Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of an irreconcilable conflict between jobs on the one hand and health on the other. The two can be reconciled, and that is exactly what the Government is doing in Cape Breton and across the country.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, November 5, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ANNIVERSARY OF SIX MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT OF CLASS OF '65

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I wish to beg the indulgence of the House with respect to a question of privilege. Since many Members do not know, and most of those who sit in the Press Gallery are oblivious, which is understandable, let me say that, come Friday, November 8, six Members of this institution, three from one side and three from the other, who came in with Pierre Elliot Trudeau, Mr. Pelletier, Mr. Marchand and others who have gone by the way, to illustrate the political terminality of this system, will be celebrating—or expressing condolences for—their twentieth anniversary in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, because in the ordinary democratic way most of us will be roasted in our respective constituencies on either Thursday, Friday or Saturday, I was trying to catch your eye today. These Members, illustrious, constructive and good Members all, are the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) and the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) who came in with Pierre Elliot Trudeau—some of us have remained.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I conclude on this note. Because these six Members are semi-superannuates—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I said "superannuates". That is why I wished to beg the indulgence of the House to ask a question of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), which was not a set-up because he will not like it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: To represent the feelings of those of us who are superannuates, my question is about—and I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will recognize me tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think the House has signalled its respect for those who have served 20 years. I am sure everyone here would want us all to wish those six a very special day. In that context, I am prepared to guarantee the Hon. Member a question tomorrow.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you giving me the right to ask my question now?

Some Hon. Members: No!

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. During Question Period I inadvertently misled the House when I suggested in my question that Syncrude had a tax remission from the year 1978 to the year 2002. It was to the year 2003. I would like to correct my question.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present to the House a petition signed by 533 citizens from the Pokemouche River area in New Brunswick, who are asking the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to prevent the use of eel pots and boxnets in this river, in order to upgrade the tourist industry in the region.

POSTAL SERVICE FOR RESIDENTS ON DAVELUY STREET IN SAINT-LÉONARD-ANJOU

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions.

My first petition is from residents in the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, living at numbers 6870 to 7045, Daveluy Street, who are asking the Canada Post Corporation which is already providing services to residents of part of the street, to offer the same services to others who are not receiving them.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my second petition bears several hundred signatures of people from the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, who are asking this House to grant, via the Government, full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Petitions

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by Nora Harrison who lives on Prince Edward Street in Vancouver and other residents of the east end of Vancouver who say that in their opinion the indexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. They ask that the indexing be reinstated.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to present two petitions to the House. The first one is from residents in the Shediac area, and the second from residents of Sackville and Tantramar. Mr. Speaker, these petitioners are demanding full indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by constituents of Winnipeg-Birds Hill who join with other Canadians in protesting the deindexation of the family allowance.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which I have the honour and the privilege of tabling in the House today, and which concern this Government's appalling decision to reduce indexation of family allowances. One of these petitions is signed by constituents from the electoral district of Trois-Rivières; one is from the electoral district of Kent in Ontario; one is from the electoral district of Regina West in Saskatchewan; one is from the riding of Spadina in Ontario; one is from the riding of Hull-Aylmer in Quebec, a province well represented in this House; one is from the riding of Langelier in Quebec; one is from the riding of Malpeque in Prince Edward Island; and finally, one from the riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador in Newfoundland.

● (1510)

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from a number of workers at the CRS Workers Co-operative in my riding of Vancouver East. They think that the deindexation of family allowance, combined with tax increases and budget hand-outs, place an extraordinary burden on families, especially on women, single parents and poor families.

They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

I also have the honour to present a petition from professional social workers from the School of Social Work at UBC in Vancouver. They also call for a withdrawal of Bill C-70. They humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents from Vancouver, Surrey and Richmond, British Columbia, who also comment on their displeasure with the Government's intention to deindex family allowance payments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition signed by 4,000 workers, all members of Local 6500, United Steel Workers of America, in the Sudbury Basin. This petition decries the fact that the Government has changed the Unemployment Insurance Act so that pension income will be considered earned income effective January 1, 1986.

The petition calls for Parliament to rescind that particular provision before it comes into effect on January 1, 1986. This petition also joins the 10,000 other petitioners whose petitions have already been presented in this House on this subject.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling petitions from the people of the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie, asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

I have another petition, on behalf of the people of the riding of Sherbrooke in the province of Quebec, who are also asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

I also have petitions from the people of the ridings of Saskatoon East and Saskatoon West in Saskatchewan, the federal riding of Chateauguay and the riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon; these people are also asking the Government to withdraw its Bill aimed at de-indexing family allowances.

I also have petitions from people from Newfoundland, from the ridings of St. John's East and St. John's West, Mr. Speaker, and from Toronto, in the riding of St. Paul's, and from the riding of Timiskaming in Ontario, and my last petition is from the riding of my colleague from Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic who is ill at this time.

All these people are asking the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to submit a petition on behalf of my constituents in Ottawa Centre and on behalf of a number of residents of the riding of Nepean-Carleton and of the City of Winnipeg, all of whom protest the decision of the Government to deindex the family allowance and urge the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases which particularly hit young families with children.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House of Commons a petition signed by a number of citizens of the constituency of Prince Albert, and a number of citizens of the City of Saskatoon. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition from a number of constituents in Spadina and other residents of the City of Toronto who object to the Government's Bill which would partly deindex the family allowance. They ask that the House of Commons have this Bill withdrawn as well as the unfair tax increases which go with it.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present these petitions signed by 2,750 constituents from Windsor-Walkerville who demand that full indexation of universal family allowance be maintained and that the unfair tax increases be rescinded.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and an honour to present petitions signed by residents of the metropolitan Toronto area. These persons, largely women, protest the fact that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that Question No. 435 will be answered today.

[Text]

STREET LETTER BOXES, PRESCOTT, ONT.

Question No. 435—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, were any mail boxes in the Town of Prescott, Ontario recently removed from street corners and, if so (a) what is the name and job designation of the highest authority who made this decision (b) on what date was the decision made (c) on what date (d) how many?

2. Were the residents of Prescott given any prior notice of the decision to remove the boxes and (a) if so, by what means (b) if not, for what reason?

3. Will consideration be given to re-install the mail boxes?

4. Do the residents of Prescott receive door-to-door mail delivery and, if not, are there any plans to provide such a service?

5. What is the cost per year charged to individual residents of Prescott for post office boxes and what are the reasons for this charge?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows:

1. No street letter boxes have recently been removed from the Town of Prescott, Ontario.

(a), (b), (c) and (d) However, nine street letter boxes were removed from the Town of Prescott in December, 1983 as part of a continuous process of review which had resulted in the adoption in 1982 of an Ontario Region Cost Reduction Plan. Street letter boxes are not normally provided in communities not served by letter carriers.

2. Notices informing the public were placed on all boxes three weeks prior to removal.

3. Re-installation of boxes at this time would be inappropriate.

4. The residents of Prescott and its environs are served by one of the following modes of delivery: general delivery, lock box or rural route delivery. The three modes of delivery now employed are the most cost effective and are adequate ones to serve this and other similar communities.

5. The rate structure that the Corporation applied to post office box customers in Prescott is identical to that in the rest of Canada since a universal rate is in effect. The fee charged for a box is dependent on two factors: the size of the box rented, and the type of alternate service available to the customer renting the box.

The Corporation's rates are as follows:

		Category of Customers
Box Size	Dimensions of Box	Customers with Access to Delivery by Letter Carrier, Rural Route, Group Box, and Mail Courrier Service	All Other Customers
A	127mm • 87.3mm	$25.40	$ 6.74
B	127mm • 138mm	$50.88	$13.48
C	127mm • 290.5mm	$76.32	$20.22
D	266.6mm • 290.5mm	$96.46	$33.71

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LOTTERIES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the Parties and I think you will find a disposition to allow the following motion to be brought forward by unanimous consent, presented and passed without debate. The motion is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, when the Order of the Day for the second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries), is called and is disposed of this day, it shall stand referred to a Committee of the whole; and

Provided that not later than the end of the time provided for the consideration of Government Business this day, the Speaker shall interrupt, if necessary, any proceedings then before the House and shall put forthwith, and successively without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of the then remaining stages of the said Bill.

• (1520)

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say on behalf of my colleagues that we will, of course, give the necessary unanimous consent. However, I must confess that I would prefer us to have arranged among ourselves that the Bill be disposed of during the course of the day. I do not think it is necessary all the time for us to formalize these arrangements in a motion. I hope that among the three House Leaders we will be able to reach some understanding to allow legislation to be dealt with, without the necessity of a motion being put to the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my dilemma is simply this. The House Leader the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray) prefers that I give prior notice in writing with respect to understandings we reach as far as possible.

Mr. Deans: All right.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On the other hand, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) prefers the more informal procedure. I am equally friendly with both House Leaders and I am going to try and be Solomon-like in this dilemma and try to do my best to get a consensus.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since I feel somewhat aimed at in the remarks—

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Gauthier: —of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), I would point out that it is understandable that I cannot always be on top of all these issues because I do not attend the meetings of House Leaders. However, I am often called to give my agreement to these things. I do not do that unless I know what I am talking about. I did consult with the President of the Privy Council before and I agreed to this procedure today.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Jelinek, for Mr. Crosbie, moves that Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries), be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased on behalf of the Government of Canada to make a few comments on Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code regarding lotteries. It was just over one year ago that I began negotiations with provincial lottery Ministers, asking them to contribute $100 million towards this Government's commitment to the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary. In return I proposed, on behalf of the Government of Canada, that we would amend the Criminal Code, which would in effect put into legislation the 1979 lottery agreement giving the provinces sole jurisdiction over lotteries and other specific gaming operations. I am happy to announce again that on June 3, 1985, the federal and provincial Governments concluded and signed an agreement incorporating the $100 million funding. The Bill we are discussing today is the result of that agreement.

The provisions in the Code are very complex, perhaps as complex as some tax statutes. At times their meaning must be discovered with the help of lawyers or the courts. For years uncertainties in the law have existed. This resulted in the launching of law suits by each Government over the proper interpretation of the present law, and the rights and responsibilities of each level of Government concerning the operation of lotteries and other gaming activities. These legal battles led to ill feeling between federal and provincial Governments, and diverted public resources to needless court battles. When this Government took office, it decided to put an end to unproductive federal-provincial wrangling and embark upon a course of action which would achieve mutual agreement among the two levels of Government for the public benefit.

One of the provisions of the June agreement provided for consultation with the provincial Ministers responsible for justice. Since that time, officials of the Department of Justice and their provincial counterparts have consulted each other concerning other changes to the Criminal Code consistent with the substance of the proposals contained in the agreement. The negotiations concerning funding for the Calgary Olympics provided an opportunity for achieving mutual federal-provincial reconciliation of these outstanding legal issues. Therefore, the agreement included proposals for both out of court settlement of outstanding federal-provincial litigation, and clarification of the legal rights, powers and responsibilities of each level of Government.

I would like at this time to detail for the benefit of the House the exact nature of the amendments proposed in the Bill which would achieve that clear clarification I justs mentioned. The repeal of Section 188.1 of the Criminal Code would end the legal authority of the federal Government, and the Governments of one or more provinces which have entered into an agreement jointly with the federal Government, to operate and manage sports pool betting. As the House knows, one of the first Acts of this Government when it took power was to dismantle the administrative structure of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. You will recall that this corporation was at that time losing some $1.5 million a week of taxpayers' money, not to mention creating a federal-provincial irritant which went way beyond the scope of already existing irritants between the two levels of Government. The present amendment would legally kill the ability of the federal Government to restart the operation of federal sports pools by any new Crown corporation.

As I mentioned, in 1979 the then Conservative Government agreed with the provinces that it would no longer operate federal lotteries. However, that agreement was not put into legislation. The proposed repeal of Section 190(1)(a) of the Criminal Code now would go further in preventing the federal Government from restarting the operation of federal lotteries. These two amendments would thereby remove the legal authority for the federal Government to operate sports pools, lotteries and other gaming activities. Such activities would only be permitted under direct provincial management and control, or under the operation of other persons such as boards of fairs or religious or charitable organizations, in accordance with a licence issued by the province. That, of course, is already taking place in a number of our provinces. Furthermore, this Bill would extend the privileges that agricultural fairs enjoy now to include any fair or exhibition with regard to the running of games. In other words, this Bill is legislating what is already in effect so far as the laws of the provinces are concerned, as well as putting into legislation the 1979 agreement between the federal and provincial Governments.

For many years Canadian companies have been highly regarded for their expertise in matters related to technology and printing. One of the amendments in this Bill will include the expansion of that expertise because it has been sought world-wide. This Bill now permit Canadian companies to export materials related to lotteries and gaming, thus adding another dimension to our export package.

For many years as well the definition of lotteries has been a contentious point. This Bill fully clarifies the term "lottery" in a clear and concise manner. In addition, the proposed amendments in this Bill clarify what types of lotteries and gaming activities the provinces may operate and conduct.

I think it is clear from what I have said that this Bill clarifies a number of uncertainties that existed within the law. In addition, it gives a clear legislative recognition to past and present provincial activities, and also puts some very clear restrictions and bounds on what is and what is not permissible. Accordingly, given the state of the current law and the judicial interpretion of it, the proposed Bill does not promote an expansion of gambling. I think it is very important for Members to understand that this Bill does not promote the expansion of gambling, but rather sets some realistic and clear standards of what is permissible.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is long overdue. It certainly spells out in black and white a much clearer picture of lotteries and associated games in Canada and transfers to the provinces the lottery rights, which was the intention of the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979.

I would like to add my thanks to all of those who participated for eight or nine months in the very long and tough negotiations in order to bring the agreement to a conclusion in June. This agreement will provide the federal Government with $100 million of non-tax revenues from the provinces. It will eliminate the irritant which existed between the provinces and the federal Government and has, therefore, opened the door to creating much better federal-provincial co-operation in other areas. I would particularly like to thank all the people in the Department of Justice who worked from the federal standpoint. Most important, I would like to thank the provincial Ministers responsible for lotteries for making this Bill a reality.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-81. I learned only a few minutes ago about the business of the House this afternoon.

To put the Bill in context, let me say that I believe it evolved from the sports pool lottery which was in operation during the previous administration. That particular mechanism to generate funds for the Calgary Winter Olympics was a noble one because it recognized the need to generate enough funds to make the Olympic Games a success. When we talk of the Olympic Games we are talking about an international event in which the world-wide sporting community will be involved. Therefore, it is important that the Olympic Games be a success.

The previous Government committed itself to a contribution of some $200 million. I am pleased that the present Minister has been able to secure $100 million from the provincial Governments as well as set up a coin program which will generate between $30 million and $50 million.

There are a number of important factors that are generated by this particular piece of legislation which the Minister failed to address. First, he had given us a commitment that the provinces would be contributing upward of half of the $200 million commitment. At the time the promise was made it was an unqualified commitment that the provincial Governments would consider it as part of their mandate to participate with the federal Government in staging this international event. Now we learn that that support is qualified, that the provincial Governments want something in return for the portion that they will donate to the Olympics rather than saying that as provinces they have an obligation to work in partnership with the federal Government to help stage the Winter Olympics in Calgary. Their support was dependent upon the piece of legislation which is before the House today. Is it fair and proper that the right to run lotteries or maintain mechanisms to generate funds for sporting activities should be given to the provinces without any assurance that the moneys generated by the provincial Governments will be directed back into the sports field?

Another thing which the Minister failed to outline was how the remaining portion of the $200 million will be financed. As I mentioned at the outset, we have approximately, depending upon the figures used, $130 to $140 million of the $200 million commitment. There has been no information forthcoming from the present Minister since his appointment in September as to how the shortfall will be picked up. There is no firm commitment on how much money will be generated by the coin program and, therefore, Canadians, those organizing the Olympics and the athletes themselves, do not know how or if the rest of the moneys will be raised.

There is also very little information, if you put aside the previous argument, on how the $100 million to be contributed by the provincial Governments will be shared. Canadians from the various provinces are asking themselves how the split of the $100 million will be arranged. That is an important consideration when one realizes that some provinces are not in a position to contribute on a proportional basis. I would have appreciated it if the Minister had taken the opportunity to elaborate on the splitting up of the provincial contributions. I think it is unfair for a have-not province, if I may use that term, to contribute the same proportional amount as Alberta or Ontario would contribute.

As I mentioned at the outset, I do not completely agree with the concept of removing the lottery business from the federal domain and saying that it is only for the provinces. I believe that the present Minister shares my feelings on that. In the Calgary Herald of September 20 he is quoted as saying, in relation to the sports pool program: "We need to come up with a different funding system and that will be a priority". I think that is very important, Mr. Speaker. When the Minister and the Government talk about eliminating a program, about modifying a piece of legislation and about the federal Government abandoning on area, then it is incumbent upon them to say also what will be replacing that system.

In this case sports organizations and interests that have used sports pools to generate funds for sporting activities and are seeing the rights to those pools given to the provinces without any guarantee that funds will be pumped back into the federal sports scene will want to know where they are left. Quite often when Governments tighten the purse strings, as the Government has done, it is inevitable that sportings and cultural activities take a beating and experience very severe financial restraints. The sporting community ought not to be treated in that fashion. If we are going to delegate away an element that generated funds for the sparting community, it has a right to know with what that element will be replaced. The Minister has an obligation to say that we are abandoning the sports pool and replacing it with another mechanism which it is felt will in fact address the needs of the sporting community. It was the same case in 1979 when the then Prime Minister made an agreement with the provinces to abandon the lotteries field and give a monopoly to the provinces. Was that a fair deal?

I am not suggesting that we should be at war with the provinces, but if we are looking at the sporting constituency, as the Minister obviously should, then we should be speaking for that constituency. In 1979 the federal Government gave away the lottery area which was generating moneys, some of which was to be used in the sporting community. The Government gave away a $200 million plus industry in return for a simple $35 million share. The loser in that deal is the sporting community.

The idea of a lottery or a sports pool is not foreign nor very difficult to understand within the sporting community. Quite often there are Members in the House of Commons who shun lotteries and question whether they are really a hidden tax on individuals who play lotteries the most. They say that some studies have shown that the people who use lotteries the most tend to be in a lower or moderate income bracket.

However, the Canadian Olympic Association has clearly been on the record as endorsing the former sports pool corporation and endorsing lotteries as a way of generating funds for the Canadian Olympic Association. It is also a concept that is not foreign to other countries when considering ways of generating funds for amateur and professional sporting activities. The sports pool or lottery at the federal level which helped to support federal sports initiatives was not totally unique in this country. Many countries in the world have mechanisms which may not be called lotteries or sports pools but which are similar to our lotteries and are used to generate funds for sporting activities.

The sports community in this country is suffering from a lack of financial resources. I cannot think of any better example of that severe financial handicap facing sports organizations than our national soccer team. Last September, the Canadian soccer team qualified for the World Cup soccer tournament for the very first time in Canadian history. They have been attempting to reach the international finals for 28 years and finally, last September, the Canadian soccer team was able to fulfil that very impressive and nationalistic goal.

There was great applause and much back-slapping and congratulations for the men and women who made that victory possible. However, let us look at the condition facing the national soccer team and its players now. I was shocked to read in the Toronto Corriere Canadese newspaper, the reality of the national soccer team and its players. It was pointed out in that article that the captain of the soccer team and his family as well as seven other colleagues and families of the seventeen member team were living on unemployment insurance. They did not have a full-time job because they had to train and there were no training funds available, to date, for these players and coaches.

That condition is an embarrassment and should not exist. Yet they do not receive any money. I am told that the only money forthcoming will not be until January when the official training period begins for the national soccer team. The amount of money to be given to the 17 players and coaches is still to be determined. It will largely depend on the generosity of the private sector.

Moreover, it was also reported in that article that part of the team is training in Vancouver and the remaining portion is training in Toronto. Our national soccer team will be playing against the best teams that the world has to offer. It will be in Mexico being watched by the world. Yet part of the team is training in Vancouver while the remaining portion must train in Toronto. The reason for that is that we do not have the necessary funds to bring all the players and coaches together at the same time on the same field. The players are probably not questioning this publicly because they are likely playing from the heart right now. However, if they are honest with their feelings I am sure that they and other Canadians are asking how they can compete against the best teams in the world when their team cannot even be on the same field in order to train together.

I believe that is unfair. I suggest that other teams in the world that will convene in Mexico are receiving not only moral support but financial support from their Governments at all levels. They are receiving financial support both directly and indirectly.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that we are discussing Criminal Code amendments. I have listened with interest to the typical misinformation coming from the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), but I am wondering whether it should be noted that we are discussing Criminal Code amendments as proposed in the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has the floor.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. During his speech the Minister stated that this Bill certainly had its roots in the previous sports lottery Bill. The purpose of the sports lottery was to aid sports and I am talking about sports. It is one thing for the Minister to be defensive but he should get up on a proper point of order.

I am not misinforming the House of Commons because the information which I shared with Members in the House is true. Perhaps he should check with the captain of the national soccer team. We will then see who is misinforming and misleading the House.

Mr. Mantha: What about the hockey team?

Mr. Marchi: The Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) asks about the hockey team. We all know that Moe is a great hockey player but we are talking about soccer at the moment.

Before the Minister rose on his point of order, I was about to say that other countries are supporting their national teams. They do this directly through the funding of national sports federations and also indirectly through lotteries. Some of the proceeds from these lotteries are channelled into the sporting community.

The problem with our present system is that the sporting federations are not permitted to give moneys to teams which may be classified as professional. I believe we should adopt a more progressive, moderate and contemporary approach in dealing with our teams and athletes because, frankly, the situation facing our national soccer team, as a refletion of what is happening to other bodies in this country, is undignified.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is supposed to televise 42 of the 50 games to take place in Mexico. It will televise all three Canadian games in the first round. In order to perform well, we cannot simply rely on the good heart of the soccer players. We must rally behind the sporting community and this team in particular, and while providing that moral support we must also recognize that they must be trained properly in order to be competitive with the other countries.

Let us not take a back seat to anyone. Let us go to Mexico and expect to do well on the field. Let us go with the other teams from other countries and let us not be a laughing stock or an embarrassment in the way we treat our players and teams. Not many countries, even those less well off, treat their players and teams in the kind of a degrading manner.

I highlight that in trying to illustrate to this House and the Minister that the whole concept of federal lotteries and a federal sports pool should not be shunned or cast off quickly to appease provincial Governments. Yes, we should be at peace with our provincial Governments but we should also be doing things that will fulfil, be effective and positive for the national will. If there is a national will to see a national sports mechanism that will function and do honour to our athletes, then we need to fulfil it whether or not the provincial Governments like it. There is no guarantee in this legislation that moneys generated now or in the future to aid sports organizations and national sports teams will be fulfilled. That is the irony of this Bill. That is the irony of this Minister who is speaking on behalf of his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). It is fine to look at the Bill from a legal point of view, but the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) also has a sports constituency to defend. He should be defending the principles that are not in this Bill but should be.

The Government has said: "We are getting out of the lottery business and out of the sports pool business. We are shipping that business to the provincial Governments and they will be happy". That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice can get up and do that because he may not be sensitive to the intricacies of the sporting community but the Minister of Sports should be sensitive and probably is because he comes from that milieu. Therefore, I am somewhat surprised that the sporting community has been abandoned in the lotteries debate. We should not simply see the lotteries as evil and dark things. If they are run properly and if they can generate funds that can be donated to sports organizations without draining the Treasury, what is wrong with that? Around the world we see sports organizations benefiting from the resources that can be drawn upon from sports pools or lotteries.

We should be relooking and rethinking, although it might be a touch too late, at what this Government is doing. There should be a commitment at least from the provinces that, if they are to run the lotteries, some of the moneys intended to assist the sporting community will still be met. I have my doubts about that, Mr. Speaker. It is an unfortunate circumstance for our sporting community. It might be a victory in the Government's eyes for federal-provincial relations but I think that, to a certain degree, it is a cop-out to regional or provincial whims at the detriment of what should be a central and a national vision in this legislation.

We should be thinking not only about the Olympics in Calgary—which this Party, this Parliament and every single Member will rally around and do everything to make it the best Olympics ever—but also we should be talking philosophically about the move we have just made. Just because there has been a unanimous agreement to send this Bill forth in one day we should not laugh it off because there are serious repercussions and a philosophical bent undermining it. A national lottery, sports pool, or call it what you will, to aid sports groups and national professional teams is not wrong.

I hope somehow we can derive commitments from provincial Governments. They will now have a virtual monopoly on the lottery business. If the federal Government says it is wrong to be in the lottery business, why is it right for the provincial Government to be in the lottery business? If you disagree with lotteries, let us make lotteries illegal. We are saying somehow that lotteries are wrong, yet provincial Governments are able to run them.

There are some very serious inconsistencies in the Bill which displease me and I am sure they displease the sporting community. It was hopeful that some guarantee of funds, if lotteries are to exist and be permitted in Canada, would be made. That is not the case here, and I regret it very much.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join in the debate on this Bill. It is a privilege because the critic in my caucus for fitness and amateur sport, to which this Bill relates, is my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus). Illness has confined my friend to his home in the riding. Consequently, this afternoon, as the person in our caucus who spoke to the sports pool wind-up Bill a year ago less two days, I have the opportunity to speak for our caucus as the first speaker with regard to this Bill which makes certain amendments to the Criminal Code to legislate and set in statute form the consequences of agreements which the Conservative Government reached. These were initially arrived at in 1979, and the Conservatives chose to implement them as soon as they formed the Government in late summer, 1984.

In speaking to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I will be taking a stance of support for the Bill. I do that in a carefully defined way because it expresses support for the principle that the federal Government is removed from gaming activity in Canada. By this change in the statute law, the Government declares that it will not embark on any endeavours like Loto Canada, which was authorized in the mid-1970s, and the sports pool Bill, which was undertaken in 1982-83. That action, of removing the federal Government from gaming activity, is supported by members of my caucus who regard it as a desirable action.

I recognize that the clauses before us in Bill C-81 provide for other gaming activities to continue in Canada, particularly those in which the provinces, through a number of lottery corporations, are now largely embarked upon. That those clauses are in the Bill gives me considerable cause for unease.

Support for the Bill is partial. The Bill reprints sections of the Criminal Code which are not being changed. The fact that they are in the Bill is the focus for the unease I am expressing.

I want to say something about this matter of gaming and lotteries on which the Government of Canada allowed the provinces to embark and which the Canadian Government in 1978-79 attempted to get into more actively in trying to establish Loto Canada and later the sports pool.

The fact that the Canadian Government was prepared to consider gambling money as a support for fitness and amateur sport activities, for cultural activities and conceivably even for the funding of medical research, gave all Canadians concern about morality. The social implications of this Government action gave very real cause for concern.

I suggest that these are all important areas of activity. I think we would concede that immediately. I doubt whether there is a person in the country who would doubt the importance of medical research. There are people who would have varying assessments of the importance of cultural activity or, for that matter, of fitness and amateur sport, but I would expect most Canadians to place a fairly high value upon these activities. Given that there is this agreement among Canadians about the importance of such endeavours, it is my conviction and that of my colleagues that those activities deserve to be supported by the consolidated revenues of the country and by a proper tax system. Governments should not, in any way, shape or form, be involved in supporting these endeavours by calling upon non-tax revenues.

Given that kind of position, the Government is putting before us today, as it put before us in the sports pool wind-up Bill, a Bill that is only to be supported because of its half-way nature. What one wanted, in fact, was for the Government to concede that gaming is not a good thing, and to ensure that the provinces as well got out of the activity and that the provincial Governments and the federal Government used a sound tax system to generate the revenues to support these important endeavours.

It may be worth saying, in some expansion on that, that this point deserves to be underscored for fitness and amateur sport. I suspect that there are people who regard that as, in some way, a luxurious activity. I am not sure whether I am finding the right words for it, but they do not regard it as an important thing in the mainstream of our life with which Government should be directly involved. They do not appreciate the importance of supporting amateur sport properly and ensuring in our fitness programs that Canadians use their leisure well. The Government has a real stake, which certainly extends to the health of the participants and to the increasing health of the Canadian public. It actually exceeds that and involves the well-being, far beyond physical health, of the Canadian population. Given the importance that one can place on the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, it is all the more important that both aspects of that Ministry be properly supported. It is imperative that the consolidated revenues of the country be adequately called upon to support all these activities.

For that reason, the decision of the Governments, at either level, federally or provincially, to call upon gaming revenues or the results of lotteries to support these activities creates a sense of their own improper evaluation of these activities and represents something to which I am deeply opposed. I think that feeling is shared by all members of my caucus.

The fact of the matter is that others, including Ministers of the present Government, feel quite the same way. Perhaps I could drop back for a moment and note that when I spoke on November 8, 1984, I used a statement by one of the venerable members of my Party, who was then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Knowles, whom we have the pleasure of seeing at the Table frequently in the chair which he now holds by action of the last Parliament. I quoted the following statement of Mr. Knowles:

> It is because we believe that physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation are important aspects of Canadian life that we think they should be financed out of general taxation and, therefore, paid for on the basis of the ability to pay.
> We do not believe that aspects of life as important as physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation should be financed by gambling, which calls on the poor to pay for it, instead of taxation which is levied according to ability to pay.

That admirable statement from 1976 was echoed in the most impressive way by the Hon. Member for Halton, the present Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek). Speaking on the sports pool Bill three years ago, he said:

> At the outset, I would like to say that this sports pool is nothing more than an indirect taxation by devious ways and means. It is an underhanded way of collecting money from the Canadian public because the Government has failed in its responsibility time and time again to collect it by normal means.

He added to that admirable statement of principle, to which I hold myself, the following observation:

As a former athlete I support anything which can be done to help amateur athletes in this country. But certainly not by establishing the phoney, sleazy programs the Government is talking about which would be taking advantage primarily of the poor people of this nation, and then misleading them with false and misleading advertising.

That, too, is clearly expressed and admirable. I hold to every word of that. Surely the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, in introducing the Bill this afternoon for debate on second reading, would agree that it is only acceptable as a half-way measure. We should be involved with getting the provincial Governments out of these activities and with ending the spreading of lottery mania across the country, particularly ending the advertising of lotteries on our television screens and on the billboards of the nation designed to arouse in Canadians hopes which are very rarely fulfilled for anyone.

I want to say something about the matter of lotteries and their continuance at the provincial level because of this half-way measure in amending the Criminal Code. We should in fact be getting out of the business altogether, at least at the provincial level as well as the federal level. The provincial Government of Ontario recently changed and, as a result, opened windows and doors and produced papers of various sorts. It has provided us with some studies on gambling which are of considerable interest.

Of course there has been discussion in recent years as to who are the participants in gambling. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) alluded to some by suggesting that it was Canadians of lower income, the poor, pure and simple, and middle-income Canadians who tended to be the buyers of lottery tickets. The extent to which some of these people purchased lottery tickets leaves one suspecting that the consequence is a reduction of standard of life for them, in the almost always vain hope that they can somehow get out of the circumstances in which they are caught and get on to the rich life which they seek. The reports which were done for the Lottery Corporation in the Province of Ontario certainly underscored that reality. In one case they indicated that in fact it was groups of Ontarians of the sort I have been describing who tended to be the larger purchasers of lottery tickets.

Another study suggested that lottery ticket buyers were more poorly regarded by the public than they should be, and that an advertising campaign was in order to improve the image of those who were gambling. I do not know whether in fact those studies were behind the advertising campaigns to which we have all been exposed and to which I alluded earlier.

I should like to refer to two of the advertising campaigns in this province. There was the "Home, James" series, if I can call it that, which pandered to all kinds of desires for luxurious acquisition by our fellow citizens. The other campaign focused on a druggist in a particularly homey store, an aunt and her niece and the young clerk who works in the drugstore. Those two campaigns were designed to improve the image of the lottery buyer.

Enormous amounts of money have been spent on those advertising campaigns for television time and billboards. A great deal of money was spent on the series this summer that encouraged us all to continue buying lottery tickets while on vacation. All of these campaigns were designed to encourage our fellow citizens to gamble with the conviction that they are going to strike it rich and break out of their poverty and that they would finally enjoy all that their hearts had desired for years.

That kind of advertising is designed to drive people into a never-never land. The possibilities of winning a lottery are extraordinarily low in most cases. There is in fact much more chance of being struck by lightning, and in fact even being struck by lightning a couple of times, than there is of winning a lottery, according to statisticians. Given the small number of people who win, it arouses false hopes to appeal to people to buy tickets in the hope that they will be able to enjoy the kind of life that is held out to them in that series of advertisements.

The fact that advertisers believe that listeners are susceptible to these appeals says a great deal about the circumstances in which many of our fellow citizens are caught. I think we might as well recognize that for some years now, the lives of many Canadians have been lives of depression. During the high interest days of the early 1980s and even earlier, many Canadians were unemployed, caught on social assistance and found themselves without any significant meaningful place in society beyond what they were able to create in family and with friends and community. Given that sense of the hopelessness of breaking out and getting ahead, even for those who were employed in low-paying jobs with very little hope, it is understandable that an advertising appeal that suggests the possibility of prosperity, affluence and luxury would have some appeal to our fellow citizens.

There is something almost diabolical about the fact that the Government helped to create the depressing situation in which Canadians found themselves while at the same time pandering to them by advertising campaigns designed to suggest to them that there was a possibility of getting out of this depression by buying lottery tickets. A social illness is developing and Governments are playing a large part in supporting this. Unfortunately, this Bill which gives the provinces the monopoly on lotteries does nothing to end that.

At the time when Governments are very sensitive to the privacy of citizens, there has been very little protest about one of the most curious features of the lottery system, which is that winners effectively forfeit their privacy and anonymity. They stand revealed before the nation as suddenly wealthy people. There has been very little protest about the demand of the lottery associations that winners identify themselves and stand before television cameras revealed as the sudden possessors of half a million, a million, or in very few cases several million dollars. That particular violation of the privacy of people who have attempted by buying lottery tickets to break out of their straitened circumstances seems to me a curious contradiction on the part of Governments that are so concerned about the privacy of individual Canadians.

My comments on the effect gambling has had on our society and the social malaise to which it relates are, it seems to me, of very great importance. It is a matter to be regretted by any Government that is really concerned about achieving the kind of social order and public policy to which I and my colleagues are committed.

There is another aspect to the matter of what gambling fosters in citizens which is worth considering. We recognize that the use of lottery moneys for public purposes including fitness and amateur sport is designed to compensate for the Government's unwillingness to use consolidated revenues for that purpose. In looking to consolidated revenues as a basis for supporting these important activities, we do in fact want those revenues to be based on a sound system of taxation.

I do not think it is all that much of a novelty any longer to suggest that the tax system of Canada has become badly imbalanced to the detriment of just the people who tend to buy the most lottery tickets. The federal tax system and, because the provincial system largely rests on the federal system, the provincial tax system as well are oriented toward the taxation of individuals and small businesses. It is of course on middle-income Canadians that the income tax system draws first. As well, poor and middle-income Canadians are hit with sales and excise taxes.

The fact is that the burden of taxation has shifted in a most remarkable way from the balance between corporate and individual income tax and the genuinely progressive individual income tax system that existed a quarter of a century ago to a system that puts an incredible burden on individual Canadians, most of whom are poor or middle-income earners. It is because we have such a tax system that the Government finds itself with the deficit it has. This Government and the preceding Liberal Governments did not have the courage or the good sense to realize that the tax system had to be brought back into balance for the good health of the country. It is for that reason that the Government believes it does not have the revenues necessary to support activities such as fitness and amateur sport through consolidated revenues. It is for that reason that the Government, which has placed this heavy burden on invididual Canadians, ends up supporting gaming activities which end up placing one more burden on poor and middle-income Canadians.

As a consequence of the policy mistakes made in the early 1970s by the Liberal Government, largely supported by the Conservative Party in opposition, people now think that the provinces have to depend on lottery income which, through negotiations, is extorted from the provinces by the federal Government for use in supporting things like the Calgary Olympic effort. It is that combination of policies and social ills to which this Bill relates. Unfortunately, as I said earlier, it goes only half-way toward actually dealing with a problem by taking the federal Government out of gaming activities.

Regarding the Bill itself, I note that certain other changes have been made to it. I would like to recognize the importance of those changes by modifying somewhat what I have just been saying in a broadly general way about gaming in this country. It seems to me that there is a limited place at the community level for raffles and similar activities. It may be a break from the principles which I have been broadly spelling out. I have an uneasy feeling that it may be the case when it is suggested that school children are encouraged to sell tickets to some event or another, or when churches are involved in bingos, or for that matter the bingo business generally, which is used for all types of secular practices as well in many of our community. In saying that that sort of activity ought to be tolerated, we are in fact making something of a concession to the vice which I have been suggesting that gambling is. I think that is probably true in principle. However, I am prepared to concede that a little bit of this might go on.

I personally faced the question of these principles and the potential contradiction when the Lottario draw took place in my riding in the Town of Nipigon late last summer. Very soon thereafter the Nipigon fall fishing derby took place in the same community and concluded with a draw for the entry prize. In the case of the Lottario draw, given what I had said in November 1984 about gaming, there was no doubt in my mind that I was not going to take part in the draw in Nipigon even if it meant missing a fine chance of receiving television publicity. It simply would have been a contradiction of my principles to do that. On the other hand, to attend the concluding hours of the Nipigon fall fishing derby and to accept the honour of drawing the ticket for the entry prize was something that I was prepared to do. I note here that the largest prize of the three drawn was for $100, which I think is relevant to two of the changes to Section 190 of the Criminal Code which this Bill includes.

As the Minister has already noted, one of the changes is to extend to fishing gatherings the permission which agricultural fairs have had for many years to include something in the way of lotteries in their operations. Clearly, that sort of expansion would easily erase any legal doubts which there may have been about the Nipigon event, not that I think there were any.

The second change to the Criminal Code is with respect to an increase in the prize which a lottery operator in a community may receive. This is an increase to $500 from $100 and an increase in the ticket price from 50 cents to $2. I suppose both of these changes simply recognize the effect of inflation over the years. It strikes me that they are immediately relevant to the organizers in Nipigon who will now be able to increase the size of the first prize at the Nipigon fall fishing derby.

These matters of gambling activities, raffles and so forth at the local level are ones which I wanted to mention because it seems to me that we might tolerate in these cases what I have described as an evil in other cases. At the same time, we realize that the consequences of a provincial activity in these areas are, in fact, very great; and the way in which gambling revenues are drawn upon by the provincial and federal Governments for social purposes really smacks of poor public policy.

I must say that on one additional aspect to which the Minister referred I find myself somewhat repelled by the suggestion that Canada has developed expertise in the area of lottery operations which it can make available to others. The way in which lotteries have expanded in the country since the change to the Criminal Code in 1969 is something of which I disapprove, as all Members will realize by now. To think that as a consequence of that change we are now skilled in the production of various materials which can be exported seems to me to be a most objectionable argument for the legislation which is before us. In fact, it seems to me to contradict what the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek) said in 1983 in describing the ills of gambling activity when he referred to sleazy operations and so on. It seems to me to be quite contradictory for him to advocate in the House at this time that the results of this activity could be usefully sold to others. Surely we should not be involved in perpetrating upon others the material of this particular wrong which we are working upon ourselves.

Given the nature of my support for the Bill, a support which relates to the fact that it takes the federal Government out of gambling activity, I might say that the critical comments of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) with respect to the Government giving up this area are comments which I would entirely share if I regarded the activity under discussion here as a legitimate activity. As I said last fall, when one is giving away the store it should not be too difficult to arrive at an agreement with the recipients of it. If one surrenders a potential chunk of an operation to those who are already well established in the business, it should not really be difficult to arrive at an agreement. All of that is of course to say that this particular 1979 agreement involves a curious complex—at least when Conservatives are in opposition—of moral disapproval and desire for better relations with the provincial Governments. When the Conservatives formed the Government the moral disapproval was abandoned. They focused primarily on good, co-operative federalism and then on giving away the shop. As a result, they are left with a limited negotiating power when they turn to the provinces to obtain somewhat more. Of course, I am talking about something more of the filthy lucre which is involved in this. I shall abandon the particular point I have made here which the Hon. Member for York West has already expanded upon quite properly. I will leave that particular argument to him and take up what the Conservatives, now in government, have quite abandoned. I speak of the recognition of the social and moral consequences of gambling and the conviction that there should be an investigation of this whole matter.

This brings me to one of the other quotations which I incorporated in my comments of November 8, 1984 when I noted that the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the present Minister of National Health and Welfare, speaking on November 18, 1982 made a statement which I fully endorse. Given the presence of a different Minister in the House today, I suppose I shall have to direct the statement to him. The Hon. Member for Provencher said:

> I suggest to the Minister that he seriously consider setting up an all-party Committee to study the subject of lotteries and what they mean to the Canadian public, both in the immediate and long term, before this Bill is passed.

The agreement among the House Leaders with respect to this particular Bill precludes me from actually insisting on anything such as that. However, it seems to the me that Ministers of the Crown who have expressed themselves very strongly as Opposition Members in quite principled, moral terms with which I heartily concur might take that suggestion from November 18, 1982 to heart and set about striking such an all-Party committee and authorize that committee to call witnesses, invite briefs and seriously consider the effects of gambling on the country.

It is something over 15 years since the Criminal Code was amended in 1969 to allow gambling on the large scale it is now. Almost into the sixteenth year now, we might very usefully have such a consideration of the question by a committee to find out what Canadians think about the advisability of such an endeavour. If Hon. Members, now Ministers of the Crown, really believe the principles they espoused in 1982 and 1983, I have no doubt they will in fact give us such an opportunity to determine what the effect of gambling is.

I will not say anything about what they feel now because this is after all an open question to which they have the opportunity of responding and demonstrating their social good sense and moral principles. I earnestly call upon Hon. Members to take such a stand and give us the opportunity to determine whether we should in fact at some early point have a further revision of the Criminal Code to strike out the power which it has now. Clause 3 with respect to Section 190 of the Act states as follows:

> Notwithstanding any of the provisions of this Part relating to gaming and betting, it is lawful (a) for the Government of a province, either alone or in conjunction with the Government of another province, to conduct and manage a lottery scheme in that province, or in that and the other province, in accordance with any law enacted by the legislature of that province—

We might very usefully have a special committee of the House of Commons to consider whether we should in fact repeal that clause as well and remove gambling from the national scene, as it were, where it has been allowed to grow and to proliferate. Let us remove it from that scene and get ourselves back to something of the moral sense which Canadians used to feel, which in fact has been the motive of members of my own caucus, past and present, and Members of the Conservative Party when it was in opposition.

I appreciate this opportunity to conclude the matter which I had the opportunity of beginning on November 8, 1984.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (lotteries).

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I rise not to expound on the positive actions of the Bill, which I have already done and of which there are many. However, my hon. friend, the hon. Member for York West, when he responded to my comments earlier, was allowed to ramble on about matters which I felt were somewhat unrelated to the Bill. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that I rose on a point of order to bring this to the Speaker's attention but the Hon. Member was allowed to continue debate. I must, therefore, stand in my place now and respond in kind to the misinterpretation and misleading statements put by the Hon. Member.

I am somewhat surprised because I have very often let the Hon. Member know that I have been disturbed that he has never put any questions to me in Question Period, or at other times when a response can be forthcoming. He seems to hide behind statements and press releases where a response to correct these misinterpretations can be forthcoming. When the Hon. Member is quite certain, as he was a few moments ago, that a response is impossible, then misleading words gush out of the Hon. Member's mouth like a flushed broken toilet. I know that the Hon. Member thought that there could not be a response because he was on his way out of the Chamber just a few moments ago. I did not want to speak behind his back and that is why I indicated to him across the floor to please stay. I would rather make my comments to his face than behind his back, which is his own practice.

The Hon. Member talked about this piece of legislation, Bill C-81, and he referred to the "noble" Sports Pool Corporation initiated by the previous Liberal Government. That "noble" Sports Pool Corporation not only went against an agreement between the federal Government and the provinces, thereby creating a major federal-provincial irritant, but it cost the Canadian taxpayers $1.5 million a week. However, the Liberal Government continued to run the Sports Pool Corporation. It went on and on. If this Government had not been formed when it was, the Sports Pool lottery would probably still be in place and would still be losing 1.5 million tax dollars a week.

That is the reason, my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and I, as one of the first steps of this Government last September, closed down the Sports Pool so that we could restore the co-operative spirit in federal and provincial relations and save the taxpayers the millions of dollars which otherwise would have been lost.

The Hon. Member for York West said that he was disturbed that Bill C-81 did not spell out how the $100 million, which was the agreement signed last June 3, split the take, so to speak, from the provinces to the federal Government. I really have to scratch my head in wonder because nearly everything said by the Hon. Member is misleading—although I do not believe he is doing it intentionally. I just think he is totally misinformed. If the Hon. Member knew anything at all about what we were talking about, he would know it is the responsibility, as spelled out in the agreement of the Interprovincial Lottery Corporation to divide the profits and, therefore, the payments to the federal Government, according to the sales and profits of each province. It is not for the federal Government to dictate to the provinces, telling them how to divide the loot, so to speak, as the Liberal Government used to do. It is up to the provinces themselves to decide as to how it is going to be done. If the Hon. Member would do his homework, he would find it is explained in the agreement which was signed between myself and the provincial lottery Ministers involved.

The Hon. Member also said that the Sports Pool was established to create funding for the Calgary Olympic Games. That is right, and it lost $45 million. The Liberals did not know how to run the country and they did not know how to run a lottery. It was probably the first Government in the history of the world which established a lottery and lost $1.5 million a week. Can you imagine that, Mr. Chairman?

Then the Hon. Member has the audacity to stand in his place, believing that no one will respond, and say: "If the Conservatives would close the Sports Pool down, how come they did not replace it with some other fund-raising event?" We closed it down in order to save the money. I, as Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport, went to the private sector and I am happy to report to the Hon. Member that in the last 12 months we have raised in the tens of millions of dollars of new funds from the private sector which are geared toward our young kids in amateur sports in this country. That is what we have done.

Then he went on to say we had given away the shop to the provinces. In fact, we are saving tax dollars. In return for a portion of lottery profits we promised the provinces that they would have the lottery rights. That portion amounts to $35 million a year. That amount is tied to the CPI which rises every year, although fortunately under a Conservative Government it will not rise as quickly because inflation will be less than it would be under the Liberals. As well, I was able to sign an agreement with the provinces for an additional $100 million in return for this Bill. The Hon. Member forgot to talk about that.

Mr. Gauthier: Stick to the Bill.

Mr. Jelinek: The Hon. Member says: "Stick to the Bill". Where was he when his back-bencher was talking about soccer?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister wants to use his 20 minutes to make a partisan speech, he is quite welcome to do it. However, we will have to make the same kind of reply. I would warn him that he does not have the reputation of being very objective in his Bills. How about addressing Clause 1 which is before us right now?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the audacity of the Member. Obviously he was not here when the Hon. Member for York West—

Mr. Gauthier: I was here.

Mr. Jelinek: —was speaking about soccer. I am responding to the matters brought up by his back-bencher.

Mr. Gauthier: You will have a chance on third reading to speak to that.

Mr. Jelinek: We now come to the final point of misrepresentation and misleading information from the Hon. Member for York West. That concerns the World Cup Soccer Team from Canada. He thought there would be no response. He said that this Conservative Government is not funding the World Cup Soccer Team. Do you know why we are not in a position to do so? It was the Liberal Government which created the rules and regulations in the Ministry of Fitness and Amateur Sport which would not allow us to fund professional teams. However, I have news for the Hon. Member. I am going to change those antiquated rules and regulations. The Hon. Member can talk to officials in Sports Canada who will agree with me when I say it is the rules prescribed by the previous Liberal Government which will not allow me to fund the tremendous success of our World Cup Soccer Team. As a former Olympian and member of Canada's Sports Hall of Fame, which I hope some day the Hon. Member for York West will join me in, I understand what it means for a Canadian soccer team to make it to the World Cup for the first time in our history. I know the benefits which will come back to Canada as a result. There are 2 billion people around the world who watch the World Cup championships. When a Canadian team is there it will mean a lot for Canada by way of advertising, tourism and in many other ways. It is for that reason that I am in the process of changing the antiquated Liberal rules and regulations put in place many years ago. We will change them in such a way that we, along with the private sector, will be able to support the World Cup team as they head for Mexico next year.

I just wanted to make certain that the Hon. Member stayed in the House to hear me out. I wish he would not hide behind statements which no one can respond to. I wish he would not hide behind press releases which espouse misinformation beyond explanation. I wish he would from time to time stand up in the House and have the courage to ask me straightforward questions which I would be very happy to answer.

Mr. Gauthier: You are never here.

Mr. Jelinek: The only time he has done that is when I was not here, when I was speaking as the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism to an Italian community group. He picks that day to ask me a question. However, if you counted the number of days I am here in Question Period and compare them to the number of days he was here I will win 10 out of 10.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, just in case there are any viewers who did not turn off their television sets when the Minister got up to speak, I want to say that I am shocked and amazed that this individual is a Minister of the Crown. Notwithstanding his background, he used language and style and class befitting a rock. I am surprised he would get up in his place and speak in the manner he did. He alleged that this particular individual is misleading the House and is afraid to stand up, that he runs away and hides behind press releases. I am surprised that this comes from a so-called veteran of the House. He does not impress anyone, let alone his own back-benchers.

If he wants to talk about misleading statements, he should look at what he just said and then take a good long look at himself in the mirror. If we look at the Official Opposition questions of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, we have asked—largely through my efforts and I am not boasting because I am the critic of the two portfolios—more questions and make more statements under Standing Order 22 then the Tories did in four years in Opposition. I challenge the Minister to get up on his feet once again, if he has the courage, and challenge those statistics. We have asked more questions, made more statements and debated the issues much longer than the Government Party did in the four years it was in Opposition.

He also talked about misleading information concerning the Canadian Soccer Team. The information I gave was not misleading. It was the reality. Then he has the audacity to say that somehow we cannot give money to this soccer team as professional players because the legislation or rules do not permit us to do that. Yet this Government is dismantling everything that is good on the basis of a whim. Therefore, I am quite surprised, shocked in fact, that he stands up and suggests the things he does in this manner. When I was speaking from my place I was speaking to the sports constituency and trying to tie that into this legislation. The Minister was trying to play lawyer, which he is not, and forgetting about the sports constituency he is responsible to. That is the issue. It is not a question of a Member being afraid to face the things he has just said because I will stay here all night.

It is not a question of running away and hiding behind press releases because had he been here last Friday I would have asked him the question that I asked his colleague, the Secretary of State, who then answered that there is no statement and no Minister. I would love to have an entire Question Period on multiculturalism and sports. I would like to extend the Question Period by an hour if the governing Party would agree. We are not scared to discuss the issues. We are not scared to show the Canadian people the reality of the Government, and in particular the reality of this Minister because there are deficiencies in both of his portfolios. If we are to do something as Parliamentarians, it is to better those two portfolios which the Minister represents. I, as only one Member of Parliament, am attempting to do my best, as is my Party, to do that very thing. For the Minister to suggest that a Party or a Member is running away, is scared, or is misreprsenting and misleading does him no justice. It does not do him justice as a Parliamentarian because what he says is wrong, and most importantly, it does not do him any justice as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport because people want him to address the issues rather than make his friends on the backbenches laugh because it is close to five o'clock. Let us talk fact and reality. We are prepared to continue as long as the Minister wants to.

I would like to return to this particular piece of legislation as it relates to the winter Olympic Games. The Minister talked about me suggesting that the provinces should split the lotteries in a certain way. That is not what I was saying and the Minister knows it. I was addressing the point that the provincial Governments have agreed, on a qualified basis, to give over $100 million to the Olympic Games in Calgary. I do not agree with the qualifications, but the $100 million is fine. I asked how the $100 million would be split among the provinces rather than how they are going to split the lottery profits that they will make through their grand monopoly. Is Alberta going to pay the same as Nova Scotia? Is Ontario going to pay the same as Newfoundland? Well, the Minister has now left the Chamber. Who is running away from the truth, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Gagliano: He is hiding.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister is quoted in the Calgary Herald of September 20 as saying: "I will come up with a different funding system. This will be a priority for me". When the Minister comes back here, if he has the courage, he can tell the House and this Member what funding system he will be replacing the sports pool or lottery business with. What is the alternative? What can sports organizations expect in terms of generating funds for them? I would also like to ask the Minister whether there is any guarantee that the lottery funds generated by the provinces are going to be channeled into the federal fitness and amateur sports world. Is there a guarantee that we do not know about? Is there a guarantee from the provinces that some of the money will be pumped into sports once again rather than allowing the provinces to use it for a variety of things?

It is just like transfer payments for education which do not get spent on education, Mr. Speaker. That is not right or fair. If moneys are designated to be used in a particular domain, they should be used for those purposes. I would like to know if there are guarantees in place that the moneys generated by the provincial lotteries will be used for sports. If there are not, then the Minister is not defending his portfolio at all.

I would also like to ask the Minister about his personal opinion or preferences on lotteries. We sometimes hear conflicting stories from that side of the House. They say that the federal Government should not be involved in lotteries and that the Liberal Government was wrong to have been so involved. They say that lotteries are a tax on the poor and moderate income earners of the country. Yet, on the other hand, they are prepared to say that it is okay for the provinces to do it. What kind of double-talk is that? You are either in favour of it or against it. I would like to know what the Minister's personal preferences are with regard to the lottery issue.

We want to know a lot of things, Mr. Speaker. Canadians want answers. We want to know how the Minister is going to pick up the shortfall from the Calgary Winter Olympic Games. His Government committed itself to donating $200 million. There is going to be a shortfall of anywhere between $50 million and $70 million. I would like to know, as would all Canadians and athletes, where that money is going to come from. Those are just some of the questions that this side of the House, and particularly this Member as critic, would like to have answer for. I am going to stay in my place and hope that the Minister does not run away but, instead, gives us some answers.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that I finally got the Hon. Member to ask some proper questions. Most of them were answered in my initial remarks on Bill C-81, which is what we are supposed to be discussing. He got riled up, of course, because I responded to his accusations and misinterpretations in his earlier comments. He is, again, misinformed.

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the questions for God's sake.

Mr. Jelinek: I would like to invite the Hon. Member to my office some day to teach him a little bit about what goes on in both of my ministries. Then he would perhaps be a little more informed in putting questions. He asked, for example, whether I can guarantee him that the $100 million from the provinces for which I made a deal will be directed toward amateur sport. He should be congratulating me for being able to make a deal for $100 million in return for this piece of legislation.

Mr. Gauthier: We don't trust you.

Mr. Jelinek: The answer to his question is no.

Mr. Gauthier: There you go.

Mr. Jelinek: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier says: "There you go". Sergio is right because I am saying that the money is not going to be directed to amateur sports. No it will not. If the Member was informed properly he would know that this money will go toward the funding of the Calgary Olympic Games. I can guarantee him that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I will not stay on my feet longer. I think that we have made an agreement to pass this Bill through all stages today.

Mr. Marchi: No, no. We'll keep going.

Mr. Hovdebo: That was before you started talking.

Mr. Jelinek: Now the NDP is getting riled and I haven't even started to attack them.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister is all mixed up again. We go until six o'clock tonight so we will have another hour of the great entertainment which he is putting forth.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Chairman, I am a little riled up, I suppose, as my friend in the Official Opposition has observed, because we had an agreement and it seems to me that the spirit of it has been violated. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we should return to the issue. For those purposes, I would like to put some comments on the record about Clause 1 of the Bill which is a general one. I would like to quote from page 26875 of Hansard of June 28, 1983, the words of the Hon. Member for Halton. He said:

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few comments on Bill C-95 in respect to the sports pool and motion No. 4 moved by my colleague in respect to the Auditor General taking over the accountability of this sports pool program. In fact, I would hope that Parliament would see fit to study the possibility of the Auditor General being accountable to this House for all Government agencies and Crown corporations, and therefore to the Canadian public.

At the outset, I would like to say that this sports pool is nothing more than an indirect taxation by devious ways and means. It is an underhanded way of collecting money from the Canadian public because the Government has failed in its responsibility time and time again to collect it by normal means. I would like to mention three examples of the devious ways in which this Government has handled the situation from the outset. On June 26, 1981 I asked a question of the then Minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport, and I will quote my whole question because it puts this whole sports pool into perspective. I said:

Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of fitness and amateur sport. When the original Olympic lottery was introduced in order to defray the costs of the Montreal Olympics, the Liberal Government at that time gave Canadians and the House its assurances that no further lotteries or gambling operations would be initiated.

That promise, as the Minister knows, has already been broken. It has now come to my attention that the Minister is well on his way to extending federal gambling programs to what is known as all-sports betting, in other words, reducing the Government to the status of bookies for betting on hockey games, football games and so on. Without once again copping out by giving a stock answer blaming the previous Government, can the minister confirm or deny whether his Government is contemplating such action?

The Member for Halton then said:

The Minister's response was:

I would inform the Hon. Member that the Government has no such plans. We do not contemplate any such scheme as the Hon. Member has mentioned.

Three days later, Mr. Speaker, I produced a sample of a sports pool ticket in this House and showed it to the Minister. He had to agree that they were studying some form of gambling operation but he was not sure whether that was it and he in fact had not seen that ticket. So the Minister was either deliberately misleading the House three days earlier, or he was totally ignorant of what went on in his own Department.

To show you the devious ways and means this Government has used to handle this situation from the beginning, less than three months later, on September 14, that same Minister announced very proudly that the federal Government, the Liberals, were going to introduce a sports pool betting scheme along the lines I suggested he was planning less than three months earlier when he denied it. That is why I call it devious ways and means.

Point number two, Mr. Speaker, is advertising. We have talked about the cost of advertising sports pools and gambling operations by this Government, but there is also misleading advertising. I take you back to December 6, 1976, when I informed the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Abbott, that the ads for Loto Canada at that time were so misleading that a Canadian is twice as likely to be hit by lightning than he is to win $1 million in that gambling operation. The Minister said that he agreed there was excessive and misleading use of advertising. He said it was exaggerated optimism. He also said that he did not plan to get tough about the ads even though he considered them inappropriate, unfair and in bad taste. He said that while he did not think the ads were misleading, they tend to raise expectations in the public mind which are unjustified. He was then removed from that position and we never heard any further about any changes made in that regard. Again, an example of devious ways and means of promoting federal gambling operations.

A third point, which is probably the most important and comes to the root of this whole problem, is that lottery operations were agreed to by Parliament to defray the cost of the Montreal Olympics in 1976. There was a lot of debate about this and we received all kinds of assurances from the Liberal Government that once those costs were defrayed there would no longer be any attempt by the Liberal administration or Parliament to bring in gambling operations under sports pools or lotteries or any such nonsense. Those were outright lies by the Government at that time because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the lottery defrayed the cost of the Montreal Olympics but then the name was changed to Loto Canada and the rest is history.

When Hon. Members opposite say that we on this side do not care about helping the arts and amateur athletes, that is the furthest from the truth. As a former athlete I support anything which can be done to help amateur athletes in this country. But certainly not by establishing the phoney, sleazy programs the Government is talking about which would be taking advantage primarily of the poor people of this nation, and then misleading them with false and misleading advertising.

There are other ways to help amateur athletes in this country other than through lotteries and sports pools or indeed even large Government grants. First we should try to expand sponsorship by the private sector of amateur sports programs and the arts. We could expand the development fees which the NHL is now paying towards the development of junior hockey players. That makes sense. But we are not going far enough. What about figure skaters, as I once was? I spent all my time learning that sport in this country. Today the federal Government is subsidizing Sports Canada, rightly so, for the development of figure skaters and other sports, but then the cream of the figure skaters are taken away for foreign professional ice shows which do not give anything back to the taxpayer in this country to develop figure skaters. Surely there is a golden opportunity for this Parliament to go to the Ice Capades, Holiday on Ice and Ice Follies and say that every time they hire one of our skaters trained here in Canada, surely they must pay something back. The same thing is true in tennis and other professional sports.

That is an eminently sound idea which I would encourage the present Minister to pursue. The Member concludes:

These are just some of the ways and means of correcting the existing problem, whether it is on an ongoing basis for fitness and amateur sports, or specifically, as Motion No. 3 stated, that there should be funding for the Calgary Olympics.

In closing, Mr. Speaker—

This is where these comments really come to the point:

—I just want to reiterate my total opposition to any type of lottery or sports pool.

Well said. If only the Bill did that, instead of stopping on the federal side.

I think it is degrading, downgrading and certainly not in the spirit of athletic sports and the Olympics.

Well said again, I would say.

If I had more time I could expand on the many recommendations available to this Parliament and the Government in order to assist the arts and amateur sports in general.

Thank you for allowing me to place these words on the record, many of them sound words and some which I would dispute.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, my only comment is that having heard my words repeated by Mr. Epp in the House today as I sat on this side, I can only say that I made one hell of a speech then.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, Otto talks about running away. After my hon. friend from the NDP spoke for 20 minutes, the Hon. Minister got up to say he likes the speech which he gave. Talk about courage, Mr. Chairman.

I also want to cite some quotes from the Hon. Minister. In describing the gaming operations, the Minister said in the Ottawa Citizen on September 21 that: "The operations are a tax on the poor and perhaps an immoral way of raising taxes, whatever the Government". What is his and his Government's view of the lottery business? When he describes it as a tax on the poor and a way of immorally raising taxes, does he not believe that that principle holds true whether it is the federal or provincial Government that is involved in the gaming operation?

I have another quote from the Ottawa Citizen of September 18, 1984. The Minister stated that: "A different form of gaming operation could continue after that— "referring to the dismantling of the Sports Pool:" —because clearly we have to keep our commitment to the Calgary Olympics and we will". Why is the Hon. Minister wasting the time of the House by saying that lotteries are evil and the federal Government should not be involved in them while, on the other hand, he is quoted as saying that gaming operations, sports pools or lottery mechanisms could in fact be established to raise the funds?

The Minister is obviously sending conflicting statements. On the one hand he states that it is immoral to be in the lottery business, yet he signs a monopoly in the lottery business over to the provincial Governments. He said that the previous administration was wrong in operating the sports pool and using the lottery business as a way of generating funds for sports teams. However, he is quoted as saying that once he has dismantled that pool he could perhaps begin another.

This leads me to my third question. If the former sports pool or another gaming operation was in fact making money that would help sports teams, would the Minister be in favour of such a mechanism? Would he be prepared to give it away to the provinces?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, first when my friend made reference to the speech that Mr. Epp from the New Democratic Party made and I did not respond to it, it was because he read my speech from a few years ago and he did not ask for a comment nor did he ask me any questions on it. I wanted to stand up and say that I thought the words Mr. Epp read were words of wisdom on amateur sport.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I hate doing this to the Minister but he has been here long enough to know that we must refer to Members not by name but by constituency. The Minister has referred to Members by name. I know he is not here very often but let me remind him that he should follow the rules and refer to Members by their constituencies and not by their personal names.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier is correct. I am sure the Minister is aware of the rule.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the normal practice in parliamentary standing committees and legislative committees is to refer to Members by name. We are in Committee of the Whole. Is the rule different for Committee of the Whole?

The Chairman: Yes. I ask the Minister to refer to Members by their constituencies which I am sure he will.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I apologize to the Member for Ottawa-Vanier. That is the first thing he has said that is correct today.

Mr. Gauthier: Stick around. I can teach you a few things.

Mr. Jelinek: I will refer to my friend as the Hon. Member for York West. In addressing his concern about my not responding to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon, it is because he did not ask a question nor for a comment. I just commented on the words he read which were from my own speech.

The Hon. Member asked a couple of questions. I will take them in reverse order. He asked why we closed down the Sports Pool Corporation.

Mr. Marchi: No, I didn't.

Mr. Jelinek: He asked why we did not continue to practice the policy of the Liberal administration. I said already in this debate today on three or four occasions that besides the fact the Sports Pool was losing $1.5 million of taxpayers' money a week, it was also a federal-provincial irritant. Therefore, we felt it was wise to close it down.

It is true that while we were considering this, in answer to a question from a reporter at the time—I am talking now about 13 months ago—whether there were other options other than closing down, I said—and I cannot make a comment as to what was quoted in the newspaper—

Mr. Gauthier: Have you changed your mind since then?

Mr. Jelinek: I never change my mind. I said that officials of the Sports Pool Corporation said it could be revised in such a way as to be a money-making operation.

Finally, the Hon. Member asked for my personal views on lotteries. As a Minister of the Crown, my personal views are irrelevant. The views of the federal Government of the Day are that lotteries belong under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, we have acted accordingly.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is certainly correct about one thing, that all his views are irrelevant.

The Hon. Minister said that in my preceding question I asked why the Government dismantled the Sports Pool. I did not ask that question. My question was specific. If that Sports Pool, or any other sports pool or lottery, was making dollars, money that would be going to aid sports organizations, would the Minister and the Government have dismantled that mechanism?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, first, the question is a hypothetical one. The Corporation was not making money. I could sit down right now and feel satisfied that I have answered the question but I will not sit down. We made a commitment with the provinces in 1979 that we were going to hand over, in return for $35 million a year, the lotteries to provincial jurisdiction. That is what we said in 1979. That is what we did in 1984 and what we have concluded doing today.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, the Member talked about courage, yet we do not see any courage toward letting Canadians know how the Minister and the Government will be doing things.

If we take the example of the Sports Pool and the lotteries, a method not new to other countries to help sports organizations, if we were to create that type of mechanism and atmosphere and we were making enough funds to help the sports organizations, would he be in favour of that?

Does the Minister agree or disagree with the Canadian Olympic Association which has gone on record in the debate of June 1984 and since then that it is in favour of a sports pool and lottery concept as a way of complementing any funds from the national Government to help sports organizations? Is the Minister agreeing or disagreeing with the Canadian Olympic Association in that regard?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the first part of the Member's question, which was a repeat of a question he put earlier, this time let me say his question is hypothetical. He is asking if it would have or would not have. The question is hypothetical and it does not require an answer.

As to the second part of the question, I have always considered ways and means of raising additional funds for amateur sport and how best we can go about doing that. I have concluded that the best way is to approach the private sector in a co-operative and a business-like fashion. I am very pleased to tell the Hon. Member today that I will be making a comprehensive announcement in that regard within the next few months.

In the meantime, I should let the Hon. Member know, as I said earlier, but I want to underline the fact that because of the position I have taken over the last 14 months, amateur sports has received in Canada tens of millions of new dollars from the private sector as a result of the challenge that I put out. I am delighted that the private sector has responded and responded effectively and well for the benefit of amateur sport in Canada.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport gives the impression that since he took the office of Minister he has been responsible solely for the corporate sponsorship or dollars flowing from the private sector. He should know and point out clearly, especially since he comes from the sports milieu, that the corporate sector has always picked up a good share of costs of sporting activities whether skiing, hockey, basketball or what have you. No one is denying that. I do not think it is incumbent upon any individual Member of this House to say it is because I am there that all the corporate sponsorships have been coming through the pipeline. I have talked to a number of individuals in Toronto organizing on behalf of sports and interfacing with the business community. They are quite taken aback that somehow this Minister is claiming that victory for himself and the Government.

We all know that in the past, in the present and I am sure it will continue in the future that the corporate sector will interface with Government, not only in sports, but in a wide scope of Government areas. We should encourage that. We are looking also for something a little more tangible.

The Minister in his statements and in recent accounts in the newspaper said that once we dismantle this aspect, we will be bringing in another scheme to take the place of sports bodies resources. I would like to know where that scheme is. Can he illuminate this House as to his plans? He failed to answer my other question. Does he agree or disagree with the Canadian Olympic Association which favours sports lotteries and sports pools in order to raise funds for the Olympics?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Olympic Association is free to do what it wants in respect of lotteries or any other fund-raising venues. The policy position of the Government is that lotteries are the responsibility of and fall under the jurisdiction of the provinces.

With regard to the private sector, it is true that there has been in the past private sector contribution to amateur sport. Amateur sport is very thankful for that, as am I.

When we assumed office just over a year ago, private sector contributions to amateur sport, in round figures, were something like 20 per cent of the total and federal Government contributions were 80 per cent. I am pleased to say that I approached the private sector on an ad hoc basis and talked consistently and constantly about trying to get more private sector involvement in amateur sport. There is a great return to the private sector. I am also a businessman, and I know from a business point of view that a corporation will not invest in anything unless there is some return. We saw the tremendous success of Canadian athletes at the Los Angeles Olympics. Stars were born. The names of amateur athletes became household words. As a result, we suddenly had a very good product to market, a product which had to be marketed in a co-ordinated fashion.

We have been working on a co-ordinated marketing strategy for past months. As I have pointed out to the Hon. Member, I hope to be announcing it in the next few months. It will be a co-ordinated effort to build upon the success which has already taken place with the private sector. It will involve a more professional, business-like and co-ordinated approach to the private sector on behalf of and in conjunction with the sports governing bodies.

I should let the Hon. Member know that this is not a new idea. There have been studies done in the past. The most recent one was in 1983. A task force was formed and sent across the country to study ways and means of improving private sector involvement in amateur sport. That task force came back with specific recommendations. It indicated that by 1984, last year, if its recommendations were put in place, the funding could be on a 50-50 basis; in other words, 50 per cent from the federal Government and 50 per cent from the private sector.

In an attempt to educate the Hon. Member a little, unfortunately they did not receive the political support needed to go ahead with those proposals. They did not receive political support from the Government of the day which happened to be the Liberal Government. Had they received that support, we would already have a much higher level of corporate support and a mutually beneficial agreement between sports governing bodies and amateur sport organizations.

I am not taking credit for suddenly thinking up a new scheme of going to the private sector and saying: "This is a great, new idea". The idea is not a new one. What I am doing is providing political support, encouragement and leadership, to make certain that we can form an entity to work with the sports governing bodies and with the private sector for the benefit of amateur sport and for the benefit of taxpayers.

We are all committed to improving goals and programs and to enlarging upon the support of all amateur sports. Hopefully that will be the case with professional sports, where applicable, such as the World Cup team. We cannot continually go to the taxpayer and say: "You have to give us more". We cannot do that, and the Government will not do that. There is not a bottomless barrel of money to dig into. The Liberal Governments of the past continually dug into bottomless barrels of money, putting the country further and further into debt. We are not doing that. I will be reducing, hopefully over the next few years, federal Government support, perhaps minimally. At the same time I will be ensuring the ability to raise additional funds in such a way that we give the necessary tools to the athletes, coaches and officials. I, as Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, will not let down the World Cup team. I will certainly not let down the amateur sports body, including athletes, coaches, officials and everyone associated with them.

In fact, the Hon. Member may know, if he has been following what I have been doing, that I have just expanded and changed the funding criteria in such a way as to expand our support to domestic sports at a higher participation level. In the past the Government only supported, through Fitness and Amateur Sport, high-performance, elite athletes who were working toward winning international medals in the world championships and Olympic Games. That is very important. We will not take away anything from high-performance athletes. We will continue to support them, even to a greater extent than they were in the past. However, under my leadership, we will expand the support program so that we encourage sports governing bodies to get more Canadians to participate in amateur sport. That will do two things. First, with an expanded and broader base for amateur sport participation in the country, we will obviously have more athletes to pick from. If we have a broader base, we will have more athletes from which to choose to develop into the high-performance area. Second, and more important, if we have more Canadians participating in amateur sport, we will have a fitter nation. As a result, hopefully, in the longer term we could start reducing some of the increases in health costs which skyrocketed under a Liberal administration to over $30 billion, not million, per year. I believe, in all sincerity, that enhanced fitness programs and expanded amateur sports opportunities, particularly for our youth and others, can be used as a form of preventive medicine, among other things, to reach the type of goals about which I have been talking.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will not take up much time of the committee. Hon. Members will know that I am a Member of Parliament from Calgary, Alberta, the home of the 1988 Winter Olympics. The people of Calgary and the volunteers who are working on the Olympics are becoming more and more excited and better and better trained. We are looking forward to the opportunity to put on a show for the entire world. It will make all Canadians prouder of our country than perhaps they are today. I pay tribute to the Minister for personally contributing to that success.

Today we have seen an example of his skills as a bargainer. He has dealt with the Provinces of Canada in the true spirit of Canadian Confederation. He has helped them reach an agreement to provide some of the funding for the Winter Olympics so that they will truly be a national event in which all provinces have participated. It strikes at the heart of the wisdom of the sew Government. Instead of dictating to the provinces what must be, it is possible under true Confederation to work with the provinces. When the federal Government and the provinces are pulling together, there are very, very positive consequences.

I urge all Hon. Members of the House to give quick and speedy passage to this particular piece of legislation. I thank Hon. Members for granting me the time of the committee and I wish the Minister well in his further work. I know that it will continue to be of the same high quality, with the same high quality results.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, I think the Hon. Member for Calgary West forgot to mention that that was a paid political announcement by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. Because it is an issue that transcends partisanship, there is no question in the minds of Members on either side of the House that everyone in the country is anxiously awaiting the Calgary Olympics. I think the Government, the Opposition and all Canadians should do all that they can to ensure that the Olympics are going to be the success that we all want them to be. That is a given and that certainly is something apart from this particular piece of legislation.

Just before he made his closing remarks, the Minister spoke a very important mouthful. He mentioned the fact that he hopes and wants to reduce federal funding for sports organizations. That strikes me as being very odd. That is very different from what Ministers of the Crown should be advocating for their particular portfolios. It is like the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, several months ago, defended the deindexation of senior citizens' pensions. In fact, the Minister of National health and Welfare was trying to be the Minister of Finance, forgetting that senior citizens fall within his Ministerial jurisdiction. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should not pretend to be the Minister of Finance. The former Minister of the Environment made wild cuts in her budget including cuts to wildlife services. She should not be walking around proudly telling us that. The Ministers should defend their own particular Ministerial jurisdictions.

Sports organizations are no exception. Rather than defending and fighting tooth and nail to have funding restored at least to the same level it was before, the Minister is prepared and hopes to reduce funding. This is much like the Government talking about the importance of multiculturalism while at the same time reducing the budget of this small Department by nearly 9 per cent. That Department absorbed the biggest budgetary cut of any Department on Parliament Hill. Yet the Government says it is serious about multiculturalism. It cannot suck and whistle at the same time. At least most of us cannot.

I would simply draw to the attention of the Minister that I asked specifically if he or the Government were against lotteries because in 1979 when the Conservative Party governed for a very brief time, the Conservative Government made a deal regarding the lotteries that in part funded sports organizations. At the time the lottery industry was a $200 million industry. Now it is an industry worth upwards of $300 million. The Conservative Government gave that away for an assurance of $35 million. That is Tory mathematics. If the Tories agree with lotteries as a way of complementing financial resources given by the federal Government, how can they say that that is good negotiating?

Tories cannot always hide behind the argument that they want to have good federal-provincial relations. We should and we do have good federal-provincial relations. However, we should not compromise ourselves either. We should not sell ourselves short. That is exactly what the Government of 1979 did. If this Tory Government is prepared to say that it is against lotteries and sports pools because, as the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport has already said, it believes it is a tax on the poor and an immoral way of raising taxes regardless of levels of Government, and if the federal Government were to eliminate lotteries, then I could respect and appreciate the Government's position. However, the Minister has been quoted as saying that he will look at another gaming operation. If he is not prepared to say that the Government is against lotteries but still gives them to the provincial domain, then what does that say about that Minister who is supposed to be protecting his jurisdiction? If he does not mind lotteries, why would he want to give them away when a good part of the funds generated would help the very people he is supposed to represent?

Therefore, I would ask the Minister, if he is in favour of lotteries and if he is prepared to give the provinces the monopoly on lotteries, will he give the House and more importantly the sporting community his assurance that he will try to fight for the interests of the sporting community and negotiate with the individual provinces so that some of those funds can be used for the original purposes for which they were meant; namely, assistance to sports federations and organizations, be they amateur or professional?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is getting boring. He has posed the same question four or five times. I have made the position of the Government abundantly clear. The position of the Government is that lotteries fall under the jurisdiction of the provinces. I cannot make it any clear than that.

While talking about this Bill which deals with Criminal Code amendments, the Hon. Member started to talk about multiculuralism. Yes, I am the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. Since he spoke about it, I can as well. Another example of the Hon. Member's misinformation is that the total budget for multiculturalism this year is slightly higher than it was last year. The Hon. Member once made a statement indicating that the budget for multiculturalism was reduced. It has not been reduced. The facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Marchi: The Estimates are for reductions.

Mr. Jelinek: I do not have the figures in front of me but I would be very happy to provide them to the Hon. Member. The budget for multiculturalism, under a Conservative Government, is slightly higher than it was under the previous Liberal administration.

As far as supporting and fighting for amateur sport is concerned, for goodness sake, I do not believe that amateur sport has ever had a Minister who has fought harder to try to get more for its community than this Minister. I am confident that I have done so. Amateur sports organizations are not suffering as a result of less money. They are all receiving more money because of the extra effort the Government has made in leading and encouraging the private sector to help us build on top of what the Government provides to amateur sport. I will never let amateur sports organizations suffer while I am the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

In order for me to return to debating this Bill, I must say that when I was able to sign the agreement of June 3 of this year which resulted in the Bill we are debating today, I received congratulatory letters from the President of the Canadian Olympic Association. I received congratulations from the Olympic Organizing Committee in Calgary for having done something that the Liberals were unable to do. I do not blame the Liberals because there were about six or seven Ministers in this position within a period of two or three years. That Ministry became a joke. It was known as a revolving-door Ministry. Therefore, I cannot blame the individuals who were in my position prior to me for failing to do a job on behalf of amateur sport. I received congratulations from the sports governing bodies and I received thanks for the support I have given them.

When I made my initial remarks regarding this Bill, I spoke in a very sincere, honest and quiet manner.

Mr. Gauthier: And partisan manner.

Mr. Jelinek: I did not get partisan at all. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is—

Mr. Gauthier: If you would shut up and sit down, for God's sake, we could get to the Bill.

Mr. Jelinek: If he would have been here, he would have known that there was nothing partisan about the comments I made earlier.

Mr. Gauthier: You are the most patronizing Minister we have ever had, for goodness sake. Quit blowing your own horn.

Mr. Jelinek: The partisan comments came when the Hon. Member for York West started attacking me thinking that I would not respond to him. After he started attacking me with misinformation and misleading statistics, then of course I rose to respond in kind.

I am delighted that I am able to be here on behalf of the Government of Canada to bring this Bill before the House, a Bill based on a $100 million agreement with the provinces, a Bill which will assist and benefit the Calgary Olympics. As my friend, the Hon. Member for Calgary West pointed out, they will be the best Winter Olympics in the history of the Olympic Games. That does not just come from myself and from those of us closely associated with it. It comes from the great individuals within the Olympic organizing committee. I refer to the President, Frank King, the Chairman, members of the committee, the private sector which has become involved, the provincial Government which is one of the partners, the City of Calgary and its Mayor. All of these individuals in conjunction with the federal Government have worked in harmony and unity to ensure that the Olympic Games will, in fact, be the best ever.

I am pleased to announce to the Hon. Member that when Juan Antonio Samaranch, the President of the Canadian Olympic Association, was in Calgary not too long ago to review the progress with respect to the development of the games site he said that it appears that the Calgary Games will be the best ever in the Olympic movement.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): My concern this afternoon has been with the Bill as it relates to the Criminal Code changes involving gambling. At the conclusion of my initial comments I raised some questions about the principled stance which the Minister has taken in the past regarding gambling. It was interesting to hear the Minister come close to clarifying the question I left hanging in the exchange between himself and the Hon. Member for York West. I would like to put this question to him. Given the high moral ground he adopted in 1983 when he spoke so strongly against the use of gambling funds for sports purposes, am I correct in understanding that he has abandoned that stance? He is very good at bandying about terms such as misleading and so on, which are only in order because he does not add the word "deliberately", although I am sure he thinks that. Someone who adopts this high moral ground is, I believe, a fit person to answer a question which is not at all hypothetical but which focuses on the realities of the situation. How far down has the Minister slid in abandoning the principles which he espoused in the summer of 1983? How acceptable is gambling now after all he has said about misleading advertising, sleazy methods and the dependence upon winnings raised from the poor of the country? Has the Minister given up all of that?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I find it humorous that the Hon. Member says that he now knows what I am thinking. To show him my consistency with respect to my position on lotteries I will repeat what I have said six times today. The position of the Government of Canada is that lotteries fall within provincial jurisdiction. When the Hon. Member talks about my saying some years ago that there was misleading advertising, and I brought the question up to Mr. Abbott, who I believe was the then Minister responsible for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, does the Hon. Member wish to know what the public answer was from Mr. Abbott?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Not particularly. I am interested in your position.

Mr. Jelinek: I will tell the Hon. Member anyway. The then Minister thought I was right. He thought that the advertising was misleading and he took steps to change it.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): That does not speak for your position.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, we are not getting very many real answers to some very real questions. As my hon. friend has mentioned, these are questions which the sporting community would like to have answered. It is fine for the Minister to say that he has received congratulatory notes from the Olympic Association and from sports federations. That is great. In fact, it is almost to be expected. I will bet Hon. Members that during the time in which the previous Government was in office it received congratulatory notes from a good many parties. However, that is beside the point.

Since the Minister failed to answer the question with respect to lotteries falling within provincial jurisdiction I will touch upon the matter. Lotteries have a history of helping sporting organizations. I would like to ask the Minister why lotteries should belong in the provincial domain. I want to know the reasons. He said that they belong to the provincial Governments and I would like to know why. Since they help sporting organizations why can they not be within the federal domain? The Minister gives us many good reasons as to why these should belong within the provincial domain. Based on the tremendous co-operation which the Minister has received from his provincial counterparts, will he ensure the sporting constituency of the country that he will go to the provinces to obtain the moneys which those lotteries will be generating and give them to the sporting organizations and federations of the country? Will he give the sporting community that guarantee? This is a very specific question which begs a very specific answer.

Mr. Jelinek: The very specific answer is that some of those funds are already being diverted to the sports governing bodies, as the Hon. Member well knows. One-half of the $35 million which comes in goes toward the sports governing bodies of the country.

In answer to his initial question regarding lotteries, I have consistently answered the question. I do not know what the Hon. Member is trying to get at when he says that I have not answered his questions. This Government believes it is within the jurisdiction of the provincial Governments. Historically, that goes back to the development of the first Olympic Lottery. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon read into the record part of a speech I made some time ago. The House accepted a temporary Olympic Lottery to defer the costs of the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal. At that time, with the support of all three Parties, the House agreed that it would be a temporary lottery called the Olympic Lottery and that the federal Government would not get into the lottery business. Of course, we were misled by the Liberal Government. No sooner did we pay off the federal Government's share of the Olympic deficit in Montreal the Liberal Government changed the name of the Olympic Lottery to Loto Canada. An Hon. Member from Montreal points out that the deficit has never been paid off. That is true.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon has already read word for word what I said about the subject in the House some years ago. At that time the House unanimously agreed that lotteries were not meant to be part of the federal jurisdiction. When we took ofice in 1979 we signed an agreement with the provinces giving them the right to run lotteries. This was in return for a certain sum of money which now amounts to over $35 million a year. Much of the money which the provinces keep goes toward the development of amateur sports in those particular provinces. Today, under my leadership, no one can say that they are receiving less money in terms of what they receive from federal Government contributions and the private sector. In fact, what they must say is that there is more money available for amateur sports today than there was ever before and that fewer tax dollars are being used for this purpose.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister goes back to the deal of 1979 where again, according to Tory mathematics, he exchanges some $300 million in return for $35 million and then he says that half of that $35 million would be used for sports. Of the greater share of the moneys which are being generated by the lotteries across the country, can the Minister provide us with some figures as to what the provincial Governments are spending on sports? Does the Minister really have a control over what the provincial Governments dedicate to the sports area? The Minister laughs but it is important because the provincial Governments, from those lotteries, have more moneys at their disposal to put into sports than the federal Government. Therefore, it would be incumbent on the Minister, and logical, if the Minister knew how the greater share of the moneys were being spent.

Would the Minister be prepared to give us statistics or numbers as a way of assuring Canadians, and the sporting community, that, yes, now that he has given away the lotteries to the provincial Governments, those Governments are in fact putting the moneys into the same areas as would this Government if it controlled the lotteries?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, I did not laugh. I was smiling because the questioning by the Hon. Member is becoming more ridiculous all the time. The Hon. Member is now suggesting that we should have control over what the provinces do with their lottery process. That is the type of Liberal confrontation which existed in the past. That is not what exists now. There is no confrontation existing between this federal Government and the provincial Government.

Surely the Hon. Member is not suggesting that this Government should dictate to the provinces as to how they should spend their revenues, whether from taxes or from lotteries, for goodness sake. I cannot believe that the Hon. Member would even pose such a question.

With respect to statistics of how much of those funds generated from provincial lotteries go toward amateur sports, I believe that is public knowledge in each individual province.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is an illegitimate question whatsoever. If the Minister was prepared to stand up on his feet and courageously say that he and his Government are against lotteries, I could respect and appreciate that. However, if we have a money-making mechanism which is to be used to aid sports organizations, that is to be used to take away some of the pressures on our federal coffers, and if the mechanism is doing that, surely to God, that is positive. However, in taking that mechanism, as a federal Minister, and giving it to the provinces, as is now being done, is the Minister suggesting that somehow he is a good Sports Minister? Is the Minister trying to suggest to me that that is in good defence of his Sports Ministry? The Minister cannot rise in this House as the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and say that he is taking a mechanism, which is in part going to help sports, and giving it to the provinces, and then say, "I don't know what is going to happen. I cannot tell the sports people how to run their business in the individual provinces."

The Minister sure can, for goodness sake, tell the provinces in a kindly way if he is afraid to bruise some of his Conservative colleagues at the provincial level. He should try in the best way possible to get those moneys going into the sports coffers where they went before.

If the Minister enjoys the co-operation of his provincial colleagues, then why is he scared to go to the provinces and tell them, "We gave you a $300 million, $400 million industry. We are getting in return $35 million. Can you try, please, to help the sports organizations which would have received that if we hadn't given it to you?" But the Minister will not be responsible. He tells us he gave it to the provinces, he does not know what the statistics are, and to go and check for ourselves.

I ask the Minister if that is responsibility to his sports jurisdiction. I think not. I am not telling the Minister to go out and do war with the provinces but, for goodness sake, if he is prepared to take a sports-generating funding mechanism and give it to the provinces, then why can he not go to the provinces and try to get some guarantees? If the Minister is not prepared to do that, he should not give away the mechanism.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member talks about me giving away the shop to the provinces. This Bill does not deal with giving the provinces anything. This Bill deals with getting $100 million from the provinces, for which I was responsible. That is what this Bill we are discussing today is all about. Why does the Hon. Member keep saying I am giving the shop away to the provinces when the Bill we are discussing—at least, we are supposed to be, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect—is a Bill which is part of an agreement whereby I raised on behalf of the Government of Canada $100 million? That money is from the provinces in return for this Bill. That is what this Bill is all about.

I believe a disease which is shared by all Hon. Members of the Liberal Party is that they forget that the citizens of a province are also citizens of Canada. Why is the Hon. Member trying to break up the jurisdictions? If we are going to give to the provinces, does that mean it is going to disappear from the borders of Canada? Does the Hon. Member not consider that there are citizens of other provinces other than the one he lives in? We are all citizens of this country. Members of this Party and this Government believe that the citizens of British Columbia, Alberta, Prince Edward Island or any other province, are also citizens of Canada.

Mr. Della Noce: Quebec.

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Quebec. I will go through all of them: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and the Territories.

Mr. Della Noce: And Quebec.

Mr. Jelinek: And Quebec, the Yukon, and Ontario. I had forgotten Ontario, and I am from Ontario.

On a serious note, the point which the Hon. Member is trying to make is a point the Liberal Government tried to make, and that is, if you give to the provinces, it disappears, and Canadians do not benefit. I do not believe that. I believe that when we give to the provinces—although that is not what we are discussing today; we are discussing something the provinces are giving us, which is $100 million—it is still money which is to provide for all of Canada. It is to provide for all Canadians. It is to provide for the benefit of Canadians in the field of amateur sports, in fitness, in health reductions, medicine, the arts and in the whole spectrum of our society. This Party stands united with the provinces.

We have created a new spirit of co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces. It is a spirit which never existed under the Trudeau Liberals. I believe that the attitude which has been expressed today by the Hon. Member for York West, and by other Hon. Members on the Liberal side, even without Mr. Trudeau around, would still not change. Those Hon. Members would still try to dictate to the provinces. They would still try to be the confrontationalists. That is inbred in their blood. That is what the Liberals are all about. They are all about splitting the country apart, putting region against region, province against province, the rich against the poor. That is the problem with the Liberal administration.

I believe that the steps we have taken today, and in the past 14 months, are the best steps that the federal Government has taken in many years, and economic statistics prove it.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SEEDS ACT AND CANADA GRAIN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michael Wilson (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grains Act, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take this opportunity to speak on this Bill. To a great extent, this Bill is a housekeeping Bill. It changes the regulations under which the seed growers of Canada operate. In that sense, it is something for which the grain growers have been waiting for a considerable time. Therefore, it is important that the Bill be passed. We hope it will have the effect of tightening up a number of concerns we have about the seed structure.

At committee stage, two very small amendments were made to the Bill, both of which were very technical in nature. Consequently, there will be no consideration of those amendments before the House.

I would like to spend my time pointing out that regardless of the fact that a need for these Acts has been shown in the past and it is a good thing they exist, they do not deal with the requirements of the farmers. Tightening the mechanism and making the advertising adhere to the structure so that it may be more honest are things that need to be done, but the Bill will only help the very few people who find themselves in a particular situation. Consequently, we should spend more of the time of the House establishing some kind of structure to ensure that the farmers can survive from year to year while producing seed. Right now, for instance, every farmer is faced with continuing increases in costs. Fuel, chemicals, fertilizers, machinery, taxes and transportation costs are all going up and they all impact upon the ability of the farmer to stay viable.

We have been spending a considerable amount of time in the Standing Committee on Agriculture lately discussing the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. We have had a number of suggestions as to how we can put in place a safety net so that the farmer can survive in bad times. However, we are not spending enough time making sure the farmer will survive under general circumstances.

I know that almost every time the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) stands up he lists the number of things this Government has done for farmers, most of which are cosmetic and have had no real impact on the ability of the farmer to survive. We have had quite a lot of lip service paid to the necessity of the survival of the family farm as a basic farm unit. It is a sort of motherhood issue. Everyone says, yes, we have to keep the family farm. Then this Government, like the U.S. Government, allows things to happen which eliminate the family farm and reduce the number of farmers to a level which makes farming much more inefficient. Everyone accepts the fact that the family farm is probably the most efficient unit. On the Prairies it is no longer a quarter or half section, it gets up to a section or six-quarters. It has increased in size in the east as well. However, it is still the family farm unit which produces more effectively.

One of the promises this Government made during the election campaign was that it would do something about the financial structure of the farming industry. This, of course, affects the seed farmer as well. A number of promises were made. Agri-bonds were promised. A reduction of interest rates was promised. A third promise was the elemination of capital gains. Of the three, the agri-bonds died somewhere in the structure. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said he could not bring that proposal forward.

The reduction in world-wide interest rates has alleviated the need for the Government to do something about direct financing of farmers, but we still have many more farm bankruptcies than we should have. It is not just the poor farmer who is going under; in many cases, the most efficient and aggressive farmers are affected by this lack of financing. The Government has failed to do anything about the need to allow farmers to survive because of the financial structure of the country. It seems to me that the responsibility for bankruptcies in the farm sector, as well as in all other sectors, should not necessarily always fall on the borrower. The time has come to start telling lending institutions that they must take half the risk, that if there is a bankruptcy they will only get half their money back and the bankrupt should have the right to keep some of it. We need to look at that kind of financial structure which would put the responsibility for the loan on the institution which lends as well as on the borrower.

The Government has gone along with the user-pay philosophy which affects seed growers specifically. The Government did this in transportation and other areas of the farming industry. In the case of the seed producer, the Government has put in place fees which have tremendously increased the cost of production of seed grains. The Government used to provide inspectors to inspect crops in the field and to inspect seeds to ensure the purity of those being sold at a minimal expense to the farmer. In many cases this has now become a much greater expense to the point where seed growers in my area feel that they cannot now afford to certify as much seed as they used to. Consequently, they are now selling uncertified seeds to a much greater extent than they did in the past and they do not get the same return on their products. The effect of the Government's acceptance of the Liberal philosophy of user-pay is to reduce incomes and make some farms much less viable because the cost of inspection of seed grains and meat is being carried by the farmer to a much greater extent.

The capital gains tax exemption, which I mentioned earlier, is a very acceptable program as far as farmers are concerned. The Finance Committee recommended the capital gains tax exemption for farmers and small business only, but the Government bent under the requirements of the larger financial community and gave it to everyone. Therefore, those who needed it the most got it, but those who did not need it got it as well. That has tremendously reduced the amount of taxes which could have been collected from speculative investments. Although that measure is valuable to the farmer, it is somewhat suspect as a national policy of reducing the amount of taxes to be paid by speculators who build themselves condominiums in Florida and make a lot of money through their resale.

As part of its commitment to make it easier for farmers to survive, the Government also promised to reduce or rebate the fuel tax. Although this was done, if one adds the total increases that will have taken place by next year, the farmers will be paying more for their fuel than they were before the Government reduced the fuel tax. Although the Government fulfilled its promise, the important beneficial effect of that reduction disappeared so that farmers are now paying a greater proportion of their input costs to fuel.

It was not long ago when fuel was considered a minor expenditure as far as most producers were concerned. Now it is one of the major expenses, along with fertilizer, chemicals, machinery and taxes.

While the Seeds Act amendments increase protection for the seed grower, they also increase his cost. While it appears that there is some value to the amendments to the Seeds Act, they take away enough so that many seed growers who demanded these amendments are not certain that they will do them much good. While the Act may protect the quality of seeds, ultimately it may reduce the quality because people will not want to spend the extra amount to maintain it.

I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) should be more careful with respect to quality. In western Canada there has been a sudden influx of a considerable amount of dwarf soft wheats which are of very inferior quality. The Grains Commission licensed the growing of HY 320, which can be identified on site as a dwarf wheat because it has a considerable amount of white wheat. However, there is a wide variety of dwarf wheat that is grown in North America and around the world that is almost impossible to identify on site.

While the Government expresses much concern in its Bill about the quality of seed, it has allowed the growing of these dwarf wheats. Farmers will not grow these dwarf wheats purposely but eventually, as this dwarf wheat is mixed with quality seeds of our hard northern wheats, the quality of our product will be reduced. Rather than being able to sell the best wheat in the world, the purchasing countries will consider our wheat as being of no better quality than those wheats which are produced in many other wheat growing areas of the world. We have been able to sell hard northern wheats because they are used to upgrade the quality of flour all over the world. Consequently, we have markets that will remain even when the rest of the production is difficult to sell. Hard northern wheats have always sold. If we get too much of this dwarf soft wheat mixed in with our crops, eventually we will have a difficult time selling it.

The Government has a responsibility. This Bill suggests that the Government is going to take that responsibility seriously because it mentions making quality one of the requirements for seed grains that are sold here. The Government does not seem to be taking this seriously in the sense that we can no longer be sure that the Government will take care of the quality of our seeds. The Government is now allowing soft dwarf wheats to come into Canada for planting and they are being accepted on the market.

We should look at what might happen to the viability of farms if we go into a free trade situation with the United States. There has been a suggestion that a free trade region would be designated between Canada and the United States. I hope the Government, when it does go into the negotiations, which it seems to be leading up to, recognizes that when it comes to free trade in agriculture, we are on somewhat dangerous ground. It is very important that we do not become fortress America. We do not want everybody saying: "You are exactly the same as the States and we can expect the same kind of treatment from you as we do from the United States". Much of the acceptance of our agricultural products and seeds has been based on the fact that we have established a market around the world. It would be too bad if in the process of establishing a free trade area in Canada and the United States we were to alienate those markets that are so important to us in other parts of the world.

Even within the seed producing structure, Mr. Speaker, many of the structures which have made our agricultural industry stable, things like the Dairy Commission, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Poultry Commission, stable at least part of the time, are of concern. This situation must be looked at in terms of free trade. It would be very detrimental if we found that these structures were dismantled because the Government did not want to make them part of a protected area in free trade negotiations.

The Government does not have a particularly good record. I suppose we could say that it has a poor record of protection of the agricultural industry when it comes to trade. It has failed to protect us from beef imports from Ireland and the EEC. It has failed to deal with countervailing duties on pork by the United States, although they have been reduced to some extent. It even closed down Canagrex, a Crown corporation which was established with the intention of increasing the sale of agricultural products all over the world. It closed down Canagrex, the marketing agency for Canadian agricultural products, and has failed to put anything in its place. It makes noises about the commercial agencies in each country doing the same work. That might have been acceptable if it had happened, but it has not happened. Consequently, the possibility of increasing our trade with countries other than the United States—and even with the United States—has slowed down. There has not been any action in that direction since the closing down of Canagrex almost a year ago.

Incidentally, we have been awaiting an annual report from Canagrex. It is due, legally, but it has not appeared. In fact, it was due some time ago. I guess we should be asking for it more often than we have.

The Government has been promising—and I see the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) across the way—for some time that it would provide some kind of drought payment for western Canada. That has just not happened. What has happened is that there was a commitment of the Saskatchewan Government and the federal Government of $90 per head for livestock. That promise of $60 by the provincial Government and $30 by the federal Government floundered somewhere along the line. Unfortunately, the Government of Saskatchewan pocketed the $30, and we have a payment of $60 per head to stock producers. Grain producers are still waiting for the Government to take some action on the drought relief program.

I have gone over a litany of promises and areas where the Government says that it has done something to help agriculture. In effect there has been no real impact on the viability of the industry. In some cases it has been a situation of too litle too late. In other cases it has been a situation of cosmetic changes, which have no impact on the incomes of individual farmers.

One of our concerns with the particular Bill—and I must say that it does not appear as a factor in the Bill and it is not a reason to consider holding it up—is that the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary indicated in their speeches, when they initially spoke to the House on the Bill, that it was an initial step to the establishment of plant breeders' patent legislation. I hesitate to use the term "plant breeders' rights" because I think it is a misnomer, although it has been suggested by the seed industry. I must point out that it is not the small farm seed industry which has been pressing for the Bill. It is the multinational seed industry. Most of the small seed plants in western Canada have been purchased by multinational chemical companies and grain moving companies. In fact, the basic seed industry, the handling of seeds, is gradually going out of the small business area and becoming part of the international agri-business area.

This is a concern which Canadians, particularly seed growers who will be making use of the changes in the Act, should recognize. Even as we tighten up the machinery and the advertising possibilities in the Act, we should be concerned that the Act does not lead to taking away from small seed producers the rights to handle grain and to do the kind of breeding they want to do, which may eventually go to large corporations that in the end do not help producers. Perhaps seed producers might get in on some of the gravy if a plant breeders' patent law were in place, but the cost of seeds to farmers would increase considerably. Of course that is another area which needs to be flagged but is not part of the Bill.

In closing, let me suggest that in the process of dealing with the Bill—and I understand that we will allow it to pass in this session—we as responsible parliamentarians should look at the kind of agricultural income security which makes it possible for seed growers, in fact for all producers in the agricultural industry, to survive. We should ensure that the viability of the family farm, or any kind of farm, is enhanced by the legislation which we pass. This piece of legislation does that to a small extent, but it does not deal with the real problems of the agricultural industry in Canada.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to speak on Bill C-64. This long-awaited legislation will amend the Seed Act in a very important way. The amendments are in recognition of the important changes which have occurred in the seed industry during the 26 years since the last major changes to the Act were implemented. This legislation has been a long time in the making, and I am pleased to say that it has very broad support.

Extensive consultations occurred with the provinces and with all major associations whose members could be affected prior to the Bill's introduction in this House.

It was unanimously passed at the committee stage following a complete and, I believe, a fruitful discussion regarding several important aspects.

The widespread support for this legislation is understandable. It will serve to strengthen an Act which governs a very important industry in this country, the seed growing industry.

Canada exports about $50 million worth of seed annually, and approximately $300 million worth of seed is sold domestically.

Of course, commercial seeds are the basis of our grain production industry, an industry that exports in excess of $4 billion worth of grains annually. Clearly, it is an industry that is dependent upon the integrity of our seed growing industry.

For the past 80 years, the federal Government has been involved in the regulation and control of seed varieties. The Seeds Act includes a grading system for seed quality, a licensing system for crop varieties, and labelling requirements to help the buyer identify quality seeds.

During the quarter century since the Act was last amended in a significant way, the industry has grown tremendously. There has been a great deal more involvement by the private sector in plant breeding. Bill C-64 responds to these changes.

In essence, this Bill will strengthen the seed licensing system, while providing greater protection against false advertising of seeds.

Perhaps the most important provision is one which will help to ensure that farmers actually receive the seed they assume they are buying based on the product's advertising.

While the current Act regulates the labelling of seed packages, those same regulations do not extend to seed advertising. As a result, it is possible for farmers to buy seed which the advertising tells them is of a certain variety when in fact it is not. Therefore, provisions in Bill C-64 will provide for the disclosure of certain information in advertising and restrict the use of variety names. This is similar to the current requirements for labelling.

I am reminded of the remarks made by the Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Seed Trade Association, Mr. Bill Leask, during committee study of this legislation, in which he stressed the importance of strengthening the Seeds Act to include the regulation of pedigreed seed advertising.

He said that the vast majority of seed companies that do operate within the licensing and pedigreeing process deserve to have their credibility protected. They want assurance that producers who buy a company's product by variety name receive the actual controlled product.

In order to enforce the Act adequately, it is necessary to impose tougher penalties for violations. Therefore, the maximum penalty, on summary conviction, will be raised from $500 to $2,500, with the courts having the discretion of setting the level in cases of conviction by indictment.

This is a significant change and a necessary one in order to indicate this Government's commitment to the maintenance of a high quality seed industry in Canada.

Under the current Act, the losses to the buyer of defective seed can easily exceed the minimum fine imposed on the person who has sold the seed. The intent of Bill C-64 is to allow the courts the discretion of setting fines in relation to the damage caused.

In connection with this provision, the Bill also extends the time limit for instituting proceedings by way of summary conviction. This will allow investigators adequate time to prepare their cases and will ensure that no case is dropped merely as a result of inadequate investigation time.

By way of housekeeping measures, Bill C-64 sets out a new system for daily amendments to the registry of seed varieties. It also changes the bonding provision by transferring bonding authority, through the Seeds Act, from the jurisdiction of Customs and Excise to Agriculture Canada.

And finally, this Bill will clarify the role of the Canadian Seed Growers' Association in the Seeds Act.

As I stated earlier, Bill C-64 has widespread support among the provinces and the seed associations. I know that all Members of this House will want to support this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson) to review for us the manner in which the registry of accepted varieties will be changed through Bill C-64 and what those improvements will be.

Mr. Gustafson: The importance of having this Bill passed is the fact that there are a number of varieties in the marketplace which must be controlled. An example already given is HY 320. HY 320 is a variety that can be easily distinguished.

It is important to protect the integrity of the pedigreed and registry seeds. A farmer buying seeds must be assured that he is getting the variety that he desires. The farming community has to have the assurance that there are no problems in relation to the seeds being received. As well, the producers need to be assured that we have the research and development infrastructure such that we can compete effectively in the international market-place.

Bill C-64 addresses these matters, providing the Government, through legislation, the means with which to deal with any infractions.

Mr. Althouse: The Parliamentary Secretary has made mention of infractions. Is he telling the House that as old varieties are dropped from the list of accepted varieties—and our understanding as a result of the committee study of this Bill is that the process for changing such lists will be expedited—is he telling the House that some varieties will be kept on as a result of overseas demand, notwithstanding the fact that they are no longer grown in Canada?

The departmental officials have told us that old varieties are dropped from the accepted list once they reach the point of non-use in Canada, and we were assured that those rules would not change. However, given the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary, I am wondering whether there have been some second thoughts in that regard such that those varieties which might be sold overseas will be continued on the list notwithstanding that Canadian producers have stopped using them.

Mr. Gustafson: In answering the question, Mr. Speaker, let me say that it is important that the Department have the flexibility to deal with whatever situation should arise. As I suggested earlier, the regulations must be such that they are capable of dealing with any infraction that should present itself. However, certainly it is not the intent of this legislation to restrict in any way varieties that would be in the best interests of farming practices, whether that be in practice itself or for further research.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words concerning the Bill which is before us. As Hon. Members have pointed out, the Bill concerns a better control of the quality and market representation of seed, the control of the advertising of seed, the imposition of fines for violations and the extension of time limits for investigative practices.

As I was listening to Hon. Members debate the Bill I was thinking that what many farmers in a great many areas of western Canada have on their minds is that, yes, it is fine to be debating a bill such as this which provides better regulations concerning seed, but a seed for what? In other words it should not be forgotten, and it should be of paramount importance to this parliamentary body, to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), to Cabinet and all Members of Parliament, that certain segments of the farming community are going through an incredibly bad time simply because of a natural disaster. I suppose that disaster has really hit primay producers from British Columbia to Newfoundland as far as the fishing industry and farming communities are concerned.

I think it is useful for all Members to keep in mind that for once—and this is the worst possible situation we have seen for many years—farmers in certain areas of the country have been left in an absolutely desperate situation which has to be addressed as an emergency. It is fine for us to talk about legislation which corrects some matters which have occurred in the long term, but there is a short-term immediate problem facing a great number of farmers in the country to the point where some are wondering just how they can last from day to day. I speak of certain areas of Saskatchewan, as was outlined by the Hon. Member who spoke a few moments ago. There, for the first time in their lives, farmers have been forced to go to the welfare office.

It is useful to keep that in mind and to continue to remind the Government, the House and the Canadian people that there is a crisis today which faces the farming community—a crisis which has to be addressed as an emergency by the Government. As far as I can see, it is not being addressed. It is not being addressed on the urgent basis on which we have addressed problems in the past with respect to primary producers in other areas of the country.

It is sometimes gratifying to listen to the Government because it does and has responded to the primary producers on the East Coast where, because of weather conditions and so on, the fishery was bad. There was an immediate monetary response by the Government, in co-operation with the provincial Government.

When we talk about rectifying problems which have to do with the marketing of seed I wish to place on the record that there is an overriding and immediate problem of farmers having to go to the welfare office. There are problems within our system and our social security safety net as it applies to primary producers who are self-employed. I wanted to place those words on the record in the closing moments of a debate which deals with an important subject, as Hon. Members have said. However, there are certainly other subjects which are far more important and more urgent in terms of certain farmers in the country which need to be addressed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-59, an Act respecting Customs, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak briefly on Bill C-59, a Bill dealing with the Customs Act, which is before us today for third and final reading. One might say that it is a piece of legislation whose time has come. As the House knows, this is an important piece of legislation, one which will replace an outdated and, in many ways, archaic statute and one which will facilitate a more streamlined and responsive approach to the management of customs matters in the country. Passage of Bill C-59 will help the Government fulfil a number of commitments it made to the House and to the country.

One of these commitments is to reduce and eliminate unnecessary costs and an unnecessary paper burden for those Canadians and Canadian firms with whom the Government does business. Another is to improve the over-all efficiency and productivity of government operations themselves. The new Customs Act, which is attuned to modern developments, methods, business practice and transportation will help us achieve these goals. It will do so without weakening in any way the Department's basic role of collecting duties and enforcing Canadian law relating to importation and exportation of goods. The legislation will help customs personnel do their work better and, in the process, of course, it will benefit the Canadian public.

I would like to thank and congratulate members of the legislative committee which reviewed Bill C-59 under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). I thought the committee acted in a very expeditious yet thorough manner when it examined this piece of legislation. The committee met several times during September and October and received representations from various organizations which will be affected by this legislation. In general, I think the representations which were made both by committee members and by witnesses were constructive and reflected the widespread support for this measure which has developed in the House and among Canadians generally.

I would like to recognize the contribution of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) and the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for their constructive commentary during debate and the parliamentary and committee deliberations of this Bill, as well as the leadership of my Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent).

I think the broad support for this legislation is due in no small part to the extensive consultation which the Department undertook in its preparation. During the development of this Bill, considerable dialogue was undertaken with those affected by its provisions. Their input was encouraged and some of their suggestions are incorporated in the final version of this Bill.

A number of amendments to Bill C-59 were made at committee stage, some as a result of representations made by members and interested organizations, others of a relatively minor and technical nature. To illustrate, one of the amendments was made as a result of concerns expressed about Clause 110(3), which permits a customs officer who has reasonable grounds to believe that the Act or regulations have been contravened to seize anything that he or she has reason to believe will afford evidence of a contravention of the Act. Some Hon. Members, and particularly the Hon. Member for Regina East, expressed some reservations about the powers implicit in this clause. These are concerns which I shared and which seemed well founded. They prompted some reconsideration. As a result, an amendment was adopted to require a customs officer who seizes anything as evidence to report the circumstances forthwith to the Deputy Minister of National Revenue. This will provide a strong degree of administrative control and will help ensure that this power is not abused.

An amendment to Clause 135(1) will extend the length of time allowed for a person to appeal a forfeiture decision from 30 to 90 days. This amendment was made in response to representations that the 30 day period originally set out was inadequate. During the course of the committee hearings, I believe committee members became convinced as I am of the need to give customs officials the right to open mail items weighing more than 30 grams without first obtaining the permission of the sender or the addressee. Of course, no item could be opened unless officials had reasonable grounds to suspect that dutiable or prohibited materials were enclosed. This change is necessary so that the Department may effectively carry out its role of protecting Canadians from the importation of prohibited items such as drugs or pornography. An amendment was introduced to permit customs officials to be given this authority prior to the proclamation of the Act which I hope will occur in June of next year.

I would also like to remind the House that one of the more progressive features of the new Customs Act is a provision for ongoing review. This is provided for in Clause 168 of the Bill. Clause 168 also requires that a committee of Parliament must, within five years, undertake a comprehensive review of the operations of the Act. In addition, regulations which flesh out the details of the Act must be published 60 days in advance of their coming into force. These two features will ensure that Government takes into account on a continuing basis any concerns of Members of Parliament, the importing community and of course the public at large.

Customs officials who serve in cities, towns and villages scattered all across Canada play an important role in protecting Canadian society and in providing service to the travelling public and Canadian businesses. This new law should enable us to enforce our laws even more effectively and at the same time to improve our service to the Canadian public. The Bill before us today has broad support from the business community and others who will be affected by its provisions. I hope that all Members of the House will join me in expediting third reading so that this important measure may be enacted at an early date. I thank the House for its indulgence.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to congratulate members of the standing committee for the excellent job they did in hearing briefs, for taking into account certain of the representations made and for changing the Bill. The introduction of this Bill has been necessary for years. Now we finally have a Bill that incorporates things that have been done by customs in Customs. The Bill was originally proposed by the former Liberal administration and then taken in hand by the now Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) who, about a year ago, was the Minister responsible. It was then successfully put through the House by the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). Perhaps that Minister deserves more credit than the former Minister who is presently the Solicitor General.

I think most of what deserves to be said about this Bill was said at second reading stage and in committee. I believe it is a good Bill and I think we all agree with that. We do have certain reservations about certain clauses of the Bill, clauses to which the Minister referred a few moments ago.

There is a point of overriding concern that was made by the union of the Canadian Customs inspectors in its presentation to the committee and that point referred to the pilot project which was ongoing in Montreal. It concerns the need for the Government to keep in mind that in order to carry out legislation such as this, we may require more public servants so that the Bill may work the way it is supposed to work. Estimates have been made concerning the need for an increased staff in the Customs Department. According to union representations, staff should be increased by about 15 per cent while the pilot projects that were undertaken indicate that an increase of about 20 per cent in the workforce is needed.

In passing this Bill, which was amended at committee and agreed to by all of those who made representations, the Government must now keep in mind that it has an obligation to reverse the trend which was announced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of cut-backs within the Department of National Revenue. It is fine to pass the legislation which tells the Customs Department that it will do this, that and the other thing, but if the Department does not have the employees to carry these things out, there is no sense in passing the Bill.

With that one reservation and a warning to the President of the Treasury Board, the Bill should pass. The statement made by the President of the Treasury Board in November certainly has to be re-examined as does the statement made by the Minister of Finance in his Budget. To carry out what is described in this Bill as being necessary for the protection of the Canadian public as it relates to the possible mailing of drugs will require additional personnel to enforce.

I feel certain that if the Bill had been passed under the previous administration, we would have had no problem whatsoever with increasing the staff of Customs by 20 per cent so that it could carry out the requirements of this Bill. However, the Customs Department is being held down by the statements of the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance. I am sure that the Minister who is now responsible for the Department of National Revenue will be making the necessary representations in Cabinet and I am sure that the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board will see the light and at least assign more personnel to the Department so that the provisions of this Bill can be properly carried out as is the desire of Parliament.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, much if not all of the work on this Bill has already been done. We are now making some final comments with regard to loose ends that may need to be tied up. I recognize that the Bill in itself is so technical that it would be virtually impossible to have a reasoned debate at this time. I do not propose to attempt to address those technical questions.

It is always a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). I know that he has had a long and abiding interest in the matter of customs tariffs and has made an in-depth study of it. Having done that, he has accepted much of what is contained in the Bill perhaps, because it was originally introduced by a Government of which he was a member but probably because he understands the necessity to pull together in one concise statute all the things that have occurred and the directions the Government has been taking over the last number of years. However, the point that was made, one I wanted to make myself, regarding the submission of the Customs and Excise Union and the Public Service Alliance of Canada is an important one and should be reinforced. I feel confident that the Minister, although he has not moved to correct at least two of the points in the submission, will do so over the course of the next few months.

On the whole question of the reduction in manpower, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) indicated some time ago that it was the Government's intention to reduce the total number of person-years in this field. While I do not think anyone would deny that where there is evidence of an over-abundance of manpower an effort should be made to trim it to a size necessary to meet requirements, the problem that seems to arise as a result of this legislation and the implementation, particularly of the pilot project in Montreal, leads to the conclusion that more manpower rather than less will be required. The reduction by the year 1990 or 1992 of about 25 per cent of the number of persons employed, when weighed against what appears to be an increased workload as a result of this legislation, just does not seem to make much sense. I certainly have difficulty understanding the rationale. Whether he responds today or takes it under advisement and reviews it over a period of time to determine whether or not the statistical information is in keeping with the facts gained by experience, it is essential that the Minister or the Ministry has a watching brief on whether or not we are overburdening the existing employees in this area of his responsibility.

The difficulty which will arise will be as follows. Employees can only do so much. We are moving to an honour system in certain areas. Human nature being what it is, there will be a tendency for people perhaps to attempt to avoid payment of the necessary tariffs voluntarily. That will result in one of two things. There will be a reduction of revenue; it was suggested, for example, in the brief I mentioned, that the uncollected revenue in Montreal as a result of the pilot project could approximate $100,000 per month. If that were true and one extrapolates that over an extended period of time, it is not difficult to see where the Government could lose many millions of dollars. It may not turn out that way. I am prepared to concede that this is possible. However, I think we have to be sure that careful scrutiny is maintained to guarantee that in an honour system such as this the moneys owed are collected.

I believe the Minister is aware that in Winnipeg, but it might have been someplace else, there was a sort of honour system concerning the payment of traffic violation fines. The end result, of course, was that they had to go back to an enforcement process. Going back is always more difficult than leaving something in place. I think the Minister appreciates that. What we are saying is this. It would appear that, with the reduction in the number of person-years, inevitably there will be a heavier workload on those who are left. That could and probably will mean that people who, by design, are attempting to avoid paying the necessary tariff or attempting to circumvent the law and bring into Canada illicit substances will have a better opportunity to do so. I have to wonder whether that is what the Government had in mind. I seriously doubt it.

In any event, as I said, the changes are welcomed in general by most people. The effect on the employees will be felt fairly dramatically. The possibility of a loss of a substantial number of dollars is there. The honour system, as I understand it, is not yet fully analysed and will require further analysis before we make any final and conclusive decision. However, I suggest to the Minister that at the end of a reasonable period of time, perhaps six months from now, he take it upon himself to report back to the House on the actual workings of the honour system. He could perhaps report by way of a statement regarding the revenue collected under the system as opposed to the previous system, as well as on whether or not the methods of collection are yielding the results the Government anticipated and hoped for. If he does that, if he keeps a very close watch on the increased workload which may and I think will result from the decrease in manpower, if he makes a commitment should it be the case that either we are losing money or the workload is being increased to the point where individuals are required to do far more than can reasonably be expected of them, and he undertakes to make the changes necessary, then I think we would accept the legislation. We will expect to hear from him in regard to those two important matters.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments, but I am not going to talk about the technical features of this Bill. Rather, I will talk about the Department as a whole and the image it has developed over the years and how it will be helped or possibly hurt by this Bill.

It is very frustrating for an individual who knows his duty and his responsibility but is unable to carry it out because there is just not enough manpower. It is important that we put on the record the feelings the public has about the Department, particularly those crossing our borders and paying their customs and excise duties and who are being hassled while they do so.

If I understand it correctly, the purpose of the Bill is to overhaul the 118-year old Customs Act. Periodically over the years the Government has responded to problems which have developed in this area by making changes. Bill C-59 seeks to respond to a number of archaic provisions in the Act and to improve its administration. Because of that, I suppose we are allowing the Government, as is its responsibility, to update and codify what it must do to make it work better and easier. The customs branch is primarily concerned with the processing of goods and individuals across international boundaries. To a great extent that has involved for the general public the crossing of the U.S.-Canadian border.

In 1983 the Department undertook a study and there were a number of interesting things revealed in it which we should not lose sight of. The real impact of that study was that, despite all the rules and regulations which exist, the individual judgment of the officer is the most important factor in dealing with the Department. The study concluded that no matter how well intentioned entry laws may be, compliance with them, in the final analysis, is directly proportional to the Department's capacity to enforce them. In other words, the Department has to be concerned with the ability of individual customs officers to enforce the rules and regulations. How they do it is as important, in many cases, as the rules themselves. The kind of character which determines how those rules are put into effect establishes the kind of experience which the general public will have with the Department and, therefore, establishes the image of the Department.

We all know that the taxation branch of the Department of National Revenue has a great deal of discretionary power which, in most cases, is used very well. However, the cases which we hear of are those cases in which that discretionary power is abused. I am sure that every Member in the House could relate one or two incidents which happened to them, their families or their constituents where the people on the receiving end felt that they had been abused. In my own experience as a Member I know that in some cases the officer has been over-zealous in trying to fulfil what is required of him. I have soemtimes worried about whether there is pressure on the officer to make a certain number of inspections even when it involves the same individual on many occasions.

In the city of Prince Albert there is a small office and probably only half a dozen businessmen use it on a consistent basis. I become concerned when, after using the services for many months or years without any concerns, an officer suddenly decides it is time to check on something. I can give a number of examples of goods being sent back before the period of time for holding them had expired. I do not want to belabour that particular point and I know the Minister has received a number of letters from me about that concern.

I think we all know that it is necessary for the powers to be put in the hands of the officer. He needs those powers and it is a good thing that he has them. I am, however, concerned that the powers are sometimes used to the detriment of the image of the Department. In some cases it may be good judgment to be less zealous.

To expand upon this concern, I suppose we should worry about the process by which the officers are recruited and the training which is given to them after they are recruited as well as the type of individual that is recruited. I am sure that Canadians generally expect their customs officers to be civil, reasonable and respectful in order that the crossing of a border will not be an unpleasant experience. I have crossed the Canadian border in both directions countless times and have never had an unpleasant experience in doing so. I believe that probably 99 per cent of crossings are not unpleasant experiences. I also believe that 99 per cent or more of the people crossing the border are honest and have no intention of taking advantage of the situation at the border. However, I hear that there are places where it is very unpleasant to cross the border and that depends to a large extent on the type of men and women who are customs officers. The point that I am making is that it is important that new recruits do not feel that enforcement requires that they hassle people. I am glad to see that the processes through which the Department is going is actually toward establishing a system under which that will probably be the rule rather than the exception.

I hope that the process through which we are going in the passing of a series of Bills in this House is aimed at the very well articulated concern that the previous Minister of National Revenue put before the country. I am sure the present Minister agrees that he believed that while the responsibility of the officers of the Department must be recognized, the way they enforce the rules is as important as having the proper legislation and regulations. I simply wanted to take this opportunity to make that statement for the record.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Layton (for the Minister of Agriculture) that Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to resume debate on Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex. I was waiting for some action from the government benches, hoping that someone would offer an explanation as to why this particular Bill is being put before us. The Government has not spent much time attempting to explain why it is dissolving Canagrex, which is not surprising when one sees the ambivalence with which the Government has viewed this agency.

The Conservatives supported Canagrex enthusiastically when the Bill to create Canagrex was first introduced in the House. The Conservative House Leader at that time, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), praised the legislation at first reading. It is very rare for anyone to say anything about a Bill at first reading, yet the Conservative House Leader of the day did just that. He suggested that it was time for such a Bill to be introduced and that such a Bill was at the drawing-board stage under the Minister of Agriculture in the 1979 Conservative Government. According to the Member for Yukon, the Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) had been responsible for that work and his Party welcomed the Bill with open arms.

The initial speeches which were made at second reading stage of the Bill show that the only criticism from the Member for Elgin was that not enough money would be spent to organize Canagrex. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) suggested that this legislation was a great step forward in assisting the cattle producers in his riding to export calves to Israel.

The legislation progressed smoothly until the Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the current Minister of Finance, said that he believed the Conservative Party should be opposed to agencies such as Canagrex because it is a Crown corporation that would be involved to some extent in the selling and exporting of agricultural products. While he stated that it was his opinion and that of his Party that such agencies should not exist, he made no mention of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Dairy Commission and some other very popular agencies.

From that date forward, however, the die was cast, the Conservative Party turned 180 degrees and became the opponent of Canagrex, fighting it in committee and in the House. The agency had just been established when the Conservatives became the new Government. One of the first actions outlined in the Economic Statement, which was made shortly after the House resumed its new session, was that Canagrex would be dissolved.

When the Conservatives were in Opposition they advocated open Government. It was only after the Economic Statement that we caught a glimmer of what they meant by open government. No one in Canagrex had been told that their agency would be dissolved. They only heard about it on the night the Economic Statement was made. There had been no consultation or clear discussion as to what the agency had been doing prior to the announcement of its dissolution. That was unfortunate because it was quite clear that in the short five or six months it had been operating, Canagrex had been fairly successful. I remind the House that the start-up costs for an agency such as Canagrex are higher than the regular operating costs. However, even for an expenditure of some $2.6 million in start-up costs, it was reported that Canagrex had already achieved sales worth $16 million and had sales in progress that were worth something over $100 million. However, once a decision has been made to close down an agency, it is hard to generate sales.

Many farm products had no means of being exported as a result of the vacuum created by the dissolution of this agency. Those farmers have no choice but to wait for an exporter to purchase their products. The farmers want to be assured that there is a market for their product, and they cannot conduct a viable operation if they must wait for an exporter to purchase their products.

Less than 4 per cent of over-all agricultural production consists of products that are not produced on a large-scale basis. This includes virtually hundreds of products. These farmers have no way of amassing their production to make it look attractive to foreign buyers. When the producers of these commodities are scattered throughout the country, the problems of putting that production together become almost insurmountable because these products are a provincial responsibility according to our Constitution. When the production in a particular province is not sufficient to warrant action by the provincial Government to seek markets for that commodity, the alternative for farmers is to combine interprovincially. However, this is not possible under the current law in this country.

The Progressive Conservative Government failed to allow that to happen when it opened up the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act to include the word "tobacco". I had moved a motion that was duly seconded and recorded in the House to permit the Act to be opened up so that producers of red meats, fruits, vegetables and grains could have equal access to that right to organize themselves interprovincially in order to market their products outside the country.

The Government, which is supposed to support the farmers, refuses to allow such authority to be included in the Act. The farmers have had to organize in such a way that a majority of their producers were in favour of such a step before applying for that right. The Government still refused to grant them that right.

The Minister of Agriculture, in presenting his motion to dissolve Canagrex, pointed out that he has been very active and had introduced a great deal of agricultural legislation. He spoke about the hundreds of things that he has claimed to have done since becoming Minister. Subsequently I got a list of what the Minister has claimed to have done as Minister of Agriculture and I began to do some analysis. This Minister of Agriculture has done very little. Most of the one hundred and some items he claims achievements while being Minister were items on which that would have been achieved automatically whether he was Minister of Agriculture or I was Minister of Agriculture, or whether there was no Minister of Agriculture.

Certain programs go on automatically. The Minister kept a score card as each program was triggered. He has boasted of having passed eight or nine agricultural Bills. I have the list before me. They do not do very much to change the way farmers live out in the country. Let me go through the listing to show how innocuous and how little action has been taken in the name of the Government caring and sharing in the agricultural sector.

First let us consider Bill C-4, which was to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. This was the Act to which I just alluded which included the word "tobacco". That was all the effort the Government put into that Bill. The Government refused it to be in effect for other agricultural products so that farmers would not have to rely on agencies like Canagrex to do their export marketing for them. The door has been slammed on farmers. They cannot take action on their own, and on top of that Canagrex has been closed up. Then we have Bill C-25, an Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act. We reiterated the power of the Government to form a tripartite agreement for stabilization plans with the provinces and producers who were interested. I say reiterated advisedly because those powers were already in the old Act. The Minister simply wanted some word cleaning up to be certain of having the powers he hoped he had the way the Act was before. A slight revision was made which accomplished nothing more than had been available previously to producers, provincial Governments and the federal Government.

Bill C-29 was an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It did not change the amount of money going to farmers one iota. It gave the Government the power to issue an interim payment in advance of when the final payment could be calculated.

As for the Meat Inspection Act, something happened there. The Government decided to reduce the powers of the federal inspectors and to leave some of those powers up to the plants. We have had some offshoots of what can happen as a result of that with the tuna scandal. We have set ourselves up with the passage of that Act to some more instances of ministerial interference and interference at the company level. Some meat normally not considered fit for human consumption could slip through the system because inspectors paid by the plant, under the control of the plant and hired by the plant will not have the backing of the federal civil service.

We had to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. That agency had done nothing and had no employees for 20 years, but the Bill adds to the Minister's tally. He likes to tick off things that happen.

We had an Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act. That moved the date forward another two or three years so that the Act could continue, something that Parliament does every couple of years, after its grandfather clause wears out. We amended also the Advance Payments for Crops Act so that the amount of cash advances could be increased. This was a positive move and it did not take any time in the House. We had an Act to amend the Seeds Act which concluded today. It says we shall have quality in seeds and that we can increase the amount of fines if somebody disobeys the Act.

