view. So does the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which represents most large business organizations. It is on the whole very favourably impressed with the proposals made by the Minister of Finance. In fact, its criticism of the Minister's proposals is that they do not go far enough. The Chamber of Commerce has called for a major assault on budget deficits, and reducing the budget deficit is one of the major concerns of this Conservative Government of ours. The Chamber of Commerce said that the federal Government must launch a major assault on budget deficits and do so now or the Canadian economy will fall short of realizing its potential. Then the brief listed several options for government spending cuts—putting the review of social programs back on the front burner, including consideration of greater selectivity in income support programs; implementing savings identified by the Nielsen task force; a renewed commitment to privatizing Crown corporations and selling other Crown assets; and an end to bail-outs of private corporations.

They talk about the bail-out of private corporations. They certainly do not talk about the tremendous tax breaks given to corporations, some of which I will put on the record in a few moments.

On the other hand, there was another reaction in the same week. In a press release issued on November 27 by the Canadian Health Coalition, an organization which represents more than 2.5 million Canadians, including representatives of health, education, co-operative groups, churches, consumers, senior citizens, women, social development, agricultural and environmental groups, a contrary view of the Budget expressed about the proposal of the Minister of Finance to cut $2 billion in federal-provincial transfer payments. It indicated that cut-backs in funding to the provinces through a renegotiation of the Established Programs Financing Act were also proposed by the Minister of Finance, and that federal funding cut-backs would allow the provincial Governments to undermine the continued viability of their medicare plans and post-secondary education. Also it argued that we should not allow these cuts to occur and went on to point out that federal funding in recent years had decreased as a percentage of total health care spending.

I have illustrated two different and opposing approaches to the Budget. The Government has continued the policies, followed by the former Liberal Government with regard to taxation, which benefit to the greatest extent corporations and people in the highest income brackets.

Let me illustrate what I mean by putting on the record what has happened. If we look at the corporate and individual shares of income tax in the 1950s, we see that corporations paid 50 per cent and that individuals paid 50 per cent of the total received. However, the estimate for 1986-87 is that corporations will pay only 25 per cent while individuals will pay 75 per cent. If we look at corporate and personal taxes received by the Government as a percentage of the federal budgetary revenues, we see that in 1975 corporation taxes brought in 17.5 per cent of the revenues while personal income taxes brought in 42.5 per cent. However, by 1985, corporate taxes will bring in only 12.1 per cent while personal income taxes will bring in 47.1 per cent. We see a continuing decline in the amount received from corporation taxes and a substantial increase in the amount received from personal income taxes.

It is not difficult to see how this has happened. Let us look at a few recent examples of the kinds of tax measures implemented by the former Liberal Government and continued and exacerbated by the present Conservative Government. A measure was brought forward in the last Budget of the Liberal Government by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde, which was supposed to encourage investment in scientific research by permitting a tax credit for money invested in that area. It was estimated to cost the Treasury $100 million or $200 million. In fact, it was used by corporations on the advice of their tax lawyers and chartered accountants so that it did not cost the people of Canada a couple of hundred million dollars but something between $1.5 billion and $2.5 billion. We could accept that if the money had really gone into scientific research, but of course it did not.

A few days ago there was a report in The Globe and Mail which indicated that the Genstar Financial Corporation, through the establishment of non-taxable preferred shares, had found a way in which investors could save substantial amounts of money by avoiding payment of income taxes. Indeed, the report indicated that the big loser would be the federal Treasury. If the new type of preferred share catches on, it could cost the federal Government hundreds of millions of dollars in lost tax revenue. If it works for Genstar, others will be quick to pick up the same idea.

Also we had the purchase of Gulf Oil by Olympia & York. It used what was called the "Little Egypt Bump" to re-evaluate the assets of the corporation in such a way that it saved hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes which it was not required to pay.

In a similar way, Dome Petroleum some time ago was able to save up to $1 billion per year. When corporations can make those kinds of savings, when corporations can avoid paying the taxes which ordinary citizens and small businesses have to pay—and some of the largest corporations in Canada for many years paid no taxes at all—it is not surprising that ordinary Canadians have to pay more to make up the difference.

Let us look at the situation with regard to income taxes paid by Canadians. A recent article which appeared in The Toronto Star indicated the following:

> The number of high-income Canadians who paid no income tax rose sharply in 1983, tax department figures show.
> Some 1,120 people earned $100,000 or more in 1983 and paid no income tax, 33 per cent more than in 1982,—
> The figures also show that no income tax was paid by 6,662 people who earned between $50,000 and $99,999, up from 4,679 in 1982, and by 6,760 people who earned $40,000 to $49,999, up from 5,201.

We in the New Democratic Party have brought the attention of Governments—first the Liberal Government and now the Conservative Government—to the fact that there are thousands of people in the highest income brackets who have been able to avoid paying any income tax at all. We have been promised that at some point—and I suppose it will be in the next Budget—the Government will bring forward provisions so that every Canadian will have to pay at least a minimum income tax.

Mr. McDermid: Before the next Budget.

Mr. Orlikow: I hear the Hon. Member, but I am sure it will apply only to next year's income tax.

Mr. McDermid: Do you mean that we should apply income tax retroactively?

Mr. Orlikow: I want to say to the Hon. Member that we are very suspicious of what the Government will bring forward. Just as there have been loopholes for corporations and the wealthiest individuals in the past so that they have not been required to pay any income tax at all, let alone pay their fair share, we believe that anything the Government brings forward will permit many people to pay little, if anything, in the way of their fair share of taxes.

I want to talk for a few moments about the tax proposals of the Minister of Finance and what they will do for ordinary Canadians. We have calculated that, as a result of the proposals of the Minister last May, the average family, a family with two dependent children, will face a tax increase of $500. I would like to indicate how we arrived at that figure. The elimination of the federal tax reduction will cost $100. The modification to the indexing of income tax will cost the ordinary family $115. The cut in family allowance payments will cost $22.50. The increase with respect to the tax on cigarettes and alcohol will cost $75. The 1 per cent increase in sales tax will cost $150 and the increase in the tax on gasoline will cost $50. This gives a grand total of $512.50. All this at a time when the increase in the incomes of most families is running at less than the increase in the cost of living.

Let us consider how the Budget affects family benefits. We believe the Budget attacks the family benefits of the ordinary Canadian family because, in addition to the increased taxes in the Budget, it reduces the amount of money going to families with children. In 1986 the reduced child benefit will save the federal Government $130 million. By 1990 it will save the federal Government $600 million. Where is the Government's commitment to the family? Why does the Government give wealthy investors and banks priority? The child benefit tax package in the Budget will provide no real gains for anyone by 1990, including the very poor.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that the number of people living in poverty in Canada is a disgrace. It has been estimated that one person in six is now living in poverty. One can visit any city in the country from Newfoundland to British Columbia and find a straggeringly increasing number of voluntary organizations providing food hampers, clothing or meals to people who just cannot make it because they are unemployed and because their welfare cheques do not meet the minimum requirements which they have.

We maintain that the tax increases proposed and being implemented in the Budget hit the poor people the hardest. The National Anti-Poverty Organization has estimated that as a percentage of income the new taxes will amount to an increase of .69 per cent for families with an average annual income in excess of $50,000. By contrast, families with incomes of less than $10,000 will pay for the increase in federal taxes at a rate of 1.39 per cent as a percentage of income. In other words, those families which have incomes of less than $10,000 will pay twice as much as those families with incomes over $50,000 as a percentage of their income. In effect, what we are saying is that the Government's proposals in the Budget benefit those who need it the least and cost those who need help the most more than it costs others.

That view has been supported by the National Anti-Poverty Organization and by the Consumers' Association of Canada, which is not a particularly radical or aggressive organization. In a press release which the Consumers' Association issued last May in reaction to the budget proposals the President stated:

> We're told to tighten our belts, while at the same time being encouraged to spend more to help rescue the economy . . . Yet business, with a clear green light from the government, has failed to lead a strong economic recovery.
> The promised wave of new business investment has not materialized, and it is not likely to as long as there is low consumer demand, excess production capacity and high inventories in many sectors, especially manufacturing—
> We have sent a clear message to the government that consumers need more disposable income, not more lectures about belt-tightening—

The views of the Consumers' Association were not given much attention at all by the Government. It is obvious that if we are to see any improvement, we have to have more purchasing power placed in the hands of the bulk of Canadians. We are not seeing anything like that.

I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that the Minister of Finance knew what would happen because documents provided to him, as reported in an article in The Globe and Mail, showed that he was provided with figures indicating that the benefits of the tax exemption on capital gains will go largely to the wealthy and cut incomes of low-income groups. They indicated that those earning between $10,000 and $20,000 will pay an extra $300 a year in income tax by 1990. Those with incomes above $200,000 will see their tax bill increase by an average of $1,500. This would amount to a tax increase of about 2 per cent for the low-income group and about .6 per cent for the high-income group.

I think I have conclusively demonstrated that the thrust of the Budget is to help those who need help the least and to place an increasing burden upon people in the low and middle-income brackets. We think that that is the wrong way to go, which is why we oppose these proposals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of the House for almost seven years. I have listened to speeches from my hon. friend frequently. As a matter of fact, we spent some time on the road on a committee which travelled. I continue to hear the term "ordinary Canadian". We are told that we are being unfair to the ordinary Canadian. I have never heard anyone define the term. Does the Hon. Member define an ordinary Canadian by the amount of money that person makes? Does the Hon. Member define an ordinary Canadian by the position which that person holds in society? Is a school teacher who earns $40,000 a year an ordinary Canadian in the eyes of members of the New Democratic Party or is he making too much money? Will the Hon. Member take a run at his definition, or perhaps his Party's definition, of the term "ordinary Canadian", a term which he throws around loosely in every speech he makes?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows what we mean when we talk about the ordinary Canadian.

Mr. McDermid: No, I do not.

Mr. Orlikow: When we talk about an ordinary Canadian we are talking about people in the low and midddle-income brackets. What we say is that if one looks at the income distribution in the country over a period of 25 to 40 years, and despite the fact that we have made major improvements in the services which we provide to the people of Canada, one will see that the percentage of the Gross national Product which goes to the people in the lowest fifth of income earners has stayed at around 4 per cent. The improvements about which I speak are improvements which have been supported if not initially when brought in then certainly after they were in operation for some time. I am talking about improvements to old age security benefits and about the establishment of the Canada Pension Plan. I am talking about the hospital insurance plan and the medical insurance plan, which is universal in the country. These plans have eliminated the fear of people not just in low-income groups but people in middle-income groups with respect to a major illness destroying their financial security. Despite everything that has been done, if one looks at the figures provided annually by Statistics Canada, one will see that the percentage of the Gross National Product which goes to the people in the lowest fifth of income earners in the country has stayed at around 4 per cent. We say that that is much too low. The percentage of the income which goes to the top 20 per cent has hovered at around 40 per cent or more. We say that that disparity is much too large. It is unacceptable that several million people are living in poverty in a country as wealthy as Canada.

The Hon. Member asked who I was talking about when I talked about ordinary Canadians. I am talking about the vast majority of people who are in the low or middle-income brackets.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, let me get this straight. When I was working as a radio announcer earning $50 per week, which in those days was not much money, I was an ordinary Canadian. Now that I am earning the salary that is paid to a Member of Parliament, some $54,000 per year, I am no longer an ordinary Canadian. Once a Canadian is no longer in the middle-income bracket, does he all of a sudden become an "unordinary" Canadian or something different from an ordinary Canadian? I do not understand the Hon. Member's definition of an ordinary Canadian.

What happens when a Canadian does well all of a sudden? What happens when someone who is poor opens a business which does well, starts to earn money and goes into the upper-income bracket? How does this person go from an ordinary Canadian to an "unordinary" Canadian? I believe members of the New Democratic Party throw the term "ordinary Canadian" around pretty loosely and do not know what the hell they are talking about.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, all the people who live in Canada are Canadians and if they are not Canadian citizens, they are landed immigrants. Ordinary Canadians are the majority of Canadians who are in the lower and middle-income brackets. The Hon. Member asked me about Members of Parliament. We are not ordinary Canadians because we are probably in the top 5 per cent of income earners. We are not ordinary Canadians and neither is the President of the CPR, the President of Olympia & York or the presidents of any of the large corporations. They are extraordinary Canadians and form a small minority of the Canadian people.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague for his very meticulous and detailed analysis of the way in which the total tax burden on Canadians has shifted from corporations and the wealthy to the backs of ordinary Canadians. Perhaps I could pose that difficult concept once more. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the continuity demonstrated by the ideology of the Liberal Party and the ideology of the self-styled Progressive Conservative Party in continuing the shift of the tax burden.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in the time I had available to me, I tried to show that a shift has occurred over a long period of time. It began shortly after World War II and has been continued under Liberal Governments and exacerbated by the present Conservative Government. There has been a shift in the acquisition of the money required by the federal Government to meet the costs of services it provides from income taxes paid by individuals to income taxes paid by large corporations. In the 1950s, both individuals and corporations paid about the same amount in taxes. This has now shifted so that the percentage of income collected through taxes from corporations has dropped and the percentage of income collected through personal taxes has risen. According to statements made by the present Minister of Finance, the percentage of corporate taxes will continue to drop.

This has happened because of the very complicated provisions in the hundreds of pages of the Income Tax Act which permits corporations to find quite legal ways to pay no taxes. There are many people and corporations which do not pay taxes in ways which are illegal and some of them get caught and pay the penalty. However, what has been encouraged by Liberal Governments and now by the Conservative Government is legal ways of simply not paying taxes. That is continuing at an accelerated rate.

[Translation]

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deliver part of my speech in French. Please excuse my grammar and my faulty pronunciation.

Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to take part in the debate on Bill C-84.

It is a statement on the economic philosophy of the Progressive Conservative Party which the Canadian people elected last year, and it is now the basis of the policy advocated by the Government of Canada.

[English]

In my remarks, I would like to expand upon the way in which that economic philosophy is fundamental to the legislation which we are debating today and to the series of financial and economic measures which have been and are to be debated by the House as emanating from the Budget of last spring. As well, I would like to indicate the ways in which those financial measures will achieve the objectives of the Budget and the objectives for which the Government was elected by the majority of Canadians, ordinary as well as extraordinary.

When this Government took office, it inherited a heritage of doubt. Doubt was a new sentiment in the hearts of Canadians, who had characteristically been a confident people but who, under the depressing impact of the economic policies of the previous regime, had come to feel in large part that the future of Canada might just be behind us.

The American economist, John Kenneth Galbraith, had once written that a modern industrial state had to choose between inflation and unemployment. Throughout the 1970s and into the first years of this decade, there were many in Canada who thought that the then Liberal Government had solved the dilemma by choosing both at once and by adding to them the problem of an escalating deficit, which was spiralling to such an extent that many came to believe that high technology had been invented simply to give the Government a way of accounting for the spiralling of the public debt. That was the mood of the people before September 1984.

What is now the outlook of the people of Canada as we approach the end of 1985? David Slater, the former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, in the annual report of that respected body, predicted much better prospects for the economy of Canada, and hence for its people, during the next five years of this decade and that it will be even better as we go into the 1990s. It is a prediction which is supported by statistics. For example, it is predicted that our Gross National Product will increase by 5 per cent and will rise by an average of 3.5 per cent for at least 10 years. Inflation is now reduced to 4 per cent and will possibly be less in the 1990s. Unemployment, which just in the months before this Government took office was thought to be a permanent affliction on the social body of this country, has fallen from 11.4 per cent to 10.3 per cent. This was after it was submitted to the Canadian people that we must accept permanent unemployment levels perhaps reaching 15 per cent. However, the Economic Council of Canada now visualizes that by 1990, unemployment may be reduced to 8.1 per cent.

Reference has been made to the deficit by previous speakers. The deficit this country now suffers is about 7 per cent of the Gross National Product. But it is anticipated that by 1990, it will have reduced to just 4 per cent of the GNP. We may note that this is not only a prediction. In August of this year, for the first time in many years, the deficit began to fall.

In addition to the statistics we can draw from the report of the Economic Council of Canada, I submit some significant economic indicators. Employment has expanded. The labour force of this country has grown by 330,000 persons since this Government took office. There were 37,000 jobs added to the labour force in the month of October, 1985 alone. New orders for manufacturing are up 14 per cent since September, 1984. Building permits have increased by 20 per cent during the first eight months of 1985. Housing starts alone are up a full 54 per cent. We all recognize that housing starts are the most significant factor in an economy's prosperity because of the great spinoff from the housing industry. Bankruptcies are down significantly by 12 per cent.

All of this is referred to because of the way in which Government policy since September of 1984 has been one of the significant factors in the turn-around of the economic direction of Canada. It has been one of the significant shaping elements in renewing the economy. This upturn is, to a great extent, the result of the financial and economic policies such as those expressed in the legislation now before us. An economy can be renewed, can advance, can create employment and can create income for people, chiefly when there is investment and that investment results from incentive and confidence.

That is really what we are debating, in part, with Bill C-84. It is the philosophy which offers people incentive to invest, to take risks, to expand and to be creative. Since the Budget was announced declaring the philosophy to reward success, we have been told over and over again, for example, that the capital gains exemption is a give-away. No one who has ever attempted to make a capital gain would look upon a capital gains tax exemption as a give-away. There has to be effort and risk and, very frequently, there is to loss. What we are trying to do through this legislation is provide potential investors with the kind of incentive which will encourage them to move into the market-place, to take chances, to be creative, to be expansive, not only bringing rewards to themselves but bringing opportunity, employment and income to ordinary Canadians. I submit that this is the best way a Government can deal with the needs and aspirations of ordinary Canadians.

Historically we have been a nation of risk takers, all myths to the contrary. This country was built upon the vision and commitment of people to come to grips with an environment which challenged them day by day and which often demanded a risk of life itself. Confederation has been the success story it is because of those persons who gathered around a leader such as Sir John A. Macdonald and who were prepared to link one coast with the other through the construction of the CPR. That was a construction project which at one time prompted the then Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the Liberal Party at that time, to say that the Government of the day was taking the resources of eastern Canada and pouring them down the gorges of British Columbia. That was the kind of risk which Sir John A. Macdonald, his Government and those who worked with him, had to be willing to take. It was that kind of risk which made this country a political and economic possibility.

It has been said by the Canadian historian, Desmond Morton, that the people of Canada have met the challenge of the unfriendliest environment in the world. How have we done that and achieved the standard of living which Canadians enjoy? Part of the answer comes from the willingness of Canadians to take that kind of risk. We are known, and rightfully so, as a quiet and peaceable people, but we have demonstrated that we are also adventurous and courageous. That testimony comes from the 117,000 Canadians who occupy military graves in 74 countries around this world. More important, we have demonstrated our willingness to be adventurous and courageous in coping with this harsh and challenging environment which we have transformed into one of the great industrial states of the world. This has been due chiefly to adequate incentives through the years being given to those people who were willing to be enterprising.

Basically, the legislation before us is offering this kind of tax incentive as a way of renewing the entrepreneurial spirit. That spirit is not only to be found among the high income earners and the rich, of whom frequent mention is made by the Opposition. I want to share with you, Mr. Speaker, two stories from a riding which surely contains many ordinary Canadians, namely, the riding I am honoured to represent. A few weeks ago during the recess, I spoke in one of our high schools. I addressed a class of students in economics. During the discussion which followed the address, a question was raised by a young man, a teenager, who obviously did not belong to the WASP community, which is what the sociologist John Porter has called the "charter group of Confederation". Obviously, he did not belong to that group. Clearly, he came from a background that in my own youth would have been called "the working class". I suppose that was before someone conceived of the euphenism "ordinary Canadians". The question asked of me by the student was not how he could get more welfare, how he could get a grant or what kind of give-away he could get. The question he put to me was: "What are the steps I could take to buy some property and become an investor?" That is not an extraordinary story. Some years ago I addressed a week-end camp of young Canadians from the city of Scarborough. The camp was called "Camp Enterprise" and it was sponsored by the Rotary Club. It was filled with young people with a desire to become entrepreneurs—and that is not only the characteristic of the young people of this country, most of whom voted for this Government as ordinary Canadians, and we must give back to them an extraordinary chance to develop themselves. This is the aspiration of many senior citizens as well. I can take you to two senior citizens who have approached me for information on how they can look for financing so as to undertake an enterprise of their own. Whether young or not so young, the opportunity is in front of Canadians. Once again Canada has a Government providing incentives to and stimulation of the resources in the hearts and minds of our people, the greatest resource this country possesses.

Bill C-84 offers incentives and opportunity particularly for small businesses. We are giving them access to resources which in the past have not been available for the creative expansion desires of small enterprises. For example, there is access to the capital available in retirement savings and pension plans. All of these are ways in which people can do what? Perhaps they can buy an additional truck. That is the aspiration of an ordinary Canadian in my constituency. He is a one-truck operator and he wants to double his ressources. He now has an opportunity to seek capital where he did not before. This is the kind of thing which is turning this country around and producing the kinds of statistics to which I referred earlier.

Bill C-84 also deals significantly with another dimension of the tax system which is basic to incentive, namely, ensuring that it is fair. One of the ways in which we are endeavouring as Parliament and Government to add fairness to the tax system is by amending the Income Tax Act to eliminate abuses by tax collectors as under previous regimes. A lack of fairness can be a disincentive to enterprise and the new measures defining powers of search and seizure and restricting them within the parameters of fairness and justice will add to the quality of our tax system and to the spirit of enterprise in our country. I find it a considerable privilege to participate in this debate because the legislation we are dealing with will continue to add to the economic advancement of this country.

As well as improving the fairness and effectiveness of the tax system in ways designed to prevent taxpayers from using the rules in unintended and inappropriate ways to avoid taxation, we have heard reference made this morning to the Government's commitment to introduce a minimum tax measure in the very near future. Another measure which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has referred to and which illustrates the general thrust of our legislation is the amendment regarding certain investment trusts so that they cannot be abused in ways that were never intended by the legislation.

The stock market, it is said, is often a herald of our economic future. If that is so, we can certainly share with many the confidence that a market such as the Toronto Stock Exchange is showing now. The way ahead is clear and promising and we should ask ourselves what it is that gives investors the kind of confidence which makes them as bullish as so many of them have been in recent months. It is the confidence that we have a Government which wants to meet our social problems in the private enterprise way. It wants to meet the legitimate aspirations of people in the way which has been so long the character and tradition of this country.

I share with many people on the opposite side of the House the social objectives they have, their desire to help all Canadians regardless of background to meet their human needs. I know that this feeling is held by all Member on this side. However, I point out that while we have the same objectives, what divides us is the method we use. The method they favour so much is one which has shown its failure for the last 15 years. After 15 years of combatting poverty their way, we have more poor people than ever. However, we now have a new economic policy which will offer new promise and new opportunity to all Canadians, ordinary and otherwise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am somewhat disappointed in the speech of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). I expected a bit more from him. Yesterday, during my own comments, I exhorted Members to get away from partisan drivel and start to deal with some of the issues in this Budget which he apparently embraces 100 per cent as being a wonderful document. I know enough about the Hon. Member to believe that he sees the warts and flaws which are so apparent to everyone except, apparently, Members in the Conservative Party. He began by telling us that Canada is a country of risk takers. I must say that I suppose they proved that last September 4 when they voted for the Conservative Government in such massive numbers. Perhaps they will be less willing to take risks like that in the future because of the results.

That being said, let me ask the Hon. Member a very specific question. He makes much of the strength of the Canadian economy and the report of the Economic Council of Canada. I have read that report and there are a few comments which would suggest that there has been some improvement as a result of certain relatively minor initiatives taken by this Government. However, I see no great endorsement of anything the Conservative Government has done. In fact, I find in the opening line, regarding the medium-term outlook, these words: "The Canadian economy has made impressive gains in real terms over the past two years which have also witnessed a slowing down in inflation. Moreover, these gains were more broadly based in 1984 than in 1983".

Is the Hon. Member telling the House and Canadians that it is the Conservative Budget which is responsible for the strong growth in 1983 and 1984, the reduction in inflation, and the consequential fall in interest rates? Is that what he is trying to tell us?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, having listened to utterances such as that over the past 14 months, I have considerable experience in listening to partisan drivel.

To focus directly on the question he put, I would remind him that if he had listened carefully, had indeed stayed for my entire remarks, he would have heard me say that the policies of this Government were one of these elements. He has acknowledged that the report to which he has made reference and which he is supposed to have read acknowledges that one of the elements has been the kind of policy this Government has enunciated. We know what Canada was like before the election of this Government. We know that that was one of the reasons why this Government was elected. We now have statistical and other evidence to indicate the merits of the policies to which the Government has committed itself since the election, which have already begun to show the kind of results which I would have thought a man with his capacity for understanding would have welcomed in the interest of all Canadians.

Mr. Johnston: Without any preamble I will ask the Member a very specific question. Is he saying that the economic growth in 1983 and 1984, the fall in inflation, which was at around 4 per cent when the Conservatives assumed power in 1984, and the consequential reduction in interest rates, are the results of Conservative policies? That seems to be the impression which he is trying to leave.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, we can see, from an objective and fair examination of the history to interest rates since the Government took office, that there has been a steady decline in interest rates during this regime with minor statistical hiccups from month to month. We now have a bank rate which is three points below that which we inherited from the Government of which he was a member.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member on his thoughtful presentation. Would he comment on the process in which we are participating today? A very far-reaching Bill on taxation was introduced in the House. The explanations, which are quite technical, were introduced in the House a day before the debate began. There has been virtually no discussion, consultation or whatever about the implications. Yet, it is expected that this Bill will be passed within the next few days. Does the Member have some observations about that process?

I will pick up on my colleague's latest question with regard to interest rates. If the Member is indicating that the downward trend in interest rates is due, to a certain extent, to the policies of the Government, would he agree that if there were to be an upward trend in interest rates that, too, would be a reflection on the policies of the Government?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the first question first. I am sure that with the Hon. Member's seniority in the House he is aware that when this legislation passes this stage in the House of Commons it will go to committee for a very thorough study in which I hope the members of his Party will participate. I am also aware that day after day, when the Opposition does not focus its attention on matters less important than the economy and the Budget, there is opportunity for face to face encounters with the financial Ministers of the Government to debate and examine critically the implications of the legislation before us. The debate in which we are now engaged is certainly not the last opportunity for critical assessment of this legislation, as the Member knows.

With regard to interest rates, if the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Government bears any responsibility for an increase in the interest rates which so affects businesses throughout the country, including many within the Member's own constituency which I have reason to know about, I hope that he will also be willing to give credit to the Government at this time for the achievement that we and all Canadians enjoy, namely, the significant reduction in interest rates.

Mr. Riis: I am not trying to catch the Hon. Member or anything.

Mr. Stackhouse: I would never have thought that.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate that there may be some reason to think that. I am questioning this process. We are at second reading stage and after this debate the Bill will go to a legislative committee where a handful of witnesses will be heard. At that time it will come back for debate on third reading and it will be wrapped up. Is the Member really saying that that is an adequate process for a Bill which will touch the lives of every Canadian for decades to come? Does he really believe that that is an appropriate process?

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not trying to catch my hon. friend when I say that I hope he does not approve a process which I have seen in full measure in the House, namely, one whereby 70 opposition Members debate, one after another, day after day, and make speeches which simply repeat what has been said on the days before, putting forward an amendment, and starting all over again. I hope the process which he would welcome would not include that kind of obstructionism.

I hope that he would recognize as well that the process of the legislative committees examining Bills is a new one which was adopted after a recommendation by an all-Party committee in an effort to enhance the participation by Members of the House in the active examination of legislation with the assistance of expert witnesses. I have heard from some of the chairmen of the legislative committees which have been examining Bills that so many witnesses are called that they cannot keep up with the task before them. Therefore, I am really not pessimistic about the possible effectiveness of the legislative committees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we are considering Bill C-84, a very complex piece of legislation which contains hundreds of pages and any number of clauses dealing with practically every aspect of personal income tax and corporate tax, and I think we all realize that especially during the debate on second reading, it would be very difficult to consider all the issues raised by this kind of legislation. Furthermore, at the second reading stage, we are supposed to restrict our comments to the principles contained in the Bill. In fact, the legislation deals with a number of items such as capital gains tax, which will no longer apply to the first $500,000 in capital gains acquired during the taxpayer's life, and there are other aspects such as the personal deduction for dependent children, changes in the child tax credit, where the maximum income level eligible for the child tax credit will be lowered from $26,000 to $23,000, and as I said before, elimination of the exemption for dependent children.

There are also a number of other changes that affect the Canadian taxpayer by eliminating the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, which was very popular with young couples.

There are the surtaxes that will be introduced on individuals who will be paying a certain amount more if they are paying between $6,000 and $15,000 in income tax and there will be an additional tax for those paying over $15,000 in taxes.

There is of course the surtax on corporations. There are special taxes on banks. In fact, there are all kind of taxes, and as I said last May when the Budget was brought down, this Budget was bringing in an avalanche of taxes that will be affecting Canadian taxpayers very directly, either through their income tax or, as we have seen in a Bill considered previously, which deals with sales tax, excise tax—

On the whole, there has been general agreement with the position taken by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) who introduced the Bill, when he said it should be seen as part of the Conservative philosophy. And what conclusions are we to draw from this Conservative philosophy? The conclusion must be that between now and 1990, nearly $37 billion in additional taxes will be collected, thus bleeding the purchasing power of the Canadian taxpayer to support this Conservative philosophy.

I will elaborate on this later on, if I may, and I would now like to start my comment, since I only have twenty minutes, and try to consider Bill C-84 in the context of the Budget brought down on May 23 and also in the light of what was said by Government Members before the Budget was brought down.

Mr. Speaker, what were we told before May 23? What were we told during the election campaign, and what have they delivered today? Before the Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all Progressive Conservatives sang the same tune—the deficit had to be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, quite the contrary, because it is imperative that special measures be taken to cut down the Canadian Government deficit which now amounts to some $30 billion, a long-term mortgage to be carried by all Canadians. But the way this Government has attempted to honour its election promise to lower the deficit is enough to drive all Canadian citizens to despair. When the Government tells us that the deficit is its first priority, and warns the people that the huge deficit will lead to serious economic problems in the future, I should think that the Government's first move would be to clamp down on expenditures. Above all, that it would refrain from giving hand-outs to a select group of Canadians.

What do we find when we take a close look at the Budget context which explains the Conservative approach mentioned by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West? The first thing we find is the suggestion that wealthy taxpayers must be given tax exemptions so they will be able to spur the economy, which in turn will help those who stand on the lower rungs of the country's economic ladder. My colleague from Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) had already drawn an analogy about the horse and the sparrow. If the horse gets enough to eat it will grow fat and leave droppings in the street to enable the sparrow to feed itself. That is the Conservative philosophy, as explained by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West. Let us give to the rich so that, hopefully, they will be able to fuel the economy and create jobs for other less fortunate Canadians.

The least we can say, Mr. Speaker, is that it is a rather strange way to proceed in a democratic society which, true to its own democratic goals, would seek to make sure that all Canadians who belong to that democratic community can derive specific benefits from their membership in that society. Personally, I believe that if there are more people in the middle-income range, we shall have more economic activity and a better distribution of wealth instead of providing every benefit for the wealthiest taxpayers that they alone might create the economic activity we want. This Conservative philosophy is reflected in the budgetary measures of the Minister of Finance. First, he will let over $8 billion, or $8.4 or $8.5 billion, go to a small number of oil companies before the end of the decade. Oil multinationals have obtained substantial benefits, and according to the data provided by the Department of Finance, while this was not the intention at the start, it was found to be in order later on. This tax benefit given to a few companies will amount to $8.5 billion by 1990-91.

Some will say that it will be only $124 million this year, but it will be nearly $1 billion in 1986-87, nearly $1.4 billion in 1987-88, $1.6 billion in 1988-89, around $2 billion in 1989-90, and about $2.5 billion a year after that.

This coincides with the Conservative philosophy reflected in the budget. The Government started by foregoing revenue. Our friends opposite often compare themselves with the Reagan Government in the United States. However, when their American model came to power, he provided exemptions to just about everyone, while the Conservatives in Canada began by giving $8.5 billion by the end of the decade to a small number of oil multinationals. What did they do afterwards? They introduced another measure in Bill C-84, about which I shall speak further later on, to provide a capital gains tax exemption. How much will this cost in lost revenue to the Public Treasury, which is supposed to show a deficit? We are told that, this year, in 1985-86, this tax expenditure will cost $300 million. In 1986-87, it will cost $600 million. In 1987-88, the loss will amount to $750 million. In 1988-89, it will be about $900 million. In 1989-90, it will be $1 billion, and in 1990-91, it will be $1.2 billion, for a total of $4.8 billion. If we add the two figures, we find that there is over $13 billion in two taxation measures which, according to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), reflect the Conservative policy. New tax benefits of $13 billion are being given to a very select group of Canadians.

You can imagine that after giving up $13 billion in revenues, Mr. Speaker, and because it still wanted to reduce the deficit, the Government had no choice but to increase taxes. And yet, in a public statement a few weeks before his budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told Canadians that tax increases at this stage of our economic life would be counterproductive, because they would reduce consumer spending and take away the purchasing power which made it possible for businesses to sell their goods and services and, thereby, to create new jobs.

If we look at the general philosophy which is reflected in Bill C-84, a Bill which is about an inch thick, and if we consider it in conjunction with the excise tax bill which we dealt with recently and the Bill to abolish the petroleum and gas revenue tax, we soon realize that these three Bills together will cost Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars in lost revenues. The whole Conservative philosophy makes it possible for us to see the whole picture of the tax provisions in Bill C-84. By the end of this decade, the tax increases resulting from Bill C-84 and Bill C-80 will amount to nearly $37 billion in purchasing power which will be taken away from Canadian taxpayers to help fulfill the purpose of the Conservative philosophy that was described earlier by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West.

They will affect a whole lot of people. We know that personal tax exemptions and tax brackets will be partly de-indexed.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? Do you know that by the end of this decade, this little piece of legislation alone will increase the amount paid in taxes by Canadian taxpayers by as much as $11 billion? That is $11 billion more to help this Government achieve its aim, that is, to make the rich richer, in order that they might create jobs. But to do this the Government will have to collect more taxes from ordinary taxpayers who will have to foot the bill, not only to cover the fiscal benefits granted to the wealthy and the multinationals, but also to reduce the deficit.

The Government has also deprived ordinary people of the $50 federal tax credit. It has also amended the whole child exemption and family allowance scheme.

But when we look at the impact of these changes which will result mostly from Bill C-84 in conjunction with a recently adopted bill, we realize that by the end of this decade—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. When Orders of the Day are called this afternoon, the Hon. Member will have six minutes remaining in his speech, plus ten minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

CLOSING OF PLANTS IN QUEBEC—FUTURE OF LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that, after the unacceptable, inhuman and stupid decision of this Conservative Government, and contrary to the promise made in Sherbrooke by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), to abolish quotas, the Official Opposition, particularly the Members from Quebec and Ontario, have decided to set up a special committee to help men and women who work in shoe factories.

This morning, three of my colleagues who belong to this Quebec committee, the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), met with the workers of Montreal East factories.

Earlier today they told me what the owners and workers in that industry have to say about the current situation.

For openers, the owner of a Montreal East company would like to know why the Prime Minister and the Minister who is supposed to look after the unemployed have decided to force him to shut down and throw 240 workers out on the street.

Another lady, age 53, would like to know what the Prime Minister has to offer in terms of retraining programs. Where will she go? Will he retrain her in aeronautics? What other job will the Government find for her? This lady wants to work, not live off unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Quebec Conservative Members ought to wake up. And as was pointed out—

MEDICAL CARE

ACCESS BY NORTHERN ONTARIO RESIDENTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings of pride and disappointment that I rise today to comment on Ontario's new program to subsidize medically necessary travel for northerners. Pride, because after many years of persistent lobbying, northerners have finally had their legitimate concern recognized by Government. Disappointment because, as usual, the Government's response is inadequate.

Thirteen years ago my provincial colleague, Jim Foulds, began the fight for equal access to medical care for all citizens, regardless of where they live.

When I was elected to the provincial Legislature in 1975, I joined that fight, and we have carried it on ever since. We were ignored by the previous Conservative Government of Ontario and the federal Liberals. We were also ignored by the current federal Government.

However, we were able to make it a key item in the political agenda of the last provincial election when the Liberals, and at the last minute the Conservatives, realized—I suppose through their polling—that the people of northern Ontario were determined in their demand for this program and they both came on side.

The program was included in the accord signed between the Ontario Government and the provincial New Democrats and finally, after all these years, we have a program.

The program is not perfect, Mr. Speaker. The limit of 300 kilometres is too great to help many people who must travel within the north for even basic care, and the program does not allow for adequate companion travel or accommodation.

However, it is a glorious start. The onus is now on the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to ensure that similar programs are extended across the country so that—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS IN OTTAWA REGION—REDUCED FUEL COSTS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) announced a new natural gas agreement, thus completing the process begun in the Western Accord of replacing prices set by Government with prices set by the market.

The Minister indicated that consumers will pay lower gas prices this winter than last as a result of the agreement.

In 1982 a natural gas trunkline was constructed through my riding of Nepean-Carleton. Tapping into this line is in progress, and other initiatives by local gas distributors are making natural gas available throughout the Ottawa Valley.

Yesterday the Ottawa Gas Company carried a one-third page ad in the local newspaper outlining how consumers would benefit from the natural gas agreement. A portion of the ad reads:

The Government is on your side too.

Ottawa Gas also indicated to new customers that it is now able to guarantee savings in annual fuel costs.

● (1405)

This is further evidence of how the nation is benefiting from deregulation. It is in addition to the fact that oil and gas exploration in western Canada is at its highest level in history, and oil and gas investment intentions are up by about $2 billion. All of this provides energy security, lower costs, economic benefits, and jobs right across Canada.

CRIMINAL CODE

ALLEGED THEFT OF CHEESE IMPORT PERMIT FORMS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the Government for initiatives which it has taken to prevent future offences in the administration of cheese import permits. One initiative has been the actions it has taken since assuming office to deal with the apparent theft of permit forms. Within weeks of taking office, it initiated a police investigation. It made the missing forms invalid and unusable. It prepared new forms. It increased the care taken by Customs inspectors. It seized quantities of cheese believed to have been admitted under missing permits. A second initiative has been to take steps which will lead to a basic revision of the system for distributing new permits.

In the Metro Toronto area there is reason to believe that for several years there has been a black market in quotas. Dealers without quotas large enough to meet consumer demand are said to have bought permits from permit holders more interested in trafficking in quotas than in selling cheese. So common has it been that many in the industry accept it as a fact of life and ask: "What is the harm?" The harm is that such trafficking breaks down respect for the law. The Government has done right to initiate steps which will lead to a system for distributing permits that will be fair to legitimate dealers and maintain the rule of law.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN INDIA

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, your Government made public its decision to resume deporting Indians to their country of origin because it felt that the situation in Punjab had returned to normal. This decision will affect some 2,800 people. Well, yesterday, in India, someone tried to murder the moderate Sikh leader who had signed the agreement between Punjab and Mr. Gandhi a month ago. It is clear that peace has not really returned to that province.

During last September's election campaign, 1,000 people were arrested and, on election day, two persons died. A moderate party has come to power, which does not necessarily mean that social problems have miraculously disappeared. The social, economic and political contradictions are so blatant that one must have lost contact entirely with reality to believe that all problems have now been settled in India.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should up-date our investigatory methods in order to know what is actually happening abroad. Allow me to be somewhat skeptical about the political reports received from Canadians in India. Suffice it to say that even if the situation in Punjab had improved to some extent since the election date of September 25, the Government could have waited a little longer than a month before deciding that all social turmoil in that province has truly ended.

I think that three or four months from now, we will know definitely. In the meantime, a decision like yesterday's is premature indeed.

FILM INDUSTRY

REPORTED TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, with a Government known for its secrecy, we have sometimes to depend upon top-notch journalists for the news, and Sid Adilman of The Toronto Star may just have done it again.

His report on the government task force on films contains good news indeed.

Apparently the task force is to recommend that licensing rights to all movies and video cassettes distributed in Canada be held by majority Canadian owned and controlled companies. This will more than break the stranglehold American distributors have had in Canada. It would mean that producers would have some clout in bargaining with American distributors—"we'll show your films if you show ours".

Apparently the report also recommends a $50 million feature film fund, to be managed by Telefilm Canada, for made-for-cinema movies.

The trouble is that the Americans will not like these vigorous proposals. They have already said that movies are business, not culture, and it is a business which they do not want disturbed. Although every other country in the world supports its film industry and regulates distribution, the Americans do not want us to do so.

• (1410)

Will the Government listen to the American Ambassador or to our own arts community which is telling us to repatriate our own culture as we have done with the Constitution? The proposals of the task force on films as reported would go a long way to doing that. Is the Government listening, and will it act for Canadians?

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PARTICIPATION OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT IN FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT IN PARIS IN 1986

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Québec confirmed on November 8 last the conclusion of a Québec-Ottawa agreement on the participation of the Québec Government in a summit of francophone countries to be held in Paris in early 1986.

At that summit, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Québec Premier will be sitting side to side with the Fleur-de-lys and the Maple Leaf. Québec will be identified as Canada-Québec.

The summit will involve two separate sessions. At the first one, political and economic conditions around the world will be discussed and the Prime Minister of Canada will be the one and only spokesman to deal with the Canadian positions on those issues.

With respect to matters concerning Québec, after consultation and agreement with the Prime Minister of Canada, the Québec Premier will deal with them.

At the second session co-operation and development will be considered. The Québec government will then act as a full-fledged participant in the proceedings, in accordance with the terms and practices used by the Agence de coopération culturelle et technique.

We can only be pleased with the agreement concluded in the mutual respect of rights and aspirations of both parties.

This agreement shows that the Government wants to secure our national reconciliation. It puts an end to a flag war between Ottawa and Quebec which lasted for about twenty years.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—AID FOR WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, as a prairie Member I rise to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on his announcement yesterday of a $150 million Crop Disaster Assistance Program for farmers in western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Some 30,000 farmers will be eligible and payments will be based on yield deficiencies.

The Minister further indicated his intention to work with the provinces to revise the crop insurance programs to allow for additional disaster assistance coverage in the future.

Farmers are the backbone of the country and this announcement is further evidence to them that the Government is committed to agriculture.

Last year the Government participated in crop insurance payments in the amount of $530 million, and over $600 million this year. This spring we amended the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide a timely interim payment of $450 million, and a further final payment of $72 million is in the mail. We provided a $30 million contribution to help livestock producers maintain their breeding herds over last winter, and a further $48 million this summer for livestock drought assistance. We have reduced the price of farm fuels by more than 20 cents a gallon. We have implemented an immediate $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption on sales of qualifying farm land.

This Government cares about and has done more for agriculture in 14 months than the previous Government ever did or thought to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOUIS RIEL

REQUEST FOR POSTHUMOUS PARDON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we are now in November and one hundred years have gone by since the hanging of Louis Riel. I now ask that this Conservative Government exonerate the victim of the conspiracy of another Conservative Government.

[English]

For 100 years politicians and historians have shown that the Government purposely misrepresented the events known today as the Riel Rebellion. Letters and diaries of the participants and observers indicate unethical tactics to obtain political benefits from the rebellion. In a letter from the Marquis of Landsdowne to Prime Minister Macdonald on August 18, 1885, the Marquis wrote:

> You regard the recent outbreak in the Northwest as merely "domestic trouble" which should not be elevated to the rank of a rebellion. I am afraid we have all of us been doing what we could to elevate it to the rank of a rebellion and with so much success that we cannot now reduce it to the rank of a common riot.

The reason for the Macdonald Government's promotion of a common riot to a full blown rebellion was to win additional funding for the near bankrupt Canadian Pacific Railway. While the CPR benefited from the events of the summer of 1885, a Métis leader was hanged. Louis Riel, who died unnecessarily, deserves to be exonerated by the Government and recognized as a victim of wrongdoing.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPORTANCE OF ECONOMIC RELATIONSHIP

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, as the First Ministers meet in Halifax today a major item for discussion is the issue of trade enhancement with our largest trading partner, the United States of America.

As we enter trade negotiations there is some concern in both our countries about the challenge that faces us. I wish to address the people of both the United States and Canada as many of our American friends watch this session on the special C-SPAN broadcast today.

Canada and the United States cannot afford not to work together to enhance our trading relationship. We are each other's largest customer, best friend, and most loyal ally. The unique breadth and depth of our economic relationship offers unprecedented challenges and special opportunities. Protectionist measures implemented in the past have had disastrous effects on both sides of the border. The protectionist mentality is slowly re-emerging amid a world of change, and together we must combat this mentality in all of its forms.

The underlying reasons for seeking a new trading relationship are clear. We have both been struck close to home by the harsh realities of unemployment and the social waste that it brings. It is in this sense that economic renewal is not only a compelling objective shared by our two Governments but a national responsibility to all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE LATE MAX SALTSMAN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER MEMBER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a month ago almost to the day, Max Saltsman held a press conference to announce that he was dying of cancer. When he was asked about his reason for making the announcement, he said he was surprised by the national coverage and the attention he received. He went on to say: "What the hell, they are my people and they deserve to know the truth". Today Max Saltsman passed away.

Max came to Ottawa as a result of a by-election victory in 1964. He came from a business background and he explained his NDP association in these words:

> Businessmen can only prosper when people have enough money to buy their goods and services. The economic policies of our Party are designed to produce full employment and higher wages, eliminate poverty, increase assistance to older people, and generally to stimulate purchasing power. Since businessmen depend on the purchasing power of their customers, they stand to gain as much, or more, from NDP policies as everyone else.

As many Hon. Members know, Max Saltsman was a nonconformist. He always had a dream. Whether it was his fight for the under-privileged, or his relentless pursuit of a Caribbean island in order that people from Canada could go south to Canada, he was never without a cause.

We in this Party, and I am sure everyone in the House of Commons who knew Max Saltsman would want to join with us, extend our sympathy to his family and his friends. We say to them, as I am sure they know, that his commitment and influence on Parliament and our country will keep him always in our hearts.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I too rise today in sorrow to mourn the passing of a very fine man, Max Saltsman, and I would like to associate myself and my Party with the very eloquent tribute that was just paid by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Max Saltsman was a friend of mine. He had many sterling characteristics. He was a man of new ideas and old ideals. He was a man of reason, and he was a reasonable man. He was a man whom I respected most for his sense of generosity and that essential streak of decency which impressed so many of us who knew him.

I was fortunate enough that I myself never had to campaign against Max Saltsman. However, I can say from my experience in the community of Cambridge that he was an enormously popular man. He was a man who always made himself available to people. He cared about people to an extent that I cannot exaggerate. Therefore, today, on behalf of my Party and my community, I say that we are saddened by his loss.

• (1420)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the late Max Saltsman was a person of great ability and integrity. This was certainly recognized by his constituents who sent him to Ottawa election after election, from a riding which would not ordinarily be considered one from which a member of the New Democratic Party could be elected.

Max Saltsman was an independent minded person. He was a person who was willing to take a stand even if it was in the face of a different position taken by his own Party. The Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) recalls that the late Max Saltsman took a position generally in favour of that of the Government during the controversial period of the War Measures Act in 1970.

Max Saltsman was also an original thinker. Nowhere was this better demonstrated than in his long campaign to make the Turks and Caicos Islands part of Canada. Max Saltsman believed deeply in Canada and in its democratic parliamentary system. He delighted in the opportunities he had to lecture at universities about our country and its system of government.

Max was gifted with a gentle and subtle sense of humour which helped to make his many interventions in debate extremely effective and heard. Max was a strong, outspoken and courageous Canadian nationalist. Above all, he was a person of courage and this was nowhere better demonstrated than the way in which he faced his last and greatest battle.

On behalf of the Official Opposition, and on behalf of all those who knew and worked with him, I would like to extend our deepest sympathy to Max's family, and friends. We mourn his loss but certainly his example and his contribution will long live in the memories of the people in this House, and in the memories of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Would the House care to join me in a moment of tribute, of memory, and of sympathy?

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Question Period will take its normal 45 minutes.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Southwest Drought Saskatchewan Committee, in response to the so-called relief given yesterday by the Government, called for the resignation of the Member of Parliament who was responsible for the committee reviewing that drought, and quite rightly so.

The Government is spending billions of dollars to rescue uninsured, nameless, wealthy depositors in banks, yet can find only a fraction of that amount to relieve western farmers who have suffered from the worst drought in memory. Why did the Government not give the same degree of relief as in the case of the bank depositors—100 per cent—to western farmers who have been inflicted by the worst drought in living memory in Saskatchewan, southern parts of Manitoba, and Alberta?

● (1425)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member should know that the Hon. Member for Assiniboia did an extremely good job and was very conscientious.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: He happens to be a farmer, as I happen to be, and I do not think we need to be lectured by the Right Hon. Member on what is going on, on the farm.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what this Government has done on behalf of western farmers. When you add it up, it comes very close to $1 billion. When you add the drought assistance for the livestock industry to what was announced yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture, it comes to $200 million. The federal Government's share of the Western Grain Stabilization Act is approximately $350 million. The federal Government's share of crop insurance is something like $250 million. If you add in some of the other programs which everybody takes for granted, it comes close to $1 billion, to say nothing of the money provided through the Western Grain Transportation Act to assist producers in getting their crops to market.

Sure, everyone would like to have more, but let us put it into the context of what this Government has done and is doing for that area of the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the farmers are going to be impressed by that rhetoric. The Minister knows that for farmers suffering from drought the money was too little, too late, certainly in comparison with the relief given to the banks.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Agriculture promised the farmers that they would receive this relief before Christmas. We learned this morning from the senior Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture that it would take until after Christmas to prepare the forms, negotiate the payments, and the money would not be in the farmers' hands until seeding time in March.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what was said this morning in committee. Will the Minister explain how the farmers who have been wiped out by the drought will be able to survive over Christmas and the winter until they receive the payments?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the comment about being too little, too late, let me tell you what another Turner, this one happens to be the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, had to say about what the federal Government is doing. He said: "Saskatchewan farmers would have suffered a net loss of $450 million this year had they not been given government money." That tells you what another Turner is saying about what the Government has been doing on behalf of producers.

Let me assure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the forms will be available very quickly. That program will be administered by the PFRA, a well recognized and honourable institution in western Canada. The cheques will be in the mail just as quickly as we possibly can and I hope that, as quick as the farmers apply for it, they will have their money.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool also called for $50 per seeded acre and the Government has awarded somewhere between $5 and $10 per seeded acre. That is what the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool thinks of this particular offer.

AMOUNT OF ACREAGE PAYMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the face of the drought and grasshopper infestation this summer, in face of the fact that many farmers in southern Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta have suffered five, six and seven successive crop failures—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What country are we talking about?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —why would the Government grant an acreage payment insufficient to cover the spraying of their fields for grasshoppers?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member should know that this Government takes what it is doing on behalf of Canadian agriculture very, very seriously. What we are attempting to do is address some of the very severe problems caused by the fiscal irresponsibility of the previous Government which saw interest rates go as high as 22 per cent.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We also caused the drought!

Mr. Mayer: We are attempting to deal with the wrongheadedness and neglect which the previous Government showed toward agriculture. When the Hon. Member talks about the cost of spray he demonstrates, as far as a lot of farmers are concerned, that he does not know the difference between a pig's burp and an elevator.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma.

● (1430)

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

An Hon. Member: What's a pig's burp?

Mr. Keeper: What's the difference?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Here is another guy who needs a lesson.

ALLEGED THEFT OF CHEESE IMPORT PERMIT FORMS—COST TO DAIRY PRODUCERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is with regard to the stolen import certificates for cheese which have cost Canadian dairy producers $5.6 million in extra levies charged by the Canadian Dairy Commission. The Minister suggested on Tuesday that he just learned of this last week, yet in fact the Federation of Agriculture made a presentation to the Tory caucus on this over six months ago to demand action. Is the Government taking action to secure restitution from the firms which have illegally imported this cheese with these stolen certificates?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a very serious question on a very serious matter. I think he would agree that it is probably not appropriate to comment on it at much length except to say that it is under investigation by the RCMP. We view it as a very serious situation. As the Minister for International Trade said yesterday, as soon as the details are made known the appropriate action will be taken as long as we can ascertain where the blame lies. However, it is a very serious situation and I think we are all concerned about the length of time which is being taken to deal with it.

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking about the police investigation. I am simply asking if the Government is prepared to reimburse the dairy farmers immediately for the $5.6 million of extra levies which have been placed on them this year by the Canadian Dairy Commission, and to seek restitution from the importing firms later. Is the Government willing to do that on behalf of the dairy producers who have suffered because of this incident?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member asks a fair question. As soon as we are made aware of all the details and facts involved in this unfortunate situation, I think the intent of the Government will be to ensure that no producer is wrongly or unfairly injured as a result of what, so far, appears to be a very unfortunate and, hopefully, isolated case.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is with regard to Government policy. There is great confusion today among prairie farmers as to their importance in the Government's listing of priorities. Depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank can get 100 cents on the dollar when they get in trouble. Why is it that when farmers get in trouble they are only offered 10 cents on the dollar?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Opposition would get it through their heads that the depositors include municipal governments, credit unions, labour unions, religious, charitable and ethnic organizations, and many other individual Canadians as well as individual Canadian companies.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give us the names.

Mr. Mayer: Ordinary people are getting their deposits back.

Ms. Copps: Ordinary millionaires.

Mr. Mayer: We are very concerned about them as we are about Canadian agriculture. If one looks at what has been contributed by the federal Government on behalf of western agriculture this year, it is very close to $1 billion.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has very kindly given us a list of some people who are on the 100 per cent priority list. Can he explain why farmers are on the 10 per cent priority list?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Your premise is wrong.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is absolutely wrong. To the extent that there were farmers who were depositors in some of those banks, they would be getting back 100 per cent on their deposits the same as anybody else.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Sit down.

Mr. Mayer: They laugh. There are a lot of farmers who are involved in credit unions. Members should know that credit unions are a very big factor in financial institutions in western Canada. I believe we have accepted our responsibility. As I said, everyone would like to do more, but if we start to do more interest rates will go up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: For a farmer in western Canada, the 3 per cent reduction in interest rates as a result of the Government's policies will mean a reduction of $3,000 for every $100,000 of indebtedness. That is a significant benefit to western farmers as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This arrogance is contagious.

FARMERS' LOSSES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps if I put the question another way the Minister will comprehend it a little better. Does he not see that keeping farmers viable will prevent the kinds of problems we had with the Northland and Canadian Commercial Bank! Does he not see that that is the reason for some of these bank failures? Why not attack the problem at its root? Why give only 10 cents on the dollar to farmers? We must head off these problems instead of waiting until it is no longer possible to save the economy. Why does the Government give 100 cents on the dollar to credit unions and banks while ignoring the needs of the workers and producers in the country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very surprised if the Hon. Member would call the $450 million interim payment made last spring under the Western Grain Stabilization Act ignoring farmers.

Mr. Althouse: Did they not pay for it?

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member tells me that we should be attacking the root causes of the concerns of western banks.

Mr. Benjamin: No, western farmers.

Mr. Mayer: That is exactly what the Government has done with its energy policy. That is the kind of thing that we will continue to do. To the extent that farmers are businessmen, which they are, as there are reductions in interest rates they will all benefit from the policies of the Government.

FINANCE

ATTENDANCE OF DEPUTY MINISTER AT BUSINESSMEN'S DINNER—COMMUNICATION GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In the "policy guidelines for public servants", Communications with the Public, issued by the Prime Minister on November 23 it is stated: "Off-the-record background briefings will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances and must have prior ministerial approval".

With regard to the dinner organized by the chief Tory fundraiser, David Angus, at which there was a briefing of businessmen by the Deputy Minister of Finance, when and how did the Minister of finance give his approval for such a briefing, and what were the exceptional circumstances that justified it?

Mr. Foster: A thousand dollars each.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the question gives me the opportunity to refer to yesterday's question of the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount in which he made allegations that all of those in attendance were members of and contributors to the Five Hundred Club. That statement, Sir, was absolutely false. It goes to show—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Answer my question.

Mr. Nielsen: —the extent to which they are prepared to go to try to erect a straw man out of absolutely nothing.

Mr. Deans: Maybe he will answer your question tomorrow.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give us the list.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon gentleman's question was answered yesterday.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): No it wasn't.

Mr. Nielsen: It was answered last week. If he persists, I will read the answer to him again. It was a perfectly legitimate meeting for perfectly legitimate purposes. Such meetings will be repeated in the search for consultation and advice from all parts of the country.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I must repeat my question. Exactly when and how did the Minister of Finance give the approval required by the Prime Minister's own guidelines to the special briefing given by the Deputy Minister of Finance at the dinner organized by David Angus, and what were the exceptional circumstances? If he does not give a straight answer to that question, we will know what he is hiding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): There is nothing, Sir, being hidden whatsoever.

Mr. Gauthier: Tune in tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member is trying to link guidelines to press briefings which have no connection whatsoever. The fact is that a dinner was held for the purpose—

Ms. Copps: Publish the list.

Mr. Nielsen: —of consulting business persons and soliciting information, views, and opinions from the private sector. What is so wrong with talking to the people?

Mr. Gauthier: Publish the list.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—BASIS FOR PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board and is with regard to the drought assistance plan. As the Minister knows, the farmers asked for $50 an acre and are only getting about $5 per acre. I have had calls from farmers this morning who want to know how the Government is going to make the pay-out under this new program. Will it be based, as the Minister suggested, on a three-year average which, in the rural municipality of Bengough, comes to about 13 bushels per acre, or on a more accurate ten-year average which comes to around 23 bushels an acre? Which will it be, a ten-year average or a three-year average? If it is three years, the farmer will be short changed.

● (1440)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): First, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that under the formula to be used it is my understanding that the maximum payment in the most severely affected areas could be as high as $15.

He should also know that we are sensitive to the types of questions he has raised. For instance, if it is necessary to use crop insurance figures and they are based on previous production, it becomes very difficult to qualify. These things will be taken into consideration so that the people who have suffered the most from drought over a number of years will not be penalized. We will treat them as fairly as we possibly can, relative to others who have only had one or two crop failures.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister has not answered the question.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, why are the farmers being short changed? They asked for $50 an acre and they are getting about $5. The banks were not short changed; neither was Syncrude nor Dome. Why were the farmers short changed? Was it "Erik the Axe" cutting back the budget again?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talks about Dome Petroleum I assume that he is talking about some alleged tax breaks. He should also know that Canadian farmers have an opportunity on an ongoing basis to defer grain sales in order to assist them in taxation matters. He should know that at the end of most calendar years there is as much as a billion dollars in grain sales deferred in order to assist farmers in their tax planning. He should know that this action is taken on behalf of farmers to assist them with their taxation problems.

Perhaps he wants to consider the amount of money that is being put in by the provincial Governments that are co-operating with us, especially Alberta and Saskatchewan. Unfortunately, I cannot say as much for my own Province of Manitoba. However, when you consider the money being put in by the federal Government and the two provincial Governments, it comes very close to covering the $2.5 billion loss that is estimated on the Prairies as a result of the drought this summer.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are hearing from the Minister that Liberal tax policy toward farmers was pretty good.

In the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the rumours about the future of de Havilland that are now being reported in some detail in the media.

Will he bring the House up to date and indicate whether an agreement is in the works to sell de Havilland Aircraft Corporation so that it will become a wholly owned branch plant of Boeing in Seattle? Will he also confirm that a Canadian group, the Rimgate Group, which wanted to put in a bid, has not been given a fair opportunity to do so and has not been given the details that were given to Boeing to permit it to do so?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman would not expect me to answer in any other way than to say that any announcement with respect to de Havilland will be made in appropriate terms at the appropriate time.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY EXAMINATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there is to be a sale of de Havilland, will Parliament be given an opportunity to examine that sale before it takes place? Will it also be able to examine the alleged multimillion dollar finder's fee which is to be paid to Burns Fry in connection with that transaction?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, quite apart from the hypothetical nature of the question, I will not add any fuel to the vivid imagination of the hon. gentleman and the speculation which he has propagated.

REFUGEES

RIGHT OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS TO ORAL HEARINGS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Immigration, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who, I understand, is taking those questions which I have discussed with the officials of the Department this morning.

On April 4 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that everyone in Canada who claims refugee status, including Sikhs and Tamils, has the right to an oral hearing before those who will make the decision which, if it is mistaken, could send him or her to imprisonment or death.

Will the Minister assure the House today that his Government will not remove from Canada those Sikhs or any other persons who have made refugee claims and who have not had their oral hearings, regardless of whether they have completed all other legal procedures?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the actions taken by the Minister responsible, the processing of those who have claimed refugee status in Canada is now the same as for all nationals who have sought refuge in Canada. The process being used for the Indian nationals whom the Hon. Member mentioned is the same process that is used for other nationals.

SITUATION OF TAMILS IN CANADA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered my question but has chosen a different question that I did not ask. Let me be more specific. While the Tamils are being killed by Sinhalese troops in Sri Lanka, it is reliably reported that the Government of Canada has agreed with the Governments of France, the United Kingdom, Netherlands, and Switzerland to begin in December removing Tamils from Canada and sending them back to Sri Lanka.

Will the Minister assure us that no Tamil who has claimed refugee status in Canada will be removed from Canada without an oral hearing?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat my answer to the Hon. Member. The process that is being used for those nationals who have sought refuge in Canada is the process that is available to all who seek refuge in Canada. That is the policy that has been enunciated by the Government, and it will continue to be the policy.

INDUSTRY

IMPACT ON SUSAN SHOE INDUSTRIES OF IMPORT QUOTA REMOVAL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister for International Trade. This week, Susan Shoes Industries, makers of Cougar shoes, sold its Oakville plant and shelved plans for Hamilton expansion as a direct result of the Government's decision to abandon the Canadian shoe industry. What can the Minister say to Joan Malcom of Burlington who not only lost her job but saw two of her daughters lose their jobs as a direct result of the Government's announcement last week?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what the Minister for International Trade said in the House very often. The tribunal studying shoe quotas reported to the Government and we have acted on increasing protection for Canadian consumers. We are only protecting that part of the industry that we believe cannot compete, while the rest of the industry can. We will be making appropriate policies for people in the event that they are displaced.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): The Minister knows that for every dime saved a dollar will be spent in added costs of unemployment insurance and other lost revenues to the Government.

Sixty-five per cent of the workers in the footwear industry are women. How can the Minister justify annihilating an estimated 20,000 Canadian jobs so that some Canadians can wear cheaper Guccis?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this tribunal was set up by the former Government and we have acted responsibly in response to its results. I think it is time that the Hon. Members opposite recognize this.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPACT ON WOMEN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first, may I welcome back to the front benches the Hon. Member for Frontenac.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: I trust that his contribution to the free trade debate will help us.

Conspicuous by its absence from the list of Government free trade studies was any analysis of the impact of these negotiations on women in the economy, despite the strongly expressed fears of the National Action Committee on this issue. Will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why the Government has not commissioned studies to examine how women may be hurt by free trade and why it has not formally consulted with the National Action Committee about this issue?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the preamble to that question or the allegations contained in it. I believe that the Hon. Member was here yesterday when the Secretary of State for External Affairs completely and fully answered questions with respect to studies undertaken by the Government.

Mr. Langdon: I think that we may have listened more carefully to his answers than you did because they did not deal with the question of studies of the impact on women.

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I ask my question quite specifically because the National Action Committee has told us this. Why has there been absolutely no discussion with NAC, the umbrella group for women, about the free trade impact on them? Why is the Government ignoring a key part of our economy?

● (1450)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I do not accept that premise, Mr. Speaker. I have said once before that the answers of the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not preclude the possibility that that kind of paper exists. In any event, the method of consultation adopted by the Government includes very much an ongoing process, and does not mean the end of the consultation process with one study.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LAKE ONTARIO—UNITED STATES PROGRAM TO CLEAN UP CHEMICAL DUMP

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary.

An announcement was made this week regarding the Hyde Park chemical waste dump located in New York State. Can the Parliamentary Secretary advise the House whether the Government is satisfied that this clean-up program will solve the problem, bearing in mind that seepage from this dump is contaminating Lake Ontario and endangering the drinking water of the four million Canadians who draw their water from Lake Ontario?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment has initiated an assessment of the proposed settlement agreement. This agreement is now a public document for a period of 60 days before a court in the United States will consider it and allow it to be passed.

On the positive side of the proposal is the fact that after six years of delay we now have a containment proposal, and a proposal that will see elimination and destruction of some of the chemicals that would have seeped into the river and into the lake.

Our response will be seeking assurance that the techniques suggested will be effective in relieving the pressures, and in keeping with our position that we must see complete removal and destruction of the chemicals seeping into the river.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to welcome back the Hon. Member for Frontenac, and I am convinced that, after living through the stress of knowing that he could lose his job, he will vigorously defend the men and women who work in the footwear industry.

My question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. This morning, my colleagues for Richmond, Ville d'Anjou and Saint-Maurice met with representatives of the footwear industry and some of its employees, and a management representative whom we met on this occasion would like to know why the Government has condemned his industry to death, causing the loss of 240 jobs.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of this industry dying off. I think the kind of fear and panic that is being spread by the Hon. Member is not helpful to a discussion of the issue.

INQUIRY WHERE 53-YEAR-OLD LAID-OFF EMPLOYEE WILL BE RE-EMPLOYED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister were willing to get down from her ivory tower and to meet real people, she would see that this is not simply panic.

My supplementary is for the same Minister. A 53-year-old footwear worker who will lose her job would like the Minister to tell her in what occupation she will be retrained and where another job will be found for her.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, has indicated to this House before that, in the event of any disruption within the industry, the Government will be looking at active policies to help people.

Ms. Copps: People are losing their jobs.

Mrs. McDougall: It is important for all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, that we have a realistic and competitive industry. Where people are hurt, this Government has already made a commitment that it will look after them.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

RADIOACTIVE WASTE DISPOSAL—INQUIRY CONCERNING SITE LOCATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister will probably know of the concern expressed by many residents of Manitoba about the latest application by Atomic Energy of Canada to acquire more Crown land near its Lac du Bonnet site for hydrogeological research with respect to disposal of radioactive waste.

Given that the concerns of many of those residents have to do with whether or not Manitoba may become an eventual site for a radioactive garbage dump, can the Minister now assuage those fears by ruling out, once and for all, the possibility of Manitoba becoming the final site for radioactive waste disposal?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You already have Howard Pawley.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Member's question is hypothetical. AECL, which is the agency involved, has already said that it has no plans to use these sites in Manitoba for the nuclear waste disposal which the Hon. Member discusses.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to hear it from the Minister, I want to hear it from the Government, that Manitoba has been ruled out for a radioactive garbage dump. I do not want to hear it from AECL, which has a habit of lying through its teeth anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I want to hear from the Minister, from the federal Government, not that there are no plans at this time nor any of that double-talk. I want to know that Manitoba has been ruled out completely.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are no plans, there are no applications, there is no movement in this direction, so my answer to the first question will stands. It is a hypothetical question.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it concerns the Young Offenders Act. I wish to applaud the Solicitor General for his prompt and sensitive response to the concerns expressed by many Canadians, including police forces and other people.

Since the Solicitor General wisely arranged to hold public hearings across the country, would he share with us some of his preliminary views about the Young Offenders Act? What changes might be made and when may they occur?

Ms. Copps: Where is your apple?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do that. We have had a series of consultations in various centres across the country. There is another scheduled for Moncton on Monday.

As a result of these consultations it has been made clear to us that there are deficiencies in the Act as it relates, in some cases, to records provisions, and in other cases relating to open and closed custody and various other administrative issues. I think the goal of all of those involved is to ensure that the philosophy espoused by Parliament, that young people should be held accountable for their actions, is made to work well and work wisely, and that is our intention.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Last December the Government, in a press release, announced two very important steps with regard to Japanese Canadian redress, first, that it would enter into negotiations regarding compensation with the community, second, that it would negotiate with and through the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Since it appears this week that those promises have fallen by the wayside, can the Minister reassure this House and the Japanese Canadian community that the Government will maintain its promise to enter into official negotiations with the National Association? Is the Minister prepared to give us this guarantee?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I can see that the Hon. Member is grandstanding again, because he asked the exact question in committee two days ago. I answered it in detail then, but I will be happy to answer again.

Our Government—unlike the Liberal Government—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Outrageous arrogance.

Mr. Jelinek: —the previous Government, which said it would never apologize to the Japanese community—will, in fact, be making a statement of apology. We will be putting together a redress package on behalf of the Japanese Canadians who experienced the atrocities some 43 years ago.

It is my view that I have to get as broad a spectrum of input into my deliberations before making recommendations to Cabinet. I made that clear to the National Association of Japanese Canadians in several discussions with them. They understood. I am getting that input from the provinces and other interested parties—

Mr. Caccia: This is a speech.

Mr. Jelinek: This is not just a Japanese-Canadian problem, Mr. Speaker. It is a Canadian problem and it will be dealt with accordingly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEGOTIATIONS INQUIRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, every problem that we treat in this House is a Canadian problem and it is shared by everybody.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: I would like to ask a supplementary question. This Minister is misleading the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: —when he said that the Japanese community is understanding of his position. His Prime Minister and his Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Please put the question.

Mr. Marchi: Will the Government maintain its commitment to negotiate officially and not discuss the issue in airport lobbies? Will he tell us whether he is going to negotiate with the National Association as he said he would, or is this simply another broken promise by the Tory regime?

• (1500)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Hon. Member who represents a Party which has said that it would never even discuss the issue, let alone apologize, has so much interest in this matter.

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question.

Mr. Jelinek: The Prime Minister of Canada, when he was Leader of the Opposition, made a commitment. That commitment still stands. However, it would be irresponsible of me, as the Minister responsible, to discuss these matters with Canadians and to make a decision before I have had input from the broadest cross-section of Canadians as is possible, which includes the National Association of Japanese Canadians. If the Hon. Member has a suggestion, I would be glad to listen to him.

ALLEGED THEFT OF CHEESE IMPORT CERTIFICATES—REQUEST THAT B.C. CHEESE PRODUCERS BE COMPENSATED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. Irrespective of whatever police investigation is taking place into the stolen import certificates, can the Minister give B.C. cheese producers a guarantee that any losses which they may have experienced as a result of stolen import certificates will be covered, either by the Government or by the importers of the illegal cheese?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member asks a fair question. I do not think he would expect a total guarantee to be given in this kind of setting. However, I have said that the Government is willing to look at it and try to do the best it can, to see that no one is taken advantage of financially for a circumstance over which they had no control. We are sensitive to the concern. We will take everyone's concern, including that of the Hon. Member on behalf of B.C. cheese producers, into account. I might mention that the same concerns have been raised by our own Members from British Columbia as well.

LOSSES SUFFERED BY PRODUCERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in light of the sensitivity which the Minister declares and the concern which he says his caucus expresses, does he think that it is fair for the innocent parties in this scam to bear the loss of $4 million to $6 million because of this illegal importation of cheese?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, before we move along the lines of giving guarantees, I think it is very important that the total situation be understood and that the total facts be known. Referring to the import of his question as to whether it is fair, certainly all of us sympathize with that and do the best we can to address the situation so that, I say again, people who lose financially through no fault of their own are not unduly disadvantaged. We are sensitive to that and will do the best we can in that circumstance.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

ADMISSION OF UNITED STATES MAGAZINE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Customs and Excise. It concerns the December issue of the American Hustler magazine which was allowed into Canada by his officials. This particular issue depicts and describes sex in a manner which is violent, degrading and dehumanizing to women. It contains scenes of bondage, sex with urination, sex with violence, sex with an apparent child, and extreme racism. Its entry into Canada is in clear violation of Section 159 of the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff. In view of the fact that the magazine is illegal, how and why was a magazine which is offensive and degrading to women allowed into Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this matter to my attention. The Minister is not in the House today because he is at the First Ministers' Conference. I will raise it with him and with his officials and get back to the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Nunziata: The fact remains that the magazine was allowed into Canada. Someone fell asleep at the switch.

REQUEST THAT MAGAZINE BE REMOVED FROM STORE SHELVES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Justice. Will he immediately instruct provincial Attorneys General to remove the offensive magazine from the shelves and to prosecute distributors and retailers who refuse to do so?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Justice I will gladly take notice of that question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns a matter of government policy. Various U.S. spokesmen, including Clayton Yeutter and key Congressmen, have urged Canada to accept voluntary export restraints on lumber sales to the United States. Will the Government, now that it has accepted talks with the U.S. on this issue, state clearly and without equivocation that Canada will not accept such voluntary restraints?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question was answered yesterday, in a similar question, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was asked, not answered.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear groans. If my hon. colleagues in the House would like me to read those answers into the record again, I will willingly take up the time of the House to do that. He was here; he heard the answer.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was a non answer.

NATURE OF TALKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, yes, I was here and I did hear the answer, and I did not hear it today, the one I am looking for.

An Hon. Member: Ask the right question.

Mr. Angus: The Government of Canada will have talks with the United States on lumber. If the question of voluntary restraints is not on the table in those talks, then what will they be discussing?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Trade issues, Sir.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—UNITED STATES CLEAN-UP PROPOSAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. It has now been six weeks since the Minister of the Environment received a very specific proposal from his American counterpart on how to clean up the dump sites along the Niagara River. There has been silence ever since. When will this veil of silence be lifted so that Canadians will know how their health and their water will be protected by the Government?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the working group, which includes representatives of the Province of Ontario and members of the federal department of the Environment, has been working ever since the time of the first meeting with Mr. Thomas and the Minister some six weeks ago. Its members are now down to a point where they are considering in detail four or five specific proposals, which I understand can in fact be agreed upon. We hope to be able to release those by the beginning of the year.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary assure the House that the final package will be in keeping with the commitment and promise made last May to the predecessor of the present Minister of the Environment?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, not being entirely clear on the exact premise of the question, I do not think I can give the Hon. Member that complete assurance. I can tell him that we will be acting on behalf of the Canadian people who will be required to use that water in the future. We will be doing our best, in co-operation with the Province of Ontario, to ensure that the standards which we all want are met.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on November 27, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott) does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

I am in receipt of a notice of a desire to raise a point of order by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

POINT OF ORDER

ANSWER OF MR. NIELSEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order with respect to today's Question Period. When I asked a question of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) with regard to the policy guidelines for public servants in communications with the public, issued by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on November 23, 1984, the Deputy Prime Minister said that my question had already been asked and answered.

I carefully checked Hansard, and I found nowhere a question pertaining to these guidelines, and nowhere an answer as to whether or not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) specifically gave the permission required by the guidelines and demonstrated exceptional circumstances. These guidelines, by the way, apply not only to dealings with the press but to dealings with the public generally. I feel this must be noted in terms of the proper order and conduct of the Question Period.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that I must say that that is not in fact a point of order. I invite him to use the late show procedure if he wishes to pursue the matter further.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader the customary question as to the business of the House which he proposes for the coming week.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from Ville Saint-Pierre in my constituency. In these petitions the petitioners ask that the Government of Canada abandon its regressive decision to deindex family allowances. This decision, if implemented, would further reduce the buying power of the truly needy in Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents who ask the Government to rescind the policy with respect to the calculation of retirement benefits and the availability of unemployment insurance payments.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions. The first is from petitioners in my constituency. I have another two petitions from Wascana Hospital in Regina signed by 37 people. I have a further 19 petitions from citizens of the City of Regina. All petitioners in these 22 petitions pray and call upon the House to maintain full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases, for which they, and I, will forever pray.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of western Canadians who are concerned about the Government's cut-back in the cost of living increase to family allowances and who are asking the Government to reinstate the full indexation of the universal family allowance. They also ask the Government to rescind a number of unfair tax increases which were introduced in the last Budget and which are presently before the House.

DEVELOPMENT OF TOURIST INDUSTRY IN WELLAND CANAL AREA

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition today on behalf of 600 residents of my riding and other areas in the Niagara Peninsula. They call upon Parliament to look closely at the potential which exists in the Niagara Peninsula and, more particularly, on the Welland Canal lands and recreational waterway for attracting more tourism to Canada and to develop lands toward that end.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions on two particular topics. The first group are petitioners who request that the Government investigate their concerns about the test range at Nanoose Bay before further negotiations are proceeded with.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): The second group of petitions are from citizens of the Prince Albert district who are concerned about the deindexation of universal family allowances. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from residents of Winnipeg, in particular—people in my riding, who take note of the fact that the deindexation of family allowances will not be offset by the child tax credit and that even the poorest of families will be worse off by the year 1990. These citizens call upon the Government to rescind its efforts to deindex the family allowance.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present today a petition from the Casselman area which was given to me by Mrs. Nicole Leduc of that community.

The petition asks the Government of Canada to reverse its decision about deindexing family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of my constituency in the Towns of Lanigan, Humboldt, Drake, Meacham, Plunkett and Colonsay who point out that in their opinion deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair tax on women and families with children. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present several petitions dealing with a common subject. The first is from Local 6500 of the United Steelworkers of America. It has some 85 signatures.

The next petition is from bank clerks of quebec which contains some 75 signatures, 37 of them collected by Mr. John R. Syme of North Bay.

The next petition contains 30 signatures from the Ontario Retail Council of Ontario. The next petition is from the Lethbridge City Fire Fighters' Union with 40 signatures.

All of these individuals deplore the fact that the Government intends to change the Unemployment Insurance Act effective January 1, 1986, whereby pension income will be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. They call upon the Government to rescind this particular provision.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned before lunch, I was trying to demonstrate that the philosophy on which the Budget was based, which we find again in Bill C-84, consists in giving tax benefits to large corporations, to the wealthy, and in significantly increasing the tax burden on middle income taxpayers.

I also touched on the child tax credit issue, and I wanted to point out that the combined effect of Bill C-84 and the legislation on partial deindexation of family allowances would be that Canadian families would lose altogether $1,210,000 between now and the end of this decade. In other words, the child tax credit will provide certain benefits for families, but the reduction in tax exemptions and deindexation of family allowances will represent more than twice the amount of those benefits. If total benefits amount of $1,100,000, there will be a $2,300,000 drop in income as a result of the combined effect of reducing and deindexing the exemption and deindexing family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, if I may refer to the debate in committee on Bill C-70, we must consider the fact that the provinces, with the exception of Quebec, will also have a $100,000 increase per year in revenue at the expense of middle income families. These figures were taken from the debate in committee on November 19, 1985, and were given by the Deputy Minister for Health. Therefore, the real loss for Canadian families will be enormous.

Mr. Speaker, finally, in the few minutes I have left I would like to comment on the provisions of Bill C-84 dealing with the capital gains tax exemption. We have often said in the House, and I have maintained this outside the House as well, that in this legislation the very principle of the capital gains tax exemption is unfair and that the legislation fails to meet the objectives laid down by the Government in its Budget policy.

Among the measures proposed by the Government, the $500,000 exemption will give the wealthiest in our society tax benefits totalling $4.5 billion between now and the end of this decade. The exemption is unconditional, and so we have no assurance that the tax benefits thus enjoyed by our wealthiest taxpayers will go to finance new investment.

Last night, for example, I watched television and listened to my friend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) referring to tax statistics. He said it is not true that rich people would benefit most from this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I would refer all Hon. Members of the House to page 277 of the 1985 edition of documents on tax statistics. One can see how tax benefits are shared and who are the people who will benefit most. They show as well in which sector of activities the benefits will be most generous. There is no doubt that people who deal in real estate stand to gain most and, as it happens, real estate transactions are the source of huge capital gains. That was the point raised by my colleague from Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston). I think the Hon. Member for Mississauga would be well advised to re-read those statistics very carefully before making the kind of statement we heard from him last night.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, we are not the only ones to speak against this unfair and unequitable measure to average income taxpayers. On May 31, not long after the Budget, the Globe and Mail reported the comments made by academics, tax experts and accountants who said that this measure was inappropriate under the circumstances and that it would not deliver the expected benefits.

More recently the Financial Post, definitely not a leftist publication, gave a very detailed report on the remarks made by tax experts attending a Canadian Tax Foundation meeting. Here is what those people said: Despite the fact that those consultants . . . Perhaps I should quote the Financial Post in English:

[English]

They will earn hefty fees from the fancy tax planning the exemption will spawn. But even so, many of the 1,500 accountants and lawyers attending last week's Canadian Tax Foundation conference here criticized the proposal as ill-conceived and poorly designed.

They now think it likely to spawn dozens of new tax avoidance schemes that could lead to pressure for big modifications to the exemption, or some sort of substitute.

Further on, the article reads:

However, after studying the proposal in more detail, the experts say it is badly flawed—

The exemption has been criticized in some circles as a gift to the wealthy. But that's not the primary concern of the tax technicians. They're alarmed that the proposal will create additional avenues for nonproductive tax abuse, and will foster more complexity in the tax system.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I could go on quoting experts who state outright that the Conservative Government's proposal to exempt from taxation up to $500,000 in capital gains is not only unfair politically and philosophically, but also technically unapplicable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, again it is my duty to rise to speak to the measures the Government has put before us today in the form of Bill C-84. This Bill enshrines the Government's present intentions regarding the tax system and the fiscal situation and it brings into concrete form many of the measures which I and my Party criticized and will continue to criticize.

Many of the measures that were announced in the May, 1985, Budget we saw as being regressive and retrograde in terms of economic opportunity and equality for Canadians. We saw them as being essentially ill conceived and only attacking the deficit, something we all acknowledge is a problem, from the single angle of adjusting the tax system. We also saw these measures as ignoring much of the revenue potential that exists in very real form in the Canadian economy. As well, we saw them as perpetuating some of the injustices that were instituted by the late unlamented Liberal Government which completely lopped off the upper end of the once progressive income tax system.

In examining these proposed changes, we should examine not only the form but the substance of them. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), quoted from a report in the The Financial Post on the rather ill-conceived capital gains tax exemption that the Government is proposing. It is very interesting to see, after the way in which members of the Progressive Conservative Party vaunted their ties with the business community and bragged about trumpeted their connections, that they should bring in a proposal which is manifestly generous to the upper-income levels, particularly in that business community, and yet should now be seeing that proposal criticized in a lively and intelligent fashion by the chartered accountants and tax practitioners. It must in some way seem a bitter pill for Government members to swallow when they notice that something that they thought was such a great pay-off for their support bloc is now being looked at in the manner of a gift horse. I think it does great credit to the practitioners who stand to benefit most from this fertile and fecund source of potential new loopholes that they are themselves prepared to criticize them.

I believe my Party could have lived with adjustments for inflation within the capital gains tax system. We all acknowledge that a large part of the capital gains that have been taxed over the past 15 years since capital gains taxes were introduced was due to inflation and was not fair game for tax purposes in the single sense that it simply resulted from a deterioration in the value of money vis-à-vis other commodities, goods and investment vehicles. It did not result from bona fide appreciation or gain that the taxpayer could tangibly use for an investment in a similar vehicle or commodity.

We might even have been persuaded to swallow the idea that capital gains should continue to be taxed at a rate of only 50 per cent. Of course, this is something that flew in the face of the wisdom of the Benson Commission which made the statement, deathless in its wisdom, "a buck is a buck is a buck". I believe we might have stomached that break, and it was a break. It was a break because it only taxed half of the actual income. I know that I could have persuaded members of my Party to approve of something which was one part of the Income Tax Act but was taken out by the Liberal Government, the concept whereby those who realized capital gains were only taxed when the gains were actually received. As we know, of course, the previous Liberal Government decided that that was a little too close to commercial reality to be allowed to persist. It decided that capital gains tax should be paid over three years no matter if the proceeds of the sale were received over 5, 10, 20 or 25 years.

I do not believe it can be said that my Party has in any way taken an unreasonable stance toward capital gains as an income phenomena. I believe, for example, that those inflation adjustment regulations should have been incorporated into the Income Tax Act, that we should have extended the principle which was granted to farm capital gains, that a gain should not be taxable until it was invested in a different medium, until it was realized for the personal consumption of the investor or until it was taken for other purposes by an investing corporation. The gain should remain non-taxable while being reinvested into a similar property as so many of us find in the common practice of trading up on homes. I suppose that exists in other sectors of the economy, for example, trading up in farms or the trading up of hotel and motel owners into properties which require more money to purchase. I think that is something we could have gone along with. However, the Government did not look at any of these intelligent alternatives. It decided it would take a broadaxe approach, that it would take a decisive measure within the capital gains tax system by granting this lifetime exemption. Well, the game is up, Mr. Speaker. This has had some detailed study and has been weighed in balance by those who are probably best capable of doing so, and it was found to be wanting. I, too, would like to quote from The Financial Post report which states:

> It (the exemption) is going to be abusive, and there will be many varieties of abuse. These won't be understood for some time because of their complexity.

That I believe is the kernel of this problem. We have seen what happened to the previous Liberal Government with the scientific research tax credits which were granted. Thank heaven, this Government did at least have the sense to put an end to those shenanigans. The way in which those things were being traded around the Canadian economy, we were going to need some form of commodity exchange just to keep track and regulate the trafficking in those research tax credits. It was the same with other little loopholes the Liberal Government chose to introduce. However, in having put an end to one form of folly and one source of exemptions, mostly unearned, and after putting an end to one form of trading in paper and property shuffling, the Government in its wisdom, finite as that wisdom is, decided that it would introduce a lifetime capital gains exemption for people up to the level of $1 million. That really is not going to encourage investment in Canada. We know that this capital gains exemption will apply to an investor's property wherever that property may be. This capital gains tax exemption could be used to cover the profit on land in Florida, be it swamp or drained land. It could be used to cover the profits on a condominium in Hawaii or a share in a future film being produced in Hollywood, California. I am afraid it is going to be a boondoggle. The people who are examining this have only just plumbed the surface of potential abuse of that tax exemption.

I believe the Government decided it would do something which would be attractive to the constituency which did so much to elect it. I believe it decided that it would introduce a measure which, certainly on the surface, was very simple and understandable. I think we are only just beginning to realize that what may appear clear and straightforward superficially can be a real mine field and fertile ground for the sharp practice of tax avoidance shading into tax evasion.

This much having been said, I do not want any Member of this House to say that I rose to speak without saying something good about the changes enshrined in Bill C-84. I am glad to see the Government has picked up on the idea of the Fonds de solidarité des travailleurs du Québec and has enshrined a similar measure in Bill C-84. I think that is a socially worthwhile objective. I feel that the opportunity to invest one's wages in labour-sponsored venture capital organizations in one which will increase understanding of the roles of the different players in our economy and I feel that is a worth-while objective in itself. Hopefully, it will also lead those who will be in receipt of the investment funds to understand a little more of the perspective, needs and aspirations of those who will be providing them.

Looking at the RRSP provisions, I believe it is fair to say that some increase in the limits was called for and the best thing would have been for the previous Government, obviously, to have indexed those limits to inflation rather than setting them in dollar terms. What we are looking at now, frankly, is a system which will again provide significant tax sheltering opportunities which will only be available to the upper-income earner. I feel that the limits which are proposed are somewhat excessive in that context.

The investment of pension plans in small businesses I think again has some considerable merit. The concern of the New Democratic Party hinges more on the nature and extent of the opportunity which is being granted than on the basic idea that underlies that opportunity. We see, for example, that a pension fund will be allowed to invest $3 outside of Canada for every $1 it puts into a small business investment corporation. I have to question whether we really want to make that sort of measure, to that degree, available. I think, frankly, that when we see the nature and extent of capital, commodity, and property investment markets in the United States, we can understand that there is a very considerable attraction toward investing in that country. However, I think we also have to bear in mind that it is those same investment opportunities which induce capital flows.

I believe that we do have a problem in Canada with the extent to which Canadian capital is invested outside of this country and, conversely, the extent to which investment in Canada depends on imported foreign capital. We might be better able to control our own economic destinies if fewer dollars flowed out from Canada and, conversely, fewer dollars flowed in. It seems to me in looking at those ratios that replacing the figure of 10 per cent allowable at the moment with a figure of 75 per cent, it is going to be something like the situation of imports within the Canadian Football League. What is intended as an upper limit becomes transmuted into a de facto standard. I think the lesson which has been learned from the multiple use residential building exemption is also one which should be applied here. It seems to me that in the enthusiasm to take advantage of those tax incentives, several people have got into investments where, perhaps, the underlying values of the investment were not so closely scrutinized as they should be. I am not saying there were major scams involved, I am just saying that having that tax incentive available seems to have given some the opportunity to charge a price which the investment would not otherwise commend.

Both I and my Party have stated our opposition to deindexation of personal exemptions and tax brackets. All this is designed to do is to increase tax revenue. It does not accomplish any other useful goal. It is simply a cynical revenue raiser. It will just tick away year after year producing more and more money for the federal treasury and reducing the protection Canadians presently have in the tax system against inflation of their taxes as well as being taxed on inflationary income gains. It is expected to cost Canadians about $650 million over the next two years alone and more after that. Similarly, the elimination of the federal tax reduction is a piece of penny-pinching and cheese paring on the part of the Government which we all know will affect lower and middle-income Canadians to a greater degree than the wealthier.

The temporary surtax on upper-income earners is something this Party supports. Perhaps it would be worth while to again make the point that this would not be necessary but for the 1981 Liberal Budget which removed the progressive rates of taxation from the income tax system.

Turning to the corporate changes, I think it is worth putting on the record some of the problems experienced in small business today as a result of the Government's slowness in bringing forward the extension of the small business bond program. This is something we strongly support, something that should go ahead, but I have to say that over the past week I have heard of several cases where people have been given different information by the banks. It seems they are not able to adequately interpret the legislative program and advise their clients precisely where they are going to stand on January 1, 1986. That is obviously something that could have been and should have been handled rather earlier. My Party also has no quarrel with the temporary tax on larger financial institutions. However, we do feel that the under-contribution by the corporate sector to the coffers of the national exchequer should be addressed in a more systematic fashion and not by a rather ad hoc looking tax, to use a perhaps pejorative phrase. This does not look at the over-all contribution of the corporate sector to the federal treasury as was outlined so well by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), this morning.

To turn from the sector which is getting off most lightly to that part of society which will feel most the brunt of Bill C-84, we have the changes to child benefits. After those changes are phased in, to quote The May Budget and the Poor, a publication of the National Council on Welfare:

> After the various changes are phased in—raising the child tax credit, lowering the turnover point for the child tax credit (the level of net family income above the credit is reduced) reducing the children's exemption to the annual family allowance, and partially de-indexing all child benefits—even the poorest parents will receive less than they would from the existing child benefits scheme.

We in the NDP view that with frustration and sadness and even with disgust. We know how it flies in the face of the concrete promises trumpeted by the Progressive Conservative Party before it became the Government last September. We believe that this is a signal to Canadians that the value of child raising and the value of the family is being depreciated by this Government. I am not going into a rhetorical flight of fancy on this. I am not one to say that the Government is turning families out on their ear or throwing them overboard. However, the fact remains that the assistance given to families, and of course the poorest families, is going to be gradually reduced over the next few years. That is one of the major flaws in this Budget. It seems to continue the Liberal Party emphasis on ensuring that those who have the best ability to pay are those who will not be asked for as full a contribution as they would be under a progressive tax system.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on second reading of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and several related statutes. In September of 1984 this Government was given a mandate by the people of Canada, Canadians who felt a sense of alienation, who were fed up with acrimony and division, weary of high interest rates and sick of record unemployment. Clearly Canadians opted for change and a new direction. The themes of this Government have been and continue to be economic renewal and national reconciliation. That is what the Budget and this Bill are all about.

This Government inherited an extremely serious fiscal situation. Expenditures exceeded revenues by 50 per cent with the result this Government faces annual deficits in the range of $35 billion to $40 billion. The accumulated national debt is close to $200 billion. Interest on the debt consumes one revenue dollar in three or one expenditure dollar in four. Clearly, serious and meaningful action is called for.

The road toward economic renewal began last November with the economic statement which enunciated the obvious. Priority had to be given to the Herculean task of restoring order to the Canadian fiscal house. That statement contained a series of restraint measures which totalled over $4 billion. These included reductions in the level of spending on programs, improved program management, reduced overhead, deferral or cancellation of capital expenditures which were not absolutely necessary, a reduction in the rate of personnel growth and increased revenue generation. The rate of expenditure growth in the Main Estimates in February was the lowest in 17 years. Non-statutory expenditures, those matters of spending to which the Government is not already locked in through existing legislation, are expected to rise negligibly this year. The Nielsen task force has undertaken the massive job of reviewing literally hundreds of Government programs in order to identify further opportunities to reduce the cost and financial burden of Government.

Then came the May 23 Budget which encouraged private initiative, improved Government effectiveness, controlled the national debt, secured economic renewal and created jobs. The underlying message is that meaningful economic growth can occur only by utilizing the dynamism and entrepreneurial spirit of individual Canadians in the private sector. Economic renewal is the objective and it will be achieved first by personally encouraging private initiative. That is the key to productive growth and job creation. Secondly, it will be achieved by providing Government effectiveness, cutting waste and reducing the magnitude of the Public Service. Thirdly, it will be achieved by controlling the national debt because we can have more responsible deficit reduction.

These changes must be effected fairly and realistically. This Bill implements many of the significant measures in this Government's first full Budget. In examining the legislation we must ask some questions about the nature of a budget Bill. Clearly it must implement new taxes and increase others. By way of analogy, I compare a budget Bill to the situation of a cancer patient. There is a symptom of pain or malfunction. The patient did not put the malignancy in his body but, nonetheless, he has been diagnosed. He is in deep trouble and corrective surgery is necessary. It is possible that the disease is beyond cure. The patient could lash out a the doctor, the staff or the hospital, but the problem will not go away, it can only get worse. He really has no choice but to have the surgery and pray that it works.

Sad to say, Mr. Speaker, in fiscal terms Canada is a cancer patient. The malignancy is the deficit. The symptom is the pain and misery caused by interest charges on the cumulative national debt. The cancer is there and it will not go away, it can only get worse. The only difference is that we know the cause: 20 years of Liberal Government. Canadians lashed out in anger and got rid of the cause last year. They know that treatment is now necessary. Part of that treatment will be found in Bill C-84 which represents another step in the long and arduous climb back to fiscal responsibility in the country.

This Bill contains a number of measures. The first and foremost is a lifetime $500,000 capital gains exemption for all Canadians. The second is improvements to the rules governing investment in small business by pension and other retirement income plans. The third measure is an expanded definition of disability to benefit some 120,000 Canadians. The fourth is a capital tax on larger financial institutions to ensure that they bear an appropriate part of the tax load at a time when deficit reduction is a high priority. There is a temporary deficit reduction surtax on higher income individuals and large corporations. Individuals are permitted to collapse Registered Home Ownership Savings Plans free of tax. The seventh measure is the implementation of rules to prevent taxpayers from splitting incomes among family members to reduce tax. The eighth measure is the modification of Revenue Canada's power to audit and examine taxpayers' books and records, including its power of search and seizure. The much-abused scientific research tax credit has been eliminated. The rip-off whereby investment tax credits were allowed on third party cash rebates has also been eliminated. A further measure is the modification of indexation of personal exemption and tax brackets to prevent further widening of the gap between revenue shortfall and exemption increases.

The lifetime individual capital gains exemption of $500,000 is the single most important measure. Indeed, I believe it to be the single most significant tax measure to be instituted in the 1980s. Having dealt with farmers, ranchers, small business people and other individuals in southwestern Saskatchewan on a daily basis for the past 20 years, I have seen first-hand the stifling effects of a tax regime which gave no incentive and no hope for the entrepreneur. The tax system caused many to opt not to go the extra mile. In that tax system the spectre of capital gains hung like a poisonous cloud, particularly over the farm community.

Agriculture predominates in my constituency. Farmers and ranchers never really have any great amount of cash because they plough their money back into their operations, particularly into their land base. The farmer and rancher often have the fruits of a lifetime of hard work tied up in the ground. That ground has, until now, been subject to a capital gains tax imposed in 1971 by the present Official Opposition. The incidence of that was softened for a while through income averaging annuity contracts which, in turn, were retroactively taken away in the infamous MacEachen Budget. That cruel and unfair tax has penalized initiative and taxed inflation.

Capital gains tax has distorted and impeded the normal flow of farm land transactions for the past 10 years in western Canada. Indeed, even simple parent-child transactions at a reasonable price—less than fair market value but more than the parents' ACB—were obstructed, delayed and even prevented by this odious tax.

The farm community now rejoices in the freedom to move provided by this lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000 which is available immediately effective January 1, 1985, on qualifying farm properties, that is, land which has been actively farmed by the vendor, vendor's spouse or children for any five years since valuation day. This measure will allow an entire generation of older farmers to retire in dignity while permitting the younger farmers to enter into agriculture without a crushing debt burden.

For Canadians other than farmers the lifetime $500,000 exemption will be phased in over six years with cumulative limits of $20,000 in 1985, $50,000 in 1986, $100,000 in 1987, $200,000 in 1988, $300,000 in 1989, and the full $500,000 in 1990 and subsequent years. This measure, incidentally, will not reduce the present exemption on the sale of a principal residence. This major initiative was designed to encourage risk-taking investment by individual Canadians and small and medium-sized businesses.

Our priority goal is jobs for Canadians. Clearly, job maintenance and job creation requires a strong and healthy business sector. We recognize that some 700,000 small and medium-sized businesses across the country are the most dynamic forces for growth and employment. New ideas are implemented, new activities generated and new jobs created through capital investment. It is the thrust of this Bill and the May Budget that Canadians will respond to the challenge of taking a direct stake in the future if they are encouraged by the Government rather than discouraged.

The Government wants to encourage risk taking, but in a way that lets individual Canadians choose what to do with their own hard-earned money. Government ought not dictate to Canadians where and how to invest. Surely it should be left to the individual to decide as he or she sees best. This exemption will attract new equity investment to business and will improve the financial health of Canadian companies. It will assist small business in raising capital to pursue new ideas and directions. It will help generate funds for research and development.

The bottom line is as stated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 23. I quote: "This is a broadly based incentive that allows individual Canadians to decide where to put their money and how to create wealth, economic activity and jobs. It is central to our philosophy. The decision should and will be made by individuals across Canada, not by politicians or public servants here in Ottawa. With this measure we are sending a clear signal to Canadians across this country: Invest in Canada's future; help build the strong and prosperous country we all seek; help create those jobs".

Canadians now know that the successes they achieve will be rewarded. This knowledge is a vital element in the rising surge in the level of confidence in the economy of the country; confidence which dates from September 4, 1984. Bill C-84, in recognizing the over-riding importance of small business, contains other innovative measures to enable small business to tap into new sources of equity investment. Thus, it gives small business access to RRSP and pension plan funds and will benefit both the businesses and the administrators of the plans.

Essential to any taxation system is the concept of fairness. To be effective the tax gathering system must not only be fair, it must be seen to be fair. To this end, Bill C-84 introduces several measures I earlier mentioned: prevention of income-splitting trusts, the elimination of the SRTC, the temporary surtax on high income individuals and corporations, imposition of a capital tax on financial institutions, and elimination of the business investment tax credit on third party cash rebates. These measures, combined with the introduction of a minimum tax on personal income in 1986, will promote and improve the fairness of the total tax system.

Also included in this Bill are advances in procedural fairness set out in defining Revenue Canada's powers to ensure that administration of tax law complies with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As well, there are specific and complicated rules inserted to prevent the conversion of normal income into capital gains. The capital gains exemption is designed to encourage risk taking and growth, but abuse would diminish the fairness of this system. Therefore, anti-avoidance rules are incorporated regarding business income, corporate capital gains, and the shifting of exempt capital gains between individuals in order to ensure that the exemption fulfils its policy goal while not being subject to abuse.

The Opposition may suggest that some of these measures are unfair and inequitable. I disagree, of course, but we have no choice in any event. We have reached the point of no return in this country. Canadians are caught between the proverbial rock and hard place. The deficit is growing at such a pace that the modest spending cuts and tax increases we make barely take care of the increasing interest charges on the national debt. We must never lose sight of the fact that we were placed in this position by the profligacy of the Liberal Party which wantonly rang up a deficit of historic proportions. We cannot, Mr. Speaker, continue to spend more than we take in. As individuals we cannot, as families we cannot, and collectively as a nation we cannot.

I firmly believe that most Canadians understand the importance of this Budget and the very necessary change of direction manifested in Bill C-84. The thrust of this Bill is economic renewal. The Bill represents another step in the Government's plan to effect that economic renewal. The progression of initiatives since November last are clearly manifesting themselves in concrete positive economic indicators.

Since the election of the Government, employment has risen. Interest rates are down. Investor confidence is strengthening. Consumer spending is rising. Prices are stable. Bankruptcies are declining. The Canadian economy is out performing the American economy.

Our GNP is up over 4 per cent in real terms. Some 330,000 new jobs have been created, 37,000 in the month of October alone. The unemployment rate has fallen from 11.6 per cent to almost 10 per cent. While that is still unacceptable, it is improving. The Bank of Canada rate has fallen 3.5 points. The prime rate is at 10 per cent, the lowest level in seven years. The rate on five-year mortgages has fallen to 11.75 per cent, which is the lowest level in six years.

Capital spending plans are up 55 per cent and business investment intentions are up considerably. Consumer spending is rising and retail sales are up. For instance, motor vehicle sales have risen by 27 per cent and housing starts by 54 per cent. The inflation rate, as evidenced by the Consumer Price Index, remains stable in the 4 per cent range. That is the lowest since 1971.

After a decade of increasing deficits there is finally light at the end of the tunnel. For the first five months of this fiscal year the federal deficit is actually 1.5 per cent less than the same period a year ago. Total revenues increased 12 per cent while spending rose only 7 per cent. If debt charges were excluded, federal spending would have increased by only 2.7 per cent, an increase that is less than the 4 per cent annual rate of inflation. This indicates that the Government is, in real terms, spending less this year than last. These are hard economic facts. It is proof positive that the steps taken by the Government are contributing to a boost in investment and are producing jobs, jobs, jobs.

We are facing up to the fiscal reality. We have to face up to the unfair consequences to all Canadians of taking the easy road. It is that old road so well travelled by our predecessors—the road of writing bad cheques, the road of mortgage tomorrow to pay for today's excesses. We cannot allow the Government's fiscal policy and the economy to deteriorate further. The Government has set a clear goal and all its measures are designed to reach that goal of a healthy economy that provides greater opportunity for all Canadians. Bill C-84 is fair, reasonable and absolutely necessary. I call for speedy passage of these measures.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). He gave us his reasons for supporting the $500,000 exemption on capital gains. I suppose that one could support part of the exemption, particularly with respect to farmers and if one could be convinced that the savings to an individual would be ploughed back into projects that would provide employment for Canadians.

However, let me quote for the Hon. Member the views of William Lawlor as reported in this week's The Financial Post. Mr. Lawlor is national tax partner with Ernst & Whinney and in 1984 was technical adviser to the Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada. This is what he said in part with respect to the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption:

> Its scope is too broad. Although many would support lower taxes from the sale of Canadian common stock, practitioners fail to see how tax-free gains on the disposition of jewellery, summer cottages, or Florida condominiums provide much benefit for the economy.

Then he says:

> The exemption destroys the neutrality which has existed between the taxation of dividends and capital gains.

He goes on to say:

> Individuals' tax returns will become much more complicated because of Ottawa's need to monitor the extent to which they have used up their lifetime gains exemption.

These are not the views of some wild radical or rabid socialist. These are the views of a chartered accountant and tax expert who is obviously sympathetic to the position taken by the Conservative Party on most issues. However, he is quite critical of this $500,000 lifetime exemption on capital gains.

Will the Hon. Member comment on this view, which is not mine but that of a man who is an expert in the field and sympathetic to the general philosophies of the Conservative Party?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am not surprised to notice that it is the same question which he put to one of my colleagues yesterday.

Mr. Orlikow: I did not get an answer yesterday.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I believe that the answer is fairly clear. The essence of this Budget, particularly the capital gains provision, is to try to promote initiative in this country. We must put forward a system of reward for those entrepreneurs who are putting themselves at risk. They are the ones who would employ people. They are the 700,000 small business people in this country who will make things tick and create the jobs.

Ms. Copps: No women.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Here we go. We talk about civility and decorum. We are into it already. I appreciate the intervention by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and look forward to receiving some questions from her before we are finished.

In answer to the question with regard to the newspaper article, I dare say it would be possible to find a clipping from any newspaper in the country which would back any particular position. I believe the man is entitled to his opinion. Of course, the Government must look at the total picture. There is a harsh reality which we must face. We are in a catastrophic situation.

When I originally thought of using the analogy between the state of the economy and the cancer patient, I was reluctant to do so. However, upon reflection it seemed to me that perhaps it was appropriate because there is a very serious cancer eating away at this country. It is the deficit—more particularly the carrying charges on the deficit—which truly hamstring the Government in terms of planning and in terms of the future. If some concrete, important and necessary steps are not taken to contain the deficit at this time and stimulate activity to put people back to work in order to contribute to the system, we will be in serious trouble. Clearly, by the 1990s the entire tax revenue generated in this country will have to go to pay the carrying charges on the debt. That would put all Canadians in an untenable situation.

Therefore, I believe that we are in a position of tossing out a life preserver with the hope that people will grasp it so that we may come to the rescue. The course that has been charted over the past 20 years clearly has not worked. The evidence is there for all of us to see. A new direction is necessary and must be regarded as a total package. That is our position in regard to this Budget.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I found that quite a remarkable piece of circumlocution. The question posed by the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) was very direct. I have sat on committee with the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) and I am sure that he has his own view to express about this particular provision.

He somehow managed to scramble from the question asked to the issue of the deficit, which is quite unusual given that there is a proposed tax loss here that runs into the billions of dollars by virtue of that capital gains provision. In fact, according to the Department of Finance's own projections, there will be a tax loss of $1.2 billion by the year 1990. I do not know how he squares that with his rhetoric about the problem of the deficit.