Last, but not least, but in keeping with the kinds of moves made by this Government on behalf of agriculture, we had an Act to amend the Criminal Code dealing with pari-mutuel betting. It is now possible for someone to go to the racetrack and bet on the Kentucky Derby or other races occurring outside the country. This does not have a great immediate impact to help agriculture, but it is one of the Bills the Minister is using to count the great contribution this Government has made to agriculture.

At the same time, the Minister still has some things he is supposed to be looking after concerning Canagrex. He may have fired all of the staff and told the board that it no longer has a purpose or a function, but Canagrex is still in place, it is still the law of this country and it is important to remember that in terms of what I now have to say. That Act requires the Minister of Agriculture to do certain things upon the receipt of the annual report of the Canagrex Agency. I understand the board of directors had such a meeting on or about September 11. The final report was submitted to the Minister of Agriculture. What is so significant about that, Mr. Speaker? Canagrex had a new provision that was supposed to help provide better scrutiny and control by Parliament. The Canagrex Bill has a clause in it that requires the Minister of Agriculture to table the annual report within 15 sitting days of his receipt of the report. This is a very unusual clause, but it is in keeping with the move toward better parliamentary scrutiny of government agencies and Crown corporations. Once that report is tabled in the House, it is automatically referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I say this is important because the Minister has had that report in his hands far more than the necessary required 15 sitting days.

The Minister has had this report almost two months. He has yet to table the report in the House of Commons according to the law of the land, passed by this House of Commons, approved by the Senate and signed by the Governor General. The Minister has ignored the law. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, he has taken away the right of parliamentarians on the Standing Committee of Agriculture to review that final report, to call witnesses, members of Canagrex or the Minister himself to find out just what has been going on in the agency, what it did in the last few months of its operation and why the Minister decided to do away with it.

It is impossible for us to ask these questions because the Minister refuses to table the report as the Canagrex Act as the law of the land specifies.

Why is the Minister evading the law? It is not because he was not made aware of it. I wrote to him pointing out that he has this responsibility. The letter is dated October 3. I pointed out that he had had the information far in excess of the 15 days the law requires. I asked him to table the report so it could go to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. One of the Minister's assistants responded on October 22. The letter reads:

> On behalf of the Honourable John Wise, this will acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 3, 1985 concerning Canagrex.
> Please be assured that your letter will be brought to the Minister's attention at the earliest opportunity.

● (1250)

I am not sure whether the Minister's staff has brought it to his attention. However, I am bringing it to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and to the attention of the House. I think it is time the Minister acted. He has had far too long. The action is clear in the Bill. In order for parliamentarians to conduct their business, it is necessary that the Government adhere to its own laws, the laws of the country.

For that reason, we should carefully consider why we are debating this legislation at all, when the Government and some Ministers of the Crown are flouting the law, in terms of this particular law, at this moment. It makes a travesty not only of the parliamentary process but of our justice and legal system, when a Minister of the Crown ignores the laws of Canada in such a blatant fashion.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to enter into this debate. I happen to enter it as a new Member, carrying no baggage for what I have said in the past. That may allow me to provide a little more common sense perspective than has been applied to it so far.

We should go back in history a little in order to have a full grasp on what is proposed in this particular Bill. During the late 1970s and early 1980s, we had a Minister of Agriculture who was running around the country telling the population that there were great and wondrous markets out there which were just waiting to be tapped, and that all we needed was some super agency which could deal state to state and take advantage of those markets. I assure the House that that is a myth. There are no markets out there which are just waiting to be taken up by putting together some type of agency. There is fierce competition in the world market in whatever commodity is involved.

As has been pointed out, the record of the agency in question over its life was one of minimal impact upon the Canadian agricultural industry. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) made mention of its total sales, but $15 million of the $16 million which he quoted was a credit arrangement with Cuba. Farm agencies were bending over backward to give this organization business so that it would become viable. In the end, they had to withdraw that business because of inaction.

I have been involved with a commodity group which was heavily involved in export marketing, not only to the United States, but to the Pacific Rim and to European markets. There is no golden panacea out there. It is hard work, and only hard work will produce results.

Our country has been pretty well served over the past. Prior to 1982, we had the old Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which worked in conjunction with Agriculture Canada and, in my opinion, did a fairly commendable job. I am not suggesting for a minute that we do not need a strengthening of some of our foreign trade offices, particularly those in the Pacific Rim. However, by and large, we have had good support from the Government agencies which were in place. I have some concerns about the restructuring of the international trade which took place in 1982 under the former Government. I think a monster has been created in lumping together three responsibilities, particularly that of international trade, which deserve to be separated.

A question has been asked about the rationale for disbanding Canagrex. As someone deeply involved in exporting an agricultural product at the time Canagrex was in place, I assure the House that it did nothing for our industry. It was a duplication of a system which already had the wherewithal in place. Again I reiterate that it should be strengthened; I am not suggesting for a minute that it should not be. All we have to do is to look at the record of the organization, and I would say that it was rather dismal.

While I am on my feet, I want to say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has done more for agriculture in one short year, even though the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre seemed to take some exception to it. One item which he held up for ridicule was the tripartite meat stabilization program. He said that the authority was there and all it took was for the Minister to carry through with it. I happen to have been involved for the last 15 years from the point of view of the producer sector in trying to get a tripartite red meat stabilization program into effect, and I know that nothing happened until this Minister managed to get Bill C-25 through the House in June. That carries back 15 years.

While dealing with the red meat sector, I should like to refer to the fact that an Hon. Member opposite held up our meat inspection system to some ridicule, particularly under the changes which were put in place. We have the finest meat inspection system in the world, and that is barring none. Even with the changes which have been put in place, no other country is allowed to ship red meat across borders in volumes comparable with that of Canada, and that is almost entirely due to our inspection system, which is held in the highest esteem in most exporting countries.

At this point I will sit down and allow Members opposite to question me on what I have said.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member care to offer his opinion as to why the Minister has failed to carry out the letter of the law? Why has the Minister failed to table in the House the final report of Canagrex within 15 days, so that it could be automatically sent to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for us to find out what happened in those last few months and in fact look at the record, which is what he said we should be doing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) on a short answer, please.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to answer for the Minister. The Minister is quite capable of answering for himself. I would suggest that the Hon. Member put that question to him in the House this afternoon.

I have indicated my position. If the Hon. Member has questions to put to me on what I said, I am quite prepared to debate it with him. However, as far as a question which only the Minister could answer is concerned, I fail to see why the Hon. Member would direct it to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACK

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a matter that is of the utmost importance to the people of Canada. In the "Budget of Disaster" that was presented by the Progressive Conservatives last May 23, the Government announced its intention to cut the heart and soul out of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by reducing the research and development budget by 50 per cent over five years. This action will result in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to AECL, to the laboratories at Chalk River, and to the Town of Deep River.

Contrary to what the Government says, these cuts will seriously damage the health and safety research programs, programs that have made great contributions in the battle against cancer in our country.

In order to lessen the impact of this ill-advised action, I sought, on August 1 last, a meeting with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). More than three months have passed and the Minister has not had the courtesy to reply to my request, or even to direct her staff to take this matter seriously by discussing possible dates for a meeting.

I want to tell the Minister that this is a matter that the people of Canada take very seriously and we will not tolerate the arrogant attitude of the Government.

An Hon. Member: Shame on the Tories.

Mr. Hopkins: The people who are affected by the cuts in the budget of AECL deserve a hearing with the Minister: the business community, labour, and the professionals. To continue to ignore them is an insult to Canadians and, indeed, to this Parliament.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES—CENTENNIAL OF "LAST SPIKE" CEREMONY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, today is the one hundredth anniversary of the driving of the last spike and the beginning of transcontinental rail history in this great country of ours.

I come from a town, Transcona, whose very name is a combination of "Transcontinental" and "Lord Strathcona", the man who drove the last spike.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, to mark this anniversary is also to mark 100 years of corporate greed and exploitation. The CPR has apparently recognized this by trying to outdo itself in this anniversary year with an act of unsurpassed corporate cruelty and miserliness, that being to take away arbitrarily the pass rights of all of their pensioners, driving the last spike into the remaining dignity of all of those who, as the ad so piously sings, "Work the CP railway line." These people are now to be cut off from the fruits of their labour.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as in days of old, and even now, in mine, mill, factory, and across the prairies, from farm kitchen to farm kitchen, let the cry ring out: "God damn the CPR".

SITUATION IN QUEBEC

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest economic indicators, Quebec's economy is continuing its sustained progress in 1985. Retail sales have increased 11 per cent between September 1984 and August 1985. The increase in capital expenditures is expected to continue. We can say that the private sector is responding favourably to the first measures taken by the Mulroney Government.

From January to August, 1985, the value of construction starts increased 23 per cent compared with the same period last year. Thanks to our policies, 74,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec since September 1984.

According to a recent survey conducted by the Canadian Federation for Independent Business, 37 per cent of small- and medium-sized businesses intend to increase their capital spending between now and the end of this year. Furthermore, 26 per cent of these businesses intend to hire staff, and 41 per cent are planning to increase their working capital.

These figures show once again that our economy's performance has improved considerably since a Conservative Government was elected last year. This is a real injection of optimism!

As soon as our various oppositions decide to stress the positive things this Government has done, the economic skies will be even more serene over Canada, and the prophets of doom confounded. I say to the people of Quebec and Canada: Remember the disastrous legacy we were left by the Liberals! Now, we are gradually making things better, on my honour as a Beauceron!

THE ARTS

ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, from November 9 to 14, 1985, the most important cultural event in the entire Abitibi-Témiscamingue region will take place in my riding.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, the cities of Rouyn and Noranda will be hosting the 4th International Film Festival of Abitibi-Témiscamingue, an annual event that is getting more and more attention from all over Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote two comments made by well known Quebec journalists at the end of the third festival. Richard Guay of Le Devoir said: This is the most important annual regional film event in Quebec. This is what Minou Petrowski had to say: "I appreciated the efficient way things were organized, and the cordial and considerate attitude of the organizers, something that is entirely absent from other festivals".

Mr. Speaker, this festival has gone far beyond our borders to become a truly national and international event. The Abitibi-Témiscamingue region has opened its doors to the world and revealed the hospitality, warmth and efficiency of our people.

Finally, I would like to congratulate the entire team that works year-round to make this festival a success and express the hope that the Abitibi-Témiscamingue International Film Festival will have a long life.

SHIPBUILDING

SHORTAGE OF ORDERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, according to industry figures, the Canadian shipbuilding industry has its slimmest order book since the start of the Second World War. This can hardly come as news of the Government. Not only once, twice, but five times in the past year the Government has been asked to explain when the all-too-long promised Government position on the Canadian shipbuilding industry would be revealed, and each time a Minister has risen to tell the House that the shipbuilding industry is indeed a top priority and that action would soon come.

If a "top priority" means wasting a year, I wonder what these Ministers do with those issues that they feel are not quite so important.

DRIE has dismissed pleas from industry and labour alike to reinstate a 9 per cent shipbuilding subsidy. We are the only nation that does not support this most basic element of the national economy with some form of assistance.

To add insult to injury, we must be the only nation to give this preferential treatment to offshore buyers, who get subsidized financing through the Canada Export Development Corporation. Yet our own Canadian shipowners see their Government assistance eliminated.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, where is the logic in that? The time for talk is over. The Canadian shipbuilding industry and the thousands of workers who depend upon it have been cast adrift by the Government. It is time the Government put both oars in the water and headed the economy in the direction of growth, rather than continue with its present course of going in circles.

SMALL BUSINESS

FORECAST OF GROWTH IN EMPLOYMENT AND INVESTMENT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business recently announced that the six-month outlook for Canada indicates further growth in employment and investment for the independent business sector. Nearly 30 per cent of the firms responding forecast that they would increase employment, while only 5 per cent predicted lay-offs.

Moreover, investment plan responses were positive. As many as 42 per cent plan to increase capital investment, while nearly 41 per cent plan to increase working capital, including inventories.

Furthermore, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business noted the significance of the capital gains tax exemption, a measure which was included in the Budget of last May.

In the light of what I have just mentioned, it is obvious that the small business sector in Canada has been encouraged by the capital gains tax exemption, thus leading to a climate of confidence in the small business sector.

SPORTS

NATIONAL SOCCER TEAM—SUPPORT URGED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were extremely proud last September when, for the first time in our history, our national soccer team qualified for the World Cup soccer tournament, to be held next year in Mexico. Since then, however, the national team has been living in a miserable, pitiful state. An article in the Toronto Corriere Canadese newspaper reported that the captain of the team and seven of his colleagues and their families are presently relying solely on unemployment insurance benefits, with no access to sports training funds.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Marchi: Moreover, part of the team will train in Toronto, while the remainder will train separately in Vancouver, the reason being that there are not enough funds to bring all the players and all the coaches together on one field at one time.

These conditions are undignified and unprofessional, and we are becoming an embarrassment in the eyes of the international sporting community.

The Canadian players and coaches have worked long and hard and have been successful despite government inaction. Other countries fully support their teams, and I believe our Canadian team should be accorded that same respect.

• (1410)

The federal Government can and should help remedy this unfortunate reality. Let us live up to this historic occasion. For the Government to stand idly by and allow its national team to continue under substandard and archaic conditions would not only be irresponsible but would be a sporting and national disgrace.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

ONE MAN'S MEMORIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Remembrance Day is a time to remember. I remember that it was not Canada, Britain, the United States or any of the NATO countries which started World War II; it was Hitler and his Nazis who wanted to conquer the world.

I remember Chamberlain, the appeaser, signing the agreement granting almost all of Hitler's demands, leaving Czechoslovakia defenceless and then returning to England where he announced "Peace in our time", to the applause of the people. There was not applause a few months later when Hitler seized the rest of Czechoslovakia and continued his war to conquer the world.

I remember the Nazi army with the modern weapons of war overwhelming the brave Dutch who tried to defend themselves with the few weapons they had, and the Nazi air force bombing the very daylights out of Amsterdam, killing thousands of men, women and children, and occupying that country.

I remember being in Holland to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the liberation of the Netherlands by the Canadians. I saw the gratitude in the thousands of Hollanders who said: "Thank you for freeing us" to the Canadians who died and the Canadians who lived.

I remember the horrors of war. I remember that wars are started by men and nations who want to dominate the world. I remember the challenge given to all who love freedom from the graves of those who died to free others.

"Take up our quarrel with the foe: To you from failing hands we throw the torch . . ."

I remember! Je me souviens!

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

LIST OF SUGGESTED PRIORITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in a year which has been designated by the United Nations as International Youth Year it is fitting that our country join the celebration by taking account of the two primary concerns of young people in our country.

The number one priority, for very understandable reasons, is that of jobs. The creation of jobs is a social, political, economic, and human imperative which ought to be of concern to every Member of the House. Too many young people have been left on the sidelines of our society waiting for a chance to contribute, a chance to fit in, a chance to be a full member of their nation.

The tragedy of unemployment must not become the tragedy of an entire generation of young Canadians. It ought to become a leading priority of Parliament in this year to create the conditions for all men and women in our country, young or old, to be able to get a job if they want one.

[Translation]

Our second priority should be to listen: listen to our young people when they express their views on so many important subjects. For instance, the nuclear responsibility of the two superpowers was never discussed as intelligently and the cause of protecting our forests and lakes never defended with as much vigour.

There are many other examples, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

REDUCTION OF DEFICIT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, figures released yesterday indicate that for the first time in four years the deficit is going down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Browes: That is good news for all Canadians. I commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

The Government has taken sound and responsible fiscal action to reduce the deficit because it recognizes the damaging impact large deficits have on interest rates, business investment, and especially on job creation. We on this side of the House understand the importance of fiscal responsibility and proper management of tax dollars.

In 1985 Nobel Prize winner Franco Modigliani, a highly respected Keynesian economist, wrote:

> In reaching levels unprecedented in peacetime, the deficit has become a serious threat to the well-being of younger and future generations.

That comment was in reference to the American deficit which, on a per capita basis, is lower than our own.

Progressive Conservatives believe that it is irresponsible and unfair to place the burden of increasing deficits on the backs of our children. That is why we recognize today's news as welcome relief for tomorrow's generation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Conservative Government has tabled a Bill aimed at reducing family allowances by 3 per cent. The Government's justification for these cuts is that we must reduce the deficit.

How can the Conservatives claim there is no money for our children, when they are giving millions and billions to the rich people in this country?

They say there is no money for our children, but they could find one billion dollars for bankrupt banks. There is no money for our children, but they can find one billion dollars for Dome Petroleum. No money for our children, but they can find $64,000 to pay for a trip by the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

What a staggering contrast, Mr. Speaker! There is a lot of money for the rich and for the privileged in our society, but our children only get de-indexation of family allowances.

The Progressive Conservative Party in 1985 is the same party led by R. B. Bennett in the Thirties. The Progressive Conservative Party remains a party for the rich. The Progressive Conservative Party and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have broken their election promises, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT STRATEGY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in Edmonton in response to questions affecting our trade negotiations with the United States he was reported to have said: "What is there to be secret about?" I agree with that. Why has his Government adopted a deliberate and manipulative secret strategy in advancing the negotiations with the United States? Why does he not come clean and tell Canadians what is on the table for negotiation and what is not? Just what is negotiable and what is not?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asks why we have adopted the strategy which he has ascribed to us. The answer is that we have not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PROFITABILITY ANALYSIS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In that case, Mr. Speaker, it is clear the Government has not revealed the parameters of these negotiations.

I have another question for the Prime Minister. If there is nothing secret about these negotiations, does the Prime Minister intend to provide Canadians with a cost-benefit analysis, so they can judge for themselves which Canadian industries and communities will benefit from these negotiations with the United States and which may be at a disadvantage?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, once negotiations are underway, I assume that negotiators acting on behalf of the Canadian Government will want to advise Canadians, at the appropriate time, of the reasons behind the various positions being taken.

There is an advisory committee on the private sector, in every area where serious preparatory work is being done, and there will certainly be announcements very shortly in connection with this question.

What we are looking for, if, as and when feasible, and since nine out of ten provinces and a considerable part of the population are in favour, is a dialogue with the Americans to find out whether we can improve our trade exchanges and obtain more jobs and more secure markets for Canadians in the future.

REQUEST THAT COST BENEFIT ANALYSIS BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at this point all we have from the Prime Minister and his Government are vague generalizations as to what the potential benefits might be from a free trade arrangement with the United States. The advisory committee to which the Prime Minister refers has not been completely set up. The provinces have not been adequately consulted. His reference to nine out of ten provinces being in favour will probably not bear analysis when each province looks at the cost benefits province by province.

For the scrutiny of Parliament, will the Prime Minister table a cost benefit analysis so that Members of the House and the joint committee which reviewed free trade during the summer can review the industries which will benefit and those which will be hurt, the jobs which will be made available and the jobs which will be lost? Will he do this so that Canadians can begin to make an intelligent value judgment on the state and direction of these negotiations?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the most thorough of the analyses done so far on the subject was done by the Hon. Donald Macdonald, Chairman of the Royal Commission appointed by a previous Government. Therefore, its impartiality and its objectivity vis-à-vis this Government would be, I think, fully appreciated. Mr. Macdonald and his colleagues recently conducted the most extensive research into this area of which I am aware. They came down very strongly in asking the Canadian Government to examine this possibility very carefully. If we examine it carefully, and we shall, it will be with a view to procuring more jobs for Canadians, to attempting to secure longer term and more secure access to American markets, and to bringing in a new degree of prosperity and security to Canada while enhancing our sovereignty at all times.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question to direct to the Prime Minister related to the discussions with the United States. He has just said that it will be very important for there to be co-operation with the provinces. There is now a report from the Ontario Legislature that recommends substantial exemptions for certain industries such as the auto, agricultural and cultural industries. There has also been a major representation by the Government of Manitoba and the Government of Saskatchewan requesting that there be exemptions. In the spirit of that federal-provincial co-operation which the Prime Minister wants to have, is he now prepared to agree with the provincial representations that certain industries such as agriculture, culture, and the auto industries can be exempted from those negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing this matter and others in some detail with the First Ministers in Halifax at the end of the month. No doubt some of them will want to raise matters such as the ones raised by my hon. friend. Pursuant thereto, I will report to the House.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSION WITH ALBERTA PREMIER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already had the opportunity to have a discussion with the Premier of Alberta. I understand that they met yesterday. Considering the importance of the provinces being in agreement with putting on the bargaining table matters under their own jurisdictions, such as marketing boards, agricultural subsidies and support programs, did the Prime Minister raise that matter with the Premier of Alberta? Is the Premier of Alberta in agreement with putting on the bargaining table and having negotiated those matters that fall under the jurisdiction of his province?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the Premier of Alberta told me in general terms was what a delight it was for Albertans to deal with a federal Government that was not interested in savaging the interests of western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

CABINET CONFIDENTIALITY—ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On December 4 last, in a reply to a question put by me about the powers of the Auditor General, the Prime Minister said that when there was "... a collision between the rights of Parliament and certain privileges of the executive. In my judgment, in that kind of confrontation, Parliament should always prevail". Last Friday, as the Prime Minister, will know, Mr. Justice Jerome rendered a historic decision on this question using almost precisely the same words as the Prime Minister but in this instance giving them the force of law. He said the following about the tradition of cabinet confidentiality conflicting with the Auditor General's powers: "where they are in conflict, the Auditor General's right of access must prevail". Does the Prime Minister stand by what he said last December? Will he now give the Auditor General that which is his due?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, that matter is being currently reviewed. It is an important constitutional issue that is under review. The decision will certainly be in the best interests of all parliamentarians and the Government.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope what is not to be involved is the Prime Minister reviewing another sacred trust. He made this commitment pretty clearly last fall.

My supplementary question pertains to the PCO. The Prime Minister will be aware that Mr. Ward Elcock, the acting legal counsel in the PCO, the same man who acted as counsel for Energy, Mines and Resources in 1981, pointed out regarding the same Petro-Canada case that it is possible to, in his words, hide in regulations certain information. Considering the possibility of hiding material, on instructions from the executive branch, no doubt within traditional powers, which is precisely what the Auditor General was concerned about, and if we believe in open Government, does the Prime Minister not now agree that we ought to give the Auditor General the powers that the Prime Minister promised he would give him during last year's election campaign, and in the House last December?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not accept any of the premises in the hon. gentleman's question. However, I can assure him that, in so far as it is within our power, we are more than anxious to see completely exposed the whole circumstances surrounding the acquisition of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. There is another convention, of the Constitution that has provided a problem in that connection because the papers involved are those that exist as a result of the administration of former Prime Minister Trudeau who, as of yet, has not seen fit to give us consent to release any of those papers. These are matters that are all being examined now.

I would say to the Hon. Member that there are two points at issue. One is Petro-Canada's acquisition of Petrofina, and we are determined that all information regarding that should be given to the public. The second issue is a very important constitutional question involving cabinet Government collective responsibility, and that has to be considered as well.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question.

AGREEMENT MADE WITH FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister is clearly not prepared to answer about his responsibility and commitments, I would ask the Minister of Justice if he is now saying that it would be necessary to get permission from former Prime Minister Trudeau to provide the documents that a Justice of the Federal Court indicated ought to be provided by law.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that there was an agreement entered into during the brief tenure of the former Prime Minister, who is now the Leader of the Opposition, with former Prime Minister Trudeau to the effect that the cabinet confidences and documents of that administration would be sealed and not gone into by successors. Whether or not it is a legal obligation, it is certainly a moral obligation that one must consider very carefully. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell the House whether the NDP Government of Manitoba or the former NDP Government of Saskatchewan—

Mr. Broadbent: The legal judgment was about your Government.

Mr. Crosbie: Did they give to their Auditors General and the public all their cabinet confidences? Of course they did not. It is time for my hon. friend to cease being holier than thou.

Oral Questions

FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER LICENCE APPLICATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries, the Deputy Prime Minister. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House if he has arrived at a decision concerning an application by National Sea Products Limited to operate a factory freezer trawler on the East Coast of Canada, an application opposed by every fisherman and fish plant worker in the Province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, when a decision is made it will be made at the appropriate time and announced in the appropriate fashion.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, since the majority of this fish will come from Area 2J3KL, which is the east coast and north-east coast of Newfoundland, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House how the Government can have the audacity even to consider this proposal which is opposed by the Province of Newfoundland? Is this co-operative federalism?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the factors inherent in coming to any such decision which, as I said a moment ago will be announced, if it is announced, at an appropriate time and in an appropriate fashion, will all be taken into consideration.

STANDING COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. He will know that every segment of Atlantic Canada is opposed to the factory freezer technology, and he will know that the Government's case in the arbitration with France over stationing factory freezer trawlers in St. Pierre and Miquelon will be destroyed if it is approved. Finally, it is a slap in the face to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. Would the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House what kind of mix of political stupidity and contempt would lead the Government to approve this application before the Standing Committee has had a chance to hold its hearings on November 21?

• (1430)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the hon. gentleman has made three comments in the preamble to his question, two of which are utterly false and one of which is doubtful, in the best possible interpretation.

EFFECT OF LICENSING FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister agree that if he approves the permit for National Sea to operate a factory freezer trawler off Atlantic Canada, he will jeopardize our position on free trade in the fishery with the U.S.? Will he also admit that it runs the risk of destroying rural communities throughout Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Not at all, Sir.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS—REQUEST THAT DECISION BE POSTPONED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries. Is he aware that the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry has decided to invite on November 21 the Governments of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, the major fishermen's union in those provinces, Fisheries Products International and National Sea, to appear on the question of factory freezer trawlers? That decision was taken by all three Parties, including his own Parliamentary Secretary. Will the Minister give this House, and in particular the standing committee, a commitment that no decision will be taken on factory freezer trawlers and the application by National Sea until the hearings have been held and the committee reports with our advice to the Ministers? Will he do that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the broadest possible consultation has already taken place with provincial Governments, the Council of Atlantic Fisheries Ministers, the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee, unions, and the newly formed Atlantic Regional Council. Full discussions and consultations have taken place since this matter first arose, I believe last June.

GOVERNMENT'S APPROACH TO COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is saying that he is going to ignore the standing committee. I remind him that the committee has heard 107 witnesses in the last 12 days, over 100 of whom oppose factory freezer trawlers. I ask him again, in the spirit of reform put forward by the McGrath Committee, to respect the standing committee, allow these hearings to be held, and await our advice before a decision is made. Will he do that?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): All I can say, Sir, given the initiative by the Government, and the excellent work done by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, is that this Government, refreshingly, has a heck of a lot more respect—

Mr. Tobin: Will you wait?

Mr. Nielsen: —for the committee system and standing committees in this House than was ever displayed by the former Government.

Mr. Tobin: Will you wait?

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

REGULATORY REFORM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure he is aware that almost everyone now agrees that fundamental changes to the regulatory and supervisory system which governs our financial institutions must be made, although I am not certain where the Liberals stand on this particular issue.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't worry about us; get your own act together.

Mr. Riis: Will the Minister tell the people of Canada that the Government will act immediately on implementation of a regulatory system as proposed by the finance committee?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the report of the standing committee was just tabled yesterday. I have read in a preliminary way their comments on the question of regulatory reform. I think the committee agrees, as do we in this Government, that it is necessary to strengthen the regulatory system. As soon as we won the election we started on a number of steps relating to the appointment of the Wyman Commission, the Green Paper set out by my colleague, the Minister of State, and which was followed through with an announcement concerning actions she was proposing for the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to strengthen its powers. From the time we took office we have moved quickly to strengthen the regulatory system, and we are going to continue in that direction.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in light of recent results we have a long way to go, and that is why I am urging the Minister to take immediate action to send a very definite signal that the Government is taking action on this critical matter.

I would like the Minister to assure the people of Canada, particularly those in areas where small regional financial institutions are really struggling to survive, that the Government will not stand idly by and will follow at least some of the recommendations of the committee report so that banks like Citibank, Barclays Bank or the Bank of Tokyo cannot come up and gobble up some of the small regional financial institutions which are struggling to survive?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Obviously regional banking is of great interest to this Government, as we have indicated, and our commitment has been on record for a long time. I might also say that the report from the committee is not a quick read. There are a number of proposals concerning foreign ownership, among other things, which we will be examining in a great deal of detail before we come out with our final suggestions.

PROPOSED LICENSING OF FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who is quite concerned with process. Since the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has refused to give us an undertaking concerning the fishery committee hearings on November 21 when in fact the all-Party resolution was moved by the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary, does the Prime Minister not think it is both irresponsible and in breach of the reforms brought in by the McGrath Committee not to hear the evidence of the two provinces and various interested groups before any decision is made?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, even if the inferential fears of the Hon. Member were to assume proportions of any reality at all, he completely overlooks the fact that extensive consultations have already taken place with the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Nova Scotia, as well as other provincial Governments in Atlantic Canada.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, tens of thousands of dollars have been spent in the last 12 days by this committee travelling through Atlantic Canada, hearing in excess of 100 briefs which said no to factory freezer trawlers. Is the Minister not making a mockery of the parliamentary process by not waiting until November 21 to hear these important parties make their case here in Ottawa? Is this not mockery of Parliament?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): No, sir, not in my view. However, I can tell the hon. gentleman—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I suppose Blais-Grenier's travels are more important.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: I can, however, tell the hon. gentleman that in my opinion he breaches the rules of this House when he refers to evidence submitted to that committee which, if in fact it was submitted as he described it, and I do not for a moment—

Mr. Dingwall: Don't mislead the House. You have a habit of doing that.

Mr. Nielsen: —take for a fact his description of it—the hon. gentleman asks me not to mislead the House. I suggest—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: —that he and his colleagues should follow that advice more carefully themselves.

Mr. Dingwall: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Simmer down, dingbat.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SERVICES OF CHAPLAINS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I gave his office notice of this question because I did not think he was aware of the decision his Department made. Yesterday we learned that his Department will be terminating the services of its chaplains and that it intends to provide this service on a contract basis. Would the Minister, who is a veteran himself, not agree that the relationship between veterans and chaplains is a very special one which cannot be provided by contracting out services the way you would a dental program or any other kind of program? Would the Minister not agree that that is the case, and agree to rescind that decision?

● (1440)

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The short answer to that question, of course, is no, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate so much that the Hon. Member gave my office notice of this question. It is an important and very serious one and deserves a serious answer. I have written out the answer which I will give him, because I want no mistake made in the understanding of it.

Veterans Affairs has been steadily transferring veterans' hospitals and nursing homes to the provinces for many years now. Gradually, over the years, we have been moving toward contracting chaplains' services. In conformity with this long-standing policy, all chaplains will soon be employed on a contract basis.

Mr. Nystrom: Dial-a-prayer.

Mr. Hees: I am pleased to assure our chaplains that those who will be employed on a contract basis will receive the same pay and hours of work as they are now receiving. I would like to assure the House that chaplain service to our veterans will not, in any way, be diminished.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: But will it be sacred?

DEPARTMENTAL POLICY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Would he not agree that if his Department is going to continue this service, albeit on a contract basis, it would be much easier on the veterans and would ease any concerns that they may have about that relationship, simply to continue to have the chaplains in the employ of Veterans Affairs?

Mr. Benjamin: It's the same money, the same pay.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are simply acting in conformity with the policy we have steadily been moving toward for many years now in this regard so that there will be a consistent policy in the Department with regard to chaplain services. As I said, the chaplains will be completely protected. They will be receiving the same pay, working the same hours, and giving the same service.

Mr. Deans: Why are you doing it?

Mr. Benjamin: Why bother?

Mr. Hees: Our veterans will, in every way, receive the same service from our chaplains. It is simply that we believe and are firmly convinced that doing the work this way is a more efficient and effective way of providing chaplains' services than that formerly employed.

Mr. Benjamin: You said there'd be no change, so why change it?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXTRADITION OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. A few days ago the Minister met with the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Edward Meese, and, according to news reports, discussed, among other things, the extradition of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler. Could the Minister tell us if he has now received a request for the extradition of Charles Ng, and can he assure Canadians that Joseph Kindler will be home in time for Christmas?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I did meet with Attorney General Meese on Monday and among the matters we discussed were the two matters the hon. gentleman mentioned. With respect to Charles Ng, there has been no request as yet received from the United States, or any State thereof, for his extradition, and he is commited to go to trial on certain charges in Alberta at the present time in any event.

With respect to Mr. Kindler, his solicitors have been given until November 15 to submit a written brief outlining their reasons why certain conditions should be requested in connection with any extradition back to the United States of America. That has not yet been received. I will also likely give them an oral hearing following that, and then decide the matter. I certainly think it will be decided before the middle of December.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—DIOXIN SAMPLE ANALYSIS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister's Department received a sample of the St. Clair River toxic waste patch from the Great Lakes Institute at the University of Windsor in August, 1984. He told the House yesterday that it took until August of 1985 for an analysis of that sample to be completed and a dangerous level of dioxin to be disclosed. Why did it take the Minister's Department a year to complete this analysis and disclose the dioxin? Why did it not show a greater sense of urgency with regard to this important matter involving the health and safety of millions of Canadians?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is true that a sample was taken in August, 1984, but it was just one of many hundreds, indeed thousands, of samples taken by my Department throughout the Great Lakes area. We were not looking, in particular, for dioxin, or even for hazardous chemicals. Indeed, the sample was revealed almost by accident. When we discovered a year later that, in fact, hazardous chemicals were contained in the substance in question, we acted promptly and expeditiously by seeking further information.

LEAKAGE OF TOXIC CHEMICAL WASTES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the sample was taken pursuant to a contract with his Department to look for hazardous chemicals in the St. Clair River. In any event, Mr. Speaker, today an official of the Minister's Department said that the leakage of toxic chemical wastes in the St. Clair river "could create the biggest hazardous waste problem in North America". Will the Minister confirm now that he and his Government will take immediate measures to clean up the toxic waste problem in the St. Clair River with an even greater priority than he has announced for the Niagara River, in order that the people in the St. Clair River area and downstream can get the necessary reassurance that this matter will be dealt with immediately and that their health and safety will be protected?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been in the House, or at least paying attention, in the past week, he would know that my Department is acting in just the way he is recommending. I will say, however, that the official who was widely quoted in the media this morning, and to whom the Hon. Member has now made reference, was not speaking with the authority of his political or bureaucratic superiors. In an effort to be forthcoming and open with the media he engaged in some very unhelpful and, as it turned out, unfounded speculation. My Department dissociates itself from his statements and I suggest that the Hon. Member dissociate his question from them, too.

EDUCATION

COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY FUNDING

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. Report after report has documented the deterioration of Canada's college and university system in which financial constraints have increasingly limited quality and accessibility for those in greatest need. Yet there is no sign of a new financing agreement with the provincial Ministers responsible for post-secondary education. Has not the Minister of Finance, by cutting the transfer payment escalator, pulled the rug out from under the Secretary of State in his efforts to negotiate a new post-secondary funding agreement with the provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member, as I informed him several times before, that the Department of Finance has made no cuts but simply reduced the increase to be granted to the provinces. Again, I may remind the Hon. Member that the provinces are responsible for deciding how the money is spent, and that is what they are going to do. I also said that we would soon be meeting with the provincial Ministers of Education. We are going to try to assess the various possibilities we have, and I think that considering the meetings I have had with presidents of universities, professors and with the students' association this evening, that we will be able to find a solution.

● (1450)

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will this understanding curtail the diversion of federal funds to the provinces for uses other than post-secondary funding, will it stop the cut in provincial funding, and will there be some change in transfer payments that will ensure that the university and college system is not faced with continuing decreases in funding as it has been for nearly a decade now?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are also sensitive to the specific problems of our Canadian universities. Now, I may remind the House again that the responsibility for transferring the funds lies with the provinces. We are open to suggestions. We did not sign the unconditional agreement of 1977. That was done by the previous Government. If we could find a way, and I am confident that I will, to increase the resources allocated to universities and colleges, we shall certainly do so, but always within the framework of the constitutional agreements under which the provinces are responsible for education.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION REFORM—POSITION OF PRESENT SUPERANNUATES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Obviously I want to thank you very much for recognizing me on this very interesting day, which is one day from tomorrow!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I sent around these little white carnations which were neutral—not red or blue, but white—and I am sorry that the three on the opposite side, Gaston, Warren, and Len, are not wearing them. The memo said: "This bud's for you. '65-'85".

My question, Mr. Speaker, is very serious, and I have a supplementary, depending on the answer. It is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who has a vicarious knowledge of the question. I laud him for the commendable work on public service pension reform but will he assure the House that, regardless of public service pension reform, the superannuates, those who are now retired, will not be adversely affected in any negotiations he concludes?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me notice that he would ask me the question. We have been working for several months on the question of pension reform and I share his concern and the concern of superannuates.

I repeat what I have said on a number of occasions. He can rest assured that superannuates will be treated in a fair and equitable manner and with all due respect to the commitments of this Party and the Government. We are trying to put the plan on a sound financial basis. No changes will be proposed to Cabinet without full consultation with representatives of all the parties involved.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

ELECTION COMMITMENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, in the continuing discussions and negotiations, I hope and know that the President of the Treasury Board will follow the policy that was enunciated by our Party in the last election, which says:

> While our Party recognizes the need to negotiate changes to arrangements with current employees, we are determined that these must not affect the benefits for current superannuates.

Will he follow that provision?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has quoted the commitments of this Party and the Government accurately. I believe that I said in my previous answer that whatever changes are brought to the plan will be fully in line with the commitments of this Party and the Government. I do not think I can be any clearer.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FORMER ENVIRONMENT MINISTER'S LIMOUSINE EXPENSES IN LONDON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, what a difference 20 years makes. A welcome difference.

Mr. Dingwall: That Nowlan is a good man.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. He has tried to justify the limousine in Paris. He has tried to justify the limousine in Sweden. Can he justify why, in London last December, for a one-day meeting, the former Minister of the Environment, the current Minister of State for Transport, quite literally chalked up 125 miles in limousine travel at a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of over $400?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the then Minister of the Environment was in London representing her Department and the Government of Canada at meetings of the Environment Ministers of the seven so-called summit countries. She used the occasion of being in London to accept invitations to tour a number of environment-related facilities in the Greater London area. In that connection, she incurred the expenses that the Hon. Member referred to in her question.

INVOICED ITEMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, according to the invoices which were filed by Prestoncrest Limited

Chauffeur Services in London, the bills for 137 pounds sterling and 126 pounds sterling included a pick up of the Minister at the hotel, sight-seeing around London, a trip to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a supplementary question?

Ms. Copps: Since the invoices show quite clearly that both days were occupied in a sight-seeing tour of London, does the Minister not believe that the former Minister should reimburse the taxpayers for this waste of taxpayers' money?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Well, Mr. Speaker, before asking a question like that which is certainly insulting, if not slanderous—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Just read the invoices.

Mr. McMillan: —the Hon. Member should have satisfied herself that it is not true that the Minister toured environment-related plants, as I indicated a moment ago. Does she have information that would establish that what I have said is incorrect? If so, maybe she should provide it to the House.

AUDITOR GENERAL

CONFIDENTIALITY OF FORMER GOVERNMENT'S DOCUMENTS—COURT JUDGMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Earlier in Question Period the Minister made an extraordinary statement. He said that he had to consider what Justice Jerome had to say about access to information by the Auditor General and that he also had to consider the confidentiality of former Prime Minister Trudeau's documents in the circumstances.

Is he not aware that Justice Jerome dealt specifically with that question about Mr. Trudeau's papers and said in the last sentence of his judgment:

—the refusal of access was unjustified then and therefore remains unjustified now.

That being the case, that being the law, will the Minister provide the documents?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, whether or not that is the law is not yet quite as clear as the Hon. Member seems to imagine. As I said to him in my answer earlier, there are two questions: there is a legal question and there is a moral question. There is the fact that the former Prime Minister, who is now Leader of the Opposition, made a commitment to his predecessor with respect to the papers of that administration, and his predecessor made a commitment to Mr. Clark, who made one to Mr. Trudeau—

Mr. Broadbent: It is illegal.

Mr. Crosbie: —who made one to Mr. Diefenbaker. These are constitutional conventions upon which the governance of the British system rests. Therefore, we are not as sanguine as the Hon. Leader of the NDP who has never been in government and never had to observe any commitments like this before.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS BE PRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, the Minister is revealing considerable ignorance of the judgment. The Justice considered the conventions the Minister is talking about. In his judgment about those conventions, he said that the Auditor General's right superseded them. Given that fact, why does the Minister not obey the laws interpreted by the Justice and give the documents that he ought to, now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question is premature. We are going to do everything in our power to see that the full details of the Petro-Canada—Petrofina operation are given to the public. We want that, but because we are scrupulous about the convention and about agreements entered into with previous administrations, we are having some difficulty. However, we intend to get that red herring out of the way and then deal with the main question, which is the question of responsible cabinet Government and parliamentary democracy.

THREAT OF PRE-CHRISTMAS STRIKE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Once again there is a threat of a pre-Christmas strike. I believe that this threat shows the union's insensitivity to their customers, who are all Canadians. If they are really looking for support, I submit that they are choosing the worst time to do so.

Since many Canadians consider postal delivery an essential service and, accordingly, no strikes should be permitted, will the Minister seriously consider this option in his deliberations over the next few weeks?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation is currently negotiating and every effort is being made to reach an agreement.

• (1500)

The Corporation has faced this situation in the recent past and has managed to negotiate settlements at the bargaining table without any work stoppage. We are optimistic that this will occur again.

Regarding the other committees that will have to report to us, we will have to see by their reports whether this question is dealt with.

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of one, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, November 6, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, could the Government House Leader tell us what business he proposes for tomorrow and then for the week of November 19?

In addition, could he give us an outline of the business he proposes for the five weeks remaining to the Christmas adjournment?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will respond as best I can with respect to the next two or three weeks, and I will try to address at the end of my remarks some of the hopes I have with respect to legislation that might be passed before Christmas.

Before that let me say that I am pleased to see the progress made in the House today.

At the present time we are dealing with Bill C-42. If that debate concludes, the next item of business I will call is Bill C-66, which deals with the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation. A back-up to that piece of legislation will be Bill C-55, which contains amendments to the Immigration Act.

Tomorrow, as I previously announced, will be the second allotted day in the current supply period.

Next week, as Hon. Members will appreciate, the House will be in its mid-term recess in observance of Remembrance Day. I anticipate that tomorrow, in the usual tradition, at 11 a.m., in anticipation of Novermber 11, representatives of each Party will make statements in honour of those who served with such distinction on behalf of our country in the great wars.

Upon return to the House on November 18, our first priority will be to complete the debate at second reading stage on Bill C-62, which is the Bill to bring a new and progressive degree of employment equity to Canadians.

Following Bill C-62, we will return to consideration of second reading stage of Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. Back-up legislation to Bill C-82 will be Bills C-46, C-47 and C-48 relating to the divorce law. These are currently at the report stage, as the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition will appreciate.

As can be expected, and as is the usual case, we will monitor the progress being made with respect to legislation that has been announced.

As the House Leader for the Official Opposition has mentioned, there are several Bills on the Order Paper and others coming out of committee which will be brought forward at the earliest possible date, such as Bill C-45, subject to some consultation with opposition Parties. Bill C-45 relates to parliamentary relations for employees of the House of Commons. I hope to deal with that Bill in a manner which will be acceptable in the best interests of the employees of the House of Commons.

We do have other Bills which I suppose I can simply say to the House Leader for the Official Opposition that Canadians expect us to bring forward and deal with expeditiously. Essentially they are pieces of legislation flowing from the Budget.

As the Hon. Opposition House Leader will know, it has been the practice of previous administrations to allow Bills flowing out of budgets to remain unpassed and undealt with for two to three years after a Budget has been brought down. This causes a great degree of uncertainty and some considerable dissatisfaction on the part of those who are trying to plan their affairs and deal with their tax returns. In a sense of fairness to the people of Canada we should try to have an adequate, thorough but nonetheless expeditious treatment of legislation flowing from the Budget. It will be my intention to give priority to those pieces of legislation, which I can assure Hon. Members will be introduced at an early date following our return.

There are important pieces of legislation, Mr. Speaker. Since the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition has asked me to cover the period until Christmas, I am only too happy to do so—

Mr. Deans: He did not mean for you to speak until Christmas.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As soon as I give Hon. Members the good news, they do not want to listen to me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You could send me a letter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can tell the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition that there is legislation, particularly in the area of social justice and law and order, Solicitor General Bills, and Bills on mandatory supervision. People are asking why those particular pieces of legislation, which will offer some form of protection for the average citizen, have not been passed by the House of Commons.

Mr. Gauthier: You haven't called them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All those pieces of legislation, plus the number of other attractive matters that will be brought forward, will give us a rich legislative agenda. I hope Members of Parliament will pass all items before Christmas.

Mr. Benjamin: And a Merry Christmas to you too!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the House for asking a question that brought forth such an empty and meaningless response.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I do not know whether it was meaningless or not, Mr. Speaker. I thought the question was a little empty myself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): In bringing forward all this wonderful legislation, would the Government House Leader find some time for a debate on the proposed reforms of the House, bearing in mind that that ought to take place before the Christmas recess to give Members an opportunity to express their views on the new package?

Second, in scheduling House business, would the House Leader also remember to arrange some time for a debate with regard to the two reforms that he tabled earlier this week so that those matters can be dealt with by Members of the House since they affect each and every Member?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the very valid question with respect to the reform of the House. This is a major step forward and one which will be dealt with a good deal of support, I am sure, throughout the House. It is a positive response to an all-Party committee, which indicates that we should make very good progress.

As the Hon. Member will appreciate, I have been carrying on discussions with the House Leaders opposite with the idea of having their suggestions and input. I hope to have a very attractive package ready for December, which we will bring to the House for debate.

I will bring forward one item with respect to the registry of foreign travel at an appropriate time after I have first discussed the matter with opposition House Leaders.

With respect to the reference to the standing committee for study of other items which might be included in a registry, I want to discuss that matter. It would seem to me in the best interests of the committee and the whole process that if we got that into committee quickly, it would allow members on the Management and Members' Services Committee to give it a thorough examination so they could bring down their report by the end of the year. When we can see that report, there will be an opportunity to discuss the final response of the Government with respect to those recommendations.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on that same question. Most of us in the House remember that the last time we talked about reform in the Chamber was last June 28, at about one o'clock in the morning. I ask the President of the Privy Council—and I think most of us would appreciate it—to come in a little earlier with the reform package this time than was the case the last time, so that we can substantially address it in a manner that we all understand.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out, the discussion we had with regard to the first report of the committee took place at the end of June. That did not occur without very substantial prior discussions with the House Leaders of the opposition Parties. I would have liked to address all Hon. Members of the Opposition personally and to give them the benefit of my sage advice on these matters, but that was not possible, and I had to deal through their House Leaders.

In any event, the Hon. Member can rest assured that we are discussing the matter now. I am sure his House Leader is advising his caucus. In December I will be coming forward with this very important initiative. There will be an opportunity for Hon. Members to participate in the debate. I would be very interested in hearing their positions.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, does the Hon. Government House Leader not think it important that Hon. Members have a chance to debate this matter and put their views on the record before the package about which he is talking—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was reluctant to accept even the earlier question. I think the representations are becoming ones which should be put through the House Leaders for conversation at House Leaders' meetings. The practice here has been to allow House business questions about matters of agenda and scheduling for the next week. This is moving quite a long way away from that, I would suggest, even though Hon. Members know that I, too, believe the subject is important.

RAILWAYS

ANNIVERSARY OF COMPLETION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House today, this seventh day of November, 1985, on the 100th anniversary of the driving of the last spike at Craigellachie, British Columbia.

That historic event, which occurred at 9.22 a.m., was truly one of the most important moments in Canada's history. With the final drive of a hammer, Canada emerged as a united country from coast to coast. A ribbon of steel brought us together as a nation. It gave meaning and substance to the word "Canada". Completion of the transcontinental railway realized our national dream. It serves as a monument and testimony to the spirit, conviction and determination of our forebears.

The sheer act of pushing the iron rail across this land, through muskeg and mountain, over river and plain, stands as a symbol of Canada and the Canadian spirit. That desire to build, to work the vast reaches of Canada, remains a vital element of our national character. The last spike resonates in our imagination and national identity. While it was the end of an epic task, it also marked the beginning of many new and exciting ventures, serving as a springboard for Canada's future.

For the next 100 years, our railways and our transportation system would be instrumental in Canada's economic and social development. The system gave us a base, a link on which to take hold and grow. Now we stand on the verge of a new era in our nation's history. As we look to that future, we again depend on our transportation system to provide the enterprise, innovation and excellence which helped to build our great nation.

Today, just as a century ago, we recognize the importance of transportation to Canada's future and the need to respond with equal vision and spirit to the challenge of building a foundation for national development. To this end, the Government is committed to developing a new legislative framework for transportation to lead us into the 21st century.

Our goal is to develop a transportation system which contributes to the competitiveness of our commerce, a dynamic and energetic system serving new demands. To do so, we must adopt new technology and fresh innovations to provide a wider range of services. We are world leaders in transportation technology, and we must build upon that strength.

We are confident that in a new environment the transportation community will respond to the challenge. Our framework, as outlined in Freedom to Move, encourages the competitive spirit and energy of Canadians to meet our transportation needs.

One hundred years ago, the driving of the last spike helped make our national dream a reality. The spirit of that national dream is alive in Canada today. We are a nation of builders; we take pride in having forged a country out of the rock and soil of our land. The challenges ahead are great; together we can conquer them with the boldness, vision and imagination which made this land a nation.

In conclusion, on this historic day I want to extend sincere congratulations to Canadian Pacific, its management and to all its employees across Canada, whose spirit, dedication and enthusiasm are an inspiration to us all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, November 7, 1885, was a red letter day in Canada's history, when the CPR train travelled from coast to coast for the first time. Canadian Press reporter David Gersovitz commemorated this event in a very interesting article on the Canadian Pacific.

Ever since Canadian Pacific completed its first transcontinental railroad link, it has played and has continued to play a major role in the economic development of our country. Since that day 100 years ago, Canada's expansion has been impressive. The prosperity we have in this country would certainly not extend to all its regions without the major communication links provided at the beginning of the century by the railroad.

Interestingly, and I quote David Gersovitz:

In Canada, however, this project was essential——that is, building a railroad that would connect Canada from coast to coast was absolutely—

—essential to this country's development, something which could not become a reality without a transcontinental railroad link. Those who wanted a united Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific claimed that a railroad line cutting across the entire continent, across the formidable Canadian shield, would keep the West from being swallowed up by the United States.

It is a fact that to develop what we know today as Canada's five main regions, it was necessary to cross that formidable obstacle, the Rocky Mountains, and to reach the Pacific. It is thanks to the pioneer spirit and the enterprise of Canadian Pacific that this dream could become a reality and that Canada is a country stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and since that time, to a third coast, on the Arctic Ocean.

As suggested by the Minister, we should congratulate the administrators of the Canadian Pacific who have diversified their operations over a number of years. This corporation, one of the most important in Canada, is the property of a great many Canadian shareholders.

I want to congratulate both the shareholders, who represent a significant part of the Canadian population, the administrators of the Canadian Pacific for their entrepreneurship, but also and especially the workers, not only those who have built the railway but also those who over the years have directly contributed to the success of that company.

Today being November 7, I cannot help being somewhat sorry when I think of the former employees of the Canadian Pacific who retired before 1978 with a lifetime pass as a result of their years of service for that company. They were used to travel with their lifetime passes which were unilaterally cancelled. I dare hope that, on this 100th Anniversary, the administrators of the Canadian Pacific will demonstrate their kind generosity for their former dedicated employees by announcing within the next few hours or days that they will return to these pensioners the passes which they certainly deserve.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, as a third generation employee of Canadian Pacific Limited—my grandfather having started employment with Canadian Pacific Limited in 1904, followed by my father and then myself—I join with the Minister in his remarks. I only wish the Minister had had more to say.

It is true that this is an historic anniversary. However, there is also an historical record which all Canadians and Members of this House should be reminded of. The workers, the immigrants—who worked, for the most part, under slave-labour conditions—deserve more recognition. One thinks immediately of the Chinese labour involved in the building of the Canadian Pacific railway line. Scores of those workers died in the process. They had to pay a head tax and live like animals, and all for two bits a day. Had it not been for those workers, that line would never have been finished. Recognition has to be given to the contribution of those workers.

So, while this is an historic event, it also is an opportune time to be reminded of this historic behaviour of this corporation, behaviour that represents a century of corporate welfare.

As was said in 1880 or 1881 by the then Leader of the Official Opposition: "Since we are putting up all of this money, land, mineral rights, subsidies, and so forth, why don't we own it?"

And we are still doing it. This particular corporation owes over $1 billion in deferred corporate taxes. It is a corporation that has got out from under commitments and agreements as to the type and amount of service that it would provide forever and a day, not the least of which was the agreement in respect of maintaining a statutory freight rate for the movement of grains.

The CPR has quite a record when it comes to bad corporate citizenship, but the act that takes the cake is the arbitrary cancelling of the passes of its own pensioners.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: That is the most despicable, small-minded and immoral corporate behaviour that I have seen in a long time. These are people who spent their lives working the CP rail line. They regarded the pass to be both a condition of their employment and a benefit from that employment.

Mr. Speaker, this corporation, as has been the case in 100 years of corporate misbehaviour, is again picking on those who cannot defend themselves, its own pensioners.

I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister that he, with the support of all Members of this House, must take all steps necessary to require this corporation—and it is something that has to happen this month—to cease and desist from taking that action. The pensioners of Canadian Pacific Limited should be allowed to keep their passes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The Minister has made mention of Freedom to Move. It could also be read as Freedom to Manoeuvre—something which this corporation is already engaged in. This corporation, a corporation which was set up at a cost to the people of Canada, has made billions of dollars as a result of the land and money grants provided by the people of Canada since 1880. The return on that investment for the people of Canada has been, at best, minimal.

While we recognize the validity of this historic occasion, we also must remember that we have to put an end to the kind of corporate welfare operation that Canadian Pacific Limited has been involved in for the past 100 years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: A question for the Minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Under the new rules, Members are not allowed to ask questions.

EXTERNAL AID

RECENT EARTHQUAKE IN MEXICO—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Last September 19, Mr. Speaker, a very strong earthquake hit Mexico, and we all know the aftermath. According to estimates, 8,000 people died in this tragedy and 30,000 more were injured. Material destruction was widespread—thousands of homes, schools, hospitals. Given the extent of the catastrophy, the international community rallied to provide help.

Mr. Speaker, I think that all Members of the House can be proud of Canada's quick response to this tragedy. Less than 36 hours after the earthquake, the Canadian Government had announced a $1 million contribution for emergency assistance through the Canadian International Development Agency, CIDA. Without delay, we sent to Mexico a cargo of essential equipment along with expert staff. On September 24, we announced an additional $250,000 contribution to a fund administered by our embassy in Mexico and reserved for small assistance projects. I should think that Canadians who had close relatives or friends in Mexico were also grateful for the exceptional efforts made by Department of External Affairs consular personnel to find people from whom no news had been received and to assist our fellow Canadians who needed help.

[English]

Last September, Mr. Speaker, I indicated that the Government would address itself to the matter of providing longer term aid as well. While the film crews are gone from Mexico, our determination to assist those in need remains. It is for the purpose of reporting to the House on that aspect of our work that I wish to speak today.

Our first task was to assess the needs and, to that end, Canada worked in close co-operation with Mexico. As soon as the Mexican Government knew what its priorities were with respect to long-term reconstruction, a Canadian planning mission was sent to Mexico. This team was made up of representatives of two Canadian non-governmental organizations, a spokesman for the business world, and CIDA officials. The members of the mission met with officials of various Mexican Government levels. We also consulted other donor countries, multilateral institutions, private interests and Mexican NGOs.

Mr. Speaker, following these discussions and an assessment of requirements, I am happy to announce that the Government of Canada will be using CIDA budgets to allocate an additional $3,750,000 for aid to Mexico. Areas that will benefit from this assistance—again, further to the discussions we had with the Mexican authorities—are education, housing and health.

The funds will be distributed as follows: first, one million dollars will be spent to rebuild and equip facilities on the campus of the National College for Technical and Professional Training, where a building collapsed, causing numerous casualties among the student population.

Second, I am happy to announce that CIDA will set aside one million dollars for the reconstruction of low-cost housing units and community facilities.

These funds will be channelled through Canadian NGOs under the auspices of the Canadian Council for International Co-operation. The project will be carried out in the most severely stricken communities, in co-operation with Mexican community agencies.

Third, we are allocating the sum of one million dollars for a rural health and pure water project, to be carried out by UNICEF in Guerrero State, which sufferred considerable damage. Beneficiaries of this project will be the peasants in the many isolated communities in this State.

Fourth, a special allocation of $500,000 will be set aside to cope with any additional requests we may receive within these three areas. Finally, an additional $250,000 will be made available to the Canadian Embassy for its small projects program. Experience has shown that this is an ideal way to respond to immediate construction needs.

Yesterday, our embassy's management committee, which met to approve the initial series of projects, was already proceeding to identify specific projects. These will include rebuilding a primary school, a nursery school, a shelter for young girls and a community co-operative for manufacturing bricks.

● (1530)

These new contributions raise the total value of our aid to Mexico for both emergency assistance and long-term reconstruction to $5 million. I might add that this was done in under 50 days.

Canadians have a very special feeling of solidarity for this hospitable country which remains one of their favourite holiday destinations. Once again, Canada has proven to be true to its humanitarian traditions. I must say that it is indeed an honour for me to represent it whenever the time comes for assistance to be provided to countries and people in need.

And I want to pay tribute to all those who made it possible for us to act effectively in such difficult circumstances.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, the awful tragedy which occured last September 19 certainly hit the consciousness of people throughout the world. While I was naturally impressed by the announcement in today's statement that additional funds will be sent to various agencies to help these people recover from this terrible tragedy, what strikes me most forcibly is the feeling of solidarity and sympathy which has emerged amongst various nations. Immediately following the announcement of this earthquake, independently from any expression of opinion by whatever political regime, there was an immediate feeling in the consciousness of all human beings that they had to do something to help. This always strikes me when such tragedies occur and God knows that there have been a lot of them in the last 20 years: earthquakes, floods, tornadoes, and so on. Of course, I am not speaking about the hunger problem, but about the fact that human beings can suddenly put aside their differences to help a brother or a sister who is suffering and in need of assistance. However, I always ask myself a question: Why is it that we are so quick to provide assistance when such events happen and so quick to forget as soon as the situation is more or less back to normal?

I must tell the Minister that, naturally, there can be no disagreement with her statement. I must also tell her that we would like more to be done. We always want more in such circumstances, which is quite normal.

However, I would like to ask her whether it is truly possible to fool around with the funds provided to our embassies. For my part, both as member and as chairman of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, I have always urged that additional funds be provided to our embassies which can provide assistance on the spot to those who need it, immediately and at much less cost.

I have made this suggestion throughout the years and I would like the Minister to take note of it and refer it to the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). First, I would like more and more thought to be given to the possibility of increasing the funds provided not only to non-government organizations, because they are directly involved, and often act more quickly than large bureaucratic organizations.

Second, if possible, I would like the funds allocated to embassies, which are directly accountable to the Department, and I am not speaking about the embassies in European countries, because there are virtually no such funds provided for them, but about embassies in underdeveloped or Third World countries, to increase gradually each year so that the ambassador could provide assistance immediately and on the spot after making a single phone call, and even if it is impossible to make such a call.

I would like the Minister to consider increasing the amount allocated to these funds placed at the disposal of embassies.

I would also like to join the Minister, but I would like to do so in a spectacular way, on behalf not only of this Party but of all Canadians, in order to commend officials of External Affairs who really, this time, outdid themselves . . . one casual look is enough, and it is more eloquent. But the Department deployed itself . . . I would like the Minister to transmit to her Department and to all those people who will be listening to us anyway, our most heartfelt thanks. They really have been at the complete disposal of Canadians.

The External Affairs Department is often criticized by certain people. We are not aware of what those persons have to go through. I for one have great admiration for the Department and its officials who represent us, often in an anonymous way, and when it so happens that one mistake is made, right away the entire department is criticized.

Well then, I have seen them at work, I was there, and Canadians also were able to see that on TV, and it was a very good thing that people could see the work done by Canadians at that time. I want the Minister to know that we are proud of those Canadians who work in her Department. This does not necessarily mean it is because of this Government, of course, and I want the Department to be aware of it. But I want to commend the Minister for any initiatives she may have taken.

On page 2 of her statement, it is said that a planning mission was sent to Mexico. Because of our desire to be well informed about this rather than out of mere curiosity, I would appreciate getting the list from her if only to commend those people who work for Canada, and to know who they are. For the future, this could provide us with ideas when we appear before the Committee on Reform . . . the Committee on the green paper, for making suggestions to the Government. Personally, as spokesman for this Party, I would like to know the names of the mission members and of the representatives of the various levels of Government in Mexico. I would greatly appreciate having the list. I know this is not very complicated, and that the Minister will be happy to send it to us.

I would also appreciate it if, through her Department, the Minister could tell us who were those people who were consulted, which were the other participating countries. Actually I am especially interested in having this information in order to report to my party how other countries responded to such a disaster . . . Because I would like soon to conclude with very concrete proposals which will somewhat extend beyond the statement and which result from the experience we had over the years and which might help the Government of this country. Therefore, I would like to know about those people who have been consulted, and about the multilateral institutions from both the private sector and the non-governmental Mexican organizations.

If this is not asking too much from the Minister, I should like her to tell us with respect to the $1 million earmarked for the reconstruction of low cost housing and community facilities, what she thinks would be their cost price in some countries? It is all very well to say that $1 million will be earmarked for the rebuilding of low cost housing, but how many units? Ten, twenty, thirty or fifty? I think that we would then better understand the thrust of the Canadian contribution, and if it is too low, have Canadians understand that we want to be generous and if we believe in world solidarity we should then be much more generous because this kind of solidarity should always be there since we never know who could be the victim sooner or later.

She stated that there will be a supervisory committee. I would like to know which of those non governmental organizations will control the funds made available to them. I am quite pleased, with an eye on the forthcoming holiday season, on this particular occasion of the Minister's statement to encourage Canadians to make their yearly contribution to UNICEF by buying something from them, since the benefits on the sale of all kinds of items are passed on to that organization. This is a concrete example of what UNICEF can do.

Before concluding, since the Speaker tells me that under the Standing Orders I cannot speak longer than the Minister, some day in committee I would like the Minister to reflect with us on the following fact—if the Speaker would allow me, I will take another 30 seconds—which has been bothering me for years and I mean the fact that we know that on this planet earthquakes do occur. There was an earthquake in North Yemen in January 1983; there were floods in South America in March 1983. I could go as far back as 1980. We hear almost daily about disasters, earthquakes, flood relief for Argentina, floods in Paraguay. We hear about them constantly. What surprises me is that although all western democracies are constantly on the alert to defend themselves, that large military alliances such as NORAD and NATO have the necessary means and structure to defend their member countries within minutes—I am not blaming the Minister—that when a disaster occurs they spread the news that they will generously fight to defend the rights of suffering human beings, and that they do so in a quite unco-ordinated way. It seems to me that the UNDRO which is the United Nations body responsible for seeking help is not as well organized as we would like it to be, so that when a disaster occurs—we know there will be disasters, even though we do not know where or when they will occur—why is there not more co-ordinated effort on the part of each country when an earthquake hits. We are aware that earthquakes can occur either in rural or urban areas. In urban areas, we know that some buildings will crumble. That we know, Mr. Speaker. And day in and day out, medical teams are sent there. I think, Mr. Speaker, that such a suggestion would be quite proper because we would see how we could be prepared in the future, and how we could draw up, as Canadians are experts in this matter, a new world system for the co-ordination of all people who have something to offer to their brothers and sisters in need as the result of a great tragedy.

In my opinion, it could be a Canadian initiative and if the Minister would consider it, I would be willing to study it with her in committee. This could be a tremendous Canadian project that would show the world that if we are prepared to support military organizations, we are also prepared to show our great generosity and resourcefulness in having some sort of organization, multilateral or whatever which would immediately come to the rescue of human beings who are all our friends.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister of State for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) for providing an advance copy of her statement. Accompanying the statement was CIDA's estimate of damage that was done. Perhaps Hon. Members can get an idea of the magnitude of that damage if we compare it with what was considered to be a major disaster in Canada, the tornado which ripped through the community of Barrie in southern Ontario. I make this comparison with no intent to belittle what happened in Barrie. When tragedy strikes one individual, it is felt very keenly by that individual. When tragedy strikes a community, it affects the whole community in a very serious way. I am not in any way trying to belittle what happened in Canada as much as I am trying to show the magnitude of what happened in Mexico.

In Barrie, 12 people were killed, some 200 homes were destroyed, there were 300 injuries and the total loss to local business was estimated at some $27 million. As well, some 100 unemployment insurance claims were filed as a result of the incident. In Mexico, there were some 8,000 people killed, 30,000 people injured, 100,000 left homeless and 150,000 left unemployed. As well, there was extensive damage to schools, hospitals and other public buildings. The announcement of an additional $3.75 million in relief is welcome but it is by no means too much to meet the overwhelming needs that exist in Mexico today. It brings our contribution to both emergency assistance and long-term reconstruction to a total of $5 million.

As the Minister said, the film crews are gone from Mexico and will be responding to some new crisis or excitement in another part of the world. However, the need remains long after world attention has shifted. We know that that is the case as well in Africa. When the attention shifts from the drought in the Sahel, the TV cameras leave but the drought and suffering continue.

Canadians are very generous in sharing when confronted with need. However, like other people in the world, we tend to suffer from compassion fatigue when we are confronted by the same issues over and over again. What is unbelievable when it is seen for the first time on television becomes after awhile simply common.

We must have some way of dealing with the long-term needs after the emotional impact of the immediate crisis has passed. The Canadian International Development Agency is set up to meet that kind of need as is Canada's official Development Aid Program. The problem is that we keep backing away from our commitment to that long-term need.

We originally set a goal of .07 per cent of Gross National Product to meet long-term needs. However, in the early 1980s, we moved the target date of that goal to 1990. At this time last year, we said that we were not going to reach that goal by 1990 and moved the date to 1995. The $5 million we are providing for immediate needs in Mexico comes out of a very restricted CIDA budget. By moving the goal posts we are making it more difficult to respond generously to the immediate as well as long-term needs of Mexico. I urge the Government to take that into consideration. As well, I urge the Government to do what it can with agencies such as the International Monetary Fund to ensure generous treatment of Mexico and other Third World countries which are attempting to reschedule very heavy debt payments. This $5 million we are providing is a drop in the bucket and it will be useless unless we enable those countries to get on their own feet economically.

I want to leave the Government with those two suggestions. We appreciate what has been done in this initial quick response to the immediate crisis in Mexico. We urge the Government to reinstate as a goal the .07 per cent of GNP for ODA by 1990 and do what it can to encourage the IMF and World Bank to reschedule Third World countries' debt.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition signed by several hundred residents of the riding of Montreal-Mercier, and by members of the Women's Coalition, who are asking this House to withdraw Bill C-70 aimed at deindexing family allowances.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WORK TOWARD WORLD PEACE

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, signed by a group of students of Urgel-Archambault Secondary School in the riding of Montreal-Mercier. They have thought about the issue of nuclear disarmament, and they are asking this House to work toward world peace.

Mr. Speaker, this petition was signed by 450 students.

TEXTILE IMPORTS

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): I also have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the textile workers of Montreal-Mercier who are concerned about low-cost imports competing unfairly with their industry and threatening thousands of jobs in Quebec.

MAIL DELIVERY

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): And finally, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting to the House a petition signed by homeowners living at Nos. 7426 to 7450, Jacques-Rousseau Street, Rivière-des-Prairies, in the riding of Montreal-Mercier. They are asking for the same mail delivery services as the other residents on this street.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and duty to present four petitions to the House signed by Canadian citizens from Ituna, Moose Jaw, Weyburn, Melfort, St. Brieux, Stony Beach, Alvena and Domremy. The undersigned petitioners call upon the House to retain full indexing of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases, for which they and I will forever humbly pray.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the pleasure and duty to present a petition signed by many Canadians from Winnipeg who join with people in other Canadian cities in adding their voice to the protest against deindexation of family allowances and unfair tax increases. They call upon this House to do something about that reprehensible measure being taken by the Government at this very time.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition signed by citizens of Victoria who protest the deindexation of family allowances concurrent with tax increases which will hit low and medium-income Canadians at the same time millions of dollars are being given away to the banks and oil companies. They call upon the House of Commons to rescind its deindexation proposals as well as unfair tax increases.

AID FOR POTATO PRODUCERS

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting to the House a petition signed by 70 residents of Saint-Rémi and Saint-Michel, in the riding of Châteauguay.

These residents are producers of table potatoes and they are asking Parliament and the Government to come to their assistance and compensate them for the heavy losses suffered in marketing their product.

These losses are jeopardizing the future of producers who are not in a position to absorb the potential loss caused by the drop in the price of table potatoes.

KOREAN WAR SERVICE MEDAL

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 25 residents of my riding of Welland and other parts of Ontario who would like to see the establishment of a service medal to honour Canadian soldiers who fought so bravely in the Korean War.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present this petition on behalf of families in Canada at the same moment that the Government is considering this measure in committee. The petition reads as follows:

That family allowances and child tax credit government programs provide essential help to families with children.

That families with children include a large proportion of single parent families, one of the poorer groups in our society, and that the Government made a commitment during the election campaign to take action to strengthen the family unit.

Wherefore the petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada reestablish full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

That is from the great riding of Shefford.

I also have a petition signed by constituents of the great federal riding of Richelieu, again calling on the Government, in light of the necessity of family allowances and child tax credits, to give those families, in particular single-parent families, the boost they sometimes need to put food on the table. They call on the Government to live up to its election promises and back off on deindexation of family allowances and child tax credits.

I have another petition from the great riding of Québec-East seeking a retraction by the Government of its decision to cut back on family allowances, child tax credit and child tax exemptions. The residents of that riding believe that the Government—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to not make a short speech on every petition?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I will not make a short speech. I will simply give to the House the petition on behalf of not only these residents but thousands of other Canadians who are seeking the same thing.

I have one more petition from the residents of the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe.

[Translation]

The petitioners, also from the Province of Quebec, ask the Government to withdraw its Bill asking families to pay the cost of the federal deficit while it is giving money away to businesses and banks.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the fine Province of British Columbia who are concerned that the Government is continuing with its plans to deindex family allowances. They cannot for the life of them figure out why anyone would do this when, on the one hand, money can be found to pay foreign bankers but not to assist hard-pressed families raising their children.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will all questions stand?

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week the Government was about to table answers to question Nos. 450, 451 and 452 in this House. It has used a technicality in order to delay the answering of those questions. It is allegedly waiting for me to initial a document so that the questions can be reput on the Order Paper the next day. Mr. Speaker, is the Government so embarrassed by the questions relating to the expenditures for travel by the former Minister of the Environment that it is delaying until Friday in order not to get press coverage on this obviously very embarrassing issue to the Government? The Government has had the answer since Tuesday. Why can it not be tabled now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe a question has been put to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that there has been no intent to delay.

Mr. Boudria: Why have you?

Mr. Gurbin: We are certainly not embarrassed. I will take his comments as representation and will ensure that the questions are answered as quickly as possible.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have another question?

Mr. Boudria: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask why this document marked "confidential until answered" dated 05.11.85 was given to the Whip of my Party on Tuesday. The Government is alleging that it has the answers and is not willing to answer those questions in the House 48 hours later. If the Government had them 48 hours ago, why is it not providing them now? Surely there is an answer to this question.

Mr. Benjamin: Take it as notice.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I will clearly have to investigate the comments of the Hon. Member. I will undertake to do that and to respond to him as quickly as possible.

Mr. Boudria: Yeah, tomorrow afternoon, sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF CANAGREX

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some reluctance, but since the House has spent a great deal of time in the past several years trying to reform the House and make the Members of the House more in control of its processes and more in control of the Crown corporations and agencies that the House establishes, I want to bring to your attention the law as it relates to the Crown corporation, Canagrex. I refer to Volume IV of the Statutes of Canada, Chapter 152. Section 40.(1) reads:

> Canagrex shall, within three months after the termination of each financial year—

That financial year ended in March, 1985.

> —make a report to the Minister, in such form as he may direct, on the operations of Canagrex for that financial year.

It goes on in subsection 3 to explain:

> The Minister shall cause a copy of the report made to him pursuant to subsection (1) to be laid before Parliament—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Do I understand correctly that the Member is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Althouse: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair believed that the Member was speaking on debate on Canagrex under Bill C-42. Very well, the Member on a point of order.

Mr. Althouse: Yes, I believe you even said "point of order" when I was recognized, Mr. Speaker. The subsection reads:

> The Minister shall cause a copy of the report made to him pursuant to subsection (1) to be laid before Parliament on any of the first fifteen days that either House of Parliament is sitting after the report is made to him;

We have, therefore, established that the report should have been made to the Minister three months after March 31. We have established that once that report has been received by the Minister in the form that he wishes, he must—he "shall" it says—present that report to the House within 15 sitting days. I submit that those sitting days have long since lapsed. It goes on to say that:

> —and every annual report laid before Parliament pursuant to this subsection shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The reasoning for that is very clear. That is the immediate opportunity for Members of the House to discuss the annual report and to understand the functions of this Crown corporation.

I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because it is my contention that the Government is attempting, with Bill C-42, to avoid the law, to try to change the law with this particular Bill. It has failed to uphold the existing law. I argue that because the Government has failed to live up to the spirit of openness which the Committee on Parliamentary Reform has been trying to instill in the House for the last five or six years, that this Bill at least be set down. It is out of order. Until such time as the existing laws can be adhered to, we should not be dealing with laws that will simply make what is now illegal legal.

Mr. Benjamin: It's out of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Fraleigh) on the same point of order.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that there was no notice given of this so that the Minister could have responded in kind.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister should be in the House. Where is he?

Mr. Fraleigh: I want to take the opportunity to give you my perception of this issue. It is that the report is not legally tabled until the end of the fiscal year at which time the Minister is required to table the audited report as I understand it. I apologize to the Hon. Member. He did raise this issue this morning and I should have taken the opportunity at the noon hour to have verified it. However, as I understand it, the Minister does not have to file the audited report until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Benjamin: That was last March.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) may have a point, however, the Chair does not believe that it is up to the Chair to rule on a legal interpretation of a particular statute.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my colleague is asking the Chair to rule on the order of this House having to do with a legal requirement for an annual report to be tabled in this House, as the law requires, and it has not been done. That is all we are asking. We are not asking the House for a legal opinion. We are just waiting for the report and it has not been tabled. The Government has broken the law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will rule that the Hon. Member is asking for an interpretation of the law and not an interpretation of the Standing Orders. The Chair is ready to give an interpretation of the Standing Orders, but does not believe that this is the request which is presently being made.

CANAGREX DISSOLUTION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Layton (for the Minister of Agriculture) that Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that, because of the ministerial statements, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 41 minutes this day. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.41 o'clock p.m. I will recognize the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on debate.

Mr. Fraleigh: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I had time left in the time allotted to me for questions when the House recessed. Do I not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes, the Member is correct, he had time left, but I saw no one rising on questions or comments.

Mr. Fraleigh: Well, there were a lot of allegations made by previous speakers and I thought surely there would be all kinds of questions on what I had said.

Mr. Benjamin: You blew it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately for the Member, I do not believe there are.

An Hon. Member: Nobody wants to talk to you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on debate.

Mr. Althouse: You said the Minister was answering those questions, not you.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise in my place today to speak against this piece of legislation. The Government has taken the decision to wind up what is probably one of the most creative, productive and valuable Crown corporations ever. Quite frankly, I remember very clearly, not many months ago, when members of the government Party were in Opposition and stood in their places, both in the House and in Committee, speaking about the value of having a corporation such as Canagrex in place. They had some concerns about various aspects of it, but, by and large, agreed with the principle. As a matter of fact, I believe it was the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) who at one time stood in his place and indicated the value of having a Crown corporation such as Canagrex in place. It is peculiar how one forgets about commitments made to various groups once one is in Government. In this case, the group is the farmers of Canada.

When talking about Canagrex, one cannot help but think of corporations such as the Export Development Corporation. It does an effective job in terms of assisting the industrial sector to develop an export option for its products. It has a budget of some $20 million of contingent liability. It provides specific financial lending and insurance assistance to help reduce the very substantial risk in the export of Canadian industrial products overseas. We consider this corporation as an important aspect of our trade policy and an important component of the development of Canada's economy for export trade.

There is also the Canada Commercial Corporation which assists Canadian corporations, both large and small, to find opportunities for expanding the sale of their goods overseas in foreign markets. I believe the record would show that the EDC and the CCC have very impressive track records and could in fact accomplish much more.

However, there is no commitment to our farmers. They take advantage of our most important resource, agriculture, in order to grow foodstuffs for domestic purposes as well as for sale overseas. There is no commitment to assist the development of those overseas trade opportunities. Canagrex was a Crown corporation that was attempting to do just that. Although it had not been given enough time to prove itself, it had a reasonable track record in the short time it operated since its establishment in January, 1984. Canagrex had a reasonable track record and had made a great many sales. It provided many opportunities for individuals and firms throughout the country. I ask Hon. Members to stand in their place and deny that there were not literally dozens of sales which had not taken place prior to the formation of Canagrex and that there were many more potential sales before the Government decided to wind down its operations.

The Government has taken this action strictly for political reasons. It was fashionable during the campaign to denounce and decry all Crown corporations and say that Government involvement in such enterprises was bad. When one considers the rhetoric used about Canagrex, it was very disappointing that people would politicize the development of this newly formed Crown corporation. As a result of that rhetoric and the attacks made against Canagrex by the Conservatives during the election campaign, I suggest they felt an obligation to wind it down once they formed the Government.

I believe we should comment on the various aspects of Canagrex itself. In fact, Canagrex was a model of what Crown corporations should be in the future. There was a requirement to review its effectiveness every five years. Another section in the Canagrex Act enabled the Auditor General to have access to its books at any time and to have full access to its operations so that the people of Canada would know if they were getting their money's worth.

Canagrex consisted of a broadly based Board of Directors that reflected the need for wide ranging representation. The Chief Executive Officer and President, Mr. Edwin Story, had acquired extensive experience in the export field over a long period of time. He knew the export field and knew what was required in terms of opening new market opportunities. Mr. Glenn Flaten was Chairman of the 11 member Board of Directors for Canagrex. He was President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a member of numerous other agricultural related associations and boards. Mr. Howard Malcolm was President of the Canadian Pork Council and obviously familiar with the hog industry. Mr. Walter Kroeker was President and Director of Vegetable Growers in Manitoba, a vegetable farmer and businessman, and past-President of the Canadian Horticultural Council. There were many qualified individuals on the board who represented various sectors of the agricultural industry. They played an active role once Canagrex began operations in January, 1984. It was most unfortunate that there was no consultation between the Government and those involved in the agricultural community before the decision was made to wind down this operation, especially when one considers that the Government promised to conduct a great deal of consultations with groups before making decisions. That was not the case here.

Many people sent telegrams, wrote letters and sent delegations to Ottawa, at the eleventh hour, once they heard that the Government was planning to wind down the affairs of Canagrex. Let me refer to some of those telegrams. A telegram from Mary Boyd of Charlottetown states:

> Please reconsider Canagrex Bill. Should be discussed by Agricultural Committee. Canada needs Canagrex.

Another telegram from a farmer on Prince Edward Island requests the Government to reconsider the Canagrex decision. He asks that the Canagrex officials appear before the Agriculture Committee to explain the work of the Crown Corporation. Robert Jeppsen of New Brunswick, who was with the National Farmers' Union states:

> Let me state my disappointment with the cancellation of Canagrex. Our present system of exporting potatoes has not proven beneficial to potato producers nor have our exporters been responsible agents abroad. We see Canagrex as a sign of hope. Therefore we request your Government to reconsider Canagrex and bring it to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for hearings.

A dairy farmer from Grand Falls, New Brunswick and another farmer from Manitoba have indicated how vital Canagrex was to the farm communities and their future. There are pages and pages containing the names of active and knowledgeable farmers who realize the potential of that sector. That potential will disappear because of Conservative rhetoric and ideological commitment about Crown corporations.

My hon. friend, the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) indicated that we are concerned about proceeding with this Bill because it appears that it is against the law. For example, Section 40(1) of the Canagrex Act states:

> Canagrex shall, within three months after the termination of each financial year, make a report to the Minister, in such form as he may direct, on the operations of Canagrex for that financial year.

That is straightforward. It goes on:

> (3) The Minister shall cause a copy of the report made to him pursuant to subsection (1) to be laid before Parliament on any of the first fifteen days that either House of Parliament is sitting after the report is made to him; and every annual report laid before Parliament pursuant to this subjection shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

It is our interpretation, as New Democrats, that Government is proceeding in an inappropriate manner. It has not fulfilled its legal obligations. We feel very uncomfortable dealing with something by which the Government is breaking the law, as best as we can determine.

Therefore, in light of our hesitancy to proceed with something that may in fact be illegal, and considering that we have many pressing matters to deal with that are of a legal nature, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

> That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: In my view, it is deemed to be 6.41 p.m. I do now leave the Chair until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 6.17 p.m.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

COMMEMORATION OF SERVICE MEN AND WOMEN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find unanimous consent of the House to alter somewhat our normal proceedings in anticipation of Remembrance Day, November 11. We would like to proceed with statements by each of the Parties at the beginning of the proceedings. Following that, we will proceed to the usual order of business. The business of the House will be extended for the period of time used for the statements with respect to Remembrance Day.

Mr. Speaker: Can I be clear whether it is the intent of the House to proceed with the normal statements and then the Ministers' statement, or just the Minister's statement?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Ministers' statement will be made first, followed by statements under Standing Order 22 and then Question Period will take place in the usual sequence.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my proud duty to remind Members of the House that Canada will be observing Remembrance Day next Monday. Last year I said it was not sufficient to recognize the sacrifices of veterans and their families merely on special occasions. I said they must be regarded as a very special group, worthy of our unsparing attention each and every day. I am thankful that we in this House have been able to give a practical expression to those sentiments during the past 12 months.

I would like to thank members of all Parties in the House for so enthusiastically supporting the provision of additional funds for the benefit of many more thousands of veterans and their families. One of the first pieces of legislation passed by the House allowed the Department of Veterans Affairs to streamline and upgrade long established veterans' programs. I am particularly grateful for the advice and co-operation I received from all Members of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in the preparation of this legislation.

Canadians have been reminded once again this year of the achievement of the men and women we are serving here in Parliament. Some veterans returned to Sicily and Italy to pay their respects to those Canadians who died during a harsh 20-month campaign fought long before the rest of the Allied Forces arrived in Europe on D-Day. Others of us returned to Holland to be greeted with love as representatives of Canadians who liberated that wonderful country 40 years before. Next month another pilgrimage will be going to Asia. There Canada will be able to salute those who were among the first to see action and the last to see freedom again, the defenders of Hong Kong. Cemeteries in Singapore and Burma will be visited by veterans, including some of our own colleagues, who flew so many dangereous missions in that forgotten theatre.

These pilgrimages are always occasions for both sadness and pride. The rows of Canadian graves and the lists of names on memorials are a terrible reminder of the price our country has had to pay in war. Our pride comes from rediscovering just how much respect our service men and women gained for Canada overseas.

I would like to quote some remarks made by the Dutch Minister of Transport when we Canadians visited Holland last May. She said at that time: "During the war Canada was, in the Dutch peoples' eyes, a big, free, hospitable country far away from the acts of war. During the war it was that country whose sons and daughters were willing to risk their lives, and sometimes sacrifice their lives, for the liberation of Europe. The children from that paradise called Canada wore uniforms and went to a hell called Europe. To us, the Dutch, Canada is still a concept we link with freedom and courage".

Such words, Mr. Speaker, eloquently explain why it will be such a privilege for Canadians to commemorate the two World Wars and the Korean War next Monday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as spokesperson for the Official Opposition, I welcome this opportunity to join the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) in paying tribute to those Canadians whose memory we shall be honouring on Remembrance Day, Monday, November 11.

The Minister referred to the trip to the Netherlands made by our veterans early this year to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the end of hostilities of the Second World War.

I am sure all Canadians were very proud and very moved by the many stories about this visit that were published in the media. On television, we also saw the joy, love and pride with which thousands of Dutch people welcomed our veterans back to their country.

Personally, I was very impressed to see so many young children waving Canadian flags. They seemed to be very much aware, and at the same time grateful to all those Canadian veterans who were proudly parading past them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that today's youth in Canada will also show this gratitude to our Canadian veterans.

Since 1953, Canada has not engaged in any armed conflict. If our young people wonder why Canada celebrates Remembrance Day, they should remember the supreme sacrifice made by generations that went before, to give them a present so few had been able to enjoy for so long: peace and freedom.

We enjoy the unusual privilege of peace. Freedom is an integral part of our daily lives in this country. On Remembrance Day, we shall pay tribute to the suffering and bloodshed with which others paid for this freedom.

There is also fear, the fear felt by those who went overseas and who had to face the enemy, and the fear of those who stayed home, waiting anxiously until a telegram announced that a relative or a friend was wounded or killed in battle.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are not demonstrative people. Remembrance Day has never lost its sacred characteristic, nor its silent dignity, nor its link with past events. The Flanders poppy is a discreet reminder of World War I atrocities and sacrifices—over 67 years ago already.

Speaking of the poppy, I would remind the House that the Royal Canadian Legion is celebrating its 60th anniversary this year. The Legion has been the staunch defender of veterans' rights and the protector of their families for the last 60 years. I commend the Legion for past achievements and I fully expect its future endeavours to be equally illustrious.

As parades worm their way through Canadian cities on Monday, bagpipers will remind us of our grief, buglers will blow the last post. But we will not highlight Remembrance Day by displays of new missiles, fly-pasts, or tanks thundering down the streets. We do have such weapons, of course, but that is not what Remembrance Day means to Canadians. We can still appreciate what Remembrance Day represents—an opportunity to recall Canadian men and women who made the ultimate sacrifice so we may live as we do today, free!

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to read a verse from a poem written by John McCrae, physician, poet and soldier, entitled "Somewhere in Flanders":

> You who survive us, it is up to you to take the torch of combat from our emaciated fingers, it is a sacred duty, we shall not sleep under the soil of Flanders if you desecrate it.

• (1110)

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, over 70 years have passed since the first Canadian died overseas in the fight for freedom against totalitarianism. This year marks the fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War, a war which I lived through in Britain as a child and which my father, together with so many other fathers of other young men and boys and girls, the brothers and the sisters and the cousins and the other relatives, took part. I remember that at the end of that war we vowed it would never happen again and that we would, in fact, remember the sacrifices. We vowed that we would remember those who died and that we would, in a more tangible way, recognize the sacrifice of those who returned from that war wounded, in body and, in some instances, in mind. I ask the House to think back about whether in fact we have lived up to that obligation, to that undertaking to which we committed ourselves at that time without a moment's hesitation.

In 1984 I had the privilege of travelling with hundreds of veterans as they returned to the places which are indelibly inscribed in their memories. I stood on the shores and at the battle scenes and heard of the terror, the sacrifice and the bravery first hand. I met, with others from Canada, those in France who had befriended and protected our men as they fought for freedom.

I knew then what Remembrance Day was all about and why we, who benefited from the sacrifice, committed ourselves to ensuring that this could never happen again. We continue to owe a great deal to those whose lifetime was one of great sacrifice and suffering, to the widows and families of those who lost their lives.

On behalf of my colleagues, I want to join with the Minister and the representative of the Liberal Party in paying tribute and rededicating ourselves now to meeting our debt to those who served our country, who served it in World War I and World War II, to those who served in the Korean conflict and to those who continue to serve in the many peacekeeping missions in which we take part around the world as part of our obligation.

I continue to pray that we will not lose sight, as Parliament, of the need to develop an economic order throughout the world which will eliminate poverty and want and establish for all people a sense of belonging that will guarantee the level of life-style that will, by its very existence, put an end to the threat of war.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we remember.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Members will want to join me in a minute of silence.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN EAST MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, we learned this morning from the medias that the number of unemployed people in Montreal has increased by as much as one half of 1 per cent over the past month.

We, Liberals, have emphasized these past few weeks the many plant closings and job losses on the Island of Montreal, especially in East End Montreal, because we expected Tory members to do something.

We were wrong, Mr. Speaker, for Conservative members representing ridings on the island of Montreal are not only doing nothing, but they are so incompetent that they simply do not know what to do, which is even worse.

Mr. Speaker, the only minister from an Island of Montreal riding is of course our great international traveler, the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) who is much more concerned about Sweden, Corsica, the U.S.S.R. or the London suburbs than she is about the thousands of jobs which are being lost on the Island of Montreal and which are likely to continue being lost.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the PC committee which meets at the Ritz every Thursday night to give mandates and make appointments might deal with the unemployment situation on the Island of Montreal, for while the number of unemployed is increasing, the number of mandates given to their PC friends is increasing even more.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Tory federal Government in the name of deficit reduction is cutting back on family benefits, on social programs, on transfer payments to provinces for health and education, and on essential public service jobs. While professing to care about those in greatest need, it is copying the B.C. policy of restraint which has made a devastating contribution to unemployment, poverty, and human rights.

Bill Bennett in British Columbia cut social service programs, eliminated child protection teams, family support workers, closed the Rentalman's office, disbanded the Human Rights Commission, laid off consumer protection officers, closed transition houses and fired elected schoolboards.

While unemployment remains at 14.2 per cent, the third highest in Canada, the number of poor families in B.C. has increased by 400 per cent since 1980. A 400 per cent increase in poverty is a crisis, Mr. Speaker. The federal Government by adding another layer of restraint will add to the poverty and hardship of British Columbians and other Canadians.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

NEEDS OF VICTIMS

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, this week has been designated as Crime Prevention Week in Canada, with the theme being victims. I wish to take this opportunity to address the House on the importance of this issue.

Violence is always tragic, but none so tragic as that violence which occurs within the family. Abuse of children and wife battering are far more widespread than most Canadians imagine. For example, it has been estimated that at least one in 10 Canadian wives is beaten by her husband in any given year.

There are transition houses and crisis centres for victims which provide an invaluable service for abused children and battered wives. However, they are too few and underfunded. Such a centre exists in my riding in Manitoba, the Dauphin Crisis Centre for Battered Women and Abused Children. The dedicated people involved in this Centre offer counselling, referrals, general information and, in the near future, hope to provide short-term emergency shelter.

The Government has promised that, in consultation with the provinces, it will take action to provide additional assistance to the victims of family violence. It can never be too soon to provide the victims of family violence with somewhere to turn. They need and deserve the support of this House, the provincial Governments, and all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL OPPOSITION'S ATTITUDE

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition persists in disparaging our Government not by enquiring as to the great orientations of our election campaign, which are national reconciliation and economic recovery, but by trying to create panic among the poor. We only have to recall the campaign launched last spring to stir up students without any reference to our new program which has been very successful. We should also recall the campaign to stir up senior citizens with no emphasis at all on the new spouse allowance program worth close to $600 million to be paid to the poorest of those people.

In spite of their eloquent and demagogic statement, truth has its rights and we only have to look at the economic indicators. All this was done despite the scandalous legacy of the Liberal Government. For several years, we have seen them cutting capers on the Parliament Hill steps and putting on a show at the expense of all Canadians. That Government was characterized above all by its arrogance and its contempt for all Canadians.

We should therefore unmask, Mr. Speaker, those new defenders of the widow and the orphan who led the country to the brim of disaster. In 10 years they spent 10 times more than during the first 110 years of Confederation, Mr. Speaker. I have been speaking for almost a minute and one half and this will cost us $75,000 in interests because of the foolishness of the Liberal Government. Our Government should therefore continue—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time allotted to him has expired.

FISHERIES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER LICENCES—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the fishery and for politics in Newfoundland. The federal Government has announced not just one factory freezer trawler licence, but it has offered two more factory freezer trawler licences, one of them to a provincial-federal Crown corporation, namely, Fishery Products International, which licence was not even requested.

We have the sad situation today in Newfoundland of having the federal Government calling the provincial Government names and the provincial Government calling the federal Government names in open battle. I think that is pretty sad, Mr. Speaker, and is a bad reflection on our political system. What it requires is a full hearing on the matter as far as factory freezer trawlers versus the inshore fishermen are concerned, and for everybody to keep in mind that the best quality of fish is that caught by the inshore fishermen in a trap or by hook and line.

I am hoping that the provincial Government and the federal Government can resolve these differences, because it certainly does nobody any good when we have this situation occurring in a Province like Newfoundland.

• (1125)

SUPPORT FOR DECISION TO LICENSE FREEZER FACTORY TRAWLERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to make a statement, not to engage in debate. I welcome the decision made by the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Nielsen) to make a policy change which will result in the issuance of factory freezer trawler licences. I am sure it was not an easy decision for the Minister, and I am sure he applied the Solomon-like judgment of which he is capable in coming to his conclusion.

At the same time all of us respect the views and legitimate concerns of people like the Premier of Newfoundland and others interested in the Atlantic fishery who fear that difficulties may arise from the use of this new technology. However, like any advancing technology, we cannot fear it; we must learn to live with it.

I think the decision of the Minister has allowed the Atlantic fishery to advance with this new technology, adapt it to our own use, preserve jobs, and preserve the traditions of the Atlantic fishery.

I know from my personal experience that the Minister, in pursuing the process by which he came to the decision, had many opportunities to consult with the people in the industry. Many of us in the House of Commons, particularly from the Atlantic area, know more about factory freezer trawlers than we ever wanted to know. There has been a steady barrage of material in the newspapers, in the media, in presentations and so on. I think the consultation process has been followed to the extreme in this case. I think the views of all are well known.

What remains is for Members of Parliament to accept their responsibility to the people—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government formulate plans for the next Budget, today's unemployment figures in western Canada should be studied carefully and should act as a guide to the Government.

In British Columbia, where Conservative ideology has resulted in the devastation of the educational system, the economy, and the province's social programs, and now only offers Expo '86 as the economic saviour of the province, forgetting that there will still be life in British Columbia after 1986, it has become crystal clear that the Conservative approach to economic problem solving has created an economic and social nightmare for hundreds of thousands of British Columbia residents.

Today's unemployment statistics show that the situation continues to deteriorate in the Province of British Columbia, as unemployment climbs ever higher, from the seasonally adjusted rate of 13 per cent in September to 14.2 per cent this past month.

This should be compared with the Social Democratic Province of Manitoba which has had the lowest seasonally adjusted unemployment rates in Canada. In the Province of Manitoba there have not been vicious cut-backs in social programs, the economy is on the upturn, and the number of unemployed continues to fall month after month. In September it was 7.6 per cent and in October it was 7.2 per cent.

By looking at the facts, and the facts only, the western province led by extremist Conservative ideology is a disaster in economic and social terms, while the western province led by a Social Democratic ideology is a caring and building province. Mr. Prime Minister, you now have budget models—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

FIREARMS

REVIEW OF CONTROL LAWS URGED

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address an issue of concern expressed to me on numerous occasions. The complaint is that changes to the 1978 firearms control law adversely affect the ownership and use of recreational firearms.

Several reports and evaluations commissioned by the House have indicated that the 1978 changes had little impact on firearms crime. Instead, the resulting growth of the bureaucracy has increased costs, with questionable results.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this House must take into consideration requests for the revision and simplification of that law. Recreational firearms can be controlled much more cheaply and effectively.

• (1130)

[English]

Firearms control authorities are primarily police officers. Their view of recreational firearms is rightly constrained by their training and experience, but this can lead to unnecessary friction between honest citizens who use firearms for recreational purposes and the authorities.

The diversity of firearms disciplines makes it difficult to achieve adequate control of the use of recreational firearms without enlisting the co-operation of the community itself, which we have not done.

Our present firearms registration system is deficient. A new system, devised jointly by the authorities and the recreational firearms community, would be cheaper and more effective. This is an area where co-operation between citizens and Government could be improved. On behalf of the recreational firearms community in my constituency, I call for a review of the firearms control laws, with the full participation of representatives of that community.

ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that a year ago today, on November 8, 1984, the Conservative Government tabled its document called A New Direction for Canada, An Agenda for Economic Renewal. It read: "On September 4, Canadians voted for change, and for a better future. In doing so, they have provided the opportunity to make a fresh start, to build new confidence and a new national consensus toward achieving the economic promise and potential of Canada."

Mr. Speaker, I could not find anywhere in that document that the Conservatives would try to deindex old-age security pensions. I could not find either any reference to the fact that the Conservatives would deindex family allowances. That document does not say anything about the resignation of three Ministers. Nor does it refer to the rancid tuna affair. There is no mention of the two bank failures or the nearly $1 billion gift to Gulf shareholders. Nothing is said of possible revenue losses of $250 million in the case of Algoma Steel. A $2.4 billion increase in the tax burden of Canadians was not mentioned anymore than tax privileges of $500,000 to the wealthy.

To the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives promised the earth. They ignored their election promises, their document full of promises. One year later, the Conservatives should bury their document so that a new one could be drafted and give perhaps better reason to rejoice in a year from today.

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, here is the truth: day after day, it becomes more obvious that the Mulroney's Government is rebuilding the Canadian economy.

The number of jobs increased by 37,000 in October. Since the elections, 333,000 jobs have been created. The rate of unemployment has decreased from 11.5 per cent in September 1984 to 10.3 per cent now.

The Bank of Canada rate has dropped 3.54 points since we took over and currently stands at 8.84 per cent. The charter banks prime rate is now at 10 per cent, three per cent less than it was. The mortgage rates have declined by 2.5 points and now stand at 11.75 per cent.

During the first nine months of 1985, building permits value has increased 20 per cent over the same period the year before.

During the first nine months of 1985, bankruptcies were down 12 per cent as compared to the same period last year.

Investment intentions of large companies for 1985 are up 12 per cent over last year.

The Canadian economy is actually doing better than the American one.

In September 1985, exports reached a record $10.7 billion, an increase of 10 per cent over September 1984.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this positive statement should . . .

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

OCTOBER UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Prime Minister. Today the unemployment figures are out, and they show a troublesome increase in unemployment since last month. In particular, there are a series of sharp increases in unemployment in key regions of the country. For example, in British Columbia there was an increase of 1.2 per cent, with 20,000 people losing their jobs in a period of one month only.

[Translation]

Also in Quebec, 10,000 people lost their jobs in a single month.

[English]

We have 5,000 more out of work in New Brunswick, and 5,000 more in Alberta.

My question for the Prime Minister is: why have he and his Government allowed this to happen? Don't these figures show that the air is starting to go out of the Tories "jobs, jobs, jobs" balloon?

An Hon. Member: You will wish you had never asked that question, Herb.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): My hon. friend may be sorry he has raised this question. As of today, under a new Progressive Conservative Government, there will have been created in Canada, since the swearing in of this Government, 333,000 new jobs. We have taken the unemployment rate down 1.3 per cent from 11.6 per cent, creating 333,000 jobs in the process.

An Hon. Member: Not in British Columbia, you haven't.

Mr. Mulroney: Interest rates are down; employment is up, investment is up. Canada is on its way to a sustained recovery, and that is good news for Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment figures began trending down under the previous Government. One wonders why the Prime Minister is satisfied with more than 1,300,000 people out of work. Doesn't the Prime Minister realize that his words are empty? Looking at the Atlantic Provinces, we have a 1.8 per cent increase in the unemployed in Prince Edward Island, 1.5 per cent in New Brunswick, with the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland remaining in the area of 20 per cent. Why has his excuse for a regional industrial development policy been such a failure?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, employment increased in the last month by 37,000. The employment record, in all regions and in all provinces, is better now, today, under the Progressive Conservative Government than it was under the Liberals, and that is true in all circumstances, in all age groups across the country. We increased employment by 37,000.

What my hon. friend doesn't mention and what I think the country ought to reflect upon is the fact that, apart from the 333,000 jobs already created, there are jobs and prospects in the bank. Oil wells drilled in the first nine months are up 21 per cent over 1984; retail sales in August were up 13 per cent over 1984; motor vehicle sales in August were up 27 per cent over 1984; housing starts are up 49 per cent over last October.

The GNP is increasing at 4.1 per cent. That is good news for Canada and bad news, I know, for the Liberals.

An Hon. Member: Ask another one, Herb.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's empty words won't mean much to the more than one million unemployed. Doesn't he know that there has been an increase of almost 1 per cent in unemployment for young men aged 18 to 25? Why is he allowing this to happen? Doesn't he realize that his unemployment policies are creating a lost generation of young people? Why is he satisfied with that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not satisfied—and that is exactly the answer. It is for that reason that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has put in place such impressive programs to deal with the particular tragedy of youth unemployment. It is something to which we have tried to respond. The response of the Minister of Finance has been a decrease in interest rates, in the neighbourhood of 3 per cent. The economy is coming on strong. But the important thing in this respect is that youth unemployment is down from where it was under the Liberals. In 12 months it is down 2.2 per cent, and that, Mr. Speaker, is great progress.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Montreal East industrial base is being eroded with the announcement of lost contracts. Would the Minister tell us today, instead of repeating the answer she gave my colleague, the critic for my Party, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, an answer which I have read carefully, what she is doing in practical terms for Montreal East?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the Hon. Member about the employment situation in Montreal. I was in Montreal yesterday with my colleagues from that city and we met with a large number of citizens to try and find practical answers to the problem.

However, I must point out at the same time, Mr. Speaker, that 90,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec in the last year. This is a very positive record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, East End Montreal will not be satisfied with an announcement of jobs created in general. What the residents of East End Montreal want to know is exactly what is going to be done for the industries of that area.

I quote La Presse:

Montreal East Cries for Help! Montreal East is ill, and to cure it, the only remedy found was to create the CAMO committee, which all unemployed people in Montreal East are now calling le comité Chameau of Quebec and Ottawa Ministers.

Can the Minister tell these people in practical terms, in addition to saying that jobs have been created throughout terms, in addition to saying that jobs have been created throughout Canada, or to saying, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister has just done, that everything is going well, while we can see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is enough!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are very conscious of existing problems in Montreal East.

• (1140)

[English]

I regret that the Hon. Member will not take part in the committee or put forward his suggestions to the committee in order to help the people about whom we are concerned. Indeed, we are taking steps. We have set up a committee but, more than that, we have put into effect a Canadian Jobs Strategy which is already having an effect in Montreal and in Quebec. I would tell the Hon. Member that as of November 1, over 1,000 applications under the Canadian Jobs Strategy have come into offices in Quebec. These applications involve almost $100 million for the many people who need training and jobs. That is a positive approach to the affairs of Montreal East and Quebec, not the negative approach that the Hon. Member is taking.

LICENSING OF FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLERS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister might be able to give the House a definition of consultation. Regarding the factory freezer trawler issue, the vast majority of groups before the Standing Committee opposed it and the Province of Newfoundland opposed it. In fact the decision of the Government to grant three of those permits shows absolute contempt. Would the Prime Minister give us the Government's definition of consultation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman heard me say yesterday that the broadest possible consultation took place. The preamble to the Hon. Member's question, as usual, is utterly false. When he makes a statement in the House indicating that all of the provinces were against the granting of licences, he knows, or damned well should have checked his facts before saying such a thing, that it was false.

STANDING COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister cannot handle it. I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister and try to redo the facts for him. The Province of Newfoundland is opposed to the factory freezer trawlers but the real serious question I would ask of the Deputy Prime Minister is if he can explain why he is not prepared to let the Standing Committee hear all sides of this question in a public forum and not behind closed doors on November 21. Why is he not prepared to let that happen?

Mr. Gauthier: We asked that yesterday.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Exactly, Mr. Speaker. The question was asked yesterday. I do not know where the Hon. Member was yesterday. Indeed, I do not know where he was when he, like all other Members of the House, received a copy of the application from National Sea Products. I did not hear from him on that occasion. All of a sudden he has started to raise these questions. I wonder why he did not make those representations far earlier than now.

CANADA-FRANCE ARBITRATION CASE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my final question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the Secretary of State not agree that the Government has cut the ground from under him on the arbitration case with St. Pierre and Miquelon and that in fact we will now have a French fleet of freezer trawlers tied up at St. Pierre and Miquelon? Would he not also agree that, when it comes to the free trade negotiations, the United States will be asking to put freezer factory trawlers in our waters to fish our surplus stock? Has the Government not now cut the ground out from under him in both these cases?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as has become his unhappy habit, the Hon. Member is speaking nonsense.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, under the heading Legal and Regulatory Restrictions contained in National Sea Products' application to the Government for a factory freezer trawler, it states:

—Article 12 of the Canada Newfoundland 1983 Restructuring Agreement states that FFT's would not be permitted to harvest northern cod.

The Government has violated a federal-provincial agreement. I ask the Acting Prime Minister and Minister of Fisheries what makes the Government so arrogant as to believe that it can violate a federal-provincial agreement and get away with it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the record of the Government with respect to the conduct of its affairs with the Government of Newfoundland is historic. The Atlantic Accord, the Burin Agreement, the actions of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and every single action the Government has taken has done more to focus attention on the problems of Newfoundland than anything the previous Government which the Hon. Member supported ever did. In this specific instance the intent of that Agreement is being pursued.

The first step in achieving the rejuvenation of the fishery in Newfoundland was the allotment of $76.7 million in the new five-year plan for Fisheries Products International, with another licence being made available to that Newfoundland-based firm. Is the Hon. Member opposed to that kind of rejuvenation in his province?

MIDDLE-DISTANCE FLEET PROPOSAL

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question because I do not think he can. Let me ask him something that he can perhaps answer. We are not now talking about one factory freezer trawler licence being issued. Two more have been offered and National Sea Products is talking about four being issued as early as 1987 in its application to the Government. Knowing that this will have a devastating effect on the inshore fishery, how far does the Government intend to go in issuing factory freezer trawler licences? Is the Minister going to issue the 30 or 40 licences that have been requested by the Newfoundland Government under the new so-called middle-distance fleet?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. gentleman has not read the release. What is being done is the issuance of a maximum of three licences, one to a Nova Scotia based company, another is available to a Newfoundland-based company, and another to the smaller operators in the fishery. The whole intention of this is to enhance the ability of the industry to compete more effectively in the market-place. What could be so drastically wrong with that approach?

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

VANCOUVER RADIO BROADCAST FINDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In April a Vancouver radio station broadcast a one and a half hour program with the following themes: incest is a regular occurence among Indians, native people are dishonest, native people have no respect for the law, and native people are poachers, dirty, messy and alcoholic. Does the Prime Minister support this week's CRTC recommendation that there be prosecution in this case, and does he not agree that such prosecution should occur quickly since this broadcast took place more than six months ago?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I cannot refer to the radio broadcast to which the Hon. Member has referred but I can tell him that I am sure every member of the Government and every Member of the House would want to dissociate himself or herself from those kinds of statements. They are just not facts. Those of us who have had some responsibilities in the Department of Indian Affairs have always tried to encourage the development not only of models of success but the image, which is correct, and that one is obviously dead wrong.

PROSECUTION INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister because he is the only one who can now clear up the matter. There is at least one Member of the House who does not share in the remarks just made by a member of the Cabinet. Perhaps the Prime Minister could explain, when the CRTC has described the program as being unsubstantiated, indefensible, ill-advised and irresponsible, and that much of the information was false, and has publicly called for prosecution, why he is not prepared to rise today to say that he will proceed with this prosecution under the Broadcasting Act. His friend, the Minister of Justice, is blocking it at this point in time.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Minister of Communications is not in the House today as I indicated to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, he is.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is the Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to associate myself with the remarks made by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with respect to this issue. I will bring the question to the attention of the Minister and he can get back to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fulton: It is the Minister of Justice who is blocking it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There will be two letters then.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC SUMMIT AND TRADE SHOW—AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On October 28 I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether Argyle Productions of Toronto, headed by his good friend and political adviser, Bill Marshall, was involved in the planning and conducting of a native economic summit and trade show. To that suggestion, the Minister said that he rejected it. I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain to the House how the Minister could respond in that way when we now know that Argyle and Marshall are involved in this event in a very substantial and lucrative way.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member that that issue will be brought to the Minister's attention when he returns to the House.

TENDERING PROCESS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister agree to inquire into this matter to determine whether the tendering process was completely and fairly used in every respect in the awarding of these contracts?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the first answer applies and those details will be conveyed as well.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It was announced this morning that Simon Reisman will be our ambassadorial head in the free trade talks with the U.S. What consultations have taken place with the provinces on this appointment? Did all provinces give explicit approval to the appointment of this quite conservative centralist to this key job in these negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when we were sworn in as a Government we did not contract out our national responsibilities to the provinces. We selected Mr. Reisman as a man of great distinction and uncommon accomplishment in international negotiations because we felt and were secure in the knowledge that he could represent the national interest and harmonize the provincial interests therewith, with great competence in the negotiations.

PROVINCIAL CONCERNS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am told by my colleagues, who should know, that that is vintage Trudeau.

Given the background of this ambassador in the central corridors of power here in Ottawa, can he really be expected to reflect the opposition of all provinces to bargaining over our cultural industries? Can he be expected to reflect their concern about bargaining away agricultural support programs? Can he be expected to reflect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is the third question.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian negotiating team will indeed reflect the interests of the Canadian community because that negotiator and the team working with him will be consulting directly with the provinces, with the industrial sectors, reflecting what he learns rather than bringing pre-conceived prejudices into the discussions as has unhappily been the characteristic of the Hon. Member.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC SUMMIT AND TRADE SHOW CONTRACT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to another important aspect of the Bill Marshall contract.

Last September the Prime Minister personally tabled conflict of interest guidelines which declared, among other things: "A public officer holder shall not accord preferential treatment in relation to any official matter to family members or friends." Given that Mr. Marshall ran the Minister of Indian Affairs' municipal campaign in Toronto, was his chief of staff during his term as mayor, and ran his Conservative Party leadership bid, would the Prime Minister not consider Mr. Marshall to be a personal friend of the Minsiter and therefore the guidelines have been seriously breached in this $200,000 contract? What is he prepared to do in light of this serious violation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the answers I have given on this issue apply. However, I want to tell the Hon. Member that, yes, members of this Government and this Party, and I would hope members of his Party, but maybe they do not have many friends left, have a lot of friends and supporters. We have many Canadians who want to work with government and see our country improve. I suggest that if he asks questions, he should ask them legitimately and not imply that because people might have friends they should be totally isolated from anything in Government.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the number of friendships the Government has is going to drain the federal Treasury. Will the Prime Minister have the courage to get up on his much-touted conflict-of-interest guidelines and agree that the awarding of a $200,000 contract to the political and personal friend of the Minister of Indian Affairs is simply another crass example of political patronage? Canadians want to know when this is going to stop—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Marchi: —and does he have the courage to revoke the contract?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): First of all, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the figures concerning the consulting firm are wrong. For example, does he take Seneca Communications, a native-run organization, as part of that as well? Yes, they are supporters and friends of this Government as well. When he looks at some of those issues, he should stay with the facts rather than the innuendo he loves to throw around.

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that yesterday, on the 100th anniversary of the driving of the last spike, and on many other occasions in this House, Members on all sides have expressed their anger at the action taken by the CPR in arbitrarily cutting off the pass rights of its pensioners. Because there is widespread support in the House for such a measure, will he consider making a personal representation to the CPR on behalf of all Members to have this measure revoked?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to respond to that question. I share the concern of the Hon. Member and, I am sure, the concern of other Hon. Members. I have made representations to officials of CP and asked them to consider coming before the standing committee to explain and justify their action so all Members of Parliament who are interested will have an opportunity to ask questions and seek clarification on the action CPR has taken.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the idea of having them before the committee is a good one and certainly not something one would want to criticize. However, there is very little to clarify. The CPR has done something which has invoked the disapproval of all sides of the House. I ask the Prime Minister, not the Minister of Transport, will he intervene personally with the CPR and say that this is the kind of thing it should not be doing anytime, particularly not on the anniversary of the driving of the last spike?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I listened with sympathy and concern to the point raised by my hon. friend. I know he will agree that, given the fact we have in this House probably the most outstanding Minister of Transport this country has ever seen—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —he will want to join with me in encouraging the Minister in his representation to CP. However, the point raised by my hon. friend is an impressive one and I know we will follow through as best we can.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONG KONG CLUB RECREATION COSTS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns the high cost to Government of our foreign service employees as shown by their membership in the Aberdeen Marina Club in Hong Kong. It costs about $200,000 to maintain one foreign service person out of the country. Does he intend to have a review on that subject and report to the House?

● (1200)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, not only are we intending to have a review, but the review is virtually completed between myself and the President of the Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board will shortly be indicating the response to the report of the Auditor General. I simply want to take the opportunity to say how much I, as a Minister, appreciate the work of the Auditor General in drawing to my attention accusations about practices within a Department under my jurisdiction.

REQUEST FOR RENEWAL OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In May 1984, Mr. Prime Minister, you promised in the Eastern Townships that if you were elected, you would maintain quotas on shoe imports. We know that quotas are essential and vital to the economy of Quebec. Will your Government, Mr. Prime Minister, indeed respect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I believe he knows very well the question must be put through the Speaker, please.

Mr. Tardif: Will he respect that commitment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is very much aware, there has been a report prepared by a tribunal established to study the matter and recommendations have been made. Those recommendations are now being considered by the Canadian Government, and an announcement, a statement of our position will be made before the end of November.

INQUIRY WHEN ANNOUNCEMENT WILL BE MADE

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. That decision was to be announced in September, then in October. Today is November the 8th, and we know that already the whole market is lost for next spring. You are in a position today to state on what day, at what time that decision will be made, so that importers and manufacturers may know what to expect?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can indicate once more to the Hon. Member that the decision will be made and announced before the end of November.

AUDITOR GENERAL

ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On November 4, this week, when asked in the House about access to cabinet documents the Minister of Justice said:

—I can assure the hon. gentleman that a decision will be made this week.

Does the Prime Minister hold by his own stated views that in that kind of confrontation Parliament should always prevail, and by the decision of Justice Jerome that the Auditor General's right to access must prevail? Will he announce today, in keeping with the commitment of the Minister of Justice, that the Government has decided to give the Auditor General the documents in question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Minister of Justice is not in the House today, Mr. Speaker. He has been reviewing this matter and will be making a recommendation to the Government. As soon as that recommendation is received, which I hope will be very shortly—in fact I know it will be shortly—we will respond in an appropriate and, I hope, helpful way.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): The Minister of Justice stated categorically that the decision would be made this week. This is, for parliamentary purposes, the last day for two weeks that any questions can be asked with regard to this matter. Therefore, is there any conclusion which can be drawn other than that the Government is not prepared to give the documents requested by the Auditor General and ordered given by Justice Jerome, and that the Government is attempting to hide not only these documents but also documents pertaining to other matters decided upon by the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would the Hon. Member draw such invidious conclusions from a faulty premise? In point of fact the Minister, as I understand, said that a decision would be made this week. He will, I assume, make his decision as Attorney General and make a recommendation to us before the week is out and we will respond in due course.

The Minister indicated in the House that, notwithstanding pretensions by my hon. friend to the contrary, this is indeed a complex matter. There is the request for documentation from the Auditor General—

Mr. Deans: You said Parliament should prevail.

Mr. Mulroney: If I may, there was a request for information. He indicated the intention of the Government to respond fully and with alacrity to that to the extent humanly possible. He indicated that there was a second, complex dimension to the problem which dealt with undertakings in regard to documents under the control of previous Prime Ministers. We have not yet had a response, to the best of my knowledge, from the Leader of the Opposition with regard to his judgment to free up those papers.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Did you ask?

Mr. Mulroney: The Minister of Justice is proceeding to come forward with recommendations in both of those areas and I hope that my hon. friend will find our response appropriate in both of them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DEATH OF UKRAINIAN POET, VASYL STUS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister knows that Vasyl Stus was a Ukrainian poet, a strong and vigorous supporter of human rights and freedoms, and a member of the Helsinki monitoring group, who died in the fifth year of a fifteen-year sentence in a Soviet concentratioan camp. What action has the Government of Canada taken or what action will it take to protest this loss of life in the interest of freedom and human rights?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the case of Vasyl Stus very closely. All Members of this House are deeply saddened by his death. The House may recall that five or six months ago, when I was in the Ukraine, I had the opportunity to raise directly with the leaders of the Government of the Ukraine the deep concern of Canada about the human rights situation in the Ukraine and elsewhere in the Soviet Union. I did that to the best of my ability conveying, I think, the full conviction of Canada. We intend to continue to make that kind of representation on behalf of human rights everywhere in the world, but particularly behind the Iron Curtain. On behalf of the Government I want to extend our most sincere sympathies to the family of Mr. Stus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOD AND DRUGS

DISCOVERY OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES IN WINES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health and Welfare. The federal Government became aware of toxic substances in wines in May, 1985. We learned yesterday that certain imported wines contain a cancer-causing substance called ethyl carbamate. Will the Minister tell us that he will assume his responsibilities under the Food and Drug Act and assure Canadians that the food they eat is safe for human consumption?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Member refers back to the first instance of the Austrian wines. Ethyl carbamate was not a factor in that situation. It was diethylene glycol at that time, which falls under the Food and Drug Act. What we have in Ontario, and I imagine that is what the Member is addressing the report of yesterday that there are fortified wines and spirits manufactured in Ontario which have urea carbamate in them, which is a carcinogen. As of this morning we have health protection branch people working with the distillers, the wine manufacturers, the LCBO and the Ontario Government. There are indications that we also have some imported wines and fortified spirits which contain the same product.

INSTITUTION OF PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Food and Drug Act states:

> No person shall sell an article of food that
> (a) has in or upon it any poisonous or harmful substance.

Will the Minister assure the House that he will prosecute any importers or sellers of tainted wine which is unfit for human consumption? Will he assure this House that provincial commissions or boards which control the sale of liquor will not be exempt from prosecution if they are found to be guilty?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, through my Ministry the Government has taken a very clear position on this situation, whether it involves imported wines or domestic products which contain substances in contradiction of the Food and Drug Act. Our argument has been very straightforward that these substances should not be in the products. That is the position we have taken.

I have also said in the House that so far, happily, provincial liquor commissions have pulled these products off their shelves on a voluntary basis. Additionally, as of November 21 when we meet, the provincial authorities, the liquor commissions and my own Department will look at further standards. I will take the Hon. Member's suggestion under advisement as well.

BANKS AND BANKING

NORTHLAND BANK—FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, I am sure, during his recent trip to Alberta discussed with the Premier of Alberta the need to maintain and develop regional financial institutions. The finance committee looking into the bail-out Bill has decided that sufficient evidence exists now that the doors should not be closed on the Northland Bank. Would the Prime Minister, therefore, be prepared to instruct the Minister of State for Finance, who has been dealing with this matter, to consider, with some rigour, ways and means of keeping that bank in place if, in fact, sufficient evidence does exist?

• (1210)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I read with interest the observations made by the committee. However, I would also draw the Hon. Member's attention to the expert witnesses on the part of the Inspector General of Banks and the curator for the Northland Bank who drew different conclusions based on detailed studies over a number of weeks into the operations of the bank.

I can understand the position that has been expressed by the management of the bank, who have a certain emotional involvement because they are directly involved in the decisions affecting that bank.

We, as a Government, must look to and rely on the observations and conclusions drawn by these expert witnesses to whom I just referred.

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF BANK'S STATUS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be well aware that the bank itself feels that sufficient life may have been breathed back into it so that it can be saved. The committee members, most of whom are from western Canada, are of the same mind.

Considering that evidence does exist that perhaps there is a possibility of saving that western-based bank, would the Minister of Finance at least look further into this whole matter before the door is completely closed on the bank?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me take the Hon. Member through the sequence of events that have taken place over the past three or four months that have indicated very clearly the desire of the Government to give the Northland Bank every opportunity to keep its doors open.

During the period prior to the appointment of the curator of the bank there were a number of discussions between the Inspector General and the bank to try to encourage it to find some other means of maintaining its viability. When the curator was appointed, we gave the bank over a month to find other partners to work with, in an attempt to find a way to keep that bank open. The Minister of State for Finance asked for assistance from a respected investment banker.

The Hon. Member should also remember that it is important that we keep in mind the interests of the depositors who, until this matter is resolved, will not be able to get their money back. This includes insured depositors as well as uninsured depositors.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF TELEPHONE SERVICE TO FARMERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will he take the opportunity at the upcoming First Ministers' conference to make a representation to provincial Ministers of Agriculture urging that they encourage their provinces to extend private telephone service to farmers, wherever possible? This is not only for the purpose of privacy of conversation, but also so that they may have access to the enormous capacity of data banks in marketing and economics which presently exist in farm technology. That access is limited because of the absence of private phones on farms.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is becoming a speech.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the representation from the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. Those of us who know the Hon. Member will appreciate his knowledge, experience, and good advice with reference to the agriculture community.

I want to assure him that I will answer his question positively and will make every effort to make representations on his behalf at the First Ministers' conference.

TRANSPORT

ABOLITION OF CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE TOLLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State (Transport), but in her absence I will direct it to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. During the election campaign, the Member for Laprairie geared his publicity to the abolition of Champlain Bridge tolls. Two weeks ago at a Conservative meeting in Greenfield Park, the Minister of State (Transport) promised to abolish Champlain Bridge tolls just before the next elections in order to make political gain. My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Could he tell the House whether the Minister of State (Transport) stated a personal view or was she stating Government policy when she announced the Champlain Bridge tolls would be abolished just before the elections for political purposes?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that matter is currently under consideration by my cabinet colleagues and me. The Hon. Member will be pleased to know that it is being very actively considered and we will report to him at some later date.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for a brief supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR PRECISE ANSWER

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it might be something under consideration by the Cabinet, but it is a position stated by the Member for La Prairie and by the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A brief supplementary please.

Mr. Rossi: Could the Hon. Minister of Transport state categorically whether or not he will abolish the tolls?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer remains the same. The matter is under consideration.

PROPOSED NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING BOARD— ATTITUDE OF TOBACCO MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister knows, the tobacco manufacturers are stalling on the establishment of a national marketing board for tobacco. They initiate court actions, they refuse to bargain with the existing provincial boards, and now they are saying that if farmers persist in developing a national tobacco marketing plan some manufacturers will pull out of the country.

If these manufacturers choose to leave and do their manufacturing outside the country, is the Minister prepared to restrict access to Canada for their brands of tobacco and tobacco products?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the extent of the Hon. Member's knowledge of the tobacco industry and the difficulties that the tobacco growers of this country are experiencing at the moment.

I would rather take a more positive view and hope that common sense and good judgment will prevail. I hope that in the very near future it would be possible for the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Marketing Board to negotiate a settlement on the 1985 crop with the tobacco companies.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the companies are being very hard-nosed. Will the Minister not show that he is prepared to be equally hard-nosed on behalf of Canadians so that, if the companies leave, their products will just stay out of the country?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, perhaps some of the difficulties that the industry finds itself in now are due to some rigidity on both sides which may have taken positions that have not been in the best interests of both parties and, indeed, of the industry.

I have met with the board. I have met with the tobacco companies. In fact I am having another meeting on Saturday afternoon with the board. I am simply trying to close the daylight between the two parties so that a settlement can be reached.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING FUTURE OF NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for Public Works.

It is rumoured in the National Capital area that for all practical purposes, the last terms of reference that the Government gave to the National Capital Commission dates back to 1956. In view of the fact that there has apparently been no announcement as to future responsibilities of the National Capital Commission, would the Minister tell the House if there is any truth to the rumours that the National Capital Commission will be abolished or that its operational responsibilities will fall under the Department of Public Works?

Would the Minister comment on these rumours?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is worried by rumours, I wish to tell him on one hand that I think he has nothing to be worried about and, on the other hand, that the Nielsen Commission, as everyone knows, should bring forward a rather comprehensive report by the end of the year. In the context of this report, I am much more optimistic than the Member for Hull-Aylmer as regards the future of our beautiful capital.

ALLEGED DEPARTURE FROM PRACTICE ON HOUSE ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises out of the mechanism used for the adjournment of the House yesterday evening. It is a rather important point of order, as you will undoubtedly realize and so recognized at the time. This, of course, is the first opportunity we have had to bring this matter to the attention of the House because under our generally accepted proceedings it is not possible at the time of adjournment to bring up points of order. That procedure has been disallowed on several occasions.

● (1220)

I would like briefly, in developing this point, to go through the sequence of events yesterday afternoon. At about 4.30 p.m., or thereabouts, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), pursuant to Standing Order 30, moved that the House do adjourn. It came about that the bells were made to ring on that issue in order to bring in the Members to vote thereon.

I presume that at some time after 4.30 p.m. it was indicated to you, Sir, by the Whip of the Official Opposition, that he had no intentions of coming to the House so that that vote could take place. However, I do not know that. It is a surmise.

What did happen, Sir, is that at 6.17 p.m.—and if I recall correctly the two most conscientious Members of this House were present, you and I, Sir—you rose in the Chair and said, and I quote from Hansard at page 8470:

> In my view, it being 6.41 p.m. I do now leave the Chair until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m.

The actual time, Sir, as I have already stated, was 6.15 p.m. This would appear to depart substantially from established practice in this House. On previous occasions when a motion to adjourn the House has been made, and one of the Parties refuses to come to participate in the vote, the bells have rung until the formal hour of adjournment. Because of the ministerial statements yesterday that normal hour of adjournment would have been 6.41 p.m. This would appear to be a radical new practice. What took place yesterday evening was presumably meant to establish a new precedent for the operation of this Chamber. Therefore, my I suggest that some form of explanation by the Chair might be given as to why this took place and, if possible, citing the authorities under which this action was taken.

It also occurs to me, Sir, that if it was possible for the Speaker to adjourn the House some 30 minutes or so—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the representation the Hon. Member is making. Is he really raising a point of order or is he making representations to me?

Mr. Nickerson: I am making a point of order, Sir. If the Chair could address itself to these questions; first, if it is possible for the Speaker to adjourn the House some 30 minutes before the appointed time, would it not, therefore, he possible, using the precedent which was established yesterday evening, to adjourn the House—

Mr. Speaker: I fully appreciate the importance of the subject the Hon. Member is raising, and I fully appreciate that he may want to make representations to me on this matter. I am perfectly happy to hear the Hon. Member's representations in the normal way in which representations are heard. However, if he has a point of order to make, I suggest he may want to make it, because so far what the Hon. Member is doing is making worthy representations but not yet, in any way I can see, raising a point of order.