Is he prepared to admit that this provision could be improved? Yes or no.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) for his questions. I do appreciate them because I have had the opportunity over the past number of months to serve with the Member on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We have had the opportunity to deal with a number of very serious problems relating to deficiencies in the financial system. We have appreciated the benefit of his wisdom and experience, even though it might be said that a goodly amount of trouble relates to items that arose during the course of the Member's administration.

I note also that the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount has invented the time-lag theory. Both he and his colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) have resorted this week, in the face of these overwhelming statistics indicating that the Budget is a success, to the time-lag theory which somehow states that as things get better they relate further back in the past to the goings-on of his administration. Clearly, nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker.

I noted in today's Question Period that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) resorted to quoting one John Wiebe, head of the southwest drought committee as some sort of authority on the funds which farmers in the drought-stricken western prairies should receive. I think one should be very careful in terms of expecting a response to particular individuals whether it be Mr. Wiebe of the drought committee or whether it be the particular gentleman referred to in The Financial Post article. I am sure that all of us are quite able to find articles in newspapers from across the country to back up our particular positions.

The Hon. Member quite correctly points out in a theoretical sense the lifetime exemption on capital gains could result in a loss of revenue to the federal treasury. However, it is important to look at the other side of the coin at the expectation that this system of rewarding initiative and risk-taking will produce much greater revenue than the loss the Member could project.

While we are talking about initiatives and attempts to improve the situation, we can never lose sight of the scientific research tax credit, which the Hon. Member's Government put forward, I am sure in good faith, which is projected to result in a loss of some $5 billion to the public treasury. That should put things in perspective, I think.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have now terminated.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I did not have a chance to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson). His speech has to be about one of the most blatant cases of unadulterated balderdash that I have heard in this House over the last number of months. The Member euphemistically tells the people of Canada that the Government has chosen to allow holders of RHOSPs to fold them over with no taxation for the purposes of collapse. That is a euphemistic way of saying the Government has put the final nail in the coffin of the RHOSP.

The Government has ended the RHOSPs. The Government has said to young families and young couples that the Government is not going to give any tax breaks and when the Government forces people to collapse their plans, they will not be taxed. Of course, people could not be taxed on it because the Government has not yet given itself the right to retroactive taxation. When money was put into RHOSPs it was put in in good faith by young couples who believed they would be able to accumulate money for the purchase of a new home at some point in the future.

I cannot believe that the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek can stand in this House and justify the half a million dollar capital gains write-off in the fight against, what he calls, the cancerous deficit at the same time as his Government is prepared to give out $1 billion in bank bail-outs and pay-offs to anonymous depositors, which include millionaires who themselves were not the risk-takers, who themselves put the money into the Canadian Commercial Bank because they knew they would get a better interest rate than they would in other conventional banking facilities, who took the risk and who knew that the CDIC would insure up to $60,000 and who put more money into that bank out of their own choice.

Now we have the Government and this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who are prepared to pay out $1 billion to anonymous depositors without even giving the Parliament of Canada a list of the names of the people who put their money into that bank. It is shameful. It is incredible. It is a Conservative job. It is the biggest "con"servative job that we have been in this House in a good many months. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the Government and its members with their prepared texts have the audacity to tell the families that they will have to pay by a reduction in the increases to the baby bonuses. We hear the Prime Minister say: "Well, the bank presidents should not be able to benefit from baby bonuses". However, Mr. Speaker, if you examine the impact of this Wilson-Mulroney insidious sneaky tax grab Budget, the people who will be the hardest hit are those families earning $10,000, $20,000 and $30,000 a year. The figures will show that a family of four earning $20,000 over the life of this Budget—and these are not Liberal figures, these are figures from social welfare groups who have taken the time to examine the consequences—

An Hon. Member: The same thing.

Ms. Copps: The same thing the Member says. I am happy to be allied with the National Council of Welfare. I am happy and proud to be allied with the Canadian Council on Social Development and I am happy and proud to be allied with the social policy reform group who have exposed this Conservative con job for what it truly is. It is a tax grab on the middle-class. It is a tax grab on poor families so that it can give to those people who are the top 4 per cent of the population who can take advantage of capital gains tax with no conditions.

We have heard the cries in this House by an all-Party committee that capital gains should be exempted for farmers. The Government did not choose to make an exemption for farmers. It chose to say to any person in Canada "If you want to buy South African diamonds, European art or a condominium in Florida, wite it off at the Canadian taxpayers expense", but it does not say that to a family of four earning $20,000, who are not exactly sitting pretty in the Canadian economy. But then I suppose Conservative Members say those people are not risk takers. Maybe it is just the poor guy working in the steel mill supporting a wife and two children. He is not a risk taker. He risks his life every day on the job in the coke ovens. If you have ever worked in the coke ovens, you will know that it is not an easy job. But he is not moving money around so he is not a risk taker. The Government is going to slap him with a tax grab which will mean that over the life of this Budget that family of four earning $20,000 will lose almost $1,000 as a direct result of the measures we are voting on and discussing in the House today.

A family of four earning $10,000, below the poverty line by any definition of in any part of this country, will lose almost $300 as a direct result of this Budget measure, notwithstanding the capital gains exemption and notwithstanding the other giveaways, and anonymous bank bail-outs. The Government has chosen in its wisdom to favour a certain segment of society, to favour the segment earning $80,000 a year or more. By the calculations, not of the Liberal Party, but of the social policy reform group which it represents, I believe people of all political stripes, a family of four earning $80,000 will receive $1,708 more as a direct result of these Budget measures.

That is Tory fairness. That is Tory risk taking. That is the Tory attitude which exposes Canadians to the kind of con job that was done to all of us on September 4, 1984. The Tory con job sees a Member of Parliament standing and reading from a prepared text which tells young families of Canada that they will be allowed to collapse their RHOSPs with no tax disadvantage.

Let us look at the increased costs faced by those same young families, such as the increased cost for guaranteeing mortgages through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Let us also look at the impact of the cut in RHOSPs and at the increase in the cost of building materials. As a direct result of the actions of the Government, the cost of homes across Canada has increased about $1,600 on average. This is a direct result of construction cost increases, as well as other measures which increase the cost of a mortgage guarantee under the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Let us look at a two-earner family who put $1,000 each into the plan over the life of the plan, that is, 10 years. In fact, such a couple does not represent the many single-parent and economically depressed Canadian families. In any event, if they each had $1,000 per year to put away toward the purchase of a home, the combination of those measures could have allowed them, over the course of a 10-year period, to put together an amount which would equal more than the $40,000 for a down payment on a house.

In one fell swoop, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Prime Minister have said no to homeowners. They have said no to young families in the case of deindexation. They have said no to those people who want to get into the housing market with a little direct Government help. Fundamentally, the Government does not believe in any kind of intervention. Fundamentally, it is a free enterprise Government. In the words of the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, it rewards risk takers, people who move money around and stockbrokers who do nothing to create the wealth which is created by people who work with the sweat of their brow. Those are the people who are favoured in the Budget. Those are the people who will take advantage of the $500 million capital gains write-off. Those are the people who are targeted in the kinds of secret meetings like the one that took place recently in Montreal involving the Deputy Minister of Finance.

Mr. Caldwell: Secret?

Ms. Copps: It was a secret meeting. Where is the list of the people who attended the meeting? Where is the list of the $1,000 contributors to the Progressive Conservative Party. A list of those who attended that meeting should be tabled in the House.

Mr. Caldwell: Where is David Peterson's list?

Ms. Copps: David Peterson ran what was advertised as a fund-raising dinner.

Mr. Caldwell: What names were on his list?

Ms. Copps: David Peterson is an elected politician. Stanley Hartt is a public servant who has no business in the Progressive Conservative back rooms. The Hon. Member should not try to cast aspersions upon politicians who are prepared to stand for what they believe in. Has the Government so co-opted the Department of Finance that Stanley Hartt is now running for office? Will Stanley Hartt and the Minister of Finance meet with the steelworkers in my riding?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether Mr. Stanley Hartt, this so-called Progressive Conservative Member, is prepared to meet with workers from my riding. Is he prepared to meet with workers from the shoe factory which has just been sold in Oakville? Is he prepared to meet the 750 working men and women in the Hamilton area who will lose their jobs as a result of the Government's decision to abolish the quota system for Canadians?

I assume that Stanley Hartt, this so-called Deputy Minister of Finance, is not prepared to meet these people because he will only meet and listen to those who can affort to pay $1,000 to have contacts with higher officials of the Department of Finance.

The response, Mr. Speaker, which was given in the House today, yesterday and the day before by the Deputy Prime Minister who, rising in his place, told the Canadian people that there was really nothing wrong with that, is similar to the response which this Government made following the infamous meeting between the Sollicitor General of Canada and the outgoing Premier of New Brunswick.

An Hon. Member: He is not out yet!

Ms. Copps: But he is going to be out very soon, that is for sure.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the policy of the Conservative Government. It is utter rubbish. P.Q. or P.C., what is the difference, Mr. Speaker? We know for instance that in the province of Quebec, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was at one time in favour of the Hyundai deal. Then he turned against it. At first he was in favour of sending someone to the press conference. Then, he decided not to send anybody. First, he wanted to support the P.Q. Government in the province of Quebec. Now, he no longer supports that Government, because it has no policy except that of surviving and making their rich friends jump for joy.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us clearly demonstrates to the Canadian people that when a Government is willing to dump $1 billion on the laps of millionnaire depositors . . . It is the Bill that should be dumped, Mr. Speaker. Anyway the Government is ready to give billions of dollars to anonymous depositors who are not prepared to come forward. Who are these millionnaires? Who are they? Are they friends of this Progressive Conservative Government? Why is the Government afraid to let the Canadian people know the names of the people who will get these billions of dollars? At the same time, Mr. Speaker, it is about to deprive working men and women of $100, $200, $300 or $500 in family allowances, not to mention $800 in de-indexed taxes.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party have always firmly believed that the single person who is well off and is earnings the average wage of $35,000 a year and who has no dependent should pay more taxes than the married man earning $35,000 a year and who has a wife and children or a spouse to support. That is a basic tax principle which was introduced by the Liberals. The fact is that the Government is responsible not only for supporting the have-nots, but also the families.

The Government must always have the family in mind when implementing any taxation policy, income tax credits, family allowances, because that is one way of telling the people: Listen, with the cost of living as it is in Montreal, raising a child until the age of 18 costs over $100,000.

An Hon. Member: What did you do before?

Ms. Copps: I did not do anything before. I hope to do something soon. Anyway, I am blushing. He caught me there, for the first time.

Anyhow, in Montreal it costs $100,000 to raise a child until he is 18 years of age.

• (1630)

That money which is paid for the indexation of taxes cannot be used to raise a child. We know it quite well. Many of our costs will be even higher because the federal Government has decided to reduce transfer payments to the Provinces. The costs of education, health care, social services such as child care will be increased.

If the Government now wants to stop supporting the family, it will do so at its own risks. Canadians who earn $25,000, $30,000, $35,000 and have three or four dependent children at home, actualy need the support of the Government to help them bear the costs of their children's education. So what they are doing now is take that money which, under the previous Liberal policy, was used to help families.

An Hon. Member: What about the deficit?

Ms. Copps: He talks about the deficit. He always talks about the deficit. The Progressive Conservatives simply cannot understand why we talk about people, about jobs, about the unemployed; we do not talk about statistics and so-called deficits, we talk about individuals who stand to lose almost $1,000 each. Each Quebec family will lose $1,000 on the average as a result of the Conservative policies which are a betrayal of the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was in Sherbrooke and everywhere else in Quebec, making all kinds of promises while knowing exactly what the deficit was at the time, $7 billion less than it is now.

Mr. Speaker, they can find $1 billion for the banks, they can find $2 billion for the petrochemical industry, they can find thousands of dollars for handouts to the major petrochemical multinational companies, but they cannot find pennies for families and people who earn less than $20,000 a year. I should think that Canadians, who gave a massive mandate to this Progressive Conservative Government on September 4, 1984, will remember that day in history as the day of betrayal, the day when the supposedly neo-Liberal Mulroney Government promised the people—

Mr. Malépart: "Malrunny"!

Ms. Copps: "Malrunny"! His policy was to say: "We will not reduce family allowances". He said the same thing in the House in answer to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau)—and you were all present because you were in the process of reducing the old age security pension benefits. Last December the Prime Minister promised in the House that he would not de-index the child tax credit. He even gave his word to the House. The Prime Minister gave his word. I think it was last December 13 or 17 in answer to a question put by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. It is recorded in Hansard. Mr. Speaker, it has been quite some time since the word of the Prime Minister in the House meant something, when people believed in him.

When Prime Minister Trudeau made statements in the House, people believed him, because he did what he said. He was a man of his word.

When Mr. Turner became Prime Minister, he told the people what the deficit was. He promised not to spend more than we could afford, but he also promised he would never reduce the deficit at the expense of the workers, at the expense of families, at the expense of single-parent families, which is what this Progressive Conservative Government is doing and what has truly shocked Canadians. They are going to pay for this after the election in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I certainly feel I should comment on what the Hon. Member just said. We hear all these attacks on the Progressive Conservative Party, but Canadians know what the real situation is today. Our national debt is nearly $224 billion, and this only fifteen years after the Liberals came to power. As for their comments, I find this lack of respect offensive. Puns like "Malrunny" are just not . . . In the House of Commons we must have a minimum amount of respect, especially for our men in public office.

We have never attacked Mr. Trudeau, a man who was admired for his previous work in certain areas and certain movements. We respect people and what they represent. And I think that was more or less my comment, Mr. Speaker. Fortunately, the Canadian people know that the Progressive Conservative Party is here to change things.

In fact, we are giving an extraordinary performance and an entirely new direction to Canada's history, and therein lies the true greatness of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am proud to be a member of this party, and I am proud of the greatest Prime Minister of all time: the Hon. Brian Mulroney.

Ms. Copps: Unfortunately, when the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) talks about change and about people in Parliament, he tends to forget that sometimes there are women in Parliament. He talks about men only in Parliament as if there were no women here, as was the case in 1867 and 1877. I might remind the Hon. Member that we are here, and that we are here to fight the policies of the Government which are now being used to oppress workers. We in the Liberal Party go and meet union members in our ridings, unlike the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve who refuses to meet union workers from Vickers because he is afraid to tell them his Government's policy is to close shoe factories and textile plants and to let Montreal East go down the drain. He is the one who isn't looking after these issues, his riding and the union employees at Vickers. I think he would be much better off looking after his own work instead of calling people names in the House of Commons.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to hear all kinds of things, but not that I am not working on the Vickers problem. I find this terribly offensive. However, nothing should surprise us coming from the Liberal Party. We have known them for a long time. I wanted to tell the pretty Hon. Member that I do work on the Vickers problem and that I am always available. We are going to have good news later on and this will certainly please you. You may not be happy to learn these good news, but we are going to help the people at Vickers, and you will then see that I have taken the time to work on the Versatile Vickers problem. The Canadian public will then realize, dear lady, the terrible things that you are saying today. You are admittedly quite young and new to this great career, but you are in the wrong party. You may eventually understand the truth, as many Canadians have done already.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if we look at Parliamentary records, they show that I have been in politics about seven years longer than the Hon. Member. If he wants to speak about inexperience, I would point out that he should look at the Conservative Members. In addition, Mr. Speaker, when I spoke about his lack of involvement and lack of concern about Vickers, these were not the words of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, but those of the union president, who is in a position to know who has been working on the Vickers issue. It was the Liberal team that got involved. It was the Liberal team that forced the Government to recognize what was happening in Montreal East and at Vickers. As for the Conservatives, for the silent Members from Quebec, they stay in their seat and never say a word, even when textile and footwear plants are closing everywhere. We have heard nothing from them because they are so afraid to speak that they stay in their seat, like movie extras, sheep or followers, and they do not get involved in Quebec politics. The Liberal Party is the one to urge the Government to do something, even if it is very little.

Mr. Desrosiers: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) on a point of order.

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because I believe that what the Hon. Member has just said is completely inaccurate. The situation in Montreal East has existed since 1974.

• (1640)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Would Hon. Members please be seated. Would all Hon. Members please be seated. Please speak one at a time. I will recognize this point of order and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for another point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Desrosiers: Mr. Speaker, I cannot leave such a statement unchallenged. What has just been said is quite inaccurate. The situation—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member simply does not agree with the other Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, the point of order was . . . first of all, it was not a point of order, and second, you have recognized the Hon. Member for Sainte-Marie.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Just so that we all agree, that is fine.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, you have no doubt added the time wasted on the point of order. I think that the Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, who is my neighbour, should be careful before suggesting that what my colleague said is not true, because I am well aware the facts and what my colleague repeated we have proof of because the newspapers reported it

However, I will not carry on with this matter and I do not think that we could settle those issues.

I should like my colleague to comment on the report of the Canadian Health and Welfare Council which clearly indicates . . . It is a neutral and non partisan organization which has definite proof that families with a yearly income of $15,000 or less stand to lose $1,879 under that budget. Families with an income of $35,000 will only lose $3,452.

I would like my colleague to comment on the matter, namely that it is a budget for the rich people.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, there is worse that that, for even if we accept the statistics of the Canadian Health and Welfare Council, it may also be proven that people earning over $80,000 will not be losing a cent. They will be gaining if we include the half billion dollars in capital gains which will not be taxable.

On the whole, we can see that families with a yearly income of over $80,000 will be richer, and this because of the Wilson budget, while the lower income families, that is those with a yearly income of less than $15,000, will lose close to $2,000.

Such is the fairness of the Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker.

• (1650)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate on the Income Tax Act and related statutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by listing some of the legislative provisions we support, in part. I know that Members on the other side have long been under the impression that the Opposition often makes negative criticism.

An Hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Keeper: It is true that we make negative criticism, but we are justified. That is why I want to begin today by mentioning the provisions we approve in these acts.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the House was considering today a measure which would grant a $700 tax credit to an individual who invests in a capital fund to which workers can contribute. Reference to this fund in the measure can be found on the first page of the Bill because of the FTQ. The FTQ is the Fonds de solidarité des travailleurs du Québec. That is the union to which my colleague belongs. It is a good measure and, because of that, it has our support.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): It is not the right reason though.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Bill contains other measures we like. For instance, there is a measure under which pension funds will be invested in small businesses. That is another very good provision and we support it. That is why I commend the Government for taking those measures.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Excellent!

Mr. Keeper: But there are some weaknesses, Mr. Speaker. For example, the definition of small businesses includes those worth up to $35 million. In my riding, however, any company worth $30 million or $35 million is not a small business by any means. That is a weakness in an otherwise good measure, Mr. Speaker.

There is another danger in this otherwise good measure, because this Bill allows more investments outside of Canada. There is a danger that investment funds which are so badly needed in Canada might leave our country.

Mr. Speaker, there is another provision in this Bill that I will support. It is the 5 per cent surtax on upper-income earners, and it has a lot of merit. Although we support this measure, we know it is a temporary one. Why? If it is a good measure, why not make it permanent?

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): We might raise it to 10 per cent; we shall see!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, although I cannot give this Bill my full support because of some weaknesses, I think that the Government should be praised when it deserves it, but also criticized. I will first deal with criticism, Mr. Speaker.

Criticism is necessary. The most unfair feature of this Bill is the changes made to the capital gain exemptions. It is a gift to the wealthy. It makes the income tax system even more unfair. It will benefit people earning more than $500,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, it will cost the ordinary Canadians nearly one billion dollars, over the next two years—one billion dollars given away to the rich. While the rates for ordinary Canadians will increase, the wealthy will be handed a present. It is an unfair measure and the Government must reconsider and withdraw it.

It is also unfair because it allows investors through this legislation to invest outside of the country which will not spur the recovery of our Canadian economy, but will promote activities in countries outside of Canada. It is unfair.

I would like to point out another weakness in this Bill, and it concerns pensions. An increase in "The Registered Retirement Savings Plan" will benefit upper-income earners; for example, people earning $80,000 and more will save more than $2,500 with this measure, while people earning $20,000 will not benefit from it.

Mr. Speaker, a tax bill that gives away $2,500 to people who earn $80,000 a year, while at the same time giving nothing to the ordinary people who earn $20,000 is not fair. It is a Bill that must be withdrawn by the Government.

There are other measures in this Bill to amend the Income Tax Act which are not fair, but I would like to make a more general comment. Because this legislation was initiated in the last Budget I would like to comment on the impact this Budget has had on ordinary people, on ordinary Canadians. The consequence of this Budget is to transfer $4 billion, not $4 million, but 4 billion. This burden is transferred from corporations, from big business, to ordinary people. This $4 billion burden will be transferred from the rich to the poor by 1990.

My party and I think that it is unfair, and yet such is the policy, the philosophy, the approach of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, who benefitted from the last Budget? What people in our society got something out of that Budget? I would like to give some examples. A two-income family of two children earning $15,000 lost almost $2,000 per year, exactly $1,884 on account of the last budget.

At the same time, a similar family but whose income is $80,000 did not lose as much. It has lost only $1,000, or half as much as the low income family.

Mr. Speaker, in the case of a two-children family where only one parent works, the $80,000 income family gained $5,000 and the one with an income of $15,000 lost $2,400. It is unfair. It is obviously unfair, and that is why we oppose the provisions now before the House. That is why we think the Conservative government is an unfair government, a government for the wealthy, against the poor people and the middle class.

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens have also lost with the last budget. While they won a great battle against this government and forced it to retreat on the de-indexing of their pension, they stand to lose with the last budget. They will lose because they will have to pay higher sales taxes and because the $5 federal tax cut is eliminated. Because of measures such as those, senior citizens have also lost ground in the last budget.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out who was favoured in the last budget. Two groups of people were big winners. They are now ahead by $6,350 a year. Independent professionals will improve their situation by $6,000 and investors by as much. They are the ones who benefitted from the last budget.

[English]

I would just like to say briefly that while there were some measures in the legislation before us today which we support, by and large, the tax changes in the legislation are totally unjust and uncalled for and hurt ordinary Canadians. They take money out of the pockets of the middle class and the poor people and put it into the bank accounts of the rich. It is because of this that we believe the measures in the legislation before this House should be withdrawn and, in particular, the give-away of capital gain tax which has no conceivable economic benefit for ordinary Canadians. That measure is blatantly unjust and needs to be withdrawn. This Government has to wake up to the fact that Canadians know it is favouring its rich friends, the people who bankroll the Party, and Members opposite should back up and get this measure out of the House.

YOUTH

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie) moved: That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of reviewing its policy on youth and establishing programs more adequate to their needs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before starting my speech I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on the quality of his French.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that when people work this hard, they should be encouraged, and I would urge the Hon. Member to keep up the good work.

I would now like to get back to the motion I moved today, namely:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reviewing its policy on youth and establishing programs more adequate to their needs.

Mr. Speaker, I have here the statistics for October 1985, which show that youth unemployment has gone up. I could also quote the headings of newspaper articles describing the problems encountered by young people. In the newspaper Le Droit: "One hundred and seventy thousand unemployed too many. Challenge 1985 a failure." "On campus: Budget cuts for employment centres," "Youth march for jobs gets off to timid start." "Poverty of others no excuse for poverty among young people." "One thousand young people bring up rear of big job march." This last quote was from the newspaper Le Devoir. Again from Le Devoir: "Non-profit agencies deprived of federal summer job grants." "Summer jobs becoming scarce in Quebec City." This from the newspaper Le Soleil. Again in Le Soleil: "For young people, getting a job has been main concern." In the newspaper Le Droit: "Little change expected for unemployed youth." And again in Le Droit: "Future difficult for young unemployed workers."

Mr. Speaker, I could mention commitments made by the Progressive Conservative Party or the Liberal Party and speeches made by Members of this House, but I am sure all Members will agree that we have not done enough. It is not enough when we consider there are still 1.5 million Canadians unemployed.

Of course we could argue here in the House which of the three parties is better and smarter and more understanding than the other two, but the fact is that we still have more than one million people out of work and that this is discouraging for our young people.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to set aside all political partisanship and invite my colleagues to pool their experience and try and find a way to deal with the youth unemployment problem once and for all.

I think that all of us here must remember how difficult it was to find a job upon completion of our studies, the representations we had to make, and so on. Nevertheless, we have been luckier than most young people who presently drop out of school or who did so one, two or three years ago, and statistics show that in the Province of Quebec, there is chronic youth unemployment.

We can be proud of all the efforts that have been made: the Liberals did one thing and the Conservatives may boast of doing another. But, I humbly believe that this is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. It is not good enough because there are still too many unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a contribution. I don't pretend to have the miracle solution to the unemployment problem because if I did, I would not run for Prime Minister of Canada but for Prime Minister of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should really set up a committee, some organization including young people, where all parliamentarians would meet regularly to review the whole employment program policy. I do not want to blame the Government or anybody else. I think that at present, they are all trying their best but, unfortunately, the end result is always the same: the young are living in harsh conditions.

In my own province, the young are faced with dramatic situations, because at the time when they were job opportunities, the Government decided, believing that youth on welfare were lazy, to cut the income of those under 30 and give them $156. I don't want to argue with the validity of the decision at the time but six months later, Canada, the Province of Quebec and the whole world were going through an economic crisis and there were no more jobs, Mr. Speaker.

The number of young unemployed has increased. Even though they could not find a job, even upon completion of their studies, they were not entitled to unemployment benefits. In Quebec, they had to turn to welfare. I can tell you, and I am convinced that not one single Hon. Member in this House will stand up and say: In my constituency, young people are heartless, they are lazy. It is true that you can find one here and there, Mr. Speaker, but the vast majority of young people are as good and as willing to work as we were when we were young and just out of school.

However, circumstances are such that there are no jobs. The impact of the decision that a young Canadian living in an apartment will have $156 a month because he is under 30—

An Hon. Member: At the provincial level!

Mr. Malépart: —yes, at the provincial level, Mr. Speaker— For some people, the only way to survive is by stealing, and you know that in those circumstances there is no lack of fences; all kinds of shady people take advantage of those young people because they have to eat, they can get those young people to steal because they have to survive.

Prostitution among young people has become a very serious situation in Montreal, and I am convinced that it is the same in the other provinces, Mr. Speaker.

Others, because of the lack of income, because of the need to survive, are under the same pressure from advertising. Those young people have a right like other people to have ambitions, but nobody can live, have an appartment, eat, buy clothes with $156 a month, Mr. Speaker. This is what happened because of economic changes, and I do not want to blame any government that made the decisions at that time.

Mr. Speaker, if we look back on past experience in trying to bring about changes, I think we should keep in mind the mistakes made by previous governments, whatever their colour, so that the people in power will not make the same mistakes over and over again.

Mr. Speaker, there is an important question we should ask: Is it true that the private sector and the public sector can cope with one and a half million people officially unemployed, as well as with all those who are not officially registered? I for one think it is impossible. It is impossible now for the private sector and the public sector, and everyone will agree that the public sector is saturated and outgrown, and the private sector, what with the technological and industrial changes, automation ... In all other areas, businesses have to be competitive and whenever a plant is modernized, whenever a new job is created in a new technological field, whenever a worker with higher skills is hired in one field, whenever a worker with higher skills is hired in one field, there are workers engaged in more manual activities being laid off.

Mr. Speaker, I for one would like the Government to examine—and I made that suggestion when we were in power—consider earnestly whether we should not in the first place reduce retirement age to 60 because at the same time, we have young men and women who are willing to work, who have been taught skills in colleges and universities and who would like to get some practical experience and are willing to be of service. There are thousands of people who are at present employed and who would like to retire simply because they have been working for 25 or 30 years. And there are women who very often have held two jobs as compared with men. Very often, working women, in addition to working normal hours, have also had to have a normal working day at home. And very often, those people who are 55, 57 or 60, are getting tired and are not in very good health ... and in my opinion, after working in an industry, after serving their country for 30, 35 or 25 years, they should be allowed to retire.

I am told, and the figures are accurate, that the cost of allowing free retirement at 60 might run up to $3 billion. However, the problem with our system, the way our Parliament is run, is that we figure the possible cost to the Department of National Health and Welfare, but no one figures out what the Department of Employment and Immigration would save in unemployment insurance and social welfare.

I believe this is something which should be reviewed by a working committee. Union leaders are advocating a reduction in the number of working hours. However, the question is this: If working time is reduced, will the workers keep their full present salaries? Would it be the same hourly rate . . . less money at the end of the week? I believe this is an alternative that should be studied. I also believe governments, industry and labour will all have to streamline their positions somehow, because Canada will not be allowed to survive forever when some people have everything while others have nothing. Gradually, we are moving toward retirement and we will be succeeded by a lost generation of disillusioned young people.

No one in this House, I am sure, whatever his or her political stripe, wants this situation to continue. But it will continue if we leave it to the federal administration, because no matter how well intentioned our civil servants are, they are very often in large office buildings, far removed from reality. At least, we in our ridings have more contacts with the real problems and we should say: "Enough is enough. It cannot go on for ever". Some workers are unionized, and with the help of their unions they get better wages while next door, in another company, other workers just as dedicated, do not make the same kind of progress because they have no union, but they do not mind.

If we want to avoid social unrest, if we do not want to disillusion our young people, we will have to create those jobs. We will have to sit together, to agree on something. We will have to forget our political differences and meet some place, maybe outside Parliament, outside the provinces, maybe abroad, with all the participants, not only the federal and provincial governments, but also our municipal governments which are responsible for much job creation. Our school boards and trade unions have a role to play as well. Being a union member myself, I know there are conflicts between different trade unions and that their leaders are politicians just as we are. They have to be elected and therefore must please their electorate. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am not a trade unionist but a simple unionized worker. I am one of those who pay for the boss, for the trade union president. Thus, my hands are not tied in any way.

Employers should take part too. Seeing the kind of measures the Canadian Board of Trade advocates, they will have to change their attitude and recommend more constructive job creation measures. We will have to invite advocacy organizations or groups that care for ordinary people as a whole, whether they are unionized or not. The National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Canadian Consumers Association have both a vision that differs from that of the Quebec employer's council or of the president of any given trade union. They have their own approach and, as we have seen these past years, an increasing number of organizations, whether at the local, provincial or national levels, have gained much expertise in this area. They are developing a new approach in order to help society as a whole without any consideration of trade category, salary scale, or situation as an employer or manager. They want to help the Canadian consumer, no matter his trade, profession or earnings. This is what I call a fourth power in our society, Mr. Speaker, and Governments had better consult with it. These past years, Governments have been of all political hues, including the NDP at the provincial level. But we always end up with the same result and the same problem: We have unemployment in Canada, and I am sure no one wants unemployment in this country.

I think if we could change the membership of the usual groups . . . Take the Macdonald Commission, the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance. What did they do? They appointed an academic. They got a labour representative and they got a representative from the business world. For years and years, we have always ended up with the same group and the same philosophy. And with the following result: the expert, the academic, the company president, the economist and management submit a report. They agree. The union president has a dissenting opinion, so there is a minority report. Mr. Speaker, we always get the same split along the same lines. It is not a matter of personalities. Put us there, and because of our mandates and our convictions, we would probably end up with the same result.

I think that when the Government appoints new committees, it would be well advised to add members from consumer associations who take a broader view and who could act as mediators. When the union president says: Just a minute, those wages have to be doubled, and when the management representative says: That is too much, no way, the consumer representative would say: Just a minute, this is all very well, and everybody wants to earn as much as they possibly can, but can consumers afford it? We must remember that the consumer is both employee and employer. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important point. I am sure all Members of this House would like to see the day when there are no more unemployed in Canada. However, we will have to start designing structures and approaches for a committee to involve the greatest possible number of participants, so that we can find a way to set up a full employment strategy. Establishing a full employment strategy, Mr. Speaker, does not simply mean jobs; it also means preparing young people for the future and giving them practical job experience in addition to formal training. I see that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure all Members will agree with me that we must do something for our unemployed youth.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), who made his first speech in French this afternoon. I do not agree with his sentiments, but I do want to congratulate him once again, on his second—third language.

• (1720)

Unfortunately, he has left the Chamber. However, I do extend to him my congratulations and the congratulations of all of us on this side. Besides, I must do so because my new responsibilities as Parliament Secretary to the Secretary of State include Canada's Official Languages Act. I am glad that I am getting support from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

In rising to speak to the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) it is my pleasure to draw the attention of the House to the themes and programs undertaken in 1985, the International Youth Year. The three themes of the International Youth Year are participation, development and peace.

[Translation]

Participation means that young people take charge of their own affairs and have a say in decisions that affect them.

Development means the individual enrichment of every young person and of youth as a whole. As young people develop their skills and talents, they will increase their influence on the community in which they live.

Peace means mutual respect and understanding among peoples. Personally, I would be delighted if this year brought us a little closer to this objective. I like to think that youth, above all, will be able to help us determine what factors contribute to maintaining peace in our society. We can help young Canadians become interested in youth in other countries, where fighting for peace is a daily struggle.

[English]

As the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications, I will address these themes in relation to culture and talk about the role of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne).

The mandate of the Minister of State for Youth is to address the needs and aspirations of young people. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed the Minister of State for Youth with the responsibility of co-ordinating the national program of activities for the International Youth Year and to act as the spokesperson within the Government and Cabinet for young people and youth organizations.

To fulfil this role successfully, the Minister is the channel of communications between young people and the Canadian Government. She is listening to young people, learning more about their problems and their achievements. Canadian youth are being shown that they have an advocate in the Minister of State for Youth, who is determined to draw attention to youth in this country and to their concerns.

Over the past year, youth have been participating in a wide range of projects in all facets of society. I would like to take this opportunity to reiterate the involvement of youth in the cultural arena with which I have had some experience.

Youth Programs

A few months ago a national survey was conducted by the Minister of State for Youth to identify projects in which young people took initiatives which affected their own situation and that of their community in an innovative way. The projects did not necessarily have to form a part of the activities for International Youth Year. In fact, some were the work of our precursors, initiatives started by the former Liberal Government. Nor do they need to have received funding.

The research team contacted youth organizations and groups across the country and asked them to name projects which were both innovative and reflected the initiative of the participants. More than 700 such projects were reported.

Youth across this country are participating. In Ontario, for example, a project involved the publication of a weekly newsletter by and for volunteers working in a national park. The project provided work experience for young people interested in pursuing a career in journalism. Believe me, having been young once and having pursued a career in journalism, I can certainly identify with that kind of initiative.

A youth performing arts centre in Manitoba was initiated. The project included a nine-day cabaret in May. On an ongoing basis, this group undertakes a variety of activities aimed at counteracting the negative media attention concerning city youth and to provide entertainment for youth under 18 who are excluded from drinking establishments and need challenging involvement outside of school.

Participants in a Newfoundland town produced a community television program and slide presentation which had the duel benefit of giving the community a positive and optimistic sense of itself, as well as providing the youth involved with a direct experience of working with the audio-visual media.

This provided morale for the rest of the province, an opportunity for young people to be seen engaged in skilful activities which were supportive of the community, and an opportunity for youth across the province to view and understand the difficulties encountered in a one-industry town. These projects are but a few of the initiatives taken by Canadian youth.

During this very special week, there are possibly as many as 23 million Americans—almost the entire population of this country—viewing the proceedings in this Chamber. I hope that our American friends are taking note of some of the important initiatives that we in Canada are taking on behalf of our country's youth. These projects which I mentioned are but a few of those initiatives. Such innovations, coupled with the special projects for International Youth Year, serve to emphasize the enthusiasm, commitment and hard work of young people in communities across the country. In April the Minister of State for Youth announced the approval of $630,000 in grants for 78 special projects to mark International Youth Year. Projects range in scope from national to local and include activities such as workshops and conferences on youth issues, cultural projects and leadership development initiatives. These projects are but a part of this Government's commitment to our youth because our youth is our greatest national resource. I am sure that every Member of the House would agree that in a very real sense our youth is the future of this country.

It is because our youth is our most valuable resource that great emphasis is placed on such programs as Open House Canada. That is an educational exchange program in which groups of young Canadians 14 to 22 years of age make reciprocal visits. The program is designed to expand the knowledge of Canadians of their country. I do not have to remind our American friends that we are a very large country. It is designed to expand Canadians' knowledge especially of regions other than their own and of federal institutions, and to build understanding between communities.

During exchange visits individual members of visiting groups are welcomed into the homes of their hosting "twins". The host groups are responsible for preparing activities that provide their visitors with a complete program of study on the economic, political, cultural, social, historic and geographic aspects of their community. Within six months of the initial visit, members of the first group to travel play host to their "twins" and provide a similar program. Approximately 27,000 young people are expected to participate in 1984-85.

Developing effective means of communication between youth and between youth and Government has been and continues to be a fundamental aspect of the mandate of the Minister of State for Youth. In order to facilitate open lines of communication, an International Youth Year advisory committee has been established. Regional forums have been held. A national forum is in the planning stages and emphasis has been placed on developing links with youth of other countries.

These initiatives are already showing positive results. Early in 1985 the Hon. Minister of State for Youth named 24 young Canadians to serve on the Youth Advisory Committee.

Broadly speaking, the mission of the members of this committee is to make Canadians of all ages more aware of the themes and objectives of International Youth Year. They are encouraging young people to participate in planned activities. They are also advising the Minister of ways to improve the youth program. More specifically, these young men and women representing all regions of the country have been helpful in the planning of the regional forums and will be involved in the upcoming national forum. These forums encourage young people and their partners in the social process to engage in a constructive dialogue, a dialogue that is fundamental to a successful consultative process.

Together, our Government is working together to develop strategies for promoting a better understanding of the position of young people, enriching their development and enhancing their participation in all aspects of society. While links among youth are being strengthened across Canada, international exchange programs are serving as a vehicle through which young people may become acquainted with peers from different countries.

There are many international development programs. Through the Canadian International Development Agency, the federal Government provides funds to several non-profit, non-governmental organizations that offer opportunities for Canadian youth to train for, or participate in, international development projects. These organizations include Canada World Youth, Canadian Crossroads International, Canadian University Services Overseas, World University Services of Canada and the International Co-operation Study Centre. For the most part, these programs encourage sensitivity to cultural diversity and an ability to adapt to different cultures.

For those of us who have been involved in these international initiatives through the World University Service and other associations, it meant so much to be able to see another country, to see and talk to people and learn about their regions, their cultures, their politics and their economies. It is an experience that none of us who have ever done it as young people in the 14 to 22 age group and perhaps a few years beyond that, will ever forget.

Cultural exchanges cannot help but foster the building of mutual respect and understanding among people. To quote the Minister of State for Youth:

> I would like to think, with youth leading the way, we may identify factors conducive to a more peaceful society.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, is a proud young country. It is a land where people have fulfilled dreams and it remains a land rich with promise. The fulfilment of this promise rests with our youth.

In that connection, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie for the spirit of his motion and move an amendment. I move that Motion No. 222 be amended by striking out all the words after the word "should" replacing them with the following words:

> Continue reviewing its policy on youth with an aim of further enhancing programs that are adequate to their needs.

The motion would then read:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should continue reviewing its policy on youth, with the aim of further enhancing programs that are adequate to their needs.

I submit the amendment. I would ask for any further comments or debate on that amendment.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for having brought before this House the complexity of issues that affect a portion of our population. How our modern society impacts on them has been a matter almost totally disregarded in this House, in so many other sectors of Government at all levels and in so many parts of our community.

I have been engaged for the last six weeks in conversation with young people about their concerns. We have been told repeatedly that young people are apathetic, that they do not care. I suppose that the most significant finding that resulted from our encounters with young people in this international youth year is not at all that young people are apathetic. On the contrary, it is their view that we, who have gone beyond the age of youth, are the apathetic ones.

When one considers the concerns of the youth all over the world, it is that they are disregarded, certainly in terms of their feelings about issues and in terms of effective action to be taken in response to them.

I want to emphasize that young people are not just concerned about what society does for youth per se. Youth is concerned about the kind of society in which they live, although it is certainly true that they share a complexity of problems which are unique to their age class, and quite different from the experiences we have shared in the past.

I suppose one might get an idea about our attitude toward the young when we hear young people referred to as our richest natural resource. I asked some young people what they thought about that. They said: "Fish are a resource and they get a lot of attention. Forests are a resource and get a lot of attention. Minerals are a resource and get a lot of attention. If it is necessary to dehumanize ourselves to such an extent that we are matched with fish, forest and minerals in order to get that attention, then let us be natural resources."

We have heard a discourse by the Parliamentary Secretary about the involvement in international year of very many of our young people who have had the support of grants and other kinds of support. We got the impression of a creative, innovative energetic, well educated portion of our society. It is certainly true that young people today are much more informed as a class than we were in the past. It is also true that they have contributed much and will still contribute much.

To emphasize, as was done in that intervention, the kinds of activities that the relatively privileged youth in our country indulge in, is to mislead the public, to mislead the House and ignores all too much that which must be dealt with by this House, this Parliament and by other responsible sectors of Canadian society.

It was sad to behold that, although unspoken by virtually every young person to whom we spoke, there resides in the hearts of so many youth around the world a dreadful fear that they will not survive, one young lady said, beyond thirty. It is a fear so deep that it remains unspoken because the fear is too dreadful to utter.

They hear adult politicians talking about peace, about disarmament, about spheres of international influence and about national interests, without realizing that what they say communicates to the youth that the immortality to which youth has normally been heir is dead. We must realize that we are talking to a group within our community which has fears which we never had in our lives.

I ask the House to think of what I say. We send young people to war because they have a perception that they will not die, that they are immortal. We know young people tend to be reckless at times, as we were because we had a sense of immortality. Now we find that young people believe that the world will not survive to their adulthood. International Youth Year was not initiated by the United Nations for the purpose of celebrating how well off are our young people and how much they have to contribute. It has always been presumed that young people would grow up and replace us, and hopefully do better than we have done. What happened was that the nations of the world began to realize that there was an imminent crisis among young people. In western Europe, they looked to Bristol, Livepool, London, Paris, Berlin and Rome to find disenfranchised youth engaged in violent activity and riots against the system because so alienated were they that they could expect nothing from the system. Therefore, they challenged it just simply out of frustration.

Many young people in the world and in our country are not merely unemployed. Unemployment is an issue which affects many people. Unemployment has occurred in the past, but it has never occurred before where there has been such a total reorganization of our international economic relationships or where there has been such a marked transfer of jobs to machines, to technologies and to robots. I have had young people ask me: "If robots are going to build robots that are going to build cars, what robots are going to buy those cars?" That conjures up a vision. Not only are young people unemployed, but they may never get jobs. Too many of our youth cannot share the assumptions which all of us could, that when we finished school, or even dropped out of school early, we would be almost certain to have a job. We assumed that when we got that job, we would get married, have children and have a house. We assumed that we would share in the benefits of the community and contribute to the community. We assumed that we would live a happy life with family. There are youth all over the country who regard that as a dream shared by their predecessors, not by themselves.

Our youth are living in a world which changes extremely rapidly, a world where information is poured into their ears day by day about issues, conflicts and crises affecting them and others, with which they cannot deal. This produces a far different point of view or perception of reality than we share.

Another aspect of modern society is that the family is far more mobile than it used to be. More parents are unemployed than used to be the case. More families are split by divorce than used to be. People are far more preoccupied with material things than they used to be. Families are less concerned about relating to youth and their problems than they used to be. Huge portions of our population feel that they are ignored in the decision-making processes in which we engage. A large number of young people feel that they can no longer communicate with their families and with other parts of the community which they should be able to expect will serve them but do not.

We hear young people talking about an educational system in which they are not taught but are told what to learn. They talk about an educational system which is difficult for them to relate to the world in which they must live. They talk about an educational system which does not provide any guidance in respect of jobs. They talk about an educational system which denies them the personal relationships and contact with other understanding human beings that helps them to deal with the problems youth have always had but, more important, with the far more critical problems they have now.

We have a world of young people to whom we have not listened. If it is the intent of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie that the House of Commons and other portions of our community with responsibility will begin to listen more to young people, then I support him. Young people are not only saying that they want jobs for themselves. They need those jobs. They need that future. They understand that jobs must mean jobs for everyone. They have a notion of the country which they sometimes think we do not share. They know that jobs cannot be created merely by the production of commodities, by the making of a car, by the cutting of a tree or by the fishing of a fish. They also know, from their own experiences, that there are many needs out there to be met. They know that there are one million Canadians who are illiterate, by any appropriate definition of the term. They know that there are four million Canadians who are functionally illiterate. They know that in the City of Toronto there are 135,000 people, many of whom are on the street, who can barely read or write and need help. They know, as was indicated by the young native lad with whom I talked, that unemployment and violence on native reserves are such that a young person, 18 years old, can tell me that to find a body in a ditch is not a shocking experience any longer. So rampant is unemployment, so rampant is violence as a consequence of frustration, there are young people walking the streets as prostitutes. Our reaction to that is to pass legislation which does not address the problems of those forced into prostitution but infringes upon human rights and pretends, at the same time, that the problem will go away by putting everyone in jail.

They look at the House and they must ask, as they have asked me, serious questions about the directions which we are taking. They look at our post-secondary educational system and find that the whole system is deteriorating to a point where there is an obvious inconsistency with the expressed intent of Government to produce economic growth based upon technological and scientific development, while young people across the land are being denied an opportunity to attend university or college.

It is not only that universities and colleges are being underfunded. It is that we are increasingly creating a system which denies opportunity to many youth who wish that opportunity. We have a situation in which young people, who are not sons and daughters of the rich—those who represent people in our society who have not been in universities or colleges before—must commit themselves to debts totalling from $40,000 to $50,000 to gain access to the opportunities presented in that sector, even before they get their degree. We have a secondary school system which does not respond to the needs of young people. They hear us talking about investments in research. They hear us talking about wage equity. They hear us talking about free trade. They hear us talking about so many things in ways that do not seem to address their needs. I will tell Hon. Members one thing about the young Canadians with whom I have been speaking—they are seriously concerned about the future and destiny of Canada and what type of nation it will be. They are deeply concerned that being a Canadian will continue to mean something unique in the world. They are deeply suspicious about the potential dangers to our culture, our economy, employment and our unique characteristics presented by free trade. More than any of us here young people regard themselves as Canadians with something significant which they can potentially contribute to the world at large.

However, if there is one message—and it is a positive one—which comes from International Youth Year and the relatively few who benefited from the Government sponsored programs, it is that young people have found that if they are given an opportunity to engage in activities involving their own interests with other young people there is much to do toward solving the problems they share. That means young people, whether in universities, unemployed, as prostitutes on the street, those who have been in jail recently for doing things which unemployment forces them to do, say: "Look. Give us the opportunity not just in International Youth Year but on a continuing basis to engage in the types of activities with other young people which some young people had an opportunity to engage in during International Youth Year". They say: "We can solve some of our own problems but we want you to listen to us".

When the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie says there should be some type of national committee with a broad representation to address the issues affecting youth, I am concerned that the umbrella will be spread too widely. There are issues which particularly and specifically affect youth which ought to be addressed. One of these issues has to be education. Young people all across the country have said there has to be something done about education at the national level in order to establish some standards based on not only the needs of our economy but on the needs of our young people. They should be involved in this process. It should not involve just adults and those involved in youth serving organizations, but young people must be intimately involved in determining the agenda for education themselves in order to adopt the type of national standards for education which will address all their needs, as the United States has done.

Somehow, we have to bring about not only a more coherent approach to the education and training of young people but, surely, it is obvious that to engage in improvements in our educational system and in our training experiences it is useless if we cannot provide these young people with jobs. We must listen to them. They tell us that there are jobs out there for everyone. Let us get our priorities straight and those young people will be able to fulfil the promise. Perhaps they will create a world and a Canada which is a lot better than that which we seem to be on the way to creating in the absence of having sufficient consideration of the interests and views of young people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Scott, Hamilton-Wentworth) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The debate is on the main motion, as amended. The Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Clifford).

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the motion which is before us. The people of Canada, particularly the young people, in September of 1984 overwhelmingly showed their support for a new Government. That support has not gone unnoticed. Our Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) has taken this matter keenly in her considerations and in her actions. I wish to speak about the Minister's actions because they have been underplayed this afternoon.

The atmosphere which has been created in Canada which the young people have noticed is one of enthusiasm and openness. The economic renewal is something which they voted to see and are now finally seeing. It reminds one of what Voltaire must have seen when he was in Paris in 1789 when he spoke to the young French people and said:

[Translation]

Young people are lucky, they will do great things.

[English]

Our Minister went to the young people of Canada and said: "Give us an advisory council so you can tell the Government what it should know. You cannot just advise, you can tell us the things which should happen." She went from coast to coast speaking to youth forums. I know this because she came to London-Middlesex where she met over 100 young people. They were not the well off; they were the unemployed, the disadvantaged, the young people in the high schools and community colleges and, indeed, in the universities. They came from all walks of life and they had something to tell our Government. Basically, they pointed out six matters to us and to our Minister which make up their main concerns. These are education, employment, their status in our society, socio-economic concerns, peace and the environment. There has been a great deal of action taken with respect to this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is time to put the question.

The question is on the motion, as amended. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

Adjournment Debate

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as promised earlier this afternoon, I have now finished my meeting with the Opposition House Leaders. I would like to take this opportunity to announce the business for next week.

Tomorrow it is my intention to call as the first item of business Bill C-74. The back-up to Bill C-74 will be the Bill which we have been discussing for the last two days, Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and other Acts. On Monday there will be debate on Bill C-84. I would like to designate next Tuesday as an allotted day. I believe this will be the fourth allotted day in this supply period.

Wednesday has been designated as a day for the debate on provisions contained in the Western Grain Transportation Act. We have discussed other initiatives which might be considered on Wednesday and Thursday of next week. I hope to make further progress in our discussions with the House Leaders of the Opposition in that regard.

On Thursday we hope that we can make progress on the Bills which are before the House. In this regard I have mentioned Bill C-74. There is also Bill C-79 and Bill C-83 on which we might be able to make some progress. As usual, I will continue to monitor the progress from time to time and to consult with my colleagues, the opposition House Leaders. If there is to be any change in the order of business, I will report to the House at my earliest convenience.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 is deemed to have been moved.

REFUGEES—EXPRESSION OF CONCERNS. (B) BACKLOG OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the Adjournment Debate to review a question I asked in the House of Commons during Question Period of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) on November 21. Unfortunately, both Ministers responsible for immigration were absent that day so the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) took the question as notice. I am very hopeful, as are others, that the Parliamentary Secretary, or perhaps one of the Ministers, will have an opportunity to be somewhat more forthcoming and to offer some substance in response to a very important question.

My question concerns the entire issue of refugee status in Canada. As you are well aware, there are some 20,000 refugees waiting for determinations to be settled by the Government. I asked the question the day after some 300 refugees from all parts of the country representing eight different countries and some 13 different organizations, gathered on Parliament Hill to bring the message to the Minister and the Government that they are feeling uncomfortable about the situation. The 300 people who were present were representing the 19,700 other individuals who are in the same situation, a situation that is quite painful.

That situation was made evident to me at the meeting I attended with the 300 refugees, a meeting that was filled with emotion and despair, despair over the fact that they know that they are here today, but certainly with the fear that tomorrow they will be sent packing to another country and perhaps even to their original homeland. I would submit that that is not the best way to live one's life.

At the meeting there was despair in that these people have substandard living conditions and many do not hold full-time jobs. Those who do have full-time jobs certainly do not have the parity in wages that other Canadians in general enjoy. Part of the reason is that employers take advantage of many refugees. The Socal Insurance Numbers given to a great many of these refugees are of a particular series of numbers that identifies them as refugees. Employers have come to know this, and some have to come to this knowledge in an abusive way.

There was also despair because of their inability to provide satisfactory long-term education for their children. There was despair over three important factors, living conditions, employment and educational opportunities, as well as the feelings that come into play when a refugee leaves his homeland; the pain that comes from being separated from one's loved ones.

There is also a second issue at play here. Is it fair that we ask individuals who have been here for three, four and sometimes even five years to once again pack their bags and go back home? There is a terrific example of this in my own riding. One family from Argentina was forced to leave Buenos Aires when the parents were purged by the former military Government. These individuals were first forced to leave because they were school teachers in their home country. The school system was one of the areas on which the military regime cracked down very hard. Therefore, they came to this country and for the last five years have been living in Toronto. Both the mother and father have learned English very well; both have found jobs in the community. They have two daughters, neither of whom speak Spanish, only English. They have tried to become involved with the Toronto community, specifically with the Latin American Community Centre in my riding. This is a perfect example of a family which has set its roots in this country. They have learned our language and our way of life. But for lack of a piece of paper, they are in fact as Canadian as, perhaps, you and I, Mr. Speaker.

The immigration authorities have asked them to return to Argentina because the Government of the day has changed. However, there is no guarantee that the persecution they faced at one time will not occur again. Is it fair to expect these individuals who have contributed to the way of life in my riding of York West and the way of life as we know it in Canada, to be asked to pack their bags and leave once again?

One aspect of my question revolved around the Gunther Plaut report. We are familiar with his first report submitted on the question of refugee status. But, he submitted a second and confidential report to the Minister of Employment and Immigration dealing solely with the backlog of refugees and the solutions he proposed. Thus far, Mr. Speaker, you and I have no knowledge of what is in that report.

My question was twofold; what is the Government planning to do with the serious backlog of refugee claimants as manifested by the 300 refugees in Ottawa some weeks ago? Second, is the Government prepared to share with us the confidential report by Gunther Plaut on the bottleneck of refugees? That was the essence of my questions in the House of Commons. I look forward to the Parliamentary Secretary providing answers which will be satisfactory to some 20,000 refugees whose future depends strictly on this Government.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the concerns of the Hon. Member. Fifty per cent of my constituency is made up of visible minorities. Twenty-five per cent of the population of St. Laurent, the largest city in my riding, falls into that category. As the former mayor of my city, I have had constant consultations with those citizens.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the questions raised by the Hon. Member. First, I would like to remind Hon. Members that Bill C-55 has been reported back to the House and will receive third reading shortly. The primary purpose of the Bill is to increase the personnel of the Immigration Appeal Board and thus enhance its capacity to deal with an increasing case-load of appeals and refugee determination applications.

The Bill will allow for more expeditious oral hearings at the redetermination stage for refugee claimants whose claims have been unsuccessful at the first instance. This can only be good news for bona fide refugee claimants currently caught in the backlog. The group that demonstrated on Parliament Hill on November 20 maintained that Bill C-55 will thwart the Supreme Court decision that guarantees an oral hearing. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the contrary is true.

At the same time, I must emphasize that it has always been the Government's position that Bill C-55 is a limited interim response to the caseload situation at the Immigration Appeal Board and should not be seen as part of the comprehensive refugee legislation reform package now being developed. More comprehensive measures will be introduced into Parliament when we have completed our study of the many complex recommendations contained in Rabbi Plaut's study on refugee determinations in Canada and the public impact that report has attracted.

This brings me to my second point. There is a certain irony in the fact that among those groups demonstrating against a so-called lack of progress in presenting a new system are several respondents who made strong representations to have the consultation period extended. Such persons should realize that they cannot have it both ways. In fact, the consultation period was extended and for good reason. The views of many interested groups and individuals are relevant to the process and are being given serious consideration. If the Government's response to the Plaut report has not been as rapid as some would wish, I suggest it is not because we are insensitive but because we are proceeding with care to avoid the mistakes of the past which have led to this difficult situation.

I am pleased to say that our efforts should bear fruit in a few weeks, but it must be evident to all Hon. Members that even if we can achieve the rapid passage of upcoming legislative amendments, the full implementation of a new system is at least several months away. Therefore, until we have a new framework for a fair and expeditious refugee claims process, the only practical approach is to speed up the existing process, which Bill C-55 will facilitate.

I note as well that the Hon. Member referred on November 21 to a "second and confidential report dealing solely with the refugee backlog that was submitted to the Minister by Rabbi Plaut." I must advise that no such secret report exists. Contrary to the Hon. Member's suggestion that the Government is sitting on a follow-up study by Rabbi Plaut, the full report was released on June 17. If he is sufficiently interested, he may wish to refer to pages 215 through 221 which contain proposals for transitional arrangements which Rabbi Plaut presents as a means to clear the backlog.

In conclusion, I regret the lack of understanding displayed by those who characterize Canada's response to the plight of refugees as insensitive and inhumane. Canada's humanitarian concerns have found repeated expression time and time again in recent years. Canada has a tradition of generosity of which we can be proud, and our current efforts to create a speedy and equitable system are part of that tradition.

SHIPBUILDING—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROJECT TO BUILD SECOND CN MARINE FACTORY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, on November 22, 1985 I asked the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) when the Government would make a decision concerning the construction of a second ferry for CN Marine.

As you know, Versatile Davie and the Department of Transport are holding negotiations concerning the construction of this second ferry.

Lauzon's Versatile Davie management have assured us they are prepared to build a second ferry for exactly the same price as the first one, $127 million. A similar ferry is now being tested and just about ready for delivery to the customer, CN Marine.

Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention the fact that Versatile Davie's offer is a pretty good indication of the effort made by the company to keep costs from exceeding the tender price.

Versatile Davie workers and all subcontractors within the greater Quebec City region have been asked to co-operate, so the company was able to offer to build a second ferry for the same price as the first one.

We have to keep in mind that the immediate construction of a second ferry at the Versatile shipyards has many advantages.

First of all, it will enable the company to hire 1,500 workers who otherwise will have to make do with unemployment insurance benefits and very soon depend on measly social welfare payments.

Second, if our workers have to spend too much time on unemployment insurance and social welfare, they will lose both their incentive to work and their skills with the result that the Lauzon Versatile Davie shipyards will no longer be very competitive on the market.

Third, CN Marine's responsibility is to run a ferry service and we know that the users have been asking for such services.

Fourth, this project has involved the participation of 19 municipalities in the Quebec City region, not to mention the municipal conference which includes all Lévis county municipalities that have given their support to the second ferry construction project. The Quebec Urban Community as well has decided to join the group.

In a telegram sent to the Hon. Michel Côté in early October this year, the economic council of Lévis-Lauzon expressed its growing concern about this matter and the employment situation in Lévis.

Then, on November 14, 1984, Mr. Mazankowski had this to say concerning the rationalization of ferry services:

> —this will have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, will create jobs.

The day after, November 15, 1985, Mr. Mazankowski said, and I quote:

> As a matter of fact, we have a number of initiatives to stimulate the shipbuilding industry, and part of the rationalization for the upgrading of the eastern ferry system involves the acquisition of a new vessel. There will be four new vessels coming on stream, one of which is already built. They will, among other things, provide more capacity, faster service, greater flexibility and, equally important, provide the shipyards with some needed activity.

● (1815)

In addition, it is imperative that the Government make up its mind quickly, for it would be the logical result of the initiative taken by the Hon. Sinclair Stevens who, on March 15, 1985, announced the acquisition of Davie Shipbuilding by Versatile Davie, with a $15 million grant to the new Versatile Davie Inc. In doing so, the Government was making a formal commitment to the future of the Lauzon shipyards and recognizing the reputation of a company whose experience and know-how are unique in North America.

Considering what we have already accomplished, Mr. Speaker, and also considering our formal commitments, we now have an obligation to proceed quickly in the matter of reaching a decision on the construction of a second ferry.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I think we should be very careful about the proposals and reports being submitted by CN Marine concerning certain alternative solutions for the second ferry. In fact, CN Marine is suggesting to the Department of Transport the purchase of a foreign vessel. Does this proposal contain all the elements of a cost-benefit analysis, and not just the capital cost but also operating costs, not only the book cost but also the economic cost? Do these recommendations by CN Marine take into consideration aspects such as jobs, technology, and our reputation and competitive position on international markets?

Has CN Marine given the authorities at the Department of Transport several alternatives or has it presented only one proposal without offering an alternative to the acquisition of a foreign vessel? Has it given no alternative to acquiring a foreign vessel?

Mr. Speaker, I have serious doubts about the quality of the data prepared by CN Marine for the Department of Transport and thus for Parliament. It is in the long term interests of Canadians that we get a quick decision that will preserve jobs and improve our technology.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for his continued interest in and hard work on an issue that will be of major importance to his constituents. This may be the kind of stimulus we need to get some action as soon as possible.

Hon. Members are aware that one of the elements of the upgrading plan for ferry services which was ratified in 1984, was the delivery by Versatile Davie of Lauzon of the ferry M.V. Caribou, to be put into service early in 1986.

As indicated several times by the Minister, various aspects of the matter are being analyzed, and a study will be submitted to Cabinet within the next few weeks.

The use of new, bigger and more efficient vessels will result in a significant reduction in operating costs and increased passenger and cargo capacity, thus providing a better service for the people of Newfoundland.

The House will recall that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has an obligation to ensure that transportation services are provided safely and efficiently, at the lowest possible cost.

In fact I would like to take this opportunity to express the Minister's thanks for the excellent work done by the Hon. Member for Lévis in connection with the report submitted to the Minister on the whole issue of the shipbuilding industry in Canada. Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend does not mind, I would like to give him a few statistics which I think will convince all Members present of the government's concern for this industry.

Today, 90 per cent of contracts for building ships in our shipyards are Government contracts. In addition, 60 per cent of the work in repair shops is done on government ships. The Canadian Coast Guard's current building program includes eighteen vessels, with contracts totalling over $465.2 million.

Ports Canada and CN Marine contracts for the construction of new vessels will total $143 million.

Furthermore, Transport Canada and several Crown corporations are expected very shortly to allocate $50.7 million for repairs to 21 vessels.

Mr. Speaker, these projects are being directed to shipyards, large and small, across the country.

AIR SAFETY—INQUIRY INTO AIR INDIA DISASTER. (B) AIRPORT SECURITY MEASURES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) prompted by a Canadian Press article which indicated that the lawyer representing the Canadian Government at the New Delhi inquiry into the June 23 crash of an Air India jumbo-jet off Ireland was attempting to make the point that the inquiry should not determine who was responsible for the incident.

The article stated:

> At issue was whether the week-old inquiry should decide who was responsible for airport security before the Boeing 747 left Toronto and Montreal for Bombay.

Obviously, the answer will be crucial in civil litigation. As you know, 329 people died in this incident.

The Minister's answer was that he wanted to wait until the inquiry was completed before commenting on the inquiry. However, what is at stake is the conduct and attitude of the lawyer representing the Government in this inquiry. Why was the lawyer trying to prevent this inquiry from getting at the consequence and responsibility of this incident?

I suggest that on the one hand the Canadian authorities do not want anyone to know if they are responsible for the incident. On the other hand, it seems that the Indian authorities do not want anyone to know if Air India was responsible for the incident. Therefore, this inquiry is taking place for no reason than just to find that indeed there was an accident. The exercise in New Delhi seems to be purely unnecessary because the judge has decided that according to the court, all questions of responsibility will be disregarded. I find this absolutely incredible and certainly not in the best interests of our country.

I also pointed out to the Minister in my question that despite the series of measures that had been taken to better protect air passengers at our airports, there are still a number of failures in the system. Last week the Transport Committee heard witnesses on the document "Freedom to Move". At the time of this hearing in Vancouver the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks presented a memorandum to the committee indicating that in fact there have been a number of failures. Let me briefly read into the record some of these failures. This is what the union organization said:

> The first is that, despite every intent to adhere to the new policy, the pressure of competition can result in the waiver of rules. Although there is an extensive effort to ensure that all passengers who have checked in, are on board, there has been at least one instance recently when, in the interests of "on-time" departure an international flight left Vancouver airport without reconciliation of passengers on board.
> Another problem exists with passengers travelling internationally who must first connect through another city. For example a passenger leaving Calgary for Tokyo, will not have his baggage x-rayed. During the change of plane in Vancouver the passenger is supposed to pick up the luggage and re-check it in order that it may be cleared through security. Often passengers neglect to claim their luggage and the responsibility falls to the airline agent (a BRAC member) who must physically handle the baggage by processing it through the x-ray procedure. This naturally puts the employee in a potentially dangerous situation should an explosive device be contained in the luggage.
> A third situation, which is of grave concern, is the through handling of baggage originating outside Canada, destined for another country.
> ● (1825)
> This baggage is not subject to any X-ray check unless the originating country has a procedure in place. For example, baggage originating from South Pacific locations destined for Europe will not go through any security clearance.

I want to submit, Mr. Speaker, that these three cases presented by the union are very important. I appreciate the Minister is doing his best to improve security at airports, but I submit there are still grave problems that have to be corrected. I appreciate that the Parliamentary Secretary will be doing his best here tonight in trying to answer us. I would have preferred to see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) or the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. Forrestall) handle it. I have confidence that the Parliamentary Secretary will certainly convey to the Minister this great discrepancy in terms of security at airports.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in this Parliamentary Secretary you are getting a man who has been marked for life by the going down of Air-India's Flight 182. Many of those who died were my constituents. I spent much of the summer in constant consultation with the families. I have been watching this file and the proceedings very carefully. In addition, I lost a personal friend, an outstanding pharmacist, Gaston Beauchesne, a director, a colleague, and a member of the Order of Pharmacists. I too share the concerns, and I am watching the proceedings most carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) would know indeed that no Minister of the Crown may comment on a judicial inquiry. Even so I would like to remind him of the words of Mr. Justice Kirpaul:

[English]

What this court has to do is to find the cause and circumstances of the accident and not apportion blame.

I believe those remarks were taken from the same report which the Hon. Member must have read on that subject.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) said in the House on several occasions, our airport security has been considerably boosted. We have added $6 million to the $36 million already earmarked for airport security in 1985 and 1986.

Twenty-seven X-ray devices for monitoring checked luggage have been installed; 23 more have been ordered and will be delivered before March 31, 1986; 26 explosive vapour detectors will be installed in international airports by December 15, 1985.

The Prime Minister has set up a special study sponsored by the interdepartmental committee on security and intelligence. The final report has been received by the Minister and the implementation of its recommendations is being considered.

Mr. Speaker, we are trying to reverse the action taken over the past five or six years by the previous Government in which the Hon. Member was involved to reduce security measures and expenses at our various airports.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.28 p.m.

ALLEGED THEFT OF CHEESE IMPORT CERTIFICATES—DAIRY FARMERS' LOSSES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government places a low priority on agriculture in Canada and on its importance to the Canadian economy. After the recent theft of Government import certificates for cheese the Government forced the importers using these certificates to pay a 10 per cent fine and return the illegally imported cheese to the country of origin. That may have been an appropriate action if there was no illegal action by the importers.

What is not appropriate and not fair is the treatment that has been handed out to Canadian dairy producers. They have been assessed over-quota levies of millions of dollars because some civil servant stole a bunch of import certificates and peddled them to make a fast buck. Why are these producers being fined by having this unfair levy imposed on them? The Minister's defence of the Government's action is as full of holes as Swiss cheese.

The Government should stop picking on the farmers and reimburse them for these levies which have been estimated by the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture Dairy Committee to be $5.6 million. The Tory caucus has known about this for six months. We need action from the Government now.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SALE OF HABITAT 67

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): On Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation sold Habitat 67 to a speculator despite the fact that two-thirds of the tenants had made a bid for the entire housing complex.

Forming an association, 100-odd tenants offered close to $10 million. They stated that they wanted mainly to continue to live in their units and, "above all else we want Habitat 67 to remain in its present conditions as part of our national heritage".

In its purchasing offer the tenants' association made a commitment to protect the existing structure and the exterior appearance of the building. It also asked CMHC management to give it an opportunity to make a counter-offer and the corporation had promised to negotiate with respect to the highest bids.

Just the same, CMHC sold the complex to a speculator for $10 million without giving the tenants an opportunity to defend their own interests.

This is most unfair on the part of this Conservative Government which as usual gives priority to the interests of speculators over those of tenants and workers.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF PACIFIC NATIVE FISHING ASSOCIATION

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the Native Brotherhood of B.C. for their hard work in securing the position of native fishermen in the B.C. fishing industry. I also want to commend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) for providing $11 million to the Native Brotherhood of B.C. These moneys are to be administered by the newly formed Pacific Native Fishing Association which will operate under the auspices of the Native Brotherhood of B.C.

The Association will provide financial assistance to native fishing vessel owners, assist former operators of rental vessels such as the Cassiar Native Rental Fishermen to purchase their own boats, provide basic business management training, and ensure that native fishermen who wish to leave the industry pass their vessels and licences to other natives through a purchase plan managed by the new association.

Today the Minister announced the members of the board for the new fishing association. These members were selected by the executive of the Native Brotherhood of B.C. I want to extend my best wishes to the Native Brotherhood of B.C. as they meet today and tomorrow in Masset, B.C., for their annual convention.

TERRORISM

CANADA'S DECISION TO PARTICIPATE IN ESTABLISHING INTERNATIONAL AGENCY TO COMBAT TERRORISM

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, November 23, we watched, shocked and helpless, as a tragedy unfolded that was to end in the death of two Canadian citizens, innocent victims of an act of international terrorism in Malta. I am sure that this tragic accident has once more aroused in Canadians feelings of indignation and disgust at these thoughtless acts of terrorism, at a time when terrorism has become common as a form of protest, but at what price!

Despite the tragic outcome of this incident which aroused general consternation among the Canadian public, I would like to point out the excellent work done by officials of the Department of External Affairs, their speedy intervention, their close co-operation with the bereaved family and their sense of duty.

I am sure that Canadians were very pleased and vastly relieved at the announcement yesterday by Canada's ambassador to the United Nations that Canada has decided to help set up an international agency to combat terrorism. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this agency will be to defeat international terrorism, since no one can be entirely safe from its effects. We therefore have a duty to support the action taken by our Government, so that tragic events such as the Achille Lauro affair, the EgyptAir incident and the attack against the Turkish Embassy will never happen again.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROGRAMS TO HELP LAID-OFF

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, last week in Quebec, more than 500 community agencies set up a coalition to ask the Government, and more specifically, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to review her decision on criteria for job development programs, which now make it compulsory for all futur employees in these programs to have been unemployed for 24 of the 30 last weeks. If the Government does not change its decision, it will mean that all those who have agreed to work under the Government's Canada Works program will be excluded from subsequent programs, and that if the Government maintains this attitude, community agencies in Quebec and the other provinces will have to close their doors.

Mr. Speaker, this particular coalition includes the Regroupement des maisons des jeunes du Québec, the Association des centres de femmes du Québec, the Mouvement d'action populaire et d'action communautaire du Québec, the Association québécoise pour la défense des droits des retraités et des préretraités, and the Confédération des organismes provinciaux pour personnes handicapées and various shelter facilities. All those agencies are asking the Government to remember that community agencies can do excellent work for the public while at the same time providing manpower training, provided they are allowed to hire people with experience.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SINKING OF FISHING VESSEL LADY MARJORIE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House the sinking off the coast of Nova Scotia of the fishing vessel Lady Marjorie, by the Canadian Navy vessel H.M.C.S. Nipigon. The Navy will undoubtedly resolve the procedural problems internally to prevent a recurrence of this type of event in the future. However, the Conservative Government has a clear responsibility to compensate the owner of the vessel. The owner of the Lady Marjorie must be compensated for the loss of the vessel in such a negligent and dangerous manner.

In addition, the owner owned a small fish processing operation based on production from his vessel. That plant employed 15 people. As a result of the sinking of this vessel by the Navy, that plant is closed and 15 people are out of work.

The Minister of National Defence and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) must act quickly on the matter. I also note that no member of the Conservative Party from Nova Scotia has seen fit up to this point to raise this important matter in the House of Commons and urge the Government to move quickly toward compensation. It is important that they join the NDP and speak up on behalf of the people whom they were elected to represent. The Government must provide compensation, and provide it quickly.

TOURISM

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS OF NIAGARA PARKS COMMISSION

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, 1985 is the centennial of the Niagara Parks Commission and I would like to draw the attention of the House to some of the work the Commission is doing to promote tourism in Canada. Many people do not realize that the Commission is completely self-supporting and is run as a business. Moneys are raised through gift shops, restaurants, attractions, and through water rentals to power companies. Funds are used to maintain not only the lands and gardens but also the buildings and roadways. The Niagara Parks Commission has its own police force as well as 1,400 employees.

Last week the third annual winter Festival of Lights, an international light show that runs for three months, began. Along with the nightly illumination on the falls, 30,000 lights are strewn over 55 giant trees. Private companies have joined the celebration, making the winter Festival of Lights a real community celebration.

This Festival has resulted in an increase of over one million tourists visiting the Niagara area and has been an incredible boost for local merchants and business people. The Niagara Parks Commission is to be congratulated not only for its tremendous work over the last 100 years but for its continual leadership in the tourist industry.

As I mentioned yesterday when I presented a petition, there is tremendous potential for attracting tourists to Canada by way of the attractions of the Niagara Peninsula and we need to encourage this in any way we can, both federally and in conjunction with the province.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATUS OF WOMEN—GRANT TO NATIVE WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I, along with many women in Canada, was pleased to hear the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) announce this week that the Native Women's Association of Canada will receive a grant of $1.062 million to help in the implementation of Bill C-31.

As my colleagues in the House know, the passage of Bill C-31 ends years of discrimination suffered by many Indian women in Canada, enabling those who were previously struck off the Indian Register to be reinstated to Indian status. Already over 18,000 applications have been received for reinstatement. It is expected that 70,000 to 80,000 native people will be reinstated under the provisions of the Bill.

The grant to the Native Women's Association of Canada will help them inform their members and families of the intent of Bill C-31, and assist them in applying for status and membership. The funds will also enable the Association to monitor the progress and implementation of the Bill, and prepare a report to the parliamentary committee which will review this issue in 1987.

Finally, as these Indian women take their rightful place again in their bands, I know their contribution will have a significant and positive impact on the economic, social, and political progress of all native people.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF FUNDING CRITICISED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, we are lucky that Thomas Edison did not have to invent the electric light under the Conservative Government's research and development policies, for we would still be sitting in the dark.

Unfortunately the science community is being kept in the dark because of the Government's long and inexcusable delay in providing funds for its most important activities. With increasing frequency we learn of Canadian scientists leaving the country for a more favourable R and D climate south of the border. Not a day passes without us receiving dozens, if not hundreds of letters expressing outrage at the Government's failure to recognize that, without funds for research today, we are saying "no" to the jobs of tomorrow.

Perhaps if this dangerous delay is caused by the lack of clout of a junior Minister, we would be better off to absolish the Ministry of Science and Technology and make scientific research and development of responsibility of every member of the Cabinet. Science and technology affect every aspect of our lives. If the Government does not give urgent priority to research funding, we will all end up in the dark, while Mr. Edison's light bulb will illuminate the road to the United States for the most brilliant brains of our country.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. He knows, coming from a farm family, that western farmers are in deep trouble, particularly those who have been hit by the drought. He should also know now, by reason of the reaction out on the Prairies, that the new drought relief program of the Government is considered to be absolutely pathetic. I suppose that the real villain is the Minister of Finance, but I will direct my question to the Minister. Would he go once again, with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, to the Minister of Finance and explain to him, in the strongest possible terms, that we have a crisis on the family farm in western Canada, and that the program for drought relief just will not do the job?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Right Hon. Member's question. Perhaps I could read into the record what the Vice-President of the Saskatchewan Pool said. He said: "I am sure you know in the minds of a lot of people that it is a great deal of money, and it is a great deal of money". Certainly $150 million is a lot of money. In connection with that, there was an additional $48 million which was paid earlier in the fall to assist livestock producers.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which Saskatchewan took into its own treasury.

Mr. Mayer: No, it did not take it into its own treasury; that is not the case at all. The Right Hon. Member should know, based upon the amendments which were put through with his Party's support—and we appreciated it—last February, that in all likelihood there will be another interim payment or advance payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act next spring, which will assist producers in getting their crops into the ground.

As I pointed out yesterday, when we consider the amount of money which has already been committed by the Government to assist western farmers directly with their financial problems, it comes very close to $1 billion. That is a substantial amount of money. Also, as I said yesterday, we know that everybody would like more. However, if we put it in that kind of context, I think everybody would have to admit that it is a reasonable amount of cash which will support western producers.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the programs to which the Minister referred were enacted long before his Government took power, as he knows. Would he not admit that yesterday he and the Minister of Agriculture misled western farmers by promising that payments under the drought relief program would be available before Christmas? Does he still insist upon telling the House, the country and, more particular, western farmers that they will receive benefits and payments under the program before Christmas? Or, will he give us the realistic date of when that will be done?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any comments which I have made saying that payments would be made before Christmas. What we have said is that the money would be available just as quickly as possible. However, he should know that in the case of British Columbia, where the province has decided to participate in a fashion different from that of the other provinces, there is at least a possibility for some of that money to be made available before Christmas. Certainly we are doing everything we can to get that money out as quickly as possible. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know, as we all know, that when you do not have money sometimes the timing of it, whatever amount comes, can be just as important as the amount.

We are very sensitive to that and we are doing whatever we can to get the money out as quickly as we possibly can.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that as a result of this exchange and the exchange yesterday in the House of Commons the Minister would again go back to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, and tell him in the strongest possible terms that farmers consider the drought program to be a token gesture, particularly in view of the fact that western bank depositors are receiving 100 cents on the dollar and the western farmers are receiving 10 cents on the dollar.

Would the Minister give an undertaking to the House that he will review this program with the Minister of Finance at an early opportunity?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think anybody would consider $200 million, spent in western Canada to support people who had problems with the drought, a token gesture.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what one of the press people said yesterday: "The day that the Opposition Members of Parliament have praises for Government intiatives, there will be two moons in the sky and one in the backyard".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: That is one of the concerns we have. Certainly we would all like to do more, but let us give some credit for the amount of money that has already been put in there. Let us tell them that we will try to do everything we can on behalf of western agriculture and all agriculture. As the Right Hon. Member well knows, agriculture is probably the one sector of the economy that is not experiencing any kind of an income increase that we see occurring in other areas, for instance, increases in car sales, in housing sales, and in drilling activity. The agriculture industry is not experiencing that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SASKATCHEWAN WHEAT POOL OFFICIAL'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Acting Minister of Agriculture. We note that he is very defensive about the Disaster Assistance Program. He knows that neither the Minister of Finance nor the Prime Minister have visited the drought area, as has the Leader of the Opposition who has put forward a program that was very well accepted by the Saskatchewan Pool.

Does the Minister agree with the comment of Avery Sahl, vice-president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, when he said: "This is a token gesture that hardly equals one treatment for grasshoppers", a problem which many of the drought area farmers experienced this summer? This is aside from the costs incurred by the farmers in planting the crop and so on?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I know that Mr. Sahl, and I just quoted him, said that it is a great deal of money. When he talks about not doing anything and being taken gestures, again to go back and put it into perspective, we will, as a federal Government, have spent close to $1 billion supporting western agriculture as a result of the drought situation. I do not understand why anybody would call that a token gesture, Mr. Speaker.

ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the Minister had attended the agricultural committee meeting yesterday morning he would have heard the senior Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Dr. Trant, point out to the committee that payments would not be made until next March or April. Why do the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board and the Minister of Agriculture continue to mislead farmers that payments will be made by Christmas? The Minister reponsible for the Wheat Board knows that the program will not even be negotiated by then, let alone application forms being made available until some time after the first of the new year, and payments not until next March or April, as was outlined by the senior Assistant Deputy Minister to the committee yesterday.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the senior Assistant Deputy Minister can make statements at committee. Let me tell the Hon. Member it is my understanding that as of this morning, in the case of British Columbia where it will be a different arrangement, there is the possibility—and I emphasize the possibility—that some of that money could be in producers' hands before Christmas.

As far as not having this money available, announced by the Minister of Agriculture on Wednesday, until March or April, that is not the case. If it were the case, it would be unacceptable to us. We would do something to make sure it would get there faster.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS WITHOUT CROP INSURANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): My question is for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Last December the Minister of Agriculture stated that if farmers choose not to protect themselves under crop insurance programs, they will find themselves without assistance for crop losses. Since this matter was not addressed in the statement of the other day, I should like to know whether this is still the Government's position. Or will farmers in the drought zone who did not have crop insurance this year receive this payment?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, farmers in the drought zone who do not have crop insurance will be receiving the payment for this year.

SIZE OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): A supplementary question. If there are two farmers in the same area suffering the same drought, one with crop insurance and one without, will they receive identical payments on an acreage basis, or will the farmer without coverage receive a supplement?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a definite answer for the Member. I shall have to check to determine how the program will be administered. I can say that it will be administered on as fair a basis as possible, based on the actual loss that the farmer has suffered, without regard to whether or not that farmer has crop insurance.

We will try to ensure that no farmer is disadvantaged by virtue of his not having had crop insurance.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM DETAILS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. We waited three and one-half months for the report from the Member from Assiniboia. In that time, we had expected that all of these details would have been finalized.

Why is it that we do not have these kinds of details? The only detail the Minister was able to give us in his initial statement was that there would be $150 million available. Will the Gustafson Report be tabled in this House so that we can see what he did or didn't do for the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be well aware that as the summer progressed and as we got into fall, there were a lot of circumstances that changed. A lot of people ended up in difficulty because of the wet harvest conditions, quite apart from those who suffered losses as a result of the drought and the grasshopper influx.

One of the reasons for the delay was to give us sufficient time to treat everyone as fairly as we could, based on the loss suffered and regardless of the cause of that loss.

We will be dealing with probably 30,000 farmers under this program, and in order to ensure that everyone is treated as fairly as possible we have taken the time necessary to work out the details in respect of the compensation program.

Ideally, things should have happened quicker; but we are doing everything we can to put things in motion as quickly as we can.

Mr. Althouse: Will the report be tabled?

INQUIRY WHETHER STUDIES WERE MADE OF IMPACT ON LAY-OFFS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the acting Minister for International Trade. Yesterday, your Government stated that lifting quotas on shoe imports would not result in loss of jobs. However, the unions and the Canadian Manufacturers Association do not agree. They say that as many as 5,000 jobs would be lost in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would inform the House whether serious studies have been done to determine the social cost of losing these jobs.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in taking this decision, a decision that was taken in response to a Liberal Party established tribunal, we took into account the interests of the economy as a whole, and that includes consumers, and producers, and workers.

My colleague, the Minister for International Trade, has stated many times in this House that the competitive part of that industry is expected to remain competitive, and that where there is particular hardship he will be taking a look at it.

INQUIRY CONCERNING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND WELFARE PAYMENTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister did not quite answer the question. I would like to know how much Canadians will be paying in unemployment insurance and welfare benefits and whether those amounts will exceed the savings to the public as a result of eliminating the quotas?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question. As usual, the Liberal Party is trying to spread fear and panic among the Canadian people.

If there are difficulties in particular sectors, then those will be dealt with. It was because this Government is sensitive to that, and sensitive to the need for this country to have a competitive shoe industry, that we took the action that we did.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Agriculture—and I hope that becomes a permanent position.

Canada's grain producers are pleased with the restraint shown by the Minister in not taking credit for the final payments in respect to grain. It is the farmers' money.

I would ask the Minister why, in the last few weeks, he and his colleagues have been insisting on taking credit for other pay-outs, pay-outs which are producer-financed, such as payments under crop insurance programs, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and so forth—payments which would have been made regardless of the Party in power.

• (1130)

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is wishing me well in a permanent acting career, I certainly thank him for wishing me that kind of luck. I appreciate the comment the Hon. Member made regarding the federal Government staying away from making announcements dealing with the Canadian Wheat Board and its final payments. We have not at all done anything different.

Any announcements that have been made have consistently pointed out how programs are funded. We have always said that regarding the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It is a one-third—two-thirds shared cost between producers and the federal Government. I do not see any change, and I have very consistently made that point whenever I have issued press releases, made statements, or spoken. I do not know where the Hon. Member gets that kind of indication.

GUSTAFSON REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the last two days the Minister has done quite differently. Does the Gustafson Report make the recommendations for the miserly pay-out that was made? Does the report make a recommendation for long-term disaster pay-outs? Will the Government table the report or must the Hon. Member for Assiniboia be maligned by the idea that he would make this kind of recommendation on behalf of his neighbours?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question which dealt with some of the announcements made recently, the statement that was made in the House regarding a $522 million pay-out indicated that $350 million of that, about two-thirds, came from the federal Government. I did not use the larger figure.

With regard to the Hon. Member for Asiniboia being maligned, everyone knows the kind of work and dedication he put into that report this summer. He lives in the area. He did not have to go to visit it as some other Members must do. If the Hon. Member were to talk to the producers, and if he watched some of the interviews on television last night emanating from the Agribition, he would know that, far from being maligned, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia is being very well received and thanked for the work he did on behalf of the farmers this summer.

LOSS OF JOBS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF GOVERNMENT AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and concerns the elimination of quotas on shoe imports.

The Minister admits that the Government will have to take steps to help those who will lose their jobs. Now, workers in the footwear industry, through their spokesman and union leader, Mr. Jean-Paul Hétu, President of the CSD, would like to know what kind of programs the Government intends to set up to help workers. Are these old programs, new programs, or new funds applied to old programs? It is high time we got some information in this respect.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it was the Hon. Member's own party that ordered this inquiry.

[English]

I suppose if that Party were still in office, it would have ignored the results. This inquiry provided a very rational view of the shoe industry. The Minister has said in the House many times that the competitive part of the industry will lose its quotas and that, where there is a particular problem in one sector of the industry, the quotas will remain. The disruption to the industry will be minimal and will be dealt with.

INQUIRY IF FUNDS WILL BE AVAILABLE TO HELP WORKERS WHO LOSE JOBS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not answering my question, but if she would only get her head out of the sand, she would realize that this will have a very serious impact.

On December 20, just five days before Christmas—and a Merry Christmas when 100 people will be laid off at Daoust-Lalonde!

I would like to know the following from the Minister and the Government: Is she going to release funds to help those people who are going to lose their jobs? That is not hypothetical. That is going to happen.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade has said in the House that the Government supports the results of the tribunal on the shoe industry.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We know that. What are you going to do?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE VIOLATIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. We now have clear evidence of the high-handed, arbitrary, and unfair attitude which is being displayed by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce not only to its employees but also to its customers. Is the Minister aware that the Canada Labour Relations Board has found that this bank, among others, is guilty of numerous violations of the Code? Will the Minister move now to require an investigation and an industrial inquiry into the labour relations practices of this bank under the Canada Labour Code?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the negotiations that have taken place between legally constituted bargaining units and the bank in question. I am aware of the process put down in legislation which those people in Canadian labour have available to them under the Canada Labour Code. That process is fair and will continue to be maintained.

BANK'S NEGOTIATIONS WITH EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I assume that that means that there will be no inquiry. Does the Minister really believe that a bank that would display the kind of attitudes that this bank has displayed toward its customers can be trusted to sit at the negotiating table and work out an agreement with its employees? Why will the Minister not move now to have an inquiry into the practices of this bank as displayed at and beyond the negotiating table, in order to try to solve what is a very difficult problem for a great many quite innocent people?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I find it very, very strange that a member of the New Democratic Party would demand that the Government become involved between two legally constituted bodies that are trying to come to a negotiated agreement. That is the premise of the practice of bargaining collectively in Canada. I cannot understand the Hon. Member or his Party suggesting that the Government impose its will upon one or the other partners in negotiations.

DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY FOR SHIPBUILDERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, but in his absence, I shall direct it to his closest colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was supposed to provide a development strategy for ship and drilling rig builders in Canada. Can the Minister give us any information about this matter?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank the Hon. Member for Lévis for his interest in the shipbuilding industry. That sector was seriously affected by the decision of the previous Government to cancel its shipbuilding program.

I shall take the question as notice and check with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, and I shall report back to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

PROPOSED SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked him about the possible tokeover of de Havilland Aircraft by Boeing. This morning I learned that notices have been put up in the de Havilland plant calling all employees to a meeting at 3.30 on Monday afternoon. I presume this meeting is to announce a sale to them. Meanwhile the United Auto Workers and Bob White have been trying for a month to have a meeting with the Government and have been refused. And the only Canadian bidder interested in this matter has not been given an opportunity to know the facts. Why is the Government so obsessed with selling that company to a foreign owner?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, any announcement with respect to de Havilland, if made, will be made at an appropriate time, at the appropriate place, and in the appropriate terms. Parliament will be informed should anything be in the allegation of the Hon. Member who asked the question, at the appropriate time and in the appropriate words.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is telling us that the sale will be announced as a completed sale. Will the Minister give Parliament the opportunity to look at the matter in order to give the Canadian bidder an opportunity to make his bid and to give the auto workers a chance to be reassured about jobs? Will the Minister agree that that pre-examination will take place before any sale of such an important part of the aerospace industry is permitted by the Government?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is referring to "the sale", which are his words and not mine. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, in contrast with the experience which I had on the benches on which he now sits, there have been more opportunities for discussing matters in the House of Commons and its committees than there ever were while he was on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MEET UNIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal about consultation from the Government. My question is for the Minister of Labour. Why has the Government refused to meet with UAW leaders and de Havilland workers with respect to sales plans for the company, despite weeks of union requests for this type of meeting? Why has there been a refusal to meet?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the premise to the Hon. Member's question is completely inaccurate. I have never—and I repeat never—had a request from the leader of the Canadian United Auto Workers Union or from the workers of de Havilland to meet.

Mr. Deans: You are wrong.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that just shows the lack of communication on the part of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Bob White wrote personally weeks ago to the Government, specifically to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, requesting a meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Does the Minister not see it as part of his role as the Minister of Labour to see to it that when workers make a reasonable request for a simple meeting to discuss plans which will affect their company that he should ensure that such a meeting takes place?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, now it becomes more clear. The Hon. Member is talking about a letter sent to a Minister of the Government which was not apparently "copy" to me. Therefore, I take it that there was not a request put forward to the Minister of Labour. However, I can say that I will meet, if requested at any time, with both employers and employees who come within the responsibility of Canada Labour when I am requested and when I am able to do so. I have done that in the past and I will continue to do it.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN MAGAZINE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the December issue of Hustler magazine. I gave notice of my question both to the Deputy Prime Minister and to the Minister of State for Finance. I also offered to show the Minister of State for Finance a copy of the magazine but she declined.

In April of this year the Minister of State for Finance said that the Government regards the control of obscene and hate material as a matter of utmost urgency. If that is true, and if the Government is serious about stopping the importation of pornographic material into Canada, will the Government indicate what steps have been taken to get this magazine off the shelves? Do Canadians have to wait until the Minister responsible returns from his constituency before action is taken?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we do regard this as a matter of some urgency. The circumstances were that although the magazine came across the border the two offensive pages were removed before the magazine hit the stands. Personally, I find the entire magazine offensive. However, if the two pages which do not fall under the guidelines were removed before the magazine was on the stands, and if that magazine is still on the stands, then it becomes a matter for the provincial Attorneys General since the matter falls under Section 159 of the Criminal Code. Once it is in the country it is no longer a Customs matter. However, the Department has looked into the matter and there will be a full report by Monday morning.

Mr. Nunziata: The Minister is indicating her ignorance of the matter. Customs and Excise indicated that 16 pages were offensive and contravened the Criminal Code of Canada. Notwithstanding that, the magazine was allowed into Canada.

STAFFING OF CUSTOMS SERVICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, what does the Deputy Prime Minister intend to do with respect to his decision to cut 120 positions from Customs and Excise with respect to cut-backs in the Civil Service? Will he give his undertaking today that he will not cut back with respect to Customs inspectors, in order to give the inspectors sufficient opportunity to stop the influx of pornographic material into Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's accusation that I recommended a cut of 150 Customs inspectors is absolutely false.

Mr. Skelly: It is absolutely right on.

ADVANCE PAYMENTS FOR UNHARVESTED CROPS UNDER SNOW

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It relates to the Old problem of getting cash into the hands of farmers. About one month ago the Minister talked about reviewing the possibility of supplying advances on crops which are sitting under the snow. Will the Minister look at the matter now in light of the need for cash by farmers, in particular those in the Peace country?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peace River comes from an area which, I understand, has left 50 per cent to 60 per cent of its crops in the field. I am happy to announce today that last night we completed arrangements to make emergency cash advances available for unthrashed grain. It is in the form of an interest-free loan which will be administered by the Canadian Wheat Board. Preprinted forms in this respect will be in the mail today. Producers should be in a position at the first of next week to go to their elevators and apply for an interest-free cash advance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MARKETING OF PHOTOGRAPHIC DEVELOPING MACHINES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in these depleted times my question is for whichever Minister is acting as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns the notorious one-hour developing machines marketed in Canada by Key Independent Systems, and known to their owners, approximately 50 of whom have gone bankrupt in Ontario, as the "KIS of Death". In a letter to the Leader of my Party on August 19 the former Solicitor General stated that the complainants are to be interviewed with a view to laying charges under the Act. Will the Minister advise the House when these charges will be laid?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will appreciate the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is with the Prime Minister and the provincial Premiers in Halifax today and therefore unavoidably absent from the House. I will be glad to take notice of his question and ensure that the Minister gets back to him with a response.

Mr. Parry: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Parry: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate.

WESTERN ACCORD—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in the Atlantic Accord which was signed on February 11 the federal Government undertook to deal with legislation enacting the agreement within one year of the signing of the agreement. We have not seen a Bill introduced nor has notice been given with respect to it. Therefore my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Government intend to follow the letter of the agreement and introduce legislation forthwith?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to report to the Hon. Member that the matter of this legislation will be dealt with in accordance with the undertaking of the Government. I expect that shortly after we return in the new year there will be legislation introduced and available for the Hon. Member to see that we on the federal side will be carrying out entirely the undertakings and agreements arrived at with the Province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Baker: I know that the agreement will be changed somewhat in the legislation.

REQUEST FOR CHANGE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will the Government also undertake to change Clause 54 which prohibits industrial development in Newfoundland from use of its own off-shore oil until all other industrial needs are satisfied for the existing industrial capacity in eastern Canada, which is a stab in the back for Newfoundlanders?

• (1150)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate that this Government, in its relationship with the provinces, always operates on a co-operative basis. We have demonstrated our great success in accommodating provinces, particularly in this instance. Those parts of the legislation covered by the provisions the Hon. Member refers to are proceeding with the full co-operation and to the satisfaction of Newfoundland's interests.

AIR SAFETY

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—LABOUR RELATIONS DISPUTE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns passenger safety on Pacific Western Airlines' flights during the current labour dispute. This morning I sent the Minister a list of 16 incidents reported to me, incidents such as a plane taking off tail-heavy due to miscalculation of weight, another taking off with a cargo door open, and another which had to return to the ramp because it was 7,000 pounds under-fuelled. These incidents and others are a direct result of this airline using inexperienced help to replace those on strike.

Can the Minister tell the House what additional monitoring and inspection procedures he has put in place to assure the safety of the public during this dispute, and whether or not he or his officials had any prior knowledge of these 16 and possibly other incidents?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I checked with my office and I have not received as yet the letter to which the Hon. Member refers. I will certainly look at it as soon as it is available to me. I want to assure him that surveillance has been beefed up substantially. I also want to assure him that the training courses are monitored and that the standards are prescribed by Transport Canada officials. They are fully qualified. The level of safety, I am informed by the reports we are receiving, is normal.

However, bearing in mind our interest in ensuring safety and security for all passengers, I will certainly undertake to look at any allegations or incidents to which the Hon. Member has referred.

MONITORING OF SECURITY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister did not receive the list. We sent it over about two and a half hours ago. However, I will give him a copy immediately.

I am sure the Minister realizes there have been three labour disputes in three major airlines in a previously harmonious industry, since he became Minister. Will he ensure that this increased monitoring is put in place because it deals not only with safety but also with security? We had an incident of unchecked firearms, embargoed or restricted cargo being shipped as checked baggage, and a host of other such things. Will the Minister investigage all of these and prohibit an air carrier from overworking people crucial to the safety or an aircraft, and also prohibit them from using untrained and under-trained people during a strike?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is fully aware of the very comprehensive audit procedures undertaken at all airports with respect to our methods and procedures respecting safety and security of passengers. There are a number of steps being taken, new equipment is being procured, and we are increasing resources by way of RCMP and other personnel. All standards and procedures are being evaluated. A number of those recommendations are currently in the process of being enacted, and of course we are always concerned and always cognizant of any incidents brought to my attention.

I think the Hon. Member recognizes that we are living in a different era and we are trying to correct this situation as quickly and as comprehensively as we possibly can.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—DIRECT PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The $150 million Crop Disaster Assistance Program will be a tremendous shot in the arm for western farmers. However, I am concerned that some Saskatchewan farmers may be under the misapprehension that this federal initiative will be paid to the Province of Saskatchewan as part of that province's cash advance program. Could the Minister clarify the situation?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments on the package announced by the Minister of Agriculture. Let me assure him that the $150 million is entirely separate from any provincial programs. All these programs are designed to work with and complement each other, but in no way will any of this money go into provincial government coffers as people previously thought. It will be paid entirely to the producers directly, and let there be no confusion on that.

Mr. Hovdebo: That is what you thought about the cattle, too.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

OCEAN RANGER ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. Winter drilling in the offshore areas is already under way and the weather is colder and windier than normal this time of year. When is the Minister going to implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger concerning search and rescue, instead of endangering even more lives in the offshore?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): As the hon. gentleman knows, Phase I has pretty well all been implemented. Phase II is well along. The matter should be before Cabinet early next month.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The Minister is misleading the people of Canada. The major recommendations of that Royal Commission have not been implemented and are not being given consideration by the Government. Why does the Minister insist on ignoring these recommendations on search and rescue? Why will the Government not implement the recommendation of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and put this whole question before a parliamentary committee?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Why does the Hon. Member persist in not hearing me? I said to him, Mr. Speaker, that the matter should be before Cabinet early next month.

EMPLOYMENT

INCO—EFFECT OF PRODUCTION CUT-BACK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Late yesterday afternoon Inco announced that it will be cutting back its production of nickel in the Sudbury Basin by some 10 per cent in 1986. This will result in some 6,500 hourly rated and 1,900 salaried workers being laid off for over two months. This will have serious effects in the Sudbury Basin.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House now what specific steps he intends to take to help alleviate an unemployment situation which is already quite serious?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should have noticed, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is at the First Ministers' Conference. I will ensure that his question is brought to her attention. However, I am certain that, given her usual vigour and attention to matters raised by the hon. gentleman, appropriate steps will be taken by her and the Government to alleviate any situation such as that which he describes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am tired of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: —utterings from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: The country does not grind to a halt just because of this conference.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Maybe I should explain. The practice of putting supplementary questions when Ministers have simply taken notice is a difficult one. I think today I am going to go to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

EXTERNAL AID

COSTA RICA—PAYMENTS TO GOVERNMENT MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in light of press reports which show that the Government turned a blind eye on a questionable payment to a Minister of a foreign Government, I want to ask the Acting Minister of External Relations if the Government is not ashamed that, instead of building housing for needy Costa Ricans, our aid is going to pay the salary of a political hack who earns 25 times the salary of a Costa Rican farm worker?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that matter was brought to our attention last July by the Ambassador and by the Minister for External Relations when she visited there recently. She has indicated that that practice will be terminating at the end of the year and the Costa Rican Government itself will be bearing those expenses.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister involved has been aware of this situation since last June. The program has been in place for almost a year and not a single house has been built. Is the Acting Prime Minister not ashamed that the Government is spending foreign aid money to pay the salaries of political hacks and Ministers instead of building housing for the needy and desperate people in the Third World who need our assistance?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The Hon. Member has misrepresented the facts. The fact of the matter is that the problem was identified by the Ambassador, brought to the attention of the Minister, and it is being rectified at the earliest possible moment.

THE FRANCHISE

REQUEST THAT RIGHT TO VOTE BE GIVEN TO ALL PRISON INMATES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General of Canada. In view of the important ruling of the Federal Court granting Federal convicts in Quebec the right to vote in the provincial elections Monday, can the Minister assure the House that he will respect the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and grant the basic right to vote to all convicts in provincial and Federal elections, and if not, why not?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, these are essentially the same questions the Hon. Member put to me in committee yesterday. As the Hon. Member knows, it is the Government's intention to comply with the decision of the court that inmates in federal institutions will be able to vote in the provincial election in Quebec on Monday, but is doing so without prejudice to its right to appeal. We will study the court decision and make a decision on whether to appeal following that.

COURT DECISION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a Tory M.P. urged the Minister to use the over-ride provision of the Charter of Rights should the courts allow prisoners to vote. In view of the fact that prisoners are deprived of their liberty, but not stripped of all other civil rights, will the Minister assure the House that he will respect any decision of the court in this matter and not use the over-ride provision to subvert the Charter of Rights?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, the question is simply hypothetical. There is presently a case before the courts which is considering the Canada Elections Act passed by Parliament which denies inmates the right to vote in federal elections. We will want to hear the decision in that case and then guide ourselves accordingly on the basis of what the facts are at that time. My colleague, the Government House Leader has responsibility for any amendments to the Canada Elections Act, not the Solicitor General.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a number of petitions from citizens of the country residing in Spadina and other parts of Toronto who have pointed out that the Government's current legislation proposing to deindex the family allowance is unfair, particularly to poor families, especially when we consider the Government's hand-outs to the rich and the large corporations through capital gains tax breaks and straight hand-outs. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

I have another petition which is not exactly the same, but to a similar effect, from a number of people in Scarborough who ask that the Prime Minister immediately withdraw Bill C-70 which would reduce the indexation of family allowances. They say that children should be everyone's responsibility and the principle of universality should be maintained.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I continue to receive petitions from my constituency with regard to the deindexation of universal family allowances. I have three petitions today on that topic. The petitioners request the Government to maintain full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

ENTRANCE FEES AT NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 460—Mr. Corbett:

1. How much revenue does the Government estimate it loses annually because of the absence of entrance fees at Kouchibouguac National Park?

2. What other National Parks do not charge an entrance fee and, in each case, for what reason?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Approximately $125,000 in the current fiscal year.

2. Seven other national parks do not levy motor vehicle licence (entrance) fees: (i) Georgian Bay Islands, Northern Yukon, Nahanni, Auyuittuq and Mingan Archipelago. None is accessible by road. (ii) Wood Buffalo and Kluane are accessible by road, but the number of visitors is so low that collection of motor vehicle licence fees would not be cost effective.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 26, consideration of Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and Motions No. 4 (Mr. Rodriguez), and No. 5 (Mr. Foster) (p 8837).

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-74. It is an important piece of legislation on which I would like to provide some input. Some Opposition Members have left the impression that members of the Conservative Government from northern Ontario have been avoiding the issue. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha), the Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), the Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) and I have not been avoiding the issue. We are very pleased to be able to address the issue today.

Since my election in 1982 I have repeatedly dealt with the issue of boundary readjustment. It is an issue which is important to all Members from northern Ontario and one to which northern opposition Members have no special claim. For many years the riding of Timiskaming has been subjected to threats of boundary changes and reorganizations. Since October 12, 1982, the riding of Timiskaming has been continually dealing with boundary changes, redistribution and the numerous problems which it may face due to the realignment of northern Ontario. The situation has been on-going during the three years that I have been the Member of Parliament for Timiskaming.

Before I appeared before the Electoral Boundaries Commission of Ontario in 1983 I contacted nine townships on the outskirts of my riding and 26 within the boundaries of my riding, including the Towns of Onaping Falls, Black River, Matheson, Iroquois Falls and Springer Township. I should mention that the Hon. Member for Nipissing was the reeve of Springer Township at the time. I congratulate him again for now being the Member of Parliament for Nipissing.

I got in touch with the reeve of Chapleau, the Townships of Ratter, Dunnet and Foleyet and the Timiskaming Municipal Association which represents roughly 26 municipalities in Timiskaming. My riding of Timiskaming stretches from James Bay, Moosonee and Moose Factory south to the town of Verner, west to the communities of Matawotchan and Elk Lake and east to the towns of Thorne and Eldee. During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, when I was elected on October 12, 1982, many residents who were included in the riding of Timiskaming in the late 1970s believed that there was no reason for their being in that riding. The boundary change was simply to increase the population in the riding of Timiskaming. I came through with my promise that, if elected in 1982, I would do my utmost to serve the entire riding of Timiskaming. In doing so, I set up constituency offices in the northern and southern parts of my riding in order for everyone to have an input into the problems affecting a riding as large as Timiskaming.

The question of a need for change has been addressed again today. My riding borders on the Ontario Northland Railroad which provides a north-south link between strong community interests that should be maintained. A Member of Parliament must represent his constituents in every way possible. In such a riding, with great distances and sparse population, one's travel commitments make it very difficult to represent one's constituents. Therefore, I believe that this Bill is an adequate response to this problem. Timiskaming his comprised of roughly 77,000 square miles and has a population of approximately 56,000 people.

Let me make some general comments before dealing with Bill C-74. When our Government was elected in September, 1984, it was the first time that northern Ontario had sent four Members from the Conservative Party to represent areas in northern Ontario. It is an area that had never been given the opportunity to maintain and expand its population. During the past 50 years, previous Governments never addressed the problems of northern Ontario. Those Governments were very willing to remove the resources from northern Ontario but never put enough back in to encourage our young people to stay and build on the strength of that area. That is why we have had so many problems in northern Ontario. Previous Governments never addressed those problems or encouraged population growth in northern Ontario. They simply continued to remove our resources.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are doing the same thing.

Mr. MacDougall: Here we have the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) from the rump of the Liberal Party. They are the ones who voted to get rid of the 1979 Conservative Government that would have assisted northern Ontario. What happened?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Member to speak to the Bill.

Mr. MacDougall: The problem we faced in northern Ontario was that every time we attempted to do something in the last 50 years, the two Parties on that side of the House got together and destroyed northern Ontario.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Member should remember that we had 42 years of Bill Davis and the Progressive Conservatives in northern Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. MacDougall: The Province of Ontario has always been well represented by the Conservative Government for years and years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDougall: In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you want to talk about that for a moment, the new Liberal Government in the Province of Ontario has a Minister for northern Ontario who told the press that they will put a tourist operation in Timiskaming—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask the Hon. Member to speak to the Bill.

Mr. MacDougall: I would be glad to get back to the Bill. Let me address a few comments to Members opposite and illustrate what we have done in the short period of time that we have been in office. During the 15 years that the former Member for Kenora-Rainy River held office, the Grassy Narrows and Whitedog fish reserve issue was never addressed. However, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has solved the problem with a $2.75 million agreement. It took our Government to do it.

Mr. Foster: Bill Davis would not settle it.

Mr. MacDougall: I would remind the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) that it was our Government that brought in natural gas to his area. The Hon. Member for Nipissing was there for the official opening. He has shown what a new Member can do. Some of the initiatives taken by this Conservative Government in northern Ontario include mining and the development of access roads to resources in northern Ontario, job training and the concerns of small municipalities.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDougall: Listen to the chatter over there, Mr. Speaker. They are embarrassed because we are doing what they could not accomplish in the last 25 years. It is glorious to witness what is happening on the other side of the House. While we hear many promises during an election campaign, it takes a Conservative Government to get things done.

Mr. Gauthier: Get back to the amendment.

Mr. MacDougall: Now we will get back to the amendment.

Bill C-74 brings us closer to a fair balance between the ideals of representation by population and regional representation. It ensures that provinces with stable or declining populations will not lose seats or that growing provinces will not be punished. It provides for a simpler distribution formula that is easier to understand.

In addition, I am sure this will be re-evaluated before 1990 and adjusted to fit our future needs. This is an important part of the process which we should not overlook. Furthermore, this formula will slow down the process of an ever-expanding House of Commons. We believe that the quality of representation is just as important as the quantity of representation.

We hope that this Bill will give some stability to the electoral boundary process, which I and my constituents welcome. Bill C-74 ensures that for the first time Members of Parliament will have input into the commission's stages of deliberation in boundary redistribution. At the same time it will provide for a truly independent commission that is free from political pressure.

Many Members have raised concerns about the effect of this Bill. Although we may have different opinions about northern Ontario, I believe we are all concerned about the future of northern Ontario. I believe that the Government is taking the proper action to address this problem.

I commend our House Leader for the hard work he has done on this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDougall: Again, we hear chuckles from the other side. Once again, our Government has addressed this problem in a way that will help northern Ontario in every way possible. Continued assistance from the Government will benefit future stability in northern Ontario. It is unfortunate that these problems were not addressed during the last 50 years.

It is a great honour for me to stand, as a representative from northern Ontario, and support this Bill as a means of addressing the problems of redistribution in northern Ontario.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, little did I think that I would see the day when a Member from northern Ontario, in his second term of office in the House of Commons, would need to read a speech on a topic as crucial to representation in northern Ontario as that of electoral redistribution.

Let me begin by correcting a couple of fundamental errors made by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). First, I think all Members of the House should be aware of the chemistry that is taking place here. Obviously, the Hon. Member has given up all hope of influencing his Government, and hence the continued excursions into topics which, though worthy in themselves, are totally irrelevant to the Bill. Hence, the bluff, bluster and another word beginning with "b" which should fit there, of which the Hon. Member treated us to a good portion—

Mr. Lewis: That is the baloney that we are getting now. Why don't you say it?

Mr. Parry: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary should know why I cannot say it. It is unparliamentary.

Mr. Lewis: It is the baloney we are getting now.

• (1220)

Mr. Parry: The question of representation is one that will continue, and has continued for some time, to be of great significance to the people of northern Ontario.

A book was published recently under the aegis of the former unlamented Progressive Conservative Government of the Province of Ontatio entitled A Vast and Magnificent Land. No single phrase sums up northern Ontario better than the phrase "a vast and magnificent land".

I should count it as a reproach to myself if, for example, I did not know the names of the other ridings in northern Ontario. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming refers to the riding of Rainy River. There is no such federal riding. There is a provincial riding. As the Hon. Member for Timiskaming observed, the Member for the provincial riding sat in a provincial House for a long time without having very much impact. I think that in this House a Member from northern Ontario should take some pride in being able to denote correctly the names of other ridings in a province as some of us almost think of northern Ontario, but which is that part of the great province of Ontario which is the greatest part.

I should also point out that, while I am giving the Hon. Member, despite his absence, a lesson in geography, there is a White Dog Falls in my community and there is a White Fish Bay. There is not a community answering to the name that he attempted to give it in conjunction with that of Grassy Narrows.

I would draw upon my own riding, since that is the one I know best, for some example of the effect that will occur if this amendment is not accepted by the Government and incorporated into the legislation.

My riding is slightly larger than Germany, not East Germany, not West Germany, but slightly larger than the whole of Germany. Within that riding sit not a mere 30 or 40 communities but fully 110 communities, of which half are Indian reserve communities.

Mr. Lewis: Right now they are poorly represented.

Mr. Parry: In that riding, there are some 77,000 people, which places my riding in the very unusual position of having not only the largest area geograpahically, but one of the largest populations in northern Ontario.

By most possible standards distribution, my riding is unlikely to change very much, either in terms of numbers of people or in terms of size of the geography. When one is used to dealing with 110 communities, the thought of adding two or three, or substracting two or three is not terribly daunting.

I am on my feet today because I believe representation in northern Ontario is a key issue. Despite the fact that there are four Progressive Conservative Members, for example, who represent a combined geographical area and a combined number of communities slightly smaller than the area I represent, I know that representation is an issue for every Member of this House from northern Ontario. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to stand on my feet and do something to protect the boundaries of their ridings. Under the present proposal there is no necessity for me to try to protect and advocate the boundaries of my own riding.

We have in the Government's Bill one reasonable objective, namely, to contain the growth and the rate of growth of this House, and another reasonable objective is to contain the costs involved in running the House of Commons.

It goes without question that we could easily augment our Budgets if we would only take the common sense and practical approach of abolishing the Senate. The Senate has never been of the slightest bit of use to northern Ontario, nor will it be for as long as it continues. We know, and even the Progressive Conservative Members know, that in order to represent northern Ontario, you have to do a lot of travelling.

I hark back to the previous Member who represented Timiskaming. I recall the gentleman, a dedicated Member who lost his life in a car accident. It was probably because he was too tired to be driving over the distance he was driving. Those are risks, and they are very real risks, that Members from northern Ontario accept. I do not believe that Members from northern Ontario, any of us, need to shoulder an increased load in the representation of our communities by having to spread ourselves even thinner than we do at the moment.

We have a system of distribution in Canada that might politely be described as paying lip service to the idea of representation by population, unfortunately, paying much more service to tradition and history. We have a situation whereby—I say this not to be derogatory—the Province of Prince Edward Island, which could fit into the lakes in my riding, is allowed four Members for a population of 122,000.

I do not feel that the growth of areas like northern Ontario, and now the levelling off of that growth, has ever been adequately acknowledged or recognized in the representation process.

I feel, similarly, with large urban ridings that we just do not have a system that adjusts to the dynamics of this country, in spite of having a Government that has paid great lip service toward the ideas of the free enterprise system, which obviously implies population shifts, but is not prepared to bring in a representation system to recognize that. Nor does it appear that the Government is prepared to address the difficulty of representation of areas whose greatness is measured as much in terms of their geography and the distribution of their population as in the size of that population.

It saddens me to think that the discourse of the previous Member might have been motivated by a belief that already the Government has put thumbs down on this amendment. I would have hoped he would have been much more positive and active, and I would have hoped that he would have been much more influential within his own caucus and able to accomplish something in terms of getting these amendments accepted.

If these amendments go through, northern Ontario will be a co-respondent, so to speak, in the action that will be taken to limit the number of seats in Ontario which is, of course, a fast growing province and a large one to start with. We do not feel that it would be fair. We entreat our colleagues from the southern part of the province to remember the burdens that northern Ontario shoulders for the entire province and to remember the contribution—the one thing the previous speaker was able to describe adequately and eloquently—that northern Ontario is making to the Province of Ontario and to the country.

My riding is the only riding that bisects the entire country, stretching as it does from the shores of Hudson's Bay to the American border slightly below the 49th parallel. I feel it would be a tragedy if other Members of this House, by failure to pass this amendment, had to face a similar load.

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House that we were accused last week or this week of not being too interested in this Bill that has been presented.

Mr. Althouse: Whatever week it was.

Mr. Mantha: I would like the Opposition to know that I was in Vancouver and in Winnipeg this past week. At the beginning of this week I was in Halifax. I want to reaffirm and tell the Opposition that I am concerned about northern Ontario.

● (1230)

If I may, I will start with why I do not support the amendments of the opposition Parties. I want them to listen to what I have to say. I do not support the motion to freeze the number of seats in northern Ontario, that number being 11, as was suggested by my hon. friend, because I advocate fairness in the proposed Bill. I support development and growth in northern Ontario.

I have faith in our wonderful democracy. I realize that the Bill meets the requirements of fairness and equity. The formula has enough merit to be supported by Hon. Members. I care about northern Ontario and the rest of Canada.

Today, I wish to address an important matter dealing with the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. It is a very critical issue with ramifications for every riding and every region across Canada. Due to time constraints, I intend to limit my remarks to the following areas. I intend to review the contents of the Act and specifically how the proposed Act will affect northern Ontario. In order to accomplish this, it is necessary to examine the background of the Act, its particulars and, finally, the substance of the Act. I intend to dwell briefly on the make-up of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about my amendment?

Mr. Mantha: I wish the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would pay attention.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are supposed to be debating Motion No. 4, an amendment which limits or freezes the number of ridings in northern Ontario to 11. The Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) is peregrinating all over the Bill, and I wish he would stick to the particular motion before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) seeking the floor on the same point of order?

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) used a certain word; I am not sure what it means or whether it is parliamentary. Could Your Honour render a ruling on whether "peregrinating" is parliamentary?

Mr. Benjamin: It is not a falcon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We are now debating Motions Nos. 4 and 5 together.

Mr. Mantha: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to draw to his attention that he was talking specifically of northern Ontario. The background I am about to give involves all boundaries. If it is good for Canada, it is good for nothern Ontario.

In addition, the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act proposes to accommodate the ever-increasing population of our nation, by ensuring that all Canadian citizens will continue to receive fair and equitable treatment in all regions of Canada. The primary purpose of the Act is to prevent unchecked and costly growth in the number of federal ridings across the country. As amended in 1975, the Constitution Act, 1867, provided for the number of Members of Parliament allotted to each province to be adjusted. These adjustments were to be made according to a formula which took into account the demographic significance of each province, as well as the particular status of the Province of Quebec. Over the years, as a result of these adjustments, an ever-increasing number of Members of Parliament filled the House to near capacity. Under the present formula, the distribution of the increased number of seats, based upon the results of the 1981 census, would increase the number of seats to 310 after the next general election. It has been estimated that direct costs to accommodate extra Members would amount to $90 million.

Application of the present formula would increase the number of Members to 343 by 1991 and to 369 by the year 2001. Needless to say, this will result in a host of problems. It would mean additional administrative costs which would have to be borne by Canadian taxpayers. The physical lay-out of the Chamber is unable to accommodate that number of Members. The significant increase in the number of Members may have an undesirable effect on the character of the House. Private Members would have relatively fewer opportunities and less effectiveness in the House. It has been suggested that the sense of collegiality may suffer. Finally, it is not certain whether an increase in the number of Members in the House would automatically mean that the electorate would be better served. More members does not mean better representation.

The new adjustment formula, as proposed in Bill C-74, while respecting the need for representational equity among the provinces, will slow the rate of growth in the number of Members of Parliament and will thus lessen the operating costs of Parliament.

Let us examine the proposed formula. The draft Bill intends to accomplish three important goals. First, Bill C-74 intends to limit increases in the membership in the House of Commons to levels which are moderate, fair and equitable. Second, the Bill will ensure that no province or Territory will lose seats in the House of Commons through redistribution. Third, it will enable provinces with growing populations to get additional seats in a fashion which reflects the need to maintain the House of Commons at a level close to its present size.

Under the proposed formula, the House would increase to 288 Members after the 1981 census, as compared with 310 Members under the present formula. By 1991, the number of Members in the House would be elevated to 292 as opposed to 343 and, by the year 2001, to 296 as opposed to 369, when I hope to retire as the Member for Nipissing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mantha: I thought that would rattle my colleagues. I will have a little white beard by that time.

In summary, Bill C-74 provides that each province will retain, at the very least, the same number of seats. I have tried to paint a picture for the Opposition by indicating that to give confidence to northern Ontario, we should not put on a cap of 11 seats. If there is an increase in population, we are proposing that we should gain seats in northern Ontario. It would not remain at 11 seats, as the Opposition wants.

On a real positive note for northern Ontario, let me indicate that we want to increase the population in that area. In the Sudbury riding, Inco had over 23,000 people working for it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Are you kidding?

Mr. Mantha: Now the number is down to about 6,500. We are trying to guarantee jobs in that area, as well as in my area of Nipissing.

Mr. Rodriguez: Get back to your speech.

Mr. Mantha: I will now deal with Nickel Belt, for the benefit of that friendly little fellow over there. There has been a decline in jobs at Falconbridge. I would like the Opposition to be positive. It should not let things go down the drain. We want industry in the North. We have raw materials. We can create our own jobs.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) wants to put a cap on the number of seats, to freeze it at 11. We do not want to do that. We want to go with the population. However, my other friend from Nickel Belt just skates around the whole thing. He says what we are saying and he says what the Hon. Member for Algoma is saying.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are the skater.

Mr. Mantha: He is sitting on the fence and not saying anything. The Commission will make the boundary changes. It should have been done by the previous Government. Members of the Official Opposition are saying that they are being professional about this matter. They had the opportunity to do something about it. The people voted for a change; they voted for us.

I want to represent Nipissing here, as well as other Canadian people. We in northern Ontario invite entrepreneurs to come north to develop and create jobs for our people. That is why we are becoming involved in deregulation, to make transportation cheaper so that people will come to northern Ontario to create jobs for us.

We do not propose to put on a cap of 11 seats. We are encouraging growth in the North, and that growth will provide us with more seats. If the opposition Parties have their way, if there is an increase in the population, we will not gain any seats. We in northern Ontario are positive that we want to increase our population.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I did not intend to take part in this debate, but I was quite surprised by the remarks of the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha). It is the first time I have seen as disciplined a Member defend the interests probably of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who must have drafted a few good notes. It is fitting and quite acceptable.

● (1240)

[English]

The Hon. Member speaks not only against his personal interests—and I think he should be given a medal for that—but against the interests of northern Ontario.

I come from the Province of Quebec, a province which, under this new scheme—

An Hon. Member: We will not hold that against you.

An Hon. Member: That is Quebec's problem.

Mr. Prud'homme: I know that some of the Members opposite feel very frustrated any time there is mention of the Province of Quebec. The Members opposite seem to get very nervous whenever the Province of Quebec is mentioned. "Quebec" is a great name—as great as the name "Ontario".

As a Member from the Province of Quebec, I am rather surprised at the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha).

As I said earlier on, here is a Member who, in the name of Party discipline, stands up and speaks against, not only his own personal interests, but the interests of northern Ontario.

It is well understood, Mr. Speaker, that the principle of representation by population is the principle that we should always adopt. However, we have already agreed that, given the vastness of this country, exceptions to that principle would be made. For example, we have made an exception in the case of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory—and I do not think any Member will disagree with those exceptions.

Also, because the Constitution provides that no province will have fewer Members in this place than the number of Senators representing that province, exception from the principle of representation by population is made in the case of Prince Edward Island and at least one other province of the Atlantic provinces.

Canadians fully understand that some protection has to be given in these circumstances. At the moment, I am the Chairman of the Management and Members' Committee, a committee which has put forward some proposals in respect of Members' budgets.

While the provision of the same budgetary amount for all Members of Parliament would seem to be the appropriate and proper thing, the Management and Members' Services Committee realizes that exceptions have to be made.

I see the very competent and able Vice-Chairman in his seat, and I know that he agrees with me on this point.

The committee is of the opinion that provision should be made in Members' both in terms of geography and of population. Those proposals have now been placed in the hands of those who will ultimately decide.

It would be unfair, for example, that a Member for a constituency with a population of over 180,000 should have the same budget as that of a Member whose constituency has a much smaller population; it would be unfair for Members representing districts larger than some of our provinces to have the same budget as Members representing constituencies of a much smaller size.

We are trying to find some means by which the budgets of such Members can be increased so as to allow those Members to better exercise their duties as parliamentarians.

I do not mean to exaggerate, but the same principles should apply in respect of northern Ontario. We do have in the Province of Quebec the same situation as exists in northern Ontario. The commissioners who will be appointed to revise—

Mr. Mantha: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member is trying to put words in my mouth. I did not say what he has said. My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider that to be a point of order. It is a question of debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member is not following my remarks very attentively. What prompted me to speak was the fact that my hon. friend, in his speech, was not protecting the interests of northern Ontario. That is what brought me to my feet. The rest of what I say is my own speech.

I am not quoting the Hon. Member, so I do not see where there is a point of order.

Mr. Mantha: A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha), on the same point of order.

Mr. Mantha: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, my comment in relation to the boundaries was that I am not for freezing the number of seats at 11. What I said is that if there is an increase in population, we could gain seats, in the same way that—

An Hon. Member: Come off it! That isn't so.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have a debate with the Hon. Member. If there is no protection in this respect for northern Ontario, there will be fewer and fewer seats from that area every time there is a redistribution.

The Hon. Member makes a general invitation to Canadians to come and live in northern Ontario so that some seats may be saved.

[Translation]

But that brings to mind Quebec's revenge of the cradle, you know, more children to open up new lands—

[English]

Everybody was promoting the opening up of the northern regions of Quebec for farming. Well, I do not think people are going to do that just in the interests of the survival of that region.

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to say is that if we were to accept . . . I see several of my Quebec colleagues here and I hope that when I repeat the word Quebec I do not make our colleague too nervous, for he seemed to be very miserable a moment ago . . . I think it is the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) who looked unhappy when I referred to Quebec. Some people are a little bit unhappy like that, but things change.

I would suggest that if we were to accept the principle whereby Northern Ontario needs protection, the commissioners to be appointed in each province would conclude that the thrust of this debate was that the larger communities in each province must be protected. For instance, the province of Quebec . . . I think it would be very unfortunate if representation were strictly applied to Northwest Quebec. I am not defending Liberal interest, since at the present time, these ridings are represented by Government Members. I don't think we should apply the same principle we apply for instance to Montreal, where I come from. I represent a Montreal ridings, and my constituents realize that I can go everywhere in my riding on foot, and so I don't have problems in that respect. I do have some problems linguistically speaking, because about 50 languages are spoken in my riding, which is a different problem altogether.

Quite frankly, I think we can go along with the principle of giving certain regions within a province certain guarantees. In fact, these are provided in the Bill.

However, if this principle, which is being supported in an amendment by our colleagues in the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, were acceptable to the House, and I do not see why it should not be . . . I am not accusing my hon. friend from Nipissing, but I want him to understand that applying the principle across the board would mean that my hon. friend here who represents the Northwest Territories . . . They would not even have a Member! And that would be unfortunate—

[English]

It would be absolutely unacceptable for the Northwest Territories to have no representation. As a result, an exception was made for that region. It is an immense area with very few people, and an exception was made. The people of that region, the majority of whom are native people—and those are the true Canadians, having been here long before either the French or the English arrived—would not have their own Member of Parliament if the principle of rep by pop were strictly applied. To my mind, the Northwest Territories should have three seats.

In so far as the Yukon Territory is concerned, I think we have more than enough in one Member for the moment. It may be that some day we will want to have two Members representing the Yukon Territory.

I would not like to have a double of the present Member for the Yukon Territory.

An Hon. Member: Where would you find two Erik Nielsens?

Mr. Prud'homme: And boy, has he ever changed since moving to the other side! He can no longer attack the Government. Instead, he has to endure in silence. But soon we will serve him with what I call the "Yukon book of tactics». We are studying the tactics he has used for the last 20 years, and certainly we will have a lot of fun with those in the next session.

To come back to the subject, I think that the principle—

An Hon. Member: You have no original ideas of your own.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: My hon. friend was not here 20 years ago, or he would be singing a different tune. In any case, I would hope, and I know my fellow members from Quebec and in fact the Members of all parties in the House will agree, that the same principle, namely to help underrepresented regions by allowing them to have fewer constituents, should also be applied to Northwest Quebec.

I also hope that when the commissioners decide whether to allocate three or four ridings in Northeast Quebec, they will consider that like the Lac Saint-Jean area, the region is a historic entity, an entity that should keep all four of its Members, even if that does not exactly correspond to the rule of so many constituents, so many Members . . . The same principle should apply also in the area—and it does apply now because there an exception—in the Gaspé area, which you know very well and visit every summer with your family, Mr. Speaker, instead of going abroad, as other Hon. Members do. Because of this very principle, I, both as a Quebecer and a Montrealer, am pleased to join with others to fight for the interests of other provinces.

Because this is true federalism, provided that one day, when asked, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North will be as sympathetic to the representation made concerning Quebec as I am today concerning the representation made concerning Ontario, so that the House as a whole may reflect more accurately not only the Canadian population but also the geography which we know so well in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have just debated Motions Nos. 4 and 5 together. We will vote on them separately.

The question is on Motion No. 4 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 3 of Standing Order 13, the recorded division stands deferred until six o'clock, Monday, December 2, 1985.

The question is on Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 81, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. We will now be dealing with Motion No. 6.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-74, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 15 and 16 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"12;

(b) the commission shall consider the following in determining reasonable electoral district boundaries:

(i) the community of interest or community of identity in or the historical pattern of an electoral district in the province, and

(ii) a manageable geographic size for districts in sparsely populated, rural or northern regions of the province; and

(c) the commission may depart from".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief with respect to this particular motion. As Hon. Members will know, this motion is one which I undertook to move at committee stage on the basis of representations made by members of the committee and, most particularly, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). It seemed to me that during the course of the deliberations and discussions in committee, a point was made that would strengthen even more the mandate to the electoral boundaries commissions so that they must indeed take into account things such as the manageability in geographic terms of the size of constituencies as well as other matters of historical areas which may be included within constituencies, community of interest and the like. I think this was a very important ingredient in the initiative we have taken on this particular legislation.

I have been listening with great interest to the discussions that have taken place. For the first time now, we have made provision under our legislation that these particular items must be considered by electoral boundaries commissions in the creation of new boundaries. I believe all Members whish to have that sensitivity in place as part of the mandate of the electoral boundaries commissions which are independent commissions that will be reviewing the boundaries in each of the provinces.

I know this particular motion is one which was promoted in the course of the committee hearings and one with which I am glad to agree on behalf of the Government. At this point, I would once again thank those Hon. Members who participated in the committee hearings. I think we had a very useful and constructive discussion with respect to the Bill. On behalf of the Government, I was happy to be able to accept suggestions put by Members from both sides of the House with respect to improving this legislation, a legislation which I think is good in the spirit in which it was brought forward initially.

With those few words, I hope the House will be able to accept this particular motion so that we can carry on with third reading of the Bill at an appropriate time.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate our support for the amendment put forward by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It does make clearer community of interest, historical voting patterns and electoral districts in northern areas.

I was really disappointed that we did not have the support of the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) with regard to maintaining 11 seats in the redistribution. I think the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) seemed to indicate that he was in favour of maintaining the floor of 11 seats for northern Ontario. We are still waiting for the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) and the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher) to indicate whether or not they will be voting for those amendments when they are put at six o'clock on Monday. We certainly hope they will vote for them and we hope they will be able to make the President of the Privy Council and the Government caucus reconsider this matter, which is very, very important for representation in northern Ontario in the years ahead. However, we do want to indicate our support for Motion No. 6 which stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in these closing moments before one o'clock, I would like to indicate our support for this particular motion. I will have more to say about it after lunch. I would like to call it one o'clock now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House adjourned for lunch the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) had the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before lunch, we in the New Democratic Party support the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Indeed, we are pleased that the Minister has brought forward such a motion. It was at the insistence of representations made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), as well as the persistence of the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), that the provisions in this motion were brought forward in order that they not be left to the inclination of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission.

What is particularly interesting in the motion is the fact that it recommends that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission shall consider such matters as community of interest, community of identity or the historical pattern of an electoral district in the province, as well as a manageable geographic size for districts in sparsely populated areas, such as parts of northern Ontario. What the motion states is that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission shall consider these matters. No longer is it a matter of the commission either being able to do so or not; it is now mandatory.

We have no difficulty with supporting this motion and we urge all Hon. Members to support it.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and I each have a short statement which we would like to make with respect to the motion which is before the House. This is something which was recommended to the Government by Members of my Party when we saw the Bill. Although we disapprove of the Bill in general we think it is greatly improved as a result of this motion. Not only do we support it but we are surprised that the Government House Leader and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) would have brought forward a Bill which did not recognize the long standing practice of taking into consideration community of interest, community of identity or the historical pattern of an electoral district in the province and the manageable geographic size for districts in sparsely populated rural or northern regions of the province.

I can speak from personal knowledge with respect to the importance of the former point because in my region, the metropolitan Toronto area, although it may seem like a rather homogeneous agglomeration to outsiders, it is made up of traditional communities. Some of these communities are very old and have become knit together by population increases. However, the people in these communities think of themselves as living within pretty categorically identifiable areas of the city. This was demonstrated when there was an attempt, which succeeded to a large degree, in the matter of postal zoning for the city, which overlooked the fact that there was a Municipality of North York, Downsview and quite a number of other areas in which people feel that they live in a community and prefer to be identified as such as opposed to simply being a numbered unit inside a pretty large diverse metropolitan area. Thus, this principle is even more strongly applied to the matter of electoral boundaries.

To use my own riding as an example, there are three communities in it which are divided by my present riding boundaries. When the present boundaries were established representations were made to try to draw the boundaries so that the people of a community, for example those people in Downsview, might be able to look to one Member of Parliament in relation to a particular problem which they may have with the federal Government for resolving that problem. When the boundaries do not take account of historic communities that continue to exist in these areas, it tends to undermine the spirit of community which is important in Metro Toronto.

This amendment is one we approve of, but it does not change our minds about the Bill as a whole. However, we will vote for this amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): As I was saying this morning, Mr. Speaker, I just do not understand why the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) should always vote against the amendments introduced by Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party and why he should come up with reasons which resemble somewhat what our colleagues from Northern Ontario have already brought before the House.

Our Ontario colleagues wanted to be more specific. They said: "A manageable geographic size for constituencies in sparsely populated regions."

I think that with that description, the Hon. President of the Privy Council meets the concerns of our colleagues from Northern Ontario, but I wish the House had accepted the two amendments introduced by the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, because they provided concrete examples of what the Minister is seeking today under paragraph (b) (ii). I think the Commissioners would then have known about the wishes of the House and would have been provided with concrete examples of what we are seeking through the amendment moved by the President of the Privy Council.

I am afraid that with considerations of such a general nature, the Commissioners, I think, could go just about in any direction. But if the House had accepted the specific amendments introduced by our colleagues this morning, the Commissioners would say: We are going to use this concrete example and apply it mutatis mutandis to the other Provinces, wherever similar cases exist. Again, I hope that when the Commissioners for the Province of Quebec are asked to deal with the Quebec electoral boundaries, they will remember that the House wants remote ridings such as that of Lac-Saint-Jean to maintain their representation, and ridings in North Western Quebec which, geographically speaking, are of an enormous size to be allowed a smaller population. But that principle is merely stated today, because we have no concrete examples to give them of the strong will of Parliament.

But, in this House, the majority has ruled differently. Being a democrat, I bow to this decision, I have no choice.

I should like to deal also with the concepts of community of interests and community of identity.

[English]

Here I would like to get the attention of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I know he is very busy now with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry.

Mr. Rodriguez: He is going somewhere.

Mr. Prud'homme: Most likely. They are all good friends.

The phrase "community of interests" is well translated in French. I do not know if the text was prepared in French and translated into English or vice versa, but when you translate "community of identity'—

—by "identité culturelle'—

[English]

—I am not sure that we are not talking about two different things. We will have to be very careful because a commissioner in an English province could use the English text and a commissioner in Quebec, depending on his or her first language, could use the French text. Those texts will have to be reconciled to make sure that they really mean the same thing. If they do, forget about my comment; if not, then come back to the House at the first opportunity and clarify the situation. Then, by unanimous consent, everything can be done, including the acceptance of my fourth report from the Committee on Management and Members' Services later on this afternoon.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I promise I will do my level best to get that through.

Mr. Prud'homme: I want you to know it is not my report, it is a majority report voted by a majority of Members supporting the Government.

I want to draw your attention, Your Honour, to the fact that I very proudly represent a district, which is more than what Canada is used to having. I am glad to see my colleague from the Northwest Territories back because I am very highly respectful, not only of the two founding races but of those who were here before us, the Indian and Inuit. We have to remind ourselves always of what Canada is all about. I have the honour to represent a district which is most likely the most multicultural district in Canada. There is no doubt about that.

We have the immense additional problem of having to function in languages other than the two official languages of Canada, and that makes our life more difficult. I am afraid that my electors are not as well served as they may be or should be, and perhaps certain considerations should be given to them because of the fact that very few districts are like Saint-Denis. Some in central Toronto and central Montreal are similar, but when you have over 50 languages spoken, many by people who speak neither of the two official languages when they arrive in Canada, you understand the immense difficulty in serving them well. Out of respect we should at least try to understand them in their own language until they have the ability to speak either one or both of the two official languages of Canada.

The Minister very correctly put in the wording that the commission shall consider the community of interests or community of identity when considering reasonable electoral district boundaries. We were talking about that during lunch. We will have to be very careful about what we mean by community of identity and community of interests. I would hope that community of interests would not mean that the very rich should stay together and the very poor should stay together. I hope it does not mean that the multicultural people should stay together and the Anglophones and the Francophones should be given a seat. That is why I would like to get more precision as to the meaning of community of interests.

I do understand very well the requirement for a manageable geographical size for a district which is sparsely populated. There is no doubt that that is clear. In the past many commissioners have split villages which traditionally and historically belonged somewhere farther away and for reasons we never understood were put them together. It is good that the commissioners will read the speeches we are making and we hope they will understand the sensitivity and historical background of this country, as well as be very sensitive as regards the notion of community of interests.

Last but not least, it is an old tradition of mine to observe a full census every 10 years, and I am going to go through the fourth census in my career. So I have to be very careful.

• (1420)

When the commissioners sit down to design the new boundaries they will design them according to 1981 figures. We should give the commissioners some flexibility, and I ask the Minister to consider that between now and next week. That was a wish of the Chief Electoral Officer.

In Toronto there has been a switch of population since 1981. There has been immense new development. The same thing has taken place in Montreal. Downtown Montreal is becoming less and less populated, to the benefit of the west of the Island of Montreal. I am not being political because both extremes of the Island of Montreal are represented by members of the majority Government for the time being. Therefore, it is not a question of being partisan. But downtown Montreal has been developed commercially and there has been immense developmeng going on in certain districts of Montreal since 1981. The same thing is happening in Toronto. I see my hon. friend, the President of the Equality Projects Task Force. His riding is one of the best examples I can find.

If the commissioners were to design the map according to the 1981 census, as the law says they should, they will already be dépassés par les événements and we will not have a map which is representative of what exists today. Therefore, flexibility should be given to the commissioners.

Another consideration is the fact that since 1981 in the major centres, as populous as they are, there have been changes in the population, and that should be taken into account in the redesignation of the map.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this redistribution Bill. I want to thank the Hon. Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for moving this particular motion which recommends that in determining reasonable electoral district boundaries the commission shall consider the community of interest and a manageable geographic size.

I come from a part of Saskatchewan where both of these factors must be looked at. The new boundaries that have been established for the Prince Albert constituency contravene both parts of that clause. Neither the community of interest nor the geographic size have been well established in the new map. For example, the proposed Prince Albert constituency takes in well over half and nearly two-thirds of the Province of Saskatchewan. The area is 750 kilometers long and 500 kilometers wide, which makes it an area of unmanageable geographic size.

I appreciate that this amendment gives the commissioners more direction and recognizes a couple of factors which I think must be recognized. If instituted, it will give those groups of people least likely to be heard in the House an opportunity to send a Member to Ottawa who would represent them more directly than is often the case.

I would like to refer specifically to the first part of that clause, the community of interest. In the proposed Prince Albert constituency there are approximately 30,000 people of native ancestry. There is a fairly large but sparsely populated agricultural area which is intermingled with a forestry area. There is, as well, the very small city of Prince Albert with a population of between 30,000 and 40,000, approximately half the total population of the constituency. Therefore, I agree that we should request that the commission review this in the case of the Prince Albert constituency in Saskatchewan. Prince Albert is only one of the constituencies that both of these clauses deal with and I use it as an example because I am familiar with it.

Besides the fact that there may be several different communities of interest in a constituency of that size, the difficulty in representing such an area should be considered. I have found it very interesting to listen to the debate regarding the difficulty in representing northern Ontario with 11 Members. The area that the Members were concerned about is probably only twice as large as that which is now being proposed for the Prince Albert constituency. Travel, which is necessary to represent a constituency, is very difficult in those circumstances.

I visited most of northern Saskatchewan while I was the director of education for the area. Unless one is to take several months, many places can only be reached by aircraft. Unless the Government starts supplying aircraft to northern Members, they cannot afford to travel to those places. Although the size of the constituency remains large, the number of people can be reduced, which would allow the Member the opportunity to visit more of his constituents in order to gain first-hand knowledge of them. There is a second area which is as large as my present constituency which has a road system and about a third of the population of the total constituency.

Besides that, in this constituency as well as in many others along the northern fringe of the country, knowledge of a number of languages is required in order to do a good job of representation. In the Prince Albert constituency four languages are spoken: Cree, Chipawin, French, and English. The ability to represent communities depends, to some extent, upon the ability to speak the language or the languages of the community.

The basic principle of representation, representation by population, has been honoured by its breach in many places across Canada. I think that situation must be accepted. For instance, at present there are 80,000 people in the proposed constituency of Prince Albert. If we take away the northern area of Prince Albert, which would have a population of over 30,000, that would cause the other smaller constituencies in Saskatchewan to be increased by a population of 3,000 or less. That is not really a major factor as far as an individual Member is concerned. This is true for Churchill and for some other new constituencies as well.

I am suggesting that while the representation by population principle is acceptable and should be a basic principle, we should not consider it as the only way to divide the country. For example, the Hon. Government House Leader represents half of the City of Saskatoon. I believe it would be much easier for him to represent the entire City of Saskatoon than it would be for a Member from Prince Albert to represent more than half of the province. That must be taken into consideration when the boundaries are being drawn up.

It is important that we maintain the fairest representation but that it be not always defined by representation by population.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. I am particularly pleased to be speaking to Motion No. 6 which deals with the powers of the commission with respect to the definition of electoral district boundaries.

As all Members are aware, it is no easy task for the commission to decide how a particular constituency should be defined and what would be reasonable boundaries. There are many factors which must be taken into consideration.

Motion No. 6 states that the commission shall consider the following in determining reasonable electoral district boundaries. First, the commission can look at the community of interest or community of identity in the historical pattern of an electoral district in the province. The legislation would require the commission to consider certain matters. What does it mean when it says that the commission must consider the community of interest with respect to a particular area? That might present a problem to the commission in the sense that it would have to define first what the community of interest is and then determine how to adjust the boundaries to take that particular community of interest into account.

The motion goes on to say that the commission must consider the community of identity. In my view that might present more difficulties in terms of trying to understand what it means. Does it mean that the commission must consider what particular ethnic group is predominant in a particular area and, in deciding where to draw the boundaries, must the commission try to encompass the whole of a particular ethnic community?

There are arguments for and against that particular suggestion. The argument against it is that it might result in the ghettoization of a particular ethnic community. Some would argue that that is a desirable right, while others would not, but the effect of this motion is to require the commission to look into that particular issue.

Of course, the commission must also look into the historical pattern of that particular electoral district. I do not believe there is any difficulty with the commission doing that in certain areas. In my riding, for example, certain municipalities used to exist but because of changes by the provincial Government through amalgamation and the expansion of particular municipalities, the municipal make-up of Metropolitan Toronto has changed.

A number of years ago we had the old town of Weston that was a distinct municipality in Metropolitan Toronto. There were a number of similar municipalities, the number of which were reduced through amalgamation some years ago. However, the historical feeling of the people in those municipalities has not changed. They still refer to their place of residence as being the Town of Weston, for example, or the Town of Leaside or the Town of Mimico.

It is important that the commission take into account the historical nature of a particular a rea and try to keep it intact as much as possible. We would not want the commission to dissect these historical municipalities that perhaps may no longer exist in law but still exist in terms of the feeling of its particular residents.

I represent the riding of York South-Weston. I do not represent the Town of Weston, only the part of it which lies south of Lawrence Avenue, but because the name of my particular riding is York South-Weston, many people outside of my riding believe that I represent them. That is the problem with dissecting particular communities.

The commission would also be mandated by this amendment to consider, in determining reasonable electoral boundaries, a manageable geographic size for districts in sparsely populated, rural or northern regions of the province. We have no difficulty with that particular provision. While the Liberal Opposition supports this particular amendment, we do point out some of the difficulties that might result with respect to the problem of defining or understanding what this particular legislation might mean.

In the few minutes that remain, I would like to speak generally about redistribution. As Canadians know, at present there are 282 seats in the House of Commons. There was a previous proposal to increase the number of seats to 310, an addition of 28 Members. If those Members were Liberal, of course no one on this side of the House would complain. However, all joking aside, the concern raised by a number of Members is that if we continue to use the same formula that at present exists which results in an increase in the House with every census, sooner or later we would run out of room in this place. Perhaps there would be a couple of Members sitting beside you, Mr. Speaker, being able to look at your notes. There would be no more aisles and there would be benches similar to the British House of Commons. I suppose ultimately we might have that program some time down the road when each and every one of us has long gone to other places.

I think there are problems with respect to trying to limit the representation or the number of seats in the House, recognizing the very practical problem of trying to house the extra Members in the House. One has to consider the very basic premise from which we all work, our British parliamentary history that there should be representation by population. That is where you begin. That is a fair place to start. One vote should mean just as much in one area of Canada as it does in another.

We all recognize because of history, and because of our particular history here in Canada, that one has to deviate from the important concept of representation by population to take into account the regions of Canada that are not as densely populated as others.

In the City of Toronto, from where I come, or in any other major city, you do not have the problem of lack of representation in the House of Commons. You do have that problem in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and in other provinces, including Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. These areas are not as densely populated as the larger urban centres. We have to deviate from the principle of representation by population to say that in certain areas we will not insist on a certain number of people or on a certain degree of population.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating that my time has expired. It is unfortunate because I wished to raise several other points.

Let me reiterate our position. We support Motion No. 6, notwithstanding some minor difficulties with respect to interpretation that we might have. Generally, though, we are in opposition to the Bill.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of words—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —that will take maybe just a minute, that is all.

As far as this amendment is concerned, I think some Members should be more forthright in expressing their own opinions about this amendment as they see it for the ridings they represent.

Some Members in this Chamber who represent rural areas would say that there should be fewer people in their riding than in a riding considered to be urban. Those Members would say that the urban ridings should have twice as many people in them as in a riding considered rural. Then you would have another Member who would say that if you have what is classified as being rural urban, that should fit into the same category as being completely rural. If they do not say it they should come clean and be honest about it. If they were not trying to follow the Party line or anything like that, the reason that a Member, who represented a rural urban riding or a completely rural riding in Canada, would say that is that those areas are by their very nature 95 per cent non-industrial.

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: It means that those Members have more phone calls than the other Members.

An Hon. Member: I doubt it.

Mr. Baker: They get more letters from constituents than other Members. They have a different function in Parliament than the other Members have. Let us be honest about it. There are certain ridings in Canada, and it has always been the case, where residents of the riding would not know who their Member is. A name would come up and they would say: "We do not know if that is municipal, provincial or federal". But go to a rural riding, go to a non-industrial riding and ask who the Member of Parliament is, bang on. And if you ask who the provincial Member is, bang on. You ask them who their municipal Members are, again bang on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: There is an exception to that. In certain urban areas there are some very popular people in the House of Commons, like the Hon. Member who spoke a few moments ago.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hustler.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: However, Mr. Speaker, not wanting to get away from the subject under consideration, here is the fact of the matter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about the amendment?

Mr. Baker: The Government House Leader asks about the amendment. As I read the amendment, it is twofold. The amendment which the House Leader introduced says that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission will look at the connection that one part of a riding has with another and will not destroy any historical or traditional links. The second part of the amendment says, "Let us look at geography in the total consideration of the Bill on redistribution."

There is another element coming in here, that is, the type of riding and area that a person represents. I do not wish to make excuses for Members of Parliament but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there are some Members here who sometimes do not know how far to go on a certain problem they get. For example, there are Members of Parliament who are asked to look at an appeal to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, an appeal to the Veterans Allowance Board or an appeal to this or that. Then the constituent says: "We want you to represent us before that board". After that is over, a second appeal comes. Perhaps it is before a court. On one case you are perhaps tied up with two or three days of actual work. You say to yourself, like some Members do who have a 100 or 150 cases of appeals before the Federal Court or the Tax Court of Canada; "Am I really doing justice to these cases?" Some Members are not lawyers. They appear before a judge to get a decision regarding a constituent. I am not saying that there are some Members here who, out of necessity, work ten times harder than other Members. There are certain ridings that require more attention than other ridings simply because of geography and a practically non-existent industrial base.

There is a third element here. Who makes the decision on the third element, I do not know, but it should be taken into account in making decisions on where boundaries lie. In some areas of the country there should be two Members. If this Bill were not before the House, perhaps geographically speaking there would be a separate riding for Labrador. Under this piece of legislation that cannot be so. All it does is to rejuggle the boundaries within the Province of Newfoundland.

I should like to make a point which I think is a very legitimate one. Some Members of Parliament deserve smaller areas of coverage than others, simply because of the circumstances in their ridings. As the House well knows, that determines what is done by a Member of Parliament. I mean, there are only so many hours in a day. A Member of Parliament is either a constituency man or is involved in committee work and everything else in the House of Commons. We cannot do both. That should be a major consideration. In rural areas it is the Members of Parliament who speak on behalf of the people. In other ridings, associations and organizations prepare briefs. Sometimes we do not know one from the other, there is so much representation. However, in rural areas it falls back to Members of Parliament. That should be a third consideration when we are dealing with the particular amendment before the House.

I cannot see anything wrong with the amendment. I cannot see any great good coming from it. The reports of the boundaries commission which I have read always made the point that an area was a concise geographical one, that one area was connected to another, and used rationale to divide it up. They have always indicated geographic, historic and economic reasons for an area being as it is. However, there is nothing wrong with including that in the actual Act. It certainly re-emphasizes the wishes of the House of Commons. I think we agree with this particular amendment.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to follow the articulations of my colleague from eastern Canada. There are few Members in the House who can approach the Hon. Member's knowledge of electoral ridings, commissions and so on.

I, too, am in favour of the amendment as proposed. However, I have some concern about the English and French versions of the amendment itself in that they seem to give a different perspective. In English the amendment reads:

—the commission shall consider the following in determining reasonable electoral district boundaries:

(i) the community of interest or community of identity in or the historical pattern of an electoral district in the province,—

The French version identifies the community of interest or the community of identity on a cultural basis as well. That strikes me as being somewhat odd, in the sense that the word "cultural" was not used in the English version but appeared in the French version. I think that is quite significant. It ought to be consistent in both languages, of course, but there is also the importance of the word "cultural". If we are to draw boundary lines based upon cultural group, cultural identity or cultural neighbourhoods within a certain metropolitan or rural area, then I am at odds with such a philosophy. If we base ourselves upon cultural lines, perhaps we are trying to ghettoize something we ought not to ghettoize.

There are a number of different ethnocultural communities in my riding, comprised of Canadians who came from different parts of the world or Canadians whose ancestries were certainly in other parts of the globes. Should we draw a line around a community of predominantly Italian Canadian extraction and another line around a community which may have a Spanish background? I think not. I think we must preserve the integrity of communities, whether the delineations be physical or otherwise. However, it disturbs me somewhat that the word "cultural" was included in the French translation of the particular amendment.

Perhaps we ought to look a litte closer at this particular amendment, to ensure that we will not draft boundary lines based upon culture. Certainly one is a Canadian, whether one is of Canadian Italian background or of Canadian Portugese background. I am somewhat surprised that the word "cultural" entered into the question of boundary guidelines.

In addition, it makes sense to preserve the sense of community in our deliberations. Obviously the legislation will result in new public hearings to solicit support and recommendations from the public at large in terms of where delineations should be drawn. The last series of public hearings conducted by the previous administration were ignored by the present Government. One thing which came through loud and clear in many of those deliberations was the importance which people attached to the sense of community. People were very sensitive to any community being delineated in a way which would perhaps radically change their way of life. Individuals and neighbourhoods came forward, be they businessmen's or ratepayers' associations. Perhaps they were used to doing the community work in their own market areas and being delineated according to those boundaries. They were the last ones to want communities to be cut in half or otherwise. This amendment speaks very boldly and forcefully to the sentiments which were expressed by Canadians from coast to coast. Therefore, it makes sense that the commission be instructed by the House, by parliamentarians, that when it has hearings across the country, these guidelines will be the parameters of the debate. Certainly the debate will be representation by population, but the parameters will be to safeguard what is there now, to safeguard the way of life enjoyed by individuals in their communities. At the same time it should be recognized that we need an equation which will assure Canadians of the best possible representation in the House of Commons.

However, I return to the word "cultural". Perhaps in the ensuing debate, in committee or at the public hearings, that word could be somewhat better defined. As I indicated, it appears in the French version but not in the English version. I do not think we should get into boundary disputes on culture. That is the last thing at which we should look. I am pleased that the House provided me with an opportunity to include my comments in the equation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchi: On division.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

Income Tax Act

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 28, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

● (1500)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I reflected upon the capital gains provisions contained in Bill C-84 as I listened to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) trying to explain to the provincial premiers in Halifax yesterday why the federal Government was going to have to change the formula for EPF funding, a change which will result in the provinces receiving $6 billion less over the next number of years for use in hospital funding and post-secondary education funding. The Prime Minister's words were that the money had to come from somewhere; that the federal Government had a big deficit that it had to reduce.

When I heard the Prime Minister talking about that, I could not help thinking about this measure, a measure which will benefit well-off Canadians by allowing them free capital gains appreciation over the next five years up to the tune of $500,000 each.

I have seen a number of assessments as to how much of a drain that represents on the fisc. It struck me that had the Government of Canada been somewhat more rational in approaching the Budget, it would have been possible for the Prime Minister of Canada to maintain whatever goal he has in terms of deficit cutting while still being able to respond positively to the provincial premiers yesterday in terms of their desire to maintain the traditional federal assistance provided to those very important provincial programs.

I do not think it is digressing at all to talk about the hospital funding programs in Canada. While I was not in the House of Commons at the time, I can recall the kind of encouragement and leadership the Pearson Government provided in convincing the provincial Governments to establish hospitalization programs and eventually to establish universal medicare for all Canadians. Part of the consideration was the promise that the federal Government would be a solid supporter of these programs. Indeed, during the years since—years when there have been largely Liberal Governments in office—the federal Government has stood behind those programs, and it has done so notwithstanding the consequences for the federal financial position. The federal deficit is much larger than it would be had the provinces been left to take care of medicare and hospitalization funding at their expense, as the Constitution provides for programs of that nature. In a spirit of co-operative federalism, the Pearson Government made a strong financial commitment to those programs, a commitment which this Government is backing away from under the guise of reducing the deficit.

The cost of the proposal in respect of capital gains contained in this measure is one of the principal reasons why this Government is not in a position to support these provincial programs—programs that were undertaken in the 1960s on the understanding, on the basis of the agreement entered into between the Liberal Government of the day and the provinces, that the federal Government would provide transfer payments to assist in their funding.

We do not approve of this capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000 in one's lifetime. We are going to vote against it. While we agree that the federal Government has to be concerned about the provincial hospitalization and education programs. We in the Liberal Party do not find acceptable the introduction of a shiny new loophole available for the well-to-do in Canadian society while the general tax burden is being increased on lower and middle-income Canadians. That is not something that is acceptable to the Liberal Party, and for that reason we intend to vote against the proposal that there be this capital gains lifetime exemption of $500,000. The Liberal Party does not object to the use of the Income Tax Act to provide certain incentives. Capital gains are already taxed at a lower rate than other forms of gain or income.

I appreciate all of the theoretical arguments that distinguish capital appreciation gains from earned income. However, from the point of view of the morality of it, there is a very good argument in favour of imposing the same rate of income tax on capital gains as applies to earned income. We do not do that in our system because of the incentive that we want to provide for investment. As a result, capital gains are taxed at a lower rate than earned income.

However, this Government is going further. This Government wishes to reintroduce the inequities that the Carter Commission criticized in its report—a report that came out at the end of the 1960s—as a result of which the capital gains tax was first introduced. I very much regret this big opening in the Income Tax Act, an opening which will benefit only that relatively small number of Canadians earning capital gains.

The suggestion made by my leader—a suggestion which I shall repeat—is that we would be more comfortable, if the Government wants to encourage investment by Canadians to see the incentive, the encouragement, focused on the type of economic activity that is truly beneficial to the Canadian economy, the type of activity that creates jobs and economic activity in our country. But, as my leader has pointed out, the way this exemption is drawn, not only does it give tax favoured treatment to the individual who invests to create jobs and to create economic activity, but the same beneficial tax treatment is available to those who buy and sell condominium apartments in Florida or those who buy and sell works of art from the Middle Ages. In other words, any type of investment qualifies for this capital gains tax lifetime exemption, to a maximum of $500,000.

Part of the reason that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) puts forward for going with this much wider exemption than one which we would have been able to support is that he wanted something simple, something that would be easy for taxpayers and investors to understand. To our way of thinking, it would be far better to add a few technicalities to the measure—technicalities which would focus an exemption on encouraging investment of the kind that is useful in job-creation and in building up our country—thereby saving, as some people have estimated it, up to three-quarters of the total cost of this particular tax incentive.

Objective people who have reviewed this proposed exemption have indicated that 75 per cent of its benefit will go to those who make investments that have absolutely no positive impact on the Canadian economy. It is a measure that will encourage the sale of businesses, which is something which may not necessarily be beneficial to the Canadian economy; it will encourage the selling of an apartment in some other part of the world, if one is lucky enough to own one; it will encourage the turning over of works of art.

Can we expect the Canadian taxpayers to support that kind of activity and to view it as something that should receive favourable treatment under the Income Tax Act? We say no. The Prime Minister of Canada, yesterday, said that the federal Government could no longer afford to provide the same level of increased support for hospitalization and medicare, programs administered by the provinces, because of the large deficit. I wonder how many Canadians are going to believe that. I wonder how many will not be able to see that this is done to try to finance some of the mistaken fiscal policies of this Government, including the one before us in this measure.

I want to deal, as well, with the personal individual surtax of 2.5 per cent for incomes of $29,500 to $60,800 and 5 per cent for incomes over $60,800 in 1985. It is pointed out that these rates will double in 1986. Of course, these rates, as much as they are being increased and as much as a surtax is being created, do not result in one additional nickel being paid by those taxpayers who organize their affairs so that they pay no taxes at all. The Government promised in the Budget that it would deal with the situation of Canadians who have high incomes and who pay no income taxes at all. I would like to talk about that problem for a moment.

The reason there are individuals with high incomes who pay no taxes at all is that those individuals have organized their affairs to take advantage of a great many incentive opportunities under the income tax laws which permit individuals to save taxes by making certain kinds of investments and by organizing income receipt opportunities in ways recognized by the Income Tax Act. I recognize that virtually all of those incentives were put in place during the Liberal administration but it certainly was a trend which concerned the former Government and purportedly concerns the present Government. Something should be done about it. No matter what incentives of which an individual wishes to take advantage to reduce his income tax, he should not be able to reduce it below a certain minimum tax.

This Government made the promise during the last election campaign that it would introduce a minimum tax so that the situation for which they criticized the Government of which I was a part would be corrected. The temporary individual surtax which the Government has proposed is not the answer. That is not a measure that will increase the taxes of Canadians who pay no taxes at all because of the way they organize their affairs.

When the Budget was introduced, the Minister of Finance indicated that a paper would be introduced and there would be some answer on a minimum tax to be imposed on that category of Canadians by the end of this year. We have yet to see any of the answers. Some of the options have been put forward, but as the end of the year draws nearer and with few days for parliamentary business remaining before Christmas, there is still not a Bill before us to implement that minimum tax.

Another thing that makes this Bill unacceptable to us is that while those who will be paying the minimum tax when it is introduced are free of paying taxes in the meantime, the other provisions of the Budget which increased taxes imposed on ordinary Canadians and reduced the effective amount they receive through family allowances and the old age pensions have already been put into place. They are now beginning to affect the incomes of average and lower-income Canadians.

Whatever Conservative Members said about their constituents and however much they made appeals to lower and middle-income Canadians during the election campaign, what has become clear when looking at their way of organizing the Budget and the way taxes have changed since they have come to office is that the beneficiaries of their policies will be the Canadians who are better off. The people who will bear the burden are the middle and lower-income Canadians. We object to that part of the income tax Bill that is before us and we intend to vote against it as well. I had wished to make some further points, but I will stop now and allow the debate to be taken up by one of my colleagues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Debate.

[Translation]

Otherwise, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has the floor.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today, to speak to Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

I am pleased to be able to continue the debate started by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) on November 27, 1985.

The ultimate purpose of this legislation is to restore our country's economic growth and thus provide jobs and enhance the well-being of Canadians. Its purpose is to give each and everyone of us a chance to have a better life and especially to give our business people a much-needed stimulus for business development and expansion.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of Bill C-84 will have the effect of giving our small- and medium-sized businesses, especially, a free rein. They will also give private enterprise the priority it deserves in our country's economy. We have 750,000 small- and medium-sized businesses in this country. We have a million and a half unemployed, a legacy we received from our Liberal predecessors.

As soon as we came to power in September 1984, we tackled the unemployment problem. In November 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented his agenda for economic renewal. Basically, this agenda proposed giving the private sector a free rein and opportunities for profits. It received the confidence of the private sector, which immediately understood, upon reading the agenda for economic renewal, that the new Government would try and save money by cutting Government spending. These measures, in addition to others, should eventually help us to reduce our deficit.

Subsequently, in his May Budget, the Minister of Finance announced to Canadians concrete measures aimed at stimulating economic recovery. Further to this agenda for economic renewal and the May Budget, our Government opened the door to foreign investment by eliminating FIRA and introducing legislation to establish Investment Canada. From now on, instead of pestering foreign investors, we are providing a climate that is attractive for and welcomes investment.

Our Government has also started to dispose of Crown corporations. We will soon be able to announce further significant developments in the disposal process. Canadians will then be in a position to manage, on a profit-making basis, assets which until now were managed by Government technocrats lacking the profit incentive or any other kind of incentive, who moreover were not accountable for their actions, not even to Parliament.

We have also started a very important series of negotiations with our U.S. partners. If these negotiations are conducted successfully, and we intend that should be the case, they will open up a market of 250 million customers, enabling our businesses to become more specialized and to maximize their production processes.

Incidentally, I have the pleasure to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that I have been appointed chairman of a special committee that will regularly monitor and analyze developments in Canada-U.S. negotiations, with special emphasis on the interests of the Province of Quebec.

We also signed the Atlantic Agreement and the Western Agreement. We put an end to the climate of confrontation, the arrogance and the insatiable appetite of the Liberals who were never able to reach a consensus with the provinces concerning the development of Canada's plentiful natural resources.

As promised to the people we have begun deregulating the oil industry. We scrapped the National Energy Program in which the previous Liberal administration had sunk billions of dollars.

Respecting small- and medium-sized businesses, we amended the legislation in order to allow banks to lend them money at preferential rates, and our Government guarantees the repayment of those loans along with the interest. The legislation gives Canadian bankers more operating room and does not create further administrative red tape for small- and medium-sized businesses.

To ease the administration of the act we liberalized a number of significant matters, particularly concerning the caisses populaires which, because of their position, did not enjoy the same privileges as banks did. We lifted some of the restrictions thwarting the business of several caisses populaires so that those institutions, which are well acquainted with promoters and their environment, can now lend them money with the backing of the State.

• (1520)

The Liberals failed to recognize the importance of the caisses populaires.

During the period set aside for questions, the Liberals, unable to analyze the impact of our economic program and envious as they are of our successful efforts have to ask specific questions.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I must also make specific comments. While our Government tells Canadians they may have to put up with some restraints, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) willingly takes a 15 per cent annual salary cut-back and all Ministers agree to make do with 10 per cent less. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) who is here today happens to be one of those who have accepted a 10 per cent cut in his salary. These are some of the details which the Liberals would rather not mention.

I want to add, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Turner, I think, did not accept to have his salary reduced by 10 per cent. As for Mr. Broadbent, the leader of the socialist party, who is so close to working men and women, to the needy and to widows and orphans, he did not accept to reduce his salary by one cent.

As for the results of our program, they have been extraordinary. We have enabled the creation of over 340,000 new jobs in the last 15 months. The interest rate has gone down by 3.6 per cent. For instance, a smaller business with a debt of $300,000 will save $1,000 in interest costs because of this 3 per cent decrease in the interest rate.

Thanks to these savings, our businesses can reduce their costs and be more competitive on international and American markets, which is very important in this period of intense trade negotiations with our southern neighbors.

The lower interest rates on mortgages, securities and lines of credit for smaller businesses will allow them to increase their sales and therefore their production, which means that they will be able to hire more workers.

At the consumer level, a lower interest rate is even more significant if we think about Canadians with a $50,000 mortgage on their home. They will now save $150 in interest costs, and if we consider the impact of the taxation system, at a marginal tax rate of 50 per cent, that is the equivalent of a $3,600 a year pay increase. It is important to point out that a 3.6 per cent decrease in interest rates is the equivalent of a $3,600 a year pay increase for Canadian families.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, unemployment has gone down by 1.3 per cent generally and by 2 per cent among young people.

The Bill proposes measures which have already proven to be effective because of the positive reaction of Canadians. One of the most important and appropriate of these is the capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000. This provision is economical for the Government because it will not deprive us of more than $600 million in revenue and its positive effects are incalculable.

Mr. Speaker, everyone is sensitive to an increase in his on her assets. The system created under the Liberal Government discouraged the accumulation of assets and therefore prevented businesses from prospering. The proof of this is that the Government had to invent all kinds of public schemes to replace private initiative. Our population had lost all motivation. The possibility of making non-taxable profits thanks to the capital gains provisions will allow our citizens to invest, especially in smaller businesses, and so improve their capital structure and reduce their borrowings.

This Bill also provides for the creation of small business investment corporations, for the purpose, among others, of promoting the provision of venture capital. These corporations will pay no income tax.

Bill C-84 allows Canadians to set up limited partnership investment corporations to deal with small businesses.

The possibilities offered by Bill C-84 will facilitate capital raising for high technology companies. They are the companies of the future, that will be competitive on the North American markets. That, Mr. Speaker, is one way of improving the lot of Canadians.

High technology development used to be done by technocrats in Government laboratories, but as a result of this Bill, private enterprise will be able to generate its own capital and, given the creativity, initiative and fighting spirit of its managers, to develop new technologies directly for its own use.

This Bill also closes some tax loopholes. The objectives set by the Liberal Governments which implemented them could never be reached, due in part to the shrewdness of business people and the lack of foresight of the Liberal legislators. Our Government plugs these tax loopholes while streamlining the Act.

This concludes a few comments on the most important aspects of our legislative program. I know very well that the Liberals are going to do their utmost to delay passage and Royal Assent of this Bill. That is the way they work. They have no regard for the priorities of our country. They act on only two fronts. They question minor details and reach a consensus only on the use of filibuster, both in the House and in Standing or Legislative Committees. People should know that Liberals will try anything to delay what we are trying to achieve. That is one reason why they will stay in opposition for a very long time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I could not miss this opportunity to make a comment and ask a question. I note that the Hon. Member is blaming the Opposition because his Government does not know how to govern. Frankly, I think he exaggerates a little. After all, the Opposition is not responsible if this Government keeps struggling with increasingly serious problems, unable to solve them and constantly embarrassed.

If the Government took more time to manage the country instead of appointing Conservatives on committees and to various other jobs, the country would perhaps be better governed.

Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question to ask. The Hon. Member has just praised his Government and told us that it has plugged, to use the word, the loopholes in the legislation. And if such is his Government's intention—Mr. Speaker, I would never have accused him of belonging to the extreme right as the other Conservatives do. I thought he was more fair-minded, but I see that I was mistaken and he is just as bad as the others.

However, I would ask the Member opposite why this Government who wants to plug loopholes has taxed the poor this year? Why does the Government want to de-index family allowances? Why did the Government try to tax senior citizens while taking no action against the rich until next year or even later?

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) for giving me the opportunity to answer a few matters of particular interest. I would ask him firstly why your Leader, or you so-called leader, did not agree to a 15 per cent cut in his salary for the benefit of the poors, those who need it, as you claim? If he were to set the example as a Leader, it might have a significant impact.

I would also tell the Hon. Member that we have created 340,000 new jobs since September 1984.

I would also tell my hon. colleague that, unless he has no mortgage on his house, that the average Canadian—

An Hon. Member: I have none.

Mr. Fontaine: Great, congratulations, Sir. The average Canadian saves $1,800 a year on mortgage interest costs and I have explained that those savings amount to a $3,600 salary increase. This was done through the involvement of our Government, and it is a significant achievement.

Mr. Champagne: Mr. Speaker, I believe what my hon. colleague just said is very true—

Mr. Boudria: Go ahead, congratulate him!

Mr. Champagne: If the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) wishes to stand up to contratulate him, he is welcome to join me. The question I would like to ask my hon. colleague, and he will call me to order if I stray away from the subject matter of our debate, is the following. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell said earlier that our Government wanted to de-index, wanted to harm old people, families, poor people, mothers with children, but Mr. Speaker, this is what I would like to ask him: When did the former Government when they were in power introduce an income tax for the wealthiest people in the country? Mr. Speaker, when did those Members on the side of the previous Government who claim to be supporting the poor and the low income families, when did they stand up? When did the Members opposite stand up, Mr. Speaker, when family allowances and old age security pensions were cut? When did they stand up? Really, I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, because since they have been in Opposition, all they have been doing is yelling around. That is what they do. They come to our constituencies and tell people things that are just not true at all. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker. And that is why I am asking my hon. colleague, so that for once at least the people of Canada, all our constituents, including the people of Quebec, will know what the Liberal Members have been indulging in the past few months: cheap political rhetoric.

• (1530)

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) that when his party came to power, just after his Government took office, one could fiil a large food basket with $100 or even $50. However, when you left, one could hardly fill a grocery bag with this same $50. This is how you treated Canadian consumers, all the while reducing family allowances and old age security pensions. Under your regime, the size of a food basket shrank significantly.

It was your policies which started the inflationary spiral throughout Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat difficult to believe what we are hearing. Was it not the Hon. Member's Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), who stood up on the election platform in Sherbrooke, Quebec, in July of 1984 and said to the people there and, through them, all the people of Canada, that he would not touch senior citizens' pensions? Was it not his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who issued a Budget which was a direct attack on the senior citizens, a Budget which attempted to reduce the deficit on the backs of our seniors? Was it not his Minister of Finance who tried to deindex senior citizens' pensions notwithstanding the fact that his Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, promised those senior citizens during that election campaign that OAS was a sacred trust and would not be touched?

We fully recognize that the Leader of the Conservative Party was thirsting for power and was prepared to do and say anything in order to gain power. Would it not lead one to seriously question the credibility and integrity of this Conservative Government when, during the election campaign, it made promises to the disadvantaged in our society and then, the moment the Government came into office, forgot all about the promises? The Hon. Member talks about caring and compassion, honesty and integrity. Was it not his Prime Minister who made that promise, yes or no?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, even though we have inherited from the Liberals a pitiful administration, a poor financial situation and huge difficulties, we are still able today to allocate $45 billion of our $105 billion budget to social programs and had it not been for the $25 billion in interest payments, we would allocate today 57 per cent of our spendings to those programs. We are still able to do it in spite of the problems we have inherited from you. We have done that while creating 340,000 jobs.

Mrs. Pépin: Part-time jobs.

Mr. Fontaine: We have reduced interest rates. We have reduced unemployment. Our Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has increased by $1.8 billion the funds earmarked for retraining programs available to Canadians. That is what we are committed to achieve, Mr. Speaker, and what we are achieving.

Mr. Prud'homme: I would simply like to ask a question from my hon. colleague and friend. He is blaming us for the deficit but in fact, the previous Government was never blamed by the then Official Opposition. I understand that the Hon. Member is new here and incidentally, I welcome him to this House, but I have one thing to tell him: I have sat on the opposite side and I don't want to be nasty gratuitously but I have already been there and as far as I remember, the Official Opposition which now forms the Government never blamed us at the time for what he calls abuse and deficit. On the contrary! We had to hold them back. Instead, Mr. Speaker, we had to hold back Opposition members who were asking us to take a thousand other steps that could not be paid for given the financial needs of the Canadian people. Therefore, do not blame us for that.

If it is true that . . . I conclude, Mr. Speaker. If it is true that we are presently in a period of restraint in Canada, how can he explain to his constituents in Lévis that one of the first useless expenditures of this Government consisted in spending almost $55 or $60 million on something as useless as new uniforms? How can he explain that to his constituents of Lévis if we really have to limit our expenditures, at a time when all over the world and particularly in Geneva, in Europe, people talk about a reduction in armaments, in the military staff of both big alliances of NATO and of the Warsaw Pact? However, at the same time, the Minister of National Defence and Deputy Prime Minister, who controls about everything in the House, the protector of the Conservative Party and of everything, proposes to increase our NATO forces by 1,250 soldiers at an added cost of $100 million a year. Extra millions, hundreds of extra millions, and if those things had not been done, they would not increase the deficit. I would like to understand how he can feel justified in blaming us for some things for which his party did not blame us when they were in the Opposition since those people asked us for more expensive programs. Now those things are happening under his administration. How can he justify all those military expenditures? I recognize the importance of military spending. But how can he explain that to the people of Lévis? I would like him to tell us how he explains this to the people of Lévis, whom I know, because personally I have not found a way to explain such extravagant military spending to the people of Montreal-Saint-Denis.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for his excellent remarks. However, the Hon. Member will not lead me today from a Budget measure with financial repercussions to a debate on an international level. When the Member for Saint-Denis tells me that the opposition never talked about the deficit, I have to remind him that it is not the opposition who gave us this mandate on September 4, but the Canadian men and women; they are the ones who have sent here 211 of us to reduce the deficit and rebuild the economy, to give them back hope, to revive businesses, to reduce interest rates and unemployment and to raise the standard of living of the population. The Opposition did not give us that mandate on September 4, 1984: the Canadians did. And I have to tell the Member for Saint-Denis that the honorable Member for Lévis was also given that mandate and that he is proud to participate today in its fulfilment.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is clearly a Friday afternoon. We face the prospect of this meagre piece of legislation before us—two hundred and how many pages? With the normal expectations of Friday afternoon, we even see the rebirth of the "Rat Pack", the rebirth of what we thought, for the sake of the Liberal Party, was long buried.

Mr. Mazankowski: The leader left town.

Mr. Gauthier: We have the grasshopper pack now.

Mr. Langdon: It seems to be back and re-emerging. I must say I am reluctant, Mr. Speaker, to stand up and interfere in the re-emergence of the Rat Pack because it gave us a sense of—

Mr. Marchi: Envy, jealousy.

Mr. Langdon: —Liberalism in its true essence. But I have to confess, Mr. Speaker, that today I am speaking with some chagrin about the Americanization of Canadian politics, particularly about the Americanization of NDP politics.

Mr. Gauthier: That's tough.

Mr. Marchi: Do you have any?

Mr. Mazankowski: You had to hire an American pollster.

Mr. Langdon: We confess, Mr. Speaker, to having had an American pollster. I remind the Chamber that the American pollster was faced with a difficult task, that of taking a Party at 10 per cent at the polls and putting it back into its rightful place as a powerful political movement across the country.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are dreaming.

Mr. Nunziata: This guy is dreaming in Technicolor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it succeeded. We found the right American to give us help. Unfortunately, the Conservatives, in their search for an American to give them guidance and direction have clearly stumbled on the wrong American. Perhaps Will Rogers was the one they sought, but I fear that the man they found was the mighty Mencken whose notion of a beautiful day was one with sleet replacing a blizzard, whose notion of happiness was a newspaper strike.

Mr. Nunziata: What's he talking about?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives found their Mencken, they found a man who could guide them as they sought political popularity through reshaping their tax policy. Mencken gave them advice. It was, I can see, remarkable advice. It is advice which I would have taken with some scepticism. However, with their customary sense of complete faith in things American, with their commitment to continentalizing our political system, they took the advice of Mr. Mencken.

Mr. Mencken's advice to the aspiring politician would have sounded something like this: Young man, if you wish to become a successful Prime Minister—

Mr. Nunziata: What about young women?

Mr. Langdon: We realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is a tradition of ghosts leading Prime Ministers. In this case the ghost must have been that of Mr. Mencken and it must have been speaking to our present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The message must have been this: "Young man, if you wish to be Prime Minister, for a short four years"—and perhaps the Prime Minister did not quite pick up that phrase "four years"—"here, Mr. Prime Minister, is the course to follow. It is an easy course, Mr. Prime Minister, a course which recommends itself to me as a humourist in the American tradition. First, Mr. Prime Minister, you tax the middle classes because the middle classes are forever likely to complain and by taxing them at least you give them a target at which to direct their complaints. Tax them seriously, Mr. Prime Minister, because if you do it in a half-hearted way I fear the middle class will not notice because the Canadian middle class tends to be a little comfortable. So tax them and tax them hard."

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the ghost of Mr. Mencken quoted to the Prime Minister the comments that he made during the Leader's debate when he said he intended to tax the rich and tax them hard. "Then, just to make sure your political future is well established, take taxes away from the rich. Make certain that the taxes you take from the rich are taxes which are completely undeserved. Make certain that the tax breaks that they receive are something that they do not have to earn. Do that and you can be assured of a place in the history books of Canadian politics."

So, Mr. Speaker, a Budget came down with magnificent tax breaks for the rich for which they had to do nothing. They could put their money into the paintings of French impressionists with which I have no quarrel. French impressionism is something I respect. They could put their money into Florida condominiums. Again, I would not want to quarrel with the sunshine of Florida. They could put their money into real estate in Wisconsin. Now, frankly, real estate in Wisconsin is a bit risky in my mind. However, they could put their savings into real estate in Wisconsin and they could receive their capital gains without paying a single penny of tax. We could build up this nice contrast between the poor, hard-working, salaried, middle-class members of our society, whose taxes were increased by this Budget, and the rich with their condominiums in Florida, their investments in Wisconsin, and their French impressionists on the walls.

However, Mr. Speaker, Mencken was not through because the ghost of Mr. Mencken recognized that a full piece of satire had to have its complete exclamation mark. It had to include taking money from the mouths of babes. You could not just tax the middle class and give tax breaks to the rich, you had to also have a system that took from the mouths of children. Then, if you succeeded in putting a package like that together, you could have the ultimate in this country—a tax proposal that infuriates everybody. Therefore, because we believe that Mencker had clearly been listened to, we tested whether there had been this sense of infuriation across the country, thanks to the Conservative's tax measures.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member during his most eloquent and interesting speech, but I would like to bring to your attention Standing Order 6. It appears that we do not have a quorum in the House. However, in view of the fact that I see a number of Conservative Members scurrying to their seats, I would not ask that you ring the bells. I would simply request Hon. Members opposite—

Mr. Mazankowski: There is only one Liberal in the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do have a quorum in the House now.

Mr. Thacker: Just wait until the next opposition day.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for helping to expand the audience for the advice which I am giving to these poor misguided souls on the other side of the House.

We wrote to thousands of Canadians across the country, indicating that we were launching a campaign this fall for fair taxation. We asked these people to respond to our questionnaire. Most Members of the House send out questionnaires with their regular reports from Parliament. I consider an average return on those questionnaires to be perhaps 250 to 300 a week over a period of three or four weeks. In one week we received 600 responses to our fair taxation questionnaire. These responses run 98 per cent in favour of the yes position on each of these questions. First, we asked our constituents, "No one should make an income of $50,000 a year or over and pay no taxes. We need a minimum tax now to make sure everyone pays their fair share". A yes answer was supplied on virtually every return that we received. I note that the Government, despite its promises, has not yet come through with a minimum tax which it proposed during the election campaign.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is coming.

Mr. Langdon: The Hon. Minister says that it is coming. So is winter, so is Christmas, so is spring. I hope that the minimum tax reaches us before Christmas.

The second question was: "We need an end to a capital gains tax exemption that lets a few wealthy Canadians earn up to a half million dollars tax free while ordinary families will pay up to $1,000 more a year in taxes". Over 98 per cent of the respondents said yes, they agreed with our position.

The third question which we put was: "We are against the proposed tax changes that hurt the ordinary family by taking $635 million out of the child tax benefit system". Again, on that question, 98 per cent said yes, they were against that as well.

Finally, we said: "Tax concessions to corporations must be used to create jobs, not to let big corporations take a tax holiday. The Mulroney Government should give tax breaks and grants to small businesses and local projects to create jobs instead of giving it to big corporations". Again, there was overhwelming support for that statement.

I brought some of these questionnaires to the House to share some of the extemporaneous comments which come back on questionnaires such as these. For instance, there is a questionnaire which says at the bottom—forgive me for breaking parliamentary decorum but it is not me, the questionnaire—"Mulroney is a liar". Forgive me for quoting from this list—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member knows better than to read into the record something that is unparliamentary, purportedly said by someone else. I would ask the Chair to consider the matter and suggest that in his considerable speech material he pick something that is more appropriate. Furthermore, he should pick something that is true rather than that lie.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the Hon. Member is aware that that cannot be done. I am sure he will withdraw the words. I understand that he was quoting in the first place, but he knows that he cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly.

Mr. Langdon: Of course, I would never suggest in the House—though it may happen elsewhere—that our Prime Minister is a liar. However, I felt that I had to quote directly from the material which I received.

I have a few more quotes which I think might possibly be within parliamentary decorum. In any event, it is not me, but my constituents who say: "We should get rid of Mulroney and his cronies". It is signed by "a very highly burdened taxpayer". Another one reads: "For our country's sake, dump Mulroney".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member, when he talks about the Prime Minister, to refer to him as the Prime Minister, not by name.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know if there is anything in the rules, but you can educate me if you like—

Mr. Lewis: Lord knows that we have tried.

Mr. Benjamin: I do not know of anything in the rules that prohibits a Member form reading his mail, as long as it is germane to the debate. He can read what other people are saying about anyone in this place or anything that is done here. It happens every day in the press. In fact, the Hon. Member could read parts of the telephone book as long as it pertains to taxation. I do not understand why there is a call to order. The Hon. Member is not saying these things himself. He is quoting from the mail he has received from his constituents.

Mr. McKnight: Unidentified.

Mr. Mazankowski: Call it four o'clock.

• (1600)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member wishes to identify them, I would be quite prepared to table them before the House and 600 more.

An Hon. Member: Read them out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that he cannot do that. As far as the comments made by the distinguished Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), Beauchesne's clearly indicates that an Hon. Member cannot, in a quotation, cite something which would normally be disorderly in the House. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) will of course have the right to continue his speech the next time the matter is debated.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

HEALTH

ADVISABILITY OF DEVELOPING PLAN TO REDUCE TOBACCO SMOKING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should develop a comprehensive plan to reduce tobacco smoking, its attendant diseases and specifically, that the Government commit itself to discussing co-operative measures with the provinces and introduce the necessary legislation within the coming year.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the House seldom has the opportunity to discuss a matter as important as the one with which we are dealing this afternoon. We seldom have the opportunity to discuss real life and death issues. The issue of tobacco smoking for Canadians is one which affects every person in the country. The problem is very much greater than people realize. As many as 35,000 Canadians die every year as a result of tobacco-related diseases. When we consider that the toll of Canadians in World War II was 45,000 for the entire war, we have some idea of the scope of the problem before us. There are 350,000 deaths in the United States every year and, when we consider the rest of the world, it is into the millions. For Canada, smoking is the number one preventable health problem. Canada is the fourth highest country in the use of tobacco products, and we have the highest rate of tobacco smoking in the industrial world.

Tobacco smoke contains 3,800 chemical compounds, 50 of which are known to be carcinogenic. For some of these compounds, no level of exposure is known to be safe. Sidestream smoke—and that is what we all breathe, whether or not we smoke and whether or not we like it—contains an estimated 50 times the number of carcinogens in mainstream smoke. We are all badly affected by it. The symptoms of healthy adults exposed to secondary smoke include eye irritation, nasal congestion, headache, cough, sore throat, hoarseness, nausea and loss of appetite. Loss of appetite will become relevant when we consider the level of pollution of VIA Rail. It just may be one of the reasons that the railways company which has the worst food in the world also has the most polluted railway cars in the industrial world.

Twenty-one per cent of Canadians have conditions aggravated from exposure to secondary smoke. This goes from the serious extreme of cystic fibrosis, to the use of contact lenses at the other end. In between, we have people with heart disease, asthma, hay fever and angina, whose lives are indeed troubled by exposure to unwanted tobacco smoke.

Relatively low amounts of carbon monoxide significantly impair driving ability by reducing braking time and by delaying recovery of vision from glare. In short, cigarette smoking causes accidents on the road.

The cost to the economy is estimated at $8 billion. That is the cost in terms of health care costs, medical costs, loss of time at work and fires. A quarter of fire deaths are due to smoking. Only $3 billion is brought in by taxes. In short, we have a $5 billion deficit every year due to tobacco smoking. For a Government which says it is concerned about the deficit, one has to wonder about the $5 billion, year after year, added to the cost to the economy. It is time to act now. All medical associations, including the Canadian Medical Association, provincial groups, physicians, surgeons and the public, are looking to the Government to act.

Prior Liberal Governments failed to act. We can look back to an excellent report of a committee of the House, the "Isabelle" report of 1970. It contained excellent recommendations on how to deal with the problem and excellent documentation. In that time there was the introduction of some Bills, even a Government Bill to ban advertising of smoking in 1971. It was never even debated. That is how much attention the Liberals gave to this most important problem.

Government bodies, such as the Canadian Transport Commission, Air Canada, CN, VIA and all such organizations with federal Government responsibilities, have been given the responsibility to protect the public from tobacco smoke but they do not act. In fact, the Canadian public is exposed to secondary smoke as a result of their failure to act. Not only is the Government failing to act, it is making the problem worse. It continues to encourage the tobacco industry. There is the proposal of a national tobacco marketing board to subsidize exports of Canadian tobacco to Third World countries where the increase in smoking is at the order of 4 per cent per year. It is immoral to continue this. We should be encouraging farmers to switch to other more wholesome crops. Farming is badly hit, in any event, by production in Third World countries. The idea that we should make up for this economic trend by subsidizing exports to Third World countries is flagrantly immoral. Yet, that is what the Conservative Government is considering.

Who, in conscience, can recommend subsidies for a product which is killing 35,000 Canadians per year, as well as people all over the world? According to the President of the Canadian Medical Association, each tobacco farm is indirectly responsible for the deaths of 10 Canadians every year.

[Translation]

We are beginning to recognize the problems of secondary, passive smoke.

Medical authorities estimate that 5,000 Canadians die each year from the inhalation of tobacco smoke pollutants, that is that out of the 35,000 who die each year, 5,000 were nonsmokers. That death rate is five times that caused by driving while intoxicated.

Inhaling tobacco polluted air is equivalent to smoking ten cigarettes a day. I have not even yet raised the ill-effects for pregnant women and their babies, or for children at home. Twice as many children of smokers' families suffer from respiratory diseases as children of nonsmokers' families.

Air polluted by tobacco smoke has become a major problem in the work place. A great many companies allow their staff to smoke on the job even though ventilation is woefully inadequate, with the result that illness strikes employees including nonsmokers, and the public. Customers are also badly served.

Female workers are forced to file complaints through their union representatives. Members of the public and customers have no recourse, nor do non-unionized employees.

Time has come to respect the rights of all Canadian workers to breathe fresh air. Such toxic substances would not be tolerated if they were the by-product of manufacturing processes. They would be banned from the work place, and people would ask for adequate air conditioning devices to get rid of such pollutants.

[English]

I have received letters and telephone calls from people recounting the problems they have had at work. People have had to quit their jobs because of the danger to their health. The problem for Canadians who smoke is particularly high because more Canadians are heavy smokers. Therefore, the problem is worse for their non-smoking friends who have to work around them.

The same goes for smoke in airplanes, trains, buses and stations. VIA Rail is the most toxic and most polluted train service in the industrial world. What a record that is! Neither it nor airline companies provide real non-smoking air space. The Department of Transport and the federal Government which are responsible for the unhealthiest treatment of the travelling public in the industrial world are our Government and our Department of Transport. I have written in and complained, as have others. The Railway Act is simply ingored. There is no enforcement. Employees who complain are told that it would cost too much to give them decent air in stations or at their place of work.

[Translation]

And the smokers themselves? Both sexes are concerned here since an increasing number of women are now smoking and have fallen victims to this habit. In most cases, today's adults started smoking when the ill effects of cigarettes were not well understood. And the vast majority of smokers, and I mean 90 per cent, would cease smoking but they find it hard to do. We have to help these people quit smoking. The great majority of smokers now admit that smoking is also harmful to non-smokers. They would endorse stricter regulations if they were introduced in a reasonnable and sympathetic way.

But children are the most pitiful victims of smoking. They now start to smoke when twelve years old. And it is a well known fact that advertising is aimed at the young people, especially at teenagers. One must not forget that the child who starts smoking will be losing, on average, 8 years of his or her life.

● (1610)

[English]

Because tobacco companies are losing customers—who quit or die—they are directing their efforts at the young. This is forbidden in their own so-called advertising code, and that code itself is a farce. One tobacco ad agency strategy was leaked to the United States Federal Fair Trade Commission. Let me quote from it. It is very interesting. The following is that agency's recommendation:

> An attempt to reach young smokers, starters, should be based upon the following major parameters:
> —present the cigarette as one of the few initiations into the adult world; > —present the cigarette as part of the illicit pleasure category of products and activities;
> —create a situation taken from the day-to-day life of the young smoker but, in an elegant manner, have this situation touch on the basic symbols of the growing-up process, the maturity process;
> —to the best of your ability, considering legal constraints, relate the cigarette to "pot", wine, and beer.
> Altogether, provide starters with a rationalization to start smoking.

And, of course, the cigarette companies are going after women increasingly because men, very sensibly, are quitting in large numbers.

The advertising code is a farce. Complaints do not result in billboards being taken down, even when they are close to schools. Not one billboard respects the provision for a prominent display of the warning against smoking cigarettes. The warning, if you can see it—and sometimes it is hidden behind the lighting—is one to two inches in height. It needs to be six inches in height to be read, and 12 inches in height to be considered prominent.

The warning itself is inadequate. It is voluntary, and the reason for that is that previous Liberal Governments never legislated the warning. The warning is weak. In the United States, for example, the warning says such things as: "Smoking causes lung cancer, heart disease, emphysema, and may complicate pregnancy." In Australia, the warning says: "Smoking is addictive. Smoking kills." That is certainly true. In Iceland, it is: "Protect children from tobacco smoke. Tobacco smoke pollutes the air and is a health hazard." Yet in Canada we have only a very vague warning. It does not mention at all that smoking is addictive; it does not mention at all that it is harmful to children in the family. It suggests that one should "avoid inhaling"; in other words, it is suggesting that the smoker cause more harm to people around him by forcing those people to breathe in secondary smoke.

Fortunately, Canadian athletes are speaking up about the hypocrisy of having tobacco companies sponsor sporting events. The organization Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada counts among its members prominent athletes. They accuse the tobacco industry of "deliberately trying to link cigarettes with sport," and a "flagrant violation of any acceptable standards of corporate or advertising behaviour." I quote:

> While tobacco manufacturers continue to pose as exemplary corporate citizens, thousands are dying. These are not good corporate citizens. They are pushers in pinstripes. The fact is that the children are most aware of the brands that do sports sponsorships.

It seems that sport sponsorships are the ideal form of advertising to get young people to start smoking. While adults—especially men—are quitting, young people, especially girls and young women are beginning to smoke. Now more girls smoke than boys, and among young women in their twenties, the percentage who smoke has gone from 36 per cent to 49 per cent in the last three years. It is not uncommon to have 11 and 12-year-olds smoking.

This is shameful and very distressing. The companies are going after young people to get them to start, with the hope that once they get them started, they will not be able to quit. The tobacco companies never admit that smoking is habit forming, that it is addictive; that it will be hard to quit once one starts. They get people hooked when they are young.

Organizations supporting a ban on cigarette advertising include the Canadian Medical Association, the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, the World Health Organization, a number of city councils, a number of boards of education, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Ontario Heart Foundation, and the Canadian Home and School and Parent/Teacher Federation. A report of this House in 1970 recommended a ban, unanimously. A Bill was introduced by the then Minister of Health and Welfare, Mr. Munro, but it was never debated.

Previous Governments have simply capitulated in the face of pressure from the Tobacco companies. It is shameful that the Governments in this country have been prepared to put the interests of the tobacco companies ahead of the health of Canadians. We do not know how much money political parties get from these companies by way of campaign contributions, but certainly that type of consideration has been put ahead of the health of Canadians.

Tobacco companies like to say that a ban on advertising will not make any difference. But we wonder why they are fighting it so hard if they really think that. Let's be very clear: partial bans do not work. Adbvertisers of tobacco products simply shift to other media, as they did when television advertising of tobacco products was stopped in Canada. At that time, they concentrated their advertising efforts on billboards and magazines. In the United Kingdom when tobacco advertising was stopped on the broadcast media, the switch was to gift coupons, various kinds of promotions and giveaways, and sport and cultural promotions. These other avenues of advertisement have proved very effective. As a result, there has not been a ban in actuality. Advertising especially affects young people, as demonstrated by the studies in Britain which show that children smoke the most popular brand. Conversely, where there has been a ban on advertising, as in Norway, the rate of smoking among young people has decreased.

It is an interesting fact that the differences in life expectancy as between women and men are coming together, the reason being that women are increasingly smoking and men are quitting. As a consequence, the life expectancy for men is going up, while at the same time it is going down for women. We have the horrible possibility that we will achieve equality in mortality rates before we achieve equality in any of our economic aspirations or aspirations for political representation.

I am asking the Government to today give a commitment to bring in a comprehensive serious program to deal with this problem. Any such program would have to include a ban on all forms of advertising of tobacco products. Such a ban could be phased in over a two-year period. Along with it, there should be a positive counter-advertising program aimed at discouraging young people from starting to smoke. Secondly, there should be a phasing out of all supports to tobacco production, research and marketing, with those moneys redirected to crop substitution and aid to farmers to get out of tobacco production and into something that would add to the health of Canadians.

There should be legislation to require that there be smoke-free areas in the work place, in places where the public is admitted, and in all modes of transportation under federal jurisdiction. As well, there should be an increase in the taxation of cigarettes, with the moneys so derived directed to counter-advertising, health promotion, research, quitting programs, and crop substitution. In other words, the tax revenues that result from cigarette sales should be utilized in programs aimed at reducing tobacco consumption.

[Translation]

I charge this Government with having neglected the health and the life of Canadians. I charge this Government with yielding to the multinationals of the tobacco industry, with allowing them to make profits out of the health and the lives of men, women and children across the country. On behalf of all Canadians, I call for a realistic and humane program that will stop this butchery.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we have had enough of rhetoric and gesture. This Government has not taken the problem seriously. It is behind Canadian public opinion in that regard. I ask the Government to stop following Canadian public opinion and to start setting it. I ask this Government to do what Canadians are asking, that being to take public health seriously, to take Canada's number one preventable health problem seriously. I ask this Government to bring in a comprehensive program which puts the health of Canadians first.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak to a subject that is so important to the health of Canadians, and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for presenting this motion.

As we all know, the Department of National Health and Welfare is aware that tobacco has a very severe impact on the health of Canadians. It is estimated that annually some 33,000 deaths can be attributed to tobacco smoking. Canada is one of the countries in the industrialized world with the highest tobacco consumption per capita, despite a decrease in the percentage of people who smoke, which has slowly dropped to 42 per cent among men and 37 per cent among women. In 1981, this group represented about 40 per cent of Canadians over 14. One item in the figures for 1981 is particularly alarming. In that year, 42.6 per cent of Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 were smoking 40.5 per cent of Canadian men and, surprisingly, 45 per cent of Canadian women. If we look at the statistical trends for certain illnesses, this could explain why lung cancer is gaining ground and starting to catch up with breast cancer as the form of cancer responsible for the greatest number of deaths among the Canadian female population.

A number of organizations are taking an active interest in tobacco consumption and its effect on health. Programs to deal with the problem have been set up by non-governemental organizations such as the Canadian Medical Association and the Association for Non-Smokers' Rights, as well as by provincial departments of health. As far as the dangers of tobacco smoking are concerned, it seems public awareness is quite significant and increasing rapidly. It is also important to note that society is becoming increasingly reluctant to approve or even tolerate tobacco consumption, not only because of health considerations but also from the esthetic point of view.

Mr. Speaker, the issue becomes really urgent when we consider our young people, who constitute a group that is particularly vulnerable and easily influenced. Is it not true that, often, habits acquired at that age stay with us for the rest of our lives? The consumption of tobacco and other substances that become addictive or create a kind of dependence may result, years later, in the deterioration of our health. We must not forget that tobacco smoking definitely increases the risk of death and also increases the burden on the health care system used by those suffering from tobacco-induced illnesses or a handicap resulting from their condition.

Since the problem can largely be avoided by a change in lifestyle, the Department of National Health and Welfare has both a moral and a legal responsibility in this area. However, there is no easy solution. Tobacco is not an illegal product, and thousands of Canadians depend on the tobacco industry for their livelihood. It has even become a tradition in certain families. It is a fact we cannot ignore when considering measures or programs aimed at reducing tobacco consumption. If tobacco sales were to stop tomorrow, this would trigger a major economic crisis.

In designing relevant programs and to achieve some progress in the area of tobacco consumption, the Department has opted for a specific and methodical approach, using all the resources available to a national federal agency.

In accordance with its mandate by law which is to protect the health of Canadians, the Department of National Health and Welfare directs monitoring programs through its Health Protection Branch. Data on the prevalence of diseases in Canada and their distribution according to age, sex, occupational group and region are collected regularly in co-operation with cancer associations, provincial Health Departments, educational institutions and other federal departments such as Statistics Canada. These data are then transmitted to health care staff and those responsible for health policy, through the medical press, government publications such as "Geographical Distribution of the Death Rate in Canada", conferences and other informative meetings in which the Government takes part.

Such monitoring activities make it possible to establish the incidence of cancer, respiratory ailments and cardiovascular troubles—diseases which strike smokers more than others. After analyzing those data and comparing them with tobacco consumption statistics, we can draw projections not only, to help us draft provincial and federal policies, but also to treat patients, give them advice concerning their specific case, and urge Canadians to adopt a healthier way of life.

The Health Protection Branch also makes tests to establish the toxicological effects of tobacco components. Branch technicians study the genetic effects, analyze the various components of tobacco, and then provide the medical community with their findings.

Since tobacco regulations do not fall within the realm of a specific authority, the DNHW has taken the initiative to come to grips with the health hazards inherent in the use of tobacco. Negotiations with the tobacco industry have been going on for a number of years, more precisely since scientific evidence has shown that tobacco is definitely a health hazard. As a result of those negotiations, a warning appears on all packages of cigarettes, cigars and pipe tobacco. There is full co-operation with respect to grading measures and standardization of lab tests. Technical meetings are also held regularly for researchers of the department and their colleagues in industry.

The industry has agreed to voluntary restrictions to tobacco advertising. A many faceted formula restricts advertising to localities and designs that leave every discretion to consumers. This agreement practically precludes all advertising directed at younger people who can be influenced more readily.

In cases where voluntary guidelines might not go far enough, the department takes up the cudgels for Canadians and attempts to convince the industry to change its approach. It must be said that, generally speaking, the tobacco industry has been willing to co-operate with the department on this issue, and that relations between both parties remain positive and friendly.

The department has hired the services of private agencies to come up with advertising campaigns aimed at urging Canadians to smoke less. For instance, in co-operation with the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association launched an information campaign under the slogan "Pharmacists, Take Position".

In addition, through the Health Protection Branch, the department keeps the public aware through releases on various questions, and responds to regular requests for information from interested groups.

However, the Department of National Health and Welfare is not the only federal department involved in the quest for a solution to the serious problem caused by tobacco consumption. It remains in contact with the other Federal organizations concerned and, under certain circumstances, it takes together with them corrective measures. For instance, the increase in Federal tax on tobacco has resulted in a reduced consumption of this commodity. The Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Office of the Auditor General have set up policies to limit smoking in the working place. The Department of National Health and Welfare has just put forward a policy to restrict smoking to specific designated areas identified as "smoking areas". A program is also being offered to encourage civil servants to quite smoking. The Department has adopted this policy on the basis of a survey of its employees who strongly supported the idea of restricting smoking to designated areas. Having consulted a great many people, the Department is now in a position to advise other institutions on the tendencies that emerge and the orientation to give proposed policies in the fight against the use of tobacco. In addition to conducting research on tobacco and providing support to those carried out by various organizations everywhere in this country, the Department subsidizes research in this area through its national program on research and development in the area of health and, indirectly, through the Medical Research Council. That way, the Department is helping channel the efforts of scientific researchers to maximize results.

The Department already has structures allowing it to develop acceptable political options for the purpose of implementing an exhaustive plan to reduce tobacco consumption.

Under the guidance of the Deputy Minister, experts in the Health Protection Branch, the Health Service and Promotion Branch as well as in the Policy Planning and Information

Branch are working together on this problem. The Department can then communicate with the industry, the various Provincial Governments as well as with non-governmental organizations and groups, as well as co-operate with other Departments. Thanks to this organization, the Department has inaugurated major programs like the non-smoking generation and the national program to fight against the use of tobacco.

The Department can rely on the advice of specialists in various areas such as tobacco toxicology, health promotion, clinical medicine, economy, policy planning and legal services. It can focus their efforts toward the finding of solutions to tobacco related problems, while taking into account the impact which these proposed programs are likely to have on the economy of the industry.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has developed guidelines on the use of tobacco for instance in collective transit systems. The Department has also helped other federal agencies and Departments, Crown corporations and private organizations to prepare their own programs.

Finally, the Department provides assistance for outside initiatives in this area, by suggesting for instance anti-smoking guidelines for health facilities and private industry.

Because of the Departmental structure, the Federal-Provincial Community Health Advisory Committee approved in April 1985 the joint development of a national anti-smoking program directed first and foremost at young people, but also at Canadians generally.

The first phase of the program for young people, entitled "For a generation of non-smokers", was launched in October 1985 by the federal Government and provincial and territorial authorities. This is an extension of the "Generation" program of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The federal Government has therefore already shown its commitment to joint initiatives of this type, and constantly explores other avenues of co-operation with the provinces, industry and relevant organizations.

The mechanism for federal-provincial co-operation allows the Department to take on the role of leader in many aspects of the fight against smoking and of the promotion of health. In addition, the Department supports provincial programs which need it and mobilizes considerable human and financial resources to bring Canadians to adopt a healthier lifestyle.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) for bringing to the attention of the House a very important and serious matter.

Needless to say, the ill effects of smoking have to be discussed far more seriously than we have discussed them in the past. It is not a matter of which political Party has done or not done enough in the past. Collectively, no one has done enough in the past at all levels of Government with respect to this issue. I think we have to be more conscious with respect to the matter. Statistics have demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt that smoking is injurious to one's health. Together, as elected officials, we have to give signs of encouragement to those people in the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Minister, and others to increase and strengthen government policies which are now in place in order to encourage our young people never to start smoking and to encourage all others who are still smoking to quit.

Hon. Members know that in its wisdom the Government decided to mount a publicity campaign to encourage people not to smoke. The publicity campaign on television is aimed at young people. It has all types of jingles, music and other things which are meant to tell the young people of Canada that, indeed, they should not start smoking. Of course, that is very laudable. I have watched the ads carefully and they are not quite as convincing as I would like to see them. They do not demonstrate to me the ill effects of smoking. Rather, they portray young people dancing. The idea that you do not have to smoke in order to enjoy yourself is the theme. This is fine. However, we need to have a far stronger message than that for young people.

The other matter with respect to the advertising campaign with which I took exception was the fact that the Government of Canada earlier this month decided to award a contract for an anti-smoking campaign to a company whose claim to fame is the fact that it is the advertising agency for Imperial Tobacco. One wonders about the credibility of the campaign when one considers this fact. Obviously, our young people at whom this advertising is aimed are not fools. They know there is a certain element of hypocrisy in a process which would hire the firm which does advertising for Imperial Tobacco to mount a campaign to tell young people not to smoke.

In my hand I have an editorial dated Thursday, November 14, from one of the Toronto newspapers. It deals with this matter. It is entitled "King size mistake" and states:

> At McKim Advertising, they have it both ways. First, the firm is handling more than $6.6 million a year in advertising for Imperial Tobacco, the cigarette manufacturer. And now it has a $800,000 job from the federal government to create an anti-smoking ad campaign.
> But we shouldn't worry. Jim Mintz, the federal Health Department's marketing chief, sees no potential conflict of interest. "That was a concern, I might tell you," he told The Star's Martin Cohn this week. "The department and the minister were satisfied that there was no conflict."

That is most assuring. When one reads a little further in the article one will find out why the Minister was so assured. It states:

> Why? One explanation is that McKim convinced government officials that it would not play down its anti-smoking ad campaign to avoid offending Imperial Tobacco.

I ask Hon. Members: How on earth can we determine that? First, the company got the contract, which was an untendered contract. Therefore we do not know whether the Government is obtaining the most effective ad which it could for its advertising dollar. As I pointed out earlier, the whole credibility of the advertising process to encourage our young people not to smoke is damaged tremendously by the fact that this company is the advertising agency for Imperial Tobacco. However, there is another thing wrong with the whole process. Let me read further and I am sure you, being a very non-partisan person, will identify it right away. I continue to quote from the editorial:

● (1640)

Another might be that Health Minister Jake Epp is well acquainted with the creative talents of Ron Telpner, McKim's senior vice-president and Winnipeg manager, who has played a key role in Tory election advertising in Epp's home province of Manitoba.

You can see how the Minister was apprised right away of this person's qualifications. The editorial continues:

Telpner denies that he is on the receiving end of a patronage pay-off. "It (the patronage charge) absolutely outrages me," he says.

I can understand how a Conservative getting a Tory job could be outraged by the fact some people are pointing out that he is a Conservative getting a Tory job. Reading further:

Expressions of outrage and perceptions of patronage are one thing; conflict of interest is another. The Health Department has made the wrong choice in McKim and McKim has made a king size mistake in playing both sides of the street on such a controversial issue.

I bring this to your attention because the worst thing we can do is treat the subject of smoking lightly because it is so important. Think of the increase in heart attacks in people who smoke. Think of the lung diseases, some of which are caused entirely by smoking. In other words, we have diseases which would cease to exist if people did not smoke. We are spending countless millions of taxpayers' dollars to eradicate all kinds of diseases, and we are doing so with a certain amount of success. As a nation we have an excellent health care system. I am beginning to wonder whether the Government will put the axe to some of that with the way it is cutting back on transfer payments to the provinces but, be that as it may, by and large we have a good health care system. In recent years that system has assisted in increasing the life span of our citizens. It has worked well. However, if we all got together and really drove home the message of how bad smoking is for our health, if we did it with the serious attention it deserves and in a manner as proposed by the Hon. Member, then we would be a lot further than we are now.

I want to let other Members have a chance to say a few words on this subject, or perhaps we could immediately vote in favour of this good resolution, but I also want to say that I am very concerned about a trend we are seeing now. No doubt the Hon. Member has noticed this herself. We are seeing older Canadians quit smoking and that is very encouraging. In the case of my own family, my mother quit four or five years ago and my father only recently. I am very encouraged by that. However, as I travel throughout my constituency and elsewhere I have been particularly alarmed to see the number of young people who are still smoking, especially the number of young women. I do not have exact statistics on it and perhaps others who are knowledgeable could inform us, but it seems to me there is a shifting between the sexes among younger people who smoke. Unfortunately I smoked when I was a teenager. I managed to give it up a while back. However, I seem to recall that many young men smoked but few young ladies smoked. Today it seems to me there are as many if not more women smoking than there are men. I know the number of young men smoking has gone down and perhaps that accounts for a portion of it, but it has to be more than that. I am convinced that the number of young women smoking is also on the increase. No doubt the reasons for this are peer pressure, the bad example set by adults and so forth. Nevertheless, we should aim the campaign at them in particular because the side effects from smoking are damaging to anyone but particularly to young women. As they get closer to child-bearing age, it is of particular concern because health statistics demonstrate that there is potential harm to the unborn child because of smoking.

I was at a meeting only a few weeks ago in my constituency. One of the moderators was a young woman who was seated beside me and it was quite obvious she was expecting a child in the not too distant future. She was also puffing away at cigarettes. I did not count how many she had during the short meeting of an hour or so but I'm sure it was a half dozen or so. I watched her smoke and the only thing that crossed my mind was why could this person not understand the harm she was doing not only to herself but to the child she was going to bear in the very near future. I am very concerned about that, as I think a lot of Members are. We have to increase the work we are doing there. We have to consider very seriously this motion proposed by the Hon. Member. We should all support it and congratulate her for the work she has done.

[Translation]

I know that the Hon. Member herself opposes smoking, perhaps even with fervour, at least from what I hear, and I do not blame her. It is sometimes difficult for us who have public duties to speak out vigorously against those who smoke, especially when people who come to our offices start smoking. Most of us seem to tolerate this, even if we do not like it. I know, however, that the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) tolerates it much less than I do, at least according to what I have been told, and I congragulate her on her courageous stand on this issue.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that more should be done in that area. For example, the Hon. Member referred to conditions aboard planes. I admit that some people do smoke, and I do not like it, Mr. Speaker, but still I can put up with it. I seriously wonder why is it necessary to allow smoking aboard a plane travelling between Ottawa and Montreal, a flight of about fifteen minutes.

I am sure smokers can wait 15 minutes to have a smoke, Mr. Speaker. The same thing goes for other flights such as the one between Ottawa and Toronto and other similar ones. On longer flights, if they have to be tolerated, then so be it for the time being, but let us begin somewhere. Let us at least begin in those areas where it is absolutely unnecessary and where it could be avoided.

This is an area where we could implement the suggestions made by the Hon. Member today.

My congratulations to her once again and I ask all my colleagues and Members of the other parties to support this motion.

[English]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleague in expressing my appreciation for the very genuine concerns advanced by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). I have experienced the determination that our colleague has just spoken of when she comes into a legislative committee and the first point of order she puts forward is one indicating that she is allergic to cigarette smoke. I do not know whether she is allergic or not, but she finds it offensive and I cannot argue that at all. I respect the concern that she has for her health and that of others. As the chairman of that committee, and a smoker, I do not for a moment object to or feel resentful about that kind of a point of order. I am sure that others and other committees will benefit from leaving the weed alone for a period of an hour and a half or two hours while in committee. The Member may be assured that as a health professional I know better, it is just that I have not got to it yet.

● (1650)

The need to reduce tobacco smoking in Canada is an area of concern for the federal Government. Indeed, that is why the federal Government is currently undertaking policies and programs which aim to discourage tobacco consumption and is studying several alternative strategies concerning a whole range of tobacco issues.

As has already been indicated, Canada has a high tobacco consumption rate. Thirty-nine per cent of Canadians smoke. However, polls indicate that the proportion of smokers in Canada is decreasing. For example, in 1985, 41 per cent of men and 37 per cent of women aged 15 and over smoked cigarettes, compared to 60 per cent and 40 per cent respectively in 1966. A source of concern, though, is the rising prevalence of smoking among Canadian youth, especially young women. For example, there has been an increase in daily cigarette smokers among the 12 to 14 and the 18 to 19 year old age groups while smoking among the 15 to 17 year olds has remained fairly constant. Among Canadian women in their twenties, the proportion of daily smokers has increased from 36 per cent in 1983 to 49 per cent in 1985.

There is no doubt that smoking is a major health hazard. It is the single most preventable cause of death and illness in Canada. Over 30,000 premature deaths in Canada per year are attributable to cigarette smoking. It is estimated, for example, that 30 per cent of cancer deaths, 30 per cent of heart disease deaths and 90 per cent of chronic obstructive lung disease deaths are caused by smoking. Male lung cancer rates are increasing. Lunc cancer rates among women are also increasing and are overtaking breast cancer rates.

I would like to digress for a moment and emphasize what I have said in a more real way. Just over a month ago I attended the funeral of a very dear man whom I loved very much; my father-in-law. Up to 16 yeras ago he was a cigarette smoker. I swear that that man of 65 was healthier than I in physique and appearance. Yet, he succumbed to the insidious maglignancy of cancer which first attacked his lungs. He fought that brave battle for close to a year before passing away. To me this has a very close association. It comes even closer when, speaking to my sister a week ago, I found out that the cancer that she as a smoker has been fighting is making further inroads. One can only assume that sometime in the future she will die prematurely. One really must wonder about the sense of myself, as a health professional, being engaged in the same habit. If it is of any solice to those in the House today, I am addressing that problem in a very real sense. Next week I will undergo the treadmill test which will surely tell me that I have been pushing my luck.

To return to the thrust of my speech, economically it is estimated that the monetary cost of tobacco-related deaths and illness exceed the taxes collected and, probably, consumer expenditures on tobacco products. The federal Government is concerned about these human and economic costs and has already put into place policies and programs which aim to reduce these costs. However, the federal Government also recognizes that smoking is, unfortunately, a customary activity with a long history which will be difficult to change. While surveys indicate that smokers do want to quite they, nevertheless, do not want Government to tell them not to smoke. The production and marketing of tobacco has also supported a considerable economic infrastructure ranging from tobacco farmers to tobacco manufacturing employees. It has beena source of employment and income, albeit not the best.