Mr. Nickerson: My final point, Sir, is that it is possible that the privileges of Hon. Members might, by this action, have been breached. It is possible that at some point in time between the time at which the House adjourned and the normal hour of adjournment, Hon. Members might have wanted to come in to participate in the vote and to continue with their deliberations. The action taken by the Speaker yesterday evening was such that it prevented that possibility from taking place. Therefore, it would be my submission that there were difficulties with the precedent established yesterday evening.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the Hon. Member is making representations and I appreciate his representations.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of western Canada who are protesting the Government's decision to reduce the increases to family allowance and, therefore, ask the House of Commons to encourage the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance as well as to rescind a number of unfair tax increases which were introduced to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

RENOVATION OF SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL BUILDING

Question No. 3—Mr. Ellis:

Were renovations carried out on the 8th and 9th floors of the Sir Alexander Campbell Building and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) at what total cost?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Yes, renovations were carried out on the 8th and 9th floors of the Sir Alexander Campbell Building.

(a) The purpose of these renovations was to permit the Canada Post Corporation to assume all the new functions associated with becoming a Crown corporation. Many tasks formerly carried out by the federal Government are now direct functions of Canada Post's operations.

(b) The total cost of the work carried out was $1,428,180 broken down as follows:

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—QUEBEC'S ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the people of Quebec by reneging on its commitment to:

(1) Develop new job potential in Quebec communities;

(2) Ease the tax burden on low and middle income families; and

(3) Protect and safeguard key existing industries such as lumber, textiles, agriculture, pulp and paper and footwear.

He said: Mr. Speaker, our motion, as you just said, condemns the Government for abandoning the people of Quebec by reneging on its election promises. We mentioned three of them here: (1) to develop new job potential in Quebec communities; (2) to ease the tax burden on low and middle income families; and (3) to protect and safeguard key existing industries in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose you remember the election on September 4, 1984 very well. It was certainly a great victory for the Progressive Conservative Party across Canada, including the province of Quebec. It was an overwhelming victory.

After 21 years with the Liberal Party in power, the people of Canada and Quebec voted for a change, and the Progressive Conservative Party won 211 seats across this country, including 58 in the province of Quebec.

However, Mr. Speaker, the situation has changed, and it did so very quickly. Canadians are very disappointed. The turnaround took place in the last two or three months, and according to the last Gallup Poll, the Progressive Conservative Party dropped from 50 per cent to 45 per cent of the popular vote across Canada, while the Opposition parties, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, made a 10 per cent gain.

According to the latest Crop poll in Quebec, Mr. Speaker, where the Progressive Conservative Party came out with a huge majority some 13 or 14 months ago, that Party now ranks second and the New Democratic Party is third with 22 per cent of the votes.

Mr. Speaker, it proves that people in Quebec and the other provinces are disenchanted with the Government team across the aisle. Why this change, Mr. Speaker? Why such changes in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada after only 13 months?

First, the image of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He is not competent at all, he is badly organized, and then the question did arise as to whether the Prime Minister had told the House of Commons the whole truth about the tuna incident.

Second, two Ministers had to resign, the former Minister of Communications and the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

More significant still, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister broke the election promises he had made to men and women in Quebec and in the rest of Canada.

During the 1984 summer election campaign the Prime Minister and his Party made hundreds of promises, but Canadians can see now that the promises are not being honoured.

First of all, the Prime Minister made an election promise respecting employment. What he said was: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". So where do we stand after one year? Statistics Canada made their figures public this morning, and the unemployment rate is now 10.3 per cent in Canada, and this is the seasonally adjusted rate, Mr. Speaker. Our unemployment rate is 10.3 per cent, but the United States reported a rate of only 7.1 per cent in October, while the number of unemployed in Sweden and Japan is roughly 3 per cent. In October last year 1,305,000 Canadians were without jobs, yet in October this year 1,200,000 Canadians were still looking for work. That is only a difference of 105,000 fewer unemployed for the 13 months the Progressive Conservative Party has been in power, in spite of the fact that the recession in the world has nearly come to an end, that interest rates all over the world are lower now than a year ago, and that oil prices are now lower than a year ago. There are still in Canada 1,200,000 unemployed people, which represents an unemployment rate of 10.3 per cent.

In the province of Quebec, the unemployment situation is pretty bad, especially in Montreal East, Desbiens and Valleyfield. The unemployment rate in the province reached 11.8 per cent last month, and between September and October, 8,000 people lost their jobs in the transportation industry. In the trade and commerce industry, there were 10,000 more unemployed people than the previous month. What sort of future do you think the young people who are unemployed have in the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker? The Prime Minister has broken his promise to create jobs for Canadian men and women in Quebec and everywhere else in Canada.

He has broken another promise in the area of social programs in Canada. I clearly remember that during the election campaign he used to say that he would not fight the deficit on the backs of the poor. He had the best intentions, but what has happened since then? As a first step, last summer, the Government tried to deindex the Old Age Security pensions under the pretext of presenting a fair and equitable budget. The Conservative Party was going to hit the pocket-books of as many as three million Canadians in one of the most disadvantaged groups in our society. After seeing the anger of senior citizens throughout the country, who were able to make themselves heard, the Government was forced to withdraw its deindexation proposal.

Now, the Conservative Government is threatening to deindex family allowances. As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, the Government has introduced a Bill to reduce family allowances by 3 per cent. The Government justifies these cutbacks by saying that we have to reduce the national deficit. How can the Conservatives say that there is no money for our children when there are so many millions for the wealthy in this country? Mr. Speaker, the Government says that there is no money for our children, but it can find $1 billion for bankrupt financial institutions. It says that there is no money for children, but it can find $1 billion for Dome Petroleum. The Members opposite say that there is no money for our children, but they can find $64,000 for a trip to Europe by the Minister of State for Transport. What a contradiction! They never run out of money for the wealthy, but in the case of children, they deindex family allowances. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) disagrees completely with his Government, and I hope that he will rise immediately to address the House on this issue.

Mr. La Salle: With pleasure.

Mr. Nystrom: He says that he will do so with pleasure. I was speaking about the important matter of family allowances, Mr. Speaker. We must not forget that they were implemented in 1945. They became universal in Canada two years later. In 1947, family allowances accounted for 7.7 per cent of federal expenditures; last year, they only made up 2.4 per cent of our federal expenditures. Moreover, the national debt represented the same percentage of the national income forty years ago as it does today.

Who is victimized by that Tory policy, Mr. Speaker?

First, the children of Canada, and you must not forget that 20 per cent of our children in Canada live in poverty and in Montreal . . . According to the most recent statistics available, there are 160,000 children living in poverty in the City of Montreal. Children are the victims of that Tory policy.

Second, the women of Canada are victimized, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-East (Ms. Mitchell) has often referred to the problems of Canadian women with respect to the cut backs in family allowances. And do not forget, Mr. Speaker, that we have women who are heads of single-parent families in this country, and some 50 per cent of single-parent families live in poverty. Four years ago, there were 600,000 single-parent families in Canada, and what with cut backs made in family allowances, those families will suffer even more.

Mr. Speaker, I know you agree that we can change all that. There are two, three or four weeks left to change the minds of the Conservative Members and the Government on family allowances. I would like to tell those who are watching us, the men and women who are watching these debates this morning, that four things must be done to save the indexation of family allowances in this country.

First, it is important to write to your Member of Parliament and to the Prime Minister of Canada. Second, you will have to phone your Member of Parliament's constituency office—and this is most important if your MP is a Conservative—you will have to phone his office immediately and tell him you do not support the de-indexing of family allowances. Third, petitions must be circulated throughout the country, and this is most important. And, fourth, the question of family allowances must be raised with your local press.

Mr. Speaker, another broken commitment of the Conservative Party dealt with the matter of taxation, the tax burden borne by Canadian men and women.

The last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) increased the gas tax by two or three cents a litre. There was also an increase in the federal sales tax. And the federal sales tax is the worst kind of tax, because it hits everyone, the rich, the middle-income people and the poor. By 1990, the average Canadian family will pay $300 more a year in extra taxes. The Government has also reduced indexation of the tax system. You will be paying more income tax, even if your annual income increases at the same rate as inflation does in this country.

If these examples are not enough to convince you that our Prime Minister's Government prefers to ignore the interests of people on low and middle incomes, what about the Government's decision that let the Reichmann family save one billion dollars in taxes in the Gulf Canada purchase? Not only did this tax exemption fail to produce any new jobs, but Gulf also recently announced that 600 workers would be laid off and the refinery closed in Montreal East, where we have a very serious unemployment problem, Mr. Speaker.

And what about the nearly one billion dollars in tax rebates the Syncrude Company in Alberta has been receiving since 1978? It is very obvious the Government is prompt to help the rich in our country, but it has failed to create a single job.

Mr. Speaker, bankers and big investors will be the biggest beneficiaries of the billion dollars the Government has decided to pay to uninsured depositors; and I am referring to a situation I am sure we are all familiar with. The uninsured depositors are the same people who took a risk by investing in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Those same billion dollars could have been used to maintain indexation of family allowances every year until 1990. Mr. Speaker, we know that was not one of the Conservative Government's priorities.

Today everybody realizes that while the rich in Canada are benefitting under the Conservative regime, the poor are not.

According to an economist, by 1990, a poor family with two children and living on a salary of only $10,000 per year will have lost $400 in income. A middle income family with two children and an average income of $30,000 per year will have a drop in income of $1,100 by 1990, thanks to the Budget of the Minister of Finance.

In 1985, the Conservative Party is the same party that was led by R.B. Bennett in the thirties. The Conservative Party is still a party for the rich, everywhere in Canada.

And the Liberal Party, and we have Liberal members with us here in the House, the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, was not so different as a Government. I remember very well when Mr. Lalonde was the Minister of Finance, two or three years ago, and they increased the federal sales tax. It was exactly the same thing.

I remember vividly, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) mentioned it two or three times, that Mr. Trudeau's Government limited the amount of family allowances at the time of the 6 and 5 per cent, when we had inflation rates of 15, 16, 17 and 18 per cent, that the increase in family allowances was restricted to those 5 and 6 per cent. It is strictly the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, what we need in this country is a real change, what we need is a Government for ordinary citizens. We are an immensely wealthy country. We have a positive people facing our future. We have vast quantities of natural resources, but let us not forget what happened in other countries of the world, for instance in France, in Germany and in Japan. All three countries were almost completely destroyed during the Second World War forty years ago. Now, the standard of living in France, in Germany and in Japan is almost the same as ours. And do not forget also that those countries did not have any oil nor any of the national resources that we have in Canada.

Something else, Mr. Speaker, in the United States, the unemployment rate is 7.1 per cent and in Canada 10.3 per cent; in Sweden it is between 2 and 3 per cent and in Japan approximately 3 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, why in a country such as Sweden having a population almost the same as that in Quebec, the unemployment rate is between 2 or 3 per cent? Why is the standard of living as high in that country as in Canada?

Mr. Speaker, we can do something for ordinary Canadians in Canada. I mean we should give money to the ordinary Canadians and not to the rich. Give money to the workers, not to the banks; give money to farmers and producers throughout Canada, not to big foreign oil companies. And with changes such as these, there will be jobs for everyone in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I will be over in another minute. On that basis, Canada, Quebec and Saskatchewan will be strong. We will be strong all across Canada with a policy designed to encourage ordinary Canadians.

And for our children, Mr. Speaker, and I do have two of my own Canada will truly be the country of the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know, having listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's statement, I would like him to tell the House which Government introduced the family allowance program? Which Government introduced the old age security pension programs? Which Government introduced social welfare programs? And which Government did indeed introduce all the social measures Canada is now enjoying?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the same Government which slashed the family allowance program. The same Government which three or four years ago cut back by as much as 6 and 5 per cent old age security pension expenditures.

And do not forget that historically, it was a Liberal Government here in this House, but that Liberal Government was spurred on by the CCF Party, by the New Democratic Party. They introduced family allowances in 1945 because the CCF Party told them it was a priority. They spread the idea around and all across the country. And remember something else. We have here, at the table, Mr. Stanley Knowles, Mr. Speaker, and it was Mr. Stanley Knowles, Mrs. Thérèse Casgrain, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, people from the CCF Party who launched the idea of old age pensions in Canada. And without the CCF Party, the Liberal Party would never have done anything for senior citizens in Canada. It is thanks to Mr. Knowles, to Mr. Woodsworth and to the CCF Party that we have in this country social programs that are different and better than in the United States.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how the Hon. Member can claim that the NDP or the CCF introduced family allowances, old age security pensions and all those other social programs when they have never formed the Government?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I know that the Hon. Member was elected six or seven years ago, but he was not here when there was a minority Government in Parliament.

However, in our parliamentary system, with a minority Government, the third party has a lot of influence on the Government.

• (1250)

For myself, I was in this House in 1972 and 1974 when Mr. Trudeau was Prime Minister, but with only 107 or 110 Members of Parliament. At the time, it was the NDP who told Mr. Trudeau that he could remain Prime Minister on the condition that he take action on three or four very important issues, such as Petro-Canada, the indexation of old age security pensions, the indexation of family allowances, and so on. We must not forget that we have a democratic system and that this system sometimes work better with a minority Government.

Mr. Gauthier: With blackmail!

Mr. Nystrom: Not at all, Mr. Speaker, it is a democratic system. Historically, when Mr. King was Prime Minister, before Stanley Knowles, at the time of Mr. Woodsworth, there was a minority Government in this House. He spoke to the Leader of the CCF, Mr. Woodsworth, who told him: if we are to support the Government, we want pensions for senior citizens in Canada. That is why Old Age Security pensions were introduced in Canada, exactly in the same way as we later had Family Allowances and Welfare. Mr. Speaker, because we live in a democratic system, Members of all parties can have a real influence and a very large power in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Another question? The Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle).

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for my hon. friend and colleague. I would simply like to ask him if he believes that the Conservative Party will do as much for the Canadian population as the Liberal Party did, thanks to Members of all parties including, of course, the New Democratic Party which was also part of this Chamber? Does the Hon. Member think that he will have as much success in promoting his ideas with the Conservative Party, even though it is not a minority but a majority Government, which can do almost anything it wants?

Mr. Nystrom: I am of course very happy, Mr. Speaker, that my "adopted" MP should ask me a question. I say that because when I am in the National Capital Region, I reside in his riding of Hull-Aylmer, and I know he does a very good job.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is more difficult with a majority Government; especially now with 211 Conservative Members.

An Hon. Member: You voted for them!

Mr. Nystrom: No, I voted in my home province; I am an MP from Saskatchewan, and I always vote there.

Mr. Speaker, it is more difficult now because of the overwhelming majority of the Conservative Members. However, even with its majority, we can still make the Government change its mind from time to time. I remember very well, last summer, when the Minister of Finance wanted to deindex the old age security pensions, there was a general outcry throughout the country against such proposed measure. I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, the anti-parliamentary language used by Mrs. Denis when addressing the Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: It is your fault!

Mr. Nystrom: It was quite anti-parliamentary! However, Mrs. Denis told the truth which everybody knows. She appeared on the French and English television networks, and as a result of her campaign and the unrelenting efforts of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and other Members of the House as well as the elderly, although the Conservative Members in the House were 211 strong, the government had to change his mind.

I make the same call today, Mr. Speaker. In the same way we can change the Government's mind about the deindexation of family allowances if the people in Quebec start calling their Conservative member's office.

Mr. Kindy: I would like to ask my good friend who is sitting not far from me here, a question. Does he believe that we can balance the budget while making huge social spendings because, all things considered, if we keep on spending and the deficit keeps on growing, we will end up like a South American republic, a banana republic. As our revenues allow us to put more money in the social envelope, we will be in a position to increase family allowances and old age security pensions. But we must safeguard our ability to do so. Does he think this is a sound argument or not?

Mr. Nystrom: That is a good question, Mr. Speaker. I know full well that we have a problem with our deficit. You must not forget that the Prime Minister said during the election campaign that the deficit would not be reduced at the expense of the less fortunate in our society. The Prime Minister said that, he made that election promise, Mr. Speaker. But there is now before the House a proposal to cut back family allowances as the Government did with old-age security. At the same time, there is a lot of money for bankrupt banks. One billion dollars! I hope the Hon. Member does not approve of that. There are another billion dollars for Dome Petroleum; several million dollars for Syncrude, for Gulf, but in my riding, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry—

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. By way of clarification, the Syncrude remission order was signed by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was the Minister of Finance in 1975.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order; it is argumentative.

The Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

The question and comment period has expired.

[English]

I believe the next speaker will be the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle).

Shall we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! When the House took recess at 1 p.m., the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) had the floor.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the mover of this censure motion.

I think we should all ponder the part which all elected members of Parliament should play, whether they sit on Government or Opposition benches. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville talked about democracy, and we are all glad, I am sure, to live in a democratic system. However, while such a system allows us sometimes to say silly things, it should not prevent us from telling the truth and to behave as honestly as possible, thereby ensuring the credibility of the system in the minds of the Canadian people, in order to have a Government and country as honest as we hope them to be.

When a Government has been in power for 12 or 13 months, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to emphasize the problems which affect this great country, and to deplore especially the situation which exists now in the province of Quebec.

It is easy to take a pessimistic view of events. But it would be just as easy to recognize that some things did happen, some interesting proposals were made and that a change occurred.

And I frankly believe that no Hon. Member in this House can deny it.

The Prime Minister of Canada is blamed for not having kept his promises. In fact he has four years to do so. He has already made good on some of them and I believe it is important to take part in this debate today, and I shall try to do it in a non-partisan way in order to remind all Canadians, especially the people of Quebec, that we have been truly concerned with the status of Quebec within the federal system.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would also ... speaking about openness, the sponsor of the motion before us has emphasized the difficult situation regarding unemployment. That problem did not arise on September 4, 1984! And the Hon. Member is well aware of it, having been in this House since 1968, I believe.

I wish he had said, for instance, that as Minister of Public Works, as you have seen it, Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to announce on behalf of the Government and in the best interests of the citizens of Edmonton, which is very close to his own province, a $200 million project that will create 2,000 jobs over the next three years. I wish he had said that. He surely forgot, because I have known the Hon. Member for a long time and he usually is a very honest person. He did not have to praise the Government, but he could have, at least, mentioned the fact and thanked the Government for having considered the difficult situation of the construction industry in Alberta.

Coming back to Quebec, Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have done a number of things which I have witnessed. As a Minister, I was very glad and proud to announce them nationally, but also in the Province of Quebec. However, the most important promise made by the Prime Minister was a commitment to restore the economic climate of this country, to prepare for a real economic renewal which would create a climate favorable to investment. I think all Members agree with that. We all want to encourage investment.

For Quebec in particular, Mr. Speaker, our Government—and nobody found fault with that—was able to reopen communication between the two levels of Government. I believe that the Hon. Members opposite are aware of this improvement in our relations with Quebec. Now, Quebecers are proud to talk and negociate with the Government of Canada and they are willing to make proposals and enter into agreements with us. This is a very good thing, and I am sure Quebecers are delighted. That was the national reconciliation the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to so often during the election campaign, and that is what we have achieved, Mr. Speaker.

People who are willing to listen and to understand the meaning of this reconciliation, of this renewed dialogue with Quebec, will understand that it definitely creates a favourable climate for investment, a climate that was urgently needed. We created that climate, Mr. Speaker.

In addition, there have been a series of agreements with the province of Quebec, and I suppose our friends opposite will tend to overlook this fact. So I think we on this side have a duty and we are of course delighted to point out that we have concluded agreements with Quebec that will create jobs and produce some very interesting projects. And I am sure that both Liberal and New Democratic Party Members will at least applaud the projects resulting from these agreements.

We were not condemned for signing a historic agreement for $1,600 billion to be spent on regional economic development. We did that, Mr. Speaker. The agreement means $350 million for industrial development, $100 million under a federal-provincial agreement on tourism, $40 million for communications, $40 million for cultural infrastructure, $300 million for forestry, $170 million for transportation and $100 million for the development of new technologies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am mentioning a few points which in my opinion should be mentioned and kept in mind throughout our beautiful province of Quebec, and should also be kept in mind by all of us in this House in replying to an accusation which I feel is not fully justified, to the effect that Quebec would have been left out, forgotten in our present and future policies.

Mr. Speaker, what was important first and foremost was to restore this atmosphere. And we did restore this atmosphere. We can now speak together, and I believe these Opposition days should also give us the opportunity to make some observations without necessarily indulging in criticism, which is probably the easy way out.

With respect to Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I also knew where the Liberal Party stood during the election campaign with regard to the Pétromont plant in Montreal. Of course the overall situation was mentioned. We managed to bring down unemployment, Mr. Speaker, although not enough. They will say: it is not enough. Of course it isn't, and we intend to go on. We lowered our interest rates, and we are very pleased and everybody is very pleased with that. But they on the other side will not mention it, and I know that too. We controlled inflation down to its lowest level in years, and that of course is another highly positive achievement. But in East Montreal—we had, quickly after the elections, and some Hon. Members may not recall this, we had pledged $15 million to at least try and save a plant in Montreal called Pétromont. We may be accused once again by opposition members of being in a difficult position with a Montreal refinery, but they will forget to mention the fact that for instance in the past ten years some 12 refineries were shut down throughout Canada. They will probably say that we have not done our homework in respect of the textile industry. Thousands of jobs have been lost over the past ten years. Yet, it was not under a Progressive Conservative Government. They will probably say that we have not done our duty in respect of the footwear industry. A statement concerning the footwear industry is forthcoming, and we are going to do everything possible to save jobs in both the textile and the footwear industries. Thousands of jobs have been lost in both these industries.

And my hon. friends know it. I am not putting the blame especially on the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for that. I am not saying anything of the sort, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is that before blaming us for jobs which are being lost in a difficult climate which is not of our own making, Mr. Speaker—

One should be careful before accusing this new Government which is striving every day to repair the almost irreparable, Mr. Speaker. That is what we are up against. There is more. For instance, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) blamed us for the billion-dollar rescue of the banks, as if we had wished those people or any bank in Canada to experience such difficulties. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. We have to deal with the situation. We try to make the best of it and I think we have shown the best of dispositions toward those who put their confidence and their money in those banks. Then again, we will be told that we only protect the rich because we reacted, we realized the importance of suppressing any doubt about the credibility of our banking institutions. We had no other choice. We had to act, and we did. I know that action will prove to be quite worthwhile, in the mean and long term, Mr. Speaker, because we cannot afford to leave any doubt about the credibility of our banking institution and jeopardize the investments we need from abroad and within Canada. So we responded to a situation we inherited, Mr. Speaker.

I do not want to spend all the time I have critizing our predecessors, but I say we have changed course in the last fourteen months. As our colleagues of the opposition know, because the figures are there to prove it, the economic conditions are more favourable, and business people have a greater degree of confidence. Of course, this morning mention was made of a slight increase in the unemployment figure but people seem to forget, for example, that over the last 12 months, more than 300,000 jobs were created in Canada and nearly 100,000 of those were in Quebec; the matter came up no doubt as a result of the poll published this morning, and I am not happy with these figures, Mr. Speaker, of course I am not. But the question is: so we really want to see our economy take an upward trend and get our country back on the road to prosperity? That is the question we have to ask ourselves, and each and every Member in this House is moraly responsible for achieving that goal which is not only to have our country regain its economic stature, but also to have a sound economy.

I think every member, in the Opposition as in the Government, has a certain responsibility towards this objective and I think that we ought not to go beyond what is generally accepted. To level criticisims is very easy, Mr. Speaker, and I have been in the ranks of the Opposition before, but never have I indulged in petty politics. I did not want to be considered as a second-rate politician, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I have consistently refused to score political points at the expense of the elderly, as was done here recently when it was implied that our party is against the poor and the elderly. God knows, Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of respect for these people, and if we work so hard to get our economy going again it is especially in the interests of the poor and the elderly, Mr. Speaker! Some will say that our investment oriented policies are directed only at those who are capable of investing. Of course, they are! Mr. Speaker, farmers, businessmen and homeowners are fully aware of the impact of the $500,000 maximum capital gains tax exemption. But why did we abolish the capital gains tax! To give people an incentive to re-invest in their own country—they are free to do so and we have confidence in Canadians—and also to create jobs so that we will be able to give work to those who are unfortunate enough to depend on unemployment insurance or who for too long have been living off welfare.

It is part of an over-all strategy, Mr. Speaker, and those people know it. I would suggest that the initiatives we have taken will pave the way to economic recovery, particularly certain agreements we have signed with Quebec. I am proud of them, so are all my Quebec colleagues, and I commend them. However, Mr. Speaker, I remain somewhat wary of the Opposition approach. I keep wondering whether they really want us to succeed in getting the economy back on the right track and creating new jobs.

You know, the previous Government has institutionalized unemployment. I have to point out that the number of unemployed went from 300,000 or 400,000 to 1,750,000 in the last 12 or 13 years. They probably think we are biting off more than we can chew when we say we want to reverse this trend, but they should help us anyway. They should react positively, and I will be the first to applaud if they can recommend incentive measures to create jobs. But they refuse to support our efforts to achieve that goal, however noble it may be since that is how we want to give renewed hopes to our youths and make elderly Canadians feel even more secure. No wonder I entertain serious misgivings about the objectivity of those people who are launching unrelenting attacks against us barely 13 or 14 months after we took office.

Mr. Speaker, over the last 14 months we have steered a different course so as to expect better days. The economic picture is brighter: interest rates are lower, as I said earlier and the number of bankruptcies has also decreased significantly; we have evidence that confidence in the economy is growing and that negociations on tremendously important projects are about to start. With regard to our negotiations on free trade, there again the Opposition is quick to spread doom and gloom and predict failure while alarming Canadians with dismal predictions. The biggest mistake this Government could make would be not to move with regard to free trade.

We are aware that not only must we begin negotiations but we also have to open wide our ears to have meaningful discussions with our American partners, neighbours and allies. We are aware of the challenge and the work involved. But doing nothing would be irresponsible from this Government and we are not irresponsible people, so we shall tackle those negotiations face to face with a very specific goal in mind: to improve what we have and to increase the number of jobs directly related to our export markets. That is our goal, Mr. Speaker, and we think that we will therefore entirely fulfill the responsibilities given to us.

I might add that as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I was also very happy to agree to a payment of $27 million to compensate farmers following crop losses they suffered in 1983. We have not found it necessary to refund those people. It has now been done, Mr. Speaker. We also approved a $26.7 million payment under a crop insurance program. Funds of $16 million have also been earmarked for a very interesting industry in Sainte-Foy, namely an optic and laser centre. And what about the settlement of the Mirabel claims? I think that all the Hon. Members are quite happy with the settlement which I was able to achieve with the expropriated landowners within nine months of being appointed. Naturally, we hope, by implementing relevant policies, to be able to give back to these farm lands their former natural beauty and usefulness.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my allotted time is nearly over, but while this motion accuses us of having forgetten Quebec and of not thinking about the poor, our whole economic policy is aimed at helping those who need it the most. The Opposition can do whatever they like, we shall probably refuse to develop a social policy as a whole. We are honestly and sincerely trying to help those most in need, but we shall have to create a renewed prosperity. Then, we shall be able to provide more assistance to those who need it the most, and, like the Members opposite, we shall be quite happy to improve the lot of those we represent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and I must say that either his comments are demagogic, or else the Minister is making very valid efforts without receiving any support from his Quebec colleagues.

I have noted his commitment concerning the shoe industry. However, I also remind him that he made the firm commitment during his election campaign that his Government would pay $13 million to hog producers. There is one thing I know, and that is that if the Minister had got his way, this amount of $13 million would have been repaid a long time ago.

However, I have been wondering, and this is my question: How come he does not get the support of his Quebec caucus, which is quite powerful, for this kind of initiative?

I also have a subordinate question. The previous Government had made commitments which were endorsed by the conservatives during the election campaign, namely, the cartography project and the agricultural laboratory in Victoriaville—where, I believe, he is going this weekend—which was to specialize in plant diseases and protection. They also promised to build a gas pipeline between Sherbrooke, Windsor and Asbestos. These were firm commitments. Why didn't he deliver? Why didn't he carry out such projects which would have created much employment?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I shall not go back to 1979, when our friends opposite defeated us over an 18 cents a gallon tax. We know what happened afterwards.

So I would have lots to say about honesty.

As concerns the $13 million that were promised to hog producers, I remember having promised $27 million during the election campaign for crop losses. A $30 million figure was mentioned but we settled for $27 million. That amount was paid by our Government.

The Hon. Member mentioned a $13 million commitment, but he forgets, once again, to mention and thank me for the $27 million which was given to farmers in his constituency and elsewhere in Canada. He forgets about it, but that is understandable.

As for the $13 million intended for hog producers, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that we could have settled that question soon after the election, if it had not been for the position our American neighbours have taken about that industry. He understands it so well, Mr. Speaker, that he could even explain the situation to me. We were actually embarrassed, because we feared that a quick payment of that subsidy might have resulted in the loss of export markets as high as 25 per cent for hog producers in Quebec. That would not have been very helpful so soon after the election.

He mentions several other projects, such as the Cartographic Centre which, obviously, he should know is still alive. However, the Hon. Member will understand that we have a $200 billion deficit, the legacy of these gentlemen of the previous Government who forgot to take care of that before they left. So we have a small debt of just $200 billion, the servicing of which costs some $25 billion. Obviously, we had to postpone certain projects because of that, not only in Quebec but all over Canada.

Heaven knows, Mr. Speaker, how much I would like to carry out these projects as Minister of Public Works. That would really make me happy. Due to various considerations and budgetary restraints, it has not been possible to go ahead, but we have not forgetten or rejected these projects.

It is our hope, Mr. Speaker, that as we proceed with this economic recovery, we can implement those projects as soon as possible, both in the area of cartography and others, in the best interests of all Quebecers, and in all the constituencies of Quebec.

There is no problem about that, Mr. Speaker, and it is not always easy, as the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe very well knows. He did not mention the footwear industry in his remarks to me, because he knows perfectly well, having been a Member of a Government which unfortunately had problems with the footwear industry, yes, he knows perfectly well that this cannot be solved as easily as he would hope, and if it was that easy, I wonder why he did not do so during the eight or ten years he was with the Government, and a majority Government besides.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) for his liveliness, the way he defends the interests not only of Quebec but of Canada, and of this country's economic situation.

I would like to congratulate him no just for the work he is doing in this House, but also because he is a most able Minister.

I have a question for him. He mentioned an investment in Edmonton. Could he give a few details on what is being done with respect to that investment?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, true enough, this may not be the most difficult question, however, it is relevant.

I assume that each one of you would like to have a project that would be creating 2,000 jobs over the next three years. In the larger National Capital region, here in Ottawa, we have no cause for complaint, there are museums that are proceeding well, and so on. So in the case of Edmonton, it is a major federal presence that will be called Place Canada, in Edmonton proper where a hotel, office, and business complex will be built, of course, for the benefit of people living in Edmonton. And, there is not doubt about it, the federal Government probably will also have congenial office space for its public servants in Edmonton.

What to my mind was the most interesting for Edmonton, considering the unemployment rate in the construction industry prevailing in the great City of Edmonton, in that great region of Canada, since there were economic problems there as elsewhere, I think, was this compensation, this federal presence which responded to a need in the construction industry. I remember quite well that the unions at that time had talked to me about that as well as other people concerned, civic authorities and the Members of this House. Our Members, Mr. Speaker, had told me that it would be relevant to have a major project there because of the economic circumstances existing in Edmonton.

As a Quebecer and as Minister of Public Works, I will admit, Mr. Speaker, in this fine spirit of national reconciliation, that I was proud last Tuesday to dedicate this first-rate complex which will take shape during the forthcoming months, of course to the great satisfaction of Westerners.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the previous speaker.

Mr. Speaker, on May 4, 1984, in the Sherbrooke newspaper La Tribune, the following could be read: "A Tory Government would not remove quotas on imports set by Canada in the footwear and textile industries as indicated Wednesday to La Tribune, by the Conservative Leader Brian Mulroney. The quota policy will remained unchanged, according to Mr. Mulroney who said that he was not in favour of free trade in those areas."

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Hon. Minister can tell us if the Cabinet remembers the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on May 4, 1984, when he was seeking the votes of footwear workers and others in Quebec. We have heard "delay, delay, delay" in the past two months. The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said that there will be an answer, but we have heard that for weeks and weeks. Members have asked when we are going to hear a statement. We know that retailers are not buying from Canadian buyers because they are waiting for the end of the quota in three weeks. When will the statement be made and will it honour the pledge made by the Prime Minister?

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to inform my hon. colleague that a decision will be made before November 30.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for comments has now expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier, when I was listening to the Hon. Member who presented the motion for the NDP, and who comes from a riding in Saskatchewan, I felt that I had to tell him, first of all, that I did not have to be grateful to him for presenting this motion and limiting it to Quebec, because in any case, he know and his party knew, that yesterday, today and tomorrow we were having a general meeting in Halifax, where the majority of the Quebec caucus, at least our party's Quebec caucus, since they don't have any Members from Quebec, would probably be attending. At the request of my whip, the person responsible for party discipline, we managed to get some of our Members to stay, because this motion, in addition to condemning the Government, might also be construed as an attempt to demonstrate, at least partly, that the party I represent, which has had many Members from the province of Quebec and which very shortly, I am sure, will be able to win back the trust of Quebecers . . . so I certainly do not have to be grateful to him for the way he, in a more or less rhetorical fashion, limited his motion, although after listening to him via the television cameras, I had not heard anything that concerned Quebec. He did not speak at all to the motion before the House, the motion concerning Quebec and the fact that this Government has apparently abandoned the province of Quebec.

I thought he was exaggerating a bit, especially when I heard him talking about social programs. Having always been an avid reader of La Fontaine's fables, if I may on this Friday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and this is quite relevant, I should like to relate what came immediately to my mind. When I listened to my very good friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) I was reminded of another fable. The NDP Members who openly take credit for all social programs reminded me of La Fontaine's fable about the stagecoach and the fly. It is unfortunate that young Quebecers and Francophones in the rest of Canada are no longer taught La Fontaine's fables, everybody should know them because they seem to always apply in every human situation. Now, about the stagecoach and the fly, I will skip the first few lines. It was going uphill on a sandy and tough road which was hard to climb. It goes something like this: "The fly sees horses coming. It gets the idea that buzzing them will help. It stings them one after another, convinced that it alone keeps them pulling the coach. Indeed it takes full merit and complains it is doing all the work. After an arduous climb the coach finally reaches the top of the hill and the fly says: Now I can breathe, I worked so hard for those poor people, they finally made it to level ground".

My friend the Minister of Public Works takes it for granted that all of a sudden everything is peachy and inflation is going down, as if the previous Government did not have anything to do with that. But it does take time and the downward trend was clearly unmistakable before the elections when the inflation rate was 4 per cent and interest rates were levelling off. There is one of La Fontaine's fables which applies, not to him, but to his Party, the one about the frog trying to grow as big as an ox. This really applies, Mr. Speaker, to the Government which claims all the merit for the completion of almost everyone of the big projects which were already started and for which it just had, as was mentioned yesterday by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) to reap what others have sown.

What strikes me, Mr. Speaker, is that during the debate on this motion today, the Hon. Member of the NDP did not really make any reference to his motion, which will probably allow the Government and Official Opposition Members to digress a little, but I will leave to my colleague and friend, the Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), to speak about the third part of the today's motion, that is:

> Protect and safeguard Key existing industries such as lumber, textiles, agriculture, pulp and paper and footwear.

I will entrust my colleague and friend of Richmond-Wolfe to do that.

I was not offended because we are among colleagues, and there is no reason to be shocked because one of then says things he or she might not like, however I was somewhat surprised at the strategy of the NPD which had the whole debate revolue around the situation in Quebec. Obviously, the Gallup Poll gave them temporarily 22 per cent and they believe, of course, they have made extraordinary progress; they imagine themselves in power, as the fly of the la Fontaine fable they see themselves at the top of the hill. Well, I must say to him, Mr. Speaker, that I would have liked to see him make the same remarks in English, because what I do not like with the NDP, with socialists—although socialists are very respectable people—I so not mean nasty and mean socialists, but socialists—They always take the same approach to debates in a very clever but around about way, the class struggle approach. I find this dangerous, expecially when they say "The rich get richer and the poor get poorer" I have seen the theme of their campaigns "Let's make the rich pay". It has a demagogic and sad ring to it. It seems to me that there should be a better way to approach this debate, and I say that out of friendship for my colleagues, because when people hear those words and take them at face value they might reach in a violent way which I do not think is what the NDP had is mind the NDP, formerly the CCF and eventually I don't know what—I feel, Mr. Speaker, that one must always guard against this kind of class struggle rhetoric.

Having said that, I of course agree with them when they say the Government has reneged on its commitments. The abandonment mostly of their social programs because, as the Hon. Minister of Public Works said earlier: There are people in the political world who are trying to make us believe that we want to frighten the elderly, the old people, our elders. I would never dare accuse one of my opponents, even if during the last election campaign my opponents travelled across the constituency saying: Mr. Prud'homme is scaring you. I will not repeat what I said when I met those elderly people because of those who know my constituency, there are 12 homes for the elderly, I have known those people forever and they would have kicked me out if I had dared go and stir them up, scare our senior citizens, and as I said at the time, almost several months ago, it would have been a shame for my father who died at 90 to hear that his son could have gone to an old citizens home just to stir them up. But it was indeed facts that led us to go and speak to those people. It was facts. And what were those facts? The fact was that the Government decided to de-index old age pensions. They are saying: Well, no, it was not serious. But I ask them: If your intention was not really to de-index and roll back pensions, why did you do it? It was the people's involvement that made you step back. And I have to say that I shall not be claiming the merit of that achievement for my party, and even less so for those who jumped on the bandwagon, the CCF Party which joined us in the wake of the efforts by our colleague, our champion, the one we had chosen within our party to be a leader on those matters, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

But at the same time, and for the first time in their lives, the people of Canada got organized. Senior citizens who used to remain silent got their act together.

And I must say that I strongly oppose what I always hear from our socialist friends in Canada, that the Liberal Party also had brought down indexation, had de-indexed with its six and five program . . . which is misleading because that is not what happened. The deindexation proposed by the Government related to the first 3 percent . . . it was an immediate attack against senior citizens, those who received those cheques, to remove the first 3 percent saying . . . you will have nothing. However, the temporary proposal of the government at that time, and it did not last very long because inflation decreased rapidly, was 6 percent and 5 percent the following year, and it was not enough. But this hardly occurred because inflation decreased to 6 and 5 percent. Thus there is a difference between taking immediately the first 3 percent and what we did at that time.

It is the same as far as family allowances are concerned. I am very pleased to see that a distinguished colleague, a friend of Hon. Members' who is not a Liberal, an Hon. Member from the east end of Montreal, has just started to realize how dangerous the situation is, because she is now presenting petitions. The day before yesterday, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Jacques) presented petitions similar to those presented by all my colleagues, asking for the Government to withdraw their Bill on the deindexation of family allowances.

Why all this? Because it is related to the end of my speech. The Hon. Member, if anyone is honourable in this House he is, the former Minister of National Defence and Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), presented a motion on behalf of his constituents to oppose deindexation. He is not a Liberal! He is not a member of the NDP!

He stood up by presenting a petition, and I do not know whether he spoke against the legislation or not, but he presented a petition, which was remarkable, knowing that it would be embarrassing for the Government.

Take it from me, Mr. Speaker: before the debate on the Government's plan to deindex family allowances is over, even my colleague the Hon. Member for Verdun will be tabling petitions calling on the Government to renounce its plan.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has failed to fulfil its promises concerning the well known RRAP—I cannot stand these acronyms!—Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. The activities in Quebec under this program have considerably decreased, while in Ontario they have hardly decreased. I cannot help thinking. I see in the statistics published this morning that Ontario is somewhat better off. There are 7,000 more jobs in Ontario. Unemployment has decreased. But for Quebec and other Eastern Canada regions which are faced with the same problems, it is simply more, much more of the same.

I should like to know what the elected representatives of the ridings I am going to name—I am not going to name all of them—have done about the RRAP—I do not think the hon. member who represents the City of Victoriaville is a Liberal. I hear that my friend the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivière was met with a demonstration, and that something resembling a sit-in took place at the PC office. I hear also that Gilbert . . . I mean the Hon. Member for Verdun has had his own problems. I can see our good friend the Minister, that is, the Hon. Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Vézina) who manages to calm us with her smile when the goings get rough. Major cuts were also made in her own riding, and the people there fumed. The elected representatives of East Angus, Bécancour, even Victoria . . . The Council of mayors . . . A council of Bellechasse mayors say the same thing. A good friend from Rouyn-Noranda. They must be embarrassed. I hope they will find some way of explaining the unexplainable. Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that a colleague who presides over our proceedings as you do, the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest), also has problems. Questions are asked in Sherbrooke, in Windsor.

So, Mr. Speaker, those promises must be fulfilled. Those cuts hurt middle-income earners and those who are ill off.

I could go on and on. Broken promises! Lord! I will be charitable and suppose the Government will eventually honour those promises, as the Minister of Public Works who responded on behalf of the Government said earlier. He asked for a chance for a Government that has been in power for only twelve, thirteen or fourteen months. I am quite prepared to give them a chance, since that allowed them to make all overtures. Everything they take credit for would have happened anyway, without them. Personally, and that is the advice I gave my colleagues, I prefer to start applying more pressure on the Government after eighteen months, two years or two years and a half. That is when the Conservative Government will be applying its own policies, which I fear.

In Montreal, as a last word on RRAP, Mr. Marcel Sévigny, the spokesman of demonstrators, was quoted in La Presse of Wednesday, March 20, 1985, as saying: "One hundred and twenty-five representatives of housing co-operatives on the Island of Montreal demonstrated yesterday . . . " I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that those people will make the Conservative Government members move. There is no doubt about that.

I can say one thing, and that is my reply to those who say things were bad before. Even though my colleagues in my own party do not agree with my interpretation of our defeat, I believe the Canadian people seemed to have had enough with us. Very well. They made a decision. They re-elected 40 members of our party. I thank them, like my colleagues Rossi, Tardif and others who came back. We thank the people for keeping us but they decided they wanted a change. They decided that the Hon. Member for Rimouski was good enough, that the Hon. Member for Verdun was useful as well as my colleagues from Alberta and Nova Scotia who have been re-elected, and they wanted those people to bring about some change. Well, we are still waiting for a renewal.

I can tell you something, and I will quote from official documents of the Government. Things were not that bad in Montreal. At that time, we did not hear about problems like we do now in Montreal, and I am very concerned because I am first and foremost a Canadian and a Montrealer. And I do not forget my Quebecker status, which means I am a good Quebecker-Montrealer-Canadian.

However, in a magazine called L'économie du Québec 1984 published by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, one can read, and I will only quote one paragraph: "For the second year in a row, the rate of growth of the Quebec economy has been higher than the national average". The Conservatives were not yet in power, or had been for a very short time. "Thanks to the sustained growth of the manufacturing and trade sectors, the real gross domestic product has increased by 4.9 in 1984, that is half a percentage point more than the Canadian economy as a whole. The improvement of the economic situation also resulted in a decrease of the number of bankruptcies in all economic sectors, except the resource sector". Our good friend, the Minister of Public Works said exactly the same thing earlier and I quote: "Since we came to power 18 months ago, we . . . " I was listening very carefully as I always do when our friend the Minister of Public Works is talking. Always, faithfully. I found that quotation in an official report, no less; entitled L'économie du Québec 1984 published by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion of the Government of Canada. I have it in my hand so that people can see it. There are copies available. It was released in August 1985. At that time—

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what has changed since that time, and I am sorry to have to mention that. People tell me sometimes I should be a little tougher. Nevertheless I am sorry to have to say that, Mr. Speaker. In Montreal we need doctors, that is strong Ministers who are able to deal with problems when they arise.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we had problems in Montreal in the past, but the Ministers representing the island and the city of Montreal were so powerful that they immediately found solutions to them—and I will conclude with this hoping I will be asked some questions—what about Versatile, Vickers, Bombardier, Gulf, Canadian Steel Wheels and others; indeed, we had problems in the past, but in those days we had people in the Cabinet who could give help to those important companies such as Vickers and Bombardier. But what do we see today? For all those 40 ridings in the Montreal region, I do not mention the Hon. Minister for Public Works who knows very well how to take care of his own area and riding—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. We have a period now for questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on the quite remarkable way he described what is going on in Quebec, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like him to complete the last comments he made in this House about the situation on Montreal Island, especially in the eastern part. What are the problems and what solutions can we expect in the future?

• (1500)

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to thank the Hon. Member. I shall be very brief because the rules say that we must be but it is really tragic, Mr. Speaker, that each time we ask the question to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), she can only quote imposing figures. I can assure you that the workers at Versatile Vickers, Bombardier, Gulf, Canadian Steel Wheels, Parisette, D'Aoust & Lalonde, SKD Technology, of Montreal, and the others who will be joining them will not use these figures to buy food next Christmas or next Easter. They want jobs and they want the Government to act immediately. This is what is happening in Montreal East, and there is one thing I have noted for one of the first times in my political career. I went to Vickers, and in spite of what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said this morning in reply to one of my questions, we cannot sit on all the committees when there are only 40 of us and 21 legislative committees and 23 parliamentary committees. We know how to share work in my party and we have done so. We have the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre). We each deal with certain issues.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that these people, and especially the Vickers employees will not be satisfied with speeches or statistics, they want jobs. I know the Minister of Public Works very well, we all know he has a big heart, that is why I ask him to try and understand the desperate situation of Vickers employees. They thought they had an iron-clad contract and they see it go somewhere else. Even if it creates jobs elsewhere, it does not help them. I have met these people who will come on Parliament Hill and that is why I ask the Government to do something to deal with the sad situation in Montreal East, because nothing creates more social problems than plant closures. If one closes, others are sure to follow . . . this is the domino effect. I know the Government is going to study the matter, but $100,000 to create a committee with the provincial Government, called Manpower Adjustment Committee, or MAC for short, will not solve the problem. I was at these meetings, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell you, and there is no doubt in my mind, that this people will not accept that we abandon Montreal East totally. You can ask my colleague from Bourassa, who was with me, or the Liberal Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). They have met these people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A question from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle).

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) a question. Concerning the contract signed by the former Government, it was clearly stated in the original contract to St. John's that of the six frigates, three would be built in Quebec. If there is an oversight today, I think the Hon. Member will understand the problem and it is that Quebec and not necessarily Montreal was mentioned. I am sure this contract was not concluded in bad faith, since guarantees were sought. It is now difficult if not impossible to politicize the debate, because there will be no job loss in Quebec. I understand the frustration of the people in Montreal who are bound to lose those jobs to other workers in Quebec.

However as Quebecers, I do not think we will quarrel about jobs in Quebec. I think that the Minister who was then responsible forgot a comma, because Montreal is not specifically identified. I think that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis will admit that oversight which is the cause of a major problem but we should insist on that matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have a short answer for the Hon. Minister. When that contract was awarded, it was understood that the Lévis shipbuilders, near Quebec City, would have their share. Because they had lost that contract so to speak, they were given something else, that is the retrofitting, or TRUMP program, for $650 million. Montreal got the other contract. It is so obvious that that was the real intent of the Government, no matter what the legal contract says, that the people from Saint-John, New Brunswick, were forced to go to Montreal since Paramax was directly linked to that contract. Paramax, which creates some extraordinary high technology jobs is not in Quebec City but in Montreal, to stay closer to shipbuilders. Those are the facts that need to be remembered.

Therefore, I would submit to the Minister what I consider a shrewd proposal. If, as is your intention or not whether there was an error, the contract now goes from Montreal to Lévis, I tell you in return, take the TRUMP contract from Lévis and transfer it to Montreal. This would make sure that the people concerned in east end Montreal and In Quebec City are happy, because the TRUMP contract was given to the people in Lévis who were expecting the contract that went to Montreal. Do the reverse. But, please, do not let people out of work, please, Mr. Minister. I urge your Government not to allow those people to be out of work. This will be a disaster for them. They can no longer be displaced. You know very well that, with all the great programs of your colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDonald), it is difficult to place people in other jobs at their age. The Minister knows this very well. Mr. Speaker, you are a reasonable, intelligent and understanding man, you know very well that those people who have just lost their jobs cannot be placed in other industries. And yourself, if you had to decide, you would find that so clever that you would say: This sure makes sense, the TRUMP contract was given to Lévis, let us give it back to the Montreal people who just lost a contract to Lévis. Clearly, this is so very obvious.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle), who spoke for some time about the advantages which the Government of Canada provided to the country, particularly to the Province of Quebec, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said that those advantages came about because they were on stream from the previous Government.

Would he take this opportunity to explain to the House and to Canadians why a $200 billion debt, which takes one out of every three tax dollars to pay for the interest on that debt, is an advantage? Had the Government been left with a stronger economy, which had not been blown away by borrowing, we would have been able to do much more than the Hon. Member is now suggesting that we are. Can he not reflect upon his own past in that regard?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow one minute for the Hon. Member's rebuttal.

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have sat with the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) in the House for a long time. I never saw him point his finger at the Government, when he was on this side of the House, for incurring all these expenses.

Mr. Malone: Oh, yes.

Mr. Prud'homme: I stand to be corrected, but I never heard the Conservatives, when they were in the Opposition, reproaching us or asking us to give up all the good programs which indeed were expensive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Prud'homme: Have a nice weekend.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, my hon. friend, but the period provided for questions and comments has now expired.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering a motion presented by the New Democratic Party concerning the situation in Quebec. The motion reads as follows, and I quote:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the people of Quebec by reneging on its commitment to:

(1) Develop new job potential in Quebec communities;

(2) Ease the tax burden on low and middle income families; and

(3) Protect and safeguard key existing industries such as lumber, textiles, agriculture, pulp and paper and footwear.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the third point which deals with the situation in Quebec's industry.

What is that situation? Mr. Speaker, today, if we consider all the statistics on the unemployment situation, we see that Quebec has an unemployment rate of 11.8 per cent. That is an increase over last month and constitutes a level of unemployment that is not acceptable in this country. However, some regions of Quebec have unemployment rates that are even higher. For instance, Jonquière and Chicoutimi have an unemployment rate of 15.5 per cent. The city of Montreal has an unemployment rate of 11.4 per cent, far too high for a city of its size.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at regions in Quebec that are located far away from these urban areas, and I am thinking of the Gaspé—In the Gaspé, we find unemployment rates as high as 17.1 per cent, 40.6 per cent, 40.9 per cent. This is intolerable in our country.

And these problems are the result of a widespread loss of jobs in industry in Quebec.

I have here a list of all the jobs lost in Quebec after the Progressive Conservative Government was elected last year. There is for instance in Ormstown a textile industry where 80 jobs were lost. There is another small plant in Saint-Jérôme where 30 people lost their jobs. The list could go on and on and on. There is for instance a small clothing factory where 55 people lost their jobs. But those are minor setbacks. There seems to have been a change this year in Quebec. Some shutdowns are taking place which create massive unemployment. Take for instance the case of Shawinigan with 175 jobs lost.

There are many other cases in such industries as lumber, footwear, leather, but mostly in the textile industry where losses are quite severe. Last May, for instance, in Quebec, 264 workers became unemployed at the Wabasso plant in Shawinigan and 560 at the Wabasso plant in Trois-Rivières. Those are weak industries, small scale industries, but industries which used to play a major role in the province of Quebec. Today I wonder that the Government's strategy is in tackling the problem of those losses in the manufacturing sector of Quebec. I believe there is no strategy, and I do not say that because I am a socialist, a Member of the NDP, I am saying it because I have discussed the matter with the textile industry in our country and they handed me their files and in the files you find a lot of interesting things.

In the files of the textile industry, for instance, you find a statement by the Conservative Party, a statement for immediate release, on July 26, 1984. That was close to the elections. This is the way they look at things in that statement: the Progressive Conservative Party will be committed, and it is a promise: first to fair trade, but not free trade.

That was not said by this NDP member. The Conservative Party said no to free trade before the election. It is true, that was your opinion.

Secondly, with respect to the textile industry. Stability is based on a promise of comprehensive quotas and a controlled increase of imports. Where is that promise now? There are no such comprehensive quotas. The Minister has perhaps forgotten them? Is that the explanation? I do not think so because the textile industry has held meetings with the new Tory Ministers who will provide a great future for Quebec.

For instance, in November 1984, the textile industry arranged for a meeting with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and responsible for international exchanges. At that meeting, the textile industry set forth all the problems and difficulties experienced by the textile sector in Quebec and referred to all the jobs which would be lost if nothing were done.

Mr. Speaker, what has been done? Nothing! The textile industry is quite articulate and thinks that the Government really wants to respond to the industry. After a year's work to arrange for another meeting with the same Minister, on October 4, to deal with the same matter, with the problems it was experiencing, the textile industry told the Minister: "We told you that if nothing was done many jobs would be lost in the textile sector. And now since you have done nothing, many, many jobs are lost".

And at that October meeting the Minister was asked if it was then possible to arrive at some decisions. Was it possible then to amend the textile industry policy in a way that would be consistent with their election promises? Was it possible to have comprehensive quotas? The Minister answered no, it was not possible.

I have before me a press release issued before the election, which says: Here are comprehensive quotas, they are for you too if you vote Progressive Conservative. But after the election, the textile industry told me the Minister had said: No, that is not possible.

And the textile industry apparently was not the only one to have made that proposal.

• (1520)

I have here a letter from the Quebec Government which says exactly the same thing. This letter, Mr. Speaker, is signed by Rodrigue Biron, the Quebec Minister of Trade and Industry. It reads, and I quote:

> The announced shutdown of the Dominion Textile Company plants in Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu and Valleyfield, with the resulting layoff of more than 800 workers, and the recent Wabasso shutdown in Trois-Rivières and Shawinigan, with the resulting loss of 1,000 jobs, are but a few examples of the disastrous situation facing the Quebec textile industry.

And this is not an NDP Minister but a Quebec Minister who sent the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, Mr. Sinclair Stevens, this letter last August to ask for the implementation of global quotas. It is a small, direct and simple request, related to a promise the Conservative Party made before the election, and it is something very important for the future of the textile industry in Quebec as well as in the rest of Canada.

Here is a communication from the committee for the survival of the textile and clothing industry, it is an invitation to join forces so that this great magician, the Canadian Government, will not make our industry vanish because imports are not restricted. The survival of the textile industry is now for sale. But what does the Government do? It does nothing. Mr. Speaker, this Government has no strategy at all. We see the same thing happening in many other areas, like forest products industry, clothing and textile industry, for which there is no strategy. There is a strategy that could support Quebec communities and inform them about their economic future and that of our country. Take the Desbiens situation for instance. This is a project our Party considers very important, Mr. Speaker. During our tour, we visited Jonquière and found this small pulp and paper mill, and we have fought for Desbiens, asking in the House that the Government support this industry. It might not be a big struggle, but it is the struggle of a community which does not want to become a ghost town. This community seeks a balanced economy with jobs and a future.

When we raised questions, the Government announced help for Desbiens. But this now brings an other important question. The private company, which was considering building or renovating that small plant, has backed down. We must find an other solution and the House should take up this challenge. When we have this kind of small community which thinks in terms of planning the future, I believe we should have economic tools to help them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hope of that small community is the same as the great hope of the province of Quebec, and we endorse it without question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, first I must say that I am a little moved to be recognized after some very experienced members such as the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) who brought forward this motion, then the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle), of course, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and last my colleague from the New Democratic Party.

Earlier today, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville proposed this motion in this National Week of Career Counselling announced by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), I hope the hon. members of the NDP will take this opportunity to train for another career than prophet of doom in Quebec. I beleive this is a golden opportunity.

Moreover, I would like to indicate that the Hon. Member who is the sponsor of this non-confidence motion before us, said he belonged to a party which represents ordinary people. I, for one, as Member of Parliament for Charlevoix, I come from a region and I have not been elected by the previous Liberal "establishment" but precisely by ordinary people. I am the representative of a peripheral area. I represent ordinary people. I am Member of Parliament for a region where unemployment rate vary between 20 and 80 per cent. In my riding, I succeeded to a Liberal Minister, the Minister of Public Works, as well as Minister for Small Business and Tourism. When I was elected, I found that the economic situation in that riding was just as bad as everywhere else in Canada and particularly in Quebec.

I would like to say as well that I agree with the last intervention of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who spoke about the poor East Montreal region which is now in difficulty. I sympathize with those people and I suffer with them. But what about our peripheral areas, what about us people from the Upper North Shore, from remote areas like the Abitibi, from Gaspe, Rivière-du-Loup, Rimouski, who are constantly facing prohibitive transportation costs and business investment disincentives? I sympathize with people of East Montreal. I am quite sure that the meeting which is taking place between the Members from East Montreal and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) as well as some of her colleagues will bring about solutions. This is a unique opportunity for them, given the closeness of markets and so on, to start a new process in East Montreal.

As for us, what has been done for us during the last fifty or hundred years? We live in outlying, isolated areas. It happens that 13 or 14 months ago we too in Charlevoix in particular and in Eastern Quebec generally, voted, with an overwhelming majority for change? Why did we vote Progressive Conservative?

Precisely because we wanted to breathe into our people, the disadvantaged, a new spirit, a will of change, a will to control our affairs.

The previous speaker was talking about a mere 11 per cent unemployment rate. If I had an unemployment rate of only 11 per cent in my riding, I would be taken for a god. People would kiss my hands and feet. I would be carried in triumph.

The fact is that unemployment in my area is well over the national average. We always exceed it. And we avoid comparisons, because although it may sometimes be comforting it can also be distressing at times. In the area of underemployment and underdevelopment, we still have much progress to make. Yet we have started making some progress in cooperation with people. For example, just a day ago, I was 60 miles deep in the forest as a result of a deal made with Miss MacDonald to invest $509,000 in a forest management project. I was in the ditches with the guys, about a hundred men working at forest management and feeling proud and happy, despite the temporary nature of this investment, to be able to control the future of the forests. Because, of course, Charlevoix is also the country where Le temps d'une paix was filmed, it is the Little Switzerland of Quebec and indeed of Canada and one of the most beautiful areas of our country.

I urge my hon. friends to support the tourist industry in my riding by visiting Charlevoix next summer or even this coming winter . . . they could ski there also. That is an invitation. They will find excellent accommodation and can expect a warm welcome on the part of my constituents who are working hard to change things and improve their lot.

And I do my part too, as a backbencher, or rather, as I often tell the people in my area, I am a proud "front-sitting backbencher". We have managed, thanks to the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDonald), to get some $15 million to invest this year in my riding and to mobilize my constituents around a number of projects which are a little more significant and around which we hope to create long and middle term jobs, for in spite of all the investment contraindication, we are trying to adapt to a changing situation. We make very effort to do so, Mr. Speaker.

The results are often late in coming. Like people in other areas, those who have lived for years up there on a Cadillac level find it hard now to step down to a Volkswagen. However, I urge them to follow the example of our people and to show this new spirit. Along those 100 miles of coastline my riding is almost 300 miles long—there are communities with just one small industry and often during the winter, you can count on you left hand those who are working. Do not waste time counting those who do not work. It takes too much time, the other way is easier.

However, we are trying to rouse those communities and to breathe into them a new working or creative spirit. And I was quite pleased, indeed, to take advantage of the support provided by my Government for certain projects and that creative spirit is going quite far. One of our industries was advertising today in the Globe and Mail its intention of issuing a new series of shares once it will have secured a loan from the Quebec Government which has not yet been confirmed. However, in view of their worthwhile project, which is to build a fifth pulp and paper mill, those people are issuing new shares. And I can tell you that the decision to expand has come from within, from the workers, the ordinary people, the leaders and the unions who are fostering this development and asking for this new investment. I hope that the issuance of new shares will be really successful and that they will find the necessary capital without too much help from the Government. Of course, they have asked us to intervene. They asked the Quebec Government. If the Governments of Quebec and Canada had been willing to open up the valves, we would have been the first on to congratulate them and to provide financial aid to that business. However, what is more fantastic yet is that they have done it all by themselves encouraged by the worthiness of their project. I feel this is great and I hope it will result in the creation of 200 or 300 jobs in an area which is highly underprivileged, but still experiencing major technological changes.

Some investments have also been made under the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle). This week, a $800,000 project in my constituency will get under way for the refitting of a new wharf. The use that is made of those wharves will be changed. I have had funds invested this year in Tadoussac, where the tourist industry is experiencing new developments, where very low unemployment rates have been felt in that small community because of the natural phenomenon of whales visiting our shores. This is an extraordinary event, which year after year generates activity with people coming to enjoy that tremendous attraction. And this has been done by local people. There is a new spirit that is spilling over. And, of course, If we had all that money available, if it were not for that damned $200 billion deficit, if the previous Governments had not run wild with the coffers, we might afford to add to all this activity. There is also a tremendous awareness effort in the small community of Sacré-Cœur, where cooperative movements "rehabililated" a mill. Yet, the previous Governments had spent $47 million, but because of the distances those $47 million proved to be unproductive investments. There were successive failures, but for the first time, the local people took over that investment and the company manager, assisted by the chairman of the cooperative union was proud to show us the 196,000 board-feet of average production, a figure never before achieved for that mill and which has steadily been maintained for some months now. That same cooperative union with others in the area, and even some private investments are triggering a process that will, as I wholeheartedly and despite unfavourable conditions, our remoteness, the financial reluctance of the banks—In remote areas like the North Shore, banks think that assets have no resale value at all whereas in Quebec City, you can get loans up to 70 per cent or 80 per cent of your investment, because banks know their money will easily be recovered if the project fails. The bank thinks: "I will recover as much as 70, 75 or even 90 per cent of my investment." In our outlying communities, you get 0 per cent. And investors must give iron-clad guarantees.

Despite all that, however, there exists a new climate, a new will and a new hope. And contrary to what today's motion implies, I think that we are creating new opportunities in the remote areas. If past debts were not so heavy we could build our future more rapidly.

Now, this is a young Government and despite a lack of resources, it stimulates people and investments. When my Government says it intends to negotiate free trade, it has a tremendous impact where I live. However, free trade is important for the forest industry, the lumber industry, the sawmills which cut our timber. Should the Americans decide to limit our exports, as they intend to do under the influence of the protectionist lobby responsible for the Gibbons Bill and others, something we watch very closely, it would be a disaster.

That is why it is crucial that or Government anticipate that trend and tell the Americans: "Let's sit down and negotiate". Naturally, our people expect our Government—elected for that purpose—to protect the interests of the average Canadian. I can tell the Hon. Members of the NDP that, in my riding, dealing with the lumber industry and exports to the U.S. is dealing with ordinary Cannadians.

I repeat, I represent ordinary people, not the Establishment.

I was working on a project in a community of 800 inhabitants. We had the financing. We had, thanks to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Government of Quebec and Hydro Quebec, a nice little project of $1.7 million. We were to announce it, to start creating 60 jobs, permanent jobs. But, the threat of American protectionism was enough to make the main developer back down. That was the only threat.

You can see the need for us to initiate such a process in the best interests of regions such as mine, where tourism and the forest industry, which often has low stocks because of the infestation by the spruce budworm, need investments. An agreement of $300 million has been signed with the Quebec Government, and I have learned that workers in my constituency are already benefiting from this agreement. What is also interesting, is that—my colleague tells me that we should speak about remote areas, such as Pontiac, Gatineau, Labelle and Lac-Saint-Jean. He is right. This is Canada and Canada is a country of regions. If we were ever to forget that fact in Ottawa, this country could not survive. We, in the ordinary regions, are what make up this country.

As I was saying, this new agreement between Canada and Quebec is beginning to show results. There are new spruce trees in the forests and work for the unemployed in my region. It is unfortunate that this motion has been introduced by a Member from Saskatchewan, even though I have a lot of respect for him. I see his intervention as coming from someone who wants to invite us to do more for Quebecers. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that we, the new Conservative Members from Quebec, who might, it is true, not speak that often in this House . . . do you know what we are doing? We are waiting to see the results of all this experience.

Of course, we cannot judge the future by the past. We saw what our predecessors did. You, socialists, never had the opportunity to implement your proposals. However, the people in France now bitterly regret having done so, and there will be major changes in this regard.

However, I understand this proposal. I would rather view it as an invitation from a colleague to do more. But before redistributing wealth, we have to create it. We are now doing so with what little means we have at our disposal, but I hope that the policies we are implementing and which admittedly impose certain sacrifices on the public will enable the outlying regions to initiate an ongoing process to achieve their economic potential so that their needs will no longer always be subordinated to those of the major centres.

As for the 74,000 jobs created in Quebec, I would naturally have liked them all to be in Charlevoix. Some of them have probably been created in our region, and it is thanks to the dynamic attitude of this Government, to this new spirit of entrepreneurship, to this new will to promote development, because of which within four years, we shall have fulfilled our mandate to change, maybe not that much, but significantly, the economic picture in Quebec and Canada.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a magnificent speech. We have many NDP members who could say the same, but we must say it is the same Government who decided to give away $865 million to two major banks. It is also the same Government which made cuts in RRAP, the program that was so helpful for your area.

I agree with what the Hon. Member had to say and it was very interesting to hear both speeches one after the other. I also think as a Member from a peripheral area, namely South Ontario instead of Quebec, but it is basically the same.

I think it is essential for all of us from remote areas to appeal to the Government who pays more attention to demands from Montreal, Toronto or Edmonton; we must tell him that he must now listen to remote areas.

I believe it is sound to struggle, it is important for the Hon. Member that we support him and we hope that during next Parliaments we will lead the Government to at last listen to what remote areas have to say. That would be helpful.

• (1550)

Mr. Hamelin: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his support which, I hope, will be more forthcoming than in the past for this Government. I am as anxious as you are to achieve all these objectives and you know, I wish we would have the "Decade of remote areas", but we should give ourselves the means to achieve that end. My people and myself still have enough patience to understand that we must give ourselves the means to act, to give more consistency to this economy, to have more confidence in private enterprise because I too believe in it, even though it is difficult in our region. But I am prepared as well as my fellow citizens to ensure that we take some time, that we change our scale of values and that within a short time we may achieve all the objectives that this Government and this party . . . all the objectives I have set to myself as a Member of Parliament both for my riding and for all peripheral areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his excellent presentation. We understood how much you wanted to defend the interests of peripheral areas. You have said it many times in your speeches and since you talked about Canada and its regions in your presentation, I wish you would tell us about a statement that you made a few months ago regarding that suggestion to help our regions and to create a special fund for this purpose. Following the statement that you made a while ago, I wish you would give us details as to how this special fund would work to ensure that peripheral regions are taken care of.

Mr. Hamelin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a few months ago, within the very structures of our party, I did suggest the establishment of a regional fund of development, not to be confused with a fund of regional development, and I even put forward a figure of several millions of dollars for each of the ridings or outlying areas. From that fund we, the people from the regions, could draw on the basis of various factors, criteria, competitiveness, investment disincentives, to realize all our social and economic potential. Unfortunately, for the time being we lack the resources to put these policies into place, to establish this regional fund of development, but the idea has already gained ground, for even the Quebec Government and certain people have talked about it and I hope that the idea will gain even more ground to the point of allowing us to establish it at some point in the future, when the funds are available.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate. If I may, however, like my colleague I deplore the fact that the motion, which has my full support under these circumstances, has been introduced when most Quebec Members have to attend the Halifax convention. Be that as it may, I should like to take the next few minutes to voice my views with respect to the motion before the House.

• (1600)

As Hon. Members may recall, we were in the midst of an election campaign a year and a few months ago, facing men and women who were crisscrossing Quebec and making every kind of firm commitments. The underlying theme of all those commitments was "jobs, jobs, jobs". Everybody then knew the state of the country's financial situation. Canada's debt was not a secret to anyone and, more than that, during the months following the election of the present Government it became clear that our indebtedness was definitely not as outrageous as they had claimed throughout the election campaign.

It is therefore fair to say that they were fully aware of the Canadian economic situation when they made those hundreds of promises and commitments on the hustings. They knew that Canada had gone through extremely hard and difficult times when, unfortunately, the deficit was bound to increase. They knew what the score was all right, but it did not stop them from making formal promises. So election day came and we all know the results—the Canadian people gave a massive vote of confidence to the Progressive Conservative candidates.

Here we are now, November 8, wondering what has been accomplished during those short 14 months. We have been hearing all along that inflation went down and interest rates declined since they took office. We were also told that they had a strong mandate to take whatever action was necessary under the circumstances. Well, as everyone knows, one does not have to be an economist to realize that the current situation with respect to interest rates and inflation happens to be the outcome, the result which could have been generated only through policies which had been implemented long before the Conservatives even arrived on the scene.

They pass a number of measures. They introduce a number of bills, but the particular feature of this Government is that for the majority, if not for all of its initiatives this Government, dug into the pockets of the constituents of my hon. friend who are people of modest means, whose salaries are very small or very average.

There may be a certain logic in taking money from the people through direct and indirect taxation to lower down the deficit. On that basis that kind of rationale is acceptable. However, what is unacceptable, what is even odious, is the fact that these sums collected through taxes on drugs and deindexation of family allowances, are being given away to the tune of $1 billion or several hundred millions to individuals or companies which also have certain responsibilities under the circumstances and should participate in the economic recovery of this country. It is totally unacceptable to take money from people who cannot afford that extra expense.

Still under the theme of job creation, they also said to the people of the region I know best, the Eastern Townships, the Bois-Francs, that they were going to develop, as soon as possible, a number of projects, absolutely essential to the economy of the Eastern Townships to strenghten its infrastructure and to create direct jobs and thousands of indirect jobs.

Obviously, I am referring to map-making, to the gas pipeline which should have linked Sherbrooke, Windsor and Asbestos and would have created hundreds of jobs as a result of infrastructure improvement.

They also said, because this is an agricultural oriented region, that they would develop a project which had been announced in June, a research laboratory, the phytoprotection laboratory, in Victoriaville. The cost of that project was 12 or 13 million dollars. Agriculture Canada had given its approval. This amount of $12 million was to come from the Laprade Fund, but once again, the project was postponed indefinitely.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), in response to a question that I put to him last week, said that he did not know enough about the project to answer a question of this importance. These were issues with a regional dimension. These were issues which were and still are necessary, in order to preserve the basic and significant economic nature of the Eastern Townships and the Bois-francs.

But there were other issues as well. Personally, I come from an asbestos producing region. During the election campaign, it was said that asbestos was a very important natural resource and that we should intensify research activities in this field and make additional efforts to promote it again in order to be able, eventually to consider transforming that product in larger quantities. What happened to the asbestos? A year and a few months after September 4, some 1,200 layoffs in the asbestos sector were announced; 1,200 people who were very well paid, lost or will lose their jobs in the next few months and weeks; 1,200 direct jobs that will disappear. It is well known that jobs earning $25,000, $30,000, $35,000 or $40,000 per year are very contributive to the economy and themselves generate an enormous number of indirect jobs.

So, what happened in that regard? Nothing at all. Absolutely nothing. Yet, it would have been easy for Canada which professes to believe in asbestos to put into place policies that would have served as a model, on the international level, to issue guidelines to all construction undertakings to use as many asbestos-based materials as possible. Asbestos is no longer the controversial substance it once was, and it can now be used in a scientifically acceptable fashion. There is evidence that asbestos can be useful, even protect and save lives. It just have to be used safely according to rules and regulations.

There have also been commitments concerning an industry that is of special interest to me, that has been the subject of a fight to which I have been closely associated and still is, that is the footwear industry. The footwear issue is very simple and easy to understand. There are 20,000 jobs in Canada in footwear manufacturing, equally distributed between Ontario and Quebec, 10,000 in each province. Approximately 100 million pairs of shoes are bought in Canada.

At the present time, we import about 65 million pairs. Some will say I am against imports. I am not opposed to imports, I am for a just and equitable share of the Canadian market for manufacturers, through protectionism, with a view to ensure half of the market that is estimated at 100 million pairs. If Canadian manufacturers were guaranteed that share of fifty per cent, Mr. Speaker, the 20,000 jobs would first be secured. Second, that would lead to the creation of 6,000 new jobs in the next few weeks or months, at most within a year. During the last election campaign, there were men and women representing the Party which is now the Government who came to Quebec and said: "If we are elected, we solemnly promise to continue the quota system. We will make sure the jobs in these vital industries for the Eastern Townships are fully protected." They made a clear commitment to maintain the quotas.

What has happened? Under pressure, the Government is saying that it is in the interest to the consumers to abolish the quotas. I feel it would be easy to prove the opposite, because importers are very much interested in getting rid of the goods manufactured in this country and replacing them with imports with a much greater profit margin. When they speak, these people generally do so on behalf of the retailers. Well, there are some 4,000 independent retailers in the footwear industry who are never consulted, who never have their say and who in fact are for the protection of the Canadian footwear industry.

The Government had clearly defined its stand during the election campaign. The quotas which had been established under the Liberal Government were coming to an end. As a matter of fact, they will effectively do so in November. The Government promised to make its decision known last August. Then, it promised to make it known in September. Then it said it would be in October, and although the date today is November 8, there is still no decision. And the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated today in the House that the Government would make its decision known before the end of November. At the end of November, a decision will be made concerning footwear, and quotas end November 30.

However, we must realize that the decision, even if it were a good one, and I did take notice of the statement of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), namely that jobs would be safeguarded . . . Even if this decision is good at the end of November, some harm will have been done, a prejudice will have been done, for which we will have to pay next year, because as everyone knows orders in the footwear industry must be placed 6, 7 and 8 months in advance.

Now, importers, assuming that quotas would disappear, have already placed their orders; they have already made their purchases for next Spring and next Summer.

Now, even if the decision were good, some harm, a prejudice would have been done to the Canadian manufacturing sector. Why? Simply because we were passive, because we have not made a decision, because we have not delivered after making formal commitments which were very clear, very precise.

There is also the textile and clothing industry, although this is another sector. At the present time, we talk a lot about the necessity to turn to a free trade policy, about the necessity to liberalize trade with the United States. In a constituency like mine, and I am not the only one in this case, there are dozens in Canada, constituencies which would in fact become extremely vulnerable if the economic barriers, customs barriers, with the United States were to be abolished.

Dozens of small businesses which do not have the capacity to invest millions or even billions of dollars, are literally going to go bankrupt. Small businesses which employ presently 25, 30, 50 and 100 people and which, in the case of free trade without conditions, will disappear. Unfortunately a constituency like mine cannot hope to benefit from the investment of billions or hundreds of millions of dollars, considering that such investments are generally made in densely populated areas. Remote constituencies or those which are not too close to large centres will fall victim to the consequences of such a policy.

I am proceeding rapidly because there is another fundamental aspect for Quebec which, in my opinion, has been totally and shamefully ignored, namely, agriculture.

And speaking of agriculture, the spokesperson for your political group, now the Hon. Roch La Salle, said in Longueuil: To live you have to eat. We understand that. He was inferring that farmers would get everything they wanted under a Conservative Government. In a question I put to the Hon. Member I mentioned the $13 million they have been waiting for all this time. According to the Minister's comments, they can now forget the whole deal. You have adopted a Bill which according to some Members is fantastic for agriculture and I am referring to Bill C-25, the stabilization legislation. This is an unprecedented setback for Quebec farmers, and here, they all agree that they have been sold down the river by the Members from Quebec. Not a single Quebec Member rose in the House or even expressed disapproval of this measure which was an insult to everyone involved in agriculture in the province of Quebec. Today, those same farmers are very concerned about the Government's indecision—it reminds me a little of the footwear industry—about establishing a long-term dairy policy. It has been promised repeatedly by the Government, which was very emphatic about it, even implying that production costs would cover all the input, all the elements involved. We are still waiting. It was promised for August 1. The Minister has said time and time again: You will get a long-term dairy policy and we are going to release it on August 1. Today, on November 8, we still have no policy. They are now talking about reviewing a problem which had aroused considerable interest, and I am referring to the Crow rate. They are considering the possibility of putting that back on the table, with the clear implication that eventually, payments will be made to the producers instead of to the railways. Most farmers in Quebec are very pessimistic today about this whole issue.

Still on the subject of agriculture, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission, since we are often given this opportunity, I would like to talk about what the agricultural or the agri-food industry has been discussing in recent weeks in a journal which comes very close to what the Government's official spokesperson on Agriculture Canada, the Parliamentary Secretary, was saying: We are not here to play Santa Claus, and the Government is no longer financing the shortfall between production prices and costs. We cannot apply social welfare or social insurance policies to agriculture. That is what he had to say about the stabilization bill. A little later, that same Parliamentary Secretary, the same official spokesman of your Government said: I was feeling somewhat uneasy as I spoke in favour of Bill C-25, but I do not feel I am a traitor . . . Because the word traitor is not used by him, but by the farm community which says that the Quebec deputation is composed of 59 traitors, and these will be my final words, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I certainly wish to congratulate my Hon. colleague for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for speaking in such objective fashion. I would indeed like to ask him how we could explain to the people of Canada the difference, since he mentioned the de-indexation of family allowances and old age security pensions, how we could explain to the people of Canada what the difference is between the full 3 per cent de-indexation and what the Conservative Party are claiming we were going to cut down with the 6 and 5 per cent? What is the difference, and what was the impact of those 6 and 5 per cent in terms of wage control in the industrial sector in the provinces?

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my Hon. colleague indeed for allowing me to qualify somewhat this aspect, which seems important in the circumstances, since that argumentation has been cropping up repeatedly on the other side of the House, namely that we too in the past were somewhat unfair to the people benefiting from social programs, which by the way had been introduced by the Liberals. The 6 and 5 per cent were not aimed just at the lowest income people, they applied to every sector of society, every individual and every company. The basic feature was that the first 6 per cent were unassailable, sacrosanct, and that the restrictive measures, if any, applied to the higher amount. The policy put forth by this Government concerns the first 3 per cent, and this means people will lose the first, the second and the third percentage points. Now within that context, the decision reached by the previous Government under the 6 and 5 policy which this Government is taking advantage of because if we are so often told today that the inflation rate is good, that growth is on again, it is the result of measures such as those taken by the Liberal Government. The 3 per cent are not aimed at large companies, at the rich people, at those who will benefit from capital gains of $400,000 to $500,000, but at the people to whom my colleague was referring, the little people who really need those 3 per cent.

I agree, as I said earlier in this House, that 50 cents, $1, $1.50, $3, $4, $5 per month are not much, but people are vulnerable. But what I say is that for these people, it is very important to know one, two, three months in advance that they will have $5, $10, $15, or $20 to spend on Christmas. It is these people who suffer the most because of your unfair measures. And what is even more despicable is that you are literally bleeding them to feed big companies, very big companies that do not need that money at all.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) has raised quite an interesting point. He talked about asbestos. According to him, asbestos is not as dangerous today as it used to be because of new processes. Will he explain which processes he is referring to when he says that as such asbestos is not hazardous to health?

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I know of a Member who could give some of the details, I think, and I mean my colleague because I understand he is from Sherbrooke. And in the Sherbrooke area, asbestos is most important. What I want to say is this: at a time asbestos was submitted to a lot more research than any other resource, product or commodity. We had an unbelievable volume of expertise on it and I do not think there is anything on the Canadian market that has been subjected to that many studies and analyses. Obviously, when a subject is as researched as this one has been, it is difficult not to find some failings. But what I am saying is the properties of asbestos have been identified as well as the effects of a non-regulated use, in other words, we know all about the parameters involved in the use of asbestos. And since we fully know about all the peculiarities of this natural resource, asbestos can now be used in a totally safe way.

Finally, I will say, Mr. Speaker, that dynamite, gasoline and a lot of products that are extremely more hazardous than asbestos are being regularly transported—we realized and accepted that those are essential products to the same extent as asbestos. Furthermore, asbestos has saved and is still saving hundreds of lives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is ended. Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to take this opportunity to thank my colleagues for their contributions, and especially my colleague for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). If there was any need for an example of involvement by Conservative Members, I think he has set it. The Hon. Member for Charlevoix has been an advocate of regions, and has been promoting his own region within that spirit of renewal that motivated all Quebecers and all Canadians in 1984. He has realized that it is not by handing out money to a region that it will become a dynamic region.

The work required now from those Members who want to respect the movement they set up, who want to respect the people is indeed to get involved, to work very hard and to motivate their community. The Hon. Member mentioned a current example in his area, a business which has decided to invest although it has no definite feelings that there will be government involvement.

That determination to invest is to be found also in the Charlevoix region; it is to be found throughout Quebec, throughout Canada.

Those who are monitoring the situation, and I do not mean the Government or any political party, but people who usually monitor the Canadian economy . . . we have had over these last few weeks the economic statements of the Royal Bank of Canada. If you take a close look, all indicators are positive. The average number of hours worked in manufacturing industry is growing, the house building industry is picking up and so on. The Royal Bank of Canada has good news; a real economic recovery is taking place in Quebec.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business talks as well about a steady growth in employment and capital investments for small businesses. It indicates that the capital gains exemption announced in the May budget has clearly brought about stronger investments. That is yet another analysis confirming that we are achieving our objectives and that better days lie ahead for the Canadian population.

The Canadian Economic Council is also optimistic. Canadians can well have faith in the economy of their country. There is indeed a recovery and this recovery will continue.

A moment ago, my colleague from Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) was mentioning among other things the regional unemployment situation. The Hon. Member from Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said that the unemployment rate had just gone up slightly. To better make his point, he stated that this rate is unacceptably high for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that anybody speaking about unemployment in this Chamber would always find the rate unacceptable. Any unemployment is wrong, and the Government's task in this regard is precisely to find remedies.

If you look abroad, you will see that the current OECD forecasts put Canada right behind Japan. I must say I feel very good being placed there by OECD in terms of economic growth. If that growth can be allowed to continue, Canadians will have a more stable and more balanced standard of living.

Cost of living increases are presently stabilised at around 3 or 4 per cent. Deficit for the first five months of the year is only $300 millions. Compared to last year, this is already an improvement.

All these improvements, and my friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) touched on that this morning, could in part be attributed to the spirit of cooperation. We have the will to succeed, but this will must be supported by a better understanding between the various levels of Government, general acceptance by the population and cooperation at all levels.

Within a year, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion supported 559 projects in Quebec which will generate some $648 million of investment. They will create 12,324 new jobs and help maintain 9,400 others. Naturally, there are problems in certain areas or certain industries. What we must avoid is tranferring the problems, that is to say solve the problem of an area at the expense of another. We have to be more dynamic, more innovative and we must find new solutions.

I heard a lot about federal-provincial agreements. They too mean money spent in Quebec, for the Quebec people. A moment ago, my friend, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (M. Hamelin), was talking about the benefits for his area of the forestry agreement.

There are also other agreements which will have an impact in Quebec in the areas of industrial and regional development, and tourism. These total over $450 million. If we look at industrial development, under the agreements already signed, $152 million have been committed, of which 50 per cent will come from the Federal Government. We have therefore put aside $77 million to help certain businesses in Quebec.

As concerns tourism, $32 million have been allocated. We could also add the amount of $45 million already allocated under federal-provincial agreements by the Government since its coming to power.

Under all regional and industrial development programs, $90 million were allocated between September 1984 and April 1985, and another amount of $22 million has been allocated since April.

The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe said earlier that we have done nothing for the textile industry. We should not forget that this Government is now working on a textile policy which will be proposed and developed in consultation with the industry, and that, this year, the Canadian Government has allocated an additional amount of $44.4 million to the textile industry through the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. In the textile, clothing and shoe industries, 234 projects have been approved which made it possible to create or preserve 1,730 jobs.

There is another program developed by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to increase the productivity of the defence equipment industry, under which $95 million were provided to Quebec manufacturers between September 1984 and April 1985, and $31 million since April.

We must not forget either that the Federal Government provided an amount of $10 million to help the Quebec Labour Federation create a small solidarity fund. Such contributions could be offered to similar organizations on the condition that they were created in accordance with provincial legislation. This is another contribution to the Quebec economy.

The Hon. Member, whose constituents probably go to the various financial institutions to ask for loans, should know that, this year, the Government has taken care of small businesses and, under the Small Businesses Loans Act, it has guaranteed 11,524 loans to small businesses for a total of $342 million.

The Federal Business Development Bank has granted 938 direct loans since September 1984, which represents an investment of $220 million.

Quebec businesses now owe $457 million to the FBDB. When we look at these figures, it is impossible not to realize that this Government wants to allow our businesses to become more dynamic. If the Government—During my own electoral campaign, I insisted on two major themes, which were also the two major concerns of the people in my constituency, in Quebec and throughout Canada, namely unemployment and the economy.

If there is one thing that my constituents understood, it is that it was impossible to lower unemployment and improve our social programs if we did not succeed in promoting economic recovery. What this Government and private businesses can do at the present time is to continue to work together. It seems easier to increase the deficit to stimulate the economy than to try to work with local businesses and people to have them take control of the situation and invest in the economy in our areas. I appreciated very much the comments of my colleague from Charlevoix because he seems to understand that it would take more than grants to get his area moving.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. B. Tardif) who seemed to have so well all the facts and figures. However, I would like to ask her how many businesses took advantage of capital gains? I would also like to know how she could say that those capital gains were invested when the legislation has not been passed yet? Could she tell me how many businesses invested and also what are the amounts involved?

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for this question. He knows perfectly well that when we talk about those provisions, it is with a view to encourage businesses to use them. The important thing right now is that our business community realize that they will benefit from investing in our economy.

If businesses understand the message that was sent to them, they will invest large amounts and in this regard, I consider what happened in the case of Charlevoix. The business community decided to use some other means rather than asking for Government grants or if they do, it will be as a surplus. They will first appeal to the population and the Canadian people are asked to invest in Canada as foreign people were asked when the legislation on Investment Canada was prepared; they were told that Canada was in business. I think the same principle applies. Many Canadians have yet to understand that it is in our interest to invest at home and that we will manage to improve our situation by investing in our businesses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) has the floor.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has not answered my question because in her statement, she did say at the outset that people who have made capital gains had re-investyed their money in this country. If the Hon. Member wants to check the "blues", she will see that she did say that capital gains were re-invested.

Therefore, I ask the question: How many businesses have re-invested these funds since the legislations has not been passed yet? Are you not deceiving people when you say that capital gains were re-invested? I think you are deceiving the Canadian people. I would like the Hon. Member to answer my question.

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, yes I will read the "blues" and if I said that, I did not mean to. What I wanted to say was that that provision has been worked out to help our businesses and also that I hope they will understand the message and use it.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I do agree with my colleague that some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) were very interesting and attractive. I want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, and this is the heart of the problem, that he did say on several occasions in his speech that if we could increase or intensify our will to control our affairs by making investments at the federal level, it would be ideal. What I want to know is what do you say to those who need this Government effort in the area of resources when, on the one hand you give billions of dollars to large corporations and on the other you tell them: "Listen, we do like the idea, the initiative, but, as you know, the country's financial situation does nos allow us to get involved in your investment?"

What can you tell them after having invested billions of dollars with the multinationals? As a sub-question, I understand that there is a footwear industry in my colleague's riding; what do you tell those workers? That you did not make the decision? What do you tell them, considering the simply disastrous impact of the present situation? And a final question, with your permission. My colleague has access to data that could certainly have been interesting to this House if she had told us what proportion of her Department's funds has been spent in Quebec as opposed to those spent elsewhere. It would have been interesting to have those figures.

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit I am not too sure about the meaning of first part of the question about the billions of dollars we could not promise the multinationals, but still I will try to answer as best as I can.

Obviously projects submitted cannot all be considered, for various reasons. Therefore some projects get our support while others do not, and my colleague should know that, as a rule, the preference will go to cases which will produce results, and we would rather not provide help when no jobs are created. So we will set priorities and respect them.

My colleague referred as well to the shoe industry. Mr. Speaker, I am quite interested in that file. I have been working on it for quite some time, perhaps even longer than my colleague. You may think that you have a major problem in Richmond-Wolfe, but I should point out that in Charlesbourg we have 1,000 jobs directly related to the shoe manufacturing industry. There is no easy answer to that problem, and I would suggest that a parliamentarian who has been here for many years should know that different viewpoints are expressed in the course of negotiations, that it does take a little time to reach a consensus. As my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) said, the shoe manufacturing industry should have an answer before the end of this month.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor and support the motion of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) who said something about the money spent by the Government to help the shoe industry. She said that she was concerned about the fact that thousands of people would be losing their job in the footwear industry, in his town, but she forgets to talk about the commitment that her leader made, on May 4th, 1984, when he promised to maintain import quotas. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said then: "A Conservative Government would not abolish the import quotas in the footwear and textile industries".

On Wednesday, the Conservative Leader, Mr. Brian Mulroney, pointed out to the newspaper La Tribune that the policy on quotas would remain the same, and he made clear that he was not in favour of free trade in these industries. He also added he did not intend to bow to the pressures that could be exercised by the Common Market on the United States in order to bring down the quotas on footwear and textile products in Canada. He said that he would not hesitate telling that to President Reagan, when he meets him in Washington, next month.

Mr. Speaker, they said that they intended to renew these import quotas at the end of the month. It was necessary to do it in September or October. Mr. Speaker, in September and October 2,000 may have been lost jobs in Quebec alone. Three hundred and twenty jobs were lost at the G.A. Corbeil Company, in Montreal. At the Empress Company, in Montreal, 100 workers lost their jobs. The companies Saint-George Shoe, in Saint-Georges de Beauce, Jean E. Blais, in Saint-Cézaire, Chaussures M.G., in Actonville, Boot Legger Incorporated, in Montreal, M. Lalonde, in Montreal, Popular Shoes, in Contrecœur, La Parisette, in Montreal and Gen Foot, in Contrecœur, laid off respectively 225, 110, 155, 375, 100, 147, 160 and 200 workers. In Grand Mère 100 jobs were lost.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not give its word, to maintain the import quotas on shoes, we could lose even more jobs, because Canadian retailers refuse to order shoes made in Canada, while waiting for the end of import quotas, this month.

[English]

I do not have very much time because I have to catch a plane, Mr. Speaker, but I want to make one more point in this connection. The public opinion on this point has been tested by a Decima poll which has shown that 44 per cent of Canadians consider imports are a serious threat to Canadian jobs and 66 per cent said that they would prefer to maintain quotas in order to protect jobs even if it means paying higher prices for footwear.

It is not enough to talk about all the great things the Government would like to do if it had more money or even about the things the Government may have done in subsidizing certain industries. The point is to renew the quotas on the importations of footwear, otherwise we stand to lose a whole industry in Canada of 20,000 jobs, as has been pointed out, half in Quebec and half in Ontario. That is the action that is needed and it is not a substitute for that to give certain subsidies or to promise certain grand programs for the future. If those companies give up because they are losing the Canadian market to countries that pay wages perhaps one-tenth of ours, then it will be too late to try to restore the industry by government subsidies. I would urge the Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) to consider this and to use her influence with the Government to have those quotas declared and restored immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. B. Tardif).

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to my hon. colleague. He spoke of course of job losses in the footwear industry and Government concerns in that regard.

I would like to remind him that there have been job losses before those of the last year. When we examine the decline of that industry over many years, we realize it is not a new problem.

There is however a question I asked several times last summer when I toured the country with a group of Members of Parliament to study the textile, clothing and footwear industries. At a dinner, I asked my table companions: How many of you are wearing Canadian-made shoes at the moment? I would like to ask my colleague the same question, and see how committee he is to Canadian industry. If Canadians do not make it their main concern to buy Canadian products, the problem will remain with us for a very long time.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I only wear shoes and clothes made in Canada.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know the Hon. Member has to catch a plane. Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House will allow me to raise another point before dealing with the motion proper.

Today, I should like to congratulate a former Member of the House who last Sunday was fortunate enough to be elected Mayor of the City of Verdun.

Mr. Raymond Savard was elected Mayor of the City of Verdun, and I take this opportunity to assure the new administration of my full support and cooperation for the next four years.

Mr. Speaker, I should like now to turn to the censure motion which the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has moved and where he condemns in part the Government for abandoning the people of Quebec by reneging on its commitments. As a Quebecer eager to defend the rights of my province and region, I can hardly accept that.

When he says that the Government has failed to develop new job potential in various communities, I point out that the Verdun-Saint-Paul riding which is not much industrialized has managed to create over 900 jobs last year. The Government has invested $1 million in my riding to create these jobs, and it would be very difficult to demonstrate that Canadians are unhappy or dissatified with the efforts their elected members have made in their respective ridings. It is a fact that many industries are faced with problems. But there is a whole new generation of politicians who have entered politics to improve the well-being of the people and provide them with better services, to make it possible for them to work at something they like and raise the living standards of their families, and I think they will achieve that in a not too distant future.

Admittedly the textile and footwear industries are in a very difficult position now. I have had the opportunity of travelling and meeting with many people who export their products in Canada. Here, we are told that we do not protect our industries; and yet, when we go to other countries where footwear and textiles are produced, we are simply told that our industries are overprotected, that the market is completely closed, that the exporters are not allowed to sell their products on the Canadian markets. One must understand that our textile and footwear industries are indeed in a very difficult position, where the markets are invaded by virtually all the countries of the world.

There is also the fact that these people have an expertise in various types of machinery, and they have the know-how; and I am confident, for the Montreal area for example, that very soon there will be an economic upturn, an upturn which will bring new industries and high technology. I believe that we must mention it, because all over the world, Canada has the reputation of being an unequalled producer of high technology. I am confident that very soon we will be able to retrain these people who will have lost their job; it is indeed true: in some industries, we will retrain the workers in other fields where we do have state of the art high technology on the international level.

We must also recognize that the new programs, the housing programs, will create many jobs. They will put to work many people. I will give again the example of my area, the riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul.

Last year, I managed to get more than 235 housing units that were subsidized by the federal Government. This meant that people were needed to build and improve and repair them. And when people say that we are not doing our best to reduce the tax burden on families, especially on low income families, and I am not saying that my riding is any poorer than another riding, but these are average people who work hard to succeed and who have worked hard to get what they have today. And now, thanks to these subsidies and the jobs we are providing, these people will be able to live a better life, have a roof over their heads and a home that can compare with homes anywhere in Canada, and all this at very reasonable cost.

These people can live comfortably, can live very well and can prove to themselves that they have the respect of all Canadians, that no one can tell them they are poor and they have to live in poverty, because that is just not true that some people want to be poor or think they are poor and will never get ahead. When I decided to go into politics, I had thought about it for a long time. Several years ago, I decided I wanted to get involved in politics and do something for the people around me, and I ran in the municipal election. I found this an extraordinary experience, because now I had a chance to meet people in their own homes, to see what their needs were and find out where they worked and what they did and what they had against the system. But I realized that at a given level, one cannot do more.

A new team was formed at that time, a team with an extraordinary leader, someone who believed in Canadians and who was prepared to give all Canadians a chance to succeed, to achieve their goals and stop being jealous of others.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave me a chance to become a member of this team when he said quite simply: "I am giving you a riding, but it is not an easy one." These people have been manipulated for years and years and told time and time again that with a Conservative Government, they would not get anywhere and would lose everything they had. However, at 30, and I was actually 29 at the time, all this was a challenge, and you do something because you believe in it. I really took the bull by the horns and I went to see these people who did not belong to my municipality at the time, they were living next door. These people had always been told: "Oh, we don't care about the people of Verdun because they are poor." Nobody was interested and nobody wanted to get involved. But today, I am proud to say the people of Verdun have understood.

Those people gave me a chance to go and meet them, speak to them, and stop telling them lies and telling them consistantly that everything was going to be taken away from them, that they were not going to be allowed to succeed, they were not going to be given a chance, because the Progressive Conservative Party was the Party of the rich. The last elections showed a participation by those people. The percentage of votes went up by 15 per cent from 60 per cent to 75 per cent. So there was indeed a dissatisfaction among them.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was wrong, I believe, when he said earlier that we no longer study La Fontaine's fables at school. I, for one, have been lucky and fortunate enough to have parents that allowed me to learn, to study and to travel. And what I have learned is what I want to give to the people of my constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul. Day after day, they come and see me. It is not true that they always come and ask for jobs, and tell me that they are unhappy, that things are not going well, that they pay to much tax, that their pension is about to be cut, that they are not satisfied with Bill C-70 on family allowances, and they do not want to have it. All that is not true.

Many express very hard views, but we let them speak. As you know, being a Member of Parliament today no longer means that you just work five days a week. It does not consist simply in attending functions and cutting ribbons. It means being in your office and meeting people who come and tell you about their everyday life, tell you about the difficulties in the plant where they make shoes; tell you that the Unions are sometimes much too harsh with the bosses or with themselves. You have to go and meet those people at home. You have to speak to them.

And when I see a Party like the New Democratic Party, to me, the New Democratic Party are socialists. How could we accept a socialist Government in a country like Canada? Canada is a country of free enterprise where everyone is allowed to succeed. And if someone is rich, it means that he has worked and has been successful, and has been involved in an environment, in a community. It should be clear that if I personally spend hours and hours working, I shall never ever accept overnight to give everything I have to people who don't want to do anything. An I am not afraid of saying that to anyone. When people come and see me at my office and tell me: "I am willing to work, but I want to work 35 hours a week with a salary of $40,000 a year", I ask them questions. For instance, I ask them: What is your educational background? What can you do? And frequently the same answers crop up. Eight year. They gave up and are frequently what we call dropouts. I am willing to help them, but not by taking money out of the taxpayers' pockets. It would be most unfortunate for the people of Canada and mostly for that particular individual, because I fail to see what interest there would be for that individual to live off the government.

The Conservative Party really had new ideas to offer and it proved it by bringing new Members to the House and when I say "new Members", I do not mean only young ones, from 27 to 35 years of age, but also new Members who are 50, 60 or 65, as well as socially involved women, not only the feminist type who have a grudge against males, but also women who are willing to work in the community, for the prosperity of their constituents and neighbours. Our Prime Minister gave us that opportunity.

Now, they try to tell us that we are not keeping our promises in Quebec when we work late every night, seven days a week. The NDP Members are not the only ones to work late at night. We do too every day, seven days a week, in order to give our constituents the service they are entitled to receive and that they did not get for a number of years.

How is it that everywhere we go people keep asking us: How come you are not treated as a VIP? You are the Hon. Member of Parliament and you should be seated at the table of honour and be asked to make a nice speech about all of the Government's achievements. In fact, most Conservative Members go to see the people, sit with them and discuss their problems. We listen. We are not members of Cabinet. It is very difficult to change decisions once they are made, but at least there are Ministers who listen and give us a chance to say what we have to say. However we do not give them our personal views but those of thousands of Canadian men and women.

If sometimes we reverse a decision like the one on the deindexation of pensions, it is not because we fear the electorate. On the contrary, I think that our Prime Minister is too smart to waste his time on polls. It is because each and every one of us went in our constituencies to talk to our senior citizens, who told us that they were against it for numerous reasons. We had the opportunity to express those reasons to the Cabinet, to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and the decision was made there, at a time when every Hon. Member had the opportunity to express his views. This is democracy. This is what I call enabling people to make progress ina country all of us can be proud of.

Could some people say that they are not proud to live in Canada? How many of us have travelled all over the world to see poverty in other countries? We say that there are no jobs here: have you been in France, have you seen what the socialist party has done in France? I have a personal example. My family has been in business for years, for more than 40 years, and we deal with a French company which had been in business for 130 years. Because of the socialist government, because of unions which really twisted its arms and prevented it from working, that company will close its doors and lay off 250 workers this year. Strangely enough, people here want a socialist Government thinking that the Government will give everything, whereas we have blatant examples in various countries. For us in Quebec it is easier to find examples in France, because we are much better informed on France, particularly because of the language. Do not deceive our people, the Canadian people, in believing that your ideas are better. Tell them the truth, tell them that Canada is the ideal country, the place where young or old people, where any one who has an idea can succeed if he wants to work. There is no free lunch.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is not trying to do to his leader what the Liberals have been trying to do to theirs since September 4.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

• (1710)

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, in closing the debate on this motion today we have to be aware that this is a national Parliament. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has quite correctly and appropriately drawn our attention to a number of national problems and their adverse effects in the Province of Quebec such as the lack of effective job-creation programs. There is an inequitable tax system which causes low and middle-income families to pay more than their fair share of taxes in Canada, and difficulties and problems in certain industries or sectors such as the forest products industry. These are all national problems with serious effects in Quebec as well as in other provinces.

It does not matter to what extent the Government boasts about job-creation endeavours. As Members of Parliament we still have to face up to the fact that we have double-digit unemployment in Canada, much higher than in the United States. Everyone I think rejoiced rather cautiously when the unemployment rate in September dipped to 10.1 per cent. It has not been at that level for a long while. Everyone hoped that this was the beginning of a new trend, but when the figures came out today, as we begin to approach another long and probably cold winter, we see the unemployment rate is once again building upward. In October there was an increase of .2 per cent so we are back again to 10.3 per cent. Now there is concern that this may be a trend that is going to be with us for several months. It is most disturbing that in these figures there is an increase of .6 per cent, taking us to 8.5 per cent unemployment for young men in this country between the ages of 15 and 25. The unemployment rate among women in the same age category is also alarmingly high, nearly 14 per cent. In Quebec the unemployment rate is above the national average. It is nearly 12 per cent, compared to 10.3 per cent for the rest of the country. In Atlantic Canada we learned from questions in the House today that the situation is really in a state of crisis. Prince Edward Island in one month had an increase of 1.8 per cent in unemployment, taking that province over the 13 per cent point. New Brunswick had an increase of 1.5 per cent in a single month, increasing the rate of unemployment to 15 per cent. In Nova Scotia it is 13 per cent, and in Newfoundland it remains at almost 20 per cent.

I can well understand that a Government wants to boast about job creation and quote figures about the number of jobs created in a certain period of time. However, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was correct and apt when he stated this morning that he took no satisfaction at all from these statistics. I think all Members of Parliament share that feeling with him.

The United Church of Canada, Mr. Speaker, has a national working group on the economy and poverty. It met with a Liberal caucus task force last summer. It used some rather strong language in talking about the May 23 Budget. It referred to that Budget as being obscene.

Mr. Nickerson: You should have heard what they said about the MacEachen Budget.

Mr. Penner: The Budget the Hon. Member is bellowing about does not have any effect on Canadians today.

Mr. Nickerson: It sure does.

Mr. Penner: The Wilson Budget does have adverse effects. I do not know about the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) but I am living in the present. He wants to live in the past, that is his choice.

However, this working group condemned the Conservative Budget for one reason. It put the rich ahead of the poor and the unemployed. It gives tax breaks to the rich while at the same time it cuts services to the young. It cuts services to women and elderly and unemployed. Look at the figures that this working group provided for us. It pointed out that no matter how well we think we are doing in this country in our attempts to alleviate poverty, there is still one in five Canadians classified as poor. Some 75 per cent of this nation's wealth at the top end is held by 10 per cent of the people. At the bottom end 1 per cent of the wealth is held by 40 per cent of the people. Realizing that, one wonders how the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) could bring in the kind of Budget we heard on May 23.

In the same submission the Church told the caucus quite clearly that the situation is getting worse. I am among those Members of Parliament who feel a deep sense of concern about the size of our deficit. I am concerned about the growth in our national debt. However, at the same time, I cannot help but be aware that in 1945, at the end of World War II, on a per capita basis we had a higher deficit than we have today. Despite that we managed to live with it. Not only that, successive Liberal Governments were able to bring in a number of social programs which today are part of the very fabric of our society, programs which the Prime Minister during the election campaign described as a sacred trust. Social programs will not be part of the negotiations when we deal with the United States on a free trade agreement, said the Government.

Our focus today really ought not to be on reducing our social programs. That is not where the emphasis should be. That is not where we should be looking for better accountability and better use of scarce financial resources. We ought to be looking at the elimination of government mismanagement and waste. Cutting social programs at the very same time we introduce legislation in this House which will cost the taxpayers nearly $1 billion to pay unknown and uninsured depositors in two failed banks is extremely difficult for my constituents to comprehend. I cannot explain it to them and I share their perplexity. We do have an inequitable tax system in this country, as suggested by the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville. However, when you add together tax revenues lost on personal income which escapes taxation, to that of corporate write-offs, there is enough money there, about $31 billion, to cover our federal deficit.

I wanted to take some time to speak about the third item in today's Motion, namely problems with the forest industry. However, suffice it to say in the time remaining that the forest industry is in some difficulty at the present time. I am at somewhat of a loss to understand or appreciate exactly what the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) in this Government is doing. He promised last April that he was going to carry on extensive consultations with interested Canadians regarding the forest products industry. We have yet to hear from him. It is now November. What has he learned from these consultations? When can we except him to announce a national forest products strategy to help overcome some of the serious problems we are facing? There is the problem of protectionism in the U.S., especially with reference to softwood lumber; the instability of domestic and foreign markets; the need for an effective reforestation program. Like other Members of Parliament, we are wondering, debating, asking questions about the free trade agreement to be negotiated with the U.S. At present, Sir, we have free trade with the U.S. in lumber. There are many people wondering if any new comprehensive free trade agreement, while it may on the one hand remove the threat of congressional legislation which would have the effect of limiting lumber exports to the U.S., on the other hand are wondering if a free trade agreement is not also going to lead rather quickly to some kind of parity between our currencies. If that were to happen, and it probably will, along with the effect of declining interest rates, I suggest it will be far more serious for our lumber exports than any quotas imposed upon us would be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.16 o'clock, it is my duty to announce that pursuant to Section 2 of Standing Order 63, proceedings on the motion have expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4 this House stands adjourned until Monday, November 18, 1985, at 11 o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.16 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-62

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

She said: Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago on November 20, 1984, I tabled in this House the report of Judge Rosalie Abella on equality in employment. Very shortly after that, in fact within days, almost within hours, opposition Members were demanding and pleading that the Government give its response to the Abella royal commission report. That was a year ago. In March of 1985 I had the privilege and honour of presenting the Government's response in principle. At that time I promised that legislation would be introduced shortly. Still, the Opposition got up and demanded immediate action with regard to legislation. The Opposition said: "Bring it in within the next few days, within the next few weeks".

Sir, the legislation was presented on June 28 of this year. Along with it we presented a working paper which was designed to stimulate wide-ranging consultation and debate throughout the summer months. That, indeed, took place. Mr. Speaker, second reading debate on Bill C-62 has been under way since October 3. In other words, what I am explaining to the House is that this particular piece of legislation has been received, delivered, analysed, scrutinized and debated for the better part of a year. Thoughout all of that time there has been intense consultation with business, the target groups, unions, individuals and organizations right across the country. More consultation, more discussion and more debate will follow at committee stage. Therefore, it is time to move this Bill forward, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Members opposite have indeed made points and we have attempted to answer them. Then they made the same points over again. This circuitous discussion on equity, of course, is not new. This sort of thing has been going on for years and years until the Government has the courage to introduce this specific, practical, employment equity legislation.

I have listened to those who say that the legislation does not go far enough and I have listened to those who say that it goes much too far. It would be nice if one could please all of the people all of the time, but, Mr. Speaker, we live in a real world. The new legislation is a realistic effort to solve the employment problems that are faced by women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities.

First, this Bill seeks to attain what is attainable. It establishes a mandatory reporting requirement on larger firms under federal jurisdiction which employ 100 or more workers. That, in effect, will have impact on over one million Canadians. Second, in addition to the mandatory reporting requirement, the Bill makes effective use of existing enforcement agencies and resources. In fact, the Bill brings these agencies into operation for the first time in order to ensure compliance based on results. We do not need to create new enforcement bureaucracies when the Canadian Human Rights Commission already has the power to ensure that investigation and enforcement is carried out.

I may say that this approach is well in line with one of the options recommended by Judge Abella in her report. Under Model 4 of the enforcement mechanisms in her report Judge Abella suggests that the Canadian Human Rights Commission would be responsible for issuing employment equity guidelines, for collecting, reviewing and assessing data, for investigating and adjudicating disputes, and for contract compliance. Mr. Speaker, we are doing things very much in line with the proposals of Judge Abella. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is preparing equity guidelines and will offer consultative services to the firms involved. Similarly, we will ensure that data is collected and we will make it available to the Canadian Human Rights Commission as well as to individuals, groups and organizations across the country. The Canadian Human Rights Commission, in following up on this data, will handle the investigation and adjudication of disputes about employment equity, such as is recommended in the Judge Abella's Report. Section 32.3 of the Canadian Human Rights Act, legislation which is already in force, empowers the Canadian Human rights Commission to initiate complaints where reasonable grounds exist. The mandatory data collected as a result of Bill C-62 will provide the grounds for investigations.

The data that employers will be required to provide under the legislation will be specific and clear enough to ensure effective enforcement. No one will be able to cover up employment discrimination once this Bill goes into effect.

The Government will provide the Canadian Human Rights Commission with the resources necessary to conduct effective investigations. We believe that by using an existing agency rather than creating a new one, we save precious tax dollars and cut down on administrative overhead and overlapping responsibilities. More to the point, we use an agency which has already proven its worth and which has shown to the Canadian people that it can be effective in safeguarding equality and helping to eliminate discrimination in this country.

Contract compliance procedures are also in place. I might point out that these procedures do not require legislation but only the will of the Government to write into the contracts it has with business the requirements that will be necessary. It makes eminent sense to require enterprises that wish to do business with the federal Government to live up to employment equity standards. That has been done. We are doing that by requiring that all contracts for $200,000 or more be backed up by employment equity plans. Canada Employment and Immigration Commission officials will monitor these contracts and advise the contracting Minister about companies who do not live up to their commitments. The result of that may be that the companies will be barred from doing future business with the Government.

I believe that these enforcement and compliance measures will ensure that employers live up to the spirit and the intent of the new law. I would like more time to speak on this particular matter but I realize that my time is indeed limited. I believe that we have reason to be optimistic.

While the opposition Members have spent much time criticizing the legislation, they seem to agree that employment equity is an important and vital objective. Some members in the Opposition claim that it does not go far enough. However, I ask them what they did in previous years. This Government is the first to have the courage to take action in this field and implement new, strong legislation for employment equity. It is time to move this Bill forward. It is time to get on to the next step in this process. The people of this country want and need employment equity. We want to give it to them.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to preface my remarks this morning by indicating to the House that at the international conference held in New York some seven or eight days ago, the international reporting group indicated that the existing legislation, not Bill C-62, is among the most innovative and creative legislation in the western world dealing with women's problems.

As the Minister indicated earlier, there is no doubt that there were complaints about the record of the previous Liberal administration. I can assure the House that when I finish my remarks the Minister will understand that I believe certain portions of this Bill are not strong enough. However, when one examines the previous Government's commitment to the enhancement of the quality of the workplace and the payments related to it, I suggest one will find that the previous Government's record will stand on its own. Furthermore, that record is recognized by the international community.

The Minister is quite correct in saying that there will be representatives of various groups in our society who believe very strongly that Bill C-62 does not address the problems that were dealt with in the Abella Commission's Report to the Government of Canada. These groups which indicate that the Government's response to the Abella Report is far too meagre to be discussed this morning represent a majority of women in this country. These groups include the Canadian Labour Congress, the Urban Alliance on Race Relations and the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women. These groups represent a majority of women in this country.

These are the same groups which appeared before the Abella Commission. They represent women, disabled people and members of visible minorities in this country. They stated that there is a need for mandatory affirmative action programs to overcome the inequalities that women experience in the Canadian labour force. They said: "Those mandatory affirmative action programs must be backed up by strong and effective enforcement procedures if we are to see progress toward equality".

Therefore, one of their first criticisms of Bill C-62 is that the Government has not opted for mandatory affirmative action programs.

A second concern is the monitoring process. The Minister indicates that she believes that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has had an excellent track record and should not be concerned about its ability to ensure that the intent of the legislation will be enforced. However, the Bill only requires employers to report the data on their workforce by sex, race and disability. Not only do we maintain a reporting relationship, I believe the Bill indicates that the Government will do little with these reports until 1988. There will be a three year delay while the Government reviews the reporting relationships from these various data bases before any action is taken.

It has been clear in past years that when a Government simply indicates it wants to have a reporting relationship rather than providing strong and effective legislation, it does nothing to address the immediate inequalities that exist in the workforce. Furthermore, while public reporting is useful and should continue, it is important that the Government act on that information once it has been collected. When one considers that there will be a three year delay in accumulating the reporting information, and when one considers the past record of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, I suggest it will be the year 2000 before we see the first test case before the Supreme Court.

The point made by these groups to the Abella Commission was that the purpose of affirmative action programs is to move away from the complaints system, to which I just alluded, which places the onus for change on the victims of discrimination. Instead, the onus should be placed where it properly belongs, that is, on the employment systems themselves. We are saying that the reporting stage is only the first step and the Bill should provide greater ability for the Government to respond to inequalities that exist in our workforce.

Before I go into the specifics of the Bill, let me refer to a statement made by the Canadian Labour Congress. It state that it has been possible to file complaints regarding failure to pay equal pay for work of equal value for almost 10 years now. But this complaint system has not been very effective in bringing pay equity to women. It is already law. As an example, federal sector employers should be required to provide equal pay for work of equal value in their establishments.

The Government's Bill today does not require this. The onus remains on women to make their employers obey the law. That is a serious flaw in the legislation, Mr. Speaker.

As I have indicated in moments past the complaint system itself has been far too slow and has not yet addressed the systemic discrimination that exists in the workforce toward women.

Let me indicate some other areas where we believe serious flaws exist in Bill C-62. First, Judge Abella herself recommended four alternative enforcement mechanisms to ensure that employment equity is implemented. The Government indicates that the Human Rights Commission, with no formal extension of its own mandate or of its funding, will both monitor and enforce the program. There again that is a very serious flaw. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the backlog in cases before the Canadian Human Rights Commission is sufficient now that there are serious doubts whether the CHRC can fulfil the kind of mandate that Bill C-62 will give it unless its funding mechanism and mandate are extended to deal with it effectively.

Second, the extension of employment equity to federally regulated business will exclude companies with fewer than 100 employees. In effect, what we are talking about is excluding roughly 82 per cent of companies that do business with the federal Government, which is the intent of Bill C-62. With only 18 per cent of companies required to enforce these regulations, I really do wonder about the commitment which the Conservative Government has to address the inequality that takes place now in the workforce with respect to women.

Let us now look at Government contracts for goods and services. I mentioned earlier that employment equity will only apply to those companies with more than 100 employees and to contracts over $200,000. In other words, it means that effectively you have eliminated the need for small business to adhere to the new regualations under Bill C-62.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has indicated on the floor of the House previously that the majority of jobs being created today, never mind the existing pattern, are created by small business.

Miss MacDonald: Mostly women.

Mr. Frith: Small business and mostly women. I believe 65 per cent of small business jobs are being created by women, but Bill C-62 will exclude the necessity of small business to adhere to the degree of qualification.

Although reporting by Crown corporations and the larger federally regulated businesses will be mandatory, monitoring by the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be done at random. The Minister has declined to define what, if any, power the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have to enforce employment equity. That is a very serious flaw in the legislation. I can only indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that others who follow me in this debate will point out the flaws that are inherent in Bill C-62. I hope the Government will use the committee structure to allow us to improve this Bill so that the working relationships of women in our society will be improved.

I will not stop without saying that I recall in the last Parliament the howls of outrage every time the previous Government brought in time allocation on its Bills. Yet this Government has done the same thing. I am astounded at the hypocrisy of the present Government, looking at its trade record, which only 16 months ago screamed with outrage every time allocation of time was moved.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on the time allocation Bill brought before the House by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

I want to oppose the motion brought before the House for many of the same reasons which the Minister herself used to oppose these motions when in Opposition. I can recall the Minister making statement after statement as an opposition Member saying that this represented a guillotine and did not give the House proper time to consider a particular Bill. I can quote speech after speech of hers. She has a very short memory. If she were on this side of the House she would resent being pushed around by the Prime Minister's Office and by the Government House Leader.

We have had only a few days of debate on Bill C-62 since it was brought before the House. We had a debate on October 3, October 21, on October 23, on October 30 and on October 31. That is five days, but in reality we had only four days. On October 30 only one speech was made. The second speaker moved adjournment of the House and the bells rang for the rest of the day. We have had four days of debate on this legislation. Is four days of debate long enough on an issue as important as employment equity for the women of Canada, for native people, for visible minorities and for the handicapped? The answer to that is no, it is not long enough.

Our Party has had 14 Members speak on this Bill, the Liberal Party has had a comparative number, and Conservative Party Members have not been anywhere near as involved.

To me it is passing strange that a Conservative Government that spoke in opposition about openness, consultation and national reconciliation would spend only four days on an issue as important as employment equity before bringing down the guillotine. It is not fair at all.

This is an important issue to women, to the visible minorities, to the native people and to the physically handicapped. We have to make sure that we have strong legislation to make sure these people have opportunities for employment equity. The program in the Minister's Bill is not adequate. She said we can accomplish these things through a voluntary method of affirmative action in Canada, but that is not the case.

Judge Abella in her report said that we need mandatory affirmative action. The Americans have been saying that for years. Let me read to the House a statement made by Judy Lichtman, Executive Director of the Women's Legal Defence Fund in Washington, D.C. At a conference the other day here in Canada she said that she was dubious about affirmative action programs that do not have fixed goals for employers. She said:

In our American experience, we got no compliance until there was an enforcement mechanism.

We do not have an enforcement mechanism in this Bill and that is what this debate is all about. Everything is voluntary. In the United States they do have such a mechanism. But until there was something mandatory in the U.S. there was no compliance. Miss Lichtman went on to say:

Under U.S. law, firms doing business with the federal Government cannot discriminate by gender and must meet deadlines and targets for hiring women.

In Canada, in this Bill, we do not have any targets, deadlines, objectives, goals or quotas in terms of affirmative action by companies from which the federal Government buys supplies and goods. Miss Lichtman went on to say:

A court can order companies with more than 15 employees to take affirmative action measures.

In this Bill the program applies only to companies that have over 100 employees that do business with the federal Government. In the United States, a much bigger country, the American can make companies with 15 employees or more comply. Why can we not do the same here with companies with 15 or more employees and make this rule mandatory? If that were the case, we would not be having this debate in the House of Commons. The Bill would have gone to committee after a couple of days for detailed study and analysis.

This is the fourth time we have had a time allocation motion in this House since September, that is four time allocation motions in the last two months. I am concerned about that as a parliamentarian. What was in the past an occasional practice is becoming a custom under the Conservative Government of Canada of bringing in time allocation time and time again. Before long this will become a custom and a convention. I do not think that is good for an open and free democratic parliamentary system.

Also, in the last while we have had rule changes. Now, compared with the past, we have 20-minute speeches with a 10-minute question period. After a certain amount of time expires, we are down to 10-minute speeches. There is less need to have a closure motion or a time allocation motion than there was in the past. I recall what members of the Conservative Party have been saying in the House in the last 15 years after the Liberals brought in time allocation motions after several days of debate. They said that it was the guillotine and that the House had not had enough time to deliberate. In those days we had longer speeches. We would go on for several weeks, such as in the case of the Crow debate, before time allocation was brought in. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would rise in the House as an opposition Member and talk about how horrible it was that democracy was being chocked or cut off.

One reason the Conservatives are losing popularity faster than any other Government in the history of Canada is that they have misled Canadians. They have not been honest with Canadians as to where they stand. They said one thing in Opposition; they do another thing in Government. We have another example of that today. While in opposition, they talked about full and fair debates, free-ranging debate and several days of debate. They would rise and be very angry at the Government for cutting off debate. However, once they are in Government, the table is turned; it is a different tale. I think that is why Canadians are becoming very dismayed by the Conservative Party which sits across the way. That is why we are seeing in the House what will become, in my opinion, a one-term Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I am getting some reaction from one-term Members sitting across the way. Perhaps they can rise in the House and tell us why, when their Party was in opposition, they made speech after speech saying that it was unfair to bring in time allocation, eight, nine, ten or twelve days of debate in the House, but today that very same Party, in government, brings in time allocation after only four days of debate. They say that it is because it is a new Government, a new caucus and new Members. Part of the reason they won so many seats is that they led Canadians to believe that they would be different.

Some Hon. Members: We are.

Mr. Nystrom: They are different. They are throttling democracy and freedom and speech in the House of Commons by bringing in time allocation. This is a one-term wonder which we see across the way. The Gallup poll and other polls are reflecting that.

The people who are the angriest with the Government across the way are the Conservative Premiers in western Canada who have to face their electorate in the next few months. Grant Devine is shaking in his boots because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his federal Conservative colleagues are pulling stunt after stunt, such as the one they are pulling today in the House of Commons. They won because they misled Canadians. When they were in opposition, they said one thing; now that they are in Government, they say exactly the opposite. If

It would be one thing to bring in a motion like this if they had been saying such things in opposition. However, it is another thing to say the opposite in opposition to what they are doing now that they are in Government. That has been the legacy of the Conservative Party in the last 14 months since they won the Government of Canada. That is why the people of the country are losing trust and confidence in the Government sitting across the way.

I appeal to Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, even those on the back-benches, to rise and speak their minds. They should not be pushed around by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). They should not be afraid of the Prime Minister of the country. He will not be there very long. There is a tradition in the Conservative Party that they gobble up their leaders every few years. They should not be afraid of him. They should stand up and be rugged individuals like they preached during the campaign. They should speak their minds and have the courage of their convictions. Then the people of the country will respect them for it. If not, we will see across the way a one-term Government and a small rump of Conservatives in the House come 1988 to 1989.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate, and thus bring the second reading stage to an end and refer the Bill to committee according to our normal procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak today, and not because I feel we are suppressing individual freedom of speech. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, we will have ample opportunity within the legislative committees to make our points and to indicate to the Government the amendments we would like to see in this legislation. There is certainly no shame in doing so, and I do not think we are to be criticized for following this procedure.

Mr. Speaker, I may point out that we previously considered a similar Bill in the House. The Bill went to the legislative committee, where we considered again the same motions that had been presented before the House, and I just realized now that when the Bill comes back to the House, we will again be considering the same motions that were presented in committee after first being presented in the House.

Members of the public listening to us this morning and on other occasions often say, and I think we should listen: There is a lot of repetition and a lot of redundancy.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate, because basically, our Bill is based on two concepts: trust and performance. We want, and our friends opposite have always wanted to have a system with public servants to run it. We will make a plan and develop it, and penalties will be provided.

Canadians must be told how to achieve legitimate objectives that are set by a government, whatever its political affiliation. Our friends opposite always thought: Not only are we going to give you a plan, we have an objective and we gave you a plan. That is how things were, Mr. Speaker, because we were not working according to a Government plan and that is how people were kept in a state of inferiority.

Mr. Speaker, this must be true because when our friends opposite talk about women in the House, they are always talking about them in connection with their place in society, with family allowances and pension plans. They are kept in a state of inferiority and they are not given the information they should be given, and that is the kind of role our friends opposite have made women play. We want to do better than that.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to set objectives, and we are going to start by cleaning our own backyard. We are going to set general objectives, and then we are going to compare performances from year to year. And that is what we are going to measure. We are not going to measure a plan set up by a public servant. We are going to measure performance.

Mr. Speaker, we must stop telling Canadians: This is what we want. We must tell them: Here is the recipe for achieving what we want to achieve.

Mr. Speaker, the other day I was listening to the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) when he said: There was one important measure in the Budget, and that was the rebate on . . . that is to say, Canadians would not be paying taxes on profits, on capital gains over four or five years. But he said: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, Canadians were not told how to spend the money they would save in the process, and these people are going to invest that money elsewhere.

That shows the difference between our two parties, Mr. Speaker. The party opposite would have said: We are granting a tax rebate on capital gains, but we are also going to tell you what you have to do with the money. This Government is saying: Here is a tax rebate, and we think Canadians are smart and clever enough to know what to do with the money they will save. That is the difference in our philosophies.

Mr. Speaker, it takes a plan based on performance, not a plan set up and run by public servants. That is the essential thing: a plan based on confidence in the public. Instead of being a public servant run plan, it will consist of a public plan and reports that will be tabled in Parliament. We are hearing reactions from the various associations, and that is how it should be. We are now hearing from these various associations across Canada. Some support the Government's action and others do not criticize it except to say it does not go far enough. But even with this legislation which, according to the Opposition, does not go far enough, we are going much further than you ever did in the last fifteen years.

Mr. Speaker, these organizations will be able to have input in a Government plan and in an office or a commission, and they would not have had that right before, while today, the plan is public, it will be released to the public, and even the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be able to intervene legally as required in certain cases. Not only it will be able to do so, but it will also have to hear individuals or pressure groups which will want to be heard on the matter.

Mr. Speaker, this is the thrust of this Bill. We are ready to discuss it in legislative committee. We are ready to hear once again the views of the Opposition. However, we have to say that this is a constructive measure. The legislation now in effect is the first step. The usual criticism is that it does not apply to all businesses. Mr. Speaker, firstly, we begin by cleaning our own house. Secondly, we proceed by groups or targets and on the basis of performances. The eligible groups will be in a position to resort to self-scrutiny and self-control because discrimination is not a legal issue. First and foremost, it is a matter of attitude and openness. And Canadians, both men and women, have made some progress since then.

Mr. Speaker, I spent a week in a riding where I visited an Indian reserve. Its leaders are telling the Government that it is urgent to act as far as employment equity is concerned.

All this, Mr. Speaker, still is a matter of confidence and I mean confidence at the level of Canadian businesses and businessmen and not confidence in the plan put forward by the Government. Confidence in businesses on the basis of their performances from one year to another. This is the basic issue. This is the reason why I am pleased to support this Bill and to say: We will now go to the legislative committee to consider and further discuss the subject matter of Bill C-62.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like Canadians to understand the Government's initiative which rests on action—not a voluntary one—aimed at drawing a logical plan for each business. In that respect, the voluntary aspect will not allow the company to choose the direction of its plan, because the direction or the target have already been chosen. As far as means and performances are concerned, year after year, Canadians are mature enough to review them without necessarily relying on a Government plan providing all criteria.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased—and sad—to take the floor on this Bill dealing with an issue which I think should have been given a lot more attention.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that for the first time women, disabled persons and native people are quite justified to feel that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has let them down.

Mr. Speaker, not only is the Government promoting a Bill which reflects the approach of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government—a hypocritical approach—but at best this is a half-baked measure like all the others. Hon. Members need only recall the deindexation of old age security pensions, the deindexation of family allowances and the 10 per cent tax on sick Canadians. And now we are considering this feeble attempt at a Bill, when for years on end women, disabled persons and native people have been fighting to gain full recognition in terms of employment equity. This Government can only come up with second-class measures.

Mr. Speaker, we Canadians now have laws for second-class women, laws for second-class disabled persons, and laws for second-class native people. Any women lucky enough to get a job with a company having more than 100 employees soon finds out that she rates minimal protection, what we might call token protection.

But if she happens to be one of fewer than 100 employees she does not have any protection at all. That, Mr. Speaker, tells us all about our Prime Minister. The Hon. Member who just resumed his seat, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon), could only keep repeating that it is a matter of confidence, Mr. Speaker. Obviously he got up too early to read this morning's newspapers, otherwise he would know that the latest Gallup poll indicates that 52 per cent of Canadians no longer have confidence in this Government, 52 per cent of them disagree with Government policies after only one year since it came into office. Worse still, Mr. Speaker, most people do not even know what this Bill is all about, so you can imagine how they will react when they do find out what the Government has in store for them!

I have to say that the women who successfully ran under the Conservative Party banner are nobodies! Mr. Speaker, the Coalition des femmes du Québec met with Quebec women Conservative MPs only to be told that they did not want to be associated with the case of women. That is not what they had promised, Mr. Speaker. Is there one Hon. Member who will try to have me believe that women will be protected if they get jobs with companies having more than 100 employees? Most women who work as waitresses in the restaurant industry will not be protected under this measure, Mr. Speaker. This is where they are being exploited, Mr. Speaker, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) would rather bury her head in the sand like an ostrich and heed the advice of the Minister of Finance instead of standing on her own two feet and advocating the kind of Bill she personally favours. If the Tories keep this up, Mr. Speaker, 75 and even 80 per cent of Canadians—not only 52 per cent—will turn against this Government.

Is it acceptable that, in 1985, human beings elected to represent their fellow citizens introduce a Bill for the purpose of granting a minimum protection based on the status or corporation, Mr. Speaker? It reminds me of the Government's Bill concerning the spouse allowance for widows and widowers. Half measures all, Mr. Speaker. If you are single, you are not entitled to it; if you are separated, you are not entitled to it. They create classes of citizens. They have just the Prime Minister's image, just a clean-cut guy with a nice slogan, very nice on the surface but without substance, Mr. Speaker.

When I think of the promises that were made by this Government, I recall the debate which Canadian women had organized during the election campaign; how great our dear Prime Minister looked, with such an open-mindedness and so many firm promises. I can understand that Conservative Members are anxious to limit the length of the debate, for they are ashamed to see what the Government is proposing now compared to what it had promised; I can understand that Conservative women are ashamed and dare not rise to deal with this issue. I can understand that, because if I were they, I should be ashamed too to defend this Bill, in view of all the promises their Party had made to the Canadian people.

What will be the end result of this Bill, Mr. Speaker? From now on, companies willing to do so will submit a report to the Government, and a bunch of civil servants will compile the relevant data. On the proper forms, company so and so will state: I have over 100 employees. Last year, I had not a single woman on my staff. This year, I have one. She could be either a caretaker or a telephone operator. All other companies will do likewise. This will amount to a lot of paperwork which will have to be processed, and in three years the Government will table in the House a report dealing with this issue. It is a joke, Mr. Speaker, and a bad one at that. It is worse than if the Government had done nothing. When one does not know what to do, instead of coming up with half-measures, one had better wait. Your party had agreed to consult the various groups and to govern together with the people. Although the various groups are against this Bill, the Government is bent on having it adopted. Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind you of the conference held here, in Ottawa, and during which the Prime Minister acted as presiding MC and where it cost us $1,000 a minute to see Brian Mulroney's face on.

All participants were in favour of equality for women and the handicapped; yet, the Minister of Employment and Immigration had the gall today to introduce a Bill, or rather to try to stifle the Opposition by moving closure. If I were she, I should be quite embarrassed. At the time she was sitting on the Opposition side, she used to fight for women and worked very hard to improve their lot. Now that she is making $40,000 more, Mr. Speaker, she is keeping her mouth shut. She introduces half-measures. That is outrageous. That is a shame. She has lost her credibility. She was the last of the Cabinet Ministers who still had a minimum of social credibility.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the so-called Minister of social injustice, has lost all credibility. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cannot find anyone who will believe him. As for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), it is even worse: nobody can trust him any longer. The only Cabinet Minister with a measure of credibility was the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but she has lost it all today.

Not only is the Government not open to consultation, Mr. Speaker . . . The Parliamentary Secretary has already warned us that in committee he will listen to what the Opposition has to say, but he will change nothing . . . In committee, he will listen to the representations of the various groups, but he will change nothing. It is a fraud! The Government should be ashamed to ask Canadian people and groups to step forward and make representations, when it has already decided to have its own way. It is a shame, Mr. Speaker!

My friend the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) who has a lot of experience, reminds me that . . . It seems to me that these people should stand up. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) refused this past weekend to take part in a debate on family allowances. I understand that she was ashamed of her Government's actions, but I feel that people should stand up and be counted. People should defend their position, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask for guidance. As I read them, it is not allowed under the Standing Orders to refer to an Hon. Member as being present or not in this House, unless that Member is taking part in the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With due respect to the Hon. Member, I do not believe the Hon. Member has mentioned the presence of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) in his speech. I think he referred to possible debate, but I do not believe he referred to her presence as such in this House. If that were the case, the point raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau would be valid.

Mr. Malépart: As usual, Mr. Speaker. Her facts are all wrong.

I will therefore resume my comments, Mr. Speaker, as concerns the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), I would welcome her comments on that, I would like to hear her say sincerely, right in front of her constituents of both sexes, whether she wholeheartedly supports equality for women. Or would she rather say this to all those employees, to all the women in the constituencies of Gatineau, Brome-Missisquoi, the constituency of the Minister of Employment and Immigration: "Ladies, if you work in a plant that has more than 100 employees, there will be a small program. But if you happen to work for a company with less than 100 employees, we will not be looking after you".

Mrs. Mailly: This is more than you did!

Mr. Malépart: We will see how that goes. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration said: "Well now, we will check on that. People have every confidence in us". Yes, businessmen had such confidence in Brian Mulroney, the Prime Minister, that in the East End, companies are shutting down 52 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Government Members should say that 52 per cent of the people disagree with Government policy. And speaking of disagreement, they did not even know about this legislation because this is no legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I see I am running out of time, although Government Members are getting interested in my comments. A couple of them are waking up. They were asleep. I hope that my speech is not just waking them up, because waking them up is easy, but giving them at least some courage, the courage to defend the interests they were committed to during the last election.

The day after September 4, and I will conclude on this, I saw on television two or three ladies who are here now, Members in this House. They said: "We are going to be there, stirring up the whole thing, we will change all that". I see two of them smiling. But today, you can see they are stirring nothing, Mr. Speaker, They are on all fours, saying: Yes, dear Brian, yes, kiddy boy, do that—

Mr. Speaker, I pray the Hon. Member for Gatineau, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) to show some courage, to stand up and then people will be proud of you. But right now, people are ashamed of you. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by asking Government Members to amend this Bill, to provide protection for every woman, for every handicapped person, and for every native person, whatever the number of businesses, whatever the number of employees in the workplace.

[English]

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, there is a certain irony in the efforts of the opposition Members to delay the passage of Bill C-62 dealing with employment equity. This irony, I am sure, is not lost on the Canadians most in need of the positive measures put forward in this Bill, that is, native people, disabled people, members of visible minority groups, and the women of Canada's workforce. Canadian women in particular must find this whole exercise of nit-picking especially ironic. The two decades which have passed since women surged in record numbers into the workforce is a period distinguished by a singular lack of practical action on employment equity from various Liberal Government incarnations. Instead, what Canadians got was a lot of studies, commissions repeating the findings of other commissions, and a lot of high minded talk, all of it amounting to absolutely nothing in the way of pragmatic progress for women in the office and on the shop floor. Now that the real action on these longstanding concerns is dangerously imminent, the Opposition has once again resorted to type and we are faced with even more talk. This is not only unnecessary but, in the context of two decades of inequity buttressed by inaction, it is totally unconscionable.

Where women are concerned, employment inequity has been twofold, the inequity of opportunity to compete for certain positions and, within the positions they do occupy, inequity of salary—64 per cent of what men make for doing the same work, to be exact. As for inequity of opportunity, statistics show that despite the fact women now represent 41 per cent of the labour force and will reach 50 per cent by the end of the decade, only 4 per cent of senior managers and only 10 per cent of middle managers are women. Yet, in the face of this, we get weeks of stalling on innovative legislation that will require employers to integrate employment equity provisions in their long-range planning.

It should be stressed as well that the importance of the commitment expressed in Bill C-62, and the equity provisions of the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, go beyond redressing long standing and obvious injustices. As we progress by real and practical steps towards employment equity, there will also be a spinoff effect that will be felt throughout the Canadian economy and Canadian life. As a nation we can no longer afford to exclude any group if we are to revive economically speaking. Be it women, native people, the disabled or members of visible minorities, the growth of the economic dimension these groups represent will stimulate the growth of the economy as a whole. Through the employment and training programs of the Canadian jobs strategy, particularly the job entry program, women are finally being given a chance to realize their goals within the modern workforce. Through important measures like this Bill we will ensure that women will encounter fairness and flexibility on the job as they strive to reach those goals.

This Bill is not a band-aid measure established in isolation from other Government programs and the realities of the market-place. On the contrary, it is designed to complement other federal initiatives to foster equity of opportunity and salary for Canadian women. Quite simply, women and other target groups must be assured of fairness of choice and fairness of income. This precedent-setting legislation is a practical step toward that goal.

I suspect that it is this very practicality which has caused such earnest confusion among the opposition Members. Some say Bill C-62 goes too far and some say it does not go far enough. Perhaps the source of their discomfort is that Bill C-62 actually presumes to do something and to do it in a reasonable, flexible framework which makes its goals achievable. No wonder the Opposition is disoriented. Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, no more studies, studies, studies; no more bureaucratic blizzards of paper work dumped on unsuspecting business people; no more inflexible regulations which break down the instant they are applied to regional or individual circumstances? What Bill C-62 proceeds from is the almost revolutionary presumption that results are more important than rhetoric.

We are making a clear commitment to employment equity and we are asking Canadian companies to make that same commitment. That commitment is backed by tough enforcement and penalty measures through the Canadian Human Rights Commission, although we hope to receive a level of co-operation which will make these enforcement measures largely unnecessary. The Government will also require contractors who do more than $200,000 worth of business with the Government to implement employment equity. And where Bill C-62 or other employment measures are concerned, we put these requirements into a workable framework. At a time when the Canadian economy is finally struggling, with the help of the Conservative Government, to get its head above water, it benefits no one, particularly women and other target groups, to throw employers an anchor of unattainable, unilateral and over-complicated legislation. A balance must be struck if the goals of equity are to be achieved. Make no mistake, Bill C-62 means business where equity is concerned. This Government is committed to equality for all Canadians and we are proud to be the first to go beyond the rhetoric of equality by taking concrete steps.

Bill C-62 ensures action and results. It also assumes good will on the part of Canadians as its legislative context. The advance interest and enthusiasm of Canadian enterprises, including some small businesses which do not even come under the legislation, indicates without question that this course is the right one.

The enthusiasm of participants, combined with the urgency of the situation for working women and other target groups in the labour force, makes the ongoing argument of the Opposition all the more empty, especially when we consider its track record on this issue.

We have made a legislative commitment to employment equity and we have backed it by real money and by objectives which are both fair and attainable. It is a commitment which is built upon the co-operation and initiative of all concerned. The time for talk is over. The time for action is now. Because it is so imperative that we move this issue forward in the interests of Canadian women, I am pleased to move, seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau):

That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(A), the House continue to sit through the lunch hour this day for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those objecting to the motion will please rise.

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being 25 Members rising in objection the motion is adopted.

Motion (Mrs. Collins) agreed to.

Time Allocation

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the well practised rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) who eloquently defended what the Bill does not contain, that is, action. The Hon. Member said that the Bill means business. The Bill actually means that business has been heard far more clearly in its 80 per cent opposition to affirmative action than other voices. We have before us now a motion to limit debate on a little Bill that is such an inadequate response to so many of those voices. There has been the clear voice of the aboriginal peoples, of the disabled, of those with skins of a darker hue, and those of women. These voices have been recorded, reported, supported and ignored. These voices have told us that the most significant aspect of life is being able to have the same access to secure employment and decent salaries as everyone else in the country. These voices tell us that they ought to be able to house and clothe themselves and send their children to school on the basis of adequate income and access to jobs. It is an absolutely fundamental right of every person to have a job without regard to sex, skin colour, religion or anything else.

We have been told that it is no longer true that when members of minorities apply for jobs they are faced with a bigot who says: "Coloured people are not employed here". We have been told that complaints presented to the Human Rights Commission have become less and less effective as explicit discriminatory action no longer occurs with the frequency of the past. We have been told that systemic and institutional barriers to members of minorities and women for promotion must be attacked. I have indicated clearly how that must be done.

We do not have a Bill which in fact will implement affirmative action or employment equity. We have instead a Bill which says, "No more. We are going to count minorities and count them twice. We are going to find out which companies are naughty and which are nice". In this Bill there is a mechanism for ascertaining whether or not the statistics of employment of minorities, women and the disabled reflect the population in an area where they have equal access to jobs.

Affirmative action has a number of elements and everyone who has looked at the issue understands what those elements are. If we are going to have an adequate Bill, it should be directed at the entire federal sector and all government contractors. This Bill is limited in that regard. It says that affirmative action dictates that there should be a timetable. It says that affirmative action requires that there should be established goals and targets. The misunderstanding of that concept was clearly indicated by the Minister when she said that quotas become ceilings. That is the clue to the orientation of this Bill.

Affirmative action has been in existence for almost two decades on the North American continent. In places where affirmative action has been effectively implemented quotas have not been set. A quota is a nasty flag raised by those who oppose affirmative action. It elecits all types of negative responses. It is the bugbear of those who oppose affirmative action. The fact that the Minister herself refers to quotas in the context of affirmative action indicates the orientation of the Bill which is before us. As the previous speaker said, little is imposed upon business in the implementation of affirmative action. True affirmative action requires something more than counts; it requires targets, timetables and an enforcement mechanism. More important than anything else in order to be effective is the necessity for penalties. Affirmative action must be based on a plan or plans which are specific to the businesses involved in a situation which has to be addressed. That plan should also include employee or union involvement along with that of management and members from the designated groups. None of this is contained in the Bill before us. The Bill is a mockery—a mere sham—in response to the needs, concerns and actions requested by women, the disabled, natives and the visible minorities. It is no wonder that the Government is trying to impose a limitation on debate. What the Government is saying to those of us who sit on this side of the House who want to communicate the message that the designated groups would have us communicate is: "Shut up. We do not want to hear any more about it".

We have a little Bill which we intend to pass which ignores all of what has been said. We are purportedly leading the nation on a track of real progress in answer to discriminataion in employment. Yet, when we look south to the United States, which has a history of slavery and struggle in terms of the civil rights movement, a country to which we have compared ourselves and which we consider as being so much better in so many respects in terms of its treatment of women and minorities, we see affirmative action programs which are far more effective in the key areas. The Americans have requirements for timetables. They have targets and penalties which apply to all federally-regulated employers and all federal contracts.

The designated groups under this legislation have asked for contract compliance. Yet there is only limited contract compliance set out in the Bill. They have asked that the number of employees be reduced to 50, as it is in the United States. That has been denied. What we have before us is a betrayal of all of those whom this Bill purports to serve. It betrays the young native who says that violence and suicide is a common occurence on reservations where youth unemployment might be 100 per cent but is actually close to 90 per cent. There is a betrayal of the highly skilled female secretary who makes less than a janitor. It is a betrayal of the 70 per cent of black youth in Halifax who are struggling to find jobs. It is a betrayal of the disabled who were promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that their needs for employment equity would be looked into and that action would be taken.

No wonder the Government wants to shut us up. It does not want to hear the message. It wants to get through with the matter quickly so that, presumably, no one will notice the magnitude of the betrayal of the needs of so many of the people in the country. It is a shame that the Government does not want to listen. It refuses to hear what has already been said so many times. Perhaps it is a waste of time to continue the debate because for half a century the minorities have been asking for the type of action which affirmative action would provide in allowing them to have equal participation in our society. Maybe it is just as well that we be frank. The Government is not interested and it wants to cut off debate.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this important debate on Bill C-62 and on the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Women, the disabled and ethnic minorities have waited long enough for the type of practical and effective employment equity legislation which Bill C-62 represents. During debate on the Bill we have all heard of the frustrating statistics which demonstrate the need for employment equity legislation in the country. We have heard of discrimination in the workplace which visible minorities and the disabled experience almost every day. We have heard of the wage gap working women face simply because they are women. Above all, we have heard of the tremendous waste of human resource and talent that this type of discrimination wreaks on our country and upon our furture. The time to act is now. Further delay of the Bill will only delay equality in the workplace.

The question we on this side of the House are asking, is why would the Opposition want to delay legislation which will give millions of Canadians new hope and new opportunity? The country simply cannot wait. Why delay legislation which, for the first time, will give the Human Rights Commission the date and the resources it needs to further the cause of equality in the workplace? Why delay legislation which, for the first time, will compel hundreds of private firms which deal with the Government to implement workable employment equity? Above all, why delay legislation which will bring the country into the 21st century in terms of fairness and equality in the job market?

The Opposition would have us believe that the answer to employment equity lies in quotas and Government red tape. They simply do not understand that quotas are unworkable, unfair and unnecessary. A recent poll conducted by the American Enterprise Institute in the United States found that 77 per cent of blacks actually oppose quota-style affirmative action programs. Despite forced quotas, discrimination still exists in the U.S. because employers treat people as numbers and as fillers for Government forms. Our Government believes people should be judged on merit and capability.

Bill C-62 reaffirms our intention of encouraging a positive and progressive environment for employment equity in Canada. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration has said, employment equity is about opportunity, the opportunity for Canadians everywhere to earn a decent living and to participate fully in our society.

This past weekend the newly elected Leader of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party, the Hon. Larry Grossman, highlighted the importance of involving ethnic minorities more actively in the political and decision-making process. I share his sentiments. I applaud his commitment to equality opportunities when a new Progressive Conservative Government is returned to the great Province of Ontario.

• (1220)

Mrs. Browes: Bill C-62 represents an important turning point for Canadians. It signals that Canadian women are not going to be balkanized in clerical and service sector occupations. It signals that native people and visible minorities are not going to be denied opportunity because of the colour of their skin. Job discrimination, whether overt or unintentional, can no longer be condoned by a country that expects top performance in its industrial sector. Systemic, unintentional discrimination is inefficient and a waste of our human resources and impedes the natural flow of the free market. Mr. Claude Bruneau, President and Chairman of the Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada recently said, and I quote:

I see 50 per cent of the population becoming financially autonomous and scant attention has been paid by business.

He also said there was a great opportunity for women as business leaders. And this, I might add, would be of benefit to the whole country. This Government's vision of a fair and equitable labour market can truly serve the interests of all Canadians. Fairness and equity are more than mileposts for social justice. They also show that this society needs the participation and contribution of all our human resources if we are to be competitive.

We are taking a positive first step towards change, one which works with Canadians, not against them. By requiring the implementation of employment equity we are telling employers to take the time to examine the composition of their workforce. Are there barriers that block the entry of potentially good workers? Are these barriers truly necessary to the job? Does everyone have access to training? Who got promotions last year? Is there under-representation of women or native persons at the executive level, and if so, why?

Therefore, let me say that, in the interests of justice, prosperity, and basic human rights, this Parliament should pass Bill C-62 as quickly as possible and prove to Canadians our commitment to equality and social justice.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak once more about Bill C-62, which aims at promoting employment equity for women, visible minorities, the native people and the handicapped.

These objectives are quite valid and I support them wholeheartedly. However, I object to Bill C-62 as it now stands because it does not provide the mechanisms required to achieve the stated objectives of the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Like many pressure groups representing women and the three categories mentioned earlier and covered in Bill C-62, I believe that it is essential that legislation to promote employment equity include effective enforcement mechanisms, target dates and penalties.

Since the tabling of Bill C-62 in this House, the Committee on Equality Rights has tabled its report. Earlier, I heard my colleague say that Bill C-62 should have the support of all Opposition Members. However, I am somewhat surprised at what she said because she herself supported the report on employment equity which deals among other matters with Bill C-62.

It has been said that the Conservative Government wants to apply Bill C-62 to all companies having more than 100 employees, but not to the Government itself in its capacity as an employer. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the recommendations contained in the report of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights, of which my colleague was a member included recommendation No. 60, which states:

We recommend that employment equity legislation apply to all federal public sector employers and to employers under federal jurisdiction, with necessary adjustments being made by regulation for small businesses and agencies.

This was one of the recommendations of the Committee, but this Bill does not reflect these recommendations.

I also believe that the minorities should co-operate with employers and unions in developing employment programs. A great many groups representing women, the native people, the handicapped and visible minorities have deplored the lack of mechanisms to enforce employment equity programs. The Abella Report emphasized the importance of having an independent agency responsible for implementing employment equity programs. The report Equality for all also recommends that the legislation designed to guarantee employment equity contain implementation mechanisms through which the Canadian Human Rights Commission would develop special programs and have the financial and human resources it requires to do so. The members of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights also thought that the employment equity legislation should provide for a periodical review of special programs so that they might be adjusted or cancelled according to how the situation develops.

I am somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member described this Bill as sensational this morning, as there is a striking contrast between this legislation and the report she signed herself. Since employment equity concerns not only the labour force, as stated in the report of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights, but our whole social structure, the members of the Committee recommended a series of measures to help women, the handicapped, native people and visible minorities to achieve real equality. I therefore question the statements made by the Hon. Member earlier. Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Committee are important since the family responsibilities of women constitute real obstacles to their equality on the labour market. The same is true of the major financial costs which the handicapped must bear if they are to live a relatively normal life.

Realizing the importance of these factors in the daily life of Canadian men and women, the Committee also recommended that, in consultation with the provinces, the Federal Government urgently take measures to ensure that day-care services in Canada be available at affordable prices. The Committee on Equality Rights, of which my colleague was a member, also wants the Income Tax Act to be amended so that the handicapped can be entitled to deduct from their income the costs of special devices and services, including additional job-related transportation costs which are a direct result of their handicap.

This report is one of the best that this House has received, and the Hon. Member who extolled the merits of Bill C-62 this morning was among those who signed it. Once again, I am somewhat confused about this because, in view of this report, Mr. Speaker, I am in fact urging the Minister of Employment and Immigration to withdraw her Bill on employment equity and introduce legislation which will better reflect the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights. This report was accepted by the three political parties, I think it is a progressive report, and I believe that the Conservative Government should take advantage of the fact that it was a unanimous report to implement new guidelines. The Minister of Employment and Immigration told reporters last week that the women's movement should deal with basic issues and put less important matters aside. In my opinion, she now has a golden opportunity to introduce in Bill C-62 elements which groups representing women, visible minorities, the handicapped and the native people consider essential. This bears repeating: I think that the report on equality rights ranks among the best we ever had, so I am surprised that the Minister would not implement the recommendations made by the committee members concerning this Bill. I am still more surprised to see my colleague support a Bill which is lacking, when in fact she belongs to the sub-committee which presented a report on equality. I find that quite astonishing.

Regarding the Bill under consideration, we learned last July that the Government would only require from employers a statement that they endorse the principle of equal opportunities for men and women, nothing more for the time being. It falls far short of the Abella report recommendation. The report went as far as urging that the Canadian organization responsible for ensuring compliance with equality provisions related to employment in the federally regulated sector monitor as well compliance with private sector contractual obligations. Well, this Bill C-62 does not provide for any such commitment. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, the lack of enforcement mechanisms makes the Bill under study totally useless.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to refresh your memory concerning the reaction of some politically independent people and groups who are strongly opposed to Bill C-62. At a meeting organized last spring by the federal caucus of Conservative women of the Montreal region, UQAM labour sociologist Évelyne Tardy stated that toothless employment equality legislation would be useless.

I have received a great many telephone calls from groups of women concerned about the Conservative Government's lack of political will in the area of employment. On the other hand, I have received a great many phone calls from groups of women and other people supporting the report of the Sub-committee on Equality Rights. I should like, therefore, my hon. friend to come clean. As I listened to her, I had the clear impression that she had two different ways to approach this bill.

Of course, I am very disappointed today that the Government should impose closure on such an important bill as this. This demonstrates the Conservative Government's lack of understanding of and sensitivity for women issues. We are all aware that in Canada poverty is a fact of life for a great many women and that today, in 1985, 42 per cent of married women with children must go out to work. I do not think that a bill such as this will make it possible for Canadian women to achieve the place they deserve on the labour market. I am extremely disappointed and I want to make it quite clear again that I categorically oppose Bill C-62 in its present form.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, when I return to my riding of Niagara Falls on the weekends I am very pleased to discuss some of the federal issues which are before this House. One of the things that I am particularly proud and pleased to discuss are the provisions of Bill C-62, the employment equity Act. People like it. It appeals to their basic sense of fairness which, I think, characterizes Canadians.

When my constituents ask me about the progress of this Bill, I have to be fair about it. I tell them that the NDP and the Liberals are against it and are trying to hold it up, just as they are doing with several other pieces of legislation before this House. They argue that it does not go far enough, that it does not have enough enforcement to scare Canada's business community into action. They then issue their classic response: "Let's do nothing, let's forget about it and maybe the problem will go away on its own".

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, with that attitude. However, having observed the proceedings of the Thirty-third Parliament up to this point, I am not surprised by it. I believe it is that kind of closed-minded outlook that lies at the root of the need for this employment equity legislation. Canadians want strong, forceful legislation which appeals to positive rather than negative qualities. I think the Government has achieved this with Bill C-62, but the Opposition's response is just to keep talking about it and eventually forget about it. I think I know the reason for that. I think they are afraid that this legislation will be successful and, obviously, this is a risk which they would rather not take.

I will use a few minutes to explain why the Government's positive yet firm approach to employment equity is, in my opinion, the best way to proceed. I ask you to think about people who are handicapped, many of whom, up until a few years ago, faced a life of isolation and institutionalization. Many of these individuals are now out in the community ready and willing to work. However, they are faced with a 50 per cent unemployment rate. I think that is most unfortunate because these people can and want to work. They do not want to sit at home collecting unemployment insurance cheques or disability pensions. Many of them have valuable skills. Many of them could fit in well as professional individuals. Others have top rate clerical or semi-professional skills. These individuals wake up every morning into a world of "can't do". Those "can'ts" are inspired by social barriers and implied restrictions.

Physically handicapped individuals have a tough time going door-to-door. Many times they cannot physically get through the employer's door. This is one area in this particularly difficult problem where I think we have made progress. It has been encouraging for me to note in recent years that changes in building codes require all public buildings to provide access ramps and other facilities for the handicapped. Even if that individual can get through the door, Mr. Speaker, he must still overcome the invisible barriers of prejudice and fear. This is another unfortunate aspect of this problem. However, many times when I have spoken with employers who have hired physically handicapped people I have noticed, almost without exception, that their efforts have been rewarded. However, Mr. Speaker, that is not enough. Where prejudice and fear remain there will continue to be a tremendous waste of potential.

I believe that Bill C-62 will help to change this situation. No longer will employers be able to hide from the problem by denying its existence. They will now have to implement equity and demonstrate its implementation by reporting on the results. Now they will have to explain what they are doing about hiring disabled individuals as well as women, native people and members of visible minorities. However, I think it is important that the Government not lean over employers' shoulders and say that they must hire target groups whether or not they are qualified. There are no quotas here. Too often when quotas have been implemented they have represented a ceiling for the employment of minority groups. Rather, the data which employers must provide in their annual equity reports will provide a bench mark, a public comparison of employment equity performance. Consumers and Government agencies, for example, will know if a business is pulling its weight or is just sloughing off its responsibilities.

As Bill C-62 is aimed at larger businesses, often with a high public profile, a poor equity report is, at the very least, embarrassing. More important, the Human Rights Commission is now going to be able to look for evidence of discrimination and will be able to use its power to initiate investigations. No longer will reliance be placed solely on idividuals or groups to file complaints.

Why should only larger businesses with 100 or more employees be involved? Why rely on the Human Rights Commission to assess the report data and decide on enforcement under its human rights mandate? The answer is simple. Canadians hate bureaucracy, Mr. Speaker. I know that some of my friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties love bureaucracies, but I think most Canadians hate them. I hear some of my friends insisting that they probably invented bureaucracy. I am not going to quarrel with their interpretation of history.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, while adhering to the reporting requirement will cost larger firms less than $2 per employee, the administrative burden on smaller enterprises could be unreasonable and unworkable. Unlike my hon. friends beside me, we certainly do not want an army of equity police descending on Canada's employers. Nor do we want to spend more of our tax dollars on bureaucrats' salaries, when the money could be better used to create real jobs. Therefore, the message to the employers of this country is simple. Either clean up your act or we will be prepared to act further. Clean up your act and do it now.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has already indicated to the House that she will see to it that the Human Rights Commission will be provided with the additional resources to ensure that employment equity gets proper attention. Fortunately, the commission is already well equipped with administrative and staff resources to handle equity cases. It is a practical and efficient way to run the Government and meet the needs to target group members.

Let me conclude by making some basic observations. Our Government in the first in Canada's history to go beyond rhetoric and false promises. It goes beyong the bull-headed claims and stonewalling of the NDP and Liberals. It is the first Government to actually implement employment equity legislation.

It took courage to bring this Bill before Parliament. Many vested interests would prefer not to see it happen. My colleagues in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are part of those interests who do not want to see it happen. However, for the disabled individuals, women, native people and members of visible minority groups, this Bill offers hope and promise. That promise is extended to all Canadians who will be able to learn what these individuals can do.

I think Bill C-62 is a courageous and exciting piece of legislation. It is an historic place of legislation and it is time that it became the law of the land.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) stated that the approach of the Conservatives to matters like enforcement was to trust the business community to look after itself and respect the ideals set out by Parliament in legislation such as Bill C-62. I find that a particularly interesting comment coming from a Member from Niagara Falls. It should give the constituents of Niagara Falls cause for some concern not only about their present Member but about previous Members who obviously took that attitude about the industrial community which we now know has been responsible for the pollution of the Niagara River system and indeed of the Great Lakes for many years. What happened as a result of the trust that was placed in the business community with respect to their regard for the environment? At that time it was argued that those who wanted to enforce environmental regulations on those industries were people who had a passion for bureaucracy and did not take a proper attitude toward the business community which should have been trusted to do what was right. That kind of trusting attitude has been responsible for many of the problems that we now find with respect to the environment and many other issues.

People do not talk about enforcement because of a passion for bureaucracy. It is a realistic assessment of how businesses tend to operate in their own short-term self-interest. Very rarely do business do anything other than act in those interests.

Therefore, those of us who complain about the lack of enforcement mechanisms in this Bill are not arguing in favour of bureaucracy but that some kind of enforcement mechanism is necessary in order to achieve the goals that have been set out in this Bill. These mechanisms must be efficient and need not be bureaucratic in the pejorative sense of the word.

With respect to this debate, there is nothing like a closure debate to bring out the incredible hypocrisy and double standard which so often plagues the image of Parliament. The Liberals, now in opposition, complain about the horrible and undemocratic use of closure. They say that the Government does not want to hear debate. On the other hand, the Government is repeating what the Liberals used to say, that people who are against closure are against the Bill. The Member for Niagara Falls said that the Liberals and the NDP do not want advancement for women, native people and others affected by this Bill. It is the same routine over again except that the players have changed.

Mr. Edwards: You have stayed where you are.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, indeed. The Hon. Member says that we have not changed. That is true. I would not want to change from maintaining a critical attitude toward this kind of charade that happens every time there is a closure motion.

Eventually we must stop this charade and come to an agreement in the House about how to manage the time of the House and its legislative calendar. Anything would be an improvement to this charade that takes place every time there is a a closure motion before the House. Surely it does not increase the respect for the House of Commons held by those who pay attention to what goes on here. Therefore, I suggest that not only in this instance but in other areas of concern to the House, there should be careful study of how we manage our time.

One of the more pressing problems is how to manage our committee time. In that context, let me comment on the need for some time management in the functioning of legislative committees. I was a member of the committee which recommended the establishment of the legislative committee. As a member of that committee, I am concerned about the proliferation of legislative committees—

Mr. Mazankowski: You are responsible for it.

Mr. Blaikie: The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) says that I am responsible—

Mr. Mazankowski: Partly responsible.

Mr. Blaikie: It was an all-Party committee. I believe that some recommendations have not been implemented as we wanted. I am trying to clear that up. The Minister should listen, if he wants to see it work.

For instance, legislative committees have been established when we do not yet have the smaller standing committees that were recommended by the committee. The workload in proportion to the number of members involved in the committees is larger than the reform committee envisaged. Furthermore, there are many more legislative committees than we envisaged sitting at the same time. Perhaps we should have been more explicit in our report. We thought that common sense would dictate that there would be a limit on the amount of committees sitting at one time rather than having an endless number of legislative committees sitting at the same time. I believe this causes an unnecessary strain on the good concept of a legislative committee.

I realize that we are debating a closure motion, but behind every debate on closure is the larger question of the management of the time of the House of Commons. I believe we must develop a different attitude toward how we manage the time of the House and committees. We must find a solution to the strain being put on Members, individually and collectively as caucuses. We must also find a solution to the strain on reform as a result of the proliferation of legislation committees. In that respect, I hope the Government will allow a debate on its response to the committee's recommendations to take place in the House so that Members can be heard before an agreement on the next stage of reform takes place. I think it is very important that the House have an opportunity to debate those recommendations. I regret we have not yet seen that. I tried to ask the Government House Leader a question about it the other day, but I was ruled out of order.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, if we do not get that debate soon, I say to you, and through you to other Members, that I will move concurrence in the committee's report and then we will have debate if that is what it takes to get an opportunity for Members to comment on the final recommendations of the Reform Committee and the Government's response to the recommedations. That is what I will do if that is what it takes and I say quite openly that I used this opportunity to make a few points that I think needed to be made about the present state of affairs with respect to parliamentary reform and about the question of the management of our time in general.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the time has come to end the debate on second reading of Bill C-62, the legislation on employment equity, otherwise the public might start thinking that South Africa's philosophy has rubbed off on this Parliament.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, discriminatory measures, although usually not intentional, are preventing many members of target groups from enjoying the same advantages as other citizens with respect to recruitment, promotion and remuneration.

We must act to change this situation. We must take action to guarantee their rights: the rights of women, native peoples, the handicapped and members of minority groups. We must take action to ensure that women have equal access to jobs on the labour market.

We must take action for the benefit of native peoples, so that our position internationally with respect to various aboriginal peoples is not used against us and we are not made out to be hypocritical in the extreme.

We must act to help the handicapped, since during the International Year of the Handicapped, we recognized that they have the same rights and privileges as other citizens, and it is therefore essential to take appropriate action to guarantee those rights.

We must act to help members of visible minorities and ensure their full participation in the economic, social and cultural life of this country.

Mr. Speaker, it would therefore be in order to question the motives of some individuals and groups in criticizing this legislation. Some people claim that their hesitation in embracing the intent of this legislation is due to a lack of information, but this is hardly a convincing argument because of the abundant literature available on the subject.

I would like to add that that literature must be read with the requisite objectivity, because there will always be those whose minds are so narrow they will object to fundamental principles such as those that guide this Government.

Individuals or groups who object on economic grounds should be reminded that they are taking a very short view of the situation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the amount to be spent on setting up equity measures is only a drop in the bucket, if we consider the amounts we would have to invest in the future to remedy a situation caused by our neglect. How many billions of dollars will have to be spent on assistance for women, native peoples, the handicapped and members of visible minorities if we do not give them the opportunity to become active participants in this country's economy?

Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of those who are using dilatory tactics to reduce the impact of this legislation or to get rid of it altogether. They will have to take the responsibility for their actions. It is intolerable that in a society that calls itself civilized, we should doom a very large part of the population to being second-class citizens or ignore their rights altogether.

And there are those who will claim that we are doing this for purely political purposes. That is not so. We could indeed have delayed our response to the Abella Report recommendations, saving it as icing for a cake for the end of our mandate. Quite the opposite, we wasted no time reacting to the proposals in that report, we introduced a legislative measure, Bill C-62.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, their objections do not hold. What is needed now is that we get out of our lethargy, get rid of our prejudices and act. I referred earlier to South Africa. I will now have a few word on the historical situation of our southern neighbours. After the war in the middle of the 19th century, many generations had to come and go before they could take corrective measures against discrimination. Fortunately, this country did not have to go through that kind of war.

However, because of our peaceful nature and situation, we came to think this was paradise. Regretful as it may be, paradise this is not. We have been practicing various forms of discrimination, more often than not in an unconcious, unintentional way. Some will say they have nothing to do with it, not being at the root of these problems, and not supporting them in any way. But this is a social problem, Mr. Speaker, and we are all involved. Whether by our awareness or through our decisions, we can and must act.

We can act, Mr. Speaker, and we, as a Government, have decided to introduce a bill that will be the starting point of a major movement at the national level to fill gaps that have been plaguing this country for too long, and which we can no longer tolerate.

As I mentioned in my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, I feel the time has come to put an end to these discussions, otherwise we will be showing contempt for Canada's people and institutions.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the rules of the House preclude me from calling any Member in this House a hypocrite, but the rules do not preclude me from calling this Government a hypocritical Government. There is no question, and there is ample evidence for any Canadian to conclude, that this Government is hypocritical. The Conservative Government has mastered the art of hypocrisy.

We are debating a motion by the Government to limit debate with respect to Bill C-62 dealing with employment equity. When that Party was on this side of the House, time and time again it argued against closure. The Conservatives said it was undemocratic and that the Opposition should be given as much opportunity as possible within reason to debate a piece of legislation. They said it was wrong to cut debate and have the guillotine fall. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) when she was in Opposition spoke out very vigorously on that subject matter. Now the same Minister today has moved the motion to cut off debate to stifle any further debate on Bill C-62.

There comes a time when Parliament must have the authority to limit debate, because a Government has the mandate of the people. In order for the House to continue to operate efficiently, there comes a time when enough is enough and matters should proceed to the next logical step.

Concerning this legislation, which is one of the most important pieces of legislation that we have discussed this far, we note that debate has been limited to five days. One can hardly argue that the Opposition is obstructing the passage of this legislation. After five days of debate, the Government decides that it has had enough. That would lead one to question why. Why is the Government invoking closure in respect of this extremely important piece of legislation?

I will try to answer that question in the few precious moments I have to speak today. It appears obvious to me—and I think it is obvious to Canadians—that the Government is embarrassed by Bill C-62. It is embarrassed because it realizes that the Bill is seriously flawed. The Government is embarrassed because, even though the Bill is seriously flawed, there are a lot of Conservatives who disagree fundamentally with Bill C-62.

I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in 1982, at a policy convention of the Conservative Party of Canada, 75 per cent of the delegates felt that women were not entitled to special employment programs. That is where the Conservative Party is at when it comes to employment equity or employment fairness. That is where the Conservative Government is at when it comes to justice in the workplace. That is one of the reasons it is cutting off debate. The Conservatives are embarrassed about this piece of legislation. They know that the longer the debate lasts, the more embarrassed they will become.

The Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are now considering prorouging the House in December. They are considering adjourning the House for two months. Is that responsible action? Is that evidence of hypocrisy? I would submit that it is. Today they are telling us that there is other business which has to be attended to, important business facing the nation, and therefore we have to get this piece of legislation through the House of Commons. That is what they are telling us, yet they are considering adjourning the House for two months in order to give Conservative Members a holiday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: The Government is without direction. It is without vision. It is adrift. It knows not where it is going. It is bankrupt and has nothing further to do, so it is planning on adjourning the House for two months. Yet, it does not have the time to give this particular piece of legislation adequate consideration.

Canadians wonder about where the Government is at in respect of hypocrisy, sincerity and integrity. The last year has provided us with an abundance of evidence in respect of the integrity and credibility of the Government. During the last election campaign in the summer of 1984, the Conservatives conned the women of Canada, aboriginal groups and the disabled. They promised the people of Canada, including the visible minorities, that they would bring in effective legislation.

I note that my time is up. It is unfortunate, but it is the result of the motion which the Minister presented today. Had I had the opportunity, I would have continued to speak about the pitfalls and inadequacies of this particular piece of legislation. I cannot because you are about to cut me off, Mr. Speaker. That is closure.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.04 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 84 have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of this Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is the following one. Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that, in relation to Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and that 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment. It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Miss MacDonald), which was agreed to on the following division:

TOURISM

PROBLEM CREATED BY OVER TAXATION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Federal-Provincial Conference on Tourism will open tomorrow in Vancouver. A month ago, representatives of the tourist industry met to convey their concerns to the federal and provincial ministers. They raised on several occasions the issue of overtaxation. They insisted that government-levied taxes made the Canadian industry less and less competitive.

Mr. Robert DeGrâce, President of the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association, stated, and I quote:

[English]

At this conference, I have heard that cost is not a significant competitive factor. I want to tell you that it is, Mr. Minister. When are we going to look at the tax structures in Canada and their impact on the price of tourism services.

This testimony clearly demonstrates that the Conservative Government and the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta) are not paying attention to the serious problem the overtaxation is creating for our industry.

In Canada, for instance, gas costs 30 per cent more than in the United States and the Canadian Government is collecting on a bottle of alcohol three times as much taxes as its American counterpart.

That is the reason why the deficit of the tourist industry has increased by 5.1 per cent over the first six months of this year compared with last year. The industry feels that the Government did not get the message and I hope that the—

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ALLEGATIONS OF MISCONDUCT MADE BY FORMER OMBUDSMAN

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put on notice the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), and the Commissioner of the RCMP concerning the urgent necessity of a federal investigation into this weekend's allegations by the former Ombudsman of British Columbia. Dr. Karl Friedmann has publicly revealed that a B.C. cabinet Minister authorized Government employees in British Columbia to break and enter the warehouse of a company in B.C. and remove 16 tons of files. Dr. Friedmann states that he spent nine months fighting the chief law enforcement agency of the Province, the Ministry of the Attorney General, in his efforts to have criminal charges proceeded with. Dr. Friedmann was not successful.

Since this matter strikes to the very heart of the criminal justice system in Canada, I believe the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice, and the Commissioner of the RCMP have a moral and legal responsibility to uphold the laws of Canada to investigate, charge, and arrest all of those involved, including the Cabinet Minister who authorized these criminal activities.

I am confident that all Members of the House wish to see this matter brought before the courts. I challenge anyone who thinks otherwise to state that outside the Chamber today. The Criminal Code applies to all Canadians—including Cabinet Ministers.

SOUTH MORESBY—CONFRONTATION BETWEEN LOGGERS AND HAIDA INDIANS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, thousands of miles to the west a major confrontation has emerged between the loggers and native Indians of South Moresby, particularly on Lyell Island. This region contains several areas of high ecological and anthropological importance. As well, the forest industry there provides jobs, local services, and a way of life to many citizens of my home province. It is my view, and the view of many of my constituents, that the best land use is an intelligent, multi-use approach which will meet the needs of many, as opposed to a single use concept which will favour the few.

The economy of our province needs every job we can hang on to, and jobs are definitely at stake in the South Moresby issue. Everyone involved agrees on one thing—there is no opposition to the creation of some sort of wilderness area or park over the vast majority of these islands; but the same people who would object strongly to the flooding of a portion of B.C. farmland see no problem in removing a portion of the allowable cut which provides hundres of jobs.

The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has advocated civil disobedience on this issue. The provincial Leader of the New Democratic Party has said that he is ashamed to be a British Columbian. I am proud to be a British Columbian. Those who live and work in the shadow of the tall timber do not view trees as two-by-fours with twigs. They respect the ecological balance of the forest. They have a right to share in that resource with all British Columbians.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

RECENT CONCLUSION OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, today I would be pleased if all the Members of this House could demonstrate as I do how proud they are of belonging to a Government which once again has shown Canadians that it is willing to make this country rich in similarities and differences into a prosperous nation.

On November 8 last, our Government and the Quebec Government reached a historic agreement providing for the formal recognition of Quebec and its right to exercise its powers at the international level.

In September 1984, Canadians elected a Government which was to assure at the level of federal-provincial relations, a return to the full mutual respect of rights and aspirations. The theme of national reconciliation meant that our Government was ready to re-establish contact, to renew relations which had eroded with the passage of time and a Government clinging to power.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement is to some extent a peace treaty bringing to an end close to twenty years of flag swapping on the international scene and this thanks to the efforts made by this Government.

This agreement will hear witness in the coming years to an enlightened vision and a better understanding of the legitimate aspirations that make up the Canadian mosaic.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

EAST COAST—CALL FOR STATIONING OF HELICOPTERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the issue I raise today is not a partisan issue. It is one that I know every Member will support. The issue concerns saving the lives of those Canadians who make their living from the sea.

The Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger disaster was emphatic on the need for modern helicopters using the latest technology for search and rescue duties on the East Coast. In 1984 the Government decided that occasionally moving one helicopter from Gander to St. John's, Newfoundland, fulfilled its obligation to improve search and rescue techniques. That was not what the Royal Commission recommended. Far from it. The commission emphasized the need for full-time helicopter facilities to be established in St. John's, and that the search and rescue helicopters be the most modern available. It also strongly suggested that they be placed not only in St. John's but also in Halifax and near the Labrador sea when offshore drilling activity is taking place.

Even more disturbing to Members on both sides of this House is the Government's lack of public commitment to replace the Labrador/Voyageur helicopters, now in place for nearly 30 years, with more up-to-date equipment. Helicopters which are faster, have greater range, and a capability of flying in the different types of weather which bring about marine emergencies are available. Canadians who put their lives at risk in order to harness the resources of the sea deserve nothing less than the maximum protection available. Minutes means lives when there is an emergency at sea. NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

MEETING BETWEEN UNITED STATES PRESIDENT AND SOVIET UNION GENERAL SECRETARY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the leaders of the two most powerful nations on earth meet in Geneva. I am sure I speak for all of us in this House, indeed for all Canadians, in wishing them well. There has been no meeting at the summit for six years. These have been six years of increasing danger, tension, and rising public fears. We can only welcome without reservation this vitally important summit and urge a continuation of such meetings on a regular basis.

Both President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev have said that there is an urgent need both to prevent an arms race in space and end the arms race on earth. These must be Geneva's paramount goals. We have learned from a CBC poll that one-third of Canadians fear a nuclear war in the coming decade. Half of all Canadians recognize the nuclear arms race as the greatest threat to world peace and Canada's security.

Most Canadians have high hopes that this summit will improve superpower relations. These views are neither naive nor moralistic. They are opinions based on our history of active internationalism, problem solving, and opposition to nuclear proliferation. The Government of Canada should feel secure in the guarantee of public support for initiatives this country might take in easing tensions and ending the arms race. We do have a role in the sombre affairs of Geneva. It is our fate and our future that are at stake. Let us sincerely hope that the leaders will leave Geneva having taken a giant step back from the nuclear abyss.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

IMPROVED ECONOMIC STATISTICS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, it appears that both the public and private sector agree that the economic indicators continue to move in a very positive direction. I refer to two sets of statistics released last week, one from StasCan and one from the independently funded Conference Board of Canada.

• (1410)

The Conference Board's September survey shows that consumer confidence in Canada is up 20 per cent since March of this year. Significantly, one of the factors contributing to the rise in consumer confidence is the increase in the number of Canadians who expect jobs to increase in the next six months. Canadians will not go out and spend large sums of money on so-called luxury items if they are afraid of losing their jobs or that inflation will eat up their income. Confidence in the economy means that Canadians have confidence in the economic policies of the Government.

The StatsCan figures also prove that our Government's economic policies are working. Retail business in September was up 11 per cent over the same period in 1984. Inflation rates remain in the four per cent range, and unemployment continues to drop. Housing starts for October were up 49 per cent over October, 1984, while bankruptcies dropped 12 per cent. In my province of Saskatchewan 27 per cent more oil and gas wells were drilled in the past 10 months of this year than in the same period in 1984. Business investment intentions are 12 per cent higher than last year.

I could quote many more figures to prove what Canadians all know. The Government's economic policies are working. That is good news for all of us.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF LATVIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, on November 18, 1918, Latvia became an independent democratic nation. Latvia lost that treasured status in 1940 when the Soviet Union occupied this small Baltic country. Freedom has always been an important aspect of Latvian life. In the 1890s the first Latvians to arrive in Canada were refugees from Czarist Russia. In 1945 Latvians were fleeing the ravages of two occupiers, the Nazis and the Soviets. Both waves of immigrants from Latvia contributed to the growth and development of our country and both shared the common aspiration of living in a free country.

At times, Mr. Speaker, we take for granted the very special freedoms we enjoy as Canadians. It is through the historical experience of many nationalities which came to Canadian shores in search of safe haven that we can be reminded of our good fortune as Canadians.

November 18 is a special day of commemoration for Latvians in Canada. Let us join with them in marking this day as one of special significance for all who value freedom and the pursuit of liberty.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION ON THIRD SASKATCHEWAN TELEVISION NETWORK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the people of Saskatchewan have again been relegated to third class citizenship. They were the last to get CTV, the last to get cable services, and there is still no cable service, in rural Saskatchewan. Now their hope to have a third TV service, like the rest of Canada, is in jeopardy.

Aside from the dangerous precedent set by the Government catering to powerful Tory lobbyists and interfering in a CRTC licensing decision, there may be a serious breach of rights involved. Surely the Charter of Rights did not envisage this kind of political dictatorship, this kind of state intervention, this potential control of the mind. The Cabinet took a decision involving the rights of the people of Saskatchewan, involving the right of all of us to full freedom of speech and access to information.

The actions taken by Cabinet fly in the face of everything the Government said in its attempt to get Bill C-20 passed. The promise then, of course, was that there would be no interference in individual grants of licences when Cabinet addressed broad communications policy. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Government will now clearly see the implications of what has been done here and will rescind the order to the CRTC. Je l'espère au moins.

LOUIS RIEL

CONTRIBUTION TO ACCEPTANCE OF MANITOBA AS A PROVINCE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, 100 years ago last Saturday, November 16, Louis Riel was hanged at Regina after being convicted of high treason. Since then the merits of that hanging have been debated in the hallowed halls of universities, churches, and cultural centres across Canada. Over the past 100 years Riel has been retried thousands of times and has been pardoned as many times as he has been hanged. Many of my constituents in Selkirk-Interlake can trace their ancestry back to the Manitoba Metis settlements of the 1860s and 1870s.

Louis Riel had seen the need to form a provisional Government at Red River, and on February 10, 1870 was legally elected President of a council later called the Legislative Assembly of Assiniboia. Many of the inhabitants of the Red River area had envisaged a new province of Assiniboia entering into Confederation with Canada. Being closer to the action than was Sir John A. Macdonald, the Prime Minister at the time, Louis Riel and the Metis could see the reality of a nation stretching from sea to sea, while Macdonald could still only dream about it.

Riel's actions at Assiniboia in 1870 forced Canada to accept the Province of Manitoba into Confederation, probably much sooner than the Macdonald Government had wished. If we cannot call him a Father of Confederation then we should at least call him a great motivator for Manitoba to join Confederation. One hundred years ago he suffered—

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL PARK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment and, in his absence, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, under the circumstances, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

On South Moresby Island in the Queen Charlottes we have a priceless natural treasure which is being affected by indiscriminate logging. The Minister of the Environment has given an undertaking that his Government will move with the Province of British Columbia toward establishing a national park on South Moresby Island. Has his Government been in touch with the Government of British Columbia? Was it informed of the provincial Government's decision to allow the continuance of logging on Lyell Island? What position will the Prime Minister take in order to protect a priceless heritage?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Leader of the Opposition to repeat his question?

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not a supplementary. It is a repeat.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment concerning the decision of the provincial Government of British Columbia to allow the continuance of logging on Lyell Island, affecting the priceless heritage of primeval forest on South Moresby. Was the Minister of the Environment informed by the provincial Government of that decision? Has he been in touch with that Government What position does he intend to take on behalf of the people of Canada?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Leader of the Opposition and the House for being late.

I cannot recall having been advised in advance by the Government of British Columbia of its decision to allow logging on Lyell Island. I learned about it almost at the same time as everyone else.

In response to the other part of his question, I have said in the House, and outside the House, that the Government of Canada would be very predisposed toward pursuing with the Government of British Columbia every possible route—purchasing some of the timber rights of Western Forest Products Limited, for example—for the purpose of expediting the establishment of a national park in South Moresby and of bringing the unfortunate discord between the Haida Indians and that company to an end. However, the prior decision would have to be made by the Government of British Columbia because the land in question is British Columbia Crown land.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTEST PROVINCE'S ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while recognizing the interests of the province over that land and the forest management licences that are attached to that land, would the Minister not reflect what I believe is the opinion of a vast majority of people in this country, that while indiscriminate logging proceeds on South Moresby we are losing a priceless treasure in a primeval forest that can never be replaced, and on behalf of this Parliament protest to the Government of British Columbia about this unilateral action?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the position of the Government of Canada on the subject is at all unclear. We have said that we favour the establishment of a national park in South Moresby. There is some question as to whether the entire island area should be included in such a park or whether some part of the island area should be so designated. In any event, let it be clear that we are in favour of the establishment of a national park.

We have tried to use every possible moral suasion on the Government of British Columbia for that purpose. However, the decision rests first and foremost with the Government of British Columbia. I do not believe the Right Hon. gentleman or anyone else in the House would wish us to act unilaterally. Nor could we.

INTERESTS OF HAIDA INDIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister is not talking as tough as he did when he was out in Banff. Nor is he talking as tough as he did when he visited the islands.

● (1420)

I want to put a further question to the Minister. He recognizes that the Queen Charlottes are the ancestral home of the Haida people. He knows that the Haida people are now outraged at the fact that these lands are being despoiled by indiscriminate logging.

While I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there can be an accommodation made with the logging industry, will the Minister consult with his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and assure the House that the interests of the Haida people are being actively considered and, so far as this jurisdiction is concerned, will be paramount in those negotiations?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not as interested in toughness as I am in effectiveness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: I operate on the assumption that all Parties concerned share an element of good will. There does seem to be a broadly based consensus that there should be some sort of park, whether national or provincial. That is my over-all objective and I am just as committed to it now as I was in Banff and when I visited South Moresby some weeks ago. In connection with that goal, Mr. Speaker, I did meet with Miles Richardson and his band council representing the Haida people, and gave to him and to his people, on behalf of my Department and the Government of Canada, a firm commitment to take their interests fully into account.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION ON THIRD SASKATCHEWAN TELEVISION NETWORK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in Canadian history the Cabinet has set a very dangerous precedent in overturning a well researched and carefully considered decision by the CRTC on the establishment of a third television channel for Saskatchewan.

My question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the television, broadcasting, and radio people if he plans that Cabinet handle all their demands for licence renewal when they know now that they no longer have to accept a decision by an independent CRTC?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, concerning the decision to ask the CRTC to reconsider a number of contents, I would point out to the Hon. Member that it was done at the unanimous request of all Saskatchewan residents, and particularly of all Members of Parliament from that province. We thought that, given the request and certain inaccuracies in CRTC market surveys and a number of other considerations, it would be wiser to . . . I would remind the Hon. Member that the main purpose is to seek additional information, not to reconsider the ruling. Under the circumstances, I think that province-wide representations did warrant our request for additional information.

INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO CABINET

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I find it regrettable that the Prime Minister cannot answer for his own cabinet decisions.

An Hon. Member: He is still in Florida.

Mrs. Finestone: As the Acting Minister of Communications stated not very long ago, Cabinet is only going to set major policy directives and is not going to interfere in individual licensing, and I refresh his memory in that regard, I find it rather curious that members of the Cabinet are in a position to do—

An Hon. Member: Question.

An Hon. Member: That is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. Finestone: My question to the Acting Minister then is this. What new information did the Cabinet receive that was not available to the CRTC, that independent licensing body, that made it change its mind?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member, but she misunderstood me. I said we had asked the CRTC to look into some of the provisions of the license they issued. That being so, I repeat that seeking more information on the issuance of a license does not constitute a challenge on the issuance per se nor a request for a ruling review. That is all.

As Minister and Member of Parliament I have to make the necessary inquiries, and I fail to see in that a breach of the law on the independence of public boards.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS TITLE CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and, I believe, only he can answer it. As the Prime Minister is fully aware, the Government of Canada has accepted for legal negotiation the claim for aboriginal title to the Queen Charlotte Islands by the Haida people. I am sure he is aware that in recent days an extremely grave situation is evolving there. In the interest of bringing peace to a confrontation which presently has no solution, will the Prime Minister make use of his good offices today to open negotiations with the Haida people on their claim?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a possibility, at least, of interpreting the question to mean that there have not been negotiations between the Government of Canada and the Haida people. That is distinctly not the case. I myself met with the Haida Indians for almost half a day. I tourned the South Moresby area for a full day, with some Haida people present. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs, has been out to the Queen Charlotte Islands for the same purpose. We will continue to work with Miles Richardson and his people in a spirit of openness and commitment to resolve the problem.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is really crucial. The Government of Canada has accepted the legal documents of the Council of the Haida Nation for negotiation. They are with the Government, and the Government has the power to open negotiations with the Haida people. A grave situation is occurring on Lyell Island. It is a confrontation which is very dangerous. I plead with the Prime Minister to offer, today in the House, a signal to British Columbia that he is prepared to open those negotiations. It would be simply the to open those negotiations. The Haida people plead for that. All the people of the country plead with the Prime Minister to start that today.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when I met with the Haida people I put to them the possibility that the Ellesmere Island formula be followed in connection with South Moresby—the establishment of a national park reserve which might involved setting aside, for the moment, some of the outstanding questions that the Haida people have raised with the Government of Canada, as a means of getting on with the establishment of a national park in South Moresby. All the while the federal Government would pursue the commitment to honour the interests of the Haida people, with every possible consideration being given to acting in favour of them.

NEGOTIATION OF LEGAL TITLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I go to the Prime Minister again. This is a very serious situation. The Premier of British Columbia is saying that there are no aboriginal rights in British Columbia. It is in the Constitution. The Premier of British Columbia signed that document. There is an absolute stalemate between the Supreme Court of B.C. and the Lyell Island issue. I plead with the Prime Minister. Will he rise in the Chamber today, as I think he must as the Prime Minister, and offer to open negotiations on the legal aboriginal title of the Haida people the Queen Charlotte Islands?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on.

Mr. Waddell: All you care about is Quebec, Brian.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Waddell: It is only Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think Hon. Members know that some language should not be used in this Chamber.

Mr. Waddell: What?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you noticed, as have other Members of the House, that the third question was exactly the same as the second, and that the second was exactly the same as the first. I have said that the Government of Canada has been negotiating with the Haida people. I, myself, have met with them. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs, has met with them, and we intend to meet with them again. Those negotiations have been opened and they are flowing well. I have not received any indication from the Haida people that they are disgruntled about the performance of the Ministers of the Crown in that respect.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

U.S.-U.S.S.R. TALKS—ARMS CONTROL ISSUE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As a result of a poll commissioned by his own Government, which identified arms control as the absolute priority on the minds of Canadians, has the Prime Minister informed President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev that arms control at the Geneva talks must take precedence on the agenda over any discussion about bilateral or regional conflicts or, indeed, any other issue? If he has not made this clear, why hasn't he?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have made precisely that point clear to President Reagan and in correspondence with General Secretary Gorbachev.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—NORAD AGREEMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. This past September the Prime Minister gave Canadians assurances that Canada would not become involved on a direct Government to government basis with the Strategic Defence Initiative. Will the Prime Minister now assure Canadians that a renewed NORAD agreement will not be used to enter into a hidden Canadian-American effort of co-operation in the Strategic Defence Initiative?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): As the defence critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member should know better than to ask that question. He knows as well as I that the two questions are quite distinct. The press release of the Prime Minister with respect to SDI still stands intact as being the policy of the Government. With respect to the NORAD agreement, the Hon. Member knows that that matter is currently being considered in committee. Hopefully, it will come back to Parliament with the proper conclusions.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—RETENTION OF COMPANY DIRECTORSHIPS BY CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister recently appointed Simon Reisman to be Canada's chief neogtiator in our free trade negotiations with the United States. He is well aware that Mr. Reisman is a director of two companies which have a direct stake in the negotiations. Will the Prime Minister confirm that Mr. Reisman was retained, knowing that he wished to retain his ongoing relationship with the Western group and the Bombardier group?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Reisman was retained on a temporary part-time basis as we got into it. He is going to be conducting the necessary work of putting together his team, and if the signal comes from the other side in regard to negotiations which will require a full-time commitment, then obviously he will do what he has always done, conduct himself in the appropriate manner.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is well aware that Category "B" of his own conflict of interest guidelines states that part-time office holders, which presumably Mr. Reisman will be, are allowed to hold directorships but must take care to avoid being placed, or the appearance of being placed under an obligation to any person or organization which might profit from special consideration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question is simply this. Knowing what the guidelines under Category "B" state, did the Prime Minister not consciously break his own guidelines by appointing Mr. Reisman?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, not at all, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be generally acknowledged that Mr. Reisman has always represented this country with honour and will continue to do so.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—CONTROL OF INDUSTRIAL POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It has to do with the St. Clair River which, the Minister knows, is an international body of water and we are responsible for its purity under the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Because of our commitment under that Agreement, can the Minister tell us what kind of controls he intends to promote jointly with the Province of Ontario in order to control the industrial pollution which takes place daily, so as to protect the quality of the water of the St. Clair River in the future in the interests of the health of millions of Canadians and Americans?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will appreciate, because of the fact we have an urgent and immediate problem, I am placing priority on the identification of the substances found to contain some highly toxic chemicals. My Department is working hand-in-glove with the Department of the Environment of Ontario and with Dow Chemicals, in particular, to clean up the so-called tarry blob, to have it analysed, and to see if we can identify where the substance came from. That will be our priority.

If, as a result of that particular inquiry, we determine that the offending substances are continuing to be leaked into the St. Clair River, say, from disposal sites or caverns, then we will be putting our heads together to see how best to deal with the problem both domestically and internationally.

PROVINCIAL ENVIRONMENTAL SECURITY FUND

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister, as a supplementary question, whether in view of the fact that the Ontario Government has established an environmental security fund of some $10 million per year he is prepared to commit himself today to matching or giving a similar amount of money in order to clean up the dangerous waste sites on the Canadian side of the river which have so far been left untouched?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I assume from the way the question was expressed that the Hon. Member was contemplating the possibility of a federal-provincial super fund, like that which exists in the United States, for Ontario alone. If such is the case, and it seems to be because the Hon. Member talked about matching federal-provincial funding, I would, first, have to have a specific proposal from the Government of Ontario. I have yet to receive a proposal.

ORIGIN OF DIOXIN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Ten days ago the Minister stated that he expected the interim report on the St. Clair River dioxin discovery to be in his hands today. Could the Minister tell the House if that report supports his own fears that high dioxin concentrations have resulted from leakage from past disposal sites in the area?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in response to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, the answer is, yes, I have received the report. In fact I received it only moments before Question Period, thus my reason for being late.

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, I have just received the report and I have not yet had a chance to do more than peruse it. However, I am told by my scientists that it is an interim report only. There is nothing more anathema to science than incompleteness. I think that until we receive the full report in a few weeks we will not know the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

I can say, however, that there is genuine concern that the substances may be continuing to be leaked into the river from old disposal sites. Whether that is in fact the case or whether the substances have been discharged directly by the industries in question, we do not know and will not know for some days yet.

PROPOSED DRILLING PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given that some of the scientists within the Department itself have suggested that extensive drilling is required to answer this question conclusively, would the Minister be prepared to authorize at this stage, before the cold weather, this kind of extensive drilling program to see that we get answers to this problem as quickly as possible? The drilling is in addition to the river test presently taking place.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, not being a scientist I cannot respond in the House to the question of whether or not the best approach to be taken is one of drilling. I can simply say that we have mobilized the best team of scientists in the country and in the United States for this general purpose. I defer to the technicians, the scientists and the experts, as to how best to deal with the problem. If they determine that drilling is advisable, then I will certainly put some pressure on them to follow that route.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED ABUSE BY IMMIGRANT ENTREPRENEURS—REQUEST FOR ADOPTION OF CERTAIN MEASURES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. According to a Globe and Mail survey, the Department of Employment and Immigration does absolutely no follow-up on the investment projects of immigrant entrepreneurs. During the discussions on entrepreneurs in Parliamentary Committee, we have never been able to find out which follow-up procedures the Department applies. We now know the reason why: there are none. My question is this:

Is the Minister willing to take action immediately to prevent abuses by immigrant entrepreneurs?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker,

I want to thank the Hon. Member for her question which gives me the opportunity to clarify what I believe is an important story but one which is misleading to the point of suggesting that somehow Canada is opening rather than tightening and arranging an appropriate security mechanism. We are concerned about the possibility of abuse at the same time as we are anxious to have entrepreneurial investment. Therefore we have taken a number of steps in order to ensure the appropriate security measures are in place.

REQUEST THAT ALLEGED ABUSES BE STOPPED

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister announced two weeks ago with a lot of hoopla that the Government was planning on doubling the quotas for this category of immigrants. Can the Minister guarantee today with as much hoopla that the number of abuses will not double also and that present abuses will stop immediately?

[English]

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration) and Minister Responsible for the Status of Women): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we have not only undertaken a vigorous program around the world designed to indicate to those who are interested in investing in Canada that we wish to deal with them expeditiously; we have also set in motion a program whereby, rather than having to complete their involvement within five and a half months, it is now spread over two years, thus giving us a time frame in order to see that the appropriate checks are made. This will be shared not only by the federal but as well by the provincial authorities whose concurrence we must have.

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

FILLING OF VACANCIES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will be aware that there has been a lot of concern about the continuing vacancies on the International Joint Commission. Does the Prime Minister anticipate filling those vacancies on the International Joint Commission in the very near future, and can he assure the House that when he does get around to filling those positions he will not fill one of them with Sterling Lyon, the former Leader of the Opposition and Premier of Manitoba?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will be filling those positions very shortly and I certainly think it would be the opinion of all reasonable minded people in this House that, if we could attract people of the competence of Mr. Lyon to that kind of position, the Government would be well served.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the Prime Minister's commitment to the reviewing of appointments, I wonder if he could tell the House why he thinks it would be good to appoint someone who has a reputation for regarding all environmentalists as subversive—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is hypothetical.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister tell us why in his view he might see it as wise to appoint someone—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The very verbs are hypothetical. The Hon. Member for York East.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

USE OF M16 RIFLE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. According to a recent news report, the M16 rifle that was ordered by the former Liberal Government for delivery to Canadian Forces in 1987 is now being phased out by the American Army because they are having difficulty hitting targets with that particular rifle. I wonder if the Minister can advise the House if the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: You're giving us good targets.

Mr. Redway: I wonder if the Minister could advise the House if the former Liberal Government made a mistake in ordering the M16, or is it that the Americans are just lousy shots?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it pains me to have to defend the previous administration. However, in fact this model of the M16 rifle which we are now having manufactured in Kitchener is being and will be used by the United States Army until 1992. The United States Army is ordering another 500,000 of them and the U.S. Marines are ordering 230,000 of them. The armies of France, Great Britain, Italy, Australia, and New Zealand are also using this rifle. However, in answer to the Hon. Member's final question, yes, Canadian soldiers are better shots.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to draw his attention to the tragic fact that job losses in Montreal are continuing to occur while the Government is doing very little in practice to stop this.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister why his Government missed a golden opportunity to stop the haemorrhage of job losses in Montreal East by not urging the Hyundai Company to locate its automobile plant in Eastern Montreal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, over 90,000 new jobs have been created in Quebec since the election of this Government. I would have thought that, as a Quebecer, the Hon. Member would congratulate the Government for having contributed to the establishment of such an important industry as the car industry in Quebec.

SIZE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S PARTICIPATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about this participation by the Government of Canada. I wonder why it is that the announcement was made at a time when it seems that no Cabinet decision has yet been made as to the participation of the Canadian Government, as well as the nature and the extent of this participation.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that my friend is sorely mistaken. Last August 29, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion announced from Seoul in South Korea the intention of the industry to locate this plant in Canada and also said:

[English]

At the request of Hyundai, they are now focusing on several specific locations in Quebec.

This is what the Minister stated last August. The deal had therefore already been made.

Last November 8, I said during a press conference that, if aspects of various joint economic matters could help to create jobs, we would attempt to . . . I know that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East in Ontario does not like to hear good news for Canadian men and women.

However, the agreement announced last August is now becoming a reality which will benefit, in my opinion, the people of Quebec and Canada. These are good news and important news which have absolutely nothing to do with the holding of a provincial election. In any case, it was announced beforehand—

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CAPE BRETON—POTATO CHIP COMPANY PROPOSAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. A Cape Breton owned potato chip company which would have created 50 jobs in Cape Breton is going to locate elsewhere because the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion not only failed to provide a timely decision but would not even reveal when a decision would be made. How can the Government seriously suggest that Cape Breton will be made the best place in Canada in which to invest when there is so little co-operation given by the Government to that end?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is way off.

I must state that the matter was submitted to me. At least a month has already passed since I gave an answer and made an offer to that applicant, and I am still waiting to know whether or not he will accept it.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing like shutting the door when the cows have already escaped. Let us try the question again. It has been six months since the Government wiped out 600 jobs in Cape Breton, so that the 150 jobs that have been announced are not really much of a record—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is there a supplementary question to the earlier question about the plan, please?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister at least tell the House when the Government will respond to the Cape Breton Advisory Committee which recommended that it will be necessary to have direct Government job creation in areas such as municipal and industrial infrastructure in order to create jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the Government, and in particular the Minister, have given a great deal of attention to this most important question of job creation on Cape Breton Island. I want to assure my hon. friend that we view this as a most serious obligation. We will fulfill our obligations to ensure that fairness and equality of opportunity and new opportunities come to the people of Cape Breton.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

DISCUSSION OF AMENDMENTS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Many sections of the Young Offenders Act have left Canadians with a frustrated feeling with the justice system as it relates to their communities. Can the Minister indicate what specific changes are contemplated to the Young Offenders Act which are under discussion and will give Canadians a more positive feeling concerning the justice system and the laws of the country?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we are presently looking at the whole range of issues relating to the Young Offenders Act. There are a series of consultations which we are undertaking with provincial Governments, representatives of the judiciary, Crown attorneys, lawyers, child welfare officials, and others. I might add that one of these consultations will be held in Vancouver this week. As a result of these regional representations I will be meeting with the provincial Attorneys General and Solicitors General and will subsequently come back to Parliament with possible changes to the legislation. It is my hope that Parliament can make changes to the legislation which will ensure that the philosophy incorporated in the legislation is made to work, and work well, for Canadians.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING HYUNDAI PROJECT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It follows from the answer received by my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques concerning the Hyundai matter.

Mr. Speaker, if only the Hon. Prime Minister will listen . . . Can the Prime Minister tell us first how it happened that there was no Minister representing the Canadian Government at the press conference, and, second, how much the Federal Government will be investing in the building of that plant?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government announced on August 29, 1985, which is several months ago, that the company involved had decided, further to recommendations and pressure from the Canadian Government, to locate in Canada.

Further, it was announced on that day that a major firm had been retained to choose a site for the new company, and that certain sites in Quebec were being especially considered, including the site that was ultimately chosen.

I therefore feel it is a fortunate event for all Canadians and all Quebecers that the company in question decided to locate in the Eastern Townships, in Quebec.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, if I understood the answer correctly, it was the Hyundai Corporation that decided to locate in Quebec. It was the Hyundai Corporation that decided to locate in Bromont. You are therefore in agreement with me.

The Quebec Premier, Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson, can claim no political merit whatsoever for that, nor Conservative Members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

MULTICULTURALISM

WHITE PAPER INQUIRY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The Minister is undoubtedly aware that his predecessor invited comment from ethnocultural organizations on a draft multiculturalism Bill and led them to expect a White Paper on multiculturalism. Will the Minister confirm this afternoon that the multiculturalism sector was in fact working on a White Paper on multiculturalism? Will he also confirm that he has ended that effort?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, no, I cannot confirm either of those allegations. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that we have waited patiently for the major breakthrough which this Government has attained, that is, the creation of a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: I look forward to visiting the committee in the next week or so at which time we will be able to discuss at length the details of an Act and a paper.

REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister, who has just given a useful answer, also assure the House and the ethnocultural organizations of the country that before a Department of Multiculturalism is created there will be further consultation with these groups?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

ANTI-SMOKING ADVERTISING CONTRACT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the very questionable awarding of an advertising contract to a firm with a clear conflict of interest. How can the Prime Minister defend the awarding of an $800,000 anti-smoking advertising campaign contract to a Winnipeg firm whose parent company is handling at the same time a $7 million contract from Imperial Tobacco? Knowing the conflict of interest exists, will he now issue instructions to revoke the contract?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will appreciate the fact that the Minister responsible for this area is not in the House today. He will be back tomorrow. I will be glad to take notice of the question and make sure that the Minister responds to the Hon. Member with respect to the matter he raises.

PLACEMENT OF CONTRACT

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the fact that the Winnipeg firm which was awarded the contract played a key role in the Tory election campaign of last summer, in terms of its advertising contract, have had anything to do with the awarding of the contract to a company in the home Province of Manitoba and the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe the question is serious.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Last week the Minister spoke to a group in Calgary and mentioned that it was his intention to bring to the attention of his colleagues the idea of an expanded full-scale space agency. I am interested in the implications of this agency for our universities and research and development in the private sector. In particular, will this agency concern itself with surveillance of Canada's North?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Canada has a proud history of achievement in the area of our space accomplishments. At the present time we are preparing for Cabinet a long-range strategic space plan to cover our ongoing space program for the next decade. As part of that plan we are considering a number of options for managing our role in space, and a number of options to use our competence better in this area with respect to all questions of the sort raised by the Hon. Member.

PARCEL POST DELIVERY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. The Marchment Report will be delivered today. Among its recommendations is a recommendation to limit the investment which the Post Office makes in parcel post delivery. In light of the fact that parcel delivery is one of the ways in which the Post Office can raise its revenues to provide adequate mail service to Canadians, will the Minister take this opportunity to dissociate himself from this specific recommendation?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): As my colleague said, Mr. Speaker, the Marchment report will be tabled this afternoon. We will have an opportunity to examine the recommendations, Cabinet will make the appropriate decisions, and they will be announced in due time.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that if he pursues the recommendation to limit the investment of Canada Post in parcel delivery he will be serving the intersets of the couriers by keeping competition away from courier service and he will be making it much more difficult for Canada Post to deliver mail because it will not have the revenues to do the job which needs to be done?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, these are recommendations made by an independent study group. We will have an opportunity to examine the recommendations and, whatever decisions may eventually be taken by Cabinet, they will be made public.

PARTICIPATION OF FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC AT FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Considering that agreement has been reached between Canada and Quebec concerning the February 1986 Francophone summit and that the Prime Minister has given the assurance that Acadia will also take part in the discussions, can he assure the House that all Francophones outside Quebec, including 500,000 Franco-Ontarians, will also be invited to attend discussions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): During the negotiations, Mr. Speaker, we did insist that French-speaking Canadians be adequately represented at any conference. More particularly, attendance by the New Brunswick Acadian Society was considered because the Province of New Brunswick is officially bilingual and it is a major reason for being asked to participate on an official basis. As far as I know we had not received recommendations or response from the New Brunswick Government, but I would indeed be quite pleased were the delegation to include Franco-Ontarians.

I would think that the decision was first made because New Brunswick is officially bilingual, which unfortunately is still not the case in Ontario. Still I intend to look favourably upon the proposition of my colleague.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier on a short supplementary.

FRANCO-ONTARIANS—FIRST-CLASS CITIZENSHIP STATUS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Since the Prime Minister has special consideration for official bilingualism as it has been proclaimed by New Brunswick and Quebec, is he prepared to initiate negotiations with the Government of Ontario to do justice to Franco-Ontarians and thus grant them full-fledged citizen status in the province and the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend knows full well how I feel about this. I find it altogether abnormal that 500,000 Franco-Ontarians should be denied the same rights and privileges as other Ontario residents.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my speech today is to address Canada's policy on UNESCO.

First of all, however, let me express the shock and sadness with which Canadians heard last November 13 about the natural disaster in Colombia that resulted in the loss of so many lives.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has already addressed, on behalf of all Canadians, a message of sympathy to his Colombian counterpart, but I am sure that all Members of this House will want to join me in expressing once more our profound sympathy to the families of thousands of Colombians who died or have been reported missing as a result of this terrible disaster. I also wish to extend our condolences to the 50,000 Canadians of Colombian origin who may have lost relatives or friends as a result of this catastrophe.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday I announced that an initial contribution of $60,000 had been made by the Canadian Government to the UN Organization for emergency assistance and a donation of $100,000 to the League of Red Cross Associations and to the Pan American Health Organization. That same evening, a Canadian Forces Hercules aircraft left Ottawa carrying blankets, drinking water containers and emergency medical supplies requested by the Colombian authorities. We have also been able to send technicians with seismological equipment, who will back up experts on the spot responsible for monitoring developments in the volcano's seismic activity. Our embassy in Bogota is offering additional assistance and has also made its vehicles available to emergency relief teams.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I met His Excellency Mr. Orlando Abello, the Colombian Ambassador to Canada, who advised me of his Government's assessment of the situation in this particular area of his country. After consulting with His Excellency, I would now like to announce the following additional Canadian contributions:

A contribution of $50,000 to World Vision;

A contribution of $60,000 to UNICEF emergency programs;

A contribution of $30,000 to the Canadian Catholic Organization for Development and Peace;

Funding up to a maximum of $100,000 for the Canadian Embassy in Colombia, to be spent on local emergency assistance projects.

I have also instructed my officials to report to me as soon as possible on potential opportunities for assistance.

In concluding this disgression, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate our feelings of deepest sympathy for the people of Colombia during this time of grief following the worst volcanic eruption in 100 years.

Mr. Speaker, forty years ago, Canada was one of the co-founders of UNESCO. Why? Because for all Canadians, then as now, the objectives of UNESCO were and are of vital importance. UNESCO was created for the purpose of enhancing peace and security through exchanges among nations in the areas of education, science and culture. Peace in this world and the well-being of mankind were the goals that motivated the creation of the United Nations Organization and which are proclaimed in its Charter.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my speech today is to reiterate on behalf of the Government of Canada our faith in UNESCO and our desire, following its Twenty-Third General Conference, to remain a member. UNESCO is playing a unique and invaluable role.

It would perhaps be useful to recall its basic mandate. In education, UNESCO combats illiteracy, trains teachers and teaching staff and also builds schools. It dedicates much of its efforts to promoting equal access to education for girls and women, the handicapped and the elderly, and to improving education in rural areas, an important and vital task that is also in line with the priorities of this Government.

In the area of science, UNESCO encourages scientific and technical development in all parts of the world. As a promoter of science, it supports thousands of projects in the world by helping others do the job instead of doing it itself.

UNESCO is also active in the fundamental area of culture, an area of great significance for the Canadian Government. The affirmation of cultural identity is a duty within the international community. We must learn to share our cultural resources. The steps taken by UNESCO to preserve historical sites in Venice, Athens and Carthage have been taken on behalf of the whole of mankind.

Finally, UNESCO has also been able to adapt to new realities. Mankind has entered the era of global communications. This is something which UNESCO, like Canada, was quick to recognize. I hope that all Canadian men and women are duly proud of the pioneer work carried out in this area by a Canadian, Mr. Marshall McLuhan. In 1983, together with Teleglobe Canada, the Canadian Commission for UNESCO created a prize bearing the name of this great thinker which is the highest distinction awarded in the area of communications.

As all can see from its many activites, UNESCO today is a modern and complex international organization.

Over the past 40 years, Mr. Speaker, the number of member states in the organization has increased from 28 to 160. A majority of the member states are developing countries. Many of them do not have the resources to establish permanent contact with an international network to exchange information and ideas on education, science and culture. According to our friends from developing countries, UNESCO greatly helps them preserve their cultural identity and opens for them large avenues of information. UNESCO was therefore right to direct a major part of its programs to Third World activities. In this regard, our support of UNESCO is an extension of our foreign aid program which is very much appreciated by the friends of Canada in the developing world.

Six weeks ago, UNESCO paid tribute to the Canadian Organization for Development through Education, an NGO which provides the farthest corners of the world with pencils, papers and books. I am pleased to report that this non-governmental organization has been supported by CIDA for a great many years. I am happy that UNESCO is there to recognize and encourage the work of organizations such as this.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I have come back from Sofia determined to increase co-operation between the Canadian International Development Agency and UNESCO, for instance in the case of small projects which cost nearly nothing and which can have a great developmental value by promoting education, science and culture.

I emphasized earlier the benefits which accrue to developing countries thanks to their association with UNESCO; however, this does not mean that I underestimate the benefits received by industrialized nations through their involvement with this unique testing ground for new ideas. UNESCO is important not only because it allows a freer flow of information between nations, but also because it contributes directly to the development of knowledge in a world where we increasingly depend on each other economically, culturally, socially and politically. UNESCO has a stabilizing influence on the world because of the exchanges it allows. For instance, its publications make it the most important publisher in the world, and these publications reflect the values, aims and traditions of all societies. Such an activity is certainly irreplaceable.

Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, UNESCO has had very serious problems in the last few years.

Canada has long maintained that 1985 would be a decisive year for UNESCO and that the 23rd General Conference in Sofia would be the most critical during this period. That conference has now ended, and I want to tell the House today that the Government of Canada is happy with its results. UNESCO comes out with a stronger commitment than ever to reform, and with the image of an organization that will live up to its responsibilities.

Having had the privilege of heading the Canadian delegation in Sofia, I was able to appraise myself of the good will and moderation shown by member states in the proceedings of that conference. Canada's desire for reform was broadly shared. Member states want UNESCO to work efficiently.

Why are we satisfied with the results? Because our reasonable expectations from that conference have been met, in every area where we had been asking improvements for the past year and a half.

What was the ill affecting the Organization to the point of jeopardizing its very survival?

The diagnosis made by Canada and many member states from all continents was the following:

UNESCO had to define more strictly its goals and priorities;

It had an urgent need to concentrate its activities and give up less essential programs;

It also had to review its financial, administrative and other practices; and

It had to tone down its political debates.

Mr. Speaker, last spring, the executive council—within which Canada exercises its influence—laid the groundwork for a condensed and improved UNESCO program that met with the concerns I just referred to. That program, which resulted from very difficult compromises negotiated over the last year, was adapted to UNESCO's budget, a budget reduced following the United States' withdrawal in 1984. As Members in this House very well know, it is not always easy to operate within a budget that is reduced by 25 per cent. This, however, is what UNESCO has done.

That new departure may contribute in a very major way to the revitalization and refocussing of the essential programs for which the Organization was established. A more modest UNESCO must now double its efforts in order to win the confidence of sceptics over the next two years and beyond. To that end, vigilance will remain the order of the day.

To consolidate what has been gained, all members and especially the major contributing states will have to keep pressure on the Organization. In the long run, it is in the interests of the UN system as a whole to continue the reform experiment at UNESCO. Whether the necessary reforms are implemented will depend on whether we are prepared to persevere in our commitment to work from inside the Organization.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are interested in UNESCO. This interest is a sign of the tremendous goodwill organizations such as UNESCO enjoy among the general public. I am relying on the many non-governmental organizations and provincial and federal departments representing the various components of UNESCO's action in Canada to continue to support this work. I would especially ask the Canadian Commission for UNESCO to advise and assist the Government in this difficult task. I will do so because there may well be no other country in the world that is so conscious, at all levels of its society, of its international connections.

I said earlier that Canadians had a special relationship with UNESCO. I may add that UNESCO has a special relationship with Canada, as was shown by the many expressions of esteem I received in Sofia on behalf of our country.

Finally, I would like to recall at this point the Commonwealth's support for UNESCO, its goals and its dynamics of change. In Nassau, leaders of the Commonwealth countries emphasized the importance of renewal of international institutions in general. Following the same line of thought, the commissioners of a number of Commonwealth countries posted in London, including our own High Commissioner, wrote to Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Foreign Office Secretary, on Friday, November 15. They again mentioned the importance attached by the Commonwealth to Great Britain's participation in this very important international organization. They took this step because the Commonwealth countries realized that a great many of our educational, scientific and cultural institutions are historically rooted in Great Britain. UNESCO needs the wisdom of our British friends, as it does that of all nations.

Mr. Speaker, the results of the General Conference are clear, and we have considered them in the light of our position on the proposed reforms. The Government of Canada is very pleased with the progress already made by UNESCO in this respect. I can state quite positively that we shall continue to work within the Organization towards implementing the requisite reforms. We will not abandon ship. As the Prime Minister said not long ago: "We will not withdraw from UNESCO . . . We have asked for internal reform, and we believe that a start has been made. We want to achieve reform but from the inside."

In short, Mr. Speaker, by remaining within UNESCO, Canada intends to realize the vision of the Organization that its founders had when it was created. Mr. Speaker, if UNESCO did not exist, we would have to invent it.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition and of our leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), I wish to express the shock and deep sorrow we all felt when we first heard about this great tragedy in Columbia. Along with the Government we extend our sincere sympathy to His Excellency Orlando Abello, the Columbian ambassador to Canada, and we ask him to convey our feelings to his Government and the people of Columbia.

Within a few days, Mr. Speaker, almost two weeks in fact—November 7 as I recall—the Minister who has just spoken was telling us about another great tragedy which had occurred and the measures her Government would be taking to help the victims of that tragedy.

Then I pointed out to her that in a world ... and what strikes me today in the two statements which I will attempt to link together is that when the two major world powers are about to meet in Geneva—I did say the two major world powers, for I never claimed that one was less powerful than the other—to seek ways to put an end to the mad arms race and, in fact, to unbelievable military expenditures while we know they are ready to attack one another at a moment's notice, as I said last November 7, we have yet to find mechanisms to bring quick relief to and defend people who suffer or become victims of disasters such as the one which has just happened in Columbia.

I made an offer to the Minister—and I still offer my humble assistance in such cases—either through parliamentary committee consideration or through non-government organizations with a view to finding ways of responding in an orderly manner to help people cope with major disasters, a world organization ready to intervene so as to demonstrate that we are determined to take action when tragedy strikes just as we are when it comes to military issues.

I would be remiss if I did not echo the Minister's remarks and extend sincere congratulations to our non-government organizations which are doing so much good, yet receive so little publicity. I am wondering whether such ministerial statements as we hear now and again might not be the ideal forum to come up with constructive propositions. In addition to these sums of money which I find quite small under the circumstances, I wonder if the time has not come for the Minister to consider the possibility of offering a so-called matching grant on top of the normal contribution of the federal government, the Government of Canada announcing its willingness to contribute one dollar for each dollar collected by non-governmental organizations whenever great disasters such as this occur. This would be a fine way for the Canadian Government and people to demonstrate their solidarity with the rest of mankind.

I hope that the Minister will contact her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), so that following this and similar disasters ... she indicated in her statement that some 50,000 Canadian men and women of Colombian descent are directly stricken. I wonder if we should not consider immediately the possibility of having young children, even though they have not been abandoned by their Columbian parents, to start new lives here, in Canada. I wonder if the Minister should not contact the Minister of Employment and Immigration to make it possible for these 50,000 Canadian men and women born in Columbia to sponsor a relative, a friend, or anybody else and help them to come to Canada. We should demonstrate our willingness and open-mindedness through our immigration policies, and abandon certain requirements whenever such great disasters occur for the sake of demonstrating our solidarity with the rest of the world. I am sure that if the Minister conveyed this wish to her colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration, she would give a lot of attention to representations made not only by myself on behalf of my party, but by herself.

We have also heard upon this occasion an important announcement concerning Canada's intention to remain a member of UNESCO. It would clearly have been a disaster if Canada had announced today its intention to leave UNESCO.

I have read the statement very carefully, and it would be useful for the Canadian people to know—I always like the educational side of politics—about the background of statements made in this House. I must say that I received my copy in very good time. Someone else could have replied to it, but I have been asked to do so on behalf of my party. I have to say that this is a very cohesive and well written six-page statement, which must have required the participation of the entire Department, because many people are involved in preparing this type of statement. It is certainly not a waste of time to repeat to those who will be listening to us on television or on radio or who will read reports of our proceedings in the press how important we have always believed UNESCO to be.

In the field of education, how extraordinary is the fight against illiteracy. How exalting it is to train educational staff and to build schools. Is this a thankless task? Is this insignificant? We do not think so.

Making enormous efforts to promote equal access to education for girls and women seems natural in Canada and the Western World, but it is one of the major tasks of UNESCO, and this must be repeated and re-emphasized.

As concerns the handicapped and the aged, I shall always remember what I was told in my youth. My father, whom I often quote when speaking about such matters, told me that you can tell how civilized a society is by its attachment to its senior citizens and its handicapped.

I think that UNESCO is doing a marvelous job. In the field of science, as the Minister said so well, UNESCO promotes the development of science and technology.

UNESCO operates in the basic area of culture. As the Minister has told us, we are entering the era of global communications. Mr. Speaker, I shall not be long, but I must say that this Party, the Official Opposition, has always been and still is committed to supporting UNESCO, and I know there have been all kinds of debates within UNESCO, but as a political party we are sticking to that commitment.

The Minister today announced that Canada will finally remain a member and, I must thank her for that, because for a long while there were all kinds of rumours coming from all quarters. I did a little reading, in the little time at our disposal because I received the statement this morning. We have to work very hard and very fast. Somebody called from Montreal saying: "There is a statement by your friend that very distinguished Minister". So we had to get posted and I had read of course that there had been all kinds of discording notes concerning our support for UNESCO. I was concerned. But, finally, the Minister put an end to all those endless discussions. There were discussions in Paris, within the executive council, where doubts were expressed, doubts that may have stemmed from the fact that the United States were preparing to leave, as they in fact did. At that point, there is always a tendency to follow the same path, the same direction.

So the Minister said that we were staying. What must be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, is that for all those things I referred to, we have a budget this year, and Canadians must know that in the $8 million provided for—an increase of less than 1 per cent from last year's contribution—Canadians must know all the good that can be done with only $8 million. At the very same time that in Geneva certain people will again be shouting at each other, shaking world conscience, as to whether we should slow down or not that crazy arms race that is costing hundreds of billions of dollars, a major friendly country, a powerful friend, the United States, is reviewing its membership, and not only has it reviewed it, but has withdrawn from UNESCO although its contribution is hardly 8 times that of Canada in approximate terms. When we know how much good UNESCO can do, it is obvious, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister said in her statement that an organization whose member countries have increased in number from 28 to 160 in a few years, representing various visions of the world, very poor people, people who have been exploited, who have suffered from illiteracy, starvation and all the miseries caused by illness, the homeless . . . And all those people meet within UNESCO. However, one of the most powerful friends of Canada, our southern neighbour, decides to withdraw because it does not always get the upper hand in discussions. Indeed, it would like to make a scanty contribution when one considers all the good that can be done by UNESCO, and because it cannot convince its colleagues from 160 countries to come to its own conclusions, it withdraws.

I should like to ask the Minister if during the Sofia Conference where several Members of this House were present—I should add that we were invited but we were unable to accept—I wonder if Canada, this close friend of the United States . . . I have to ask, as there is no reference thereto in the statement made by six countries . . . called upon the USA to return to UNESCO. I think that it is very important, because this new Government is proud of the fact that it maintains direct communications; a mere phone call. Call me Brian. Yes John. Yes, Ronny. Call me! I am listening. Did Canada play the role of a good friend and intermediary, the role of a country that understands tragedies and enjoys the respect of developed and underdeveloped countries.

And I wish the Minister or the Secretary of State or the Prime Minister would come back to us in two months and make the following important announcement: We have convinced the United States, in the interests of world peace and international co-operation, to renew its membership. That would be a brilliant coup for Canada. I would be the first to rise in the House and congratulate either the Prime Minister or the Minister for External Relations or the Secretary of State for External Affairs and say: Thanks to our discreet efforts, we have been able to persuade the United States to renew its membership. And thanks to our own membership, our ambassador did the same for the Commonwealth . . . She said so in her statement on page 6.

I wonder whether the same representations, coming from a close friend of the United States, were made to that country.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, may I say that at a time when the two superpowers are expected to meet tomorrow, today, I could not do otherwise but pray, because I am one of those people who believe that in these circumstances, one must meditate—meditation is prayer, after all—and wonder what the world would be like if tomorrow, those two superpowers who are meeting at last . . . just imagine, the world is terribly excited because the two superpowers are going to meet tomorrow. To me, it is the most natural thing in the world for the two leaders of the two most powerful nations on earth to meet. To me that is normal. The International Parliamentary Union, of which I was the president for Canada, expressed the hope many years ago that they would meet, without pre-conditions. And I hope the press will not ask them right after the meeting, as if they had to reach some kind of decision: What did you decide? To me, the fact that the two superpowers are meeting tomorrow is already a step in the right direction, even if they do not solve any problems. Seeing each other, looking at the intentions of the other side and going back home to think it over and coming back would already be tremendous progress.

Speaking of tremendous progress, that would certainly be the case if tomorrow, the two superpowers and especially the United States would realize that the best thing they could do for world peace would perhaps be to come back to UNESCO. And to pay their dues, after all, $64 to $70 million in US funds is not that much for the United States, if you consider the tremendous contribution it can make by being a member of this great institution.

So I thank the Minister for allaying the fears we might have had as a result of various statements which have been made. We know where we stand, Canada supports UNESCO.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to join with all those who—and this is something we do not do often enough—wish to congratulate non-government organizations which do so much good, as I said, with little fanfare.

I cannot do other than conclude by saying that I am surprised the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the competent Minister of International Relations (Mrs. Vézina) are not employing their time and their energies trying to convince the Americans, especially having such a close relationship with the United States of America, to return to the UNESCO fold. Look at all the good that UNESCO can do toward more understanding and sharing for such a small amount of money.

I hope the Government will tell us in a few months that we have convinced our great friend, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, not to withdraw from UNESCO and that we have succeeded through our efforts and close companionship with the President of the United States to convince that country to return to UNESCO.

We talk about the big problems of the world today. Let us concentrate a little more effort toward a better understanding of the immense problems of the Third World, with la famine, no schools, no teaching and no respect for women or the handicapped—nothing at all for them—for this is part of the silent work of the United Nations. I am very pleased to hear at long last that Canada is a supporter of UNESCO. I hope that the Minister will have good news for us in the months and years to come concerning our participation in UNESCO. I am a little worried because she said very clearly in her statement that we will have equal participation in foreign aid. Let me quote what she said:

In this regard our support of UNESCO is an extension of our foreign aid program—

If we slash $185 million off our CIDA foreign aid program in 1985-86 and $50 million more in 1986-87, if we decrease our over-all financial commitment to CIDA and claim that it is an extension of our participation in UNESCO, I suspect we may contribute less. I am sure the Minister will enlighten us on these issues in the coming months and I thank her for her statement today.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I am pleased to respond to the Minister's statements on Colombia and UNESCO. Perhaps in relation to this horrifying disaster in Colombia, no one is pleased to respond. We are all shocked by the consequences and the continuing problems associated with the volcano.

All of us admire the tremendous fortitude of the Colombian people in the face of this disaster and hope very much that our expression of concern will go to the Government from this corner of the House and to the people of Colombia.

Several years ago I served for almost two years on the committee of the House of Commons that was studying Canada's relations with Latin America. In the course of that study I had the opportunity to visit several countries in South America and became aware of the enormous courage of the Colombian people throughout their history. Not only did Colombia maintain a democratic form of Government at times when many, if not most, of its neighbours were succumbing to military and neo-fascist regimes, but Colombia took a lead in seeking democracy, stability and peace in Latin America. It continues to take that lead today through its work in Contadora.

At a time of enormous national suffering in Colombia, I am, as we all are, pleased that the Government of Canada responded immediately and is continuing to respond with financial and other assistance. As the Minister has noted today, there will be further assistance through non-governmental organizations. It seems to be a very tiny response given the enormity of the problem. I hope the Government will be able to increase its contributions, not only in immediate emergency aid and particularly financial aid which are required by the people of Colombia, but also in further reconstruction efforts.

There have been many tragedies over the past year. There has been the famine in Ethiopia and the response of the Government, which was a good and strong one. However, we were told and still are told time and time again that it is long-term aid or long-term reconstruction that is needed in the case of Ethiopia and indeed in the case of many countries in Africa which have suffered enormous famine. Similarly, in the case of Mexico and now Colombia, we want to help in the reconstruction works. That is what Canadians want to help Colombians achieve. I feel confident that the Minister will want to see us do that.

Also I hope the Government will seriously address the need for reform of our international financial institutions and our international financial arrangements which place such a heavy burden on Colombia, on other Latin American countries and on many other countries in the world that are trying to deal with debt crises. The continuing debt crisis and the inadequacy of the response to the crisis by international financial institutions, while not as vivid or as horrifying as earthquakes and volcanoes, nevertheless, it seems to me, will inevitably bring comparable suffering, poverty and tragedy to the peoples of Latin America and of other countries who are suffering so deeply from the crushing burden of debt.

On UNESCO, I was pleased, as all of us in my Party were pleased, to note the Minister's warm commitment to the survival and work of UNESCO. Indeed, she made a commitment on her own behalf and on behalf of the whole Government. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) mentioned some rumours which had been floating around that Canada might not in fact give its full support to UNESCO. Indeed, I first heard rumours under the previous Government that we might not continue our moral and financial support to this incredibly valuable organization and, therefore, I was glad to see that there was no foundation under the present Government to those rumours. As the Minister has said—and I thought it was a point well taken—if no UNESCO existed, one would have to be invented.

Also I would like to know whether the Minister has had any success in persuading the United States to return to the organization. It made a substantial contribution to the organization. In withdrawing from it, it not only undermined UNESCO and everything UNESCO stands for but, in a sense, it undermined the United Nations itself. In this connection I should like to urge that Canada, now that it has firmly recommitted itself to UNESCO, equally firmly recommit itself to the United Nations charter and move to strengthen the United Nations itself as an integral and essential institution for maintaining world peace. Very urgent measures are needed and must be taken, for example, to curb the growing militarism and the growing anarchy which we see throughout the world. There are many steps that Canada could take within the United Nations to help curb such militarism and anarchy. The United Nations Security Council and the Secretary General could be and should be given—and Canada should press that they be given it—more authority to help maintain world peace. We should urge that the United Nations play a more central role than it does on North-South issues. There are a number of reforms which we could be initiating that could restore the United Nations as the prime promoter of human rights and, in the reform of international law, provide greater access through the United Nations for individuals suffering injustice. Just as UNESCO would have to be invented were it not there, so is that as true or perhaps even more true for the United Nations.

I hope the Minister would take occasion to reaffirm our commitment to the United Nations Charter and specifically give us some of the ideas which are undoubtedly circulating in her Department, the Department of External Affairs, on the ways in which Canada, having now made this clear and firm commitment to UNESCO, will make an equally firm and clear commitment to the strengthening and reform of the United Nations itself.

PETITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to present a petition to the House, calling upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases in the last Budget.

WITHDRAWAL OF REMARK MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding some remarks which I made during Question Period as a heckle at the point where my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was trying to put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the situation with the Haida people in the South Moresby part of the Queen Charlotte Islands in British Columbia. I said that the Prime Minister was only concerned about Quebec and later on that it was only Quebec, or words to that effect. I would like to withdraw the remark. It is very un-Canadian to do that. The situation is that we have a recession in British Columbia and a real problem with the Haidas and the natives. That is what was behind it, and I would like to withdraw it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Government House Leader to indicate to the House when we might expect answers to questions which I placed on the Order Paper some seven months ago, respecting the involvement of the former Solicitor General in the Hatfield marijuana case in New Brunswick. We have waited over seven months for answers to those questions. Perhaps he could rise in his place today and tell us when we might receive those answers.

• (1550)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a specific date, I must admit to the Hon. Member, but I do recall a previous response from the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) himself, that there would be quite an exhaustive reply because of the nature of the Hon. Member's question which, I am sure he understands, is fairly long and covers not only one Department but a number of Departments. The nature of the question is such that it requires an exhaustive answer. I believe they are working hard at getting a response, quite seriously, for the Hon. Member but it has taken more time because of the length and complexity of the questions raised. However, I am assured that the matter is receiving earnest attention and I hope it will be answered soon. It may even be answered tomorrow but I would not want to commit myself to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wish to inform the House that, because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Government Orders today will be extended by 45 minutes.

Therefore Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.45 p.m.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-82, An Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion on which I have come before the House to introduce changes to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am looking forward to this assignment with greater hope and enthusiasm than on the previous occasion.

Last year I was responsible for shepherding the PGRT legislation left in limbo by the previous Government. It was an embarrassment for two reasons, the first being that the legislation had been left on the back burner for too long. Some changes had been announced about 24 months earlier.

More significant still, however, it gave rise to confusion because it contained nothing more than a mish-mash of inadequate temporary solutions, whereas a major reform was needed.

[English]

The reason for my greater enthusiasm today is that only seven months after the signing of the Western Accord, the Government has now done the major surgery which will restore Canada's oil industry to good health.

On March 28, 1985, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), announced the Western Accord. This historic event marked the end of a decade of dispute between the federal Government and western provincial Governments concerning energy. It signalled the beginning of a new co-operative atmosphere between the federal and the provincial Governments. The amendments included in this Bill are a direct result of that Accord.

I will not take the valuable time of this House to repeat the adverse effects of the National Energy Program, in general, and the PGRT, in particular. I will, however, point out some of the most glaring negative aspects of this national embarrassment. The PGRT was first announced in October of 1980, just over five years ago. I quote from the National Energy Program document:

> Initially the PGRT tax will be set at the rate of 8 per cent of net operative revenues . . . deductions such as those for exploration and development expenditures, capital cost allowances and interest will not be allowed. As oil and gas prices rise faster . . . the rate of the tax will be reviewed.

This tax was an unprecedented attack on a single industry and single region of Canada. The prosperity of western Canada and its oil industry was simply too enticing for the previous administration and it set about a revenue grab of major proportions. The PGRT collected over $1 billion from the oil industry in 1981 with no deductions for reinvested amounts.

Is it any wonder, I ask Hon. Members of this House, that the oil industry went into a disastrous tail-spin? Is it any wonder that thousands of westerners in the oil industry lost their jobs and their homes? Is it any wonder that businesses servicing the oil industry began to fail? Eastern Canadians as well were not immune. All too often we forget the economic ties we have throughout this country. The PGRT not only hurt western Canada, it hurt the suppliers of steel and other products in Ontario and Quebec. it also hindered young engineers who graduated from our universities from working in the meaningful jobs in their chosen careers.

That was not enough for the previous Government in its crusade to squeeze all of the money out of western Canada. Not content with the damage done by an 8 per cent tax, barely one year later the PGRT rate was doubled to 16 per cent and yet another tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, was introduced as part of the PGRT Act. It is no credit to the former Government that this newest tax lasted only a few months before being indefinitely suspended. It was obvious to all that the industry was in failing health and a number of other steps were taken in a belated effort to repair the damage which the Government itself had caused.

In 1982, a temporary 1 per cent rate reduction for conventional oil was introduced, along with a new small producer credit. An increased resource allowance was introduced for synthetic oil production. In 1983, capital expenditures on enhanced oil recovery projects were allowed as deductions. These changes were an admission of the fundamentally unsound nature of a revenue tax in a capital intensive industry. However, these were band-aid solutions. They were unable to solve the problem which continued to get worse.

It was against this background that the Progressive Conservative Party promised a new and a fair energy deal for all Canadians. In 1984 we promised to remove the petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. We also promised to dismantle the Byzantine system of oil-pricing controls. We promised to remove the discriminatory system of petroleum incentive payments. One year later we have accomplished all of those things.

I want the House to know that I recently held a pre-Budget consultation with members of the oil and gas industry. I want to share with all Hon. Members today the mood of optimism, the new sense of opportunity and the climate of confidence which now exists in the oil and gas sector. I was told that government policies, including the Western Accord, have brought significant changes to the economic arena. The Canadian petroleum and natural gas industry has emerged from a mantle of politically imposed nationalistic policies to a new era of economic opportunity.

The last six or seven months have seen great changes in the industry. The Western Accord, coupled with non-punitive tax measures, and the deregulation of gas prices have enabled the oil and gas industry to rev up its own engine and contribute in a meaningful way to the economic renewal of Canada. It is with pride and enthusiasm that I present today a Bill which will carry out the promises of the Western Accord to phase out the PGRT by December 1, 1988, and to repeal the incremental oil revenue tax.

I would now like to point out briefly the specifics of the legislation before the House. Clause 6 provides for the following statutory rates to be applied to conventional oil and gas production from the current level of 16 per cent: in 1986, 13.33 per cent; in 1987, 10.67 per cent; in 1988, 8 per cent; and in 1989, nil. Synthetic oil production will be subject to lower rates as follows: in 1986, 12 per cent; in 1987, 8 per cent; in 1988, 4 per cent; and in 1989, nil.

The regulations to the PGRT will continue to provide a resource allowance of 25 per cent for conventional oil and 50 per cent for synthetic oil. These resource allowances reduce the statutory rates to result in effective rates over the next three years of 10 per cent, 8 per cent and 6 per cent for conventional oil and of 6 per cent, 4 per cent and 2 per cent for synthetic oil.

The new legislation provided does more than reduce the tax rate over the next three years. To stimulate new activity immediately, Clause 4 allows a full tax exemption available for new wells drilled after March 31, 1985. In addition, enhanced oil recovery projects are provided with options that will result in a more favourable treatment during the remaining years of the PGRT. Enhanced oil recovery projects can opt to exempt their incremental production after March 31, 1985, and major new energy projects can also apply for an exemption from the PGRT.

Another important feature of this Bill is the introduction of a PGRT offset in Clause 7. A new mechanism will allow for 30 per cent of the value of new unused exploration and development deductions to be applied against the PGRT in order to assist companies that are unable to realize income tax savings from new exploration and development expenditures under the Income Tax Act. This measures will be of particular benefit to a number of smaller Canadian companies and that is why we are proud to be presenting this Bill. The taxpayer can eliminate PGRT otherwise payable if he has sufficient unused income tax deductions and the consequential changes to the Income Tax Act that are required to implement this offset are included in the Bill before the House.

A final new measure introduced is a $10,000 annual deduction for individuals starting with the 1986 tax year. This measure will remove the burden of filing returns from several thousand Canadians who have some amounts of royalty income from producing oil and gas wells. All of these measures have combined to produce a remarkable recovery in the oil industry and the economics of exploring for and developing new oil and gas supplies have improved significantly. The provincial Governments in a new spirit of co-operation with us have complemented these changes with policy initiatives of their own and the economic recovery has begun and is well under way. It is creating jobs not only in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia but in all the provinces of the country including my own Province of Ontario.

The Bill before us truly marks the beginning of a new era, an era of restored economic vitality for the oil and gas industry, for the thousands and thousands of Canadians whose livelihoods depend directly and indirectly on the oil and gas industry and for western Canada. I commend this Bill to Hon. Members and I know they will embrace it with enthusiasm.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this Bill, but unlike the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), I do not exactly embrace it with enthusiasm although I appreciate her optimism. During the election campaign, we as a Party indicated that we would review the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax and certainly it was our intention to do so. The Minister spoke of a revenue grab from industry. That is just not the case. What is evident at the present time is that there is a money grab from the consumer as a result of this Bill and as a result of the policies of the Government.

The Government is giving the energy sector to the large oil companies, not the Canadian oil companies but the foreign oil companies. The Government has made sure that the oil companies are flush and will be successful but the consumer and Canadian companies will suffer.

I would like to move away from the issue of the PGRT for a moment and mention one of the things that the PGRT did. With its revenues, we were at least able to have a Petroleum Incentives Program. This is a program which the Government has completely abandoned. As a result, exploration on the frontier lands including the offshore has plummeted and the economic future of the oil and gas sector in Atlantic Canada in particular is very bleak indeed. At this time last year, 10 rigs were drilling in Nova Scotia. There is presently one rig drilling there. I am afraid this is the trend that is being set in Atlantic Canada. Of course this is not the viewpoint the Minister of State for Finance or the Minister of Energy (Miss Carney) have been putting forth. They are saying that exploration will surge and that there will be a very promising economic picture in Atlantic Canada. However, that is not the case and that is certainly not what we are seeing at the present time.

As I mentioned earlier, Canadian companies are in a position very different from that of multinational companies. The tax credit that has been granted for exploration on the offshore will not be satisfactory for Canadian companies. That is, it will not be satisfactory if there is any exploration activity at all. Shortly after the offshore package was announced by the Government, Mobil Oil, which made the application to the National Energy Board for the bringing of the Venture Gas ashore from the coast of Nova Scotia, withdrew its rig from that very field leaving only one rig, that of Shell Canada, drilling off the coast of that province. It is a very, very serious situation. The spin-off effects that the offshore has created in Nova Scotia are completely dissipating. We are left with empty office buildings and with people who had jobs at this time last year and do not have them now. These people have very bleak futures in the oil and gas sector.

What exactly will this new tax credit do for Canadian companies? It is a 25 per cent tax grab and all companies are being treated equally as they were under the regulations first stipulated under the Western Accord. However, what does that do for Canadian companies? It does not allow Canadian companies to take advantage of this particular tax credit because it is not a tax credit to the extent that the benefit is passed along regardless of whether the company pays taxes or not. No, it can only be deducted from income tax payable. As a result, companies which have had difficulties but have taken the initiative to explore and have taken a chance on the country, Canadian companies that are making an investment in Canada and as a result are not in a tax-paying position, cannot take advantage of this tax break to the extent that will be necessary. They will be allowed a mere 10 per cent of the benefits as compared to the 80 per cent that they were allowed prior to this measure which in addition to their normal income tax write-offs would require them to pay at best 10 cents on the dollar. These companies that have bought equipment for the offshore and are involved in the offshore have now had the rug pulled out from underneath their feet.

It is a devastating blow to Canadian companies in the oil and gas sector. In fact, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada met with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to talk about the problems some Canadian companies are having in the transition from the Petroleum Incentive Program to tax credits. Some firms are worried that they will not be able to meet drilling commitments before the grants expire and, therefore, could lose their entire investment to date. Husky-Bow Valley, which has just announced a major oil find off the coast of Newfoundland, says that its financial support system may have been pulled out from under it. This is after three long years of effort on the company's part.

Mr. Robert Blair, the Chairman of Husky Oil, says that the end of the Petroleum Incentive Program throws a wrench into Husky's efforts and that it wants to get help through this transition period. The company needs to be able to utilize the investment which it has made. It has explored heavily and invested a great deal in expensive equipment. It would be economically devastating to have this equipment lying idle if the offshore activity stops after the expiration of the Petroleum Incentive Program.

The new tax system means that instead of receiving $40 million in petroleum incentive grants for every $50 million it spends in the offshore it will now receive $4.5 million. Mr. Blair says that the new tax incentive system leaves companies which have already invested in exploration and otherwise at a disadvantage while advantages occur to those companies which have not been doing so. However, he says that enough goodwill exists in Ottawa that a solution will be found. That is whistling past the graveyard, if there was ever an example of that. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that there will not be any change to the program at all. Yet, Mr. Blair and his company and other Canadian companies are being dragged along over needles. What can they do but go along and hope that the Government will do something on their behalf? Only the Government can change this very Draconian measure for Canadian companies. There is no need for Canadian companies to be at a disadvantage in the country. This is Canada and these are Canadian companies. They have invested heavily and with the best of intentions. Yet, they are now being put at very severe risk. A great many of them will be placed in economic jeopardy and will not be able to survive. Why not give these companies the advantage? Why not allow them to take this tax credit and utilize this 25 per cent even though they do not pay taxes? Why not allow them to use it as a credit per se which would give them a 25 per cent advantage regardless of their income tax positions? Why not allow these companies to pass it along to their shareholders if they cannot utilize it themselves? There are various ways in which Canadian companies could be helped by the Government if the Government wished to do so.

The Offshore Trade Association of Nova Scotia said that an acceptable level of exploration could not be sustained under this new energy policy. What is really happening is that there are far too many rigs bidding farewell to Nova Scotia. Some nine years ago there was a great deal of activity. Last year there was also a great deal of activity. However, this year there is but one drilling rig drilling off the coast of the province. Even the ex-Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, told the energy investment conference in Calgary that Newfoundland may need special help to bring the Hibernia oilfield into production. The industry also says that special deals may be necessary to bring western heavy oil projects and Nova Scotian natural gas into production; but the Minister says she has no more money on the shelf. She says: "Ottawa gave at the office." She says that she gave the industry a multibillion dollar break on taxes so she does not have to do anything more to help the smaller Canadian companies or boost the economies of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland by showing some flexibility. This is counter-productive to an area of the country which sorely needs economic activity.

It is not only Atlantic Canada which will suffer. We can now see that the Minister and the Government are retrenching and withdrawing from promises which they made with respect to the heavy oil sector and the tarsands. I would like to quote one example in particular with respect to heavy oils concerning the Husky upgrade which was promised by the former Liberal Government. It was substantiated by the Government in power which recently decided it did not want to go forward with it. The Government decided it wanted nothing to do with equity. It thought it had enough green stamps in western Canada that it could cut back on this project, which is what it did. It was a purely political move. The Government thought it would not be noticed. It thought it could withdraw from this oasis of plenty which it has given the oil industry and that it could withdraw the commitment once again. It made a promise to a Canadian company which it had been relying upon for over a year since the Government took office. Yet, it says it is investigating. It is taking a long time to investigate this matter—and no answer has come up yet. Meanwhile, this company is hanging by its fingers waiting for an answer. The Government has put Husky Oil in a very difficult position as a result of this change of mind. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says that by removing taxes such as the Petroleum and Gas Revenu Tax there is incentive enough to invest. However, it is certainly not incentive enough to invest in the frontier lands. Nor is it incentive enough to invest in the offshore. She said that this move will be good for the country. I will deal with other points such as Canadianization and security of supply later.

I wish to touch upon what this move will do for the group which will benefit the most. I speak of the multinational oil companies which are investing in Canada. These companies should see their profits rise by 160 per cent by the end of the decade. Denis Moté, an analyst for Maison Placements Canada Inc., predicted that producing oil and gas companies in Canada will have profits of $8.1 billion in 1989 compared with $3.1 billion in 1984. During the same period of time revenues should jump 37 per cent to $36.6 billion and cashflow should soar by 70 per cent to $14.5 billion. The largest single factor in the profit picture is the elimination of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax which will increase profits by 75 per cent without any other factor whatsoever.

What has the Minister done for consumers? This is where I return to the money grab from the consumers. In the recently announced consumer gas rate agreement there was nothing for the consumers. Certainly the producers absorbed a 12 per cent increase which the distributors were granted. However, when one considers the fact that natural gas prices in the United States are expected to decline by 10 per cent in the next year, then this is of no benefit to the consumers of Canada compared with what they should receive. In fact, the consumers of the country had been paying a fair price for natural gas under the former Liberal Government; but as the price went down world-wide the Government decided that it would not pass along the benefit.

Then there is the question of revenue for the provinces concerned. Will there be compensation for the money lost as a result of this Government's new energy policies? Will there be compensation for the lack of economic activity? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated last December that the Government was going to do away with the back-in provision. This, of course, was done. However, the Government is very slow to say how it will compensate Nova Scotia and Newfoundland for their resulting losses. We still have no knowledge of what amendments the Government will put forward concerning the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement or when they will be made known. As far as anyone knows there has been no dialogue on this matter. The Nova Scotia Minister of Energy is a man dangling from a 12-story window with little choice but to go along with whatever the Government offers. Purely and simply, the federal Government has hung the Province of Nova Scotia out to dry. That province has been left in a very precarious position and the federal Government is doing nothing to alleviate that situation.

So far as Newfoundland is concerned, there is a very good deposit of oil in Hibernia. As well, the recent discovery by Husky-Bow Valley increases the encouraging feelings we all have as to the future of Hibernia. However, the reduction in the world price of oil has left us somewhat concerned over what Newfoundland will receive from all this. The province has lost the back-in provision but has been told it will receive the royalties. Does that mean Newfoundland will have to wait until the world price of oil goes up before the companies actually start production? If so, what is in it for Newfoundland? Is the federal Government going to assure that province that regardless of the low price of oil it will receive some benefit from these changes? Of course, the economic stimulus resulting from the development of Hibernia will be very important. However, will the oil companies say they are going to leave the oil where it is until the world price goes up? In that case, would the federal Government sit back and allow this to happen as it did with Nova Scotia? If so, production in Hibernia will certainly not start by the target date of 1992. It will be many years after that before we see any oil production in Hibernia unless this Government is prepared to take positive steps and become a factor in encouraging production as soon as possible. It is hoped, of course, that that will happen hand in hand with meaningful changes to offshore drilling practices to ensure the safety of those working on the rigs. The Minister has said that most of the royal commission recommendations were put in place, but we know that the most glaring deficiencies have not been corrected and that the men working on the rigs are still subject to very grave and unnecessary personal risk.

Where does all this leave us with respect to this Government's policies? What is the Government doing? I agree that we certainly have to stimulate oil and gas production and I am very pleased that western Canada is now selling increased amounts of oil. We hope their gas sales will increase as well. However, where does that leave Canada? Where is this Government's commitment to security of supply? By the turn of the century most of the oil and gas production will be controlled by OPEC or communist countries. We will then be in the position we were in in 1970 of being dependent upon the OPEC countries once again. What are we going to do to counteract that? What are we going to do to safeguard our security of supply? This is very important and we have to consider it. If we do not develop the offshore and frontier oil and gas reserves, if we do not make sure that the tar sands and the heavy oil reserves are brought forward when we need them, then we will be in a very difficult position. Our readily accessible oil and gas will be sold to the U.S. and our reserves will have been seriously diminished.

The Conservatives say that their energy policy is based on five goals. The first goal is that of a stable policy framework in which energy resources can support growth for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. McDermid: Done.

Mr. MacLellan: It has not been done in Atlantic Canada or the North. Another goal was self-sufficiency and energy security.

Mr. McDermid: Done.

Mr. MacLellan: That certainly has not been done. The readily available and low-cost reserves are being developed, but nothing is being done for the long term. That commitment to self-sufficiency and energy security has been completely abandoned by this Government. Another goal was that of enhanced Canadian participation. The Government is completely doing away with Canadian participation in the offshore. Yes, the Government says there has to be 50 per cent Canadian participation at the production stage, but what about the time it is taking to get to that stage? This whole sphere of activity is going to be closed to Canadian companies.

The fourth goal was that of fair treatment for consumers and producers. Certainly there has been good treatment for producers so long as they are not Canadian. There has not been fair treatment of Canadian consumers. There is no benefit for oil and natural gas consumers in this country. Consumers were told that deregulation would mean a reduction in the price of oil at the pump, but the price went up. The Government is supposed to be looking into ways of investigating and dealing with these price increases, but once again we have heard nothing as to what progress is being made. This whole thing is getting out of hand. It is ironic, to say the least, that the multinational oil companies will always increase their prices within one day of each other and in the same amount. The consumer is being ignored. Security of supply is being ignored. Canadian oil and gas will be sold in the U.S. at a lower price than it is sold to Canadians. It is only a matter of time before that is going to become evident. It is fine to sell oil and gas in the United States. The producers must have a market for their products. There is no question about that. You cannot lock in an important resource such as that. Natural gas, for instance, means $4 billion to this country annually. We are not in a position to be able to lock in that kind of resource. We need to sell it, but we need to look after the long-term security of this country as well. That is a tremendously important feature.

I hope that the Government will remember its promises, Mr. Speaker. A few short months ago when we were debating the Canadian Oil Substitution Program and the Canadian Home Insulation Program, the Parliamentary Secretary told us in the House that it was not necessary to give people financial incentives to reduce the amount of energy consumption in their homes but that it would be done on a voluntary basis. We were told that there would be a program put forward by the Government which would promote conservation. It was proven in that debate that of all the energy money spent in the country the best value per dollar is in conservation. There is nothing even close to the value we get for conservation in the energy field. Yet, there has been no program put in place by the Government to deal with conservation. There has been nothing to substitute for that. All the Government wanted to do was to institute a money grab at the expense of the Canadian consumer and taxpayer. Any promise or commitment by the Government was thrown to the wind after the Government got its way with the Canadian consumer.

I think the Canadian consumer is becoming very jaundiced in its opinion of the Government as is indicated by all we are seeing in the press and all we are hearing from our constituents. The reason, of course, is that the Government is not taking the interest of the consumer first and foremost as it is necessary for any Government to do. By not taking the needs of the consumer first and foremost, and by not considering the consumer at all, the Government is on a catastrophic course and the people of the country are going to suffer greatly.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand on behalf of the New Democratic Party and debate this Bill today. I have heard the speech of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and of my colleague, the Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), the Liberal energy critic. I will try to deal with some different matters, although there will be some overlap.

This is an important debate although one would not know that from looking around. That fact could easily be lost in the statistics, facts and terms that will be used. Generally critics are saying that the Government has not really done very much in most areas, but they have applauded the Government for what it has done in the energy sector. I acknowledge that. I think the critics are dead wrong. In my remarks I will try to explain why I think they are wrong. I think we have an energy crisis in the making. It is just a question of time.

This Bill specifically deals with the abandonment over the next five years of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. The PGRT, as it is known, was Ottawa's most effective instrument for taxing petroleum companies which have been masters of tax loopholes. This tax worked. It raised a lot of money for the federal Government. It was not liked by the oil industry. Handing over the proceeds of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax to the oil companies, more than $2.4 billion a year, is supposed to encourage investment by the industry. This is the argument of the Government. It says it is giving all this money back to the industry to spur investment and create jobs. I believe that it is unlikely to do this because the real barrier to investment is the falling price of international oil and the glut of petroleum on the world market.

I think the real impact of this Bill, of the Government's energy policy, and of the Western Accord will be increased taxes for consumers, as my friend the Liberal energy critic, has just said. I think it will also mean cut-backs in social services in other areas because the Government is going to be starved for the money it has given to the big oil companies. I think it will also mean an end to the efforts to Canadianize one of the most important industries in Canada which has always been dominated by foreign-owned and foreign-controlled companies. One of the reasons for the National Energy Program and the motive for Canadianization was that between 1975 and 1979 foreign-owned oil companies were responsible for an outflow of $3.7 billion to their American parents. That is going to continue and it is going to increase in spades.

There is a double standard here, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the money that has been given to the oil companies. The double standard is that the federal Government's deficit is no problem when it comes to handing out money to the oil companies, but it is a problem when it comes to social programs for ordinary Canadians. At the same time as the Government gives, by its own figures, something like $5.5 billion in foregone tax revenues under the PGRT, it will have to recoup those revenues somewhere. Guess who pays. Ordinary Canadians pay. We saw evidence of that already when the Government tried to cut back on the indexation of the seniors' pensions. Only a mounted lobby by the seniors stopped that from happening. We see evidence of that now in the Government's efforts to deindex family allowances. So you have a system where—

Mr. Speaker, the ordinary Canadian is the one who has to pay for this energy policy of the Progressive Conservative Government.

And the major oil companies will receive $5.5 billion by 1990.

It is a double standard, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to give some of these figures. In the first six months of 1984 the profits went up 40 per cent over those in the same period in 1983. Those are the figures of the Petroleum Monitoring Association. There was a 22.7 per cent increase in energy industry profits in the last 12 months over the previous 12-month period. That was reported in The Globe and Mail of May 16, 1985. Of those companies which made profits, the four largest oil companies in Canada, Imperial, Shell, Gulf, and Texaco, increased their profits for the first quarter in 1985 by 24.8 per cent. That was before the Western Accord and before this Bill. The oil industry was already recovering before it received this immense giveaway. Now, with the removal of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, large profits will accrue to the oil industry with a loss of revenue to the federal Government. It is estimated that with the stepping down of the PGRT under the Western Accord, $5.26 billion will be lost to the federal treasury by the end of 1989. Peters and Company, a Calgary energy analyst house, has projected that in 1986, the loss to the federal treasury will be $430 million; $680 million in 1987; $1.36 billion in 1988; $2.79 billion in 1989 for a total of $5.26 billion by 1990. Therefore, a rich industry is receiving more money. In addition, the price of oil was deregulated in April and went to world oil prices. As a result, the various companies made money. The price of oil found before 1979 was $29.75 a barrel. The price rose to the international level which was $37 a barrel at that time. Although new oil decreased in price, the increase in price for old oil was a windfall to those producers. Who got the windfall?

Mr. Fraleigh: Who discovered it?

Mr. Waddell: I will come to that in a minute. Some 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the production by each of the major integrated oil companies was in old oil.

Imperial Oil and Texaco, both foreign owned, are this nation's largest oil producers. According to The Financial Post these companies will receive at least $50 million of additional revenue each year as a result of decontrol. The phase-out of the PGRT will result in a saving to these two companies of approximately $30 million in 1986, up to $150 million in 1989 when the tax is completely eliminated. The Minister of State for Finance did not say today that the two big winners, in addition to receiving the windfall as a result of going to world oil prices, will now receive a tax break with the elimination of the PGRT. That is not to say that these companies do not pay taxes. They are supposed to pay taxes but those companies are experts at working their books in terms of paying taxes.

John Ferguson of Southam News states:

> How can any government justify increasing sales and income taxes, higher gasoline prices and cuts in the indexing of family allowances—all in the name of spending restraint—while pumping billions out the back door to clever corporations with smart accountants?

I challenge the Government to deny those facts. According to the Government's figures, it will lose $5.5 billion by 1990 as a result of this change within the legislation we are debating today. According to Peters and Company Calgary, this figure is $5.26 billion.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) stated in the House of Commons that in the first year, the figure would be approximately $800 million. Furthermore, the western provinces agreed in the Western Accord not to take more royalties. In return for this system of vast giveaways to the oil industry, the Government gets a promise to create more jobs. There is no doubt that some jobs will be created.

This capital intensive industry has indicated that 300,000 jobs will be created. That figure is from the brief of the Canadian Petroleum Association and is used as part of the propaganda we see on television daily in the form of a progress report from the Canadian Petroleum Association. They have progressed by managing to reverse the entire energy policy of Canada and revert to an old system which existed before the first oil crisis in 1973.

My hon. friend, the energy critic from the Liberal Party, dealt with the effects on the East Coast as a result of this policy. While we will see some increased exploration and production in the offshore because the PIP grants are being phased out, we will see a system in which the multinational oil companies will dominate frontier exploration at the expense of the small Canadian companies which had a chance under the old National Energy Program. They will no longer be layers in these fields.

I recently read an article about Joe Mercier, who runs a small oil company in Alberta. It said:

> Energy Minister Carney didn't know what she was doing, giving away the store. The oil industry did a great job with several years of full-page newspaper ads, containing all the catch phrases that Carney used—engine of growth, market-oriented prices and end discriminatory taxes.

This was stated by an oil man. He said:

> Small and medium-size Canadian companies do the lion's share of drilling in Western Canada, thanks in part to federal government exploration grants to be phased out under the new energy deal.