In developing a workable tobacco policy, the federal Government must continue addressing the health problems caused by tobacco smoking while avoiding undue economic disruption to the tobacco farmers and industry workers as the tobacco market inevitably declines. The federal Government has taken an active role in maintaining and initiating policies and programs which will achieve these goals.

I would like to outline to the House some of the accomplishments to date in this regard. On January 25, 1985, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) announced that effective that date all national amateur sport bodies funded in part by the federal Government would be required to desist from any new or renewed sponsorship arrangements with the tobacco products industry for events and programs that primarily involve amateur athletes. The new policy was in response to concerns raised by many Canadians that tobacco products were being promoted through the sponsorship of the Canadian Ski Association by R. J. R. Macdonald Company. This announcement followed extensive consultation with all the Parties involved including representatives of amateur sport governing bodies, the tobacco industry, the medical community and various interest groups. The federal Government decided not to intervene with the CSA-R.J.R. Macdonald contract in order to give the association time to find an alternative sponsor. However, it was agreed by all the parties involved that a formal relationship among the national amateur sport organizations, funded extensively by the federal Government and the tobacco industry, could not continue.

Second, the federal Government has continued to monitor the voluntary agreement among the tobacco manufacturers which has been in place for approximately 15 years. It brings violations of the voluntary tobacco advertising and promotion code to the attention of the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council and holds ongoing discussions with the industry to extend the code. The purpose of the code is the establishment of and compliance with uniform standards of cigarette and cigarette tobacco advertising and promotion in Canada. It has proven useful in restricting cigarette advertising on radio and television and in limiting, to some extent, cigarette advertising expenditures. It has also ensured that health warning labels appear on cigarette products and tobacco print, billboard and point-of-sale adversiting.

Third, the federal Government has enhanced its comprehensive smoking prevention and cessation programs aimed at reducing the incidence of smoking in Canada, especially among Canadian youth. It has, through the Department of National Health and Welfare, funded the "Time to Quite" program and the "National Program to Reduce Smoking". The current expenditure level on all non-smoking promotion programs is approximately $1.7 million per year. Mr. Speaker, I see that it is five o'clock and I will so call it.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, November 29, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this morning, a bright election morning in our country. I notice that perhaps quite a few members of the Conservative caucus are busy helping out their colleagues, the Péquiste Conservatives in Quebec.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: I hope we are not going to waste the whole morning hearing about the pet peeves of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), and that he will confine his remarks to the subject before the House today, namely, a Budget Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell knows the Standing Orders very well.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I notice that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) are as useful as always, and I shall give them the consideration they deserve, that is to say, I shall ignore them. I do intend to speak to Bill C-84, and I may say, in passing, that I do not blame the Hon. Member for Gatineau for being offended at my reference to the Péquistes Conservatives, her friends in Quebec, because if I were in her shoes, I would not be feeling very comfortable either, because they are obviously going to get "clobbered" later today, and—

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's speech is still far from relevant, and I wish he would show us the courtesy he seems to be very reluctant to display in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) may proceed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I hope I can make my speech without constant interruptions from an Hon. Member who has so little to say.

In any case, let us proceed with Bill C-84, which our party is very reluctant to approve. Although we agree there have been some technical changes in the Bill which may be beneficial, the Bill also contains certain policies which are quite offensive and in some parts I would say even repugnant. Again, this may be why some Conservative Members are feeling very uncomfortable this morning.

[English]

Let us talk about the child tax exemption provisions of this Bill. Just in case the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has not concluded that that is part of the Bill, I will remind her so that she does not stand up on another point of order. This Bill will gradually decrease the child tax exemption from $710 in 1986 to $560 in 1987 and $470 in 1988. If you couple those child tax exemptions with other provisions of the same Bill, mainly the provisions on the child tax credit, you will see that a situation has been created in which the poor people of the country will be getting less and less, and the rich people, the friends of the Conservatives, will be getting more. This is not simply empty rhetoric, Mr. Speaker. I will give you tangible proof of what I am telling you.

Let us look at the net annual benefits for a one income earner family with two children under the age of 18 residing in the Province of Ontario at certain income levels. A family such as I have described earning $10,000 a year received a total of $1,540 in 1985 and will receive $1,888 in 1988, a very small increase indeed. A family earning $60,000 will, at the same time, lose approximately $200 under these provisions. Looking at that measure on the surface one could say that perhaps it is not so bad. However, when you couple this with other provisions of the same Bill and other Government legislation such as the capital gains tax exemption, you see how unfair it really is.

The capital gains tax exemption clearly benefits people at the upper end of the income scale while penalizing those at the lower end who obviously cannot take advantage of the capital gains provisions. You see, Mr. Speaker, one of the prerequisites for gaining on your capital is that you must have capital to start with. Obviously, if you are trying to struggle to maintain a family of four on $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000, there is simply no capital left over to increase in value. I am sure that the Conservative Members sitting on this side, who appear to be very reasonable people even though they are Tories, can understand that. I hope that they will take the position of our caucus on this Bill. The net effect is that after four years a family of four earning $15,000 a year will have lost some $400 or $500. However, a family of four earning $200,000 a year will have a benefit of roughly $2,000 at the end of that period. Where is the social justice from a Government that believes in that kind of approach?

I believe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) perhaps best described the word "Conservative" in Progressive Conservative during a speech last fall. He emphasized the meaning of Conservative when he said that this country had a shortage of rich people. That is the reasons he gave for part of our financial difficulties. However, I see it somewhat differently as a Liberal. It is not the shortage of rich people that concerns me but the surplus of poor people. I am not worried about a shortage of rich people because they can look after themselves. However, it is those many people who are living below the poverty line about whom we should be concerned and whose lot we should try to improve. While the Government likes to take much of the credit for lower unemployment, I remind Hon. Members that most of the jobs that have been created are only part time and short term. At a time when we still have very high unemployment, with hundreds of soup kitchens across the country, we should be more concerned about the plight of our needy rather than the shortage of rich people which seems to concern the Minister of Finance so much.

I am disturbed about other provisions of this Bill. For instance, there is the cancellation of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, or RHOSP. I believe that this was a very good program which was beneficial to young people. A young family who could afford to put money away were able to receive a tax advantage under this program and, after saving a substantial amount in a Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, could use those funds to buy a home of their own. It is a very worth-while investment and that plan helped thousands of people, mostly young people, to own their own home.

Of course, the Government says that it wants to encourage the private sector. Its first step was to cancel a program which aimed to make homeowners of a number of Canadians, particularly young Canadians. This seems to run contrary to that Tory policy. Perhaps the Tories abandoned this measure because it had a certain element of social justice which was contrary to Conservative policy.

After the federal-provincial conference in September 1985, the Government indicated that it wanted to withdraw from making housing policy and hand it over to the provinces. Perhaps therein lies the reason for the cancellation of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. It was the Government's view that it should not provide small tax benefits to enable people to own their own home because it was not a federal responsibility. Perhaps that is the view taken by the Conservatives in this debate and the reason this program was cancelled. If that is not the case, I certainly hope that a member of the Conservative Party who is knowledgeable about these issues will clarify that position. Perhaps that Member could explain why the Tories have decided to cancel a very worth-while home ownership savings plan.

The Liberal Party believes that the whole issue of housing is indeed an important one in which the federal Government should be involved. It is a national issue and the federal Government should work with the provinces in developing a housing policy. It is not appropriate for the Government simply to abandon this policy.

There seems to be a general view held by members of the Conservative Party that the country would run better without Government interference. Perhaps they were elected in the belief that they should not govern, as opposed to being elected in order to govern. Of course, that is unacceptable because the Government must be involved in leadership. A Party that is in power must provide good Government, not necessarily no Government at all.

We do not know what the Government will do with the funds that it will save a result of cancelling the RHOSP. Perhaps it will find ways to bail out more banks or other small interest groups. Perhaps it will even use the money to increase the number of rich. However, I can wager that the Government will not use the funds to decrease the number of poor.

I also want to talk briefly about Registered Retirement Savings Plans. Many Canadians are now saving funds for their retirement years through these savings plans. I think that it is generally a good means for people to put money aside for their retirement years. It will assist them in gaining independence for as long as possible so that they will not be a burden on others and will have as well a very worth-while feeling of being able to take care of themselves.

I notice that the Government has decided to increase the amount which will be eligible for contribution under RRSPs. While I believe that is worth-while as well, there must be a limit so that the RRSP remains a useful retirement measure as opposed to something which will amass large amounts of capital beyond the mere necessity of providing for one's retirement. Therefore, I express some caution about increasing those amounts by an unduly large amount.

The Government has decided that a person presently on a pension can no longer take pension receipts and invest those in a spousal Registered Retirement Savings Plan. That may sound a little complicated but it is not. The provision is disturbing, particularly for women. In the past, many men at retirement age who had a younger spouse would contribute toward a spousal RRSP, using the receipts of the funds that they had. It is my understanding that this will no longer be possible under the new method. I have received over a dozen letters from constituents, particularly men with somewhat younger spouses, who are rightfully concerned about this proposal. We know that the life expectancy of women is considerably longer than that of men—some seven or eight years. Of course, this realistically means that women, especially if they are younger than their spouse to begin with, will be around significantly longer and will have to provide for themselves for many years. That being the case, the Government should ensure that the provisions of Registered Retirement Savings Plans encourage contributions in order to provide for women who will be alone for a number of years in the future, at least in all likelihood, once their spouses have deceased. This provision of the Government should be corrected.

I should like to speak briefly about small business bonds, another provision of the Bill. It is a good measure to assist businesses in difficulty. The farm sector has been the recipient of small business bonds, which of course assist farms subjected to severe financial duress. Farmers could borrow funds from these bonds at a lower rate of interest, and the funds which they were borrowing were not tax deductible in exchange. That procedure has been of benefit to some. However, something is missing. The Government, in its summer election platform, made a number of promises to the agricultural sector. I may have referred to some of its promises once or twice before, but in the event that I forgot this one, I should like to refer to the document entitled 338 Tory Promises. The third promise under Agriculture reads as follows:

> Allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds so that farmers will have access to reasonably priced funds.

The Government has totally forgotten its commitment to farmers with regard to agri-bonds. We could say that it has forgotten about farmers altogether; that would probably be a far more accurate statement. In any case, it has completely forgotten this particular promise, along with other promises which it made, particularly with regard to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. I remind the Government about its promises and ask: Why are those promises not kept in this Bill?

Unfortunately my time is drawing to an end. I invite Hon. Members to participate in the debate as it is a very important issue. In particular, I invite Conservative Members to rise and fight for their constituents who are being subjected to terrible injustice in the Budget of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on this Bill. It is one of the most important ones with which the House will deal this year. It raises key questions of principle, some of which were raised by the Hon. Member for Prescott-Russell in a gingerly way.

Mr. Boudria: It is Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Hockin: I should like to make three or four major points about the Bill in order to help clarify for the Hon. Member why we are not too concerned about his worry as to whether or not we agree with him.

The Conservative Government of today is trying to raise different questions in a more eloquent way and to implement programs which answer questions that the Hon. Member never considered asking. First, I think about the vocabulary of the Hon. Member when he talked about helping the poor. His way of helping the poor would be to generate more and more direct government programs to create jobs.

Let us look at what the Government has done in the past 15 months. It has created 343,000 new jobs through letting the private sector operate effectively, through lowering interest rates and through allowing the great battery of business creativity in the private sector to charge the engine. That is the program which creates jobs, but the Hon. Member looks to Government programs to create them. Government programs can do some things, but nothing like the 343,000 new jobs created through the private sector and through the approach of the Budget.

The Hon. Member spoke about the plight of the poor. He likes to appropriate that issue to himself and to appropriate his great concern for the poor to being a very special quality of the Liberal Party. If the Liberals were so concerned about the poor, why did they not do the number of the very effective things which are being accomplished by this Bill? For example, we have abolished income splitting through low interest loans, as well as tax shelters for the use of yachts and recreational vehicles. These abuses were created by Liberal Governments and sustained by them, to the detriment of the poor. There are many more examples.

Also we had an exposition from the Hon. Member on housing. His approach to housing would be to have a new program or to retain the old RHOSP. We should not have Government programs with the name "housing" just to say that we have housing programs. The Liberal way of governing for the last 20 years of 30 years was to pass legislation which was essentially an expression of sentiment. The Bill would contain the right words but in practice it accomplished very little for the target group. Our approach to housing was not to produce yet another piece of legislation which sounded as if it were propitious for housing. We lowered interest rates. No one would rise in the House and say that lowering interest rates hurts housing. According to the latest figures of last week, 196,000 new units are being constructed, thank to low interest rates and thanks to the approach of the Budget, compared with half that many when we were first elected. In our housing policy we lower interest rates and back it up with philosophy in a Budget which gives investor confidence to build housing. Our approach is not to implement new alphabet soup RHOSP and call it a new housing program or to keep RHOSP just for the sake of keeping it.

The Budget tries to change the whole vocabulary of political debate when it comes to public policy. The Budget talks about incentives, more than subsidies. Also it talks about providing for future generations as well as present ones, instead of just responding to the people who knock at the door of the Hon. Member for Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Boudria: It is Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. The people of Glengarry are being offended.

Mr. Hockin: I thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

By changing the vocabulary of political debate, we are talking about future generations rather than the present ones. I will expand on that in a few minutes. We tried to change that vocabulary by talking about capital in a useful, public-spirited way. We have discovered—and I do not know why the previous Government had such trouble understanding it—that most of the new jobs being created in Canada were through petites entreprises, small businesses. When they obtain proper capital inflow, they can do amazing things and create a tremendous number of jobs. Women starting small businesses have especially benefited from the growth of the small business sector. That is a major part of what the Budget stands for.

First, we ensured that venture capital and RRSP funds could flow, as well as funds from other pools of capital which could never flow to small businesses before. They will now be allowed to flow, which will make an enormous difference. We are inviting the people of Canada and the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) to ask this question: How do you get enough capital to small business so it can employ people? We are asking that rather than: How do we create yet another Government program to employ people directly for a limited time?

• (1130)

Mr. Boudria: It is the trickle-down principle.

Mr. Hockin: No, it is not. As a matter of fact, it is an immediate injection principle. You have heard about the turbo-charged engine? That is what we are talking about.

Investment, controlling the deficit, dealing with abuses and dealing with capitalization for small business are the major principles of this Budget. Speaking first about investment, I find that the position of the Opposition very often is that corporations exist simply to be taxed. Of course, corporations should be taxed, but they have a more important function in our national life. They should be the energy cells so that the economic engine can operate to increase the size of the economic pie. That is why we have brought in the very bold and useful lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000. The Opposition has described this as a "giveaway to the wealthy". It does not know the people who can take advantage of this. They are not the wealthy.

Mr. Boudria: Are there all kinds of welfare recipients using it?

Mr. Hockin: There are people who would like to expand their business but cannot see much incentive to do so without this provision. There are people who would like to, perhaps, pass on to their children an expanded business but see no incentive to do so. This Bill gives them that incentive, and it is phased in so that it is not irresponsibly expensive for the federal Government Budget in the first two years. It provides incentives rather than simply taxing for the sake of taxing.

The second major thrust of the Budget is against the deficit. All Members of the House are looking for a solution to this problem. However, generally we do not hear too many constructive solutions generally from the Opposition because it usually expresses concern only over a cut-back. We are trying to introduce a new set of questions, a new vocabulary, into this issue. We are trying to ask what is going to happen in 1995, only ten years away, to the youth and the aged? What will happen to the burgeoning number of Canadians over 65? We know the problems the Canada Pension Plan is having, how poorly funded it is. What happens to future generations if the deficit continues to grow at this alarming rate? Quite frankly, any Government will have its options limited in 1995 if all our taxes are going to service the debt. This Budget is an attempt to look after future generations by trying to modify indexation and cut back the rate of growth of federal Government spending. We are trying to change the whole concept of where federal Government money should go. It should be invested in the future, not just in the present.

The third thing this Budget tries to do, which I find particularly important and which perhaps has not been highlighted in the media as much as it should be, is to come to terms with legislation which sounds good but really does not accomplish very much. We have tried to do this, for example, in our treatment of the research and development tax credit, small business bonds and so on. What we need in Canada is legislation and spending programs specifically targeted to specific needs.

The fourth thing this Budget tries to do is to deal with the problem of capital starvation in small business. This is not an issue which concerns just The Financial Post or the Report on Business; it is something which affects everyone in every village and town in Canada. We are trying to provide streams of capital which can flow into small business. We have already seen almost a "jump start" to the economy in the last 12 months given the huge number of jobs which have been created. I suggest that the infusion of capital which this Budget will bring about in the years to come will help lower interest rates because it will mean less pressure on a small pool of capital; larger pools of capital will be created.

There has been in the past, in our approach toward small business, an attitude of condescension. The attitude has been that if you have a pension or are the holder of an RRSP, then do not invest in small business because it might collapse. To some extent that perception helped to prevent the growth of small business. They do not take this view in the United States. Down there it is sometimes the case that the smaller the business, the more attractive the investment opportunity. The changes we are trying to make to the investment ability of pension plans, RRSPs and others will encourage investment in small business and hopefully change that psychology.

What I am trying to suggest is that if we look at these issues differently, we will not worry too much about some of the problems which the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-

Russell worries about. He worries about more Government programs with the right names on them. We are trying to change the focus. Let us not produce a Government program unless it accomplishes the purpose for which it is designed. Sometimes you can do that by strengthening the private sector, especially through increasing capitalization for small business. The best example we have of helping small business is the strengthening of the capital sector through lower interest rates.

In conclusion, Canadians generally feel that the $500,000 capital gains exemption will reward those who are willing to take a risk. What if it does not? What if we find that this whole program is not working all that well? We can change it. However, quite frankly, this program has been so well received and investment intentions are already in place to such a degree, that I suggest this will be perhaps one of the longest lasting elements of any Budget to date. As well, people worry about the validity of our efforts to create jobs through lower interest rates and less government participation in the economy. I invite them to look at our experience over the last 12 months. It is almost psychological. A great deal of what we are discussing here is not even in legislation yet, but the fact that we are intending to open up the economy to the private sector, has helped small business in our attempt to target social spending to those groups who need it. All this is already helping the country a great deal psychologically. It too has already had a good effect on the economy.

In conclusion, last night I was in Montreal and I rode a bus back to Ottawa at midnight. As you know, Mr. Speaker, leaving Montreal, the roads in the city are a bit rough and a bit slippery when it is raining as it was last night. The bus I was on was filled with a very precious cargo including many very fine Canadians, some of which were Conservative Members of Parliament returning from a dinner party in Montreal. The beginning of the trip was a bit slippery and a bit bumpy but within 10 to 15 minutes, we hit the high road and that precious cargo had a wonderful trip back to Ottawa.

The Budget started out with a few rocky months and a few bumps. We did not get knocked off the road but there were a few bumps. That will happen with any journey. The journey we are taking with this Budget has a cargo of immense value for Canada. The journey is now becoming extremely smooth because the people of Canada realize how important it is. Therefore, I commend this Bill to the House and hope that it receives speedy passage.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his fine speech on how to deal with rocky and bumpy issues. I am glad he acknowledged that the Tories have had a bumpy ride so far. However, if he thinks his rough ride is over, I have to tell him that the road ahead is a lot worse than the one he has just been on, particularly since the Tories have such a propensity for bungling.

I do have a few questions to ask the Hon. Member regarding his remarks as they pertained to this Bill. He talked about capital gains and said this would help just about everyone. I would like to know specifically how the welfare recipients of my riding will benefit from that particular measure. They are most interested in this measure and they want to know how the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) thinks that the capital gains tax exemption will help the Government in its quest for social justice.

I would also like to know about the tax on the rich. Again, the Hon. Member said that we need to decrease the deficit. I agree with that in principle. Taxing the rich would go a long way toward achieving that goal. A promise was made, a promise which was broken, by the way, just in case you have not come to that conclusion yet, Mr. Speaker. What the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in the House on this issue has been recorded by Hansard of November 22, 1984 on page 491 so it has to be true if the Prime Minister said it. He said:

> The commitment I made that evening was to the minimum tax and to that sense of fairness that inspires both of us. We will follow through with regard to a minimum tax.

Is that not nice? He went on to say, in response to the Hon. Member who asked the question:

> —I give him the assurance that it will be in the budget.

The Minister of Finance, in the Budget of May 23, said that he would be introducing a minimum personal income tax beginning in 1986 to ensure that high-income Canadians pay their fair share. Why is there a contradiction between what the Prime Minister said would be in the Budget right away and what the Minister of Finance said would not be in the Budget right away but would be delayed for one year? Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell us, which one of the two was stating what the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) has called untrue facts? Perhaps he could tell us, which one of the two was not telling Canadians the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer these questions. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) did not use the occasion of his recent remarks to respond to the questions I raised regarding housing and so on. Still, I am happy to answer his questions.

First, he asked me how welfare recipients will be helped by the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. The answers to that question are legion. There are thousands of ways to answer that question. I think the most vivid answer is this one: last week, three constituents came to my constituency office and told me that they had a business which employed welfare recipients for limited periods of time to deliver things for them from door to door. They said that because of this particular capital gains tax exemption, they are thinking of expanding their business because they can see a future for it. They said that they could therefore hire more welfare recipients and could hire them for longer periods of time. There are thousands of combinations of that example that will occur because of this measure. It is the faith that will occur through stimulating small business in this way that will create the jobs rather than the approach of the Hon. Member.

The second question he asked dealt with the tax on the rich. I am very pleased to answer that question. He knows we are going to bring in a minimum tax early in the new year. Second, he knows that we have brought in a surtax on upper-income earners, something the Liberal Government never did. Liberal Members—members of the Party that is supposed to worry about these matters—did not do anything but express rhetorical concern. We have done something practical by bringing in a surtax on upper-income earners as well as a surtax on large corporations. There will also be a surtax of 5 per cent on federal income tax payable by large corporations from July 1, 1985, to December 31, 1986. These are practical actions of equity and fairness. That is more than simply rhetoric.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin), for some very direct and honest remarks about this Bill which truly is important. Perhaps the Hon. Member could expand somewhat on his remarks regarding the capital gains tax exemption. I do not believe he touched on the benefits to the farm community in particular. As well, I would like to stress the extreme importance that a Bill like this has on the investment climate in Canada.

The Conservative Party is a Party that believes in rewarding men and women who want to start up new businesses, and this type of approach has a great positive ripple effect on the economy. I would ask my colleague to expound on some of the thinking behind the capital gains tax exemption and particularly how it has been welcomed by the farm community.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to that question. The effect on the farm community is immediate because the legislation has been much more immediate than it has been for measures affecting other areas of the economy. The farm community in Canada has also suffered enormously from high interest rates and we have come to terms with those. That together with the capital gains tax provision will be of enormous value to the farm community. Two of the key things that matter to the farm community, interest rates and capital gains, have both been tackled and ameliorated to a significant degree within a year.

London, Ontario, is surrounded by the great farm land of Middlesex County, Oxford County, Perth County and others. Issues affecting the farm community affect the City of London, a part of which I represent. I can see the economy of London itself coming back because of the improvement and because of the optimism which exists in the farm communities that surround the city. Of course, there are problems with some farmers who for one reason or another have debts with which they have difficulty dealing. The effect of the capital gains tax exemption together with lower interest rates will make an enormous difference to the entire agricultural community which surrounds my riding.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is just an oversight on the part of the Member, but a little while ago I asked the Hon. Member why it was that there was a direct contradiction between the promise of the Prime Minister to tax the rich this year and the promise of the Minister of Finance to tax the rich next year. Very briefly and in concise terms can the Hon. Member explain the inconsistency to us? Why was one of the two making statements which are, in fact, not true?

• (1150)

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, of course, there is an answer which should be obvious to the Hon. Member. It is the answer which has been given by the Government. The surtax which has been brought in with respect to upper income Canadians and large corporations performs that role in the interim. It will perform that role until we design a solution to a minimum tax which will work. The fidgeting and thrashing around in trying to approach the problem, as the Liberals did by bringing a Bill which they would wrap up and throw out—

Mr. Boudria: In other words, you do not know the answer.

Mr. Hockin: Just one minute. No one could make an investment in that type of unpredictable legislative environment. We will try to get it right, and that is why we will wait until 1986.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to make a comment on what the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) had to say. What he does not understand and what his Government does not understand is that if there is a surtax on individuals or corporations that earn high incomes their tax rate will be very low because of the abuses and loopholes in the tax system and that they will not pay anything at all. One of the serious weaknesses of the present Government is the fact that under pressure from the New Democratic Party it promised to place a minimum tax on the rich and close the tax loopholes which exist. However, in the year and a half during which the Government has been in office it has not done this. God knows when we will see any legislation in this respect. I fear that it will have no impact at all.

The major message of Bill C-84, the Bill which we are debating today, is that the Government is committed to opening up more tax loopholes and to providing more benefits for corporations and rich individuals as opposed to putting in place a fair tax system which members of the New Democratic Party feel we need in Canada. Canadians from coast to coast have been telling the Leader and members of my Party that this is what we should have.

I wish to speak about the process with respect to the Bill and then talk about the contents of it. The Bill was tabled last week on November 26. That was six months and three days after the tabling of the May 23, 1985 Budget. It is a disgrace that a Government which talked about trying to come up with new procedures in order to reform the budgetary process to make it more understandable and more effective should present us with a 235-page Bill and give us one day in which to debate it. This comes from a Government which talked about making Parliament more effective with respect to complex and extremely important matters such as the tax system.

On top of that the Government has indicated through its House Leader that it expects that the Bill will be made law before we rise at Christmas. Because of other problems which the Government has with respect to the prorogation of Parliament at Christmas, we will have no choice but to sit extra hours or do whatever is necessary in order to deal with the Bill if the pressure is put on in order to pass it. I say to Hon. Members that this is a lot of nonsense.

How can any Member of Parliament be expected to go through an extremely complex and lengthy piece of legislation and be knowledgeable about it in such a short time? The fact of the matter is that in the debate on second reading we talk about the major measures which were contained in the Budget of last May. We will not be able to get down to the nitty-gritty of the Bill. A legislative committee will be established and a handful of members will spend a few days discussing this legislation.

The Government has indicated that it does not fear using closure with respect to subject matters before committees in order to stifle discussion. Thus, the committee will come back before the House with a half-baked response to the Bill. At the behest of the Department of Finance we will end up making this piece of legislation law.

When the Government came to power it said it would change the way things worked in Ottawa. In fact, things are much the way they prevailed before. The Government has left bureaucrats in the Department of Finance to work out what every section of this particular Bill should stipulate. The Government has left Parliament with almost no time at all to comment and participate in any coherent and relevant way with respect to the Bill.

At the same time, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled proposals with respect to improving the Canadian budgetary process. That budgetary paper acknowledges the complexity of the process. It talks about the need for reform. The Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has been considering that very question. If the Government were serious about the question then it would have implemented what it could have done now. We would have seen the Bill some six weeks ago. We would have had a chance to gain some input from tax practitioners and from organizations such as the National Council on Welfare, the National Anti-Poverty Organization and others concerned with tax fairness. We have not seen a bit of that. All these groups are now being told that they have to run like hell if they want to have any input at all in terms of the legislative committee when it finally sits down to look at this measure.

I wish to recall for Members of the House the way in which we have dealt with the Budget up until this point in time. The initial debate involved the deindexation of pensions. I am proud to say that because of the pressure of millions of elderly and not so elderly Canadians, and because of the work of my Party, and to some extent the work of the other opposition Party, we succeeded in making the Government withdraw that extremely objectionable measure late in June. This was a measure which would have taken spending power away from senior citizens.

There are a great many other objectionable features in the Budget as well. Most of these are contained in the Bill which is before us. I wish to remind Members of the House, particularly those who sit on the Government side, that crow as they may about what they see as an improvement in the economic situation since September of 1984, it is a fact that we still have 1.3 million unemployed Canadians. It is a fact that our unemployment rate is 10.3 per cent. It is a fact that part-time work continues to increase and that many part-time workers are working part-time because no full-time work is available even though they would like to be working full-time.

It is a fact that the Macdonald Commission and the Government are trying to con Canadians into believing that 6 per cent or 7 per cent is the lowest level of unemployment which can conceivably be reached in Canada. It is a fact that the Government forecasts that unemployment will be down to only around the 8 per cent level by 1990. This means that one million Canadians will continue to be unemployed. I think it is outrageous that we should have a Government which is prepared to tolerate on an ongoing basis one million or more unemployed Canadians.

It is a fact that there is an increasing number of Canadians who, quite simply, are discouraged and do not even figure on the unemployment rolls. It is a fact and a scandal that tens if not hundreds of thousands of native Canadians living on reserves are not even counted on the unemployment rolls because it is said that they are not living in an area where jobs are available and, therefore, are not realistically looking for work.

It is a fact that Canadians are losing $40 billion to $50 billion in GNP annually because of the intolerably high level of unemployment which we have in the country. Members of my Party and I say that if we are really serious about bringing down the deficit and about ensuring a decent life for Canadians we would make unemployment the number one priority. That is obviously not the case when one considers Bill C-84 and the actions of the Government.

How can we get Canadians back to work? First, there is fiscal policy, monetary policy and industrial policy to be considered. Interests rates have been reduced because of what has taken place as a result of developments in the United States. This is the reason for housing starts being up from what they were before. It is the reason for the improvement we have seen in terms of investment. It is quite simply a fact that with interest rates down peole who rejected investments or house purchases a few months ago are now being able to consider the matter. The fact is that our interest rates are running at 2 per cent or 3 per cent ahead of those in the United States. The fact is that real interest rates in our country are still at the level of 3 per cent or more. They are far higher than they should be and no action has been taken by the Government to do anything about it.

This past weekend I attended a conference in Ottawa on full employment. At this conference an economist, Michael McCracken, estimated that we could have an increase in employment of 500,000. He suggested that we could bring down the unemployment rate by 1 per cent, 2 per cent or more if we were to reduce interest rates by 200 basis points. He said that that would be very clearly conceivable and possible.

I do not want to speak about industrial policy because of the amount of time available. However, with respect to fiscal policy the Government had a choice. It could have placed money into job-creating investments, but it has not done so. The Government could have ensured that fiscal and tax policy could be more efficient in terms of creating jobs but, instead, it has gone in the opposite direction. This is exactly what we see in Bill C-84.

I find it almost laughable when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) talks about improving the efficiency and effectiveness of Government by cutting waste. In this respect does she consider the payment to depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the removal of obstacles to economic growth? A great many of these obstacles for ordinary Canadians is the fact that quite simply there are no jobs available. In this respect she also says that we should make better use of scarce and precious resources. Is that why the Government gave a huge tax hand-out to the Reichmann family for the buy-out of Gulf? Is that why the Government has been anxious to give hand-outs to Dome Petroleum? One has to ask that kind of question.

• (1200)

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) talked about how the Government is building on the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice which is the essence and character of our Canadian people. That is good rhetoric and I congratulate the speech writers in the service of the Minister of State for Finance. However, they do not realize, as she does not, that when we take indexation away from the family allowance and when other measures are put in place which affect and hurt ordinary Canadians, we are surely not putting compassion and tolerance into our tax system. In fact, we are taking those things away.

If the Government had a real sense of commitment to fairness, we would have the minimum tax proposals in force right now. We would have a system which, instead of giving more to the rich, would undo some of the unnecessary and unreasonable concessions which came in in the 1982 Budget under the Liberals and which have been perpetuated under the present Government.

I would point out that the increases in the RRSP deduction proposed in this Bill are virtually certain to reduce aggregate demand in comparison with the situation in which the same tax dollars were used to either reduce income tax or to raise Government spending. Quite simply, the RRSP proposals are inefficient in fiscal terms. We save far more than do the Americans as a proportion of our Gross National Product. We save so much that in fact we take job creating demand away from the economy. That is inefficient use of fiscal policy. It means that rather than helping people get back into jobs, the Government is hindering them.

Through the Western Accord, the Government is given lower tax revenues mainly from the production of old oil. There is no direct incentive to increase exploration by making new oil production more profitable. The bang for the buck, in fiscal terms, from that multi-billion dollar concession to the western oil companies would have been very much larger had the same number of dollars been spent in a way which increased the profitability of new oil production. In other words, this is a fiscal incentive which is not going to help directly to create jobs in Alberta and elsewhere in western Canada. We have to ask what would happen if we were to take $1 billion and, rather than giving it to the depositors—mainly foreign banks and large corporations—in those insolvent western banks we had used that money to fund municipal enterprise corporations or to fund buy outs of some foreign corporations which are seeking to close down here in Canada. What I suggest would happen would be far more job creation.

What about the abolition of the capital gains tax? Hon. Members of the Government are saying what a wonderful thing this is, despite evidence to the contrary from every credible economist in the country. This is total "pie in the sky" in terms of a useful and efficient fiscal incentive for the creation of jobs or for the stimulation of job creating investment. There will be some improvement and some incentive for small businesses as a part of this Bill, and some help for farmers. Those parts of the Bill are welcome. However, we are only talking about perhaps 10 per cent or 20 per cent of the total incentive. We are talking of $1 billion to be added to the deficit by 1990 on an annual basis because of this half million dollar tax concession on capital gains. And there is no guarantee that those capital gains will even be earned in Canada. It could be done, as my colleagues have said, in Texas or in the fine art market at Sotheby's. From almost everywhere in the world the profits can come back to Canada and be available tax free. No one has said it specifically, but through judicious tax planning, a couple who, for example, have investments abroad which yield them $1 million in capital gains will be allowed to keep the complete profit without paying any tax.

On behalf of my constituents, many of whom are living in poverty, I regret to say, within 10 or 15 minutes' walk of this Parliament Building, I say that situation is intolerable. It is intolerable that we are giving $1 million tax free to some people while at the same time our tax system takes $300 or $400 per annum from families earning less than $10,000 a year, and will continue to do so. In fact, in certain cases, we are going to tax them more heavily than before.

The National Council on Welfare has calculated the impact of the Budget on families. The tax concessions and changes which are in Bill C-84 will mean that by 1990, in five years, a family with one wage earner and two kids who earns $15,000, will wind up $2,400 worse off because of the changes in income tax and the child tax credit under this Government. A family earning $35,000 will be $4,200 a year worse off. But is a family with one wage earner and two kids, earning $80,000, going to pay more? Is that going to be the impact? No. Because of the concessions on capital gains in particular, that family will actually be $5,662 better off after five years than if the existing tax system had prevailed.

We have an inequitable tax system right now. It is a tax system which, rather than being weighted to people's ability to pay, is too easy on people in the upper income brackets and too harsh on people in the low income brackets. The Conservatives, who I see are sitting very quietly right now, are going to make that worse because of this particular Bill.

I travelled across the country with our task force on jobs last year. We went to places like Chicoutimi and Quebec City. We went into every corner of Canada. The message we received had a real impact on our policy. We learned that there is a tremendous amount of initiative, ideas and ability among ordinary Canadians, and that is backed by municipal and enterprise funds, by industrial commissioners who are looking for new ways of creating jobs in different communities, by trade unions, by small businesses, by people who are setting up co-ops, and by individuals who want to buy out foreign control firms, which are not being particularly enterprising here. The message we received was: "For God's sake, let's take advantage of that kind of entrepreneurship, that kind of initiative, rather than continuing to discourage it". We will not take advantage of this entrepreneurship by simply putting money into the pockets of people earning $50,000 and more a year, most of whom live in Toronto, Vancouver, in southern Ontario, perhaps a few in Montreal and some in Alberta. We will not do it in that way. I would like to see a buy-out fund whereby a group of Canadians can take over an American firm which is threatening to pull out of Canada because of free trade which the Tories will have negotiated within one year or two years' time with the United States. Canadians should be able to get some access to financial resources in order to take over a particular company and show what Canadians can do with companies which often are badly managed.

I would like to see an end to the kind of abuses which are going on. People who are wealthy and powerful are well looked after and people who are poor have little done for them.

Last weekend I came back from a few days away and I felt compelled—I am not quite sure why—to read that terrible article by Conrad Black in The Globe and Mail's Report on Business magazine. Conrad Black is a parasytic excrescence on the hind of capitalism here in Canada as far as I am concerned. He drives around in stretch limousines and lives on expense account lunches. My constituents and I are paying for that, and there he was slamming Canadians for not having the will and drive to work. I want to say to all of those people in that corporate elite who are benefiting from Bill C-84 and from the Budget, that ordinary Canadians want to work. A million and more of them want to get back on the job. They deplore the fact that the Government is not making the cration of employment a real priority. These ordinary Canadians have intiative and ideas. They have all kinds of entrepreneurship. They want to be given a chance in terms of managing and running the enterprises in which they are involved rather than seeing those enterprises run into the ground by the managers who are responsible right now.

Conrad Black managed the Dominion Stores into the ground when six years ago it was the pre-eminent retailer in the grocery business in Canada. He just about did the same thing to Massey-Ferguson before he bailed out. He has done that to Standard Broadcasting and is about to do that to the Daily Telegraph in England. We do not need preaching from people like that. What we need is to bring together the initiative, the ideas and excitement, not just of the small entrepreneurial or managerial class, and not just of the small expense account class, but of every single Canadian.

The $1 billion a year which is going into capital gains exemptions under this particular Bill, most of which will go to people earning $50,000 a year or more, should in fact be made available to ordinary Canadians in many ways. One of the few things in this particular Bill which I can applaud is that there is incentive for the venture funds set up by trade unions. That is a good thing, but it is swamped by the objectionable features of Bill C-84. I think that we should borrow and develop ideas from other countries by which people earning $10,000 or $20,000 a year can start to get themselves into co-operative and can perhaps take over sections of the business in which they work which their parent corporation wants to ge rid of.

These are the kinds of things which our task force on jobs began to look at and which we would like to have implemented for the creation of a fair tax system which does not just give to the rich. We need a tax system, an enterprise system, and a Government system that seeks to tap the talents and abilities of every Canadian. Those are the reasons for which I personally cannot support Bill C-84 and for which I deplore the way in which the Government is trying to ram this Bill through Parliament.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, in that long oration there was a nugget of news for me. Does the New Democratic Party now stand for all-out criticism of RRSPs on the basis that they are an inefficient use of capital? I ask this because the Canada Pension Plan is going to have great trouble being properly funded in the next ten years. About one-third of the workforce is being looked after by corporate pension plans and so on. RRSPs are growing in importance. Is the Hon. Member against RRSPs? If so, what would he put in their place?

Also, does the Hon. Member know something I do not know? I thought that Conrad Black was at least a millionaire. It seems to me that the $.5 million capital gains exemption would not be of much use to him as he has already passed that finish line.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a couple with one income of $80,000 and two kids is going to get an extra $1,000 in 1986, thanks to the increase in contribution limits on RRSPs. Frankly, I think the incentives for increased savings which are entailed in the very substantial increases in the RRSP limits, which will in fact be of use only to people earning high incomes, do not make a heck of a lot of sense when we have a lesser demand. If we had more demand we would have more jobs in our economy right now.

For most Canadians RRSPs within the existing limits are what they can afford to put aside. You may want to index that to allow it to move gradually to take account of changes in money values. I have no particular problem with that. However, the very sharp increase which is proposed here, which creates a very substantial new tax shelter through the use of RRSPs, is something that I simply do not believe should have high priority.

I note that the Government announced last week that it is delaying by a year changes in the pension system. The Hon. Member asks whether there are not problems with the pension system. Those problems have existed for 15 years, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives in Ontario, whom the Hon. Member presumably supports, quite systematically delayed action in that particular area which would have benefited ordinary working people. If we wanted to make one specific change in the pension system which would benefit ordinary working people, it would be to reduce to a couple of years the period for vesting to ensure that people in their twenties and thirties can maintain the credits from pensions to which they had contributed rather than having to wait until they reach the age of 45 or, in some cases, never get any benefit at all. Unfortunately, there has been no drive to do that, either by the previous Liberal Government or the new Government which could have done it in the year and a half that it has been in power.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the Hon. Member who just made a very elaborate speech about unemployment and high interest rates and the rest—I see he agrees—and I am sure he was speaking straight from the heart.

However, I would like to know way the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party is going to vote against Bill C-84, since it seems to provide answers to our current problems. And on this memorable day for Quebec, I would like to know what he and his party, and especially his little brother in Quebec, have to say about the way they would deal with these problems, because there must be many Quebecers who are waiting for their answer today, before casting their vote.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments, and I can inform him right away that the capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000, or even $1 million in the case of a couple, will do nothing for many regions in Quebec where there are no opportunities for earning that much money, except for those who are already well off.

Large regions with many people who are quite poor are looking for ways to create jobs. I was particularly struck by the situation in the Saguenay-Chicoutimi-Lac-Saint-Jean area, where industrial commissioners and people from the unions, all kinds of people, appeared before our task force on unemployment and jobs and told us that they were looking for ways to use the entrepreneurial spirit that exists in these regions, but it was clear that the capital gains tax exemption would not be very useful in that situation.

Our main reason for objecting to Bill C-84 is that it is ineffective and unfair in terms of its tax measures. Instead of levying taxes on the rich, the Government has decided to add a capital gains tax exemption, which means that since most capital gains are acquired by people earning more than $50,000 per year—average Quebecers, those who are voting today, are going to pay for benefits for the wealthy. And that is something we find totally unacceptable.

[English]

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Member did not intentionally mislead the House, but he asked why, if the Government were serious about pension reform, it did not do something such as bring in a two-year vesting provision. I wonder whether he has actually taken time to read the Budget, because the two-year vesting provision is in it. Pension reform takes up one-sixth of the Budget papers by count. There is also complete provision for portability and for equal benefits for men and women. It is probably the major section of the Budget. When he asks why the Government has not brought this in, I wonder whether he has taken the time to read the material because it is there.

He asks why we have not yet tabled anything in the House. As a former provincial representative I am sure that he recognizes the importance of harmonizing the provincial and federal statutes with respect to pensions benefit standards. If he had taken the time to read the papers he would realize that there have been meetings going on through August and September with the provinces to ensure that the legislation which is to be brought into the House this month by the federal Government will be in harmony with that which is likely to be brought into the provincial legislatures. When he suggests that nothing is being done, I suggest that he plainly does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I remarked on the fact that while RRSP limits have been increased in 1986 mainly for people who are self-employed or in upper income brackets, nothing is to be done about pensions until 1987, according to the news of the past few weeks. In the past 16 months the Government could have decided that due to the need to harmonize in a number of other areas it could not do everything on pensions. However, under those circumstances I am suggesting that promises and White Papers are not enough. Nothing has been done to benefit a 28-year-old with a couple of kids who is concerned about whether his or her job is going to survive and who would like to see results from contributions to a corporate pension plan should they move, either for career purposes or because their firm is about to fold.

The Government could have said that it is going to bring in two-year vesting now and if the provinces do not follow along that is too bad. That is the approach the Government of Manitoba took. I think that we needed that kind of leadership from a Government somewhere in order to break the impasse. The pension industry and large corporations, in many cases, have quite adamantly resisted for 15 years any meaningful action on the pension front. I speak from an historical basis because I was a provincial Member in the Ontario Legislature for 13 years. White Paper was followed by task force, which was followed by Royal commission, as the Member knows, but no action was taken. Of course, action could have been taken before now. It might not have been perfect or ideal, but at least it could have addressed the question of ensuring that the equity in pension funds being built up by ordinary Canadians, many of whom have no other form of retirement savings apart from the Canada Pension Plan, would not be lost to them if they lost a job because of recession or because of change in their position.

● (1220)

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. While I do not agree with the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) very often, I do agree that this is a very thick Bill. It consists of 235 pages.

This is a major piece of legislation and, as the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) says, it is very complex. I am not a financial expert or a tax lawyer and when I was asked on Friday to speak to this Bill I was not sure what I would say in 20 minutes. It takes longer than that simply to read the first few chapters. It would certainly take days and weeks to understand it thoroughly.

Fortunately, this Bill will go to committee soon where we will have an opportunity to review it extensively with expert witnesses to see what it really means to the average Canadian. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said last week during debate that this Bill requires an explanation paper to help us understand what the "legalese, gobbledegook" means. He is correct that the Bill is somewhat confusing, so let me talk about some of the generalities of the Bill before us this morning.

Bill C-84 is one of a series of Bills that provide legislative authority for tax and other measures announced in the May, 1985 Budget. This particular Bill deals with most of the Budget income tax measures, some of which I will review now.

The capital gains tax exemption measure has caused considerable controversy. It is a lifetime personal capital gains exemption of up to $500,000 that will be phased in over the next six years, beginning with a $20,000 exemption in 1985. However, the full exemption will take effect immediately for qualifying farm properties. We are telling farmers that those who have worked a lifetime working the land and putting their future into the farm will be allowed to keep that investment when it is sold. The same incentive applies to small businesses that have been built up over the years. The total amount of $500,000 is actually well above expectations. During the spring the rumour was that the exemption would be $100,000 or $200,000, and the announcement of a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption was a surprise to most people.

Whoever said that Tory times are tough times is dead wrong. In fact, this is a very generous tax measure that is intended to trigger a major change in the attitude of Canadians towards savings and investment. I admit that this is somewhat of a risk and we are banking on this new measure to spur investment interest in the dynamic small and medium-sized businesses because we all know that this is where the real jobs are created in this country.

Another measure in the Bill deals with labour-sponsored venture capital. Investors in labour-sponsored venture capital funds will be provided with a federal tax credit of up to 20 per cent of the share purchase price. This credit will be conditional on the availability of a provincial credit of at least 20 per cent in the investor's province. The combined federal-provincial credits will not exceed 40 per cent. This is just another step toward federal-provincial co-operation, creating incentives to create jobs. This particular labour-sponsored venture capital and the proposed federal tax credit is to encourage workers to invest in the economy in a form that will directly benefit the labour force through the injection of capital into the small businesses that are responsible for the jobs in the various communities.

Another feature of the Bill deals with pension and RRSP investment in small businesses. Some measures in Bill C-84 will assist small businesses to obtain equity financing for the first time from registered retirement savings plans, deferred profit-sharing plans, registered retirement income funds and others. These pension funds will be allowed to establish special tax-exempt small business investment corporations. The ability of pension funds to invest in small business investment limited partnerships will be expanded.

Another part of the Bill deals with housing loans. Employees who relocate to maintain their employment or begin a new job—goodness knows that there are lots of new jobs in this country—will not be taxed on certain subsidized housing loans. Canadians have been reluctant to accept promotions and move to new parts of the country because of the various aspects of uprooting one's home and moving to a new neighbourhood. We are giving greater incentive to do this and, according to this provision, the maximum tax-free subsidy will be equivalent to the benefit on a $25,000 interest-free loan and will apply to the first five years of the loan.

We are not giving the store away; we are merely creating an additional incentive for those who are asked to move to a new job in order to advance their career.

The Bill also deals with research and development. Tax credits earned on the first $2 million of the current R and D expenditures will be fully refundable compared to the 40 per cent at present. This will encourage small and medium-sized businesses to risk research and development and come up with new ideas in order to continue to make Canadian goods and services more competitive in the international market.

There is another part of the Bill which deals with disabled people. The eligibility for the $2,590 disability deduction is expanded to include all severely disabled persons. The Income Tax Act currently allows this special deduction to be claimed by disabled persons, but under the present rules only those persons who are blind or confined to a bed or wheelchair qualify for this deduction. The Budget proposes to broaden the definition of disability in the tax legislation so as to include the many other severely disabled conditions which do not result in confinement to a bed or wheelchair. As a result of this new measure in the Budget, it is expected that approximately 185,000 Canadians will be eligible for the deduction under this new definition, compared with the 65,000 under the present definition.

Another part of the Bill deals with artists. The visual artists will be permitted to write off costs involved in creating a work of art in the year that the expenses are incurred. At present, they must wait until the work is sold. Rules for charitable donations from artists' inventories are made more flexible.

The question of income splitting was also mentioned this morning. This is another component of Bill C-84. The rules pertaining to income splitting among family members are tightened in order to prevent tax avoidance through the use of low interest loans to family members. How can anyone say that this is unfair or inequitable? In fact, we are closing another Liberal loophole.

Bill C-84 looks at other questions dealing with the surtax on upper income earners. I repeat, there will be a surtax on upper income earners for the 18 month period beginning on July 1, 1985, of 5 per cent on federal basic tax between $6,000 and $10,000, and 10 per cent on federal basic tax in excess of $15,000. This Bill provides for a surtax of 5 per cent on federal income tax payable by large corporations, which will be in place from July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986.

There is capital tax on larger financial institutions. For the two years commencing January 1, 1986, larger financial institutions will be subject to an annual tax of 1 per cent of capital employed in Canada in excess of $200 million. How can any Party in the House, particularly the New Democratic Party, say that we are not going to tax large corporations?

Another part of the Bill deals with the question of home ownership savings plans. RHOSPs, as they are called, will no longer qualify for preferential tax treatment, effective May 23, 1985. Funds may be withdrawn on a tax-free basis at any time after May 22, 1985. Interest income earned after January 1, 1986, on existing home ownership savings plan accounts will now be taxable. The savings rate has been just too high, and RHOSP is one of the reasons for that. We are trying to unlock slowly a total amount of $2 billion, which has been accumulated in RHOSPs since 1974 when I believe they were first introduced. The availability of these funds now on a tax-free basis, coupled with other incentives in the Budget, represent a large pool of funds which can be used to support entrepreneurial job-creating investments and to purchase many consumer goods in Canada.

These are some of the tax components which are now being affected by Bill C-84. However, what does all this really mean? As the Minister of State for Finance said when she discussed the Bill last week in the House, it represents a substantial and integral component of the Government's program to secure durable economic renewal for all Canadians.

There are certainly some controversial parts of Bill C-84. I think there are controversial parts in any Bill presented in the House. I should like to refer to statistical record to keep the particular Bill and the tax measures in their over-all context in light of the tremendous successes which we have had to date. The Speech from the Throne last fall talked about three main themes—national reconciliation, economic renewal and renewed internationalism. In the area of national reconciliation, let us look at what has happened in Canada in the last 14 months. We inherited a country with regions that were totally forgotten in the national process of decision-making. We have come up with an energy accord in Newfoundland and the Western Accord. The National Energy Program impaired investment in the energy sector in western Canada. In 1981, the well-known New York firm of Salomon Brothers indicated that it was not worth reporting on the Canadian oil and gas sector because of the National Energy Program. Its August, 1985 release indicated that the reinvestment potential in the Canadian oil and gas industry would double over the next four years as a result of the policies of the new Government. We predict that investment this year in the energy sector in western Canada will increase by $2 billion over 1984. That will create about 10,000 new jobs in western Canada. That is keeping our promise of jobs, jobs and more jobs.

Also in the area of national reconciliation, natural gas prices have been affected. Recent Ottawa Gas advertisements in the newspaper, particularly the one of last week, have indicated: "The Government is on your side", because consumer prices for natural gas are lowering. Quebec has dropped separation as a fundamental option in its particular policies. The opportunity for us to bring Quebec into the constitutional accord is tremendous. We have westerners back at the cabinet table for the first time in 20 years. We have signed historic numbers of ERDA agreements in mining, tourism, forestry, science and technology. We finally have peace with our provinces. We have been consulting with the provinces. We have had dozens and dozens of meetings with our provincial counterparts. As a result, there has been the signing of very successful economic agreements.

In the area of economic renewal, the numbers speak for themselves. This is good news which opposition Members do not seem to like to hear. In fact, the media does not seem to like to talk about it enough. We have had successes in the area of creating more jobs. We are always criticized for either overspending or underspending, not enough or too much. We have had the slowest growth in government spending of the last 17 years. Apart from debt financing, spending this year will rise by only 2 per cent. The deficit has decreased for the first time in 13 years. According to recent information from Statistics Canada, there has been a $500 million reduction in the deficit. While I am on that subject, let me integrate something from the Business Council on National Issues. It conducted a press conference in Ottawa in October, 1985. Mr. Frazee, the Chairman of the Business Council on National Issues—he is also the Chairman and CEO of the Royal Bank of Canada—said the following:

> The immediate challenge facing the federal Government and all Canadians . . . is to gradually bring a halt to the rising ratio of our collective indebtedness in relation to our Gross National Product. The current federal Government, which inherited a serious fiscal situation, has taken a number of important initiatives to restrain expenditure growth and tackle the deficit. However, the problem is so serious that more must be done.

The Business Council produced a very important paper; I recommend it to all Hon. Members of the House. I should like to refer to the following reference in its paper:

> More than half of all income taxes in 1981 were paid by individuals with taxable incomes of less than $30,000. Almost one quarter of all income taxes in 1981 were paid by those with taxable incomes of less than $20,000. Middle and working-class Canadians are therefore largely paying for the interest on our debt. Accordingly, it can be expected that this group will actually be hurt the most by continuing deficits and rising debt charges.

That is why the Council is bringing us the important message that we have to live more within our means.

The list of achievements goes on and on. The replacement of FIRA has encouraged tremendous amounts of investment in Ontario. We all know the economic indicators dealing with bank rates. The bank rate is down three basis points, to the lowest level in seven years. A young couple buying a home today with a mortgage of $50,000 will pay $8,000 less over a five-year term and save $125 on each monthly payment. As the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin) mentioned, housing starts are up. Building permits are up 37 per cent in the last year. Automobile sales, the heart of Ontario industry, are up 27 per cent over last year. Retail sales were up 13 per cent and 14 per cent in August and September. That shows a confidence on the part of Canadians in what the Government is doing to stimulate economic renewal.

On the international front, we have renewed our relations with the United States. We have strengthened our communication and co-operation with our largest trading partner. We have looked at increasing our commitments to NATO and Europe. We are sending troops to the Sinai, and Canada is speaking out more and more at the United Nations. We are searching for a very durable peace.

We should continue to remind ourselves of all the achievements integrated into the over-all direction of Bill C-84. Canada is strengthening itself month by month. Business confidence is up. Consumer confidence is up. Retailers are expecting to do a booming business this Christmas, for the first time in many years. The need is not for the Government to intervene more directly in the economy, but to restore a climate conducive to confidence, investment and growth. That is exactly what we are doing.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) spoke last week in the debate on this Bill about the retreat we made on the old age security question. Yes, we retreated. We admitted that it was wrong. We listened to the grey power. However, we should remember the MacEachen Budget of 1981. There was retreat after retreat after retreat; dozens of them. We have only moved on one issue because we know the direction which we are giving to the country is a very strong, healthy and positive one. All economic indicators demonstrate that we are on the right course to economic recovery.

Also the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount spoke about the tax credits being increased for investment in Cape Breton from 50 per cent to 60 per cent. He as not sure what kind of an impact that might have or was having. Let me refer quickly to some of the results to date. The Superior Sausage Company Limited is to build and expand meat facilities in Cape Breton. Another one speaks of a vitamin supplement to be manufactured in Cape Breton. Another announcement concerns a drapery firm receiving federal assistance to invest in Glace Bay. Another one concerns a Cape Breton company and expansion of export markets for Canadian deer hide with assistance from the federal Government. There has been a considerable and immediate reaction to investing more and more in that particular part of Canada.

Let me conclude by touching on a comment made recently by the Conference Board of Canada, specifically on November 29, when it said that business leaders think they will do better in the next six months. That shows confidence and without confidence, Canadians will send their money elsewhere. As well, I recommend to all Members of the House an article in the winter 1985-86 edition of the Financial Post magazine which talks about the outlook for 1986. If you think I am biased in my political judgment, you should read that article and the good news it has for the whole nation. There is also an article here that talks about paddling our own canoe. That is what we are starting to do in the economic and the nationalistic sense by creating more and more lasting jobs for the people of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before I get to the main purpose of my intervention in this debate, I want to deal with a couple of questions. These have already been dealt with and I cannot say I am an expert on some of these subjects. I do not think anyone is really an expert on some of these subjects. However, I have a couple of comments.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) talked about holders of retirement funds such as RRSPs being allowed to invest up to 50 per cent of the fund in shares of Canadian-controlled corporations. There is one restriction involving a limit of 10 per cent of the shares in any one company. Given that, in certain cases, if someone were to invest less than $50,000 and all the payments required under the regulations, he would find, I estimate, the measure to be prohibitively expensive.

As well, the legislation requires a shareholder's agreement covering all shareholders. As you know, in these small companies that the Minister was talking about, there are several shareholders' agreements covering many different shareholders. Therefore, one would have to conclude that certain investments, certainly those under the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption, will not be covered under the Act.

The other main point was that the Minister claimed he was going to shut the door on income splitting. That is a situation where you have a high-income person with a low-income spouse. He or she loans the low-income spouse money and they would then pay less tax. I note that the legislation permits the sale of assets or a share of assets to a spouse at market value. In other words, you could have a high-income spouse who purchases from a low-income spouse a portion or all of a house, thereby getting around the regulations.

As to the capital gains exemption itself, I think everyone would agree that it is too broad. What does it profit small business if you are allowed tax free gains from the sale of fur coats, jewellry, summer cottages or a condominium in Florida? Certainly that is not acceptable. The legislation also draws a line between dividends and capital gains. A corporation could now look for ways of withdrawing excess capital so that it is not taxed at the normal rate of 25 per cent on dividends. It would declare it as capital gains, and that would eliminate a very fundamental difference between the way dividend income and capital gains are treated. I think that is a dangerous precedent. All corporations will now be looking at ways to withdraw funds and have them treated as tax-free capital gains.

All of this will certainly complicate matters of force Revenue Canada to look at this from year to year to determine how it is being used, and this will create more paper work. There is a provincial complication as well. Quebec says it will go along with the exemption for a year, but Ontario says it will continue to collect the capital gains tax.

My final point is that if the Government goes ahead with a minimum tax and applies that to capital gains, one will cancel out the other. If it is not applied, then the minimum tax becomes a joke. On the other hand, surely it is nonesense, plain stupidity, to have a minimum tax apply to capital gains if they are tax exempt.

These are minor points although they certainly have not been raised in this Chamber. However, the main point I want to make concerns the part of this Bill dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Act. Page 214 of this Bill deals with Part V of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971. There are pages and pages of amendments. What is the purpose of this particular part of the Bill? To find that out all we have to do is to look at the first clause. Clause 134 reads:

Section 67 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

It talks about the definitions of authorized person, documents, dwelling house, judge, and then about the definition of the Minister. As you look over these amendments you see that certain sections of the Act are modified and changed, sections dealing with seizure of documents, persons authorized to seize documents and enter premises. The point is that the emphasis should not be on the documents that the Government is able to procure through seizure and it should not be on the documents the Government is able to seize in order to find out if someone owes money to the federal Government under the auspices of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). The emphasis of the Government should be on the documents that are available to the poor man or woman who is drawing unemployment insurance and gets into trouble under this Act. That is the problem with these particular sections of the Income Tax Act. The reason it is a problem is very simple.

If one looks at the access to records and documents by the federal Government in a dispute with the Minister of National Revenue under the Unemployment Insurance Act as outlined in the Bill before us today, one begins to discover that evidence that is presented to the judge as defined in this Act is not lacking from the point of view of the Department or the Minister of National Revenue versus the appellant. It is lacking from the point of view of the appellant versus the Minister of National Revenue.

Someone who is drawing unemployment insurance today dare not go to work. He should not lift a finger, he should not move away from the phone and he should not leave his house because if he does, he is going to be nailed. That is a fact. When looking at the appeals and what emanates from these particular clauses in the Income Tax Act which are under discussion as well as the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, one can see why this is especially so today.

If a fellow were drawing unemployment insurance benefits and the Unemployment Insurance Commission said that he was working on the side and therefore did not qualify for unemployment insurance a year later, then modified sections of this Act would give the Department the right to seize papers and documents from any employer. We are dealing with both an Act and the regulations. These cases go before umpires, judges or boards of referees, and what is under dispute is the Act. However, the regulations might show that such records are not necessary.

For example, it is in the regulations that someone drawing unemployment insurance need not report 25 per cent of his income. If he is discovered to have been collecting an income while drawing unemployment insurance benefits, he is automatically cut off and has to prove before a board of referees and eventually before a judge that that was not his principal source of income or that it could not have been his principal source of income.

There are many examples today of people who are laid off from Public Service jobs. Perhaps a plumber with the Department of Transport gets laid off because of cuts which are taking place in every Government Department and tries to go out on his own. He keeps a record of his income and presents that to the board of referees and eventually to a judge, and this is done under this section which is one of the sections that is dealt with by this Bill. That person has already signed an affidavit. What would be the purpose then of allowing someone under the auspices of the Minister of National Revenue to enter upon that person's premises in order to steal whatever can be stolen to develop a case against him? Would it not be better if the Government of Canada were to turn around and say to that particular man: "Look, we encourage you to go out and work. Just report your earnings. Just tell us the name of your employer and we will leave it at that". No, that is not the case.

The second reason why records do not mean anything when dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Act is that one can draw incorrect conclusions from the records of employment and moneys owed which the Act speaks about. We have all experienced many such cases. I heard of a case the other day of a gentleman who, according to the records that the Government would be able to seize, is guilty of an offence. However, according to the regulations, he could defend his actions before a judge. The problem is that he will lose his unemployment insurance benefits until the cumbersome system gets around to the Minister of National Revenue who controls the Unemployment Insurance Act. What a stupid thing that is. If we are going to change something, we should change that. We should put the Unemployment Insurance Act under the auspices of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and not under the auspices of the Minister of National Revenue through a Bill like this.

If the Government were to acquire the records of every single fisherman in Newfoundland who sold fish to a fish plant, probably everyone who lives on islands around the coastline would be disqualified from unemployment insurance benefits. Why is this so? It is because the Act and the Unemployment Insurance Commission indicate that a fisherman gets a stamp in the week the shipment is made. They would all be disqualified. Hundreds of such cases are now being appealed in Newfoundland.

The fact of the matter is that if the collector-boat did not come in in one particular week and a fisherman put his fish on ice and sold it the following week, the regulations state that he could average that earning out. However, the Department of National Revenue does not do that. The Unemployment Insurance Commission would know the difference but not the Department of National Revenue. The tax experts in the Department of National Revenue who determine whether someone is eligible under this Act that is being amended here today would not know the difference.

The Department has investigators who know the Act down pat. They will find out that a particular fisherman shipped fish on a Monday, and that means that only one stamp will be issued for that week. That is all the investigators see on the records that can be seized. The fisherman now has only one stamp. However, under appeal, he can claim two stamps. After all, he did receive two stamps, as did the buyer. It is nonsense for us to be passing legislation like this which only makes it more convenient for the Government of Canada.

As I see it from reading this very complex Bill, we are now going to be facilitating the seizure of records. We in Newfoundland have had a lot of experience with the seizure of records. The Department of National Revenue and the Unemployment Insurance Commission are hitting particular areas. They bring in the RCMP and it looks like some raid on a coastal community during the Vietnam war. Helicopters come in to seize the records of a particular employer and to search the homes of employees. Sometimes, the seizure of the records themselves and the law as it appears in the Act are contradicted by the regulations. It is the poor unemployment insurance benefits recipient and eventual appellant who suffers.

What do we see in this Bill? This Bill makes changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to facilitate the Government's budget measures. Not only that, it goes a little bit further, and that has not been explained by the Government in its introduction of this Bill to the House. Just a moment ago, I picked up this document and started reading through it. I was wondering what it had to do with the budget measures and the Ways and Means motions. The fact is that some of these clauses are simply being slipped in for the Government's convenience.

We warned the Government of Canada—and I suppose we could have warned any Government—that over the years or in the future when we start fooling around with the Unemployment Insurance Act and when we start to solidify the case of the Minister of National Revenue against someone drawing unemployment insurance benefits, we will be doing a disservice to the people of Canada, and particularly to the primary producers. I may have something more to say about this this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRADE

ELIMINATION OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, yesterday marked the end of the shoe quotas for all intents and purposes. I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the blatant hypocrisy of the Conservative Government of Canada when, on June 15, 1982, seven prominent Conservative Members of Parliament were here on Parliament Hill protesting with the shoe workers. They were the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek), the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle), and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), as well as three other Members of Parliament.

On May 3, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the then Leader of the Official Opposition, said that a Conservative Government would not abolish import quotas in the footwear and textile industries. He added further that the policy on quotas would remain the same and that he was not in favour of free trade in these types of industries. He also said that he did not intend to bow to pressures which could be exercised by the Common Market or the United States to bring down the quotas on footwear and textile products.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion himself is quoted as having said on August 1, 1985—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

THE LATE VALINDA AND ANDREW LEONARD

BURIAL SERVICE FOR MOTHER AND CHILD KILLED IN HIJACKED EGYPTIAN AIRLINER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, with the Right Hon. Joe Clark, the Hon. Connie Osterman, MLA, Mayor John Richter and hundreds of Canadians from near and far, in 22 degree below zero weather, I attended the funeral of Valinda, beloved wife of Edward Leonard and daughter of Harvey and Leah Uffelman, and her young son Andrew, who were killed by terrorists in Malta. The ecumenical service in St. Mary's Catholic Church was predicated on the sure and certain hope of the resurrection.

As the casket was brought into the cathedral, with a beautiful wreath of fresh flowers in the centre, and a coloured photo of Ed and Valinda Leonard and Andrew shortly after he was born on one side, and a coloured photo of Valinda and Andrew taken just a few days before the tragedy on the other, it was hard to hold back the tears.

Father B. Field and the Right Hon. Joe Clark read several verses of scripture including "In my Father's house are many mansions", and Mrs. Margaret Berreth sang beautifully "Lead Me Gently Home". Rev. S. Bessy delivered a stirring message "In times like these . . . we need to trust God". Following the community service the congregation of every church in the area provided refreshments for the vast crowd.

● (1405)

The shock of the death of this beautiful wife, who spent her life helping others, and her handsome child, was eased by the prayers of Canadians throughout the nation, the helpful concern of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) on behalf of the Government of Canada, and of the Right Hon. Joe Clark. Let us pray and work together in such a way that such a terrible tragedy will never happen again.

FISHERIES

FUTURE OF SALMON ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call an extremely important matter to the attention of this House. It is the announcement over the weekend that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) intends to cancel the Salmon Enhancement Program in British Columbia and his indication that salmon enhancement from this point on will be done by privatization and management. That, in short, means that Government hatcheries built at taxpayers' expense will be turned over to the private sector. That will not save Canadians one dime. In fact it will cost more to produce salmon.

Wages in those hatcheries will be reduced to the minimum wage. The technology and innovative procedures which have been developed in the hatcheries will accrue to specialized industry instead of being spread throughout the entire industry.

The other aspect of enhancement by management will mean it will allow more escapement to try to produce more fish, but when the habitat is not protected and the spawning channels are not increased, we will have a very serious problem where the total allowable catch, and the fishermen's income, will be reduced and no more fish will be produced. The Government must wake up and remove itself from its rigid, philosophical confines, and begin to do things in a way which is acceptable and proper in the community.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

COLOMBIA VOLCANO DISASTER—HEROIC RESCUE EFFORTS BY SEVEN CANADIANS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw to the attention of this House the heroic efforts of seven Canadians employed by Sealand Helicopters Ltd. of St. John's, who risked their lives in a rescue and medical supply mission in and around Armero, Colombia, following that country's devastating volcano erruption.

The mission, voluntarily undertaken by these seven brave men, involved flying into the most severely affected parts of Colombia and rescuing those who survived the devastating mud slides. In Colombia for a private sector project, the Sealand's Super Puma helicopter was immediately diverted to aid the Colombian Government in its rescue efforts. I might add that it is not the first time this company has been involved in search and rescue.

The Sealand crew was led by Captain Robert Freeman and included Captains Malcolm Fraser and Paul Dorfman, Engineers Daniel Merritt, Howard Sturge and Dean Porter, and Avionics Technician Neil Burt.

I am proud to have brought this matter to the attention of the House, and I have written to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), bringing this matter to his attention.

CROP DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—CRITICISM OF MEASURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to listen to the western Tory Members trying to defend the Government's disappointing token efforts at assistance for drought striken farmers in the southern Prairies. The assistance plan which was announced last week, and could have been announced three months ago, has been universally condemned on the Prairies as being barely a fraction of what was needed.

I never thought we would see the day when a Tory Minister would brag and boast about the payout of money under the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, and Crop Insurance as evidence of what his Government has done for farmers. All these are good programs. They all help farmers. But they all were in place long before the current Government took office. Farmers will not be fooled. They are not about to thank the Government for giving them money to which they were already entitled and on which they have already paid premiums. The payment of $5 to $10 per acre on average is not even 20 per cent of what western farm organizations agreed was needed, and even these payments will not be made until next March or April.

The Minister can quote the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool out of context, as he did last Thursday, but he will not change the reality. As farmers, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), who chaired the special Committee on Disaster Assistance, should all be embarrassed at the low priority their Government gives to agriculture.

THE LATE J. C. BYRNE

TRIBUTE TO MINING PIONEER

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, recently Mr. J. C. "Jerry" Byrne, Chairman of Rayrock Resources, a man whose name is almost synonymous with Canadian mining, passed away. He was born in Sault Ste. Marie in 1910, attended high school in Haileybury, and took a degree in geology and economics at Queen's University.

He and his brothers discovered and brought into production then Canada's richest and farthest north gold mine, Discovery Mines. This was followed by bringing the Rayrock Uranium Mine, also in the Territories, into production.

• (1410)

Jerry Byrne was an entrepreneur with remarkable foresight. Income earned at Discovery and Rayrock was reinvested in at least 10 other mining enterprises across Canada which produced or currently produce uranium and several precious and base metals. He was also responsible for bringing into production several mines in Ireland and the United States. His companies pioneered the now widely used heap leaching process for low grade gold and uranium ores.

Most important, his entrepreneurship and leadership resulted in the creation of thousands of jobs in numerous communities across Canada, together with the infrastructure in those communities. Mr. Byrne was a life member of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy and a director of the Mining Association of Canada. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, Canada and the mining industry have lost a special person.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE LOSS OF JOBS IN MONCTON, N.B.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign the slogan of the Conservative Party was: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". Right now the slogan of people in the City of Moncton is: "Preserve our existing jobs".

The reason for that, Mr. Speaker, is that the more than 1,200 men and women who work for CN shops in Moncton have very good reason to believe they may lose their jobs. They have seen the federal Conservatives stand back and watch CN Marine cut back on its services in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere. They have not yet heard the Conservative Government stand up and say that the jobs in Moncton at CN, the largest industrial employer in New Brunswick, will be preserved. The Government should ensure the preservation of these jobs.

[Translation]

The unemployment rate in New Brunswick is over 15 per cent, and the federal Government is ultimately responsible for ensuring that no region or city or town will suffer the full impact of cutbacks imposed by a Crown corporation.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

"ANGEL TREE" APPROACH TO ASSISTING NEEDY CHILDREN

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, last year over 80 per cent of the Christmas gifts donated to the Salvation Army in London, Ontario, were generated by a unique idea called the "Angel Tree" in a local shopping mall. Here is how it works. Any willing donor picks a small angel from the tree which lists the name, age, and clothing size of a needy child. The gift is then returned and registered with the paper angel attached.

S.O. 22

Last year, in concert with the Salvation Army, a local radio station and the mall, the angel tree received close to 3,000 gifts. The "Angel Tree" approach is not only satisfying and enjoyable for the donor, but ensures a happy festive season and fills a real need for thousands of children.

This idea is the genius of Ginny Vershagen and has gained support here in Ottawa and is being tried at three local shopping centres.

I commend the idea of the "Angel Tree" to my colleagues as I remind the House of the approaching festive season and of those less fortunate than ourselves.

CONFEDERATION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech of November 5 last year the Conservative Government proudly made the commitment that the new Parliament would bring with it "the new beginning of a new era of national reconciliation—a new era of federalism". The Government said it was its priority to "breathe a new spirit into federalism".

After the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax last week it is obvious that the Government was only blowing hot air in the Throne Speech. The Government clearly stated last year that all regions of the country would be represented in the national Government. Obviously the Government's definition of representation omitted the words "compromise", "negotiation", "sensitivity", and "co-operation".

On the issue of free trade negotiations the provinces have been left wondering what part they will be allowed to play, and to what extent, in protecting Canada's national interests. Premier Peterson of Ontario pinpointed the essence of this important issue when he stated that Canada must not only speak with one voice, but with a voice that must speak for all Canadians and all Governments.

Unilateral cuts in health and post-secondary education have been unilaterally deemed non-negotiable by the federal Government. Despite calls from many Premiers for a reordering of federal priorities, it is clear that these issues have been dismissed from the arena of compromise and negotiation. If the past week's meeting is any indication of the Government's commitment to national reconciliation and a new era of federalism, Canadians in all parts of Canada have been sadly cheated.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ACCESS TO FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my constituents, and indeed all Canadians, were delighted with the measures announced recently by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to improve access for the disabled to federal Government buildings. These new measures required federal Government Departments to improve accessibility on a priority basis for Crown-owned and long-term Crown-leased buildings without, I might add, exceeding the limit of their previously approved budgets. This is an important step and one that is long overdue. Many provinces and municipalities in Canada, including my own municipality, initiated a similar program some six or seven years ago to ensure that public buildings are accessible to the disabled.

• (1415)

During the past weekend I visited the East York Recreation Club for Disabled Adults in my riding. The founder of that Club, Gord Hamilton, is a disabled athlete. He has represented Canada and won medals for Canada all over the world in the Disabled Olympics.

It is high time that Gord Hamilton and thounsands of others like him have proper access to federal buildings and I applaud the Government for this initiative, an initiative that the former Government should have taken years ago.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand that, after a very important First Ministers' Conference involving an important issue like free trade, the Prime Minister is not here to answer questions in the House. If that is the case, I am constrained to put my questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. These questions are of the utmost importance and I would have thought that the first Minister of the Crown would have been here to respond to them.

The Joint Federal-Provincial Statement on Free Trade with the United States, issued following the First Ministers' meeting in Halifax, states that: "Ministers agreed to the principle of full provincial participation in the forthcoming trade negotiations between Canada and the United States . . ."

Subsequent to that statement, provincial Premiers have interpreted that phrase "full provincial participation" to mean that they are full, joint, and equal partners with the federal Government in the preparation and pursuit of all negotiations with the United States on free trade, and that they have, in effect, a veto power on these negotiations.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has been charged with these negotiations, tell us whether he shares that interpretation put on those words by the provincial Premiers? If not, what interpretation does he choose to place on those words?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the House will agree that a very important and decisive step forward was taken in federal-provincial relations by the agreement with regard to international trade reached by the federal Government and the provinces. I am sure the House would share the support for that agreement which was expressed by the Hon. Member for Shefford, speaking for the Liberal Party.

As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know, I chaired the meeting of Ministers charged by the First Ministers to achieve agreement. It was the meeting that did, in fact, produce the documented cited by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. During those discussions it was agreed by everyone around the table that the question of the manner of provincial participation in the formulation of the mandate would be a question that would be decided later in the process.

INTERNATIONAL NEGOTIATIONS—POWERS OF PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Not only is the Prime Minister of Canada not available to provide an explanation of these key words here in the House, he withdrew before the end of the session with the provincial First Ministers, after refusing to give an explanation.

We agree that Ottawa ought to consult with the provinces, but this agreement appears to make the provinces joint and equal partners with the federal Government in international negotiations. My question is as follows: Is the Minister going to admit that the Government has put itself in a well-nigh impossible position? How can the Prime Minister tell the President of the United States that he is speaking for Canada, when the provincial First Ministers claim they have joint monitoring rights and a veto right as well?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not at all surprising the Liberal Party should be against an approach that can involve the provinces in a process that is very important to Canada's future. That is the history of the Liberal Party, that is what happened under the Liberals, with disastrous results within our own country.

Our position is entirely different, and we have said that the provinces have a right to participate in negotiations. We specified how we would proceed in the initial phase, and we have agreed with the provincial First Ministers and the Minister for International Trade that together, we would develop ways of implementing this formula at subsequent stages of the negotiations. That is a major step forward for the consultation process and for Canada's interests.

CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR'S REPORTING AUTHORITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let it be noted that the Hon. Minister has in no way responded to our question. My Party has been on record since my first intervention in the House of Commons on free trade that there ought to be full consultation with the provinces. There is a difference between consultation and the words "full provincial participation" in the communiqué, which is the reason for the question.

Let me be a little more specific. Mr. Simon Reisman is the chief negotiator; full-time or part-time, we do not yet know. To whom will Mr. Reisman report—to the Prime Minister of Canada, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to the provincial Premiers, to both, or to the federal and 10 provincial Ministers? To whom is he reporting as chief negotiator? Let us be specific about it.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is not only repudiating the Hon. Member for Shefford, his own Member of Parliament who approved the agreement when he was speaking on national television on Friday, he is also repudiating the position of the Liberal Premier of Ontario. The Liberal Premier of Ontario said, and I quote him from his opening statement: "The Government of Canada must speak with one voice but must speak for all of Canada". That is the principle which we are pursuing. That is a new principle, a principle which did not exist when the Government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was in office following practices which, on issue after issue, tore the country apart. What we have done is establish a process to bring the country together in a negotiation which is important to our future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PREMIERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Minister is in the exercise of having agreement on various statements, would he listen to a few short statements which were issued at the conference last Thursday and Friday. The Premier of Ontario, Mr. Peterson, said: "The bottom line is the negotiating team will take instructions from the First Ministers". Premier Getty of Alberta said: "The negotiating team becomes our team", and Premier Bennett said: "We agree that we 11 Governments will establish the mandate for the negotiations". Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree with those statements put forward by the provincial Premiers?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, not for the first time, is repeating questions which have already been put and anwered in the House of Commons.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): When were they answered?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The situation, as I indicated earlier, is that at the instruction and behest of all First Ministers, a meeting was held of Ministers interested in representing specific Governments on the question of trade. We agreed, for the first time in history, that we would move away from the empty formula of simply consultation and toward the right of the provinces to participate in the trade negotiations. We agreed that we would spell out how that would be done in the phase that we could see, the preparatory phase, and that we would decide the means by which that principle would be applied in later phases as we moved along. That was agreed by all Governments represented at those discussions.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would simply say to the Hon. Minister that the reason we repeat questions is that we do not receive proper answers from the Government side. We will keep asking those questions until we get the answers.

Mr. McDermid: The problem is that you do not like the answers.

Mr. Axworthy: The provincial Premiers have said that they are now fully responsible for establishing the mandate for the negotiator and, furthermore, that they will be in the position to make decisions on what will or will not be on the negotiating table.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The preamble to the question is becoming a little long. Could we have the question?

Mr. Axworthy: I will ask my question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister confirm that the provincial Governments now have full responsibility and share in setting the mandate for the chief negotiator and for determining what will and what will not be on the bargaining table?

● (1425)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will confirm again that the provinces have the right to participate in the formulation of the mandate. That is clear, that was agreed. The means by which that principle will be applied in the formulation of the mandate as it was agreed by all Governments there present, the manner of implementation, will be decided as we have a clearer picture of the response of the United States and the nature of the negotiations.

We have here, Mr. Speaker, an historic principle of federal-provincial co-operation on a question which involves all of the Governments of this country. We have here a situation where we cannot see with certainty—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONFERENCE COMMUNIQUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that the Prime Minister indicated earlier that he would be in the House. After such an historic conference he had an obligation to be here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I will go to the surrogate Prime Minister of the day and ask him about these discussions. The communique he referred to talks about 90 days to sort out certain details. Will the Minister deal with the question of principle? We agree details should be discussed with the provinces, but will the Minister answer this question? Does he agree with the Premier of Ontario and the Premier of Quebec that they have a veto in these discussions? Does he agree with that or does he not? It is a clear question; give us a clear answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive from the surrogate Leader of the Liberal Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —a repetition of the question put by his colleagues. He asks me about the principle. Let me quote to him the principle agreed to by all of the Governments present at the First Ministers' Conference, an historic principle: "The Ministers agreed to the principle of full participation in the forthcoming negotiations between Canada and the United States and the GATT."

REPORTING AUTHORITY OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, presumably the provincial Premiers will be answering to their Houses what they mean by that. This Minister has an obligation to give clear answers to this House because he speaks for the Government of Canada.

While we agree that the details of fact as they are to be analyzed in the discussions and so on should be discussed with the Premiers, this all makes sense, will he tell us on this fundamental question of principle, so that there is no confusion amongst the Premiers or people of Canada, whether he agrees with Simon Reisman that there is only one boss, the federal boss, or does he agree with the Premier of Ontario and the Premier of Quebec that they have a right to a veto? Will the Minister please answer that question and we will stop putting it to him?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard, in the question put, the voice of the old days and the old ways where the role of the provinces was limited to discussion and consultation. Now there has been established, by a Government determined to achieve national unity in fact and in important negotiations affecting all of the jurisdictions of the country, that there will be a principle of provincial participation. We have established how that will apply in the preparatory phase of the negotiations. We have agreed that we will work out together how that will apply to the question of the formulation of the mandate. These procedures go forward step by step. They are being taken that way by all 11 Governments.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have applied the principle to the first step and we are applying the principle to subsequent steps.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Some of the questions and answers are becoming longer.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a number of the Premiers have clearly taken one interpretation from this agreement and the federal Government has taken another. Therefore, will the Minister tell the House whether the Government is simply confused on this issue, or is it systematically trying to mislead the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, neither. We are not the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

OPPORTUNITY TO SETTLE DIFFERENCES IN CANADA BEFORE NEGOTIATING WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is in charge of these negotiations. Since the free movement of persons, goods and services under the Canadian Constitution does not exist in Canada de facto, and since following the negotiations, the federal Government will not be able to put a treaty into effect without the consent of the provinces where their jurisdictions are concerned, would it not be wiser if the Government started by putting Canada's house in order, before negotiating a treaty it would not be able to put into effect?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we agree it is sensible and important to work together with the provinces in order to achieve a broader joint approach to domestic issues. We are entirely aware of the fact that to achieve this kind of co-operation, there must be leadership at the federal level, capable of stressing the importance of this kind of co-operation. That is why we have departed from the old Liberal habit which almost destroyed our country and now for the first time, we have set up a procedure for establishing a system of co-operation among Canada's jurisdictions.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE VETO FOR PROVINCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may rephrase my question.

Does the Minister intend to inform the United States Government that, following negotiations with that Government, if one of the provinces wishes to exercise its veto right on matters falling under provincial jurisdiction, the Canadian Government will not be able to deliver the goods? Does the Minister intend to say this to the Americans, telling them, in fact, that these negotiations will be just a farce so long as there is no agreement in Canada before the start of negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to explain Canada's constitutional position to the Americans or to the Canadians.

What we want to point out to Canadians and Americans is that we have today co-operation among the various levels of Government which did not exist in the past, and that today we can reach a consensus on national objectives. That is why we concluded this historic agreement in Halifax last week.

[English]

PROVINCIAL POSITIONS ON AGRICULTURE AND CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to sort out this bowl of mush that the Minister is trying to feed the House of Commons. I would ask him a very precise question. If the provinces say that they want agricultural policies and cultural industries left off the negotiating table, as indeed many of the provinces have said, will the federal Government respect that decision and follow that course of action?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, because he has posed the question and received answers to it before, that we do not intend to start the process of unravelling the negotiations before they begin by taking several subjects off the agenda that will be there in any event. There are two sides to a bargaining table and those issues will be raised by the other side in the negotiations. What we have established for the first time is that there will be a right of participation and not just consultation for the provinces.

The Hon. Member asked a question about specific fields that might be the subject of negotiations. The means by which we discuss the mandate and apply the principle of provincial participation in the formulation of the mandate is, as has been agreed by all Governments, a matter that will be worked out in the 90 days that are to come.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, in fact the Minister is saying that if the provinces want these points off the negotiating table, he is going to put them on because that is his view. I would ask him precisely how that shows respect for the supposedly grand principle of participation which is such a great new achievement, when in fact all the Secretary of State is doing is conning the provinces into thinking they have a role to play while leaving them out of substantive decisions.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I wouldn't talk about Howard Pawley that way.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not trying to con the provinces or the people. We have involved the people of Canada and now the provinces in negotiations in a way that is without precedent, whether it be the successful negotiations we had with the United States in the past or the negotiations in which Canada was involved under the MTN. Far from conning the provinces, the Government is inviting the provinces to participate in matters which affect their futures and their interests.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister not admit that when the Government refused the plea of the provincial Premiers to halt the planned federal cut-backs in growth transfers for medicare and post-secondary education, it not only broke its own election campaign commitment made in the summer of 1984 but also broke the Minister of Finance's commitment not to touch the transfer payments until the spring of 1987? Would he not agree that in fact all the federal Government is doing is exporting its deficit problem to the backs of the provincial Premiers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, no, and no. Let me explain what I mean by that. The increase in transfer payments will be from $65 billion over the last five years to $90 billion over the next five years. Surely that is a significant increase.

Second, we are not transferring the deficit. The spending of the federal Government outside of interest and transfer payments to persons and individuals, last year increased at a rate of 10.8 per cent under the previous Government. This year it will be flat. That is not transferring the problem to the provinces.

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—POSSIBLE REACTIONS OF PROVINCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance's own document indicated that he would not touch transfer payments until the spring of 1987, and that promise has been broken.

[Translation]

Does the Minister realize that by cutting back transfer payments to the provinces, he is running the risk of worsening the already critical situation in emergency wards of Quebec hospitals, where patients must wait for hours on end, and that he is forcing the Government of Quebec to consider introducing a user fee?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Hon. Member is touching on is a matter that is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. If he has some views on that, perhaps he could speak to Mr. Peterson himself. Perhaps he could speak to the Premier of the Province of Quebec who will be elected today.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who will that be?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can give you a suggestion, if you want. However, I would not want to betray confidences to the Leader of the Opposition.

The point I would like to make is that nowhere did I say that I would not be changing anything until April 1, 1987. I did make and keep a promise in January of this year that in the current fiscal year I would not be touching the federal-provincial transfers. In fact, what we did was increase the equalization payments to six provinces.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. I would like to welcome him back to his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Does the Minister stand by the policy with regard to the publishing industry that he announced in the middle of the summer just past?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the Government has made no changes in the publishing policy announced by the Priorities Committee in Baie-Comeau.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wonder then if the Minister would explain what the Secretary of State was talking when he said that the publishing industry can and should be on the negotiating table during the free trade discussions. How are those things consistent one with the other?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think we must be careful here, to avoid confusion. Some cases are now being discussed and examined by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and that is the responsibility of Investment Canada. And there is also a policy for the entire country, which was formulated in Baie-Comeau. So I think these are two entirely different aspects of the question.

Now the Minister of External Affairs is responsible for organizing discussions on free trade with the United States and it is up to him to answer questions pertaining to this area.

EMPLOYMENT

FEDERAL WORK PROJECTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question about a very urgent matter, that is, hunger strikes which are taking place at this very moment in the Province of Newfoundland. The Minister of Employment and Immigration was notified by groups in seven communities last week that they intended to go on hunger strikes to protest the inefficiency of the Government in terms of the approval of works programs which were promised, because these people do not have any incomes.

In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration my question is directed to the Acting Minister. Is the Government aware of these hunger strikes? More important, is the Government aware of the reason for them? If it is aware, what is it planning to do about the matter?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is certainly aware and the Government has acted. As the Hon. Member will know, and as he has been informed, fully $9.5 million in emergency funding has been made available for projects to create jobs. I am pleased to report to the Hon. Member that already 91 projects having a total value of $4.7 million have been approved.

STARTING OF PROJECTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, people should not have to be driven to this type of action as a result of the inefficiency of the Government in actually approving the projects and getting them started.

Will the Minister assure the House and guarantee these people with no incomes who are on hunger strikes today that these projects will start immediately, today, in every community in which they were promised?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure Members of the House and, more particularly, the people of Newfoundland, that the Government is proceeding expeditiously. As I have mentioned, already 91 projects have been approved, and others will be approved just as quickly as possible.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS FOR EDUCATION AND MEDICAL CARE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The reason so many questions have been asked in the House with regard to exactly what the Government has signed with regard to trade is because of the confusion over what the Government says and what it does. Before the last election the Government promised to increase funding for post-secondary education and for medicare along the lines of the 1977 cost sharing agreement. Why is it going in the opposite direction today?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Hon. Member does not listen to previous answers. In the last five years funding in post-secondary education and health care amounted to $65 billion. In the next five years it will be in excess of $90 billion. If the Hon. Member cannot add, that is $25 billion plus which will be added to those budgets.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not with my adding. The problem is with what the Government promised before it was elected. In 1983 the Prime Minister promised 50/50 sharing with respect to medicare. In 1984 he promised to reinstate post-secondary education funding. Why are these promises not being kept?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave to the first question stands. Surely the Hon. Member can understand what an increse is. Some $25 billion over some $65 billion is very close to a 40 per cent increase. That is up, up, up, up—higher.

Oral Questions

TERRORISM

INTERNATIONAL SECURITY MEASURES—CANADA'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. All Canadians mourn the loss of 60 people who died when Egyptian commandos stormed a hijacked aircraft a week ago Sunday. We particularly mourn the loss of Valinda Leonard and her 16-month old son Andrew. These acts of terrorism must stop. How can Canada bring pressure to bear on countries to tighten up security measures and to take other strong steps to eliminate terrorism and hijacking?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a most serious question. The Government of Canada can act in two ways. The first is by showing some leadership, and the second is by working in consultation with other countries interested in stopping terrorism. Leadership involves the type of actions which have already been taken, such as the announcement by the Minister of Transport. Consultation involves, for example, the meeting which will be held in Bonn on December 10 and 11 at which Canada will have representation. Canada will be making some proposals as to means by which the world can act together to indicate to terrorists that their acts of terrorism will not be tolerated, that there will be no haven for them, and that there will be the harshest response to the actions which they might undertake.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AGRICULTURAL MARKETING QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns free trade.

Last week the Ontario Federation of Agriculture passed a motion expressing grave concern that agricultural programs and quotas could be bargained away in free trade negotiations with the United States. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate to the House today his clear and unequivocal commitment that that will not happen and that marketing quotas in the agricultural sector will be protected and not bargained away in free trade negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament who comes from an agricultural area I know, as the Hon. Member should, that for years—almost for decades—the agricultural industry was run into the ground by the disinterest of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government of the day. This Government was elected to change the situation in agriculture. We have done that on a number of fronts. We do not intend to place agriculture at risk in any negotiations. We believe that there can be advantages for all of Canada in the trade negotiations.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I gather the answer means no, they will not be bargained away.

[Translation]

QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): If that is the answer, why should dairy farmers in my riding believe what the Secretary of State for External Affairs says about milk quotas, when the Conservative Government lied to workers in the shoe industry in that same riding?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I would like to ask the Hon. Member to rephrase the last part of his question.

Mr. Boudria: I said the Government, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows, I think, that the issue is language and not to whom his question is directed.

Mr. Boudria: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I will take that back.

[Translation]

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs give us the assurance that this time, we will not be getting the wrong information or rather, that for once it will be true?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think the answer is that the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell needs a better Member in the House of Commons.

[English]

IMPACT OF NEGOTIATIONS ON WOMEN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In Halifax the Prime Minister reaffirmed his Government's commitment to integrate women in all aspects of policy and programs. He then completely ignored this when he talked about free trade and transfer payments. Is the Minister aware that in 42 Government studies with respect to trade not one of them examines the impact on women? Will the Minister immediately request that further studies be conducted with respect to the impact of free trade on women?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there certainly will be studies with respect to the impacts of trade negotiations on women. One of the things that we know now is that many of those jobs which are threatened today by the protectionist pressures in the United States are jobs which are held by women. We wish to take practical steps and not simply wave rhetorical gestures, in the direction of ensuring that there is not only greater job security for women now but a broader range of opportunity in a workplace which is itself expanding for the women of Canada.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS WITH NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is our understanding that women's groups are particularly concerned about the type of industries which will be phased out by free trade since they are largely industries in which women now work, at notoriously low wages. Will the Minister consult the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, and other groups, on the impact of free trade on women workers, from their point of view, but not from the point of view the Minister represents?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to receive and to pay attention to any representations and, particularly, any serious data put forward by the National Action Committee or by any other responsible groups in the country.

Working now under the historic agreement arrived at with the provinces last week, we will also in agreeing on common analysis of that data so that we will be working with the provinces not simply in gathering common data, but also have a basis on which Canada can proceed into those negotiations. But it is essential for us that we find ways to achieve both economic growth and the protection of Canadian jobs if we are serious about the status of women in this country. This Government is deeply serious about achieving some range of equality and some real opportunity for Canadian women in an expanding workforce, not in a workforce which is increasingly threatened, as is the case today.

ENERGY

EXCO ENERGY CORPORATION—PLIGHT OF CREDITORS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. One of the worst aspects of the National Energy Program was the potential for abuse with the PIP Program. Can the Minister tell us if there is any hope that the creditors of the Exco Energy Corporation, presently under investigation by the RCMP, will be able to recover any of the moneys which are owed to them?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that this particular case has caused some hardhsip for some constituents of the Hon. Member. But, because this case is under RCMP investigation, I believe it would not be appropriate for me to comment further at this time.

Oral Questions

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN MAGAZINE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. It concerns, again, the December issue of Hustler magazine. The Minister is aware that the magazine should have been seized and destroyed at the border by the Customs officials. On Friday the Minister of State for Finance promised this House that a report would be forthcoming today.

Could the Minister of Justice report to this House on the reasons why this particular edition of the magazine was allowed into Canada? Could he also indicate to the House what steps his Department has taken to ensure that this offensive and disgusting magazine is removed from store shelves in Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I don't know why the Hon. Member wants to give so much publicity to this issue of Hustler magazine. He continually brings it up in the House. This is a matter which is, under the present legislation, left to the judgment and discretion of certain Customs officials who have a very difficult job to do and who do their best to come down on the right line on each occasion.

The Hon. Member was promised a report. He will get his report when the report is ready. In the meantime I would adivse him not to continue giving such publicity to this magazine.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, we were promised the report today and it is obvious that the Government is not serious about stopping the importation of pornography into this country. The problem won't go away if you ignore it.

STAFFING OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Notwithstanding what the Deputy Prime Minister had to say on Friday, will the Minister confirm that over 1,200 jobs will be cut from Customs and Excise in the next five years? And would he not agree that we should be increasing instead of decreasing the number of Customs inspectors in order to stop pornography from coming into Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to look into the specific multi-year operational plans of the Department—

Mr. Gauthier: You won't.

Mr. de Cotret: —and come back to the Hon. Member. That is the plan we work with over a period of years and I will be very happy to look at the specific numbers and report back to the Hon. Member.

Oral Questions

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It is in regard to the give-away and fire sale prices of the de Havilland Aircraft Corporation to the Boeing Corporation of the United States, which the Minister intends to announce in half an hour's time.

Could the Minister explain why the Government set conditions for the sale of de Havilland requiring that it be sold to a legitimate air frame manufacturer and that there be financial depth in such a way that it effectively excluded the sale of de Havilland to any one other than a foreign corporation? Could the Minister also explain why it was that Rimgate Holdings of Vancouver, a Canadian buyer, was effectively excluded from getting the information it needed in order to submit a bid to keep de Havilland in Canadian hands?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be making a statement on the progress of our privatization program—

Mr. Broadbent: Why not in the House?

Mr. de Cotret: —and I can tell the Hon. Member that, as he obviously well knows, this is part and parcel of our Government's commitment to revitalize the Canadian economy and to move on to economic renewal.

Mr. Deans: That sounds like John Diefenbaker and the Arrow.

Mr. de Cotret: I can tell the Hon. Member further that the program is progressing very well for the interests of Canada, for the interests of the employees, and for the interests of the private sector, and very well, indeed, for the over-all economic renewal which we are witnessing in our country at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: I can tell the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that it is offensive that the statement he is making will not be made in this House. It is also offensive that the Government's conditions effectively ensured that de Havilland will be sold to foreign hands.

JOB GUARANTEE INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister say why it was that the representatives of the 42,000 workers involved have not been consulted in any way with respect to decisions so vital to the future of the aerospace industry? And will the Minister ensure that there will be job guarantees to keep those aerospace jobs here in Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): The Hon. Member talks about 42,000 workers. I would be very happy to see 42,000 workers at de Havilland. What we are doing is exactly that. We are ensuring that the workforce goes up rather than goes down in that vital industry of ours.

EXTERNAL AID

ETHIOPIA—REPORTED DEATHS CAUSED BY FORCED MOVEMENT OF PEOPLE

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. In spite of reports that life is better in Ethiopia than it was a year ago, other reports bring us the news that 100,000 people have died from conditions imposed on them through forced transfer from the north to the south. In view of such forced transfers which are reportedly continuing, what steps can our Government take with other democratic Governments to protect the rights of people under these conditions?

Ms. Copps: Wake up, guys.

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Nystrom: She is not a guy.

Mr. McDermid: What a sexist statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is only Monday. All the noise doesn't help.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, Canada did not take part in the displacement of families in Ethiopia. The support we are giving consists in helping on a case-by-case basis. Mr. David MacDonald, our emergency assistance co-ordinator, has made the necessary contacts, and we have taken steps to help these people overcome the trauma of resettlement.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INGESTION OF DANGEROUS CHEMICALS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. On Friday, Doug Hallett, the senior adviser for Environment Canada, said that "Canadians ingest a high amount of "the dangerous chemicals" PCBs, just by eating staple foods such as potatoes, vegetables, fruit and meat". He went on to say that the average Canadian may just as well package PCBs and swallow them.

Would the Minister tell the House what immediate steps he is taking to remove this danger from the foods Canadians eat? Can he give us an immediate answer to reassure Canadians, in the light of what his own senior departmental adviser said on this important matter?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member probably knows that successive Governments, including the one of which he was a part, and certainly this one, have put in place a very rigorous regime to control the use of PCBs and their transportation. In fact, PCBs have been effectively outlawed for use in this country.

The official to whom the Hon. Member made reference in his question was speaking at a seminar as an individual—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: He was not commenting on this subject in his capacity as a senior adviser to my Department or to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that Dr. Hallett knows a lot more about the subject than the Minister.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF SUPER FUND TO DEAL WITH TOXIC CHEMICALS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Will the Minister say today that he will immediately accept the request made at that same conference last Friday by the Ontario Minister of the Environment that the federal Government set up a super fund to help Canadians deal with problems of toxic chemicals, such as the excessive levels of PCBs in food and those in the St. Clair River? Will he make that commitment today?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, other Members have raised this proposal. I said then, as I say again, that I have been discussing the matter with my counterparts across the country, including the Minister of the Environment in Ontario. The Government of Ontario has set aside approximately $10 million for this purpose. One proposal was that the Government of Canada match that $10 million. I am looking at the proposal as well as others along the same lines.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Friday, November 19, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

One petition presented by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) did not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT PRACTICE OF MAKING ANNOUNCEMENTS OUTSIDE HOUSE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order which also contains a question of privilege. It arises out of the fact that the Government has chosen not to make a statement to the House respecting the future of the aerospace industry, but to do it by means of a press conference one-half hour after Question Period has taken place. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the House, that we should all be entitled to have the information necessary to make comments in the House and that it is a derogation of the privileges of Parliament for the Government consistently to go around Parliament by making statements at press conferences rather than using the House which is where those decisions should be announced.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that his representations constitute neither a point of order nor a question of privilege. The Government is free to do what it wishes where it wishes.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and responsibility of presenting several petitions, the first from the Alberta Federation of Labour signed by some 300 members of that organization. I also have a petition from Ottawa, a petition from the Sudbury Legal Clinic, a petition from Local Union 7062 of the United Steelworkers of America in Hamilton, a petition from the Winnipeg Labour Council, and a petition signed by many people from the riding of Spadina in Toronto. All of the people who signed these petitions call upon the Government to withdraw the provision, which is to come into effect on January 1, 1986, whereby pension income will be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

PEACE AND DISARMAMENT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by many individuals from the congregation of the United Church of Meaford, Ontario, in my riding of Grey-Sincoe. The petitioners underline their deep concerns and strong feelings that everything possible must be done by all levels of Government to further the cause of peace and disarmament throughout the world.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia asking that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases because of the very adverse effect that this will have on families, children, and particularly on single-parent mothers.

I have a similar petition from a number of people in Nova Scotia who feel just as strongly on the other side of Canada. They ask that family allowances be fully indexed and that unfair tax increases be rescinded.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a couple hundred people from Winnipeg, most of them from my riding, with regard to family allowances. The petitioners point out that the cut-backs in family allowances will hurt all families, including the very poorest, after the year 1990 and that this measure is unfair and unjust and should be rescinded.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of Manitoba indicating their opposition to the federal Government's plan to deindex the family allowance. In the petition the people explain how they need that money for their basic expenses. They also feel that it is an unfair burden on the middle and low income households of Canada.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I received a petition from the residents of the riding of Blainville-Deux-Montagnes who humbly declare that Government programs respecting family allowances and the child tax credit are absolutely necessary to families with children, and that families with children do include a considerable number of single-parent families that happen to be among the most destitute citizens of our society. The petitioners urge the Government to honour its election promises by restoring full indexation and the full child tax credit for single-parent families.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House a number of petitions from the City of Prince Albert, all of which request the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

PUBLIC PENSIONS REPORTING ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-255, an Act to impose reporting requirements with respect to public pension plans and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, in this year's Auditor General's Report the Auditor General expressed concern that parliamentarians do not have adequate information to assess and fully understand both short and long-term financial implications of public pension programs. Similarly, in the public accounts of Canada for the last five years the Auditor General has noted that he does not have sufficient information concerning Government of Canada employee pensions.

The Public Pensions Reporting Act will require the Government to prepare and file in the House actuarial valuations of all public pension plans using both standards and timetables similar to those imposed on private sector plans.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 473 will be answered today.

CHANGE IN ROUTING

Question No. 473—Mr. Young:

1. In 1985 and to date, was there a change in the routing of outgoing and incoming aircraft at Pearson International Airport and, if so, were flight patterns changed so that more flights were being routed over the south-east portion of the City of Toronto?

2. During 1985 and to date, did the Department of Transport receive complaints about jet aircraft noise from residents in the Constituency of Beaches and, if so, how many?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. Yes, one.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Boudria: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, on November 5, 1985, in the House the Government indicated that it would be answering one of my questions concerning the travels of the then Minister of the Environment. Later that day the Government changed its mind and asked that my question be withdrawn from the Order Paper and reput. They had the answer in their hands that day, Mr. Speaker. If the answer was available to be tabled in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary on November 5, 1985, why has it not been done since? Is the answer so embarrassing that the Tories do not dare table it for public view?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Hon. Member is asking this question when the Parliamentary Secretary who would normally answer is not in the House. I am glad to take note of his question and I will get back to him.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I had anticipated that there would be another speaker from the New Democratic Party following the finalization of a speech by a Liberal Member. But I am more than willing to take this opportunity to speak now. It is a privilege to speak to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act. The Bill provides legislative authority for several income tax measures outlined in the May 1985 Budget. These changes affect three major areas and will encourage private initiative.

• (1510)

These changes include a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, measures to encourage labour and pension fund investment in small businesses, and improvements to tax incentives available for research and development. There is a special tax credit for investment in Cape Breton. There will be changes to improve Government effectiveness, including an increase of $140 in the child tax credit and increased tax assistance for the disabled and artists. There will be clear limits on Revenue Canada's powers of search and seizure, a measure in this Bill that I loudly applaud.

Among the changes in this Bill to help control the deficit are the modification to personal income tax indexation, an end to the federal tax reduction, a temporary surtax on upper income earners and large corporations, as well as an end to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan.

The purpose of this Bill is to continue Canada on the economic road to recovery that was initiated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget and by this Party in September, 1984. We have seen an indication of that recovery. The unemployment rate has fallen tremendously. Some 333,000 new jobs have been created in Canada. Not only has the bank rate dropped, providing lower interest rates, but the mortgage rate has decreased to a level that will enable people to afford homes. This means that housing starts have begun to climb. Consumer spending has risen. Bankruptcies in Canada are on the decline. Manufacturing orders have increased and the fact is that the Canadian economy is outperforming that of the United States. We intend to continue this growth and improve the economy of this great country.

Many of these indications are of particular interest to my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk. It is a riding which is very similar to many other rural ridings in Canada. It is basically 75 per cent rural, consisting of the usual agricultural sectors; dairy producers, pork producers, beef producers, chicken and turkey producers and egg producers. We have apple growers and strawberry growers. In fact, the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk consists of the whole family of aricultural commodities. It is in my riding that the majority of tobacco in Canada is grown. We grow tomatoes not only for canning or retail sale in stores, but for tomato paste. We grow peanuts and even ginseng in Haldimand-Norfolk.

Haldimand-Norfolk is an agricultural area that has been ignored for too long and requires direction.

In contrast to agriculture in my riding we have probably the largest steel plant in the world with the Stelco-Erie Works. We have the largest Canadian fossil burning generator plant at Nanticoke and the large Texaco refinery that recently announced expansion plans. My riding, like many others, includes urban areas with textile plants, footwear industries as well as many other small industries and businesses. These industries have been seeking direction for years and we are providing it with this Bill.

Today, I want to deal with the three measures that affect us most directly. They are, the capital gains tax exemption, small business bonds, and the deductions for the disabled. In the six years I have had the privilege of serving the House of Commons, many of my colleagues and I have been striving for a capital gains tax exemption. We literally begged the Government of the day to introduce such a measure that will allow the farmer who has invested his life savings in his farm an opportunity to deduct the gains from the sale of his farm in order to live in retirement with some dignity. Since the farmer may not have to increase the price of his farm in order to retire comfortably, it presents an opportunity to young farmers to purchase a farm at an affordable price. We have fought hard for such a measure during the last three elections and I am pleased to see it being brought into play.

I must admit that I was pleasantly surprised to hear the Minister include small business in that provision. This means that money will be recycled into revitalized, expanded and new businesses. Those people who will be able to deduct the capital gains tax from the sale of their businesses can reinvest in other ventures and create more jobs. I was very pleased to see the Minister take the very wise step of including small businesses in the capital gains tax exemption.