He gave an example:

> —in 1984, smallish Universal, had revenues of $25 million and spent $15 million drilling 103 wells.
> By contrast, TexacoCanada Inc.—200 times larger than Universal—spent only ten times as much on exploration, drilling 53 wells in 1984 at a cost of $161 million.
> Texaco Canada also handed out $156 million in cash dividends to shareholders—92 per cent of which went to its U.S. parent, Texaco Inc. of New York.

And another $500 million flowed to its parent to "buy" a Canadian subsidiary Texaco Inc. already owned.

The Government has given the biggest windfall to Texaco, which is perhaps the worst spender in the oil patch. Imperial, while a better spender, will also receive a windfall.

The consumers are the ones who will suffer. They are beginning to realize this because I am beginning to receive letters concerning the increase in gasoline prices. I recently visited Saint-Jean, Quebec.

I was in Saint-Jean the other day, Mr. Speaker, and it was 60 cents a litre, while a litre of gas now costs 57 cents in Vancouver, British Columbia.

[English]

What we are seeing is increased prices for consumers.

I suggest that a matter which has gone unnoticed in the press and in the House of Commons throughout this debate concerns the fact that the basic issue in an energy program for Canada is the split of the energy pie between the federal Government, the provincial Government and the industry. A basic reason why the National Energy Program was developed in 1980 was that the federal Government was receiving virtually no money from the oil patch while giving more money in tax advantages and tax breaks.

I have written to the new Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to obtain a breakdown of the energy revenue between the federal Government, provincial Government and the industry under the Western Accord. I am told that these records are no longer kept and that the figures are speculative. While I criticised Marc Lalonde in this House many times, he always provided the figures. We are unable to obtain those figures from the present Government. That is a serious problem. As I suspect, the Government will be very short of revenues. I see the chairman of the Finance Committee in the House. I hope he will speak in this debate. If you give away $5.6 billion how do you recoup? What an immense gamble it is that the industry will create jobs and pay a lot more taxes without any control over it. We are dealing largely with a foreign industry that could send that money out of the country in dividends. How can you give a guarantee at a time when oil prices are falling? It is an immense gamble. It will not work and we will suffer.

I want to say a few words why I think there is a future energy crisis in the making. Canada is blessed with all the energy sources known to humankind. Canada is actually energy self-sufficient right now even in crude oil. We export one-third of our production of crude oil and one-quarter of our natural gas. We are back into the old system before the 1970 oil crisis of exporting to beat hell, if I might put it that way. It will cost us in the future.

When you look at the Western Accord you will see that it deregulates the price of oil. It gives massive windfalls and tax breaks to the oil companies and it substantially weakens the control of exports of oil and gas. I draw Hon. Members' attention to an article in the Ottawa Citizen for Saturday, November 2, 1985 written by Les Whittington. It is a very perceptive article. Mr. Whittington quotes the opening words of the National Energy Program:

This is a set of national decisions by the Government of Canada.

The National Energy Program did not work as Mr. Whittington says. He said the program was hurt by the downturn in oil company activity in the western provinces, the fierce defence of provincial resource rights mounted by Alberta, criticism from the United States and the well-heeled oil lobby, and the scandalous air of wasteful spending associated with the NEP's generous exploration grants. As well there was the price miscalculation that oil would go up to $80 a barrel, which never happened and which really ended the National Energy Program. Notice the opening words of the National Energy Program: "This is a set of national decisions by the Government of Canada".

We now have an energy policy that is made by the oil industry, largely in New York of in the provinces. That is the difference between the National Energy Program and the program we have now.

The National Energy Program did make Petro-Canada into one of the largest gasoline retailers and refiners in the country. It expanded Canadian ownership of the industry from 28 per cent to 47 per cent. It turned up the reserves in Hibernia and Venture. It had those positive aspects but it had negative aspects as well. What we have done, to quote Mr. Whittington, is:

—passed the economic levers over to the companies with no way to guarantee results other than vague threats of renewed high taxes.

That is the gamble of which I was speaking and that is what we have done. In Mr. Whittington's words we have returned to a situation in many ways closer to what existed prior to the energy crisis that erupted in 1973.

Let me talk a little bit about that crisis, Mr. Speaker. There are many issues in energy, nuclear, hydro, conservation, alternate fuels, to name only a few. In my view the key energy issue, and it has always been key, is the level of our oil reserves and consequently the pace of our oil exports. Gas and oil are non-renewable resources. We are rapidly depleting the light sweet crude oil in Canada's western sedimentary basin despite a more than 1,000 per cent increase in wellhead prices from $3 to $38 a barrel.

Our accessible conventional crude oil reserves have gone steadily downhill since 1969 and they are still going down. This year we are exporting, as I said, about 30 per cent to 33 per cent of our domestic oil production. The world is now burning its oil at a rate of 900 billion gallons a year. One-fourth of the recoverable oil that existed when the first well was drilled just over a century ago has been burned. Exploration has already found about two-thirds of the oil it is likely ever to discover. At the present rate of consumption, there is roughly a 60 year supply remaining of world oil. The United States, which consumes one-fourth of the world's oil production and which has only one-tenth of its oil reserves will look increasingly for its oil supplies, my friend was saying, to the Persian Gulf where what is left of the world's oil will be increasingly concentrated. You know the security problems there, Mr. Speaker. As we in Canada deplete our conventional oil resources, we will have to go further into the tar sands, the heavy oil, the Beaufort Sea and Hibernia. That oil will be more expensive to produce and it will cost consumers more money. Ordinary Canadian consumers will once again pay dearly. Geoffrey Edge, the retiring Chairman of the National Energy Board has forecast:

An increase in oil prices in real terms in the 1990s.

The National Energy Board has forecast that Canada will rely on the tar sands and the frontiers for more than two-thirds of its oil by the end of the century. Yet the oil companies still follow a consistent pattern. They want to export to get more cash. That is why they want to get rid of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. They want more cash to pay for further exploration. Once they find the oil, they push and lobby to export it. There is big money to be made largely by foreign companies and they make a big buck, about $4 billion a year in natural gas alone. Canada is now the second most important oil supplier to the United States.

Tommy Douglas, when he was the NDP energy critic, once said that while a person can be forgiven one mistake, it takes a fool to make the same mistake twice. That applies to a country too, but that is what Canada is doing.

The Western Accord, as it is embodies in this Bill before Parliament, is a repeat of the mistakes of the 1960s and early 1970s. Quick exploitation of non-renewable resources, supported by tax breaks and other incentives, exported at fire sale prices to make a quick buck for largely foreign corporations is what Conservative energy policy is. That is going to cause us trouble in the future.

I have already talked about the winners and the losers in terms of deregulation. I have talked about the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax and why it was disliked by the oil industry because it was so effective in capturing revenue from that industry.

I have already said how much money the federal Government would lose. John Helliwell, a UBC economist, concluded that following deregulation, the rate of return in the oil industry would be well above, and I say this to the Parliamentary Secretary, average even without the deregulation and the end of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax.

This is an industry whose profits are already up. We are already paying more money at the gas pump. We are paying 2 cents a litre more as a result of the Western Accord. Another 1 cent a litre is going on effective January, 1986. We are paying on the pretext of paying for the indexation of Old Age Security.

What we should have instead of paying 1 cent a litre at the gas pump is a windfall profits tax on the oil industry. We should have tailored the PGRT, and I say this to the Member for Calgary, so that smaller Canadian companies could get exemptions and tax breaks making the big majors pay the taxes. Instead we are going with a policy that is in the opposite direction. I want to see jobs in the oil patch too but I want to see it done through small Canadian companies which, to my mind, are the best investors.

The Minister said in this House that the Western Accord will be the engine of economic growth and there will be up to 300,000 jobs. From where does that figure come? The phrase the engine of economic growth comes from the Canadian Petroleum Association, the lobby group for big oil. It comes from a brief to the Senate committee submitted by the Association in April, 1984. I wanted to quote the President of the Canadian Petroleum Association, but I do not seem to be able to find it. Basically, he was surprised at how much money the industry was able to get from the Government. As a matter of fact, he was shocked that it got everything it pretty well wanted.

Where is the evidence of job creation? I filed an application under the Freedom of Information Act and tried to find out whether the Department had studies. One would think that if $5.6 billion was to be given to the oil industry by 1990, there would be some studies on how many jobs would be created. One would think that they would not take the word of the Canadian Petroleum Association. It would be like Little Red Riding Hood taking the word of the wolf that she would be safe—"You are fine, little Red Riding Hood", says the wolf at the door. One would think that the Department would have some studies, but I found out that there were no such studies. In fact, the Department indicated that it had a compilation of other people's studies but noted that the prediction of the number of jobs to be created were based on "outdated and possibly unrealistic assumptions".

What kind of policy is it other than just a giveaway? Indeed, we have returned to the bad old days which saw us so unprepared for the last energy crisis. That is simply not good enough for the 1990s. This is why I think we will face another energy crisis, and that is why this policy has the seeds of the making of a crisis.

Disregarding present market price fluctuations, I believe we are seeing the underlying patterns like those which led to the 1973-74 crisis, the first OPEC crisis, and the 1979-80 prices. That is why we had a recession in Canada. The increase in prices was the source of much of our trouble and the great suffering of our people in the recession of 1981-82. In my view we do not have to vacillate between panic and complacency. We do not have to be manipulated by the big oil industry. We can do better. We must have security of supply. We must end our need to import oil in the future. We cannot continue to export a third of our production of sweet crude oil.

In the view of the New Democratic Party, the vehicle for doing this is significant Canadian ownership—public, private and co-operative. We can use our abundance of energy resources—and as I started my speech by saying, we have every one known to mankind—to give us economic growth and to make us the richest country in the world. It will add to national unity by opening up the North, the frontiers, the East Coast and the tar sands. We should not export it for a quick buck. We should not return to the pre-1970 policy which failed in the past and did not pass the muster when it came to an energy crisis.

That is what the Bill is about. This is one of the most important debates we will have this year in Parliament, and it was a privilege to be able to speak in it.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in the debate on Bill C-82. Today, we are putting an end to one of the most unpopular taxes in the history of our country. The Bill incorporates the legislation to remove the petroleum and gas revenue tax or the PGRT, as it has come to be known.

I was very interested in the comments of my two colleagues with whom I work fairly closely, the energy critics for the Liberal Party and for the New Democratic Party. I will come to their particular arguments a little later in my discourse. There are a few points I should like to make before I deal with what they had to say. Suffice it to say, if I can just make a passing comment before I make my prepared remarks—

Mr. Keeper: Be nice.

Mr. McDermid: I will be nice. I found both speeches to be very interesting but very contradictory. They contradicted themselves many, many times during their addresses. I will try to cover that a little later in my remarks.

During the last general election, the Progressive Conservative Party made a commitment to the people of Canada to rid ourselves of the highly controversial and divisive National Energy Program introduced by the previous Government, a program which robbed Canadians of opportunities and very seriously impaired the economic and energy potential of Canada. My Party has always supported the goals of the National Energy Program. I think everyone in the country supports those goals of opportunity, fairness and energy security. However, we adamantly opposed the measures of the National Energy Program by which these goals were sought and the manner in which it discriminated against the regions of the country.

Canadians were presented with a choice on energy policy a year ago last summer. They voted for a new approach. I campaigned on it in my riding of Brampton-Georgetown. I know my colleagues from Ontario, Quebec and right across the country campaigned on a change to the National Energy Program. Canadians responded in spades; they voted for an end to the National Energy Program.

During our first year in office, we worked hard to fulfil our promise to change Canada's energy policy. The Bill before the House today represents but one element of a new energy policy for Canada. These new energy initiatives have become a reality through the Western and Atlantic Accords and then, more recently, through the frontier energy policy statement and the agreement on natural gas prices and markets. These energy initiatives have truly marked the end of the National Energy Program and ensured a replacement by a fair, non-discriminatory and constructive energy policy.

In establishing a new energy policy for Canada, it was most critical to get the Canadian petroleum industry back on its feet again. We wanted to return the industry to the days before the National Energy Program, to the days when the Canadian petroleum industry was a major source for investment in job creation, to the days when this industry was clearly the engine of economic growth for Canada. To assure that we could achieve our goals of national reconciliation and economic renewal, we consulted all Canadians, including members of the oil and gas industry. The message from the petroleum industry rang loud and clear. I might point out to the Hon. Member in the New Democratic Party that large and small firms, Canadian companies, and foreign-owned multinationals all sent the same message. They wanted a system of less Government intervention by way of lower taxes and lower Government grants. That is what they asked for.

With the Western Accord and the subsequent energy announcements, we have introduced an approach which relies less on Government hand-outs and intervention and more on the opportunities provided in the market-place. This approach also reflects our commitment to implement an oil and gas taxation system which recognizes bottom-line profits. "Profits" is not a dirty word to this Party. It should not be a dirty word in this country. Profits rely less on Government hand-outs and intervention. More opportunities are provided in the market-place, and we recognize bottom-line profits as the basis for assessing taxes. The failure to recognize profits was clearly one of the major shortcomings of the PGRT tax.

I would like to give a brief history of this tax if I might, just to put the Bill in its proper perspective. The PGRT was introduced in the National Energy Program effective January 1, 1981, at an 8 per cent level. After only one year, the rate was doubled to 16 per cent, although many taxpayers were given a resource allowance of 25 per cent so that they paid an effective tax rate of 12 per cent on their net operating revenues. This represented a 50 per cent increase in one year. I suppose it is fair to say that the PGRT became the single most unpopular tax of all of those taxes introduced as part of the previous Government's National Energy Program revenue-sharing scheme. That occurred for a number of reasons. First it was a tax on net revenues and not on profits. As such, it became a very blunt instrument for grabbing revenues for the federal Treasury. No recognition was given, for example, to the high capital costs associated with bringing on new oil and gas supplies. If anyone has taken the time to visit, as I have, some of the new exploration which is going on, not only in this country but in other countries as well, one would soon begin to realize the tremendous high capital costs which are associated with bringing on new oil and gas supplies. Second, the producing provinces as owners of the resources always objected to the federal Government imposing a discriminatory tax only on their industry and their resource. No special taxes were imposed on hydro, nickel or iron. They were just imposed on the resource of oil.

Third, to add insult to injury, the same income was taxed twice, once by the PGRT and then again by corporate income tax. Unexpected hardships resulted for many companies due to the double taxation of resource income. Most importantly, however, the PGRT reduced the incentive to reinvest because it was not profit sensitive. This insensitivity to profits led to a very poor investment climate and an unwillingness to invest in what otherwise might be attractive opportunities. The PGRT was a major factor which led to the downturn of the oil and gas investment activity after 1980. The Canadian reinvestment ratio in the petroleum industry fell from 147 per cent in 1980 to 83 per cent in 1983. That is a decline of nearly 45 per cent.

Western Canadian drilling activity in 1982 was 30 per cent below its 1980 level. Who can forget night after night seeing pictures on the national news of those Canadian oil rigs leaving this country for the United States where there was a better opportunity. They were not the big oil companies, the multinationals. They were the little guys out west who provided the rigs and did the exploration and drilling. They were the little guys who provided the supplies. They were the small business people of the west who were absolutely destroyed by the National Energy Program. The National Energy Program sent them out of this country and now we are trying to get them back. We are now saying to them they are welcome. We are saying: "You have the expertise in the oil industry. You are welcome to come back to this country. We want you back here and not in the United States. This is where you belong".

What else was going on, Mr. Speaker? Western Canadian drilling activity was down 30 per cent. Canadian exploration expenditures in 1982 were only 60 per cent of what they were in 1980. Of course, this downturn had a tremendous ripple effect throughout the country in lost job opportunities. In Ontario, the province I come from, there were tremendous job opportunities lost in the manufacturing industry in Ontario. These figures are well documented, I might add.

In 1982, the former Government, God bless it, finally recognized that there has been damage done. It actually admitted it, albeit, timidly. But rather than concede to the error of its ways and get rid of the tax, it made a few ad hoc changes. It reduced, for one year, the effective rate of PGRT from 12 per cent to 11 per cent, a dramatic change of 1 per cent. It introduced a new quarter a million dollar tax credit for incorporated working interests and it reduced the PGRT rate on existing tar sands plants to 8 per cent for two years. The response from industry and the western producing provinces to these measures was predictable. None of these measures did much to change the basic nature of the PGRT. It was still a blunt, onerous tax which was not profit based.

Following the 1982 announcements, it took the former Government another year before one small step was taken to make the PGRT even partly sensitive to profitability. The Budgets of the former Government were a real delight, by the way, Mr. Speaker. You were not in the House between 1980 and 1984, but I can tell you that we always looked forward to the Liberal Budgets. They were comic relief in what is a very serious place otherwise.

The April 19, 1983 Budget proposed some capital expenses for enhanced oil recovery projects be deductible in the calculation of PGRT. I believe my colleagues in the House today are willing to admit that production of oil by enhanced techniques is expensive. It was clear that under the combined burden of the 12 per cent PGRT and high provincial royalties—my NDP friend alluded to the fact that the provinces should put on higher royalties which I found very interesting, at least that is how I interpreted his speech—these projects would not have taken place. The result would have been even higher rates of unemployment in an industry which was ready to get back to work.

This fundamental change in the character of the PGRT, along with more profit sensitive provincial royalties, was viewed positively by the industry and some new, so-called "mini mega" projects were started. The tragedy, however, was that it took so long to recognize the damage that a net revenue tax could do to a capital intensive industry such as the Canadian petroleum industry. We lost many jobs and many opportunities for new jobs in the interim period.

It was also of major concern to industry that no changes had been implemented by the previous Government to the PGRT Act or regulations to even include these ad hoc changes. The Government did not even make the changes in legislative form. The industry had to work with the uncertainty off draft legislation and regulations. Nothing was permanent. In fact, this Government enacted this backlog of legislative changes to the PGRT Act and regulations shortly after we began our term in office.

Unlike the previous Government, we do not intend to keep the industry in suspense. We announced our intent to phase out the PGRT in the Western Accord. We are now following up on these commitments with the appropriate legislative changes as outlined in the Bill before the House today. To this end, the current Bill will implement a number of changes which were announced in the Western Accord and will have an important and positive impact on the industry. These changes include: The phase-out of the PGRT for existing conventional production and for synthetic oil production such that by 1989 this tax will be totally eliminated; the immediate exemption from PGRT of new production of oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids and major new energy projects. New production includes production from wells drilled or deepened after March 31, 1985, an incremental production from new water flood and tertiary oil recovery projects.

During the PGRT phase-out period, new exploration and development expenses not immediately usable for federal corporate income tax purposes will be allowed to reduce PGRT otherwise payable. The implementation of the PGRT offset provision requires certain consequential amendments to the Income Tax Act. This provision is of particular benefit to many smaller companies which are not currently paying corporate income tax. The first $10,000 of an individual's production royalty income will not be subject to PGRT. These amendments are designed to eliminate the PGRT by 1989 for the industry in general and immediately for new production. During its phase-out period, a greater degree of profit sensitivity will be introduced into the tax than has previously existed.

Another major amendment contained in the Bill before us deals with the Incremental Oil Revenue Tax which is levied under the PGRT Act. Around here we call it IORT. We have these crazy names and short forms for everything. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the Incremental Oil Revenue Tax was introduced in the 1981 Canada-Alberta energy agreement as a form of windfall profit tax. The tax was so onerous and poorly constructed, however, that it was suspended on June 1, 1982, only five months after it became effective, for all but one company operating in Canada. Another discriminatory element was therefore introduced into the already very discriminatory National Energy Program regime. As previously announced in the Western Accord and in the May 23, 1985, Budget, in order to rectify this inequity and remove an unnecessary hindrance to investment, this Bill proposes to repeal the IORT for all production after December 31, 1984.

Canadians have been very supportive of the thrust of the energy policy changes introduced by the Government. The reaction to our initiatives has been very positive. I would like to set the minds of opposition Members at ease after all the doom and gloom we have heard from them today. We heard how terribly things were going in the oil patch and with oil exploration. I am pleased to announce that today, oil exploration in western Canada is greater than at any time in our history. Since the Western Accord, exploration activity in Alberta has increased by 30 per cent compared to the same period a year ago. Over-all gas investment intentions are up by $2 billion, an increase of more than 25 per cent over last year in just one year. Deregulated oil and gas markets are creating opportunities for both producers and consumers.

The Government has put a system into place which will provide jobs and investment opportunities for all Canadians. It is a non-discriminatory system which rewards success and initiative and is attractive to international investors. The commitment to changing Canada's energy policy as promised in the election campaign of 1984 has been fulfilled by the Government. The energy tax and pricing systems have been overhauled and the investment climate has improved significantly. The oil and gas industry is again becoming a leading sector in creating jobs and investment opportunities throughout the country.

Members of the NDP want Canadian explorers to find oil and gas and then to leave it in the ground. I would like to know what would encourage explorers to explore for more oil and gas if what they find just sits there and they cannot gain from their finds. To me that does not make sense, but that is the NDP policy.

Our friends in the Liberal Party are concerned. They are saying that Canadian companies cannot compete, Canadian companies cannot explore, Canadian companies cannot, cannot. We have faith in Canadian companies. We believe in their expertise. They will participate and they will enjoy the benefits of what we have done to the National Energy Program. Canadian companies will fare as well as or maybe better than they have in the past under this regime.

I hear Members of the NDP saying that our energy industry is mostly foreign controlled and that that is terrible. It is 53 per cent foreign controlled and 47 per cent Canadian controlled. That is not an industry that is largely controlled by foreigners or by those terrible people that do not come from within our own borders.

Mr. Waddell: Misleading figures.

Mr. McDermid: It is completely inaccurate to make those wild statements. He should not do that. He also said that we will be selling our energy off the borders for less than we will to Canadian consumers.

Mr. Waddell: I didn't say that.

Mr. McDermid: No, I am talking about my friend from the Liberal Party. That statement is just not accurate. We are now talking about market-sensitive pricing. We will be paying market price for our resource. I think it is only right that we should be paying market price for our resource.

Our friend from the Liberal Party has said that we will not have any exploration. It is interesting to note that at the conference on energy that took place in Calgary last week, one of the experts said that if the PIP program had not been in place, we would have had much smarter exploration offshore and Hibernia might be on stream now.

Mr. MacLellan: Oh, come on.

Mr. McDermid: He did. He said we would have had much smarter exploration. The Hon. Member knows as does my friend, the hon. critic from the NDP, that a lot of that exploration money was wasted. They know that and they have complained about it.

Mr. Waddell: I said that.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. I agree with you. There has not been smart exploration. Now we will have smart exploration.

I see that my time is up. In conclusion, may I say that Bill C-82 is an important step in the implementation of the changes announced by the Government, changes designed to establish a solid framework for jobs and investment in Canada. We have faith in the Canadian people and in the energy industry. We believe they are going to make this thing work.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question regarding all the money that the Government has given to the oil companies and taken away from the taxpayers, supposedly, as my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has said, to create jobs as set out in the Canadian Petroleum Association study of April, 1980. Could the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary tell us just how many jobs have been created or how many jobs are being created?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that since the Progressive Conservative Party was elected on September 4, 1984, there have been 330,000 new jobs created in Canada. That is performance. A lot of those jobs were created in the energy industry. A lot of those small business people are back to work supplying—

Mr. MacLellan: How many?

Mr. McDermid: I just spoke about the exploration that is going on in the West.

Mr. MacLellan: How many?

Mr. McDermid: I gave him the figures. Obviously he did not write them down so I will give them to him again if he would like. Activity is starting again. Jobs are starting and the rigs are starting to work. Exploration is up by 30 per cent. The small supplier businesses in the West are back to work. They are happy there. The Liberal energy critic should go out West to see what is going on out there. Maybe then he could rise in the House to speak a little more authoritatively on energy.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of comments to make and a question to ask. I will not say that I appreciated the Hon. Member's speech. It was a real debate. He was making his points and I disagreed with some of them. However, I did agree with some of the points he made as well.

I did not say that the provinces should put on higher royalties. I may have confused the issue when I said that the Western Accord contained a clause indicating that the provinces should not put on higher royalties to take away any benefits that were being passed on to the oil companies and I made the point that that was an additional windfall for the oil companies. I would say that that is part of the Conservative strategy of job creation.

In terms of exports, I am not saying that there should be no exports, I am just saying that we should be careful. When we are exporting one-third of our crude oil production while there was an oil crisis only seven years ago, we have to be very careful.

Finally, regarding the figures about Canadian control, I mentioned that the industry was indeed 47 per cent Canadian controlled. However, those figures are a bit misleading because they include the downstream, the gas stations and so on. We have to think of the upstream consisting of the companies that produce the oil and control the exploration, the real key. In my view that is less than 47 per cent Canadian-owned. I put it to the Hon. Member that if the Government plans to give up $5.6 billion by 1990 where will it receive that sort of revenue? Will it not in fact lead to placing more taxes on consumers at the pumps or lead to a cut-back in social programs?

• (1730)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I suppose there are all types of taxes being placed on petroleum products these days. I noticed that the Liberal Government of Ontario in its last Budget placed a sizeable tax on gasoline. That is where much of the price increase has taken place lately. It is interesting to note that the Liberal critic talked about gas stations setting higher prices. On my trip from the airport to Brampton, which is a distance of about 10 to 15 kilometres, it was interesting to see about five different prices at the same company's gas stations along the way. Thus, the market is working, as is the competitive spirit. I invite everyone to come to Brampton because all summer long we were paying between 40 cents and 42 cents a litre for unleaded gasoline. We were actually doing better than Calgarians as far as gas was concerned.

I can tell the Hon. Member for one thing that we are not paying out as many PIP grants, which is where some of the money is coming from. We are cutting back in Government expenditures and, thus, we do not need as much revenue. There is increased activity going on in the country today. With the statistics which are coming out today, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, Pierre Trudeau would have killed for the same type of statistics. Our economy is going extremely well now, thank you very much. Deficits are falling and incomes are increasing. People are getting back to work. Industries are being expanded and people are paying taxes because they are now making a little profit. I know that is a foreign concept to members of the NDP, but profit is not a dirty word with the Conservatives.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party do not quibble with the word "profit". We think it is important. We also believe it is important to have one's priorities straight in that a Government and a country is measured, to a large extent, by the way in which it treats the disadvantaged of society and by the way it sets it priorities vis-à-vis those disadvantaged. The Conservative Government is handing over $5.6 billion to the oil industry. We have received estimates that oil profits will rise by 160 per cent as a result of the ditching of the National Energy Program. We know what impact these measures will have on oil companies and their shareholders. We know that those shareholders will become rich—very rich. However, what will happen to the Canadians who are not fortunate enough to own shares in those oil companies? What will happen to the millions of Canadians who are at or near the poverty line?

We know what the Conservative Government thinks about senior citizens. We know what the Government thinks about families. They do not take priority because as far as the Government is concerned those who own shares in oil companies are far more important than the disadvantaged in our society. That is the way the Government thinks. It gives $5.6 billion away to the oil companies thereby increasing their profits by 160 per cent. It does that on the one hand while on the other it attacks the senior citizens of Canada by trying to deindex their pensions. It attacks families in Canada by trying to deindex family allowances. Where is the fairness? Where is the justice? There is not any because the Government does not believe in fairness.

Mr. McDermid: Where is the question?

Mr. Nunziata: The Government does not believe in justice. It believes in its rich and affluent friends on Bay Street.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Like John Turner and Jean Chrétien.

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary who appears to be wallowing in a quagmire of hypocrisy. In all his rhetoric can he tell the people of Canada what is fair about attacking families and senior citizens on the one hand and giving oil companies and shareholders in those companies billions of dollars in profits on the other? Can the Hon. Member justify that to his constituents in Brampton? Can he justify it to all the Canadians who will suffer as a result of this regressive measure taken by an uncaring and uncompassionate Conservative Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, that was fabulous. That was the greatest show I have even seen. The Hon. Member is now sitting down and giggling. We know that he was not serious at all. I would like to given him a couple of examples of a caring Government. Some two weeks ago we turned the sod in Brampton for a shelter which is to be built for battered women. It is being financed by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is something which we have needed in our community for quite some time. I could not talk the previous Government into supporting it but this Government did, I can tell the Hon. Member that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: A couple of weeks ago my Government announced some co-op housing which is sadly needed in the small town of Georgetown. This project is supported by CMHC. So all the baloney that the Hon. Member tries to sell to the Canadian people about this not being a caring Government is so much hogwash. I know what I would like to say it is—el toro pooh-pooh.

Mr. Nunziata: El Tory pooh-pooh.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member gives much misleading information. He know full well that moneys are going to create jobs in order to get industry going again. That is very important to a country which was in the depths of depression during the last Liberal regime. That is the reason the Canadian people kicked them out. The Hon. Member talks about uncaring! That was a Government which did not care about a thing except itself. It only cared about its bailiwick. It said "Lets keep this part of Canada fighting with this part of Canada and then we can maintain power." Well, it did not work and it will never work again. My Party is the only Party which has unified the country over the last 20 years. We are doing a damn good job of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Chair would remind the Hon. Member that Spanish is not an official language of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I find it unbelievable listening to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) speak about fairness and compassion. It is amusing to hear him talk about what happened a year ago at the polls. Perhaps the Hon. Member and Conservative Members opposite should be reminded of the last Gallup poll and the results of a few other polls which have been released. Those polls show that the confidence which Canadians have in the Conservative Government is dwindling—dwindling at a rapid pace. In fact, the Conservatives are in a free fall with respect to national support. Hon. Members opposite recognize that, which is why we have so many glum and long faces staring at us from across the way. They recognize that the people of Canada are beginning to see through the veneer. They are beginning to realize that they were handed a con job by the Conservative Government.

The reason I am standing here this afternoon is to speak on Bill C-82, not to overly criticize the Conservative Government. I am quite confident, as are other members of my caucus, that the people of Canada will judge this Government by its actions and vote accordingly in the next election. In the few minutes I have I would like to speak a bit about the history of the National Energy Program. As Hon. Members are aware, the NEP, produced by a Liberal Government, had three basic goals.

Mr. Malone: None of which it met.

Mr. Nunziata: The first goal was to boost domestic control of a foreign dominated industry. I challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to criticize that goal. It was because of the NEP that Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry climbed to 47 per cent—

Mr. Malone: False!

Mr. Nunziata: —this year from 29 per cent in 1980. What is wrong with Canadians controlling their own destiny? It is not out of nationalistic or patriotic sentiments that I talk about foreign control. However, if we look at the practical impact of increased Canadian ownership of that industry, simple logic tells us that the profits will stay here in Canada and not be siphoned off to the U.S. or other foreign countries. When we talk about profit we say there is good profit and bad profit. Good profit is that which is reinvested in Canada for Canadians to create Canadian jobs. Profit which does us little if any good is profit which belongs to each and every Canadian as a result of the hard work and trials and tribulations of our labour force, particularly from natural resources, but which is then sent south of the border to the head office. We do not believe that is right. We believe that there is a need for that profit to remain in Canada. Therefore, I challenge Members opposite to prove me wrong when I say that the goal of the NEP of increasing Canadian control of that industry succeeded.

Another main goal of the NEP was to give Canadians a larger share of petroleum revenues. Back in 1980, when the program was introduced, oil company revenues were increasing at an extraordinary pace. Was it unreasonable to ask that those revenues be shared by each and every Canadian from one coast to the other? There is nothing unreasonable about that. Surely Canadians should share in that industry's profits. Canada wanted a larger share of the profits from the energy industry.

The third main goal of the NEP was to achieve oil self-sufficiency. I challenge Members opposite to quibble with that goal.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating my time is up. I just want to reiterate how ill-conceived and unfair this measure is. Then again, is it any wonder when you are dealing with Conservatives who talk about fairness and justice and equity? They just do not care.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.15 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's order paper.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ABANDONMENT OF PRACTICE OF LEAVING CAR ENGINES RUNNING ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That this House urge all Members of Parliament and drivers of other vehicles on Parliament Hill to abandon the practice of leaving vehicle engines running within the precincts of Parliament Hill, and invite the Senate to adopt a similar motion to this effect, as such practice adds to environmental damage and, further, the Government should launch a public education campaign inviting all Canadians to do the same and to invite the provincial Governments to take the same steps; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you have just read it, the purpose of this motion is very simple and straightforward. It urges the abandonment of the practice of leaving motor vehicle engines running within the precincts of Parliament Hill and, by way of example, urges Canadians at large to do the same. I will explain why this is important by way of a brief talk on what happens when engines run, particularly at idle. They in fact emit substances which are not considered to be very healthy. They emit carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, hydrocarbons, lead and soot. These substances contribute directly to damaging our health as well as to the formation of acid rain and smog.

As you know, the health hazards of lead are well documented, particularly regarding children. We do know that lead is one of the ingredients utilized in the cheaper grade of gasoline. When we speak of nitrogen oxides, we are speaking of a substance which damages our lungs, can cause throat and nose problems, and has been proven statistically to aggravate asthmatic conditions as well as increasing the number of admissions to hospitals in certain meteorological conditions in our cities. On a larger scale, looking at the phenomena of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions together, we know through scientific research that they contribute to the formation of acid rain. In eastern Canada alone this has been measured to the extent of 9 per cent, this representing the contribution to acid rain formation by the emission of cars. The effects of acid rain are extremely well known to Canadians, Americans and Europeans. I will indicate the fact that forests are seriously damaged by the effects of acid rain, that buildings and structures are affected, that salmon spawning grounds are particularly affected in the springtime and that the combined effect of ozone on agriculture has already lead to considerable losses in production as measured in southwestern Ontario in particular. I should also mention that the impact of acid rain on sugar maple stands in Ontario and Quebec has been negative.

When we talk of acid rain we talk of a broad economic issue. We talk about damage done to a variety of natural resources. As well, we talk about the fact that our health is affected by this industrial phenomenon. When we consider the question of motivators we must include gasoline engines, diesel engines and the like.

The scale of the problem as covered by this particular motion applies only to the Hill because the Hill is a microcosm of the larger world beyond its gate. I am sure you have noticed that every day a considerable number of vehicles contribute to the problem of pollution on the Hill. I am told that up to 3,000 tour buses per year bring people to visit Parliament. There can be as many as 116 on a given day. Of course, the average is lower and the numbers vary through the year. Buses keep their engines idling while the passengers tour the Parliament Buildings.

There are several RCMP vehicles, marked and unmarked, as well as patrol cars which survey the premises from various vantage points. I have noticed, as you must have too, that when they are stationary they frequently leave their engines idling. There are some 40 Ministers' cars, probably the largest fleet in the history of Parliament. Depending on the weather, the car engines tend to be left running. The drivers sit in the cars when the weather is cold, or stand beside them, and leave the engines running while waiting for their next assignment.

The question, Mr. Speaker, is what are the solutions? We all realize that we have a cold climate and that we want to keep the cars warm. For that matter, we like to keep cars cool in the hot weather. However, let us deal with the cold weather because that is the most uncomfortable of the two. I would like to bring to your attention the fact that it is possible to buy fan heaters which run off the car's battery and provide adequate heat for people sitting in the car. These car heater units retail at approximately $70 apiece. It seems to me that every Canadian who is attracted by the idea of finding a solution to the problem of acid rain ought to think of the possibility of installing a car heater of this kind. This, of course, would apply mostly to the RCMP cars on the Hill and to the trucks that idle while delivering.

In the case of Ministerial drivers, I would suggest that provision could be made for them to wait in a room inside the buildings, thus eliminating the need for them to keep the engines running in order to be comfortable. With regard to the tour buses on the Hill, they ought to be asked by whoever is in charge of the parliamentary traffic division to turn their engines off in order to reduce discharges into the air which, as I mentioned earlier, are particularly strong in the summertime. There may be some discomfort for passengers who return to the bus and do not find the interior as cool as they would like, but it is a minor sacrifice considering the example that they would be setting to the nation by adhering to these rules.

It seems to me that MPs could also set an example on the Hill for Canadians to follow. Of course, in particular, cabinet Ministers may want to adopt the good practice of turning engines off when they are idling in the hope that this practice will be adopted and copied by others. In society we all take leadership for example, and there is definitely a lot of leadership that could be given by cabinet Ministers in this respect.

Outside the gates of Parliament Hill, Mr. Speaker, we would like to ask all Canadians to turn their engines off while waiting in their cars other than in normal driving patterns. This applies to all vehicles, but it seems to me that it would have a particular impact in bus terminals and at taxi stands.

If this motion were to be adopted, it would be necessary to have a public education program. That initiative would require provincial and municipal co-operation with the federal Government. I submit that the three levels of Government should promote the idea of shutting off engines through an advertising campaign which could be carried out in local newspapers, by way of radio and even television. Parallel to that, Mr. Speaker, there could be a campaign of stickers promoting the fact the driver of a vehicle is concerned about acid rain. The slogan could read: "I do not idle. I fight acid rain". In the towns, villages, and cities across Canada we could also seek the co-operation of driving schools which could promote this idea while instructing new drivers. There could be another form of public education with the help of service clubs which could be asked to reward environmentally conscious drivers through a variety of initiatives at certain times of the year. This would stress the fact that keeping emissions to a minimum while idling has long-term beneficial effects on human health.

The Department of the Environment, at the federal level, could launch an annual contest among schools across Canada in which the young people in the schools, our future drivers, could develop creative ideas on how to reduce the habit of idling a car while waiting. While this is not exclusively an urban problem, it is magnified by the larger number of vehicles in urban situations.

In summary, eliminating the habit of idling a car engine needlessly is one important way in which every Canadian car owner can contribute to the reduction of acid rain. Of course, there are other methods, including using unleaded gasoline, accelerating moderately, frequently checking tire pressure, observing speed limits and tuning the engine regularly. Last, but not least, it is increasingly important to install a three way catalytic converter which has the effect of virtually eliminating the nitrogen oxide emissions of a car whether idling or running on the roads. This would considerably reduce the negative effects of pollution that results from the running of a combustion engine.

I am using the example of idling the engine of a car as a symbolic measure and I am using the territory covered by Parliament Hill as a symbolic area. If we were to combine all of these preventive measures, we would go a long way to reducing the extent of acid rain in our country. At the same time, we would make our cars run better. By reducing that pollution, we also reduce the emission of toxic substances into the air which eventually returns to the soil, our crops and forests by means of that acid rain which does so much damage.

By asking Canadians to participate in a campaign to eliminate the habit of idling engines when possible, we would be asking each Canadian who cares to become a real and active participant in the battle against acid rain. It is something, as small as it may seem and as small as it really is, that we can do about acid rain in our country. This is a specific example that I would like to put forward tonight to the House for the consideration of Hon. Members.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words to the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It is a good motion for a number of reasons. First, it illustrates how all of us can participate in ways that are helpful to the environment. It is not only a question of large policy changes with respect to Government or questions of industrial environmental policy, it is also a question of how we behave as individuals in everyday situations and habits.

It is worthy to remember that we all have a role to play in confronting air pollution and other environmental questions. It can take the form of ensuring that we dispose of empty cans rather than throwing them on the side of the road or not idling our engines unnecessarily. It is certainly true that this occurs on Parliament Hill, particularly with the tour buses and Ministers' cars. I do not have a car so I have not given much thought to this in terms of my own habits. However, I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing this issue to the floor of the House of Commons.

I must caution him that the real reductions in air pollution will take place when we have the kind of pollution abatement programs that so many of us in the House have asked for from the last Government and the present Government. Those are the programs that will make the real difference in terms of over-all reduction of emissions.

We should be careful not to get involved in blaming the victims of this problem and transferring the responsibility for the quality of our environment to individuals while forgetting that the most serious environmental pollution comes from the action of industry in our environment and economy. It is important to focus our attention in that area rather than concentrate on how individuals contribute to environmental pollution. I am not saying that individual participation is not important but we should not shift our attention from what can be done by Government policy about the various sources of pollution.

I remind Hon. Members that we have not seen any concrete manifestation of the hopes that were aroused when the Government announced that it was prepared to contribute $150 million with the provinces toward the acid rain problem. I understand that an announcement is forthcoming and I hope it will be beneficial, but we have yet to see something concrete take place at that level.

There has been opportunity to take steps in this context during a recent debate on the question of leaded and unleaded gasoline. I support the views of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) about the need for Canadians to use more unleaded gas but I regret that he has not taken the opportunities to use legislation before the House to do something about the tax framework applied to leaded and unleaded gasoline. I do not believe there would be any political repercussions—unless it affects the oil companies—to provide an equal price for leaded and unleaded gasoline. I would prefer to see a disincentive for using leaded gasoline by making it more expensive, but why could they not be the same price to at least provide incentive for people to use unleaded gasoline?

Mr. Gurbin: What about the farmers?

Mr. Blaikie: Special provisions could be made for farmers. That is not an insurmountable problem, but one which we could surely solve. I would say to the Government that it is one thing to lecture Canadians about what they are doing to their catalytic converters et cetera but there is a policy option choice waiting for the Government. The choice is, if not equalize the price of leaded and unleaded gas, perhaps even make leaded gas more expensive, and to have a compensatory policy to offset the effects of that general tax policy on people who are perceived to be captive users of leaded gas, in this case the agricultural community. This could be done and it would be a forward step. I recommend it to the Government as I know other people have. I do not pretend to be saying anything original here, but I am just using the opportunity of this debate to urge upon the Government that it do that and that it move with all speed, so to speak, to show that it is sincere when it comes to the question of leaded and unleaded gas.

• (1810)

I have a great deal of genuine respect for the new Minister of the Environment. I think the kinds of things he has been saying about leaded and unleaded gas have been very good. I hope the Government will be able to follow through on what the Minister has been saying by doing something at the policy level with respect to leaded gas.

I think that is about all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, on the matter. I hope the motion passes. It would be kind of neat for us to try and do within our own precinct what we want people to do everywhere else. It would be an opportunity to show a certain kind of leadership, and for that reason I hope the motion passes.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and to make a few comments contrary to those made by the previous Member. The actions taken by the Government to control vehicle emissions are only part of the picture. They are only one element of a larger program to combat air pollution on all fronts. Measures already taken by this Government will reduce harmful emissions of nitrogen oxide. They will also greatly curtail the amounts of hydrocarbons, carbon monoxide and lead. The new standards will have the effect of reducing automotive pollution by over 45 per cent by the end of the century.

The Government is moving against air pollution to protect the health of Canadians, to improve air quality, particularly in our urban areas, to reduce crop losses caused by automotive pollutants and to control the greatest environmental problems that Canada has ever faced, namely, acid rain.

Acid rain is caused by two common by-products of our modern industrial lifestyle, sulphur oxide and nitrogen oxides. As a result of acid rain, or more correctly acid precipitation, the rains and snows that once were clean and pristine have now become dangerously acidic and destructive due to human activity.

The main sources of sulphur oxide emissions in North America are coal fired power generating stations and non-ferrous ore smelters. The main sources of nitrogen oxide emissions are vehicles. The Government's initiative to clean up acid rain will vastly reduce sulphur emissions as well. In fact, the Canadian acid rain control program announced on March 6 is the most ambitious environmental program that has ever been launched in this country.

Consider, Mr. Speaker, the accomplishments of this program. Canada is the only country to have based an acid rain control policy on achieving a quantifiable environmental objective, the target loading level of 20 kilograms per hectare per year of wet sulphate fallout, the level which our lakes and rivers can tolerate without damage occurring.

Canada's commitment to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions in eastern Canada by 50 per cent by the year 1994 is the largest percentage cut-back promised by any national acid rain program. The Government has put in place a pragmatic program to see that this commitment will be fulfilled. Our new motor vehicle emissions are as tough as those of any other nation in the world and, indeed, are tougher than most.

The program of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) includes the largest and most comprehensive scientific research and monitoring effort ever undertaken by Canada in the environmental field. Current expenditures equal $30 million, and over $18 million of this sum will come from the federal Government.

In a way which typifies the working of the new Government, Canada's acid rain program is an example of co-operation. It involves the seven eastern provincial Governments in the signing of agreements with the federal Government and the active support of the three western provinces. As well, the program reflects the interests of the private sector and of citizens of all ages and walks of life.

Each of these provincial Governments has now identified the SO_2 emissions to be cut to safeguard the Canadian environment from acid rain and each has committed itself to make these cuts. The process of developing regulatory orders is now under way.

The Province of Quebec provides a good example of how the acid rain agreement will work in a practical way. Quebec announced its emission control plans on February 8, 1985, in amendments to its Environmental Quality Act. Quebec's sulphur emissions will be cut back by 45 per cent over-all. In some cases, actions must be initiated immediately to respond to the regulations. The implementation of these regulations means that Quebec will have done its share in helping Canada to meet its 1994 reduction target. The other eastern provincial Governments are expected to announce their own emission control regulations during 1985.

These measures to reduce acid rain will not be without cost. The price of designing and installing acid rain control measures is over $1.5 billion, of which $750 million will be spent in the nickel and copper smelting industry.

Industry has the primary responsibility for carrying these costs. The federal and provincial Governments have agreed to provide financial assistance in cases where a company cannot afford to implement the necessary pollution control measures as quickly as required to meet society's best interests.

The Government, Mr. Speaker, has been able to sit down with the provinces, discuss the acid rain problem in a frank and realistic manner, a portion of the cut-backs that are necessary to meet the 1994 targets and hammer out a way to meet the substantial costs involved.

We are supporting technology development for the cleaner and more efficient use of coal for power generation. The objective of this program is to make the continued use of coal, particularly Canadian coal, economically attractive for power generation by both industry and utilities within the established emission levels. More than $70 million has been budgeted for this purpose over the next four years. Together with the western coal producing provinces and Ontario, we are investigating the prospects for using low sulphur western coal in Ontario.

We are also pledged to a continuing scientific investigation and monitoring of acid rain. Annual expenditures in this field will be in excess of $18 million, and will involve Government scientists and engineers from eight different departments and agencies. The private sector and our universities will be asked to join in this work.

The Hon. Member's motion states that:

> —the Government should launch a public education campaign inviting all Canadians to do the same and to invite the provincial Governments to take the same steps.

In other words, the motion is calling upon the Government to get involved and to educate the Canadian public about better driving habits. I am pleased to inform this House that Environment Canada is already active in the area of vehicle emissions and good driving practices, including excessive idling of cars. I would like to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to just two of the Department's fact sheets, one entitled Air Pollution and Your Car and the other Winter Driving. Both are excellent brochures. Both warn against excessive idling. Last April's issue of Environment Update was devoted exclusively to the automobile and the responsibilities of the user in helping to protect the environment. As well, there are a number of publications put out by the Department of Transport and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources encouraging good driving habits. Of particular note is Transport Canada's 1986 Fuel Consumption Guide which rates new cars' performance and includes reference to low polluting cars.

I hope I have shown that the Government's program to fight acid rain by reducing emissions from various sources, including cars, is a sign of its commitment to environmental quality in general. The Government has been given the wherewithal to carry out its resolve to clean up our environment through the assurance of a stable Budget and sound government finances for at least the next five years.

The Hon. Member's motion is completely in line with the policies and practices of the Government. It brings home to all of us, in a very concrete way, the aims and goals toward which we are working and sets an example for the way in which individual actions of ordinary Canadians can be brought to bear to reduce air pollution. I support the motion and recommend that it be adopted.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we are on the verge of doing something here which will dramatically affect our life-styles as Members of Parliament. I guess that remains to be seen. We become a part of a very select group of people in the House of Commons after six o'clock in the evening. I guess we will not all have to walk home.

We have before us a very interesting and worth-while proposal by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Other Hon. Members have supported his motion quite freely. He is asking us, as Members of Government and specifically as Members of Parliament, to set an example which will show Canadians at large that we are serious about the kinds of things we discuss, not only tonight but whenever we talk about environmental issues. Basically he asks us to practise what we preach in this specific area which is under our domain.

A couple of points might be made. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) raised some concern as to the balance between private Canadian citizens and Canadian industries on the relative contribution which each might make to air pollution. I do not know whether it is an either-or situation. I do not know whether he meant to imply that. However, I do not think the motion indicates that it will solve all our problems.

Depending upon what area of the country one looks at, a very significant proportion of the problem is caused by automobile emissions. Probably Los Angeles might be the best example in the world, but we certainly have our own examples in Canada. In some of the downtown core areas of our cities this motion could make a dramatic difference. I think Ottawa itself would be well served if the motion was concurred in.

The motion before the House is very similar to a suggestion brought before us not long ago. I do not have the exact date, but it was presented by the Chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Acid Rain, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). Under the provisions of Standing Order 21 he asked the House for unanimous approval to ensure that the buses about which the Hon. Member for Davenport spoke, would no longer idle the way they do.

This raises a very specific point which the Chair might like to consider. There may in fact be instances where there is reason for it not being an absolute rule, where common sense might prevail. For example, it might involve a refrigeration unit containing Hershey bars, or some other very perishable product which requires refrigeration to avoid spoilage or destruction of edible foodstuffs. It may not be the only example. There could be other very specific instances. I am sure Hon. Members have confidence in the discretion of the Chair to ensure that whatever the House decides in its wisdom to pass will be executed with some common sense and in a reasonable way.

What stands out in my mind—and perhaps it stands out in the minds of other Hon. Members or perhaps the scribes who are listening—is that this has been going on for a long time. It is not a new problem which we discuss in the House tonight, it has been going on for years and there can be no question in anyone's mind about that. If we take a look at the figures and the information now available to us we will see that air pollution is an ongoing and very serious problem which we in Canada have been trying to come to grips with for many years.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill asked where was the action about which we had talked. When the Conservative Government came into power on September 4, 1984, we promised an action plan within six months. The last Minister of the Environment delivered that action plan on time, and in a way which provided effective control in one specific area of air pollution. Included in that control program were significant changes, as indicated by the previous speaker, to acceptable levels of auto emissions. We have expectations that we will see the final touches to that program, the action plan which was presented in full along with the federal commitment, in the very near future. It will be a relief for all of us. Then we will be left to deal with the major problems of trans-boundary pollution.

We know that automobile emissions account for 21 per cent of all man-made Canadian nitrogen oxide emissions. Other transportation vehicles, including heavy-duty trucks, machines and off-highway transport, produce 41 per cent of NO_x emissions, so that vehicular transport accounts for 62 per cent of NO_x emissions in Canada. If we balance that with the industry component, we find that it does not account for all the remaining, but certainly vehicles account for the majority of emissions, and individual Canadians drive those vehicles.

Nitrogen emissions are a dangerous environmental pollutant. I should like to touch upon several matters, but first I would like to review the environmental problems associated with NO_x. Some of this terminology may confuse some people from time to time, myself included, but NO_x includes a whole range of oxides of nitrogen. They are grouped or clumped together in this so-called NO_x. All of them have their own level of danger. Some are more dangerous in certain situations than others. There are direct and indirect effects. The direct effects are on human health, on the environment itself and on material goods. We heard a little from the Hon. Member for Davenport about the effects on human health. Primarily we should consider the effect on the respiratory tract itself.

Also we have seen the effects which nitrogen oxide can have on plants, particularly commercially grown crops. However, there is good evidence to show, especially as a component of acid rain, that not only commercial plants are affected. In some areas of the country—the area in which I live, for instance—acid rain and its effect on small lakes is not really a problem because of a limestone base. Therefore, people in those areas do not have the same sensitivity to the issue as those in other parts of Ontario, or indeed Canada.

When acidic precipitation becomes heavy enough, it affects the leaves on trees, and on other plants growing around homes for example. In fact, leaves experience significant detrimental impact from highly acidic rain.

The indirect effects relate to the reaction of nitrogen oxides with other elements of air pollution. We are all familiar with smog. We usually think of it in terms of very large cities, but smog is formed when nitrogen oxides and hydrocarbons combine. They, together with other products of combustion, react with sunlight. A major component of smog is ozone.

If it is difficult for myself or other people to communicate some of this information, it is because we do not exactly know what we are talking about. That is not to say that we do not have good reason to respond or to take action, but the scientific evidence is certainly incomplete. It is not developed to a point where we can precisely indicate the reaction of specific by-products or a combination thereof. We know the end effect of many of these things. We know, for instance, the very serious effect which ozone can have on our agricultural products in Ontario. There are $2 billion worth of agricultural product affected each year and the losses to agriculture in Ontario are as high as $20 million a year just from ozone alone. We know that 7 per cent of people when exposed to ozone have very serious respiratory problems. So there is a health impact as well as a direct impact on other living material such as plants. We know of some specific problems but are unfortunately not in a position to be completely clear on all of these interactions.

Ozone levels in many Canadian cities have exceeded the national ambient air quality objectives which we believe are acceptable. A specific example which impressed me is that Vancouverites are frequently exposed to elevated ozone levels once or twice a week during the summer months. In eastern Canada, particularly in southwestern Ontario, high ozone levels are related to the trans-boundary movement of air pollution. We know as well, and we have heard information on it today, that the NO emissions themselves must be reduced in order to address the acid rain problem in Canada. NO emissions are responsible for about 35 per cent of the acidity of precipitation. In winter months, they can be responsible for up to 50 per cent of the acidity of precipitation. Nitrates deposited during the winter months accumulate in the snow pack and when the snow melts accumulated acid from the nitrates then runs off into the so-called spring shock. This gets into our lakes, streams and watersheds and in those higher concentrations picks up some of the heavy metals which themselves contribute to some of the secondary effects of acid rain and the resultant effects on our forests.

Evidence is mounting which suggests that the combined effects of acid rain, ozone and climatic stress such as drought can combine in ways which are highly damaging, particularly to forests. Dramatic evidence of these effects has already emerged, particularly in Europe. Germany, in particular, has responded very dramatically. It has had almost a complete turn-around in its whole environmental program and concepts within the last two or three years. Its current policy now calls for substantial reductions in both sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions.

NO_x emissions in Canada have been increasing steadily. In fact, it is predicted that if they are not controlled by the end of the century they will rise to a level 20 per cent higher than they are now. In view of the fact that these emissions have been increasing at such rates that they damage the environment and contribute to acid rain, controls on NO_x emissions in Canada are urgently needed.

The Conservative Government has recognized this need and after years and years of inaction a package of measures was introduced last March which we feel can be effective in reducing these emissions to an acceptable level in order to prevent further damage from the acid precipitation.

I could talk about some of the things we have accomplished in gazetting the standards we hope we can achieve and plan on achieving. The second part of the gazetting which would impose those standards is currently being considered now and we hope to introduce it very shortly.

I would like to conclude by making a few points which I believe are important. The question of lead in our gasoline has already been alluded to. This is a part of the total emissions from cars here on the Hill and everywhere right across Canada. We know of the effects of this on human health. What I want to do is specifically mention something which I do not believe has been mentioned before, that is, in September of 1984 the previous Minister of the Environment in this Government asked the Royal Society of Canada to provide independent advice on the present and future risks resulting from the presence of lead in the environment.

The Royal Society Commission on Lead in the environment released its report on October 29, 1985, less than a month ago. The recommendations in the report support the planned reduction of lead in leaded gasoline and the stricter exhaust emission controls for new vehicles which will take effect in 1987. The report also states that the Minister may want to reduce levels of lead in gasoline even further. The Minister has declared his intention to meet with members of the petroleum industry to discuss a timetable for the phase-out of lead in gasoline.

What we have before us, Mr. Speaker, is a very common sense and reasonable motion. We, as a Government, are determined to protect the health of Canadians and our environment as far as possible. We want to encourage all actions toward this end. I believe, Mr. Speaker, if you were to ask for concurrence in this motion you would find the House to be in agreement.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport for his foresight and his ongoing efforts on behalf of the environment and I would like to assure him that the Government plans to follow along with things which have been initiated in the past and also to proceed in the future to make sure that we have the kind of environment which will serve us all well.

CHILDREN—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL CENTRE FOR MISSING CHILDREN

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, we have a very major problem in this country, that of missing children. Some of the children run away from home, some of them are abducted by their parents and some of them are abducted by strangers. Over the last 10 years in Metropolitan Toronto, apart from those children who were abducted by their parents, some 64,000 cases of missing children were reported. On almost any day in Metropolitan Toronto between 35 and 75 children are reported missing. Of course, this is a problem not only in Metropolitan Toronto, it exists right across the country. There are thousands and thousands of cases of missing children reported each year.

What are we currently doing about this situation? Some of the police departments are very co-operative assisting the parents in trying to track down missing children. Some police departments are not quite as co-operative. Police departments are linked by a computer system, and the Canadian Police Information Centre tries to keep track of all police information, including missing children. Unfortunately there is no common data base between police departments with respect to matters relating to missing children. As a result, it is impossible for the police to access this information accurately and properly to every police department in the country when they need it. We have and continue to have the problem of a lack of information relating to missing children.

In the United States they have tried to meet this problem by establishing the National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children. On October 10, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, that I asked a question of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty) relating to the American Centre, and whether he would consider establishing a similar centre in Canada. Subsequently I wrote to him on the same subject.

In his reply on November 1, he indicated that he currently has the Royal Canadian Mounted Police doing extensive work on the question of establishing a central registry for missing children, a registry that would provide, in his words: first, enhancement of police investigations concerning missing children; second, a mechanism through which the public would seek information on missing children; and third, a mechanism which would facilitate the correlation of information with a view to periodically publishing national bulleting on missing children and other forms of public information. This is something that is certainly long overdue.

I have received a letter from a Mr. Gary Rosenfeldt, Director of the Victims of Violence, an organization centred in Edmonton. He mentioned one case involving a missing child in which he has been involved. He tried to communicate with the police department in one particular city on this subject, asking for a picture of the missing child that has actually been published in the press. He did not receive any response whatsoever to his letter. He called long distance asking for a picture of the missing child and was promised a picture, but it never came. Eventually, he received a picture from private sources. The Victims of Violence organization publish flyers and leaflets on which pictures of missing children are printed, and using volunteers they have been posted in some 8,000 post offices across the country. That is the sort of thing that is very helpful, but certainly the police should be much more active and helpful in this area.

In his letter of November 1 the Solicitor General went on to say that the registry he has in mind on which the RCMP is working would not be the equivalent of the National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children in the United States. That American centre was established in 1984 and was funded with something like $4 million. It is an organization that is centred within the United States Department of Justice. It administers this system which helps to co-ordinate a volunteer network looking for missing children, a free telephone system to carry the information and a whole network that provides information relating to missing children so that the public, parents and anyone interested can receive this information. This organization has been in existence for a very short period of time but hopefully it will have the effect that all of us wish to see, of helping to locate missing children, whether they are missing as a result of running away or of abduction.

In his letter the Solicitor General went on to say that he has also instructed officials in his own Department to carry on discussions with the Department of Justice and the Department of National Health and Welfare with a view to examining further initiatives that might be taken by the federal Government, either alone or in conjunction with the provinces and the private sector, to alleviate the human tragedy associated with the phenomenon of missing children. That is certainly something in which we are all interested. Hopefully the efforts of the Solicitor General of Canada will bear some results.

I am optimistic that we will see some legislation to assist, and that we will definitely see a registry of missing children. I hope there will be other measures as well to help solve this very, very perplexing and troublesome problem. I am looking forward to hearing the Parliamentary Secretary tonight tell us of his suggestions and hopefully the suggestions of the Solicitor General of Canada regarding what immediate action will be taken by the Government in this direction to help solve the tragic problem of missing children in Canada.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to expand on the reply given October 10, 1985 by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) regarding the establishment of a national centre to assist in locating missing children. The Hon. Minister of Justice informed the House that the RCMP is presently exploring the feasibility of establishing a national registry to assist in the search for missing children. In addition, I would like to elaborate briefly on the efforts of our U.S. neighbours, and also to describe an important piece of legislation presently under consideration by this Government that will assist in locating children abducted by parents.

The National Centre for Missing and Exploited Children in Washington, D.C. is located within the federal Justice Department and largely co-ordinates efforts of local law-enforcement agencies and volunteer groups to assist in locating missing children. It has in place a toll-free number for the public to use in order to report children who have gone missing and the sightings of any missing children. It is also involved in promoting public education and public awareness programs about the problem of missing children.

For example, it promotes the training of law-enforcement officers and members of the legal profession in a way that would inform them about the realities of missing children. Its staff does not actually search for missing children. However, it has access to the National Crime Information Computer system and other networks to facilitate its work. The success of the centre's co-ordination efforts therefore relies heavily on existing law-enforcement facilities and adequate laws throughout the United States. Without the capacity to obtain reports on missing children and to be able to call on law-enforcement and social agency personnel to carry out the search, a co-ordinating service such as this would not be able to achieve the desired results. This should make it clear to the Hon. Member that, while a central co-ordinating centre has an important role to play, it plays only a small part in the over-all network that must also be in place.

I would now like to say a few words about our own federal efforts to introduce a similar co-ordinating mechanism at the federal level designed to assist in the tracing of missing children in Canada. The Minister of Justice has sponsored a Bill that is presently under consideration by the Government which, if passed, will allow courts to authorize the release of information to trace missing persons. It would apply to cases in which children are missing due to parental abductions, and also to cases in which children are missing due to the violation of a custody order, a right-of-access order or a custody agreement. It is expected that these provisions will increase the enforceability of parental abduction offences recently introduced into the Criminal Code, as well as secure greater respect for custody and access rights.

TEXTILES (A) INQUIRY ABOUT $30 MILLION GIVEN TO DOMINION TEXTILE (B) INQUIRY RESPECTING USE OF FUNDS PAID TO DOMINION TEXTILE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, regarding the question I put to the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) on October 30 of this year concerning the textile industry and more specifically: " . . . the shutdown of two modern plants in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield, the members of a committee to maintain employment urged the Government to inquire into the use and management of public funds given to Dominion Textile by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board." And my question was: "Was there an inquiry? If so, what has been learned about the $30 million given to Dominion Textiles?"

Mr. Speaker, to give some background information and provide some insight into the importance of this issue, I would like to start by talking about the social and economic impact of Dominion Textile's decision to close its two plants. With an unemployment rate near 12 per cent in both communities, the social and economic repercussions of the shutdown of these plants could prove to be disastrous for Saint-Jean and Valleyfield.

The two support committees estimate that in addition to the 850 employees, union and management, who will be laid off, there are some 1,200 people, dependent children and spouses, who will also be directly affected. The total wage bill at stake in the case of a shutdown would be around $20 million. Add to this the subsequent loss of at least 200 jobs indirectly related to the industry.

The impact would be even more severe in the Valleyfield area, according to Denis Lecompte, Vice-President of the Chamber of Commerce, since the average age of employees at the Valleyfield plant is 42.8, which is higher than in Saint-Jean, where the average age is 33.5, which means Valleyfield workers would have more trouble finding new employment. This particular impact, this economic fact was described in a document prepared by the committee for maintaining jobs in Valleyfield and Saint-Jean-sur-le-Richelieu.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to quote from an article that appeared in May 1984. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), at the time Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and of the Official Opposition, said as reported in the Sherbrooke newspaper La Tribune:

> A Conservative Government would not get rid of the import quotas imposed by Canada in the footwear and textile sectors.
> "The quota policy will remain as is", declared Mr. Mulroney, who said he was not in favour of free trade in these particular sectors.
> He added that he would not "give in" to pressure from Common Market countries and the United States to reduce quotas on footwear or textile products imported into Canada.
> "And I will certainly say so to President Reagan when I meet him in Washington next month. I will make sure our interests are protected at all times. Friendship does not come free. Neighbours like us are worth a lot", maintained the Conservative Leader.

Mr. Speaker, the situation has taken a turn for the worst. Over 800 jobs will disappear. The average age of workers is 42.8 in Valleyfield and 33.5 in Saint-Jean-sur-le-Richelieu. They can therefore expect to have some retraining problems.

The current buzz words are free trade, but the fact is that Canadian taxpayers have put up $30 million to enable Dominion Textile to equip its two plants with the most modern facilities in Canada, yet they will be the first to close down.

Now then, as I said in my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) on October 30, 1985: What happens to the $30 million—and these funds belong to Canadian taxpayers—paid to Dominion Textile which has now announced the shutdowns? What happens to that money, Mr. Speaker?

• (1850)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to the question put by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) who was concerned about $30 million supposedly paid to Dominion Textile which recently announced the closing of its Saint-Jean and Valleyfield plants.

An important element of the textile and clothing policy announced in June 1981 was the establishment of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. The purpose of this board is to provide firms in these sectors with financial assistance to enable them to restructure and modernize their facilities.

In February, 1983 the CIRB approved an offer of a contribution to Dominion Textile based on the intention of the company to invest $150 million. To date, eligible capital expenditures by the company have totalled $79,101,011, for which the company has received a contribution of $15,820,202, corresponding to 20 per cent of approved expenditures. The company has until June 30, 1986 to complete its project. It is not expected that the company will be able to finalize its restructuring plan as forecasted.

With respect to the assistance provided to the two plants for which closures are scheduled for June 1986, totals of $2,337,048 and $286,905 were disbursed for the Saint-Jean and Valleyfield plants respectively. There is nothing in the agreement with the company which prevents the movement of assisted assets from one location to another, as long as they continue to be utilized by the company to improve its competitiveness, the prime objective of the CIRB program.

As part of the process of restructuring its activities, the firm has chosen to rationalize its operations further by closing the Saint-Jean and Valleyfield plants. We understand most of the equipment, which is fairly modern, will be transferred to other plants owned by the company. CIRB will not finance the moving of the equipment. From a total of 740 jobs which will be affected in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield the company expects to provide some 350 to 400 extra jobs in Drummondville and Magog. It is hoped that these measures taken by Dominion Textile will result in a return to profitability and the safeguard of the 7,000 jobs which remain in the company.

Although the company has confirmed that its decision to close the two plants is final I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is continuing to explore, with the company and persons concerned, all the options available for keeping these plants in operation or for attracting additional investment in order to maintain an equivalent number of jobs. Various factors contributed to these two plant closures including increased imports.

The Government is currently reviewing the situation of the textile and clothing industry with a view to developing a revised textile and clothing policy. The policy review is aimed at developing measures to provide longer term certainty for these industries and their employees. It will also include an assessment of the multi-fibre arrangement which provides a framework for regulating international trade in textile and clothing products.

FISHERIES—STANDING COMMITTEE HEARINGS. (B) EFFECT OF LICENSING FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on a question I asked of the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Nielsen) concerning the licensing of factory freezer trawlers in Atlantic Canada.

At the time the committee was travelling in Atlantic Canada there was only one application under active consideration. That was for National Sea Products Limited to operate a factory freezer trawler off the East Coast of Canada. In our opinion, the information gathered in that committee was gathered behind closed doors without public input and public scrutiny of the process. Of the approximate 106 witnesses who appeared before the committee, the vast majority were absolutely opposed to the granting of a factory freezer licence and saw very serious impacts for Atlantic Canada if it were granted.

The committee travelled through Atlantic Canada between October 23 and November 6 and there were requests to raise the matter. By and large the committee denied those requests and would not permit a detailed hearing of the factory freezer trawler issue. Instead, the committee passed a unanimous motion to hold a one-day hearing in Ottawa on November 21. An advertisement was placed in the newspapers of Atlantic Canada asking for the submission of briefs from groups affected and interested in this particular question. The opposition was so virtually unanimous and so deeply rooted in Atlantic Canada that certainly this should have been done. Unfortunately, the Conservative members of the committee decided today that they would not permit the groups affected and the people of Atlantic Canada to comment on the impact of this licensing. I am not speaking of just one licence but three. We feel it is an incredible breach of confidence in the committee and a breach of the parliamentary process when a committee can unanimously turn around and cut off all input which would occur in a public forum.

We in the Opposition see this as the hand of the Acting Minister of Fisheries, a man whom I would suggest has been given the task of dismantling many of the aspects of Government. We wonder whether or not one of his tasks is the dismantling of the Atlantic fishery through the method by which the Government has chosen to license the factory freezer trawlers. We see the hand of the Acting Minister through the Parliamentary Secretary who gave the direction or the marching orders to Conservative members of the committee to vote against allowing the people and groups they represent from Altantic Canada from appearing before the committee and laying out the problems they have or, in some cases, the support they have for the factory freezer trawler issue. By and large the vast majority of Atlantic Canadians involved in the fishing industry are absolutely opposed to this move.

I would like to mention a couple of small items in addition to the very negative impact on the rural fishing communities and the inshore fisheries of the Provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. I am referring to the situation in St. Pierre and Miquelon where the French are attempting to use factory freezer trawlers in the area around St. Pierre and Miquelon. Canada has recently submitted that case to arbitration. I think the Canadians have made fools of themselves in the international theatre by grating not only one licence but three for factory freezer trawlers, considering the timing of the granting of these licences prior to an arbitration case. I think they have cut their own throats on this particular matter, an act of colossal stupidity.

As well, we are talking about free trade with the United States. It has been said in the U.S. that if we want greater access to that market we should be prepared to allow the Americans to fish our surplus stock with factory freezer trawlers. They would not have to worry about jobs in Canada. They will deliver our fish in their vessels into their ports for their market.

Again, the Acting Minister of Fisheries, with undignified haste, is attempting to muzzle the committee and by doing so demonstrates contempt for parliamentary reform. It demonstrates contempt for the committee system. This Government obviously has no intention of abiding by a policy of open Government. The decisions will be taken by someone who is literally the hit man for this Government behind closed doors.

We suspect that the reason for this muzzling is to allow the dirty work to be done by the Acting Minister. Should the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ever get around to appointing a new Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, one who is concerned about the industry on both coasts, he will supposedly be able to approach the job with clean hands. However, that is not going to happen. If we cannot deal with this matter in committee, we intend to raise the issue time after time after time in this House. This issue must be dealt with properly in a public forum before a decision is made which will literally take apart many of our small communities in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that the Hon. Member again demonstrates his lack of understanding of the Parliamentary process. He has raised matters tonight which took place in the last day or two and are extraneous to the question he asked on November 8. The misinformation and unreliable statements he has added today signifies and typified the reasons he is held in contempt by so many of his colleagues in this House, and he is most contemptible most of the time. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) adequately summed it up on page 8478 of Hansard when he said, referring to the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly):

> Mr. Speaker, as has become his unhappy habit, the Hon. Member is speaking nonsense.

That is the same Member who spoke nonsense just a moment ago.

I should inform him, in case he does not realize it, that there have been numerous consultations on the subject of the request by National Sea concerning obtaining a permit for a factory freezer trawler. The decision was taken and announced on November 8, 1985.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed from Monday, November 18, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for the motion so admirably presented by my colleague, the Hon. Barbara McDougall, Minister of State (Finance), and I share the enthusiasm with which she tabled this Bill.

It is high time the House legislated measures to counter the unfair and paralyzing effects of this regressive petroleum and gas revenue tax which has created considerable, and I may say regrettable, economic problems for Western Canada.

If we could turn back the clock, we would be delighted to do so, but we cannot. We do not have that power. We cannot compensate people for lost income nor for the psychological disruption produced in Western Canada. Nor can we resurrect lost business opportunities, but we can, however, create a climate conducive to economic recovery and investment growth.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill before the House today is to put the oil and gas industry back on the road to recovery, and to do so, it will make four major changes in the petroleum revenue taxation system.

These changes signify a clear recognition of the failure of this regressive tax introduced by the previous Government. The changes will eliminate the disastrous effects of attempts by the unfortunate previous Government to increase its revenue, in a highly questionable manner, by penalizing an industry and a region in this country that until then had been strong and dynamic.

The proposed changes are as follows:

—Gradually phase out the regressive tax on petroleum revenue by 1989;

—Provide welcome tax deductions for unused exploration and development expenditures;

—Exempt new oil and gas production and new oil and gas installations from the PGRT;

—Reduce cumbersome administrative procedures and accounting costs for thousands of Canadians who receive income from oil and gas wells, by allowing a basic deduction of $10,000;

Finally, eliminate the incremental oil revenue tax, as a stimulus for the successful entrepreneur.

Its confidence restored by the promise made by the Progressive Conservative Party to establish a more equitable tax system, in 1984 the petroleum and gas industry started on its difficult but nonetheless encouraging road to recovery.

Clear signs of this recovery have become increasingly frequent since the former National Energy Program was replaced by the Western Accord on March 28, 1985.

This growing activity is reflected in statistics on the number of active drilling platforms and the increasing number of oil and gas wells that will soon be in production.

During the first quarters of 1985, the utilization rate of petroleum and gas drilling platforms was 64 per cent, which is higher than it was during all four quarters of the last three years.

It is expected that a total of over 11,000 wells will be drilled in 1985, which means an increase of about 26 per cent over the record number reached in 1980, before the industry felt the negative impact of the National Energy Program which subsequently was to have such disastrous effects.

It is indeed a spectacular increase—almost double the number of wells drilled in 1982 at the peak of the disastrous energy program launched by the previous Government.

Unfortunately such statistics may well make some people yawn openly, but they do reflect encouraging employment prospects. These new figures are encouraging as well because industry is banking on the adoption of amendments proposed in this Bill and on incentive measures related to provincial royalties.

Since the memorable Western Accord was signed, many companies have said they intend to boost their investments.

Among others, Imperial Oil has announced investments of about $1 billion in 1985, not bad by Canadian standards.

Shell Oil recently unveiled capital investment projects of some $500 million for 1985, not to mention the $200 million earmarked for expanding its oil sands processing plant near Peace River, a project which entails over 900 person-years in direct employment and 1,800 person-years in related works. Mr. Speaker, that is the outcome of an election promise which has been honoured after we took office and which was our campaign rallying cry: jobs, jobs, jobs.

Canterra's capital investment budget for western Canada has gone up 34 per cent in 1985.

Nova Corporation will spend some $500 million to expand its natural gas pipeline network.

BP Canada will invest $450 million to beef up its Wolf Lake crude oil development project.

• (1110)

These are all private sector initiatives.

We could go on and on listing the many concrete projects which have been hatched as a result of the renewed confidence of Canadians in their oil and gas industry.

Mr. Speaker, it has become obvious that the oil and gas sector has at last regained confidence and that such brightening prospects have prompted other provincial Governments and private interests to make further investments.

Average Canadians can also be optimistic and confident, and higher consumer spending reflects their buoyant mood.

In the first half of 1985 Alberta consumers spent 10 per cent more than they did during the same period last year.

In British Columbia—a dynamic province which was hard hit by the latest recession—retail sales did rise by 7 per cent in the first seven months of this year as compared with the same period in 1984.

In Saskatchewan, where some of my cousins live, employment growth in the first half of 1985 was much stronger than the national average.

The amendments contained in this Bill will be the starting point of Western Canada's economic revival so that our energy industry as a whole will benefit. The economic fallout will also be felt in a number of other regions and sectors.

As my colleague said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and as other Members on this side pointed out, this Bill will mark the end of an era of unfair and discriminatory taxes.

I therefore suggest that we give it quick passage to provide a healthy economic climate in the oil and gas industry and at least attempt to help those who have been hit so hard directly and indirectly by the taxes on oil revenues.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a very personal note to this nearly official speech and say that the constituency of LaSalle benefits directly from the increased growth of the Western Canada oil industry. Indeed, yesterday, in preparing my intervention for today, I made a survey of some of the industries in my constituency. I can tell you that no fewer than 12 industries will benefit directly from increased orders as the result of the economic recovery in Western Canada.

I believe that it is somewhat inaccurate to say that recovery in Western Canada is concentrated only in that region. In my opinion, our country is truly integrated and it was a real discovery for me to find—and maybe I learned this rather late—that Canada is truly integrated and that the East-West market still exists.

I therefore urge this assembly to give passage to this Bill which will do something to compensate for the misfortunes which have hit one region in our country and affected all Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) and I would like to ask him a question. The Hon. Member spoke about new activities by the big oil companies. He spoke about the oil and gas sector. If all this activity is taking place, why do we still have to provide an additional amount of $5.6 billion to the oil industry by agreeing to this Bill?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be confusing cause and effect. What I have given is a list of the effects of the general resurgence of confidence amongst Canadians since our financial statement of November 1984 and the realistic Budget brought down last May. What we have here are projects not financed by the state, projects which do not exist for nothing, projects which are based, first of all, on our general financial situation and on the fact that our Government has put some order in our financial affairs, and second, on the energy program put forward by our Government. What we are doing today with this Bill is to put in practice the principles which were stated a long time ago. The investments now being announced have not been made yet. These are projected investments to which we have opened the door.

Obviously, if we do not give passage to this Bill, which will put into practice the principles already expounded, the door could close back just as quickly. Indeed, we saw this with the oil and gas policy implemented by the previous Government, supposedly to canadianize the industry. What was canadianized was the closing of doors! This was not very progressive. What we want is to canadianize development, and the Hon. Member should not confuse cause and effect. What I have described are the direct results of our new policy, and if we made the mistake of withdrawing this Bill now, the doors would close much more quickly than they opened.

To use the language of construction, Mr. Speaker, when you throw a bomb on a building, you cannot throw another bomb beside it to rebuild it. Reconstruction takes much longer. It took some time to rebuild confidence in our Canadian economy. We should not now close the doors once more on a Parliamentary whim. I believe that the doors are open and that we must tell the oil and gas industry that it has the support not only of this Government, but of all Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) for a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I listened to the Hon. Member as well as to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. McDermid) who spoke yesterday about the record drilling and so on.

I came across a news clipping in my files. It is a Canadian Press story from Calgary. The headline is: "Oil and gas drilling nears record". It states:

More oil and gas drilling took place in Canada last year than since the record year of 1980, according to figures compiled by the Daily Oil Bulletin.

The publication, whose statistics are considered authoritative by the industry, said its records show 9,031 wells were drilled in Western Canada and on the East Coast and Arctic frontiers in 1984.

• (1120)

The Member talks about the record drilling last year. Why does the Government get so sucked in by the oil industry to give it, up to 1990, $5.6 billion? This is what this Bill does, and it phases out the petroleum gas revenue tax. The industry had just adjusted to the National Energy Program and was back drilling.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is nonsense.

Mr. Waddell: Once you have a tax system in place, why give in to the demands of the industry? I remind the Hon. Member that he is not talking about western Canada, there are three western Canadas. There is Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and within Saskatchewan and Alberta there is the oil industry and there are the other people, and then there is British Columbia. You are talking about a very small sector that has a lot of economic power and a lot of clout. I just draw that to the Member's attention.

I want to ask two short questions. Does the Minister not acknowledge that the National Energy Program, which he said did nothing, in fact, brought Canadianization from 28 per cent to 47 per cent and made Petro-Canada the largest refiner and retailer in the country?

Some Hon. Members: Boo!

Mr. Waddell: I notice Hon. Members are booing that. The Member says oui. He boos it too. Petro-Canada is our company. It is unlike Texaco which is based in New York. If Members want to boo that, fine. Canadians will hold them to it.

I did not agree with everything in the National Energy Program, but in Quebec it kept the price of gasoline at $28 a barrel when the world price was $37 a barrel. In other words, for three years people in the Member's constituency were getting lower gasoline prices. Why is the ranting against the National Energy Program?

My other question is also for the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). What is now the price of regular yellow gasoline in his own constituency?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Opposition Members to come back to our Canadian reality. This is 1985. The old 1984 statistics indulged in by the previous Governments which established all kinds of state ownerships and nationalizations are something that belongs to the past. That was rejected by the people of Canada, who support private enterprise. I would therefore ask him to please do two things: first, get rid of that old regressive mentality of state ownership and nationalization, and fall into step with the Canada of 1985. His statistics are not up to date, in the first place. And, second, Mr. Speaker, what we have been doing since last November is building up a climate of confidence.

When I am confronted with statistics that prevailed in 1984, well, it should not be forgotten that 1984 was the year we came to power, the year the people of Canada were not merely expecting, but were in the process of making sure there would be changes. And God knows how clear the message has been. Our response was to foster private enterprise in the first place. And to suggest that only a small area was involved in oil and gas development, is totally false. He should have listened to my speech in which I explained that, within the constituency of LaSalle alone, at least twelve industries are directly involved.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Opposition members, those socialist bed-fellows from both Opposition parties, to update their statistics, to bring them up to 1985, and to stop singing their old socialist tunes or munching rundown statistics.

Mr. Kindy: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, because I would not have missed this opportunity to comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier). I would also like to point out that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has never understood anything about the oil industry. He is always disparaging the companies. He depreciates them when they make money that provides people with jobs. In my view, he represents a party that would nationalize the whole oil industry. That might make him happy, but then we would not be paying 50c. a litre for gas, but probably $2 because we would be totally inefficient.

• (1125)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt but the time has expired for questions and comments. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in this debate with regard to Bill C-82. Much has been said in this Chamber today and on previous occasions. In fact, when one considers this piece of legislation, we have to go back a period of time when many Members were concerned, as I was, with regard to the world situation of oil and gas and the pricing of that commodity. If we go back to the OPEC crisis of 1974 and to the situation with Iran and Iraq in 1978 and 1979, there was a clear obligation on the part of the Government of the day to come up with a policy to encompass the goals now contained in the National Energy Program. I think many Members on all sides of the House were perhaps in agreement with those goals but differed, and differed greatly, with the way in which the goals were to be achieved.

Looking back to 1979 and at the Government of the day, we had distinguished Ministers of Fitness and Amateur Sport and other individuals who served in different capacities in the House. An attempt was made by the Government of the day to conclude a pricing agreement with the western producing provinces. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that agreement was never consummated. There was a lot of talk and suggestions but there was never any clear written arrangement between the national Government, the Government of Canada, and the western producing provinces concerning the price of oil and gas.

We all know what took place in the election and the defeat of the Government. Certain individuals were no longer occupying senior positions in Government, they were elevated, if you will, downward. The National Energy Program was then brought in—

Mr. Siddon: It was imposed.

Mr. Dingwall: When you try to separate the rhetoric from what actually did take place, you know that there was an obligation on the part of the Government of Canada to proceed with a national oil and gas policy. Unfortunately, government Members today who were in opposition at that time when I was on the Government side of the House debated vigorously, and rightly so, with the way in which the methods of the National Energy Program were to be implemented. Never in the Chamber did they take the opportunity to debate or to question the goals and the objectives of the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: I did.

Mr. Mayer: What a windbag.

Mr. Dingwall: Never, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives sat like pussycats with regard to the National Energy Program.

Mr. Siddon: Nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister opposite perhaps was one of the demonstrable pussycats that one would see in the House of Commons. He sat on his hands time and time again—

Mr. Siddon: Rubbish.

Mr. Dingwall: —when it came to the over-call goals and objectives of the National Energy Program.

Let us look at the context in 1980 regarding the National Energy Program. The Government of the day had to react, based upon its election promises, to the world situation which existed at that time. There was a need for Canada to have a national oil and gas policy. I recall with great clarity the huge revenues which were going to the multinational, foreign-controlled oil and gas companies. We know about the deficit of the various provinces and indeed of the national Government at that time. There was an obligation on the part of the national Government to come in with a set of policies. I had no difficulty with Hon. Members opposite, as they were then, debating the various measures and how those objectives were to be achieved. I want to make the point that they never disagreed with the goals and objectives of the National Energy Program. It was the view of the Government of the day, in 1980, that with the various megaprojects which could initiated across the country, that particular sector of our economy, which was growing at that time because of world conditions, would be an engine for economic growth in Canada, whether it be in western Canada or in other parts of the country.

• (1130)

Recently John Ferguson indicated in an article that just about everyone who knew anything about energy then had a chart on the wall with a line which looked like a hockey stick, showing prices heading toward $50, $60 and even $80 per barrel. That is what predicated the various taxes on that particular sector of the economy, to which the Minister has made reference. It was the view of the Government of the day, which was not shared by the then Conservative Opposition, that revenues from that particular sector would be taken and distributed throughout Canada for a variety of measures, whether they concerned social issues, promoting or trying to enhance the sagging fishing industry in Atlantic Canada, assisting a conservation program in the Province of Quebec or attempting to assist the Province of Prince Edward Island. By any stretch of the imagination, it has the highest energy costs of any province. That was the purpose. Unfortunately, we know what happened in the international community. World oil prices did not rise to what was anticipated.

Also I recall with great clarity that the Premier of Alberta objected pretty strongly to the ways in which the National Energy Program was to be implemented. However, that was in 1980, and 11 months later he agreed to what was best as the national energy update and some of the provisions contained in it.

Had prices continued to spiral upward, there would have been enough money to keep everyone happy, including the provinces, the industry and the federal Government. The fact of the matter is that because of international conditions, the world price for oil and gas had a devastating effect upon an energy program. I do not think anyone can dispute that; no one can dispute that.

Let us look at the PGRT and the money transferred by it to the national Government. Perhaps the Minister could indicate at some point in time just how much money will be transferred away from the federal Treasury. What will that add to the already high deficit in Canada? Will it be $1 billion, $2 billion or $3 billion? Some people have indicated that by 1990-91 the transfer away from the federal Treasury will total in excess of $5.5 billion. Will it be $5.5 billion? That is money which could be used by the national Government to create jobs in the Province of British Columbia or perhaps in Atlantic Canada. It could be used to provide a homemaker's pension, which has been advocated by the Government as one of its priorities. It could also be used to provide much needed housing across the country. Perhaps that money—and rightly so—could be spent on our farmers. Because of the devastating economic situation in which they find themselves, they could certainly use significant, additional financial input from the Government of Canada. What about the provision of daycare facilities in a national daycare program? We have heard very little from the Government about that. I would think with an exodus in excess of $5.5 billion away from the federal Treasury, that the issues of housing, daycare, job creation and regional development which have not been a priority of the Government will drop even lower on the list of priorities as a result of moving away from the PGRT.

One argument indicates that the elimination of the PGRT will create all sorts of new jobs and wealth and prop up the oil and gas sector. That argument can be stated. Whether or not it can be proved is another matter. I do not see any strong evidence which would convince me—and I stand to be corrected if other Hon. Members have evidence and information—that it will in any way significantly add to the revenues of the Government of Canada, revenues it would normally have under the PGRT, or create the thousands upon thousands of new jobs to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) alluded on numerous occasions.

This particular policy is typical of the Conservative Government. It is typical of its ideology. In fact, many people are confused by the different signals which are coming from the Government. With regard to its energy policies in total, of which the PGRT erlimination is one example, perhaps consideration has to be given to its elimination. However, the Government has eliminated a number of things in the energy sector which will be devastating to other regions. I do not want to suggest to Hon. Members that the West should be against the East or Quebec should be against Ontario. However, what I am suggesting is that the leasts prosperous area of the country, using any yardstick in any Department of the Government, is Atlantic Canada. Unfortunately, the energy policies of the Government will add greatly to the economic chaos in that particular region. We have already seen the effect of the elimination of the Petroleum Incentives Program, PIP. We now have fewer rigs drilling in the offshore than we had a year ago. That is not political rhetoric, that is a fact.

Mrs. Sparrow: It is called geology.

Mr. Dingwall: I hear an Hon Member saying that that is geology, that it has to be that way.

Mrs. Sparrow: No.

Mr. Dingwall: There is a role and obligation on the part of the national Government to explore in the frontier regions of the country for quantities of oil and gas and perhaps coal or other resources. To take that away, to eliminate that in its entirety, as I said earlier, will add tremendously to the economic hardships in the offshore. Hon. Members opposite do not like to hear that. They do not like to hear bad news. I do not like to tell them bad news.

• (1140)

Mr. Scowen: Let's face it: You love it!

Mr. Dingwall: The fact is that people who were meaningfully employed offshore in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia are no longer employed. The number of drilling rigs has been substantially reduced. However, what is our policy? It is a policy of smoke and mirrors. The Government has not taken its responsibilities seriously. It has not differentiated between Canadian-owned and foreign-owned companies. It treats everyone equally: small, big; domestic, foreign. I do not agree with that. I think Canadians ought to be given preference in drilling for oil and gas, whether it be in Alberta, British Columbia or off the coast of Nova Scotia or Newfoundland.

What about the 25 per cent Crown share? This was something talked about by the Minister when she was in Opposition. The Premier of Newfoundland and the Premier of Nova Scotia did not raise a great furor over that issue; they agreed with the Government of Canada's back-in provisions. Now the Government intends to eliminate the Crown share in those two provinces, but how are they going to be compensated? Is there any agreement in place? Not at all. The promise is: tomorrow. We cannot put bread on your table but wait until tomorrow and we will see what we might be able to do. Tomorrow. That is not good enough from a national Government elected to protect and enhance the interest of all Canadians, not just a select few involved with the multinational oil companies.

The Government has changed to an auction system which, among other things, defers exploration of less attractive areas. It tends to exclude companies with small financial and technical resources and generally gives Governments little direct control.

Mrs. Sparrow: What about joint ventures?

Mr. Dingwall: This provision gives preference to the big multinational oil companies. Of course, this is the philosophy that the Conservative Party has been advocating since it came to power. The philosophy is to help those who already have everything and somehow they will create enough wealth to trickle down to the less fortunate regions of this country. I have to say, and I say it sincerely, that I disagree with that type of policy. I do not think it is in the best interests of Canada. It is wrong. The national Government has to be an active player in enhancing the economic livelihood and viability of the various communities across the country. To cut the PIP grants and replace them with what is at best a meagre incentive program to explore the offshore is to be totally insensitive to the concerns of my region. We are Canadians too. We have the same rights as anyone else to expect some sensitivity and financial assistance from the national Government. We do not like this caution system which has now been put in place because we believe it to be preferential treatment of the multinationals. The elimination of the 25 per cent Crown share will be devastating to these two Atlantic provinces.

In closing, I want to say that the goals and objectives of the NEP, which I think were agreed to and fully applauded by all Members of Parliament, were indeed goals that Canadians should continue to strive for. Yes, there has to be a toning up of the various tax measures, and a toning down of some. However, I think the NEP was a good program, but it did not work as well as it could have because of international market conditions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment in rebuttal to the very interesting perspective which the Hon. Member has placed on the NEP. If one were sitting in Atlantic Canada listening to the Hon. Member, one would have to conclude that all those years of Liberal Government gratuities given to the part of Canada he represents, indeed to all of Canada, should have produced a great increase in employment and a strong surge in our economy. Indeed, if the Liberal approach of liberally taking money from private sector pockets and redistributing it to other parts of the country had worked, we would not have seen unemployment rise from one million people in 1980 to 1.5 million by the time that Government left office in 1984.

We agree that benefits were delivered to provinces and regions such as Cape Breton which the Hon. Member represents. However, if we were to plot on a graph the data regarding the transfer of funds to the Atlantic provinces under Liberal programs and the impact on unemployment and the health of the economy, the level of disposable income and the new economic initiatives by private interests in that region, we would find the results were inversely proportional to the assistance given. That is, the more money we pumped in by way of Liberal Government hand-outs, the more unemployment increased. As the Government in Ottawa mounted a major war with the Atlantic provinces, particularly Newfoundland, unemployment continued to rise.

The Hon. Member asked us to show what improvements in the economy this Government has brought about in the 14 months it has been in office. Over the last 14 months, more than 300,000 jobs were created, bringing unemployment down to 1.1 million from 1.5 million under the Trudeau regime. That is the evidence that the private sector incentive driven approach is far superior to the Liberal approach of taking money from one region of Canada and handing it out holus-bolus in the form of grants to another region.

This Government does indeed take a new approach. It places the incentives in the hands of those who can take greatest advantage of them. That is the purpose of the $250 million of drilling incentives to be made available annually. This will ensure the pace of offshore drilling in his region, and ensure that the benefits are returned to the people of those regions through the private companies and individuals who will make such investments.

In conclusion, let me say that the Hon. Member tended to mislead this House when he implied that Members sitting on the Government side today did not resist vehemently the Draconian and confiscatory nature of the NEP. If he consults Hansard and the record of the debates on Bill C-48, the Canada Lands Act, if he would consult in particular the record of committee hearings in response to the budgetary measures flowing from the NEP, he would find indeed that members of this Government resisted most vocally not only the goals and objectives of the NEP, but the very divisive and impudent way in which it was foisted upon this country by the Government of which he was a part. I would ask the Hon. Member to clarify for the record that indeed it was the outspoken objection on the part of members of this Party that led to an unprecedented overthrow of a Government and its replacement with one which is devoted to creating a stronger economy and thousands and thousands of new jobs.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to try to respond to all of the comments made and the innuendo which was tied into them. However, I think it has to be clearly stated that unfortunately, and I say this with great sincerity or, as the Prime Minister would say, with great civility, this Minister has not got one iota or one clue about regional development in Canada. He is so ignorant with regard to the issue of regional development that it is sickenening. It is sickening to have a Minister of the Crown rise in his place to suggest that we in Atlantic Canada can run the economy solely and completely through the private sector. The Premier of Nova Scotia himself has said recently in La Presse that the Atlantic region has been ignored by the Conservative Government and it is now time for the Prime Minister to shift focus away from the private sector.

This Minister has demonstrated beyond comprehension his total inability to understand regional development. I am sure there is no one with any degree of intelligence or intellectual ability who would say that the development of regional development policies in Canada or anywhere else in the world is easy. It is not easy.

Yes, the Minister made reference to the fact that there have not been thousands of new jobs created in Atlantic Canada. Let him remember that regional disparities existed some time ago prior to the national policy of the Liberal Party which tried to alleviate some of those disparities. That policy brought untold benefits to those in Atlantic Canada. We do not have the migration out of the province that we once saw under former Governments. We have an educational system which is being torn asunder by this national Government, an educational system which is very important to Atlantic Canadians. We have a health care system in that particular region.

This particular Minister does not understand one iota about regional development policies. I would like him to take the opportunity to rise in his place to dissociate himself from his previous comments. He knows that regional development in Canada is tough business and requires an active, progressive national Government leading the way. It does not require a national Government which abandons the regions as this Government has done, whether it has done so through the Minister's own Department, through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, through the Department of Finance or through any other Department. The Minister ought to be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one question of the Hon. Member. I have never in the six years I have been here seen such a performance in this House of Commons. The Hon. Member has been here for the last five years and he knows that we fought the National Energy Program.

Last week I saw a woman in Edmonton, who may even live in your riding, Mr. Speaker, who was obliged to move out of her house and into her garage with her family because of what the economy and in large part what the National Energy Program had done to her family. Does the Hon. Member seriously believe that Hon. Members on this side of the House had anything but contempt for the National Energy Program? I put it to him that he obviously does have that belief.

Does the Hon. Member know, for example, that oil companies halved their exploration budgets because of the National Energy Program? Does he know that the National Energy Program threw thousands and thousands of people out of work in Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia? Does he know that in Edmonton there are about 69,000 people who are unemployed including my neighbour? Does he realize that these people are unemployed in large measure because of the National Energy Program and the recession which the National Energy Program worsened for Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, unlike the Minister who had spoken previously, I will respond to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Siddon: With civility.

Mr. Dingwall: No one, and particularly no one in this Party, would take great delight in seeing any Canadian unemployed. That is point number one. Point number two is that I have said in the Chamber during the National Energy Program debates that I know that Hon. Members opposite, during that period of time, objected vigorously to the way in which the National Energy Program was implemented. There is no question about that.

Is the Hon. Member now saying that the goals of the National Energy Program were not good goals? Is he going to contradict himself? Is he going to contradict his Party by saying that the goals of the National Energy Program were no good and that Canadianization is no longer an important feature of our energy policy? The Hon. Member and all Hon. Members opposite cannot have it both ways. They cannot talk out of both sides of their mouths.

Mr. Mayer: And nobody has tried.

Mr. Dingwall: Why don't you stand up and be counted?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, Tory Members are talking about civility. that is one of the favourite words of their leader. I have never seen a leader fall so quickly from public esteem as the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) has done. Perhaps that is why he hides from the House. Every time he shows up, the Conservative Party drops a point in the Gallup polls. One reason for that, of course, is the kind of Bill that is before us today.

It is almost Christmas and we see a Bill before the House that indicates that the Government is going to play Santa Claus to the big oil companies to the tune of $5.6 billion. That should make members of the Conservative Party from Cape Breton and elsewhere ashamed.

Mr. Speaker, this is $5.6 billion given away to the large foreign oil corporations in this country, by the Canadian Government. A handout! They are playing Santa Claus to the rich in this country.

[English]

We have heard comments made in the House about the National Energy Program and how it just destroyed western Canada. I speak as a western Canadian and I think that some of those sweeping comments are over-generalized. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) said that in large measure, people are unemployed because of the NEP. I do not agree with everything about the NEP, but let us keep things in perspective.

The National Energy Program was brought in at a time when world oil prices were falling and interest rates around the world were skyrocketing. Oil-producing provinces, states and countries, regardless of where they were, were thrown into a massive recession or depression. I think we should keep this kind of debate in perspective. It is not quite as simple as black and white.

Farm prices are also falling. I would ask Conservative Members across the way, if they are so sanctimonious about what the NEP did, to tell us where the assistance is for the farmers of Canada. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) is not responsible for the entire drought package of the federal Government. However, the Government is complaining about the deficit while giving $5.6 billion to the oil companies between now and 1990. What about giving some assistance to drought affected farmers in southern Saskatchewan?

Back on August 6, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) was appointed by the Prime Minister, as his Parliamentary Secretary, to come up with recommendations. That Hon. Member did his job. He made a recommendation to the Prime Minister several weeks ago, and yet there has been no assistance whatsoever given to the farmers in the south. I was in Bengough just about a week ago. In fact, it was a week ago this afternoon. Farmers down there are getting damn mad and their Member of Parliament is getting damn nervous. He is getting very nervous because his report and his recommendations are being ignored by Cabinet and by his own Prime Minister. I say to Members of the House that farm prices have also fallen. However, where is assistance from the federal Government?

I think the Bill before the House today is a classic example of the type of discrimination we are seeing in the country by a Government which is biased toward the wealthy and the big companies vis-à-vis poor and ordinary Canadians. There is provision for some $5.6 billion in the Bill, which is a gift to the large oil companies of the country—$5.6 billion. I remind Members of the House that the oil companies in the country are extremely wealthy. I will give just a couple of examples of what I mean.

In 1984, just last year, Gulf Oil made a profit of some $308 million. Imperial Oil, which operates in our country, made a profit of some $533 million. Shell Oil made a profit of $158 million, while Texaco made a profit of $423 million. Despite these immense and massive profits, the Government of Canada has its hand in the cookie jar and is handing out $5.6 billion of your money, Mr. Speaker, and of mine and the money of our families, our friends and our constituents to these big oil companies. That is not fair. That is not fair from a Government which preaches that the deficit is too high.

The Government says the deficit is so high that we had better cut back with respect to the kids of Canada by partially deindexing family allowances. Sitting close to me is an Hon. Member and a friend from Calgary who is practically sobbing in his seat. He is a Conservative Member of Parliament who does not agree with his own Government. I know he is itching to get up and say so. The Government cuts back with respect to the kids of the country on the one hand and on the other it shovels tons of money to the big foreign oil companies. I think this is sheer unfairness.

Mr. Kindy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I disagree with what my dear friend says.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but that is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) still has the floor.

Mr. Mayer: That is unfortunate.

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure my hon. friend from Calgary will be on his feet soon during the time allotted for questions and comments to make some comments. I am sure he will reveal that he is a red Tory and that he is progressive. He will reveal that he is concerned about the kids of the country and the fact that their family allowances are being cut back while at the same time billions of dollars are being shovelled out of the money bins to the big oil companies. That is grossly unfair.

Mr. Siddon: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. Nystrom: I am not being ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Hon. Member to look at the figures. The Bill before the House would give over $5 billion to the oil companies between now and 1990 — over $5 billion.

Mr. Siddon: It does not give them anything.

Mr. Nystrom: At the same time the Government is saying that the deficit is too high. The Government cuts back on family allowances—

Mr. Siddon: What makes you think it is yours?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says from his seat—he is actually interjecting from his seat—what makes me think that it is ours. The oil of this country is ours.

Mr. Siddon: The money.

Mr. Nystrom: That is ours. It is our money and our resources as Canadians. I would not give these companies a hand-out; I would take more for the people of Canada.

Mr. Siddon: It belongs to the provinces.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that is the difference between the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party, which is one reason we can see Conservative after Conservative in trouble in the West today. Poor Grant Devine in Saskatchewan is shaking in his boots. The Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who ran his campaign at one time is shaking in his boots. In fact, I can hear them rattling from here.

Mr. Siddon: He is laughing.

Mr. Nystrom: The reason for that is that the Prime Minsiter of Canada, through his unfair policies, is turning off western Canadians and turning them in droves toward the New Democratic Party. If Hon. Members opposite do not believe me then they can check the most recent Gallup poll.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: I hope that the Prime Minister of Canada will continue on the same line he is taking month after month because we will soon have NDP Government in Manitoba re-elected with a massive majority. We will see re-elected NDP Governments in Saskatchewan and in British Columbia; and even that bastion, Alberta, will be in a bit of trouble because of the policies of the Prime Minister of Canada.

It is a very simple question of fairness with which we are dealing.

Mr. Siddon: You lack credibility.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister across the way says that we lack credibility. What he is doing is making a comment to the people of Canada. Results of a Gallup poll were published just the other day which pointed out that the overwhelming majority of Canadians have no confidence in the federal Government. Only 20-odd per cent of Canadians think the Government is doing a good job while over 40 per cent say it is not doing a good job.

Mr. Kilgour: Look at the way the question was worded.

Mr. Nystrom: I have never seen a Government lose credibility so quickly in such a short time as did the Government which is in office today. I think it is probably setting a record in that respect. The Prime Minister knows that, which is why he very seldom shows up in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: His attendance is as good as your Leader's.

Mr. Nystrom: The Bill before us is a very unfair Bill. Ordinary Canadians should rise up, telephone their Conservative Members of Parliament and ask them why they can give $5.6 billion to the oil companies when there are loggers in northern British Columbia who are unemployed. The people of Canada should be saying to Conservative Members of Parliament: "Why can you give $5.6 billion of our money—our grandmother's and our cousin's money—to the oil companies and yet cut back with respect to the kids of Canada, many of whom are not receiving proper nourishment?"

Mr. McDermid: That is a red herring.

Mr. Nystrom: This is not a red herring. A conservative Member across the way says that it is a red herring—it is a blue herring. It shows exactly where the Conservative Party stands. It has tons of money for the wealthy and very little for the ordinary citizens of Canada.

Mr. Mayer: If you have nothing to say then why don't you sit down? You are an embarrassment to us all.

Mr. Nystrom: I say to my friends in the Conservative Party that they are being very unfair. I have friends in the Conservative Party, including the man who is sitting in the Chair. There are a great many people in the Conservative Party who are very ashamed of the Government.

Mr. Kilgour: Name one.

Mr. Nystrom: There was a Conservative convention in Toronto last weekend at which a guy named Larry Grossman was elected as Leader of the Party. Hon. Members will have noticed that not one person at the Conservative convention in Toronto once mentioned the name of the Prime Minister of Canada from the podium. That is because that man and his Government are dragging down the Conservative Government's credibility.

Mr. McDermid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Hon. Member opposite would not want to mislead the House deliberately. I was at the convention to which he referred. I can inform him that the Prime Minister's name was mentioned many times from the podium and that cheers went up every time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to remind the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that he is getting awfully close to the point where he may have to retract one of his statements one of these days. I will leave it at that. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has the floor.

Mr. McDermid: Why would I have to retract it?

Mr. Siddon: He just stated the truth.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that they did mention his name from the podium because every time his name is mentioned the results of the Gallup poll go up for us.

The Bill before us will give $5.6 billion to the oil companies. The deficit is too high. Thus, if $5.6 billion is given to the oil companies, where will the money come from? It will have to be collected from ordinary Canadians—the poverty—stricken farmers in Saskatchewan, the unemployed forestry workers in northern British Columbia, and the poor people from coast to coast. The Government will raise the money by raising the excise tax on gasoline. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the tax on gasoline has recently risen. The Government will also raise the money by increasing the federal sales tax, which hits people unfairly because, rich, poor or middle class, the same hidden federal sales tax is paid regardless of income. The Government takes money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians by increasing income taxes. If the Government is to give companies such as the oil companies which are very wealthy over $5 billion then that money must be raised from the ordinary citizens of the country. That is why the Bill which is before the House is so unfair and why it should be defeated at the second reading stage.

We have heard comments today about PetroCan and stateism, socialism and so on. I would like to ask those Conservative who make these comments what their reaction is to their own Government expanding PetroCan through the Gulf takeover? It seems to me those Hon. Members are speaking out of both sides of their mouths. On the one hand they are saying it is very bad to have this kind of expansion which was started years ago and, on the other hand, there was a major takeover only a few months ago under the same Conservative Government which sits across the way. Perhaps this is what "Progressive Conservative" means, trying to be all things to all people, although I thought that is what the Liberal Party stands for.

I would like to hear comments about that from Hon. Members of the Conservative Party when they rise to criticize PetroCan. I remember very well the PetroCan debate prior to the 1979 election campaign. I remember that the short-term Conservative Prime Minister was going to get rid of PetroCan. One of the reasons he was trounced in the 1980 federal election campaign was that he wanted to get rid of the people's oil company, but the people of this country wanted to keep that oil company. And he was trounced so badly on that issue that within two or three months of the federal election campaign in 1980, he changed his mind and the Conservative Party said: "Yes, we'll keep PetroCan". Now, thank goodness, the Government is expanding PetroCan. There might be some very reactionary dinosaurs in the Conservative Party who would disagree with that, but their Leader and the Cabinet are expanding PetroCan.

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member from Ontario says: "Yes", and he has a frown in his voice and a snarl on his face. I don't think he is too happy with that because he is one of the Hon. Members who said to the people of Canada: "Elect us in the Conservative Party and we'll get rid of PetroCan". Perhaps one reason those Hon. Members are losing so much support from the population, according to the polls, is that they said one thing before the election and they are now doing something else after being elected.

PetroCan is very important. It is important that Petro-Canada stay, be expanded and become the largest oil company operating in this country from coast to coast, and that is what the people want.

Mr. Kilgour: Or the only one?

Mr. Nystrom: I never said "the only one". I am a very strong supporter of co-oped oil in the city of Regina and the co-operative movement. I would like to see that expanded. I support the small operators as well.

Mr. McDermid: Where should they get their supplies from?

Mr. Nystrom: One of the small operators was quoted in the newspaper very recently as saying that the policy of the Government was too generous. I have here an article from the Toronto Star dated April 2, 1985. The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy) would be interested in this article. Perhaps it is about a buddy, I don't know. The article begins, and I quote:

> Calgary oilman Joe Mercier couldn't be happier with Canada's new energy deal. But, as a Canadian citizen, he believes Ottawa is giving away too much to his industry.

That is what an oilman from Calgary believes. Perhaps he is a liberal oilman. I do not know the fellow at all. I assume he must be a Tory. Almost every oilman in the City of Calgary is a Tory.

Mrs. Sparrow: No, no.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps he is not. I assume he is not NDP.

Mr. Mayer: That's your trouble. You assume too much.

Mr. Nystrom: The article continues, and I quote:

> "I'm no hypocrite; this deal makes us richer, "Mercier, President of Universal Explorations ('83) Ltd., told the Star yesterday.
> "Our bank just informed us that our security (the value of oil and gas in the ground) is up by $8 million as a result of the Western Accord, and our line of credit has been increased by that much.
> "But from the point of view of a Canadian, I'm really concerned we're giving away more than we have to."

That is a Calgary oilman speaking about the Western Accord signed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) and western governmental officials a few months ago. If an oilman says it is a good deal for him as an oilman but, as a Canadian, it is a bad deal because it gives away the store, then I tend to believe that man. I am sure the Hon. Member for Calgary East will have an interesting comment to make on these statements by Mr. Mercier.

As a westerner, I would like to say that I think Mr. Mercier's point is well taken. We have Conservatives opposite saying that these moves are good for western Canada, but I ask, who are they good for in western Canada? I think they are good for a very small interest group in the West, the oilmen and a few people who work around the oil industry. I represent a riding of 70,000 people. I do not have oil wells. I do not have an oil patch in my riding. But I have thousands of farmers who must pay a higher price for gasoline because of the Conservative Government. There are thousands of farmers in my riding who must pay a greater amount of their revenue just to keep their farms going because the Conservative Party is giving billions of dollars to the oil industry. There are also thousands of consumers, including older women who are widowed and have retired to the towns and villages across my riding, who have to pay more for heating their homes because the Conservative Party is raising revenue for oil companies by raising the excise tax. There are thousands of workers in my riding, which is a rural riding, who must travel mile after mile to get to work, who now have to pay more to put gasoline in their cars and pick-up trucks because the Conservative Party is being Santa Claus to the big oil companies outside of this country.

As a westerner I can assure Hon. Members that the majority of westerners do not agree with this Bill. The majority of westerners are interested in jobs. Westerners are trying to produce food, but this Bill increases their costs. This Bill makes it more difficult for them to produce on a day-by-day basis.

I do not want to listen to these red herrings that this is a great Bill for western Canada. Mr. Mercier is right. It is a great Bill for oilmen and wealthy oil producers, but it is not a great Bill for western farmers. It is not a great Bill for the farmer in Bengough who is suffering from a drought and it is not a great Bill for the kids of this country who, as a result of this Bill, are getting their family allowance cut back by a callous government.

This Bill is unfair. It is unjust. It is not proper. It tells us exactly where the Conservative Party of Canada stands. We have $5.6 billion for the oil companies, a huge deficit and cut-backs for kids and that Party tried to cut back on pensions for senior citizens, the pioneers of this country. We face tax increases. The old fellow in my riding who has to drive his car from his farm into town to buy his groceries has to pay more for gas because the Government has raised the excise tax on gasoline. Those people will not forget. Those people are receiving a very good education about what the Conservative Party stands for. it is no different in 1985 than it was under R. B. Bennett in 1935 during the Great Depression.

Mr. Siddon: Look at the employment figures.

Mr. Nystrom: That is one reason we are seeing such a massive turnabout in public opinion. We have never seen a Government which was elected with such a massive majority fall as fast as this Government. I would love to see some by-elections right now so we can find out whether the people of Canada support this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I believe the period for questions and comments is now in order.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, every once in a while we are forced to sit here and listen to this socialist diatribe. The problem with the socialists and their friends in the Liberal Party is that there are too many adults and not enough children who believe in Santa Claus. They believe in the equal distribution of misery, and since they do not have anything, they believe they should have the right to share everything with everybody.

I would like to invite the Hon. Member to visit Fort St. John, British Columbia. There are two main economies in that area, the first is agriculture. It is one of the most productive wheat producing areas in Canada. The second major economy is oil and gas. I understand quite well what the Hon. Member is saying in terms of the crisis and problems experienced by the agri-food sector over the last three years. However, he suggests that somehow the Government can make the weather and can regulate the atmospheric pressures to suit farmers. We have been able to create a climate within which the oil and gas sector can achieve, as an instrument of national purpose, the goals that we have all set for ourselves: energy self-sufficiency, and the greatest component of Canadian—not necessarily government—ownership of the oil and gas sector.

If the Hon. Member were to come to Fort St. John he would find that literally half the city was boarded up after the implementation of the national energy policy. I was up there and spoke to the Chamber of Commerce the other day. In his introduction, the President said that the Liberals in Ottawa in Question Period are like a bunch of retired prostitutes campaigning against prostitution.

When the Liberals brought in this national energy monster, with the consent and acquiescence of the NDP, we told them that it was a monumental fraud, that it was an outright confiscation of private assets, that it would destroy the energy sector and deprive us of any opportunity to use the strength we have in energy, oil and minerals as an instrument for growth and economic renewal. It deprived us of that. We were net exporters of oil when these socialist schemers, reformers and engineers came along to build their new society. We benefited from the oil crisis at that point. We are now in a situation of having some catching up to do and the Hon. Member will have to let us do it in our own way, a proven way, a way that will produce new wealth, which we can then use to restore and strengthen the social infrastructure and benefit structure which we have put in place in our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) like to wait until the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has asked his question or made his comment in order that he can answer both at the same time?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the two main themes of the speech of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). The first theme had to do with the question of fairness and the second had to do with the impact that this Bill will have on the ordinary or average Canadian.

With respect to the matter of fairness, I know that the Hon. Member is aware of the impact which the national energy policy and the two taxes that are dealt with in this Bill as a part of it have had on the average Canadian. I know, as well, that, because of his sense of fairness, he feels that the impact of these taxes in the national energy field are just as unfair as I feel they are with respect to the following matters: First, the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax had the effect of taxing revenues rather than profits; second, it had the effect of being discriminatory in that there were no similar taxes placed on any other natural resources or any other forms of energy. Third, it was unfair in that it had the impact of effecting double taxation, through the PGRT and through corporate income tax. I know that the Hon. Member is quite aware of this tax and feels that it is unfair.

I also know that the Hon. Member similarly feels that the other aspects of this tax, the incremental oil revenue tax, was unfair in that it only taxes one oil company, namely, Suncor. I know that the Hon. Member realizes that all the taxes which we are doing away with today were unfair. I would like him to confirm that he disagrees with this unfair quality and that he is supportive of this Bill today in that respect.

He talked about the impact which this Bill will have on average Canadians. He knows that the national energy policy and these taxes had a devasting effect on ordinary Canadians in that they put so many people out of work and created so many bankruptcies in the country that, in effect, they made everyone poorer. The recent report relating to poverty in the country clearly demonstrates that fact and the impact that all of these things had on the ordinary and average Canadian.

Since the present Government has done away with the national energy policy and these taxes, which policy is implemented by this Bill, we have had stimulation and growth in the oil and gas industry. We now have something like ten thousand more people directly employed in that area than we had before. Similarly, there has been a spinoff effect for all other parts of the country. The Hon. Member referred to the lumber industry. Obviously, those who work in that industry are gaining a benefit through the spinoff effect. He referred to the farmers who are gaining a benefit due to the spinoff effect as well. He referred, also, to the senior citizens who are gaining a benefit because their pensions will be more secure when more Canadians are working and the economy is growing. I know that the Hon. Member feels that this is a fair Bill and that it will benefit average and ordinary Canadians. I would like him to confirm that for us.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) made comments about how things are going in the oil industry and said that there was a proven way, which is through the big multinationals based in the United States. After all, the oil patch is 60 per cent American owned. Mr. Speaker, I disagree. I think that what he calls the proven way was a big failure in the country in the pre-1975 and pre-1970 era. That has not been the proven way to produce jobs and good results for Canadian consumers. The proven way is to Canadianize the oil industry by ensuring that it is in the hands of the ordinary people of Canada. That is the way that we want to go and I am sure it is the way that most of the people in the country want to go.

With regard to fairness, the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) mentioned the PGRT. I think the PGRT was the most effective way to tax oil companies in the country because that tax was applied on general revenues at the well head. It was effective. The other way of doing it provides the oil companies with all kinds of loopholes. The oil companies have been masters of loopholes in the country. We had an effective tax, and the result of abolishing it will be to give the oil companies an extra $5.6 billion.

Is it fair to give $5.6 billion to the oil companies when the Government is asking the mothers of the country to cut back on expenses for their children through the deindexation of family allowances? Is it fair to give $5.6 billion to the oil companies when taxes are increased on ordinary Canadians through the income tax system? Is it fair, Mr. Speaker, to give the oil companies $5.6 billion while increasing the federal sales tax in Canada? Is it fair, Mr. Speaker, to give $5.6 billion to the oil companies and give nothing at all to the farmers in my province who are suffering from a drought? Mr. Speaker, farmers are hard-working Canadians. The oil patch is 60 per cent American and is already much too wealthy because it makes millions and millions of dollars in profits off the backs of ordinary Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is with a considerable degree of relief that I can stand and support Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act. One of the most important items announced in the Western Accord last March was the elimination of the federal oil and gas taxes or charges, including the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the petroleum compensation charge and the Canadian ownership special charge together with the incremental oil revenue tax. Following the announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his May Budget, the legislation now before us will formally mark the elimination of both the PGRT and the IORT. No westerner who experienced the devastating effect of the National Energy Program, the most punitive measure of which was this PGRT that was imposed on January 1, 1981 for oil and natural gas production revenues and royalties, can underestimate the value of the steps now being taken in this respect.

Since the Western Accord was announced last March, and on a comparison of 1983 with 1985, drilling is up by 60 per cent, exploration and capital expenditures are up by 50 per cent and direct employment has created an additional 25,000 jobs.

The spinoffs in Alberta alone are significant. Employment in other industries has increased significantly. Retail sales have improved and real estate sales are up, with vacancy rates showing the first decline in some five years.

The current rate of PGRT is 16 per cent, with an effective rate of 12 per cent on conventional oil and gas and 8 per cent on synthetic oil, after the resource allowance, where applicable.

Under the terms of the Western Accord and this legislation, the PGRT will be totally eliminated by January 1, 1989. In addition, the PGRT will not apply to approved major new energy projects or to any new production of conventional oil, natural gas or natural gas liquids brought on stream after April 1, 1985. Under the schedule for phasing out, the rate of PGRT will be cut in half and will be totally eliminated by 1989.

The Government of Canada has agreed to reduce further the burden of PGRT on individuals by making the first $10,000 of income exempt from the tax. This will mean that an estimated two-thirds of those individuals who are currently paying PGRT will no longer be required to do so. The PGRT was perhaps the most bitterly criticized aspect of the National Energy Program. Being levied on revenues rather than profits or even cash flow, this tax was closely related to a federal royalty.

The tax also has been plagued by technical and administrative difficulties. The preceding Government subjected the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act to numerous amendments, many of which were not legislated until a considerable time after coming into effect. This left the industry in limbo. Our Government has stated that the PGRT would be removed and this commitment is being fulfilled.

No PGRT will be levied with respect to new production of oil, natural gas or gas liquids after March 31, 1985. New production has been defined to include production from new wells spudded after March 31, 1985, plus incremental production as a result of enhanced recovery schemes, including waterflood schemes commencing operation after March 31, 1985. New production will include production from new development wells on proven acreage but not production from currently shut-in wells that came on stream after March 31, 1985.

The federal and provincial Governments have agreed that the phase-out of the PGRT is necessary to stimulate reinvestment in Canadian exploration for the development and release of new oil and gas reserves. New exploration and development activity will potentially be rewarded by allowing non-taxable corporations to apply a portion of their newly incurred income tax write-offs, otherwise available as a credit, against their PGRT liability.

The Western Accord has provided the industry with strong incentives to explore and produce, which contrasts strongly with the policies in effect between 1973 and 1984. In general, those policies restricted Canadian resource development through various combinations of low oil prices, high taxes and restricted markets. There was a decline in Canadian spending in 1981 and 1982, in response to the National Energy Program, shut-in gas markets and other factors.

It became more apparent in 1984 that the Canadian energy policy had to be completely overhauled and petroleum industry expenditures came back strongly, in anticipation of this revised policy. It is anticipated that capital and development expenditures during 1985 will be some 20 per cent higher than last year and some 30 per cent higher than in 1983. Drilling activity in this country set an all time record last year, a record which this year's drilling has already surpassed. That 1984 record was based on anticipation that the Conservative Government would come through with its promises, as we have.

Now, with a realistic energy policy, with exploration at high levels and with a number of new oil sands projects under development, the outlook for the next few years is extremely good. While global expenditures are down drastically, expenditures are setting new records in Canada. Global drilling has undergone a decline, especially in the United States, while in Canada drilling is at record levels. Globally, there are surpluses of crude oil and many Third World producers are permitting their production capacity to decline. However, in Canada the industry is spending record amounts on projects and geological prospects which will increase crude oil production capacity over the next many years.

Although Canada has abundant resources, national and provincial energy policies effectively put a damper on their development from the 1970 to 1981-82 era. The policies during that era included excessive taxation, controlled prices and a great deal of political uncertainty. As a result, crude oil development, particularly during that period, was extremely constrained. However, the situation is greatly different today.

Because of our completely overhauled energy policy, our favourable resource base and our proximity to the United States oil and gas markets, the Canadian sector of the petroleum industry is likely to see continuing high levels of activity throughout the remainder of this decade. The Western Accord swept away artificial elements of Government-controlled and administered economics of the industry's production sector. It ushered in an era which will see further dramatic changes in the way the Canadian upstream sector operates and in the style in which it is managed.

Our Government recognized that the oil and gas industry could provide important national economic opportunities. Our energy resources can be produced and sold at internationally competitive prices. Canada's energy policy during the last decade prevented it from fully capitalizing on the development of its hydrocarbon resources. Governments at both the provincial and federal levels agreed that the federal Government should treat the petroleum industry like other industries, by taxing profits rather than revenues, and everyone applauds the demise of that most discriminatory petroleum and gas revenue tax over the next four years.

The special significance of the elimination of this tax is that it has already greatly improved the economics of oil and gas production. Since it is being eliminated over the next few years, the industry will experience annual improvements to cash flow as the tax burden is eased. With the acceptance of the principles of market pricing and the taxation of profits, the federal-provincial revenue sharing dispute has been settled. Disagreements based upon those particular issues were a major irritant and a source of uncertainty for the industry, and led to a full decade of political acrimony, during which time many opportunities were lost. At least this is all behind us now, Mr. Speaker.

Through the energy accords, this legislation, coupled with the frontier package and gas deregulation initiatives, the Canadian petroleum industry is likely to experience sustained high levels of activity, continuing good earnings and diversification into non-conventional resources. Unless there is a precipitous drop in oil prices, the future of this industry in this country is bright.

Our Government has recognized the dramatic shift in the public's perception of the Government and its policies. We have proclaimed our faith in the strengths and the virtues of the private sector. The current atmosphere is certainly more conducive to some form of rapport than it was even a year ago. We believe in a tripartite consultative process between Government, business and labour so that when public policy is formulated, the affected Parties have had an opportunity to express their views. We have lent an ear to what the business community has to say, and should the labour movement seek the same access, I am confident it would meet the same reception. In my view, labour's participation is vital to any meaningful dialogue regarding public policy formulation.

Government ought to and is providing the framework within which the private sector is encouraged to get things done. Implicit in our oil policy is an attitude of trust and confidence in the private sector. We want to facilitate the private sector rather than regulate it. It is up to the private sector, as I said, to get on with the job.

Export of goods and services rose from 16 per cent to 18 per cent of the Gross National Product in the 1950s, to 20 per cent by the late 1960s, and now stands at 26 per cent. In effect, Mr. Speaker, Canada is more heavily dependent on world trade than any other industrialized nation. Yet, with a productivity performance up until now among the worst, we face increasing competition, not only from other industrialized nations but also from developing countries seeking to exploit their resources.

While faced with high-tech and resource competition abroad, Canada at home will have a rapidly aging population over the next 20 years and changing demand patterns that will cause major industrial restructuring and significant shifts in skill requirements in the labour force.

We face the necessity of decision times being reduced, and this means decentralization of decision responsibility to a much greater extent. It means less involvement of Governments in this process, and a greater reliance on the resource allocation properties of markets. A reduction in system rigidities caused by Government regulation and intervention is also a necessity.

Government programs, once in place, tend to be perpetuated and, I believe, a regular cost benefit review is required to ensure that resources available to Governments are being used most effectively.

Canada's budgetary deficits are a cause for overriding public concern, and the actions taken by our Government in restoring buoyancy to the energy industry are a palliative to that concern.

The need for an industrial strategy in Canada is not so much a call for a greater degree of Government involvement in the affairs of specific industries, but rather for a co-ordinated approach to an economic policy involving trade, taxation, competition, labour, research and development, industrial and stabilization policies. We have the policies in place to encourage the development of one of the world's most envied resource endowments.

Canada's geological potential is enormous. The western sedimentary basis, the source of most of Canada's conventional oil, has been drilled only one-tenth as much as similar regions in the United States. Our established resources are dwarfed by the potential of the oil sands, heavy oil and the frontiers.

Foreign investors have recognized the positive changes in Canada. In August, the Salomon Brothers of New York published a report that amounts to a ringing endorsement of Canada's new energy industry. The authors of that report said:

> As a result of the overwhelmingly favourable policy changes that have occurred in Canada over the past year, the Canadian energy industry today has the opportunity to meet the challenges of domestic and world markets unfettered by onerous government regulation.

In an interview on Canadian radio, they said that Canada's geology offers great promise for future development and that investment prospects in Canada's oil industry are greater than in the United States, the United Kingdom, Norway and other areas around the world. By our energy policies, we now have access to energy markets. We have the technology to develop conventional and non-conventional sources. Above all, we have a revitalized oil and gas industry operating with confidence in a radically transformed policy environment.

In closing I want to point out that it has been one full year since this country voted overwhelmingly for a change. During the summer, 1984, the Progressive Conservative Party promised economic renewal and promised to create jobs.

Canada's resource sector has long been the bedrock of regional economic strength. In an effort to rebuild that vital sector and create hundreds of thousands of new jobs, the Progressive Conservative Government has been quick to take action. We have had the Atlantic Accord and the Western Accord, and two weeks ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) put forth the new terms for the Canada Petroleum Resources Act and the new policy for gas deregulation in Canada. All such steps are welcomed by Canadians from coast to coast. We are now clearly pursuing a path which will lead Canada to greater prosperity. Working together, we can build on the greatness of Canada for today and for the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a short question. I appreciate the speech made by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). I understand her position in putting forth some of the views that reflect the interests of certain people in her area.

I would like to point out that there is a certain myth inherent in her speech, the myth of competition in the industry. We are dealing with big cartels, like OPEC. We are dealing with some of the largest companies in the world, such as Exxon which owns Imperial Oil, and Texaco. Their interests are not necessarily the interests of Canada. They have their own interests, but they are not necessarily the same as our interests or the interests of ordinary Canadians. We are dealing an important resource, a vital industry and a depleting resource, namely, oil and gas-energy.

The Canadian Government was faced with an oil crisis in 1979. There were tremendous implications for inflation, economic growth and unemployment. The federal Government saw excessive surpluses in Alberta with the Alberta Heritage Trust Fund. It saw there was not enough money in taxes going to the federal share. It was losing money in revenue sharing. It saw gas prices and oil prices rising. Of course, that was the mistake of the national energy policy; the prices went down.

However, at that time it thought that the prices would continue to rise. It was faced with a taxation system which was not very good. Oil companies are notorious for using loopholes, tax write-offs and so on. Therefore, in a national energy policy, the Government increased the taxes on the industry, and that is why we have the PGRT.

The industry squealed about that because it was an effective tax. It was almost too effective, and that is why I had criticisms of it. I criticized that tax as hurting smaller Canadian companies and I wanted modifications of the tax. I criticized the National Energy Program for shifting all the exploration away from Calgary and Edmonton or away from the western sedimentary basin into the frontier. That was the basis of my criticisms, and I think they were valid criticisms. I ask Hon. Members—and I am sure the Hon. Member for Calgary South has read it—to read what I think is the best book on this subject. It is entitled The Politics of Energy: The Development and Implementation of the NEP. It is not my book; it was written by G. Bruce Doern and Glen Toner. It summarizes the situation. If Hon. Members read it, they will stop speaking in myths.