We must give credit to the previous Government for instituting the small business bond. Those bonds provide reduced interest rates to farmers and small businesses in financial difficulties. At present, small businesses and farmers can arrange financing for up to $500,000 at interest rates that have typically been 5 to 6 percentage points less than would have been applicable. The maximum term for these bonds is five years.

The small business bond program was due to expire in 1985. However, the program has played a useful role in providing interest rate relief in cases where business failure might otherwise result. The program was important to agriculture, and there is a growing awareness of its role in that sector. This special tax program has resulted in nearly $700 million of small business bonds being issued. Consequently, we are extending that program for a further two years. I believe this will give the agricultural and small business sector an extra shot in the arm to get them over some very difficult times as our economic recovery continues.

I am particularly familiar with the third area I want to talk about because I participated in my Party's task force on national revenue. The Income Tax Act currently allows for a special deduction to be claimed by disabled persons. Under the present law, only those persons who are blind or confined to a bed or wheelchair qualify for the deduction. The Budget proposes to broaden the definition of disability in the tax legislation so as to include many other people with severely disabling conditions which do not result in confinement to a bed or a wheelchair. The new definition requires that in order to qualify for the tax deduction, an individual must suffer from a prolonged and severe mental or physical impairment. To be considered prolonged, the impairment must be expected to last at least 12 months. For an impairment to be severe, it must markedly restrict the daily living activities of an individual. In order to be eligible for the deduction, claimants will have to be certified by the Department of National Health and Welfare as having met the requirements of the disability definition. It is expected that approximately 185,000 Canadians will be eligible for the deduction under the new definition, compared with 65,000 under the current definition.

This need was brought home to me during the task force hearings. I recall a young man who came in a wheelchair and strugged on two crutches to come to the table to present his case. He was handicapped and restricted to his wheelchair, but because he wanted to maintain hope and dignity, he strugged on crutches for an hour or two each day. He wanted to have some mobility under his own power and to maintain pride and respect. However, because he did that, he did not qualify as being physically impaired, in that he was not restricted to his wheelchair for the full day.

Another case involved a young lady who was classified as not being disabled under the Act because although she was confined totally to a bed, she was helped or half carried to a chair each day for an hour or two so that she could look out the window; probably the only world she knew. Because she sat in a chair for a couple of hours each day, she was not classified as being totally disabled and confined to bed.

We feel that those injustices should be corrected. I am very pleased to have taken part in the debate on a Bill which corrects those injustices and to have clarified those points for very needy people in the future.

We have many other Members who wish to speak on the Bill. I appreciate having had the opportunity to use a few minutes of the time of the House to voice my respect and support for the Bill, most certainly in the areas I have mentioned.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to make a couple of comments on the speech of the Hon. Member on Bill C-84. The Hon. Member mentioned that he represented a large number of farmers in his riding, including tobacco producers. I should like to take issue with a couple of items which he mentioned. He mentioned the $500,000 capital gains exemption. It will certainly help a number of farmers to get out of farming. However, if we look at the rest of the provisions in the Income Tax Act and in the Budget of last spring, we see that farmers are treated very badly. The Hon.

Member talked about the samll business development bond and the small business bond. He knows that the extension of those bonds for a couple of years, except on very rare occasions, does not provide any assistance to farmers because the banks will simply not give them to farmers. There is very little help for those producers in that regard.

Also he knows that on September 1, the Government added some nine cents per gallon to the price of farm fuels and provided no exemption for farmers. It has been estimated that it will cost some large grain producers in western Canada some $1,000 to $1,500 each per year. It seems most unfair that the Government would increase farm input costs at a time when thousands of farmers are facing the loss of their land.

Also he did not mention that on January 1, the Government will impose a further 1 per cent increase in sales tax. This will not only increase the price of farm fuels but will increase the input costs of all farm commodities. Aside from increasing those costs, the Budget did nothing about the farm debt crisis which many tobacco farmers in the constituency of the Hon. Member are facing because of the national marketing hold-up. The Hon. Member and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not want to interrupt the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), but I hope he is not on debate. This is the period provided for questions and comments.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was just placing my comments on the record. I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. Why did the Government impose massive new taxes which will cause so much hardship for tobacco producers? Will the Government come good on its commitment in the federal tobacco REDUX program of five cents per package to assist farmers to move into other crops? Why did the Hon. Member not participate in the rally held by 600 or 700 tobacco producers last Saturday in Delhi when they blocked the streets with some 80 tractors? In the Hon. Member really wanted to represent these producers, he would have taken the opportunity to attend that rally, as well as hear the presentation made by the Minister of Agriculture some three weeks ago in St. Thomas when 800 farmers rallied to protest the lack of action on the part of the Government, not only in this Bill but in the Budget of May 23.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, do I get 10 minutes to respond to the question? I think the Hon. Member has used up most of my time.

He mentioned the capital gains exemption and that it would only help farmers to get out of agriculture. If he had listened to my speech, he would have realized that I pointed out that farmers in many cases have been required to inflate the price of their farm in order to obtain some money with which to retire. Thus, they will not be required to do that now, and younger farmers will be able to purchse those farms at a much lower price.

The Hon. Member referred to the things which he says we have not done for agriculture. He did not talk about the farm credit moratorium which is in place or the $90 million cash crop advance which was lent to tobacco farmers. I did not hear him come to their defence when the press was saying that it was a gift although in reality it was a loan. He did not talk about the fuel tax reduction or farm debt programs such as REDUX. He did not refer to the meetings of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) with all commodity groups.

However, he talked about the tobacco tax. I was not pleased with the tobacco tax, and he is aware of that. It is a question which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has answered many times and to my satisfaction. He talked about the REDUX program for tobacco. I am pleased that he raised the issue because it was my concept. Within 15 minutes of the Budget being brought down, I presented a program to three cabinet Ministers—the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—to take five cents from a package of cigarettes and return it to the industry. The Hon. Member should know better. The issue is not to get tobacco farmers out of tobacco. Tobacco farmers feel that if people are smoking cigarettes, they should have the right to grow the tobacco rather than having impure and possibly chemically-laden tobacco coming in from offshore. That is their point. I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member that the third draft is now complete. I have another meeting for 8.30 tomorrow morning with representatives of the Department of Finance and the Department of Agriculture and it will be going to the Minister of Finance tomorrow afternoon.

• (1530)

The Hon. Member talked about Delhi. He may know that I agreed to appear in a Santa Claus parade at the other end of the riding for Saturday morning and I would not want to disappoint Santa Claus. He might know as well that there were a bunch of tobacco farmers last evening at the light-up ceremony in Simcoe which I attended. He may want to know that I took the Regional Chairman, two mayors and a councillor to see the Minister of Agriculture two weeks ago. He may want to know that I had breakfast with tobacco farmers three weeks ago in Langton and met with 18 tobacco farmers a week and a half ago in my riding office. I have taken action in the five directions which they asked me to do. This included asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restrict imports of tobacco to Canada to a five-year average until the national agency is finalized. If the Hon. Member is going to stand up and make accusations and ask questions on issues he is not fully acquainted with, possibly he should meet me beforehand and I can give him the right questions to ask.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a big to-do about the capital gains tax. He specifically talked about farmers being allowed to keep the capital gain from the sale of their land. We had and have no quarrel with that. I think his leader mentioned it in the campaign. Therefore, why not do that for farmers only? Why extend the exemption to all the other entrepreneurs who invest in such things as condominiums in Florida, art, racehorses and everything else? In 1985, according to the May budget papers, the Treasury will lose $500 million, rising to $700 million in 1986 and $1 billion by 1990. How do you justify that kind of a loss when you complain about the deficit?

Mr. Bradley: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for such a well thought out question. I supported very strongly over the last six years a capital gains exemption for farmers. I know his views on that because we have talked about it many times. It is a policy supported on both sides. I mentioned earlier that I was pleasantly surprised when it was extended to small business. The Hon. Member talks about the entrepreneurs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired. I also regret that I cannot recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). From this point forward the speeches will be 10 minutes in length and there will be no questions or comments according to the Standing Orders.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-84 can in no way be described as a tax reform Bill. However, there are certain aspects of it which my constituents have drawn to my attention through conversations and letters, and they have asked me to bring to the attention of the House three matters of concern to them. The first concerns the repeal of RHOSPs. When the Liberal Government introduced this plan quite a number of years ago its purpose was to encourage home ownership by assisting taxpayers in saving toward that time when they would be able to purchase a house. For the Government of Canada to abolish this plan at this time has to be viewed as a retrograde step.

As all Members know, this plan allowed the payment of up to $1,000 a year to a maximum of $10,000 into the plan. The income earned was free of tax. This meant that over a reasonable period of time a couple could set aside in excess of $20,000 for the purchase of their own home. We all know substantial funds had been amassed in these plans. That in itself attests to its popularity.

It is true that there is in Canada an urgent need for more rental accommodation, especially in large urban areas. However, I doubt very much whether we can justigy the cancellation of this plan on the basis of a shortage of rental accommodation in large cities. Young people, at least those fortunate enough to have a job, saw this plan as one of the few ways open to them whereby they could get a tax break which at the same time was an incentive to make the most important investment any family can ever make, the purchase of their own home. All Members would agree that home ownership contributes a great deal to community and national stability. It gives people a much greater stake in society. Therefore, it seems incongruous to me that a Conservative Government whose principles, I always thought, were to preserve the status quo, to get people to put down roots and become involved and active in a caring way in building better communities, should do away with a plan which gives people a chance to become home owners. As the King of Siam said through the voice of Yul Brynner, "it is a puzzlement". It is always difficult to determine precisely what the philosophy of this Government is, and perhaps it is better not to even think about it. Perhaps there is no philosophy at work, none of any consequence. However, is it too cynical of me to suggest that the reason this plan was cancelled was simply to free up $2 billion for spending by consumers because, at the same time, the Government is taking out of the economy by way of a gigantic tax break some $1.75 billion? Even the economists on the other side realize that this is no time at all to reduce consumer confidence and spending. After all, we are only just emerging from a recession. Perhaps that is why the RHOSPs were cancelled. However, if that is the reason, I suggest it was cynical in the extreme.

Second, I want to refer to Clause 35 in Bill C-84. This, I am happy to say, is a liberalization of the tax scheme which applies to employees who have started new employment and as a consequence have to move at least 40 kilometres away. I have to commend the Government for this change and I do so. The existing legislation was such that the interest payable on house loans received by such employees from their employers was an employee benefit and therefore taxable. I object to that measure in the existing legislation and the Government is going to change it. However, there is a technical problem and that is that a deadline of May 23 will apply.

In the constituency which I represent, there is a community on the North Shore of Lake Superior called Marathon which has been benefiting from a very large gold mine which has been developed nearby. The Hemlo gold find is one of the most active mineral developments anywhere in North America at the present time. Very briefly, this is the problem. One of the companies involved, Teck-Corona, wrote a letter to me outlining its problem as follows:

> We are in a situation here where we have just gone into production with a new Gold Mine and have been hiring our Supervisory and Operating Staff over the past one and a half years. We built eighty (80) new homes to be sold to employees and also had twenty (20) trailer lots for sale to employees for a total of one hundred (100) units. Many of our employees were hired prior to May 23, 1985 and some have been hired after that date. On these units, the Company is offering an interest-free loan forgiveable over a ten-year period. As a result of the May 23rd date, we now have fifty-one (51) employees paying tax on the benefit derived from the Company loan and another forty-nine who will not be assessed with a taxable benefit for the same type of loan.

That is not fair, is it, Mr. Speaker? Marathon is not a huge community. About 5,000 people now live there. People working for this same company have now been divided into two groups, one which has a taxable benefit and the other which does not because of this arbitrary date. I would ask my hon. friends opposite to take this matter up in caucus and do something about this injustice.

I have written to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) regarding this matter. All of the people from Marathon who are concerned about this problem have also written to the Minister of Finance. In reply, he simply said that an extension of the proposal along the lines suggested would represent an additional tax expenditure and add significantly to the deficit. I cannot accept that at all. It is simply a question of equity and fairness to the community. The Minister of Finance has to do better than that for the people who live there. We cannot divide the employees of one company into two groups in that manner. I know that the Government will not allow that situation to continue. I am quite confident that a correction will be made.

I would make a final plea, and this is my third point. I would like to turn now to a consideration of fairness and equity for prospectors. Motion No. 20 in Bill C-84 indicates that when a prospector exchanges some property on which he has staked claims for shares and sells those shares on the market, those shares cannot be considered as an exemption under the capital gains tax. The Prospectors and Developers Association believe that this is unfair treatment of prospectors regarding the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption. The association feels that this is objectionable mistreatment of prospectors. Prospectors should be able to receive the benefit of the full capital gains tax exemption.

The Prospectors and Developers Association has 4,000 members from across Canada. Do we in the House realize the contribution that these people make? They are the backbone of the country's mineral exploration industry and they are essential to the development of our mining sector. They feel that they have been dealt with unfairly through Bill C-84. In fact, they telexed the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Layton) right after the Budget was brought down and pleaded with him to be given consideration.

Are you signalling that my time has nearly expired, Mr. Speaker? I was going to read the telex into the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Penner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-84. I think all Members of the House and all Canadians realize that the economy of Canada is in deep trouble. Canadians are beginning to realize that the high level of unemployment that exists today is becoming a permanent feature of our lives. Canadians are beginning to realize that the agricultural industry is in trouble. Every time I return to my riding of Regina East, I speak to people who are directly or indirectly involved in agriculture and I hear one horror story after the other describing to me the serious problems being faced by the agricultural sector. As well, I realize that people who are engaged in the fisheries, lumber and mining industries are all in serious trouble. The manufacturing industry also has its problems and is certainly not running at full capacity.

We are finding, as our economy and society goes through these troubled times, that the Government itself is experiencing some major difficulties. On the one hand, we have a shrinking revenue base and on the other hand a greater demand for Government programs. All in all, one begins to realize that while no one and certainly no political Party has all the answers, Canadians need and expect some leadership on the part of the Government. They expect leadership that will help us through these difficul and troubled times.

Let us have a look at the record of the Tory Government so far. During the election campaign, Tory members offered a pretty simplistic solution. They said that the problem in the country was a lack of confidence and that if the people would only elect a Conservative Government, confidence would be restored, new investments would come to Canada and new jobs would be created. They said that prosperity would return again. We now realize that this was somewhat of a sham. Canadians quickly learned what was meant by restoring business confidence. Essentially, it meant that there were further tax breaks to the rich and large corporations and cut-backs to programs that benefit average Canadians coupled with increased taxes for them to pay.

In the first Budget, we saw caps on the indexing of the Old Age Security pensions and the indexing of family allowances. There was a cap on the indexing of the personal exemptions and there were personal income tax increases along with sales and excise tax increases. There were cut-backs in programs that benefit the average Canadian. There were cut-backs in health programs and we will see cut-backs in education programs. We will see cut-backs in programs like the Unemployment Insurance Fund, women's programs and environmental programs. There will be cut-backs in all those areas that benefit ordinary Canadians. Of course, all this has been done in the name of fighting the deficit.

When it comes to sharing the responsibility fairly among all sectors of the Canadian economy, surely the Government deserves very low marks. I am not suggesting that the Government it replaced received high marks. In fact, the program this Government is following is not much different from the program the Liberals followed in the last number of years. That was one of helping the rich and the powerful and socking it to the poor and the middle-income earners. It is done with the notion of restoring business confidence so that business will invest more.

Let us see to what extent the Government is willing to go to restore business confidence. In the Budget, there is a provision to allow for the first $500,000 of one's capital gains to be tax exempt. I understand that this would mean the loss of some half a billion dollars in revenue to the Government. Is that fair? No, it is not fair. Certainly many of us welcomed aspects of this provision. I believe all Members of the House welcomed the way the capital gains tax exemption would affect farmers and small business people. Certainly, no sane or fair-minded person would suggest that a person who engages in quick flips, who has condominiums in Florida, who speculates in real estate, jewellery or in works of art should be given a $500,000 tax holiday. It is not just members of the New Democratic Party who point out these inequities. For example, Mr. William Lawlor, a former official in the Department of Finance

Policy Division, as well as a technical advisor to the Conservative task force on Revenue Canada, said at a recent conference of the Canadian Tax Foundation in Quebec City:

It (the Capital Gains exemption) is going to be abusive and there will be many varieties of abuse. These won't be understood for some time because of their complexity.

In other words, tax experts are saying that the capital gains provision is much too broad in its scope. Back home, farmers welcome the capital gains provision on the one hand but are realistic enough to ask why it should apply to everyone. These farmers say: "Why should this provision apply to the guy who bought his land next to mine just two years ago, never farmed it and who flipped it over the year after and made hundreds of thousands of dollars of profit?" This should have been given consideration, particularly when the value of farmland was increasing. The suggestion farmers make in my district is that the capital gains tax exemption should only be allowed to those who have actually farmed the land, those who through their sweat, labour, investment and energies have improved the quality of the land. The farmers say that these people should be allowed the benefit of the tax exemption but that it should not be given to everyone. They say: " Do not give it to the land speculator". They certainly claim this will not produce jobs and that it will not restore investor confidence in the country. All it will do is enhance a feeling of tax rip-offs and tax abuse. I tend to think that a wise foreign investor seeing a Government being so naive will not have any confidence in a country which is governed by such a Government.

We have come across other items which are not necessarily new to this Government. Previous Governments have been aware of them. I speak of customs and laws which help the well-to-do. For instance, there is the area of advance rulings. I have stood in my place on previous occasions and I have suggested the amount of tax abuse and tax avoidance which occurs under these advance rulings. In fact, the Department of National Revenue made quite a study in this respect in 1982. Some of the best brains in the Department prepared an internal report with respect to the question of tax avoidance. This is what they found, and I quote:

It is the opinion of senior management that the focus of tax avoidance has switched from implementing schemes to obtaining departmental approval through the Advance Ruling process.

The report was careful to alert the Department that its auditors were aware of those who practised tax avoidance, and I again quote from the report:

"75.9 per cent of the auditors were aware that tax avoidance is being practised mainly by high income individuals and large corporations."

Yet, we did not see any change in this policy when the Government was elected. In fact, the Government allowed an advance ruling with respect to the Olympia & York purchase of Gulf Canada. This ruling helped the company save close to $1 billion in taxes which it should rightfully pay. More recently there was the case of Genstar which involved a preferred share issue. Genstar was also provided with the benefit of a Revenue Canada advance ruling. The total revenue loss can only be estimated in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

There are many other schemes such as the scientific research tax credit scheme introduced by the Liberals and which was continued by the Tories before it was cut off after a loss of some $2 billion. We have come across the case of deferred taxes, which is estimated to have cost close to $30 billion this year. Again, it is of special benefit to the rich. We then come to the question of tax expenditures, which is figured to be close to some $50 billion in lost revenues to the Canadian public. It comes down to a question of fairness. Is it fair that the Royal Bank of Canada does not pay a cent of tax while it reports profits of hundreds of millions of dollars a year? Is it fair that an average income earner of some $30,000 has to pay ever-increasingly larger amounts of tax while those who can pay the most, those who earn and benefit the most from the country, pay less and less?

I claim that this if not fair. In fact, it is obscene. We will be voting against this measure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on Bill C-84, which is quite a large document. I will not go into the number of pages it contains but it is a document almost one inch thick. I want to say at the outset that this is a Bill which has a great many ramifications for a great many people. In speaking to the legislation I must say that I am pleased to see the removal of capital gains with respect to the sale of farm property. This is certainly welcomed by farmers in the country. I do not want to underestimate its benefits but it only benefits those who wish to get out of farming. It is in this vein which I would like to make a few brief comments with respect to the situation of agriculture as we see it today.

By allowing this exemption not only will farmers benefit but all entrepreneurs who wish to take advantage of this tax write-off if they wish to buy, sell or deal in condominiums outside of the country will benefit. The estimated cost of this package is $550 million in 1985 and $700 million in 1986. As legislators we have to look at the cumulative effect on the taxpayers of the country. In this way farmers and others who are receiving benefits will see that there is also a cost involved. Not only are they receiving relief in terms of capital gains for farm assets, those who worked all their lives, tilled the soil and built up their assets to the point where they can use this money as a retirement income, they are also paying for others who are actually investing and speculating in other property not only in this country but abroad. It is not as clear-cut as the Government would like to have us believe. If I were a farmer who was able to take advantage of this legislation I would have to look for a buyer, someone who is prepared to buy my land. With the price of potatoes and other farm products in my province it would be very difficult for me to get anything substantial for my property and $500,000 would be an awful lot of money to get out of it. After all, who in their right mind would go into agriculture this year as a new entrepreneur or a new farmer and expect to come out with even half a hide? I say this because we have to look at other things this Government has done to farmers. The cumulative effects are very subtle. The Government has put in place new inspection fees for potatoes. It has put in place ferry rate increases for my province. There are increased taxes on farm gasoline. The list goes on and on. Farmers are not just primary producers, they are also citizens and consumers, and they also have to bear the brunt of this kind of legislation. Farmers have families they have to educate and the Minister of Finance's cut-backs in transfer payments will have an effect on post-secondary education in my province. There is only so much that the people in the rural areas of this country can take. It is $500 here, $50 there, $75 somewhere else, and when you add it all up, and take it off one's disposable income, there is very little at the end of the day for one's work and sweat.

A few weeks ago Bill C-75 was before this House. It allowed for dredging fees for harbours and ince-breaking fees which can be imposed by regulation and does not ever have to come back to this Chamber for further debate. There was also the navigational fees for aids to navigation. When Bill C-75 is finally passed in this House and receives Royal Assent, this Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), or some future Minister of Transport, could quickly, through regulation, impose those kinds of fees. By themselves, they seem very small, but it all adds up.

I listened with great interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) this morning as he commented on Bill C-84. On page 214 of this massive piece of legislation, under Part V, Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, it lists the definition of the Act and defines "authorized person" as well as "dwelling house". People from National Revenue will be able to go into a poor fisherman's home in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island, and audit his books. Many of these people have been harrassed before. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate likened it to Vietnam. "Minister" means the Minister of National Revenue with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Act and I think we should make a change in that because people with the Department of National Revenue are lacking in totally understanding what the primary producers in this great country of ours are doing, how they operate, whereas the people in the Department of Employment and Immigration do have extensive knowledge and understanding of this sector of our economy. The Minister of National Revenue should not be included in this section. I am not blaming this Government because the Unemployment Insurance Act was under the Minister of National Revenue previously. However, we as legislators can do something positive about the piece of legislation which is before the House today. I would ask that when this Bill goes before committee, Hon. Members who scrutinize this legislation take a long and hard look at that and try to improve what has been very, very unfair in the past. Right now we have sort of goon squads going out and harrassing people because they have made some mistake, some innocent mistake, in filling out or filing their unemployment insurance claims. The RCMP sometimes are involved in this. Sometimes there is a difference between what the legislation says and what the regulations are described as saying. If we follow the regulations, as the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate has mentioned, in many instances we would find that, indeed, the person who is out there drawing unemployment would be in the clear. I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude by saying that I think all Hon. Members should have a serious look at this legislation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will even take my full 10 minutes but there are a few things I want to put on the record.

Mr. Gauthier: Go ahead.

Mr. Boudria: I think you ought to.

Mr. Nickerson: The Liberals should not shout and squawk over there because the first thing I am going to do is compliment the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). I would like to be associated with some of the remarks he made about the taxation of prospectors and the fact that under this Bill we are granting tax exemptions when it comes to capital gains to farmers, to real estate dealers, to people who deal in works of art, practically everyone except the prospector. In the part of the world I come from, which is not that different from the riding of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, prospectors feel they should have the same types of breaks and taxation as other people can avail themselves of. I do not want to get too complimentary to my friends on the other side of the House because it must be remembered that it was the Liberal Government which put the capital gains tax on prospectors in the first place. If I recall correctly, it was when Ron Basford was Minister of Finance that prospectors found themselves first subject to capital gains tax. That has had an adverse effect on the amount of effort going into mineral exploration, especially by the private individual.

Another point I would like to draw to the attention of the House is a point which might well be looked at when this Bill goes to committee. It deals with the surtax which is to be imposed on people earning relatively high incomes. The cut-off will be roughly around the $40,000 income mark. In certain parts of Canada, someone who is making $40,000 a year is doing quite well and perhaps can afford to pay the additional surtax. In other parts of Canada that amount of income is not that much. It may be only equivalent to an income of $25,000 or $30,000 in the southern parts. Many people in my constituency, especially those who work in the mining and oil and gas industries, will be affected by this special tax. They live in an area where costs are much higher than they are in other parts of Canada. They need a higher income in order to compensate for that higher cost of living. At the same time, they are doing very tough and arduous work, often under very difficult conditions. They work in the cold, quite often under dangerous circumstances. I think they are entitled to that extra compensation.

They are already subjected to higher rates of income tax bcause of the progressive nature of our income tax system and the imposition of this surtax will do them an even greater disservice. Most of the people are in circumstances in which they are unable to do anything except pay every lat nickel of tax which the Act imposes on them. They are earning straight salary and there is nothing they can do to hide some of that income as other people might. When this matter goes to committee the special circumstances of people who would otherwise be considered high income earners ut, because of the location in which they live and do their jobs, are not really that well off by comparison, should be taken into account.

One of the things which I would have liked to have seen in the Bill, which I understand will be addressed before the end of the calendar year as was promised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget in May, was the issue of taxation of northern benefits in a fair and equitable manner. As I indicated earlier, people in remote, high cost areas who receive more remuneration are put into a higher tax bracket and pay proportionately more taxes than would someone living in the southern part of the country. I am confident that that matter will be addressed by the Minister of Finance before the end of the year.

Mr. Boudria: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Nickerson: One of the good things contained in this Bill, among the many other good things, is the Crown priority in dealing with certain moneys in cases of bankruptcy. Cases have been brought to my attention, as I am sure they have been brought to the attention of other Members of the House, in which companies have gone bankrupt after deducting from employees' pay cheques income taxes, unemployment insurance premiums, and Canada Pension plan payments but not, for some reason, remitting those to the Receiver General of Canada. After the company has gone bankrupt, having deducted these moneys from the employees' pay cheques, the friendly Department of National Revenue has come along and demanded payment from those employees again.

Changes are being made through this Bill to give the Crown a degree of priority to take the first proceeds of the liquidation to be used, as it should be, for payment of taxes, unemployment insurance premiums, and Canada Pension Plan payments on behalf of the employees. This will do a lot to control a situation which has previously worked to the detriment of many people who have had money deducted from their pay cheques which was not turned over to the Government of Canada.

Those are the brief remarks which I wish to make, Mr. Speaker. I will now turn the floor over to my Liberal colleagues who, I am sure, want to proceed with this debate as long as they possibly can.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make my modest contribution to the debate on Bill C-84, a piece of legislation that contains a great number of measures, more than 60 from what I saw in leafing through the Bill. First of all, I have to admit that some of the measures the Bill contains are desirable, but I think defending those items should be left to Government Members. On the other hand, the Bill also contains measures I feel are unfair and ought to be changed. I intend to speak to these particular measures today and ask the Government to introduce some changes.

First of all, I notice the legislation proposes to levy a temporary eighteen-month surtax on basic federal income tax. I hope the Government does not think this surtax can substitute for the minimum tax on the wealthy we were promised and on which the Government is dragging its feet. Actually, the temporary surtax will be draining more money from the pockets of low- and middle-income taxpayers, their numbers being far greater than the number of high-income taxpayers. That is why I hope the Government does not imagine this surtax will be a substitute for the formal promise made by the Conservative Government that it would introduce a minimum income tax for those privileged Canadians with high incomes.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain it is becoming increasingly urgent for this Government to introduce a measure that will levy a minimum tax on people with high incomes, and I was astonished upon examining Bill C-84 to see that there was no such measure in the Bill.

Another measure I find unfair and which I believe should be amended by the Government is the proposal to reduce the taxpayer's personal exemption by 3 per cent, thus in fact de-indexing personal exemptions. In fact this procedure is similar to de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions which the Government tried to have the House adopt and which it had to withdraw because of public pressure. It is more or less the same approach the Government is proposing and still trying to take to family allowances. This particular measure is supposed to reduce personal exemptions which would normally increase with the consumer price index. In other words, if this year, consumer prices increased by about 5 per cent, next year, income tax exemptions would go up by the same percentage. The Government is proposing to de-index this increase by 3 per cent. In fact, this is a sneaky way to take money out of the pockets of taxpayers, very discreetly, without anyone realizing, and for that very reason this measure must be condemned.

The measure also has a proportionally greater impact on the low-income earner that the person with a high income. Granted, high-income taxpayers will pay a bit more, but in proportion to their total income tax, the impact of this measure will be minimal. So percentagewise, low-income earners are going to pay most of the income tax collected in this way. Furthermore, they are going to suffer most because their income tax is increasing more, proportionally, that the amount of income tax paid by the wealthy. I assume the Government may wish to think this over and present an amendment to restore the principle of equity to Bill C-84.

Another measure that worries me tremendously, especially because of the large number of low-income earners in my riding, is the proposal to reduce gradually the personal exemption for children until it reaches the level of family allowances. And here again, the poorest families are going to suffer most. I realize this measure will also affect high-income families, but the tax increase for a high-income family as a result of this measure is minimal if we consider the total income tax paid by a high-income earner. Besides, all things considered, there are so many low and average income families that the Government will collect a lot more taxes from them than from high income families. That is why I suggest that the unfairness of this measure lies in the fact that it amounts to a deindexation of personal income tax deductions.

The other provision which upsets me, Mr. Speaker, is the abolition of homeownership savings plans. Again this is a measure which directly affects low and average wage earners. Many of them will see in this measure the end of their dream to own their home one day and they will have to get used to the idea of being tenants for ever.

Mr. Speaker, this measure was not intended for high income Canadians, although some of them did benefit from it, I am sure. The measure was designed to enable average income taxpayers to buy a detached house or at least a duplex, something they could not have done otherwise.

This program was extremely popular, but its abolition spells the end of that dream.

I wish the Government would take time to reflect upon some of the inequities contained in Bill C-84 and refrain from attempting to push this measure through. I agree it contains some constructive provisions, however it is inequitable, and I have dealt with only a few of the unfair provisions of this Bill. It seems to me that the Government should take its time and seriously consider some of the worthwhile amendments which ought to be made to the Bill to make sure that justice will prevail.

And so, Mr. Speaker, to give the Government more time to consider the amendments which should be made to this Bill, I would like to move the following motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-84 be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are filibustering.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): No, we are not filibustering. This will give the Government enough time to reflect upon the inequities contained in this Bill and come back with acceptable amendments.

That is the amendment I would like to propose, Mr. Speaker, seconded by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

● (1620)

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate the amendment is only for six months. It should have been for 600 years. I have never seen anything more worthy of complete disregard. This Bill should be sent off with Rip Van Winkle for the next 600 years.

When one attempts to read this Bill, one sees that it is most complicated even to tax accountants and tax lawyers. As a matter of fact, the only identifiable jobs this Bill will create are for tax accountants and tax lawyers.

Mr. Gauthier: Even they are not happy.

Mr. Rodriguez: Even they are not happy because it is so highly complex and complicated. As a matter of fact, it seems that this Bill runs contrary to the goal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Tories to simplify tax law.

Mr. Brisco: Do you have to shout?

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, because you go to sleep. This is another example of the Tories talking out of both sides of their mouths.

Mr. Boudria: Typical Tories.

Mr. Rodriguez: Typical "supposi-Tories".

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Rodriguez: On the one hand they talk about simplifying tax law while, on the other hand, we have a highly complex Bill. Nevertheless, we know what is contained in the Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: You do not.

Mr. Hawkes: Not if it is complicated, you don't.

Mr. Rodriguez: We know what is contained in this Bill inspite of all the gobbledegook. If the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) wants to make a speech, I am not stopping him. He has a six month hoist amendment to which he can talk.

Mr. Blenkarn: I do not need to be recycled. I have already made a speech.

Mr. Rodriguez: We on this side of the House have always believed that the income tax system should be just. The income tax system should be progressive. It should be redistributive in nature. The three hallmarks of good income tax law are: "fairness, progressivity, redistributivity".

Mr. McLean: Say that again?

Mr. Rodriguez: The three hallmarks. That is the specificity of it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to get to its specificity for the benefit of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). If he can manufacture words, so can I. Surely he would not deny me that privilege.

Bill C-84 is unjust. It fails the test of those three hallmarks of the income tax system. It is an unfair Bill. Let me point out specific examples of its unfairness. The fact is that this Bill is superimposed on a system that is already unfair. That unfairness began after many years of Liberal Governments in this country. After years of study, the Carter Commission seemed to establish the principle that "a buck is a buck". The Liberal Government never had the courage to come to grips with the tax system because it knew that when it starts dealing with the tax system it is the graveyard for many a Finance Minister in this country.

We have a timid Minister of Finance who talks first about simplifying the tax system but makes it even more convoluted. Even the principle of fairness is being violated. For example, the budget proposals of May, 1985 clearly show that corporations will in fact contribute less to the support of Canada than ordinary Canadian taxpayers. Approximately 27 years ago corporations paid 50 per cent of Canada's tax burden. Today, as a result of the Tory Budget, they will be paying only 25 per cent while ordinary Canadian taxpayers will be picking up the other 75 per cent.

I should like to refer to a quotation of the Minister of Finance when he spoke to the Canadian Tax Foundation on November 28, 1984. He said that recent figures indicated that the effect of tax incentives—and that is a euphemism for loopholes; where it says "incentives", read as "loopholes"—had been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent. Also he indicated that when the benefit from special tax incentives, or loopholes, were added together, we were looking in some instances at an extraordinarily generous level of assistance.

Those are his friends. That is the world he knows. He came from Bay Street and brought his banker friends with him. They are all hiving in his Department. That is the kind of advice he is getting from his corporate friends. While they may tinker with a surtax for periods of time, when it all shakes down, corporations in fact contribute less to the support of Canada than ordinary Canadian taxpayers. Indeed, he had the bold-faced gall to say in a speech to the Canadian Economics Association in Montreal on May 30, 1985, that no matter how we defined the term, Canada had an acute shortage of rich people. I think he has it all wrong. It is not that we have a shortage of rich people; it is that we have too many poor people. I know what he is trying to do with the Budget. He is trying to make his prophecy come true. He is trying to ensure that his rich friends continue to become richer.

As a matter of fact, the public perceives the tax system as being unfair. When we read from the 1983 statistics, we see that 1,120 Canadians with incomes over $100,000 paid not a red cent in taxes. In the same year, 6,662 Canadians with income over $50,000 also paid absolutely nothing. Canadians are beginning to worry who is really carrying the country. Indeed, if the Government were really interested in eliminating the deficit, it could go to a report entitled Account of the Cost of Selective Tax Measures, which came out in August, 1985. In the section of the report dealing with selective tax measures for corporate income tax, we see the drainage from government revenues, all the forgone taxes which the Government does not collect because of tax deferrals and and other special tax measures for the corporate sector. If the Government were really interested in cutting the deficit, it would not cut social programs or deindex anything. All it has to do is collect the billions of dollars which are handed out to the corporate sector. This report is absolute dynamite. I see you giving me two fingers, Mr. Speaker. I hope your two fingers mean time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I am giving the Hon. Member an extra one minute, which means two minutes, not two fingers.

Mr. Rodriguez: You had me worried for a moment, Mr. Speaker. One item in the May Budget which makes absolutely no sense at all is the $500 million capital gains exemption. Who asked the Government to do that? It certainly was not the National Business Insitute. It certainly was not the Toronto Board of Trade. In fact, all knowledgeable corporate friends of the Government have said that it was a stupid thing to do. If the Government wanted to make it selective so that farmers who were selling their land would not have to pay capital gains, that could be done. The Government did not have to open it up to racehorse owners, standard bred horse owners, art entrepreneurs or the owners of condominiums in Florida. The Government did not have to do that. In fact, it has allowed them to make more money, and not one identifiable job will flow from that. I challenge any regressive Tory to stand in the House and tell us how that will create one job. In fact, we have heard comments from very informed individuals—

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Brisco: The answer is very simple, Mr. Speaker. We will have a by-election in his riding.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise at this stage in the debate on Bill C-84, to continue in the same vein as my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who just finished a speech that was far too short to my taste, because I think there is so much to say about this terrible Government Bill that debate ought to go on for at least six months.

What I find somewhat astonishing is that this Government, with its crushing majority, and with so many backbenchers, has failed to let them express their views on this Bill and tell the House what their constituents think about this entirely reactionary measure proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Actually, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-84, which is a Ways and Means Motion aimed at amending the Income Tax Act and a series of related statutes, shows the true colours of a Government that is very partial to the richer members of our society and to big business in Canada, a partiality that places a burden on low-income earners and small businesses in this country.

We could accept the Government's partial attitude towards the richest groups in this country, provided the Minister of Finance did not try to solve his deficit problems at the expense of Canada's least advantaged groups.

When we consider his Bill and especially the measures referred to by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, and I am talking about the measure that provides for a lifetime capital gains tax exemption . . . Starting in 1985, Canadians will gradually be exempted from paying income tax on capital gains, up to a maximum of $500,000, and this is a lifetime exemption. In other words, the richest people in this country are being given half a million dollars, thanks to the generosity of the Minister of Finance. The exemption applies to individual capital gains earned after 1984, and the purpose is to encourage risk-taking and business investment.

As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) pointed out, there is no guarantee that these measures will create jobs. At the present time 50 per cent of capital gains are taxable, which means that the exemption will in fact abolish taxes on $250,000 of eligible capital gains. The outright exemption now available to an individual who sells his main residence will be maintained and therefore will be in addition to this $500,000 cumulative exemption. Generally speaking, the new exemption will apply to the capital assets of individuals, except for share dividends and employee share purchase options.

What it means, Mr. Speaker, is that if you want to sell your collection of paintings you can make a handsome profit and not pay any tax. It means that if you own a few houses and are active in the real estate sector, buying and selling houses, you will not pay any tax. Quite obviously the two examples I gave will not create a single job in Canada. Yet the major problem in Canada is unemployment, and the Conservative Government had promised to create jobs for Canadians. And the highlight of the Budget of the Minister of Finance is an unconditional gift to the rich in our society, a gift which will not create a single job in Canada.

That is why we are against this provision in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. We believe it is quite unfair, particularly when we keep in mind some of the other Budget provisions which penalize poorer families and people in Canada. One that is particularly appalling is the partial indexation of deductions and tax brackets above the 3 per cent increase in the consumer price index. Then there is the gradual reduction in the maximum personal exemption for children until the exemption is equal to the annual family allowance payments. Finally, there is the cancellation of the RHOSPs, through which families and young couples were able to put some money aside to buy a home at some time in the future and which will no longer be available because the Government of Canada wants to make small savings by attacking the families who are the worst off in Canada and by reducing family allowances, while it has no qualms about giving $500,000 to the wealthiest in our society. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the capital gains tax exemption applies to a bare 4.2 per cent of Canadian taxpayers. Individuals with an annual income of over $50,000 will share 63.4 per cent of the benefits provided by the capital gains tax exemption.

I believe that Canadians have every reason to be concerned about the fact that the new capital gains tax exemption favours mostly those who have the highest incomes, whose incomes are made up largely by capital gains. It is obvious that such investments are only speculative. If the Minister of Finance had seen to it that this exemption applied only to investments in Canadian companies and in smaller businesses, we could have understood its objectives. However, there is no restriction provided in this bill, and I think that the Canadian Consumers Association was right to denounce this measure, and so was the Canadian Labour Congress. I would even say that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which had suggested that this type of exemption apply particularly to Canadian businesses, has every reason to feel betrayed by the measure proposed by the Minister of Finance.

For all these reasons, I can only oppose Bill C-84, which seems to me completely unfair for small wage-earners and which shows that the Conservative Government has only wealthy friends and does not really concern itself about ordinary Canadians.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as you know, Bill C-84 is a very important Bill. It contains many of the key elements of the May 23 Budget which are very important to ensuring the continuation of the excellent economic progress we have experienced during the course of the first year of our mandate. Over that period of time we have experienced probably the best economic performance in many, many years. We saw the announcement last Friday of a 6.6 per cent annual growth in the third quarter and a continuation of the excellent performance in the area of investment and housing starts. These are things which demonstrate clearly that Canadians are responding in a very positive and broad way to the initiatives we have taken over the course of the past year. Bill C-84 is designed to continue the positive forward thrust this Government has taken. Certainly it is the intention of this Government to move in a very forthright way to ensure that this progress we have experienced during the course of this year is maintained.

Over the course of the last month or so I have encountered a certain amount of concern on the part of Canadians, tax practitioners as well as people in the small, medium and large business community, who have expressed the concern that this legislation will not be in place prior to the end of this fiscal year. You are aware that we will be changing the method of considering income tax legislation. Previously it had been considered by the House of Commons in Committee of the Whole. We are now going to be using a new approach which will take this legislation into a legislative committee. It is essential that we move quickly to get this legislation into committee because that will give interested Canadians who have to advise their clients on the tax implications the opportunity to express their views on the various elements of this legislation, and do so in a timely way. People can then plan their affairs in advance of the next fiscal year. I do not want there to be any misunderstanding or uncertainty. I want it to be very clear that this Government is fully committed to the directions we have proposed in this Budget, in particular, the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption, the measures designed to help investment in small business, and various changes clearly designed to improve the investment climate, a climate which has demonstrated clearly that it will create jobs.

I want to inform the House that there have been consultations among representatives of the Parties in this House and it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 82 or Standing Order 83 with regard to the allocation of time for the second reading stage of Bill C-84. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House it is my intention to propose the following motion pursuant to provisions of Standing Order 84:

● (1650)

That, in relation to Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, one sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill.

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we waited long enough for the Bill to be introduced. Now it will leave us without our acceptance.

I think this is the seventh time the Government has used closure in the last little while, and most times it has been for the most important Bills. Before the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) leaves us, I would like to say that as reported on November 25, 1985, in The Citizen of Ottawa, that Hon. Member said the following not too long ago:

"If they carry this propensity towards closure far enough, what will we have? We could have a dictatorship in which everybody submits."

The same article contains the following quote:

"Closure is the mechanism put in place by the Liberal party to shut us up. It is a disgrace to Parliament . . . to my constituents and to Canadian citizens at large . . . It should not be permitted in the House."

Those were the words of the present Government Whip, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). Some Members of the Government did not use words which were quite so polite. For instance, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is quoted in the same article as saying the following:

"A sneaky, dirty trick," . . . "You are a snake."

Those were the words of Hon. Members of the Government when they were in Opposition as reported by The Citizen. They had those words to say whenever closure was brought in, and that was not as often as it has been brought in by this Government in the last few months. It was quite unusual then but it was unacceptable then and it is unacceptable now.

We remember the same Minister saying in the same tones back in May that the budget was tough but fair and a clear break from the past. What is the Government doing? It is taking billions of dollars out of the pockets of individual Canadians and passing that money to the corporate sector.

We are moving closer to the time of year when many children make wishes. By the way, the Government is not helping those children. It is increasing the number of children across the country who will not have their wishes come true this Christmas. I wish that rather than this continuous abomination of increased complexities in the Act, we could have put before the House a Bill which would be as simple as the Minister said it would be and a Bill which would be fair and progressive.

The understanding of democrats all over the world is that a taxation system should be fair and progressive. As my colleague suggested earlier, a taxation system must include several principles. One of those is progressiveness and another one is that those who are taxed must pay relative to what they earn. Neither of these principles have been accepted by the Government. In fact, the Bill does exactly the opposite.

The Government has a propensity to talk about all those people on welfare who should be working. Those people would love to be working but there are no jobs for them. The Government has made a little dent in the unemployment rate which it proudly displays but it does not talk about the 10 per cent of the population who are without jobs.

Rather than taking people off welfare, the Government passes a whole series of measures that will give welfare to the corporate sector. I remember a few years ago, we talked about the corporate welfare bums. When the Liberal Party was in power, it gave us many of the loopholes that are in place. What does this Government do? It piles further loopholes on top of those loopholes already in existence, making it possible for the more than 4,000 people who earn over $200,000 per year to pay no income tax at all. The previous Government eroded the progressive tax structure. This Government, regardless of how much it has promised a fair taxation system, is not doing anything about it.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) suggested that the wealthy should pay handsomely. We have not seen any measures to provide for that as yet. It is, however, spoken of quite often.

Let us look at the corporate welfare Bill. What does this Bill contain? Let us look at the measure that Progressive Conservative Members—and the very name of their Party is a contradiction—speak of most and that is the capital gains tax exemption. That measure supposedly exists to increase investment and jobs. No one has been able to tell us exactly how it will increase jobs. No one has been able to tell us how it will help the lower-income earners.

I must say that even as we talk about progressive legislation, many of us are forced, because of the inequities in the system, to support something which under ordinary circumstances we would consider quite regressive tax legislation. The capital gains tax in itself must be considered to be a regressive tax. However, because the tax harms those who own and operate their own businesses such as farmers and small businessmen, the capital gains tax exemption will be of some value to them but the greatest number of people who will use it have ne need of it. They are the ones who will receive the most benefit from it.

This has become a real concern on the part of the Opposition and the people of Canada. We feel that we must change the entire tax system without simply adding more loopholes and increasing the ways a person can get away without paying taxes. Let us begin with the basics and give everyone the kind of tax system they should have. If we did, we would soon be rid of the deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. So that we in the House who are not in on the secrets of the gods can understand what is going on, I understand there are deferred votes to be taken at 6 p.m. If one reads the projected order of business it says that at six o'clock we shall also proceed to the debate on the adjournment motion. I understand that this is contrary to Standing Order 46(7). Is it possible that the projected order of business be adjusted so that those of us who follow the Order Paper can understand and that when there is a vote called there will be no adjournment debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member raises a point of order upon which I would like to comment. The Order Paper does show as the projected business of the day a late show after the vote is taken. That will not happen this evening.

Mr. Gauthier: You also announced it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know that I announced it. Standing Order 46(7) states:

> When it is provided in any Standing or Special Order of this House that any specified business shall be continued beyond the ordinary daily time of adjournment or that any such business shall be forthwith disposed of or concluded in any sitting, the adjournment proceedings in that sitting shall be suspended unless the sitting is extended pursuant to Standing Order 19(4).

I appreciate what the Hon. Member has said. I regret that there might be some confusion. As always when the Hon. Member brings a matter such as this to the attention of the Chair he can see that we know what we are doing in the Chamber.

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a public inquiry into the exact functions and mandate of the agreement between Canada and the United States in regard to the Test Range at Nanoose, British Columbia, prior to the renewal of this agreement, due for signing in April, 1986.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to open debate on Motion No. 229 which calls for a full public inquiry before any signing of a renegotiated agreement between Canada and the United States on the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia.

As Hon. Members know, the present agreement expires in April and at the present time it looks probable that a new agreement will be signed at that time. If the Canadian Government has its way the Canadian people will know absolutely nothing about what is involved. In this case ignorance is not bliss. We have a need to know—we have a right to know—what the Americans are up to at Nanoose Bay. I suspect that if Canadians had all the facts there would be such a howl of protest that our Government would back right away from the agreement and that weapons testing at Nanoose would become a thing of the past. For that reason I moved Motion No. 229. I think it is important that we demand the facts and that we have an opportunity to obtain the facts so that we can debate this proposed agreement before it is signed rather than simply see another fait accompli.

Even without a public inquiry we already know enough about the Nanoose Test Range to be very worried and concerned. This is why a group of dedicated peace workers have established the Nanoose Conversion Campaign which is dedicated to changing Nanoose from military to peaceful purposes. They have established a peace camp along the Island Highway where they monitor the comings and goings of American submarines. They hand out information and they draw attention to the threat posed by the test range. It is important to note the dedication of these people and that even in the present unseasonable sub-zero weather on Vancouver Island they are continuing to maintain their camp and presence.

From across Canada the Nanoose Conversion Campaign has drawn some 3,500 signatures on two petitions calling for a public inquiry and urging that the agreement not be renewed. In the absence of any government indications so far that there would be a public inquiry, the Gabriola Island Peace Association is sponsoring a peoples' inquiry into the test range. The association will be holding hearings in Nanaimo on January 18 and 19 and Bishop Remi do Roo and Mel Hurtig will be acting as moderators. There are a number of distinguished people who will be appearing before the panel since a great many people are concerned about what is happening at Nanoose Bay.

The peoples' inquiry will ask the following quetions. First, are nuclear weapons carried into Nanoose? As we know, the United States Government refuses to confirm or deny their presence. The inquiry will also ask: Who is in charge, Ottawa or Washington? It will ask whether Canadian territory should be used to promote the escalation of the arms race between the superpowers. It will ask whether nuclear-powered vessels are polluting our waters with radiation. Other issues which will be looked at by the peoples' inquiry include the strategies of submarine warfare, the economics of converting the base to peaceful uses and the effects of a nuclear attack on Nanoose Bay. The inquiry will want to look at Nanoose in the context of a nuclear-free Pacific. It will want to consider the position of the three main political Parties. One function of the debate today will be to obtain a clear idea of where the different Parties stand. People already know where the New Democratic Party stands. We passed a motion at our last convention indicating that we were opposed to the renewal of the treaty.

While I commend the people who are organizing this inquiry and who are working hard to ensure that it is taking place at a high level, I have to ask why it should be necessary for private citizens to carry out what should be a Government responsibility. I am pleased that public-spirited citizens have not abdicated from their responsibility in spite of the bad example set by their Government.

Over the past year submarine watchers at both Nanoose Bay and Esquimalt have been concerned about the increase in the number of visiting submarines capable of carrying nuclear weapons. For example, according to Jane's Fighting Ships and Jane's Weapons Systems, the United States submarine Salt Lake City, which has visited Nanoose several times this year, is equipped with SUBROCs. These are anti-submarine missiles with a one kilo-ton nuclear charge. The Salt Lake City is also capable of being fitted with 12 sea-launched Cruise missiles known as Tomahawks. Tomahawks can carry either conventional or nuclear warheads. Other submarines with potential Tomahawk capability which have been seen at Nanoose this year include the La Jolla, Drum, Pintado and Flasher. These vessels are all capable of being fitted with Tomahawks. They are slated to be fitted with these sea-launched Cruise missiles and they already have the SUBROCs which, as I mentioned, carry a one kilo-ton nuclear charge.

I wrote to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) last June asking him some questions about what was happening at Nanoose and whether or not it was Canadian policy that we did not even ask the United States whether or not its vessels carried nuclear weapons. The Minister of National Defence replied on July 31, and I quote:

—it is the policy of the United States . . . to neither confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons on board its naval vessels including submarines. It is the practice of the Canadian Government to respect this policy.

In regard to the Canadian/US jointly funded Test Range at Nanoose, the use of the Range by US Navy nuclear propelled and possibly nuclear armed submarines is a defence arrangement whereby Canada contributes to and supports the maritime defence capability of our NATO partner. The weapons (torpedos) and sensors (sonobuoys) used on the Range are not armed with explosives of any kind, instead, electronic instrumentation for testing and trials is employed at all times.

● (1710)

I will certainly take the Minister's word that nuclear weapons themselves are not being tested at Nanoose. I do not think we have made that charge. We have been asking what is happening there. We have been raising concerns that systems which will be employed with nuclear weapons are being tested there.

We have been assured by the people in charge that the Nanoose base is not being used for testing the guidance system of the Tomahawk missile. We have been assured that it is not being used for testing the launch system of the Tomahawk missile. What we would then like to know is why are these vessels in Nanoose? Why has the Salt Lake City seen fit to be back and forth from that base several times? We would like to have the answers to those questions.

An Hon. Member: It's a good harbour.

Mr. Manly: Yes, it is a good harbour. I am pleased to see that at least one Conservative Member recognizes that it is a good harbour. I would like to suggest that there are probably better uses to put a good harbour to than for testing weapons which have nuclear capability. I hope that perhaps some of the Conservatives can see that there are better uses for that harbour as well.

I think we have to be very concerned about Nanoose in the global context. Americans right now plan for some 758 Tomahawks, or the sea-launch cruise missiles, in a fleet of 140 ships and submarines stationed around the world. The head of the United States cruise missile program, Admiral Stephen Hostettler, said this will allow virtually all Navy combatants, not just the carrier battle groups, to go on the offensive whenever necessary and from any corner of the globe. He described Tomahawk deployment as "a new threat spectrum to the Soviets through a world-wide strike capability". The Tomahawks "presents the Soviets with a formidable threat from a 360 degree axis". I do not agree with my Conservative colleague that presenting a 360 degree threat to the Soviets is going to be of any protection to me or to him either.

In what may be one of the most forward-looking statements ever made by promoters of nuclear weapons, we learn that Tomahawks will be helpful not only in World War III, but perhaps in World War IV as well. They will come in handy after Armageddon.

According to an article by William M. Arking, in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientist, Admiral Frank B. Kelso, Director of the Strategic Submarine Division of the Navy, explained to Congress in 1981 that Tomahawks will not be automatically launched in a general war scenario but will remain available so that the United States would, in any post-nuclear exchange environment, retain a measure of coercive power.

Nuclear Armaments

Admiral William Williams, Director of the Navy's Strategic and Theatre Nuclear Warfare Division, said in 1981 that the Tomahawk is the sort of weapon which will have great influence in the post-war struggle as a portion of the strategic reserve, that is, those weapons which survive the massive nuclear axchanges. This kind of bizarre post-Armageddon planning for the world war which might follow I believe illustrates the degree to which some of these people have slipped their moorings in terms of any contact with the kind of reality in which most people want to live.

I have just received Ruth Sivard's analysis of World Military and Social Expenditures distributed in Canada by Project Ploughshares. Ms. Sivard points out that in the 40 years since World War II, our world has spent between $3 trillion and $4 trillion to create a nuclear arsenal which would mean global suicide if it was ever used. We now have enough nuclear capability to kill 58 billion people, that is every man, woman and child on earth 12 times over. Yet, we will this coming year spend an additional $800 billion for military programs.

At the same time, every day of the year, some 14,000 children in Africa alone died of hunger or hunger-related causes. That is the kind of world we are living in and that is the kind of context in which we have to look at Nanoose.

In 1982, the United States spent $196 billion on the military while the Soviet Union was not far behind with $170 billion. However, these expenditures have not brought safety or security to either country—quite the reverse. It has brought a degree of insecurity to our entire world. I think it is time that we began to call a halt to this and the place where we must start, of course, is in our own backyard. That is why I am very concerned about Nanoose.

Admittedly, Nanoose is a small part of the total problem. Ms. Sivard points out that every year the United States loses about $1 billion of military equipment. It has such a stockpile that it can lose $1 billion worth of equipment and not know where it goes. Perhaps Nanoose falls into that category. Perhaps the Americans do not even know that Nanoose is there. We know it is there and we know it is not serving a very helpful purpose. We would like to see more detail about what is happening there.

It is supposed to be Canadian Government policy that we do not allow nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. That has been reiterated by the present Government a number of times. However, what good is this policy if we do not even make inquiries about whether or not American vessels carry nuclear weapons when they enter Canadian harbours? What kind of policy is that? It remind me of the story I read in last week's newspaper about a woman who was running an escort service in Victoria. The escort service was involved in some rather strange activities, but she claimed she did not know what happened after the escorts met the gentlemen, that that was not her concern. She just arranged the basic date and what happened after that was none of her concern. The Canadian Government is taking the same kind of see no eveil attitude. It is not interested in what is happening with these vessels which come into Canadian harbours.

Little New Zealand had the courage to refuse entry to American vessels which do not comply with its nuclear weapon-free policy. This is not an anti-American policy. It is a policy which looks toward world peace. It is a policy which looks toward greater world security. Canada should be willing to take such a step. By refusing to take that kind of step we leave people worried that the base at Nanoose is being used to further the nuclear arms race.

People on Saltspring Island worry that a radio repeating station related to the United States Navy has been established on one of their local mountains. They see this as a link to a growing American military presence at Nanoose. They want no part of it at all. They see this as the sort of thing that over the years can escalate and they say that now is the time to stop.

People in Esquimalt have been told that Polish fishing vessels will no longer be able to have routine servicing maintenance work done in their harbour. The reason given by the federal Government is that it is for security purposes. It is interesting to note that even the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), who himself is a former Minister of National Defence, claims he fails to see any security threat from Polish fishing vessels in Esquimalt Harbour. What is the security threat there? The only possible threat which has been suggested to me is that we have the occasional presence of American submarianes and we are losing $20 million a year in business to the Americans because of American security concerns when its submarines enter that harbour. The people of Esquimalt would like to know more about this threat to their economy. People in the Nanoose area would like to know what the effect is of radioactive leakage on their fishery or on their health. They would like to know what monitoring process is in place. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we do not know.

We do not know the answers to a lot of these questions, but we have a lot of concerns. We know enough already to be concerned. We want more information. The people of Canada are entitled to have more information and that is why I am urging the Government to set up a public inquiry. We need the inquiry to find out what part Nanoose is playing in the nuclear arms race. We want that information. Second, we want to determine what effects having the base at Nanoose is having on the health of people and on our economy. I urge the Government and Members opposite to support this motion. I look forward to their co-operation and to a public inquiry.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern for peace and security in the world. Canada does not take not take a back seat to anyone in being in favour of a comprehensive test ban and in its feelings about the amount of nuclear weapons we have. That is so why we were so heartened by the Gorbachev-Reagan meeting which took place, which meeting will begin a conversation and ongoing relationship between them which, hopefully for all of us, will lead to a way to eliminate nuclear weapons as well as all conventional weapons in order that we can all live in peace and security.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has drawn the attention of the House to the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range located at Nanoose Bay off Vancouver Island. I am very glad to have the opportunity to speak on the Member's resolution. In order that Members of the House will understand a little better what we are talking about, I would like to elucidate today on how this range functions and how it acts in support of the Maritime defence forces of Canada, the United States, and the remaining NATO allies as well as Australia and New Zealand.

The use of Nanoose Bay by both the Canadian Forces and the United States Navy was the subject of discussions which culminated with the signing of an agreement on May 12, 1965, establishing the Nanoose three-dimensional range. The range became operational early in 1966. The original agreement remained in force for a 10-year period and provided for renegotiation thereafter. The agreement was renewed for a second 10-year period on April 14, 1976. Members will be aware that the present agreement expires next year in April, 1986.

The resolution before us suggests that there should be a public examination of the exact mandate and functions of the agreement. I suggest that this agreement, which is public and the terms of which are well known, has been the subject of public examination for some years. I would also suggest that our discussion today is an additional public examinatino to which I am happy to contribute. Allow me to say a few words about the functions and the Canadian and American responsibilities at the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range located at Nanoose.

The primary functions of the Nanoose facility assumed by Canada are: (a) operation and maintenance of the Nanoose three-dimensional range; (b) Canadian ships' systems trials such as torpedo launching trials; (c) Canadian torpedo tracking (depth, direction and speed) trials; and (d) Canadian anti-submarine warfare sensors (sonobuoys) proofing and testing.

By the terms of the joint agreement, Canada is responsible for: (a) construction and maintenance of all fixed facilities including buildings, roads, jetties, power, water, et cetera; (b) provision of technicians and personnel to operate the facilities; (c) provisionof range vessels and crews; and (d) administration, security and operational control of the Nanoose three-dimensional range. The United States is responsible for: (a) supply, installation and maintenance of all technical equipment for operation of the three-dimensional range; (b) provision of technical personnel; (c) provision of all technical training for range personnel, both Canadian and American; and (d) provision of range vessels and crews.

The available operating time on the three-dimensional range is allotted equally between Canada and the United States. Historically, Canada has not used all of its allotted share of range time. The United States Navy may utilize available range time in excess of its share in return for financial recompense. Although the existing agreement is a collaborative arrangement between Canada and the United States, the commanding officer of the facility is always a Canadian and operational control is Canadian. Further, the weapons tested at Nanoose are never armed. That is, the explosives that would normally fill the warheads are replaced by telemetry.

The Maritime facilities at Nanoose are not only fundamental to Canada's security concerns, but also contribute in a very measurable way to the defensive capabilities of the United States and the remaining NATO navies as well as Our Pacific Rim friends, Australia and New Zealand.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the previous speaker that this treaty has been discussed and rediscussed and has had a full public airing since its original signing some two decades ago is obviously not borne out by the facts. The fact of the matter is that, even as he said in his own statement today, the nuclear warheads have been replaced by telemetry which, in some way, is supposed to make Canadian people feel more secure because, although there is capacity for nuclear warheads to be on the ships, they are not on them. One of the reasons that it is incumbent upon us to entertain the kind of public input suggested by the Member in his motion is that a lot of people across Canada have concerns about our role in treaties which have previously been signed and treaties which are currently under negotiation.

Let us look, for example, at the issue surrounding the Antiballistic Missile Treaty. The United States Government continues to assure the world that it does not want to incorporate a first-strike capacity into its development of star wars research. It says that it is not interested in a first-strike capacity yet, quite clearly the emanations from Washington, through the President, have shown people around the world that he is looking upon the development of SDI as another means of achieving a nuclear capability in international warfare.

I believe that we have need for a full and open public discussion on this particular treaty and that we should expand that to include a full public airing of the Government's position on SDI. On the one hand we have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stand in the House and say that the Government does not have a direct role to play in SDI. On the other hand, we have heard those same Ministers, as well as other Members, say that they are prepared to look aside and take no action when private companies get into star wars development through contracts with the United States. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, that is, as my hon. friend from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell says, a Pontius Pilate approach to our role in international affairs.

We have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs and other members of the Conservative Party say that they do not feel that the Government has the capacity to play a leadership role in this area. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I attended a meeting some months ago in the Province of Quebec where a representative of the Government said that it loved the star wars development concept and that the only problem was that the Government did not have enough money to pursue it itself on an individual basis. In fact, they were applauding behind the scenes as private companies contributed to the SDI development effort by their contracts with the United States Government and the United States defense department. Quite clearly a double message is being sent to Canadians. Not only is it of great necessity to have this particular treaty examined with much public scrutiny by Canadians, it is also imperative that that type of public scrutiny be applied to the greater question of Canada's involvement in the development of nuclear capacity vis-à-vis the United States.

At one time there was a principle in this country that Canada would never hold nuclear weapons on our soil. The member of the Conservative Party who just spoke mentioned that we needed to have greater development not only only under the NORAD agreement and with NATO countries, but also with the group of ASEAN countries. In fact, we have seen New Zealand take an extremely progressive position in telling the Government of the United States that there is not a place in New Zealand for nuclear warheads.

Notwithstanding the guarantees made by Conservative Members in the House today, we have not had that kind of unequivocal commitment from the Government. The Hon. Member said that the operation is in fact headed by a Canadian. We had those same kind of shallow, do nothing assurances from the Government with respect to the Polar Sea. The Government said that it was in control of the situation with respect to the invasion of our sovereign Arctic waters by the Polar Sea.

In fact, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) are prepared to prosecute the very people with the Council of Canadians who went to drop a flag on the Polar Sea to show all the world that the Arctic waters are Canadian. They were the only group, with the exception of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who were prepared to take a stand in the Arctic and tell the people of Canada that those are our waters and they will not be infringed by any power, even our great and good neighbour to the south.

In fact, the Government should have given the Council of Canada the Order of Canada for being prepared to recognize the sovereignty of our Arctic waters. However, it washed its hands of the invasion of our sovereign waters by the Polar Sea and at the same time prosecuted the pilot of that small plane who brought this whole question of the Polar Sea to the attention of Canadians. That is the Government's perception of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. That is its perception when it comes to dealing with very crucial issues like star wars development.

Is it not the responsibility, the obligation and the right of every Canadian to be involved in the debate surrounding SDI research? The Prime Minister and the Government say no to star wars. After the Prime Minister has finished his Decima, he says no to star wars. After he has contacted his pollsters and felt the pulse of the nation, having seen the poll and the public perception on the issue he stands in strong and courageous fashion he says no to star wars.

At the same time, in his unyielding desire to be all things to all people, he goes to the back door of companies and says that the Government cannot be involved because it does not have the capacity or resources but those companies have the full blessing of the Government to go full steam ahead.

Is that an unequivocal opposition to star wars research and the involvement of the Canadian people in star wars development? In fact, it is another example of the Government's apparent desire to make promises and commitments throughout the country, to tell one group that it has its support while standing behind an opposite group. The Prime Minister did not have the guts to state his position on SDI, so he told the people that the Government opposed it. However, he told the companies that the Government supported that initiative.

We are facing the same type of equivocation on the free trade issue. The Prime Minister emerged relatively unscathed after the conference. In an attempt to create the perception of harmony, he launched an agreement. Quite clearly, the Prime Minister did not have the courage to show up in the House today. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs was questioned about the agreement and whether there was veto power involved, as perceived by the provinces, he did not have an answer. Again, he wanted to say one thing to the provinces, one thing to the federal Government, something else to the people of the United States and give another message to the people of Canada.

It is quite clear that we cannot leave this question to Government propaganda and the salesmanship of the Conservatives. It is clear that they are salesmen because they perpetrated the biggest sales job on the people of Canada on September 4.

Mr. Holtmann: Don't cry.

Ms. Copps: We know what the "con-servative" Party means as a result of that particular salesmanship job.

The Member says that I am crying. I am not crying. It is the senior citizens of this country who are crying. The farmers of this country are crying.

Mr. Holtmann: They are happy. I represent farmers.

Ms. Copps: The families of this country who are about to lose the fullness of their family allowance are crying. The shoe workers are crying. Believe me, it will be the Conservative Party that will be crying the real blues after the next election as they see their numbers decimated in the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Get to the topic.

Ms. Copps: That is off the topic but I am being provoked, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Holtmann: You love it.

Ms. Copps: It is very difficult when I am being provoked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I would not want the Hon. Member to be provoked. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has the floor. Allow her to have the extra few minutes.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, there are several questions at stake here. There is the question of credibility, whether we will be able to have a full airing of the question without a public inquiry, and whether we are prepared to leave to bureaucrats, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the minions the very serious question of the agreement between Canada and the United States which is up for renegotiation in April, 1986.

Given the current record of the Government as it relates to SDI development, given the current spineless action of the Government as it relates to the renegotiation of the ABM treaty and given the current decision of the Government not to pursue an independent foreign policy whether it concerns star wars development, Third World issues or other major questions in which Canada used to be an honest broker, I believe that we cannot leave this question to the Government and the bureaucrats.

Indeed, we support the demand for a full public inquiry so that all the facts concerning this very important treaty can be put on the table and Canadians can finally have their say about the future of their country, particularly as it relates to the possibility of nuclear warheads on our soil.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat confused. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said that it was wrong to send out double messages. Yet she talks about Nanoose and the SDI initiative in the same breath. She talked about the Polar Sea incident but forgets to mention that the Government was hamstrung about what to do because the Liberal Party, of which she is a member, did not leave us with the type of Canadian Armed Forces we needed to protect our sovereignty in the North.

Furthermore, she said that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is without guts. What kind of guts did it take for him to go to Winnipeg and tell the French Canadians in Manitoba that they had just as many rights as Francophones in Quebec? How much courage does it take to tackle an incredibly faltering Canadian economy which was left by her Government and reduce the unemployment rate by 1.3 per cent and bring down the prime rate? That took a lot of guts by our Prime Minister. I should stay on the topic since I just chastised the Hon. Member for not doing so.

I listened with great interest to the points raised by my colleague and Vancouver Island neighbour, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly). I was touched by his sincerity but I could not help but be reminded of a passage from the book Canada Views the United States in which the authors relate the report in a British newspaper of a young wayward girl who had been brought into court for falling into a dissolute life. The newspaper stated in a disdainful manner that the reason the girl had fallen into disrepute was that: " . . . she had been associating with Americans".

● (1740)

I, too, have been known to associate with Americans. They are our best friends and allies. We are aligned with them economically and militarily. That fact should underscore this debate on the renewal of the agreement between our two nations on CFMETR. The Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental Test Range at Nanoose Bay in my riding is a symbol of the quiet co-operation between Canada and the United States. It is in our nation's best interest to renew the agreement, because, as a maritime nation and as a member of NATO, we must accept some responsibility to provide continued access to our allies maritime forces.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that I said: "allies", for it is not just the Americans who utilize METR, as it is known in my riding, but the Australians and the non-nuclear New Zealanders as well. Nor should we neglect the contribution of the base to the local economy. It has been considerable over the last 20 years of this agreement. The present employment figure at METR is, I believe, 217 personnel, 107 of whom are Canadian. In his speech today, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands neglected to point out the estimated influx from the base of $10 million per year to the central island economy. He mentions the potential loss of $20 million to Victoria with the possible loss of the Polish fleet, yet he wants to take $10 million out of the central island economy, my riding.

Perhaps it would be wise to take a brief look at the history of the Nanoose Bay area and then examine what actually goes on at the base. The name "Nanoose Bay" means the settlement at the head of the bay. It first appeared officially on the map in 1859. The meaning is derived from the Indian word "Nuas", meaning to push or work in, as Nanoose Harbour pushes inland from the Strait of Georgia. The Indian history of the local area is sketchy, and no accurate records exist. Finally, it is known that various tribes inhabited the area and that the Nanooas lived there prior to 1800. Much of the recorded Indian history has been obtained from one man—a Nanoose Indian appropriately named "Nanoose Bob" who was the sole male survivor of a massacre in 1823 by a band at war with the Nanoose at the time. Perhaps my colleague from Cowichan could have asked someone like Nanoose Bob about the value of being able to protect oneself from one's enemies. Anyway, Nanoose Bob combined an extraordinary capacity to recall the words and legends of his forefathers with a physical vigour—and you may envy this, Mr. Speaker—which enabled him to marry eight times and live to the age of 108.

The first Europeans to visit the area were the Spanish map makers in the 1790s. Their detailed charts indicate that they spent several years in the area, as even small islands such as Maude, Mistaken and the Ballenas were all accurately charted. John Enos, a Portugese sailor, was the first European to take up land in the Nanoose Bay area. He arrived in 1863, landing on what he called "Nanoose Bay Peninsula" and what we now call "Powder Point". In time he owned the whole peninsula, which he developed over the next 35 years into a major holding of orchards, agricultural and pasture land.

In 1912, the property was purchased by a giant powder company which continued to make explosives there for many decades. It is worth noting that in clearing the site for the powderhouse foundations, they uncovered evidence of the mass slaughter of 1823. Ranching eventually returned to the area and persisted after the Department of National Defence purchased some 617 acres along the south shore of the peninsula in 1953.

At the time, the Canadian Forces was operating a torpedo test range at Patricia Bay, just north of Victoria. The "Pat Bay" range afforded a sheltered but confined operation area. However, as torpedoes became more sophisticated, their underwater speeds increased, target identification ranges increases, operating depths were extended and torpedo endurance increased. Both Canada and the United States were faced with the problem of finding suitable waters in which these torpedoes could be run and tested to their design limits.

An area in the Strait of Georgia adjacent to Nanoose Harbour seemed ideally suited for such activities. The area was of interest to the Canadian Navy and to the United States Navy, as it met most of their additional requirements for the operation of a fully instrumented, three-dimensional torpedo tracking range. In 1962, a temporary installation was established in Nanoose Bay, and this initial survey and evaluation of the range verified the usefulness of the area.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner), has already mentioned, the use of Nanoose Bay by both the Canadian Forces and the United States Navy was the subject of discussions which culminated with the signing of an agreement on May 12, 1965, establishing the Nanoose three-dimensional range. The range became operational early in 1966. That is a bit of history about the area. I know it is germane and important to this debate.

Also it should be noted that although the existing agreement is a collaborative arrangement between Canada and the United States, the commanding officer of the facility is always a Canadian. The person is Michael Dunn right now. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is ever in the area, she could meet him. Operational control remains Canadian. Also, the weapons tested at Nanoose are never armed, that is, the explosives which would normally fill the warheads are replaced by telemetry.

During the description of the Hon. Member for Dollard of the functions of the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental Test Range, mention was made of the three-dimensional range. I should like now to offer a brief description of this facility. The rance covers an effective area 15 miles long and varies in width from two to five miles, giving a total instrumented area in excess of 50 square miles. This instrumented area is contained in a large, mud-bottom through, extending southeast toward the Fraser River delta and providing water depths of 1,000 to 1,480 feet. The area is known on the charts as "Whiskey Gulf".

On the ranger, specially instrumented objects may be tracked in three dimensions throughout the instrumented portion of the range. Tracking is implemented through the use of a complex system of transducers, receivers and computers. Evenly spaced about the seabed under the range are 24 arrays, each holding about four acoustic hydrophones. Acoustic pulses from the object being tracked are received by this bottom-mounted array. They are amplified, multiplexed and relayed to a computer site. The computer then demultiplexes the information and analyses it to provide an accurate position for the object being tracked. Thus, the moment by moment functioning of a torpedo being trialed is available for detailed analysis.

In addition, Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental Test Range conducts the sample proofing and testing of sonobuoys procured for the Canadian Forces anti-submarine warfare—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member, but I remark that he is reading his speech. I believe that that is not permitted according to the rules of the House. However, it has happened, and the real question is: Does he or does he not approve of the inquiry which his constituents are seeking?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. That is not a point of order. If the Hon. Member has some notes in front of him, that is fine. We are entitled to have notes in front of us. I see no problem with that.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I will get to the point. We have just seen a demonstration of why it is said that NDP stands for "no darned patience".

It has been my intention to outline for Members the utility of this maritime facility at Nanoose and to illustrate that, through a co-operative arrangement with the United States, we have available to Canada a modern and "state of the art" maritime test range for proving defensive anti-submarine warfare systems.

To portray the importance to Canadian security of this kind of facility, let me present the figures on Soviet submarine strength for two of its four fleets. In the Soviet northern fleet, there are 40 ballistic firing submarines and 135 attack or anti-shipping submarines. In the Soviet Pacific fleet, there are 24 ballistic missile firing submarines and 97 attack submarines. This totals four short of 300 nuclear propelled submarines, without the addition of its Baltic and Black Sea-Mediterranean submarine fleets. This is a submarine capability of disturbing proportions. It is not diminishing, and it clearly signals that Canada must maintain and promote our maritime anti-submarine warfare defences.

Perhaps Members of Parliament who oppose CFMETR or METR should also oppose the continuing threat to world peace of the Russian submarine base at Murmansk. Or, perhaps those in the NDP, who are so quick to oppose anything military, should read a recent address before the United Nations, delivered in stirring tones by one of their own—former Ontario NDP Leader, Stephen Lewis, now Canadian Ambassador to the UN. "Lewis is to be applauded for his forthrightness", said one headline.

What did he say? Ambassador Lewis provided an eloquent denunciation of a brutal colonial war and a regime which violates human rights as a matter of policy. He pointed out that more than a million Afghans have been slaughtered since the revolution and that up to a quarter of the population of 20 million has left the country. We can ask the Afghans if they value properly trained men and women, capable of defending their country. We can ask the Afghans if they believe in strength, if they support the proper testing of military equipment and if peace, very often, comes from strength. While we are at it, let us ask the same questions of the Poles, the Czechs, the Hungarians or the millions of other east Europeans who live beneath the boot of the Warsaw Pact. Let us ask our colleagues in the NDP to name one occasion, one time, when NATO invaded another nation.

The Nanoose facility is an integral part of Canada's contribution to the maritime forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. It helps to preserve the peace which some of us have come to appreciate, and it ensures our continued security.

Let me close my contribution to this debate by quoting from my own mail on the issue. One constituent wrote in a letter dated November 13: "With the sad state of the Canadian Armed Forces courtesy of our previous Government I feel that the use of this bay and the range in Georgia Strait is one small contribution that Canada can make to the defence of North America. And activity by U.S. ships should be welcome." Then there is this letter from the Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce dated November 25: "The Economic and Government Affairs Committee of the Greater Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce is in full support of renewing the agreement for the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental Test Range in Nanoose Bay. The base provides considerable employment to the surrounding area and is a major contributor to the economy of Nanaimo. It is essential that this entity be maintained to provide ongoing economic benefit to the surrounding communities."

The Maritime facilities at Nanoose Bay are not only fundamental to Canada's security concerns, but they also contribute in a very measurable way to the defensive capabilities of the U.S., the NATO navies, and our Pacific Rim friends in Australia and New Zealand. This agreement means over 100 jobs and approximately $10 million for that fragile central island economy. The agreement has worked for Canada and our friends for two decades and it should be renewed next April for a stronger Canada and a lasting peace.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is an issue of importance not only on Vancouver Island. It touches us all. It is an issue which has been extremely important in the politics of our sister country in the Commonwealth, New Zealand, and it should conern my constituents in Ottawa Centre as well as those of my friend from Cowichan, Malahat and The Islands. The issue is whether Canadians should accept the presence of American or other vessels in our waters while carrying nuclear arms on board. That is the key question raised by this motion which asks for a public inquiry into what goes on in this testing range, and in particular the presence of nuclear arms surface vessels and submarines which it is believed put into port there. Perhaps when the Americans send a ship to Nanoose Bay they always leave their nuclear weapons behind. However, it is clear that those vessels customarily carry nuclear arms. The question I ask is whether it is appropriate that Canada allow itself to become a target for retaliation in the case of a shoot-out between the Americans and the Soviet Union, or whether those sea-borne missiles should stay in either international or U.S. waters. That was the question in New Zealand as well.

Let us look at some the issues raised somewhat eloquently by various Members in this debate. I have no objection to the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) saying that there is support in his area for the economic benefits of the Nanoose range. This is one factor to be taken into account. I am not sure whether he is saying that it is all right to have nuclear weapons in the immediate vicinity provided enough jobs are created. If the number of jobs went down perhaps he would take a stand on principle and say it is all right to exclude them and eliminate these tests. That may or may not be his position. However, whatever the principle involved, I think the people have the right to know exactly what is going on. That is what is being proposed here.

The Nanoose facility, as was indicated in the debate, has been used for sea-borne weapons testing for a number of years. Perhaps it was originally used purely for conventional testing. However, many of the weapons being tested there now have the potential to carry nuclear warheads as well. I would like to know, on behalf of my constituents, exactly what the situation is. Is it inevitable that any weapons carried by warships in this day and age are potentially usable for nuclear purposes? If that is the case, then I am not exactly sure what kind of position one takes concerning the use of the Nanoose facility for unarmed weapons of a type which could be used for nuclear purposes. What I do know is this. If Canada is to make a contribution to the denuclearization of the conflict between the western and eastern blocs, we have to be vigilant and ensure there is not continued proliferation. Anyone who has looked at these matters knows that one way to stop the nuclear arms race is to stop testing. If they cannot be tested then they are not going to be used. No one will risk putting into operation arms which they have not had an opportunity to test. We know that the failure rate can be quite substantial. Therefore, tests are required. One of the preconditio;ns for nuclear arms reduction is ensuring that no further arms are tested to the point where they can be deployed. After you ban tests then you can ban future deployment. After you ban deployment you can talk about reducing the numbers. Both the U.S. and the Soviet Union have proposed 50 per cent cuts in their nuclear arsenals. After you get to that point you have to start to talk about other means by which the two superpowers and their allies can talk about other confidence-building measures by which the threat of war would come to an end.

I recognize that is a long process but you have to start somewhere. My Party was extremely critical of the previous Liberal Government because it permitted cruise missile testing over Alberta. I find it hypocritical for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to get up and state how solidly her Party deplores the presence of nuclear vessels in Nanoose. The Government formed by her Party when it was in power was no different than the present Government with respect to nuclear-armed American vessels entering Nanoose Bay or other harbours. I am told that at the other end of the country, in Halifax, there is a regular presence of American nuclear-armed submarines. I am told that if you have a dinghy or rowboat you can row out there, the sailors will come out and say, "Hi, boys" and wave and be very friendly. At the same time they are carrying weapons of death and destruction and this makes Halifax a number one target should the Russians ever choose to let off some missiles on American nuclear missile bases. That is intolerable.

There is time for this motion to come to a vote so let me just appeal to Members of the House. This motion does not say that under no condition should Nanoose Bay remain open. It simply says that the people in this area are asking that an inquiry be held to find out what is going on and what the risks are. They want to know whether nuclear-armed vessels are going into this test range in order to then determine whether that is desirable or not. I therefore ask my colleagues to support this motion and allow it to come to a vote in the minute or two remaining.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to add a few comments to this debate. I am sorry there is so little time left.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, allow the vote. Sit down.

Mr. Crofton: It might have been helpful to Members of the House to have an opportunity to listen to someone who has actually served in the navy talk about one of our naval bases.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crofton: I have heard a lot of arrant nonsense from Members opposite on this subject today. I am glad that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) managed to slip the word "Nanoose" into his speech at the very end because he talked about everything else but that. I can understand members of the NDP wanting to close down a military base because they are opposed to our involvement in NATO and NORAD.

Mr. Manly: We are asking for a public inquiry.

Mr. Crofton: It is unfortunate that they choose to ignore history. I am not aware that the peace loving people of the Soviet Union are doing the people of Afghanistan any good right now.

Members have managed to bring into this debate the subjects of tariffs on shoes, the Polar Sea and a whole bunch of things. I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) started off by complaining that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not on hand today. I notice she stayed just long enough to say a few words and disappear. Perhaps she is looking for a map to find out just where Nanoose is.

● (1800)

During my time in the Navy I was a qualified weapons officers. I was involved in the original trials of sonar buoys by the Canadian Navy. I have been to Nanoose on a number of occasions. I suggest that Hon. Members opposite should do a little homework so that they would know exactly what does transpire there.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, November 29, consideration of Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; and Motions No. 4 (Mr. Rodriguez), and No. 5 (Mr. Foster) (p. 8837).

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 2 the following:

"4. Notwithstanding rules 1, 2 and 3, and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, in dividing Ontario into electoral districts under that Act following the completion of the 1981 decennial census, the electoral boundaries commission for Ontario for the census

(a) shall consider the aggregate territorial area of the electoral districts described in paragraphs 1 (Algoma), 9 (Cochrane-Superior), 34 (Kenora-Rainy River), 49 (Nickel Belt), 50 (Nippissing), 69 (Sault Ste. Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The next question is on the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, as amended, be concurred in.

Hon. Members have heard the suggestion. Is it agreed that the same vote will be applied in the reverse?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn moved that the Bill (as amended) be concurred in.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—CANADIAN AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the Canadian Aerospace Industry through the sale of de Havilland Aircraft Ltd. to the Boeing Corporation and for its consequent failure to protect the aerospace technology paid for by Canadian taxpayers and developed by de Havilland.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is very clear from the announcement made yesterday by the Government that the present Conservative Government intends to pick up where the Diefenbaker Government left off, in terms of selling out Canada's aerospace industry. Canadian ownership ought to be a matter of vital concern in certain crucial sectors of the Canadian economy. The aerospace industry is one of those sectors.

The Canadian Government, which was determined to take us into the future, ought to be one that is putting more emphasis on Canadian ownership and Canadian control in such sectors. Instead of marching us into the future, the present Government is marching as fast as it can into the past.

[Translation]

It is a sad day for the aerospace industry in this country and it is a sad day for Canada. We are selling a company in which Canadian taxpayers have invested millions of dollars, at a time when we are starting to reap the profits of our investment and should be starting to reap the benefits of sales of many Dash-7 and Dash-8 aircraft throughout the world. Thanks to the Conservatives, we are letting Boeing reap the benefits of Canadian investment. What lack of vision! What a ridiculous decision! What a typically Conservative decision!

[English]

There are two principal reasons that we in the New Democratic Party find this decision by the Conservative Government to be deeply contrary to the interests of Canada. The first of these pertains to the important matter of Canadian control in a crucial sector of our own economy. The second aspect of the decision is that even in terms of a business deal, in dollars and cents value, what the Conservatives are doing is a complete abomination. It will remind all Canadians of the incredibly inept way they made a decision last March in dealing with the crisis in the banking industry. They are costing us millions and millions of dollars; that is the truth.

• (1110)

I want to say something about the recent history of the de Havilland Corporation. As Canadians will know, it was originally a branch plant operation of Hawker Siddeley. During one part of its development, it indeed produced aircraft which had become known throughout the world, not simply in Canada, as a first-rate product. Of course I am referring to the Otter, the Twin Otter and the Beaver aircraft which are used not only in our own land but in many countries throughout the world. In the early 1970s, Hawker Siddeley for whatever reason—and it was not accidental that it was owned and controlled outside our borders—decided not to put the required investment into the Canadian branch plant which was necessary for the full development of the Dash-7 and other inter-urban commuter aircraft. Having made that decision, the Government of Canada was faced with the decision of having a modern industry go under or of coming in with capital to ensure proper development. At that time, the Government made the correct decision. It decided to put in what amounted to some $700 million over the years, to ensure the proper development of a modern or a series of modern first-rate aircraft.

The point I want to make about this is that this kind of capital investment makes a lot of sense in an industry of this kind. In my own small part of Canada where I was born, the area of Oshawa which I now have the honour to represent, the General Motors Corporation is putting in over $1 billion in the short run, in that little community alone, for a relatively few jobs to ensure longer range jobs.

Mr. Fennell: They make money too.

Mr. Broadbent: I will deal with the point which I just heard from the Conservative side of the House in a moment and talk about the friends of the Conservatives, the Boeing Corporation. The key point I want to make is that if we are to have development in a modern industry, we have to put up the bucks. Since the parent firm, Hawker Siddeley, was not prepared to do that, we in Canada made the proper decision to use public funds for creative investment. Now, however, just at the point when we are about to have a return on that investment, just when the company has orders on its books for its remaining production in the coming year, what does the Government decide to do? Instead of taking advantage of the productive investment which has gone on in the past decade in this industry, instead of starting to sell airplanes around the world and bringing back a return to the public of Canada for its investment, the Government which was elected just a year ago has decided to sell it off.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is giving it away.

Mr. Broadbent: I hear one of my colleagues saying: "It is giving it away". I will document that in just a moment.

The key point I want to make in this part of my argument about the nature of this kind of industry is that every country around the world involved in the aerospace industry, without exception, uses public funds. Many countries in western Europe, whether it be France, Great Britain or Japan, use public funds in the form of public participation in the industry. In fact, there are some outright ownerships by Governments.

Let us look at the United States. I hope the Minister will deal with this argument. He is making much of the cost of $700 million and how the Canadian people will not be saddled with this kind of investment, according to the Conservatives. I did some checking of the Boeing Corporation in the United States. The Government says that the Boeing Corporation is a private firm which makes its way in the market-place.

An Hon. Member: It is profitable.

Mr. Broadbent: One Conservative has just said: "It is profitable". There is a good reason for its being profitable. It is not the only reason, but it gets a lot of money from American taxpayers.

What corporation is at the top of the list of corporations in the United States which receive the most benefits from American taxpayers? Is it General Motors, IBM or any one of the other corporate giants outside the aerospace industry? Of course not. The company which receives the highest level of assistance from American taxpayers is none other than the Boeing Corporation. For the years 1981 and 1983, the Boeing Corporation received $400 million in the form of subsidies—and that is what they amount to—and special tax benefits from the American Government. It received $400 million in two years. At the same time it listed profits of $1.5 billion, but it did not pay one cent in income tax to the American people. That is another story about which many American citizens are concerned. The aerospace industry around the world, not just the Canadian industry, has been subsidized by taxpayers. However, there is only one Government in the modern world which is stupid enough not to recognize this necessity and is stupid enough to want to get rid of it in its own country, and that is the Conservative Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I ask the Minister who will be participating in this debate whether he thinks for a minute that the American people and the American Government would permit the Boeing corporation to be bought up by an enterprise or a country outside their own nation? I have just said that in two years the taxpayers of the United States put up the equivalent of $400 million Canadian for Boeing. If we look at the actual past two decades of the history of the Boeing Corporation and the way in which it financed research and development in the aerospace industry in the United States, I know I understate the degree of subsidy when I say that it is in excess of $2 billion. That is what the Boeing Corporation has received in the past decade or so from American taxpayers.

The American flag will be very clearly waved on top of the American industry, and Americans will ensure that that happens. What is tragic is that we in Canada have a Conservative Government which, following its own past bad history of the Avro Arrow, is now taking down the Canadian flag from a Canadian corporation that is just about to take off and is wrapping itself as a Government in the Stars and Stripes. I think that is deplorable.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Broadbent: Is it any wonder that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be going down to Chicago tomorrow as the guest speaker of Time magazine? The next thing we know, the Prime Minister of Canada will be selected as Time magazine's man of the year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: For good reason, because he is a great Canadian.

Mr. Broadbent: There they are, the new Conservatives on the other side of the House, publicly cheering a Prime Minister who has just sold out one of our major industries. I say to those Conservatives: "Some sense of perspective!"

Not only is it bad for its possible implications for the long-range development of high-technology jobs in Canada, it is also, if I can put it in a way that even the Conservatives will understand, a bad business deal in terms of dollars and cents.

I want the House to consider some of the details. Ostensibly, on paper, we are supposed to be getting $155 million. That is a giveaway even at that terribly low price, but I want to study the figures and see how much we will really be getting. Of the $155 million, the poor old Boeing Corporation is being asked to put up, $90 million is as a cash down payment, and it is to pay $65 million over time. We are allowing the Boeing Corporation to buy out a crucial Canadian company on time, the way Canadians buy cars or TV sets.

When we analyse the figures, Mr. Speaker, we find something that is deeply disturbing. If Boeing makes $325 million worth of purchases in Canada over the next 15 years it will be eligible for $65 million in benefits from the Canadian Government. I see the Minister nodding. He knows very well that given the potential of the Canadian aerospace industry, which is some 40,000 strong with 100 firms in the industry, there is not the slightest doubt that Boeing can make sufficient purchases to get $65 million back.

What about the remaining $90 million? Boeing will get back an estimated $30 million of the $90 million as a result of the Government's agreement to pick up new insurance costs as well as assuming new costs for certain future potential liabilities for faulty aircraft. The Government has reached into the taxpayers' pocket again for this $30 million which it will provide in benefits to the Boeing Corporation.

As for the remaining $60 million of the original $90 million, Boeing will simply have to invest a certain amount for increased productive capacity in Canada to write off the cost of that eventually. As the Minister no doubt knows, if Boeing invests $115 million, as it plans to do, as a result of the Government's decision Boeing will be eligible for financial assistance under the Defence Industry Productivity Program of roughly $60 million.

It is therefore very clear, Mr. Speaker, that not only are we permitting Boeing to buy out a crucial Canadian industry but, due to the ineptness of the Government, Boeing is going to be able to buy out a Canadian industry with Canadian money. What a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. It is bad enough to drink Canada dry, but it is even worse for Canadians to have to put up the money. The Government deserves to be defeated on this matter as much as it does on anything it has done since it was elected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: They call themselves businessmen.

Mr. Broadbent: My colleague will be adding further information which pertains to the Government's excuse for this abominable deal when he speaks.

I want to conclude very rapidly with three possible options from which the Government ought to have chosen from instead of taking the route that it has. The Government must recognize, as most other modern nations in the world that have maintained an aerospace industry have sensibly recognized, that the public sector is a very important way of doing this. The first option the Government should have seriously considered was to maintain this successful corporation, which had a $700 million investment in it, and to pursue international markets in order more rigorously pursue international markets to sell more DASH-7s and DASH-8s and other products in the future.

If the Government wanted de Havilland to have access to Boeing's international marketing network, why in heaven's name did it not go after a joint venture? Why could some deal not have been negotiated with Boeing? Boeing has negotiated deals with other countries. Why could we not have said that we will maintain this Crown corporation, we will maintain Canadian control and guarantee Canadian jobs, and have a joint arrangement with Boeing which involves some payment for access to Boeing's marketing capacity? That would have been another option which could have been exercised without losing Canadian control of this important industry.

The third option which could have been considered, if necessary, was more rigorous pursuit of a private Canadian owner. If the route of private ownership was to be chosen, a more systematic effort ought to have been made to get a Canadian owner to ensure that the industry would remain in Canadian hands. It is certainly our clear understanding from the development position of this industry that, of all the options, it would probably have made the most sense to keep that corporation in the public sector. The public made the investment in it and ought now to be getting the benefit of that investment.

I want to conclude by observing that the Government was elected just over a year ago on the promise that it was going to take the country rapidly and more confidently into the future. In decision after decision since the Government was elected it has done just the opposite. Whatever transpires in the weeks and months ahead in terms of the Government's thinking, the New Democratic Party will remain committed to the future of the country, to the view that crucial industries ought to remain Canadian-owned, and to the view that public investment can make a lot of sense for the short run and the long run for the development of our nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I noticed that he said that the Boeing Corporation in the United States had received $400 million Canadian "in the form of subsidies because that's what they amount to". I think I have quoted him accurately. That is what caught my attention. I wonder if the Member could give us a breakdown of where that $400 million came from. Was it in the form of contracts or in the form of tax benefits? Could he enumerate that?

Mr. Broadbent: I would be very happy to get that data for the Hon. member. I can tell him that the general category is in fact all of the benefits and it is the equivalent of $400 million Canadian in the form of special tax concessions. For the Member's benefit, it came from an American source that was very critical of this use of American taxpayers' money. That aside, it was $400 million in special tax concessions, the final result of which was that Boeing, which had in excess of $1 billion in profit, ended up paying not a cent in taxes to the American Government.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Member said they were special tax concessions. Were they different from any other tax concessions made to any other companies? In that way does the Member view this as a special subsidy to Boeing as distinct from any other companies?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that they were not special. I have no reason to believe that they were special to Boeing. They were special only in the sense that the ordinary taxpayer in the United States, like the ordinary taxpayer in Canada, simply is not eligible for these kinds of benefits. The key point I was making is that the Americans have taken care to ensure the development in the U.S. of a world-class firm in this very modern industry. They have used the money of the American taxpayers to do so. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that Boeing has received more from the American taxpayers on a comparative basis than de Havilland has received from the Canadian taxpayers. Having put up this money, the Americans have enough sense to make sure that the industry will remain American controlled. The key point is that the Canadian Government should have enough sense to do the same thing for Canadians.

• (1130)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). It was over 20 years ago that the Conservative Government of that day, the last majority Conservative Government, decided to destroy the Avro Arrow program. I was a teenager at the time and I recall that happening. In the 20 odd years that have passed since then, most Canadians have agreed that that was a decision which destroyed the aerospace industry in Canada. We lost the research and we lost the lead that we had at that time. The situation was so bad that the Conservative Government destroyed the prototype of that particular airplane and cut it up into small pieces so that the Canadian industry could not benefit from the research for which the Canadian Government had paid.

Since this is a decision which not only affects the workers of today but the future of Canada for the next 20 or 30 years, should we not have a full discussion and committee investigation into the implications of this sale to the industry?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the quick answer to that question will not surprise the House. What may surprise the House is the fact that I did not have advance knowledge of the question. I say that honestly. What will not surprise the House is that I agree with the thought and wisdom behind the question, unlike that which I have been hearing from the other side of the House.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), in his address to which I listened with great interest, referred to the Avro Arrow and the dismantling of that project. That matter was picked up by another member of his Party. I would like to ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party what he thinks of that project within the current framework of peace negotiations and the world concern for peace.

I understand that the Avro Arrow was a weapon of war. That is to say, it was to be used in the National Defence program and had the capacity to carry bombs of great destructive capacity. Apart from the technology involved, and I understand the Hon. member's interest in that, is he interested in arming Canada more and involving it in the international defence industry? Does he want Canadians to participate in weapons of war and to build up and industry of national destruction, or does he want us to pursue peacefully industrial interests that employ people and keep Canadians in industries that will guarantee employment over this decade and future decades? Does he want us to engage again in the international arms race with weapons with a capacity for total destruction?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, Conservative Members certainly are the masters of the irrelevant question. I would say to the Hon. Member quite clearly that we happen to differ in certain details of defence policy. That is the difference between a Government Party and an opposition Party. The New Democratic Party believes in a defence policy. We believe that, regrettably so, in a modern world we still need weapons. However, unlike certain other parts of the world—I will not make a polemical point about the Government. Not only do we believe in the defence of Canada, we also believe that we ought to be working simultaneously for disarmament in the world. Those two things are not mutually exclusive.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) regarding his position that the national Government should own Crown corporations. In the Province of Manitoba, the Minister responsible for Crown corporations went to The Netherlands last month in order to try to sell a Crown corporation called Flyer Industries. He made the statement before the Economic Committee of the Legislature that he would sell Flyer Industries and that if he could not sell it he would close it down. Who was with the Minister in The Netherlands but a union leader from Flyer Industries.

Has the Leader of the NDP been writing to Mr. Pawley to tell him not to close down Flyer Industries? Has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) been writing to Mr. Pawley to tell him not to close down Flyer Industries? If they are not doing that, how can they rise in the House to make statements like the one the Hon. Member just made?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would make a couple of points in reply to the Hon. Member. I note that he said that a union member was being consulted and was part of what was going on. That is in complete and utter contrast to what the Conservative Government has done in this case. The Government did not have the thoughtfulness to consult the workers at all. If the Government of Manitoba is doing that, it is to be commended.

I hope the Hon. Member listened to my argument. I was not arguing that Crown corporations should never be sold back to the private sector. I never said such a thing. In fact, I gave as one of the options at which we should look the desirability of selling the firm to the private sector and making sure the taxpayers got a good deal, but I made the point that it should be sold to the Canadian private sector and remain Canadian owned.

Third, in my judgment—and I am not an expert but I have seen the experiences elsewhere in the world—regarding whether certain sectors ought to be privately or publicly owned, world experience seems to suggest that public ownership in this sector which massively involves taxpayers' money probably makes sense. It is a question of detail. We are unequivocally clear that this industry ought to remain Canadian owned. We think that on balance it ought to remain in the public sector but we have not closed the door to having it sold to a Canadian firm. If the Manitoba Government in its wisdom—I'm not there, I'm not from that province and I do not know the details—happens to believe that that particular Crown corporation would be more viable and effective for the people of Manitoba in the private sector, that could well be the perfectly sensible solution.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government announced that the de Havilland Corporation, which is located in Downsview which is in my riding, was to be sold to the Boeing Corporation and that a 90-day long memorandum of intent had been signed for that purpose. I would like to indicate, as have commentators all across the country overnight, that this is a tragedy of the order of the one committed by a former Conservative Government which closed down the production of the Avro Arrow, putting something like 15,000 people out of work. This is not a decision that will put 15,000 people out of work as did the Avro-Arrow decision, and I will speak of that in a moment. I will not criticize Boeing although I will say something about it. However, I would like to assure the House and Canadian people that this is no less a tragedy, the consequences being the diminution of the economy of the country, the reduction of Canadian sovereignty and the subtraction from the Canadian identity, which are as serious as those of the tragic closing down of the Avro Arrow.

The de Havilland Corporation is a company located in my riding which uses suppliers from virtually every province in the country. All Canadians are a part of it and apart from their physical, technological and working contributions, it is a part of the Canadian identity. This is the company which made the Twin Otter and the Beaver. This is the company which made the Mosquito. These are a line of planes which particularly define the Canadian way of approaching aerospace, something which the company has been doing over the decades. The idea that this company will become a division of a multinational firm, however good that firm is, has closed the door on the future for all Canadians.

I said that I wished to talk about Boeing for a moment. Boeing is a good company. It is a good multinational corporation. Boeing manufactures the most successful passenger and cargo jet airplanes in the world. It has sold more of certain of its lines, more copies of some of its planes, than other planes which have been produced in the world. This is to Boeing's credit, and I do not want to criticize the company. However, in this connection I wish to point out that it seems to have adapted well to doing business in Canada. One of its first acts following the election of the Conservative Government was to engage as its public relations firm the firm of Advance Planning. Advance Planning is a subsidiary of Camp and Associates which was set up at the time of the Government's coming to power. Camp and Associates is a Canadian company whose identity with the Conservative Party is well known. If anything, one could give credit to Boeing for understanding how the new Government operates. Boeing put itself in the ballpark through the use of a public relations firm which is known and friendly to the Government.

I also wish to point out that it must be helpful for Boeing to establish a base in Canada which is larger than the base it had in the past. After all, with the whole future of jobs at de Havilland at stake, from now on if this deal goes through—and I hope it will not—Boeing will be in a position months and years from now to remind the Government that it is the owner of this large enterprise in Toronto. Boeing will be able to remind the Government that de Havilland is a division of its company and that if Air Canada is looking for other types of airplanes made by other companies, or if the Department of National Defence is in the same position, then Boeing may also remind the Government that it is the company keeping jobs at de Havilland in Toronto. That is the regrettable fact of this acquisition by Boeing. Again, I make no criticism of Boeing because of that possibility. However, it does show that the Government has given Boeing a hostage for future performances which will be favourable to it.

I indicated that this acquisition is a tragedy of a diffrent order when compared to the loss of 15,000 jobs. Ironically, I am positive that at least in the foreseeable future there will be big increases in terms of employment at the Downsview air base. When I was there yesterday for the announcement by management I learned that 34 new employees were taken on just yesterday. I learned that 50 employees were taken on that day. I learned that 1,000 have been taken on over the last year. The reason for this is not the sale which was announced yesterday. The reason is that de Havilland has finally reached the stage where its Dash-8 is ready to take off.

The taxpayers of Canada brought this company through the worst recession since the 1930s, that is, from 1981 until today. It was brought through that recession with a good workforce, with all its research capacity intact, with all its management in place and with products for which orders are finally starting to roll in large numbers. In order to justify the development costs there needs to be 400 sales of the Dash-8. As a result of the planes and as a result of the confidence which Canadians had in the company over the years, and not as a result of anything the Government or Boeing has done, de Havilland is now in a position where it has nearly 200 sales. I also learned yesterday that the Twin Otter, which has been out of production for a few years, is being brought back into production in a new modernized version adapted to today's requirements. I also learned yesterday that the production of the Dash-7 will be speeded up as well. I learned that the Dash-7 Stretch is now considered to be more viable, and while it is still on the drawing boards it has been given a great boost.

So there will be jobs created over the next few months. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) cannot get up, nor can the Government, in the months ahead and say these results are because of the takeover. It is because of the products. It is because of the confidence which Canadians have had in the company over the last few years.

The company will now be owned by an American corporation if the deal goes through. I have already indicated that Boeing is a good company. Hawker Siddeley was a good company too. It owned de Havilland until 1974. I would like to remind the Government of the reason the company was taken over by the former Liberal Government from Hawker Sidde-

ley. It was not taken over because the former Government was fanatically committed to state ownership. It was taken over because the Hawker Siddeley multinational corporation had more important priorities than the products which were being created at de Havilland in Downsview. Hawker Siddeley had other planes which it was making in the United Kingdom, just as Boeing has other planes it is making in the United States. At a certain point in time Hawker Siddeledy decided it was not prepared to take its shareholders' investment and capital and invest it in Canada in the research which had been done in terms of the continuation of the STOL lines. That is not an improper decision for a multinational corporation to take. I think it was wrong. Hawker Siddeley should have stuck with the STOL aircraft which de Havilland had designed and begun to produce. However, when it did not do so, the former Government moved in and took the company over.

Now that we are realizing the privatization dream of the new Conservative Government, and since this company will become a division of the Boeing Aircraft Corporation, how can it be denied that the greater priorities of the multinational corporation will not prevail? How can this be done when, in Seattle, where Boeing sells its planes, it sells one which costs more than the whole purchase price of de Havilland Aircraft? When capital is short and when de Havilland needed good managers and wanted good research people, which they find here in Canada, please do not kid us, Government, and tell us that Boeing will not come to Canada and draw on the strengths of de Havilland for its multinational purposes. That would be the normal thing for a multinational corporation to do and we will suffer for it.

I remind the Government that de Havilland accounts for 25 per cent of the aerospace industry in Canada. The act which was announced yesterday—yesterday's tragedy—takes the company out of the control of Canadians and puts it into the control of a company with large scale priorities when, someday soon, like Hawker Siddeley, it just might decide that de Havilland is less important to it than its other affairs in the United States.

What have we lost? The autonomy of the company has been diminished. It was its autonomy which permitted the design of these airplanes in the first place. Canadian identity is lessened since we are proud of these planes, as we have a right to be. The taxpayers of Canada have paid large sums of money to keep this company going and to keep its products going. It is no longer part of the Canadian identity. Canadian sovereignty is reduced as a result of the sale announced yesterday by the Government. That is the tragedy.

When he spoke the Leader of the New Democratic Party reminded us that he comes from Oshawa. I was thinking about that while he was speaking. Back in the 1920s, the McLaughlin Automobile Company, the last major Canadian automotive company, was sold to a multinational firm. But jobs did not go down, jobs went up. There are more people working in Canada in the automotive industry now than were working in that industry when McLaughlin owned that company. When I said that our sovereignty and identity were diminished, what I was getting at was that when that last company was sold—not by the Government but by the owners—Canadians lost the opportunity to express themselves through the economy, the opportunity to create products which would have responded to our situation and not to the situation of our powerful neighbours to the south.

Would the Canadian automobile have been a Volkswagon, a Rolls-Royce, a Volvo? I do not know the answers to that question. And, starting today, we will never know what Canada might have contributed to the world in aerospace. We made a pretty good start; the Twin-Otter, the Dash 7 and the Dash 8. These are pretty good expressions of Canada's way of dealing with aerospace in the world today. But we will not know from now on how Canadian identity would have developed in this sector because this Government does not see the difference between a Canadian owner and a foreign owner.

I agree with a lot of things the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) said today, but David Lewis once said in this House, before his Party became excited about economic sovereignty: "There is no differnece between a Canadian capitalist and an American capitalist. They both want to be as efficient as possible and to make as much money as possible". My Party has never left it at that. We think there is a difference between Canadian ownership and foreign ownership.

While we feel that this is not the moment to sell, we do feel that if it is going to privatize—and I am going to come to the Canadian option in a moment—why not find a Canadian solution? Why not keep an election promise? During the last election campaign the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)—and he is not here in the House today—promised on behalf of his Party that there would be a national aerospace company. He promised that de Havilland and Canadair would be put together, that they would be made viable by converting liabilities to paid in or contributed surplus, and so on, and shares would be offered to the Canadian people. That promise looked pretty good for the Canadian people, but we have heard nothing about it. What has happened? Why is it not still a good idea to take the company and put it together with Canadair, make a Canadian company and allow the Canadian people to express their confidence in the aerospace industry by taking a risk as investors in the future of a corporation like that?