According to the polls, the Canadian public liked the thrust, not of that particular National Energy Program, but of some sort of national energy program. It was popular, and it is being continued by the Government in many ways.

How does the Hon. Member feel about her Government expanding Petro-Canada into the retail field and so on with the purchase of Gulf? Surely that is contrary to some of the things she said in her speech. Again it is an attempt to have a national energy program in the sense of expanding Petro-Canada across the country. Did she agree with the Government's expansion of Petro-Canada in this way?

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take a few hours and discuss Petro-Canada and the take-over with the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), but I do not think that it is directly relevant to the Bill we are discussing today.

He mentioned competition, and I strongly believe in competition. I believe in supply and demand as well. We in the Conservative Government, by removing unfair taxation of revenues and treating the oil industry like any other industry, have opened it up to more competition. Canada certainly welcomes foreign investment. Canada is looking for increased economic activity and increased productivity.

The Hon. Member also mentioned Canadian ownership. Certainly my Government believes in Canadian ownership. It has risen by 5 per cent during the past year. We are working toward that.

I spoke a great deal about Alberta and western Canada in my speech, but perhaps I could diversify a little and refer to Fort McMurray. Fort McMurray is perhaps the centre of the Syncrude oil sands area. It has a population of about 35,000 people. Between 7,000 and 8,000 of those people come from Newfoundland. I call this wonderful. We are obviously expanding our resource activity in Alberta, but we are also providing jobs for people in other parts of the country. When we start back in the hole, making holes out West, we buy our steel, perhaps from Hamilton. We buy all our whoopees—pick-ups for those people who do not know what a whoopee is—from either Windsor or Oshawa. We buy a lot of our compressors out of Quebec and, yes, we even purchase some of our valves from New Brunswick.

I had the opportunity of visiting Fort McMurray and Cold Lake last spring with a few of my colleagues. I would suggest that some of the other people in the House should expose themselves to what are the oil and gas industry spinoffs. What helps one region can certainly help another. In conclusion, I want to say that it is not just—

Mr. Waddell: What about Petro-Canada?

Mrs. Sparrow: I will discuss Petro-Canada with the Hon. Member, but it would take two or three hours and it is not relevant to this particular Bill.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief comment, if I may. For those of us who are in the House and spend some time here, I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), who just made her speech, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who just asked a question. We do ourselves some service when we have civility and serious debate in the House. It is really unfortunate that people like the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) could not be in the House a little more regularly. We should act as though we are people trying to do the best we can on behalf of the people who sent us here. It is unfortunate for people who choose to watch this kind of debate to see the harangues which occur all too often. When we have a useful discussion, Hon. Members rise, talk about the issue and put some points on the record. They should be commended for the way in which they conducted themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment. I appreciated the speech of the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). I think she indicated the reality of the situation. The reality is that when the national energy policy was brought in, the prices of oil and gas were rising, contrary to what the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said. Once the national energy policy was established, things deteriorated. There was unjust treatment of the oil industry. Whether they are small or large firms, they are working for Canadians. Whether they are foreign-owned or Canadian-owned, they produce goods and services in Canada.

Our Government has given us the opportunity to re-establish confidence in the oil and gas sector, and I am very proud to be part of the Government.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow). As I understand it, she has been involved in the energy industry. There is a perception across Canada, among those people who do not know the industry, that five or six large companies do all the work. We hear about exploration. I think many people picture Imperial Oil picking up its rigs, heading out and doing exploration work; that just the big companies are involved.

Could she enlighten the people who are watching the debate today, as well as those who will read Hansard, about the myriad of people involved? Who does the exploration, the supplying and that type of thing of this kind of work?

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. He is quite right that there is a myth out there that perhaps five or six multinational companies do most of the exploration, development and production.

With regard to conventional oil, most exploration and production is done by small independents. In the frontier areas or on the Canada Lands, most of it is done by major companies; there is no doubt about that. However, we have joint ventures. Oftentimes two or three smaller independent companies will work together in a consortium, put up so much of the working principal and take back some of the funds on a percentage basis. A number of small independents are involved. If I were to quote the figure, I am sure it would be close to 400.

The small independents are really the big workers in western Canada; there is no doubt about that. I am speaking about Saskatchewan, Alberta and into B.C. where we have more gas plays. They lend themselves not only to exploration and production; they are also what I would call the hard community workers in terms of various community operations or even into oil and gas, like IPAC and CPA. These gentlemen participate in and help oil companies to work together. Independents are by far the biggest explorers in Alberta and Saskatchewan. However, when we get into the frontiers, it is definitely the larger companies, that are involved.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments is now terminated. I see the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) seeking the floor. Is he prepared to call it one o'clock?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it one o'clock and be held over until after three o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, the Hon. Member will be recognized then.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ST. CLAIR RIVER CHEMICAL SPILLS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the lesson we are learning from the St. Clair River is that whatever industry discharges into air, water, and soil eventually becomes a burden to the public purse. What Occidental Chemicals did in the Love Canal has become a threat to health in communities taking drinking water on either side of the Niagara River. Now we learn of Dow Chemical's nine spills into the St. Clair River at Sarnia between January and August, 1985. These consisted of 8.9 million litres of dirty acidic water; 4,400 litres of ethylene glycol; 2,500 kilograms of ethylene dichloride; small amounts of perchloro ethylene, a cancer-causing dry-cleaning substance; 800 litres of styrene and ethylbenzene; 13,368 litres of propylene oxide derivatives which cause cancers in animals; 41,000 litres of perchloro ethylene. Industry knows what it discharges daily into the environment. The public does not.

The St. Clair River is international water. So is the Niagara River. We have a responsibility to keep them clean because of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. If industry does not know how to police itself, then Governments must impose stiff controls and penalties. The Canadian Environmental Law Association is right in demanding a judicial inquiry. At the same time the Government of Canada must impose along the St. Clair River stringent controls on daily industrial discharges to protect public health from now on.

If we do our part in implementing the Water Quality Agreement in the St. Clair River, then we will have a stronger voice—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

WAR CRIMINALS

PARLIAMENTARY STUDY GROUP—MEDIA REPORTING

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the concern many Canadians feel about the Royal Commission given Mr. Jules Deschênes to inquire into the presence in Canada of alleged Nazi war criminals has led to the establishment of a parliamentary study group on the Canadian Nazi war criminal inquiry. Media reporting of the activities of this group has, unfortunately, tended to increase rather than allay concern.

Almost two weeks after the members of this group heard a critical treatment of the U.S. Office of Special Investigations which has been pursuing deportation proceedings against alleged war criminals in the U.S., The Globe and Mail reported the meeting and described members of the group as opposed to the commission seeking evidence in the Soviet Union. The Globe and Mail has not yet reported that I, as one member, believe Canadian courts could make proper use of Nazi records and other legitimate evidence to be found in the Soviet Union. Nor has it reported on the presentation that the group heard the next day, November 6, from Professor Irwin Cotler, speaking on behalf of the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Many members of this parliamentary study group are determined to maintain the balance required of Members of Parliament. They wish to inform themselves in anticipation of the Government's receiving the report of the commission. They are also concerned about achieving better understanding among the ethnocultural communities of Canada and think that their activities may contribute to that end.

MARCHMENT COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to applaud and endorse the basic thrust and direction of the Marchment committee's report on the mandate and productivity of the Canada Post Corporation. Over the past year I have received many complaints from residents of Don Valley East, most of whom are upset about the quality of service. It simply takes too long for a letter to be delivered. Seniors are hard pressed when pension cheques arrive late. Small-business owners are pressed to the wall when delays occur in receiving orders and payments. Most of the people I spoke to were against the decision to increase postal rates a few months ago. They wanted the service to improve first.

Now, at last, we have a set of strong recommendations and sensible objectives. The new standards of delivery for first and second class mail will be welcomed. A letter must be delivered in two days.

There is also a huge public relations job to be done. Most people speak well of individual postal employees they meet. However, they are fed up with the threats of strikes and the below par service. It was encouraging to see that the committee recommends a contingency delivery system in case of a national emergency. The recommendation to reduce absenteeism to normal industrial levels is a must.

While privatization was rejected at this time, I was pleased to see it will be considered in 1990 if service and financial self-sufficiency goals are not met. Most Canadians will welcome the committee's tough—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

COMMISSION'S DECISION TO SECURE EVIDENCE IN SOVIET UNION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, Justice Jules Deschenes has delivered his decision with regard to the taking of Soviet evidence. This decision falls far short of the expectations of many Canadians.

Presently the Soviet Union is engaged in a war in Afghanistan, a war the Soviet Union began as an invader in 1980. Since that time about 5,000 Soviet soldiers have been killed and an unknown larger number wounded. The Afghans have had their homeland ravaged and five million refugees have fled their homes. They have been uprooted by an invader that has the audacity to claim it was invited. These tactics are not unlike the tactics of Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union during the Second World War. There is no regard for the inviolability of borders, there is no regard for the population, and there is no regard for their own military forces.

It is ironic that the Deschenes Commission feels evidence can be gathered in the Soviet Union, a country with a record on human rights violations that is second to none. It is not inconceivable that five million innocent victims of the war in Afghanistan may some day be accused of war crimes and one can be sure that the Soviet Union will be more than willing to supply evidence against them.

TAXATION

VALUE ADDED TAX—CONSEQUENCES FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is considering the possibility of introducing a value-added tax system to replace the federal sales tax. Such a decision would be disastrous for small businesses. The administrative costs would be very heavy, for exemptions would very likely create confusion. A value-added tax system would require 1.4 million new tax licenses and an extension of the bureaucracy.

One of the hundreds of promises which the Conservative Party had made before the September 4, 1984, election was to ease quickly and significantly the burden resulting from overwhelming regulations and red tape.

In Sherbrooke, on July 26, 1984, the Prime Minister stated: "Private sector is the engine of economic growth, and small and medium size businesses are its key elements". Now that he is in power, the same leader is entertaining the notion of setting up a tax system which would betray the promises he had made before the election.

LIVESTOCK BLOOD-TYPING LABORATORY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday Agriculture Canada officials overruled the recommendations of the Department's study by announcing the privatization of the only cattle and horse blood-typing laboratory in Canada. This action shocked livestock breeders and could cost the industry millions of dollars.

Using the same principles of blood-typing used in human paternity suits, this lab solves disputes involving embryo transfers in cattle and resolves questions of parentage in expensive thoroughbred horses. Clearly, large amounts of money are at stake.

In view of this, and in view of the obvious need for the strict integrity, confidentiality, and continuity well provided by the federal lab, it seems absurd that this important service will be privatized on April 1. What makes it seem even more absurd is that the program did not cost the Government a cent. It was run on a break even basis.

Quite understandably, the breeders are worried and upset. They are concerned about the prospects of higher testing prices as a result of a private monopoly taking over, but they are also concerned about a sudden decline in international confidence in the records of Canadian breeders. On behalf of the cattle and horse breeders of Canada and on behalf of the livestock industry in general, I call for this decision to be rescinded immediately.

COMMISSION'S DECISION TO SECURE EVIDENCE IN SOVIET UNION

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Deschenes Commission decided that it would send representatives to the Soviet Union and Poland to obtain evidence on possible war criminals in Canada. In Edmonton, 80,000 Canadians of Ukrainian origin, as well as Canadians of Lithuanian, Latvian, Estonian and other origins are deeply concerned over this decision. This decision leaves me asking a number of questions about the safeguards and conditions requested by the Commission to protect our own citizens. Our primary concern should be to protect Canadians from potential falsified evidence used against them by the Soviet Union.

● (1410)

Can we trust Soviet authorities to respect the independence of our own inquiry? Will they not interfere with our Canadian legal traditions while the Commission is conducting examinations in the Soviet Union? If the Commission is to seek Soviet evidence then it must agree, first, to guarantee in writing that all documents are absolutely genuine; second, evidence heard by witnesses will be obtained according to Canadian law free from Soviet interference; and, third, interpreters must be Canadian.

We should always be mindful that the Soviet Union has rewritten its own history to fit its own views and philosophy. The Commission should not use any information that cannot be verified through sources and evidence obtained in the democratic and free world. To do otherwise could condemn innocent Canadians.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—TESTING OF WATER SAMPLES

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform all Members and the Canadian public that the Ministry of the Environment tests of treated water samples at four St. Clair area water treatment plants have shown no detectable dioxins in any form. We are assured that the St. Clair River area drinking water poses no threat to our health.

I would like to applaud the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for responding in a most responsible and effective manner. Mobilizing an urgent scientific investigation into the sources of chemicals and directing water samples to be taken every two hours are proof positive that the Government is committed to acting in a professional and positive manner on environmental concerns. The St. Clair River issue has been plagued by many who inaccurately reported the events. Such irresponsible actions have, unfortunately, caused undue stress for many and a possible blight on our community. This should never have happened. The Minister recognized this. He exercised great care to ensure that the reports were completely and professionally reported. The St. Clair River situation is being addressed by four Government agencies spending a total of $8 million over the next two years. Those who have spoken on this issue should make sure that they are bound by the standard practice of data quality assurance. Failure to do so indicates an unseemly haste to condemn an entire area by innuendo, a practice which serves no one.

WOMEN

EQUALITY OR INDEPENDENCE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform one of my colleagues, who was amazed and felt betrayed by the absence of any Canadian symbol and by the presence of an alleged separatist poster at the Quebec Trade Mission in New York. I had a chance to go to New York last week for the Conference of Women Leaders in North America.

I was therefore able to have a look at what the Hon. Member referred to two weeks ago. Contrary to what he suggested, there is no separatist poster in the office of the Mission head, but rather a poster with the slogan "Equality or Independence".

For the benefit of those men and women who are not aware of the meaning, I want to emphasize that this is the title of an important report published by the Quebec Council on the Status of Women. That report dealt with the Quebec Government's action strategies for implementing non-sexist policies, policies that would better respect the rights of women. This is indeed one of the most significant reports on feminist policy in Canada.

That therefore is in no way a separatist poster, unless feminists are to be branded as such. Further, I would invite him to come and see that poster in my own office here in Ottawa. My honourable colleague had no reason to feel humiliated by the Quebec Government. The next time he sees what to him looks like a separatist poster in French, I will be pleased to translate it for his benefit.

WAR CRIMINALS

COMMISSION'S DECISION TO SECURE EVIDENCE IN SOVIET UNION

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, although Justice Jules Deschénes' decision on the taking of Soviet evidence has outlined several safeguards, it has ignored safeguards which must be in place before any agreement is reached.

Justice Deschénes makes no mention of the right of the accused to be represented by counsel and to receive notice. There is no mention that examination of evidence will be taken on neutral territory where forensic examination and verification of the authenticity of the documents will be guaranteed. There is no mention that witnesses should and would be free to travel to Canada to give their testimony, and that they and their families would be free from retribution after testifying.

Before any travel is undertaken all the conditions must be agreed to in writing, and all the conditions must be maintained. The slightest deviation from the conditions set out should immediately nullify the agreement. There can be no allowance for the taking of evidence by anyone other than Canadian authorities. Justice Deschénes' conclusion that, barring unforeseen circumstances, the evidence be elicited by deputy commissioners leaves the door wide open for Soviet authorities to impede the justice procedure.

The rights of Canadians must be protected, and every guarantee protecting those rights must be in writing. It is not enough to say that the Commission will insist that they be accepted and observed. All the conditions must be accepted in writing and observed, or they will not be worth the paper they are written on.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION TO HYUNDAI PROJECT—CONDITIONS IMPOSED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister who has just entered the House.

Yesterday I asked him whether he could indicate to the House the nature and extent of the federal Government's participation in the Hyundai project, but he declined to answer.

Now that he realizes the growing interest in this matter, and given the fact that his planning and priorities committee met this morning, or so I have been told, is he now in a position to tell the House the nature and extent of the federal Government contribution, and what conditions Hyundai will have to meet to obtain Government assistance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The answer will be given at the proper time, Mr. Speaker, but I can say that, as far as I know, considerations at the provincial and federal levels have been deemed to be objective and quite reasonable under the circumstances.

Last August 27 the federal Government announced that Hyundai had decided to come to Canada, and a research program was begun to find a location satisfactory to the company, and this has been done. There was such a program and I should think that the results are promising for Quebec and Canada as a whole.

Oral Questions

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL GIVE DETAILS ON HYUNDAI PROJECT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister keeps repeating that he or his Government reached an agreement with Hyundai nearly three months ago, last August 29, yet it would seem that the federal Government has been unable to make a decision on the nature of its own participation in this project. Just how much longer will Canadians have to wait to know where the matter stands? The agreement was concluded over two and a half months ago.

[English]

An Hon. Member: There was no question.

Mr. Speaker: Questions? The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING HYUNDAI PROJECT PERTAINING TO CANADIAN CONTENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Car manufacturers in Canada have always been obliged to provide guarantees they would use made in Canada parts in their assembly plants, before they would be allowed to sell their cars in Canada.

Apparently, the Canadian Government neglected to insist on this kind of guarantee in the case of Hyundai, thus depriving Quebecers of 16,000 jobs—

An Hon. Member: 1,600 jobs.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —I meant 1,600 jobs.

My question is as follows: Why did the federal Government neglect to negotiate a guarantee with Hyundai that the Canadian content rule would be followed as it always has been in Quebec?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Leader of the Opposition may not have all the facts. Last February, Hyundai announced it would be investing $25 million in Ontario to set up an automobile parts plant. This proves that the company is prepared to manufacture parts in Canada, and I can inform the House that the President of the Automobile Parts Association, Mr. Lavelle, was both very interested and very satisfied at the time.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING 1,600 JOBS THAT COULD BE SACRIFICED IN HYUNDAI PROJECT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Unfortunately, there is no agreement between the Government of Canada or the Government of Quebec and Hyundai to ensure that the Canadian content rule is followed in manufacturing parts for Canadian automobiles. There is no guarantee, and the Government has therefore sacrificed 1,600 more jobs in this matter.

Would the Minister care to comment?

• (1420)

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I see the Leader of the Opposition does not have his facts straight and is relying on rumours.

The fact that Hyundai has already started investing $25 million means that the company and the Canadian Government are already communicating and negotiating satisfactorily.

Mr. Speaker, in any case, Hyundai and the Canadian Government have not yet concluded an agreement. We are still at the negotiating stage.

SAFEGUARDING OF JOBS IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the agreement was even announced by the Government of Quebec as a fait accompli.

My question is still directed to the Minister. If we let Canadians buy more cars containing parts manufactured in Southern Korea instead of here in Canada, this is going to cost us jobs at General Motors in Ste-Thérèse and elsewhere.

Could the Minister inform the House how he intends to safeguard jobs in Quebec, considering the agreement with Hyundai?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Liberals, especially the Quebec Liberals and in fact all Quebec Liberals remain silent when 2,000 new jobs are about to be given to this province.

I know you are upset and I know they are upset. I know they are upset, because for the first time in 20 years, a major part of the automobile industry is going to be shared fairly across the country, including Quebec.

We are concluding agreements pursuant to our joint agreements with the Government of Quebec, and in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, details will be announced when and as appropriate. I can tell you one thing: Quebecers and Canadians will be very pleased with Hyundai's coming to Canada.

INQUIRY WHY CERTAIN GUARANTEES HAVE NOT BEEN OBTAINED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It does not concern the jobs which have been created, but the 1,600 jobs which are indirectly involved and which will not be created without a guarantee from the company to the Government.

Can the Prime Minister explain why the Government did not obtain a guarantee from the Hyundai Company to create indirect employment in the manufacture of automotive parts since this was done in the case of other investments made by automobile companies in Canada? Why has no guarantee been given, according to the administrators of the company itself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will see that the conditions for job creation in the case of Hyundai will be at least as interesting as they have been for all other automobile companies in Canada.

Quebec and Canada will benefit from this new high technology industry which will locate in this country.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS NOT DEMANDED PRECISE GUARANTEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is as follows. No Canadian consumer would purchase a Pony, a GM car, a Renault or any other kind of automobile without a specific guarantee that this car would receive maintenance services for one, two or four years.

Why did the Government not obtain a similar guarantee from Hyundai in return for its investment of $200 million in this company? Why is there no guarantee?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is so negative. All the usual conventional guarantees will be announced in due time, as they should be.

I would have thought that the NDP Members who rise in this House to speak about job creation problems in Montreal East would be unanimous today in congratulating us on this magnificent achievement of job creation in Quebec. Stop complaining!

TRADE

ROLE OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister said that the employment of the chief negotiator for trade would be on a part-time, temporary basis. I believe those were the words he used in the House. An incredible amount of work must be done in preparation since there has, as yet, been no consultation with the provinces or the private industrial groups. Surely it is necessary to have someone without corporate attachments doing this job on a full-time basis.

In the role that Mr. Reisman will play on a temporary basis, will he be involved in discussions on trade negotiations with the cabinet committee? Will he be involved in laying out the strategy and developing plans with the individual sectors? If so, does the Prime Minister believe that it is proper under the circumstances, when Mr. Reisman still has his private business attachments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say that I saw the quite unseemly and pejorative allusions made by the Hon. Member about Simon Reisman and I think he should take them back, because Simon Reisman's record of accomplishment in this country in the service of Canada is second to none.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As I indicated yesterday, when we receive the signal—as I hope we shall—that would transform this into the kind of employment that my hon. friend refers to, obviously all the appropriate steps will be taken and there will be no difficulty at all. I know that my hon. friend would agree that that is the honourable course.

Mr. Axworthy: I suggest to the Prime Minister that he go back and read the articles. I was questioning his bad judgment, not Mr. Reisman's character.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL OF APPOINTMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will recall his September statement about the reference of Order in Council appointments to a committee of Parliament. Will the Prime Minister make a commitment now that Mr. Reisman's appointment will be submitted to a committee of Members of Parliament so that we can properly question him about his terms of employment, his views on trade, and his business attachments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to do that if the Hon. Member will promise that when Mr. Reisman comes he will not hightail it out of town and hide again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: At least I wasn't in Florida, Mulroney.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING HYUNDAI PROJECT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is for the Minister of State (Small Businesses). The Minister has indicated that the Government is negotiating with the Hyundai firm, but the Government has already made a decision concerning the financial assistance. My question is simple: Why guarantees to the firm first and negotiations later?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question and said that the whole thing was being done under objective criteria and following the proper procedure, and that a statement would be made in due course.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister clarify for the House if he is saying that the Government of Canada has put up hundreds of millions of dollars in taxpayers' money—from Quebecers as well as other parts of Canada—and has already guaranteed that to Hyundai so that they know they will get their money, but has not obtained a commitment from Hyundai to install a parts production facility? What kind of nonsense is that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, both aspects of the premise to the question are false. There is no question of hundreds of millions of dollars being put up. I believe that the amounts being discussed are very reasonable in the circumstances and are pursuant to objective standards. I can assure my hon. friend that all the appropriate and conventional guarantees in this area will have been secured before the matter is finally concluded.

Mr. Broadbent: We are seeing the kind of negotiation we can expect between the Government and the United States on much broader and more serious matters. We will not hold our breath.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Is the Prime Minister telling the House that he acknowledges that at least millions of dollars of taxpayer money have been offered to Hyundai but they have not committed themselves to producing parts which would provide additional thousands of jobs in the Province of Quebec? Is that what the Prime Minister is telling us?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why is the Hon. Member so persistently silly?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: He works at it.

Mr. Mulroney: I know he works at it. Do not hold your breath.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: In point of fact—

An Hon. Member: What will be the Canadian content? Answer that question.

Mr. Mulroney: I can hear an Hon. Member from Quebec who is whining. You are unhappy, I know, because we are creating jobs in Quebec! You are unhappy because of that.

[English]

I thought that I had responded fully to my hon. friend.

On August 27 last the company announced its intention to come to Canada. In the same press statement there was an indication that an engineering firm had been retained to seek an appropriate location in the country. That was found.

Whatever assistance is provided by provincial and federal Governments is entirely conventional and appropriate. It is helpful to the attraction of this very important industry to a province which has suffered very high unemployment rates, and I know my hon. friend wants to be helpful in bringing those down. It was all done in the normal and helpful course of business, and I know that my hon. friend agrees with that. There have been no undertakings that in any way vitiate our commitment to those guarantees. This will all be made abundantly clear.

Mr. Broadbent: What guarantees?

INQUIRY IF CANADIAN CONTENT GUARANTEED IN HYUNDAI AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Prime Minister, I am under the impression that once again Quebec is being taken for a ride. With respect to the Hyundai contract in Bromont, could you tell the House whether the company has guaranteed a Canadian content not only for the assembly line but also for the manufacturing of parts? Has the company guaranteed a given Canadian content and if so, what is the figure?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on my friend's remark but I can tell him that Quebecers from all over the province are tired of his vulgar remarks in the House.

A good 2,000 jobs have been created in the car industry in Quebec and the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie is unhappy. All Quebecers are most pleased with the agreements concluded between Quebec and the federal Government in compliance with the fair criteria used to settle all issues.

INQUIRY CONCERNING CANADIAN CONTENT IN AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I should like to say to the Prime Minister that 52 per cent of Canadians disagree with his policy. I should like him in the first place to answer our questions. Quebecers want to know whether they were taken in. Has the company given some guarantees about the Canadian content in the manufacturing operations? And I would like to remind the Prime Minister that Bromont is not in the East End of Montreal. He was mixed up a while ago. Can he answer yes or no that the company has agreed to a Canadian content?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, actually, Quebecers on September 4, 1984, came to the conclusion that they had been taken in during the past 16 years and that it was time for a change. This is why they elected a new Government. We barely missed him the last time but it will be better next time. Carry on with your stupid remarks and the voters in Quebec will settle your case, and in a very short time.

WESTERN DROUGHT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the western drought agreement, or the lack of an agreement. The Minister told this House on October 25 that the provinces were not required to declare the drought zone a disaster area, that that was not necessary. Yesterday, however, the Minister indicated in the press that the federal decision is being delayed pending further discussions with the provinces.

Can the Minister tell the House specifically what are the provinces now being asked to do or to agree to before federal assistance can be announced? Specifically, what is being asked of them?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my comments to the press yesterday were accurate. The Member should know that the Government is fully committed to providing some reasonable level of financial assistance to drought stricken western farmers. This Government is one that does not act unilaterally, and is one that believes in co-operation and consultation with the provinces, which is exactly what we are doing.

SIZE OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us specifically how many federal dollars he is prepared to put on the table? What is under discussion here in terms of dollars as the federal contribution?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest with respect to the dollars, but the Member will know that this is not the time nor the place to make such an announcement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

DECISION ON THIRD SASKATCHEWAN TELEVISION NETWORK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Communications. Yesterday the Minister advised the House that the main purpose of the Cabinet's intervention into the CRTC licensing of the third TV channel in Saskatchewan was simply to seek information and not to question the CRTC ruling. Your cabinet order, Mr. Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Finestone: —clearly refers the decision back to the CRTC for reconsideration and hearing, not for information. The Minister misled the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: —and I think was unaware of that.

Mr. Speaker: A question please.

Mrs. Finestone: Would the Minister care to admit that he misled the House, and would he care to withdraw his remarks?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State and Acting Minister of Communications): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I tried to explain the process to the Hon. Member. I will try again today.

What we did was to ask the CRTC to reconsider some information concerning the Regina and Saskatoon markets as well as the situation in terms of revenue to make sure that surveys on contents were accurate and did not warrant a further ruling. Period! That is all we asked. We do not seek to change the ruling, we simply want additional information, and I suggest that it is exactly what the CRTC will provide.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister read the Privy Council order that came out of the office and then determine whether or not he has misled the House.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

An Hon. Member: Are you the Speaker?

An Hon. Member: Mind your own business.

Some Hon. Members: Keep quiet.

Mrs. Finestone: Excuse me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. A supplementary question. Just a question, please.

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to know whether the Minister now agrees that the Cabinet has set a dangerous precedent and that the Government is basically saying that the arms length independent CRTC regulatory body is not doing the job it is supposed to do. Is that what you are saying?

An Hon. Member: Order.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State and Acting Minister of Communications): No, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

UNITED STATES FUGITIVES—LEGAL SUBMISSIONS

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler. People in my riding are fed up about keeping these people in Canada.

We hear that the Minister of Justice has decided to give an extension of two weeks for the submission when he will hear arguments. Could the Minister tell us why he gave that extension?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the case of Mr. Kindler, his counsel wished to have more time because he was recieving some evidence, I think it was from a psychiatrist. Therefore, I agreed to give another two weeks for him to make his submission.

The matter was dealt with justly. It will be seen to be dealt with justly. I am a just Minister of Justice, and that is why I gave the additional two weeks.

INQUIRY CONCERNING CANADIAN CONTENT UNDER AGREEMENT WITH HYUNDAI

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

As the Prime Minister would know, other car companies in Canada have to buy at least 50 per cent of their components in this country.

Here is my question: Mr. Speaker, what will be the Canadian content under the provisions of the agreement with Hyundai? Will the company have to buy at least 50 per cent of its components here in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered such questions on several occasions.

INQUIRY IF HYUNDAI WILL GUARANTEE 52 PER CENT CANADIAN CONTENT AS DID AMC IN BRAMPTON

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is no. However, I have another question: Will Hyundai's Canadian content in Quebec be the same as that of AMC in Brampton, Ontario, which has to buy 52 per cent of its supplies here in Canada?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, Hyundai does not build cars in Canada, yet it already buys a lot of its parts in Canada. That is one proof. Besides, we have explained very—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Answer the question.

Mr. Bissonnette: Besides, if the Leader of the Opposition would listen, we have explained very clearly a few moments ago that last February the company had already announced a $25 million investment to make parts in Canada. Negotiations have been going on and you ought to be pleased about the number of jobs which will be created in Canada.

I can tell the Leader of the Opposition that I have seen Japanese and other foreign cars on Canadian roads for the past 15 years. What have you done during those 15 years?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER POLLUTION—GREAT LAKES INSTITUTE INQUIRY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister has repeatedly assured the House that he wants the best team of scientists available in the country to study the toxic chemical situation in the St. Clair River. Yet it now appears that the Great Lakes Institute in Windsor, which collected the samples in August, 1984, and is a key source of expert knowledge in this area, will be denied $100,000 to participate in the study. Could the Minister explain why?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any institute, even one as reputable as the one to which the Hon. Member referred in his question, has a monopoly on scientific truth. We have mobilized a high-powered team of scientists from across the country and the United States, involving many institutes, several universities, and different Departments of Government, both federal and provincial. If the Institute in question thinks that it can be more usefully involved in our activities, I would be glad to entertain a proposal from it directly.

INSTITUTE'S PROPOSAL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. There is a proposal and, not only that, there is a willingness on the part of the Institute to participate in the study. I would rather hear the answer of the Minister of the Environment as to whether he can reassure us that the Institute was not denied $100,000 because of the desire of his Department to keep a lid on information.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I find that question to be as offensive as it is unfair and inaccurate. The fact is that in a few moments time I will be releasing more scientific information on any environmental question of import to the Canadian people than has ever been released before by any Minister of the Crown.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

HAIDA INDIANS' CLAIM TO QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday he ducked questions about the Haida Nation and what was happening in South Moresby. This is not an environmental issue. This is a constitutional issue which clearly falls under the purview of the Prime Minister. The fact is that the Haida claim is legally filed here in Ottawa with the Government of Canada. Will the Prime Minister do what he has done in other areas of Canada and open negotiations with the Council of the Haida Nation with regard to the South Moresby area? Right now they are being treated as criminals on land which they have occupied for more than 10,000 years.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, frankly I am not sure why the Hon. Member continues to persist with this same line of questioning. I do not think it furthers the goals of either Parliament or the Haida people. It is exactly the same question which I was asked not once, not twice, but three times yesterday. My answer is the same. Those negotiations have been opened. We are proceeding with them. They are going well, and we have received no indication whatever from the Haida people that they are disgruntled with the way in which we are performing.

OPENING OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I hope, before he goes to Geneva, that he will take some action on this matter. The Constitution recognizes the aboriginal rights of the Haida people. They need to be affirmed through a legal negotiation process which only the Prime Minister can undertake—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Fulton: I ask my question on behalf of Canada's first citizens and the people of British Columbia. Will you get on your feet today and simply say that yes, you are prepared to open those negotiations, as you have in other areas of Canada? It is a crucial matter in British Columbia, and I plead with you again that you answer it in the affirmative—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Questions and answers should be put through the Chair.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question has been answered yesterday. My hon. friend does not have to issue any plea in this regard. He is aware of the commitment of the Government on behalf of the native peoples of Canada when we met with the provincial Premiers and tried urgently and desperately to seek a fair agreement on behalf of the native people of Canada. That we were unsuccessful at that time in no way diminishes our commitment toward equality, fairness, and justice for the native people. That has been the motivating force and will continue to be so in this case as well.

ESTIMATES

FORECAST OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. He will know that Canadians continue to be disappointed at the rising cost of Government. While the increase in expenditures was comparatively modest in the recent Supplementary Estimates, when will the major impact of cost savings from the Nielsen task force be reflected in Supplementary Estimates? When will we see absolute decreases in Estimates as Canadians are demanding?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the Supplementary Estimates which I tabled last week indicated a very modest rise. As a matter of fact our programmed expenditures for the first five months of the year are up by only 2.8 per cent, which is the lowest rate of increase in many years indeed. The Supplementary Estimates were well within the fiscal framework. We are tracking it and monitoring it on a very regular basis. We fully expect to be able to live within that fiscal framework for the rest of this year.

FISHERIES

WORKSHOP ON NORTHERN FISHERIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries. Could he explain to the House why he has deliberately refused to attend a Montebello workshop to develop a policy on northern fisheries and oceans, sponsored by his own Department, when his predecessor made a firm commitment to be there? Even more puzzling, why has he ordered his senior officials not to participate in that workshop, offending many northern native groups and industrial representatives?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the allegation contained in the last part of that question is utterly false, and in respect of the first part of the question, I was not invited.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We can understand why.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will know better, because he had a telephone call about this.

Mr. Nielsen: I didn't.

Mr. Penner: When will the Prime Minister appoint a full-time Fisheries Minister so that we do not have groups, like those at Montebello, being offended as they were yesterday and today, and so that our fishing industry is not ignored and confused as it has been for the last many months?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Tomorrow morning.

INCO WORKFORCE REDUCTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the fact that International Nickel Company of Canada has to reduce its workforce in the Sudbury basin by 1,200 workers. It has tried an early retirement plan, and only 375 workers took advantage of it. The company is now threatening 32-hour work-weeks, lay-offs, and plant shut-downs. What will the Minister do about this very sad and very serious situation?

• (1450)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that some 354 employees have agreed to early retirement. Another 217 have applied for special disability pensions. I also understand that the company is discussing with the union other measures which would ensure that no permanent long-term lay-offs take place.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer does not square with the facts. When can we expect some particular measures to create employment in the Sudbury Basin? We think this matter is very serious.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member. The matter is serious. That is why we are working under the Canadian Jobs Strategy to ensure jobs are created this winter as well as training for these people. As I mentioned to the Hon. Member earlier, we are also working with the province of Ontario to ensure special measures in this case. When that is finalized I have invited him to participate in that particular venture.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF TAX YEAR

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Each year at this time mining and exploration companies have run into difficulties with flow-through shares are exploration work. Could the Minister tell this House if his Department will look into the possibility of extending the year end to January or February of the following year so the exploration work can be done in a more detailed manner?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is expressing some very serious concern for the interests of the mining industry. I want to assure him that I have discussed this matter with members of the mining industry as well as with the Minister of State for Mines. It is under consideration and I very much appreciate his comments.

INQUIRY IF AGREEMENT EXISTS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND HYUNDAI

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

I was at the press conference when it was announced that Hyundai would be coming to the Eastern Townships. We were told the Prime Minister had agreed to this major investment being announced, and I was given the assurance the federal Government had made a deal with Hyundai for construction of the plant in Bromont.

I would now like to know from the Prime Minister: Was there a deal when he talked about Florida with the Premier of Quebec? And is he now telling me that the deal is off and that the people of the Eastern Townships can no longer count on the federal Government going along with this venture?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Is the Hon. Member for Shefford against Hyundai coming to Quebec? Is that what he is trying to say? In that case, the question is—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is asking you a question!

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition says he is asking a question. I answered the question and I say this is an entirely normal transaction. It is the kind of criteria that have been used to attract industry to various parts of the country.

The Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada have been working on this matter for some time.

I think that if we refer to these basic objective criteria, the Government has been successful in attracting this major industry to Quebec, on the basis, as I said before, of entirely conventional criteria.

So I would say that this is reason for the Hon. Member to rejoice, not to criticize.

ROLE PLAYED BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, what I am asking the Prime Minister is: Did he make a deal? What is the federal Government's contribution going to be? At the press conference, we were given to understand there would be 1,200 jobs plus 1,600 jobs indirectly, through sub-contractors.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to rise in the House and say: Yes, our signatures are on it, we have a deal; here is our contribution; here is the number of jobs guaranteed? That is what we want to know. We will certainly be rejoicing, but we want no surprises. We want to know whether the Prime Minister was playing politics or economics with respect to the assurances we were given.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I know that my hon. friend would like to sow the seeds of uncertainty in Quebec with respect to Hyundai. I think he has received all the normal and usual assurances that Hyundai is coming to Canada and Quebec, with all the advantages that entails.

I can give him further assurances. After the next federal election, I promise you will get a Hyundai dealership in the Eastern Townships, and then you can sell the cars!

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health and concerns a very broad policy issue surrounding cigarette advertising. Instead of relying on a counter advertising program to discourage people from smoking, which of course will only be a drop in the bucket compared to what the tobacco companies can put out, would the Minister not agree that it would be a far better policy to ban cigarette advertising altogether?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I agree with much of what the Hon. Member says, as well as in terms of the capacity, be it voluntary organizations or Government at both levels, to deal with it. There are other options to consider as well. I want to assure the Hon. Member that other policies on convincing Canadians that smoking is detrimental to their health will be forthcoming.

ANTI-SMOKING ADVERTISING CONTRACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister now admit that there is some hypocrisy and conflict of interest in awarding the counter advertising program contract to McKim Advertising, a company which has a much larger contract to convince people to start smoking? We are giving them a few hundred thousand dollars to discourage people from smoking, when they make a lot more money encouraging people to smoke.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, both myself and others who have looked at it feel that the advertising campaign going forward is a good one. It is directed at youth. We have up to 30,000 smoke-related deaths in Canada in a given year and I think the Hon. Member should keep in mind that whatever measures we can use, and whatever number of young Canadians we can convince not to start smoking, that is a great advantage.

Ms. McDonald: It is not enough.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): My point is, yes, I would like to see even more money expended on that program. I do not see a conflict because the contract was awarded on the basis of a recommendation by six civil servants.

LOCATION OF HYUNDAI PLANT IN QUEBEC—CANADIAN CONTENT INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it relates to Hyundai and whether or not there is a deal. The Minister responsible for Small Business indicated that the deal had not yet been finalized. We are interested in the Canadian content involved. The vice-president of Hyundai said that last year they purchased $25 million worth of Canadian parts, which is about 2.5 per cent of the total deal. Is there a Canadian content guarantee? Do we have a contract? Did the Government of Quebec break out of the traces as the Minister of Public Works indicated? Do we have a deal or not, and what is the Canadian content? That is what we are asking for here.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that the transaction will be made public in the normal course of events. It follows conventional and objective criteria which will neither offend nor surprise Members of this House. It meets the objectives of successive Canadian Governments, including job creation.

WESTERN DROUGHT—SITUATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who will know that British Columbia cattlemen in the drought zone have not yet received assistance and, as a consequence, are forced to reduce their herds. Is the reason for the lack of assistance the inability of the Government to enter successful negotiations with that Province? Is this also causing the hesitation in signing an agreement for all of western Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. The difficulty arises from the original assessment. Certain areas of B.C. were identified as being in the drought area but, unfortunately, others were not. I have had a number of representations made to me over the past number of weeks on this issue. I have asked our people in the field to try to secure funds which have already been committed. If there are some funds left over, and I hope there are, we can take a second look at some of the areas in his Province.

SURVEY OF AFFECTED AREAS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister takes a second look does he take into consideration the geographical differences based on elevation as opposed simply to an aerial basis as applies to the Peace River country and the plains area? The problems in central British Columbia are often vertical in the sense that they are high up in the hills.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a very valid observation and recommendation. Had some of these matters been taken into consideration at the time of the original evaluation, then perhaps we would not find ourselves in these difficulties. However, the Hon. Member can rest assured that I am well aware of it and I will do my best in the final analysis, as I indicated earlier, to come up with a few extra dollars, dollars that have already been committed. If I do, I can assure him that they will be redirected in that area.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week Allan George, dean of the largest mathematics faculty in the country at the University of Waterloo, announced that he would be leaving Canada to go to the University of Tennessee. He said that he was leaving Canada because of the negative research climate in this country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I asked the Hon. Member for a very short, immediate question.

Mr. Berger: Is this what the Prime Minister had in mind when he promised us jobs in the last election? Will the Prime Minister keep his promise to provide money for research in Canada and not the United States? Will he keep the jobs in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when we talked about creating jobs in the election campaign, that meant the 333,000 jobs the Government created in its first year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That compared with an average of about 70,000 jobs created by the previous Government will give the Hon. Member an idea of how far and quickly the country has come in terms of realizing its capacity. Part of that is stopping the brain drain to which my hon. friend referred, which became a haemorrhage under the Liberal Government which drove them out of the country along with the job-creating equity capital. We are starting to bring it back so the country can realize some of its growth potential.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Contrary to what was reported in yesterday's Hansard, I have never refused to go to a meeting last week-end to deal with family allowances. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has made an allegation to that effect during a debate and I want to set the record straight.

Such dishonest and devious methods are an insult to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. I have never been—

MONITORING OF RADIATION TESTS AT NANOOSE BAY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a very large number of residents of British Columbia, and particularly residents of Vancouver Island, who have become very concerned over the years about the radiation monitoring tests of waters adjacent to the base at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They have become concerned that there has been no monitoring of the procedures used for these tests and that there has been no public inquiry to hear the concerns of the people about the tests, and they therefore humbly beg the House to ensure that a public inquiry is held before the agreement between Canada and the United States on testing is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from some people in Canada who are protesting the deindexation decision on family allowances. They point out that the accelerated cut-backs in child benefits, which will reach $600 million annually by 1990, on top of other increases to sales taxes, excise taxes and so on make it very difficult for middle and low-income families and they therefore request the Parliament of Canada to rescind the unfair tax measures.

MONITORING OF RADIATION TESTS AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions. One is signed by Canadians from Winnipeg who are also concerned about the present agreement between Canada and the United States with respect to the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range in Nanoose Bay and who ask that a public inquiry he held before the present agreement is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the pleasure to present a petition on behalf of many of my own constituents and others from Winnipeg who are protesting the deindexation of the family allowance and who want Parliament to do something about the deindexation and have full indexing reinstated.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I also have two petitions. I have the honour to present first a petition from——the Federation of French Canadian Women of the Sudbury area, including the municipality of Chelmsford.

[Translation]

[English]

These persons who have signed the petition call upon the Government to withdraw the deindexing of the family allowances and they call upon the Government specifically to re-establish full indexation to family allowances.

Petitions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my second petition comes from members of the United Food and Commercial Workers Ontario Retail Council which covers the Province of Ontario. There are some 300 signatures to this petition and those who signed it protest the changes in the unemployment insurance program which would see pension income used as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. They call upon the Government to return the unemployment insurance program to its original position whereby pension income was not considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

MONITORING OF RADIATION TESTS AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I too have several petitions to present today. The first one is signed by a number of individuals from various communities across the country including my own constituency who state that the agreement between Canada and the U.S. that authorizes the use of Nanoose Bay in British Columbia as a maritime experimental test range is inadequate in several areas and does not safeguard Canada's sovereignty. They ask that a public inquiry be held prior to the present agreement's renegotiation in order to investigate those concerns and to recommend appropriate action.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from Canadians who live in Montreal and other Quebec centres who state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They state further that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table two petitions. The first one is signed by a number of my constituents from Ottawa Centre and some other people of the Ottawa area who oppose the Government's decision to deindex family allowances and urge the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

PRESENCE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN CANADIAN WATERS—CALL FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The other petition is from Canadians residing in the Province of Quebec who are concerned about the presence of Americans on the Maritime Experimental Range in Western Canada as well as the presence of nuclear weapons on board American ships, urging the House to hold a public inquiry before an agreement is negotiated with the Americans on the use of the Maritime Range.

IMPROVEMENT IN POSTAL SERVICE REQUESTED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which was circulated by the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada and it contains some 70,000 names. I would like to inform the House that these petitions are continuing to come in. What they call for is that the service of Canada Post be made a number one priority—

• (1510)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Hon. Members opposite may laugh but Canadians want better service.

These petitioners call for basic customary services, such as door-to-door delivery, six day delivery to rural areas, six day accessibility to wicket and postal services and prompt service at reasonable rates. They call upon the Government to cease and desist its plans to privatize Canada Post.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MONITORING OF RADIATION TESTS AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and responsibility to present a petition from citizens of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands regarding the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They are very concerned about the radiation monitoring situation and about the naval policy of the United States which neither confirms nor denies the presence of nuclear weapons. They are concerned about the economic impact of the testing agreement. Therefore, they call upon the House to hold a full public inquiry before the present agreement is negotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and my duty to present petitions from residents of northwestern Ontario, primarily from the City of Thunder Bay, who protest the deindexation of the universal family allowance program. They point out that this will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and will fall further and further behind. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance.

IMPACT ON FOREST INDUSTRY OF U.S. PROTECTIONIST MEASURES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege today to present a petition signed by residents of the communities of Hudson and Sioux Lookout who call upon Parliament and the Government to intervene on their behalf by discouraging the United States Congress from passing into law unfair protectionist measures aimed at Canada's forest industry.

MONITORING OF RADIATION TESTS AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition signed by numerous residents of the communities of Armdale, Halifax and Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, concerning the Nanoose Bay test range in British Columbia. They state their concerns and worries about the use of this range by the United States of America and petition Parliament to authorize a public inquiry into its use and misuse.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 60 people from the northern Okanagan area of British Columbia regarding the procedures for and the results of the radiation monitoring tests of waters part of and adjacent to the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They ask that these be made public. They are concerned about the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels entering the said area. They suggest that the test range is unacceptable and are concerned about the economics of the test range on the local community. They are calling for a public inquiry.

DEW LINE SITES

Question No. 86—Mr. Nickerson:

Is the Department of National Defence aware of the presence of polychlorinated biphenols at old DEW line sites in northern Canada and, if so (a) on what date does DND plan to remove these dangerous chemicals (b) what means of transportation would be used and what would be the method and location of ultimate disposal (c) what would be the estimated cost of satisfactorily removing and disposing of the PCBs?

Mr. Robert Wenman (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. (a) The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (DIAND) is responsible for the old DEW Line sites. DND agreed to provide assistance to DIAND in a clean-up project during the summer of 1985. DND personnel and aircraft were involved. Environment Canada provided on site advisors to ensure all contaminants were removed.

(b) Helicopters have been used to transport packaged equipment and contaminants to active DEW Line sites. Arrangements have been made with the United States Air Force to fly the materials, along with other U.S. materials from the DEW Line, to a proper disposal site in the United States.

(c) The cost for the clean-up is not available at this time.

PRESS PACKAGE

Question No. 474—Mr. Allmand:

Did the Minister of Employment and Immigration mail a press package (communiqué and clippings) dated August 29, 1985 and, if so (a) what was the postage cost, per package (b) how many were sent through the post?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes. (a) Postage cost per package averaged 921/2 cents. Total cost $2,944.33. (b) 3,180 press packages were mailed.

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT INCOME TAX ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in the debate on Bill C-82 this afternoon because it provides us with an opportunity to appreciate important fiscal and economic matters which should be in the minds of the Canadian people. It provides us with an opportunity to appreciate the policy directions which the Government is taking. It gives us the opportunity to discover choices made by the Conservative Party, choices which will not redound, I suggest, to the prosperity of the country, choices which are very closely related to the fact that corporate enterprises in the country may do very well with the present Government. I suppose its leaders will be happy about that fact.

The ordinary people of Canada, the payers of taxes in the middle and lower ranges in particular, will suffer from the decisions which this Government has made. The result of the economic and social suffering they undergo will be to make Canada a poorer country than it might be. It will quite possibly have the effect of nipping in the bud this fragile recovery, some manifestations of which the Government is using so strongly to try to maintain its standing with the Canadian public.

We know that as far as the polls are concerned the Government is in some difficulty with the Canadian public and that its standing has fallen markedly. I suggest this afternoon, in the context of debating the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, that that fall in public standing does not relate only to mistakes which Ministers made during September and October and evidences of Government bungling of matters as varied as the inspection of tuna in New Brunswick to the propping-up of a bank which should have been allowed to fall last March as a consequence of the mismanagement of that bank. I suggest that this fall in standing of the Government reflects choices which have been made, including the one that we are debating this afternoon, choices which will impoverish ordinary Canadians while enriching a small number of oil companies. These are companies which have done very well in the past and which will be pursuing the process of their own enrichment more and more strongly thanks to the decisions of the Government.

I was interested to note before we rose for lunch the comments of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) who commended friends and colleagues from my caucus for the fine tone the debate had taken between them. I hope this afternoon that in considering some of these questions we might maintain that particular level of debate, even if I do aim at the bone and marrow of Government policy in these matters in suggesting the nature and the consequences of decisions which the Government is taking.

If we are to appreciate the nature of Bill C-82, and if all Canadians who are watching us are to appreciate the nature of the Bill, it is necessary to look back over a dozen years or so of the petroleum industry in Canada and place this particular decision of the Government in context. It will be of no surprise to the Canadian people, nor to any of my colleagues here I would think, to suggest that what happened in the petroleum industry beginning about 1973 was one of the most incredible pieces of cartel action ever seen by the human population of this globe. The increase in petroleum prices which OPEC was able to carry through beginning in 1973-74 led to one of the most massive and certainly rapid transfers of wealth which we have ever seen. It had the effect of enriching producers of petroleum, initially perhaps the companies, but, in the Middle East in particular, also the owners of the resource, and a variety of countries and governments in the most remarkable way. Inevitably, given the global nature of the oil business, that impact was felt in Canada as well. Those who were experiencing this transfer, those who were paying the rise in costs of gasoline and other petroleum products, were faced with a situation in which wealth could end up in very few hands or could very easily leave the country. In fact, during the 1970s that clearly happened. If one examines the figures for the petroleum industry, one will discover that the total revenues to be shared in 1975 were $5 billion. Two years later it had hit $7.5 billion. By 1979, it had reached $10.9 billion. These very rapid increases in revenue to the oil companies were taken from the petroleum users.

The question is, what should the Government do in these circumstances, are the oil companies to be enriched and able to transfer great amounts of capital out of Canada, or are the people of Canada to be able to share in this enormous economic rent, as the economists would surely label it? Whether or not it was possible for the people of Canada to share in the consequence of cartel action was a very important question which faced the Canadian Government in the late 1970s and early 1980s because the profits of the leading oil companies in Canada rose so very sharply. For example, the profits of Imperial Oil rose from $290 million in 1974 to $471 million in 1979, and they went as high as $601 million in 1980. That was a reflection of the consequences of the process I am describing.

During the 1970s the industry succeeded in holding percentages ranging from 56 per cent down to 45 per cent in 1977-1978 and down still more to 42 per cent in 1979, but then they rebounded in 1980 to 56 per cent of the revenues. The province took practically all of the rest. The federal Government received very little of this. It received 6 per cent of the total, a mere $300 million, in 1975. The percentage dropped to 4 per cent in 1977 and in 1980 it actually fell as low as minus 10 per cent. The Government ended up a net loser in the petroleum revenue sharing in which the people of Canada surely had a right to share. The oil companies made enormous gains which were largely transferred out of the country. The evidence from 1974 to 1980 is that there was a net capital export of $4.1 billion by the oil industry. It is in the context, then, of the oil companies largely involved in transferring these monopoly gains, the economic rent, out of the country. So the establishment of the petroleum and gas revenue tax in 1981 was a sensible decision by the Government. Its repeal now under Bill C-82 is a stupid decision, fiscally and economically, as one can appreciate in perusing these statistics. As a consequence of the changes carried through by our last Government it became possible for Ottawa to join in the sharing of these revenues which had resulted from the OPEC cartel power. In fact, in 1981 the federal Government was able to achieve a 22 per cent share of those revenues. In 1982 that went up to 26 per cent although the percentage and the absolute totals fell off from $5.3 billion in 1982 to $4.6 billion in 1983 and only $3.8 billion estimated for 1984.

The significant thing of this process of achieving some gain for the Government of Canada, for the people of Canada, out of the consequences of cartel success, was that the people of Canada were able to see the Government taking in revenues and using them for the great variety of national purposes for which the Government of Canada exists. The oil companies did not suffer from all of this. One of the quite remarkable things is that the revenues of the petroleum industry continue to rise. In 1980 the revenues were $11.3 billion to be shared between industry, the provinces and Ottawa. In 1981 they increased by almost one-half, to $15.8 billion. In 1982 they shot up to $20.4 billion and then levelled off a little.

With respect to these incredible revenues coming to the industry for potential sharing, the significant thing is that in spite of the petroleum and gas revenue tax, the gains which the industry had after the tax was applied, continued to increase in absolute figures. In 1980 the industry had taken in $6.3 billion. The following year, under the tax, it took in $6.7 billion. In the following year the total rose to $9.4 billion and then to $10.6 billion and $11.6 billion. In fact, the industry was moving towards keeping one-half of the revenues which were produced from petroleum and gas in this country. That is evidence of the extent to which the industry continued to flourish in spite of the tax. During the years 1981 to 1983—that three-year period—the oil companies transferred out of this country another $3.5 billion.

The decision of the Conservative Government to cancel the petroleum and gas revenue tax means that this revenue will no longer come to Government to cover the costs of Government, that great variety of things we need to do, such as keeping family allowances indexed, maintaining the old age pension at the proper level, and covering the cost of Government mistakes like the $1 billion it is going to cost to take care of the depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Perhaps even more things, such as job-creation activities, could be paid for by a fair sharing of this revenue.

It is the decision of the Conservative Government to allow the oil companies to take the boodle again, to operate on the same patterns of the early 1970s and the 1960s. It has decided to allow these companies and their shareholders to enrich themselves outside of the country while individual Canadians pay two cents per litre more for gasoline in September and an additional one cent per litre in January, the increase in the sales tax which the Liberals put through in October of 1984 and another percentage point on the sales tax in 1986, and so it is nickel and diming the Canadian people to death. It is loading more and more of the burden of taxation on individual Canadians while it lets the oil companies get away with these enormous amounts in profits. The oil companies are able to enjoy again the unrestricted use of the profits which result from cartel activity. Here is a Government which is prepared to sock it to individual Canadians, to take money out of their pockets, and restrict the amount of business which can be done in any community because of the levels of taxation which it imposes, while letting the oil companies—which are undoubtedly good supporters of the Conservatives at election time—run off with billions and billions of dollars, sweep it out of the country, making precious little contribution—as others have noted before me—to the economy of this country.

Those are the kinds of decisions the Conservatives have made. Do they care about ordinary Canadians? Don't make me laugh. Are they concerned about the profits of their corporate friends? Obviously. That is the point of the petroleum and gas revenue tax changes which are before us this afternoon.

The Canadian people expected something different than that. The oil companies, I am sure did not. However, ordinary Canadians, the people who voted for the Conservatives on September of 1984, expected them to take a leading part in getting this country moving, not selling it out as the Government will do with this Bill. I speak in strongest opposition to this Bill.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Waddell: I want to comment, but if there is an opposition Member who wants to ask a question first, I would be prepared to wait.

Mr. Ravis: I will listen to you comment.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to make this comment. The Member who spoke talked about the revenues and the difficulty of giving $5.6 billion to the oil companies, as this Bill does, in the period until 1990. We must talk about where the federal Government is going to get the revenue. I would like to put on the record two letters which I have with respect to revenue sharing between the federal and provincial Governments. I wrote to Paul Tellier, then the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, on June 27 of this year. My letter is very short. It reads:

Dear Mr. Tellier:

According to your Department's paper "Energy Policy Overview", it is estimated that the revenue sharing between the federal and provincial governments and industry for 1984 will be, in percentage terms, 17 per cent, 31 per cent and 52 per cent, respectively.

Would you please advise me by return of what the revenue sharing split is now as a result of the Western Accord, both in percentage terms, and in dollar terms.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter.

This is very important, Mr. Speaker, because this is how the pie will be sliced up and this will be the way in which the federal Government can finance a lot of its social programs and so on. I received a reply on September 19 of this year from Mr. de Montigny Marchand who is the new Deputy Minister. It reads:

Dear Mr. Waddell:

Thank you for your letter of June 27, 1985, in which you requested information on energy revenue shares. You referred to EMR estimates for 1984 that were produced late last year, and asked how these figures compare to the shares under the Western Accord.

The Petroleum Monitoring Agency has recently published its annual monitoring survey for 1984. I understand you have received a copy of the report. It shows the following actual breakdown of revenues for 1984:

	$ Billion	%
Federal	3.4	14.9
Provinces	7.3	31.5
Industry	12.4	53.6

The differences between these results and the earlier departmental estimates to which you referred are the normal result of receiving more accurate data on which to base the calculations.

Although it is still too soon to know with any degree of certainty what the total revenues available for "sharing" or the percentage splits will be for 1985, we expect that the results will be quite similar to those for 1984.

With respect to projections beyond 1985—

This is after the Western Accord and after this Bill.

—we have produced several different, internal forecasts of energy revenues. However, in the midst of so much uncertainty regarding international oil prices, levels of domestic oil and gas production, export volumes and natural gas prices, these projections are highly speculative in nature and, in fact, could be very misleading. Therefore, no single forecast has been adopted as the "official" departmental forecast, and I am of the opinion that it would be inappropriate to put any on the public record at this time.

Yours sincerely,
de Montigny Marchand

What he is telling me, and the point I raise, is that we are asked to approve $5.6 billion to be given to the oil companies without putting this tax on. We do not know what the federal Government's share will be. We do not know whether it will get less of a share or how much it will get. It is incredible that the Conservative Party, which was dedicated to freedom of information, will not release the information as to how much money the federal Government will get. Through this Bill we are, in fact, bankrupting the federal Treasury.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) a question with regard to the bank bail-outs that we keep hearing about. I think the people of Canada are getting a little tired of hearing the NDP talk about this bail-out. I want to ask him a specific question. What would his Party have done with the municipalities, the credit unions, the pension funds and the individuals that were caught in that squeeze? I ask this question as a Member of the House from western Canada because that side of the issue must be touched upon. It is very easy to say that there is a billion dollar bail-out, but I do not hear too many people in the NDP from western Canada saying that we should let these little people fall by the wayside. What is the Member's response to that?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for that question because it allows us to be quite clear about our position on this particular matter. I will say at the outset that the mistakes that were made last March are at the root of the difficulty. If there had been a thorough examination of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the kind of examination that could, I believe, have been undertaken over the weekend that the Government had, it would have been realized that the bank was beyond saving. Responsible Ministers of Finance who deserve the position that they have in the Canadian Government, recognizing that and appreciating that this amounted to 2.5 per cent of the assets of the Canadian banking system, which banking system has prided itself on its standard and probity in years past, would have said that the bank does not deserve to exist. They would have said that we should drive it into receivership. We should have had a royal commission, or whatever you would choose in the way of an investigation, to determine how, in the history of Canadian banking, something of that sort could have happened. That commission could have been empowered to consider hardship cases among the depositors who were involved in the bank and could have been asked to recommend to the Government action that might have been taken in case of a genuine hardship.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, that we are dealing with depositors who have more than $60,000 in the bank because those with up to $60,000 on deposit are covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. If there were hardship cases among those who had more than $60,000 in the bank last March, let the Parliament of Canada consider what could be done. There is no question that we could have had a sound policy for dealing with the hardship cases and the Canadian people would not have had loaded upon them the consequence of mistakes made by Ministers of Finance and of stupid and naive decisions made last March which could lead those Ministers to resign their positions. The Canadian people would then not have to pay $1 billion for a bail-out in September resulting from the repeated assurances that the Canadian Commercial Bank was fine. Sometimes bad business is done, and when bad business is done Government does not prop it up and the people of Canada do not pay the shot.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Member specifically what his response would be. I received a song and dance about what his Party would have done, but what, specifically, would the answer have been to the municipalities which had a couple of million dollars each in that bank, to the credit unions, the pension funds and the individuals?

I would also like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What would have happened if we had not looked after these people? What stance would the New Democratic Party have taken then? I suggest that it would have been here to clobber us over our heads at every chance. You cannot win with those people. It is a no-win situation. You are damned if you do, and damned if you don't.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what I am being asked to add to my response. I have suggested that there could have been consideration of hardship cases among the depositors. Perhaps the $60,000 level is inadequate and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation should be reformed. I have already said that provision could have been made to deal with those cases. We could have had a royal commission to recommend to us what should be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the period for questions and comments is now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-82, an Act to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall), which was agreed to on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution), as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Crosbie moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to begin the final debate in this House on Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code in relation to prostitution. I might say that this will be the first of three Bills which will reach the final stage of debate. In the ensuing days and weeks we will have a Bill before the House for final reading with respect to divorce, for amendment of the Judges Act, and very soon there will come into force and effect the new legislation which was passed in this House, Bill C-18, with respect to drunk driving.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the legislative committee which reviewed Bill C-49 made just one amendment to the Bill as introduced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). That amendment, which clarified the meaning of the application of the Bill to customers of prostitutes, was welcomed by the Government as a successful attempt to clarify a meaning which was somewhat nebulous.

The committee had the benefit of the evidence of witnesses both for and against the Bill. Their testimony has, for the most part, reinforced my belief that Bill C-49 is not only needed urgently, but that it is the only possible way to deal effectively and efficiently with the problems related to street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution. None of the witnesses heard by the committee seriously question that Bill C-49 is the only legal, constitutional and practical way to return to the residents of our major urban centres the freedom to enjoy their homes and the streets of their communities without the interference of those who now use those streets to buy and sell sex.

May I add at this point, Mr. Speaker, that I was very impressed by the fact that over the past few years included in the people who appeared before our committee were the mayors of every major city from Vancouver to Niagara Falls to Halifax to Toronto. These are duly elected officials who represent their constituents and with one exception—that is the mayor of the City of Ottawa—everyone agreed that this is a good Bill. May I also point out that Mayor Drapeau came from Montreal to appear before our committee to support this Bill in circumstances where the City of Montreal has a by-law.

There are some who are opposed to this Bill. Their numbers do not include the mayors of the major municipalities of Canada which are afflicted with the blight of street prostitution. With the one exception I mentioned, that of the outgoing mayor of Ottawa, the elected representatives of the people at the level of government most directly affected by the problem endorsed the Government's response. Moreover, the Minister of Justice has the support of the chief law officers of the Crown in the provinces, the Attorneys General, in his effort to deal with the problem. It is worth noting that the newly elected Attorney General of Ontario, the Hon. Ian Scott, wrote to express his support for this legislative initiative. It is unfortunate that his colleagues in this House do not choose to follow his advice.

The opposition to this Bill focuses essentially on two criticisms; first, that the Bill does not deal with all of the problems associated with prostitution, including those relating to the exploitation of children and to the economic status of prostitutes. The second criticism is that the Bill creates a risk of abuse by the police. I would like once again to respond to these concerns. First, it is not, and it has never been, the objective of Bill C-49 to deal with all aspects of prostitution. What we are going to do is review the Badgley Report, and the report of the Fraser Committee, and in the new year there will be more legislation with respect to this particular topic. The purpose of this Bill is, plainly and simply, to deal with the very serious situation which exists in many cities in Canada, that of street solicitation.

Despite the evidence, a few persons continue to maintain that this is a minor problem. With respect, I cannot agree. Both in the view of the Fraser Committee and in the view of the citizens who are living with the problem on a day-to-day basis, it has been proven beyond any doubt that other legal and non-legal administrative means cannot deal effectively with the situation. That is not to say that social and economic approaches should not be undertaken to deal with the problems associated with prostitution but, first and foremost, we need a strong and forceful law to deal with the urgent problem of public prostitution which faces communities across Canada. Proposals for response to other problems associated with prostitution are under review. These other recommendations, as I said, will be coming forward in the new year.

With respect to the argument that Bill C-49 hypothetically could be abused by the police, there is always an element of risk when criminal law is used for the protection of the public interest. This is true for the enforcement of any sanction involving the Criminal Code.

Nothing in this Bill alters the fundamental rights of Canadians guaranteed by the Charter. Nothing in the Bill changes the basic substantive, procedural and evidentiary rights enjoyed by anyone suspected of an offence in the country. A lawful arrest requires reasonable and probable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed and the prosecution must prove every element of the offence beyond a reasonable doubt. The courts have made it clear that the control of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution is a function of the criminal law. The provinces and the municipalities do not have the legislative authority to resolve the problem. That responsibility rests with Parliament and we have an obligation to the public to exercise our duty.

May I very briefly, Mr. Speaker, tell the House a little about the history of the Criminal Code as it affects prostitution and street soliciting. During the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries there evolved in England, for reasons I am not sure I can tell you about, a notion of what was called a "street walker". When our Criminal Code was codified in 1892 it contained certain offences known as vagrancy offences. No matter how the Criminal Code changed in terms of numbers, there was always the section with respect to vagrancy.

This law was in effect until 1972 and, although it was a very, very effective law, many of us felt that it was not a good law because it said that anyone who was known as a common prostitute and who loitered in a public place had to give the police a good account of herself or else she would be convicted of an offence. In many cases in those days prostitutes were picked up on the street, there were disputes as to the accounts they gave of themselves and it became, quite literally, a status offence. It was decided in 1972 that, as effective as this law was, it was not a good law. We changed the law in Parliament in that year and as a result of a judicial decision made in 1978 on what the word "soliciting" meant, it was decided that the conduct had to be "pressing and persistent". To this day, in spite of many, many cases that have gone to the Supreme Court of Canada, people still do not know precisely what the limit of "pressing and persistent" is.

As a result the Fraser report said that there is no doubt that there has to be a change in the law. It is not something that should be dealt with by way of municipal by-laws but is the responsibility of Parliament. There is no doubt, as evidenced by the surveys which were taken by the Fraser Commission, that 84 per cent of the people wanted something to happen in order that we could enforce a law with respect to prostitutes in the streets of our major cities because they are an absolute blight. Whether the political persuasion of people was NDP, such as that of the Mayor of Vancouver, or Conservative, or Liberal as it is in the City of Toronto, all of the duly elected mayors came before committees and said that we must do something.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this law which we are about to implement is going to be an effective law. It is an important law. Let us not lose sight of the fact that it is not the be-all and end-all. It is not an express train to Utopia. It is meant to be an effective law to clean up the streets of our major cities so that people can enjoy freedom from interference.

I am very happy that after two weeks in committee and a debate on second reading we have reached the final stages without amendment. I hope that there is expenditious passage of this Bill. I hope that Members of the House agree with me in order that we can get it through as quickly as possible and ensure that it is in full force and effect very, very soon.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate on third reading of Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution).

I think it is a pity the Bill is being pushed through so quickly. This is probably an indication of the Progressive Conservative Government's political will to adopt the prostitution Bill, despite the many protests it has raised in committee.

First of all, I would like to point out that Bill C-49 is in no way an intelligent response to the Fraser and Badgley reports. In fact, the members of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution made it clear that a comprehensive strategy, covering both legal and social aspects, was necessary to find answers to the prostitution problem.

Bill C-49 amends only a very small part of the Criminal Code that deals with prostitution, thereby rejecting the comprehensive approach outright, and it should now be obvious to Canadians that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has been looking at prostitution through the wrong end of the lens.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Speyer) say earlier that all mayors of Canada's major cities came to testify before the Committee and supported Bill C-49, with the exception of one mayor, the Mayor of the City of Ottawa.

I want to say that I support the brief presented by the Mayor of the City of Ottawa to this Committee.

When I heard Mayor Drapeau tell us how terrible the problem was in Montreal and that the streets had to be swept clean once again, I reminded him that 30 years ago, when he first campaigned for mayor of the City of Montreal, he had swept the streets clean in exactly the same way. In fact, he did it so well that now they have to start all over again.

My point is that today, Bill C-49 does not deal at all with the real problem of prostitution.

Pressure groups have been very active in their protests against Bill C-49. In fact, there were a great many protests by these groups, reflecting a number of legitimate concerns.

The Canadian Federation of Rights and Freedoms wanted the Fraser recommendations to be implemented. According to the Federation, the current wording of Bill C-49 is too general where the authority granted police officers is concerned, and will prove ineffective in the long run, because its effect will only be to have prostitution go underground.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Rights and Freedoms firmly believes that decriminalizing prostitution is the one and only reasonable solution that should be put forward.

In its submission to the legislative committee a few weeks ago, the Criminal Justice Section of the Canadian Bar Association reminded us that criminal law should only be used under certain conditions.

One thing I want to emphasize is that criminal law should only be used when other means of social control are inadequate or inappropriate. Criminal law should only restrain rights and freedoms when required by the goals pursued. Male and female lawyers question the far-reaching implications of the proposed amendments. They said: "Any innocent person coming into contact with a male or female prostitute could face criminal action". Asking a prostitute what time it is can also become very dangerous in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Criminal Justice Section of the Canadian Bar Association is worth being quoted:

[English]

It said that if there is going to be any amendment made to the Criminal Code in regard to prostitution it should not be a makeshift or temporary thing, but that any proposed amendment to the Criminal Code should be enacted as part of a broader legislative package dealing with other changes to prostitution under the Criminal Code including those changes recommended by the Fraser committee designed to move prostitution from the street into private settings. Amendments to be enacted should not be enacted as a separate section of the Criminal Code dealing with prostitution but, rather, they should constitute a specific and properly defined type of nuisance under the appropriate provision of the Criminal Code. Legislative changes concerning prostitution should contain a more realistic definition of an offence, addressed to the elements of nuisance and disturbance. The present wording of the legislation is much too broad and it is not directed to this aspect.

● (1700)

The proposed amendment is, in fact, to criminalize acts surrounding the provision of the services of the prostitutes and is, therefore, in direct contradiction to the recommendation of the Fraser Report.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, women's groups also were very much disappointed by Bill C-49. The National Association of Women and the Law is alarmed by the content and ramifications of the provisional measures to reduce the inconvenience for the public of prostitution on public thoroughfares. The ramifications of prohibiting any communication.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am afraid that I must call it five o'clock. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ROLE OF THE CORPORATION VIS-À-VIS OTHER LENDING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reviewing the role of the Farm Credit Corporation, in order to make clear to the farming community, its position vis-à-vis other lending institutions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to introduce my motion in the House. Last April 23 I asked that the role of Canada's Farm Credit Corporation be re-examined so as to shed light on its position concerning farmers and Canadian financial institutions. I think that, in the not too distant future, we will have to define more clearly what this Crown corporation can do to help the many Canadian farmers who are in dire financial straits. As spokesman for a riding where most residents earn their living on farms, I think it is imperative to take action.

Mr. Speaker, the first thing to do is to explain the situation the farming community was in when the Progressive Conservative Party took office, and the best way to do that is to ask Hon. Members a few questions.

Among other things, for instance, do you know that between 1961 and 1981 the price of land rose four times faster than the price of farm products? Do you think it is easy to turn a farm business into a paying proposition under such circumstances? Do you also know that, according to a 1984 Farm Credit Corporation survey, close to 20 per cent of Canadian farmers experience serious financial problems? Do you also know that farm investments controlled by Canadian farmers declined by $1.2 billion—that is 1 per cent between 1981 and 1984—whereas the consumer price index jumped from 100 in 1981 to 124 in 1984?

Perhaps Hon. Members are wondering why I should be so concerned over these figures? Maybe I should sit down and let my western Canada colleagues have the floor, because they have been pushing the panic button all these years? Well, no way! In my own riding, in my own area, farmers are faced with serious problems, and an organization such as the Farm Credit Corporation could provide them with a more structured and efficient assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a few more questions: Have you ever heard about the Movement for the Survival of Farmers? Have you ever heard about la Cour des miracles? I am not joking; this is serious indeed! Such a thing exists in my own riding. It is an organization of Quebec farmers faced with financial difficulties. Have you ever heard of Mr. Marcel Talbot? Well, in August 1984, during the election campaign, this man and a number of others, including Jean-Claude Boucher, went on a hunger strike in Saint-Cyrille de Wendover, in the Drummond riding. This man and the other strikers who were involved in various farming ventures had a great many horror stories to tell about their financial predicaments.

Mr. Speaker, I have also a number of press clippings—you can see that I have several of them—which I have collected in my area and especially from Mr. Gérald Prince, a journalist with the La Tribune newspaper. I used these clippings as a basis for my remarks.

To understand the important role which the Farm Credit Corporation could play today, we should look at the important role it played in earlier times. For instance, when its ancestor the Canadian Farm Loan Board was established in 1927, it was for very specific reasons. Canadian farmers were facing a very difficult situation. They were compelled to take short term loans at very high interest rates. Do you think the situation today is quite different? In order to address this problem, the Government established the Canadian Farm Loan Board. For 32 years, farmers could rely on an institution which adequately met their needs.

During this period, agriculture also experienced unprecedented growth. During the 50's, the whole context of agricultural financing changed. The situation became very different. The Canadian Farm Loan Board was granting loans nearly exclusively to consolidate middle term debts into long term debts. There were no lenders to serve newcomers in agriculture and farmers wishing to expand or modernize their farm. Have things really changed? The Board was no longer playing the dynamic role for which it had been created. Its terms of reference had to be changed and this is what the Government of Mr. Diefenbaker did in 1959. Desperate ills demand desperate measures. A new Act was passed and the Farm Credit Corporation was created. To give it the tools it required to be effective, the Conservative Government of the time increased the maximum amount of loans. It allowed the FCC to grant loans to farmers with lower net assets if they were willing to have their management methods monitored.

In 1964, the Farm Credit Act was amended to allow the FCC to lend money to associations of farmers and promote the pooling of financial resources. In the same spirit, the Act was again amended in 1975 to make it easier for new farmers to get started. This amendment allowed them to continue to have outside income in addition to their farming income during the first five years of the term of the loan.

By creating the Farm Credit Corporation, the Government put in place all the elements required to achieve the growth we have seen in Canadian agriculture since the beginning of the 60's until approximately three years ago.

It is interesting to note that, very soon after its creation, the Farm Credit Corporation held a large share of the farm credit market. As soon as 1965, it held 69 per cent of the market. I would like to point out that its share has now gone down to less than 25 per cent.

The 70's were certainly prosperous times. The value of land increased constantly and interest rates remained relatively low. In absolute figures, people often borrowed large amounts instead of using their capital because it was more economical to do so.

The arrival of the banks on the farm credit market was beneficial. They were able to offer middle and short term loans. Many farmers, after acquiring healthy net assets, no longer needed the security offered by long term loans.

• (1710)

They therefore turned to the banks because, even though their long term interest rates were higher than those of the corporation, their short and middle term rates were very attractive. This led many farmers to do business with them. This proved to be by far the most advantageous method of financing until interest rates began to climb. From then on, many farmers started to feel the pinch and have a lot of difficulty balancing their budget.

Moreover, at the same time the sales of farm products began to slow down and the growth of the 70's was replaced by a slow compression of incomes. Exports went down significantly, the production capacity of producers began increasing and prices fell.

The Farm Credit Corporation no longer plays the role which farmers expect it to play. It has been overtaken by the changes which have occurred in the financial structure of Canadian farming.

It is not recently that the situation of farmers has begun to deteriorate. The Government should have taken action three years ago, but it did nothing.

In 1959, when the corporation was created, there was a major problem which it helped to solve. Sources of financing and funds available for farm credit were inadequate. Today, we know that there is no shortage of money for lending.

Farmers are now facing another problem. Their level of indebtedness is too high. In addition, their incomes are not high enough to enable them to repay their debts. The problem also is that capitalization costs are too high and young farmers have to mortgage all their assets.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what happens to a pork producer when the selling price falls? What will happen to an apple producer in my riding when he incurs a $100,000 loss as a result of an early spring frost in April as it happened in 1981? Yes, a compensation was paid but three years later. Fortunately for that apple producer, Mr. Omer Blanchard, he had over 30 years of experience. What would have happened if a young man had bought that business one, two or five years ago?

Do you know also that 60 per cent of farm bankruptcies in Quebec in 1983-84 occurred within 40 miles from Drummondville? And according to the newspaper La terre de chez-nous which reported those statistics, they were generally well-equipped farms with new crops and producers arriving late on that market. Now where are the lenders who could have helped those farmers during those gloomy days? Do you not think that should be the actual role to be played by the Farm Credit Corporation?

The Farm Credit Corporation should be in a position to face the true problems and find original and effective solutions. It should not go on granting loans along the same old lines. The assets of a farmer should be better managed to increase his net worth as quickly as possible. Thus, a farmer would be in a stronger position.

It is known that one of the major problems faced by farmers since the beginning of times is income fluctuation. Their incomes fluctuate with the weather, with production elsewhere in the world, and with the prices they get. In economic terms, that is reflected in cash flow problems. It is imperative that the Farm Credit Corporation develop ways of repayment that would allow farmers to compromise with those kinds of situations.

Formerly, the solution was to arrange a loan at the lowest possible rate, with the longest possible term, in order to stabilize the expenses. The corporation is offering a product based on that model, which has already proved to be efficient but is now obsolete, because the terms and conditions of the loans it is offering do not meet with the particular needs of farmers anymore. In order to become efficient, the corporation would have to be provided with the means to reduce its interest rates to make them compatible with actual farm income, the actual income derived by a farmer from his investment.

In a column written by Mr. André Goulet in the Drummondville newspaper L'Express of November 12, 1985—which is very recent, only last week—reference is made to the case of Mario Sarrazin, a 21-year-old from Wickham, a very beautiful community in my constituency. From a very early age, he has been helping his father on the family farm, a beautiful farm with a hundred or so heads of Holstein cattle. In Quebec, the dairy cows that belong to the Sarrazin families—and I say families because there is more than one on the same range in Wickham, and they are tremendously successful—the Sarrazin dairy cows have an excellent reputation, and the prizes they have won over the years point to that high quality. Also, young Mario often meets with foreign visitors, even from Europe, who come to benefit from his father's expertise.

So you may ask me what is so special about Mario Sarrazin? You may not think there is anything really special, except that he is taking over from his father. At least he would like to, after finishing high school. I believe he studied farming techniques at the CEGEP de Victoriaville, and went through farm administration and management training sessions. He has also been through a practical training period on another farm, in order to further his practical experience. He will also be attending this week, on November 22, 23, and 24, a provincial seminar on "The place of young people in farming".

So what did young Mario, age 21, have to say to the reporters? He referred, like any other farmer, to the high cost of investment, high risk income, loans and variable interest rates, the scarcity of farm labour, the high cost of quotas, which in many cases exceed the value of the farm itself. So this is what Mario had to say in connection with his own plans. Is that not what is on the mind of a very serious young businessman?

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) who in this House would dare to launch a business costing $500,000, $700,000 or even a million dollars if he risks losing everything after a few years because of a natural disaster or the fluctuation of the interest rates? Who in this House would be willing to say: "I can lend Mario the money he needs?'

What do these young people like Mario need? They need the lowest possible interest rates because they must invest very large amounts at first. They need help in managing the financial aspects of their business. If we could help them to get through the first five years without too many problems, I am convinced that the future would not be as bleak as it now seems for our young farmers.

There is work to do because the Farm Credit Corporation could be a lot more effective than it is now. However, it needs a lot of flexibility. Its programs are outdated and are no longer adequate to meet the needs of farmers.

Mr. Speaker, all realistic and intelligent solutions will receive my support. I believe that it is possible to make a positive contribution to change this situation without spending enormous amounts of money. However, we must act; otherwise, if it remains unchanged for years, what encouragement can I give the potato producers of my constituency? What can I tell the thousands of dairy producers who deliver their milk to Agropur? What can I tell the pork producers of my region, whose largest slaughterhouse is called Olympia and has annual sales of $300 million?

We have to take action so that the Farm Credit Corporation will stop having about $600 million to lend with no takers. This is ridiculous. We must not forget that only 5 per cent of Canadians produce the food needed to feed the remaining 95 per cent of the population. If we don't back them up, our supplies in food products will be at stake.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Drummond. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this motion. First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) on his motion, and I realize how relevant his words are, since the Hon. Member's riding is next to mine, and I know that in both ridings, agriculture is one of the major industries, and that the situation of many Quebec farmers is simply appalling.

Mr. Speaker, I get the impression, after listening very carefully to the Hon. Member's speech, that he is acting on, and as a result of, pressure from and meetings with producers and farmers, and informing Hon. Members of the nature of the problems they are facing. Unfortunately, it seems to me the action he is taking is not quite strong enough and his objectives are scarcely defined and even rather obscure, if we consider how the Hon. Member is presenting the issue. For the sake of argument, I shall, if I may, read the motion before the House.

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of reviewing the role of the Farm Credit Corporation, in order to make clear to the farming community, its position vis-à-vis other lending institutions.

You will agree that upon reading the motion, I had to wonder about the significance and the meaning of the motion, and also after listening to the Hon. Member for Drummond who, I admit, gave a pretty accurate and a pretty honest description of the kind of problems farmers are facing. Considering these extremely critical and extremely urgent concerns, I deplore the fact that we do not have a motion before the House today that defines objectives and suggests some concrete ways of dealing with the problems the Hon. Member's constituents and mine are facing, problems that exist in the vast majority of Quebec ridings and everywhere else in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that during the election campaign, formal and concrete commitments were made which recognized the need to redefine the mandate of the Farm Credit Corporation. Everyone agreed at the time that since the situation and changed, the Corporation as such no longer played the role it was supposed to play in meeting the farmers' needs. The Government knows the problems, it knows where the difficulties lie, and in fact it is aware of a number of solutions that could be suggested. Now, after a year and some months in power, they are presenting a motion that seems to be very obscure and fails to propose anything that is the least bit concrete or significant. The only attempt to deal with this problem since the new Government came to power consisted in reducing the interest rate by a few percentage points. I remember statements by people in the industry in which they said it was very restrictive, very selective, and that in the final instance, these were just a few trifles, and that Quebec farmers could do without these trifles. What they needed was concrete solutions to their problems.

I think that the motion as such is very relevant and deserves support for its objectives and its potential for bringing about, I hope, some improvement, however minor, in the present situation. However, I think that when the Farm Credit Corporation is being discussed we have in the first place to accept or acknowledge a number of premises which seem to me to be absolutely essential and basic, premises which should acknowledge that farming or the food producing sector is a basis priority in our society.

We must also admit that our society cannot get along without the farming community, a sector which must have the priority and face a series of problems and barriers against which we absolutely cannot do anything. I refer of course to the weather, the international markets, a set of barriers which our farmers must face but which remain beyond their control. Now as a result of that reality or that premise, I think that we should consider the future while keeping those absolutely essential facts in mind.

The present situation is simply disastrous. I remember that a few months before it was defeated, the former government had introduced in the House a Bill to improve considerably the lot of farmers, those especially who had obligations they simply could not meet. I have always been quite surprised to see this corporation which administers public funds for the purpose not of helping agriculture but seemingly of killing it. I could give a whole series of examples.

Fairly recently, I asked the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture how much it cost annually the Department, the Corporation, to repossess farms. In other words, my question was this: When the Corporation repossesses a farm which it was financing, does it recover its costs? When it sells the farm at a later date, does it recover its investments? The Chairman did not hesitate: No, the Corporation loses tens of millions of dollars every year because when it repossesses a farm, such a farm is abandoned for a period of one, two, three, four years and, when it is finally resold, the sale price is considerably lower than the amount guaranteed. Under such circumstances . . . statistical data are there to prove it . . . the Corporation is worse than the banks. Why is not the Corporation doing what the banks are doing?

When the going gets tough, when a real problem occurs, a person goes to his or her banker, explains the situation and submits a proposal for settlement, a plan for the next few years. Often, not to say most of the time, the banker will make concession, increase grant delays to help the debtor reimburse his debt, and even reduce the principal owed to the financial institution. This will sometime give the person breathing space, as well as the desire to continue and save his business. So when a farmer is faced with similar difficulties, there is absolutely nothing he can hope for from the Corporation in terms of compromise, because all he hears is this: You owe us money, you pay; failing which, we will seize your property.

Currently, I am dealing with a number of cases one of which seems to me absolutely unbelievable. It involves a small farm that this gentleman is operating with his wife and children, the value of which clearly exceeds $100,000. That farmer has no other debt than his loan from the Farm Credit Corporation, which comes close to $50,000. That man had an accident while cutting his wood for the winter, so he was forced to let go his operations over a period of some months. He fell behind and failed to meet his instalment. He went to the Farm Credit Corporation, and all these people could find to say to that man was: "Sell part of your farm or part of your quota and you will have the money for your instalment".

How ridiculous, how grossly unacceptable can that be! There is no sympathy whatsoever for an undertaking which from the start is viable, which has no financial difficulty of any sort, where the operator has just suffered an accident, and which could perfectly well have regained its viability without any problem whatsoever. But nonetheless, that man was asked to forsake a part of his income, a part of his quota, or to sell a part of his land.

This is simply ridiculous. No banker would have dared propose such a thing that verges on indecency.

I am amazed, now that 15 months have already gone by, that this Government has not taken concrete steps to introduce a specific piece of legislation with really identifiable goals, that would give the Farm Credit Corporation a new mandate because the corporation could make a really worthwhile, relevant contribution to the maintenance and development of our agro-food industry.

I am also concerned, since no such legislation has been introduced to this day, about a few statements made by the Minister to the effect that free trade was the new challenge for Canada. What concerns me is that the dairy policy that was to be announced on August 1st is not yet known on this 19th day of November. I am concerned because a firm commitment was made to pay a substantial amount to hog producers. It has not been done yet. Besides, they gave up on that one a long time ago.

I am concerned because the Minister seems to consider the agricultural sector in the same way as all other economic sectors, like the small and medium-sized businesses, like the manufacturing of chairs and desks, or furniture, in fact like all other sectors of economic activity.

Once you have reached the stage where you consider the future in that light, there is reason for concern and it is even tragic for those who have huge financial obligations to meet within the next months or years.

I say to myself that in our statements and in our political customs, we agree to help private enterprise through grants. We agree to encourage a company to establish itself in a specific area by contributing up to 50 per cent, 60 per cent or 70 per cent, in some cases, of the business or entrepreneur's investment. And the amount that is provided or given to the company is a payment in cash made within the year following the setting up of the business or industry. The yield on that investment that is called grant is translated of course in job creation and spin-offs generated by those new jobs. To this I agree wholeheartedly. As a policy, it appears essential to me, a vital contribution to regional development.

However, from the moment we accept this approach towards supporting private industry, it seems to me that we should be even more generous, more interested by the agri-food industry since society needs and will always need farmers, and the consumer will always need a healthy, lively and very dynamic agricultural sector.

We accept to make enormous concessions to oil multinational companies apparently, and rightly, to generate employment. Yet we are very hesitant and really neglectful about giving farmers what they fully deserve, what they absolutely need.

In my opinion, as I said before, we should redefine in depth the role of the Farm Credit Corporation. We should give it a completely different direction where its fundamental purpose would be to support and to help directly and indirectly by the agri-food industry under all its forms. The present reality is however completely different.

That direction, that redefining of the corporation should be based first on a reduced interest rate, which should not exceed a real rate of 5 per cent, in my opinion. That is to say 5 per cent plus inflation, up a maximum of 8 per cent. For example, should the inflation rate be 2 per cent one year, the interest rate on loans would be 7 per cent.

In this way, it would not be very costly and furthermore, in my opinion, it would be less than what we are presently giving to the small and medium-sized businesses and to industry as a whole.

The advantage or the consequence of such a redefinition would be an agri-food industry in which people would invest. In agriculture investment also means new jobs, increased exports, better productivity and a whole range of positive improvements in the economy. It seems to me very important that we recognize the very particular nature of farming.

We are willing to help the business sector, but when it comes to the agri-food industry we are far less generous and more reluctant to provide the help which, obviously, is so badly needed.

I regret to say that farmers are presently in a situation where the future is more like the great unknown. It looks very worrisome. And you know, as well as I do, that people who are traumatized, who are worried, who do not know what future holds for them do not invest and are far less determined in the way they work and produce.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, personally, I want to support the motion so that it can go through, as I hope, as quickly as possible. I also wish that in the next few days, weeks and months, we will be able to improve it so that there will be practical solutions to the very real problems that were outlined by the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), and there will soon be applied remedial action to bring back confidence in that sector that society cannot do without.

At the present time, the Farm Credit Corporation is considered in Quebec somewhat as a Shylock. Nobody wants to have anything to do with it, except as a last resort.

Indeed, as confirmed by statistics, the Farm Credit Corporation is not very much present in Quebec, not to say totally absent. I think that if we redefined the role of the Corporation, it could become an instrument for development and promotion, for the greatest benefit of Quebec's as well as Canada's agriculture, and for the greatest benefit of society which obviously includes all electors and consumers.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault) for bringing this motion before the House. It is something that we can support. I suppose it is a motherhood-like motion in that it asks the Government to consider the advisability of reviewing the role of the Farm Credit Corporation in order to make clear to the farming community its possible position relative to other lending institutions.

Because the Farm Credit Corporation has not fulfilled its mandate for providing adequate financing to a very depressed farm industry in the last few years, there is no doubt that we need to look at the issue again. Consequently, I believe it is very important that this motion at least be passed so that it may give some direction to the Government.

In the process of discussing this motion, it would become us to bring forward some of the situations in agriculture that are causing the kinds of problems we are seeing. I suggest that the debt that farmers carry, something around $22 billion these days, is a symptom of the problem and not really the problem itself. If we had an agricultural structure with some stability and security, the farmers would not have that kind of debt. The amount of farm debt can be found in every statistic at which one can look regarding agriculture.

The Farm Credit Corporation issued a press release some time ago which suggested there should be a real concern in the agricultural industry in recognizing that the high-debt low-equity group of farmers comprise the most productive group of farmers in Canada and that one-third of the farmers who have the lowest equity are responsible for the largest share of farm sales. On the surface of it, that is not surprising because the statistic indicates that a large group of those farmers are probably the young farmers who are just getting started and consequently may be more aggressive about the way in which they farm. At the same time, we must recognize that many of those farmers are being forced to produce more than they really think they should from the same land and in that process are mining the soil rather than building it up.

The presentation to which I just referred also indicated that except for Quebec farmers, low-equity farmers borrow more than they invest in their capital purchases. In other words, statistically most farmers who are borrowing the most or have very little equity and high debts borrow money to operate. That is the thing about which we should be worrying.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture made a presentation not too many weeks ago in which it made the same suggestion as the one contained in this motion. The Federation suggested that we need to review the role of the Farm Credit Corporation as a lending institution for farmers. It was indicated that the idea of the Farm Credit Corporation being a body of last resort is not what the Farm Credit Corporation was mandated to be and therefore we should be looking at what happened to it and what we can do to return the Farm Credit Corporation to a position in which it will be the source of funds that are needed for farming. Therefore, I agree with and support this motion and suggest that the Government get with it and move in that particular direction.

Doing something about the Farm Credit Corporation so that it can make more money available to finance the farming community will not solve the problem in agriculture. Debt is a symptom of the real problem and is not the problem itself.

We should realize that there must have been a time when the farming community was doing well. There have been a few years in the last 20 years when the farming community has done well. In 1973, for example, everyone thought the farming community was on its way up and that there was no way to stop it. The statistics for the years 1943 to 1953 show that farmers received an average of about 6.6 per cent of the national income. Those were the 10 years immediately after the war. At that time, there was a certain amount of stability and growth in the farming community. It is very interesting to note that during that time, most people in this country felt that there was a balanced economy because no group was doing particularly better than any other group. Farmers were doing pretty well, small businessmen were doing pretty well and even those earning rental income were doing pretty well. The corporations that had had some difficulties during the War were re-establishing themselves and were doing pretty well. The banks did not complain. They were not doing as well as they are doing now but they did not complain. The employees of all of these groups, unionized and non-unionized, felt that they were getting a fair share of the national income.

Let us look at what happened in the next 20 or 30 years. Between 1943 and 1952, the economy seemed to be very stable and the average portion of the national income earned by farmers was, as I mentioned, 6.6 per cent. Since that time, the portion of national income going to farmers has been declining. In 1983, the farmer's portion of the national income was .5 per cent. It went up in 1984, I understand, to 1 per cent. Perhaps the portion of everyone's income fell as dramatically as well, but obviously it did not because someone has to use up that 100 per cent of income. By the way, that is a reduction for the farmers of 84.9 per cent. We wonder why they are in trouble and why they are borrowing money.

Let us look at the other side of this matter. Back in 1943, the banks collected 1.26 per cent of the national income in interest payments. By 1983-84, they were collecting 9.7 per cent of the national income. In other words, while the farmer's portion of the income went down by 85 per cent, the financial institutions' portion went up by 662 per cent. So their portion of the national income was increased by 660 per cent while the portion of farmers went down to 85 per cent. Surprisingly, when compared to financial institutions other groups which have been in trouble are not doing as well. I will deal with this now although it is not the topic today. It is rather worth-while to consider. For instance, in the period 1943-1953 small business took in 10.5 per cent of the national income. In 1983-84 small business was down to 4.3 per cent of the national income. In other words, small business has decreased its share of the national income by 59 per cent. This is not as large a reduction as that seen in the agricultural industry but it is a significant one.

One group which has stayed fairly level is that group which deals with compensation to employees. During and after the war years the salaries of people employed in union and non-union jobs was 66 per cent of the national income. Some 30 years later they now take in 73 per cent of the national income. They have increased their take by 10.9 per cent.

In terms of agriculture, we need not consider the displacement of the national banking operation in order to turn that debt over to the Farm Credit Corporation. We must not ignore the system in which we live because we have to work within that system. However, let us do something more concrete in terms of the agricultural industry. Let us not continue with reductions in this sector, although I do not know how it can be reduced much more when it is already down to 1 per cent of the national income. I do not know how one can go much lower and still survive, which is the problem with which we are faced. I am sure the Hon. Member for Drummond brought forward his motion on the basis which I am now pointing out. We must do something now about the agricultural industry. We must do something about that one-third of young farmers who have the lowest equity and the highest debt and who produce a good portion of our products. If we do not do something about this problem then these farmers will be lost to the agricultural industry. If this review of the Farm Credit Corporation will start us in the right direction toward some type of comprehensive solution to the farming problem along with stabilization, parity pricing and other issues, then we should carry it out. We should not leave the industry in the state it is in presently.

It is interesting to note that farmers have only two possibilities. They can either increase the price of their products or they can decrease their input. Over the last few years in the farming community interest on debt has increased by 322 per cent. The cost of petroleum products has increased by 284 per cent while the cost of fertilizer has increased by 218 per cent. The cost of chemicals has increased by 274 per cent. If one were to take the time to add up those figures it would be seen that for over 30 years total operating expenses for farming have increased by 1,053 per cent. During the same period of time the total receipts have only increased by some 688 per cent. This leaves a deficit of 365 per cent, which illustrates the point I have been making all along. We used to receive 6 per cent of the national income and now we receive only 1 per cent. The 365 per cent deficit with respect to reduction, in terms of actual intake compared with what we used to make per dollar spent and what we now make, has just about disappeared. I hesitate to say that by the year 1985 we will be down to 0 per cent as far as our portion of the national income is concerned. That is to say, we will be spending as much on debt as we will be taking in. That will be the case even when we take in dairy farmers, who are at least getting by.

Although I support the motion which is before us, I would have supported it more enthusiastically had it contained a resolution suggesting that the Government take a look at the pricing structure in terms of the whole agricultural industry. Regardless of whether this review is done in part or in whole it will result in us looking at every part of the agricultural industry if we expect it to survive in the way in which we think it should survive.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—U.S.S.R.—EMIGRATION OF JEWS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on October 28 last I asked the Parliamentary Secretary, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), about word which was coming out of Israel that Russia might be relenting and letting some of the Soviet Jews emigrate to Israel, Canada and other countries. We were encouraged by that piece of news. I asked the Parliamentary Secretary whether there was any foundation for our very strong hope that this might be true. Regrettably, it does not appear that there is any foundation to it. However, I look forward to the Parliamentary Secretary's response in which he may have something further to add.

Tragically, the number of Jews being permitted to leave Russia has dropped to a mere trickle in the last few months and years. I hope that if there is some foundation to the rumour, if I may call it that, it is simply not a public relations attempt on the eve of the Geneva conference. This is really a human rights issue. Russia, of course, was a signatory of the 1975 Helsinki Accord. We are pressing the Soviets to honour their word and allow refusniks to leave the country. I would like to make a number of remarks on this issue.

From time to time we have heard bits of good news in this regard. I heard recently that Yelena Bonner, wife of Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Andrei Sakharov, will be released from exile in the Soviet Union and will be allowed to go to the West for medical treatment. That is good news. There is also news which is not so good. It concerns people such as Andrei Sakharov and Anatoly Shcharansky, who is only 37 years of age. These men have been jailed or subjected to internal exile for years. They are both sick and the indications are they have been subjected to mindbending drug torture. Their terrible crimes include daring to ask the Soviet Government to honour its Constitution on citizens' rights in the 1975 Helsinki Accord on Human Rights.

There are many organizations and many individuals who work very hard on behalf of the Soviet Jews. There is an organization in Ottawa called the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry. It has, I believe, some 272 members from both the House of Commons and the other place. We are honoured to have a person like the Hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) as Chairman of that group. I am honoured to be one of the seven-person executive committee.

Different steps have been taken over the last year. There was a special trip to Russia to plead the case of Soviet Jews. Our Chairman, the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, sent a letter to President Reagan on the eve of the Geneva Conference and I would like to quote the last paragraph of that letter:

> We wish to assure you of the support which exists in Canada for Soviet Jews. We trust that on this issue you will speak with Mikhail Gorbachev on behalf of all peoples concerned with human rights.

The National Council of Jewish Women of Canada is also very active. It has a separate committee on world Jewry headed by Eti Young. In Don Valley East there are several residents who are very concerned and hard working on this issue. I think of people like Mrs. Patti Starr, Mrs. Arlene Goldwater and Mrs. Joyce Zweig. It was Arlene Goldwater who introduced me to my refusnik. I have adopted a refusnik. His name is Simon Shnirman. He was born in 1957. He married his wife Leah in 1983 and they have a daughter Yona whom Simon has not yet seen.

One of Simon's recent crimes is that he gave two postcards, probably blank, which he had received through the mail, to one of the prisoners, and he washed his clothes by hand after working hours at a time and place not intended for this purpose. For these crimes he was given five days in an isolation cell without food or drink. For the past two years in the labour camp he has suffered great harassment and has been asked to do the hardest jobs. His basic right to receive packages has been denied. I could go on with the various forms of harassment but time is not available.

I wrote to his wife Leah on April 17, 1985 to basically introduce myself and give her a bit of my background. I mentioned the four children my wife Sandy and I have and the grandchild we were expecting. I was thrilled on August 21 to receive a letter, via Joyce Zweig, from Leah. Time does not permit me to read everything in the letter but I would like to quote just one part as follows:

> God knows I tell the truth. Simon is not well, I am afraid of his health. He needs now, and after this camp of strict regime, good medical help. I thank you for your supporting and hope you won't forget us in this difficult time.

This is an important issue, Mr. Speaker; it is a human rights issue.

I recently had a letter from Eti Young concerning a telegram that had been sent to three officials in Russia on Simon Shnirman's behalf. The National Council of Jewish Women, the Soviet Jewry Committee, has adopted Simon as its refusnik in the Toronto area. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) and I jointly signed a letter to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) which was sent on September 25, 1985 pleading the case of Simon. This is just one individual, Mr. Speaker, but an important one.

● (1805)

There is a family network in Canada working on behalf of these important people. We ask the people of Canada to lend their prayerful support to the plight of these people in Russia whose only crime, in most cases, is simply wanting to speak their mind and enjoy the freedoms that we take for granted in this country.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is such support as this that gives strength to the Jewish people in the Soviet Union. We cannot let them be forgotten because that is just what the Soviet Union would hope for. The Member, his confreres on the committee and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Kilgour) have always shown that same dedication to care and concern.

I wish I could give a more positive report, but the Government is closely monitoring developments in the Soviet Union and recognizes that there are some signs of positive movement on the human rights front in general, and in Soviet Jewry in particular. These, however, remain to be confirmed. Indeed, speculation continues that Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union may be on the way up.

While emigration statistics do not support the notion of an easing in the situation of Soviet Jews—130 exit visas were issued in October—there are unconfirmed reports that a number of prominent refusniks may be released after the Geneva meeting between U.S. President Reagan and Soviet Secretary General Gorbachev.

Canada has repeatedly urged the Soviet Union to adhere to internationally recognized fundamental human rights which include freedom of religion, cultural expression and emigration. We would welcome any and all indications that Soviet authorities are beginning to re-examine their policy on these matters.

For its part, the Government is involved in various initiatives to impress upon the Soviets the importance and positive ramifications of an improvement in their human rights record. Most recently, for example, senior Canadian officials have made representations in Moscow and in Ottawa on family reunification cases. In addition, officials have stressed to Soviet authorities the constraints on popular support and confidence in our bilateral relations which the Soviet human rights performance and its policy toward Soviet Jews generate.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Government would commend all positive developments relating to Soviet Jewry and would welcome a Soviet decision to permit increased Jewish emigration.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY—FLIGHT OVER POLAR SEA IN CANADIAN WATERS. (B) DROPPING OF CANADIAN FLAG ON UNITED STATES VESSEL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on October 29 I raised a question of great concern to Canadians involving the repercussions from the incursion of the Polar Sea icebreaker in Canadian waters in the Arctic earlier this summer. I want to deal with the issue broadly rather than just with the very particular issue of the investigation of the pilot of the Twin Otter who dropped a Canadian flag on our behalf on the Polar Sea and claimed Canadian sovereignty of these waters.

The facts are that the United States Coastguard icebreaker, the Polar Sea, entered Canadian waters in the summer, making this trip without asking the permission of the Canadian Government. Our Government, in a way very humiliating to Canadians, responded by offering permission, when it was not even asked for, demonstrating throughout a thorough incompetence in not understanding the seriousness of the matter.

When I raised this issue on October 29 the Government acknowledged the fact of an investigation of the pilot concerned, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) blamed former Liberal Governments for their failure to provide adequately for Canadian sovereignty in the north, certainly a cop-out if ever there were one. The present Conservative Government was amply warned of the seriousness of the situation by Canadians, members of the Opposition and by Inuit who, of course, are very intimately concerned with sovereignty of our Arctic waters. The Conservative Government discounted all these concerns.

When the Government failed to act, Canadians acted for themselves. I am proud to say that the Council of Canadians organized an expedition to claim Canadian sovereignty on behalf of Canadians and, on August 8, dropped a canister from a Twin Otter. The canister contained a Canadian flag and messages claiming Canadian sovereignty, asking the United States ice-breaker to go back. Canadians then went on to another island, Princess Royal Island, and planted Canadian flags there, again to demonstrate Canadian concerns in the Arctic.

No harm was done either to persons or property. This was an important symbolic gesture that was made for all Canadians. These people represented us there when our Government failed to act responsibly.

Let me point out that this was not even a hostile act in any ordinary sense of the term. Canadians, certainly the Council of Canadians, do not want hostile relations with the United States, but friendly relations between mature nations as equals and people who consider each other's needs, and respect each other's interests and rights. When the Government simply agrees with another nations and allows it to do what it wants, being reluctant to assert what is clearly our rights, is not being friendly, but undignified and irresponsible to other Canadians.

A positive result from this incident is that the Government was forced to think about this position and take action. I welcome the statement made in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on September 10 that in the future Canada will exercise full sovereignty in northern waters and islands. This is not to say that the measures which were proposed are the best measures possible. I would certainly advocate discussion with northern peoples because the Northwest Territories Council is concerned about some of the measures that were proposed.

The commissioning of an ice-breaker, the plan for increased surveillance and the removal of a bar on appeals to the World Court are positive measures. Canada will now permit an appeal to the World Court and I believe that will clearly demonstrate that our claim to sovereignty is a most reasonable claim and recognized in international law.

Negative measures, such as an investigation of the pilot concerned, are reprehensible. The Government is taking a petty step in possibly punishing the pilot for making a harmless but important symbolic gesture on behalf of us all. The Inuit people are most concerned, as is the Council of Canadians and other Canadians.

I repeat the suggestion I made on October 29, that the people who represented us in the Arctic waters and made this symbolic gesture deserve our appreciation. Rather than conduct a further investigation against them, they should be awarded medals.

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members of the House know from having passed the amendments to the Aeronautics Act, Bill C-36, earlier this summer, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has a statutory responsibility to supervise all matters connected with aeronautics. Part of that mandate includes ensuring that operators are in compliance with air safety regulations. On August 8, 1985, the Department received a complaint that an aircraft had made two low passes over the Polar Sea. Two objects were dropped from the aircraft, one of which landed on the ship.

It has been the Department's experience, in over 40 years of concern with flight safety, that unauthorized low flying presents a great hazard to persons both in the aircraft and on the ground. Furthermore, the risk created to persons and property on this ship by the dropping of a canister weighing several pounds at flying speed clearly required a thorough investigation. The applicability of Air Regulation 508 which the Minister quoted in the House on November 1 may relate directly to this incident. The investigation is now nearing completion.

As a routine procedure in such administrative cases, both the pilot who flew the aircraft and the co-pilot who dropped the object have been issued allegation letters seeking their explanation of their involvement in this incident. These explanations were to be submitted by November 19, 1985. The pilot has responded, the co-pilot has been granted an extension to November 23, 1985.

In keeping with Departmental guidelines that are available to the public, the facts presented by both the investigator and the two pilots will be reviewed by a third party. If no violation is found, no sanction will be imposed. However, if a violation is found, then administrative sanctions will be imposed commensurate with the nature and gravity of the offence.

• (1815)

Hon. Members of this House will certainly appreciate that while the matter is outstanding it is not appropriate for me to comment further; until a final decision is taken by the Minister in this matter.

SMALL BUSINESS—COMPATIBILITY OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL INVESTMENT ADVANTAGES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): On November 5, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance whether he had the intention of granting tax incentives to the Small Business Investment Corporations and the Sociétés de placement dans l'entreprise québécoise—SPEQs for short. I asked him whether it was his intention to provide some incentives for Quebec investors and to grant them comparable tax benefits if they bought shares through the SPEQs program. In his reply the Minister did mention incentives with respect to small business investment corporations but did not refer to SPEQs. That is why I want to clarify my question today in an attempt to elicit a more formal explanation from the Minister.

As you know, in its April 23, 1985 Budget the Government of Quebec announced the creation of SPEQs and unveiled regulations governing them. The purpose of the program is to promote investments of risk capital in private corporations known to be small- and medium-sized businesses. Quebec residents who should decide to invest in these SPEQs will be given generous tax incentives.

The general goals of the SPEQs are as follows: to increase the shareholders' equity capital in the financial structure of Quebec small and medium-sized businesses; to encourage the shareholders of small and medium-sized businesses to invest more in their own businesses; to make it possible for those shareholders to involve other investors in the financing of their businesses; and, finally, to make it easier for small and medium-sized businesses to get started and to expand.

In order to further increase the funding opportunities of small and medium-sized businesses, the Quebec government, through its Industrial Development Corporation, decided to set up as well a capitalization loan program involving a loan granted by a private financial institution and fully guaranteed by the Quebec Industrial Development Corporation for a maximum of 10 years.

The CAPI or capitalization loan is so called because it is designed to encourage the capitalization of the recipient business. The QIDC subject to regulations will agree to guarantee this business capitalization loan for an amount equivalent to the subscribed capital by a Quebec business investment corporation in a small and medium-sized business in Quebec. The Quebec Government will thus be doubling the equity capital of Quebec investors in small and medium-sized businesses. Moreover, in addition to guaranteeing the capital, the Quebec Government will reimburse the borrowing business for the interest paid which, however, should not exceed the preferential rate plus 1 per cent. For the first two years of the loan, 100 per cent of the interest will be reimbursed, and 50 per cent for the next three years.

This is an important incentive for our businesses, and what I want to know exactly is this: Since this promotes investments by Quebecers and reduces their cost by 25 per cent, will the Federal Minister of Finance, in view of the timeliness and relevance of this method of financing Quebec businesses, allow Quebecers who invest in SPEQ's to deduct the amounts invested not only from their provincial taxable income, but also from their federal taxable income? That is my question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to reply to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) about the small business investment proposals announced by the Government in its Budget last May 23. The question of the Hon. Member concerns the compatibitily of the federal proposals and the tax incentives for small businesses recently announced by the Quebec Government.

• (1820)

The factors relevant to this matter are complex. I would like briefly to provide some background information before addressing the specific question of the Hon. Member.

As he knows, the tax measures to stimulate small business investments introduced by the federal Government in the May Budget are quite extensive. For example, measures were introduced to expand the list of qualifying investments for deferred income plans, such as RRSPs, to include securities issued by smaller Canadian businesses. Important incentives were also introduced to encourage pension and other deferred plans to undertake these investments. Furthermore, the federal proposals provide for a number of tax measures to facilitate the channelling of such funds to small business. These include the creation of special partnership, trust and corporate fund pooling vehicles which will receive certain preferential tax treatment.

The Hon. Member's question refers to one of these pooling vehicles, the small business investment corporation or SBIC. I would point out that the SBIC is a special type of non-taxable corporation designed exclusively for pension funds to assist them in making their small business investments. I think, therefore, that the Hon. Member's question is really about the more general relationship between the federal Government and the Quebec Government, in particular, whether investors in Quebec SPEQs, or Société de placements dans l'entreprise québécoise, will also qualify under the provisions of the federal small business legislation.

This by no means is a simple matter. Its various ramifications are currently being explored by both the federal and Quebec Governments. In this regard, the federal Government has recently received a formal request from the Government of Quebec. I can tell the Hon. Member that the feedback to date has been impressive. All indications are that there will be a substantial increase in available small business financing as a result of the measures being discussed. We are actively exploring ways in which federal and provincial efforts can be coordinated to enhance further the effect of the measures.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Walter Sedlbauer, the senior vice-president of Susan Shoe Industries in Hamilton, one of the major employers in the Hamilton area, is flying to Ottawa today in anticipation of the Government's announcement. I hope the Government will have good news for Mr. Sedlbauer with respect to the extension of footwear quotas as promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Most important, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Government will have good news for the workers in the footwear industry from Hamilton right across Canada.

I want to point out to the Government the commitment on this side of the House that, if the full package of quotas on men's and women's footwear is not extended, the Government will be facing the political fight of its life. The Prime Minister made promises and the Ministers have made promises on this issue.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, we will see thousands of workers on Parliament Hill protesting the Government's decision if it does not live up to its promise to extend quotas fully to allow the Canadian footwear industry to compete equally in international markets. Eight out of ten Canadians support an extension of footwear quotas to save Canadian jobs. We are here to fight, and we are going to fight for those workers in Susan Shoe Industries.

Mr. Gauthier: Merry Christmas.

CULTURE

PROJECTED BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS FOR NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, rather disquieting rumours are being heard respecting the proposed National Film Board $20-odd million cutbacks, one third of its budget. If this does not signal the demise of the NFB, it will certainly spell the end of its most creative sector—documentaries.

Particularly thanks to the NFB, Canada has gained worldwide recognition for its documentary film production, which happens to be an essentially Canadian art form. Quebec producers rank among the best in the world. It is imperative that this Government fully acknowledge Canada's cultural reality.

Artists want to express themselves here, depict Canadian reality, focus on Canadian problems and to promote a Canadian viewpoint on international issues.

[English]

For Canadian artists, the priority is not more U.S. or other markets, desirable as that goal is. Canadian artists above all want to do what they do well in Canada, and that is a contribution they can make for all of us to the world.

For nobody waved goodbye, Les ordres, Pour la suite du monde, and If You Love This Planet, the NFB needs our support and it needs an adequate budget to do its work.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest economic indicators, the economy in Quebec continues to show sustained growth in 1985.

Thanks to our policies, 89,000 new jobs were created since September 1984. The unemployment rate, which was 12.8 per cent in September 1984, dropped to 11.8 per cent in October 1985, a net reduction of 1 per cent.

Between January and August 1985, amounts for which building permits were issued increased 23.3 per cent, as compared with the same period under the former Government.

The private sector is responding favourably to the first initiatives taken by our Government.

According to a recent survey conducted by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, 37 per cent of small- and medium-sized businesses intend to increase capital spending by the end of this year. Furthermore, 26 per cent are planning to hire staff, and 41 per cent expect to increase their working capital.

S.O. 22

The estimated value of deliveries by the manufacturing sector as a whole has increased by $611 million over one year, an increase of 12.7 per cent.

Retail sales increased by 8 per cent during the same period.

Mr. Speaker, these figures show once again that the economy's performance has considerably improved since the Progressive Conservative Government was elected last year. As far as the economy is concerned, and especially that of Quebec and the riding of Chambly which I represent, the Mulroney team has managed to restore the confidence of investors and of Canadian entrepreneurship.

HUNTING AND TRAPPING

FUR FASHIONS—LEAD GIVEN BY AMERICAN AND RUSSIAN FIRST LADIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton Sun fashion page reported yesterday as follows:

When stylish Raisa Gorbachev arrived in Geneva she wore an eye-catching tailored grey coat with a fur collar and matching fur hat. Several hours later Nancy Reagan appeared in an elegant mink coat and matching hat.

At a time when Canada's fur industry is under attack by animal rights groups and organizations such as Greenpeace, and when the anti-trapping lobbyists are threatening the livelihood of thousands of Canadian trappers, these two leaders of world fashion are to be applauded not only for their excellent taste but also for their support of an industry which has time-honored traditions in both North America and the Soviet Union.

Let us hope, Sir, that the husbands of these two ladies will be as successful in Geneva in furthering the cause of world peace as they themselves have been in furthering an industry dedicated to the laudable objective of making people look and feel beautiful and which, incidentally, can only flourish in times of peace and prosperity.

REFUGEES

PARLIAMENT HILL DEMONSTRATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of this House to the hundreds of political refugees who gathered today outside our Parliament buildings. I returned just a few moments ago from a meeting with these individuals which span 13 different organizations and eight different countries. It was a very emotional meeting. It was a meeting that I wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the two Ministers responsible for immigration had an opportunity to attend. If they had, they would have seen the despair and the look of frustration in the eyes of hundreds of individuals representing 20,000 people who find themselves in the very same precarious position.

• (1410)

There was despair because they had substandard housing. There was despair because there was an inability to have their children schooled. There was despair because there was an inability to gain full-time employment at fair wages. There was despair because they had been separated from their families in their homeland. There was also frustration because of the Government's inability to deal in a fair and swift way to appease individuals looking for homes.

There are over 20,000 individuals who have spent four years or five years in this country. They are asking for fair judgment. They are asking for peace of mind. They are asking that this country allows them to become good citizens. They hope that they will not be uprooted and that they will not be asked to pack their bags once again—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CREDIT CARD COMPANIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on behalf of the 16 million Canadians who hold credit cards, particularly those who are paying outrageous interest rates on their unpaid balances month after month.

Credit card interest rates are essentially unchanged since 1983 and, in many cases, unchanged since the high interest rate period of 1981. The range is from 28.8 per cent for department store cards, to 24 per cent for oil company cards, down to 21 per cent and to 17.4 per cent for bank credit cards such as Visa and MasterCard.

Many low-income consumers who shop with these cards are getting no benefit from the general fall in interest rates. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has repeatedly told the House that he will not intercede on behalf of these consumers, many of whom do not qualify for lower interest loan credit. Instead, while he expresses his great faith in the market-place, the banks offer lower credit card rates to retailers but not to their consumers. Now the banks are offering gold cards, at a cost of up to $75 per year, with lower interest rates, to their upper-income customers who seldom need them because they pay their accounts promptly.

When the Conservative Government boasts of lower interest rates, we ask: lower interest rates for whom? There are lower interest rates for organized retailers and lower interest rates on credit cards for the well-off who do not need them. However, there are the same high rates for millions of average and low-income Canadians who cannot afford them.

I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) to take up the problems and the difficulties of low-income people who are being ripped off.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

IMPROVED ACCESS NEEDED FOR THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, these buildings, more than any other building in Canada, attract Canadians day after day. They have become almost a shrine, visited by Canadians from every part of the country. However, they are not accessible to a very important segment of our population, namely, the physically handicapped. It is possible for the physically handicapped to gain admission to these buildings, but not without great difficulty and great disadvantage. There is not even a sign pointing to the few entrances where it is possible for wheelchairs to enter.

Recently it was announced that the Government would ensure that federal government buildings would be adjusted to accommodate the physically handicapped. I plead with all authorities of the House and of the Government to ensure that the needs of the physically handicapped in terms of access to the Parliament Buildings will be given priority.

It behooves us as a caring society to be sure that the centre of Parliament, the centre of Government, is available to those who find it difficult to make their way here and want, all the more, to gain access when they arrive.

It was a complaint from one of my constituents which brought this matter to my attention. I hope it will receive the attention of all who can do something about it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SMALL BUSINESS

JOB CREATION INCREASE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government has a solid record of achievement in the development of the small business sector in Canada, certainly in Alberta. People across Canada, small-business people, have a positive attitude toward the future of business prospects in Canada. Most of the 25,000 new jobs in the last year in Alberta were generated by small business. In its most recent survey the Canadian Federation of Independent Business indicated: "Plans for increases in capital investment and working capital are the most optimistic we have seen for some time".

This renewed investor confidence results from the initiatives taken by the Progressive Conservative Government over the last year, including measures which have been announced to increase the capital available for small firms. These measures include capital gains exemptions, increased access to pension and RRSP funds, and tax assistance for labour sponsored venture capital. In addition, taxpayers have been given more rights in their dealings with Revenue Canada, including the right to a fair hearing. Finally, the federal Government has signed memoranda of understanding with all ten provinces and the two territories to reduce the regulatory and paper burden upon small businesses and to facilitate access to Government programs and services.

• (1415)

Mr. Speaker, the Government has illustrated its commitment to small business, and it will continue to provide opportunities for future growth of small enterprises across Canada.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today we met with nearly 500 workers from Montreal East. These people came here to ask the Government to find a way to deal with the loss of 5,000 jobs in Montreal East. They have no use for the statistics of the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) who seems to be living on another planet. What they want is programs that will give them jobs. First of all, they want to see Vickers get a contract for ship repairs; second, they want the Government to meet its commitment regarding the sale of the Gulf refinery by maintaining the contract for 30,000 barrels a day. As for Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel and La Forge, these people want the Government to give out contracts for the manufacture of locomotives, railway cars and wheels.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would ask all Conservative Members, and especially those from Quebec, to stand up and defend the interests of workers in Montreal East and fight against the lifting of quotas in the footwear industry.

ESTABLISHMENT OF HYUNDAI PLANT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses.

Mr. Speaker, there have been some strange goings-on during the last two days. First the Premier of Quebec says there is a Quebec-Ottawa agreement on Hyundai. Yesterday, the Minister of State for Small businesses informed the House that there was no agreement and that it was being negotiated. The Minister of Public Works told the House that the announcement had been made prematurely, against the advice of the parties concerned. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Small Businesses what went on in the Prime Minister's head and in this Government, between the Florida poolside and the cold reality of Ottawa, to bring about this change of heart after assurances had been given about the Hyundai plant?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It's the jack-in-the-box.

Mr. Chrétien: It's Monsieur Hatchet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let's at least start right today. Go ahead.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I really am astonished at the degree to which my hon. colleagues in the Liberal Party are opposed to the jobs that are being created in their own province.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nielsen: The question that has been asked today was answered several times yesterday. I need only draw my hon. colleague's attention to page 8594 of Hansard of yesterday where the Prime Minister said:

> We are concluding agreements pursuant to our joint agreements with the Government of Quebec, and in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, details will be announced when and as appropriate.

He went on to say:

> I can tell you one thing: Quebecers and Canadians will be very pleased with Hyundai's coming to Canada.

I do not know why Hon. Members are so upset about the prospect of a couple of thousand jobs in that province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGREEMENT WITH HYUNDAI—NATURE AND CONSEQUENCE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister should realize this is not a laughing matter. We are talking about the integrity and the word of honour of his own Prime Minister.

The Premier of Quebec said without hesitation that the Prime Minister of Canada had assured him he could make the announcement and that the agreement was ready. Could the Deputy Prime Minister therefore inform the House whether the Prime Minister of Canada gave the go ahead for this announcement. Unlike what was claimed by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and the Minister of Public Works? If he did, what are the details of the agreement? Are there 1,200 or 1,800 jobs? Tell us the truth once and for all!

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman suggests that I am taking this matter haphazardly. Here is an industry which has intentions of locating in the Hon. Member's own riding and he is quoted in today's Montreal Gazette as saying:

> "The whole thing is fishy," said Liberal MP Jean Lapierre, in whose Shefford riding the plant will be built. "It stinks."

Is the Hon. Member going to go to the people of Granby who are unemployed to tell them not to accept jobs in the new development that will be taking place?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN CONTENT INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government has obviously painted itself into a corner on the Hyundai issue. There is absolute confusion about the timing of the announcement and whether there is a firm deal or not, and complete stupidity on the part of the Government in the handling of the negotiations.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister, whose handlers have obviously told him to absent himself conveniently today. Why, during six months of negotiations with the Hyundai company, did the Government not insist upon Canadian content for Hyundai cars assembled in this country, something which would have assured an additional 1,600 jobs in Quebec?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition obviously believes in his own preamble. However, the people of the Province of Quebec, and particularly of this area, are not going to believe in that kind of nonsense. He says that we have painted ourselves into a corner. If this is the result of the investment strategy adopted by the Government, a strategy that will have similar results across the country, then I for one would like to suggest to the Right Hon. Member that that is the kind of desirable corner into which to be painted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: It means, Sir, more jobs, more jobs, more jobs. I do not see why the Right Hon. Member should be so opposed to that, particularly for a province that has been denied a fair share of the Canadian automobile industry.

[Translation]

HYUNDAI PLANT—ASSURANCE OF JOBS FOR CANADIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister himself has now lost the advantage to Hyundai. He was so anxious to make a public announcement that he lost his room to manœuvre in negotiations with the company. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is as follows: Why was this Government so anxious to make an announcement that it neglected to ensure that parts would be manufactured in Canada and thus provide for about 1,600 additional jobs? What is he going to tell unemployed workers in Montreal East?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Again, Mr. Speaker, uncharacteristically for the right hon. gentleman, because he does not usually distort matters, he is obviously believing in the fairy-tales of which he has assured himself by working them into the preamble to his question. In answer to several questions put to him yesterday, the Prime Minister said that the details of the transaction will be announced in the normal course of events. However, what they are really whining about over there, Sir, is the positive upturn in the economy that has taken place in our country in the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Quite apart from the employment statistics which show that employment is up by 5 per cent year over year, production in the automobile industry is up by 8 per cent. Production in the vehicle industry is up by 5 per cent, and up 16 per cent over—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF HYUNDAI NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims that the arrangement with Hyundai is still being negotiated, while the Premier of Quebec is saying that there is a concrete agreement. The Minister of Public Works is saying that the Government was opposed to the announcement being made by the Government of Quebec. Yes, he said that. But the Premier of Quebec is claiming that he got the go ahead from the Prime Minister of Canada, from Florida. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is as follows: Who is telling the truth?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the truth will certainly not be found in the allegations contained in the preamble to the right hon. gentleman's question. The fact is that the question was answered yesterday fully and forthrightly by the Prime Minister in response to the right hon. gentleman. The answer is to be found—and I will not bore him by repeating it—at page 8602 of Hansard.

With respect to the record of Hyundai, I do not think an article in The Globe and Mail of today should go unnoticed. It states:

"Hyundai has said, from the very beginning, that it would strive earnestly to reach auto pact status and that means automatically 60 per cent Canadian content," said Norman Gibbons, senior vice-president of Hyundai Auto Canada. "It's an extension of our parts purchasing program that we started in 1984 without any encouragement from anybody."

On that basis their record sounds pretty good to me.

HYUNDAI PLANT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF JOB CREATION GUARANTEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Today I met with hundreds of workers demonstrating on Parliament Hill here in Ottawa to tell the Government their concern over the heavy job losses in Montreal East.

Since jobs would be created in Montreal East if the deal with Hyundai were to include a Canadian content guarantee, can the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that the federal Government will not give a single dollar to Hyundai unless the company provides job creation guarantees similar to those given by American Motors at Brampton?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is putting the same question which he put yesterday. The answer is to be found at page 8595 of Hansard where the Prime Minister answered him by saying:

—the conditions for job creation in the case of Hyundai will be at least as interesting as they have been for all other automobile companies in Canada.

In passing, as the Hon. Member will see if he rereads yesterday's Hansard, the Prime Minister wondered about the reluctance of the NDP to applaud job creation in the Province of Quebec. Why are they doing that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HYUNDAI PLANT—AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain how it is that other Canadian car makers fully endorse the automotive agreement provisions, but that this issue has not even been raised with Hyundai to force the company to abide by the automotive agreement?

Why a different scenario in the case of Hyundai? Or would it be that you do not want to upset the Americans who have little use for Canadian content restrictions?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am again amazed at the extent to which the Hon. Member and, indeed, a good many of his colleagues, continue to believe in the truth of the preamble to their own ruddy questions. The preamble is simply not accurate. The Hon. Member's most pessimistic and gloomy predictions with respect to what will happen in the Province of Quebec are totally unfounded. The fact is that this is a direct result of the investment strategy of the Government. The creation of jobs should be applauded by him rather than viewed with his customary pessimism.

Are we looking at two different agreements, one between the Quebec Government and Hyundai, and another between the Canadian Government and Hyundai—no, do not look in yesterday's Hansard, the answer is not there—or would it be a tripartite agreement to which both Governments and Hyundai are parties?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that if the Hon. Member had been paying attention yesterday, and if he had reread Hansard for yesterday, as I have, and studied it, he would have found the answer he says is not there, at page 8594 of Hansard. The Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> We are concluding agreements pursuant to our joint agreements with the Government of Quebec, and in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, details will be announced when and as appropriate.

I don't know why the Hon. Member should join his colleague, who is from the very region where the plant is going to be established, in knocking and criticizing job creation in the Province of Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HYUNDAI—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GUARANTEES RELATING TO PARTS MANUFACTURING

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Fair enough, Mr. Speaker. It is a joint agreement.