Why is the Government not doing that? There is no explanation. The Government has made the announcement, after secret negotiations into which it would not even bring the management of the company 100 per cent, nor would it bring in the United Auto Workers, not to mention an interested Canadian bidder. In secret the Government has made a deal and has produced a memorandum of agreement which it has not shown us and which I am asking today that it make public so that during this 90 day period—if it is such a good deal—we can have a look at it.

I would like to say a few words about the price, and my colleagues will speak about that as well. It is obvious that the price puts no value at all on the product lines and on all of the development costs which the company wrote off, thanks to the taxpayers of Canada. These are being handed over to the Boeing Corporation for free. But even if the price were much higher, I cannot see the justification for this sale because the Canadian Government is going to continue to stand behind these aircraft and this company. From what we have heard the Government say, it will continue to support it like it supports every other high-tech company in Canada, and it is going to do more than the Export Development Corporation usually does to help foreign sales. Boeing, apparently, has been able to negotiate that. The Government is going to continue to insure all of the aircraft which have been produced by the company. That is a very big ticket cost. Therefore, Boeing is taking money out of one pocket and handing it to the Canadian Government—not enough as far as I am concerned—but even if it were more, the Canadian Government is still taking a lot of our money and putting it into the other pocket of Boeing to encourage that company to buy us out, to take over de Havilland.

I would like to tell the Government that it has to come up with something beyond financial consideration and beyond taking a load off its agenda in order to justify this sale.

What I think, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government is desperate to validate the promise it made that it would privatize companies. It has looked around and has not been able to sell anything. It is desperate and it has sold this company. I want to ask why the Government has not given the Rimgate group, a Canadian-based group, all of the information Boeing was given so that that group could make a sensible offer for the company? I have spoken to the Rimgate group. It has given me chapter and verse on the things it has not been told which have been told to the Boeing group.

[Translation]

Unlike Boeing, the Rimgate Group was not given details of the performance of this company. No promises were made regarding further investments to be made by the Government. I would like to ask the Government, during this 90-day period, to give Rimgate the same information and the same opportunity to make an offer as Boeing was given.

[English]

The final point I would like to make—and I have a motion to introduce which amends the motion before the House—is to remind the Government that back on December 11, 1984, I asked the Government whether or not, if this company was going to be sold, a parliamentary committee could review the deal before it was made. The answer I received from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is found at page 1108 of Hansard. Although he waffled on his answer to my supplementary question, he said very clearly, when I asked if Investment Canada could review this deal, and I quote:

> Surely to suggest that Investment Canada should have a review, in addition to the cabinet review and that which would take place in the House, is totally unnecessary.

Therefore, we received a commitment on the record of this House from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that there would be a review by this House. I call upon the Government to honour that commitment and to let us have that review.

I, therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

> That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end of the sentence and adding the following:
> "And further condemns the Government's lack of confidence in the capacity of Canadians to maintain the country's sovereignty in the aerospace industry".

● (1200)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to reserve my decision on this motion. Questions and comments?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member on his speech. It was a thoughtful commentary on what we believe is a great tragedy for Canadian high-tech and aerospace research and development. As he spoke I thought of the special qualities of the Twin Otter aircraft and how it has been used in the Arctic. I do not know how many Members have had an opportunity to fly in that aircraft, especially around the eastern Arctic where there are small runways, 600 feet or 1,200 feet in length. The Twin Otter is specially designed to land and take off on those kinds of runways. The Twin Otter, and to some extent the Dash-7 and Dash-8, are specially designed for the northern regions of Canada, and I would be interested in knowing whether the Hon. Member sees the Boeing Company maintaining an interest in providing the kind of aircraft which are specially designed for Canada. These aircraft are being used all around the world, but they were initially designed for bush work and fire-fighting in northern Canada, flying in and out of small airstrips all over the North, especially the eastern Arctic.

The Hon. Member has obviously done a lot of research on this subject. He has attended briefings and meetings with workers in the de Havilland plant. The Government put some $700 million into this company to develop new aircraft, expand plant capacity and develop a world-wide sales capacity as well. I would be interested in knowing if he has an explanation as to why the Government would sell this corporation for a net amount of $90 million, which is about the price of one 747? Why such a bargain basement price considering its potential for sales world-wide?

Mr. Kaplan: I would like to thank my colleague for the question. Indeed, STOL planes are a unique Canadian product. The fact that they were developed here in Canada does not mean that they end here. The Hon. Member is right, these planes are found all over the world. Developing countries, and even advanced countries, find that Canadian technology and products suit their needs. Rolls Royces are an expression of a certain British identity and you find them all around the world, just as you find Volkswagons as well. What is regrettable here is that, starting yesterday, these planes will no longer be a unique expression of Canadian identity.

In answer to his question about whether Boeing will continue this development, I want to comment on something the Leader of the NDP said as well. He proposed, instead of selling the company to Boeing, why not have a joint venture? He will be interested to know that there is in effect already a joint venture between de Havilland and Boeing. Ever since 1968 or 1969 they have been involved in joint research in the area of STOL aircraft. These two companies have been co-operating for many, many years. Boeing believes that STOL deserves support and they may well continue the program. However, as I mentioned before, they have other fish to fry and they may well not do so.

One current project under way concerns the augmentor wing. I do not want to take a lot of the time of the House now, but this type of wing assists the plane in gaining altitude quite rapidly. However, there is a trade-off, that of slower horizontal flight. The augmentor wing is designed to thicken the wing during take-off and reduce it during flight.

I just cannot understand what the Government is doing in this case. Let me put it in the form of a question. What on earth is it that Boeing is giving to this venture? The money does not amount to much, although it is a large sum compared to the continued responsibility of the Canadian Government. Boeing is not transferring technology, because that has been under way for some time. Is the Government saying that Canadians are not capable of marketing this plane? Is the Government saying Canadians are not capable of advancing the technology involved? Is it saying that Canadian capital would not be available? If so, I urge the Government to look at what the Rimgate group was prepared to offer. Give that company a chance to do something if the Government is getting cold feet in carrying the responsibility itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Having considered the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) a moment ago, the Chair finds it to be in order.

There are still 30 seconds left in the question and comment period.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, Canada has provided in excess of $700 million to de Havilland over the years. Would the Hon. Member please comment on the sale price of $90 million in cash and $65 million by way of a note, which some individuals have described as cherry-picking of Crown corporations by the Boeing Corporation.

Mr. Kaplan: Very briefly, we need to see the memorandum of agreement. All we know is what the press release says. That shows a disastrously poor deal for the Canadian taxpayers. We must be given the original documents to draw our own conclusions. The Government promised, through the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, that we would be given an opportunity to examine these documents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on behalf of the Government in the debate today, and I have no hesitation in stating that the motion presented by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) is unfounded and entirely without substance.

Contrary to what the motion says, instead of abandoning the aerospace industry in this country, the Government, in taking the step announced yesterday, has expressed its confidence in the future of an industry that is very important to this country. By proposing the sale of de Havilland Aircraft Ltd. to Boeing, an internationally known company, a company that is financially and managerially sound, a company that has a thorough knowledge of the industry throughout the world, by agreeing to this merger, the Government is providing Canadian industry with a far greater potential for participation in international markets.

• (1210)

[English]

This Government fully recognizes the importance of the aerospace industry to Canada. Judging by the wording of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) I wonder whether he has any real understanding or recognition of the true significance of that industry.

In his motion he seems to characterize the aerospace industry as consisting solely of de Havilland. While de Havilland is very obviously an important company and will be even more important in the future as a result of the Government's creative move announced yesterday, we should not lose sight of the fact that 45,000 Canadians are employed in the aerospace industry that is made up of more than 100 companies from coast to coast.

We are proud of the performance of workers, of engineers and of the management of de Havilland who have built for that company a world-wide reputation in the manufacture of commuter aircraft. For the Leader of the New Democratic Party to ignore and neglect the contribution of other elements of the industry, an oversight of which he is clearly guilty when one looks at his motion accusing the Government of "abandoning the aerospace industry", I wonder if he would like to go with me to visit these other fine companies and tell them and their workers that in his eyes they just do not rate as vital components of the Canadian aerospace industry.

Let him tell that to the workers of Canadair in Montreal, the workers of Boeing in Winnipeg and Arnprior, the workers of Pratt and Whitney, the workers of McDonnell-Douglas, the workers of CAE, Spar Aerospace and Fleet Aerospace or the relative newcomers to Canada like British Aerospace or the many other companies that contribute to the human and financial resources and the advancement of this industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this Government is well aware of its commitment to all sectors of the Canadian aerospace industry. We are not only respecting these commitments, we are doing more than that by ensuring greater viability for an industry that is so important to the high technology sector in Canada.

[English]

The Leader of the New Democratic Party makes two unfounded and unsupported allegations in his motion. Allow me to deal with both of them and I will refute them totally and completely. First, he accuses us of abandoning the Canadian aerospace industry through the privatization of de Havilland and the sale to Boeing. Second, he accuses us of failing to protect aerospace technology paid for by the Canadian taxpayers and developed by de Havilland.

I have already shown that the Hon. Member has no grasp or understanding of the breadth of the Canadian aerospace industry. Now I will show that far from abandoning the Canadian aerospace industry we have taken the only sensible and realistic course; to bring to an end at de Havilland a decade of increasing financial losses paid for by the taxpayers. These losses, if allowed to continue, could lead only to the ultimate and final wind-up of the company and the loss of the existing jobs.

It should be evident, even to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that de Havilland was at a critical point. Despite strong products and the dedication of its employees, new product development and new investment and even a new direction were urgently required.

de Havilland's traditional private line, which stood the company in good stead in the past, needed updating. Sales of the Dash-7 peaked at 107, with only a handful of additional orders on the books. While the company had received approximately 117 orders and options for the Dash-8, only 13 had been delivered to date.

de Havilland's losses for the first nine months of this year stood at $55 million on top of losses of $76 million last year before a special tax credit. To date, the federal Government committed more than $834 million of public funds to the company. If we were to continue to keep the company in the public sector, further substantial tax moneys would be required, to our best estimate probably some $200 million for next year alone in new capital investment and to cover ongoing operating losses.

The Government faced these choices: continuing to allow the company to absorb hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars every year; closing it down completely at a further cost of hundreds of millions of dollars, not to mention the loss of jobs and the terrible social and economic impact that such a closure would have; or finding a buyer in the private sector with the financial clout, the commitment, the ability, the energy and know how to ensure that de Havilland would remain a company that would prosper and have an open door to the market of commuter airlines throughout the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Government is entirely aware of the significant investment of taxpayers' money in de Havilland. And to protect that investment in Canada's aerospace technology, the Government has negotiated with Boeing a world product mandate for de Havilland, including not only the Dash-7 and the Dash-8 but all products that may derive therefrom.

[English]

Anyone who was at the news conference yesterday heard Mr. Albrecht, Chairman of the Board of Boeing Canada, publicly commit his company to proceed with a Stretch version of the Dash-8. That is an investment that will no doubt involve sums in the magnitude of several hundred million dollars. It will mean more jobs at de Havilland and more jobs at the hundreds of suppliers across Canada who serve de Havilland. That is how we are protecting the Canadian aerospace industry. That is how we are protecting Canadian technology. That is how we are protecting existing jobs and making sure that we will be creating more jobs in this industry as we have done throughout the country in the last 15 months.

We have made it clear through the privatization process to which the Government is committed that privatization will strengthen the ability of our commercially oriented Crown corporations to compete in the market-place.

We on this side of the House recognize the reality of the market-place. We recognize that by reducing the bureaucratic and political impediments, there will be a more effective allocation of resources in a more efficient market economy. Above all, we recognize that through privatization we can enassure that the maximum benefits flow to Canadians in terms of jobs and new investment while reducing as far as possible the risks and exposure that taxpayers may face in supporting some of these industries.

In the case of de Havilland, I have reported that the Government contacted more than 130 prospective buyers. After a year of intensive efforts, three offers to purchase were received and studied carefully. In selecting Boeing, I would like to stress that not only did we select the company that made the best offer, we also selected a company with an outstanding and proven track record as a good corporate citizen of Canada. Boeing's relationship with this country goes back some 66 years. Throughout that period of time, Boeing has always behaved itself as we would expect any upstanding true Canadian corporation to behave.

The letter of intent setting out the basis for the sale of de Havilland to Boeing has many important features. It includes undertakings that will keep de Havilland in Ontario, that will require Boeing to pay royalties to Canada on existing products and assign to de Havilland a world product mandate, to develop new activities at de Havilland and work with Canadian suppliers across the country. All these features are designed to ensure the further development of the Canadian aerospace industry, not its abandonment.

This initiative both secures the future of de Havilland and marks a major step for the Canadian aerospace industry, a $4 billion industry which is already the fifth largest in the industrial world.

• (1220)

In brief, we have reached a successful conclusion to our year-long quest to re-establish de Havilland in the private sector under ownership which has an impeccable record in the aerospace industry. The Boeing Company, by its financial and marketing commitment to de Havilland, demonstrates more faith in the future of Canada than does the mover of this motion. If the purchase of de Havilland turns out to be a good deal for Boeing shareholders—and I sincerely trust that it will—it will also turn out to be a good deal for Canada. de Havilland will be a good deal for its shareholders only when it is profitable. That will be a good deal for the taxpayers of Canada because for the first time they will begin to receive reimbursement through the taxes which a profitable de Havilland will be paying for all the support given it over the past decade.

Far from abandoning the aerospace industry, the Government is strengthening that vital industry. Far from failing to protect Canadian aerospace technology, the Government is ensuring that de Havilland technology will enjoy a wider window on the markets of the world.

The privatization of de Havilland sends a strong message that the Government is determined to remove the shadows which have bound significant portions of Canada's industrial economy. Through our privatization program, we will be able to allow organizations, which were once restricted to government control, to build their own futures in ways that will benefit both their employees and the investors who demonstrate, by their financial commitment, their confidence in the future of our great country.

In conclusion, let me repeat that the motion put forward by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party and amended by the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party is without foundation. It is hardly deserving of the attention of the House. I know that it will be relegated to the obscurity it so richly deserves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board about the commitment made during the election campaign by the present Minister of Finance that the de Havilland Corporation and Canadair would be put together into a national aerospace company, and that shares of that company would be offered for subscription directly to Canadian people. Why did the Government turn its back on that commitment? If it did not, what effort did it make before abandoning it to try to deliver on that promise?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the process of privatization, in the first step, the line Ministers responsible for various Crown corporations evaluate each of their respective Crown corporations to see whether or not they fit the definition which we use for candidacy for privatization, in other words, is the company commercial, and does the company effectively no longer fulfil a public policy purpose? The company is also evaluated from a financial point of view. It is proposed to the task force and, if it is accepted, the second stage of the process is an in-depth evaluation of the prospects of that company and the resolution of financial and policy issues which can arise during the privatization process. Only after that first stage is the company really put up for sale, bids are entertained, analyses of the bids are made and finally the commitment for sale is made.

We followed this process in this case, as we did in the other cases which we have announced to date. It was felt that in terms of ensuring a vigorous and vibrant aerospace industry in the country, the best way to go was the sale of de Havilland to the Boeing Corporation.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in other words, no consideration at all was given by the Government to the promise made during the election campaign. I heard from the Hon. Minister that they gave no attention at all to that promise. They started from scratch, just as if no promise had been made.

The Minister indicated a bright future for de Havilland. I hope he is right. Has the Government done any calculation in that bright future of the production and development of Stretch Dash-8? If things go as well as he suggested they might for the company, how much money will the Canadian Government put into it, in all the various ways the Government supports industrial activity in the country?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the company will be eligible for the various programs for which all other companies in that industry, or for that matter in other industries, are eligible. I am sure that in the development of the company we will be looking at requests under existing programs for government assistance of the same nature, on the same footing and of the same conditions as any other Canadian corporate entity could request.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. He referred to the fact that he anticipated de Havilland would be paying taxes. Could he name a single major producer of aircraft anywhere in the world, in terms of net, which is paying taxes to its Government? In that context, was he aware that the Boeing Corporation, in the last two years for which data was available, in spite of a book profit of $1.5 billion, did not pay a cent in income tax because of the tax structure for this kind of industry in the United States, and in fact received in that period of time $400 million in assistance from the American Government in tax policy? Is he aware of those facts?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware of the balance sheet and of the profit and loss statement of the Boeing Corporation. Obviously, when one concludes as important a transaction as this one, it is only prudent management for the seller to ensure that the purchaser is enjoying fine financial health. I can only reassure the Hon. Member that such is the case; Boeing is in fact a financially very strong and healthy corporation. I would like to be able to say the same for de Havilland. At the moment it is not. We firmly believe that with this deal,with this transaction and with the existing financial strength of Boeing, we will see within a short period of time a company in Canada, in Ontario, in Downsview, which will also have an interesting profit and loss statement.

There is no question. Boeing would not buy this corporation if it thought it would lose money forever. It intends to make money with that company. It intends to make profits. When it makes profits, it will pay taxes under our tax structure.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister clearly missed the point or chose not to deal with it. The point I was making was that because of the tax structures of different countries, including the United States of America, these corporations end up not paying taxes at all in that they are subsidized one way or another by taxpayers. All the Minister has done is use Canadian taxpayers' money to put over $800 million, according to the updated figures which the Minister gave the House today, into this company. That has already gone from Canadian taxpayers. What Boeing is getting is a gift of a couple of aircraft, and we paid for the development of them. Boeing will build on that. Given the structure which the Government is about to set up for the corporation, it will make lots of profit in Canada because all the costs have already been written off by Canadian taxpayers.

I have another question for the Minister. I know he is ultimately interested in—and I do not say it facetiously—a factual presentation; we can have a dispute about the policy. However, earlier he alluded to my equating the aerospace industry in Canada with the existing facilities at de Havilland. Would he acknowledge that in my speech and in reply to questions therafter, even before he spoke, I talked about the more than 100 firms in this industry in Canada and also the fact that there were some 40,000 people already employed; in short, that I did not ignore other companies in this sector?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I will acknowledge that in his questions the Hon. Member did allude to the fact that there are some 40,000 people employed in the aerospace industry in the country. I am happy that he acknowledged that. It is an important industry which we would like to have grow and prosper in the country. We feel that the move we announced yesterday is a move in that direction which will ensure that, rather than declining, the number of employees will grow over the years to come.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask about the Fokker company in particular, a Dutch manufacturer. The Minister said that 130 companies were canvassed to see if they would be interested in taking de Havilland off the Government's hands. One of the companies was Fokker. Yet, when Fokker appeared again as part of a Canadian bidding group, I understand that the CDIC refused to give details to the group because Fokker was part of it, although it would have been prepared to give Fokker information directly. Does the Minister understand, as I do, that the Canadian bidding group was not given full information because of something to do with the presence of Fokker, which makes a somewhat similar airplane, and yet the Government was prepared to tell all to de Havilland when it was one of the 130 companies with no Canadian involvement at all?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make something very clear. From the phrasing of the Hon. Member's question, it is obvious that there is a misunderstanding in his mind. In this transaction, as in any transaction to come, we would never divulge to a direct competitor information that deals directly with the product against which he is competing.

Mr. Kaplan: Why did you approach Fokker in the first place?

Mr. de Cotret: We would not have given that part of the information to Fokker.

With regard to the second question, the group in which Fokker was involved got all the co-operation it could possibly request from the CDIC. The only exception was some specific product information which could have been used in a competitive environment to the detriment of de Havilland. I repeat that that kind of information would not be made available to a prospective buyer of any of the Crown corporations which we contemplate selling over the months and years to come.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) mentioned that Advance Planning, part of Camp and Associates in Toronto, was the public relations firm for Boeing. Could the Minister outline what part they played in the negotiations and whether they were paid on a commission basis? It seems that Boeing has paid an incredibly low price. If the Minister feels that he has, as he indicated today, made such a great sale, would he be willing to put the issue before Parliament within 90 days for the approval of the House?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in response to the first question, I am not aware of the specifics of the relationship the Hon. Member alluded to. I will be happy to try to get the information for him, but I do not have it with me.

In response to the second question, the final details of the transaction will be worked out in the coming weeks and will be announced in due course in the proper forum when they are completed.

Mr. Broadbent: In Parliament?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who said that the motion of the New Democratic Party was without substance. I was interested in that because in the debate which took place in the Ontario Legislature yesterday the Minister's political comrade, Larry Grossman, the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, said quite specifically that David Peterson had not done enough to keep the plant in Canadian hands. He quite clearly took the view that Ontario should have been doing more and I presume that he meant that his federal colleagues should have been doing more as well. Perhaps there is a division on the Conservative side, but it seems to me that Mr. Grossman feels that the concerns reflected in my Party about this deal have some substance.

I note as well that when the Dash-8 was first rolled out, Bill Davis, then the Premier of Ontario, said that de Havilland must continue to be part of the economic life of this great country. I am sure that he meant it should remain in Canadian hands. In fact, that is quite specifically what his successor, Frank Miller, promised. During his term as leader he suggested that Ontario should buy de Havilland if that was necessary to prevent de Havilland from leaving Canada or being sold out from Canadian ownership.

I would like to talk about the issues raised by this sell-out at bargain basement prices. It echoes the Conservative's destruction of the Avro Arrow 25 years ago. I believe that many years from now people will look back on this week as a dark, dark week in the history of Canada because one of the leading companies in the Canadian aerospace industry went out of Canadian hands. Of course, there are 100 or more part suppliers in the industry but they will not be able to continue to work effectively if we take away the few companies which are in fact assembling final products or assembling and designing aircraft. De Havilland was the only Canadian company which was able to conceive, design, implement, and bring to market a completely Canadian-designed aircraft. The Dash-7, the Dash-8, and the others which have been mentioned are fine examples.

Canadair has been responsible for production of the CF-18 but that is a plane designed in the United States for which the components are largely made in the United States as well. Canadair has the Challenger jet on the market, but that, too, is a product of U.S. technology and U.S. know how which was brought in by Canadair. de Havilland is our only distinctively Canadian company with distinctive competence in the aircraft industry, and now it is being sold to Boeing.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Government's defence of this particular deal is weak and that a lot of questions have been raised. If the Government were to come clean and provide us with all the information, we might be able, even now, to point to other directions which could have been taken rather than selling de Havilland to Boeing at bargain sale prices.

I will put this into terms which people may be able to understand a bit better. The price of a Dash-8 is about $6 million American or about $8 million Canadian. Boeing is buying the de Havilland Corporation for $90 million Canadian, which is equivalent to the price of about 11 Dash-8s or about six months production. That is how cheaply Boeing is getting de Havilland. It is quite clear that the $65 million deferred note to which Boeing is committing itself can and will be worked out by means of a modest 16 per cent increase in its current volume of purchases in Canada, according to the information that we have been given. Therefore, Boeing gets the company for next to nothing.

What else does Boeing get? The President of the Treasury Board did not talk about the other ways in which the Canadian taxpayer will continue to be committed to subsidizing de Havilland while it is in American hands. We are giving Boeing a $400 million or $500 million tax write-off due to tax losses of de Havilland over the course of the last three or four years. Those tax losses are like money in the bank, Mr. Speaker. They guarantee that, if de Havilland has profits, it will not have to pay a nickel in Canadian tax for the next 15 or 20 years. Although I am not quite clear on this because the details have not been given to us, those tax write-offs may well be transferred by Boeing to its other Canadian operations. It is clear, however, that those tax write-offs will have the effect of saving Boeing between $150 million and $200 million in taxes over the course of the next decade or two. That means that for $90 million Boeing gets tax write-offs worth $150 million or $200 million.

On top of that Boeing will get a $30 million commitment from the Government of Canada to cover product liabilities on the existing fleet of aircraft which has already been built and sent to market. If this deal had been done in a businesslike way, Boeing would have taken over the liabilities of the corporation it acquired. In this case, the Government of Canada is taking back some of those obligations to the tune of $30 million.

When I look at the finances involved in this deal, it is hard to believe how little we are receiving for the $700 million or $800 million we poured into de Havilland over the course of the last 12 years since the company was acquired from its British parent. We have poured that money in and Boeing has now picked up not one but two aircraft which are completely developed. It has also picked up the Buffalo and the Twin Otter, aircraft for which markets continue to exist from time to time. The development costs of these aircraft have been completely paid for.

Today I spoke to someone from Wall Street and I asked an expert in the aerospace industry to ask him to evaluate the deal. He pointed out that it was obvious that the output of de Havilland complemented the product line of Boeing. However, in all of the time Boeing has been making aircraft since the first commercial jets were rolled off the assembly line by Bell-Boeing back around 1959 it has stayed away from the field of building commuter aircraft and short take-off and landing aircraft, the aircraft in which de Havilland has chosen to specialize. That is why I find a number of the things in the promises and commitments made and the rationale put forward by the Government for this particular deal to be pretty hollow.

It has been said that de Havilland will have a world product mandate for producing commuter aircraft. It has that already. Boeing is not competing in that particular area. If in 25 years Boeing has not gone into that area, it was because it had other interests. It may well cost half a billion dollars to begin building commuter aircraft. That is why Boeing had not chosen to go into that particular sector of the market. Now it is getting into that sector of the market for free or just about for free. It is no wonder it snapped up the opportunity to buy de Havilland when it was offered for sale by the Government of Canada.

The President of the Treasury Board suggested that de Havilland would be able to benefit from the world-wide marketing of the Boeing Corporation. However, de Havilland was already marketing its aircraft around the world. In the course of the last nine months, of the 27 aircraft that rolled out of de Havilland's facilities in Downsview, all but three were sold to the export market. In fact, de Havilland was in the process of establishing an aerospace facility in Singapore because of its growing market in Southeast Asia. It was already marketing around the world and was not being barred or blocked from marketing around the world because of the fact that it was a Canadian company. There were no restraints. There could be restraints now that de Havilland will be under the control of the Boeing Corporation. We already know how many Canadian companies are restrained from selling into their most logical natural markets in the United States because of prohibitions laid upon them by their parent corporations.

In his defence of this deal, the President of the Treasury Board has suggested that there were only two options. In other words, the Government blinkered itself in the end into saying that only two things could be done: one was to shut down de Havilland and the other was to sell it. The Leader of my Party has already spoken of other options. There could have been joint ventures with the private sector or sharing agreements with Boeing. If Boeing did not have a line of commuter aircraft it could sell and if it wanted to look for economies of scale in terms of marketing, servicing and sales support, there would have been a logical connection between the two companies. That should and could have been discussed. However, the Government did not want to see it that particular way.

Canadian purchasers were specifically ruled out of this sale because of the Government's requirement that any bidder had to have airframe manufacturing expertise and financial depth. It was not mentioned publicly, but any bidder also had to have another line of profitable business against which it could offset the tax losses which were ready to be tapped in the de Havilland package.

When Canadair was refinanced a year or so ago, the former Government set it up as old Canadair and new Canadair. New Canadair is profitable because of the fact that its capital obligations to the Government were taken over and it is a separate entity under the wing of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. If that had been done in the case of de Havilland, then I would suggest that the price to be paid for it might have been different. It might even have been more attractive to Canadian buyers who would not stand to benefit from the tax losses but who, on the other hand, would prefer to put their investment in de Havilland into development of a new product line and the improvement of its equipment in ways that have been discussed by various Members of the House. That option was clearly not put forward.

The Government said that a purchaser had to take the whole thing lock, stock and barrel, and the carrot was that in addition to getting fully developed aircraft, a buyer of the scale and scope of McDonnell Douglas or Boeing would also be able to get all those juicy, fat tax losses. The businessmen on the board of the Canada Development Investment Corporation who, we are told, endorsed this particular bid, would look at it as if it were a purely private-sector operation.

My Party says quite explicitly that this is not a purely private-sector operation. We are talking about the future of the aerospace industry in Canada. We are talking about whether or not the present Government has any idea of what kind of industry it wishes to see developed over the course of the coming years. This is the vision that is lacking by the present Government. It confined its judgment on this decision to a group of private-sector directors who happened to be drawing their fees by working for the CDIC. Then the former president of a bank, who is now the President of the Treasury Board, decided that that was a good thing, recommended the deal to Cabinet, Cabinet endorsed it, and now the deal is going to go forward apparently without intervention from Investment Canada.

If de Havilland was a subsidiary of a Canadian company, if it was experiencing losses and difficulties in the aerospace market, a market which is not an easy one, and if it was experiencing problems because of competition from subsidized aviation companies from other countries, then a decision to sell out to Boeing, Douglas, Fokker, or some other purchaser might have been entirely justified. I would suggest that a company that is a key company in the aerospace sector because of its buying power and the impact of its research and development throughout the aerospace sector of Canada cannot be dealt with by the Government on that basis.

My research into and thinking this particular area have told me that there are a number of key national industries including automobile, electronics and aerospace industries which are increasingly competing world-wide one with the other in a way that individual corporations used to compete against each other a few years ago. If Canada does not understand that the industrial strategy for a particular industry must be designed and implemented on a national basis, then we are going to find ourselves unable to compete with other countries that see things that way and practise industrial strategies in that manner. It is no secret that the Government of Japan, through the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, does exactly that. It has helped industries to grow and has cut back on industries by looking at them not on a company-by-company basis but at how the industry as a whole is competing against the same industries of other nations. We are not doing that.

According to the judgment expressed in this deal to sell de Havilland to Boeing, we are simply saying that it is possible for Canada to continue to exist in the 1960s while the rest of the world moves on to the 1990s. There are grave risks inherent in that particular approach.

A bit later, my colleagues will speak about some of our specific concerns with this deal. We are concerned over the fact that vague promises were made but there are no job guarantees for the 4,150 workers of de Havilland. When Rimgate Holdings of Vancouver, a Canadian company that bid on this particular deal, made its offer, it indicated that it was prepared to guarantee a minimum of 3,500 jobs at de Havilland. No such guarantees have come from Boeing in this particular case.

We are concerned with the fact that the public could—and we think should—have either retained ownership or else retained a share in de Havilland in order to ensure that it continued to serve Canadian interests in terms of the development of technology, continued to retain Canadian jobs and in terms of ensuring that sourcing was done here in Canada.

I do not agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), who suggests that a Canadian capitalist is no different from an American capitalist. I often find they are almost the same. However, if we had a choice I would prefer ownership to remain here in Canada where, as a Government, we can have some influence upon the company. One matter I find particularly objectionable with respect to this deal is the fact that, once the sale is consummated, Canada's potential for influencing or controlling what happens in this key area of this important industry will effectively be zero.

There are no enforceable guarantees which we can see in the deal. All of the information which has been given to us suggests that some vague and glowing promises may have been made by Boeing; but there is no way that these promises will be implemented if Boeing decides to back away from the deal.

It was somewhat ironic to hear the industry critic for the Liberal Party talk yesterday about how Boeing had established a firm with regional development grants in Winnipeg in order to be at the leading edge of fibreglass technology for the aerospace industry. The former Minister said: "Is it not terrible that all it is doing is making fibreglass bathtubs?" That was something which came about under the Liberal Government. It found it was not able or prepared to enforce any type of agreements with Boeing. At least at that time there was some effort to put the agreement down in writing. In this case it is just an agreement to sell and very little will be left in order to enforce the deal.

I say to the taxpayers of Canada with respect to this particular deal: "Hang on to your wallets". With respect to the deal, the Government makes the argument that it is a good deal and, anyway, it is spending a great deal on de Havilland, much more than it thought the taxpayers should be required to spend. It is interesting that a different argument was made when the Reichmann family spoke about the Canadianization of Gulf Canada and through Olympia & York was given a tax deal which will cost the taxpayers $600 million—all this to increase Canadian ownership in the oil industry and to allow the Reichmanns to take control of Gulf Canada. I am not sure why this different standard applies but it is interesting to note that, in fact, Boeing is a champion free-loader when it comes to taking advantage of government funds in the United States. I suspect we may find that it is just as eager to take advantage of government programs here in Canada.

In the period from 1981 to 1984 Boeing made profits in excess of $2 billion. Of 50 highly profitable corporations it was the champion in terms of generating income tax refunds from the federal Government. It did not pay a nickel in tax, yet it received $285 million in tax refunds from the U.S. federal Government between 1981 and 1984. That does not speak to the fact that the Americans have an industrial strategy, in terms of encouraging the development of large private corporations such as Boeing. This is not done through the process of industrial grants and regional expansion grants. We are criticized by the Americans for carrying out that type of action in terms of implementing a social strategy in Canada. Boeing benefits from defence industry grants at an enormous pace. Clearly, that is the model which is being chosen here in Canada as well. For $60 million net, Boeing is taking over de Havilland, despite the fact that de Havilland has received $200 million in advances from the Government just in the course of the last nine months, according to its most recent quarterly statement. Thus, for $60 million, Boeing receives an entity into which we have put $200 million just in the course of the last few months.

Boeing says that it will develop the new 50-seat version of the Dash-8 and expects it to qualify for repayable support under the Defence Industry Productivity Program. It interests me that an aircraft which I presume, and presumed, is to be used for commercial purposes will be financed by the Government of Canada under the DIPP. I suggest that is evidence that Boeing has said to the Conservative Government: "Look, if you guys and gals want to carry out your privatization and want some evidence that you can take around and show that privatization is a great thing, then give us access to the Defence Industry Productivity Program, despite the fact that what we are producing is a commercial aircraft for the civilian market".

The promises which have been made are vague and there is no guarantee that they can and will be enforced. It is said that de Havilland will keep its capacity for R and D, that it will be maintained and enhanced. How? It has been said that de Havilland will seek to increase the sale of Canadian content with respect to its products. How can that occur? There are no enforcement mechanisms in place.

Boeing has indicated publicly, and I think perhaps we can take the commitment seriously, that it will seek to develop the Stretch version of the Dash-8. Even if that is not enforceable Boeing has agreed to give—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate that. However, may I have a minute to conclude?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mr. Cassidy: We are opposing this deal because we think it is a sell-out of the Canadian aerospace industry. We think that Canada has sold a major part of the aerospace industry for a mess of potage and a miniscule amount of money. We suggest that this deal is the 1980s version of the Avro Arrow, which we have to remind the House came about under a Conservative Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker).

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member who has just spoken, a question. When I live in Ottawa he is my Member of Parliament. Does the Hon. Member support taxpayers' money being used to subsidize multinational corporations and multinational airlines? I raise this question because the Hon. Member indicated that of the 27 aircraft de Havilland has rolling off its lines, I do not know whether it was this year or this month, all but three are being exported. If the Hon. Member was listening earlier to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), he will have heard the Minister indicate that the losses in de Havilland this year amount to some $55 million. Last year the losses amounted to $76 million. To date we have put $834 million into the company and it would require another $200 million to keep it going. That indicates to me that we are selling these aircraft at a big loss. When aircraft is sold out of the country to be used by someone else, our taxpayers subsidize the sale of that aircraft. I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether or not he supports a subsidy with respect to aircraft being exported. I know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James does not support such a concept.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am interested to hear the Hon. Member from Winnipeg taking issue with the policy announced by the President of the Treasury Board. In the material passed around yesterday it is specifically stated that de Havilland will be eligible for the full array of Government programs on the same basis as any other company in Canada and that the existing sales financing program in support of the sale of the Dash-7 and Dash-8 aircraft will be continued. In other words, the export financing subsidies which have proven necessary because of international competition and which have been provided to de Havilland in the past will be continued in the future. If the Hon. Member disagrees with that, then let him get up and say so. What I am saying is that we have to look at what will happen to the aerospace industry in its entirety as a consequence of this sale, that is, with respect to giving a major chunk of it, 10 per cent or more, to Boeing.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Member say that he is not opposed to the taxpayers subsidizing losses of companies such as de Havilland since now, with the Boeing proposal, those losses will have to be covered by the operation of the company and not by the taxpayers?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect that, as my Leader has said, we face a difficult environment here because virtually every country in the world which has an aerospace industry finds ways of injecting public funds into that industry. That is just as true in the United States where, as I pointed out, Boeing has drawn some $300 million in tax rebates from the American Government and it has not paid a nickel in tax over the last three or four years. Those subsidies do exist. I am suggesting it is a matter of how we direct and control de Havilland which is really at issue. I am particularly offended by the fact that the $400 million or $500 million in tax losses which de Havilland accrued results from taxpayers' money and we are now having to pay again in order to offset any profits it makes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Should the Hon. Member wish to carry on with his comment when debate is resumed he will have five minutes.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

JAMES BAY CREE AND NASKAPI SELF-GOVERNMENT— NEGOTIATION OF FUNDING

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, one and one-half years ago the House of Commons passed the Cree-Naskapi Act which was the first Indian self-government Act in our country. The Act fulfilled an obligation of the federal Government under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, the first modern land claims settlement in Canada, an agreement, it should be noted, which is now constitutionalized.

For the past one and one-half years the James Bay Cree and Naskapi have been exercising self-government in their own communities and on their lands. At this time, however, there is a looming danger that this bold move forward may be sabotaged by a failure of the Government, backed by the Department of Indian Affairs, to live up to the financial commitments which accompanied the Act.

The Cree, the Naskapi, and a Minister of the Crown, the previous Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, signed a statement of understanding which allowed for annual adjustments of the grants to operate the self-government institutions. Rather than meaningful negotiations, there is now picayune quibbling and a concerted effort by the Government to wiggle and squeeze out of these commitments, rather than to honour them.

I plead with the Government. Do not hinder Indian self-government. Face up to your obligations. Proceed on the basis of good faith. Cease your efforts to frustrate the process.

INCOME TAX

IMPACT OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, within a very short time millions of Canadians will once again be asked to fill out their income tax forms. For most, this is an annual nightmare. The convoluted goobledygook of the income tax form is about as decipherable to the ordinary Canadian as are Egyptian hieroglyphics. The latest batch of amendments which the Government has brought forward will only add to the complexity and unfairness of the current system. None of these proposals is more of a boondoggle for the rich than the $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption. Recently it was reported that:

> The exemption will have a disastrous effect structurally on the tax system. Its scope is too broad . . . Practitioners fail to see how tax-free capital gains on the disposition of jewelry, summer cottages, or Florida condominiums provide much benefit for the economy.

Who am I quoting Mr. Speaker? A member of the New Democratic Party? No. The President of the National Anti-Poverty Organization? No. I am quoting Mr. William Lawlor, national tax partner with Ernst & Whinney, former official in the tax policy division of the Department of Finance and a technical adviser to the Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada.

Mr. Lawlor is hardly a radical, but you do not have to be a radical to understand that this tax break is unfair. When will the Government realize that shovelling more money into the pockets of the wealthy cannot substitute for a well planned, realistic approach to get Canada working again?

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—FULFILLMENT OF GOVERNMENT PROMISE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has acted wisely in the sale of the de Havilland Company to Boeing. One of our campaign pledges was to privatize certain Crown corporations. More than $800 million of taxpayers' money was poured into this company over the years by Liberal Governments.

The Canadian content provision will create thousands of jobs for Canadians. The Government has taken a realistic and prudent step in moving de Havilland into the mainstream of world aircraft production.

It has long been clear that a successful aircraft industry must operate in a context of world marketing, sales and distribution organizations, and this will now be provided for de Havilland through the Boeing connection. At the same time the Government has taken steps to preserve Canadian expertise and enhance research and development at de Havilland.

The Boeing deal means the survival of de Havilland as a viable Canadian operation. It means the preservation of thousands of Canadian jobs and relief to the taxpayer from a huge and burdensome debt load. It should be praised, not criticized.

CHILDREN

EXPOSURE TO SEXUALLY EXPLICIT LYRICS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the New Brunswick Federation of Home and School Associations has expressed to me its very great and valid concern about the violent and sexually explicit lyrics in today's so-called music.

• (1405)

My problem, and I suspect it is shared by many parents and grandparents, is that this garbage which passes for music is so atrocious that not only do we not pay attention to the words, we do not listen to it, period. However, it is time we did. It is time we listened to the smut coming across the air waves, songs like Darling Nikki, which I understand is about a girl who masturbates with a magazine: or another song called 10 Seconds to Love, about oral sex in an elevator; songs that promote not just rape, torture and rebellion, but even suicide among youth.

Over the weekend I heard Anne Murray, a Canadian superstar in the music industry, decry the lyrics of these songs, saying she does not listen to them and would not degrade herself by singing them.

I bring this to the attention of the House not to shock, although it is shocking, but to plead for a reaction to this moral degradation of our children by entertainers whose credo is that sex and violence sells. If this be culture, it is not Canadian culture. This call to arms was initiated by concerned parents and educators. Should we choose to ignore it, we do so at our peril.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY VICTORIES IN QUEBEC AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ELECTIONS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a red letter day for Liberals across the country. The Tory tide is going out. We saw that last night in Quebec with a landslide Liberal victory. Liberals also scored in Prince Edward Island. Islanders elected two more Liberals in by-elections last night. Liberals won a seat which was conservative for the last 42 years. The P.E.I. Conservative Government is now on very shaky ground.

What does this say about the attitudes of Canadians? An anti-Conservative tide is sweeping the country and that tide will be high by the time the Mulroney Government gets back to the polls. Voters are mad at the Government. It promised jobs, jobs, jobs. We did not get any jobs.

We are stuck with a Government which bases all its decisions upon a user-pay philosophy. It is a Government which is nickel and diming to death the working men and women of the country. It is a Government which has already told working Canadians it is time to pay up, so it has introduced inspection fees for potatoes, dredging fees, ice-breaking fees, berthage fees. It is skimming the top off family allowance cheques, and increasing ferry rates and entrance fees at national parks. It is giving the fishery to the multinational corporations in the offshore and taking it away from inshore fishermen. The list goes on and on.

Does the Government have any compassion at all for Canadians? The Mulroney Government cozies up to Ronald Reagan and big business. The Government is losing—

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF SASKATCHEWAN INDIANS' LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a funding proposal from the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians for the fall, winter, and spring sessions of their legislative assemblies. The problem is that they're having trouble getting funding from the Government which sits across the way.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) made a commitment to the Federation to fund their assemblies. However, so far they are having trouble getting the money. This fall they needed $250,000 and they received, after a lot of probing and pushing, only $170,000. They have another assembly planned for this winter which will cost around $178,000, and another one for this spring which will cost $289,000. The problem is that they have not received the money and they are not getting any co-operation from the Minister from whom they have a commitment.

I ask the House to give me some help and get the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians some help in gaining the money they deserve. When the Constitution debate was going on we said we had to enshrine treaty rights in the Constitution and recognize our Indian and aboriginal people. Here is a chance to put our money where our mouth is. These assemblies are important for the people of Saskatchewan as well as the Saskatchewan Indians, and I call upon the Minister to come up with the money he promised. Let this not be another broken Conservative promise to the Indian people of our country. I want action, and I want action now.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND AIRCRAFT LTD. TO BOEING COMPANY

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will be very pleased with the news that the Progressive Conservative Government is keeping its promise to privatize Crown corporations. The sale of de Havilland Aircraft Ltd. to Boeing is an example of this Government's efforts to return to the private sector the industries that belong there.

This transaction will certainly improve the company's competitive position on the international aerospace market, while protecting Canadian interests in the high technology sector. Selling the assets of this Crown corporation will also considerably reduce the financial burden Canadian taxpayers have felt for so many years. The House will recall that the Government of Canada, in other words, the Canadian taxpayer, has had to inject $830 million into this Crown corporation over the last ten years.

Today, de Havilland has reached a critical stage in its development. It needs firm, long term financial commitments and must diversify production to reduce costs, and that is exactly what Boeing is in a position to do. The transaction will also generate more than $325 million in contracts for Canadian business. These projects will have the advantage of creating thousands of jobs in Canada. Instead of draining millions of dollars from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers every year, this company will probably also—

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF CANADIAN ARSENALS LTD.—REFUSAL OF SECOND BID

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, while much attention has been directed toward yesterday's announcement of the sale of de Havilland by the federal Government, another Crown corporation was also sold yesterday. In this case it was not the money the Government threw out the window but jobs and investment for two provinces, Quebec and Nova Scotia, that need economic help of every kind.

Canadian Arsenals Ltd. was sold for $92.2 million. However, in its rush to sell the company, the Government of Canada dismissed another bid with a much more advantageous package of economic benefits. International Defence Products offered to purchase Canadian Arsenals Ltd. for a total price of $40 million. However, its package also included a promise that, in the first 12 months, 80 new full-time jobs in Quebec would be created, increasing personal incomes by $5 million, and that 130 new full-time jobs would be created in Nova Scotia, increasing personal income there by $31 million. There would be a $38 million expansion of existing facilities in Quebec, and a new brass mill and two modern plants would be established in Cape Breton, worth $100 million. The jobs would be permanent and pay an average of $25,000 per worker.

It was a total of $214 million in economic benefits to Canada and 200 well paying permanent jobs that the Government had a chance to create, yet it turned its back on the unemployed. They are the type of jobs that the Government promised my province and the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND AND CANADIAN ARSENALS LTD.—FULLFILMENT OF ELECTION COMMITMENT

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the Government on yesterday's announcement of the sale of two more Crown corporations, de Havilland Aircraft of Canada and Canadian Arsenals Ltd.

This is another step on the road to economic recovery and improving government management which we began just over one year ago.

In his Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a task force to privatize or dissolve Crown corporations which no longer fulfil a specific public policy purpose. Previous announcements have been made regarding the sale or winding up of Northern Transportation Company Limited, the Canada Development Corporation, Canagrex, Loto Canada, the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, the Canada Museums Construction Corporation, and others.

Yesterday's announcement is particularly notable for the sale of de Havilland for $155 million. During the past 10 years de Havilland gobbled up $700 million of taxpayers' money. For the first nine months of this year the corporation had a loss of $55 million. Through this sale we are keeping a major promise to the Canadian people to take responsible action with regard to Crown corporations.

We were able to recognize a good deal when we saw one, something the previous Government failed to do, as well as relieve the taxpayers of a burden they have been carrying. The people of Canada recognize that it takes time to ensure that the deals we are negotiating are the best ones for Canada. They realize that the Government, as each day goes by, is making good on its commitment to good management and to stimulation of economic growth through the private sector.

These sales are a prime example of this administration, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), fulfilling another election commitment.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I call on the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) to take action on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway pensioners who have lost their rail travel passes, a right they have had for generations.

There are many Members of the House who have protested this disgraceful unilateral action by the CPR toward former employees who have served it loyally. Some Members have also noted that the replacement health benefits do little for retirees in provinces with good provincial health plans, and that they actually interfere with the Blue Cross supplementary plan.

What Members may not know is that the Minister of Labour has stopped this issue from being heard as a grievance by the Canada Labour Relations Board as requested by the railway shopcraft unions.

Rather than give his approval for a hearing, the Minister instead sat on the application for two months while the passes expired, and then appointed his own investigator, which has further delayed any resolution.

• (1415)

The railway unions are still prepared to take the case of the CPR retirees to the CLRB. What is needed is approval from the Minister of Labour. Is the Minister prepared to act so that the case can be heard? Or is he, by his actions to date, only underlining the feelings of so many CP pensioners, namely, that justice delayed is justice denied?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a fairly direct question for the Prime Minister. It arises out of his agreement with the provincial First Ministers in Halifax. That agreement purported to allow full provincial participation in the negotiations with the United States on free trade. Does this mean that the provincial Premiers now have an effective veto over the negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the document which guides this is a matter of public record. It says that it is a preparatory phase and that during the preparatory phase the provinces agree with the federal Government, without in any way contesting the primacy of the federal Government, which remains unchallenged and undiminished, that we very much want intimate consultation to develop a strategy that will be beneficial to the provinces and to the country. To this end we have agreed upon a document, the four modalities of which are set forward in writing. It says that during the 90-day period, among other things, the preparatory work should include the determination of how best to give effect to the principle of full participation in the subsequent phases of the negotiation. That is what it is all about.

We very much want the provinces involved in the process, in the definition of the objectives and in the manner in which we do this as a nation. We think it is vital that we have their participation. We have actively sought it, and we welcome it.

In the next 90 days we will deal with the manner in which it is secured.

VIEWS OF PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course that is not the interpretation placed upon the agreement by the provincial Premiers. Premier David Peterson, at the end of the conference, said: "The bottom line is the negotiating team will take instructions from the First Ministers. That is where it is, and the final authority rests with the First Ministers". Donald Getty, the Premier of Alberta, said: "The negotiating team becomes our team". If those interpretations were placed on the agreement by the First Ministers at the conclusion of the conference—and I gather they were made in the presence of the Prime Minister—why did he not take issue with those statements and declare the federal position?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because the federal position is the position which was agreed upon unanimously by the federal Government and the provinces, and reflected in this document. That is what it is all about. We agreed in a formal manner on the phases and the manner in which this would be developed. It was agreed upon with the provinces.

This is the first time we have engaged in this kind of negotiation. It is new to us. It is new to the provinces. We would never atttempt to bring home a deal which was not in the best interests of the provinces or one which did not enhance the prosperity of all Canadians. There is absolutely no reason for us even to contemplate that. This is the manner, the formal agreement between the provinces and the federal Government, whereby we set out the parameters and the modalities for achieving that objective. I think, in a federal state, that that is the proper way of doing it.

PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has allowed a serious misinterpretation to arise on the part of the provincial Premiers. Obviously they feel that they have a full, direct, equal partnership in the negotiations and a veto over the negotiations. Is it to that the Prime Minister is agreeing? Is that what he is saying? This side of the House can agree with consultation, but we want to know what the definition of full provincial participation really means.

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend put aside his negativism for a second and read the document, he might find out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We know the Liberal Party is against everything because it stands for nothing. It is just against. We know what it is against, but we do not know what it is for.

Mr. Chrétien: You're falling, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: The answer is precisely in the document. That is what it is all about. I invite my right hon. friend to take a second to read the document which says that this preparatory work should include the determination of how best to give effect to the principle of full provincial participation in subsequent phases of the negotiations.

Ambassador Reisman, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister for International Trade will begin tomorrow their 90-day consultations with the provinces to produce the kinds of agreements that we hope will make absolutely redundant any reference to negativism and vetoes. We are not going to bring back anything that will be vetoed. We are going to make a good deal for Canada and all the provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. It is about yesterday's sell-out of de Havilland. Last December I asked for the assurance that Investment Canada would be able to review any takeover of de Havilland before it became final. I was told by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that it would not. He said: "Surely to suggest that Investment Canada should have a review in addition to cabinet review and that which would take place in this House is totally unnecessary". I now want to call on the Prime Minister to give us that parliamentary review before the takeover of de Havilland becomes final.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier today in debate, the details of the final agreement will be made public in the appropriate forum and will be open to discussion in that forum at the appropriate date.

MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister what that means. Does that mean that we will see the memorandum of agreement before it becomes final? No one in the country, besides the Government, has been able to see what the memorandum of agreement provides. Will we be able to see it so that we will know what conditions there are that may or may not be fulfilled before there is a final sell-out of de Havilland to an American company?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as we indicated yesterday, there are still some details to be worked out between the Government and Boeing. As soon as those details are worked out they will be made public. I would like to re-emphasize that this particular initiative of the Government will not only strengthen de Havilland but will strengthen the entire aerospace industry in Canada and provide for secure jobs which already exist.

REASON FOR SALE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The last time we had a large majority Government it sold out the Avro-Arrow. We are now seeing history repeated with de Havilland. The taxpayers of Canada put up in excess of $800 million for investment in de Havilland. We are now out of the recession in that industry and its models are beginning to sell around the world. Why in heaven's name did the Government pick this moment to sell an important Canadian company to the United States?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are making good on a commitment which we made throughout the election campaign and since, that we would return to the private sector those companies which no longer fulfil public policy purposes and which were essentially commercial. That is exactly what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the one commitment the Government made in the campaign was to combine de Havilland with Canadair and to keep it in Canada. That is the commitment that was made in the campaign. Check with the Minister of Finance. At least Mr. Diefenbaker got to his feet to defend the Avro decision, unlike the present Prime Minister.

AMOUNT OF SELLING PRICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The list price for this deal is $155 million. Special concessions offered by the Government, including product insurance, DIPP grants, and tax write-offs, give Boeing about $500 million. Does it make sense to the Government that we should be giving Boeing more than twice the listed selling price with Canadian taxpayers' money? Does that make business sense to the Government?

• (1425)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it makes eminent business sense and this is not a decision that we have to defend. This is a great decision for Canada and for the aerospace industry.

The situation we are facing is very simple. In the first nine months of this year de Havilland lost $55 million. Last year de Havilland lost $76 million. That was taxpayers' money. The best estimate for next year was that de Havilland would lose $200 million. That is taxpayers' money, and that is what we are going to save the taxpayers.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, instead of that the Government is going to lose the $700 million it has already invested, give the Americans $500 million more, and think it got a good deal. I would say that that is business genius!

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I hope he will deal with the issue. Does he consider it—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Back to teaching university, Ed. Back to the Liberal Party.

Mr. Broadbent: There he is, sputtering away, the former Prime Minister who will always remain a former Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: At least he got there. You never will.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question?

Mr. Deans: You can always tell when we're getting under their skin. They won't let us ask.

Mr. Broadbent: My question is for the present Prime Minister. Considering that taxpayers are going to put up some $500 million for the Americans for something with a list price of $155 million, does the Prime Minister think it is a good deal for Canadian taxpayers to put up the money while American citizens will end up with the deed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously my hon. friend has failed to realize that the $700 million that was pumped into de Havilland is money is already gone.

With regard to another grave misstatement of fact, he referred to the decision of a previous Government in regard to the shutting down of the Avro-Arrow. What we are doing today is saving de Havilland and securing jobs for de Havilland workers. That is the difference. There will not be fewer jobs but more jobs for de Havilland workers.

With regard to the fundamental question my friend raises, the figures mentioned by the President of the Treasury Board are, I think, eloquent. There were serious losses, not only in the past but projected. Pursuant to our commitments to the Canadian people, we have looked for a purchaser that would strengthen the jobs of those employees and make de Havilland a stronger, bigger and more prosperous company, and a greater contributor to technology and development. We believe that this is the manner in which it ought to be done, and we think it is a gesture that will benefit the workers and the company and make a significant contribution to Canada.

TRADE

FREE EXCHANGE—NUMBER OF PROVINCES REQUIRED TO CREATE A VETO

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the question of free trade and ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister how many provinces it will take to have a veto, when the 90-day period is over, since the Premier of Ontario, Mr. Peterson, and the Premier of Alberta clearly indicated they had that right. How many provinces will it take to bring negotiations with the Americans to a standstill?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice is always talking about the past and about vetoes. That was typical of the Liberal Government. We are now setting up a mechanism for co-operation between two levels of Government which will concentrate on what brings Canadians together, not on what can divide them.

INQUIRY IF CERTAIN PROVINCES WILL HAVE POWER TO STOP NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I think the provincial premiers are very anxious to know what the agreement involves, and I shall repeat my question: Will the Premier of Ontario or the Premier of Quebec or both or will the Premier of Alberta have the power to stop negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has some understanding of the Canadian Constitution and existing jurisdictions. What we are doing is create a situation where the various governments can act together. We acted together in Halifax to set up a process and establish a principle. For the first time in Canada's history, we have established the principle that the provinces have a right to full participation in negotiations on international trade.

Mr. Chrétien: Full participation?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the first stage. We are engaged in a step-by-step process. As the agreement clearly points out, the process, the conditions governing subsequent stages will be established jointly by the governments.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wish to refer to the statement of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which he made last December in which he said that Investment Canada would not be required to look at the de Havilland sale because of review by the Cabinet and by the House. Will the Prime Minister undertake to ensure that the House will have such a review of the de Havilland sale before the deal with Boeing is consummated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, those procedures which are in place and which would apply by the normal course of events will apply.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be specific since there is perhaps a gray area. Will the Prime Minister undertake to have a parliamentary committee or this House review the sale of de Havilland to Boeing in order that we can look at the $500 million in taxpayers' money which will go to the deal? In this way we can look as well at alternatives, such as the purchase by Rimgate Holdings, a Canadian company, which would have kept this important company in Canadian hands? Will we have such a parliamentary review—yes or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's question as a representation. It will be one of the factors which we will take into account with respect to this transaction, and other transactions, in the privatization program of the Government.

INSURANCE COSTS—REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have now had three Ministers try to justify what is not justifiable. I would like to go back to a specific part of the transaction.

The Government has agreed to a most unprecedented arrangement whereby it will cover all insurance costs and future liabilities of de Havilland aircraft instead of having Boeing undertake proper responsibility for those liabilities as would normally occur. Considering the irregularity of such an action, will the Government ask the Auditor General to examine that part of the financial transaction, or will it refer the matter immediately to the Finance committee so that we can get to exactly why this particular and peculiar arrangement was made?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as is often the case, the premise of the question is false. Boeing has agreed to assume the cost of insuring all aircraft produced to date, including those produced while de Havilland was under ownership by the Crown. What the Crown has agreed to do is share in a part of those insurance costs which are incremental, in other words, in the increasing insurance costs and, at that, on a declining basis over time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the answer of the Minister we can be thankful that Boeing did not offer the Brooklyn Bridge or Florida swampland in exchange for de Havilland, since obviously the Minister would have taken it up on the deal.

What we want to know about this very important arrangement is why the Government has also agreed to a series of open-ended commitments for development grants, research loans, and other forms of assistance which could amount to over $300 million.

Mr. Broadbent: $500 million.

Mr. Axworthy: We would like to know why the Government has not asked for some continuing equity or participation on behalf of Canadian taxpayers in that company to ensure that those investments will be properly controlled and managed.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, what we have done in this letter of understanding is indicate that Boeing and de Havilland will be eligible for existing Government programs, just like any other corporate citizens in the country. In return, and apart from the price, what we will be getting is a deal with a corporation which is strong financially and strong from a management point of view. This is a company with a great deal of expertise in international marketing. It will bring new technology and new jobs. It will provide a world product mandate which will open markets for Canadian workers and Canadian companies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: Let's sell the Government.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We did that in 1979.

Mr. de Jong: And what a bargain that was!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMPACT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Will he not agree that the decision of the last Conservative majority Government to close down Avro-Arrow cost us in terms of jobs, technology, and research? Does he not feel that his Government's decision is likely to involve the same type of loss in terms of our future in this world?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think the House is indicating its concern that the question relates to a matter of government policy of a different Government. Does the Hon. member wish to put his question directly to this Government about matters of Government policy?

Mr. Murphy: My question to the Minister, then, since the Government does not want to deal with what happened in the past, is this: Has this Government done any study of what the effects of this particular deal and this memorandum of agreement will mean in terms of research and development and in terms of any losses in these areas?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, we certainly have, Mr. Speaker. In terms of research and development what this deal means is more. It means a commitment, for example, to develop the Dash-8 at a cost of several hundreds of millions of dollars. Again, that will mean more jobs, more investment, and an upgrading of the plant at Downsview. I think this is a very positive deal. It retains our own technology, builds on what we have in place already, and it ensures a bright future for that company and the whole of the aerospace industry in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES FOR EDUCATION AND HEALTH CARE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister with respect to the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax. I quote to him a statement made by the Premier of Ontario with regard to transfer payments. He said:

—these cuts which were announced without consultation speeded up by a year without discussion . . . will weaken our country in the very areas where we must marshall our greatest strengths.

I ask the Prime Minister, and I ask him sincerely, where is the fairness in cutting back on moneys for post-secondary education and for health care when billions of dollars have been provided to multinational oil companies and to other companies? Where is the fairness?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend quoted the distinguished Premier of Ontario in his question, or at least I believe he did. There is another quote from the Premier of Ontario which I saw on the front page of a Toronto newspaper on Sunday in which he said that the Conservatives inherited one hell of a mess from the Liberals, financially. What we are trying to do is make that mess an awful lot better and, in the process, strengthen the economy of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECISION—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought we would have received some sincerity from the Prime Minister. However, I guess all we will get is his famous temerity.

I wish to quote the words of the Premier of Ontario again. He said:

—we propose that the federal Government live up to its commitment to genuine consultation by deferring the post-secondary education and health care cuts that are scheduled to be moved in April of next year.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Dingwall: Will the Prime Minister not do the honourable thing and defer these cut-backs in 1986 until the next year? Will he not do the honourable thing?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend believes that that is the honourable thing to do, then he is entitled to his opinion. We have an obligation to maintain the expansion which this Government has initiated in co-operation with the provinces since we have come to power. That recovery remains fragile. We have initiated policies which have created jobs. In terms of the creation of jobs, the Liberals averaged 85,000 a year. We have created over 300,000 jobs in our first year in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Interest rates have gone down by three percentage points. Productivity is increasing.

Mr. Rodriguez: This is a recording.

Mr. Mulroney: We have an obligation to build upon that, and that requires the installation of some fiscal sanity here in Ottawa.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: We propose to do precisely that.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have in front of me the famous statement to which the Prime Minister referred earlier. Is the Prime Minister saying that Premier Peterson is wrong to state that the principle of full provincial participation means that the negotiator will receive his instructions from the First Ministers?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we are saying and what the document says—the document, among others, written by Mr. O'Neil, the Minister of Trade for the Government of Ontario—is that the first 90 days, the first step in this process, would include the determination of how best to give effect to the principle of full provincial participation in subsequent phases of the negotiation. That is absolutely clear. We are taking this matter step by step. That was agreed to by all of the provinces.

The Premier of Ontario has given his interpretation. I would suggest he is a little ahead of himself. What we are doing now is sitting down with all of the provincial Governments to determine how that principle would apply to subsequent phases of the negotiation.

ONTARIO PREMIER'S INTERPRETATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Do I take it, then, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of State for External Affairs is explicitly rejecting the interpretation of the Premier of Ontario by stating that he is ahead of himself? Is this a specific repudiation of the comments which have been made about this document by provincial Premiers right across the country? Will the Minister admit he is repudiating them? At least do that clearly.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has worked very hard and very successfully to achieve an atmosphere of co-operation between federal and provincial Governments on trade. The New Democratic Party is working very hard and very unsuccessfully to break up these negotiations—

Mr. Deans: We are trying to get the truth.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and to restore a sense of bitterness to federal-provincial relations.

The Hon. Member has asked me what I am doing explicitly. What I am doing explicitly is quoting the document which was agreed to by 11 Governments, including the Government of the Province of Ontario, which sets forth the idea that we will approach the question of full participation step by step. We have spelled it out for the first step, and together, as is the determination of this Government, we will spell out how it applies in subsequent steps.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES—RISE IN WATER LEVELS

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he is aware that water levels in the Great Lakes basin are above normal. Due to high winds over the past couple of days we have had severe flooding in that particular area. Is the Minister willing to look into the situation and assist residents along the north shore of Lake Erie, if possible?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am. In fact my Department is already deeply involved in issuing warnings of flooding and erosion damage. We are active as well in the provision of technical information to the International Joint Commission which is responsible for the regulation of the water levels.

I should tell the Hon. Member, though, that the huge Great Lakes system is almost totally controlled by natural processes of precipitation and evaporation so there is very little we can actually do to control the water levels themselves. However, the Hon. Member may also wish to know that federal disaster assistance program may apply in this case, provided that certain specific criteria are met and provided as well that there is a request from the Province of Ontario for such assistance.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REQUEST FOR BENEFITS AT AGE SIXTY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We have in our possession the Government's negotiating paper on planned changes to the Canada Pension Plan which raises the disturbing spectre that the position of the Government will be to take a nickel and dime approach to fundamental changes in key areas of pension reform.

Would the Minister of National Health and Welfare commit his Government to the principle of an actuarially reduced early retirement age so that Canadian workers can have access to the Canada Pension Plan at 60 years of age? And, second, in the area of disability benefits, would the Minister agree to the proposal that these people should be treated as if they were retired, with the appropriate levels of benefits?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this Government is committed to reform of the Canada Pension Plan. We have stated that. The Prime Minister has stated it both in the election campaign and subsequently. That has been done in a very consistent manner.

What I will say to the Hon. Member, as I said to him yesterday in committee, is that the Minister of Finance with his provincial counterparts and some other Ministers who have responsibility in this area, such as myself, are negotiating. The position of negotiation, as I mentioned to the Hon. Member yesterday, is obviously not to be discussed in the House. However, I want to say to the Hon. Member that the commitment is there and the negotiations are going well.

PENSIONS FOR HOMEMAKERS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations are going on but what is disturbing is that the negotiating paper indicates a very cautious and nickel and dime approach to some of these key areas which I believe all Canadians are in agreement need to be overhauled.

My question is in regard to the homemaker's proposal which the Minister announced yesterday in one of his speeches to a women's group. Why is his Government now waffling on the position taken by his own Party on homemakers? And will the Minister commit the Government to a retroactive introduction of homemakers to the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, I did not make a speech. I was asked a question by a responsible women's organization as to whether the commitment stood. I said the commitment stood and we want to have that kind of reform. Second, there is no waffling. I just hope that the Liberal Party will come out in favour, as this Government has done, of homemaker's pensions, so that we can get on with the job, and in fact, it can convince some of its provincial friends of the same thing.

ENERGY

LAY-OFF OF 600 WORKERS IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

Ultramar has just announced this afternoon that it will buy the Montreal East Gulf refinery, keep the service stations open, but close the refinery itself, so that some 600 workers will be laid off. Here is my question: What does the Government intend to do to make sure that the 600 Montreal East workers will have jobs, considering that the unemployment rate is already very high in that area?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the disposition of Gulf's downstream assets in Quebec and Atlantic Canada is strictly a matter between two private sector companies. Of course the Government of Canada has no control over the decision or of the timing. What we did do was ask that the refinery remain open for another two months so that possible buyers could come forward. During that period some possibilities emerged but no commercially viable deal was struck between the companies.

It is our understanding that some of the employees will be retained at the Montreal refinery site because it will continue to operate as a tank farm. Other refineries in the area are looking at hiring and efforts are being made to place the employees.

I should also add that this is part of a world-wide problem. There have been 10 refinery closures in Canada within the last three years.

POSITION OF EMPLOYEES TO BE LAID OFF

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question was very specific. I want to know what the Minister is going to do for the other employees who will be thrown out of work, because only a few will be kept in the refineries. Six hundred employees will be thrown out of work, and there is already an unemployment problem in the east end of Montreal.

Specifically, what is the Government going to do for those 600 employees who are being thrown out of work, because there are two other companies which will soon be closing their doors as well?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, clearly the Hon. Member does not understand the situation. This Government is doing everything it can for those employees in the Montreal area who have been affected, as it has for others with the job programs we have brought in which, as we have pointed out, have increased employment across the country.

I would like to point out that the Hon. Member is a member of a Party which supported the National Energy Program of off-oil or conservation, where the taxpayers of Canada spent $550 million to discourage the residents of Quebec from using oil. So it is hardly surprising that the demand for oil has dropped in that province.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—CANADIAN TECHNOLOGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct another question to the Prime Minister on the de Havilland deal. I hope he will respond to it. I think Canadians will shortly come to the conclusion that this has been a bad business deal for our country. What we have really given to Boeing is a $1 billion Christmas bonus. Why did the Government give away about $1 billion worth of high technology in the aerospace industry, and do so in such a way as to give control to an American company without retaining some Canadian control in this very highly developed aerospace venture?

• (1450)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again the premise of the question is somewhat erroneous. We are not giving away technology, we are preserving and enhancing it.

Mr. Broadbent: And no guarantees.

Mr. de Cotret: A world product mandate means that all of the production of the existing product lines of de Havilland will be maintained in Canada. The use of any of that technology outside Canada requires, according to the understanding, specific ministerial control. So we have not given away technology, we have maintained it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Until we see that agreement we cannot make a judgment about that.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE PROPOSAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I hope he will respond to my second supplementary as he did to the third supplementary of my friend, the Leader of the NDP.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): "Friend" understates it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When the Prime Minister responds to the final question, the questioner cannot get back at him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am assured of an answer now, Mr. Speaker.

On February 23, 1984, in the city of Toronto, the Prime Minister promised the creation of a joint Senate and House of Commons committee on Crown corporations with the mandate and resources to undertake effective reviews of individual corporations. Why has the Prime Minister broken this promise? Why has he not allowed a parliamentary committee to review the situation in de Havilland, Canadair and other companies so we have a chance to review this before it becomes a firm agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend is right. We all live in terror of his questions. That is well known. However, he has the facts a wee bit wrong. When I was Leader of the Opposition I stood and asked the then Liberal Prime Minister for a parliamentary committee to investigate the spending of another $400 million on Canadair in Montreal. He said no, and all those trained seals sitting next to the Right Hon. Member stood up and applauded that rejection of a request for a parliamentary committee.

What we have done is campaign on a commitment to privatize Crown corporations to the advantage of Canadian taxpayers. This is an idea that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition developed when he was seeking the leadership of the Liberal Party. Then he was in favour of spinning off Crown corporations, but now he has changed his mind.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Again.

Mr. Mulroney: Well, we are consistent, and we want to make the best deal for the Canadian taxpayer, secure those jobs and that technology in Toronto, and that is what we have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

HAIDA INDIANS' CLAIM TO QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week he met with the Premier of British Columbia regarding Lyell Island and the federal view that there must be negotiations with the Haida on their legal claims to title to the Queen Charlotte Islands. The Prime Minister undertook in this House to advise the House of the results of those discussions regarding this urgent federal-provincial matter. Will he take this opportunity to advise the House of any common ground he found with Premier Bennett in furthering the negotiations between the Haida and the provincial and federal Governments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My apologies to the Minister, because I did respond in the House. The conversations are ongoing and when I have information to impart to the Hon. Member I will so advise.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL INITIATIVE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister is aware that the communities on the Queen Charlotte Islands and in other areas of British Columbia are becoming highly polarized over this matter. Would he be prepared to put forward a federal process now which can address the legal claims of the Haida, the federal park proposals in relation to South Moresby, and a recovery proposal which will replace job for job those who may be displaced by any kind of shut-down of logging in the contested area?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond to the Hon. Member. As he may know, I have had elements of the comments made by him under consideration by the parties concerned. As recently as just prior to Question Period I had some further discussions. I expect to be out there myself at the beginning of next week and there will be some communication between now and then regarding this situation.

TRADE

ADMINISTRATION OF IMPORT PERMITS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Charges have been laid in connection with the hundreds of missing cheese import permits, but this action may be just the tip of the Mozzarella.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stackhouse: Under the system of permit distribution this Government inherited from its predecessor it has been possible for firms convicted of illegal use of permits to get new permits. What action can this Government take to tighten up the administration of permit distribution?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise that action has already begun. Fines in the amount of $111,000 have been levied against nine companies. On November 29, 121 charges were laid against Marquis Foods of Toronto. My officials are presently carrying out a comprehensive review of all matters dealing with import and export permits, which includes the issuing of quotas, and we expect to have a preliminary report ready early in the year.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GULF SALE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On this sad day, Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources respecting the Gulf refinery shutdown which will wipe out 600 more jobs in Montreal East, an area already quite depressed as it is. If her memory is good, the Minister will probably recall that right here in the House she refused to give her Government's financial backing to a Quebec company that wanted to buy Gulf to operate the refinery, not to shut it down. My question to the Minister is simply this: How can she now wash her hands off this whole matter, like Pontius Pilate, and pretend that it is a deal between two private companies, whereas she once had an opportunity to intervene but chose not to do anything?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to find the actual question in that statement. At no time did I ever say in this House that there would be a grant given to the refinery because we have written information from Ultramar that if funds are made available to a Montreal refinery in a market where demand has dropped 40 per cent, Ultramar would close its refinery in Quebec City. Clearly the problem is one of reduced demand for oil caused partly by the Hon. Member's own Party when it was in power. It spent, as I said, $500 million persuading the people of Quebec not to use oil, and demand for oil has dropped.

INQUIRY CONCERNING PROGRAMS TO HELP WORKERS LAID IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Minister will recall that it was the Government of Quebec and not the Government of Canada which encouraged people to switch to electricity.

Since it now appears the 600 workers—

Mr. La Salle: Do you agree?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Do your homework! Since it now appears the 600 workers will be thrown out of work, may I put this question to someone on the Government benches: What adjustment programs are to be implemented to help those people survive after being laid off?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that some of the employees will be retained and others will be hired by other refineries in the area. I would just like to point out that three other refineries have closed in the Montreal area in the last three years when the former Government was in power, and they did nothing at all for those three refineries. I would also like to point out that if you average the number of jobs created in Quebec since our Government came to power, it comes to 6,846 a month, compared to only 673 under the Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

ABUSE OF THE ELDERLY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Mayor Mel Lastman of the City of North York has set up a task force on the sensitive topic of abuse of the elderly. It is being chaired by Doctor Jerry Cooper. Since this is obviously an issue of national concern, what initiatives is the Government planning to look into this critical situation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the point the Hon. Member raises is a valid one. Abuse takes different forms. As he has pointed out in his question, one could result in legal action. There are other types of abuse, such as mental abuse, social abuse, and abuse from family members putting pressure on the elderly in terms of their money. There are various forms of abuse.

• (1500)

I want to commend the Hon. Member and his colleagues for the initiatives they are taking. Obviously I look forward to further representations which he and others might make as to the appropriate action we should consider.

POINT OF ORDER

PRESENCE OF LIBERAL PARTY POSTER ON WALL OF WEST BLOCK COMMITTEE ROOM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, there is a matter that I feel compelled to bring to your attention in your capacity as guardian of the decorum of the precincts of the House of Commons.

In meeting room 308, West Block, there has recently been attached to the wall a large framed election poster. In large letters it has on it the word "Liberal" in that Party's colours and there is wording on it to indicate that it was published under the authority of the Liberal Party.

Ms. Copps: Don't lecture us about decorum.

Some Hon. Members: Hush.

Ms. Copps: That's a joke.

Mr. Nickerson: The public committee rooms in the Parliament Buildings ought not to be desecrated in this manner. I would ask that you require the offending Party to remove such partisan and unparliamentary material.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should simply say that that is not a point of order.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

UNESCO DESIGNATION OF QUEBEC CITY AS SITE OF OUTSTANDING UNIVERSAL VALUE

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to inform the House that the UNESCO World Heritage Committee, which is meeting in Paris this week, has approved, literally just a few moments ago, the nomination of the historic district of Quebec, essentially old Quebec, to the World Heritage list as a site of outstanding universal value.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: This prestigious national distinction is shared by only a few sites around the world, among them the Egyptian pyramids, the Versailles Palace, the Vatican, the Taj Mahal, the Statue of Liberty and the Grand Canyon, to mention but a number of examples.

In a nutshell, the designation means that the 87 countries around the world that participate in the relevant convention are committed to preserving, through international co-operation, the cultural and natural marvels recognized to be of exceptional universal value. For Canada, then, and for Quebec in particular, the designation to which I have made reference makes this a special day.

[Translation]

I am sure that all Members will join me in congratulating Mayor Jean Pelletier and the people of Quebec City on this international recognition of our heritage.

[English]

One of the many benefits of the designation, including the more aesthetic benefits, is that it makes Quebec eligible to call upon international support for the conservation of the cultural and architectural richness of that splendid city. Before we even give consideration to calling upon that support I think we should set the example ourselves within Canada and Quebec by continuing to preserve that richness in a spirit of appreciation for what we have been bequeathed by previous generations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition, I am very pleased to congratulate the Mayor of Quebec City and all the citizens of the "Vieille Capitale", and we find it very gratifying that UNESCO has recognized the heritage value of Quebec's Historic District. What generations of Quebecers have learned to appreciate will now gain international renown, and around the world people will be able to appreciate the beauty of this city. The people of Quebec City may be justly proud of the honour bestowed on them today, and we are delighted to add our congratulations to those expressed by the Minister.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for calling the attention of the House to this important announcement.

[Translation]

On behalf of my party, I want to congratulate UNESCO for designating the historic district of Quebec as a site of outstanding universal value. By giving the City of Quebec international recognition, UNESCO has recognized the historical significance of that city and its inhabitants. It is one more reason for all Quebecers to be proud of their city and their cultural heritage.

I therefore extend my sincere congratulations to the people of Quebec City.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of 270 constituents of the riding of Saint-Maurice—not St. Moritz—I should like to present a petition.

The petitioners humbly state their belief that any society must share responsibilities with respect to children and that the principle of universality must be maintained.

Wherefore the petitioners humbly call upon the House of Commons to support the immediate withdrawal of Bill C-70 aimed at de-indexing family allowances.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions from different parts of Canada. These petitions are continuing to come in in great numbers every day. My first petition is from the machinists' union local 2315 from Ontario, imploring people to help save baby bonus indexing. They ask the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

My second petition comes from Halifax, Nova Scotia. The petition states that the undersigned oppose Bill C-70 because it will deindex child benefits and take money from low income women and children.

My third petition, which comes from my riding of Vancouver East is particularly interesting. Every signature is either that of a Vietnamese or of a Chinese citizen of that area. I believe it shows how much new immigrants care about these programs and the cut-backs that will affect their families. They also ask to have the fully indexed family allowance reinstated and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we know that one in five children in this country lives in poverty. It is for this reason that I am most pleased to present petitions in the House on behalf of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) calling upon the Government to rescind its unfair deindexation of family allowance and child tax credits, particularly because it deals with the critical issue of poverty of children and single-parent families.

I also have a petition from Hochelaga which again outlines the difficulties, as we have seen in the newspapers, of people lining up at food banks and single parents trying to feed their children on the family allowance cheque which the Government is cutting back. I urge the Government, on behalf of these petitioners and hundreds of people in this county and thousands across the country, to retract its unfair cut-backs on family allowances.

• (1510)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbian residents of Kelowna, Comox, Surrey, Vancouver, Burnaby, Dawson Creek, Penticton, Terrace, Kamloops, Fort St. John, Charlie Lake and other places. All of them draw to the attention of the Government the fact that they are dissatisfied with its decision to deindex family allowance payments. They ask the Government to reinstate full indexation of all universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases which were incorporated in the last budget speech.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of the City of Halifax who, along with many other Canadians, appear not to have given up on the Government. They are still trying to get the Government to change its mind. I am glad that these petitions continue to roll in. Perhaps they will finally have the appropriate effect.

These petitioners call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the family allowances and to roll back unfair tax increases.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present some petitions from my home City of Regina, Saskatchewan and others from Unity, Saskatchewan. These petitioners, as have many other Canadians across the country, call upon the Government to restore full indexation to family allowances. They also express their opposition to some of the inequities in the tax increases, particularly some of the tax breaks given to the wealthy. These petitioners join with other Canadians in opposing the cut-backs.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Shawinigan in the Province of Quebec. The undersigned urge the Prime Minister of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances and of the child tax credit. They point out that cut-backs of $500 million will be made in family assistance if the Government does not reconsider this Budget measure.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions from residents of British Columbia, Nova Scotia and Ontario, regarding the Maritime Experimental Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They are worried that the process for testing radiation is not satisfactory. They say that the naval policy of the United States which neither denies nor confirms the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels is unacceptable. They call for a full public inquiry before the present Canada-United States agreement is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition from residents of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands. They protest the Government's attempt to cut back on the indexation of family allowances, its unfair tax increases which will particularly affect low and middle-income people, and the tax breaks which are being given at the same time to the rich and well-to-do. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of the Province of Quebec who humbly ask for the full restoration of family allowances and the repeal of unfair tax increases.

[English]

I also have the honour to place before the House petitions from the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, from my riding and from other parts of eastern Ontario. These persons say that the cut-backs in family allowances are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as $500,000 in tax-free capital gains, greater deductions for high income recipients for RRSPs, billions in hand-outs to the oil companies, and the billion dollar bail-out of the banks. They demand the rescission of deindexation of the family allowances.

POINT OF ORDER

CONTRADICTION IN STANDING ORDERS CONCERNING ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you will appreciate my point of order. Today gives me an occasion to bring to the attention of the Chair one of the funny decisions which we took in respect of our new rules. When we have a statement by a Minister, according to Standing Order 46(7) it automatically triggers Standing Order 19(4), which gives Members of Parliament an adjournment debate. Since we have a recorded vote tonight, we were not to have a "Late Show". However, since a Minister made a statement, we will have a "Late Show". I just wanted to ensure that Hon. Members knew that we were entitled to a "Late Show" tonight, so that they would get their names on the list for it. Let us review the rules so that we at least have some logic as to when we have "Late Shows" and when we do not have them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is absolutely correct; there will be a "Late Show".

This gives me the opportunity to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by five minutes this day.

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—CANADIAN AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the Canadian Aerospace Industry through the sale of de Havilland Aircraft Ltd. to the Boeing Corporation and for its consequent failure to protect the aerospace technology paid for by Canadian taxpayers and developed by de Havilland.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Kaplan:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end of the sentence and adding the following:

"and further condemns the Government's lack of confidence in the capacity of Canadians to maintain the country's sovereignty in the aerospace industry".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rises on questions or comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the last speaker. Considering some of the points raised in Question Period and the need to have some scrutiny of just what studies assisted the Government in making this decision, does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) have any ideas on where this matter might be referred to or whether it should be referred to a committee? If so, what kind of committee should it be and what might its terms of reference include?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would comment by saying it should be either the Standing Committee on Finance or the Standing Committee which deals with regional industrial expansion. Certainly they would be logical places where this particular deal could be and should be reviewed, not after the agreement with Boeing is signed, sealed and delivered, but beforehand.

There are some real options at which I think the House should look. It may be that in end the Government's majority will prevail, but I think Canadians expect Parliament to look at something as important as this matter because of the implications for the future of the aerospace industry and because of the enormous amount of taxpayers' money which has gone into and will go into de Havilland.

Perhaps I could share with my hon. friend the estimates which we have. It is indicated that $65 million of the sale price is a deferred portion. An additional $30 million is a commitment from the Government of Canada because of the Crown share of product liability insurance. The tax loss carried forward—and this is a loss which has already been paid for by taxpayers—is $400 million. That is like real money as far as Boeing is concerned. A further $65 million is allocated because the Crown, through the Defence Industry Productivity Program, will share in development costs for the new Dash-8. Finally, $30 million to $40 million is expected to be paid in subsidies for export financing of de Havilland products. That approaches $550 million. That is what we are paying to Boeing for it to pay us $155 million on this particular deal.

In conclusion, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) was quite explicit in saying that because of cabinet scrutiny and the review which would take place in the House, it was unnecessary for Investment Canada to look at this particular deal. That was in December, 1984. If that was good enough then, I suggest that it is good enough now. I take it that the comments of the Hon. House Leader mean that the Government is now taking actively into consideration that kind of review. My Party and I intend to press for that kind of review in Parliament or in a committee.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I was a bit disappointed with that response. I was assuming that my friend would also have a great deal of concern with regard to what this might mean in terms of aerospace technology development in Canada. I wonder if the Hon. Member would elaborate in some detail so that we would have an indication whether he feels that the matter of technological implication in the decision ought also to be referred to the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the technology is there. I am not satisfied that the guarantees given by Boeing are bankable in any way. If Boeing says that it wants to withdraw the world product mandate from commuter aircraft being built in Canada and goes to the Minister looking for his approval, what will the Minister do? They will put a gun to his head and say that they are either going to shut it down or take it back to Seattle, leaving us a few bits and pieces to be made in Toronto. That is the kind of deal they would bring, Mr. Speaker, and that is the kind of thing we fear. I think that should be explored in a committee of the House very soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) on debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to participate in this very important debate, particularly as it relates to an indusry which I believe is important to all Canadians. Approximately a year ago, shortly after the federal election, the Conservative Government, with great haste, announced to the Parliament and the people of Canada its desire and intention to sell a number of Canadian-owned Crown corporations. One corporation which was talked about at great length was de Havilland of Canada Limited. In fact, in numerous utterances in this House, in press releases, and in various statements made by Ministers of the Crown the Government's desire to unload this Canadian Crown corporation was emphasized. However, there were no restrictions or limitations as to who might be the purchaser of this Crown corporation.

The sale price of $155 million for this particular Crown corporation is worth noting and deserves careful consideration by all Members of Parliament. Boeing will pay $155 million; $90 million in cash and $65 million in a note repayable over 15 years. There are some other facts which I think ought to be read into the record. For each $5 million of new orders to Canadian suppliers $1 million will be cut from the amount which is outstanding. Second, Ottawa will pay part of any increases in de Havilland's liability insurance for all its planes now flying. This can cut the purchase price by some $30 million according to the Chairman of the CDIC.

In addition, Boeing will be allowed to carry forward de Havilland's losses for tax purposes but has agreed to use the benefit only for lending moneys to Canadian buyers of de Havilland's planes. This can cut the purchase price by $400 million according to the Chairman of a competitor, Rimgate. Boeing will pay a royalty of a specified amount on all sales of models developed by de Havilland. Finally, Boeing will benefit from all available federal programs including the loans the Government now provides to support sales of Dash-7s and Dash-8s.

That is the sale price, Mr. Speaker. On one side of the ledger there is $155 million and on the other side the Government of Canada is investing in excess of $700 million. Its assets today at market value would be in excess of $300 million, plus the added features which were attached to the agreement in small print with regard to the benefits under the Income Tax Act and the carrying forward of certain liabilities thereto. The sale price is $155 million. It can be argued and substantiated that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has now put Canada up for sale and the price is a meagre $155 million for this Crown corporation.

There was an argument advanced many months ago by members of the Opposition about prudent and competent managers of the economy. The evidence which has been adduced thus far does not prove to a reasonable individual that it would be prudent and competent for Canadians to be involved in this deal. Perhaps at some time in the near future the memorandum of understanding signed by de Havilland and Boeing will clarify for Members of Parliament and the Canadian people exactly what the bargaining position of the Government of Canada was with relation to this particular subject matter.

de Havilland is a good company. It has a world product mandate. Why would a multinational corporation like Boeing not want to pick up de Havilland for $155 million? Those in the private sector would say that this is the private sector at its best, it is cherry picking. They take that which is the best and leave that which is not. They cannot lose in this deal, Mr. Speaker. de Havilland will build the Dash-7 and Dash-8. Why else would Boeing want to buy this particular company? Boeing knows a quality product even if the Government of Canada does not.

With the deregulation of the airline industry the Dash-7 and Dash-8, short take off and landing aircraft, are about to come into their own displacing many jets built by Boeing. It only makes sense that an American company would buy out the competition. To date de Havilland has 117 orders for its Dash-8 aircraft. The Government allowed the Canadian people to accept all the risk over the past ten years and has now handed an American company the opportunity for profits which rightly belong, not to the Government of Canada, but to the people of Canada.

This is a tragedy in that it can be argued successfully that it is comparable to the 1959 Avro Arrow situation. There was a large Conservative majority Government involved in that particular decision which affected Canadian industry. Canadians saw a wealth of technology along with individuals with ideas and expertise migrate to the United States, thus becoming the real substance behind the American thrust to have a man on the moon. I do not know where this trip will lead us, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that the selling of de Havilland at this point in time without the necessary qualifications is not good for Canada. It is not good for the workers and it is certainly not good for the Canadian economy.

What about consultation, Mr. Speaker? In the Throne Speech, the budget, and subsequent speeches by Members opposite, we heard about consultation. Did the Government consult with the United Auto Workers? Did the Government do, as the Prime Minister would say, the honourable thing by consulting with the workers involved? No, it did not.

● (1530)

Did the Government consult with the Ontario Government? According to Premier Peterson's office, the Government of Ontario has received two communications from the Government of Canada concerning the de Havilland takeover. One was an acknowledgement of a request made by the Government of Ontario well over a year ago to be consulted on the possibility of a de Havilland sale. I regret to report that the second one occurred last Friday at the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax. At that time, officials of the Ontario Government were told that the deed was done.

What happened to the claim of the Prime Minister that co-operative federalism is here? Why was there no meaningful consultation with the Ontario Government? Why was there no consultation with the United Auto Workers? The critics will argue that it was to provide a sweetheart deal to Boeing. There was no consultation because the Government wanted to circumvent every possible concern and objection regarding this particular transfer so that it could be put in the hands of Boeing.

There was a press conference at which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) made a statement. He talked about a memorandum of understanding. Where is that memorandum of understanding? For a time, the President of the Treasury Board argued in the House that jobs would be increased in de Havilland. Where are the figures? Where is the documentation which would allow Canadians to view for themselves the investment intentions of Boeing? We have seen no memorandum of understanding.

Of course, Government Members have the answers. They say that there are a few details yet to be decided upon and once they are decided upon they will table the document. It may be many, many months before the people of Canada will really know what has transpired. Then, unfortunately, it will be too late.

During Question Period today and in the speeches of Hon. Members who have preceded me, there has been mention of job guarantees. Approximately 4,500 Canadians are employed with de Havilland. There has been not one word in the documents provided by the Minister on jobs guarantees. The tragedy of that is that the Government has demonstrated in other areas of the Canadian economy—I will not talk about the banks, the multinational oil companies or anything of that nature—that it does not have the business acumen or prudence required to assure that workers in Canada will be protected as a result of this takeover.

It is very evident that in this particular agreement between de Havilland and Boeing, nothing has been mentioned about job guarantees. I stand to be corrected on this and I hope I can be corrected on it. However, until such time as I see the memorandum of understanding and the documents that have been exchanged by the two companies, I must conclude the very obvious: there are no job guarantees for Canadians in the transfer of de Havilland to Boeing.

What about the technology transfer? Boeing has recognized that Canadians have developed a superb technology, a technology which will be able to take advantage of a market which I believe, though I am not an expert, will open up significantly in the next number of years. We have provided an American company with a certain amount of goodwill. The Prime Minister has said that Canada is open for business. He just sold it right off for a song.

What about research and development? Were any financial guarantees included in the documents that were provided? No, Mr. Speaker. Was there mention made of the percentage of research and development that would have to be done in Canada? No, there was none whatsoever. There has been no financial commitment and no commitment with regard to the percentage of research and development that ought to be done in Canada by Canadians for Canadians.

The argument that some of us have made and will continue to make is that we are transferring to the United States technology, individuals and brainpower without even protecting here in Canada something that we have developed and on which we have spent millions of millions of taxpayers' dollars. I believe that is shameful.

Perhaps Members of Parliament are asking of the Government something that it is impossible for it to do. Perhaps this request of Government Members and particularly the Cabinet is something with which they cannot comply. Perhaps other countries in the world cannot restrict foreign control. In the United States Federal Aviation Act of 1958, 49 U.S. Code, Section 1301, Subsections 3 and 16 indicate that Boeing is allowed to do something in Canada that it is not allowed to do in the United States. Boeing is classfied as being vital to the aviation sector of the American economy and consequently is not allowed to sell any more than 25 per cent of its interests to a foreign Government. What happens in Canada? The Prime Minister, that great vocalist, travels to Washington and New York, sings a song for the President of the United States and tells Boeing to come on over to get 100 per cent of a Canadian Crown corporation without any restrictions whatsoever. How are Canadians protected from this takeover? There is not one iota of protection.

Neither the Prime Minister, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) nor the President of the Treasury Board have placed Canadian interests first. What we are pointing out to Government Members is not something which is completely alien to all western democracies. In the United States, there are restrictions on industries that are vital to the economy. I suggest that this particular sector of the Canadian economy is vital and that there ought to have been restrictions in place with regard to the selling of de Havilland to the Boeing Corporation.

The Government has carried on in such a way that one cannot believe what it says any longer. The Prime Minister says one thing and does the opposite. He reassures Canadians, yet he taketh away. In New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, he said that we ought to increase transfer payments. He told the First Ministers that he did not say that and that he meant something else. On August 17, 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised to turn Canadair Limited and de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd. into separate Crown corporations to develop new products in the aerospace industry. That is what the Minister of Finance said with a great deal of integrity.

• (1540)

On April 12, 1984 the Prime Minister said that Canadians should put no more money into Canadair or de Havilland until a parliamentary committee takes a good look at the future prospects of both firms. On February 23, 1984, in Toronto, the Prime Minister promised the creation of a joint Senate and House of Commons committee on Crown corporations with the mandate and resources to undertake effective reviews of individual corporations. I do not want to call my Prime Minister a liar. That is not my intention.

Mr. Kilgour: It is unparliamentary.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member is correct, it is unparliamentary. I take great pride in saying that my Prime Minister does not lie. However, when constituents confront me and place before me statements which have been made by the Prime Minister and when they argue very forcefully that he has lied, it is difficult to say that they are incorrect. I want to give the Prime Minister and his Minister an opportunity to correct this—

Mr. Kilgour: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With the utmost respect, I suggest that the Hon. Member is attempting to do indirectly what the rules bar him from doing directly. If that is the case I think he should be stopped immediately from following that tack.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think he is treading a fine line. However, his time has expired. I regret that he is finished, as far as I am concerned, that is, as far as his time is concerned. Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in listening to the comments of the previous speaker. I think other Members will join me in saying that the speech which was just delivered was not only an emotional plea but a plea based on facts. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he can perhaps wrap up his discussion, the one which he was about to wrap up, so that he may draw his conclusions to the facts he has just presented to the House.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I take note of your last comment about my being finished. I will be brief.

I wish to say to the Hon. Member that a point has to be made that the Prime Minister and the Government will have every opportunity to correct the injustices or, indeed, the misquotes which have been made by Hon. Members on this side of the House. They will be able to stand in their places and say that there will be a joint parliamentary committee established to review this particular takeover. The Minister of Finance will be able to stand in his place and say that he did not mean to say what he said, if he admits that he purposefully misled the Canadian people. The Prime Minister may also stand in his place and say that, perhaps, a parliamentary committee will take a good look at the future prospects of both these firms, if he agrees to that particular proposal. I am sure these matters can be resolved. Therefore, the disposition which constituents may have throughout the country will be dispelled. Unfortunately, if the opposite is true, and there is no parliamentary committee established as offered by the Prime Minister, or if there is a holding-back with regard to the sale of de Havilland, perhaps Canadians will continue to believe, as they have echoed to me, the concerns which they have with regard to their Prime Minister. Frankly, I hope that those constituents of mine and electors throughout the country who hold the view which the Hon. Member opposite finds to be unparliamentary, as I do, will have an opportunity to hear the Ministers rectify the situation.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that constituents in his riding have come to him to complain about what he alleges to be a change of policy by the Prime Minister. Will the Hon. Member be kind enough to place on the record the names of these constituents? If he does not wish to do that, then will he be kind enough to tell us how many there are? Will he tell us whether they are male or female or if he remembers anything about them? While the Hon. Member is doing that, would he be kind enough to tell Hon. Members whether he accepts the estimate of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) with respect to de Havilland having to spend $200 million of taxpayers' money next year? Just how much does he and members of the bottomless Party of which he is a member think we should put into de Havilland before we place it on a commercially sound basis, as indicated by the President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is known for throwing lob balls across the House. I thank him for this opportunity to respond.

With regard to the number of individuals who have confronted me, there have been numerous individuals. I am not prepared to release their names, not at all. Letters which are written to me in confidence as a Member of Parliament will remain confidential. No Member of Parliament, no matter how two-bit he may be in his role as a Government Member, can force me to breach a commitment which I have established with my constituents and other electors across the country no matter what he does or tries to do.

Mr. Kilgour: How many?

Mr. Dingwall: We know that if names are provided what Members opposite will probably do. I am not suggesting they would harrass these people but it would probably be the next best thing. The numbers which are involved—

Mr. Kilgour: How many?

Mr. Dingwall: I would say a couple of hundred.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kilgour: Male or female?

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member seems to be somewhat sexist. He wants to know the particular sex of the complainants. I do not think that is any of his business. The fact of the matter is that Canadians do not believe the Prime Minister and they have ample evidence to substantiate that feeling, whether it comes from deindexation, the setting-up of a joint commitment with respect to de Havilland, the bail-out of the banks or a host of issues about which the Prime Minister has misled the Canadian people. If the Hon. Member wants more, all he has to do is check the transcript of the First Ministers Conference in which he will see Premier after Premier stating that the Prime Minister unilaterally broke his commitment with regard to transfer payments. If that is not misleading Canadians, then I do not know what is.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) did not quite finish off his question. He asked the Hon. Member opposite how much the Canadian public should have to spend and he indicated that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said that next year it will be $200 million or more. At what point does the Hon. Member feel we should stop? Should we stop when we hit a figure such as a couple of billion dollars? What figure does the Hon. Member have in his mind?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, certainly the moneys which have been expended with regard to the $500,000 capital gains exemption ought not to have gone through. Certainly, the billions of dollars which were provided for the bail-out of two banks and the billions of dollars which have been provided—

Mr. Caldwell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am just answering the Hon. Member's question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell) on a point of order.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Hon. Member a direct question and I think I am entitled to a direct answer. At what point should we stop, as far as putting public money into saving companies such as de Havilland?

Mr. Dingwall: As I said, and I am coming to the point, billions of dollars have gone toward the multinational oil companies. Preferential tax treatment has been given to certain companies in the country. That amounts to billions of dollars of waste. We do not hear anything from Hon. Members opposite with regard to that point.

With particular reference to de Havilland, we would like to see the memorandum of understanding with regard to this particular corporation vis-à-vis job creation which will take place as a result of this so-called new investment by Boeing, whether it is in the order of $200 million or $300 million. I cannot tell the Hon. Member because the facts have not been provided by the Government. Hence the need and the rationale to have a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to review all of these things so that we will have a better opportunity to answer questions which the Hon. Member will have and he, in turn, can intelligently answer his constituents who are as concerned as mine with regard to the sale of de Havilland to the Boeing Corporation.

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. Resuming debate.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak against the motion which is before the House today and to support the sale of de Havilland. I am fortunate that there are several aerospace manufacturers in my riding of Winnipeg-St. James, such companies as Bristol Aerospace, Standard Aero and Boeing of Winnipeg. I can tell you, Sir, that, as a professional engineer, I am also concerned that the technology developed in Canada within the aerospace industry be preserved and expanded. I am confident that with the purchase of de Havilland by Boeing, we will see that objective achieved.

I found it interesting this morning when the Leader of the New Democratic Party rose to speak about a sale of a Crown corporation. In fact, if you were in the House at that time, Mr. Speaker, you would have heard me ask a question with regard to what his stance was in Manitoba because I feel it is important that Hon. Members who are not from Manitoba recognize what the policy of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba is as compared to the policy of the same Party in the House of Commons. As we all know, the basic social philosophy of the New Democratic Party is that the Government should own businesses and employ people. It is odd that when that Party is in Opposition it expounds on how good companies are which are Government owned and how they are useful to social programs. However, I would like to cite my experiences in Manitoba with respect to Crown owned corporations when we had a Schreyer Government as well as a Howard Pawley Government.

We had experiences with Saunders aircraft which cost the taxpayers of Manitoba $40 million before the then Ed Schreyer Government decided it should close it down, realizing that the taxpayers of Manitoba had supported this Crown corporation to the fullest extent it could. That amount of money does not sound as much as the $800 million we are talking about here, but when one considers Manitoba has a population of one million people, one can readily see it is an amount equivalent, in Canada as a whole, of $1 billion.

We have had bad experiences in Manitoba with Chinese food manufacturers which the Government owned and then closed down. What has happened now is that the NDP Government in Manitoba has done a complete flip in its philosophy that Government should have Crown-owned corporations when it comes to Flyer Industries. Flyer Industries is a manufacturer of buses. I would like to quote what the present Government of Manitoba has said. In June of this year Hon. Eugene Kostyra, the Minister who is responsible for Crown corporations, made a statement in committee that he was going to sell Flyer Industries this year and if he did not, he would close it down. But where was the Minister of the NDP Government last month? He was in the Netherlands trying to sell Flyer Industries, a Crown corporation, to a foreign company. The NDP opposition in the House of Commons have made a complete about-face of 180 degrees. It wants to retain a Crown corporation. It is protesting that we should not sell de Havilland to private industry, or what it calls a "multinational".

I would ask Hon. Members of the Manitoba-NDP caucus at the federal level if they have talked to their colleagues in Manitoba. What has been said about selling Flyer Industries? Have they raised any objections to this, particularly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)? Flyer Industries is right in his riding. Those Hon. Members rise and protest that we are doing the wrong thing when in Manitoba their own NDP Government is trying to do the same thing we are doing.

I can tell you why, Mr. Speaker. It is because of the fact that when a Party becomes the Government it finds all of a sudden it cannot afford the haemorrhaging of taxpayers' money which Crown corporations cause. I call it "haemorrhaging" because that is exactly what it is. I sat around a Cabinet table in Manitoba arguing for money for mental rehabilitation programs. We were refused. We were told the Government had to put the money into the support of Flyer Industries or some other Crown corporations. That is exactly what is happening here. The taxpayers' money which is going to these Crown corporations is being stolen from these other programs which are needed by our taxpayers.

I hope that the New Democratic Party will recognize that we are in no different position from their colleagues in Manitoba who are trying to sell Flyer Industries. The haemorrhaging has to be stopped. How long can we continue to pump millions and millions of dollars into these particular Crown corporations only to see them lose money?

What really hurts in any industry such as Flyer Industries in Manitoba is the fact that when the manufacturer makes a product which is sold outside its provincial boundaries or its country, and if it is being sold at a loss, the taxpayers of that province or the country subsidize the transit systems in other places such as Chicago and San Francisco. Every time Flyer Industries sells a bus, it gives a $92,000 contribution to one of those transit companies. I do not know what the figure is when de Havilland sells an aeroplane, but, obviously, if we have pumped $800 million into that company and it has had a $76 million loss last year and has already lost $55 million this year, when we export its product, we are subsidizing an airline industry in another part of the world. I say that it is time to stop and the sale to Boeing will stop that because Boeing will be responsible for any losses.

When it is argued that Boeing will get all of the grants, it can be argued that de Havilland gets all those grants now. Nothing has changed except that de Havilland has a $55 million loss this year which will be the responsibility of Boeing next year. I believed that should be drawn to the attention of the Opposition because it will not accept the fact that the Boeing company will pick up any losses which occur.

I would like to comment on Boeing Winnipeg because I think it is important to explain to the House of Commons why I have confidence that Boeing will keep its word. My acquaintance with Boeing goes back some 15 years. I was on the St. James Assiniboia Council at the time when Boeing approached us and said it would like to locate in our city. The City of St. James sold Boeing 126 acres of prime industrial land in a west end industrial area. It was the first to go in there. We were naturally concerned about a company from the United States perhaps taking advantage of Canadians. We were concerned that it would perhaps purchase 126 acres and when it got the acreage it would subdivide it, sell it and make a profit and then pay for its buildings and so on. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Boeing has not done that. Boeing in Winnipeg developed a plant which employed 57 people in 1971. It expanded to employ 300 employees by 1973. It then continued to expand its technology in the space industry and is now presently employing 650 people. I could not believe what I heard yesterday in the press conference of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would think that a former Minister of Transport would know what is happening in his City of Winnipeg. He made the statement that Boeing makes bathtubs. Do you know when Boeing stopped making bathtubs? Two years ago. That is how up-to-date the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is on what is happening in the transportation industry in Winnipeg.

At one time there was no space technology, no manufacturing of specialized plastic and fibreglass components for this industry in Winnipeg. Boeing developed that technology and brought it to Canada. That plant is now supplying components for the 757 and 767 Boeing aircraft. Second generation aircraft components are being built in Winnipeg using technology developed in Canada with the guidance of that company's U.S. engineering department. It is also developing specialized tooling and fabrication. The company is doing work on satellites. The Opposition is talking about a flow of technology out of Canada but I suggest that there will be a growth of technology in Canada. I am quite confident about that.

The Hon. Member left the impression that all Boeing did was build bathtubs. He downgraded a very important industry in Winnipeg and a very good corporate citizen. To give an idea of the kind of employer they are, there are about 1,065 Canadians working for Boeing in Canada. I had a chance to talk to the president of Boeing this morning. I asked him how many Americans his company employed to run the show in Canada. His answer? Zero. They are all Canadians, Canadian engineers and workers. The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) talked about wrapping the stars and stripes around de Havilland. However, everyone who works for Boeing in Canada is a Canadian. He should check his facts before he starts making statements like that. There has also been all this talk about multinationals. Do you know where Boeing has its factories? In the United States and Canada. That is all. I did not know that a multinational operated in only two countries. What we are getting with Boeing is a corporate citizen which is interested in Canada and Canadians. To give an example, the unused part of their plant site in Winnipeg contains a herd of deer which the company feeds all year round. The company also allows its employees to have garden plots at the plant if they want to make use of them. This is the kind of corporate citizen which has bought de Havilland.

The last speaker made a statement with regard to the quality of the product they produce. I think we all agree that de Havilland makes several damn good aircraft. However, you can make the best pump or the best aircraft in the world but if you do not have the marketing ability, you end up with a yard full of pumps or a hangar full of aircraft. That is what happened to Saunders Aircraft. It did not have a world-wide marketing ability. The aircraft industry is a very unique industry. Millions and millions of dollars are involved when buying a fleet of aircraft, whether it be two, three or whatever. You expect to get a least 25 or 30 years life out of an aircraft. You want the parts to be available when you need them. You want the guarantees when you need them. Boeing brings that to de Havilland. de Havilland has the product quality and Boeing has a world-wide reputation for providing a guaranteed product and making sure parts are always available.