Well then, I wish someone would explain to me why the Quebec Government has already made its announcement. How can it possibly guarantee 1,600 indirect jobs in parts manufacturing when, according to the vice-president of Hyundai, the question of guarantees with respect to parts manufacturing was not even raised in the negotiations with the federal Government? Is that what a joint agreement is? My eye!

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there were 333,000 jobs created since last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: And all we hear from them in response—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That's what Trudeau used to say.

Mr. Nielsen: —to that good news is complaints.

The Hon. Member almost had apoplexy yesterday because the news was so good. For heaven's sake, when the news is good, rejoice!

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mr. Nystrom: That's a hard act to follow, Mr. Speaker.

JOB LOSSES—INQUIRY ON MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): In the absence of the Prime Minister, I should like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada.

I have just met some 400 working men and women from Montreal East who are really angry. They asked me to put to the Prime Minister of Canada the following question: What is the Government going to do for the workers of Montreal East who are now unemployed and to protect the jobs of those who are still employed?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have also had the opportunity to meet these 400 or 500 workers of Montreal East who are quite concerned about the situation which exists there.

I should like the House to know that I have been quite pleased to meet these workers and to assure them that we are actively looking for ways and means to help them, in view of the fact that the policies implemented up to a few months ago have been disastrous for workers of Montreal East. We will make a special effort to help them. And I do not think the Members opposite are in a position to tell us what to do.

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, these workers would like to get a definite answer from the Minister, because such corporations as Bombardier, Gulf Oil, Vickers and so on are laying off workers.

Mr. Speaker, how many workers will have to come to Ottawa to camp on the steps of Parliament before this Government takes concrete action? Just how many? Five hundred, 1,000, 2,000, 3,000? How many?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand that Members of the Opposition do not realize that 1,200, a minimum . . .

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think there is a point of order being made to me with regard to the appropriateness of the Minister answering the question, because I presume it was put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am not sure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, you certainly realize that I know a thing or two about Quebec.

Therefore, in view of the fact—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: No, I'm sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. The Hon. Minister may want to speak, but I think he knows the House does not follow the practice of allowing political or regional Ministers to take questions. Therefore, I think we must go to the next question.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT ON GULF REFINERY PRODUCTION LEVELS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question refers to the crisis which exists now in Montreal East following the loss of 5,000 jobs. I can understand that the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Supply and Services were hiding.

Mr. Speaker, what these workers who are in the galleries would like to know from the Deputy Prime Minister—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could we just have a little quiet, please? I think the Hon. Member knows—

[Translation]

The Hon. Member is well aware that he is not allowed . . . Order, please! He is well aware that he is not allowed to mention the galleries. I think he knows that. I should like him, please, to ask his question immediately!

Mr. Malépart: Could the Deputy Prime Minister assure the Gulf refinery people that his Government intends to live up to the commitment made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the effect that Gaz Métropolitain, the future buyer of the Gulf refinery, will benefit from the contract for 35,000 barrels a day?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member, while directing his question to the Prime Minister, would like a reply dealing especially with the Montreal situation. May I tell the House that, contrary to the previous Government—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When a Minister is absent, his parliamentary secretary—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member for Windsor West please resume his seat? Order, please.

An Hon. Member: Settle down.

Mr. Speaker: I have to remind the Ministry, I think, that the question was put, I take it, to either the Prime Minister or—may I know in what capacity the Hon. Minister of Public Works is replying, please?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gauthier: It's Question Period. Get your act together.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I need to know from the Minister of Public Works in what capacity he believes he is replying, if I may. I take it the Deputy Prime Minister is now going to answer the question.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Let me respond, since there appears to be some misunderstanding about the right of the Minister of Public Works to respond on behalf of the Ministry, which I suggest he is entitled to do. The Hon. Member accuses us of hiding certain members of the Ministry. I would like to be able to say the same thing about himself but, unfortunately, I can't do that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member has specific questions which he wishes to ask with respect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Do I need to remind Hon. Members that this is the House of Commons and some language surely should not be used here.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the demonstration in front of the House, the Hon. Minister for Public Works will respond to those questions fully, forthrightly, and completely.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: All that yelling is not helpful. I think, with respect to the House, that following Citation 361 in Beauchesne's fifth edition, which Hon. Members may want to read, I cannot allow questions to Ministers answering in a regional capacity, following the traditions of the House. I cannot do that.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PRODUCTION OUTPUT AT MONTREAL GULF REFINERY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister did not get the point. It is clear that the Government is all mixed up in its answers. How do you think it will be able to save jobs in Montreal East?

I repeat my question to the Deputy Prime Minister: Could he assure these people that his Government will transfer to Gaz Métropolitain, the future purchaser of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East, the contract for 35,000 barrels a day? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the hon. gentleman what we will continue to guarantee as a Government Sir, as has been demonstrated by their smarting over the investment opportunity in their own province and the job creation which has occurred there as a result of Hyundai's investment. We can guarantee that those same strategies will be followed which will further improve the unemployment rate, now down 1.5 per cent from last September. Youth unemployment is down 2.2 per cent. The bank rate is down 3.6 per cent. The chartered bank rate is at a seven-year low, down three per cent. Mortgage rates are at a six-year low.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: He and his colleagues do not like those kinds of encouraging statistics but that is the kind of thing we will continue to promise him as a Government, and will continue to deliver.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CONTRACT AWARDED TO CLEARWATER LOBSTERS LIMITED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. He could have added that 52 per cent of Canadians think the Government is doing a lousy job.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And 82 per cent voted against the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Wait for it, Ray.

In Nova Scotia on the weekend I learned that the federal Government had awarded a contract to Clearwater Lobsters Limited for $3.4 million. This same company is now eligible for some $2 million in federal loans. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Supply and Services holds shares in that company?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I am certain that the Hon. Member would not like—I hope I am wrong—to leave the inference that the Minister of Supply and Services somehow has a conflict. Such is not the case.

An Hon. Member: What about the guidelines?

Mr. Nielsen: Someone in the NDP mentions the guidelines. If they know the guidelines at all they know that Ministers have 120 days from the time of their appointment to comply with those guidelines, which the Minister of Supply and Services is doing.

However, the question is defective for more than that reason. The contract of which he speaks nothing to do with Supply and Services and everything to do with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. So I suggest that before he leaves that kind of innuendo lying around in any further questioning, he better check his facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON VALUE OF COMPANY SHARES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Deputy Prime Minister that, as is usually the case, I check my facts in advance.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What about uranium?

Mr. Broadbent: I was aware of those facts. Since this decision by the Government will have a positive effect, no doubt, on the shares of the company, and since the Minister stands to gain directly from that, does the Deputy Prime Minister think it is appropriate and consistent with the spirit of the guidelines that a Minister of the Crown should retain shares for three months in such a company without his colleagues being informed that he holds shares in such a company?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I can assure the hon. gentleman, and I spoke with the Minister of Supply and Services this morning, that he has taken and is taking every step required to comply meticulously with the guidelines. Thus far, in my judgment, he is not in breach in any way of those guidelines. I continue to assure the Hon. Member, though, that DSS has nothing to do with the contract in question, indeed has never had any business transactions, I am informed with the Clearwater Lobsters concern.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows very well that the conflict of interest guidelines he has alluded to do not exclusively pertain to the Minister's own Department, but they have everything to do with the appearance of justice, fairness, and the absence of private access. That is what they are all about.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister ensure that an investigation is made into the timing of the application for this grant, when it was made, and inform the House of that date?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I can assure the hon. gentleman to this extent, the extent to which my inquiries have gone thus far, that prior to the announcement of the grant the Minister of Supply and Services had no knowledge of it whatsoever. I continue to reassure him that the guidelines in existence, tabled by the Prime Minister recently, will continue to be applied meticulously, and the Minister of Supply and Services is complying in all respects with those guidelines.

EMPLOYMENT

MONTREAL EAST WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Transport.

The workers of Montreal East travelled to Ottawa to protest on Parliament Hill and tell the Government that Montreal East is not Schefferville and that they want to keep their jobs at all costs.

Will the Minister announce her commitment to the workers of Bombardier, Canadian Foundries and Canadian Steel Wheel Foundries and state that the jobs of the workers in Montreal East will be protected?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his question and tell the House that we did not waste six years worrying about the situation in Montreal East, which had been getting worse under the previous Government. Not only are we concerned about the workers, but we are also consulting the companies to try to rectify the situation and we hope to be able to announce additional corrective action within a few weeks.

INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S PLANS TO STOP CLOSURE OF S.K.D. TECHNOLOGIE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the workers in Montreal East are fed up with promises; they want jobs now.

My supplementary is for the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. I would like to know what is happening about the change of ownership of S.K.D. Technologies since the previous Liberal Government had guaranteed that Canadian jobs would be protected in such a case.

Are jobs in Canada going to be protected with this change of ownership and what does the Government plan to do to prevent the closure of the S.K.D. Technologies plant in Ville d'Anjou?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is detained in his constituency for a short while yet. I shall take the question as notice and come back with an answer as soon as possible. I am not familiar with this matter.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. One of the many achievements of the Government has been a persistently low bank rate, but the news has not gotten through to the companies which levy excessive interest charges on their customers, including Crown corporations. Insofar as Air Canada charges its customers 19 per cent, which is 10 per cent over the bank rate, and Petro-Canada charges 24 per cent, which is a whopping 15 per cent over the bank rate, what assurance will the Minister give that when he discusses joint action with the provinces, to which he has referred in answers he has given previously, the agenda will include those corporations which boast they are ours?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, my view is that, as mentioned by the Hon. Member, we are proceeding with discussions with the Provinces on that matter, which of course concerns many consumers.

The Hon. Member will also remember that those carrying charges include not just interest charges, but also operating charges.

We are concerned about the matter, and we want to make sure that consumers are well informed of the choices available to them to get the credit they need. We are discussing with the Provinces about how to inform those consumers of the best available choices.

AUDITOR GENERAL

RELEASE OF CABINET DOCUMENTS ON PURCHASE OF PETROFINA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the Government to comply with Justice Jerome's decision and give to the Auditor General all of the cabinet documents relating to the Petrofina takeover?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the position is that there is as yet no judgment in that particular case. We do not know when the judgment will be entered.

At the last meeting that took place before Mr. Justice Jerome, he added some observations to the record. Counsel are still supposed to see if they can agree in drafting the terms of a judgment. Until a judgment is entered we cannot consider the matter any further or make any decision. We can hardly make a decision until we know exactly what the judgment is.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, what was the Minister of Justice talking about when he said on November 4, as reported at page 8318 of Hansard:

—I can assure the hon. gentleman that a decision will be made this week.

On November 8, as reported at page 8481 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said that the decision:

—I hope will be very shortly—in fact I know it will be shortly—

What were you talking about?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the hon. gentleman is puzzled.

Mr. Deans: As usual, I am puzzled by you.

Mr. Crosbie: I can assure the hon. gentleman that there is nothing to be puzzled about. I was ready to make a decision when the judgment was entered. However, the judgment is not yet entered so I cannot make a premature decision. I will not be made a victim of premature decision making.

TRIPARTITE RED MEAT PLAN

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure that beef and pork producers across the country are very pleased to hear the announcement of a stabilization payment. Will this be the last payment made under this particular plan? Will the next one be made under the tripartite red meat plan? If so, does that mean that all provinces have signed the new agreement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject. He will know that the campaign for tripartite stabilization has eluded previous Governments for ten years. We provided the necessary change in the legislation and we have a tripartite stabilization plan ready to proceed. It carries one signature, the signature of the federal Minister of Agriculture. Again I invite all provincial Ministers to come to Ottawa and join that plan.

CLEARWATER LOBSTER LIMITED CONTRACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. While it may just be coincidence that this money has been made available to Clearwater Lobster Limited, let me review the facts briefly. The Minister is a former secretary treasurer of that company, a former legal adviser, and presently a shareholder. His son is the assistant retail general manager for that particular company.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House how this type of behaviour and conduct by the Minister of the Crown lives up both to the substance and spirit of the conflict of interest guidelines tabled by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would have expected better—

Mr. Rodriguez: We do.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You took the words right out of our mouths.

Mr. Nielsen: —than the despicable accusation that is made in that question. The fact of the matter is that the Minister of Supply and Services resigned as a director in March, 1985. The fact of the matter is that he has no voting shares in that company. The fact of the matter is that he is in strict compliance with the guidelines. The Hon. Member might have a case if, after that time has expired, there was no compliance with the guidelines. However, at the moment he has no case and should not be pushing that kind of canard in the House of Commons.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Deputy Prime Minister of Section 5(2) of the conflict of interest guidelines which says in part: "... holders of the responsibility are to take such additional action as may be necessary to prevent real, potential or apparent conflicts of interest".

Is it not high time that the Minister of Supply and Services either resign from his position or that we have this whole matter submitted to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to be reviewed by the parliamentary committee?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not high time that any such action be taken.

Mr. Dingwall: Another cover-up.

Mr. Nielsen: Now he charges, from the safety of his seat, that there is a cover-up. Nothing could be further from the truth, and he knows it.

Mr. Dingwall: Let's go to committee.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister is complying with the guidelines. He should know that there is a strict procedure in place for assuring that compliance. That strict procedure is being followed by the Minister, but it sure as heck is not being followed by that Hon. Member.

ST. CLAIR RIVER—POLLUTION CLEAN-UP PROJECT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The interim report on the St. Clair crisis shows a deeply serious situation that has been allowed to exist for far too long. The Minister now indicates that clean-up will take a further 75 days. Will the Minister ensure that more resources are devoted to this clean-up so that the job can be completed before the winter freeze-up, and downstream communities can keep a sense of confidence that this problem is being handled with urgency?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said outside the House that the job of vacuuming the offensive toxins was taking about ten times as long as was originally expected because of various circumstances that had not been anticipated. Because of our concern about the pending winter conditions that might compound the problem, it is my understanding from my team of high-powered scientists that a meeting is being held on Friday for the purpose of assessing the most up to date projection for completion of the clean-up. I would be glad to advise the Hon. Member and, through him, the House, on any further remedial action we might wish to take as a result of that meeting.

IMPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS WASTES FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that assurance. Given the large increase which this report shows in hazardous waste imports to the area from the United States, will the Minister agree that we have enough problems in Canada disposing of our own chemical wastes, and ban this trade in dangerous garbage?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I assume from the question that the Hon. Member is referring to the importation of hazardous goods from the United States into Canada, and into Ontario in particular. If that is the case, I can assure him that the necessary regime to deal with this concern has already been put in place by the Government. It is a question of vigorous enforcement and I can assure him and every Member of the House that we will be tough on companies which offend our environment, including companies on the other side of the border.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF REAL ESTATE BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

Some time ago, the Auditor General of Canada referred in his report to the very large number of unused buildings entailing tremendous costs to the Government.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker: Did the Minister make changes? And what kind of changes?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question. It is a fact that the Auditor General referred to surplus buildings or property owned by the Government, which cost millions of dollars because they are not being used. It is with great satisfaction that I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, striving as we do for good management, we have sold property—coming from my Department this should interest the lady—for $36 million that go to the Treasury Board, with a saving of almost $2 million in grants in lieu of taxes, and hopefully this will in fact generate private projects to the tune of $2 billion.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. In light of the report released yesterday, can he indicate to this House and to the people of the country whether it is safe to drink water from the St. Clair River?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Would you?

Mr. McMillan: The quality of the drinking water has not been compromised. Indeed, over all there is no concern about the quality of the St. Clair River in general from which thousands of Canadians are deriving their drinking water.

What we are concerned about is not the immediate threat from the so-called tarry blob but about what that tells us about the over-all conditions attendant to the St. Clair River.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Government announced an agenda for the economic renewal of Canada. In it, we recognize that Canada's economic well-being will be determined, in large part, by how successfully Canadians respond to the challenges of technological change and rising competition that are facts of life in today's world.

In the Agenda for Economic Renewal, we set ourselves four basic goals: to put our fiscal house in order; to make Government less intrusive, reducing the compulsive regulation that has hamstrung business and sapped it of creative energy; to adopt policies that foster higher investment, greater innovation and increased international competitiveness, and to do all this in a climate of fairness and openness that is characteristic of Canadian society.

One of the basic tenets of the agenda was that we must improve our export performance. Trade is our lifeblood. Nearly one-third of our national income and more than three million jobs are directly dependent on our exports. During the past year, promoting and improving our capacity to export has been one of our Government's main preoccupations. Securing our access to the bigest market, the United States, has of course been a major theme. But we have also launched an important trade initiative in the Pacific Rim. We have worked with the provincial Governments to draw up a dynamic national trade strategy, and we have taken a leading role in promoting and preparing for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations that would lower more of the barriers to commerce throughout the world.

Trade is a two-way street. To export, we must also import. The balance in our trade can only be determined by our capacity to compete. Artificial barriers, such as quotas and high tariff walls, may provide temporary protection to specific industries, but experience has taught us that they are counterproductive in the long run. They can have the effect of isolating the industries they were intended to protect, of making them less able, rather than more able, to stand on their own.

During the past year, Mr. Speaker, the Government has been engaged in a comprehensive policy review related to one of Canada's protected industries, footwear. Our producers of footwear have enjoyed the protection of import quotas for the past eight years.

In June of last year, the previous Government assigned the Canadian Import Tribunal to review the industry's position, with particular stress on determining two factors: the extent of injury the footwear sector would sustain if quotas were lifted, and the extent to which the industry had used the period of protection to become more competitive.

To carry out its mandate, the Canadian Import Tribunal spent one year conducting the most comprehensive review ever undertaken of our footwear industry. In addition to its own studies, the tribunal heard 72 witnesses and received 39 written submissions representing virtually all interests, manufacturers, importers, exporters, retailers, labour unions and consumers. It made its report this past June, and we see no reason to disagree with its findings.

Indeed, the tribunal found great cause for optimism. It found that, by and large, the Canadian footwear industry has in recent years matched and, at times, outperformed the economy as a whole and the manufacturing sector in particular.

We now have an industry which has undergone a process of adaption, adjustment and change. It has made significant changes in product mix. It has strengthened its position in its most favourable market segments. It has thought up new methods of competing. It has improved the efficiency of its management and financial information systems. It has continued to employ state-of-the-art technology and has moved upward in the quality scale in the market.

As a result, we now have an industry that, with one temporary and limited exception—that of the makers of women's and girls' footwear—is ready to stand up to the international challenge.

The tribunal pointed out another relevant detail about the transformation of the footwear industry. The quota system had little effect on it. The changes were brought about primarily by the pressures of the market-place rather than eight years of quota protection. A particular source of the industry strength, for example, has been its ability to fill orders for short runs of new products on very short notice.

The Government has therefore concluded that further granting of import relief to the whole industry would not be in the country's economic interest. Accordingly, effective December 1, 1985, import controls will be continued only on women's and girls' dress and casual footwear. This sector accounts for nearly half of the Canadian industry sales, and it is the only sector which the Canadian Import Tribunal found would be injured by an immediate removal of quotas. Moreover, in this sector of the industry the tribunal recommended—and the Government is committed to it—a phasing out of quotas over the next three years. They will be increased by 6 per cent in the first year, 8 per cent in the second and 10 per cent in the third year. By then the quotas will have been in force for almost 11 years.

In coming to this decision, the Government was influenced by the actual effects which the footwear quotas have had. They have driven shoe prices up. Canadian consumers have paid somewhere between $450 million and $500 million more for footwear than they would have, had there been no quotas. This increase has been felt by most lower-income Canadians, both because their budgets are lower and because low-cost imports have been restricted. Because prices were higher, demand for footwear decreased. Judging by the figures produced by the import tribunal, Canadian consumers now buy roughly 12 per cent fewer shoes than they would have if quotas had not been in force since 1978.

At the same time, the benefits accorded to the industry were minimal. In 1983, for example, consumers paid an extra $85 million for their footwear, while the industry produced only $29 million more than it would have without the protection of quotas.

Who gained from the quota system? The principal beneficiaries were not Canadian footwear producers. The ones who gained the most were the holders of footwear quotas, mostly importers and large retail chains. Smaller outlets were adversely affected because they had allocations too small to take advantage of price reductions for bulk buying.

There is a broader consideration as well in the Government decision to reduce and phase out footwear quotas. The fact is that continuation of the quotas would have seriously affected Canadian interests in other sectors of the economy.

The imposition of quotas invariably raises demands for compensation by countries whose exports are affected. These demands are neither unfair nor unrealistic. They are provided for by the rules of the international trading system which Canada supports. However, they are very expensive.

Compensation can take many forms—lower duties on other imports, for example, cash compensation or higher duties for some of our own exports. Injured countries are even entitled to retaliate by imposing their own quotas on products we sell to them.

Some Members of the House will recall that at the time the present footwear quotas were extended to November, 1985, the European Economic Community threatened to exercise its right to retaliate. It threatened to raise tariffs to prohibitive levels on Canadian petrochemicals, steel products, craft paper, furs and other products. This could have cost us $150 million in sales to Europe in industries that had nothing to do with footwear. We managed to stave off this threat only by agreeing to forgo duties on a range of European imports at a cost of $12 million to the Canadian Treasury. Had we not done so, a great many jobs would have been lost. This, somehow, does not seem fair.

The Government does not subscribe to the gloom and doom predictions that the lifting of quotas would result in the eventual demise of the Canadian footwear industry. The evidence suggests just the opposite, that the footwear industry has regained its vitality and health. It should not be forgotten, moreover, that Canadian manufacturers will still be protected by a 23 per cent tariff on imported footwear. Twenty-three per cent is a lot of protection. In the U.S., the average footwear tariff is 8 per cent; in western Europe, it is 10 per cent; and Canada's average tariff on all manufactured goods is 9 per cent.

The process of industry adjustment has been significant. It has, moreover, been speeded by a number of Government assistance programs. We estimate that by the time disbursements are finalized under the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board program, footwear companies accounting for more than 60 per cent of industry sales will have received benefits, benefits totalling $22.5 million. This assistance has been directed to management, finance, marketing and production, with the bulk of planned investments directed to upgrading equipment.

Additionally, I am pleased to announce that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will give consideration to any industry requests for temporary tariff or duty remission schemes to help the Canadian footwear industry improve its competitive position. These measures, coupled with Canada's existing anti-dumping legislation and the industry's increased competitiveness, not to mention the 23 per cent tariff, should allow Canadian manufacturers to compete successfully against foreign imports.

The Government anticipates that the lifting of quotas will give rise to a moderate surge in imports. Some of this will be due to pent-up demand for lower priced shoes. Some of it will be due to the fact that there will be a number of new importers, and some will be caused by what we expect will be an inclination by retailers to experiment by importing new items.

Our view is that the surge will be short-lived, that it will stabilize within 12 months to 18 months. Nevertheless, to mitigate any effects the surge may have, we will be conducting consultations with the countries which are Canada's principal footwear suppliers. We will put them on notice that their long-term interests in the Canadian market would best be served by a prudent and gradual approach to sales.

As for Canadian importers, some of whom have been known to bring in footwear for the sole purpose of establishing a high base for the allocation of future quotas, I will make it abundantly clear to them that such practices will not be rewarded in the future.

Canadians across the country will benefit as consumers from this decision. However, the Government also recognizes that a period of adjustment for workers in the industry may well result from the removal of quota controls. We are, therefore, adopting a pro-active approach to anticipated challenges. Rather than react with band-aid measures after the fact, we are proposing a strategy which recognizes the particular dynamics of the industry. Altogether, the footwear industry comprises approximately 175 companies and employs 15,000 workers. Most companies are fairly small, with an average of 86 employees.

To assist those affected, the Government has planned a three-pronged attack. We will provide aid to companies, to communities and to individual workers in the footwear industry.

Companies anticipating human resource problems can go to the Government's industrial adjustment service which can make available up to $100,000 on a cost-shared basis for a variety of purposes, including joint research into alternate business proposals and the adjustment needs of employees who might become vulnerable to market forces.

Employees are also eligible for the Government's skill investment and skill shortages programs for professional retraining and will bring into play the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program to assist older workers unable to take advantage of new job opportunities.

A further level of assistance will be applied when disruption in footwear employment might affect a whole community. Affected communities can take advantage of the industrial adjustment service on much the same terms as affected companies. In addition, the Community Futures Program will be well placed to provide direct assistance to communities which have been dependent on the footwear industry. This assistance will come in the form of program options designed to encourage new enterpreneurial activity and new employment or, if necessary, helping workers to relocate.

These are programs with a high degree of flexibility. We are confident that they will enable us to promote the Canadian footwear industry's growing ability to compete, both at home and in international markets, and to do so without causing great upheaval in the lives of Canadians employed in the footwear industry.

If we have learned anything from the past decade, Mr. Speaker, it is that the real source of our wealth is the ingenuity, the intelligence and the hard work of the Canadian people. However, we have also learned that if we are to preserve our wealth and increase it, we must be competitive at home and abroad and that if we are to be competitive we cannot impede change but must embrace it. One year ago the agenda for economic renewal summed up the challenge in one sentence. It said: "The art of progress is to preserve order amid change and to preserve change amid order". That, Mr. Speaker, is the intention of the action I am announcing today.

[Translation]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to quote what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in Sherbrooke in August 1984. As reported in the newspaper La Tribune, the Prime Minister stated: "The policy on quotas will be maintained". He also said he was not in favour of free trade in that sector. He went on to say "he would not give in even under pressure which might come from European Common Market countries, the United States, and other nations".

What a cruel lie, Mr. Speaker, what a cruel lie! Today the Prime Minister has betrayed the Sherbrooke footwear workers as well as all other footwear workers in Canada.

Footwear workers can now call the Prime Minister the Pinocchio of Sherbrooke. Does he not feel any shame?

[English]

We have seen today one more in a long, long list of broken promises by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). During the election campaign he said, with brave words of assurance to the people of the Eastern Townships, the people of Quebec and Ontario, that he was not going to succumb to the pressures of those other countries, that he would protect their industries and keep the quotas on. Today we hear his Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) trying to put a gloss on those words and trying to bury them in the deep ground of shame which has covered the Government since it took office. Members of the Government have no intention of living up to their commitments and promises. They make a mockery of the profession of public service by completely and totally contradicting any sense of trust or confidence that people placed in them. It was not us who said that, Mr. Speaker. It was the present Prime Minister who made those declarations. Presumably he made them with some intention of carrying them out. Presumably, as a man of honour, which he likes to claim he is, he did not use those words lightly. He used them with great seriousness and great gravity because he knows how important that industry is to the people of those regions. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is not a nose cover large enough in Canada to provide any camouflage for the kind of treason that the Government commits day after day as it breaks promise after promise.

Something that is perhaps even more serious than that broken promise, as serious as that may be, is what it tells us about the future. Since September 24 we have been trying to debate in this House the commitments that the Government is making to all kinds of other workers about what it will do when it negotiates trade. The Government says that it is going to protect the cultural industries and workers in agriculture, in the auto pact and in the lumber industry. The Government says that we should trust and believe it because it never changes its mind but is firm and determined. Mr. Speaker, I would ask members of the Government to today talk to workers in the shoe industry in Canada to find out how much they believe the Government and how much confidence we can entrust in these negotiations.

The very time when someone else calls the tune, our song and dance man is up on his toes whistling Dixie. That is the problem with our Prime Minister. We cannot believe what he has to say. As we enter into perhaps the most serious negotiations on trade in the history of the country we are faced with this example of betrayal and broken promises. That is the foundation upon which we are supposed to build the new regime of international commerce. That is what the Government is asking Canadians to place their trust in. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a serious and grave indictment and creates an incredible sense of uncertainty on the part of all Canadians as we make this leap of faith which we are being asked to do.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government does not have a comprehensive, clear approach to the issue of trade. It does not understand that a trade policy is an extension of domestic economic reality. The Government treats it as a form of abstract economic theology which, since it was implanted in the agenda for economic renewal, takes on the appearance of being cast in stone. It has now become sacrosanct, another sacred trust. The Government does not understand that a trade policy should be the means to an end. It should be the way of securing employment. In order to develop a proper and effective trade policy one has to integrate and bring together problems of labour markets, capitalization, modernization and export-import policies. Sector by sector there must be a series of Government actions of consultation, planning and development to make sure that that sector is prepared to face whatever international competition exists.

The Minister said that we must live by international trade. We do not disagree. We agree that as a country we must broaden our markets and secure better markets. However, in order to achieve that we must have strong Canadian industries. We must have productivity, growth and competition at home in order to allow our industries to compete abroad. Surely that is the example set by Japen, which is presently probably the world's greatest exporting nation. It does not open its doors wide and say: "Come on in". Japan protects its fledgling industries. It gives old industries protection until they can regroup, remodernize and refresh themselves and then they compete abroad. That is the plan of attack of the Japanese rather than this theological abstraction which we get from the Government on the other side. The Government does not understand that, Mr. Speaker. It says that the eight years which the shoe industry has had is long enough.

Notice the inherent contradiction in the Minister's own statement. He says that protection is no good. Then, two paragraphs later, he goes on to admit that during that period of protection the industry has made a successful effort to start its modernization, to start retooling, the start bringing in new equipment and to start developing new markets. In other words, it has used that period to begin rebuilding itself for a new day. However, the industry has said very clearly that as yet, it has not had enough time; it has not achieved the point where it can meet that competition. During the period when there was a quota protection the industry did start turning itself around and rebuilding for the future. Now the Government has cut it off at the knees. It has short-circuited and short changed that industry.

You do not have to take my word for it, Mr. Speaker. I will quote the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), the colleague of the Minister of International Trade. In giving the declaration of his new philosophy of economic regional development to the Financial Times he said: "A country like Canada may have to say we want to be free as far as our trading relationships are concerned. But it's got to be in the context of saying there is a portion of the market that we should reserve for Canadian companies". That was the statement of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Where is that statement contained in the report of the Minister of International Trade? I did not see any reference to the statement of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that he was going to protect a portion of every industry for Canadian production. The poor Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, he takes a few weeks off because of a severe illness and his colleagues totally and completely abandon his policies. He is betrayed, as are the workers in the shoe industry, because his so-called new approach to economic development has just been torn to shreds. Even worse, we on this side of the House find it absolutely incredible to accept that at the very time when we must strengthen and modernize the industry, the Government has discarded the one program that was enabling the shoe and textile industries to rebuild themselves. Two years ago, we formed the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, a Government agency the decisions of which were made by senior executives from the private sector. The Chairman of the Board was Mr. Desmarais from Power Corporation and he was helped by union and business people from across Canada.

● (1530)

The import tribunal itself in its own report gives substantial credit to CIRB for having been the catalyst that was enabling the shoe industry to begin to bring in new machinery and develop new techniques. What did the Government do? It got rid of the program. It is cancelling it and has stopped its funding. It abandons it. While there was one real way in which the Government of Canada could help the industry to develop and modernize, the Government, in all its wisdom, gets rid of the program. That is really smart. That shows a great comprehension of industrial strategy. That shows that the Government knows what it is doing.

I recall that when we attended the meeting of the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association, a Member from Quebec applauded the wonderful job CIRB was doing while the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was getting rid of it.

Mr. Charest: You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. Axworthy: He denies it. However, I was at the meeting.

The fact of the matter is that CIRB was the kind of program that was working with the shoe industry and was giving it a chance to redevelop and to od the very things the Government says it wants it to do. Now the rug has been pulled out from under it and CIRB no longer exists.

Wait a minute. The Minister has said, "Never fear, we are coming to the rescue. We are going to bring in an industrial adjustment service program for $100,000 a year so civil servants from Employment and Immigration can rush to all the towns and communities in which people are going to have their livelihoods destroyed to help those people plan how to move out of town". That's what industrial adjustment is. I was the Minister of that Department and I know what the program is about. It is a program to help people get out of town when industry fails. Industrial adjustment means that $100,000 is made available to help people plan how to pack their bags. That is what the Government is offering the workers in the shoe industry. That is the kind of compassionate, beneficial assistance that the Government is providing for these workers.

Mr. Gauthier: Schefferville solution.

Mr. Axworthy: My colleague says that it is the Schefferville solution. In fact, the Schefferville solution was far more generous because we formed the Government then. We put a lot more money into Schefferville as a federal Government than the Conservative Government is now giving. Now that the Conservatives are in Government, they have forgotten all about Schefferville. In fact, 60 per cent of the aid for Schefferville came from the Department of Employment and Immigration. This Government is not even offering to the people of Montreal, London and Guelph—

Ms. Copps: And Hamilton.

Mr. Axworthy: —and Hamilton the same kind of assistance we offered to the people of Schefferville. What a difference 14 months makes!

Again, this goes to the point I am making that the Government has ignored what the tribunal has said. On page 44 of the tribunal's report, it indicates that the footwear industry is a low-wage industry which employs a high proportion of women and that women who are employed in single-industry communities may not find alternative employment, particularly if they are not prepared to relocate.

I have read the Minister's statement. I have turned it upside down. The tribunal has made a clear declaration. What is the Government's response to it? Nothing. The women of the footwear industry have obviously been forgotten.

The report of the tribunal goes on to say on page 58 that the dislocations associated with this process will be severe in the case of those enterprises and employees directly affected. This report recommends not only that the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board continue but that extra funding will be required to meet the problem.

The import tribunal itself and the document upon which the Minister has based his statement, in its very last recommendation, says that CIRB must be expanded and increased. What does the Government do in response? It puts it in the ash bin of history. Why? Because this is a Government that believes that the market-place will take care of everyone. In this case, the market-place will throw all kinds of workers on the trash heap. That is the verdict of the Government. We know how the market-place will take care of the workers. They will be abandoned and unemployed. That will be the only answer.

What does this tell us about what we can expect in terms of a long-term future of industries whether it be the furniture industry, the brewery industry or others? They will be abandoned likewise. As we are entering into this incredible time of trade, where is the assistance that is being offered? What happened to the opportunity to consult with the shoe industry and to work out guarantees for workers and a modernization and marketing plan? Where are the great promises and commitments to be in partnership with private enterprise? The shoe manufacturing industry has not been asked what it is prepared to do.

There is obviously much more that I can say. As my time comes to a close, I would simply say that we deplore this decision. We deplore it because of its absence of efforts or initiatives to come to grips with the industrial issues related to the shoe industry and the textile industry and to provide a proper industrial strategy to cope with the problems.

We call upon the Government to begin plans for a major worker-adjustment program in order to make sure that workers are properly cared for. We call upon the Government to meet with the communities affected, the provincial Governments and the local MPs to start working out a plan of capital modernization for those industries so that they can at least try to meet the terrible judgment that has been laid upon them at this point in time. We call upon the Government to establish a proper marketing plan for the industry and to start a buy-Canadian program so that the Canadian manufacturers will have opportunities to make their cases in those markets and to establish a proper marketing plan to get into the export initiative markets.

The Minister says that we must be prepared to change and to progress. Change should not mean chaos. Progress should not mean making the victims of that change and progress the workers of those industries. That is not the kind of commitment that we made as a Government or as a Party. Until the Government begins to show some compassion and caring for workers, its trade strategy will be subject to the most severe attacks ever seen because this Government does not know what it is doing.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) has made a statement today. It is a statement which has to be characterized, I believe, as sad, uncreative and unjust. It is a statement that in fact abandons 20,000 workers, breaks a major promise and will lead to a gross waste of the restructuring help which we have already committed to this industry.

What is worse, Mr. Speaker, is that this statement comes at entirely the wrong time. It comes at a time when the United States is toughening up its demands and its bargaining position prior to crucial negotiations that will take place between our two countries. While we are giving away gifts, giving up ground and abandoning positions by backing off from our quotas on the shoe industry and refusing to put Canadian-content rules into effect for a company like Hyundai, the United States is playing hardball. It is being tough. It is putting its position up front as strongly as possible so that when we sit down at the bargaining table, the United States will feel good and it will feel as if it had built a strong offensive position. We will have given up so much ground that we will be weaker than we need to be. We will face those negotiations with weakness instead of strength.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, we need a strong trade strategy, but this Government makes gifts to the Americans before the negotiations. We have had the case of Hyundai in the automobile industry and we now see what is happening to the shoe industry. The Americans are not taking the same approach; they are making even more demands. However, the strategy of this Conservative Government is to make more gifts instead of increasing its demands.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, Canadian men and women chose a new Government because they wanted a new policy. What the voters wanted most of all was a human Government, but the Minister said in his speech: "We see no reason to reject the conclusions contained in the report of the Tribunal." As for us, Mr. Speaker, we can see 20,000 such reasons, namely the workers of the shoe industry who could lose their jobs because of this decision. If the Minister and the Government have read this document carefully, they will know that it contains very important points showing the need for a specific decision which is not the one made by the Minister. For instance, Mr. Speaker, we can read the following on page 67:

> The upheavals caused by this readjustment mechanism will certainly be significant for the businesses and workers directly involved.

We also find the following on page 66:

> The manufacturers viewed as particularly vulnerable are the small manufacturers located mostly in Montreal, the small manufacturers in Quebec outside Montreal, and perhaps even those in Toronto, who may also be threatened.

This is a fact, Mr. Speaker, and it is a fact that the Prime Minister knew before the elections. At the time, the Prime Minister said that we needed these quotas for the shoe industry. But, Mr. Speaker, now that he is Prime Minister, he says: "It is not necessary, we do not want to do that." For all the voters in Quebec and Canada, that is the problem with our Government. Many Canadians voted for this Government because the Prime Minister had said before the election that we needed those quotas. However, after the election, in spite of his promises, he had decided to scrap that policy.

[English]

There is no question that there are serious challenges which face the country in dealing with industries such as the shoe industry, the textile industry, the electrical products industry and many of the other industries which face competition from low wage countries throughout the world. It is a touch challenge, but the answer to it is not to abandon these industries to their own fate. It is not to bow in hollow supplication to past economic theories. The challenge is not to surrender the shoe industry because we want to prove to the Americans that we are really committed to free trade. The challenge is to lead an industry to adjust, adopt restructure, modernize and change in order to face the competition of the future.

That is the challenge which the country has faced dismally. It is a challenge which was faced more by the previous Government than by the present Government. The failure to respond effectively to that challenge lies particularly with the previous Government. The Minister of International Trade is quite right to say that quotas which have been in place for eight years should have done their job by now. The fact of the matter is that because of the failure of the past Government's strategy this industry did not adjust, did not adapt and did not begin to modernize until far too late. If the Minister had taken the time to examine the case, I think he probably would have seen this.

I must say that I was particularly struck to hear my colleague from the Liberal Party speak about how he viewed adjustment policy as helping companies pack their bags in communities and give up their future. That is not how we view restructuring policy. We see the strategy which we have to take toward these sectors as a creative one in order to help them prepare for the future so that they can compete successfully. However, the present tribunal report fully documents the failure of our past policy.

I would like to read again to Members of the House some quotations from that document. I quote from page 53 of the footwear report. It reads:

● (1550)

In its 1981 report—

This is four years after quotas were first put in place.

—the Tribunal noted that there was no indication that major restructuring had taken place since quotas were imposed.

So as of now, we face a situation where, as the tribunal itself admitted, and I quote from page 19 of the report:

The footwear industry has not yet completed this process of improvement in management efficiency . . .

Let me quote perhaps the most damning statements which come from the report of the tribunal. This is the most damning judgment on past footwear policy in this country. I quote from page 100 of the report as follows:

As of October 31, 1984, roughly $14.1 million of the $17 million earmarked for footwear under CIRB's Sector Firms Program had been committed . . . As of December, 1984, however, it appeared that actual payments to the footwear industry under this part of the program were in the region of only about $2.2 million.

So less than one seventh of the money allocated to help this industry modernize had actually been spent at the start of this year. That is why the decision to terminate these quotas at this stage is economic nonsense.

There are those persons within this country who take the approach of neoclassical economists to the sector. They say, "Look, we should not provide support for a sector like this which is weak and vulnerable". That is an inhuman decision. It is an inhuman approach to industrial policy. But the approach which the Government is taking is not just inhuman, it is incompetent, because it runs the very real risk of wasting the whole of $15 million which has been been allocated to help this industry and has not, as of the start of this year, yet been spent.

In my misbegotten past, I worked—I must tell the House—as an economist on these questions of restructuring. I can tell Hon. Members, on the basis of all of the work I have had a chance to do in my own research, that we cannot restructure an industry quickly. It takes time and commitment and a sense of understanding of the human problem. That is what the Government is abandoning with this approach.

This policy is not wrong because it wants to see an end to quotas. No one in this country wants to keep quotas in place forever in the footwear industry. But it is wrong because we have finally started the process of restructuring—too late, I agree, but we started it. Now is the chance to put this industry back on its feet, to give it a future, and to give the communities across this country who depend on this industry, the thousands of workers, the future they deserve. We need to do that not just for the sake of those workers but for the sake of our country as we enter these crucial trade negotiations so that we look like tough bargainers who are committed to jobs in this country, not to the loss of jobs to the United States.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to table in the House a petition which was circulated by Mrs. Hilda Goldberg of 376 Montrose Avenue in Toronto. It calls upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases which were indicated in the Conservative Budget. The petition is signed by some 30 individuals who live in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a very large number of petitions from my own riding and from other ridings in Toronto and, indeed, from other parts of Canada. This first set of petitions I am presenting point out that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and will fall further and further behind. These petitioners call upon Parliament to reinsinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

I Second, I have a very substantial number of petitions also on the issue of the family allowance. These petitioners point out that in their opinion, the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. Again, these petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have also a number of petitions signed by residents of Ontario on a different question. The petitioners show that the procedures for and results of radiation monitoring tests of waters part of and adjacent to the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, should be made public; that Section 1 of the agreement between Canada and the United States authorizing the said test range is ambiguous; that the naval policy of the United States of America of neither denying nor confirming the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels using the said test range is unacceptable; and that the economic impact of the said test range on the local community is not properly understood. Therefore, these petitioners call upon Parliament to hold a public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated with powers to investigate the above concerns about the said test range and make recommendations therefor.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions on two separate items. The first petition is from the residents of my riding in Govan, Quinton and Pangman Indian Reserve near Punnichy. The petitioners point out that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 by an amount of some $600 million annually. The petitioners state that this will be on top of sales tax changes and increases, excise tax increases and income tax increases. They urge the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians concerning the agreement between Canada and the United States authorizing a test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. The petitioners are calling for a public inquiry before this agreement is renegotiated with powers to investigate a number of concerns about this test range. The concerns which they call upon the Government to investigate are the following, that the procedures for and results of radiation monitoring tests of waters part of and adjacent to the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, should be made public; that the agreement in question is ambiguous; and that the naval policy of the United States of America of neither denying nor confirming the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels using the said test range is unacceptable. Finally, the economic impact of the said testing on the local community is not properly understood. For these reasons the petitioners call upon the Government to authorize a public inquiry which can deal with these very important questions.

• (1600)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have one more petition from residents of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, who point out that the procedures for and results of radiation monitoring and testing of waters in the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, should be made public. The U.S. policy of neither denying nor confirming the presence of nuclear weapons on board its vessels using that test range is unacceptable. They call upon Parliament to hold a public inquiry before the present agreement is renegtiated.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from citizens resident on Denman Island, Qualicum Beach, Duncan, Port Alberni, Sechelt, Egmont, Lund, Powell River, Halfmoon Bay, Madeira Park, Union Bay, Courtenay, Black Creek and Merville. They ask that the Government of Canada conduct a public inquiry before the present agreement with the U.S. concerning the weapons testing range at Nanoose is renewed. The inquiry would have the power to investigate concerns about radiation monitoring in the area, whether the U.S. vessels in the area carry nuclear weapons, and make an assessment of the economic impact of the test range upon the local community.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions from all parts of British Columbia. The petitioners are concerned about the Government's intention to deindex family allowances. In their opinion this is an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. They ask the Government to reinstate full indexation and rescind unfair tax increases in the last Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present two petitions on the same question, that is the deindexation of family allowances.

[English]

The first petition comes from residents in my riding, more particularly from Sackville, Port Elgin, Bayfield and Point de Bute.

The second petition comes from residents of St. George and Bonny River in the riding of Carleton-Charlotte. They humbly request that the Government not proceed with partial deindexation of family allowances.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a second petition concerning the Government's cut-backs in family allowances. The petitioners are resident in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and point that deindexation will have a very serious negative effect on Canadians. This, on top of sales tax and excise tax increases, as well as income tax increases, places an unfair burden on middle and lower-income households.

Motions for Papers

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 462 will be answered today.

[Text]

PARKS CANADA

Question No. 462—Mr. Corbett:

1. What second language training is available to national park employees to permit them to compete for all job classifications in their respective parks?

2. In what national parks is language training available?

3. How many positions at Fundy National Park are designated bilingual and, in each case, what are they?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Parks Canada employees have access to the Public Service Commission (PSC) language training offered in the main urbain centres. The PSC Offers night courses in the following cities near the parks indicated:

Revelstoke (Mount Revelstoke)

Shawinigan (La Mauricie)

Charlottetown (Prince Edward Island)

Moncton (Kouchibouguac and Fundy)

Sydney (Cape Breton Highlands)

Employees in the prairie region have access to a self-directed course called "Dialogue Canada programmé" developed by Parks Canada. CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 19, 1985, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution), be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to resume debate on Bill C-49 and again express my disappointment with this Bill.

I may add that women's groups in particular were very disappointed.

The National Association of Women and the Law is alarmed at the content and impact of provisional measures aimed at reducing the inconvenience to the public caused by street soliciting.

The prohibiting of any communication, as proposed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), constitutes a serious and unjustified infringement of our civil liberties, considering the respect Canadians have for freedom of speech and association and for individual freedom and security, as enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

According to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Bill C-49 is trying to deal with the problem of street prostitution piecemeal, without considering the economic and social climate that fosters this phenomenon. Furthermore, the Bill fails to suggest any legitimate venue where prostitution may take place, thereby increasing the risk of violence for prostitutes.

When the Minister of Justice presented his Bill in committee and we mentioned the risk of violence for prostitutes, and also that the Bill went far beyond street soliciting as such, his answer was that once the prostitutes were banned from the streets, they might have more trouble finding customers but that really was no concern of his.

It is therefore not surprising to find this kind of legislation before the House, since we have the impression that the Minister himself is not terribly concerned about what enforcement of this legislation will do.

The National Advisory Council on the Status of Women feels that Bill C-49 is unimaginative, narrow and punitive. According to the president, who was appointed by the Progressive Conservative Government, the Bill deals with only half of the problem. The CACSW believes that, although it might allay the grave concern of residents, the new legislation might force prostitutes to operate secretely, compel them to resort more often to pimps, and make them liable to more fines and jail sentences, with police records. This would restrict even further any possibility of abandoning their trade.

During committee proceedings we tried to introduce amendments about pimps—let it be said, Mr. Speaker, that there is not a single reference to pimps in this Bill—but we were told not to worry, that pimps can be arrested, that they are covered under some other legislative provisions. Yet when we ask the police why they never manage to arrest a pimp they tell us that the legislation is so badly drafted and so complicated that their hands are tied.

I entertain serious reservations about this Bill, since it covers juvenile prostitution and it will make it quite impossible to arrest pimps who will be selling the services of 12-year-old children and adult prostitutes alike. We did propose amendments but they were all turned down.

As to the client, I must admit he is mentioned in the Bill. But they have taken a very paternalistic approach in the written text given to us by the Minister of Justice. We have to wonder how the police will be able to apply the provisions of such a Bill.

I, for one, believe that we should not concern ourselves with what might go on between adults. However, since the Bill stipulates that adult prostitutes will be arrested, then clients have to be arrested as well.

If we take a closer look at what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) wrote about the clients, and I quote: "Most clients however have undoubtedly never been in trouble with the law . . .", those clients will indeed run the risk of ending up with a police record, besides being sentenced for having committed an infraction and publicly unveiling before the courts an aspect of their private life which is generally unknown. So I wonder if the police will be able to punish clients as they do prostitutes because even today the police tell us: We arrest the clients, but they always manage to go scot-free through the back door. In my judgement, this Bill has no teeth when it comes to the clients.

Another thing is that, throughout the debate on Bill C-49, I expressed my concern about juvenile prostitution. I believe that making prostitutes under 18 subject to the same laws as prostitutes over 18 is fundamentally wrong. In the legislative committee, I proposed a series of amendments concerning juvenile prostitution, which my Conservative colleagues rushed to vote down.

Mr. Speaker, three possibilities are generally considered when we are talking about prostitution: criminalization, legislation and decriminalization. Bill C-49, the intent of which is to wipe out street soliciting for the purpose of engaging in prostitution, tackles the first approach: criminalization. The purpose of the Bill is to give the law teeth so that it will be easier to arrest a person who is soliciting. When the Police chiefs of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver came to testify before the Committee, they said that they liked the Bill this way, and when we discussed again how difficult it was to arrest a pimp who was selling the services of an adolescent, the Mayor of Niagara answered: "Listen, is the Hon. Member anxious to legislate morality?" So I do not know whether it is concern for morality to want to arrest someone who is selling the services of a 10 or 12 year old child, because if Bill C-49 is enacted, it will then be possible to be arrested if a police officer sees you communicating in any way with another person, if the officer believes that such communication is for the purpose of engaging in prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, like the Law Reform Commission, I believe that the Criminal Code should not be used unless other means of control in our society are inadequate or inappropriate, and when rights and freedoms are threatened. I would say that prostitution does not threaten rights and freedoms. It may shock some people, one may find it immoral, indecent or unworthy—that is a matter of personal opinion—but prostitution does not in any way threaten the rights and freedoms of Canadians.

And if we look at prostitution as the only opportunity for individuals whose training and labour market experience are practically nil, I believe that the answers we are looking for are not judicial but social.

The Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution, also known as the Fraser Committee, pointed out, and rightly so, that prostitution is related to lack of social and educational programs that would help young people approach confidently and responsibly the problems of sexism, sexuality and sexual identity. It is most significant that the first recommendation of the Fraser Committee on Prostitution calls upon the Government to intensify its moral and financial commitment to eliminate economic and social disparities between the sexes as well as discrimination based on sexual orientation. It is my view that any legislation on prostitution should contain social provision aimed at eradicating the causes of prostitution that relate to social and economic injustice. The Fraser and Badgley Reports are replete with all kinds of proposals to that effect. They deal among other things with social programs aimed at women and young children in need, with sexual education programs to be implemented in schools, with assistance to community groups contributing to the welfare of present and former prostitutes, so that they may have access to social, health, employment and educational services.

The studies, the research, have been made, the special committees have been set up, and we now have a set of realistic recommendations available. All that is now lacking for action across the board is the political will.

And when I heard the Minister of Justice suggest yesterday that this legislation was not a response to the Badgley and Fraser Reports, that we would have another legislation in early 1986, I was somewhat concerned because looking at the current approach and the current Bill on prostitution, we have cause to wonder whether the Government would ever have a better approach to juvenile prostitution. I am therefore sorry that such a legislation should be allowed to pass, and it is my hope that a more specific remedy will be forthcoming concerning juvenile prostitution.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on third reading of Bill C-49 to reiterate the strong opposition of the federal New Democratic Party to this legislation. Having heard from a number of witnesses that appeared before the legislative committee considering Bill C-49, certainly our position has, if anything, been strengthened and reinforced.

The Bill is a sweeping attack on civil liberties. The approach which is taken in this legislation is fundamentally misguided. The Bill is dangerous and will merely drive prostitution underground in the short run. It will make prostitutes more subject to violence, more dependent on pimps, or it will mean that prostitutes who return to the streets after having been charged will run more often. This was indicated by a woman who appeared before the committee. She is presently working the streets of Vancouver as a prostitute.

We were told that the effect of the Bill will be to create a revolving door. Prostitutes will be arrested and charged. They will pay the fine and return to the street to work in order to pay off their fine. Indeed, the representative of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police who appeared before the committee agreed that it was likely that the Bill would not significantly affect the number of prostitutes working on the streets. The association recognized that the prostitutes would likely be back on the streets. It said that that is why it would pursue the customers of prostitutes.

I asked the representatives of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police, when they appeared before the committee, how the police intend to go after the customers of the prostitutes. They said that they will use undercover female officers to arrest the customers. I then asked how many female officers are working in the morality squads of the Vancouver police department, the Toronto police department, the Montreal police department or the Niagara Falls police department. Across Canada there are perhaps eight or ten women who are working in those positions within the police departments. The reality is that women will not be in a position to be used as undercover police personnel to arrest male customers. I asked the chiefs of police if they had an alternative plan for pursuing the customers. They said that they could use boom microphones to intercept communications between prostitutes and customers. I suggest that those who enforce our laws should also read them because using boom microphones to interrupt communications between Canadians is illegal under the provisions of the Criminal Code. I would hope that the police of this land would not be using illegal techniques in order to attempt to make arrests under the provisions of Bill C-49. When I pressed the police, Mr. Speaker, and asked, if boom microphones were not allowed and that if there were not enough female undercover personnel, what techniques they would use to go after customers, they said: "Well, that is classified information. We are not prepared to tell you".

• (1620)

The reason the police are not prepared to tell us is that this Bill will be applied overwhelmingly against the poorest of prostitutes, against prostitutes who work on the streets. It will not affect the call-girls, those who service the economic elite in our society, the doctors, the lawyers and the wealthy. No, Mr. Speaker, it will touch the poorest of the poor, the women who are huddled under street lamps in order to prostitute themselves. Surely that is the real question.

Why is it that women, and in some cases men, are selling their bodies as commodities on the street, Mr. Speaker? As the Fraser Commission has documented very clearly, this is fundamentally an economic and social problem. To deal with an economic and social problem using harsh and repressive criminal measures is profoundly mistaken.

I would argue that certainly those who live in residential communities, whether they be in Vancouver in the Mount Pleasant area or in the west end of Vancouver or Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and elsewhere, have a right to live in peace and quiet. Their children have a right to go to school without being harassed. People have a right to sleep at night without hearing the screeching of tires and obscenities being hurled underneath their windows.

We must ask, before adopting the Draconian provisions of Bill C-49, have the police exhausted all other possibilities? I suggest that the answer to that question is no, they have not. In fact, the police should not be coming before Parliament seeking these sweeping new remedies without being able to demonstrate clearly that they have attempted to use other provisions, other sections of the Criminal Code, including Section 171 dealing with disorderly conduct, Section 169, concerning indecent acts and sections concerning assault.

Carefully drafted municipal by-laws concerning traffic, noise and nuisance can be enacted or enforced locally to aid in the control of nuisance factors that are associated with street prostitution. Indeed, a by-law has been upheld in Montreal that effectively regulates the nuisance aspects of street prostitution.

My colleagues, particularly the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), recognize and are deeply concerned about the serious problem of street prostitution in residential communities.

We have before us a piece of legislation which does not just deal with street soliciting, but it goes far beyond that, representing a sweeping attack on freedom of expression in Canada. I say that because while the Government says it wants this Bill to deal with street soliciting, the Bill does not just deal with street soliciting. It deals in its very terms with any form of communication or attempted communication in any public place anywhere in Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is not just streets. It is nightclubs, bars, inside automobiles, anywhere to which the public has access as of right or by invitation.

When the Canadian Civil Liberties Association appeared before our committee, it pointed out that these provisions were Draconian. They go far beyond what the chiefs of police sought to deal with street prostitution. The association pointed out some of the behaviour which would be illegal under the provisions of this Bill.

Under this Bill it would be unlawful for a passenger in a taxi to ask a driver how to contact a prostitute. It would be unlawful for a hotel guest in an elevator to ask such questions of a bellhop or for a customer to ask it of his pharmacist in a drugstore, no matter how inconspicuous or discreet such communications might be. In fact, there are no limitations whatever in this Bill in the scope of it in terms of communication. A wink, a nod, a smile could trigger a criminal prosecution. I suggest that such provisions may very well be struck down under the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

What we are told is to trust the police, that they will not abuse the sweeping new powers we are giving them. Sure, we may be giving them a little more than they asked for, but we should trust them; they will not abuse the powers. I suggest that we do not give powerful new weapons to the police and then suggest that perhaps if we have given them too much power, having a sunset clause in the Bill would allow us three years later to remove those powers. That is an abrogation of our responsibility as Members of Parliament to draft legislation with thought and care by giving power that go well beyond those which should be accorded to the police.

What about the manner in which this Bill deals with kids on the street, young people, juveniles? One area of consensus on the Justice Committee in 1983 was that in dealing with the problem of juvenile prostitution, one should not make criminals out of young people. Surely one must go after the customer of the young person and nail the customer.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who sat on the committee at that time was in full agreement, and indeed the entire NDP caucus urged the Government to act on that recommendation with respect to juvenile prostitution. What is there in Bill C-49 to deal with the question of juvenile prostitution, Mr. Speaker?

What this Bill does is to label young people who engage in prostitution as criminals. It would give them a record and drive them further underground and make much more difficult attempts to try to use social and economic programs to get them off the street.

When I asked the chiefs of police what they intended to do with the kids they arrest as criminals, they said: "We recognize that there are not adequate programs available". The Province of British Columbia, the province from which I come, has totally inadequate programs to assist young people in getting off the street. The Chief of Police for Vancouver said: "We know there are not programs now but when this Bill is passed, we trust there will be additional pressure put on the Government to bring in programs to deal with young people". That is nonsense. Certainly the provincial Government of British Columbia has been cutting back on social programs. What we will see is young people who are engaged in prostitution again back on the streets or going underground, even more dependent on pimps.

The Bill fails to deal with the reality of juvenile prostitution and to recognize that in some cases, particularly in the case of young men, they are on the street because there continues to be discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in Canada, and that violence and repression in their own communities, particularly in small towns, drives them to the street which is the only place where they get any kind of acceptance. That is one of the reasons the subcommittee on equality rights was unanimous in its strong recommendation calling for a legislative amendment to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in Canada.

The Bill would sweep the streets of prostitution according to the police, but what it fails to recognize is that prostitution itself is not illegal in Canada today, and that in sweeping prostitution from the streets and doing nothing to deal with bawdy house laws the Government, in effect, is providing no alternative.

● (1630)

The Fraser Commission was clear in its denunciation of that kind of proposal. It indicated the following:

> We see no virtue in replacing the present system with a more repressive regime. There is no evidence in the history of this country or those countries like the United States which retain a Draconian system, that the results of such an approach would justify it. Indeed, we are inclined to think that a move in that direction would subvert any attempt to treat prostitution sensitively as a major social problem.

A major social problem and a major economic problem it is. I should like to refer to a letter which I received from a gentleman in Vancouver, a representative of the Evangelical Tabernacle in that city. He has been involved in helping prostitutes by Christian street witnessing. After a year of this work, he became a volunteer worker at a drop-in centre for prostitutes. He said that Bill C-49 would legislate prostitutes underground, resulting in more pimps and more violence to the prostitutes. Also he said that working bars would force prostitutes to pay off both bartenders and doormen, and that there would be more involvement of organized crime. Also he noted that women who are prostitutes today, for the most part, do not want to live that way.

We heard evidence from a prostitute who appeared before the committee which indicated that some prostitutes chose prostitution as a job. Certainly many of us find it difficult to understand prostitution as a career choice, but I think it should be noted in this debate that there are those who choose it as a job. The vast majority of those who work as prostitutes were either violently abused or sexually abused as children. Also many of them are involved in prostitution because they are poor and are on welfare. Prostitution is a way of feeding their children.

In the Province of Quebec, young people under the age of 30 years and on welfare are supposed to survive on $161 per month. Is it any wonder that some of those young kids are on the streets when that is the amount of income they receive? In the Province of British Columbia, an individual with one child is supposed to survive on $640 per month. As the individual to whom I referred earlier stated, the best way to clear the streets of prostitution is to raise the welfare rates.

In conclusion, in that I know my 20 minutes are up, again I emphasize a very strong opposition to the approach taken in this legislation. Also I want to emphasize that the Government is attempting to deal with what is fundamentally a social and economic problem by using a legal sledge-hammer. That approach is profoundly wrong.

I hope the Government comes forward early in the new year with recommendations to deal with some of the suggestions of the Fraser Commission. We are by no means adopting those recommendations holus-bolus. After very careful study, the commission made a number of recommendations in respect of changes to bawdy house laws and in respect of decriminalization, which I think the House would be wise to adopt.

Finally, as a Parliament, we are engaged today, in many ways, in what is an act of collective hypocrisy. We can go to sleep tonight, suggesting that we have dealt in a serious way with the problem of prostitution; we have swept our streets clean of the poorest prostitutes. Until we come to grips with the social and economic reasons for prostitution, the second-class status of women in society, economically and socially, until we put more resources into dealing with violence against women, we will be continuing to adopt a piecemeal, destructive approach which represents an attack not just on the civil rights of prostitutes but ultimately on the civil rights of Canadian men and women.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 52 minutes. Are there questions or comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)? If not, we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak on Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code with regard to prostitution. An extremely heavy-handed amendment is being proposed. It lacks common sense. It will not deal with the problem of street soliciting or the nuisance problem with which Canadians want us to deal. Instead, it will result in the criminalization largely of women, young women and children.

The reason the Bill is before us is that the police have not been able to cope with the problem of street soliciting with the present means at their disposal. They have asked and lobbied very vigorously, supported by many mayors and citizens, for stronger powers. I am sympathetic with the objective of their concern because citizens are entitled to quiet neighbourhoods and a trouble-free existence in their homes, as well as going to and from them. However, the Bill will not help achieve that peace and quiet. It will raise a whole set of new problems.

The old interpretation that soliciting had to constitute pressing and persistent importuning was one which limited prosecutions on soliciting. However, there are other measures which could be used to deal with street soliciting. I sat on the Justice Committee when we examined this question and came up with a couple of much more appropriate, very concrete proposals to deal with the street problem. One was to enforce existing nuisance, noise, disorderly conduct and traffic provisions of the Criminal Code. I have discussed with police officers why these provisions are not better enforced. In fact, I recall discussing the matter with the then chief of the Toronto police who pointed out a great problem posed by street soliciting, that traffic was held up and that cars lined up as motorists were looking for prostitutes standing on the corners. He said that it was a very serious problem, and I asked him what they did about it. He said: "We arrest them". I said: "Do you mean that you arrest the motorists?" He said: "Oh, no, we don't arrest the motorists; we arrest the girls". I think this conversation points to the hypocrisy of the implementation of our current laws. The Bill before us now will not do anything to change that hypocrisy.

I should like to refer to some of the statistics on enforcement of street soliciting under our existing laws. We have no reason to believe that there will be any improvement in going after customers. Heretofore the laws have been enforced against women, and this is what we have to expect to happen. In Toronto, 78.2 per cent of the soliciting charges laid in 1979 were laid against women in 1980, 69.9 per cent; in 1981, 82.6 per cent; and in 1982, 80.8 per cent. This is a law which is enforced against women. The idea that it will be enforced against customers, male customers in most cases, is absolutely ludicrous. We know that it will not happen. We know what are the enforcement procedures. The police have enforced it against customers to a very limited extent. Referring to the loitering charges in Toronto, 84.5 per cent were laid against women; charges laid under counselling to commit an indecent act, 67.2 per cent were against women.

In the case of Vancouver, 65 per cent of the charges were laid against female prostitutes. The vast majority of charges are in fact being laid against women, not against customers. In Halifax, 77.8 per cent were laid against women. In the case of British Columbia there is an anomoly that customers cannot be charged under the Criminal Code. They could be charged under by-laws, but not under the Criminal Code as a result of a most unfortunate interpretation by a court which was never appealed. Of course the answer to that is to change the law to close that loophole. That would have been, by far, the more appropriate thing to do, to make it possible to charge more customers and in fact go ahead and do that when there is a genuine problem of street soliciting.

I have referred to the 1983 Justice Committee report which made a very important recommendation which I supported very strongly. It recommended that it be an offence for an adult to ask for or agree to pay for an act of prostitution with a minor. We know that there are large numbers of young people on the streets and it should certainly be up to adults who are seeking prostitutes to ensure that they do not seek an act of prostitution from a minor. It seems to me that adult behaviour requires a certain amount of responsibility and it would be far better to put the onus on improving adult behaviour to save young people this experience. Yet, the Bill before us today does not do that. There was strong support from the Justice Committee for that very concrete and direct proposal, and yet it was ignored by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) in the drafting of this new legislation.

The Bill before us today attempts to deal with the nuisance problem of street prostitution in isolation from the social and economic climate which promoted the problem in the first place. We have an unemployment rate of one in five among young people who are, in growing numbers, becoming prostitutes. We must understand that that is the problem to be dealt with and this sledge-hammer approach, this punitive approach, is not going to deal with the causes of young people going into prostitution. It provides no legal venue in which prostitution may take place. It is a damned-if-you-do, damned-if-you-don't situation. If the idea was to get it off the streets, the Bill criminalizes soliciting in other places as well.

In the testimony of the Mayor of Vancouver he said that it was not the concern of the Vancouver city council or the citizens of Vancouver to try to ban prostitution entirely. He said that that was unrealistic, it was not something that could be done, and they were not attempting to do that. They were attempting to get it off the streets and out of places in which it was a nuisance to the public who could not enjoy their homes and were hassled going to and from work and going in and out for the evening. Yet, this Bill does not meet those very reasonable expectations of the Mayor of Vancouver and city councillors. It goes far beyond that to criminalize behaviour in a much more general fashion. They suggested that we needed to get it off the streets and put it where it will not be a source of nuisance to other people.

This legislation will simply result in a large number of people being criminalized and we will get into the revolving door syndrome. There will be more dependence in pimps. Women will have to call their pimps to get bail. They will have to go back on the streets to pay their fines and lawyers' fees. This is the kind of legal control that we do not want. We have had it before. The idea is that we need tougher laws to deal with this problem. However, we used to have tougher laws. The jails of Vancouver used to be filled with prostitutes. It was a revolving door. If they could not pay their fine and no one would raise bail for them they simply stayed in. Then, when they got out, they had to get back to work to pay the rent and do all the things which people have to do. It simply got them further and further into a criminal milieu and it was harder and harder for them to get into ordinary work and out of that kind of life.

We have tried the revolving door. It was repugnant to people and they argued against it. As a result of all those arguments we had the laws improved and now the Government wants us to go backward. My Party is very strongly opposing this legislation. We are opposing the revolving door and the increased criminalization of women and young people.

If passed, this Bill would result in prostitutes being at risk of violence to a greater extent. It would increase the male exploitation of female prostitutes because they would be more dependent on people to intervene for them with the law. They will be more vulnerable as a result of this legislation. It also endangers the freedom of expression of other Canadians. The wording of Bill C-49 is very broad indeed. It says:

> Every person who in a public place or in any place open to public view
> (c) stops or attempts to stop any person or in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person
> for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or of obtaining the services of a prostitute is guilty of an offence—

The words "stop or ... in any manner communicates" is very general. This very, very general wording which will result in large numbers of people being criminalized is totally inappropriate and is possibly contrary to the Charter of Rights. Certainly one obvious result, if this legislation is passed, is that there will be court cases challenging the legality of the legislation instead of proceeding in a practical and focused way to deal with the immediate problem. It is aimed at the most vulnerable prostitutes, those who are young, those who are unskilled. It is an extremely repugnant measure, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest that we should take quite a different approach to this problem. We should be closing the loopholes and making it an offence to solicit an act of prostitution from a minor. We should be enforcing the laws of nuisance, disorderliness and noise, which measures are available. If I were a police chief in a city which had a prostitution problem I can assure you that there would not be a street soliciting problem. The matter could be dealt with. Police forces have sheltered and protected the male customers out of a mistaken sense of male bonding. They have gone after the prostitute, the evil woman in the case, and sheltered the male customer. They have done this out of a very mistaken sense of honour saying that they are only innocent occasional offenders whose reputations should not be harmed by having it known.

In no jurisdiction in Canada has there been public reporting of the names of offenders who have been customers in cases of soliciting. The furthest that has been gone in this direction was in Vancouver and I will tell you how paltry the measures were. Male customers were reported using their surnames and initials only with no addresses. For example: "R. Smith was convicted of an act of street soliciting". Obviously that is no risk to the reputation of anyone. It is the customer who can be controlled by the threat of loss of reputation. Clearly, for the prostitute the publication of a name is neither here nor there. Indeed, it might be advertising. However, the customer has something to lose. Yes, this very obvious method of dealing with the problem has not been used. Police forces would rather use the sledge-hammer than use the very practical tactic of publishing the names of offenders who are customers. If I were a police chief I would use this cheap, easy and convenient means of clearing up the problem. I would not wish to resort to this far more heavy-handed, extremely expensive measure. It is expensive in terms of prison costs and in terms of the human costs for people who are going to suffer very much as a result.

A large number of people spoke very strongly at committee stage in opposition to this Bill. A large number of women's organizations made representations. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women spoke very strongly. It gave a brief detailing the reprehensible nature of the proposed measures and proposing a very different approach. They recommend a much more global approach which understands the social and economic context in which street soliciting occurs. The Elizabeth Fry Society, an organization which I belong to and support, has been very strong in support of the rehabilitation of women offenders and in support of civil liberties in a general fashion. The members of this organization work directly with women offenders, including women prostitutes, and they are very familiar with the problem. Their advice ought to have been heeded rather than this more Draconian approach which the Conservative Government approves.

I will quote from the position taken by representatives of the Elizabeth Fry Society before the Justice Committee. They said:

● (1650)

> Our goal is to ensure that prostitutes have alternatives to selling their bodies in order to make a living. Criminal records decrease this likelihood and further demoralize people who are already condemned by many sectors of our society. Criminalizing prostitution and/or soliciting expresses public condemnation of women who, if anything, are closer to victims than to criminals . . . Criminalizing soliciting in fact increases the prostitute's dependency on her pimp. She needs him for protection, and she has no means of protecting herself from the pimp. She will have to work the streets even harder and be more persistent in her soliciting to repay her pimp for the trouble she has caused him.

Again, does this measure deal with the problems caused by pimps? Not at all. We have heard plenty of testimony from women's organizations indicating that we should throw the book at pimps. That is a difficult thing to do. I am sympathetic to police forces which point out the difficulties of dealing with pimps. However, how hard have they tried? Pimps are the people who really cause problems. Indeed, one of the revelations of the Badgley Commission was that young people who were prostitutes and solicited in a pressing and persistent manner did so as a result of orders from their pimps who said that they were not making enough money. It was the pimps who were creating the problem, not the prostitutes themselves. Yet this measure will not do anything about the problems posed by pimps.

Let me continue to quote from testimony of representatives of the Elizabeth Fry Society:

> —prostitutes generally are not dangerous criminals; they are not people who we would wish, on an objective test, to put into our prisons, particularly at a time when the provincial prisons across this country are, I believe without exception, overcrowded, particularly the remand and short sentence centres. I am wondering whether we really want to increase the double and triple bunking in our prisons, particularly with young people—many of the prostitutes are young people; an increasing number are juveniles as well. These, I believe, really are not appropriately dealt with through toughening of the Criminal Code.

Another proposal was made by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women as follows:

> It would seem a far better use of government funds to support women in retraining programs, and provide street workers and alternate living quarters away from the street, than to spend funds on policing, court costs, and imprisonment of prostitutes.

I have raised a few points on the question of policing. Let me continue with some further analyses that the police themselves have revealed. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has pointed officers who could act as undercover officers to entrap male customers. There is a much larger number of male police officers ready and apparently quite willing to work in this capacity to attract women prostitutes. This was the historic way of getting conviction quotas up when the old laws were in force and many more women were going to prison than is the case now.

I recall asking the Chief of Police of Toronto about this matter. I asked him why he did not go after the customers and one of the answers he gave me was that he did not have many women police officers and they did not like doing it. Women police officers do not like enforcing a law using entrapment. I asked the Chief of Police about the situation with men police officers and he told me that they do not mind so much. That is a double standard. We should not be happy about it. Yet that is the nature of the beast. We must understand this and we should have laws which will take us away from the double standard. We must be very sensitive to the fact that this is a law that will really be used against women and children and that it is entirely inappropriate.

To conclude, let me say that this is not a law that will do any good. It will not stop the problem of street soliciting. It will not deal with the problem of children on the streets. It will criminalize a large number of people and will increase dependence on pimps. It will worsen the situation of children on the streets. This is a heavy-handed, Draconian measure and it lacks common sense. It is an irresponsible measure and I urge the House to defeat Bill C-49.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? If not, we will resume debate.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak to Bill C-49. Put very simply, Bill C-49 is not the answer to the problem.

It was hoped that after committee deliberations over this Bill, the Government would recognize that the Bill was offensive and deserving of substantial amendment. Be that as it may, the Government, in its wisdom, decided not to amend the Bill. It decided to bring the Bill before the House for third reading with no amendments other than the inclusion of one word in the first clause.

In my respectful submission, the Bill is not supportable simply from a civil libertarian point of view. There is no question that the Bill poses a threat to individual rights and freedoms and we as Parliamentarians must be the custodians of civil liberties and of individual rights and freedoms. We must ensure that in our deliberations, we afford as much protection as possible to Canadians so that we may protect those rights.

In my submission, I would like to indicate why this Bill is not deserving of support from a civil libertarian point of view. However, I would like to begin by indicating why we are here today debating Bill C-49. In my view, the Bill is a knee-jerk political reaction to a problem that does exist. We recognize that the problem of street prostitution does exist. It is a nuisance in many of the major cities of Canada including Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto, Halifax and others. However, Bill C-49 is not the answer.

We argued at committee and at second reading stage that what was needed was a comprehensive piece of legislation to deal with all the aspects of and problems associated with prostitution in Canada. The Minister indicated on a number of occasions that it is the intention of the Government to bring forward a comprehensive piece of legislation as early as the new year. Why then? Why pass this Bill which is so basically and fundamentally flawed now?

In my view, this Bill will be struck down by the courts. You can bet your bottom dollars, Mr. Speaker, that it will be challenged at the earliest opportunity. I am confident that a superior court will strike this Bill down as being too vague and not specific enough.

The Government decided that it had to act because of political pressure. As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, when Governments act under political pressure, they make bad laws at times. This one is a bad law.

We know that the Criminal Code has not been effective in dealing with the problem of street prostitution. We had Section 195.1 of the Criminal Code of Canada which reads:

> Every person who solicits any person in a public place for the purpose of prostitution is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

The courts of the land have interpreted that particular Section as stated in a Supreme Court of Canada decision as meaning that the activity had to be pressing and persistent. A mere wink, a wave or a mere communication was not sufficient to prosecute and convict under the particular section. The police forces across the land felt fettered as a result of that particular Supreme Court of Canada decision. The previous administration decided that the whole question of prostitution had to be looked into. In that respect we had the Fraser Commission and the Badgley Commission which looked into the matter and related areas. Both Commissions have tabled reports in the House of Commons and both have made recommendations with respect to the problems. While all Members of the House may not support these recommendations I think it is important that the Government respond in a comprehensive way to the Fraser Report and bring in legislation which will deal with the problems associated with prostitution and with pimps. Bill C-49 does not deal with pimps, nor does it deal with common bawdy houses because of political pressure which the Government has brought to bear with respect to this legislation.

• (1700)

Bill C-49 is a short piece of legislation. It has but two clauses. I think it is important to point out that the Government is unsure of itself with respect to the Bill. This can be concluded by reading the two clauses contained in the Bill. One of the clauses is a sunset clause. It requires the Government of Canada to conduct a comprehensive review of the provisions of this Bill after three years. That suggests to me that the Government is not sure whether this Bill will survive and whether it is the answer. I think the Government realizes deep down inside that the Bill might not survive. I think the Government is paying a disservice to those who are concerned about the problems of street prostitution. It is doing a disservice because, as I indicated earlier with all the certainty I could command, this Bill will be challenged.

What will be the result if the Bill is challenged? It will go to a trial court and a trial judge will make a decision either in favour or against it. Regardless of the decision made someone, either the Crown or the accused, will appeal the decision to a superior court. A superior court will strike down the Bill because it is vague. Then what will happen? The police will no longer be able to act. Their hands will be tied again because the courts will deem the Bill to be unenforceable, vague and perhaps in contravention of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The legislation will be held up for months and months, if not years, before a final decision is rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada. In effect, what the Government may be doing by passing this Bill is perpetuating the problem for years to come. It may be effective on a short term basis, perhaps for a number of weeks or months. It might get the prostitutes off the streets for that period of time; but they will come back after the Supreme Court of any province decides that the Bill is unenforceable. We, as legislators, will then have to sit on our hands and wait until the Supreme Court of Canada renders a decision with respect to it. I hope the Government has thought about this aspect of the Bill and about the potential of a lengthy delay as a result of a court decision.

I would like to review the Bill and the offensive clauses in it and indicate why, in my view and in the view of many people, the Bill is not supported because it poses a threat to individual rights and freedoms. The Bill makes it an offence for any person, which would include a customer or a prostitute, who, in a public place or in any place open to public view, does one of a number of things. If that person stops or attempts to stop any motor vehicle for the purposes of engaging in prostitution or of obtaining the services of a prostitute, then that person could be prosecuted and convicted of a criminal offense. How will the courts define "stops" or "attempts to stop any motor vehicle"?

With respect to stopping a motor vehicle, it is pretty simple. If someone stands in front of a car and forces it to stop then I think it is obvious that the person is stopping a motor vehicle. However, that is not where the matter ends. The prosecution will then have to show that the person has not only stopped a motor vehicle but it will have to go on in order to secure a conviction. The prosecution must prove that the purpose of the stopping was to engage in prostitution or for obtaining the sexual services of a prostitute. How will the police be able to prove that?

I submit that there is an evidentiary problem. My friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), indicated some of the problems with respect to adducing such evidence in order to secure a conviction. How can that evidence be obtained? Someone will actually have to listen or understand why the vehicle is being stopped. Of course, we could use undercover police officers to this end, but there would be problems with that. Either the customer or the prostitute would have to admit or confess to the police what in effect had taken place.

Proposed Subsection 195.1(a) deals with stopping or attempting to stop any motor vehicle. What does "attempts to stop any motor vehicle" mean? It is a simple wave to the driver an attempt to stop a motor vehicle? How does one attempt to stop a motor vehicle? If one gets in the way of a motor vehicle and the driver drives around that person is that an attempt to stop a motor vehicle? One can see the problems associated with that subsection.

Let us go on to proposed Subsection 195.1(b) which deals with the person who in a public place or in any place open to public view impedes the free flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic or ingress to or egress from premises adjacent to that place. What does that mean? These are questions which the courts will ask. They will ask what Parliament intends when it says that it is a criminal offence to impede the free flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic. If a prostitute or a customer simply stands on a sidewalk and someone has to side-step that person in order to get around, then is that person impeding the free flow of pedestrian traffic? That is but a judgment call. The court demand some certainty from Parliament with respect to its laws in order for those laws to be fair and in order for them to be equally applied. There is a problem with this subsection in that one does not know what it means to impede the free flow of pedestrian traffic.

I would like to indicate at this point how it can be seen that police officers are given tremendous discretion under this particular piece of legislation, Bill C-49. It is up to the police officer to decide whether or not to charge a particular person, for whatever reason. He or she has that discretion under this legislation. While we have the utmost respect for police officers and police force in Canada we have to ensure that a discretion of this magnitude is not given to them because it just might be, and it is likely to be, misused. If a particular officer does not like a particular person for whatever reason then he or she can decide that that person is impeding the free flow of pedestrian traffic or that that person is attempting to stop a motor vehicle. One can see the problems associated with the vagueness of this particular piece of legislation and the reason it will be turfed out of court. Let me come to the most offensive section of this particular piece of legislation, proposed Subsection 1(c) which states, and I quote:

> Every person who in a public place or in any place open to public view
> (c) stops or attempts to stop any person or in any manner comunicates or attempts to communicate with any person
> for the purpose of engaging in prostitution—

What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? If that is not vague, I do not know what is. What does it mean to attempt to communicate? I am sure Hon. Members in the House, and many Canadians, could think of examples of what it means to attempt to communicate. Is winking an attempt to communicate for the purpose of prostitution? How about if you wave? If any one of us is walking down the street one day and a person unbeknown to us waves at us and we wave back, and that person happens to be a prostitute, I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that a police officer could charge that person who is the prostitute and anyone of us in the House, if the officer wanted to. That could be the result of this particular piece of legislation.

I say to Hon. Members opposite to beware of liberal police officers because they could charge you. What would the consequences be to Hon. Members opposite of a charge under Section 195.1 of the Criminal Code of Canada? I need not tell them that their political careers would be destroyed as well as their family life. In any case, they would have a lot of explaining to do to their constituents and to their families. This Bill is offensive on a civil libertarian basis because of the vagueness of this particular piece of legislation. It does not define what it means to attempt to communicate with any person.

Bill C-49 in proposed Subsection 195.1(2) defines what a "public place" means. A "public place" according to this Bill includes any place to which the public has access as of right or by invitation—that would include, of course, shopping malls, bars, lobbies of office buildings, any place where the public has the right of access—expressed or implied, and any motor vehicle located in a public place or in any place open to public view. If one has his car parked in his driveway, someone from the street could look to see what is happening in his car, or if the curtains of a home were open, a pedestrian walking by could look into that home to see if there was an attempt to communicate or direct communication for the purpose of prostitution. In that case, a police officer could lay a charge.

Hon. Members opposite may laugh and say: "Police officers would not do that. They are responsible people". However, you and I know, Mr. Speaker, as well as Hon. Members opposite, that we have to ensure that the discretion given to police officers and others who have to enforce the law have to be limited and that our laws, in order to be good laws, must be certain and definite so a Canadian will know when he or she is committing a criminal offence.

I will conclude by saying I have considerable regret and chagrin that the Conservatives have brought forward this Bill and have decided not to amend it in order to address the civil libertarian concerns which have been expressed by a great number of Canadians. It is regrettable. We hope that the Government will see the wisdom of its folly and bring in that comprehensive piece of legislation but it is obvious that this Government will not. I simply ask the Government to read my submissions in a year or two years' time and perhaps it will see that what I have said here today holds true.

Mr. Nystrom: Could the Hon. Member tell us what he means by "the wisdom of its folly"?

Mr. Nunziata: What I meant to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the Conservative Government is totally lacking in wisdom by bringing forward this particular piece of legislation. It is displaying an abysmal folly by bringing it forward. That is what I meant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-49, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution) be now read a third time and do pass. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Crosbie), which was agreed to on the following division:

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-78, an Act to amend the Governor General's Act, the Governor General's Retiring Annuity Act, the Salaries Act and the Judges Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Crosbie moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I intend to say a very few words with respect to third reading of this Act. This Act essentially amends different Acts to increase the salaries of judges, Lieutenant Governors of the Provinces and the Governor General.

The Constitution of Canada imposes upon Parliament the duty to fix and provide the salaries, allowances and pensions of the federally appointed judiciary. It is a difficult duty, although no doubt it seemed fairly straightforward to the Fathers of Confederation when they determined upon the text of Section 100 of what was then the British North America Act. Acting pursuant to this provision, Parliament is expected to balance the needs and expectations of the judiciary with its own responsibility to use the money of the taxpayers wisely and to the best effect. It is a duty only Parliament can perform. By virtue of the wording of Section 100, this duty cannot be delegated to any other body. It is a duty that is often embarrassing and distasteful to both Members of Parliament and members of the judiciary since it requires a public debate upon the remuneration of men and women who, as a result, may be subjected to generalized abuse but who, by their offices, are denied the privilege of public reply. It carries with it the danger of politicizing judicial compensation issues and, unless the levels of compensation are reviewed at regular intervals, the danger also of inequity and unfairness to the judiciary if salaries and other benefits are permitted to fall behind on the basis of leading economic indicators.

Judicial salaries have in fact suffered erosion since 1981 when an indexing formula was first provided to cushion the effects of inflation between parliamentary reviews. Indexing has had the effect of permitting Governments and Parliament to defer consideration of the salary issue in the comforting knowledge that the judiciary were receiving some increase each year without the necessity for full public debate and legislative action. This tendency has been further reinforced by the provision for triennial commissions to review the adequacy of judicial salaries and benefits.

Two years have passed since the report of the first commission on judges' salaries and benefits was tabled in Parliament. At its 1985 annual meeting, the Canadian Bar Association passed a resolution deploring the delay in dealing with the Lang Report and calling for its implementation forthwith. While we are aware of the serious delay which has ensued, the Government also accepts that its mandate for fiscal restraint and the protection of the nation's economic interests will not permit full acceptance of the Lang Commission's recommendations. Accordingly, we have sought to arrive at adequate compensation for the judiciary while recognizing the fact that we continue in a period of economic recovery and fiscal restraint.

Very briefly, what is intended is that the salary of a judge of a provincial superior court which, as of April 1, 1985, was $93,800 will be increased by this Bill to $105,000. With respect to District Court judges, their salaries will be pegged at $5,000 under the salary level from year to year of a superior court judge.

With respect to the Governor General, the annual salary will be raised from $48,666, its current level, to a level of $70,000. With respect to the Lieutenant Governors of the provinces, the increase will be to $69,000.

We have heard speeches on this matter and the Minister appeared before the committee to testify with respect to his views on these matters. There were no amendments at report stage. I hope for the sake of the judiciary and other people involved that this matter can have the most prompt attention of the House so that we can implement it and make it law.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and make a few brief remarks on this legislation. The position of members of the New Democratic Party in relation to this legislation was stated clearly at the time of the second reading debate and subsequently when the distinguished Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) appeared before the legislative committee which was considering this Bill. I do not now intend to repeat the arguments we made at that time. However, I do want to put on the record our opposition to this legislation.

While no one in this House would in any way deny the integral and vital role played by the judiciary in our legal system, certainly it is not our view that we should be increasing the discrepancies between the wealthy and the poor in Canadian society. At a time of restraint when basic social programs which provide essential social services to the poor are being cut back, and when we are attacking the deficit, an increase in the salaries of a group who are in relative terms privileged economically cannot be justified.

We as Parliamentarians have the obligation to allocate scarce resources among competing ends. If there are additional dollars to be spent, I suggest that they should be spent in assisting those at the bottom end of the economic scale and not those who are already very well paid by any standard of comparison. Instead of increasing the gap between the rich and poor we should be reducing it.

The suggestion has been made that it is essential to increase the salaries of judges in order to recruit more qualified and capable personnel. First, I would suggest that the Canadian Bar Association report on the independence of the judiciary made very clear that that suggestion is without foundation. I would like to quote from that report as follows:

> —it is neither necessary nor desirable to establish judicial salaries at such a level as to match the judge's earnings before appointment to the bench. The most obvious reason for this is that such a policy would tend to attract people to the bench for purely financial reasons. The sort of person who would accept a position on the bench because it paid well is not the sort of person who would make the best judge.
> Rather the sort of person we would wish to see on the bench are those who appreciate the honour of being a judge and who see as part of their reward the satisfaction of serving society on the bench.

I would remind Hon. Members that in calculating the over-all level of judicial compensation, we must remember as well that there is a very, very rich pension scheme for federal judicial appointees. It has been suggested by some, including some members of the judiciary, that the contributions made by members of the federal judiciary to their own pension plan in some way undermines the independence of the judiciary. I suggest that any statement to that effect is without foundation, and should the Supreme Court of Canada rule in the Beauregard case that in fact the legislation which requires the members of the judiciary to contribute to their pension plans is in fact within the powers of Parliament, Parliament should not take any steps to remove the contributions of members of the federal judiciary.

I would note that there are some flaws in the present judicial pension scheme. These flaws have been identified by a number of commissions. Perhaps one of the most glaring flaws is that those who have served more than 10 years but less than 15 years are not entitled to any pension whatsoever. I suggest that we look at some sort of prorated pension for members of the bench who have served Canada with distinction during that particular period of time.

We also have to look at the method of the appointment of judges. The Canadian Bar Association has recommended substantial changes to the manner in which judicial appointments are made. In August of this year it issued a report which constitutes a scathing criticism of the current method of judicial appointment. It finds that the quality of the Canadian judiciary is high. However, it also finds that in some provinces politics play too great a role in the selection of candidates for the bench. It recommends one form of judicial appointment process which I think we should certainly look at.

What we must recognize is that the present system, which allows for political patronage to far too great an extent, is one which has no place in a democratic society, particularly at a time when the role of the judiciary is being enhanced by the adoption of an entrenched Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

At third reading stage I wanted to put on the record these brief points with respect to some of our concerns about this legislation. I wish to note that, federally, the New Democratic Party opposes this Bill and will continue to call for legislation and policy which will reduce the gap between rich and poor in Canada instead of increasing the gap, as this Bill would do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there is a predisposition in the House to call it 6.52 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being after six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, October 31 consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Keeper (p. 8197).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this will be the last day of debate on Bill C-62 at second reading. The Government for the fifth time in this session of Parliament has imposed closure, cut off debate, on an important Government Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Something you never used to do, did you?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: As a result of that procedure by the Government, we are not permitted to have a full discussion in this House of what is supposed to be one of the key pieces of legislation put forward by the Government.

The Government has made a lot, both in the Speech from the Throne and in speeches that have followed, about the reform of Parliament. The Government established a committee, headed by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to examine the rules of Parliament and to suggest ways in which Parliament can be reformed to give Members on both sides of the House the opportunity for more input into legislation so that legislation will not be formulated in the back rooms of the civil service. In other words, those who are elected to this House will have some say in the drafting, in the amendment and in the content of legislation.

If the Government continues to use allocation of time and continues to cut off debate on Bills so Members of Parliament cannot have that input, what does that say about reform of Paliament? It says that the Government is not really serious about reform of Parliament. The proposals put forward are simply a facade and not a real approach to parliamentary affairs.

When we debate an issue in Parliament, such as we want to do with this Bill on employment equity, we know that we are not going to convince too many of the 211 Conservative Members on the other side to change their minds. We know that there are only 70 of us in opposition, 40 in one Party and 30 in another and despite the soundness of our arguments, we will not convince too many Conservatives to change their minds.

The purpose of debate in this House—and this does not begin with this Parliament—is to reach beyond the walls of Parliament to the public outside where we hope to touch public opinion. If we touch public opinion by continuing the debate in this House, through the media and through those who may watch the proceedings of Parliament, then pressure may be put on the Government and the Government will begin to amend and withdraw Bills. That is what happened when we dealt with the proposal to cut back indexation of old age pensions. If it had been for the government caucus itself, deindexation would have proceeded, but by debate in this House and outside the House the public became aware of what was happening to old age pensions. The public went after the Government. The 211 Member majority responded to the mass of public opinion that was brought to bear on the Government to amend and draw back on that proposal. We believe the debate should continue on this Bill. We abhor the fact that the Government is cutting off debate on Bill C-62 and that this is the last day on second reading.

Why do we oppose this Bill and why are we trying to make the public aware of what is happening? This Bill pretends, and I say pretends, to do something about employment equity. Employment equity is supposed to bring about fairer conditions of employment for certain target groups who have had a rough deal generation after generation. I am speaking of the women, the visible minorities, our native people and the handicapped. This Bill pretends to do something about those particular groups in our population so that they will have a fairer deal in seeking and maintaining employment.

The Bill was supposed to be based upon the recommendations of the Abella Report. The previous Government appointed Judge Abella in 1983 to look into the whole problem of inequity in the employment market-place and to make recommendations on how it could be corrected. Judge Abella tabled her report in November, 1984, after the change of Government, making some very specific recommendations on what must be done. Unfortunately, the Government has not followed those recommendations.

We are opposing the Bill because while it expresses the right intent—it indicates that it wants to do something about the situation of inequity in the employment market-place for different target groups in our population—it in fact does very little. There are no standards set out in the Bill. There are no objective criteria which must be followed. There is no enforcement agency set out in the Bill. In fact, there are no penalties if the employers who are subject to the Bill do not follow through with what is expected of them. The only penalty in the Bill is for employers who do not report to the Government. However, if they report, and even if their reports are wanting or are lacking in progress, there is no penalty. The only penalty is if they do not report.

Judge Abella, in her report, demanded that there be an enforcement agency, standards and penalties. The Bill does not provide for them. This is why we are opposing it and trying to make clear to Canadians that while the Bill pretends to do something, it does very little. We are afraid that if the Bill passes, the Government can then say that it has done something about employment equity, when in fact it will have done nothing at all and will go on pretending that something meaningful has been done. If the Government really wanted to do something, it would have put into law what Judge Abella recommended.

I am not the only one who says this. The great mass of public opinion is not yet aware of the façade which is going on here. However, the leaders of the target groups do. They have come to Ottawa, have visited our offices and have told us so. The leaders of the handicapped associations have told us that the Bill is not acceptable. Also they have told us that they would rather see it defeated than passed in this half measure form before us. Women's groups have come to Ottawa, such as the National Action Committee and other organizations, and have told us that the Bill is not acceptable. The leaders of visible minorities and native people have told us that the Bill is not acceptable. Yet, the Minister and Members on the Government side tell us what a great Bill it is.

The Bill is not to serve most of us in the House of Commons; it is to serve those people who are considered target groups under the Bill. If they do not think it is acceptable, why does the Government not do what we have asked, take back the Bill and make some amendments to it?

The Bill could be improved and could be made worth while, if key amendments were made to it. I am afraid those key amendments cannot be made in committee. At first I thought they could be made after the Bill was sent to committee on second reading, that that would do the job. Now, after further consideration, I have come to the conclusion that the Bill is so defective and needs so many amendments that it should be sent back to the drawing-board. The Government should reform the Bill, revise the Bill and bring it back to us. Then it would be doing something to please those target groups.

One wonders who the Government is trying to please with the Bill. Rather than trying to meet the needs of the groups to which I have referred, those who have difficulty with employment—women, native people, the handicapped and visible minorities—it is really backing off Judge Abella's recommendations because it does not want to offend big business which does not want too much regulation or interference with its employment practices.

The decision in the Bill as to what the standards should be is left to the employers. That is really surprising. It is a very unusual situation. A Bill will be passed which indicates that employers must do something about a certain problem, in this case employment inequity, but the Government leaves it up to them to decide what the standards will be. That is what the Government is doing in Clause 4 which reads:

> An employer shall implement employment equity by
> (a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices, not otherwise authorized by a law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups—

● (1115)

It is saying to the employers that they decide which of their practices are against employment equity and do something about them. How many employers will say that they have been doing the wrong thing for several years and now they will make changes in some of their policies? We need standards in the Bill. We need an enforcement agency. I hope the Government does something about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. On debate, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie).

Mr. Gauthier: Good morning, David; I am glad you are here.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be in the House this morning. I have been on the road for the last number of weeks, so it is nice to see smiling faces on both sides of the House.

Mr. Allmand: It is better to be on the road.

Mr. Crombie: The Hon. Member might be right.

It is with considerable pleasure that I am able to rise today to endorse the historic Bill which my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), presented some time ago. All Members of the House must recognize that we have reached a landmark, no matter what imperfections might be perceived, with this Bill. That focus should be kept on most of the discussions because in many of these things there are always matters which could be done better or could be done different. There is no particular Bill, no particular passage of literature, which contains all the wisdom. However, the House should not miss the point; it is a landmark Bill.

With the passage of the Canadian Human Rights Act of 1977 and the proclamation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1983, the people of the country clearly stated that employment discrimination could no longer be tolerated in a democratic society. With the passage of the Employment Equity Act, we will ensure that employers, both public and private, will be responsible to ensure that equality becomes a reality.

Over the past 14 months, it has been my pleasure to criss-cross the country, talking with native people. After visiting many communities, hundreds of communities, I can say that few issues have dominated my discussions as much as the desire on the part of native people for economic development and employment. With unemployment rates reaching 80 per cent in many communities, native people want the opportunity for long-term productive employment. They want the types of jobs which will allow them to break out of the dependency relationships which they see as a major threat to the survival of their own culture and communities. Few other Canadians face the kind of barriers to employment which Indian people face. For many, there is a need to upgrade their education, to acquire occupational skills through training, and to obtain work experience and the special assistance necessary to enter the labour market successfully.

Recently I was pleased to announce the Indian Community Human Resource Strategies Program. It is designed to provide resources to Indian communities in order that they can provide their members with the skills, experience and other assistance the world of work increasingly requires. However, all the training and preparation in the world will be a waste if Indian people do not have opportunities for employment at whatever job and at whatever level for which they are qualified. Whether intentional or unintentional—and native workers are often excluded because of invalid or inappropriate employment requirements—discriminatory barriers for native people must be removed. Even further, employers must be prepared to demonstrate to potential Indian employees that those opportunities are there. Again, the figures are compelling. If Indian people are to reach the same employment levels as other Canadians by the 1991 census, some 85,000 jobs must be created just to get close to the level of other Canadians.

Certainly, our Government is committed to assisting Indian communities and individuals to develop fully the employment opportunities on reserves. However, even with success, a minimum of 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the required jobs will have to be in the non-Indian private and public sectors. Clearly, whether they are opportunities for Indian workers commuting from the reserve or for those choosing to live off the reserve, we must be prepared to ensure finally that Indians will have a fair share access to employment in this country.

I am convinced that this Bill represents the cornerstone of its successful employment strategy for native Canadians. Despite the rhetoric we sometimes hear from the other side, as it is part of their job, employers as defined in this Act will be required—I emphasize required—to implement employment equity. First, they will be required to remove all barriers which discriminate against designated groups, whether intentional or systemic. Second, they will be required to implement positive measures to ensure an appropriate degree of representation. Third, they will be required to provide annual reports to the Minister of Employment and Immigration on exactly how well they are doing with respect to achieving employment equity.

There are those who would criticize the Bill because it establishes no new enforcement agency. However, the facts show something different. Crown corporations will be required to submit mandatory employment equity plans to Treasury Board and will be closely monitored for compliance. Federal contractors will be required by law to certify their commitment to implement employment equity and they will be monitored. Those failing to comply will face debarrment, and that is a very powerful incentive. Companies under federal jurisdiction will be required, under penalty of a stiff fine, to report publicly their employment data on a yearly basis. If they make no progress, Section 32(3) of the Canadian Human Rights Act clearly gives the Human Rights Commission the right to initiate complaints with respect to it. For the first time, the commission will have the information required to monitor employment practices.

As my colleague stated earlier, the Government is also committed to ensuring that the commission has the staff and resources to carry out that part of the mandate. If this Bill does not have a new enforcement agency it is because the Government believes in using the powers of the agencies already in place. What we do not need is another redundant agency. We need the action that this Bill gives to those people who are looking for employment equity. Officials in my Department are currently working with over 80 Indian communities which are negotiating with Crown corporations and private employers for employment opportunities. This long list includes oil and gas, transportation and service industries and construction companies. Many other communities will be developing and implementing long-term human resource plans as part of our human resources strategies program.

I can assure all Members that the employment equity program will be an enormous boost in all of these communities. It will help pry open doors that have long been closed to Indian people. The prospects are exciting for them. It is historic and I believe that all Members of the House should support this Bill.

Nothing in the world is perfect, but I can say that this Bill moves this country forward such a distance that it will make all Hon. Members who support this Bill proud they did so and those who do not will wonder why.

• (1125)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to Bill C-62, I am pleased to have the opportunity to follow the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). As the Minister is well aware, the native population in my riding is approximately 30 per cent of the total. We have had experience in the past with provincial regulation that is very similar to the Bill before us today. Therefore, I am aware of the difficulties we will face in turning this Bill into a real affirmative action program. The intent of the employment equity Bill must be to provide real equity and real participation at all levels in the workforce for those disadvantaged groups, whether they are native people, women, the handicapped or others.

During my term as Public Service critic for my caucus prior to the last election, I read many reports stating that there was no real equity within the structure of the federal Public Service. The problems have not been resolved after many years of Liberal study and after a year of Conservative promises. I believe we will suffer from the same inefficiencies as a result of this Bill.

During the election campaign the Government promised to implement mandatory affirmative action. Again, this promise is being broken by this legislation.

Let me explain why I believe this legislation is flawed and will not fulfil the task that it should. Large hydro development projects were being implemented in Manitoba during the 1970s. At that time a northern preference clause was negotiated with the contractors and sub-contractors who were involved in these large projects that employed thousands of people. However, there was essentially no enforcement mechanism or method of ensuring that native people and women really became involved in the process. We have learned from those negotiations in the 1970s, and as we gear up for new projects in Manitoba at Limestone and Conawapa, we have built in quotas and indicated that various trades must provide up to 45 per cent native hiring and maintain 45 per cent native employment in some trades on those projects. There must be training for those people before the projects begin in order for them to be qualified for the jobs as they come on stream. In this case, I will give credit to the federal Government for helping to pay for these training projects. In particular, I give credit to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) for agreeing with the Manitoba Government to pay for some of the training that is involved in that project.

However, this illustrates that there must be some real enforcement mechanism provided in this Bill. It is not enough to leave it up to the companies to look after their own affairs and simply report to the Government. We have had experience with years and years of reports about the federal civil service. We know that women are under-represented and we know, as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is well aware, that native people are under-represented especially in areas where they live. We know that the higher one goes in the hierarchy, the fewer disadvantaged people there are, fewer women and fewer native people employed in the Government. While that information is useful in itself, the process must continue to achieve the goal of real equity. That is what we are looking at in this legislation. It is unfortunate but true that this Bill is only a step along the road to what we need.

I would like to see the Government live up to its election promise of mandatory affirmative action for corporations that are involved in very large Government contracts. That was a promise, and presumably a promise is made to be kept. However, it is not being kept.

The fact that almost every major Canadian organization that is concerned about women, natives and the handicapped have spoken out against this legislation, tells us a great deal. They have said that it is not adequate and is not in keeping with the promise the Government made during the election campaign. There is really no enforcement mechanism that will make sure anything will really happen as a result of this legislation. There is no guarantee that these corporations will even fill out the forms the Government will produce for them.

As the labour spokesperson for our Party, I am concerned about the fact that there is no provision for the input of unions in this legislation. Unions are the ones that are involved in negotiating and it is their members who are affected. The unions could have input in terms of educational leave for purposes of helping people move up the ladder within the company. Yet there is no input from the unions suggested in this legislation. A Government that has prided itself on its consultation is leaving out a very fundamental group which has a lot of input into what will happen in the workplace. Again, this legislation is flawed because of that lack.

As well, this legislation is flawed because it lacks not only the goals but the guidelines for affirmative action. What does the Government expect to happen as a result of this legislation next year, two years down the road or five years from now? I think we have a right to know that. Year after year we have seen a failure within the federal civil service to deal with real affirmative action. I have talked about the fact that there has been study after study and that chart after chart has been shown to us. What is the real goal of the federal Government with regard to its own employees? We are talking about hundreds of thousands of Canadians. What are the goals of the Government with regard to Crown corporations? What are the Government's goals and expectations for the effect of this legislation on the private sector? I think we should know that and I think that is the problem we are facing at this time.

We are dealing with a piece of legislation which I do not believe will do very much for the people about whom we are so concerned. I think that in 1985, the people have a right to expect more than a piece of legislation which would have been found to be faulty even in the 1960s and the 1970s. The Government is moving in the right direction. There is no question about that. However, I think that it is moving very slowly and probably very cautiously, which is certainly not in keeping with the bold statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign.

I have lived in northern Manitoba and seen mining companies bring in workforces from outside. I have seen other companies bring their workforces with them to the North. Because of that, I recognize that voluntary plans do not often work. Sure, we can say that we are open to native hiring and the advancement of women. However, if we are not going to do anything about it, that will not help the situation.

I do not think that INCO in Thompson had any particular regulation indicating that native people could not be hired but the net result was that very few native people were hired. It was only in cases like the one of Sherritt Gordon for which the Government had specific programs that native people were actually being hired. It was only for Manfor Ltd. that the Government made specific regulations and developed hiring programs so native people would be employed in the forestry industry.

In closing, because we are under time allocation and I am limited to speaking only 10 minutes, I would say that the legislation is too weak. I can certainly speak from the experience I have had in my own riding and I say that it ain't going to work.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I too am rather concerned and disappointed that the Government is bringing a halt to debate on this very important employment equity Bill. A lot more needs to be said on this issue. Frankly, a lot of the things that have been said already need to be said again, because it is obvious that the Government is not listening.

I do not think anyone on this side of the House is quarrelling with the Bill per se. It is just that the Bill does not do what the Government said it was going to do. It certainly will not do what the Abella Royal Commission wanted done in this regard. This Bill provides us in the House of Commons with a chance to do something for women, visible minorities, native people and the disabled in the workplace. This is the moment when we can achieve something for these groups. If we let this opportunity go by with just a cursory glance, we may not get another chance, with the thinking of this Government, for some time to come. We have to be cognizant of the importance of this Bill, particularly at this time when we have before us this legislation and we can do something regarding this very important matter.

This Bill, as has been stated by the affected groups, just does not go far enough. This is the tragedy. It indicates to me that the Government is not sincere in what it is attempting to have the Canadian people believe. We in Canada made a good start with the Canadian Human Rights Act of 1977, with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and particularly with Article 15 of the Charter. It was hoped that this Bill would provide the additional buoyancy that would support these groups in their attempt to attain what the Government should be giving to them.

There are a few things about the Bill with which I would like to deal. As has been mentioned, the definition of employer in the Bill is any person who employs 100 or more employees on or in connection with federal work undertaken. That is just not sufficient. There are holes in that definition through which one could drive a truck. It is not a clause that would be designed by a Government that wants to put teeth and feeling into the stated purpose of this Bill, a very important matter for these groups.

Clause 4 refers to identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices not otherwise authorized by law. If it were not so obvious, we would say that the Government was just being naive. To try to give an objective standard to the subjective position of employers and leaving it at that is far from being sufficient. In fact, it is bordering on being insulting to the intelligence of the Canadian people and particularly the groups that we on this side of the House wish to help, the groups that the Government is not helping anywhere near to the extent that is needed.

I listened to the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie). He made some very good points, points which I think all Canadians should consider regarding the seriousness of native employment. I think the Minister mentioned that we need to create 85,000 jobs by 1991 if we are going to bring native people anywhere close to the norm of employment levels in Canada. It is astounding for a country with the prosperity and enlightenment of Canada to have our native people in that type of position. Something has to be done, something more than what we see in this Bill.

I am not only distressed by the fact that the Bill does not carry the strength which is needed to protect native people and to secure employment for them, but I am distressed by the Government's policy with respect to abandoning its regional development aspect. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), will say more about this when he speaks. At least when we had a Department of Regional Industrial Expansion we had a way to help those people who were no longer on the reserve to work hand in hand with the work which was being done by the Minister responsible for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Those natives who are no longer on the reserve have no way of being assisted by the Government. The Bill does not go far enough in that regard.

As has been said earlier, there are no teeth in the Bill. There are no sanctions. There is certainly provision for a fine of up to $5,000 if companies do not report on their progress and position with respect to the requirements of the Bill. However, it is not enough to have these targeted companies and organizations do what we want them to do to enforce the principle, purpose and heart of the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) said that he does not know what the goals of the Bill are. The Government is not saying what the goals are, that is true. I think we can see a clear indication of what the goals of the Government are when it says that even though it requires a report and the sanction applies only to a report not being filed, it does not have to be filed until June 1, 1988. The Government is obviously not expecting anything from the Bill and from the targeted organizations and companies until after June 1, 1988. Without the spirit of accomplishing what the Government says it wants to accomplish, the Bill will not go anywhere near achieving what we want to achieve and what the Canadian people want to achieve. As has been said earlier, Canadians do not want a continuance of this discrimination. That is becoming more and more obvious.

The Bill will just not do anything. The recommendations of the special committee dealing with the handicapped have been pretty well discounted. The Abella Commission said that the recommendations in the report entitled Obstacles have to be followed in a Bill such as this if it is to have meaningful application. That has not been done. The recommendations of the Abella Commission have not been followed. What we have is smoke and mirrors with respect to this very important question. Visible minorities, the handicapped, native people and the disabled have been waiting a long time. When I say a long time I mean that something should have been done a long time ago. What I am afraid of is that by having this insufficient Bill become law people will say: "Oh well, this question has been looked after and the needs of these groups have been looked after". It just ain't necessarily so. It will not happen. This Bill is not the answer. It has to be strengthened. We can no more abandon the search for the just practice and treatment of these groups after the passage of this Bill than we could before it was introduced.

I am concerned that there will be no follow-up and that companies will look at this legislation as just another porous document to which they will give only cursory glances now and again. Without any of the principles which we in the Liberal Party want to see but in the Bill these aims will not be put into practice. I think that will be very unfortunate.

I ask the Government to reconsider this Bill and to look at it again. I ask the Government to give further consideration to strengthening the Bill. The Government should listen to Hon. Members on this side of the House, put some teeth into the Bill and do what it says it wants done in Clause 2.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak in support of Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. For years the Liberal Government paid lip service to the doctrine of equal opportunity in the workplace. It was all talk and no action. With its strong mandate from the people of Canada the present Government has given this basic right top priority. In fact, within our first year in office we have drafted a Bill which will finally make employment equity a reality. Members opposite are still all talk and no action.

We have had enough, as have the Canadian people. Women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities want to see some action. They want to see results. They demand legislation which will enshrine the right of all Canadians, not just the white, able-bodied males, equal access to employment opportunities. They have waited patiently through years of rhetoric and self-serving inaction. However, with the Bill which is before us now the barriers are coming down. We have shared their frustration and we have heard their cries. As legislators we are committed to opening wide the doors of opportunity for all Canadians.

Not only will the doors be opened but here is the clout of this legislation. Employers will be held accountable for implementing special measures to ensure a truly representative workforce. Critics say the Bill is not tough enough. They say that accountability is not mandatory, that business will not comply and that employers will fudge their reports. This attitude of mistrust and confrontation toward the business community is counter-productive. I might say that this is one of the reasons the labour market and, indeed, the economy as a whole was in the sorry state in which we found it when we assumed power.

I am proud to say that my Government has confidence in the integrity and intelligence of the business community and that, when required by law to report annually on the status of designated groups in the organization, they will comply, both through social conscience and because it makes good business sense. I am convinced they will comply because we are giving them clear guidelines and a firm but realistic deadline.

All employers within the federal jurisdiction must begin immediately to examine their employment procedures and to explore remedies to unfair practices. Systems must be established so that data can be collected to support an annual report on the status of designated groups beginning in 1988.

Recognizing that there are always a few bad apples and not, as some would have us think, that the whole barrel is bad, a fine of up to $50,000 will be levied if a report is not submitted or if it is incomplete. If real progress in the elimination of barriers is not substantiated, the report will be open to public and media scrutiny and it will be made subject to the full force of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

As can be seen, we mean business. We are determined to liberate victims of past discrimination, but as you can also see, Mr. Speaker, we believe in co-operation rather than confrontation to persuade business to conform. We know it is made up of, for the most part, responsible corporate citizens. We also know they are not fools. They are vulnerable to public opinion and they respect the bottom line.

Business sets goals and timetables for every aspect of its operations; profits, capital investment and productivity increases. Setting goals and timetables for designated minorities is a way of ensuring and measuring progress. I think most companies are aware as well that they can no longer afford to waste the potential contribution of capable people for artificial reasons. What is more, the Canadian companies which are already applying the principles of employment equity such as Nova and the Royal Bank, find that their efforts to hire and promote designated groups have resulted in increased productivity, reduced recruitment and training costs, together with a more appropriate use of human resources.

Employment equity makes good business sense. It also enhances the corporate image. If employees, including women, native people, disabled persons and designated minorities are offered equal opportunities, there is a noticeable increase in job satisfaction and morale. Does this improved morale and productivity shine through to the customer and to the public? Yes, it does. Everyone is a potential employee. Everyone is a potential customer. Any company with a representative workforce has something of which to be proud.

The purpose of employment equity legislation is to ensure that all Canadians, particularly victims of past discrimination, can stand proud and confident that in Canada people are hired and promoted according to only one criterion, the ability to do the job.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I also want to join in this debate on Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. I think we should ask ourselves why the Government has chosen to bring in closure on this particular piece of legislation. This is the fifth occasion, I believe, that the Government has brought in closure on a piece of legislation which it has deemed to be important to all Canadians. Why, then, the rush? Why does the Government want to choke off debate on this particular subject matter? Why the hurry, Mr. Speaker? Would it have to do with the contents of Bill C-62?

If we examine Bill C-62 we see that the phrase "designated groups" means women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who belong to a visible minority. That is what the Bill directs itself to. I believe, as the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) indicated, that it is an important piece of legislation, but when we look at the substance of the Bill, the four and a half pages—two and a half of which are legalese which is included in every piece of legislation which comes before Parliament—we see, perhaps, a page and a half which somehow addresses itself to the issue of employment equity. The Bill does not address the issues affecting those individuals and those groups of whom I have made mention; women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and visible minorities. The Government is bringing in closure on this Bill for the simple reason, I suggest, that it has very little to offer women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities or, indeed, individuals who belong to visible minority groups. The Bill is totally lacking in substance and in enforcement procedure to ensure that equality is brought to bear in the workplace. Clause 7 of Bill C-62 reads, and I quote:

> The Minister shall in each year prepare a consolidation of the reports received in that year under section 5 and shall, as soon as possible thereafter but not later than the end of that year, cause the consolidation, . . . to be laid before each House of Parliament.

We are going to have to wait until after the next federal election—which is 31 months from now—before reports are tabled with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Then we have to wait for the end of the calendar year before the Minister tables her reports. That is a considerable length of time. The Government promised the Canadian people that if it was elected it would take strong initiatives in order to see that employment equity was brought to the workplace. It is certainly not living up to its election promises, nor is it living up to the comments made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration that this subject matter in itself is important. It will take 31 months before companies in this country submit their reports to the federal Minister, and thereafter we will have to wait until the end of the calendar year before they are tabled before Parliament.

What about an enforcement agency for breaches of this particular piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker? What about the sanctions for not complying with the legislation? Where are the standards? Where do we want to be on June 1, 1988, with respect to the provisions of this Bill? Has there been any statement of any goals or objectives set out by the Minister involved? There has been nothing. All we have is two or three pieces of paper about a subject matter which is important to all Canadians. The Government says it is concerned—as Clause 2 states—"to achieve equality in the workplace". But it takes more than pious statements by Ministers or Members of Parliament to achieve the goal of equality in the workplace. And sometimes measures may have to be taken, unfortunate as it may be, to call to task certain corporations and individuals with respect to seeing that equality is restored to the workplace. However, this Bill says nothing. It gives women, native people, the disabled and visible minorities nothing. These people may have to wait for 31 months and longer before Parliament will see the reports. In other words, the wrongs will not be righted by this legislation. These wrongs will continue and there will be no check for more than 31 months.

I had hoped Government Members would be a little more forthcoming in setting out the goals and objectives to be reached at the end of 31 months, but they have not been. I had hoped that the Government would provide clear and unequivocal sanctions in the Bill for those who breached its provisions in the workplace. That has not been the case. Then, to add insult to injury, the Government is using the guillotine, as Members opposite often referred to it when they were in opposition, to cut off debate on this very important matter. That is a shameful thing for a Government elected by the Canadian people en masse on the promise, among others, of substantive changes regarding equality in the workplace.

What do we have to show for it? A smoke and mirrors campaign by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister of Canada. That is not what Canadians need. That is why groups from coast to coast have denounced the substance of this legislation. Surely in 1985 women, native people, the disabled and visible minorities have legal rights. Surely we, as Members of Parliament, have to give them our support in making sure that those rights are observed and that equality is brought to the workplace.

In closing, I suggest that this Bill ought to be withdrawn by the Government and replaced with legislation with substance, sanctions, enforcement ability and time restrictions on compliance.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-62, and in particular on our motion for a six-month delay on second reading. It is strange for an NDP Member to be asking that the Government and Parliament not deal with this Bill immediately. We have been prodding the Government to bring in employment equity legislation for a very long time. However, the sad fact is that this legislation is totally inadequate and we do not want to see it pass. We will be voting against it because of its very serious inadequacies. We would like the Government to spend the next six months in taking a real hard look at the problem and then come back with some legislative proposals adequate to meet the needs of Canadians who suffer discrimination in the workplace, Canadians who are disadvantaged and who expect some action on the problem by the Government.

One thing the Government could do in the next six months is look at the Abella Report entitled Equality in Employment. It has a substantial list of recommendations on dealing with the employment discrimination that women, visible minorities, native persons and the disabled experience in Canada. In the section dealing with voluntary versus mandatory measures, which is absolutely crucial because it is the lack of mandatory measures which make this Bill unfit to be passed, it says:

> Voluntary employment equity means that employers are encouraged, rather than required, to adopt measures intended to rectify employment inequities. There is no provision for an enforcement component. A voluntary program with a mandatory reporting requirement is nonetheless voluntary in the absence of a requirement to remedy the discriminatory practices disclosed by the information reported.

That is what we have here. We have procedures which will mean companies will be reporting information which could be entirely revealing of inadequacies, ongoing discrimination, and the lack of measures to deal with that. That would not cut them off at all. The report goes on:

> A requirement of public reporting may result in public pressure on a company to revise its systems but it is unrealistic to rely on public opinion as an effective monitoring agent. It results in a speculative and scattered approach and creates the perception, in the absence of enforcement, that the issue is deserving of only casual attention.

Casual attention is precisely what we do not want. Studies have all too amply documented the extent of discrimination, low wages and salaries, of these target groups; the very high percentage of unemployment among disabled and native people; the concentration of women in ghettoized sectors of the economy without opportunities for job advancement. In the case of women, they have plenty of qualifications. Often they are over-qualified for the job, but there is still systemic discrimination and the measures in this Bill simply do not deal with that. The report goes on:

> Voluntary programs of various kinds on behalf of women were attempted in Canada after the Royal Commission on the Status of Women reported in 1970. Certain of these programs were revitalized and expanded, at least in the public sector in and after 1975, International Women's Year. Voluntary programs in the federal government have had little impact on the composition of the public sector workforce.

It is shameful to see the low proportion of women in these jobs and, of course, the heavy concentration in the lower paying, dead-end jobs which do not lead to promotion.

Let me refer also to the observations of the Urban Alliance on Racial Relations which presented a very excellent brief on this subject. This organization deals with visible minorities and has conducted studies on the extent of discrimination that they experience, and I think it has some very wise advice for the Government. It points out that the Government has not announced requirements for departmental affirmative action plans, the goals and timetables for increasing the representation of these target groups. It does not say whether, when and in what form government Departments will report publicly on their progress or what sanctions will be imposed by Treasury Board on Departments which do not make progress towards equality. All of this, unfortunately, is true. This legislation is seriously lacking in this area.

The initiative regarding equal pay for work of equal value is long overdue. The Government has been bound by the Canadian Human Rights Act which requires this, but there is no timetable for implementation and no indication of the amount of money set aside to equalize women's pay. This remains a vain hope, an ideal somewhere off in the sky, but there are no realistic measures and penalties for failure to comply. Treasury Board has been responsible for affirmative action in the Government of Canada for some years now and women have little to show for it. Goals set for increasing women's representation have been very low and they have only been set for management positions where women are largely excluded. Target groups have no reason to consider Treasury Board a credible agency in the affirmative action field. They have been told about what they are lacking for a long time. There has been extensive lobbying and Treasury Board has been on the other side when groups representing workers are negotiating a better situation for women. Treasury Board does not want to see classification changed. It imposes artificial limitations on opportunities for women's promotion and advancement.

The Government of Canada has announced that Crown corporations will be required to have affirmative action plans and report to Treasury Board. Some Crown corporations will be required to report publicly. However, the Government has not announced the requirements for these affirmative action plans. It has not announced goals and timetables for achieving appropriate representation of the four target groups. There are no sanctions to be applied to Crown corporations if they do not produce results.

We know how bad Crown corporations have been. I personally have been lobbying the CBC since 1974. Its record is abysmal in hiring and promoting women into the creative production and managerial positions. This is typical of the backwardness of our Crown corporations. Crown corporations which fall under the legislation governing federally-regulated businesses will not have to begin to report their workforce data for three years. Why should there be this kind of delay? Why should we not be moving into mandatory affirmative action promptly? They have had plenty of time. The Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada reported in 1970. One of the recommendations was that each Crown corporation have a plan for the implementation of the recommendations of the Royal Commission's report. For 16 years they have known that the people of Canada expect some action toward employment equity. For 16 years they have been stalling, and we now have legislation before us which would give them another three years to stall.

Contracts give the Government of Canada a major opportunity to have some impact. Billions of dollars a year are spent on Government contracts for goods and services across the country. This is a carrot which could be used to encourage corporations doing business with the Government to clean up their acts. Instead, we have a very weak approach which includes only the major corporations, and under very weak provisions at that. This is an opportunity to involve the medium-sized and even small businesses which want Government business. For them the government contracts would be a decided incentive to clean up their acts and introduce employment equity.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I will just point out that the legislation is woefully inadequate. We cannot support it. We call on the Government to take a good, hard look at it and to do justice for women, disabled persons, native persons and visible minorities. It is about time that we had some good, hard adequate legislation with timetables, goals, and mechanisms for enforcement in order to create a situation where people have a fair chance in the workforce.

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, not only do I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-62, I feel that as a woman, and especially as the Minister for Youth, I have a duty to do so because, Mr. Speaker, it is essential to get back to a subject that is very important to us, who belong to a highly industrialized world and claim to live in a modern and progressive society.

I think everyone will readily admit that high principles and noble ideals do not readily become a living part of our culture, and that it is easy to forget the principles of justice, equality and equity, and even the idea of long term benefits.

That is why Governments must intervene to keep individual aspirations from infringeing on the rights of the community. And that is what led to the creation, in June 1983, of the Royal Commission on Equality and Employment. In October 1984, the Commission's report was submitted by the chairman of the Commission, Judge Rosalie Abella.

I shall, if I may, read a passage from the report. It is taken from Chapter 6 and concerns instruments of implementation. We read: It would also be expected that employers would set annual internal objectives but these would not be required by statute.

This recommendation from the Abella report brings us straight to the core of Bill C-62, which is now at the second reading stage. Clause 4 of the Bill establishes the employer's duty, in two respects:

To eliminate employment practices not otherwise authorized by law that result in employment barriers, and to institute policies and practices to ensure that the persons concerned achieve equitable representation.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that Bill C-62 does not provide any penalties for employers who fail to observe the letter and the intent of the legislation. Some see this as a serious shortcoming. However, those who do can hardly have spent much time reading and examining the Bill before the House today.

Although the Bill does not contain any provisions that make achieving tangible and concrete results compulsory, that is not the case with the submission of reports. Indeed, Clause 6 tells us that an employer who fails to meet his obligation to produce the report prescribed in Clause 5 is liable to a fine of up to $50,000.

I do not know many companies that would want to be fined $50,000. Nor do I know any that would work very hard at submitting statistics that failed to reflect the true situation in their establishments.

So this particular provision of the Bill indicates the Government is firmly resolved to make federally-regulated businesses eliminate discriminatory employment methods and practices and substitute therefor such measures and practices that are likely to guarantee target group members that the principle of equity in recruitment, promotion and remuneration will be observed. It is this provision that will provide justice for women, native peoples, the handicapped and members of visible minorities, who have been left out of the labour market for too long. And that same provision will also provide a measure of justice for those who are being doubly discriminated against. I am referring to young women, young native people, young handicapped persons and young members of visible minorities.

People who think that getting a job right away is the sole concern of young people today do not know much about what young people are thinking nowadays. Today, they are thinking about post-secondary education, the environment, culture, and the practical job experience they can get while they are still at school. I think that as a result of these measures, they can expect to find jobs when the time comes, even if they belong to groups that usually have even more trouble finding employment.

[English]

Employment, Mr. Speaker, is not the only thing that preoccupies young people today. They want to talk about post-secondary education, the environment, the cultural aspects of life, peace, and pre-employment practical experience. Above all, Mr. Speaker, they want to talk about participation in the life of the country and the decision-making process of the country. They all want to be part of society in general. More than any others, the young women, the handicapped young people and the aboriginal young people find this difficult. It is through a Bill like C-62 that we will be able to achieve that for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in our present situation, anyone who thinks that young people, and I realize I am repeating myself, see today's job as their sole concern is really oversimplifying the problem. It is with legislation like this Bill that over time, the advancement of women and all other minorities, all members of these target groups, will make enormous strides. As far as I am concerned, a vote against this Bill is a vote against the youth of this country. It is a vote against women, young native people, young handicapped persons and against all visible minorities, and I cannot imagine how anyone in this House could be against the advancement of those who in ten or fifteen years will be the leaders of this country. If we do not take them seriously today, we deserve to get the same treatment when, in a few years' time, they will be sitting where we are now.

I therefore ask all Members of this House . . . I think we must, all of us together, take this important step towards equity, towards justice for young people and the other groups.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the speech of the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). You cannot help but feel sympathy for some of the things she expresses, concerns not only of hers but concerns of the overwhelming majority of people in the country. I listened also to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) who spoke about the need to proceed with this legislation because it was a step forward. Yet you have to stop and ask yourself, is it a step forward when you put in legislation and write into law something that you cannot enforce? Is that a step forward when you write a law that has absolutely no enforcement mechanism within it?

If we were to treat other sectors, other problems in society in the same way, we would have chaos. It is entirely possible now for companies and organizations operating in Canada to do all of the things that this Bill now requires, yet they do not. What therefore leads us to believe that as a result of having an unenforcible law companies will suddenly rush to comply with it? This is confusing to many people who view the Government's action and makes it aggravating for many of us who, for years—and I am not speaking just of opposition Members—have been arguing in some cases for what is now called employment equity but which in years gone by took on a variety of different names. We have all argued that discrimination in the workplace should cease.

When I listened to Government Members speak about a step forward, why did they not simply write a letter to everybody and tell people it is the desire of the Government that companies should do this thing and if they do, that would be nice and if they do not, do not worry about it?

Mr. Lewis: It takes too long by mail.

Mr. Deans: If it does take too long by mail as the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) says, that is the Government's problem too, is it not, Mr. Speaker? Do not foist that on us. A year and a half has gone by and there is still no action.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is sending out yet another signal identical to the signal sent out year after year after year. Surely to God we do not think that somehow or other, by virtue of the passage of this piece of legislation all of those people, who until now have refused to comply with what is reasonable and fair in our society, are suddenly going to start complying.

Does the Government truly believe that those individuals who have refused to maintain in their place of work safety standards sufficient to protect their employees will voluntarily introduce employment equity? Does the Government believe that those who have traditionally relied on women and paid them low, substandard wages will certainly alter their view of life, because we think it is a good idea, and will establish without any kind of enforcement mechanism a change in the practices pursued throughout their entire business careers?

I find it incredible that Government Members would rise one after another and attempt to leave the impression that the end result of this legislation will be a change in the attitude of Canadian employers, and that, as a result of our having nodded yes, we need to have employment equity, companies will rush to institute it. If they do not, we are going to be very disappointed, are we not, Mr. Speaker? We will be very disappointed if companies do not comply, but if they do not, there is nothing we can do because there is nothing in the Bill that will allow us to take any action to require compliance with what each and every Member of this Chamber, I hope, believes is necessary in a modern society.