When Boeing expanded its plant in Winnipeg in 1979, I asked the then vice-president what the value was of the company's total sales of aircraft world-wide. His answer was $8.3 billion. That tells me that if we get Boeing operating de Havilland it will apply its expertise to reduce the cost of manufacturing. It will apply its marketing ability and supply the confidence the buyer wants. We will see an excellent relationship between these two companies. I am confident that the technology will stay in Canada and grow. I am confident the other Boeing plants in Canada will expand as well. We will have a wider market and more jobs. Our main objective is to have sound stable jobs in this industry and further expansion of technological development. For those reasons I am opposed to the motion and I support the sale of de Havilland.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member claims this company is to be sold off because of its deficit position. Can he tell me what the paper deficit was as shown in the annual report for 1984, as well as the real deficit?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I do not have those exact figures in front of me. However, I do know that the taxpayers of Canada, under the former Government, popped in some $700 million to support this company. In addition, the company qualified for various grants available to the industry at that time. As well, the 1984 operating loss was $76 million and so far this year it is $55 million. To keep the company solvent and operating would require another $200 million. These are taxpayers' dollars. If we can turn the company around, put it into a profitable position so it can employ people who will pay income tax, and if it is run by Canadians, what is the difference? If we have the control of the technology and we no longer have to make up the losses for that company, then I say we have something good.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member obviously does not understand the role of foreign multinationals. In fact, we do not have control and that is the whole issue. Control will be sold to a foreign multinational at a fire-sale price as a direct result of this Government's obsession with privatization. In 1984 there was an income of $11.3 million on sales of $192 million. Does he agree with or dispute those figures for the 1984 fiscal year at de Havilland?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member has not included the overhead and other things, that she is just referring to a gross sales profit. All these things have to be taken into account when you look at the balance sheet.

Apparently the Hon. Member did not support the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) in his bid for the leadership of the Liberal Party. In The Globe and Mail of April 9, 1984, he is quoted as saying that Canadair and de Havilland should also be sold provided that there is no loss in jobs or technological development. I suggest there is no loss in jobs or technological development, and I presume the Hon. Member did not support that person as leader.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, over the years I have seen the consequences for our country of foreign ownership. Sometimes there are some benefits but sometimes there are also losses. Often in a recession the foreign-owned company will lay off people in the Canadian plant or transfer people from our country to their head office along with R and D to the U.S. I want to ask three very specific questions of the Member. Is there any guarantee whatsoever that would stop de Havilland from siphoning off the best Canadian brains in this industry to the U.S. along with research and development? What guarantees are there that that will not happen? Second, what guarantees do we have that money will be ploughed back into Canada for research and development if Boeing buys this corporation? What guarantees do we have that the best brains in the industry will not eventually go to the United States to Boeing's head office operations and that there will be R and D in this country?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, all that I can say is that for some reason the New Democratic Party always mistrust anyone who is successful in industry. I do not know whether the Hon. Member was listening to my comments earlier but my experience with Boeing in Winnipeg shows that the reverse is true. That company kept investing money in our community and in the Province of Manitoba. It has expanded the job population. It has not transferred the engineers to Boeing in Seattle. It has hired Canadian engineers and has used Canadians to run the plants and do the design work. It has brought technology here and has developed new technology in tooling to handle the new second generation aircraft. I am basing my comments on what I have seen in Winnipeg. I cannot comment on other companies that the Hon. Member believes might do the reverse.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) is relying on good intentions and the record of the company. Does he not think it would be wise that before we sell de Havilland to Boeing we write in some guarantees that there be no transfer of technology and that a certain amount of research and development be carried out in this country? Should we not have some contract guarantees with Boeing of the United States before we sell the company? Since every industry faces ups and downs, should we not have guarantees perhaps similar to the auto pact so that if there are lay-offs Canadians will not be the first to go? Should we not have those kinds of guarantees written into the sales agreement? My question specifically refers to job guarantees in Canada and research and development in Canada. It could be the best company in the world with all the best intentions, but if there is a recession, human nature being what it is, the company will protect its home base.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member has not had a chance to read the Government Information summary of the letter of intent from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. With respect to Canadian content/supplier development, it states:

> de Havilland will seek to increase the level of Canadian content in its products, and will work with the Canadian suppliers to secure major contracts especially related to defence production.

Under research and development, it states:

> The de Havilland capacity for research and development activity will be maintained and enhanced.

Under new investment, it states:

> Boeing owned de Havilland will undertake significant new investment in the Dash-8 and production facilities, and will develop the new 50 seat version of the Dash-8. These projects are expected to qualify for repayable support under the Defence Industries Productivity Program.
> The new investment confirms Boeing's long range commitment to de Havilland and is expected to enable de Havilland to become a major participant in new international and Canadian projects.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short comment. The Hon. Member has certainly raised the level of debate in the House. I believe the New Democratic Party should withdraw the motion because I do not think it is very valid after listening to the Hon. Member's speech.

There has been much criticism of the Americans from Members of the Opposition. There are several American corporations in my riding which have turned out to be good corporate citizens. The Hon. Member said that Boeing is a good corporate citizen in Winnipeg. Does he believe that the employees to whom he has talked feel any less Canadian by working for Boeing Winnipeg?

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I have not talked to any employees in the last day or two other than the President of Boeing, who is a Canadian. The people whom I know who work for Boeing in Winnipeg look at it as Boeing Winnipeg.

They do not consider it as a United States operated company, because it is operated by Canadians.

They have the benefit of many good working conditions. I did not mention that Boeing Winnipeg received commendation from the Manitoba Human Rights Commission for its program of hiring hearing impaired employees. Furthermore, when there is an increase in staff, it hires young people who have not been employed before. This is the type of operation that Boeing conducts in Winnipeg.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the comments made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker). I have visited the Boeing plants in my riding many times. Many of the employees live in our particular ridings. The hundreds of employees from Manitoba and Winnipeg do not consider Boeing as a devious, scheming organization that is out to steal technology or anything else from Canada.

I want to ask the Member about all the other businesses in which the NDP Government became involved in Manitoba that ended up an absolute flop. When the Conservative Government sold them, I understand they were quite successful. They survived and hired more people and I understand there was a better quality Chinese food put out when they were handed over to the private sector.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am tempted to begin by talking about socialist Chinese food in Winnipeg. It seems to weigh heavily on the mind of my colleague across the aisle.

I believe the time of the House would be more valuably taken by focusing on the issue itself, which is not whether there are good subsidiaries. I can say quite frankly that there are some excellent foreign subsidiaries in my constituency which contribute greatly to this country. I have just written a letter of welcome to one of those subsidiaries which we have been able to persuade to come from West Germany to make a contribution to economic development in Essex-Windsor.

The question we are considering is whether it makes sense to be selling good, solid technologically dynamic Canadian companies, when we already have so few in our economy, especially at a giveaway price which will eventually be an expense to taxpayers. The Government will have to face this question when it goes back to the electorate in three years. It will have to face the fact that there is a commitment in this country to Canadianization of the economy.

I have indicated to the House before that statistics from polling undertaken by Decima Research Ltd. indicates clearly that 85 per cent of Canadians want to see legislation to encourage greater Canadian ownership of industry. They want to see a greater presence of Canadians in the business community, rather than a sell-out of those flagships of Canadian industrial progress which already exist.

However, that is exactly what has taken place under the Conservative Government. Instead of Canadianization of our economy, the Government clearly believes in its Americanization. I had hoped that the Government's record in its first six months of office would have been an aberration about which it would have some shame. Rather, it has continued to revel in the fact that it is creating a more Americanized and continentalized economy in which Canada is bound to become the appendage or ignored part of a North American economy that has been integrated by free trade and dominated by American corporations.

Again and again we have seen Ministers rise in the House to glorify the fact that good, solid Canadian corporations, some from the private sector and some from the public sector, are slipping into the hands of the United States. They have not apologized. They have not said that they were sorry that this was happening or that they did what they could to make things come together but it just did not work. Instead they have glorified it. The Americanization of the Canadian economy, under the direction of the Conservative Party, goes on in abject shame.

Let us look at what has happened. For instance, Mitel was sold to foreigners. In the case of White Farm, small-scaled, high-powered Canadian entrepreneurs in the private sector were trying to get it going in Brantford. We saw it sold out and given up by the Government. A workers' co-operative in Hamilton looked to Canadian Porcelain, a small company, to make a contribution to that community. It was sold out. That time it was sold out to the U.S. company which had put it in trouble in the first place by dumping into the country through systems of unfair trade. Also we had the case of Black & Decker, as well as the great epitome of American capitalization, the takeover of CGE in Barrie. The factory was shut down within a year. It shifted its operations, cut its employment and turned factories, which had contributed hundreds of jobs to people in Barrie for a generation, into ghost town warehouses. Also we had the fiasco with the Canada Development Corporation. Through all kinds of back-handed manoeuvres and actions before the House even had a chance to consider the matter, the Government allowed 25 per cent of a company which was important to our future to be sold to the United States. We have had no action on Prentice-Hall, a case which has been before us for over a year now. Canadian publishers want to purchase the company. They do not want to turn it into a socialist enterprise, God help us. They want to turn it into a privately held Canadian company which will contribute to the country. Again the Government has refused to move.

The black list or the sad story of Americanization under the Government goes on and on, with the last sorry story added to it now of de Havilland, a good and dynamic company, a company with exciting new products which it is succeeding in selling throughout the world. Now that company is to become one more trophy in the corporate shareholding list of the Boeing Corporation with its billions of dollars in sales. de Havilland today, Canadair next, and the Canadian aircraft industry, as a Canadian-owned, Canadian-controlled industry with a sense of Canadian potential, will in fact go down the drain. It will be abandoned by the Government as it has abandoned so much of the key sectors of the economy to United States capital over the last 14 months.

It is especially dangerous to see this happening to the high-tech sectors of our economy. We as a country are not embarrassed by our riches in the high-tech sector. We do not have masses of Canadian-controlled companies making contributions and selling exports in that sector. We as a country have problems because we are small, because the risks are great and because the costs are high to create high-tech innovations. Yet, we have had our success stories. We have had our Mitels, our Northern Telecoms, and our de Havillands. Far too often the Government permits companies such as those to go down the drain, so far as being part of a Canadian core for high-technology growth in the future.

I should like to present to the House a segment of the report of the Ontario Government about what companies could make it under free trade. It indicates quite clearly that one sector which can make it under free trade, despite the intense competition it will have to face with the United States, could be our aircraft and aircraft parts manufacturers.

I will give the House a sense of how superbly that sector has done in terms of international trade. International trade is crucial for the future. In 1978, that sector of our economy in Ontario ran a trade deficit. Its exports amounted to about $174 million and its imports about $219 million. By 1984, its exports were up to $548 million, while its imports ran at $383 million. It is a success story built upon the very risks and the new product developments which have characterized de Havilland, which should characterize de Havilland in the future and which would characterize it if it remained a Canadian company able to make its contribution to the economy.

It is tough. One cannot start a high-tech company overnight. It takes heavy investment. It takes high risks. It takes long-time horizons. In the case of de Havilland, it has taken over $800 million to put together two excellent, highly-innovative, new pieces of technology which are among the best in the world in their class—the Dash-7 and the Dash-8. Now, in 1985, as December is upon us, here comes Santa Claus to give it away. Here it comes, gift-wrapped in nice tinsel paper with a bright red or perhaps blue maple leaf on it, to be placed under the corporate Christmas tree of the Boeing Corporation, to be given away as a gift. It is the kind of gift which I used to receive as a child from my grandfather. I am sure that many Hon. Members in the Chamber received such gifts. It was a gift which not only included the gift itself but, when it was opened, there was $2 or $5 in it; a gift which gives something and some money as well.

This is a super grandpa's gift to the Boeing Corporation. It is a gift described by Boeing Corporation as costing no more than the price of one 747 aircraft. It is the gift of a company that is making excellent operating profits. There have been some mis-statements made in this debate, but the fact of the matter is that income from operations of de Havilland for 1985 was almost $18 million in positive surplus. That is up from approximately $6 million the year before, so there has been a huge increase in operating profits. That increase was due to an increase from 19 to 27 in the number of planes sold. Boeing tells us that it expects to continue with this increase in operating profits. By the time the costs for research and development for the Dash-8 start to be paid off in a year or two the company is going to be making over-all profits rather than just operating profits.

There is money tucked into every possible little pocket of this magnificent gift. Let me list for the House some of the gift-wrapped envelopes of taxpayers' money which are included in this Christmas gift to Boeing Corporation. They get to defer $65 million of the sale price and probably will not have to pay it at all. That is not bad for Christmas, but that is just a start. Also included in the gift is the Crown's share of product liability insurance, worth $30 million and the development costs for the Dash-8 amounting to $65 million which will be paid by the taxpayers of the country and will go to the benefit of Boeing.

Surely it must make my back-bench colleagues in the Conservative Party, who care about fiscal rectitude, blush just a little bit to see this incredible, unjustified largesse to a foreign multinational company. Also included in the gift is export financing of $30 million to $40 million and, to top it off, a tax loss carry-forward of $400 million, not just to de Havilland but to all of Boeing in Canada. That is why the Winnipeg Boeing people are so pleased.

Do you realize what $400 million could do for the hard-pressed farmers of Essex County or the hard-pressed farmers of all of southern Ontario? Think what it could do for potential jobs of small business people in Quebec, northern Manitoba and the interior of British Columbia. That is the tax loss which is given. Santa Claus will continue down the path passing out these magnificent gifts and creating, not a fairy tale out of Jack and Jill, but a nightmare of Tory rule which we saw before with the Arrow in the 1950s and which we see now with de Havilland in the 1980s.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, these are tough issues. Building our industrial future is not easy. There are hard choices which we must make. We must start by telling the Government not to sell us out as a country, to stop giving us away to foreign firms and to stop doing it at the expense of the taxpayer of the country who is already so hard pressed that he and she deserve relief and the Christmas gifts rather than the Boeing Corporation of Seattle.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—CANADIAN AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the Canadian Aerospace Industry through the sale of de Havilland Aircraft Ltd. to the Boeing Corporation and for its consequent failure to protect the aerospace technology paid for by Canadian taxpayers and developed by de Havilland.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Kaplan:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end of the sentence and adding the following:

"and further condemns the Government's lack of confidence in the capacity of Canadians to maintain the country's sovereignty in the aerospace industry".

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, in this chamber we have to get used to the use of hyperbole. A lot of exaggeration goes on on both sides. The Member who just spoke has certainly used his fair share and someone else's too when exaggerating in his speech. He used words like "abandoned" and said that the Government was letting companies like this "go down the drain". I guess the use of hyperbole is okay, but as a former professor he will know that over-use of hyperbole soon destroys the person using it. I will let that take care of itself. No one will believe him if he continues to use that kind of exaggeration.

He should know, as I am sure he does, that this year, next year, and the following year when these aircraft are made and sold around the world they will have a plate on them that says "Made in Canada". He makes it sound as though they are going to be made in the United States now. Does he realize that this will continue to be a Canadian product? In fairness, he should not try to make the people of Canada believe that just because an American company has bought the company it is now going to be an American plane. As a matter of fact, it will be competing with American planes and will do very well with the kind of world market mandate which it has been given.

I would like to make one other point on the matter of accuracy. The Member went on to say that Boeing was going to be forgiven $65 million. In terms of accuracy and honesty, would it not be good to give the entire equation and tell the people that this is on a five-to-one ratio? For every $5 million that Boeing spends in the market-place across Canada in ancillary industries, whether or not it is for de Havilland, they will be forgiven $1 million. There is a multiplier in there. Would it not be only right and fair, when talking about a $65 million forgiveness, that he talk about the $300 million market which Boeing will have to develop in order to get that forgiveness?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question. I think it was Aneurin Beavan who once stated that words occasionally have to be a little bit wild to shake the unthinking. Frankly, as I look at this so-called deal, I think that it could only have been put together by people who were unthinking about the sense of potential benefit that could exist for our country by having our own well developed, expanding aircraft industry as opposed to letting it become an appendage of the U.S. aircraft industry. We can slice it different ways and we can use different words but the bottom line is that as a consequence of this move, de Havilland will become an appendage of a very much large U.S. aircraft company, a company which without question will shape the direction it takes in the future.

I believe the implications of this move throughout the world make an interesting point. A big part of our problem in attempting to sell export products to Southeast Asia, Africa, Latin America or other countries which I have visited has been that we do not have a reputation for making contributions to the world of high technology innovation. Frankly, by making de Havilland a division of Boeing Corporation, we will simply prove to those countries throughout the world that the image we already have is the correct image.

Regarding the question of the sale price, the point I made was that that $65 million was deferred. The Hon. Member is quite right in suggesting that the way to get forgiveness is by increasing purchases here in Canada, something which I think is perfectly appropriate. However, to begin by deferring a part of the sale price is taking the opposite tack to that which we as a Government would have taken and that is that we would tell the company to pay its money and make a commitment to buy a certain amount of its production needs here in Canada. It seems to me that in this case, we are saying that the actual price that will be paid by Boeing is only $90 million and we are saying that at the same time as all these other financial goodies are under the same Christmas tree.

I know that the Hon. Member has a reputation of being concerned about the extravagance of Government expenditure. I hope that he will take the occasion of this debate to look at these incredible potential taxpayer liabilities that attach to the sale of de Havilland of which the $65 million is just one and see to it that this taxpayer liability is reduced in the future.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on some of the point raised by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who represents my neighbouring riding. First, I would point out that the $200 million that it would cost to keep the company going next year could very well be used by the farmers of Essex County and those across Canada and I hope that it will be.

When the Hon. Member began his speech, I thought for a moment that he was going to compliment us. He pointed out that there were some very good American corporate citizens in his riding. The major employers in his area are Chrysler and General Motors, both of which have proven to be very good corporate citizens. Gathering from the Hon. Member's own householder, the Government has probably given his riding more assistance than any other riding in the country in order to develop the high-tech industry in the Windsor area. The Hon. Member should be very thankful to the Conservative Government for doing that for his riding.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why he feels that Boeing is not a dynamic company. Does he not think that it is the world leader in aerodynamics and will inject into the Canadian economy more money than the Government could have put in over the next few years?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am pleased to hear that my householder is such a bestseller that it even penetrates other constituencies. Quite frankly, I am one of those Members who works very hard to get companies to move into my constituency and to make commitments to increase employment in the constituency. Our success record is something of which I am quite proud. It is, I think, a reflection of something that is true of New Democrats and that is that we are not, as we are sometimes painted to be, the foes of the private sector. Our commitment is to make the corporate sector and companies like Chrysler and General Motors make complete commitments to our communities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I find this Chamber to be a very eerie one this afternoon. There have been many debates in the past about Canada's aircraft industry, debates that were filled with rallyism and slashing remarks. It is odd how quiet it is here this afternoon. I think perhaps that is because the Chamber has taken on the atmosphere of a funeral and that the sadness which permeates this place is for the death of a very important part of Canadian tradition and certainly in part for the frustration we feel about our future.

Mr. Rodriguez: Solemn and sober.

Mr. Axworthy: It is solemn and sober. There is no satisfaction taken by any Hon. Member on this side of the House at the deal that was struck by the Government. It is a deal that we know was propelled by the Draconian motives of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) who wishes to privatize Canadian Government activities. The way it has been done is stupid and ignorant. God, how awful this Government has become that it is so totally indifferent to the interests of the Canadian people and this industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The fact that Tory Members are laughing about this only underlines just how hardened and calloused they have become toward what Canada is all about. I suppose they may be laughing out of embarrassment. They know that they are members of a Government which acquired office to see to the dismantling of Canada's sense of independence and integrity and its ability to provide a future that it will determine on its own. It is too bad that there is such insensitivity to those issues.

The fact is that this particular debate must be used to bring the lessons home so that Canadians will understand in the future what has happened here. The first thing Canadians must undersatnd is how poor a businessman the Government really is.

I attended a conference on Saturday at which a member of the Conservative caucus said that one of the great changes that took place as a result of the election of September 1984 was that the composition of the House of Commons has changed and that Conservatives now have a large representation by small business people. If I were John Bulloch or a representative of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business I would be ashamed of that. For all the so-called new business acumen, let us consider what they have done. Let us consider what kind of deal they have made. If one takes a look at the figures one will find that once again they have sold the store for nothing but fantasy and fond wishes. Today I said that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) was fortunate in that Boeing did not offer the Government the Brooklyn Bridge for de Havilland because he would have thought that was a good deal. He would have grabbed it at the first opportunity.

I would like to point out to Hon. Members the type of things which we must look at with respect to this particular negotiation. First, and I think this is a serious charge which I must register, the Government has been guilty of serious irregular business practices. These are practices which, under normal business operations, would not be countenanced by any proper auditor of accounting. In order to deliberately show that de Havilland was having heavy losses what the Government did was take the funds being used for development purposes in the new product lines and charged that amount against operating costs. Under normal business practices these charges are normally amortized over 15 or 20 years. Whenever any business makes a new investment over a period of time it puts it down on the books as a development cost. However, the Government, members of which are smart business people, charged the amount against operating costs. Therefore, when it comes time to sell an aeroplane the new owner will have virtually free and unfettered attachments to the cashflow because there will be no development costs. They have been written off as a result of the accounting practices of the Government.

However, there was a political purpose in this respect. Members of the Government were motivated because they wanted to put the books in front of the Canadian people in order to say: "Look, de Havilland is losing money. We had better show just how bad it is". Instead, they finagled and played the old accounting shell game. They moved forward what would be legitimate development investment expenditures and said that even last year with regard to a sale of $192 million de Havilland made only $11.1 million. The company was charged $78 million against its future investments. How can that be justified? What type of so-called smart business practice is that? It may be smart politics, although I do not think so, but it has nothing to do with honesty and integrity in terms of coming to grips with the issue of de Havilland.

One of the really great sights yesterday came about at the press conference held after the announcement of the sale. Someone asked the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) a question something like this: "You are selling this company for $150 million. What are its assets worth?" The Ministers went through their books and they fumbled their papers and looked in the reports. Finally, they had to say: "We don't know". Here were two Ministers of the Crown making a public announcement of great significance and they did not know the value of the assets. In terms of commercial value the land around the Downsview Airport in that part of Toronto is worth more than the amount received for the sale. If one were to talk to municipal officials in that municipality one would find out what could reasonably be expected in terms of the value of the land, to say nothing of the equipment, the capital and development costs and all the other assets which normally go into accounting in terms of the total value of a company.

These Ministers are out selling this company without even caring about what they are selling. They did not care what the value was because the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion wants to privatize. That is his religion. His theology is to privatize. It does not matter for what, what impact it will have or how it will influence the aerospace industry. He just wants to get rid of it. That is his answer.

I would like to set out another example of good business practices, as this Government likes to term it. The Government accepted a full share of the corporate liability and the insurance costs with respect to the aeroplanes. Boeing will have the value of all the assets and all the cashflow but the Canadian taxpayer gets stuck with the insurance costs and future liabilities. Is that not a brilliant stroke of negotiating skill? Does that not show an incredible sense of judgment? We will be stuck for the bill way down the line. Mr. Marshall was not too sure about the figure but he thought it was around $30 million. Where is that reflected in the sale price? What did Boeing do to receive that kind of deal? I will bet Hon. Members there is not one other deal which Boeing has ever entered into in which it received this type of sweetheart arrangement.

In addition to taking the $90 million in cash and not the full $150 million, the Government said it is also prepared to continue giving grants and loans for the development of the Dash-8, for other research and for modernization of the plant. We are talking about another $300 million or $400 million of additional government money going into this project. As was asked today: "Where are the taxpayers represented?" They will not be represented on the Board of Directors. Will they have any equity? Will they receive anything in return? They will not receive a sou—not a cent.

When we talk about free trade with the United States it is no wonder we say: "God save this country if this is the Government negotiating the deal". It is no wonder we have some concerns when we see the silkful negotiating and bargaining which these wizards of commercial transactions are able to arrive at. The Government sells the company at a write-down price, takes on additional commitments and it receives no equity. As has been said, what we end up with in the result is the loss of any ability to set the direction or management in an area of crucial and vital interest in terms of the Canadian export market.

The Government sold this company just when it was beginning to make money. The company had spent several years investing in a new generation of aeroplanes. The atmosphere of deregulation around the world is creating a new market for commercial aircraft. Just as the taxpayers of Canada were about to realize a return on their investment what did the Tories do? They are so smart that they sold this company off before we could receive the return. That is a great tribute to their great business acumen.

Conservative Members in the House, in particular the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) and others, have said: "Don't worry about it. We have such a wonderful deal with Boeing and they are such a wonderful company that there is nothing to be concerned about". I would like to provide some commentary on that point. First, what is wrong with selling the company to an American multinational? Boeing is certainly a world-class company. It has a wonderful line of aeroplanes. However, to think that it will all of sudden play noblesse oblige with de Havilland is ridiculous.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James spoke about the Boeing factory in Winnipeg. I would like to tell Hon. Members another side to that story. When the building was first developed on grants from the federal Government the commitment then was for a world product mandate similar to what de Havilland was given with respect to fibreglass technology in terms of aeroplanes. However, along the way, in the late 1970s when the airline business began to go into a trough, somehow or other that commitment disappeared. At that time the ability of Boeing in Winnipeg to maintain an independent marketing line for aircraft technology in fibreglass somehow disappeared.

It ended up making a few spare parts. Do Hon. Members know what the company is making now? It is making bathtubs. This is Canada's great vault into the new high technology area. This is the new frontier that Boeing of Canada has established in Winnipeg. It is now making bathtubs, which is not a bad product. There is nothing wrong with bathtubs. After all, people have to wash. However, if Canadians think they bought a new frontier in high technology they may want to think again.

Mr. Rodriguez: Can they fly?

Mr. Axworthy: We have never tried.

The fact of the matter is that it was a commitment of the Government.

I would like to point out some other facts with respect to the record. In front of me I have a wonderful article which appeared in The New York Times on September 8. It deals with the type of corporate citizen Boeing is in the United States. The company pleaded guilty to charges laid with respect to illegal foreign payments. It was fined $500,000. It has also been caught in military procurement controversies. It billed the Pentagon for $127,000 in political contributions. In other words, it gave money to politicians and then it billed the Pentagon for the same amount. It also sold pliers to the Pentagon for $700 a pair. That is a way of doing business, I suppose, but if the Government thinks that somehow it is going to get a different kind of treatment, it is wrong. In 1979, Boeing again cut its workforce from 155,000 to 50,000. It basically closed up its operations here. That is the difference, Mr. Speaker. It will be making those corporate decisions in Seattle and Spokane based upon the interests of its entire corporate empire and Canada, as a small division way over in the corner, will simply take what it can get.

• (1700)

The President of Boeing made a comment in today's Wall Street Journal. He was quoted as saying that the de Havilland line of products will represent a very small percentage of the total commercial sales of Boeing, that one 747 is equal to almost 20 of the turbo-prop products of de Havilland. Boeing certainly has a world-wide marketing network, but if you are a salesman for Boeing and you are trying to hustle a 747, a 756 or a 767, and you are spending your time and your expense account, you are going for the big product, not 20 to make up one. It is like Avon calling and you are trying to sell the person at home the full line of products and saying as an aside, "I have a little toothpaste in my bag as well".

The difference is that de Havilland is an independent Canadian company. It should have the opportunity to go out into the world market and sell our aeroplanes with pride and integrity not because we have a great line of jumbo jets but because it is our own product and we know there is a niche in the market for it and we are going out to exploit that particular part of the market. We should not be part of a great massive bazaar where we throw our wares out in front of everyone, saying: "If you buy our 747s, we will give you a couple of Dash-8s as a bonus". An independent company would have given us our own independent marketing ability. We would have been able to go into those world markets to develop our own capacity and our own potential in those markets. That is something which I believe Canadians wanted. That is something which has been taken away from them by this Government.

With respect to research and development, the Government tells us it is going to have this vast capital resource of Boeing to help exploit future development. I would suggest that Hon. Members of the Conservative Party read the very long article in the business pages of The New York Times of September 8. It talks about the big responsibility and obligation of the new president of Boeing. He will have to make tough choices. He has military planes and computer hardware. He has big commercial aircraft. He does not have enough capital to finance all of these things. He has to make choices between them. Does the Government think that de Havilland is going to get preference when it is competing with 747s, new SDI star wars projects and new computer development around the world? It will get it if we give Boeing sweetheart arrangements. If DRIE starts feeding it gobs of new research grants and more loans, Boeing will say, "Oh, yes, we will take it". Of course, it will. But the point is that in terms of research and development, the Dash-8 is now a fully mature aeroplane. It is out in the market. At some point down the line we have to ask ourselves what the future is of de Havilland. What new generation of air products will begin to be developed by that company? Where is the money going to come from for that? Are we going to find, as has happened with virtually every other company which has been absorbed by this large multinational, that the engineering, the administration, the R and D and the corporate decision making, will be consolidated at the American headquarters and the de Havilland division will be just one in a long line of supplicants for a very scarce amount of resources? We will become a sub-assembly plant in Canada. That is the future.

We are losing our sense of independence to become a sub-assembly plant. That, perhaps, says it all about the economic philosophy os this Government. It is happy that Canada becomes a sub-assembly plant for the big American corporate empires. It has no sense of pride that we can do things on our own. It has no sense of motive, will or purpose in trying to achieve something which Canadians can do well, making sure they have the resources to do so.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and then ask a very simple question of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). His speech is not much different from the rhetoric I used to hear when the Hon. Member was a Member of the provincial legislature. I do not know how anyone can take the Hon. Member seriously when he makes the statement that Bristol Winnipeg manufactures bathtubs. I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, what they do manufacture in Winnipeg. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member does not have the time to come home and see for himself some of the plants in Winnipeg. He would then recogniz the leads we have in the aerospace industry. The Winnipeg plant, Aerodat, manufatures magnetometer booms. Avco Systems Division has the graphite/epoxy aerospace structural assemblies. Boeing makes all the composite components and assemblies for all Boeing commercial aircraft including the latest 756 and 767 aircraft. Boeing Vertol makes the 737-200/300 flap track fairing panels and CH47 inlet screens. Canadair manufactures a number of assemblies in the specialized fibreglass field. The Communications Research Centre does work on large graphite/epoxy structures for dynamic testing of satellite bodies and de Havilland manufactures component parts. Bathtubs have not been manufacture in that plant since February 1983 so I would like to know what the Hon. Member is using for research and who he is trying to kid about Boeing in Winnipeg. It is one of the leaders in the aerospace industry in specialized fibreglass components.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James has just proven my point. The fact is that that company, which was given a world product mandate in those areas, has become a manufacturer of components for other aircraft industries. It was the mandate that was given back in the 1970s for which it received federal grants from my Government. These grants were negotiated by Liberals to help employment in the Hon. Member's riding, which we continue to do because we are still using some of those DRIE grants even though his Government has cancelled the program. This company has now been relegated to the back corner to become a sub-assembly plant of components. It is not providing the kind of high technology leadership which would open a sales market around the world. It is simply doing the component manufacturing. I used the bathtub example because that is what they did produce for a long period of time—

Mr. Minaker: Two years ago.

Mr. Axworthy: —and it is still selling them. One can walk down the street and still purchase them. Perhaps because it did not work out so well, it was decided to discontinue the line. I am not saying that Boeing is not a good employer. It provides decent employment. However, it is a case of a lost opportunity and that is what we are talking about with de Havilland. It is a lost opportunity to become world leaders in this technology, to provide for an independent set of technologies, not simply to take the kind of orders which are coming out of the major headquarters. It supplies the blueprints and you get to work. I think the discouraging part of all this is that these people and this Government do not understand that difference.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to inform the Hon. Member, who is obviously not interested in seeing what is being manufactured in Winnipeg, that Boeing is not selling the bathtub. The design was bought by a Canadian company and the new Canadian company is involved in the manufacturing and sale of this bathtub.

Mr. Rodriguez: I listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He mentioned that Boeing went to the trough, to use his words, and received this money and it was going to make fiberglass components for aircraft. Then it did not do that. It ended up making bathtubs. Which Government gave Boeing the money to do what it was supposed to do? If it did not do what it was supposed to do, what did the Government do to protect the integrity of the investment of the taxpayers in Boeing?

• (1710)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what point the Hon. Member is trying to make. Industrial grants were given for the expansion of a plant. There was a building and certain equipment went into that building, all based on commitments written into a contract. They carried on for a period of time. Then there was a depression in the airline market and Boeing simply made a decision at its corporate headquarters to no longer make those products. That is the kind of problem we find in doing this. If the Hon. Member is saying that he or his Party does not believe in the federal Government assisting companies in Canada to modernize or expand, then he is establishing a new policy. I have heard the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) make wonderful speeches in this House about the necessity of Government providing investment funds to modernize and develop new technology. That is why I said that the responsibility here is to make sure that we have an equity position. We should be revising the way in which we provide economic development grants and support and take an equity position in the company concerned. The Liberal Government began to do that. I remind the Hon. Member that when the multinationals were going to close down de Havilland and Canadair, we stepped in and took the company to a point where we could maintain it. We would try to find someone for a joint venture so there would be a continuation of Canadian equity and whatever new company came about.

If the Hon. Member is interested in making cheap political points, that is all right. However, we are debating something much larger and much more significant than that, and it is too bad he does not see that.

[Translation]

Mr. Lopez: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker . . . the hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) made numerous references to Santa Claus, and since it will soon be Christmas, there is something I want to ask Santa Claus. If he has an extra supply of objectivity or common sense, I wish he would give some to the Opposition Members. It would certainly help the proceedings here in the House.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Hon. Member to a report commissioned in 1978 which sets out a variety of options concerning what should be done. I wish the Government had read the report because through a series of joint ventures the Canadian aerospace industry might have been able to enjoy world product mandates and manufacturing while Canadians still retained equity and interest in those companies. I would also point out that so far as de Havilland is concerned, there was a consortium of Canadian companies which were prepared to buy the company. They have said publicly that had Canadian companies been given the same deal that was offered to Boeing, Mac's Milk could have bought de Havilland. It was a sweetheart arrangement. This Canadian group has the experience and it was prepared to buy the company and this Government did not even show them an open door.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity today to speak to the House on the motion concerning the sale of de Havilland to the private sector. I also consider it a great honour to have been reappointed as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who played a decisive role in preparing the historic agreement that led to this privatization.

When this Government came to power a little over a year ago, we announced our intention of turning a number of state-owned enterprises over to the private sector. During the months following this announcement, management and the board of directors of the Canada Development Investment Corporation negotiated with great dedication, on our behalf, and were successful in concluding an agreement that will be very beneficial to Canada. And that is how Boeing has now become the owner of de Havilland.

It is good news for de Havilland, its employees and the entire Canadian aerospace industry.

Under its new management, the company is expected to grow until it becomes a major partner of international caliber within this extremely competitive industry. Canada has gradually carved a niche for itself on world markets. If we add Boeing's marketing and financial resources to de Havilland's world reputation for the manufacture of short range aircraft, I think we have a winning combination.

As was pointed out by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), in privatizing de Havilland, our main objective was to revitalize Canada's role in the international aerospace industry, since a company must be strong and aggressive to win in an extremely competitive market, to expand its scope and create new jobs and attract new investment. de Havilland will now have access to Boeing's sophisticated marketing network as well as its technical expertise and financial resources. The result will be a stronger and more viable company that will safeguard existing jobs while creating the potential for new jobs across Canada. A company that provides employment is a healthy company.

We expect the agreement with Boeing to increase employment in Canada generally, as well as at the de Havilland plant in Downsview. The sale proposal provided for a purchase price of $155 million, including $65 million in the form of a repayable note. Under the terms of our agreement, for each $5 million worth of new jobs created by Boeing, $1 million will be cut off the amount owing. This could mean new projects estimated at $325 million across Canada, and the potential for thousands of jobs across the country.

Under the new management de Havilland will be responsible for designing and making all short-range Boeing aircraft for world-wide markets, thus maintaining Canadian leadership in that technological sector of aviation. Boeing fully expects to expand its sphere of activities at Downsview's de Havilland plant so as to make better use of existing manpower and equipment. We are extremely pleased with the way the negotiations were carried out with Boeing, and with the signing of the letter of intent which was finalized by the sale announcement yesterday.

There is no doubt that Boeing is an acknowledged leader in the aerospace industry, with capital investments of $9 billion and sales of approximately $13 billion last year. Boeing has also achieved an outstanding reputation in technological development and employer-employee relations. I should think that the board and management of CDIC deserve our congratulations for their efforts which led to yesterday's announcement. A number of bids were examined by the corporation, and an exhaustive market study was commissioned. CDIC management recommended acceptance of Boeing's bid and their recommendation was endorsed by several independent investment firms. They all agree that the decision is an excellent deal for Canada and Canadian taxpayers. This sale is another fulfilled commitment of our Government to take part in the economic renewal by privatizing those Crown corporations which no longer serve the best public interests. Better still, it is a unique occasion to maintain the strength and dynamism of our aerospace industry.

Our decision to sell de Havilland to private interests will have other advantages which Members of the Opposition have deliberately chosen to ignore, intent as they are to take a negative approach whenever the Government makes an announcement. For example, some of the tax provisions included in the agreement will be of special interest to Canada's regional air carriers. Our regional air carriers—so important in a country as vast as ours, and particularly in the less densely populated regions—will be able to purchase top-of-the-line equipment at low interest rates.

• (1720)

In fact, the growth and development of our regional air carriers are some of the main features of the policy of this Government which ensures that all Canadians receive quality services no matter where they have elected to live in this country.

Other corporations involved in the Canadian aerospace industry will also benefit from the privatization of de Havilland. According to the terms of the sale, Boeing has agreed to honour all previous contracts with suppliers who will also benefit from the company's increased sale volume. That is a golden opportunity for developing new contracts and co-operating with one of the greatest aerospace corporations in the world.

Contrary to our predecessors who had presided over the take-over of de Havilland, we behaved wisely and in a business like manner. The take-over occurred under a Liberal administration, without any sort of plan to ensure the growth of the firm and the expansion of its market. On the contrary, we had very precise goals in mind when we initiated the privatization of de Havilland. The privatization, as announced yesterday, will result in a renewed market, more jobs and the establishment of a strong and dynamic aerospace industry in Canada. Benefits and spin-offs are gained immediately and will accrue for many years to come.

As a Crown corporation, de Havilland seemed to alternate between good and bad years, like on a roller coaster. The number of jobs, from a record high of 5,000 in 1981, came down to nearly half of that two years later. Thanks to a new diversified investment basis which the new administration is planning now, Boeing should create a more stable environment. We believe that de Havilland had reached a critical stage in its development, a stage which required a solid direction and diversified investments from the private sector. Boeing is offering this corporation a chance to prosper and grow.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I am quite surprised by the negative reactions and criticism which a number of Hon. Members opposite have voiced following the announcement of this agreement with Boeing. Yet, ever since the acquisition of de Havilland in 1974, successive Governments had never denied their intention to sell this corporation as soon as they received a reasonable offer. Now, we have received such an offer which we have carefully studied and compared with others, and we have come to an agreement with Boeing in the best interest of both the Canadian Government and taxpayers. We see no benefit or logic in hanging on to a corporation which was a burden on the Public Treasury when we realize the advantages the Boeing corporation will be offering the de Havilland corporation by providing it with a solid financial base.

A number of Hon. Members have expressed some concern. They felt that, by privatizing the de Havilland corporation, we had failed to protect the development of the Canadian aerospace technology. Their concerns are without any foundation. The growth and profitability of the Canadian aerospace industry have been among the Government's primary concerns, and guaranties to that effect are part of the agreement.

Boeing has committed itself to maintain and enhance research and development at de Havilland's and has effectively established a long term investment plan. This is an indication of the seriousness of the corporation regarding the future. We know that Boeing is quite impressed by de Havilland engineering and will use this asset to develop the business.

As a Crown corporation, de Havilland did have some engineering successes. However, in recent times, there have been mostly failures. In view of the decision of Boeing to grant de Havilland a world product mandate for the design, development and production of the turbo-propelled shuttle, the growth potential of the company is obvious. The purpose of privatization was to find the best possible purchaser to build on the solid foundations established by de Havilland throughout the years and to guarantee job security and the creation of new jobs, not only in Toronto, but throughout Canada.

In our opinion and that of the independent financial advisers, Boeing was the company which best met our requirements.

I profoundly disagree with those who can see no benefit in this transaction simply because the headquarters of the purchasing company are located in the United States. The tendency in the aeronautical industry favours joint international endeavours which make use of the knowledge and experience of several countries.

Moreover, there is nothing new in the association of Boeing and Canada. The company already has plants in Arnprior and Winnipeg and will no doubt continue to be a good Canadian corporate citizen. Moreover, Boeing will appoint Canadians to its board of directors and consider Canadian equity participation. In other words, the Corporation understands the need to become involved in Canadian activities and has given enough evidence that it is willing to meet these requirements, including participation in other projects, jointly with Canadian suppliers.

Finally, I would like to say something about another sector of the aerospace industry which has developed in Canada in the last few years. From discussions with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), I understand that negotiations are now underway to sell Canadair to the private sector. In the meantime, this Corporation continues to increase its sales and improve its financial situation, showing that it can meet the challenge of international competition.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that selling de Havilland benefits all Canadians and that if we could succeed in getting as good a deal and in finding purchasers as competent for Canadair, it could also be of benefit to Canadians.

Considering both this information and the agreement which ensures the development of de Havilland, I am convinced that the Canadian aerospace industry has a great future. We shall never be content to manage a branch plant industry in Canada, but we shall continue to produce the most sophisticated of airplanes, maintaining the tradition of excellence which we have always had in Canada and of which we are rightly proud.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then a question for the Hon. Member. I listened with some interest to what the Parliamentary Secretary said. If those listening did not understand the nature of the deal, much of what was said would likely be acceptable.

Let me point out that there is no co-ownership offer before us at the moment. If I recall correctly, the Hon. Member said that co-ownership between countries is now the normal practice in the aerospace industry. There is no co-ownership in this operation. Therefore, such a statement leaves an impression with the public that this situation exists. It does not.

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to be factual at the very least. I do not mind if she attempts to put her argument forward in the best possible light. I understand that and do not expect anything less or more. However, when Parliamentary Secretaries to Ministers read statements into the record, I expect those statements to be factual and accurate. That statement was not.

I assume she has some in-depth knowledge of the nature of the deal. Can she tell us exactly how much the real property, the land and buildings, now owned by de Havilland was appraised at in advance of entering into this arrangement? Could she tell me the dollar value of the land and the buildings owned by de Havilland which will become the property of Boeing?

• (1730)

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to deal with the queer comment made by my Hon. colleague in the premise of his question.

It is quite unfair in my view, to suggest that when we are addressing the House here, we manage to say just about anything. I never charged my Hon. colleague with such intentions, and I regret that questions should be premised with such remarks.

In the information kit that was released at the press conference, there was enough material to give an outline of the memorandum of agreement to be signed. There is a contract to be signed. This must be finalized. I think that, as has been stated, when everything is completed, it will be tabled in this House and you will have an opportunity to examine it.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am not interested in knowing what will be tabled in the House. I want to know from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister who is primarily responsible for the deal how much was the appraised value of the land and buildings now owned by de Havilland which will be turned over to Boeing. How much was it?

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, during the question period, I think reference was even made to the agreements and to the memorandum to be signed. It was said that those documents would be tabled the moment they are ready. I think my Hon. colleague should wait and see what will be tabled in this House.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, this morning, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) offered to provide me with some information concerning Advance Planning, part of the Camp company in Toronto. Apparently it was retained by Boeing to do consulting work. Since the Parliamentary Secretary was not in the House this morning, I was interested in knowing whether she was aware that Advance Planning actually carried out the negotiations on behalf of Boeing. Apparently that company represents Boeing in Canada.

How much of the negotiations was carried out by Advance Planning? Could the Parliamentary Secretary determine exactly what the Boeing Corporation paid that company to carry out the negotiations? Was the company on a commission basis?

It would seem to any normal observer of the situation that Boeing has got a tremendous deal, in that a company which cost the country some $760 million is being sold to it for $95 million. Someone negotiated a tremendous deal for the Boeing Corporation. Was it Advance Planning? Was that company paid a commission or a percentage for every million dollars by which it was able to knock down the price? I would like to know just what was the percentage. How much was Advance Planning paid to carry out this negotiation on behalf of Boeing? Obviously it is a well-connected company.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I think this question was put today to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and he stated that he would table the answer.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short supplementary question. Earlier the Parliamentary Secretary indicated that when the deal was complete, they would be tabling the documents in the House. Would she undertake on behalf of the Minister to table the documentation with regard to Advance Planning, as to what part it played, what fees it was paid by Boeing and so on?

In the spirit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he said that he wanted to make the House pre-eminent, would the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. Tardif) undertake to see that the matter is brought before the House for a vote? In that event every Member could vote on the issue. Obviously this is a major corporation. We passed legislation respecting Crown corporations on June 28, 1984, in which it was indicated that such situations involving major Crown corporations of the size and calibre of de Havilland should be brought before the House for a vote. Would the Parliamentary Secretary make a commitment on behalf of the Government to do that?

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my Hon. colleague that I have no recollection that, under the previous administration, such requests were ever answered. My intention earlier . . . what I said is that, when the documents are ready, the whole thing would be tabled in its form and contents, in compliance with the usual standards, and I think the same answer applies to this other request.

[English]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a couple of comments. I did not take part in the debate mainly because I did not consider myself to be knowledgeable enough about the aircraft manufacturing business. However, after listening to some Hon. Members on the opposition side of the House, I am beginning to wonder what they know about it or the economics of it.

Sometimes we are all leery about believing what we see in newspaper articles, but I have been prompted to make a comment. I have seen that in the first nine months of this year, the sales of de Havilland were $204 million, compared with $160 million last year. At the same time, the net loss was $55.1 million, compared with $19 million last year. Do those figures make them wonder why we could not get any more for it than we are getting?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now terminated.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the last Hon. Member who spoke on behalf of the Government said that he was not an expert on the airline industry and that he did not think Opposition Members were. That is probably true. I do not believe that most Hon. Members of the House are experts on any particular industry which we may be investigating at a given time. However, we have a wider responsibility, that is, to look at the actions of Government, especially when its actions have the effect of costing taxpayers millions and millions of dollars.

Let us look at the way in which the deal was entered into, the tax liabilities we inherited as a result of the agreement, future tax losses as a result of it, and the fact that the Government has committed itself to a share of all development costs. The people of Canada are being committed to more costs in respect of export financing. We are curious in terms of the real assets which will be sold—the value of the land, the buildings and other assets such as machinery. We do not know that information. The fact that the Parliamentary Secretary could not answer those questions is a concern to all parliamentarians.

Earlier today, a number of members of our caucus asked the Government to ensure that Parliament had access to that information. They asked for a parliamentary committee to hold hearings on the matter prior to any final vote or final agreement. We have not received assurances from the Government in that regard, and I think it is very important for them to be given.

It is not just that the Auditor General said that we as parliamentarians must do a better job looking after the public purse. It is not just that the Auditor General said that one area in which Parliament was weakest, in terms of doing that job, was that of tax expenditures. Obviously the memorandum of agreement with Boeing involves many future tax commitments to that particular company. It is not only because of those two concerns that I am participating in the debate. It is because I have a concern about the future of our entire aircraft industry.

I mentioned earlier today that I was a teenager when the previous Conservative majority Government decided to destroy the Avro Arrow program. That decision was made over 20 years ago but I believe that most Canadians who grew up in that generation still believe that that was a colossal mistake. The massive Conservative majority in the House of Commons made that decision. They were so paranoid that not only did they destroy the plans for the Avro Arrow, but they took the one prototype and cut it up into one-inch pieces. They absolutely destroyed the plans for that plane and the plane itself.

As a result of that decision we not only lost the lead that we had at that time in that area, but we lost the research and development that would have followed and the technological expertise that was in the country at the time as well as the resulting jobs. We are now importing the very types of planes which the Avro Arrow was providing us with the technology to develop in Canada.

I am afraid that what is being done in this particular case is a shadow of what the previous Conservative majority Government did over 20 years ago. The Conservatives say that they are getting rid of de Havilland because it is costing us money. Yet, we see from the very memorandum of agreement which has been signed and the few details that they have given out that we are committing ourselves to hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditure through tax write-offs or actual cash gifts to Boeing in the future. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we are not selling de Havilland to Boeing just to reduce the cost to the taxpayer because the Conservative Government is committing the taxpayers of Canada to spending hundreds of millions of dollars in the future to help Boeing. I think that certainly destroys any argument the Government makes in terms of this being a financial saving to the taxpayer.

The people who work at de Havilland were not consulted before this decision was made and neither was the Parliament of Canada. We do not have before us at this time a copy of the memorandum of agreement. We have no commitment from the Government that Parliament will hold hearings on the final agreement. That is important, not only because that final agreement could cost us hundreds of millions of dollars, and not only because we have no knowledge of what is involved in terms of tax expenditures, both of which are things the Auditor General said Parliament should know about, but, probably even more important, Parliament must have hearings and access to the complete agreement prior to it being signed because there exists the very dangerous possibility that we will again destroy the whole aircraft construction industry in the country.

We do not need another Avro Arrow. Just because the Conservative Government has the same type of massive majority in the House of Commons does not mean that it has to make the same mistake. Instead we should have a commitment from the Government that it will not blindly follow an ideological path thinking that we must get rid of Crown corporations, that we should not put any restrictions on private corporations, and that we should not be concerned that Boeing could strip the operation of de Havilland and take the technology that we paid for out of the City of Toronto to San Francisco, Seattle, or any other operation they have in the States.

That is what we are talking about here. The Government is giving Boeing the company and saying that it will give them some money and tax benefits in the future and pay for any export financing costs and development costs for the Dash-8 even though it will now be in private hands. Yet, the Government is not putting any restrictions on. It is not asking for job guarantees or any guarantees that the technology will stay in Canada. The Government is even allowing the physical assets, aside from the land, to be taken right out of the country. That has been done before, Mr. Speaker.

This is not a small deal. It is a massive deal which will cost the taxpayers of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars, not only because we will still be giving money to Boeing, but because we will be losing money that we should be collecting in taxation. We will be paying for the future development of the Dash-8. Yet we have made no requirements of Boeing. Why is that, Mr. Speaker?

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we realize that when the Government signed this memorandum of agreement it showed us a very bad example of what it might do in the free trade negotiations. We are speaking about a Canadian Crown corporation. There is no question that it has problems and that it is costing the Canadian taxpayers. However, it also has a product which is being made and developed in Canada and guaranteed sales of over 140 planes in the next little while. What is the Government doing? Is it saying that we should have production guarantees in the country? Is it saying that those jobs should be secure for Canadians? Is it saying that there should be some concern for what happens to the people who work in that plant? No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. It is negotiating with its eyes closed. It is giving away the shop and is not requiring any guarantees on behalf of the people who will be buying a Canadian industry.

I, as well as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and others in the House, have negotiated before. I must say that you cannot control what the other side puts on the table. However, when you go into negotiations, whether for de Havilland or the free trade pact which the Government is so keen on having with the Americans, we have a right to know what our side is negotiating with. After having seen what I have of this memorandum of agreement I have absolutely no faith that the Conservative Government will negotiate a good deal on behalf of Canada. It has not shown that it will keep even the shirt on our back when it goes into negotiations. It has not shown that it is concerned about Canadian content, with keeping jobs in Canada, with keeping Canadian technology in Canada, or that it even knows the financial details of what it gave away.

In response to a question from the House Leader of the New Democratic Party the Parliamentary Secretary could not say what the value of the assets were. How much is that land in downtown Toronto worth? How much is that building worth? How much is the machinery worth? If we are negotiating an agreement with someone else, we should know what the heck is the value of our own position. The Government does not know the value of its own position and it is certainly not capable of knowing it when it comes to negotiating a much more massive deal with the Americans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.50 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the Business of Supply in accordance with Section 9 of Standing Order 63. The question is on the amendment put by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ESTIMATES—FORECAST OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on November 19, 1985, I asked a question of the President of the Treasury Board concerning the recent Supplementary Estimates. While it was encouraging that those Estimates showed a modest increase by historical standards, I still find it troublesome in relation to the big job this Government has to do to get the deficit under control and to reduce the awesome size of our national debt. Many of my constituents continue to be alarmed at the size of that debt.

George Yates of Denver Crescent, and Ken Stephen of Meadowglade Crescent have mentioned this issue many times. Just today I received a letter from T. Richard Davies of Himount Drive in Willowdale to which he attached an article by J. Christopher Barron which outlines in a hard-hitting fashion the situation this Government has to deal with.

I believe we are on a collision course. Our national debt is now over $200 billion and the interest cost alone is roughly $20 billion to $22 billion a year. How long can we continue to spend $105 billion a year while collecting only approximately $71 billion? Households cannot do this. Corporations cannot do this. If you do not have the money, then bankruptcy will be the end result. I submit that Governments cannot continue in this fashion either.

We can be very proud of our social programs. Our care for our elderly is second to none in the world. Senior citizens now account for approximately 10 per cent of our population, but shortly after the turn of the century that will increase to 25 per cent. If we want to continue to give to that group the care it deserves we will have to get our spending under control. In a few decades the Canada Pension Plan will be in trouble if we do not have the money to support it. Other areas will suffer as well.

However, the recent meeting of the First Ministers in Halifax once again showed the difficult problem of coming to grips with the cost of running this country. This Government was very generous in granting a 5 per cent increase in transfer payments, an amount which is higher than inflation, yet we saw the Premiers demanding 7 per cent, almost double the rate of inflation.

Over the last 10 years the deficit has risen from a mere $2 billion to the $34 billion to $35 billion range today. Ten years ago our national debt was $24 billion. Today it is a staggering $200 billion to $225 billion. This erodes the confidence of investors. It reduces incentives for risk-taking.

Three out of four ridings elected a Conservative Member in the last general election. They wanted a change in the direction of this country. At the top of the list of things they wanted this Government to do was to get spending under control. There are a lot of good things happening now. The Nielsen task force is tackling hundreds of programs with a view to reducing their cost. Today the sale of de Havilland has been extensively debated. This company has been draining the treasury of $50 million a year and this sale will put an end to that. There are many more measures under way. I would just like to underscore that we know the task we have ahead of us and we will be working with due diligence to gain the respect of Canadians and get this ever-increasing deficit off of our back. In that way we can get on with the social programs which this country will need in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, whenever the Government is developing a budgetary strategy, it expects planned reductions as much as possible. For example, the 1985-86 estimates reflected its firm determination to reduce our expenditures in accordance with our November 1984 financial statement.

The implementation of those economic measures has effectively allowed us to reduce current supplementary estimates.

[English]

However, we must realize that Supplementary Estimates are a vehicle for seeking funds for unforeseen requirements and for new initiatives which are not finalized at the time Main Estimates are tabled. A few of the recommendations of the ministerial task force on program review are reflected in the level of Estimates for 1985-86. Still further reductions will be reflected in the 1986-87 Main Estimates.

In response to the question of when we will see absolute declines in the Estimates, we would draw our colleagues' attention to the fact that some 25 per cent of the Government's spending is on public debt charges in order to finance the current high debt levels created by the previous Government. I would also point out that almost 40 per cent of the total budget consists of transfer payments to persons directly, and other levels of Government. These payments are, for the most part, made in accordance with legislation which has indexing and other growth components built in.

With these facts in mind it is difficult to conceive of immediate over-all year-to-year decreases in spending Estimates. The aim of the Government is to reduce the budgetary deficit by reducing the growth of expenditures relative to revenues. The Minister of Finance's latest projections, as presented earlier this month in his progress report on securing economic renewal, show that budgetary revenues and program expenditures will continue to rise but will be roughly in balance by 1990-91.

[Translation]

Our Government's budget is a priority if we are to reduce the deficit and, consequently, we definitely intend to operate within its tax limits for the current year.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS (A) PARTICIPATION OF FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC AT FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT. (B) FRANCO-ONTARIANS—FIRST-CLASS CITIZENSHIP STATUS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on November 18 of this year, I raised in the House a question concerning the Francophonie Summit, which appears to be taking shape and will be held at Versailles, France, in February 1986. A number of francophone countries will be meeting to discuss the future of the francophone group, something like what is done in the Commonwealth context.

• (1830)

I will not mention all the problems and pitfalls this meeting seems to represent for certain people, and I asked the Prime Minister—since an agreement had been concluded with Quebec and New Brunswick had also been given the assurance it would be participating on an official basis in the discussions—if he could ensure that the francophone diaspora, and I am referring to francophones outside Quebec, in the other provinces, and especially in Ontario where there are 500,000 . . . I asked him whether they too could directly participate in the discussions at this meeting.

The Prime Minister said with a great deal of empathy that he fully understood my question, and that he first wanted to explain that New Brunswick had been invited because, and I quote the Prime Minister as reported at page 8543 in Hansard:

—because the Province of New Brunswick is officially bilingual and it is a major reason for being asked to participate on an official basis.

I realize that, and the Prime Minister went on to say:

I would think that the decision was first made because New Brunswick is officially bilingual, which unfortunately is still not the case in Ontario.

And then he said:

Still I intend to look favourably upon the proposition of my colleague.

Mr. Speaker, the question this evening is whether the Prime Minister has had time to think about my proposal and whether he has a response, because I am a little concerned about the way the media, especially, reported the exchange we had in the House. I could give a few examples, Mr. Speaker: "Official bilingualism first says Mulroney", in referring to Ontario participation at the Francophonie Summit. "Franco-Ontarians will not be represented at the Sommet de la francophonie", a headline in Le Devoir. "Mulroney excludes Ontario from francophone summit", in Le Droit.

[English]

" 'Lack of official bilingualism in Ontario unfortunate'. PM" and " 'Unilingual Ontario is abnormal'. PM".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it was my intention at the time to take a position approach and make Canadians understand there are francophones living in other provinces who like to think the federal Government speaks on their behalf. We just wanted to make sure that the Government representing us at the summit proceedings will do so in the appropriate manner and provide for the kind of presence and representation with which we could feel comfortable.

I simply want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether in his reply he could, for instance, give me the assurance that the president of the Association canadienne française de l'Ontario, the ACFO, who wrote to the Prime Minister on November 12 asking him, and he makes it quite clear in his letter, and I quote:

—75 per cent of Canada's francophones live in Ontario—

If we exclude Quebec and New Brunswick, of course—

—where they form an active and thriving community. It would therefore be desirable to have a Franco-Ontarian invited to join the delegation that will be representing French Canada at this international summit.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is a prefectly honest and legitimate request on the part of a group of people who are Canadians first, but who happen to speak French.

I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary if he could assure us this evening that Franco-Ontarians will not be excluded from the Francophonie Summit because their province is not officially bilingual.

This is the conclusion one can draw from newspaper headlines: because the province is not bilingual, Franco-Ontarians will be excluded from the Francophonie Summit. In my judgment, that is altogether unacceptable and saddening as a conclusion.

I know, Mr. Speaker—and I would like to explain this in the few remaining minutes—that we in Canada have a very special kind of bilingualism. New Brunswick and Canada are officially bilingual, they have two official languages, French and English.

Quebec is also bilingual, but in its own way, according to Section 133 of the Constitution which stipulates: In Quebec, you must communicate with your Canadian residents in French or in English when dealing with documents of the Legislature or documents before the courts. Therefore it is institutional bilingualism, and the same institutional bilingualism exists in Manitoba. Now then, if Quebec and New Brunswick were invited because they are "bilingual", why was Manitoba not invited since it too, according to Section 23, is bilingual? You know why? I am a bit surprised at some of the standards of eligibility for this conference which I consider to be very important. I consider it essential to us because I think it is about time someone began to talk about our existence. Whether we like it or not, we are the cement of this country. As long as there are Francophones and Anglophones in Canada, this country of ours will continue to exist. But the moment the mortar crumbles, the bricks begin to fall, and the moment there are no longer any Francophones in British Columbia, in Manitoba, in Ontario or elsewhere, Canada will not stay together as I want it to. It will not stay officially bilingual, respectful of both official languages as it must be.

• (1835)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to be assured this evening that French-speaking Ontario will be guaranteed active participation in the February 1976 Versailles meeting, through its spokesmen, ACFO or others. I look forward to the response.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question. I am afraid he is going to be somewhat disappointed, if he wanted a specific answer to the question: Will the ACFO be a direct participant in the summit? As my hon. friend said earlier, the ACFO sent a letter around the middle of November. You yourself very wisely remarked it was a complex issue. The Prime Minister has promised to think about it and in his reply he will certainly emphasize aspects that are encouraging for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should not forget that the Prime Minister will be representing all Canadians at this international summit, whether they are francophones or anglophones.

My second point, Mr. Speaker, is that there are certain countries . . . Let us say that Quebec and New Brunswick were members of the Agence de coopération culturelle et technique. Their two Governments were participants. And there are necessarily two aspects to the Canadian Government's participation, as my hon. friend has implied.

However, I think the Hon. Member should take another look at the answer the Prime Minister gave on November 18 and read it very carefully:

> but I would indeed be quite pleased were the delegation to include Franco-Ontarians.

Therefore, on the basis of that statement by the Prime Minister, who represents all Canadians, and since some of the provincial Governments are already active in international agencies, I think the Prime Minister will know how to show leadership, and will certainly, first, represent all Francophone and Anglophone Canadians and, second, give every opportunity to all of those who are anxious to fulfil their aspirations in this country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—RECOMMENDED STIFFENING OF CRIMINAL CODE POLLUTION PENALTIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the Law Reform Commission of Canada recently recommended that our Criminal Code be amended to include crimes against the environment. That was a rather revolutionary recommendation on the part of that Commission because traditionally lawyers and judges, when dealing with the Criminal Code, have been very, very conservative in their suggestions and have usually taken the attitude that the Criminal Code is sacrosanct and should not be amended to include new types of crimes.

The Criminal Code was originally drafted over 100 years ago. The crimes included at that time were crimes of those days. Time has passed and things have changed, but very few new offences have ever been included in the Criminal Code. Therefore, it is rather revolutionary that the Law Reform Commission is actually recommending that new offences against the environment be included.

While it is a revolutionary idea, it is understandable that the Law Reform Commission should be recommending something like this in light of what has been happening to society in the last few years. As you know, there are now over 1,200 individual chemical substances that have been identified and are considered to be dangerous. When they escape into the air, the water or, for that matter, our food, they can cause more than a small amount of trouble. We can see the effect on the physical environment from acid rain. In addition to that, we can see impact on our own physical property when the dangerous substances result in fires and explosions. In the last week or so we have heard reports that would indicate that some of these dangerous substances may be in our processed foods. All of these things will obviously cause people great concern; cause them to want to see a real form of control over the pollutants and the people who are polluting our environment.

We have had many examples of these sorts of things in recent years, as you are well aware. It is just over one year ago that there was a great chemical escape from the Union Carbide plant in Bhopal, India, which killed upwards of 2000 people. In addition, we have recently had problems with a PCB spill in Kenora, Ontario. We have had continuing problems along the Niagara River in New York State. The chemical dumps at Love Canal, Hyde Park, S area and 102nd Street in Niagara Falls, New York, are all currently seeping toxic material down the banks of the Niagara River into the River and Lake Ontario potentially causing great problems for the four million Canadians who live around Lake Ontario. We have had problems with nuclear waste at Port Hope, Ontario, as well as many, many other problems of this sort.

The Law Reform Commission has, therefore, suggested that in order to focus on this and to put some teeth in the laws we should actually include offences against the environment in our Criminal Code. They do not suggest that we should do away with all the other offences in the provincial statutes or other federal statutes, but do suggest that we should provide something specific in the Criminal Code to take into account serious acts of commission and omission, to take into account harmful acts, and to take into account acts which are performed with intent, wrecklessly, and with gross negligence. Those are the types of crimes against the environment that it is suggested should be included in the Criminal Code.

The commission indicates that in addition to the fines which we have now there should be penalties, orders for restitution, and jail terms for executives and directors of the polluting companies. This is not revolutionary because many other countries include this sort of thing in their laws. Ten states in the United States include this sort of thing in their laws, and West Germany and Japan both have provisions for crimes against the environment in their Criminal Codes. It is only logical that we should take this step in our country.

On November 27 I asked the Parliamentary Secretary if the Minister agreed with these recommendations and would urge the Government to amend the Criminal Code accordingly. He indicated to me that they were currently studying the matter and woulds be looking at some recommendations in the future. I hope that tonight we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary what changes the Government is looking at. Hopefully it will be considering changes to the Criminal Code, rather than only changes to the Environmental Contaminants Act, which I know the Department has in mind. We should be making some changes to the Environmental Contaminants Act, but we should also include these very serious offences in the Criminal Code to show the people of the country that the Government is serious and wants to get on with dealing with environmental crimes.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as an engineer and a Member of this House, I am pleased to speak about this question which relates to the reform of Canadian legislation on crimes against the environment.

[English]

I wish to inform the House that Environment Canada is now giving careful attention to the Law Reform Commission's recently released working paper on crimes against the environment. As our hon. colleague is undoubtedly aware, the working paper is a discussion document. Its tentative recommendations are intended to bring responses from various sectors, including other federal Departments. During the comment period, Environment Canada will be preparing its observations in response to the report of the Law Reform Commission.

On the international level, Canada has treaty obligations with its neighbours. One example of such an obligation is the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, signed by Canada and the United States under which both countries are obligated to not pollute boundary and trans-boundary waters. It is this treaty which led directly to the Canada-United States Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. As well, Canada is a signatory to several international Conventions designed to protect the environment, such as the London Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by the dumping of wastes and other matter at sea and the Law of the Sea Convention. All Canada's international obligations and responsibilities would therefore have to be considered before a decision could be taken to amend the Criminal Code as contemplated by the Law Reform Commission.

There are five different levels of potential environmental rights discussed by the Law Reform Commission to which Environment Canada has turned its attention. First, there is the right not to have one's life or health harmed or endangered as a result of environmental pollution. The second is the right to a reasonable level of environmental quality, even when a specific pollutant or pollution source cannot be identified with certainly to be the cause of a specific health damage or risk. The third is the right to a reasonable level of environmental quality, a quality which is violated by pollution that deprives people of the use and enjoyment of the environment even when there are no health effects or dangers.

[Translation]

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, we cannot agree on this complex project before scrutinizing the many aspects of the problem and the intricate considerations of an issue which has international connotations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Therefore this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.47 p.m.

INCOME TAX

NORTHERN BENEFITS REMISSION ORDERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November last there was a section on northern allowances which read as follows:

Employees in the North and in isolated posts receive certain tax exemption from employer benefits under two remission orders. The structure of these remission orders was announced by the previous Government but the orders were not formally put in place. The orders are now confirmed and will be in effect through 1985. During this period, the Government intends to review the issue of northern taxation in consultation with all interested parties.

I am not aware that any consultation has gone on. The people in the North are not aware that any consultation has gone on. On the other hand the people in the North are becoming very concerned that this issue which is very important to them has not been dealt with by the Government and that, by the end of 1985, there will be taxation of northern benefits.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment in Yellowknife during the last campaign. I should like to quote from a press clipping from Yukon at that time:

Minutes after his chartered jet touched down, Mr. Mulroney said the federal Conservative Government would "absolutely not" tax northern benefits such as housing and travel allowances.

I want an assurance from the Government, before the end of the year, that after the end of 1985 there will continue to be, into the indefinite future, no taxation of northern allowances.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

REPORTED PLAN TO CENTRALIZE GOVERNMENT POLLING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we learned today that a cabinet committee will probably decide to award the Government's super poll contract to that super pollster, Allan Gregg, at Decima Research. It seems that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be the first to read the results of this centralized monthly polling scheme. If nothing else, it means that the Prime Minister can no longer claim that he does not know what is going on, at least in the minds of Canadians.

However, it also represents a very serious conflict for Decima Research and the Government. Decima should not be in a position to gather polling information for the Government of Canada when Mr. Gregg, by changing his hat, is the pollster for the federal Conservative Party and various provincial Conservative Governments.

Yesterday we were told about a study for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) showing that most Canadians were unaware of the important issue of employment equity in the workplace. Regrettably, this $29,000 study shows that many Canadians are in the dark when it comes to understanding the many job barriers facing women, natives, the disabled and visible minorities. The Minister of Employment okayed $5.5 million to promote her Canadian Jobs Strategy program.

I call upon the Government to undertake a public information program to educate Canadians about affirmative action and to eliminate the confusion which surrounds the very important issue of job fairness.

ENERGY

CLOSING OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was very disappointed to hear about the sale and subsequent closing of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East. I am sure this deplorable state of affairs is due to the disastrous national energy policy set up by our predecessors in the Liberal Government. Personally, I have to admit I feel somewhat helpless and rather limited in what I can do, but I firmly believe that with the help of my colleagues, the Conservative Government will be able to find satisfactory alternatives. The days to come will prove we were right. Needless to say, my feelings of sympathy go out to the 450 workers at the Gulf refinery, and I shall continue to give them my wholehearted support.

NEED TO CONSIDER RISKS AND COST OF BREAST IMPLANTS

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise an important question in the House today which concerns over 17,000 Canadian women, including 7,000 Quebec women, every year. I was made aware of the issue by an eminent researcher at Laval University, Dr. Robert Guidoin. I am referring to a number of studies that were made on breast implant devices, studies the Department of National Health and Welfare does not seem to take very seriously. According to the analyses, the health of women who resort to this type of operation is at risk. However, no provision has been made by the Department to monitor the silicone implants being used. Research has shown that within two years after the operation, the implants break up or weep, thus causing considerable damage to the tissues of the patient, who then has to undergo a new operation.

In addition to the danger to the health of women who are obliged to resort to this kind of operation, we must realize that although the initial operation is not covered by provincial health insurance plans, the second operation that may be required owing to unsatisfactory implants costs the various provincial governments a lot of money. When the operation is redone, the patient's hospital costs are paid by provincial health insurance plans. Because this serious problem is costing Canadians money and especially because of the health risk to over 17,000 Canadian women every year, I consider this a very important issue and I feel it should be examined and regulated without delay.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): God bless you, Mr. Speaker.

I rise in my place today to raise the difficulties experienced in Newfoundland with the job-creation program of the federal Government. In response to the disastrous situation in the fishery this year in Newfoundland and Labrador, the federal Government quite properly—and I must say that we applauded this measure at the time—announced a $9.5 million fund to assist people who were suffering as a result of the natural disaster in the fishing industry. The problem is that while the fund was announced two months ago and was called an emergency response, those dollars are still not in place and the projects which the fund was designed to create are still not ongoing. Hence we have the frustrating spectacle in Newfoundland of people having to engage in hunger strikes in order to draw attention to the problem.

• (1410)

If that were not bad enough, under the regular stream of the fall Canada Works Programs, community groups are being told that they will receive no funding under the program for six weeks. The Government is going to set up a situation whereby people will be allowed to have the tools to do a good job and bring a benefit to the community, but they will only be employed in the midst of winter.

I beg the Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to get their act together and get the shop working. Get the lead out, cut the red tape, and let people who want to work, work now.

EMPLOYMENT

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO UNDERTAKE JOB-CREATION MEASURES IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government simply cannot blame the former Liberal administration for the current situation in Montreal East. Since the Conservative Government came into office in September 1984 some 2,000 Montreal East workers lost their jobs, and now 433 Gulf workers will also be laid off as a result of Ultramar's decision to buy the Gulf refinery and shut it down.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, this Government gave a $600 million tax remission to Olympia & York for acquiring the assets of Gulf Canada. The people of Quebec, the workers of Quebec and the workers of Montreal East had enough of the cynic approach of the Government which does not do anything for workers but keeps on making generous gifts to big business.

When most Quebecers voted for the Conservatives in the last election they were expecting real changes. Now they know that the Prime Minister's promise about jobs, jobs and more jobs was indeed a snow job, for he really meant jobs for big business.

Mr. Speaker, jobs are disappearing at an accelerated rate in Montreal East, and the survival committee people are seeking a constructive approach to create employment, fed up as they are with the Conservative Government's cynic attitude.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to refer to an article published in La Presse of December 3, more specifically to an editorial of Mr. Frédéric Wagnière on the disposal of de Havilland.

Mr. Wagnière's editorial is entitled "A new departure".

This company in which the Liberals had sunk close to $830 million in Canadian taxpayers' money and which required a further $85 million annual injection of public funds to stay in business has just been sold to private interests, in keeping with our Government's privatization policy and economic development program. The only opposition to our project comes from Members on the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker.

I might point out that the privatization process will continue. In answer to the attacks of the misguided Liberals, I would like to ask them what they did in the case of Canadair in 1982 when they doctored the books of that company to hide their incompetence.

Fortunately the Auditor General uncovered their insidious tactic. They should take stock of themselves instead of criticizing us!

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, our Government chose an outstanding management team, Boeing Aircraft, and made sure that the 4,500 workers in that industry will meet the Canadian challenge.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF HALIFAX EXPLOSION—CALL FOR INCREASED AID FOR ELDERLY SURVIVORS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, 68 years ago this month, on December 6, 1917, an explosion occurred in Halifax Harbour which rocked all of Canada and all of the world. Over 2,000 people were killed when two ships collided in Halifax Harbour, and many thousands of others were injured and maimed for life. All Nova Scotians, and I think all Canadians, should remember this terrible event in the light of current events across the world of equal magnitude in terms of disaster.

This was not merely an event in past history. There are many survivors of that explosion in Canada today. I want to take the opportunity once again to remind the Canadian Pension Commission and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees), who now administer the funds available to these people, to take another look at the situation to see whether we can increase the aid provided to the survivors of the Halifax explosion. Most of them are in their very late years, 80 and 90 years of age. The small settlements they received and the minor payments they receive on a monthly basis should be increased now that they are in their senior days. I ask all Members of the House to support that action.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED TRADE SUMMIT SHOW—REPORTED REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Indian leaders have asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) to cancel the proposed native business summit and trade show which is scheduled for next summer in Toronto.

• (1415)

The federal Government is going to spend up to $2 million on this event. One and one-half million of that is coming from the Department of Indian Affairs and is being taken away from a program meant for community development. Indian communities desperately need those dollars. This trade show will do nothing to benefit communities that do not even have such basic services as water and sewage systems.

The president of the Union of Ontario Indians called the trade show an extravagant expenditure. The Grand Chief of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation has said that it is money not well spent. The chiefs are now going to express their opposition directly to the Prime Minister.

Last April the Prime Minister stressed that policies regarding aboriginal people will be made only after full consultation. I ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to listen and respond to the concerns of the chiefs of Ontario with regard to this proposed trade show. I ask them to consider carefully the telex that was sent today by the Ontario regional chiefs.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TREATIES—PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO PARLIAMENTARIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In Canada we have had a fine tradition of conducting our foreign policy in a relatively non-partisan fashion. That is why I cannot understand why the Government of Canada would treat Canadian parliamentarians from all three political Parties with such utter contempt. I refer, of course, to the fact that Canadian Members of Parliament have been attempting to elicit information on the current and prospective state of our treaties with the United States, particularly those relating to air defence and the protection of Canada from nuclear attack.

Why is it that Members of Parliament and members of the committee have to go to Washington to obtain from military experts information which they could have received from our own Government? Why is our Government not as forthcoming as our American allies?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question refers to press reports of the evidence of a private citizen in the United States and not to the United States Government. The right hon. gentleman knows as a member of a former Government, and indeed as a former Prime Minister, that there are classified documents in the service that go to the heart of the nation's security and that of our allies, the disclosure of which traditions prevent. Indeed, as he knows, an arrangement was signed by himself and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as has been the case with former Prime Ministers on the change of office, prohibiting the release of classified information to Members of Parliament unless they are security cleared.

REQUEST FOR IN CAMERA COMMITTEE MEETING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that agreement between successive Prime Ministers relates to cabinet documents and documents relating thereto. Of course the Federal Court has had something to say about that particular situation.

If the Deputy Prime Minister is worried about national security, there is an option open to the Government, namely, treat Members of Parliament and those members of parliamentary committees to the information now available to U.S. Congressmen and Senators. Have the committee meet in camera and give the Members from all three political Parties who are trying to assess the present state of our air defence agreements with the United States a chance to get the information upon which they can make a judgment.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister take this matter up with the Prime Minister and his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to ensure that henceforth Members of Parliament and Senators get the same information on our mutual defence arrangements with the United States as U.S. Congressmen, Senators, and private experts get?

● (1420)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that parliamentary committees have held in camera meetings both while he was a member of the Government and now. The suggestion just made by him is certainly one which is deserving of consideration. Indeed, it has been done, as I am reminded from behind me, I believe with respect to the recent visit by that particular committee to Colorado Springs and NORAD, the entire briefing was classified and in camera. The difficulty with respect to that particular meeting, and others like it, is that some Members of Parliament, such as the critic in this area for the New Democratic Party, will not go to those meetings because of the fear of being compromised by the very information they seek.

Ms. Jewett: That is why they should not be classified.

[Translation]

NEED FOR CANADA TO RECEIVE INFORMATION IN ORDER TO MAKE JUDGMENT CONCERNING TREATIES WITH UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty weak argument. The Deputy Prime Minister is not a very open or accessible man.

However, to repeat my question: I believe all Canadians want the Canadian Government to be open and very frank, especially in our defence relations with the United States. Could he reconsider his position and the Government's and ensure that Members from all three political parties and the Senators sitting with them on joint committees, as representatives of the Canadian people, be able to obtain the information they need to form a Canadian opinion on Canada's treaties with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, where that can be done it will be done; but I am sure the right hon. gentleman is not for a moment suggesting that this Government, or any Government of Canada, should be exposing for public examination information which goes to the heart of the security of this nation and that of our allies. He knows, as a former Prime Minister and as a former member of a Government, that there is that type of information which does exist that does go to the security of the country. If he is inviting me, or this Government, simply to override all caution and make all information, including classified information—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give us return tickets to Washington so we can get the information, will you?

Mr. Nielsen: —with respect to the country's security, then I for one have to reject that idea. He should not, Sir, try to leave the impression that any documents have been exposed in Washington that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the answer is becoming a little long.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday, in defending the sale of de Havilland, as reported at page 9072 of Hansard, he said that the main reason was to save money. Specifically, he said:

> The best estimate for next year was that de Havilland would lose $200 million. That is taxpayers' money, and that is what we are going to save the taxpayers.

The memorandum of understanding has not been made public. Is it not a fact that in that memorandum the loss for that period is estimated not at $200 million but at only $14 million, and that the memorandum states that in the following year de Havilland will make a profit? To whom is the Government giving the truth, this House or Boeing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this Government is obviously giving the truth to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: I would like to answer the hon. gentleman opposite by saying that the main reason for the sale—and I think I made this point repeatedly yesterday—is to give this very vital industry in the country a new momentum, a new future, new growth and new jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We want the truth.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the media in Seattle are celebrating this deal as an extraordinary bargain for Boeing, noting that there are no job guarantees for Canadians and that the price is far below value. If the Government is so proud of this deal, then before it is final why can the deal not be reviewed by the Government of Ontario, by the United Auto Workers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —and, above all, by the Members of this House? Does the Government not realize that a little advance thinking outside the tight circle which has looked into it so far might save the country the kind of losses which are involved now in the bank bail-out?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I am happy that Boeing is celebrating the deal. It is a good deal. I would like the Opposition to be celebrating the deal as well. A good deal is a deal whereby both parties can celebrate the deal, and it is a good deal for employees and a good deal for Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is sure right that Boeing is celebrating. Because of the incompetence of this Government it is getting two or three times the price of what it is paying for.

TAX CONCESSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. We estimated yesterday that because of tax concessions and other benefits given by the Conservative Government, Boeing is actually going to get two or three times the amount of money it is going to pay for the company, from Canadian taxpayers. Will the Minister provide us with the Government's own estimates tabled for the House to see, of tax concessions and other financial benefits which the Government is going to provide to Boeing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I already answered that question yesterday.

Mr. Broadbent: No, you didn't.

Mr. de Cotret: But I will answer it again for the Hon. Member. First, in terms of any tax concessions, the company will be treated as any other Canadian corporation. There is nothing in the understanding which gives it preferred treatment. There is one thing, however, which has to be underlined, and that has to do with the tax losses carried forward, whereby the company has agreed to use those tax losses carried forward only as it relates to financing schemes for sales to Canadian purchasers. In other words, it is a break for our Canadian airline industry. That is the only understanding.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes, and what that means in other language is that the Government is going to give Boeing $400 million in tax benefits to make sales on which it is already going to obtain profits. It still amounts to a $400 million gift any way the Government wants to look at it, and Boeing understands that very well.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely contradictory evidence, flatly contradictory evidence, about how much profit or loss de Havilland is supposed to produce next year. I understand that the documents which were produced have the company saying one thing, and an expert from New York last night said something contradicting the Minister. I would ask the Minister, given the contradiction, will he ensure that all relevant documents are brought before a committee of this House before another silly financial decision is made by the Government?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Again, Mr. Speaker, the premise is false. How can there be another silly financial decision when there was never a first one made?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the estimates I gave to this House yesterday were based on the best available information that we possess in terms of the projected operations of de Havilland for the coming year, which is a loss in the neighbourhood of $200 million.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY EXAMINATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not only content to shift the decision-making for this firm from Canada to Seattle—and they are going to decide which kind of aircraft is going to be produced for this country in the future—the Minister is nodding his agreement.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, he is not.

Mr. Broadbent: That's the truth. They are going to make the headquarters in Seattle.

Will the Minister tell the House when the final date is for the agreement? Has the Government made its mind up on that? And given the importance to the whole aerospace industry of this key firm, and given the importance that the people of Canada know what it is going to cost, will he ensure that the Parliament of Canada will be able to see all of these details before the Government signs on the dotted line?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I suppose you want General Motors to leave Oshawa?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize, in answer to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, that through the world product mandate we are maintaining and retaining all of our technology in this country, we are expanding our world markets, we are providing jobs, and we are improving, through the marketing ability of Boeing, the ability of this industry to continue.

Mr. Broadbent: There are no guarantees.

Mr. Deans: Who is going to make the decisions?

• (1430)

Mr. de Cotret: The Hon. Member's second question was answered yesterday by the Right Hon. Prime Minister who said:

Mr. Speaker, those procedures which are in place and which would apply by the normal course of events will apply.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on the very common sense questions that were posed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am glad you identified the questioner.

Mr. Hopkins: My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and is with regard to information which the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence was presented with in Washington yesterday. The committee was informed that a list of agreements provided to it by the Minister's Department was sanitized by leaving out a number of critically sensitive Canadian-American agreements.

Why is this information deliberately withheld from the MPs on that committee at a time when the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence is expected to make informed recommendations and sound judgments about the renewal of the North American Air Defence agreement?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please! Order, please! The question is becoming quite long.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman, who is the critic for his Party on defence matters, should know, there are virtually hundreds of agreements in existence between Canada and the United States touching upon the defence of the country. As the hon. gentleman would expect, some of those are classified. I do not intend to discuss documents of a classified nature which touch upon the security of the country or that of our allies. The news reports indicate that the titles of certain agreements which were in possession of the committee were discussed in Washington.

NORAD—ROLE OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Would he explain to the House how he expects the committee to carry out its mandate pertaining to NORAD and future defence co-operation with the United States when the Government is systematically withholding information needed by the committee to deliberate seriously about these important issues? Is this committee merely a public relations ploy by the Government? Would the Minister like to explain to the committee in particular, and to his own Members of Parliament—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I emphatically reject the accusation that the Government is withholding information from the committee which the committee is entitled to have. This committee, and all other standing committees of the House, have had far more information before them than ever before in the history of committees in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hopkins: Don't you trust your own MPs!

Mr. Nielsen: As the hon. gentleman has attended in camera sessions of that committee, he knows the kind of information that is made available to him. He knows perfectly well that sensitive information which goes to the fundamental security of the country and that of our allies should not be responsibly discussed in the public domain and I do not intend to do so. I only wish that his—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness I think I must go on to the next Member.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—CORPORATION'S LAND HOLDINGS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Since the value of the land owned by de Havilland could well be, depending on the circumstances, between $10 million and $50 million rather than the $10,000 listed in the annual report to Parliament, will the President of the Treasury Board table in the House today the Royal Lepage property evaluation document which he has in his possession?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the value of the land, I would like to emphasize one very important element in the understanding we have reached with the purchaser. That is, should any excess land ever come to market the Government of Canada retains the right of first refusal—

Mr. Deans: At what price?

Mr. de Cotret: —at the price set by A. E. Lepage.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At what time?

Mr. Deans: At the price set by A. E. Lepage at what time?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At the time of the offer.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): In addition to the document for which I have asked, will the Minister table in the House the product liability document prepared by Reed Stenhouse, the valuation of de Havilland asset document prepared by Arthur Andersen, and the all encompassing document prepared by Burns Fry which determines all of the values and potential values of the de Havilland properties?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize once again that the various elements of the transaction were reviewed by experts in the field. We received from those experts assurances that the deal was indeed a good deal—

Ms. Copps: Just like the bank deal.

Mr. de Cotret: —a great deal for Canadians, and Members should be rejoicing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STOCK HELD IN BRYMON AIRWAYS

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. de Havilland has approximately 70 per cent of the stock in a British company known as Brymon Airways. This company has received approval from London City Council to construct an air strip near the Thames only 10 minutes from downtown London. It will be used as a landing point between London and the continent and will also be using the Dash-7 and Dash-8. Will the Minister tell the House whether this financial bonanza was added into the value of de Havilland prior to its sale to Boeing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, not to the best of my knowledge.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in view of that response, in view of the concessions of $590 million which have been given to Boeing, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister made a promise on April 11, 1984, when he said: "I don't think Canadian taxpayers should ante up any more cash until such time—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order! As the Hon. Member knows, this is becoming a long preamble. What is his question?

Mr. Dingwall: Will the President of the Treasury Board live up to the promise of his Prime Minister and have Parliament review this deal so that we can get answers to the questions I have posed, or is this another broken promise by a broken Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: He's a broken record.

Mr. de Jong: Table the document.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Government is maintaining a commitment to return to the private sector commercial corporations—

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Dingwall: It's a rip-off.

Mr. de Cotret: —that no longer serve—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please! Order, please.

Mr. Hopkins: He's skating.

Mr. Tobin: Santa Clause came early for Boeing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: It's called Tory ideology.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the Government is maintaining its commitment to Canadians for economic renewal. It is maintaining the commitment for new jobs across the country.

Mr. Dingwall: Answer the question.

Mr. Hopkins: Answer the question.

Mr. de Cotret: We are maintaining our commitment and getting the country back on the road.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSAL TO MERGE DE HAVILLAND AND CANADAIR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board and is with regard to a commitment made by the Progressive Conservatives during the election campaign last year. The Government promised to join de Havilland and Canadair into a single Canadian aerospace corporation, to make it profitable, and to ensure that the shares of that corporation would be put into the hands of Canadians.

Why is it that the Government abandoned that particular commitment which, among other things, would have come before Parliament for ratification? Why is it now selling out de Havilland to Americans without parliamentary approval?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we mentioned during the election campaign—

Some Hon. Members: Mentioned?

Mr. de Jong: He doesn't even blush.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Surely it is reasonable to let questions and answers be heard by the whole House.

Mr. Skelly: We are waiting for an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Member have a supplementary question?

COST OF TRANSACTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to have forgotten what the Government mentioned during the course of its campaign. I have pointed it out. I remind the Minister that the Government also promised openness, civility in Parliament, and accountability. Where is parliamentary accountability if Parliament will have no opportunity to review a transaction which will cost the taxpayers $.5 billion and lose us a leader in international technological development?

• (1440)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this will not cost the taxpayers anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: You don't like that. You don't like that kind of answer.

An Hon. Member: How about the truth?

Mr. de Cotret: Making de Havilland a profitable company in the aerospace industry in this country will be a net gain to Canadians as a result of eliminating the losses that de Havilland has been incurring year after year. It will be a net gain to Canadian taxpayers. The whole deal will be good for Canada, for employees, and for the Government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—LIST OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENTS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I hope that we can get a clear commitment from him this time.

In view of the fact that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence thought it had a serious mandate to study the NORAD renewal and Canada-U.S. defence agreements, is he prepared now to restore to the list of Canada-U.S. defence agreements drawn up by his Department those items which were deleted? Is he prepared to do that so that the committee, including Members from his side of the House, can have at its disposal all possible information?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the degree of information that has been supplied to this and other committees of the House is unprecedented in our parliamentary history. The committee is examining the NORAD question exactly as it has in the past, with much greater assistance in the way of information than ever before.

If the hon. gentleman is reiterating the question put by his Leader with respect to giving consideration to further in camera hearings, certainly that suggestion will be taken into consideration.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, apart from the issue of the NORAD agreement, I want to ask the Minister about Canada-U.S. defence agreements with regard to the Strategic Defence Initiative. Is he prepared to assure the House and all Canadians that there are no arrangements for direct Canadian participation in the Strategic Defence Initiative?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government on that question is very clear. There is no government-to-government participation on the SDI research initiative of the United States.

Mr. Deans: Everywhere else but.

Mr. Nielsen: However, the Government feels that that research initiative on the part of the United States is prudent.

HEALTH

BREAST IMPLANTS—REQUEST FOR STRICTER CONTROL AND ADDITIONAL RESEARCH FUNDS

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and is further to a meeting I had with the Minister a few weeks ago about breast implant devices.

I would like the Minister to give me a progress report, including measures that have been taken to monitor and, especially, regulate the quality of implants used by surgeons, and also the question whether funds have been released to promote research in an area where the health of 17,000 Canadian women are at risk every year and which generates considerable expenditures for provincial governments.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter that the Hon. Member has raised with me privately. She has done a lot of work in an area that is very important to society and women in particular. I want to advise her that breast implant devices are the subject of premarket review, and fall under the control of the Health Protection Branch. With respect to further research, I want to inform her as well that there are requests for funding for that type of research and that is being actively pursued by the Department.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We are not asking for an in camera meeting. The Liberals may want to proceed in a secretive fashion but that is not what we are asking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: Will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm now that citizens and parliamentarians of Canada will have access to the same information that citizens and Congressmen have in the United States under the Freedom of Information Act and their own Department of Defense?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, obviously the two systems are different and the legislation with respect to freedom of information is quite different than it is in the United States.

I do not know why the hon. lady refuses to be informed—

Ms. Mitchell: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Nielsen: —on security matters affecting the national security in in camera meetings held for the purpose of keeping Members of Parliament informed. She refused in 1979, refused in 1980, refused in 1984, and she has refused again to participate with her colleagues in the House of Commons on that committee in order to inform themselves with respect to NORAD and other defence matters.

Ms. Jewett: This information should not be given in camera. It is open in the United States. Why is it not open in Canada?

SUPPLEMENTS TO AGREEMENTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Prime Minister, while he is now making this information that was whited out available to the committee, also make available to us the secret—although they are available in the United States—supplements both to the 1981 NORAD renewal and the North Warning System?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the assertion by the hon. lady is simply not true. I do not believe, as she apparently does, that we should bare our entire soul to potential adversaries in this country.

Ms. Jewett: Just a little.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Government of Canada were to publish everything that went to the heart of the security of this country there would be no need for any foreign intelligence services to operate in this country because they could buy it from the book stands.

Ms. Jewett: You could get more support from Canadians.

INDUSTRY

SALE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I would like to know whether there is a Minister in this Government who is frank enough to give us an answer. So whoever feels he fits the bill may rise.

I am referring to the sale of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East, a matter where Conservative Members deceived refinery employees by supporting Gaz Métropolitain which was supposed to buy the refinery and keep it running.

I would like to know first of all why the Government allowed these Members to kindle false hopes among these workers, when they knew perfectly well the transaction was doomed. Second, why did you wait until after the election in Quebec to make the announcement?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the assertions made in the hon. gentleman's question are absolutely false. Rather than rising in his place and posing questions on this matter, he should be ashamed of himself for supporting a Party that was in office during the closure of three refineries in the Montreal area, and which imposed the national energy policy on this country which led to the circumstances calling for the decision that was made between two private sector corporations.

Instead of throwing accusations across the floor, he should be reflecting in his own shame for supporting a Party that has had those results.

[Translation]

ROLE OF INVESTMENT CANADA

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister may not have noticed, but the other day in Quebec, we swept all the "blues" from the map. You are next.

My supplementary is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses). Considering the fact that Ultramar's decision to buy the Gulf refinery in Montreal East has to be approved by Investment Canada, could the Minister give the House the assurance that they will refuse to approve the purchase of this refinery and allow Gaz Métropolitain to acquire the refinery, so it will not be just another S-31 for Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that I should respond to that question because, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is unavoidably absent today, I am, on behalf of the Government, answering questions in the House today with respect to that transaction.

The answer to the hon. gentleman's question is no, the transaction that took place was a transaction between two private sector corporations and had nothing to do with the Government.

I point out again that, unlike the Government which he supported when he was in office which did nothing for the workers when three refineries closed in the area, we are addressing ourselves to the problem that this private sector decision has caused. He should follow the Minister's activities very carefully in Montreal next Friday with respect to an announcement—

Mr. Lapierre: How about Investment Canada?

NATIONAL PARKS

WILDLIFE POACHING—HARSHER PENALTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment. Despite the fact that a wildlife poaching ring operating in the Banff National Park has been brought to justice through the co-ordinated efforts of the RCMP, Parks Canada, and wildlife officers, there is still much poaching going on. What steps is the Minister taking to deal with this problem?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. Poaching, especially underground organized poaching, is becoming a serious problem in our national parks right across the country. Dozens of our big game species are being slaughtered, largely by non-Canadians, for trophy purposes. For example, a big-horn sheep head will command about $50,000 on the black market. To meet the problem head on, we intend to change the fine, which is now only $500 and as such is not a deterrent but a licence, to $150,000 maximum. An we intend to include six-month jail sentences as a further deterrent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

CONSEQUENCES OF IMPORT QUOTA DECISION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister for International Trade. The president of the Association des manufacturiers de chaussures told us this morning that a Montreal shoe manufacturer is the first to announce a shutdown after the decision concerning quotas. How many shutdowns and how many lost jobs will it take to convince the Government that it must correct the mistake it made last week?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government followed the judgment handed down by the tribunal after an extensive investigation of over one year. In those areas where the industries were found vulnerable, we protected those industries. We are keeping our tariffs on for another three years. In those areas where they are not vulnerable and can compete, we have set them free. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that in those areas where they do not need protection, we should continue to have a cost against Canadian consumers of a half billion dollars per year?

SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the manufacturers contradicted each statement of the Minister in their meeting with us this morning. Why does the Canadian Government believe that it makes sense to eliminate shoe quotas when the U.S. Congress, after trying that experiment and seeing a huge loss of jobs, just yesterday, by a huge margin, voted to put shoe quotas back into force?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Canada is different from the situation in the United States, in that its tribunal found injury and our tribunal in Canada did not find injury in certain areas.

Mr. de Corneille: Wrong.

Mr. Rodriguez: Dead wrong.

Mr. Kelleher: In those areas we removed the quotas, and in those areas where they found that there was injury and that they were vulnerable, the quotas remained in force.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tell us about the textiles.

Mr. Kelleher: We must also think of the consumers of the country too, and I am surprised that my hon. friend is not concerned about them.

[Translation]

MEASURES TO HELP LAID-OFF EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade. When he announced the removal of quotas, the Minister told us he had made plans to help the thousands of workers who were to be laid off. However, Mr. Hétu of the CSD told us this morning that enquiries to the department revealed that no new program has been created to help those men and women who will lose their jobs. Would the Minister tell the House what those special programs will be, when they will be available, and how much money has been earmarked for that purpose?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member is indulging in false premises. I never said that there would be thousands of workers losing their jobs. Indeed, the tribunal found that such would not be the case. However, in the event that there might be some minimal job loss, I quite carefully detailed at that time the available government programs which were set up by my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration, such as the Industrial and Labour Adjustment Program, the Skill Investment and Skill Shortages Program, and the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, 100,000 jobs have been lost in the United States, and now we are following Pied Piper Reagan down the same route. My question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He has had a chance, during his tenure, to travel to Japan, Korea, West Germany, Stockholm, Paris, Moscow, Washington, New Zealand and Australia. Could he tell the workers in my riding—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Just a question, please.

Ms. Copps: Could he tell the workers in my riding at Susan Shoes, many of whom are facing job loss, why he has not had a chance to visit a single shoe factory in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member recognizes that I have been out doing my job as Minister for International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: I thank her for that recognition. In addition, I want to advise her that I have, as have my officials, been meeting with representatives of the shoe industry. I have personnally met with them and the members of my Department have met with them on a number of occasions. Indeed, a further meeting has been set up next week with representatives of the shoe manufacturing industry.

RAILWAYS

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS THROUGH TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is aware that Toronto schools near railway tracks have now started chemical spill evacuation drills. Will he take steps to relocate, reroute, or possibly even ban trains carrying dangerous commodities through high density areas of Toronto, bearing in mind that a recent announcement indicated that such would be the case in Vancouver and Victoria starting at the beginning of next year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for his ongoing concern and interest in this very important matter. I would hope to establish a task force to look at the possibilities of relocating the rail system in the greater Toronto area. However, I should also advise him that I believe most of the recommendations emanating from the Grange report have indeed been implemented. We are currently looking at ways and means to handle the issue of tank cars carrying dangerous goods. The matter is one of ongoing concern on the part of the Department and my officials. We will continue to co-operate with the Hon. Member and his usual fine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

SALMONID ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Conservative election promise to fund a $200 million Salmonid Enhancement Program over five years. Would the Deputy Prime Minister admit to the House that he was the one who broke that promise, and that it was he who in fact shut down that program just prior to the appointment of the present Minister of Fisheries?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, there has been no breaking of a promise. In fact submissions to Cabinet are in preparation which will ensure that the Salmonid Enhancement Program continues to develop as envisaged and to bring the important economic and social benefits to British Columbia that both the Hon. Member and I recognize. Indeed, if there has been any misunderstanding on the question of whether or to what extent this program will be funded, it was merely because I stated a day or two ago that I thought it presumptuous to bring to Cabinet within the first two weeks of my responsibility a proposal to spend $200 million. That is all that has been said.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. For the benefit of this House and to understand how this Government works, will the Deputy Prime Minister admit that in days prior to the appointment of the present Minister he rejected the current proposal in the area of $200 million to fund the Salmonid Enhancement Program on the West Coast? Will he admit that to this House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, typical of the hon. gentleman, in his preamble he has so distorted the facts as to come close to going over the precipice of the lip of truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The fact of the matter is that he and most Members of the House know—certainly everyone in British Columbia knows—that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South has always had this program close to his heart. It is an initiative which I pursued as Acting Minister, and which the present Minister is now pursuing to the everlasting benefit of the country.

PRIVILEGE

DESIGNATION OF WOMEN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question of privilege. The archaic expression "honourable lady", which was twice used this afternoon by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), is I think offensive to most Members of this House who happen to be women. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if you would ensure that this practice is discontinued and that all Members use the non-sexist term "honourable members" to refer equally to all Members of this House.

An Hon. Member: What's the difference? You're not a lady anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Ms. Mitchell: That is exactly what we mean. That is exactly the point.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I take the point the Hon. Member has made. I am not sure that it is a question of privilege, but I take it as a strong representation. I am sure that all House Leaders here have heard the Hon. Member's point.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up the time of the House this afternoon. People in a number of ridings have signed the petition under Operation Justice. They petition the Government of Canada to withdraw the plans for the deindexation of the family allowance. These petitions have been signed by people in ridings as far away as British Columbia, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Cardigan in Prince Edward Island and Drummondville in the Province of Quebec. I wish to submit those petitions to the House and have them so noted, Mr. Speaker.

CHANGES AT CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a few petitions, the first in a series that will be presented to the House voicing the concerns of workers of the Moncton area, in particular the workers at the CN shops. The petitioners pray—we are all praying—and call upon Parliament to stop any moves to downgrade in any way the CN shops in Moncton which would mean a loss of jobs.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to this House a petition signed by a number of constituents in the federal constituency of Moncton and other ridings as well expressing their concern for the future employment at the CN shops in Moncton. Whereas the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to stop any move to downgrade in any way the CN shops in Moncton.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and duty to present to this House two sets of petitions. One set of petitions with 50 signatures, comes from the United Food & Commercial Workers Ontario Retail Council No. 30261.

I have another petition from the Newfoundland and Labrador Federation of Labour with some 56 signatures. Both these petitions call upon the federal Government to reverse its intended decision to change the Unemployment Insurance Act so that pension income will be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions, only two of many that continue to come to my office every day. In this case, they are from two neighbourhoods in my riding of Vancouver East, calling on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases which will be so hard on Canadian families.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of the communities of Ingersoll and Tillsonburg in Ontario. Those petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions. The first petition deals with the question of family allowances. It asks the Government to retreat from its intention to deindex the family allowance because of its negative impact on low and middle-income earners.

SALES TAX ON PET FOOD

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second petition deals with the sales tax on pet food. A number of individuals from the City of Winnipeg call upon the Government to rescind this tax as it affects blind individuals and their use of guide-dogs.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility to present a number of petitions, mostly from Victoria, B.C., concerning the Maritime Experimental Test Range at Nanoose Bay, B.C., pointing out that the naval policy of the United States is neither to confirm nor to deny the presence of nuclear weapons on board vessels using the said test range, and that it is unacceptable that the economic impact of the test range is not properly understood. They call for a full public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated with powers to investigate these concerns.

CANADIAN ARSENALS LIMITED DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-87, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Canadian Arsenals Limited and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-84

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

December 2, 1985—The Minister of Finance:

That, in relation to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 26, the notice of motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Minister of Finance is transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have here four Orders on which I have consulted with Opposition Leaders and the various critics. There has been an agreement that these Orders will be permitted to be introduced and passed without debate at the present time. The first one deals with the business we will be considering this afternoon. Therefore, I believe I will present that one first. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House considers the Orders of the Day on this day, the first item of business shall be the consideration of the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry in relation to the report made to the House pursuant to Section 62(5) of the Western Grain Transportation Act, pursuant to the provisions of Section 62(6) of the said Act;

Provided that:

(a) during the said consideration no Member shall speak more than once or for more than 20 minutes;

(b) for the purposes of this Order the provisions of Standing Order 19(4) shall be deemed to be in force;

(c) in the event that the proceedings pursuant to this Order expire prior to the daily hour of adjournment, subject to the provisions of Standing Order 19(4), this day, the House shall immediately thereafter proceed to the consideration of Government Orders until the said hour; and

(d) subject to the provisions of Standing Order 19(4), at the daily hour of adjournment, this day, proceedings pursuant to this Order shall expire.

Mr. Speaker: It would be easier for the Table Officers if we dealt with these motions one at a time. Does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) have the unanimous consent of the House necessary to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this motion deals with the intent of the Minister of Finance to make a statement under Statements by Ministers today. The Order is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, at 4.30 o'clock p.m., this day, the House shall revert to "Statements by Ministers" for the purpose of considering a statement by the Minister of Finance;

Provided that for the purposes of this Order, the provisions of Standing Order 19(4) shall be deemed to be in force; and

Provided that when proceedings in relation to this Order have been concluded, the House shall resume consideration of the business before it, when it reverted to "Statements by Ministers", until the hour of adjournment as provided pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 19(4).

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council have the unanimous consent of the House necessary to introduce the motion?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, unanimous consent. I would just like to clarify that in the unlikely event that each of the three principal speakers for the Parties have not concluded their initial remarks on the western grain transportation motion, the third speaker, whether it be the Minister or a member of my own Party, may be allowed to conclude before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) commences his financial statement.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Three times twenty equals sixty. If we get going, we will be able to get it done. However, I think that is quite fair.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, there being unanimous consent, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the following is another Order which reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, has been read a second time, it shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

This is as opposed, Sir, to referring the Bill to the legislative committee as is presently indicated in the second reading motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being unanimous consent, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the final Order is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the House reaches the hour of adjournment on this day, it shall not adjourn but small immediately proceed to the consideration of a motion to be moved by a Minister of the Crown, as follows:

"That this House take note of the matter of reform of the House of Commons".

Provided that during consideration of any such motion, no Member shall speak more than once and, except for the first speaker for each Party who may speak for 20 minutes, no Member may speak for more than 10 minutes and, that when the speaker is satisfied that the debate has concluded on the said motion, but in any case not later than at 12 o'clock p.m. midnight, this day, the proceedings in relation thereto shall expire and the speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Mr. Speaker: Does the President of the Privy Council have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask for a point of clarification. Will questions to the speakers be allowed after they have made their speeches?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The arrangement that has been entered into is to allow as many Members as possible to participate in this special debate so that as many Members as possible can give the benefit of their views with respect to reform of the House for consideration by the Government. I believe this is an acceptable way to operate so that we can maximize the participation.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that it would be possible for further conversations to take place during the day. However, I think the President of the Privy Council wishes this motion to be adopted now. Therefore, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WELLAND CANAL

Question No. 476—Mr. Angus:

3. For the same years, did the authority conduct or caused to be conducted an examination of aggregate stability of the walls of Lock 7 and, if so (a) in what years (b) what were the specific locations sampled (c) what depths were sampled (d) what were the results of the tests on the samples?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows:

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has been advised by its solicitors not to discuss these matters publicly as they may be reviewed by the courts in suits with which the authority has been threatened.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, again I am forced to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why the Government does not reply to my questions, some of which have been on the Order Paper for in excess of six months. They are very simple questions like questions about the cost of redecorating cabinet Ministers' offices, the cost of the gala in Quebec City, and the cost of other Government extravaganzas like that.

Further, I would like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, my Questions Nos. 450, 451, 452 and 453 which were supposed to be answered in the House on November 5 when the House was advised by the Parliamentary Secretary that a reply would be forthcoming that day. At the last minute, the Government changed its mind because of a technicality and asked me to reword my questions, promising to answer them the next day. That was on November 5. The Government still refuses to answer questions about the trips taken by the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). I recognize that it is a terrible embarrassment to the Government but the House needs and has a right to know about that kind of nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the House will know that the Government is far ahead of the last Government in answering questions. I am sure that the Hon. Member did not do this intentionally, but to correct him let me say that the questions were in fact ruled out of order by the Table Officers. The Clerk at the Table noticed that the ruling the Speaker applied under Citation 359(6) regarding Oral Questions should be applied to those questions, and so that is what happened. The Hon. Member has resubmitted his questions and we are doing the best we can to answer them.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I too must rise. We have every confidence in the abilities of the new Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), but I have on the Order Paper Questions Nos. 372, 373 and 374 which pertain to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). They have been on the Order Paper for six months and the questions refer to the First Minister's Conference and the appointments and the policies of the Government. It is factual information that I am seeking on behalf of a national constituency. I would like to hear from the Parliamentary Secretary whether or not these questions have been brought to the attention of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and when the constituency through this Member can obtain some satisfactory answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I hear scattered applause. I will certainly take those numbers up with the Department and get back to the Hon. Member.

• (1520)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question which has been on the Order Paper for more than one year.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Ms. Copps: It was placed on the Order Paper almost as soon as the mandate of this Government began. I am sure the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will not want to blame that on the previous Government, as he tries to blame every other error, folly and chaos committed by his Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary specifically why he and his Government have refused to table documents relating to the Economic Statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last November 8 in the House of Commons. At the very least, if the Government is not prepared to table the documents related to the Economic Statement, will it give us a reason for not being prepared to table these documents?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, blaming the Department would be tantamount to blaming the Hon. Member for the Liberals' failure to win in the Province of Ontario for 42 years. I notice that when she left they won. So there is no relevancy in that respect. If the Hon. Member will be as kind as her colleague and give me the question number, I will seek out the answer.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, on March 15, 1985, I placed Question No. 296 on the Order Paper. This question refers to the Premier Hatfield marijuana case in the Province of New Brunswick and the involvement of the former Solicitor General in that particular case.

I have risen on a number of occasions requesting the Government to answer this particular question. The Government continues to say that the question will be answered soon. It would appear that the Government does not intend to answer my question. It appears that the Government is stonewalling and that the answer to the question will cause considerable embarrassment. Therefore, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why his Government is refusing to answer a question which was put on the Order Paper over nine months ago. Can he explain to the House the reason and whether or not he intends to answer this question?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Government has definitely not refused to answer the question—

An Hon. Member: Of course it has.

Mr. Lewis: —we have just not answered it. I assure the Hon. Member that his question will be answered soon.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Parliamentary Secretary if it would be possible, as was previously the custom, to have published, possibly in a Wednesday edition of Hansard, a list of first and second Acting Ministers.

Ms. Copps: They are all acting.

Mr. Nickerson: Also, would it be possible to have a list showing the membership of various cabinet committees?

Mr. Lewis: We will take that under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if I may have an answer to a question which I placed on the Order Paper six years ago. I did not get the Liberals to answer it. Would it be possible to receive an answer?

Mr. Lewis: That question will go to the head of the list.

Ms. Copps: They die with Parliament. I'm surprised you old-timers don't know that.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STATUTORY ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

COMMITTEE REPORT ON CROW BENEFIT PAYMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) moved:

That this House take note of the Report of the Committee of Inquiry on Crow Benefit Payment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, if I had thought some two years ago that I would be initiating a further discussion in Parliament with respect to the Western Grain Transportation Act, I probably would have shrieked in horror. Having spent several months of delightful time in the House—

Mr. Benjamin: It was your Bill.

Mr. Axworthy: —putting the Bill through, and having had to entertain the delightful questions of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) and a host of Conservative Members, one might have thought we had left that interesting piece of legislation behind us. However, I want to say, once again, that this shows the incredible foresight of the legislation. We built into the Act a requirement, an opportunity, for Members of Parliament on the moving of a motion to use a parliamentary day to examine the progress of the Act, and, in particular, to look at some of the outstanding issues which still give rise to debate and which are still of interest to members of the western Canadian farming community, as well as those in other parts of Canada.

I think it should be pointed out that it was our caucus which initiated this debate. It was our caucus which organized the gathering of sufficient signatures to ensure that Parliament would have an opportunity to bring this review, this re-examination, if you will, forward. We did this because we feel that it is one of the most important and significant pieces of legislation which we passed during our time in office. We feel that it has established the groundwork, the framework, for the major development and new direction in constructing modern transportation facilities for the movement of our major commodities.

Since the present Parliament is very much seized day by day with questions of international trade, I wish to remind Hon. Members that in western Canada we do not trade internationally if we do not have an effective transportation system. If we cannot move our grain, our potash, our cattle, our coal or our lumber to market then we do not trade. The question which faced our Government at the time was: How can we provide the insurance in order that we can have the most up-to-date, modern and effective transportation system so that there will never again be questions about disruptions, stalemates or any form of dislocation of the transportation system when it comes to convincing foreign customers that we can deliver on time?

It is worth noting that the type of commitments which were made during that period of time are now being fulfilled. In looking at the statistics which are at least made available to us publicly, one sees that they point out that the two railroad companies will be spending close to $1.3 billion, or perhaps even $1.4 billion, between them on the modernization of the rail system. In terms of my best estimate, that will create close to 4,000 jobs—

An Hon. Member: No way.

Mr. Axworthy: Those are the figures. There are a large number of construction projects taking place across western Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Ten thousand were laid off.

Mr. Axworthy: There are a number of new purchases being made from suppliers throughout Canada as a result of this commitment. Traffic is down, and the Hon. Member for Regina West should know enough about the railway business to know that when we go down from the shipping of 30 million tons to 23 million tons, due to weather and lack of cargo, it obviously takes fewer people to do it. I presume that is within the grasp of his knowledge.

The fact of the matter is that in terms of the basic objective, which was to unleash the type of capital expenditures which would bring the railway system into a modern, contemporary format, it is being fulfilled. It is providing a lead in terms of establishing a number of new transportation technologies as well. We would like to hear from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) with respect to whether or not it is being fulfilled and whether or not the types of powers which are within the Act to provide for enforcement of those requirements are being applied.

From the ostensible public evidence which we have been able to gather—and I refer to two reports published in 1985—the Canadian Pacific Railway will be spending something in the order of $600 million, as well as going ahead with its commitment on the Rogers Pass. According to the figures we have, the CNR will be spending $600 million this year in capital expenditures and it will be making purchases of more than $400 million. The jobs created will be something in the order of 2,000 in construction and 2,500 for suppliers. We are speaking in terms of 4,000 or 5,000 additional jobs being created by these major expenditures.

Because I can recall quite vividly the derision with which certain members of the Conservative Party treated the other side of our western grain proposal with respect to the encouragement of new investment on the part of western businesses through the Western Industrial Development Fund as a way of diversifying the western economy, I would like to remind the House that these Members said that it would never work. They said that it would be nothing but a wasteful spending of money. I read with a great deal of bemusement, interest and, of course, happiness, the glowing public relations statements and releases put out by the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and various Ministers from the western provinces announcing how, under their generous program called the Western Industrial Development Fund, they are now giving grants to groups of Hutterites to start pork-producing plants and money to this factory or that group of farm organizations. In other words, all of a sudden the Government has found out that that program has produced a very helpful and useful set of incentives to provide assistance to western businesses, farm organizations and farmers so they can begin to develop capital value and added value processing of agricultural products. I have some of the press releases and I will not take the time of the House to read them. For the life of me I do not see what it has to do with agriculture, but that Department is now administering that fund, and that is its business.

I know there is a great fondness among Hon. Members opposite to claim, of course, that everything the Grits did was terrible, but if that was the case, why do they take such delight and satisfaction in utilizing those kinds of programs which we had the foresight to put in place to help western farm organizations? I think it only worth noting—because I am sure we will hear from those Hon. Members in the course of debate about what a terrible thing this was—and I want to make sure we have it on the record, that the Government is sure taking full advantage of all of the expenditures and programs initiated by the Liberal Government.

I was quite amused the other day when we heard the Minister for the Canadian Wheat Board speak in the House. The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette stood in his place and bragged about all the assistance which was going to western farmers. But what did he point to? He pointed to the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Western Crop Insurance Program and the Western Stabilization Program. These were all programs which had been introduced and passed by the previous Liberal administration. That was his record of assistance and it was all being delivered under legislation and allocations of money which had been brought forward by previous Governments. I do not mind his bragging. However, he was not quite charitable enough to mention that those programs had nothing to do with his Government, that those were all previous initiatives and pieces of legislation. But I suppose we can forgive the Minister for the Canadian Wheat Board for having certain lapses of memory from time to time. I believe it is useful to have this kind of debate so that we can at least set the record straight. We can say that, because of the foundation which was laid by the previous Government, the construction and development of a new system is in place.

This debate is far more important, however, than taking note of what has happened. I feel it is also time that the Conservatives in this House stood up and be counted. The time has finally come for Hon. Members of Parliament from Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia to get their act together. I went back with some degree of historical interest to read the debates which took place in this House. During those debates there were at least 14 or 15 different positions taken. I give some credit to Hon. Members opposite, they were very skillful in never making a decision as to where they stood on crucial questions such as methods of payment.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where did you stand?

Mr. Axworthy: We brought in the legislation. It is already in the Bill. The Minister of Transport should read the legislation. He knows where we stood. We put it in the legislation and there it is.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is the debate all about, then?

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister of Transport is, once again wallowing in his own self humour.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not wallowing as much as you are.

Mr. Axworthy: I simply point out that when the present Minister of Transport addressed the Western Grain Transportation Act, he had no less than 14 changes he wanted to have made. But when he became Minister of Transport, he made only two of them. It seems to me that somewhere between the fall of 1983 and the fall of 1984, 12 crucial changes and amendments to the Act were once again somehow forgotten. I look forward with great interest to see what the Minister of Transport and his colleagues will decide. They have a number of very important decisions to make. The reason we built a review into the legislation was to ensure that a piece of important public policy such as the Western Grain Transportation Act could come back to Parliament to be properly debated and examined by all Hon. Members of this House. We are now seeing that our legacy to the new Government is that it will now have an opportunity to come clean and to tell us where it stands on this. I could not be more delighted, Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Members of the Government finally have the opportunity to show us what they really believe.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you take up acting?

Mr. Shields: Even he can't help smiling.

Mr. Axworthy: We had at least five or six months of debate in this House, but we could never find that out. Those Hon. Members were behind the curtains, behind the chairs, changing positions. From day to day it was a new story, a new theory, a new position. One of the responsibilities of Government is having to make choices, having to make tough decisions at times. That is something we know has not been practised to any great extent to this point in Conservative history when it comes to transportation systems in western Canada. The Conservatives have almost left everything we did functioning and I say "almost" because many of those things they are covertly and subvertly changing.

Mr. Mazankowski: Make up your mind.

Mr. Axworthy: But the onus is now on the Government to decide what it is going to do. It is trying to prolong that day of decision. Once it had the Hall Commission Report, it formed another committee, the Horner Committee, to go back and study it all over again.

Mr. Mazankowski: Look at the legislation.

Mr. Axworthy: The Government is simply back once again trying to delay the day of judgment. It is trying to ensure that somehow or other mañana will apply, that the Armageddon will not come. In the meantime, some very serious problems have occurred. While the Minister of Transport was whittling his time away, the Government of Alberta was bringing in a major top-up subsidy for its livestock producers in order to provide compensation, and that has created a very major distortion for livestock producers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. That is a program which is creating very serious dislocations for the livestock producers. It is subverting what I believe those who are concerned about agriculture would try to achieve, and that is, to establish some basic national standard in these programs so that the benefits in the agricultural field do not just go to the wealthy provinces which have full treasuries and can afford additional top-up subsidies. That is what the Minister of Transport is allowing to happen at the present time. The Alberta program is creating a serious disparity in the livestock markets in western Canada. No one has seen any form of action, response or indication of how this Government intends to deal with that major change and dislocation in the livestock market.

Yet the answers are at hand, Mr. Speaker. The Minister could make changes at any time. He does not have to slough it off to another committee. He does not have to wait, as he said, and extend and prolong the period in which the reviews will take place and new legislation will be passed. He knows that there is a very serious problem. It is the kind of problem we saw two weeks ago when the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), I and other Hon. Members spent two weeks of our time in western Canada talking to farmers about the agricultural crisis. We spent two weeks travelling to every small community throughout the prairie Provinces and British Columbia. We discovered that those farmers see a number of serious transportation problems which are not being addressed.

In addition to the livestock problems produced by the Alberta subsidy program, there are major problems now being faced on the branch line rehabilitation program. The senior officials of the Saskatchewan pools are saying that the indecision of the Government of Canada on the branch lines is causing major uncertainty and, therefore, forestalling major investments by the pools in new facilities. I want to remind Hon. Members of this House that while we were still in Government, we established a totally and complete rehabilitation program for all branch lines which were in the system. We had signed agreements with the railroads, the money had been allocated, and every branch line had a formula applied to it by which it would be upgraded. The new Minister came along and said: "We are going to freeze that program". The Government froze it all right and has since added a number of new lines to the system. But what has not happened is the rehabilitation. Members of the largest Wheat Growers Association in Western Canada are saying that the future of the branch lines is uncertain and unsure and that this is causing a major detraction. In other words, the Government, through its inaction on the branch line program, is in fact causing a reduction of economic growth and a reduction of jobs because it is creating a level of uncertainty for capital investment programs by the wheat pool. After the Government said it was dedicated to economic renewal and made all those bright promises and major commitments, why is nothing happening? What is the reason for the inaction in this area?

Let us look at the commitments made with regard to the ports of Canada which we use to provide an effective system for moving our grain. It is now December 4. The last statement we had from the Minister's office indicated that the issue of the Port of Churchill would be totally resolved by the end of November. That was only one among many, many statements made during the past year saying that the Government would come to grips with the Port of Churchill. There was a firm agreement signed and commitments have been made for major up-grading of that port. To this date only one of a number of measures have been implemented, that is, the commitment to build a tug. The Canadian Ports Corporation has not yet allocated a single cent of capital for the refurbishing of the elevator system or the dredging of the port. That is the key to the up-grading of the Churchill system.

It has been over a year ago, as I recall, when the new Government was elected, that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and said that the Government was firmly committed to the Churchill agreement. One year later there has been no work done. The Minister's deadline has once again passed. Perhaps he will use this debate to answer for that because there are a lot of people waiting. A number of other capital investments and initiatives are depending upon those proposals.

Look at the confusion which exists. A couple of weeks ago the Commissioner for the Wheat Board said that a new formula must be applied to the payment of transportation costs and that the equation was going to be switched from Thunder Bay to the lower ports in the St. Lawrence. It was immediately pointed out that that would cost the farmers of Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan almost double what they are paying now. The Commissioner of the Wheat Board very explicitly said that he had made that proposal with the understanding and agreement of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. A few days later the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board said that he had changed his mind again and that he would reconsider it.

Once again we are faced with an act of indecision and the inability to come to grips with a key issue. That, Mr. Speaker, is what this debate is all about. It is now the responsibility of the Government to make its decision. The legislation is there and the Government will have to tell us today whether it is prepared to continue with it under the present formula and accept the method of payment which is in the legislation, or whether it is considering a change. Is the Government prepared to say that the proposals in the Hall Commission are worth considering and that it is carefully considering the application of an alternative method of payment? That is all we want to hear from the Minister.

Actually, we would like to hear a few other things. We would like to know why the other opportunities which existed in the transportation system that were given some momentum and direction have been allowed to lie fallow and in limbo. Those responsible have simply thrown up their hands and said: "Gee, we don't know. Who is responsible for that?" That is the question that must be answered by the Government in this debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell us about the method of payment.

Mr. Mazankowski: He forgot what the debate was all about.

Mr. Benjamin: He hasn't gotten to that yet.

Mr. Axworthy: I want to thank the Member for Regina West for considering that it is still my responsibility to make that commitment. I suggest to him that he throw off old habits and realize that the decision-maker is across from him rather than beside him and that the decisions on this issue must be made by the Government.

Mr. Benjamin: I just want to know where you stand.

Mr. Axworthy: I suggest that the Hon. Member read the legislation. However, we want to know what the Government is going to propose. We want to know where the present Government is going.

Mr. Mazankowski: What a joke!

Mr. Axworthy: Isn't this interesting, Mr. Speaker? Of course, the joke is across from me.

Mr. Mazankowski: Go to Hollywood.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister is really saying that the Government is not prepared to make a decision, and that is going to be the ultimate joke of all time. At some point the Government is going to have to deliver the goods, because we are saying that it is now on notice. We want to know what the Government is going to propose, what kind of recommendation it is prepared to make, and what direction it is going to take with the Western Grain Transportation Act in order to show western farmers that it is prepared to act like a Government, which has not been shown up to this time.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in my opening comments in this debate I must say that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is not only caught in his own legislative backwash but is literally wallowing in it. Quite frankly, we are dealing with a product of his own legislation which, unfortunately, was not able to be dealt with in the thorough manner in which it should have been because of the invocation of closure at about Clause 33.

We find it rather strange that the bulk of his remarks this afternoon was not about the issue at hand, the method of payment. He talked about Churchill, about railway investment, about the Canadian Wheat Board, and the plight of the western prairie farmer. It was the most convoluted and distorted contribution that I have ever heard from this Member in the House of Commons. He is pretty good on his feet, but he certainly missed the point completely today.

He says that the legislation had "incredible foresight". I want to put the debate into perspective. I think there is a fair amount of confusion as to why this debate is going on at this particular time. It is important to put the debate into its proper perspective. There is confusion in the agricultural community as to the formation of the Hall Commission to make an inquiry into the method of payment and with regard to the legislative requirement to conduct the review. It is obvious that the confusion exists not only in the farm circles, but in the mind of the Member who was the architect of this debate and of this legislation. We must go back to basics and talk about that which has triggered this debate.

The Western Grain Transportation Act is an Act to facilitate the transportation, shipping and handling of western grain and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. In Section 62 there is a requirement for a review. Section 62.(1) reads:

The Minister shall—

It does not say "may" but "shall". It continues:

—during the 1985-86 crop year, in consultation with such system participants and other persons as the Minister deems appropriate, carry out a comprehensive review of the operation of this Act and its effects on the transportation, shipping and handling of grain, including an evaluation of—

This is not willy-nilly. This is a statutory requirement. It continues:

(a) the appropriateness of the provisions of this Act respecting the apportionment of cost increases between the Government of Canada and the shippers of grain in respect of the period beyond the 1985-86 crop year, having regard to trends in the incomes of the producers, the relationship between transportation costs borne by the producers and the price of grain and the economic position of the producers relative to other major sectors of the national economy and to any other factors that the Minister considers relevant;

We now come to the pertinent paragraph which reads:

(b) recommendations referred to in subsection (5);

Subsection (5) refers to the Hall Commission report. Subsection (2) says:

The Governor in Council shall, on or before April 1, 1984, appoint a committee consisting of not less than three and not more than five persons who have expertise in matters affected by this Act and represent various regional interests.

Subsection (3) reads:

The committee shall examine all matters that, in its opinion, pertain to the method of payment in respect to grain transportation that would be the most conducive to agricultural development in Canada.

● (1550)

Section 62(4) goes on to outline the powers of the commission under Part I of the Inquiries Act.

We come to Section 62(5) which states:

The committee shall, on or before March 31, 1985, make a report to the Minister containing its recommendations pertaining to the method referred to in subsection (3) and the Minister shall cause a copy of the report to be laid before Parliament on any of the first 15 days that either House of Parliament sits after the report has been made to the Minister.

Section 62(6) provides the opportunity to trigger the debate on the recommendations of the Hall Report. However, here we have a situation where the Hon. Member has triggered a debate on the Hall Report while the mandatory review process is going on. There are many deficiencies in this piece of legislation and the Hon. Member has referred to them. This is clearly one of those deficiencies.

The Government, in its haste to pass the Bill, has drawn Parliament into this very difficult web. The slammer was laid on us on November 3, 1983. There were some 75 clauses in the Bill. During the report stage Parliament did not have a chance to consider Clause 33. So everything beyond Clause 33 was not debated by this Parliament.

I should also say for the benefit of the House that the Government moved closure after two days of debate at second reading and moved the Bill to committee. It was in a serious haste to ram the Bill through at all cost, without due consideration. Essentially, we are caught up in a process created by the legislative edict that was not clearly thought out. I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member would tread into this kind of debate given the fact that it is complicated by his own legislative measure. I must say that it really is a bit of a joke. The joke is on the Member who claims credit for this piece of legislation. He is also taking credit for triggering the debate.

The elements of the debate are enshrined in Section 62. That brings us to where we are today. Section 62(6) states:

Where, within sixty sitting days after a report has been laid before a House of Parliament under subsection (5), fifteen Senators or thirty Members of the House of Commons, as the case may be, by notice in writing addressed to the Speaker, request that the report be debated, the Speaker shall, as soon as possible thereafter, assign a sitting day of the House that is not later than sixty sitting days after the request is made, for the report to be debated and on the assigned day the subject-matter of the report shall be subject to debate without interruption . . .

That brings us to where we are today. It is quite obvious that the Hon. Member must feel very uncomfortable about it because he touched on the recommendations of the Hall Report in a very superficial way. I do not know whether he has read the report, but he did not even as much as tell the House what the major recommendations of the Hall Report were. I thought he would have done that.

Mr. Axworthy: We can read them.

Mr. Mazankowski: For the benefit of the viewing public I thought it might be worth his while.

We have a report before us that recommends that the Crow benefit be paid to the producers in the form of a grain transportation refund, based on net grain sales. I believe the Hon. Member knows that some people in the agricultural community agree with it and others do not.

Members of the Hall Commission went out across the country to debate and obtain further views on their report. I had a discussion with them the other day. There are some major concerns about this proposal and some major concerns have been expressed about the workings of the legislation. Of course, this is compounded by the review process which is also currently taking place under the provisions of Section 62(1), which must consider, among other things, the recommendations of the Hall Report. That is a statutory requirement. It must consider the advisability of inadvisability, and whether these particular recommendations will work. It must consider what effect it will have on grain producers, what effect it will have to the value added, what effect it will have on agriculture across the country. It must consider Quebec's views and Ontario's views. That process is taking place now. How can we realistically engage in an enlightened debate when that review process is taking place and we are caught up in the mandatory legislative review process? The answer is that we cannot.

It is so typical of the Liberal half-baked scheme. It is due to this sort of half-baked philosophy that the Liberals are not in office today. The people of Canada became sick and tired of it. That is why they were kicked out of office. The Liberals are trying to recover some political losses through a political manoeuvre here today.

The ongoing review which I am talking about must be carried out. It is not discretionary but clearly mandatory as enshrined in the Bill. It must be carried out in the crop year 1985-1986.

The Hon. Member says that I am dragging out that process. I detect some negativism about the review by the Grain Transportation Administrator, and it is rather strange because we have engaged an appointee of the Hon. Member's Government to do the job. In any event, we have asked that the report be forthcoming as quickly as possible, hopefully in February or March and surely before the end of the crop year.

On August 2 we requested the Grain Transportation Administrator to conduct this review. The terms of reference include the provisions outlined in Section 62 of the Act. It includes the method of payment. It was stated in a letter transmitted to Mr. Horner that: "Section 62(1)(b) requires that the review re-evaluate the recommendations of the Hall Commission of Inquiry into the method of payment of the Crow benefit". The letter goes on to state: "As you are aware, the Hall Committee established by my predecessor in 1984 submited its report to me in April and has recommended a pay the producer option". I asked that, in the context of the review of the WGTA and the possible future amendments, he evaluate its recommendations, guided by the need for the development of payment that is conducive to agricultural development across Canada. A number of additional items were included which emanated from various producers and producer groups about the deficiencies in the provisions of this piece of legislation.

Therefore, consistent with the legislation, we are not only exercising the mandatory authority, but some discretionary authority as well. A very important fact that the review Committee is discovering is that this is the first time that a review is being conducted in a public way. Invitations are sent out to individual producers. We are not dealing only with producer organizations and we are not dealing behind closed doors.

As a matter of fact, in the letter of reference, I indicated: "I want to advise you that I attach significant importance to providing adequate opportunity for public meetings and hearings, as well as informal discussions". Many farmers are surprised by this because they were shut out of the process during the Gilson and Hall committees. They said that it is the first time that they, as individual producers, have been able to come forth in the public way and talk to anyone about this legislation which has a very major bearing on their economic welfare.

Quite clearly they were left out of this process. The Hon. Member for Regina West is aware of the difficulty we had in extending the committee hearings to allow producers to come forth. The Government even put time limits on the committee hearings. Therefore, we are doing some of the dirty work that should have been done by that administration when it was taking the Bill through its stages.

Quite frankly, I believe that this process is not only needed but is very healthy because neither Gilson nor Hall provided this opportunity to allow individual producers to express their concerns and feelings about what this legislation should be doing.

Ten meetings have been held: two in Manitoba, four in Saskatchewan, three in Alberta and one in the Peace River bloc. Three public meetings have been held in each of the prairie provinces at Winnipeg, Calgary, Regina and Saskatoon. In British Columbia, there were private meetings with 11 organizations, including the Government of British Columbia, longshoremen, the Grain Workers Union, the Port of Vancouver, terminal operators, the Chamber of Shipping and B.C. Rail.

● (1600)

In Alberta, there were two public meetings, at which the Government of Alberta, the Alberta Wheat Pool and Unifarm appeared. Unifarm is one of the major farm organizations in Alberta. It held 46 meetings throughout Alberta to talk about the workability of this particular piece of legislation, and it reported to the ongoing review process. Also the NFU appeared. It was the first time that the NFU ever appeared before a body which was talking about the Western Grain Transportation Act. Also the Christian Farmers Federation, the Alberta Cattle Feeders Association, the Alberta Feed Grain Users Association, the Western Barley Growers Association, the Alberta Soft Wheat Growers Association, the Alberta Cattle Commission and the Alberta Grain Commission appeared.

The following appeared before the Manitoba public meeting: the Government of Manitoba, the CNR, Manitoba Pool Elevators, Manitoba Cattle Feeders Association, Dominion Malt, Canada Malt and the UGG.

They not only confined their meetings to western Canada. They held meetings on November 28 and November 29 in Toronto and have set a meeting for December 11 in Montreal. They are getting some excellent feedback from the grass roots as to what is wrong with the legislation and what needs to be done. There are many inequities and many anomalies. The Hon. Member outlined a number of the issues to which we took exception in 1983. We corrected some, and we will correct more. However, we dealt with a volume cap, with improved producer representation, with a freight rate ceiling and with the inclusion of B.C. Rail. All those things were not done when the former Government was in power. We are making progress. There is no question about that.

It is fair to say that more needs to be done. There still are anomalies. As I said, at the present time there is no clear consensus with respect to the method of payment. There is no clear consensus in western Canada. Certainly there is no clear consensus across the country.

The following organizations support payments to railways: Manitoba Pool Elevators, Alberta Wheat Pool, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. Coop Fédérée, L'Union des Producteurs Agricoles, Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, Canadian Dehydrators Association and the National Farmers Union.

The following organizations support the grain transportation refund: United Grain Growers, Alberta Grain Commission, Alberta Grain Commission, Alberta Cattle Commission, The Grain Rate Reform Committee, Manitoba Farm Business Association, Government of British Columbia, agricultural industry groups in British Columbia, the Government of Alberta, the Government of Ontario, various Ontario industry groups and the Maritime Farmers Council. A number of organizations clearly support the producer option, whatever it might be. It has not been clearly defined, but there is no question that more needs to be done. There is discrimination in the way in which the Act is working now.

For example, to move grain into Vancouver for export, it costs producers $5.75 per tonne to ship it. However, if that same grain is going into the interior of British Columbia for the purpose of feeding livestock it costs $32.79 per tonne. That is a clear inequity and anomaly if we want to improve our ability to value add and to process more of those products in Canada.

There is concern about the level of the safety net, about inflation, about variable rates, about what improvements must be made to improve the system, and whether we should rationalize and consolidate more. We must control costs.

We are looking at a number of pilot projects in which we can experiment and innovate with regard to branch line operations, those branch lines destined for abandonment. Shortly we will be announcing a number of pilot projects such as off-line trucking, straight trucking, short-line railway options and road-rail option.

I am pleased to note that those people who are knowledgeable and part of the grain handling, producing and transporting industry recognize that we must take steps to improve the efficiency of the system and to bring down the over-all cost. Mr. Ted Turner was quoted in the November 21 edition of the Western Producer. When speaking to his delegate body, he said:

> The many economic forces bearing on our present structure simply dictate that further consolidation is necessary if we are to maintain an economically viable operation and keep charges at reasonable levels.

Wally Madill, Chief Excecutive Officer of the Alberta Wheat Pool, is credited with stating the following to that delegate body on November 16:

> It will be necessary for it to offer leaner and more variable services to its roughly 60,000 members to survive in the more competitive industry.

Of course he was referring to the Alberta Wheat Pool. I could not agree with those people more. The long-term future of the industry will depend upon a reliable and efficient grain handling and transportation operation. Of course, many people wonder whether the payment to railways option is the best way to go in terms of improving that efficiency.

Mr. Benjamin: What do you think? Which way are you going?

Mr. Mazankowski: I hear the Hon. Member. I know what we can do. We will serve the best interest of producers, the best interest of Canada and provide the most effective and reliable transportation system. This is something which I will support right down the wire.

Many improvements have to be made. We are looking at them. The review process is ongoing. I assure all Hon. Members, contrary to what was said by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, that the Government is taking action and will continue to take action. We will have a darn good grain handling and transportation system at the end of this four-year period, one of which even the Hon. Member will be proud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. It provides me with an opportunity to illustrate and to repeat again the traitorous behaviour and the betrayal of grain producers in western Canada which started under a Minister of Transport in a Liberal Government in 1975 and was continued by two of his successors, including the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Today the House is debating this piece of legislation. Hopefully motions and amendments will be moved and we will have a vote on the review of the Western Grain Transportation Act. In fact, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry had an opportunity to move a motion which stated his position and the position of his Party. However, he moved that the House should take note of the report.

Mr. Axworthy: What did your Party do?

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) did the same thing. However, the ball was not in his court; he did not have to move anything. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry could have and should have moved—

Mr. Axworthy: What is wrong with your caucus?

Mr. Benjamin: I will be moving an amendment in a few minutes. He could have and should have moved a motion concerning the report, which is the object of this debate. The number one recommendation in the report was that the $658.6 million of Government contributions under the safety net provisions of the Western Grain Transportation Act should be paid directly to producers in the Canadian Wheat Board designated area. However, the legislation seen through Parliament by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry indicates that the payments should go to the railroads. I would have thought that he would have moved a motion today indicating that the legislation which he brought before Parliament would continue to say that the payments should go to the railroads. That is not what he did. He, as was the case with the Minister of Transport, talked about everything else but the method of payment and what was in the report which is under debate. Mr. Speaker, if you are going to be something, be something, and if you are something, say so. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry is running away from deeds of his own doing. I cannot say a heck of a lot more for the Progressive Conservative Party. It was all for keeping the Crow rate. My goodness, they were so good about keeping the Crow rate in 1982, 1983 and even in 1984 until the election was over. They were for keeping the Crow, restoring the Crow, freezing the Crow, et cetera, ad nauseam. Both these outfits are like the girls at Jarvis and Queen. They work both sides of the street.

• (1610)

The issue is the Hall Report and the method of payment. There is a Hall number one and a Hall number two. He really is in second place. Hall number one states and I quote:

> If once tampering with the statutory rate is accepted or condoned or as an item on the bargaining table, all will be lost. For once the subject is on the bargaining table, it will be only a matter of time until it is lost step by step. There is no position to take except to adhere through thick and thin that the Crow Rate is not bargainable.

That is Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who can hardly be called a raving socialist. We have agreed with that from day one. We stick to it to this day and will do so for many more days to come.

If there is any change in the method of payment to the producers instead of the railroads, the complete undoing in transportation costs to western grain producers will have been accomplished. I listened to the spokesman for the Liberal Party today. About the only major thing on which we agreed with him in the legislation in 1983 was the method of payment. The Hon. Member knows that we supported him on that. It was about the only major item. He had an opportunity today to say so and he had an opportunity to move a motion to that effect. However, he failed to do so. Me thinks he is chickening out.

Let us take a look at the pros and cons of the method of payment. I want to say something for the benefit of my livestock producing friends in Alberta. Because of all the difficulties they are having with regard to the price of their product, they continue to take it out on their neighbours, the grain producers. There is something about those who would beggar thy neighbour. The difficulty of the livestock producers does not lie with the grain producers. It never did lie with the Crow rate. However, it did lie with a lot of liars who were trying to blame somebody else for their own difficulties.

Cheap grain means cheap livestock. When you have cheap grain, you have more livestock producers. Livestock prices then go down even more. One would think that the Cattlemen's Association and the Alberta Livestock Commission would learn a little from history. Every time our grain producers have been in trouble and increased their livestock production, livestock prices fell. They were all in trouble together. It has happened repeatedly. I am sick and tired of those who say: "Leave us the free and open market. Leave us to the market-place and market forces".

As soon as they are in trouble, as soon as market forces kick them in the head and the so-called free enterprise system lets them down, who is first to Ottawa looking for a hand-out? I remember the feedlot operators and the Cattlemen's Association coming here in 1969 and 1970. Who were the first with their hands out? They were the ones who wanted the free and open market. As soon as they got it in spades, who was the first to ask Parliament to bail them out?

The Crow rate was a part of the bargain for western Canada. It has little if anything to do with the price of hogs or cattle. It never has. It had to do with a bargain between the people of Canada and the railroads of Canada. It had to do with Canada and Canadian grain producers being able to export their grain and provide for their own needs. It took into account our geography and costs of transportation so that we could compete in export markets without transportation being a handicap and so that we could provide each other anywhere in this country with grain requirements, whether for human beings or animals, at a reasonable cost. The very essence of the statutory grain rates was to try to treat one another reasonably well and equitably, no matter whether you are a farmer or a livestock producer anywhere in Canada. Paying the producer instead of the railroads the $658 million means lower feed grain prices for our grain producers in western Canada. That might be nice in the minds of those on the Alberta Livestock Commission. However, it is not nice in the minds of the grain producers of the three prairie provinces. It might be nice for some big wheel ranchers in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan, but they are not that many in number.

What we have here in support of payment to the railroads and not the producers are the overwhelming majority of the grain producers in western Canada. The Minister of Transport recognizes that. It is not only the three prairie pools, but the Government of Manitoba, the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, and the cow-calf operators in Saskatchewan. Something in the area of 80 per cent or more of the grain producers have decided and have said repeatedly how they want these payments to be made. Instead, we get a whole bunch of other outfits.

There is the Government of British Columbia, the coal association, the mining association, B.C. Forest Products and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. There is a list as long as your arm. They demanded an end to the Crow rate and not a damn one of of them grows a bushel of wheat. They were great with their advice about what should be done to the other guy. The overwhelming amount of evidence in support for retaining the Crow rate and maintaining the payments to the railroads so that we would have some control over the operations and efficiency of the railways is endorsed in overwhelming numbers by those who produce the product, the grain producers of the three prairie provinces.

I appreciate that the Minister of Transport will be reluctant today to say whether he supports continuing the payments to the railroads or charging it to the farmers. I understand that. There is a terrible inequity in the price per tonne of export grain and feed grain in British Columbia. However, the Minister has the tools to cure that. There is no use getting up here and crying about it. I know that his problem is money. He needs the support of all his back-bench colleagues when dealing with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We will back him up on that. He will have no problem with us. His problem is with his own guys. If he really wants to do something and if he wants to adhere to what he and his Party said prior to September of 1984, he will, during the next session of Parliament or sometime early in the new year, bring in legislation to repeal the whole damn Bill and restore the statutory grain rates. At the very minimum, he will give us a new statutory grain rate, which is the rate that is in effect for the current crop year. If he wants to do that, we will support him.

The method of payment is the crucial issue before us today. How much time do I have left, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Until 4.30.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you running out of stuff to say? I'll give you some.

Mr. Benjamin: No, I am not running out of stuff to say. I am going to deal with some more stuff. I do wish to move an amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to do that in the last minute of my remarks. I would appreciate it if you warned me of that, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to hear from the next member of the Liberal Party who speaks if the Party's position is the same now as it was in 1983 regarding the method of payment. I can assure the House that my position and the position of my Party is the same now as it was then and will remain the same however often this matter comes before the House. It will stay the same not because of some kind of paranoia but because we believe the evidence is in. We believe the evidence is overwhelming and indicates that in order for grain producers in western Canada to have a reasonable chance in the world markets and in order for those who require feed grains in other parts of Canada to be able to receive them at a price that is not outrageously enhanced by higher transportation costs, a statutory grain rate must remain in place.

There will be penalties in changing the method of payment. If the Minister believes for one moment that feeders from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec, and I have spoken to some of them, will hold still if they have to pay $10 to $30 more per tonne for feed grain, he is wrong because they will not. If he thinks for one moment that the hog and dairy producers in Quebec whose production is as great as that of the three prairie provinces put together—

Mr. Mazankowski: What production?

Mr. Benjamin: Hog and dairy production. If he thinks that they are going to hold still without buying more U.S. or Ontario corn or without raising more of their own feed grain, he has another thing coming. He is dreaming in technicolor. They are not going to hold still for that. Changing the method of payment is a self-defeating exercise for the grain producers of western Canada. Even the feeders from British Columbia will not hold still for that. I suspect that they could probably buy feed grain from Washington for a lot less than they are paying now.

The payment to the railways exists for one main reason. It is a payment which has existed since 1983 to provide for the most efficient and best transportation system possible in Canada. That transportation system is not only for grain. To hear all the arguments against the Crow rate and all the arguments against payments to the railways, one would think that this is some kind of a hand-out, gift, subsidy, charity or welfare payment to the grain producers of western Canada. It is nothing more than a continuation of what was begun in 1881. It is a transportation subsidy, not a grain subsidy.

That transportation subsidy is not only for the movement of grain, it is for the movement of coal, potash, sulphur, lumber products, automobiles from Japan, automobiles from Oshawa and all the general commodities. We did not build a railway simply to move grain. We did not rebuild it, reduce grades and put in tunnels just on account of the grain producers.

Why are the grain producers being picked on and pointed out as being the villains in the piece? It is a transportation subsidy. Therefore the payments must continue to go to the railways. If they do, we have muscle to make the railways not only rebuild but perform. Sending the payment to the grain farmers leaves the railways with other choices. We could lose another 2,000 miles of branch lines. The producers have to buy bigger trucks. In fact, within a matter of weeks after the passage of this legislation, Canadian Pacific bought four trucking companies in northwestern Saskatchewan in order to truck grain.

Changing the method of payment means higher costs for western provincial Governments. It means higher costs for municipalities. It means higher taxes for grain producers. There should not be any question about this. The Government does not need to wait to hear any more from Mr. Hall or from the late unlamented Mr. Horner. There should be no question about it.

Mr. Mazankowski: We are governed by the legislation, though, Ben. We've got the legislation.

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister is perfectly right. He is governed by the legislation. He did bring in a few amendments with which we agreed earlier this year. Now he should bring in more amendments. He is the man who has the hammer. He is the fellow who can do it if he believes what he told us in 1983. If he believes it, he will do it, but we are still waiting.

Mr. Mazankowski: You haven't lost faith in me yet, have you?

Mr. Benjamin: I have lost faith because the Minister should not be putting up with this any longer. He should bring in a Bill tomorrow providing that the method of payment shall continue as it is. He should put an end to more hearings. He should put an end to hearing from everyone but farmers—

Mr. Mazankowski: The review is more than that, Ben. Now, let's not mislead.

Mr. Benjamin: Let us hope we get another day's debate on this matter so we can deal with other items. At least I got on to the matter under discussion, the Hall Commission Report. I sure hope the next Liberal speaker gets onto it just for a damn change. They are both trying to run and hide, but we are not going to let them stay hidden.

What we said in 1983 we are saying now and will continue to say. I would like to move an amendment. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus):

> That the motion by Mr. Axworthy be amended by deleting the period at the end and adding the following thereto:
> "and rejects the transfer of Crow benefits payments from the railroads to producers as recommended in the Report."

I now challenge Government Members and members of the Liberal Party to cease speaking on this matter so that it may come to a vote. I am interested to see whether Liberal and Conservative Members will talk this out to the end of the time allotted or whether they will allow it to come to a vote. I am anxious to find out how that goes because there are a lot of people on the Prairies waiting to see how these birds perform on this particular matter.

INCOME TAX

STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian tax system rests on a foundation of self-assessment and voluntary compliance. It depends crucially on the respect of all our citizens. The continued provision of a high level of public services depends on an efficient, effective and fair system of taxation.

Over the past few years there has been growing public concern about the numbers of high income Canadians who pay little or no personal income tax in any one year through the use of various tax deductions and incentives. As Hon. Members will recall, my Budget of May 23 proposed a number of measures to improve the fairness of the tax system. I also announced that the Government would implement a minimum personal income tax to take effect January 1, 1986.

[Translation]

With the Budget, I tabled a discussion paper outlining three different types of minimum tax. And I invited comments to assist in meeting the challenge of designing and implementing an appropriate minimum tax.

Today I want to inform the House of the Government's decision on the minimum tax which will take effect for the 1986 tax year. In addition, I will be announcing other important measures to improve tax fairness.

[English]

Today, I wish to inform the House of the Government's decision on the minimum tax which will take place for the 1986 tax year. In addition, I will be announcing other important measures to improve tax fairness.

In choosing an appropriate minimum tax design, the Government has balanced a number of important objectives. First, an effective minimum tax must ensure that high income Canadians will pay a fair share of taxes in each year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Second, a minimum tax imposed in the name of fairness must itself be fair. It must also be consistent with the valid social and economic goals for which tax exemptions and deductions have been created over the years. Third, a minimum tax should, as far as possible, complement the existing tax system and use familiar tax concepts. Finally, to limit the complexity inherent in any such measure, an appropriate minimum tax should minimize uncertainty by having as clear as possible a cut-off between those who are potentially affected and those who are not.

The Government has concluded that the minimum tax design which best meets these objectives is the option described in our discussion paper as the alternative minimum tax. I wish to take a few minutes to describe some of the key features of the chosen design.

All high income Canadians are potentially subject to the proposed alternative minimum tax, and it will significantly reduce the number who would otherwise pay little or no tax. In practice, however, the minimum tax will affect a rather small group of individuals, estimated at fewer than 100,000 of the more than 15 million Canadians who file tax returns. The vast majority of Canadians will not be affected by my announcement today. The minimum tax calculation can be ignored by almost all tax filers with earnings and other income of less than about $45,000 to $50,000, according to the number of dependants that person has. Likewise, for most individuals with incomes above $50,000 the minimum tax calculation will not be necessary because of the amount of regular income tax which they are already paying.

[Translation]

For those who are affected, the minimum tax calculation is straightforward. An adjusted income figure will be calculated for which some items will be deductible and others not. The taxpayer will then claim his annual minimum tax exemption of about $45,000 to $50,000.

[English]

Amounts exceeding the minimum tax exemption will be taxed at an effective federal-provincial-territorial rate ranging from 24 per cent to 27 per cent, depending on the province or Territory of residence. This is based on a federal minimum tax rate of 17 per cent, which is one-half of the top federal statutory rate. The taxpayer will always pay the higher of the alternative minimum tax or the regular tax.

This minimum tax will prevent high income individuals from using one or more tax incentives to pay little or no tax in any one year. I underline the words "in any one year" because available data suggests that very high income individuals have been able to avoid paying taxes for any number of years.

The Government is also aware that existing tax incentives were put in place for valid economic and social reasons. The benefits of these incentives should not be undermined by a minimum tax. Accordingly, the minimum tax will have a carry-forward mechanism to ensure that the value of tax incentive deductions and credits is not lost. Taxpayers will be able, in effect, to apply unused deductions and tax credits against their regular tax liability in future years. But in each and every year high income tax payers will never pay less than the minimum tax based on a federal-provincial-Territorial rate ranging from 24 per cent to 27 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I stated earlier that the Government is concerned that any tax imposed in the name of fairness must itself be fair. Accordingly, a limited number of deductions and tax credits will continue to be eligible in computing the minimum tax. This will mean that certain Canadians whose incomes exceed $50,000 may still pay no tax in any one year, but only in a strictly limited range of situations. These include some items allowed in order to preserve fairness to individuals in extenuating circumstances, such as those with disabilities or medical expenses under the Income Tax Act. Alimony and maintenance payments will be deductible since they are already taxed in the hands of the recipient. As well, contributions to charitable organizations will remain deductible in computing the minimum tax. Also deductible will be the actual costs incurred to earn income. Examples include employment expenses, including union and professional dues, moving costs, premiums for unemployment insurance and the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and interest expenses of business persons, farmers and investors. Business losses will also be deductible. Aside from this limited number of deductions and tax credits of the type which I have just mentioned, no other amounts will be deductible in computing the minimum tax.

Non-deductible items include tax shelter losses created by claiming capital cost allowances on films and multiple-unit residential buildings, so-called MURBs, or by claiming exploration and development expenses, either directly or by way of flow-through share or similar arrangements. Dividend tax credits and contributions to Registered Retirement Savings Plans and registered pension plans will also be non-deductible for minimum tax purposes.

In the May Budget the Government proposed a $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption. As I said in the Budget, that tax measure is an important incentive to assist in promoting investment, risk taking and job creation. The minimum tax does not remove this incentive. It will ensure that capital gains eligible for the lifetime exemption will receive favourable treatment.

[Translation]

What the minimum tax does is to prevent high-income taxpayers from using the capital gains exemption, alone or in combination with other tax incentives, to avoid paying tax in any one year. The result is a balance between preserving the value of incentives that contribute to productive investment and reinforcing tax fairness.

Special transitional reserve provisions will be available for qualifying farm property in order to assist farmers realizing large one-time capital gains.

• (1640)

[English]

The minimum tax will have a substantial yield. Although there is much uncertainty about such forecasts, I estimate that it will raise on additional $300 million in federal revenues in the 1986 taxation year. When provincial revenues are added, the total will be about $450 million. The new minimum tax should be viewed as part of a broad and continuing effort to improve the fairness and the effectiveness of the tax system. I want to speak briefly about this broader context of tax fairness.

There are some who have argued that a minimum tax ignores the real problem, the existence of significant tax preferences. I want to emphasize that I do not regard the minimum tax as a substitute for continuing efforts to re-examine the preferences which now exist in our tax system and, wherever appropriate, removing them. My record has been clear in that regard.

One of my first acts as Minister of Finance, together with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), was to suspend rulings on limited partnerships and similar financing arrangements which had the potential for major tax avoidance. Many of these arrangements involved a sale of deductions or tax credits from one taxpayer to another. They created benefit for only a small circle of taxpayers and they jeopardized the integrity of the tax system in the eyes of many others.

[Translation]

In October of last year, in response to concern about abuses of the Scientific Research Tax Credit, I announced a moratorium on quick flips under this measure and ordered a full review. As a result, in my May budget I eliminated this particular tax credit and introduced more effective, better targeted provisions to support research and development.

[English]

In addition, the Budget eliminated tax shelter financing of properties such as yachts, recreational vehicles and hotels. It also ended the long-standing advantages of splitting income between family members through low interest or interest-free loans, a practice primarily of benefit to upper income families.

The Government also acted to improve the fairness of tax administration. Limits to the powers of the tax authorities in the area of search and seizure, audits and demands for tax information, were clearly defined. Changes were made to ensure that taxpayers are not required to pay taxes in dispute until after a court rules on their appeal.

More recently, I moved to put an end to the so-called "carve-out" transactions whereby profitable oil and gas companies were temporarily transferring property to companies with losses in order to reduce their tax.

I am taking action to terminate the use of partnerships in corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions through so-called "partnership step-up" rules. I will be clarifying the law to ensure that the limits imposed on foreign property investments by pension funds cannot be circumvented by interposing a Canadian company between the fund and the foreign property investment.

I am tabling a Ways and Means motion with respect to the minimum tax and the two measures I have just mentioned. I am also making available detailed information for Parliament, taxpayers and their advisers, and for all Canadians. The legislation to implement the necessary changes will be brought forward as soon as possible.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize the Government's commitment to measures which will make the tax system not only fairer but more effective in encouraging productive economic activity.

[Translation]

In just over one year, this Government has brought forward a wide range of measures to strengthen the fairness and effectiveness of the tax system as an essential part of a comprehensive program of economic renewal designed to benefit all Canadians.

[English]

The minimum tax is an integral part of this continuing initiative. In a careful, balanced and effective way, it gives real meaning to the broad principle of fairness which underlies our efforts to build a stronger economy and a better life for all Canadians.

Pursuant to Standing Order 65(1) I wish to lay upon the Table, in both official languages, copies of a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act. And pursuant to Standing Order 65(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of said motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, this is another remarkable day in the life of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

[English]

If success were to be measured by incoherence, confusion and complexity, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would be seen as moving from triumph to triumph. We on this side of the House are perplexed, as Hon. Members opposite are clearly perplexed. Even the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) is blushing.

Mr. Nielsen: Never.

Mr. Johnston: We are confused, we are bemused, but we certainly are not amused at what the Minister has brought us today. It is more tinkering by the greater tinkerer. He tinkered with the old age security indexation and, fortunately, we were able to convince him to back off on that. He has tinkered with the sales taxes. He has tinkered a little with the fuel taxes. He has tinkered with surtaxes. He has done all of this, I might say, at a cost of billions of dollars to Canadian taxpayers. But his greatest tinkering has been with the income tax system. The incoherence, the woolly thinking, and the lack of any sense of direction, seems to grow daily with respect to the budget measures brought in by the Minister of Finance last May. The Minister knows. I know that he knows. We all know that he knows how ridiculous the position of the Government is by the juxtaposition of this minimum tax with the capital gains tax exemption which was introduced in his Budget.

The Right Hon. Leader of our Party recommended a minimum tax during the election campaign in August of 1984. In a speech he made in Chatham he recommended an alternative minimum tax of 13 per cent on upper income Canadians who pay less than that or nothing at all. Let us compare that particular recommendation with what the Minister of Finance of the Tory Government is presenting us.

The Budget proposed a $500,000 lifetime exemption on capital gains. We thought—and I think most Canadians who reflected upon it thought—that that provision would not see the light of day in a motion of Ways and Means in this House. However, unfortunately, it has. It has been tabled. In addition to that, the Budget proposed that a minimum tax of some form would be introduced in 1986. Of course, that is the intention of the provision introduced today by the Minister of Finance. Everyone in the country, except members of the Government, saw the dilemma that was created, a capital gains tax exemption to a very small percentage of wealthy Canadians on the one hand, and a minimum tax proposal intended to target those same wealthy Canadians on the other hand. One would have thought that having taken nine months to bring in a Budget, the Government might have identified the paradox in that situation. Indeed, it may very well be because of this dilemma that a further six months, or slightly over six months, has been taken before we are actually seeing the minimum tax proposal.

• (1650)

We know that the Government is inordinately sensitive to criticism although, unfortunately, not to that which it receives in the House. If the Government accepted some of the advice it gets in the House, it would avoid a lot of pitfalls with the public. However, it chooses not to do so. I need only remind Members of the great debate on the deindexation of Old Age Security. We were told by the Government that we were all wrong, we insisted that we were correct, and finally the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance had the good sense to admit that we were correct all along. It was not sufficient that Members in the Chamber made that point and it was not even sufficient that Members on the Government's back-benches made it. It had to be made by the public. The people affected had to march on Ottawa to make that point.

We told the Government that the capital gains exemption was wrong as well. Of course, it has now been told that elsewhere as well. Undoubtedly, the Minister of Finance has seen the comments in the November 30 edition of The Financial Post. Some of the comments with respect to the capital gains tax exemption describe the dilemma in which he finds himself today. One article reads in part:

The exemption runs directly counter to the spirit and intent of another Mulroney government proposal, the minimum income tax. This, to be launched in 1986, will reduce the impact of various tax shelter deductions claimed by well-off individuals.

All of which creates a no-win situation for Wilson. If the minimum tax is applied to the capital gains sheltered by the exemption, it will negate the beneficial impact from the exemption. But if the new tax doesn't go after exempt capital gains, it will be seen as a joke.

Donald Huggett, national tax partner, publications, with Coopers & Lybrand, sees the introduction of these self-cancelling measures as "an exercise in futility and stupidity".

Huggett suggests the Government write off the experience as "a terrible mistake" and scrap or delay both the minimum tax and the capital gains exemption.

Of course, faced with that kind of criticism, the Minister had to find some way out of this dilemma. He should have dropped the capital gains and put in the minimum tax. Of course, he did not. He has twisted himself and the Income Tax Act into a pretzel in order to try to accommodate both of these objectives. In his attempt to reconcile the irreconcilable, namely to have tax free capital gains for the wealthy on the one hand and a minimum tax for the wealthy on the other, he had decided to add back one-half of the capital gains exemption in calculating that minimum tax of 17 per cent. That, effectively, means a tax of 8.5 per cent on the tax free gain, but it is refundable at a later date, as the Minister just told us, because the minimum tax will have a carry-forward mechanism to ensure that the value of all these tax incentives, the deductions and credits, is not lost to the individual taxpayer. Effectively, it becomes a refundable minimum tax on high incomes and is not a real tax at all.

Mr. Gauthier: Big deal.

Mr. Johnston: Quoting a great Canadian, the Minister should have opened his remarks today by saying: "A minimum tax if necessary, but not necessarily a minimum tax".

Mr. Benjamin: That sounds like a Liberal.

Mr. Johnston: To save face he has simply added more complexities and compounded inequities. He has told us that there are some deductions. In A Minimum Tax for Canada he refers to the dividend tax credit and the capital gains exclusion which, of course, he effectively has not dealt with. However, carrying charges in excess of investment income which may be interest write-offs is the real problem, and he has chosen to skate that one off-side and not deal with it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I learned from MacEachen.

Mr. Johnston: He says that he learned from the MacEachen Budget. The MacEachen Budget was intended to introduce some equity into the Act with respect to these exorbitant write-offs.

Mr. Broadbent: Why did you back down? You changed it all, Don.

Mr. Johnston: The fact of the matter is that what he must do is bring some coherence, clarity and simplicity to the tax system in order to avoid the necessity for this kind of exercise.

The Minister continues to drag us further and further into a swamp of fiscal incoherence and tax complexities. I know this is difficult in politics, especially for a Minister of Finance, but instead of admitting to the gross stupidities which characterize so much of the May Budget, he is wading further and further into treacherous quicksand and mud, praying that he will emerge on the other side of the swamp before he drowns.

Mr. Malone: Did he see MacEachen on the way?

Mr. Johnston: We have asked him to turn back, to withdraw, to start again on solid ground, but he steadfastly refuses to do so. He believes that he will save some credibility by moving straight ahead and drowning. I fear that drown he must, unless he backs out of this quagmire.

I will now turn to some of the other provisions of which we heard today. The Minister now tells us that he is going to terminate the use of partnerships in corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions through so-called partnership step-up rules.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that it was a similar arrangement—an advance ruling, a tax interpretation—that made it possible to transfer the shares and create a tax haven with respect to the Gulf case, a famous case here in the House where we asked the Minister many questions. Why did he not overrule the advance ruling in those circumstances?

[English]

He tells us now, after the horse has fled the barn, that he is going to stop this famous little Egypt bump which has cost taxpayers, in that one transaction alone, perhaps as much as $1 billion. Now we are going to stop that transaction.

Mr. Blaikie: Why don't we tax nerve. We would make a fortune.

Mr. Johnston: We are enjoying a little comic relief from the left. Mr. Speaker, during the great exchange over that Gulf transaction I recall asking the Minister why he did not simply refuse to give rulings on such transactions. We were told that it was in the law and that the law was there and that the law had been introduced by the Liberals and that they could not do anything about it and so on, all of which, of course, was just rubbish and nonsense. The Minister himself said today: "One of my first acts as Minister of Finance, together with the Minister of National Revenue, was to suspend rulings on limited partnerships and similar financing arrangements that had the potential for major tax avoidance". If $1 million is not major tax avoidance, I do not know what is. The Minister had the option to stop a ruling from issuing with respect to that Gulf transaction, as he did in the case of limited partnerships and other financing arrangements. I want to know why he did not do it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You know it is a different type of transaction.

Mr. Johnston: He says it is a different type of transaction. The fact is that it needed a ruling in order to proceed. He knows that, and there was no requirement whatsoever that that ruling be given.

[Translation]

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a difficult period for us. Hopefully, with the Government and our colleagues to our left, we are trying to improve the Canadian tax system. But every time the Minister comes up with a new project he makes the legislation ever more complicated.

Sure enough, the tax measures just introduced by the Minister simply confirm his reputation as an incoherent tax fiddler.

[English]

If I may be nostalgic for a moment, Mr. Speaker, I picked up a document called A New Direction for Canada. In it, under the heading "Tax Simplification" I find these words: "The tax system is overly complex. It imposes on taxpayers and their advisers an unnecessary cost in time and money just to understand and comply with the law, and the more complicated the tax system is, the less effective will be the investment incentive contained in it". Need I ask Members of the Chamber, who uttered those words? It is our Minister of Finance. What has happened to him? I can tell you that there are many people in this country who are wondering what happened to that Minister of Finance.

● (1700)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I would ask him to conclude.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the Minister had tax lawyers, tax accountants and fiscal advisers in this country worried when he made that statement last year. These well paid tour guides in the labyrinth of the Income Tax Act were concerned. They now know that they are safe and secure. They would be well advised, before they go to sleep each night, to thank God for the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the election in 1984 we had a tax system that permitted special deductions for yachts, for club memberships, special deductions for rather spurious research and development schemes that were constructed and special deductions in the corporate sector that provided no concrete incentives for investment to create jobs. One of them was known as the little Egypt bump. All of these produced in Canada one of the most unfair tax systems in the western world and it was created by the Liberal Government that preceded the present Government.

I have just seen the ultimate act of nerve of a critic for the Liberal Party getting up and denouncing a system of taxation that his Party created just over a year ago when it was in power. There are simply no limits to shame, as one of my colleagues has just said.

I will leave my Liberal colleagues—metaphorically and literally to the right—alone for the moment—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We are reformers.

Mr. Broadbent: Now that they are on this side of the House they are reformers, Mr. Speaker. They shift with location in terms of philosophic positions.

Unlike the Liberal critic, I want to deal with what was specifically announced today. Before doing so, I want to put it into some perspective. In the summer of 1984 there was a perception by Canadian men and women all across the country that they were indeed paying plenty of taxes. As the Minister has acknowledged, even before today, there were thousands of Canadians with very high incomes who were paying not a penny in taxes. That was perceived by Canadians even before the summer of 1984 to be unjust.

On July 25, 1984, in this city, as Leader of the New Democratic Party I was very pleased to repeat in that debate between the Leaders of the Parties the position of my Party, speaking out for Canadians across the land. That position, succinctly stated, is that as long as ordinary men and women are paying their share of taxes, it is time everyone in this country paid his or her share. I was pleased, as were all Canadians, to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say in that debate that if the Conservative Party formed the Government, in his view the rich would pay and, to quote him, "should pay handsomely".

After the election, we saw changes brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his first statement in the fall of 1984, followed by the Budget. In those early provisions we did not see the kind of reform that was promised by the Prime Minister in that debate. We saw, along with other announcements, a package of tax increases on ordinary Canadians that amounted to approximately $1,000 per family, if one added the taxes together.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Oh, come on.

Mr. Broadbent: I would be happy to provide the documentation to my Conservative colleague. There were substantial tax increases affecting the ordinary family, but we did not see the promised minimum tax in the first year of the Conservative Government.

I say on behalf of my colleagues—and I make a distinction between righteousness and self-righteousness—that if there is something to which my colleagues remained faithful in that campaign it was that there ought to be tax fairness in this land. When we were elected in September, 1984, all NDP Members in the House plus many others in my Party across the country kept up our faith to work for tax reform.

We initiated a commission, under the chairmanship of our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), that is under way now and will be hearing representations from Canadians across the country until the next Budget from the Minister of Finance, because we intend to continue to address the important issue of major tax reform. Perhaps the Minister of Finance will know that the Prime Minister's Office acknowledged publicly some two weeks ago on Friday that, as a result of a campaign initiated by the NDP to mail out over one million pieces of literature throughout Canada, the Prime Minister's Office has received 1,000 pieces of mail per day in the past couple of weeks urging tax reform, a minimum tax in particular.

We have responded to Canadians' sense of fairness by carrying out our political obligation of maintaining pressure on the Government to do what it ought to do. I am pleased by what has been announced today. I see it as an important start. We now have a minimum tax, and I compliment the Minister of Finance for at last coming forward with that promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I also listened to him carefully when he said, with some emphasis, that this is a step and that he is committing himself once again to the process of continued tax reform, presumably leading right up to the next Budget.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the policy introduced by the Minister today is just a starting point. This process must continue because all Canadians want to have a completely fair tax system. That is the objective of our Party here in the House of Commons.

[English]

I want to mention two specific items. First, of course, the minimum tax will provide some $450 million in additional revenue. That is important because $300 million will go to the federal Treasury and $150 million will go to the provinces. However, I would remind Hon. Members that the capital gains tax giveaway introduced by the Minister will mean a loss of $600 million a year. Therefore, the Minister has begun to retrieve a good part of that and we will be insisting that in the next Budget he retrieve the rest of it by abolishing that inequitable proposal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Let the farmers hear that.

An Hon. Member: You forget about western Canadian farmers.

Mr. Broadbent: My Conservative colleagues know that we have made provisions in our approach to this to recognize that home owners and farmers are in a special category and ought to be so recognized. I say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) that if he will support our a special category we can have an interesting debate.

However, the Minister's proposal is an important and positive step. We question why the $40,000 in taxable income should be exempt and we will be very interested in discussing that proposal. I would also note that for some time our finance critic and other colleagues in the House have criticized the little Egypt bump, this interesting tax provision that has no economic benefit but has resulted in a great loss of revenue. Again, that was brought in by the Liberals. We were critical of that with the Liberal Government. We have been critical of that with the present Government. I compliment, unequivocally, the Minister of Finance today for removing that particular loophole.

• (1710)

In conclusion, I do not think the Minister took 15 minutes to make his announcement. The Liberal critic took 15 minutes to say nothing. I want to wind up my comments right now by saying that the Minister has made a good beginning. I do not qualify that. A good beginning has been initiated here today. He also said that it was step one in the process of taxation reform. On behalf of my colleagues in the House of Commons and New Democrats all across the country I want to say that we will continue with our mandate to fight for tax reform from now until the Minister's next Budget. We want the Minister, in that Budget, to deliver total tax reform on personal income tax and corporate tax. We will be watching.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Orders of the Day will be extended by 40 minutes this day.

STATUTORY ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

COMMITTEE REPORT ON CROW BENEFIT PAYMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Axworthy:

That this House take note of the Report of the Committee of Inquiry on Crow Benefit Payment.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end and adding the following thereto:

"and rejects the transfer of Crow Benefit payments from the railroads to producers as recommended in the Report".

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity this afternoon to say a few words on the motion before the House relating to the report of the Committee of Inquiry on Crow Benefit Payment. I must say that I was surprised when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) said that he could not understand why we would be having a debate on this issue now, when the legislation provided for a debate after the Hall Commission Report was tabled in the House. Surely this is one of the most important economic issues in western Canada.

Also I was surprised that the Minister did not report more on the progress of the Western Grain Transportation Act, its effects in western Canada, and his views with regard to the Hall Commission Report.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) seemed to complain a lot about the motion today. If he had really been concerned about the issue, he would have petitioned the Chair, as our caucus did, and asked for the debate. It seems to me that the issue is important and worth-while enough for the House to debate it.

The Minister talked about the Government dealing in a very hasty way with Bill C-155 when it was originally passed. However, if we look at what the standing committee did beginning in the summer of 1983, we see that it held hearings for many months. Representations on that Bill were one of the most extensive I have heard tell about around the House. The Minister might have gone into more detail as to whether he accepted or rejected the concept recommended in the Hall Commission Report.

I should like to refer to what he said on second reading of Bill C-155 on May 12, 1983. He went into a long explanation of how the Crow benefit should be paid, in his view. As reported at page 25386 of Hansard for May 12, 1983, he said:

> In that connection, I have something to put forward to the Minister for consideration. Since there is no consensus on this issue and there are some differences of opinion, I ask the Minister to consider making the payment of the Crow benefit optional to the producer or to the railroad. Let the producer decide whether the money should go to the railroad, or let him decide whether it should go to him.

The Minister described this as his "freedom of choice" approach to the Crow benefit. Of course he was the transportation critic of the Official Opposition at that time. Since he was not in power, I do not suppose his view held much sway. However, now that he is the Minister of Transport, his opinions and ideas become very important.

In the same speech, he went on to say:

> I repeat that I think the principle has validity. It gives the producer some freedom of choice and we would be very pleased to work this matter out.

Although the Minister outlined those provisions of the Act which provide for the review committee, headed by the Hon. Jack Horner, a very good friend of the Minister, it seems to me that the Hall Commission has had massive resources at its fingertips. It certainly had available more resources and more detailed research than did the grain transportation committee. At some stage the Minister will have to make a decision with regard to the Hall Commission Report. We can only assume at this stage, now that the Hon. Member for Vegreville is the Minister of Transport, that his "freedom of choice" approach will prevail.

It would be very useful to the grain industry, to the pools, to the Canadian Wheat Board and to individual prairie grain producers to know whether the Minister's position, as stated on May 12, 1983, prevails; whether he will leave the Act the way it is and the way it was passed by us when we were in power; or whether he will adopt the Hall Commission Report, which essentially recommended a payment of benefit directly to producers.

In his statement this afternoon, the Minister indicated that he had a number of concerns about the operation of the Act. He mentioned the safety net, the efficiency of the grain handling system, branch line systems of rehabilitation and upgrading. It is interesting that when he spoke on May 12, 1983, he seemed to have the same concerns. At that time he spoke about the problems of transportation and efficiency in the handling of grain. For instance, he mentioned that grains were weighed six times before being finally loaded on to the bottoms in Thunder Bay or Vancouver, that grains were graded three times, and that we had an inefficient or poorly co-ordinated elevator system which operated on a five-day week, whereas trains operated on a seven-day week. Also he spoke about the difficulties faced by individual producers when loading boxcars and hopper cars themselves and not being able to make that $600 saving. However, when Bill C-44 came forward last year, essentially it contained only two substantive clauses.

• (1720)

This Government has been in power for over 15 months, yet the Minister did not deal with any of the major problems which he outlined today. Since the Minister has been thinking about these matters for two years now, why did he not spell out to the House exactly how he will improve these efficiencies, remedy the situation and overcome these problems? Toward the end of his speech, he made the vague statement that he would have a grain transportation system in place by 1988, but he did not spell out when in fact he would be bringing in amendments.

We wonder why those amendments were not brought in in Bill C-44. When the Minister spoke in the Crown debate in 1983, he outlined 14 major recommendations that he would like to have made. He had 14 objections to that Bill, yet only two substantive ones were included in Bill C-44, the amendments brought in last year.

Although during the election campaign the Government clearly committed itself to freezing freight rates at the 1983-84 level, when the Bill was brought in, they were frozen at the 1984-85 level. That is another campaign promise broken by the Government. When freezing them at the 1984-85 level, the Minister knew that the 1986-87 level would be 22 per cent lower, that is, the transportation rates for grains which will come into effect. The Minister is really giving the agricultural producers of western Canada absolutely nothing. Talk about giving the sleeves out of your vest! "Maz" sure did it with those amendments in Bill C-44. We wonder about the freedom of choice policy that he enunciated so clearly on that sunny afternoon in May 1983. Will he be leaving the Bill as it is or will he be adopting the recommendations of the Hall Commission Report?

The Senior Grain Transportation Committee, as I said, does not have nearly the expertise or the resources which the Hall Commission had to do an in-depth analysis. The report evolves down to a decision by the Minister as to the direction in which he will go. We have seen some problems develop vis-à-vis the efficiency or practicality of feeding cattle in the West, with the Alberta Government providing $21 per tonne in transportation assistance for the feeding of cattle in that province. There will be some distortion compared with other western provinces with regard to the feeding of grain and finishing cattle.

Last week the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), in response to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), took great pride with regard to the benefit to be paid under the Western Grain Transportation Act, the $659 million. That is rather interesting because I do not recall hearing the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board ever speaking in favour of the Bill or voting in favour of it at that time. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board also took credit for the crop insurance, the western grain stabilization fund and all the other programs under which the producer pays a premium and, if he suffers a loss, he receives a benefit. That is analogous to any kind of insurance program that does not result in any great largesse from the Government of Canada.

The uncertainty in the agriculture field is greater than it has been since the 1930s. We recently spent two weeks in some 14 communities in the West listening to over 100 witnesses, farmers, farm organizations and community leaders. We certainly gained the feeling that there was incredible uncertainty in the West, not only among young farmers facing the loss of their farms because of the cost price squeeze, declining land values and low international prices. There seems to be no clear commitment by the Government to make any firm decisions with regard to agriculture.

This afternoon we are debating the Hall Commission Report on the Crow benefit payment. As far as we know, the Minister's position is that there will be a freedom of choice whereby the benefit can either be paid to the railroad or the producer based on his position in 1983. However, it goes beyond that. The Government made glowing commitments during the election campaign. When the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture came out, we noted that the Estimates for the previous year for the Farm Credit Corporation had been $494 million. This year they are $90 million. Obviously there was going to be no help or very little for the Farm Credit Corporation compared to the previous year.

Looking on through the Estimates, we see the Government making very significant demands on user-pay and inspection fees. At the end of the Estimates we noted that the Estimates were not going to be indexed. When we inquired of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), we found that there will be a loss of purchasing power by the Department of Agriculture of some 10 per cent to 15 per cent in the coming year. In addition, there will be a straight cut of $50 million. We do not know whether that will be in meat inspection or research. Not knowing that has increased the uncertainty in western Canada as to exactly what the commitment of this Government is to agriculture.

In our task force hearings, we talked to many drought victims. We talked about the loss of farms by young farmers and farmers facing the prospect of asking the provincial and municipal Governments for welfare. We received the answer last week when the Government said it would provide assistance on an average of $5 or $10 per acre at a time when the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other wheat pools were asking for benefits of up to $50 per acre.

We see the uncertainty there and the prospect of the Minister paying the Crow benefit either directly to the purchaser or to the railroad, the choice being made by the producer. That creates great uncertainty. However, we could look at the other input costs which the Government has imposed upon the producers in the last couple of months. On September 1, there was an increase in the price of gasoline by 9 cents per gallon. That will cost many producers with large holdings $1,200 to $1,500 per year more. On January 1, a 1 per cent sales tax will be imposed, which will impact not only on fuel costs but on all the equipment a farmer buys.

• (1730)

There is great uncertainty as to the Government's priorities. Clearly the Government was not there for the victims of the drought. Clearly it is not there for the cost price squeeze. The Government is now increasing this uncertainty. The Western Grain Transportation Act was designed to improve rail transportation in western Canada and to provide funding to compensate for the benefit, and we are seeing some improvement. For instance, CP Rail reports that this year, it will have record spending of $600 million for locomotive cars, new rail tracks and mechanical facilities and $175 million will be spent this year on the Rogers Pass tunnel and on double tracking in the mountains. It claims that over 1,000 people will be working on those projects.

Clearly the Bill is seeing to the modernization and upgrading of western transportation. The response of the Hon. Minister of Transport was that the entire Bill should be put on freeze for three years. I would ask him where the improvement in rail transportation would have been today if he had had his way and the Bill had not been passed for three years.

There is great concern among groups like the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. The Chief Executive Officer for the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has said that the Government is sending out conflicting signals by not encouraging major cost reductions and efficiency gains on one hand while reactivating uneconomic rail lines on the other.

The international climate is very uncertain. The United States is putting in place a bonus program and the EEC has in place a massive bonus program. In Canada, the Government's commitment to agriculture is certainly in question. There can be no doubt that because of the input costs provided by the Budget, the cut-backs in departmental spending and the $5 or $10 per acre benefit for drought victims, the Government is sending out very confused signals as to whether or not it has made any commitment to the future of agriculture. That is sad because it is a very, very important part of our economy. It is important to western Canada. The Government should come clean and get its priorities straight.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to note my great satisfaction at being able today to take part for the first time, and there will certainly be others, in such an important debate, which deals with both agriculture and transport. I am all the more proud after seeing in Hansard that I am the first Member for Quebec, except for the former Minister of Transport under the previous Government, of course, to speak about the Gilson Report, Bill C-155, and finally the Hall Commission Report.

During all that time, Mr. Speaker, we did not once hear the Members opposite express their views on this issue, even though they were in power. We have been hearing for a long time that they were supposed to defend the interests affected by the reform that they, themselves, wanted to bring about. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that no Liberal Member from Quebec dared to rise and speak on this issue, which was very controversial at the time. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to belong to a party in which everyone has the opportunity to speak about issues which are close to him. I am all the more proud that I can depend on a Minister of Transport who, before taking a final decision on such a controversial and nationally important issue as that of the Crowsnest rate, gives us an opportunity to discuss the whole matter in this House so that we may have a preliminary discussion and make, together and collectively, an enlightened decision in this regard. This reflects the will of the Government to consult the Canadian people and I thank the Minister for it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to tell anyone interested that we are open to discussion on the Hall Commission Report, that we are open to all points of views, that we are open to the necessary consensus of all parties involved to make an enlightened decision, and especially one which will take into account the unity of Canada and the various interests involved. Many interested groups from Quebec have outlined the parameters of this discussion. Everyone knows that the Union des producteurs agricoles and the Coopérative fédérée du Québec have made submissions, and if I may, I would like to quote a few passages which should confirm the consensus and meet with the approval of my colleagues in this House. Let us look first at the UPA proposals, and I quote:

> As concerns the Canadian grains policy, the concept of equity between East and West is based on three components: First, a single domestic market for grains, which means a single price throughout Canada for grain users, except for differences related to transportation costs. Second, if there is to be equity, the balance has to be maintained between grain and meat transportation costs so that the meat production industry can develop in both Eastern and Western Canada based on production efficiency. Finally, the concept of equity also requires that any assistance or benefit given by the Federal Government to Canadian grain producers be available to all producers concerned, whatever their region.

Mr. Speaker, I hope nobody in this House will dare suggest the opposite, and I hope they will agree with me that equity is the fundamental and most important parameter to be kept clearly in mind in order that the end result will not favour one part of Canada while harming another.

In another quote from UPA, it was stressed that producers firmly believe that the neutrality of payments must first and foremost be analyzed on the basis of their future impact on Canadian agriculture rather than on the basis of past results of a policy that was then different.

• (1740)

Mr. Speaker, the concept of neutrality of our resources is another basic and fundamental aspect that should be kept in mind in this debate. Although our country's economic complexity seems obvious to me, my hope is to attain, with all my colleagues, and as soon as practicable, some sort of neutrality in the interests of the country as a whole, and especially of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, allow me another quote: "The payment method should not distort the forces of the marketplace by pinning down the production and marketing structures of Canadian agriculture." Once more, this is a vital aspect in this debate.

Finally, a last quote from the evidence submitted by the Union des producteurs agricoles and the Coopérative fédérée du Québec: "If we are not to rewrite history and create clearly destabilizing effects on Eastern Canadian agriculture, especially in Quebec, it is our view that Bill C-155 is the most neutral solution possible at this stage, the least disruptive for Canada as a whole, and the most in line with the history of the past 87 years."

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am quoting here from two well-known organizations in Quebec, two organizations which are strong and which very aptly represent producers. And it is my view, as a Member of Parliament, as a Member from Quebec, that we will have the decency to closely follow those recommendations and try—as certainly we will succeed—to reach with all our Western colleagues an agreement that will give each Canadian farmer his fair share.

Mr. Speaker, the submissions from which I have just quoted were presented to the Hall Commission on November 2, 1984. To my knowledge, this still represents the position of these two powerful farm organizations. I wanted to read their views to make all Canadians and all Members of this House understand how much this issue concerns Quebec and all the other Canadian provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is essential to consider the whole Crow benefit issue in the context of the future of agriculture in Canada, and in my case, more specifically in the context of agriculture in Quebec, always taking into account the principle of national equity and fairness so that Canadian farmers will feel at ease whether they live in Quebec, in Alberta or in British Columbia.

Selling Canadian federalism to Quebecers—and when I look at my colleague for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), I cannot help thinking about it—is first and foremost selling the concept of equity in sharing the resources available to develop and promote our agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, for a Quebecer, Canadian federalism also means having the constant political will to ensure justice and equal opportunities for all Canadian farm producers. We in Quebec consider that Canadian federalism must first of all promote our collective interests. If I may, I would like to remind each Member of this House that this is the major reason why they were elected.

In this regard, I would like to quote the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who stated in Prince Albert that the whole issue of the Crow benefits had to be related to the principle of equal opportunities for the economic development of all regions in Canada.

I sincerely believe—

Mr. Benjamin: Do it!

Mr. Champagne: I will try! I sincerely believe that the concept of equity and equal opportunities expounded by the Prime Minister is the basic principle of all the policies proposed by our party.

This is a policy aimed at building a strong and stable agricultural industry in all Canadian regions and at promoting the development of the natural assets of each region.

As the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) himself said: "Our objective is to implement an efficient and productive grain transport system to assure maximum benefits for the agricultural sector and the country as a whole."

Mr. Speaker, as I said shortly, not a single Liberal Member from Quebec dared to rise to recall these great concepts of equity and fairness which must permeate our Canadian agricultural policy as a whole.

As Riverolles put it: "It is a great privilege to do nothing, but it is hard not to abuse it." Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that the Liberals did nothing. I ask the people in Quebec, the farm producers, to remember that the Liberals decided not to pay for crop losses in 1983. I want to remind Quebec and Canadian farm producers that the former Government refused to pay $27 million for the crop losses. Remember, Mr. Speaker, when the previous Government turned down the request made by all the producers in Canada for a long-term dairy policy that would recognize the interests of every individual and every region. Remember the Liberals did nothing. Remember, Mr. Speaker, when the Liberals let farming interest rates soar to 17 per cent. Look at what happened. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) should be listening, because at that moment he was in Toronto, a rich city. He should listen to what happened. What happened is that Canadian farmers, farmers in his constituency and in mine lost their farms—

An Hon. Member: They went belly up.

Mr. Champagne: —because of the failure of an irresponsible Government to act on farming.

Mr. Speaker, they did nothing. I will stop with this. You kept silent then when speaking was in order. I appreciate that the truth hurts, and this is why the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is yelling.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude on that, for fear of imposing upon your kindness. And anyway the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell knows very well that Canadian farm producers understood that on September 4, 1984.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, like other Canadians and at the request of the Minister of Transport himself, we from Quebec will have an opportunity over the coming weeks to further strenghten our common position, which is very firm on that whole question of the Crow rate.

Let me simply point out that Quebec farmers and their representatives in this House will share the prevailing ideals of fairness and equity; they will have discussions with all their Canadian colleagues, whether they are farm producers or Members of Parliament, in order to reach, more than ever in this Confederation which we have a duty to build, a national consensus, a policy under which we shall be respecting every Canadian man and woman across our nation.

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join in this debate with respect to the Western Grain Transportation Act. I wish to commence my remarks by complimenting the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) on his maiden speech in the House of Commons. I also wish to compliment him on the way in which he was able to respond to the inappropriate interventions from this side of the House. I congratulate him on a very fine presentation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1750)

Mr. Angus: I rise to support the amendment which I had the honour to second, which states that this House rejects the transfer of the Crow benefit payments from the railroads to the producers as recommended in the Hall Committee Report. As I listened to the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), I realized that so often we in this House, and I think people across Canada, see the Western Grain Transportation Act as something which only affects the prairie Provinces. Nothing could be further from the truth. It affects the three prairie Provinces, yes, but it also affects Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada. It does affect producers in each of those provinces in terms of transportation. I, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), say that this is a transportation subsidy not an agricultural or grain subsidy, and we should look at it in that context. The movement of grain from the prairie Provinces through the Port of Thunder Bay—half of which I represent—is part of the backbone of the economy of a lot of eastern Canada. The grain which moves through Thunder Bay is upwards sometimes of 23 million tonnes for export. As we note how it flows through the transportation system, we realize how broadly the Grain Transportaton Act affects the economy. Twelve per cent of the grain handled in Thunder Bay is also handled in the Port of Montreal; 7 per cent in Sorel; 7 per cent in Trois-Rivieres; 15 per cent in Quebec City. Saint John and Halifax both handle 2 per cent of the export grains which move through my port. Significantly, 37 per cent of the grain which moves on those rail lines from Manitoba through Thunder Bay is transshipped through the two ports of the riding of Manicouagan—which is the riding held by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country—21 per cent in Port Cartier and 16 per cent in Baie Comeau. Clearly, whatever happens on the Prairies will be felt all the way through that system.

If there is a situation where more grain is moving in an easterly direction, then all of those communities will benefit both directly and indirectly. If, on the other hand, for some reason the movement of grain through the eastern leg of our export situation is reduced, then we hurt all the way through. We hurt in Manitoba in terms of rail jobs and services. We hurt in Thunder Bay in terms of grain handling jobs, marine jobs and the other spinoff jobs in the community. The same could be said all the way through the Great Lakes into the St. Lawrence River up to Atlantic Canada.

I rise in the House today to support the motion that we continue to pay the Crown benefit to the railroads rather than to the individual producer. There are a number of things which will happen out there in the grain industry if there is not a national policy in effect. With changes in pricing and rates, the individual farmer would have to make a very hard decision between supporting the Canadian economy on a broad base and recognizing the limitations of his own income and opting for an avenue of transportation which, while it would be beneficial to him, could be hurtful to other Canadians. It is no different from decisions individual Canadians make all the time about whether they buy a Canadian product or something which is produced in another country. It does not matter whether it is shoes or automobiles or a decision about which method to use to ship one's grain. If it is left to the individual, he will naturally look at his own finances and, of necessity, he would have to go with the lowest price.

But we, as a nation, have some responsibility. We provide a Crow benefit to ensure that our export grains can be moved to an export position in a manner which allows us to compete in the world markets. I think we have to stay with that concept, and the only way we can do that is by continuing to make the payments to the railroads. It is extremely efficient to do that. We only have to write out two cheques per year. If we pay to the producers, we will have to establish a very large bureaucracy, which will increase the administrative costs of providing that same benefit. For that reason alone, I think this Government should reject the Hall recommendation and keep the legislation the way it is and pay the railroads a transportation subsidy.

Having said that, I would like to point out that there needs to be some changes in the kind of allocations and some provision for those improvements in the transportation system about which the Minister talks, so that on a national basis we can ensure that our grain products can continue to move to an export position and be able to compete in the world market.

A lot of the grain which Canada produces moves through the Port of Thunder Bay. In fact, historically, 60 per cent of that grain has been shipped eastward, primarily to customers in Europe, Russia and other countries in that general neck of the woods. But in recent years, the balance has begun to shift to a point where today less than 50 per cent of that grain is moving through the Port of Thunder Bay. With that reduction have come lay-offs, and not only in Thunder Bay, although we have suffered the greatest amount of lay-offs. This summer, for instance, we had over 1,200 of our people out of work. That was felt all the way down the Seaway system. We have seen unemployment levels of around 45 per cent to 50 per cent in some of the communities in Quebec which are involved in grain movement. Eighty per cent of the business of my port is grain movement, so you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, why it is so important to me and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), that we keep fighting to ensure that we continue to get our fair share. If the Government decides to accept the Hall Report and its recommendations, then we will no longer get our historical and fair share of the grain movement.

The movement of grain is under attack from many sources. In another place in this capital city of ours, we will be dealing with an Act which will allow the Government to charge for coastguard services. That will add to the cost of moving grain east and west. It will add to the cost of dredging and ice-breaking and navigational aids. That will make us less competitive. The Laurentian Pilotage Authority has asked for increases in excess of 60 per cent. The CTC has held hearings but has yet to report on whether it will allow those increases to occur. This summer the cost of weighing our grain which is charged back to the producer and the elevator operators has gone up. The $30 million dollar carve out, as proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this past spring's budget to take $30 million from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, is going to force the tolls up.

• (1800)

Most recently a gentleman by the name of Esmond Jarvis from the Canadian Wheat Board proposed that we legislate geography, that we no longer say that the midpoint between western movements of grain and eastern movements of grain is somewhere around Saskatchewan but that we move it to the Manitoba/Ontario border. It would henceforth become cheaper to move grain from Winnipeg to Vancouver than to Thunder Bay, which is only some 400 miles away.

We are being attacked on all sides. If the Government accepts the Hall Committee Report it will be one more nail in the coffin of the port of Thunder Bay. We cannot allow that to happen. We cannot allow any of these things to happen.

We have to continue with our traditional balance of grain movements in this country to ensure that those jobs that exist today can be retained where they are and not shifted to another part of this country or to another country. That is what will happen if we become less and less competitive.

We are already fighting subsidies provided by the Americans and by the EEC to their grain producers. The last thing that we in Canada should be doing is adding costs to our own products.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this because I am hoping that the request that my colleague from Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) at the end of his remarks—

Mr. Mazankowski: New rules!

An Hon. Member: No new speakers!

Mr. Angus: Well, we offered the opportunity for the other Parties not to put up speakers but they chose to do so and, in fairness, we have to have some balance.

Mr. Blaikie: The truth has to be heard.

Mr. Angus: But I am going to have to conclude my remarks early. That would allow one more speaker 20 minutes and still afford an opportunity for a vote on this very important question. I think it is time that all three Parties in this House give a clear indication where they stand on the issue of paying the Crown benefit, whether to the producer or to the railroads. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I believe today's debate is very timely, especially in the context of the current situation in agriculture. I had the privilege, together with a few of my colleagues, to go on a tour that brought us around Western Canada where we met with many farmers. Within 15 days, we visited some 15 communities from Winnipeg to Vancouver.

At each of these communities, between 8 and 12 briefs were presented to us, at the level of the national caucus of the Liberal Party of Canada, by farm producers' organizations, including the wheat pools, dairy producers, grain producers and in fact just about every commodity groups, and I was able to see first hand just how precarious the farm situation is in Western Canada, especially because of bad weather, including the drought and grasshoppers that devastated a significant part of the acreage, but also because of the cost price squeeze, the ever rising costs of production and the sharp reduction in the price of wheat resulting in an ever shrinking profit margin. So there is great anxiety in the agricultural sector.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to digress too far from the motion we are debating; however, I suggest we cannot put this debate in its proper context without referring somewhat to the general situation in agriculture and without mentioning that the Hall report raises considerable concern and that farmers and commodity producers in Western Canada are anxious to learn about the position of the Government because of the impact it will have on their financial planning for the next few years.

I have noticed that most of the briefs that were presented to us, particularly by wheat producers in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, as well as by producers in British Columbia and Alberta, although the production is much lower in the latter Province, that most of the briefs that were presented to us in the Western Provinces insist heavily on the issue of wheat transportation and the manner in which payments or grants would be paid out.

I would not want to make a mistake or to risk quoting figures that could be misleading, but I would say offhand that some 75 per cent of briefs that were presented to us by various commodity groups and especially by wheat pools indicated a strong preference for maintaining the present legislation, that is, for continuing to issue payments to railways rather than to producers.

I must admit that in Alberta the reverse was true; however, when looking at the whole picture, it seemed to me that the view expressed in the briefs that were presented to us was, on the whole, abundantly clear. Moreover, on both sides of the matter, people are concerned because they cannot figure out what will be the position of the Government.

Turning now to the situation in the East, that is in Quebec, in the Atlantic provinces and also in parts of Ontario, there are also great concerns in these areas, and the motion introduced by my colleague from Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is certainly timely. Indeed, it could give the government the opportunity to reassure Western Canada producers, to bring them up to date on the issue while at the same time reassuring producers in the East. Obviously, significant amounts are at stake—some $650 million a year, as far as we can estimate. This is therefore a most significant amount in the overalll farming economy.

I listened earlier to my colleague the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), and of course this was his maiden speech in this House, so it seems. It had not occurred to me that after a year and a half, there were still Progressive Conservative Members who had not not risen in this House. I apologize for that. I did not know it was his maiden speech. Had I known, I might have left out some remarks I made, but apart from that context of a maiden speech, I have to tell him he should be careful in his second speech. Apparently he forgot which political party introduced that legislation. But I am also looking forward to his stating, in the second speech he hopefully will be making very soon, whether he supports the Hall Report or not. He spoke for 20 minutes or so. He blamed the Liberals for all kinds of things, but he still has to tell us what he, as a Progressive Conservative Member for Champlain, and his party were going to do. He quoted the UPA. He quoted the Coopérative Fédérée, and I am convinced that the UPA in particular would have been very pleased to learn that from a Progressive Conservative Member, and much more so from the Minister.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the UPA is now holding their convention in Quebec City. It is their annual convention. I believe they will be sitting today, tomorrow, Friday and Saturday. Their discussions will deal with orientations. I am sure that the UPA during this convention would have appreciated being told by the Hon. Member for Champlain or another Member from Quebec what the Quebec Conservative caucus will do about that Hall Report. He did not tell us. He pointed out that apparently in years past the previous Government did . . . Mr. Speaker, that is a typical Conservative comment.

Looking at the speeches that were made during the debate on that Bill by our Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), who was then the Opposition critic, reading through his comments, we find all kinds of objections to the Bill that was then being discussed, but it is impossible to know whether he supported it or not. And that is today's problem in the farming economy. Perhaps my colleague from Western Canada will rise later and tell us what will be the policy of this Progressive Conservative Government. That is the main thrust of our motion.

They can blame the Liberals for all sorts of sins committed in the past, but they certainly cannot blame them for lacking courage, because there is a statute in our books that was put in there by the Liberal Party when it was in Government.

We may have made errors, Mr. Speaker. I was not a member of that Government, I was not even a Member in this House. The Liberal Party may have made errors with respect to that issue, but there is now in this House an overwhelming Conservative majority. What we are asking them is quite simply this: What are you going to do? You have criticized the new method for making payments in respect of wheat transportation, you have the Hall Report in front of you, you have the representations as quoted earlier by a colleague that were made by the UPA and the Coopérative fédérée, but he did not say whether he was for or against, but it does not matter. There are representations which we ourselves, which I myself have received during my visit to Western Canada, and it is up to you now, since you are no longer in the Opposition, after criticizing for years, it is up to you to take a stand on that Crow issue. Are you going to get rid of it? Are you going to maintain it? Are you going to let everyone choose for himself so that there will be complete chaos? What are you going to do about the Saint Lawrence river ports? Will everything be moved to the Manicouagan constituency and will the silos in Montreal and Quebec City be closed?

All these questions are related to the discussion we have had today, and in my opinion, it would be appropriate for the Government Members to explain their plans not only to us, as Members of the Opposition, but also to the Canadian farmers, who are doubly concerned because of what they were promised.

Mr. Speaker, as Deputy Speaker of this House, I know that you cannot take sides in partisan debates, but you heard like myself Quebec Members say during the electoral campaign: The Crowsnest will never be changed. When travelling in Western Canada, however, I learned that the Conservative Members of Parliament were saying just the opposite during the campaign. We now have an opportunity to know who was telling the truth: Conservative candidates in Western Canada or Conservative candidates in Quebec. As for us, we have already made our position clear. If there was a political price to pay, we have paid it. It is up to you now to decide and tell Canadian producers what you are going to do.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers have many grounds for concern, and I must point out that another one was added today when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his statement about the minimum tax. This affects Canadian farmers directly because, if we read the documents we have received, after having announced to the farmers that they would enjoy a capital gains tax exemption of up to $500,000 during the fiscal year they sell their farms—and the Minister should listen carefully because he might want to convince his colleague to change this—the Minister of Finance now tells them that, if they have zero taxable income during the fiscal year when they sell their farm for $250,000, $300,000 or $500,000, because of the way this is written, they will have to pay 12.5 per cent taxes on their capital gains.

I do not know whether this was the intention of the Minister of Finance. I have reread this document and I could even quote certain parts by heart. I am very glad to have drawn the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to this issue, but I would like to invite him to read the information on the minimum tax in paragraph 4 on page 4 under "Capital gains and losses", where we see, for instance, that the part of capital gains which entitled taxpayers to the life exemption will be taxed at the federal rate—

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that from time to time a debate like this can be rather broad and far-ranging, but I am not sure what capital gains has to do with the method of payment of the Crow rate.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to tell Canadian farmers that they should not cross the Government. They should not cross it as far as the Crow rate is concerned, particularly Quebec farmers, but also those in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, B.C., and Alberta. Two of my colleagues and I spent 15 days in western Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: You can spend 15 years and you will not understand the west.

Mr. Garneau: We listened to many, many briefs. During the electoral campaign in Quebec some of the Conservative candidates were campaigning to keep the Crow as it is. I have been told that the Conservative candidates in the west were campaigning against the Bill. There comes a time when we should know the truth. That is why the farmers do not trust the Government.

There is an additional reason not to trust the Government, and that is the declaration made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) this afternoon. At page 4 of the documentation tabled this afternoon it states that those who have a capital gain will have to pay 12.5 per cent on it. The year that a farmer sells his farm with a capital gain of $300,000 he will have to pay a minimum tax. This declaration comes only a few months after the same Minister of Finance and all the Conservative Members were praising the capital gains exemption as the thing which will save agriculture. Now they are coming back through the side door and imposing a 12.5 per cent tax on capital gains on farms.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time the Conservative Members of Quebec and elsewhere should stop playing hide-and-seek and speak the same language instead of doing like the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) who quotes from statements made by other people but fails to take position himself. I would tell them that it is time for a debate on this motion that will give the Government an opportunity to take a position and tell the farmers who are now looking after their books, because this is their slack season and they will be sowing in the spring, what decisions will be made. I urge the Government to take advantage of this debate and refrain from playing hide-and-seek and to let us know what will be the position of the Tory Government on the Hall Report.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) for his fine speech.

[English]

I wish also, Mr. Speaker, to reply to some of the comments just offered by the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). As happens so often with the Party which he represents, he has attempted to create confusion in many parts of Canada by spreading fear and apprehension. I know that the statement offered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) today will be extremely well received by the people of Canada because they have been saying it is very important that all Canadians pay an equitable share of taxation. I believe that in the end the statement offered by the Minister today will meet a desire of Canadians.

I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, other Canadians, and members of the Official Opposition, that Canadian farmers well remember which Party introduced the capital gains tax, and they will also remember very clearly which party nullified the capital gains tax for Canadian farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): The debate today is not on capital gains or on the minimum tax. The debate today is required by legislation dealing with the operation of the Western Grain Transportation Act at this particular time. Today we are taking a very important step in that process, a process which involves consultation with Canadian farmers and farm organizations. The process requires than an impartial committee be struck which is representative of the industry in Canada. It requires that committee to report to the House, and that the report, having been made to the House, be examined by Members of the House and then be presented to the Minister for his consideration.

• (1820)

The members of the Official Opposition have contributed a considerable amount of confusion to the debate this afternoon. I wish to stress that right now we are in the midst of this very important process. It is very appropriate that the Government should come before the House today and participate in this debate on the motion presented by the Official Opposition. Let us remind ourselves of that process and how it is unfolding. While we may be aware of it, I suspect that many Canadians are not. Unfortunately, if they only listen to the speeches by members of the Official Opposition I believe they will become more confused.

I remind Hon. Members and all Canadians that the legislation required that a committee be struck to examine the Western Grain Transportation Act and its implementation. This was done according to the statute. That committee was struck in 1984 and began its process of hearings as required by the legislation. The legislation required that it make a report to the Minister on or before March 31. Those recommendations were presented to the Minister and, as required by the legislation, were tabled in the House. There is provision within the regulations for Members of the House to request a debate, under certain regulations, and that is the debate which is taking place.

Let me point out that there has been a substantial change in the way Parliament operates. Our Government is in the midst of a process of consultation with farmers and farm organizations.

Mr. Mazankowski: As required in the Bill.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): That is required in the legislation. Indeed, it has been carried out because the Government is committed to consultation. With all due respect to members of the Official Opposition, it seems that they have not realized that a change occurred over a year ago with the election of a Government that was committed to a process of consultation.

Therefore, we do not enter into this process with preconceived decisions. We do not enter into this process under a facade of consultation. We genuinely have sought and continue to seek the input of farmers and farm organizations from all regions of Canada, as pointed out by the Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne).

We are also extremely fortunate that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), unlike his predecessor who spoke earlier this afternoon, sincerely believes that the way to good Government is to work in co-operation with the provinces, the organizations, individuals and all Members of the House. Such a process has not existed for a long time. I speak as a historian as well as a Member of Parliament. I have been here for two and a half years but as a historian in Canadian politics I know that such a process has been lacking for the last two decades. Therefore, perhaps it is understandable that members of the Official Opposition are confused that we have no preconceived position on this extremely important issue.

The issue we are concerned with today has been of immense importance to western Canadians since 1897. Unfortunately, those listening to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) may have come to the conclusion that the Crow's Nest Pass Agreement came into effect in 1881.

This agreement was very much a fabric of western Canada. Canadians will know that in 1897 the railways received certain benefits from the Government of Canada to construct the line through the Crow's Nest Pass, which is so much an integral part of British Columbia. In return for that financial compensation and acreage compensation which the railways received in 1897, the farmers of Canada were guaranteed a certain concession with respect to freight rates into the future.

A couple of years ago the Government of the day—the Official Opposition today—decided to change what had been a perpetual agreement up to that time. I will not repeat the debate which took place at that time, when we debated this issue into the early morning hours.

The point is that the legislation under which we are operating now was passed as a result of the decision by the Official Opposition, which was the Government of the day. It is important to understand that the so-called Crow gap, what is now called the grain transportation refund, was part of a package that was put together two years ago to compensate those western Canadian farmers who were injured as a result of that policy change. Many western farmers would have preferred that that policy change never took place two years ago. Indeed, they would prefer that we never became involved in the question of the Crow gap involving some $650 million or the question of how it should be paid. Nevertheless, we must live with that decision because it is the law of the land. It is an irrevocable change.

We are now concerned with a review of how that policy is operating. Let me stress that we are not talking about a new policy of subsidy implemented some two years ago. We are concerned with compensation for a policy that was enunciated some 80 years ago and changed two years ago.

The difficulty we face with this issue is that we are attempting to govern during a time of real financial crisis. Canadian farmers are suspicious about any policy change, the suggestion of a change or, indeed, any suggestion that would raise doubts about the future.

I say with all confidence that our Government has done more for agriculture in 15 months than any Government in Canadian history over a comparable period of time. However, despite what we have done and will continue to do there remains a financial crisis among farmers which must be addressed, as well as a tremendous suspicion within that farm community.

With all due respect to members of the Official Opposition, I believe that that suspicion which has been growing in western Canada is part of the legacy left to us when we came to office some 15 months ago. I am pleased to see that my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), agrees with me for once. We regret that this legacy exists and that there was cause for such suspicion, but it is a fact. Therefore, when we address a question as important as this we must proceed with all caution so that we do not add to the suspicion or cynicism that exists.

That is why our strategy of consultation is exceedingly important. Philosophically speaking, I believe that this should be a strategy followed by any Government. However, it is particularly important at this time.

The Hon. Minister is reassuring Canadian farmers and I do not believe that there is another Minister in the Government or previous Governments who is better suited for the task with which he is appointed than the present Minister. I have every confidence that the Minister will proceed in such a way that he will reassure those various farm organizations that do not agree on this subject that their sensitivities and fears are being carefully considered.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture was in Ottawa some three weeks ago to attend meetings. One of the highlights of that week was their meeting with the Prime Minister and 18 Cabinet Ministers. I believe that is an event such as has not taken place in recent times. I asked the Canadian Federation of Agriculture what they felt about the method of payment issue. It was not that they did not have any attitudes. Of course they had many, but they had no position. We recognize the issue which we are addressing as being extremely important for many reasons.

• (1830)

As I have said already, people are very apprehensive about anything which would work to their financial disadvantage. It is an exceedingly complex issue which is not well understood in various parts of Canada. Perhaps it is fair to say that it is not well understood by farm organizations in any region of Canada. There is still a considerable amount of confusion.

What we have is a report of an inquiry which tried honestly and sincerely to listen to farm groups and to alleviate some of their fears. It has tried to come up with a reform which is "resource neutral", in its own words. The committee of inquiry went in that direction and sought a solution which would not injure any particular sector of the Canadian agricultural community.

I remind the House that there is a recommendation in the Hall report that compensation should be paid to any segment of the agricultural community, should it be established through due process that indeed there was injury. The fear that there might be injury and the possibility of dealing with that injury are recognized in this report.

Also there was an attempt in the report to alleviate some concerns about the previous recommendation of acreage payments. This report abandoned that particular proposal and talked about net grain sales. I think that is a step forward in that regard. However, there are some remaining problems in that particular part of the report, as I see it and as was expressed to me by farmers. There is a fear remaining about the difficulty of monitoring sales between farmers. Also there is some fear that farmers who are feeding their own grain might divide into a grain enterprise and a cattle enterprise and try to take advantage of the proposed changes. These types of concerns remain and stress the importance of the process of continued consultation.

I am sure Hon. Members of the Opposition realize that this is an ongoing process throughout this crop year. In essence, it began some 12 months or so ago. However, the Minister is required, by the end of the crop year, to have considered these recommendations. That is why the debate is occurring today. I am sure there will be other opportunities in the future for it to be continued. This is an ongoing process. I think we are looking at some seven additional months, and I hope within the course of that seven months that there will be adequate opportunity for various farm organizations to reach a definitive position. Also I hope there is an opportunity for farm organizations which fear some of the implications of the report to speak directly with each other.

It seems to me, as political scientists and historians have said, that Canada is a very difficult country to govern because regionalism, which is so much a part of us, tends to be divisive. One way to lessen that regionalism is for those people who represent the different regions of Canada, whether they be Members of Parliament or part of the farm community, to have a chance to come together and perhaps informally meet on common ground to discuss their differences.

The Hon. Member for Champlain made an exceedingly important point today. He stressed that under the new Government, which has been in place for 15 months, he felt perfectly comfortable in rising as a representative of his province, on behalf of his constituents, and expressing their concerns. He felt that he could do that in an atmosphere where such debate was welcome. Other Hon. Members feel equally comfortable in the process. I believe I may be followed by one of my hon. friends from the Province of Alberta. I know that he, too, feels equally comfortable entering into this debate. The essence of the parliamentary process is that those of us who represent varying constituencies which sometimes have conflicting points of view must have the opportunity to express those points of view. In fact, later this evening we will be discussing parliamentary reform as a result of the "McGrath" report which is before the House. If I understand that report correctly, that is one of the main principles in it. The parliamentary part of the process which began today is an important step in the direction of parliamentary reform.

I want to conclude by saying that a great deal of discussion must yet occur. Although many of the farm organizations are not yet in agreement, whether they be in western Canada or elsewhere in the country, what we are doing today is setting the stage. We look forward to being a part of that process. I compliment Hon. Members who participated in this debate. Even though in western Canada we see this as being primarily a western Canadian issue, for historic and economic reasons, I am delighted that all Hon. Members of the House feel comfortable in participating, and I congratulate them on their contributions today.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I realize—

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought you wanted a vote on this.

Mr. Blaikie: I understand that there cannot be a vote. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), except on occasions when he disagrees with me, is very seldom wrong. I will take his word for that. However, on this occasion I want to reflect upon what happened to the statutory grain rate and to remind Hon. Members of the great things which were predicted by both railways if the Crow rate were to be changed.

In particular, I refer to something which happened this year as a result of an arbitrary action taken by one of the railways. I understand that a great many Hon. Members are concerned about it. I am referring to the arbitrary action of Canadian Pacific in depriving its pensioners of their pass rights. Many Members on all sides of the House have expressed concern about this matter. I am not aware of anyone in the House who supports the CPR in that action. I am sure almost all of us have CPR pensioners in our ridings and will therefore know how much of an insult this was to them, even though many of them may not use their passes. The amount of money which it costs CPR for those who use them is a very insignificant one indeed. However, that was the generous corporate response of a company that got its way with the change in the Crow rate and received $300 million per year which it otherwise would not have received. What was its response? Its response was to act in a mean, stingy, cold-hearted way toward its pensioners. I just wanted to put that on the record.

The other railway in the country, Canadian National, along with CPR, has responded in general through a systematic reduction in its employee levels. It has responded by trying to do away with what we regard as important processes for worker and public safety, such as the preservation of cabooses on trains. I do not have time to go into the record of the railways and their responses to getting what they wanted in terms of the Crow rate, but it has been an abominable one.

They have not shown the generosity one might expect from a recipient of this largesse from the public purse. They have not proceeded to deliver the kinds of jobs which they promised their employees. Many people in railway shops across the country were called in and showed nice movies about all the jobs that would be created. Since then we have had nothing but lay-off after lay-off. In fact, I was informed by CNR just yesterday that another 93 positions are to be eliminated at the Transcona shop. This is the kind of response we have had. Also we have had an unwillingness or a reluctance, shall we say, on the part of the Government to go ahead with other related programs, such as the boxcar rehabilitation program which came about as a result of a federal-provincial agreement. We have seen a third of that program implemented at Transcona. We have another two-thirds to go. That two-thirds is not happening yet. Instead, what do we have? We have more lay-offs at the shop.

I just want to put on the record that I think the behaviour of the railways following the change in the Crow Rate has not lived up to the promises they made to the Canadian people, and to a certain extent the Canadian people and Parliament itself, at least those who voted for the change, were hoodwinked by the railways.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the next order of business.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

REFORM OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the President of the Privy Council) moved:

That this House take note of the matter of reform of the House of Commons.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It will be one year ago tomorrow since this House established a special committee on reform. In so doing, Sir, it embarked on the most ambitious and comprehensive reform ever undertaken by any Commonwealth Parliament. This is the first opportunity we have had since that time to discuss the committee's reports, although much has taken place since the committee was struck.

We already have in place the recommendations of the first report on a provisional basis. Before dealing with that, though, I want to take this opportunity to thank my six colleagues on the committee who gave so selflessly of their time and who put so much effort and energy into the work of the committee. I want to thank especially my two Opposition colleagues, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who served as first vice-chairman of the committee and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who was the second vice-chairman of the committee. They, Sir, together with my colleagues on this side of the House, the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper), the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) and the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) were able to rise above narrow partisanship and take the broader view, thereby taking up the challenges presented to them by the Government and this House.

They brought to the task a personal commitment, a commitment to make this a better and more effective place to deal with the business of the nation. Critical to this was their commitment to enhance the role of the private Member. I want as well to acknowledge the work of the alternate members of the committee and the 83 Members of this House who made submissions to the committee.