I want to deal primarily with the problems of women. Time does not allow me to go into details on the other areas, those of visible minorities or the natives. We all know that the report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian society called Equality Now set out clearly what the problems were and set out the need for action by the Parliament of Canada to require compliance with fairness and equity. But did we see a great rush of people dashing forward to implement the recommendations voluntarily? No, we did not. What did we get, Mr. Speaker? We got the Abella Report. Judge Abella in her equality and employment report says that we should require, not ask, not cajole, all federally regulated employers in both the public and the private sector to implement what she calls employment equity, which for years was called affirmative action. We have seen the groundwork laid. There were countless other reports over the last decade and beyond dealing with it. Did anyone rush forward after Judge Abella's Report was tabled and immediately begin to implement policies in the federally regulated private and public sectors voluntarily? No, Mr. Speaker.

Are we thinking that because we pass a toothless law everyone will rush forward to comply? Would you put in a speed limit without some kind of penalty for breaking it, Mr. Speaker? Of course not. Would you allow people to pollute our drinking water without some penalty for having polluted it? I should not have asked that question because the Government might in fact do so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: As I think about it now, that was not a very good analogy to draw. Let me assume goodwill if nothing else.

In this Bill we have something that goes to the very fundamental principles of society, equality for people, regardless of sex, regardless of background. We say to people at this late stage in the middle 1980s, "We are going to write a little law, if you want to live up to it, fine, and if you do not, do not worry about it because there is nothing we can do about it. We will be mad at you and if we are really mad, you will have to suffer the consequences of our annoyance." That is the extent of it and that is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. That is why we say that this is not a step forward. It may even be a step backward. It is entirely possible that by virtue of the introduction and passage of this legislation complacency will become rampant in the country, if you can imagine rampant complacency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: That tells you something about it.

Mr. Riis: Rampant complacency is not any different from progressive conservatism.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: As my colleague says, rampant complacency is not any different from progressive conservatism.

When dealing with the question of women in society, why do we need to have a law with some kind of enforcement mechanism in it? We need it because the average earnings of women in the paid workforce are 60 per cent of the average earnings of men, notwithstanding the fact that for years people have said there should be equality in the pay of those doing similar kinds of work. Women workers are still confined to most of the job ghettos. Three out of five work in clerical, sales or service occupations.

• (1230)

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that computer technology is invading the area in which women used to work, so they are not getting a chance at those jobs. At present, 52 per cent of Canadian women work outside the house, 42 per cent of families headed by women have incomes below the poverty line, and 62 per cent of elderly women live below the poverty line. By the end of the century, women's labour force participation rate is expected to be equal to that of men.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker; I am just winding up. During the last 10 years, the average unemployment rate of women was 9 per cent, while it was just over 7 per cent for men.

I make these points in order to reinforce what I am trying to say. We have known of these things for years. The discrepancies and discrimination have existed for years. People have written about it. There have been reports about it. There have been requests and requirements for years. However, there has never been a law with teeth in it. Now we have yet another toothless law. I say to the Government that we are opposed to it because we frankly believe that it will set back the cause of equality in the workplace rather than enhance it.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is both a duty and a pleasure to rise again on a matter of considerable interest to the Conservative Party, Bill C-62 on employment equity which I unreservedly champion. I regret that our Canadian parliamentary system is such that, as a result of the will and directives of their Party, Members of the Opposition—and particularly my female colleagues on the other side—cannot endorse this measure. What a shame!

While I would not for a moment entertain the thought that the principles of those Members who are against the measures advocated with respect to the designated groups might in any way spring from theories which had wide currency in Europe in the 1930s, I can only conclude that the position taken by some opponents of our propositions is likely to debase our country's reputation in terms of respect for all Canadian men and women, especially those who belong to the designated groups: visible minorities, persons with disabilities, aboriginal peoples, women. Canada is made up of immigrants from every corner of the world, and a stroll along the streets of any major Canadian city will bear witness to that. People of all races, colours and cultures can be seen every day.

As to persons with disabilities, examples abound, for they are active in all circles and all spheres of society, and public transportation, access roads to buildings and city sidewalks have been designed to meet their needs. A number of companies have rolled out the welcome carpet for disabled people, a reliable source of qualified, assiduous and devoted employees.

As to aboriginal peoples, their presence in our major northern cities is ever more apparent, and companies which develop our natural resources increasingly look to them as a pool of skilled workers.

Another of the main designated groups whose sheer numbers give it preponderance—women. A lot of ground has been covered since the first women's groups took position at the turn of the century and, as a result of changing economic needs and new trends in social values, a great many women have sought to enter or re-enter the labour market.

As I have just shown, Mr. Speaker, Canada is a welcoming land, a land of warm hospitality and great diversity, a country where a foreigner wants to sink his or her roots and where peace and justice prevail. How justice has become a trite concept! Some people claim that any man or woman is entitled to possess all the wordly goods he or she can afford to buy and that we all have equal opportunities to better our own lot. Others maintain that we are all entitled to the same standard of living and that our overall wealth should be equally divided among us all.

Were we to adopt that approach we would run the risk of opening ever unresolved debates which could only prop up the cause of those who prefer to stand pat rather than forge ahead.

Unlike previous Governments we have faced the facts and taken constructive measures.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party admits that the designated groups I mentioned are victims of discrimination in employment. The Progressive Conservative Party acknowledges that, however numerous they may be in this country, members of visible minorities are denied employment equity because of the colour of their skin. We know that. The Progressive Conservative Party agrees that, despite some progress, the professional potential of the disabled is shamefully exploited and that a good many of them simply cannot claim their rightful place in the labour force.

We have acknowledged the fact that, while an increasing number of native people live and work in northern centres, they still have a disastrous unemployment rate and very little access to the labour market. We have recognized that, while women have recently seemed to be better appreciated on the labour market, their wages are still less than one third those paid to men and they are still mostly confined to so-called traditional occupations in three sectors, namely sales, services and teaching.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has recognized these facts and taken concrete action to rectify the situation. Following the recommendations of the Abella Report, this Government has introduced Bill C-62 to provide employment equity to women, the native people, the handicapped and the members of visible minorities and give them the same rights as other citizens for recruitment, promotion and salaries.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that we have proven our case. The arguments against this Bill have simply melted away. There is no basis to the suggestions that passage of this Bill will entail considerable expenses.

On the one hand, the amounts that the Government will have to spend in this regard are minimal. On the other hand, the cost to businesses will be quite reasonable and indeed insignificant when compared with the enormous benefits which will be gained by employers in acquiring an enthusiastic, assiduous, quick, faithful and competent manpower.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that we have proven our case. The Government has recognized the facts and taken action. Parliament must do the same. It must accept the facts and pass without further delay the Bill now under consideration which will enshrine in our statutes the principle of employment equity.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I remember that, in 1976, I was working for a large company, Esso Imperial, in the comfort centre department, and after going up through the ranks, I had attained a level where I was blocking the promotion opportunities of my colleagues.

An Hon. Member: Such was the climate at the time.

Mrs. Bourgault: One day, I was called to the director's office, where I was told: "Mrs. Bourgault, we have to transfer you and offer you a position in Don Mills, Ontario, because you cannot be appointed to a management position." I asked why and the reply was: "Because you are a woman and the company finds it difficult to recognize that a woman could be manager of the heating system installation department." Ten years after this, we are still discussing employment equity. We are not about to forget the work of all the women who, for a hundred years, have been making every effort to attain their rightful place in this country and make people recognize that their work and education are just as good as those of their male colleagues.

When your parents pay for your university studies, Mr. Speaker, the fact that you are a woman makes no difference. The fees are the same as for a man. It costs the same.

You pay the same for your lodgings and studies. Why is it that you cannot get the same wages after joining the labour market? This is a problem which must be addressed and our Government has recognized it. Bill C-62 attempts—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw that word—aims at solving this problem.

• (1240)

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention to the remarks made by the Hon. Member who has just resumed her seat, and I can tell her that her promotion at Esso's, on the basis of the arguments she has put forward ... she should not think that she was refused a promotion because of her sex.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has suggested that she feels it is unfortunate that the Parliamentary system does not allow us to vote in favour of this Bill. I understand that she is a newcomer to the House and that, being part of this Government, she has never had the opportunity to vote freely or according to her choice. I want nevertheless to inform her, Mr. Speaker, that she has the right to vote according to her conscience like all other Members of this House, and that if the Conservative Party has not told her so yet, I urge her to consult our Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has told us just how everything is fine and dandy in this best of all possible worlds, she has mentioned the case of the handicapped whom she sees as perfectly integrated everywhere in the labour force. Either the Hon. Member is living in a world of make-believe, Mr. Speaker, or she does not understand the reality and problems of people afflicted with a physical or mental handicap. Mr. Speaker, she mentioned the native people who were so active in the major urban centres of the North. Has she ever been to the North, Mr. Speaker? In the North, major urban centres just do not exist, Mr. Speaker. If she has visited all parts of Canada, all she has to do is to check the statistical data concerning the under-employment of native people and she will realize that the preamble to her remark was completely wrong. Mr. Speaker, she insisted that the Progressive Conservative Party is aware of the problem. Then she said that the Progressive Conservative Party is aware of the problem experienced by the handicapped, the visible minorities, the native people, and finally Canadian women. Her conclusion: it is so very much aware of it that it has decided to push through Bill C-62. But let us try to answer one question, Mr. Speaker: Is there anything in this Bill which would have solved the problem experienced by my hon. friend at the time she was working for Esso? There is nothing, because the Esso Company would have had no obligation under this Bill. She has said that the case is closed, but I feel that the advocates were quite poor, Mr. Speaker. If the case of women, the handicapped, the visible minorities and the native people has been heard by the Government, I do not understand its decision to introduce such a weak Bill as this.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 is only wishful thinking on the part of the Government. You know as I do that there is nothing in this Bill to force anybody to do anything, except table a report, and not in every case, only a number of companies with contracts amounting to $200,000 or more; yet, small- and medium-sized businesses which have provided the bulk of jobs over the past ten years are automatically excluded by this $200,000 restriction. Where does the Hon. Member think she will have any influence with her worthless bill? How could she go through the mental exercise of reading the Abella Report and then feel that this was an adequate response? I am sure that if she has read the Abella Report, she must have seen that mandatory measures and a strong mechanism were required to make employment equity a reality and not just wishful thinking, Mr. Speaker. This is what was called for in the Abella Report. The report called for the establishment of a specialized agency to ensure that actual, everyday equality be implemented. Where is that agency in Bill C-62? It is nowhere to be found. This means nobody will be there to enforce those great principles which Government Members are so self-righteously bragging about.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill could have been replaced by an ad in the papers. The impact would have been the same. Nothing at all has been gained with our wasting the time of the House when all we want is to urge to action, to gently tap employers on the back and tell them to go ahead. But there is nothing, no teeth in that legislation. What kind of Government is this? Have they got any backbone? If they have identified the problem, where are the solutions? Certainly not in that flaccid Bill they are putting forward. And worse still, Mr. Speaker, listen to the kind of speeches we have been hearing since this morning. They would have the people believe that starting from now, there is no longer any problem, that those groups will be considered on an equal footing. The Hon. Member will go back to her constituency and tell women: "Do not worry, we now have as many opportunities as everyone else". Not with that Bill, Mr. Speaker. She should go back to the drawing board and reconsider her Bill. I hope the Conservative Members will not have the gall to tell the handicaped in their constituencies that this House has passed a bill that will bring them tremendous benefits, for they will be very disappointed, because this has no real-life meaning for them.

I hope the Government Members will not lie to the natives by telling them that from now on they will have as many opportunies as everybody else to make it on the labour market. Actually, this is not the case. The Bill only contains the pious wishes of a cowardly and spineless Government.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill was analysed by Lise Bissonnette, a well-known journalist, and her conclusion is that this legislation is only symbolic. She says that it simply proposes a disguised optional program. Mr. Speaker, why does the Government take the trouble to have this Bill passed if it will then misrepresent the situation to the groups involved? I trust that the Hon. Member will look at her own conscience and rise freely to say: "This is not good enough." Her personal experience with Esso will show her that this Bill will do absolutely nothing for her. Since she does not want other women to suffer the same humiliation as she did, she will go to the Minister responsible and tell her: "Your Bill does not respond to the needs of real life." At least, I hope that she will do so. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary, who has a lot more influence than any of us on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), is listening and taking notes and that he will recommend to his Minister that some teeth be put into this Bill.

The Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) tried to suggest that this legislation will do a lot for young people. There is as much in this for youth as she had in her Youth Year and as she will have under her own portfolio after January 1. In other words, there is absolutely nothing for young people in this Bill. I do not understand how she can have the audacity to rise today and pretend that there is.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that, after looking at this Bill, all the Members of this House and the groups concerned will be able to see that the Government is simply being wishful while its cowardice is very obvious.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the brief 10 minutes available to me, I would like to remind Hon. Members of the situation that faces women in the workforce or women who are trying to get into the workforce. Then I would like to take another look at this Bill, not so much from the point of view of criticizing it, because that has been done repeatedly, but I would like to put forward in a positive way the kinds of things we would like to have seen in the Bill and the kind of things we hope will still be considered.

Earlier my colleague referred to some of the statistics that apply to women in the workforce. It is now almost a cliché that women earn 60 per cent of the average wages of men. We know that 42 per cent of women family heads are poor, and this figure is increasing every week. We also know that the traditional family, the one to which we refer when we speak about family allowances—the one in which the father works, the mother is at home doing the dishes and there are two lovely children—is almost a myth in society. In fact, 52 per cent of women now work outside the home as well as in the home and 66 per cent of the workforce is at this time composed of women.

We could look ahead to the year 2000 by following the trends. We would see an even greater increase in the direction of women carrying full responsibility in the workforce. By the year 2000, two out of three of the new entrants into the workforce will be women. Yet the unemployment rate for women is higher. Let us keep in mind that the figure we now have is a very conservative one because many women who would like to work do not register with the unemployment office. Over the last 10 years, the unemployment rate for women was 9 per cent and for men it was 7.6 per cent.

I believe we can find a very startling statistic if we look at the month of September. We heard from Government Members how many new jobs were created in September. Looking at the Statistics Canada figures very closely, we see that full-time jobs went down by 24,000 and most of those were jobs which traditionally employ women. On the other hand, there were 47,000 more part-time jobs. Most of the part-time jobs were for women. Here again there is a trend of women being forced into part-time work. Do not try to tell me that this is because they choose part-time work. It is because they do not have much choice, and in fact many of the largest companies in the federal jurisdiction, and the airlines in particular, are deliberately trying to force workers, most of whom are women, into part-time contract jobs.

The situation is bad and we had hoped that this Bill would deal with fairness within the workforce for the women who are now working. We had also hoped, of course, that there would be much more emphasis on full-time job creation, not part-time job creation, for women. We had hoped that there would be jobs with equal pay for work of equal value and jobs with equal opportunity for advancement for women.

It is very important that we look at employment equity within the federal job-creation programs. We have been told by this Government and by the former Liberal Government that employment equity is implicit in the federal job-creation programs. However, only 20 per cent of the people who benefited from the old NEED program were women. Only 13 per cent of those who benefited from the old Canada Works program were women and only 38 per cent of those who benefited from the LEAP program were women. I am going to be looking very carefully at the figures for the new job-creation programs to see what happens.

Only 5 per cent of the people going into apprenticeship programs in 1981 were women. Only .5 per cent of the workers in non-traditional jobs were women. We can see that women are still stuck in the old job ghettos consisting of jobs that are being fast affected by technological change. These jobs include clerical, sales and service jobs, three out of five of which employ women. Very few women are entering non-traditional jobs or getting training for those jobs.

Let us look at management. Affirmative action and employment equity is supposed to be targeted at getting more women and minority groups to move up the scale. They are targeted at not only getting women into the jobs and into decent-paying jobs but at giving women an opportunity to advance. Members of Parliament should be ashamed of the fact that in the Public Service on which we have a direct impact, only 6 per cent of management jobs are held by women. yet 80 per cent of those who hold administrative or clerical jobs and the like are women. This is really intolerable when for years we have been talking about affirmative action in the Public Service. It just goes to show that even though it is now called employment equity and not affirmative action, voluntary programs do not work.

Ever since I have been in the House, and that is getting on to seven years now, the Government has said that voluntary affirmative action will work. It does not even work in the public sector on which we have a direct impact and for which there are unions as well. Let us not be naive about this.

We feel that this Bill should include more provisions and we hope that the Government will seriously consider withdrawing this Bill in order to make major changes to it. If we are to have employment equity or affirmative action, whichever name we want to call it, and if it is going to work, we believe very strongly, as do the authorities in this field, that there must be one central agency that is in charge of enforcement and the establishment of standards.

In the federal jurisdiction, there are four different areas to consider: federal Departments, Crown corporations, contractors and federally-regulated businesses. These are the four areas on which we should have direct impact in imposing employment equity. As well, unions should be involved in the planning of employment equity at all stages. That is another thing that has been forgotten in this Bill.

As my colleagues have said repeatedly, if we are to have employment equity programs that will achieve true equality in the workforce, we have to have a mandatory program and not a voluntary one. We have to have a program the goals of which are clearly defined and established, and there has to be a program with timetables for achieving a greater participation of women and minorities in each job situation.

An enforcement agency must be able to receive, analyse and publicize employer' workforce data. There is a fair bit in this Bill about reporting requirements. Perhaps the Bill is not so bad from the standpoint of reporting, but if that is all we are going to require, then we should forget it. We should simply do a reasearch project.

We feel that there must be a way of imposing program requirements and penalties on employers who do not comply with the expected established targets and timetables. There must be penalties but there are none provided for in this Bill. The Bill does provide a slight penalty for not keeping records, but nothing beyond that.

We feel that there must be a way of investigating the programs, practices and data systems of employers so that reporting is not simply left to the initiative of the employers. There also must be a real channel for complaints or court action. We do not feel it is good enough that individual workers, most of whom are women, have to go case-by-case to take a complaint to the Human Rights Commission. Every single employer in the federal jurisdiction should provide equal pay for work of equal value. This should not even be questioned and there should be no need for complaints. We should make a systemic change in that direction.

We feel that there must be contract compliance and that this is not defined clearly enough in the Bill. Contract compliance must be imposed on all Government contractors with over 50 employees and $200,000 worth of Government contracts per year. Contractors must also provide equal pay for work of equal value.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

THE ECONOMY

REOPENING OF MINE—IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of New Brunswick are concerned about the federal Government's intention to subsidize the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine in the Yukon Territory.

According to several observers, this reopening of the mine would result in a reduction of the prices of lead and zinc, making several other Canadian mines hardly profitable.

In my province, the Brunswick mine, in Bathurst, could not stand a new price reduction of its minerals. Its profit margin was considerably cut as a result of the low prices of the past few years. The reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine would be catastrophic.

Another example is the Heath Steele mine, in Newcastle, which was closed two years ago because of a glut of zinc and lead on the market. If prices continue to go down, its chances of resuming operation are non-existent.

Mr. Speaker, I am not against the principle of creating jobs in the North, but knowing that the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine would result in other Canadian mines being less profitable, the Government should know that the second consequence of this reopening would be a major loss of jobs in New Brunswick and elsewhere.

How could the Government justify using federal funds to create jobs in one area, when it is aware that this decision could result in jobs being lost in another elsewhere in this country?

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Pacific Railway recently notified its pensioners of its intention to withdraw their travel privileges. Improvements to the medical plan, of little use in some provinces, were offered to the pensioners as a saw-off.

Unfortunately pensioners were never consulted on whether or not they wanted this change. Many of them have complained to me and to other Members of Parliament about this unilateral change to their retirement benefits. Pensioners feel, quite legitimately, that they are being deprived of a benefit they earned during their working lives.

Clearly, it is not satisfactory that a company make such a unilateral change. Regulations should limit companies in making retroactive changes to the benefits of retired workers. CP Rail should reconsider these insensitive changes.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROSTITUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government passed Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution).

Such important changes clearly show Canadians that our Government is carrying on with its job of dealing out the correctives needed by our society.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the objections raised by the Liberals and New Democrats, the incidence of prostitution will be reduced thanks to the Conservatives.

We have seen no demonstrations organized by the Opposition on Parliament Hill like the ones they had with respect to family allowances and old age security pensions.

Mr. Speaker, when it is a matter of cleansing the morals of people, why is the Opposition not gathering our virtuous mothers or our respected older citizens together in support of the Government in its relentless task of eradicating prostitution?

When it comes to dealing with problems of moral depravation, the Opposition outcry is no longer heard.

We have been elected to bring about those changes. Mr. Speaker, as a Government we assume our responsibilities. A word to the wise is enough.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TOBACCO GROWERS

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, approximately 80 farm families in my constituency of Cardigan, Prince Edward Island, grow tobacco. With declining demand for tobacco, an orderly reduction in production capacity is necessary in order to prevent damaging repercussions to growers. The P.E.I. industry supports the reduction plan and feels that each province should share proportionately in relation to its production.

In order to avoid financial disaster, and to aid growers who must find new means of earning a livelihood, financial assistance from Ottawa is necessary. Compensation to producers for loss of productive capacity must be in direct proportion to their contribution to the generation of tax dollars from production.

The Government must also establish a mechanism with producer-provinces to pay out compensation. The P.E.I. industry has proposed that each province's share of compensation be based on a five-year average of domestic production. In this way Ontario would receive 83.4 per cent; Quebec, 10.3 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 4.9 per cent; and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 1.5 per cent. I would urge the Government to act quickly to help all of Canada's producers through a difficult period of adjustment, in a fair and equitable manner.

IMMIGRATION

AUTHORIZATION SOUGHT BY MR. FRED DARVIN TO LIVE IN CANADA

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of this House to the case of a Second World War veteran, Mr. Fred Darvin, who is 70 years old and who wishes to spend the rest of his life in Canada.

Mr. Darvin moved to the United States after the war because he had found a job in Detroit. He raised his family in Florida as his two sons, who died at the ages of 21 and 17 respectively, both suffered from muscular dystrophy. Now that Mr. Darvin is 70 years old, he wants to come back to Canada and the Immigration officers are calling into play the rule stating that anyone likely to be a burden on Canadian medical services can be rejected.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Darvin fought for Canada during the Second World War and he should be admitted in this country today. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) has even urged his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), to accept Mr. Darvin on humanitarian gounds. I sincerely believe that, if it is true that Canada is a welcoming and fair country, Mr. Darvin should be admitted immediately without further bureaucratic delays.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REPORTED USE OF AGENTS PROVOCATEURS BY GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last June an Air-India Jet originating in Canada crashed off the coast of Ireland with the loss of 329 lives. Since that time the entire Sikh community of Canada has been under a cloud of suspicion and innuendo with the suggestion that some of its people were responsible for the crash. Federal investigation encouraged this suspicion when police raided the Sikh Temple at Duncan, British Columbia, violating their sacred space, even though the police found nothing to take.

A story in today's Globe and Mail now claims the Government of India has been using agents provocateurs to destabilize the entire Sikh community. People posing as religious fanatics have worked to discredit all members of the Sikh faith who have advocated an independent homeland in the Punjab. These very serious charges require clarification by federal authorities.

The Sikh people have the right to be protected by the Canadian Government. We cannot stand by if, as the article claims, a legitimate religious community within Canada is being destablized and placed under a cloud of suspicion by agents of a foreign Government. If the article lacks substance, the Government should indicate so. However, if there is substance to the Globe and Mail story, Canada must protest in the strongest terms to the Government of India about this violation of Canadian rights and freedoms.

WOMEN

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): For several months now, a group of women have been trying very hard to make the headlines by speaking through their hats on very serious women's issues, despite the fact that in the past eighteen months this Government has made serious commitments on the status of women, as evidenced by the following initiatives:

—The extension of the spouse's eligibility to a pension—close to 85,000 widows and widowers will benefit from that;

—The elimination of discrimination in the Indian Act. Sex discrimination from now on will be prohibited—some 60,000 women will be affected by that amendment;

—Better employment and training opportunities under the Employment Planning Programs;

—The introduction of a new divorce bill with provisions for the enforcement of custody and maintenance orders, and we are now today discussing Bill C-62 on employment equality.

Mr. Speaker, this is but a brief survey of the many initiatives undertaken by this Government to establish equal opportunities for all women. Mr. Speaker, the women in that group are speaking more on their own behalf, and their narrowmindedness and ideology will result in the status of Canadian women being pushed back 15 years and we are not ready to live through that.

WAR CRIMINALS

COMMISSION'S DECISION TO SECURE EVIDENCE IN SOVIET UNION

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to echo the concerns of my hon. colleagues from Calgary East, Edmonton East, and Parkdale-High Park with respect to the Deschênes Commission ruling on the advisability of travelling to the Soviet Union to take evidence. In his ruling Mr. Justice Deschênes clearly stressed that six basic precautions must be applied to the collection of Soviet evidence to counter the very real danger of abuse and subversion of the rule of law. In referring to the six precautions Mr. Justice Deschênes states that: "The Commission concurs in those conditions and will insist that they be accepted and observed. Failure to agree ought then to be considered as a refusal to co-operate with Canadian justice."

Are we to assume that if these conditions are not met by the Soviets then the Commission will not take the Soviet evidence? If this is the case, why not have this agreement committed to writing beforehand? I believe the six safeguards proposed by Mr. Justice Deschênes are significant and necessary, but I do not think they go far enough. For example, there should be a forensic examination of all documents to determine their validity, and this examination should take place in a neutral environment.

Consideration should only be given to evidence if it is of a corroborative nature. As well, the Commission should at least request that witness depositions be taken in Canada or at the Canadian Embassy. Without an extension of these safeguards and an agreement in writing with the Soviets, I cannot support the Commission's decision to travel to the Soviet Union to take evidence.

REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF FOOTWEAR AND TEXTILE QUOTAS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Again yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we saw the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) break his word. And again, that promise had been made in Sherbrooke during the election campaign. We all remember the Prime Minister's famous promise to the elderly in Sherbrooke, a promise which he was forced to swallow.

And then in the month of May, in Sherbrooke, in the Eastern Townships, he had promised to maintain footwear and textile quotas, but again yesterday the Prime Minister did not keep his word and footwear quotas went by the board.

Mr. Speaker, this inhuman Government is unable to tell us . . . Today's headline in the Journal de Montréal reads: "5,000 Quebec shoe workers will lose their jobs". The Government is unable to tell us where these workers will find other jobs.

Montreal East is already threatened with the loss of 5,000 jobs because of the inaction of this Government. Two groups of people from Daoust and La Parisette in Montreal East came here to see if anything could be done to help them, but what they heard yesterday was the end of it and, without quotas, other shoe factories will have to shut down as a result of this Government's stupid and inhuman decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope that the 58 Quebec Conservative Members—described as cowards yesterday by the union president—will wake up and convince the Prime Minister that he has to honour his commitments and maintain quotas.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on November 1, 1985, rail passes for all CP Rail pensioners in Canada were revoked and replaced by an extended health care package. This action by CP Rail was taken unilaterally without consultation with the pensioners. The extended health care plan does not necessarily enhance health benefits for the pensioners as they were already covered free of charge by provincial health plans. To the pensioners the passes were construed as a right in recognition of past employment, a right pensioners enjoyed since the inception of the railway some one hundred years ago.

It is morally wrong for CP Rail to have taken such action unilaterally against a group which has no bargaining units to defend itself. I believe such action to be questionable legally as well. Understandably, Mr. Speaker, the pensioners are upset. On their behalf I strongly urge the support of all my colleagues on both sides of the House in speaking out in order to allow CP Rail pensioners the option of retaining their pass privileges so abruptly revoked by CP Rail.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister for Internatiional Trade. The Prime Minister of our country has broken another major promise, this one given in a clear-cut commitment to the workers in the Canadian shoe industry. On May 4, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "A Conservative Government will not abolish import quotas imposed by Canada in the shoe sector. The quota policy will remain as is". Why has the Prime Minister of our country once again broken his word to the people of Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the inquiry which was undertaken was the most comprehensive inquiry ever undertaken into the shoe industry. It was found that in the vast majority of categories no further protection for quotas was needed. Where quotas were required, they were recommended and we agreed to them.

I would like to point out to the right hon. gentleman that it was his Government that appointed this inquiry. It was they who set the terms of reference. It was they who appointed the members of that board of inquiry. I find it strange that they do not want to accept what the board of inquiry has now recommended.

Mr. Lapierre: Why did you promise it then?

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister is saying is all very interesting, but unfortunately, it directly contradicts the promise made by the Prime Minister to workers in the shoe industry.

Last year, the Prime Minister stated quite clearly that the quota policy for shoes would remain as is. And now these quotas have been eliminated by the Conservative Government. Talk about cynical!

I will put my question again: Why has the Prime Minister of this country once again betrayed Canadian workers?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am greatly surprised by the response of my right hon. friend. Quotas are remaining on 50 per cent of all footwear produced in the country. The tribunal which the Liberal Government appointed has found that quotas were not needed in the other categories. All sorts of remedies have been provided and offered by the Government to protect the workers in the event that there is any diminution of the work force, which the tribunal did not feel would take place. I am frankly surprised at his lack of concern for the consumers of the country who have been paying an extra half a billion dollars for shoes which they should not have been paying.

Mr. Lapierre: How about the workers?

[Translation]

PRIME MINISTER'S PROMISE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has just set aside $100,000 for a study of the future of 20,000 workers in the shoe industry in Canada. That works out to about $5 per worker.

I want to ask the Minister: Is that what the Prime Minister's word is worth? Five measly dollars per worker in this industry?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I am afraid that the premise of the hon. gentleman's question is completely inaccurate. That is just one of many programs being offered by the Government. There are a number of programs in place, not only for the workers and the companies, but for the communities in which those companies are located. All the Hon. Member has to do is read the statement which I enunciated in the House yesterday which quite clearly set out a very comprehensive program for those people.

[Translation]

RECONCILIATION OF STATEMENTS AND COMMITMENTS WITH GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade. As we all know, the Prime Minister made some formal commitments in the Eastern Townships in May 1984. Much later, however, in March 1985, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion said that if the Government guaranteed them a fair share of the market over the long term, they might become surprisingly efficient. Yesterday's decision apportions about 12 per cent of the market to the industry in Canada. How can you reconcile those statements and formal commitments with the decision you released yesterday?

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would again point out to the Hon. Member that it was his Government appointed the tribunal, set the terms of reference, and appointed members to it. I am surprised now that opposition Members are finding it difficult to accept a decision of a tribunal which conducted the most extensive investigation of the shoe industry ever undertaken.

I would remind Hon. Members opposite that there still remains in place a 23 per cent tariff on all shoes, and a three-year extension of quotas on 50 per cent of all shoes produced in Canada.

[Translation]

LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in his statement yesterday, the Minister said there would probably be repercussions in terms of lay-offs and that there would be quite a number of these. Could the Minister inform the House, first of all, how many lay-offs are expected, and second, whether, if the number of lay-offs were to be substantially higher than expected by his Department, the Minister is prepared to make a formal commitment to review his decision?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again I must refer to the decision of the tribunal, which in four of the five categories stated that no further protection by way of quotas was required and, therefore, any lay-offs whatever would be extremely minimal.

In those areas that were endangered, children's and women's shoes, we have left the quotas in place, which quotas represent over 50 per cent of the total. In our opinion the programs we have announced to take care of any dislocation are more than adequate to meet the needs of the industry and the workers involved.

INQUIRY WHY PRIME MINISTER HAS NOT KEPT HIS PROMISE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before the electoral campaign, the Prime Minister made a promise in Sherbrooke. He specifically stated that a Conservative Government would maintain footwear import quotas in spite of American pressures. The Government has now done exactly the opposite. My question is quite simple. Why?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again I would like to remind the Hon. Member that we are not ignoring the concerns of the workers.

Mr. Deans: A broken promise.

Mr. Kelleher: In those areas where that part of the industry is endangered, we have left the quotas in place. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member not being concerned at all about 25 million consumers in Canada, and particularly those in the low income groups who have been badly hurt by the imposition of these quotas. Where is his concern for them?

Mr. Deans: They will get nothing.

Mr. Crosbie: You don't care about the low-income people, Ed.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, let me tell the Minister that the people of Canada are surprised that a Conservative Government which promised change is defending a Liberal appointed commission. If they wanted a change, why did we not get it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Minister, who is taking pride and boasting about implementing a Liberal commission's report, is he aware that when the quotas were lifted in the United States just a short time ago American producers lost 60 per cent of their share of the market. If he is aware of that, will he tell Canadians why we will not lose thousands of jobs which we badly need right now in Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member: because up here in Canada, the tribunal, after one year of the most far-reaching inquiry into the shoe industry, found that it did not need the protection, and that was not the case in the United States. I am still surprised that he is not concerned about those consumers and he is not concerned about all of the other workers in other industries who would suffer a loss of jobs because of retaliation by our trading partners.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF QUOTAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister is an expert on the textile industry, as everyone in Nova Scotia knows.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If he checked his facts he would find that the United States was told that it did not have to worry if it lifted its quotas too, and it lost 60 per cent of its market after its Government did the stupid thing which our Government plans to do here. If the Government is interested in the 20,000 jobs nationally, and if it is interested in more than 10,000 jobs in the Province of Quebec, why does it not use its common sense, maintain those quotas and maintain those jobs, instead of abandoning Canadian workers?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the hon. gentleman. There are 15,000 people employed in this industry, not 20,000 and, second, the tribunal found that they no longer required the protection, except with respect to women's and girls' shoes. We are protecting them with quotas for another three years. We are concerned about the workers. That is why we took the action which we did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION PROPOSAL

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance, in the absence of the Minister of Finance. The budget projections would now seem to be in tatters, along with much of the Budget itself. We have a $2.8 billion cost for the Minister's two black eyes—the Northland Bank and the CCB.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: We have $1 billion in tax rulings. We have $500 million in an ice-breaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Johnston: Would the Minister undertake—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Go back to piano playing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the House allow the question to be heard, please?

Mr. Crosbie: There was no question.

Mr. Johnston: Would the Minister undertake to ask her colleague, the Minister of Finance, to withdraw his inequitable, complex, costly capital gains tax exemption proposal, to make up at least some of the lost revenue which will take place by reason of those gaffes?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, at least my eyes are open.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Go get 'em, Rocky.

Mr. Oberle: You can lick him at any time, Barbara.

Mrs. McDougall: They are open enough to know, as the Hon. Member obviously does not know, that in the latest reporting months the deficit went down for the first time in many years. That is something his Government never managed to accomplish.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET BEFORE FEBRUARY

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is bragging about reducing the deficit by putting taxes on the backs of the poor and the disadvantaged who cannot protect themselves, that is fine, but the fact is that costs are going through the roof. I would suggest to the Minister that it would be appropriate for the Minister of Finance to bring forward fiscal projections before Christmas. Would she undertake to ask him to ensure that his Budget to correct some of this damage is tabled before February?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not paying any attention to what is going on in the country as a result of our actions on the deficit. What is going on is that mortgage rates are coming down, housing starts are up, and jobs are being created. Is that not enough for him?

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF GLOBAL TEXTILE QUOTA SYSTEM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. Can the Minister confirm what he told the Canadian Textile Institute to the effect that the Government has now decided to forget this promise as well?

• (1430)

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the statement with respect to textiles that is alleged to have been made by the Prime Minister. income consumers whom these quotas have hit the hardest. It has cost them half a billion dollars.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the Hon. He will be advised in due course, as will all Hon. Members of the House.

ESTABLISHMENT OF HYUNDAI PLANT IN BROMONT—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. When it was announced that Hyundai would be establishing a plant at Bromont, it was quite clear at the time that the federal Government had agreed with the Government of Quebec to provide a measure of financial participation in this undertaking. Today I want to give the Minister a chance to stop "frigging" around and to inform the House outright whether or not the commitment made by the Prime Minister in his call from Florida will be met and whether we now have the assurance that Hyundai will come to Bromont, with federal participation.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is the third day in a row that that question has been answered. The answer remains the same. The Government is "concluding agreements pursuant to our joint agreements with the Government of Quebec, and in view of the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, details will be announced when and as appropriate," as stated by the Prime Minister last Wednesday and repeated by me yesterday.

[Translation]

NATURE AND PUBLICATION OF OFFER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister is telling the House that they are going to make their announcement as provided under the federal-provincial agreement. Nothing is further from the truth, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to take another look at the agreement his Government signed. If those are the conditions, what was the offer and why was it not announced jointly? What are they waiting for? According to the conditions of the agreement, everything was supposed to be "clean above the board", no secrets and no "frigging" around.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, they are so upset. Again I must express my total lack of understanding of why that particular Member should be upset with the establishment of an automobile plant in his region of the country which is bound to create jobs for his constituents. I cannot, for the life of me, understand why he continues to oppose it.

NATIONAL REVENUE

COST OF GENSTAR TAX RULING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The recent Genstar tax ruling by the federal Government now means that preferred shareholders can avoid paying tax on dividends. Of course this has incredible implication for many other corporations that can take advantage of this ruling. What will be the cost of this particular ruling in terms of lost tax revenue as it is applied to other corporations? What is the cost to the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): First, Mr. Speaker, I can understand the importance of the question, but the Hon. Member must also understand that it is not incumbent upon myself or any other Members of the House to discuss these kinds of implications—

Mr. Deans: We are entitled to know how much revenue we are losing.

Mr. MacKay: I can assure him that in this particular case the action taken was in accordance with the law which was applied to the facts. Each of these cases is reviewed on a case by case basis.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, now that a brand new loophole has been opened that is likely to cost hundreds of millions and perhaps billions of dollars, is the Minister of National Revenue indicating that he is not prepared to say what this will cost the taxpayers of Canada, and that it is an open-ended loophole? Is that what he is saying, or is he refusing to pass that information along?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not saying anything of the kind. My hon. friend opposite is the one who has characterized this as a loophole. If he wishes to characterize it as that, it is not our loophole but a product of what we inherited when we formed this administration.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Each one of these cases is looked upon as it is relevant to the laws that are applied to the facts that are brought forward. If there are changes to be made in the fiscal and monetary policy, they are in the purview of my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS CHANGED ITS POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister for International Trade responsible for the creation of unemployment in Canada.

Could the Minister explain what happened to prevent the Government from honouring the commitment made by the Prime Minister in Sherbrooke when he said that he would maintain the quotas in the footwear industry and thus save 20,000 jobs? What happened that made the Prime Minister cheat the people of Canada?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the Hon. Member would be in a similar vein as my reply to his colleagues. We are not deceiving the public. We are protecting the industry where it is required, as recommended to us by the tribunal which his Party appointed under their terms of reference. Is he suggesting now that after one year its decision is not competent? If so, I suggest that he reconsider the whole matter.

We are protecting the industry where it needs protection, and that protection will be removed where it is not needed.

LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is unacceptable because the Government has had the Abella Report on equity in employment and failed to take it into account. Now stop fooling the people with the antidumping report!

Could the Minister explain why the Government was unable to fulfill the promise made by the Prime Minister in Sherbrooke? And what solutions are there for the 20,000 workers who will lose their jobs?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the second question is the same as the first. I will remind him that there are not 20,000 people involved in the industry, but 15,000. The tribunal did not find that there would be any great loss of jobs. If he has evidence of that from some study, I wish he would make it available to me.

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. On Tuesday he said that his Department has to look ahead with programs like SDA-2000 which seek to integrate NORAD and SDI, even though he told the House on Monday that NORAD and SDI are "quite distinct". Was the Minister misleading the House on Monday or misleading the press on Tuesday?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been looking behind for so long that he would probably find it impossible to look ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Nielsen: What he attributes to me is absolutely false. I made no such linkage and no such statement.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the Minister is defending his looking-ahead statement as quoted in the newspaper. Therefore, I would ask him if it is not rather dishonest to tell Canadians that the Government will not participate in star wars when the Minister's Department is laying the groundwork for Canadian participation through NORAD's Strategic Defence Architecture Plan 2000.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. gentleman. I would be dishonest if I had said it, but I did not.

HEALTH

SPREAD OF AIDS DISEASE

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Standing Committee on Health and Welfare has heard from yet another eminent witness, Dr. Peter Gill, the Director of the Bureau of Microbiology for the Minister's Department, regarding the dilemma and rapid spreading in Canada of the fatal disease AIDS. Is the Minister prepared to provide the full resources of his Department and full funding by the Government to combat this deadly plague?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has taken an interest in this subject and I thank him for it. When the National Advisory Committee on AIDS was established by the previous administration, it put together what I believe was a very full response to the situation as it was at that time. We have seen a very rapid increase in the disease, both nationaly and internationaly. The committee is meeting again on December 9. Some of those very questions regarding further recommendations and proper responses are on its agenda for the December 9 meeting. Obviously I will look at its recommendations in the light in which they are given.

REFUGEES

EXPRESSION OF CONCERNS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for immigration, I hope someone will be able to provide some answers. Yesterday over 300 refugees from some eight different countries spanning 13 different organizations marched on Parliament Hill. They came because they despaired of the insensitivity of the Government in dealing expeditiously with their concerns. Therefore, can the Government inform the House and the over 20,000 refugees living in this country of what specific proposals the Government is prepared to introduce and support and, more important, when?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister I will take notice of that question and inform her on her return. I am sure she will communicate with the Hon. Member.

BACKLOG OF REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure that the 20,000 people whose futures lie with the Government would be too pleased. I would also like to draw to the Minister's attention the following question: is the Government prepared to release a second and confidential report dealing solely with the refugee backlog that was submitted to the Minister by Rabbi Plaut? Is the Government prepared to release that report, make it public, and act on its recommendations?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Minister finds it necessary to be absent from the House on Government business at this time. I will draw the Hon. Member's question to her attention.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

HAIDA CLAIM TO QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am sure the Minister is aware that the Council of the Haida nation have had their aboriginal claim to the Queen Charlotte Islands accepted by the Department of Justice and by the Minister's Department for over two years. But the B.C. courts have warned the Indian people that they are sleeping on their rights right now. Those Haida people standing up for their rights are now being arrested. Will the Minister appoint a negotiator who can legally and formally get negotiations under way, in order to defuse a very dangerous situation in British Columbia?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and his obvious interest in the matter. A couple of points are probably worth mentioning. As the Hon. Member is aware, the comprehensive land claim policy that the federal Government has been following for a number of years limits the number of negotiations to six and there is only one of those in the Province of British Columbia at the present time. As a consequence, as the Hon. Member I am sure is aware, I asked for a review of the comprehensive land claim policy. The report on that should be due at the end of this month or the beginning of December. At that time I will be able to look for ways in which to change the general policy in order to take us out of the limit of six.

Second, with respect to the current situation, I have indicated on a number of occasions to all parties that I am pleased, along with the Minister of the Environment, to use our good offices for mediation with the interests involved. I share the concern of the Hon. Member, as we all do.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL INTERVENTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister is aware of the pressing nature of the issue on the Queen Charlotte Islands. The Haida people and the loggers, not only on the Queen Charlottes but around British Columbia, are being used as political cannon fodder. Is the Minister willing, along with the Minister of the Environment, to come with me to the Queen Charlotte Islands to see if we can defuse this matter before it gets any further out of hand?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am of course always willing to travel with the Hon. Member. I have on a number of occasions indicated to all parties that the view of the federal Government is that the future opportunity lies in bringing the parties of the contending interests together to recognize that there ought to be an understanding of the relationship between the park, the legitimate interests of the Haida people in terms of stewardship and management, and the operation of commercial enterprises. In our view, those three contending interests can be accommodated in a way which will bring about the best interests for all three. We would like to be able to participate in those discussions. I have indicated that I would be willing to do so and, indeed, if I could get a message from the other people, I would even be willing to call a meeting.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SIZE OF JURIES IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who, among other things, is also the Attorney General for the Northwest Territories and Yukon. The Supreme Courts of the N.W.T. and Yukon have found that the traditional six-person juries are unconstitutional. Does the Minister plan to appeal this finding to a higher court or, alternatively, to bring in amendments to the Criminal Code to allow for 12-person juries in both of those territories?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, two decisions were made. One, in the case R v. Bailey, was made on June 11 in the Yukon and held that a six-person jury could not stand because of the Charter. We have decided not to appeal that case because in Yukon, Supreme Court jury trials are held in Whitehorse which has a population of 17,000 people. Therefore, the administration of justice could live with that decision.

A similar decision was made in the Northwest Territories which held in the case of R v. Punch on October 12 that there had to be a 12-person jury. Because—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: If you are not interested in the administration of justice in the Northwest Territories, then continue to talk.

Mr. Rodriguez: Statements by Ministers.

Mr. Crosbie: Because trials in the Northwest Territories are held in small communities and because this would result in having to bring offenders to trial in large communities and travel hundreds of miles to do so, we are considering an appeal in the Northwest Territories case.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT RESEARCH FUNDING

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I would like to ask the new Minister a question about an old and pressing problem. The Government's delay in making a decision about research funds is becoming unbearably long. The Dean of the Methematics Faculty at the University of Waterloo has said that he is leaving the country because of the negative research climate here. Unless a decision is made now, more Canadians will leave for greener labs abroad. Will the Government end the uncertainty it has created, by keeping its promise to provide money for research, and will it do so now?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, there is probably no greater reward any person could receive than being appreciated by one's peers. I thank the House very much for its kind applause and for the good wishes that I have received in the last couple of days.

• (1450)

Having said that, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that I am very appreciative of the expertise he brings to his role as critic, an expertise which I am about to develop myself. The particular question he has asked is one to which I bring a particular and personal interest. I can tell the Hon. Member that he will be pleasantly surprised over the next few weeks with the announcements which the Government is about to make following the reporting of the various funding councils, which is to take place next week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the first answer is encouraging. The Minister should need no briefings to answer my next question since all MPs have received thousands of letters from Canadians whose careers are in danger.

Can the Minister tell us today precisely how long it will be before the Government keeps its promise to provide funds for research?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Government has already done a great many things in the 14 months it has been in power. In fact I was pleasantly surprised myself to find that $500 million has been spent, apart from the direct research funding which has been made, to support research and scientific activities throughout the country.

Will the Hon. Member be patient and give me a week in which to prepare myself in order to surprise him?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

LEVEL OF FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. This week is the six-month anniversary of the May 23 Budget. This week the Maritime Premiers joined the New Democratic Government in Manitoba in opposing the cuts in transfer payments which the Government announced in its Budget. After listening to its Conservative colleagues, in addition to the NDP Government in Manitoba, is the Government now willing to withdraw that proposal?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have suggested to the House before, as has my colleague the Minister of Finance, that there are no cuts in transfer payments to the provinces and that there is an ongoing discussion concerning the rate of growth in future payments. The Minister of Finance meets regularly with his provincial counterparts. There is the First Ministers' Conference coming up. I am sure that the issue will be resolved to everyone's satisfaction.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Government denies that there will be a cut. There will be a cut in terms of what the provinces would receive if the present legislation were extended. In addition to that there will be cuts next year, in April of 1986 instead of April, 1987, for which the present legislation allows. It is our estimate that these cuts will amount to $400 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Murphy: It is our estimate that those cuts will cost the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Murphy: Will the Government release its figures showing how much these cuts will be? Will the Government tell the provinces and the people of Canada how much it intends to cut next year?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Members opposite have not only a problem with their eyes but with their ears. We have made it clear that there are to be no cuts.

I ask the Hon. Member to consider the type of things which have gone on with the provinces. There has been a record number of ERDAs since our Government took over. Interest rates are down because of our work on the deficit, which helps them more than anything else we can do. The discussions with respect to the transfer payments will continue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

DECISION TO CLOSE CANADIAN ARMED FORCES BASE AT LAC SAINT-DENIS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. I think he is aware of the climate of concern and uncertainty which exists in the municipality of Saint-Adolphe d'Howard following the Government's decision to close the Canadian Armed Forces Base near Lake Saint-Denis.

Could the Minister tell me today how things stand as of this date? Has he received any bids to purchase the base? If so, could he make them public, and could he meet the members of the Renewal Committee to discuss them?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the Hon. Member who is particularly concerned about the Saint-Denis Base in her riding. I would like to indicate to her that the Department of National Defence has identified this territory as surplus effective November 1, that bids may be accepted until March 1, 1986, and that no bid will be accepted without their being discussed with the local Renewal Committee. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will be please to meet this Renewal Committee before the end of this year.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INQUIRY WHEN NEW PRESIDENT WILL BE APPOINTED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The Marchment report was tabled in the House last Monday and surely the Government has had time to read and ponder over the recommendations. Is the Minister, fully aware that the postal service means a lot to elderly Canadians, remote areas and small businesses, now prepared to tell us when the Canada Post president will be appointed?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): In answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleague that we are waiting for the list of prospective applicants who are available and have been proposed by the consulting firm. We hope to be able to announce the appointment of the president of Canada Post and he will take over early next year.

Mr. Gauthier: Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, it is not the Conservative Party's patronage list!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: It makes you nervous.

URGENCY OF THE SITUATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): In yesterday's Le Droit, Mr. Speaker, the Minister was reported as saying that he would act on the Marchment report recommendations before the end of the current fiscal year, April 1986. Is that really how urgent the Minister considers this matter to be? Is he not aware that there is a problem in Canada Post and that it must be settled?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, of course we give priority to Canada Post problems. We received the Marchment report recommendations early this week. They will be discussed with my Cabinet colleagues and decisions will be made very soon. I can tell my colleague that action is forthcoming.

LIVESTOCK BLOOD-TYPING LABORATORY—PRIVATIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who has received notice of it. It concerns the closure of the blood-typing laboratory by Agriculture Canada. With the closure of this blood-typing laboratory our exports of pedigreed cattle will be threatened because they are based on embryo transplant technology. As well, a tentative agreement with the New York Jockey Club to accept Canadian tests as valid has put the exports of our horse breeders into jeopardy. Why did the Minister decide that this blood-typing laboratory should be privatized in light of a report recommending against it which was made for him in 1979?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member must recognize that the Government was elected over 13 months ago to reduce the deficit. We are doing an excellent job in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member must recognize that as Minister of Agriculture I have the responsibility of identifying certain services which are currently being carried on by Agriculture Canada which might be done better by the private side, in the interests of effectiveness and efficiency. That is exactly what we are doing.

FUTURE TEST STANDARDS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since this laboratory has been operating on a cost-plus basis and has actually been covering all its fees and making money, the Minister seems to be saying that it should be turned over to the private sector for that reason. How can he guarantee that this turning over to the private sector will not result in the same type of scandals which we saw in the United States where profit intervened in testing in industrial biotech laboratories, which caused hundreds of tests to be thrown out because the company decided to go for fast bucks instead of accurate tests?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member does not expect me to give any guarantees with respect to what might or might not have happened with some laboratory in the United States.

The Hon. Member and the House should know that blood-typing has nothing to do with disease detection and identification but is simply done for parentage verification. The Hon. Member will know that we did not act unilaterally when we implemented the cost recovery exercise. We will not act unilaterally in this case either. We will have to be satisfied that, indeed, the service can be provided by the private side. If we are not satisfied, then we will wait a little longer in the interests of the industry.

DECENTRALIZATION

CANCELLATION OF OFFICE TRANSFER TO SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A year ago the Minister cancelled the decentralization of an income security office to Sydney, Nova Scotia, while three similar projects were approved for three Tory ridings. The Auditor General in his most recent report stated that the cancellation of the Sydney office cost the Government $1.5 million. When the Government has already spent $1.5 million, why did it cancel a projet which is so desperately needed?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes an interesting point about Tory ridings. Most ridings in Canada now are Tory ridings—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —so it is very difficult to have any action in any riding which is not Tory. However, I point out to the Hon. Member that, yes, there have been certain moneys spent in the North Sydney office which was not needed. In fact, if we had continued with the project, the cost would have been much greater.

Mr. MacLellan: The answer of the Minister of National Health and Welfare is going to wow the unemployed in Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have a question right now, please. We are out of time.

Mr. MacLellan: When is the Deputy Prime Minister going to implement some of those recommendations and provide jobs instead of taking them away?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Soon.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to ask the customary business question on Thursday. Would the Government House Leader tell us what the menu is for the coming days?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Whatever it is, it will be overdone.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): The menu will be as usual, Mr. Speaker, tempting, appealing, progressive and ambitious. With the co-operation of the Opposition, I hope that we can serve the best interests of the people of Canada. Accordingly, today we will carry on with the consideration of a progressive piece of legislation, Bill C-62. Hopefully, if we conclude that debate some time today, we will be able to deal with Bill C-79, which allows the depositors of certain banks which have failed to receive compensation for their investment in the banks.

Tomorrow the first item of business will be Bill C-66, which is the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation. I believe there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to this legislation and that there is a disposition to deal with both the report stage and the third reading stage of that Bill by consent tomorrow. If Bill C-66 is completed, then we will carry on with the discussion and debate on Bill C-79.

I would like to take this opportunity to designate next Monday as the third allotted day in the current period of supply.

Later on today the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) will be tabling Ways and Means motions with respect to the Income Tax Act. On Tuesday, the first item of business will be to dispose of the Ways and Means motions relating to the Income Tax Act which, as I said, will be tabled later today.

Following the Ways and Means motions, I will call Bill C-74, respecting electoral boundaries redistribution, which I understand is going to be reported to the House today. When Bill C-74 is completed, we will resume consideration of Bill C-79—that is on Tuesday.

It is my intention on Wednesday and Thursday of next week to call second reading stage of the Income Tax Bill as the first item of business in the interest of having Bills relating to the Budget dealt with in an expeditious manner. We can, hopefully, make progress on that matter so the Bill will be able to go to committee so that the taxpayers of Canada will have certainty of passage of the legislation when they are putting their income tax returns in at the beginning of next year.

The back-up legislation with respect to the Income Tax Act will be the three Bills which deal with divorce and ancillary matters of relief and enforcement, that is Bill C-46, Bill C-47, and Bill C-48.

Obviously, we will continue to monitor the progress being made from time to time and we will consult with the Opposition House Leaders. If there are any changes to be made in that line-up, I will advise the House and my opposition counterparts.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am a little concerned about one statement made by the Government House Leader that, I believe, perhaps is not entirely accurate. With regard to the CDC Bill, there would be no difficulty, as far as I can tell, in completing the report stage tomorrow. However, there are a number of amendments which will have to be voted upon and I would think it inappropriate to proceed to third reading given that the votes on the amendments will have to be held over until Monday.

What I would like to suggest to the Government House Leader is that if we get through the report stage tomorrow, and we defer the votes until Monday, we will deal with third reading with only one speaker, which will help expedite passage, but I do not want to leave the wrong impression about the way the business might be conducted tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I had understood we had made progress on that legislation with respect to both Parties and thought possibly the amendments might go on a voice vote. However, if there is intention to call a standing vote, then the rules would preclude us from having it on Friday and the votes would take place on the following Monday at the end of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: I have received notice of a point of order from the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne). The Minister of State for Youth.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE IN THE HOUSE

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, during the past few days, some Members of the Official Opposition's francophone caucus have been using language in this House which no francophone would want to hear, and certainly not in the House of Commons. I realize that if they want to go on demonstrating their fondness for vulgar language and their poor taste, they are free to do so. However, Mr. Speaker, it is incredible . . . I ask you to listen to the tapes and look at the blues, because we can hardly tolerate a Member accusing the Government of, and I quote:

—frigging—

—and a Minister of the Crown of "frigging around". This is unparliamentary language, and we have here a case of what is referred to as "indecent language" in Beauchesne's, Citation 319. I wish you would look into this, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I know I never took elocution with Mrs. So-and-So and I have never been on the stage. I am here to represent the interests of my constituents, and at this very moment, Mr. Speaker, this Government, by refusing to get on with it and making a decision it promised the Premier of Quebec it would make, is indeed "frigging around" and jeopardizing the survival of my riding and the creation of thousands of jobs.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the Minister, I am not ashamed of speaking in the vernacular, because it is probably the best way for me to represent—

An Hon. Member: That is not a point of order!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Clearly a question of language is a point of order. I am sorry, I am like most Anglophones, English is my mother tongue. I, therefore, do not know all of the words in French which one might know. Therefore, in the circumstances, I believe I must reserve, check the "blues" and determine what was said and what it does in fact mean, if I can put it that way. I am sorry, I am not in a position to resolve the matter for the House immediately.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICES OF MOTIONS

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 65(1), I wish to lay upon the Table copies of notices of Ways and Means motions to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. Pursuant to Standing Order 65(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for their consideration.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition from a number of residents of my constituency and other communities in British Columbia who continue to be extremely grieved by the decision of the Government to remove full indexation of family allowances. They pray that the Government may still act to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present two petitions. The first is signed by some 300 members of the Newfoundland and Labrador Federation of Labour who protest the proposed changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act coming into effect January 1, 1986. These changes would have pension income counted as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. They call upon the Government to retreat from that very retrograde step before it is too late.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): The second petition is signed by many Members of the Sudbury Women's Action Group protesting deindexation of family allowance benefits. They call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from citizens in my riding, especially from the area of Walkley and Chester Avenues. They ask that the Government of Canada abandon its regressive decision to deindex family allowances. This decision, if implemented, would further reduce the buying power of the truly needy in Canada.

DELAYS IN ARRIVAL OF CHEQUES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to table a petition from eight Manpower-sponsored adult students together with their teacher from the settlement of Lac La Martre in the Northwest Territories. They point out that their cheques from the Department of Employment and Immigration arrive at least a month late and often much later than that. The problem is that cheques are not mailed on time—not that the Post Office is slow. They ask Parliament to remedy this situation which causes them considerable hardship.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present concerning the Government's intent to partially deindex family allowances. They are significant petitions in that in one community concerned, Lac Brochet, where all groceries must be flown in. Everything is quite expensive and they certainly need their full family allowance.

The other petition is from residents of Leaf Rapids, Manitoba, where hundreds of people are protesting the Minister of National Health and Welfare's intention to deindex family allowances. It is significant that the majority of the adults in that community signed the petition.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from residents of Victoria, British Columbia, concerned about the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They are concerned that we do not have adequate information from the U.S. Navy about whether or not vessels entering Nanoose Bay are nuclear equipped. We do not have adequate information about the economic impact of the said test range. They call for a full public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): I have a number of other petitions from residents of Victoria also, who are concerned about the Government's proposal to deindex family allowances. They point out that this imposes an unfair burden on families, especially those with young children, as well as single-parent families. They call upon the House to institute full indexation of family allowances.

POSTAL SERVICE IN NEPEAN-CARLETON

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from some 150 residents of the Centre Point community in Nepean-Carleton who are deeply concerned about a total lack of mail delivery in their community and the very inadequate facilities they have to use for general delivery purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to present before the House two petitions signed by people from my constituency. First, a petition signed by a group of ladies who live in Saint-Adrien de Ham.

Also from my constituency, I have another one from the community of Saint-Zacharie, on the immediate outskirts of Windsor-Richmond.

I also have a whole set of petitions, but in order to comply with parliamentary procedure, I will list them according to their constituencies or origin.

So there is a group of Canadians from the constituency of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, who also object to the same thing as always, the proposal to deindex family allowances.

I have another one, Mr. Speaker, from the constituency of Saint-Jacques in the Province of Quebec.

Another one from the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, in Quebec. Another one also from Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, in Quebec. And another one from Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, in Quebec.

Another petition from Chicoutimi, in the Province of Quebec, in which again all the signers regret the Government's intention of deindexing family allowances.

I have another petition from Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke in Ontario. And another one from Essex-Kent, also in Ontario. And still another one from Kingston. And another one from Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic in the Province of Quebec.

An Hon. Member: Pronounce the names correctly.

Mr. Tardif: Yes, if you tried as hard to speak French as we do English, I think everything would go much better.

I have still another petition from Charlevoix. And another one from Montreal-Sainte Marie. Another still from Hochelaga-Maisonneuve. And another one from Moncton, New Brunswick. And another one from Laval-des-Rapides, in Quebec. Another one from Rosemont-Montreal-Sainte-Marie. Still another one from the constituency of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic.

Another petition, Mr. Speaker, from the federal constituency of Halton, Ontario. And another one from Saint-Jacques, Quebec, and, finally, a last one from Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, where thousands of Canadians regret the Government's action—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! And thank you. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND TAX INCREASES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to table in the House four petitions. The first one is signed by residents of a number of ridings in Montreal, Laval and Dollard-des-Ormeaux, in the province of Quebec, asking the House to reinstate the full indexation of family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases.

[English]

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): The second petition is signed by residents of the great community of Oshawa, Ontario. They call upon Parliament to examine the effect of the Nanoose Bay test range on the local community and its implications for Canada's independent foreign policy.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is signed by residents of the communities of Montreal, LaSalle and Verdun. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

The fourth one, Mr. Speaker, asks Parliament to reinstate the indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present from pensioners in my riding who won the fight for fully indexed pensions. They feel that right should be granted to mothers and children who receive family allowances. They call upon Parliament to index fully universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases levied against families. These petitioners are from the communities of Humboldt and St. Gregor in my riding.

• (1520)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have well over 1,000 names of people from my constituency who have signed petitions stressing very strongly their opposition to the deindexation of family allowances and to the tax increases which are being imposed on ordinary Canadians. They call upon this House to reverse those policies.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from a number of people from different parts of Canada opposing Bill C-70 and asking for full indexation of the universal family allowance. They ask also for unfair tax increases to be rescinded. On this last day that the committee will be speaking to this issue, I implore the Minister to think of the thousands and thousands of signatures that have been presented and that will be presented which oppose this Bill. I hope he will think seriously of this.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that Question No. 434 will be answered today.

[Text]

CLEARANCE FOR AMATEUR ATHLETES FROM U.S.

Question No. 434—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Are amateur athletes from the United States, who play for local Canadian athletic teams, required to have their team management complete clearance for their admissibility to Canada through documentation of Canada Employment clearance of Emp. 2151 and Immigration Authorization, Imm. 1102 forms?

2. Did the Ontario regional headquarters of the Department of Employment and Immigration issue instructions to its regional managers to process American amateur athletes entering Canada as visitors, provided they were not otherwise admissible and, if so (a) on what date was the instruction issued (b) which offices received it (c) who authorized the instruction and what is his/her name and job designation?

3. Were these instructions authorized by the Minister of Employment and Immigration or any person at national headquarters and (a) if so (i) on what date (ii) who authorized them and what is his/her name and job designation (b) if not, for what reason?

4. Will the Department instruct its officials at every port of entry to adopt the new procedures and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

5. Did the national headquarters of CEIC review its procedures concerning the admission of amateur athletes from other countries and, if so (a) on what date was the review completed and what were its results (b) for what reason?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. (a) May 25, 1983. (b) Ottawa District which made copies for their local offices. (c) The Program Specialist of the Ontario Region on behalf of the Regional Director General of Immigration, Mr. D. Donn.

3. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) The instructions referred to in part 2 were issued by the Ontario regional headquarters as an interim measure pending completion of a review by national headquarters concerning the entry of foreign athletes and also to resolve a local problem. The instructions allowed the Ottawa immigration district office to admit as visitors only those amateur athletes who were playing on recreational teams, if they were not otherwise inadmissible.

4. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Immigration national headquarters are drafting new guidelines that will be more specific than those issued earlier by the Ontario regional headquarters.

These new guidelines should then be adopted by all immigration officers.

5. (a) A review was completed in August, 1985 and the new guidelines will be issued sometime in November, 1985.

(b) Foreign athletes destined to Canadian-based teams will be dealt with under one of the categories described hereunder because Canadian athletes are allowed to work in other countries with minimum requirements.

(1) A person who plays or participates on a recreational basis in a sport activity, does not receive remuneration or any valuable consideration will be treated as a visitor.

(2) Athletes earning less than 50 per cent of their income from sports activities will be exempt from Canada Employment Centre validation pursuant to Subsection 20(5)(E)iii of the Immigration Regulations and to the exemption code E95 as per the instructions contained in Chapter IS 15 of the Immigration Manual. They will nevertheless be documented on an employment authorization. The exemption will only be used for "amateur athletes" as defined by Sports Canada i.e. a person who does not earn more than fifty per cent of his or her income from performing a sport.

(3) Athletes earning more than 50 per cent of their income from sports activities will be exempt from Canada Employment Centre validation pursuant to Subsection 20(5)(E)iii of the Immigration Regulations and to the exemption code E99 as per the instructions contained in Chapter IS 15 of the Immigration Manual. They will nevertheless be documented on an employment authorization. The exemption will be used for all semi-professional or professional athletes coming to Canada to join a Canadian-based team.

The two different exemption codes will allow the Commission to monitor the entry of amateur athletes (Code E95) and professional athletes (Code E99).

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Keeper (p. 8197).

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to speak first on this Bill before the motion to hoist was moved. Rather than reiterate some of the things I said the other day, I would like to draw the attention of the House to exactly what it is in Bill C-62 that the Liberal Opposition is opposed to with regard to the proposals made by the Government. More important, I would like to draw to the attention of the Members of the House the reasons we had the Abella Commission in the first place, the working conditions that led to the need for that kind of commission, and the exact recommendations made by Judge Abella in her report. By doing so, I will point out the inadequacies of the Government's response through Bill C-62 which is presently before the House.

The mandate of the commission, Mr. Speaker, was, in essence, the following: The Judge was asked to inquire into the most efficient, effective and equitable means of promoting employment opportunities for, and eliminating systemic discrimination against, four designated groups: women, native people, disabled persons, and visible minorities. In the 11 Crown and Government-owned corporations, the improvement rate for women over the five-year period studied had been minimal. Women remained overwhelmingly concentrated in the lowest paid occupations in every corporation. In fact, the Judge found that they held very few managerial or supervisory positions.

As a result of the first study that was done, the Liberal Government in power at the time undertook a pilot project at the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is singled out as an example of success in elimination of discriminatory barriers in employment. It was found that only in those corporations where measures have been implemented to eliminate discriminatory barriers in employment have opportunities for women genuinely improved. All corporations agreed that without legislation and a reporting requirement substantial change was unlikely to occur. Bear that in mind, Mr. Speaker, because that is a very important element in the reasons for the Liberal Party's opposition to Bill C-62 in its present form.

When Judge Abella went across the country gathering evidence most representatives with whom she met considered further Government intervention necessary to ensure their equitable participation in the workforce. The report also concluded that it is critical that census data relating to the quality of labour force participation of the four designated groups be collected every five years. Judge Abella found that employment barriers articulated by the group included insufficient or inappropriate training facilities, inadequate information systems, inadequate hiring and promotion practices and discriminatory assumptions.

The Abella Commission concluded that voluntary measures are an unsatisfactory response to the pervasiveness of systemic discrimination in Canadian workplaces and have, therefore, recommended that all federally regulated employers be required, by legislation, to implement employment equity. In other words, it decided that there had to be a mandatory affirmative action program instituted, and several ways were recommended in which to oversee and ensure that the intent of the legislation is sound.

The first recommendation to ensure that this kind of discrimination was being eliminated was to expand the jurisdiction of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to make it responsible for employment equity. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that that is one of the recommendations in Bill C-62. It is unusual, though, that in diluting that proposal of the Abella Commission the Government has indicated that the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be the regulatory body that is going to oversee the implementation of these proposals but, in fact, it has not mandated additional resources to the Canadian Human Rights Commission through this Bill, nor has it given that body jurisdiction. Therefore, in terms of the enforcement provisions, we have serious reservations about the ability of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to undertake the necessary review and ensure that the four target groups are going to be allowed the employment opportunities that we know do not now exist within the federal Government or our Crown corporations. More important, they do not exist within companies with which the federal Government has contracts and does business.

This leads me to my second point, Mr. Speaker. What laws presently exist and in what ways can we improve the track record of the federal Government with respect to enhancement of employment equity? In 1977 the Canadian Human Rights Act was passed forbidding discrimination on the basis of sex. Since 1978 there have been affirmative action programs in federal Departments. I mentioned the pilot projects within CMHC. We later had the Katie Cooke Task Force Report on child care established under the Liberal administration which is presently in the possession of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) awaiting follow-up.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That has not been reported.

Mr. Frith: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) indicates that that is not yet reported, so it is still at report stage.

The following are the major points of criticism that the Liberal Party has with Bill C-62: First, it does not implement several of Judge Abella's key recommendations. The Bill includes no mandatory enforcement of employment equity. That, Mr. Speaker, is a very serious flaw. As outlined earlier, every group that came before the Abella Commission indicated that they felt that without mandatory enforcement there would be little progress made. They have cited case after case from the 1970s and early 1980s to reinforce that view.

Second, in this Bill there is no provision for a separate monitoring agency. As I indicated earlier, the responsibility has been conferred upon the Canadian Human Rights Commission but there have been no additional manpower resources allocated to that group. Due to the backlog of cases before the Human Rights Commission, the groups that have criticized

Bill C-62 are probably correct in their assumption that with a monitored three-year reporting program it will be the year 2000 and beyond before we get the first test case of the Abella Commission's Report before that body.

Third, without the allocation of additional resources, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will not have the power to enforce employment equity. That again flies in the face of all the evidence that was gathered by the Abella Commission over the several years during which she studied the problems of the four groups about which I spoke. In addition to the fact that we are not even going to have mandatory enforcement—we are going to have voluntary reporting—there have not been any targets set by the Government as to what each Department and companies that represent 200 employees or more must agree to in order to abide by the rules set by the Government.

• (1530)

As I have indicated about that reporting procedure, there has been no standardization established in Bill C-62. If there is no standardization, Mr. Speaker, then we will have three years of monitoring before anything can be put before the Canadian Human Rights Commission. We are talking, in effect, about another generation of Canadians who will have to await another Government, I suppose another Government with more of a commitment to the enhancement of employment equity than has been exhibited by the Conservative Government.

In the election campaign in the summer of 1984 the Government made a number of promises to women in particular with respect to recommendations that would flow from the Abella Commission report. This is another example of more broken promises.

Earlier today during Question Period quotes were given by my colleagues from the Province of Quebec and southwestern Ontario. These were verbatim promises made by the Conservative leader a year ago during the campaign about how he was going to ensure the viability of the Canadian shoe manufacturing industry. He broke that promise. The Government has broken promises with respect to making sure that deficit reduction would never be done at the expense of low-and middle-income Canadians. That promise was broken within 10 weeks of the Conservatives assuming office.

Here again, with the Abella Commission report, and the manner in which the Government has chosen to reply to those excellent recommendations, we have another series of broken promises and another generation that we will have to wait before we have some improvement in employment equity.

Last but not least, in addition to all the flaws I have outlined about this Bill previously, there are no penalties in the Bill for companies not complying with it. Why do we not simply tell Canadians and those four groups, the women, the native people, the disabled and the visible minorities, that Bill C-62 will not address their concerns, that it will not, in a reasonable period of time, add to their quality of life. They should be told that the Government is not prepared to move to create the kind of legislation required. Quite frankly, Bill C-62 is a sham. Those groups know it, opposition Members know it, and I would be delighted to hear perhaps a Government back-bench MP try to defend the recommendations in the Bill.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today another instance of the degree to which the Government has adopted half measures and token efforts in replacement as a substitute for responsible, serious and enforcible legislation. I think it raises real questions about the self respect of the Government and the degree to which—

Mr. Rodriguez: It has none.

Mr. Parry: —the Government takes its promises and pre-election commitments seriously when we compare the legislation before us today with the sort of promises made before the election and the statements after the election of September 4, 1984.

I will not be repetitious, Mr. Speaker, by quoting to the Government the promises it made. I think that has been done adequately. This Bill highlights the difference to me between the sort of society which the Government would like to see us aim for and the society that I and my Party would like to see us aim for. It also highlights to a degree the difference between the sort of society that we have today and the sort of society that any of us might want to have. Notwithstanding our material prosperity in many parts of the country, though certainly not all, and the strides and gains made concerning the employment and the status of women, the minorities and the handicapped, our society is falling far short of what I would like to see.

We have to look at the state of a society in which women, as an example, receive only five-eighths of the average male's wage, in which native people suffer from greatly elevated levels of unemployment compared to the average in our society. We have to look at a society in which the job is of central and paramount importance to the individual, to the determination of his or her identity and self and how a person perceives himself or herself and his or her relationship to society. What I see are large numbers of people within society who are disadvantaged by the status quo, that status quo which this legislation does so little to change and so much to maintain.

I see people, Mr. Speaker, whose parents and grandparents suffered from unemployment. I see women who have been and are still being held back by prejudice and a failure to understand their potential, a failure to appreciate their commitment of what they are capable of doing. I see very little in this Bill that will do anything to correct those situations and move us toward a society where people will be able to compete on an equal, full basis, regarding only their talent, their ability, their skills and their commitment, and which will set aside extraneous factors such as race and sex.

The way in which the Bill is being handled in the House shows that what once were vices are now merely habits. The Government is introducing closure for the fifth time. The Government is trying to push through this inadequate little piece of legislation, as modest in its size as it is in its quality, as small in its thickness as it is in its ambition to do anything about the state of employment in our society.

I hear the Government taking the view that one cannot introduce mandatory programs for this sort of thing. We cannot push too hard. We cannot take steps that will upset anybody in the corporate environment. This reflects not only a lack of imagination and a lack of intelligence in design of an employment equity program, but it also essentially reflects a lack of adequate commitment to such programs.

Simply because we have bad examples of similar types of programs in the recent history, such as the language and the police issues in the Province of Quebec, does not excuse the federal Government from trying to produce something better, something that will better serve Canadians as we try to work toward a future of equality, a future based upon a concept, a realization and a concretization of employment equity.

I regret when we look at this legislation that there is no provision for the involvement of a union in the development of a corporate plan. I believe that many unions have pioneered the concept of employment equity and pioneered the implementation of employment equity measures in the workplace.

I recall the example of the Ontario Federation of Labour, which has been working on employment equity for women. It had a co-ordinator who was working on employment equity for people of minorities that previously had suffered a lack of equity in their employment prospects.

• (1540)

I believe that this has endowed our labour bodies with experience which could be put very well to use in the design of a corporate plan such as the legislation rather inadequately stipulates and rather inadequately outlines and requires.

Many others have said—and I must reiterate it—that this legislation lacks goals. It lacks guidelines for affirmative action. It lacks an effective enforcement mechanism and really effective sanctions. After all, the penalties for non-compliance are not framed to include any effect on the business which the offending company does with the Government.

I was surprised to hear the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) say this morning that the Bill introduces employment equity. It manifestly does not, because of the restrictions in the Bill which apply to a very narrow segment of the total economy. After all, there is nothing in it about the Government itself and its commitment to employment equity. It merely, as we see it, applies to those employers who employ 100 or more employees on or in connection with a federal work undertaking. There is nothing relating to the over-all size of the enterprise. There is only a very loose definition of people connected with or employed on a federal work undertaking or enterprise.

A comprehensive affirmative action program would include contract compliance and sanctions. It would include equal pay for work of equal value. It would include some stipulations as to the provision of the faciliative mechanisms to institute employment equity, such as education, training and child care. These things are not addressed by the Bill.

We know that with the majority which the Government has, the Bill will go through. We also know that five years or ten years from today, when the history of this sad piece of legislation is reviewed, all that could be said is that it had a marginal impact upon the introduction of employment equity in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also very happy to join those who have already had the opportunity to speak about Bill C-62. In my humble opinion, this Bill is another exercise which shows the true nature of this Government. Bill C-62 deals with a very important issue which was of special concern during the last election and still is for the coming provincial election. We are always meeting people who draw our attention to unacceptable situations, especially as concerns the problems faced by women, in certain cases to get a job, and in other cases to get promotions. There are a great many instances of such problems and we are all aware of them. All that this Bill does is stated in clause 1, namely: 1.

1. This Act may be cited as the Employment Equity Act.

In my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, about the only good thing that we find in this Bill is its title and its intent to recognize a fact which has existed for quite some time. However, there is obviously no real intent, no courage, no determination to attack the real problems directly.

The Bill states that recommendations will be made very nicely to some companies, and I emphasize the word "some", not necessarily in the short term, as the date mentioned is 1988, asking them to file a report and state their plans and intentions. However, Mr. Speaker, everyone recognizes that jobs are generally created by smaller businesses. These businesses, which are major producers of jobs, especially in a constituency such as mine, rarely employ more than 100 people.

Generally, when we speak about small businesses, we mean those whose work force varies between 2 and 50 employees. Everyone agrees that, when a business has over 50 employees, it becomes a company, since the very great majority of small businesses have fewer than 50. Yet, this legislation does not deal with such businesses in any way. It deals only with companies with over 100 employees. I find this measure rather timid, and for my part, it is quite enough to convince me to vote against this Bill.

On the subject of discrimination I think we all agree. We all recognize that there is a lot to do. Suffice it to know that 36 per cent of complaints filed with the Canadian Human Rights Commission, since its inception in 1976, relate to sex discrimination. Filed in 80 per cent of cases by women, those 2,300 complaints dealt especially with employment, but also with housing, recreation and credit. In my view, statistics such as these clearly point to a situation that is so prevalent that, unfortunately, we have somewhat become used to living with such an unacceptable fact of life.

And faced with such a crying situation, all the Government finds as an answer and a response is the tabling of what it calls Bill C-62, a rehashing of pious wishes, of decidedly unrealistic expectancies, with the hope that someone else will help better the situation, that the private sector will take action, and that despite the absence of any sanctions, we can and will rely on good faith alone. But I would be most surprised if three, four, five or six years down the road, we found the slightest betterment, the slightest improvement in the situation as it now stands. Except that when the Bill comes into force, Government Members will have an opportunity to slap their own backs, to go bragging all across the country that they as a Government have solved the problem, that in spite of the Opposition's objections, legislation was passed and from now on we will be referring to professional equity. I agree that as a theme, or balloon, it is quite interesting.

However, when we consider the subject matter of the Bill, I think that it simply is ridiculing those for whom they have been working for years to improve conditions and eliminate those discriminations. The Government is practically laughing at them by introducing a Bill that solves so few problems and which finally is a statement of intent rather than a solution to concerns.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we had the opportunity to see how much indifference there is to that problem. I have what people call a semi-rural riding where small- and medium-sized businesses manufacture clothing, footwear and textile and where women are for the most part assuming whatever responsibilities there are. They assume such responsibilities by choice, by liking and in many cases also by necessity.

Yesterday, we heard the Government announce a decision which will affect in the very near future those job-creating businesses where there exists comparative equity as far as the hiring of women is concerned and with the loss of their jobs, those women will strictly have nothing to hope for. This is an absolutely revolting decision as a result of which a promise will be broken and there will be no more quotas in the footwear industry. The actual short-term consequence will be that several plants will close their doors and hundreds if not thousands of jobs mostly held by women will disappear.

There is something else I want to tell Hon. Members, and it has to do with what happens every week in my riding office. Female constituents, ladies and representatives of women's associations come to my office to make represntations and various requests. They are quite simply shocked and even insulted every time they walk into manpower and immigration offices and see signs like "Women and disabled persons, this way". Mention that to women in your ridings and you will get the same reaction—they are insulted by the way they are treated.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to take part in the debate, especially since the first speech we had this morning referred to the fact that once again, the Government is introducing a motion of closure on a Bill, and we will be speaking to this motion for some time.

I am glad that the motion of closure was presented because it is high time we stopped ignorance from making further inroads in this House. It is time for a change and for saying why we are using closure. It is because we cannot afford this new kind of fanaticism which could be defined as refusing to change the subject.

People who have been watching us since this morning and listening to what we have said, especially the kind of language being used, know perfectly well why we are going to change the subject, with everybody's general approval, Mr. Speaker. Recently, we had a Member who said: Quebec is being "screwed". This is unparliamentary language. He withdrew the term and said: Quebec is being had. And you listen to the news that evening and lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, they quoted the first term. That is the kind of language we have been hearing recently. They speak from their seats, they speak to the Speaker without having the nerve to rise, and we have had a few examples today. Mr. Speaker, that is why we have a motion for closure and why we should support this motion and get the debate over with and change the subject and let the Bill go to committee.

Mr. Speaker, I will give you a few examples. They said earlier that we were going to go to our ridings and brag about what we did. No, Mr. Speaker. We are not going to brag and say we have fixed everything. In the last few days we have been seeing people from Montreal East. Who is bragging to the people from Montreal East? Who is bragging about finding a solution? Not us. When they shut down BP and three other refineries, they weren't bragging, but now they are.

Mr. Speaker, there was a group of political refugees here in the House of Commons yesterday. They were here because of the old system that caused a backlog of nearly 10,000 cases. And people want to criticize Bill C-55! I was there. It was incredible! But who set up the system? Who was bragging to these people yesterday and saying they would take care of them?

Mr. Speaker, today, workers in the footwear industry are setting up an appeal tribunal that will make recommendations. And who is bragging that they are going to save the footwear industry? The same people again.

Mr. Gauthier: —going to fall flat on your face—

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, that is fanaticism for you. Fanaticism has a one-track mind, but we want to change the subject and we will go before the legislative committee if necessary, and we will stand firm.

Mr. Speaker, the people watching us understand the system.

Mr. Tardif: You are not saying a damned thing!

Mr. Hudon: What? I see the hon. expert on the footwear industry decided to come back from behind the curtains and listen to the debate—

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that Hon. Members as well as people watching us on their television sets should understand this system. The Government introduced this Bill which was examined by a legislative committee; before that, it was referred to a Standing Committee of the House for a review of the problem. Then the Bill was read the first time. It was later read the second time.

Mr. Gauthier: I am going to see it on TV.

Mr. Hudon: Yes, you will be able to see it tomorrow on your VCR.

Then the Bill was read the second time. During second reading debate, we looked into the same amendments which had been raised before our Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. We went through the whole thing again, very nicely, very politely. No, no, no and no. It was at the second reading stage. There was an eight-hour debate on this Bill. Yes, eight hours!

After that, it was referred to a legislative committee. The legislative committee held four meetings during which it heard the same witnesses as our Standing Committee. Four or five meetings were held to hear these witnesses, following which we made a clause by clause study of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, there were four amendments—one, two, three and four—the very same amendments which the House had debated, because it is democratic.

Well, at the end it was passed, because we had the necessary majority and we had discussed it with people.

Do you know that, Mr. Speaker? If you check the official record, that is, the debates of the House, concerning Bill C-55, the very same amendments are still there.

For the information of the people watching us on their T.V. sets, this is the third reading stage. If you have followed me in the legislative committee, in the Standing Committee, you are going to see me again—

And do you know why, Mr. Speaker? Because they do not want to take—

Mr. Tardif: Because you do not understand.

Mr. Hudon: Because we do not understand? Let me tell you that you do not understand either.

Do you know what they want to do, Mr. Speaker? They want to file . . . witnesses to appear before the Appeal Board; they want to send for 18 to 55 people to look into appeal cases of refugees. That is what they want to do.

Yesterday, Hon. Members opposite said: We are looking after your case.

Mr. Speaker, that is what is meant when we hear that ignorance is making progress in the House of Commons. It has to be said! When Members opposite want to score a few points, they make us feel guilty or make us look like fools. They say: It is unthinkable that we should vote for such a measure.

Bill C-62 may not be much, but at least it is a step in the right direction.

They were in office for fifteen years, but we will not brag about solving all problems. We will brag about taking the first step, then you will take the second, we will take the third, and so on. That is how a society is built.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hudon: Our first step will be so good that, if they are to take the second step, it will only be in 22 years from now.

They say they make us feel guilty. It was terrible listening to them this morning, as if we ought to hide behind our desks, ashamed of the Bill we support.

But you did not do a thing about equity, not a thing, no legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) has the floor he does not say anything relevant to the Bill under consideration.

I would therefore ask my friend the Hon. Member to speak to the Bill.

• (1600)

Mr. Hudon: As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, we are debating a closure motion and I am talking about closing something. Very well, I will get back to Bill C-62.

Mr. Tardif: You have nothing to say about the Bill—

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, might the Hon. Member be urged to speak to Bill C-62—

An Hon. Member: He does not even know what Bill C-62 is about—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I think the Parliamentary Secretary is referring to the closure motion we are debating and which all other Members have mentioned—

An Hon. Member: A point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): No, if I may, I should like to finish what I have to say. All or almost all Members who have taken part in the debate today did refer to it, including the first speaker this morning who practically did not talk about anything else during the ten minutes allotted to him.

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your intervention, especially as the first Member to speak this morning on the other side was the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), I believe, and the first thing he said was that the Government was doing a terrible thing in imposing closure, and I am now explaining why I agree with the closure motion.

An Hon. Member: It is not a closure motion: it is a time allocation motion.

Mr. Hudon: No? Mr. Speaker, we are now going to argue with the Liberal Party about the difference between a closure motion and a time allocation motion. This is what they did for 15 years: they argued about the difference between a closure motion and a time allocation motion.

As I was saying when I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, and I was moving along very nicely—I do not understand why they cannot hear me on the other side—what is going on now? People are made to feel guilty and are ridiculed. The Members Opposite should perhaps learn from this.

During the question period, and even now, Mr. Speaker, I can hear from my seat insults when certain Ministers are speaking—

Mr. Rossi: It is not true.

Mr. Hudon: —or when someone else is speaking. Because he used to sell cheese, they say that he stinks. Somebody attacks one Minister; someone else attacks another Minister. What kind of word did we hear at noon?

An Hon. Member: A neologism.

Mr. Hudon: Are we going to tolerate such a thing? No, Mr. Speaker. We shall later on study the bill in Committee—listen to this, you people watching television—we shall refer the Bill to a legislative committee where the same subject matter will be discussed and we shall come back to the House at the third reading stage with the same amendments. We shall be coming back to it.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the last few minutes we have to debate Bill C-62, I think we need to recognize that it is a—

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: You will not be coming back after the next elections.

Ms. Jacques: We shall see.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! Unfortunately, you are interrupting the speech of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) who would like to have the same opportunity as everyone else to express his views. If you please.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If Conservative Members wish to speak, they should not have voted for time allocation on this Bill. It would be nice if they would allow those who do wish to speak on this Bill to have a chance.

I would suggest that Bill C-62 should not so much be opposed as it should be exposed, exposed as a sham and as a hoax because it claims to do something when in fact it does nothing of the kind. Clause No. 2 of Bill C-62 reads as follows:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

Those are fine sounding words. In order to achieve employment equity, we need to have some special measures and that naturally would lead to the hope that this Bill would introduce some special measures, However, where are the special measures in it? It simply contains a system of reporting.

Back in 1978 the federal Government tried to establish a system of preferential hiring to ensure that native people had greater representation in federal Departments by sending out requests to all Departments. However, by June 1980, only 19 of 58 Departments had even complied with requests for action plans. This is what happened with the federal Government's own Departments, let alone other corporations.

In The Globe and Mail of September 28, 1985, Michele Landsberg quotes William McEwen, the Chairman of the Resources and Equal Opportunity Committee of the U.S. National Association of Manufacturers as saying the following:

> "There's no such thing as voluntary compliance with affirmative action laws. If voluntary compliance worked, Moses would have come down from the mountain with the Ten Guidelines."

Voluntary compliance just does not mean a thing. The system of reporting that the Government is introducing will not do the job either.

This Bill is a sham. I suspect that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) knows that it is a sham. Certainly, if she had stayed and listened to some of the participants in the Conference on Women that she attended last week in New York, she would know that. For example,

Judy Lichtman, the Executive Director of the Women's Legal Defence Fund in Washington said that she is very dubious about affirmative action programs that do not have fixed goals for employers. I quote the following from The Globe and Mail of November 15, 1985:

"In our American experience, we got no compliance until there was an enforcement mechanism."

Of course, there is no enforcement mechanism contained in this particular Bill.

Chaviva Hosek, President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, pointed out that this Bill is not going to work and that it is going to create the illusion that something has been done when in fact nothing has been done and therefore it is a step backward. She pointed out that in the United States where there is compulsory compliance with affirmative action laws, 36 per cent of middle-management jobs are taken by women as compared to the 17 per cent in Canada.

In defence of her weak and toothless Bill, the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that quotas become ceilings. I would suggest that the ceiling is high enough for almost all the women in Canada to be very comfortable at present. There has been no quota imposed at all. Even if there were to be a ceiling of 34 per cent, progress would be made over the 17 per cent that we have now.

I do not think we need to worry too much at the present about quotas becoming ceilings. We should at least have quotas put in place that could serve as floors. If later on they begin to act as ceilings, then we could deal with them at that time. To say that quotas serve as ceilings as an excuse for not putting in a system of compliance is, I think, a cop-out.

I am particularly concerned that this Bill does not address the employment equity needs of Indians, Inuit or Métis people. I would like to look at the situation of status Indian people in particular. Across Canada there are some 330,000 Indian people of status who are members of some 590 bands. One-third of those bands reside in remote communities with very few employment opportunities. Because of this, many Indian people have had to leave their reserves. The off-reserve population has doubled since 1966. Almost one-third of Canada's status Indians live off reserves.

The single most important reason Indian people leave their home communities to go to larger centres in because they are seeking jobs. Yet they leave remote reserves where there are no jobs and end up in Indian ghettos where they find that they have no opportunity either because the Government provides almost no services for off-reserve Indians. The Government no longer provides services to help Indian youngsters receive an education in terms of clothing and textbook allowances when they are attending public or high schools. It provides minimal help in terms of job placement and training and now that minimal help is being cut back.

A few weeks ago I met with some people from the Nanaimo Friendship Centre who were very concerned because the basic skills upgrading program was being cut. This program gave people a grade 10 equivalency. It meant that for the first time in their lives Indian people were able to qualify for work. This is now being cut. In its place we have instead a system of reporting which will lead absolutely nowhere.

The Abella Commission report stated that the Outreach Program was very effective in terms of reaching native people and helping them find work opportunities. However, the Outreach Program is now being cut back on.

Let us consider the situation of Indian women. They constitute a group which has been called doubly disadvantaged. It is interesting to note that 10 per cent more Indian women than men leave the reserve. This does not even account for those women who married other than Indian men and who lost their status under former Section 12(1)(b). Among Indian women there are four to five times as many single-parent families as compared to the general population. The income of these women is only 58 per cent of the income of non-Indian single-parent families led by women. Yet, the Government continues to renege on its promises to establish adequate day care for these people. How will Indian people benefit from any legislation which talks about reporting when they cannot even get basic training and day care which will enable them to go out and obtain jobs?

The legislation before us is completely inadequate for the type of job which it says it will do. We expose it as a sham. We want to see the Government bring in something which will lead to employment equity, a goal which this Party believes in, a goal which we believe is necessary for Canadians. It is a goal which will not be reached by the present legislation.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Keeper (p. 8197).

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to join in this extended debate on Bill C-62. The extra time we are giving to these deliberations reflects, to me, the importance of the topic to all Canadians.

The employment equity legislation will have a dramatic impact on the Canadian labour force—not dramatic in the sense of crisis or antagonism between special interests but, rather, dramatic in that for the first time Canadians long denied opportunities to participate fully in the economy will be able to contribute all of their skills and talents. These are not idle promises. In anticipation of this legislation businesses large and small are already calling Government offices to learn how they can apply employment equity principles to their operations. Believe me, this is good news to the millions of Canadian women, native people, members of visible minorities and disabled individuals. Something positive is happening at last. Individuals covered by the legislation are being given a chance to compete as equals.

The purpose of Bill C-62 is to provide for employment equity, that is, to guarantee everyone equal rights with respect to employment, advancement and remuneration. The legislation will require employers to implement employment equity and to demonstrate their progress by reporting annually on the results. What is wrong with that? To abide by the Bill's intent, as recommended by Judge Abella, objectives have to be set by and for each employer concerned. These objectives cannot be universal. We must consider the specific circumstances under which each business operates. The distinction between purpose and objective is very important. Matters cannot be taken in isolation. We must consider the general availability of qualified workers. Then, we need to take into account the availability of such workers within the designated groups. Finally, we need to look at whether workers are in the right location for the job.

For example, it is beyond dispute that there is an inexcusable lack of women in the engineering profession. We would like to see businesses hire more women engineers. However, when women represent only 6 per cent of all professional engineers, it would be folly to set quotas for individual businesses requiring them to hire women engineers in direct relation to the number of women in the general labour force.

I believe the Government is taking a far wiser approach. It is acknowledging individual needs and circumstances rather than setting arbitrary rules and procedures which would place both the private and public sectors into a straight jacket. It is like pointing a gun to a person's head. Yet, members of target groups need not worry that the lack of quotas can be used as an excuse for inaction. When employers covered by the legislation begin filing their mandatory reports in just a little more than two years, they will have to show that they are making constructive changes.

The data reports will enable the Canadian Human Rights Commission to play a key role in the enforcement of employment equity. Investigators from the Human Rights Commission will be able to use the reports as grounds to initiate investigations and then cover possible violations of human rights legislation. No longer will they be forced to wait for individuals or groups to file complaints. The Government has already committed itself to ensuring that the Human Rights Commission has the necessary resources to fulfil its mandate in support of employment equity.

These are major changes. Thus, it is only fair that the Government allows the private sector some time to get the systems in place and, ideally, take positive measures even before employers file their first reports. Yet, the changes will not be costly, which is an important aspect. Data from the United States shows that the reporting costs will probably amount to a little more than $1.50 per worker, a small price to pay to release the blocked talents of so many capable Canadians.

I am glad that many businesses are already discovering the advantages of employment equity. I agree that few enterprises paid heed when things were totally voluntary. However, we are now receiving some genuine interest well in advance of the implementation of this legislation.

I would ask Hon. Members to consider the case of the Westin Bayshore Hotel in Vancouver which has worked with the CEIC consultants. This business employs about 500 people. It took two people only one week to collect and analyse the data of the firm's workforce. The managers there say it takes only a small amount of their time to operate the employment equity program now that it is in place. That is a good sign. Executives at the hotel, and at other enterprises, are saying that they are pleased and surprised at how easy it is to make employment equity work. They are discovering the simple truth that equity actually helps to enhance productivity and profitability.

Bill C-62 requires that the affected companies implement employment equity and report annually on their workforce's composition. Similarly, associations and representatives of target groups covered by the legislation have a responsibility to work with their members to encourage them to acquire the necessary qualifications. I agree that this task is immense. There will be times of frustration, especially in making progress in the professions where it takes a substantial investment of time and effort to obtain the required skills. In this regard, the Government is ready to help out through programs in the new Canadian job strategy. There is support for training and skills development and projects, and proposals which take employment equity into account are going to receive priority attention.

I have been listening to Hon. Members of the opposition say they wish enforcement. That reminds me of what happens in a communistic state where everyone works. Everyone will work digging ditches, men, women, disadvantaged and all. However, we cannot enforce everything immediately. There is a great diversity of peoples and of employment opportunities.

Let me conclude with a simple but important observation. No Government can, or should, regulate every small element of economic activity. Our responsibility in this House is to provide a framework through which the economy can be as productive as possible, in an environment of social justice and fairness. Bill C-62 meets the high standards so essential to democracy. The legislation calls for real change and facilitates enforcement of human rights legislation against those who would try to defy the law's intent, but the most important and significant responsibilities must continue to rest with individuals and groups within our industries and communities. It is these Canadians; workers, employers and members of target groups, who will ensure the success of the employment equity objectives. We have a big challenge ahead, one of genuine opportunity for growth and change. I am confident that Bill C-62 is a major step in the direction of justice and equal opportunity for all and I urge other Hon. Members in this Chamber to join me in supporting its passage into law.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to participate in this debate, however, this particular motion we are debating is a closure motion. I listened to Hon. Members of the Government saying what a great system they have now in the House of Commons. They used to sit on the opposition side and castigate the Liberals for introducing closure motions or any kind of time allocation to debate. The Conservatives called the Liberals undemocratic. Those Conservatives are phonies. They are now in the Government and what are they doing? They have done it five times. They have the largest majority in Canadian political history and what they think they have to do is muzzle the opposition. Why do they need to bring in closure motions? There are only a total of 70 Opposition Members. There are 210 of them over there. Don't they feel like big bullies? Why do the Conservatives have to be the bully on the block? Why not give us a chance to debate the principle which is involved? It is an important principle and one which is not carried out in practice in the Bill.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) sits over here. I don't know how he ended up on my left. It seems to me he would be more appropriately placed on the right of Attila the Hun. He sees the communist threat in any kind of mandatory employment equity program. He really sees the danger of creeping communism. He is Jerry Falwell's disciple, sitting on my left.

Lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, in Ronald Reagan's America they have mandatory employment equity programs. It was only after they got those mandatory employment equity programs in the 1960s in the United States that things started to turn around for those females, visible minorities, native people and the handicapped.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): How about Pawley? Can he do it?

Mr. Rodriguez: We should look at the hypocrisy of the Liberal Party, on the other hand.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about Pawley?

Mr. Rodriguez: I am giving you an easy target.

Mr. McKnight: If you promise, I will listen.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about the Liberals, on the other hand?

Some Hon. Members: Where are they?

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, there he is.

The Liberals had a policy convention in Halifax and one of the big issues was providing equality for women in the Liberal Party. Do you know what happened, Mr. Speaker? I quote from an article in The Leader Post on November 9, 1985:

Senior Liberal women reacted angrily Friday to the Parties rejection of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and he gets into his point of order, may I point out to the House and to Hon. Members that I am not very surprised to be standing here listening to a point of order. It sems that it always happens on Thursday afternoons.

An Hon. Member: Especially when John is on his feet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Especially when certain persons are together in the House. Before we get into the point of order, I hope Hon. Members will bear what I said in mind.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, may I just ask that you be patient with me while I make my point of order which is, indeed, one of great importance. The Hon. Member from, I believe, Nickel Belt, said we had a policy meeting in Halifax. It was a reform meeting which his Party would do well to attend to and look after its own troubles. After all, we are only 22 per cent. We have to reform something. It was not policy, it was reform.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know how sensitive and touchy the Liberals are when one points out their foibles, their phoniness in attacking this piece of horse feathers which is called Bill C-62. The Liberals are accusing, quite correctly, that this Bill is phoney, but they are the biggest phonies because they cannot even practice equity in their own Liberal Party with respect to women.

Mr. Gauthier: Our President is a woman. How about you?

Mr. Rodriguez: Apparently when the motion was made to give women equal representation as elected delegates to the Liberal Convention, there were comments like this, and I quote: "One Ontario male youth delegate said the woman's proposal would give one group power to dictate to the whole Party". This is the kind of phoniness of the Liberal Party. When it was the Government it brought in closure. The Tories when they were in opposition used to protest. Today the Tories have brought in Bill C-62 to debate in principle, a Bill which really has no substance, which is all smoke and mirrors, as the Tories would say in the old days, and lo and behold, the Liberals are acting in exactly the same way they criticized. They do not want equity in employment any more than the Tories.

I look at this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and I want to unmask it for what it is, a piece of fluff, just smoke and mirrors. Bull feathers is what it is.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What is a bull feather?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a Tory floating to the ground.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), on behalf of all of agriculture in Canada, that "bull feathers" is not something we would find in that community.

Mr. Rodriguez: I thank the Minister. Clause 2 states, for example, that this Bill would be giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences. Yet it does not provide any special measures. The only mandatory part of this Bill is some kind of reporting process. This is a report card. No wonder the Tories want a protracted adjournment at Chirstmas and then start a new session.

I see the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has arrived and he feels moved to speak. He can do it on his own time, he should not do it on mine. I have been interrupted with points of order by the Minister of bow feathers, Members on my right and Members in the centre.

The only thing which is mandatory here is a reporting system. What do they report? Is there any punishment if, for example, a corporation does not ensure employment equity? No, of course not! This Government wants to give the impression it has something going on here. This is sleight of hand. I can think of other instances where there were reporting systems. Canadian corporations operating in South Africa were supposed to file a report of their employment practices in South Africa. What a joke that has been. Bata and Falconbridge, for example, have not reported in a decade. Yet the Government used to get up and say that we have a reporting system. The reporting system has broken down! Every time we have that kind of wishy-washy approach to important issues nothing gets done. In my own riding, for example, can you imagine a police force of 224 officers with one woman constable? The force interfaces with the native community in a negative way and there is not one native person on the force. There is not one visible minority on the force.

This Bill does not cover most corporations in this country so far as reporting is concerned, so why are we selling people a bill of goods? Why is the Government building up expectations? This is empty. A shell game. The Tories are masters at playing the shell game. They were in Opposition so long they learned it from the Liberals. The best thing that can be done with this Bill is that it be hoisted and not considered for the next six months. The Tories should go back and look at Judge Abella's recommandations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Miss MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Keeper, seconded by Mr. Young, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Keeper) which was negatived on the following division:

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH IN CANADA

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill S-5, an Act to provide for the creation by amalgamation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to say briefly that the amalgamation of the churches to form the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada is supported by all members of the two churches that are to be amalgamated. There is nothing controversial involved in this and we are serving a useful public purpose in passing this private members' Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Charest in the chair.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED STUDY OF TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study the current state of the tobacco growing industry in Canada, taking into account various financial and non-financial government-assisted options available for a rationalization of the tobacco sector of agriculture which might provide appropriate solutions for all interests involved.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today I want to talk to my colleagues regarding the problems of the tobacco industry. I am asking in my motion that we refer the issue to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for its consideration.

Let me say a few words about the history of the tobacco industry in Canada and explain some of the changes that have taken place in that industry and society in general. I will then conclude with some suggestions as to initiatives which might be considered by the Standing Committee on Agriculture in an effort to relieve some of the pressures we are seeing not only on the producers of tobacco but on the surrounding communities.

This question must be considered carefully from the point of view of the communities surrounding those parts of the country where tobacco is grown. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns), rose under Standing Order 22 this afternoon and offered some very valid comments. He said that an orderly reduction in production capacity is necessary in Canada in order to prevent damaging repercussions to growers.

I support what he said on behalf of his farmers in Cardigan. I want to add that not only are we concerned about the growers, but also about the communities that surround these growers. I believe I am not only speaking on behalf of my constituents in Oxford but also for those in the riding of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the riding of Elgin, and the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk, all of which are adjacent ridings. To a lesser degree, we have the same problem in a small area of Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Most Members will know that the history of tobacco growing began roughly 50 years ago when it became a significant industry, particularly in the area surrounding Tillsonburg, Delhi, Aylmer and Simcoe. Prior to that the area was largely sand and was useless for agriculture of any kind. When it was found that tobacco grew very well in this area, tobacco growers flourished as well as the surrounding communities.

Once the surrounding communities began to flourish, various support service industries began to develop in those various communities. As a result, for a number of years there has been a very vibrant and excellent economy in those areas surrounding the tobacco growers.

However, some changes have taken place which have threatened that economy. Let me refer to those briefly. Once that economic base was developed around the tobacco growers, a certain social fabric also developed as part of the community in which they work and live. The social situation in Canada has undergone some changes. In the last 10 years, we have noticed a decrease in the use of the product tobacco for smoking. In more recent years in both the United States and Canada, there has been a decline in the use of tobacco of about 2 per cent. I as a physician who believes that tobacco is harmful, as do by far the majority of people who are familiar with the health aspects of the use of tobacco, have to agree that the decline is desirable. I do not bemoan that decline but I do bemoan the fact that it is having a deleterious effect not only on the growers who deserve better treatment than that which they are receiving now but also on their communities. As soon as the growers begin to earn inadequate incomes, those who supply the growers and offer support services in the community begin to suffer.

● (1720)

If I may, I would like to read from one of the four western Ontario journals, the Western Ontario Business News. On page 1 of the September 23 edition, there appears the following:

It has required new marketing approaches and lent a sense of urgency to the search for new industries in communities like this town (Tillsonburg) of 10,000—

Tillsonburg happens to be in my riding but similar towns like Aylmer, Delhi, and Simcoe are all in somewhat desperate straits because of the rapid decline in the use of tobacco and the impact of that on all aspects of society in those communities. It is mainly because of that that I believe we should be addressing this problem in Parliament in an effort to help not only the producers make a transition into some other more useful type of agricultural pursuit but also to protect those people who have nothing directly to do with tobacco at all but are suffering extensively as a result of the severe drought.

I have already alluded to the health aspects of tobacco smoking. We do know, for instance, that the actual number of cigarettes smoked has gone from 69 billion in 1983 to just under 68 billion. It is a drop of roughly 2 per cent per year, as I already indicated.

From an economic point of view, the growers have also suffered because of the fact that our inflation rate, our cost of production and our lack of efficiency in many industries has led the price of tobacco on the foreign markets to be way out of line with the price of tobacco from other countries. We find that Latin American countries and some African countries are now able to produce tobacco at just a fraction of the cost for which we in Canada can produce tobacco. As a result of that, what were hitherto foreign markets that we could enjoy are now pretty well gone due to the price differential. Not only is there a health care factor and the costs related to the health problems caused by tobacco but there is also the economic factor of the decrease in foreign markets hitting tobacco growers all at the same time.

These two factors have come together on top of a history which has allowed for a very active economic growth in the communities affected for a number of years. Suddenly this growth is coming to an end. I would indicate to the House how one of the leading business people in Tillsonburg feels about this issue. Mr. Eugene Heath, owner of the Heath Department Store and also Vice President of the local Chamber of Commerce, had this brief word to say:

Tobacco has been instrumental in establishing Tillsonburg.

For that reason, I think it is incumbent upon us to take a look at this problem and see what we as a Parliament can do to obviate some of the hardships that are beginning to show already on the growers and those who are living in the communities affected.

I can cite, for example, the fact that a supplier to the tobacco industry, DeCloet Limited, which produces farm machinery for the tobacco industry, has laid off 79 of 140 workers in the last couple of years. We can see the effect this is having. The general impact on the growers themselves amounts to the fact that heretofore there were about 1,700 growers in the area but there are now only about 1,000 growers. This has occurred since 1976 because of the depression that has been suffered in the growing and particularly the sales of tobacco.

It is interesting to note what has happened to the manufacturing industry. Naturally, it surrounds to a large extent the area in which tobacco is produced. In 1985, the manufacturers indicated that they needed only 170 million pounds of tobacco compared to the 235 million pounds required the year before. No agreement was reached with the manufacturers so instead of having 170 million pounds being guaranteed by the manufacturers, they have now come up with an offer of only 135 million pounds guaranteed for this year. We can see that the growers are in quite a significant bind.

Let me go on to the next area which I believe is the important one. As a country generally composed of citizens who are compassionate toward each other, what can we do to assist these people in making a transition from growing tobacco, an industry which has been cut down to approximately half of what it was, to growing something else that is productive and will allow them to lead a normal life while at the same time not cause the communities to deteriorate in other ways? We can look at a number of initiatives that could be considered by the Standing Committee if and when this motion were to be referred to it.

I must say that one of the prime concerns of the growers is the establishment of a national marketing agency for tobacco. There have been a lot of misconceptions about this agency. I have received letters and I know the Minister has received many letters indicating to us that many people feel that this agency is designed to increase the selling of tobacco in the domestic market. If that is a significant point in favour of the national agency, it is not a big one at all and is perhaps one of the smallest.

The real reason to have a national agency is to give the growers a chance to combine together to maintain a price for their tobacco that will allow them a reasonable return on their investment. The second reason for trying to establish a national agency is the fact that it will provide an opportunity to help prevent imports into Canada of tobacco leaf from those countries which can easily undersell the producers here in Canada. Some people argue that it can also be useful for export trade but with the price of our tobacco at the present time, I doubt that we will see much of an increase in exports of our tobacco.

Previously this year, the House saw fit to pass the legislation necessary to have the National Farm Products Marketing Board hold hearings that would allow the agency to be formed. Unfortunately, those hearings have been completed but before the report could be transmitted to the Minister, it was stopped because of an injunction through the courts brought forward by the manufacturers' council. Of course, this is disastrous to the producers for this year because they are not going to be in a position to be able to market their product. I would hope that that is one of the initiatives that we recognize as being very important for the growers. This national marketing agency will help those who are still in the business maintain a level of return on their investment that is consistent with a normal way of life.

There are other important reasons why this motion should go to the committee for consideration. I think particularly of the concept of alternate crop development. There is no doubt that there is a capacity for alternate crops in the sandy soil that exists in that part of Ontario and other parts of the country. I have heard representations from Gary Balthus of Haldimand-Norfolk and from George Demeyere, a former Chairman of the Ontario Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers' Marketing Board. These people have shown a lot of initiative over the last couple of years in developing a plan that would see tomatoes to be used for tomato paste grown in this part of Ontario. They have now interested close to 30 farmers in this project. They have developed a real protocol for the development of this plant. It is interesting to note that Canada utilizes about 110 million pounds of tomato paste per year, yet we import 80 million pounds. The time is here to seriously consider the wisdom of trying to develop tomatoes to be used in the production of tomato paste as an alternate crop. We are told that the same plant which could be used for tomato paste at one time of the year could be used, with a few alterations, for the processing of additional crops such as strawberries to the tune of about $26 million per year. Of course, there will be some spin-offs if alternate crops can be developed for the area. There will be spin-offs in terms of machinery production, employment for the area and plant nursery operations.

The people who have proposed the Southern Ontario Tomato Co-operative Incorporated have offered to provide 1.5 per cent of their profits to the Delhi Research Station, a neighbouring federal research station, to work on these alternate crops. That bodes well for the attitude of the people in the area who are trying to help themselves out of a difficult problem.

We have heard talk in the past which has given rise to some misconceptions about the $90 million of advance payments which was recently granted by the Minister of Agriculture. This was a big help to the producers this year who have been unable as of yet to sell their crops. The conception around the country is that this was a $90 million gift to the tobacco growers. It was not that at all. It was simply a repayable loan. The producers are hoping to be able to sell their crops in order to be able to repay the loans.

Another interesting area which should be looked at in committee is with respect to help which can be given to the remaining tobacco industry in terms of our tax laws. Taxes on tobacco products both federally and provincially have been increasing at a rather rapid rate so that they far exceed taxes on most other products. I argue that is somewhat unfair since it is a regressive type of tax. People who smoke are penalized the most and they are the ones who can least afford it. I think it is regrettable that we have to see these taxes increase at the rate which they have.

In the United States there has been a move to allocate one cent of tax per package of tobacco to encourage growers to go into other industries. It is an attempt to help those in the tobacco industry out of this predicament. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should consider taking a certain amount of the large amount of tax revenue raised from tobacco products and allocate it to those growers who wish to become involved in the transition to another type of agricultural product. Not only would this be helpful in terms of encouraging growers to become involved in another type of industry, but it would be useful to the communities which surround these same industries.

I wish to make a few comments with respect to research and development which I think the Standing Committee on Agriculture might want to consider. There is need for a long-term study to be done with respect to what will happen to the tobacco industry over the next 10 years. It is estimated that although there are now 1,600 or 1,700 tobacco-growing farmers in Canada, in 10 years that number will most likely be reduced to approximately 800. These people have to be taken into account in society. We should be looking at ways and means to help them make adjustments.

The Delhi Research Station is situated in the sandy soil of Norfolk County. It has been performing research studies on tobacco and other products which can be grown in the area. We have been told by officials at the station that they are presently underfunded with respect to assistance which they could provide to tobacco growers who wish to diversify. They say that as little as $40,000 or $50,000 more would make a big difference in their program in order to increase their progress. They also acknowledge that what they call the new crop program is definitely underfunded.

Another area in terms of research which we should be pursuing and which has taken place in Carolina concerns the young green tobacco leaf which is one of the best known sources of a complete protein in the world. I am told it is a little expensive to extract the protein and make it ready for human consumption. Of course, what is needed in this respect is more research. I am told that there will probably be some resistance from other sectors of the economy with respect to spending money on this research. I refer to the soybean producers and perhaps others. If we know that the tobacco leaf is one of the best sources of protein I think it is deplorable that this matter not be pursued in a world which is going as hungry as the world in which we live. I suggest this is an area into which the committee should look. Perhaps it should encourage our Minister of Agriculture to allocate some funds to this research.

Finally, I would like to deal with another area of research which is being conducted at the Delhi Research Station. Research is being done with respect to the need to cut back on the tars which are present in tobacco which is still being grown. Research being conducted there may well reduce some of the hazards which exist in terms of the carcinogens found in tobacco smoke.

I would like to conclude by saying that in various provinces there were at one time flourishing industries with strong supporting communities which are now suffering badly. I think the compassionate nature of Canadians tells us that they would like to see these people helped into a more productive and acceptable form of work. I encourage Members of the House to agree to refer this matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that it can be given in-depth consideration. In this way we may be of some assistance to one sector of the community which is suffering very seriously.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support my colleague in what he has just said concerning this motion, and I cannot help remembering that Canadians not too long ago had the opportunity to learn about a somewhat contradictory situation.

The Government invested substantial amounts of money to support a campaign against the use of tobacco. It made a big fuss about the need for Canadian men and women to become aware of the dangers of tobacco, with the hope of seeing them reduced their smoking. At the same time, the Government was spending tens of millions of dollars to help tobacco growers.

I suppose that a great many Canadians have reacted the way I did and felt that these two initiatives were somewhat contradictory.

I think, however, that the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) deserves our support, especially when we realize the importance of this industry for Canada.

Our hon. friends opposite are blaming us, saying we are against everything for the sake of being against everything. Well, Mr. Speaker, when legislation makes sense and is relevant, as that introduced by my hon. friend certainly is, I think that my Party makes a point to support it and encourage it. I believe this initiative deserves all our encouragement and all our support if we stop for a few moments to appreciate the importance of the undertaking.

I was somewhat amazed to realize how many constituencies actually produce tobacco. Those constituencies are to be found in Ontario, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Those tobacco producing areas are in a relatively bad position to meet the changing demand for tobacco.

However, there are still many people directly involved in that industry, which for instance in the first half of 1985 was valued at $137 million, 69 per cent of which was in Ontario and 19 per cent in Quebec. And to go on with the information I have here before me, tobacco production was stable in 1985. All areas except Quebec experienced a decrease in the value of their tobacco production. More than 10,000 Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are permanently employed in tobacco production, and 40,000 other Canadians are provided with seasonal employment. And there are more than 7,000 people working in the processing of tobacco which is being done in approximately ten plants, both in Quebec and in Ontario. In 1983, 9 plants, 6 in Quebec and 3 in Ontario, produced a total of 63 billion cigarettes, which probably was much too high.

We are facing a situation that is quite contradictory in itself, as I must recognize. The fact is we must, on the one hand, try to help those tobacco producers, and also those communities that depend on them, that have grown in line with that production, that directly depend on it, and the future of which is closely linked with the performance of the tobacco industry. So the motion now before us proposes that the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study that question, through some sort of in-depth scrutiny, to derive some kind of expertise, and surely on future possibilites, on the present situation, so that we might take concrete steps to help those thousands of persons directly affected by that industry. The motion as such seems most commendable. It must be encouraged and supported, and such is the approach taken by this Party regarding this motion, as we give it our unreserved support.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the few moments to explain the support which we will be giving to this measure. We in my Party agree that this item should go to a committee for further discussion. We do this, however, in an attempt to make it very clear that the decisions which have to be made now by the Government should in no way await any decision by that committee. There are some very clear decisions which are on the desk of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) at the moment which require immediate action if the tobacco farmers in Ontario, the Atlantic Provinces and Quebec are going to survive another year or two years.

As the House has been made aware, the tobacco farmers are under a great deal of economic pressure at the moment because the Tobacco Manufactures Council—which is in effect a very well organized oligopoly working of a few very powerful companies which have decided to work together through that Council—have organized themselves to fight the attempt by the producers to form a National Marketing Agency. The permissive legislation for that Agency was passed in this House in the fall of 1984 and the farmers have hit road-block after road-block in implementing that plan and getting it to work. The most recent road-block was a court order by one of the justices of our court system who suggested that because the cost of production formula had not been submitted to cross-examination by the tobacco manufacturers, either the process should be reinitiated or the whole thing stopped entirely. The Cabinet now has a decision to make as to whether to appeal that decision through the courts or to direct its National Farm Products Marketing Council to reinitiate the hearings concerning the cost of production figures which are proposed in the plan. Either way, it will take some time and will probably mean that tobacco farmers will miss one more year of having the right to negotiate prices on a national basis and to have some control over imports.

That is extremely important when we look at what these 2,000 producers are up against. Over the years demand for their product has actually been holding or increasing slightly in Canada. Smoking is becoming less popular as the health effects are becoming better understood. Basically we produced some 58 billion cigarettes in the 1970s and we seem to be producing 60 billion or 61 billion cigarettes in the 1980s. Therefore the production has remained relatively stable. Yet we are told by the Tobacco Marketing Council this year that it only needs 60 million or 70 million pounds of a normal requirement of some 170 million to 180 million pounds. The proposition which is being put forward on the table indicates that the Tobacco Marketing Council is not particularly interested in this tobacco crop. The reason it is doing this is quite clear. It happens every time the farmers get the right to put forward a marketing plan. The buyers of that product do everything in their power to make certain that the plan does not get off the ground.

We have suggested to the Minister in this House that one of the ways, perhaps, he could help to ease the two parties toward the bargaining table would be to make it very clear to the Tobacco Marketing Council, the manufacturers, that if it chooses to pull out of the country—which is one of the threats it has thrown out a number of times—that brands of tobacco or products those particular companies choose to produce would no longer be permitted back into the country, for health reasons, trade reasons and a whole host of other reasons. The Minister has hesitated to make such a move. We have found that in order to make up the clearly understood shortfall of the manufacturers' production requirements in this country, they have been importing products from outside. That seems to be of concern both amongst health people and producers, perhaps for different reasons, but sometimes their interests are fairly common. They are concerned about pesticide residue in this imported product. The tobacco growers of Ontario had written to the Minister of Agriculture asking for upgraded analyses of imported tobacco for pesticide residue content, and they received a nice reply from the Minister on November 5 which said that officers from the agriculture inspection directorate of his Department will collect the sample material and forward it to the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food Pesticide Residue Laboratory at the University of Guelph for analysis. He said: "Officers of my Department will be in touch with you directly to co-ordinate their sampling activities with any special needs or interests that you may have". He had explained previously in the letter that it was a joint federal-provincial sampling agreement which was at work.

Some 10 days later another letter arrived on the subject of imported tobacco samples which came from the program officer, pesticides, Ontario region, who informed the board: "It has come to my attention that our tobacco sampling program must temporarily be put on hold. Customs officials in Ottawa have refused to provide the information required for timely sampling." We do not seem to be getting uniform messages from the federal Government with regard to this issue. The question that continues to arise is whether the Government is concerned and interested in setting up such a national program. Is it concerned about protecting producers in Canada? The actions to date are not clear, and I think that it is time that producers received a little more indication from the Minister of Agriculture, and from the Cabinet, that they are indeed serious about setting up this national agency.

This is important not only for agriculture but for consumers as well because it provides a means of monitoring the size of the crop and imports. This is an extremely important power to have in the hands of farmers when they know they are producing a commodity which has limited expansion possibilities. Without a national marketing board it will be chaos for those producers and towns and villages in tobacco producing areas. Without those powers they will not be able to restrict production in a way which will permit them to ease slowly into the production of other crops and out of tobacco. Without the protection of such an agency it will be the dog eat dog world of a big oligopoly or near monopoly picking off the smaller producers one after the other. Hundreds of tobacco producers will be forced out of business this year, several hundred next year, until the industry has shrunk to just a few producers. The producers themselves have been trying to do that in a more humane way by operating through a marketing agency to distribute the pain and permit the industry to shrink to fit the new health conscious consumers we have now.

Tobacco producers are attempting to fit their product to this new reality. As the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) noted, Canadian tobacco has one of the lower tar contents of any tobacco in the world. This means it has a slightly lower carcinogen level so there is somewhat less of a chance of contracting cancer of the lungs and related diseases due to smoking. I do not want to leave the impression that Canadian tobacco is necessarily good for you. There are 30,000 to 35,000 Canadians who die each year from tobacco-related diseases. About 5,000 of those people have not smoked but have had secondary exposure to smoke in private meeting rooms and in public places. About one-fifth to one-seventh of the people who contract cancer and related diseases are people who are not active smokers themselves. As well we have a cost to the economy each year of some $85 million in property loss due to fire started by careless smokers. Therefore, there are some very real economic and health reasons for phasing down smoking, and only a national marketing agency will permit producers to make the necessary adjustments without causing undue harm and hardship to their communities. They will be able to make the transition over a few years rather than having to decide whether they go bankrupt next year or not.

I hope that when this proposal goes to committee the committee's work will encompass not only production and marketing problems, and the shenanigans going on between growers and processors, but that it will also spend a considerable amount of time on the health effects of the use of tobacco. I hope it will look at possible changes to the tax laws which will have an impact both on the growers and users of tobacco.

The committee should also look at the use of tobacco advertising. From the roughly $300 million of product that the farmer sells there is generated just over $2 billion of economic activity through processing, taxing and advertising of tobacco products. Advertising is a very large part of that $2 billion. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has just begun an anti-smoking advertising campaign. It is a very small campaign and we should be looking at proposals to change the tax laws as they apply to advertising. Perhaps it is time to look at a system for reducing the amount of advertising dollars which can be claimed as legitimate expenses for tax purposes by tobacco companies. Perhaps we should place a surtax on advertising to raise money to produce a counter-advertising campaign as well as providing assistance to producers to get into new forms of agricultural production. These are some things the committee should look at when it sets out its terms of reference. I hope the committee is able to follow in the footsteps of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) who produced the report on tobacco and a part of the industry in 1971 and presented it to this House at that time. It is time to review the industry from production to final use, to look at the health effects, and look at a means of marketing which will permit producers to adjust to the new realities.

Because my time is nearly up and I am putting you to sleep, Mr. Speaker, I think we should stop at this point, vote on the proposal, which I understand will receive unanimous approval, and send it off to the appropriate committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—(A) POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF RESEARCH LABORATORY—MINISTER'S POSITION (B) BRIEF PRESENTED BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to raise a question which I feel is very important, in the circumstances.

The previous Member for Lotbinière, Mr. Speaker, was probably one of the most forceful defenders of the agri-food industry in recent years. He represented a riding where farming is the major industry, as it is in Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot and Drummondville, and the Member in question, and I am referring to Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois, worked very hard for the implementation of a project that was to be set up in his riding, at Victoriaville.

I am referring to the plant protection laboratory that was to be established for the purpose of enforcing the Plant Quarantine Act. It was a project worth $13 million, of which $12 million was to be financed from the Laprade Fund and $1 million from public funds allocated under the budget for Agriculture Canada.

The project was officially announced on June 13, 1984, and this announcement was followed by an Order in Council on July 11, 1984—I can even give the House the number: 794586—which made the project official.

• (1800)

The project as such would have had and was supposed to have a very positive impact on this farming district. I saw it as a sign that the agricultural industry in this riding, and in Saint-Hyacinthe and Lennoxville where other laboratories were set up, had attained the status it deserved. During the election campaign, the project was frequently discussed, and the present Member made a firm commitment that the project would be implemented in the weeks following his election. Surprisingly, today it is November 21, so it was a year ago on September 4, when I put a question recently to the Minister, the Hon. Minister for Agriculture (Mr. Wise) answered, and I quote: "Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have sufficient information to respond specifically about the project to which the Hon. Member refers. I am very happy to take notice of the question and will get back to the Hon. Member."

This was not a project worth $30,000, $35,000 or $50,000, Mr. Speaker. This was a project worth $13 million with spin-offs in terms of very good jobs for 50 technicians and 15 scientists, not to mention the supporting staff and all the indirect benefits . . . This is a project worth $13 million, and all the Minister of Agriculture can reply is this: I do not know. I do not have the information.

Mr. Speaker, this makes me wonder about what the present Hon. Member has been doing for his riding. Instead of coming to my riding and telling my constituents that the federal Government would richly subsidize industrial motels, which is not the case, I think that he should limit himself to defending the interests of his riding and make the necessary representations to his Minister, because it seems to me totally unacceptable that the Minister of Agriculture should not be aware of a project worth $13 million which had been planned for Victoriaville.

There had been an announcement. The Treasury Board had approved the expenditures and civil servants had even taken steps to find the proper site. Now, a year and a few months after this announcement, the Minister makes the following statement: I do not know what it is all about. I am going to find out and get back to the Hon. Member in due course.

This is an insult to a great many people who have been waiting for this project and are dependent upon it being carried out. Under the previous administration, we had put together two projects which I felt had extremely important benefits. There was the Mapping Centre in Sherbrooke and the Plant Health Centre in Victoriaville. These were two regional projects which would have established the economic importance of the greater Eastern Townships and Bois-Francs area. And of those two projects, one is being questioned and the other one is unknown in Ottawa.

I think that under the circumstances, I am not being petty when I ask myself certain questions and when I say that I have some reservations about what has been done, because if I had a $13 million project for my riding, you can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that I would harass the Minister, I would raise the matter with him day after day until a final decision is reached. Will it be built or not?

• (1805)

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) cannot be faulted for not responding immediately when the question was put to him on October 31. As Hon. Members know, when specific questions are raised during oral questions period, Mr. Speaker himself does not usually allow five- or ten-minute answers to any given question.

So the Minister simply said that he would eventually get back to the Hon. Member, and we now have the opportunity to do so this evening.

As the Hon. Member would know, the Minister of Agriculture reviews his programs on a regular basis to make sure they are still appropriate and meet the requirements of the industries for which they are designed.

One of the programs under active consideration has to do with the protection of vegetables and related quarantine facilities. The mandate of the Department is to prevent the introduction and spreading of agents which might be harmful to the production and marketing of plants and their products. We must also ensure that all farm and forest products likely to harbour phytoparasites meet the quarantine standards of importing countries.

The departmental study committee includes representatives from the private sector. That sector does not act lightly. Canada's achievements in that sector are highly esteemed everywhere, and it is my view that we must maintain that high level of quality.

The number and the location of inspection points for crops under plant quarantine are included in the list of problems identified by the comittee, Mr. Speaker.

The committee also looks into the way the program's scientific support services are distributed to optimize the ratio of inspection and program staff to the scientific support staff. This is something not to be done lightly. I appreciate that as a crash action, the previous Government, perhaps to get the support of people in that area, wanted to announce a project to get votes. That may have been so, but people were not misled.

There is also a sub-committee that is now looking into how and where this project is to be undertaken.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, we took specific measures to make sure that the right location is chosen. Consider also the fact that the site which had been selected and which still has not been rejected up until now, gave rise within that very committee and within the private sector itself, to certain difficulties linked with its remoteness with respect to transportation, from some areas. This was not raised by us but by the private sector, which you have a duty to represent, as I do, and as does each and every Member in this House.

In view of the fact that this Government is also making every effort to control its expenditures, something the previous Government was not doing . . . They found it easy to announce projects, because with a running deficit that had reached $200 billion, $13 million did not make that much difference. But this is not the way we—

The private sector is asked to invest, the Government joins in, perhaps not to the least possible extent, but still it must join in so that projects are carried out, but it is not the Government's role to always assume the financial responsibility for all those projects.

Mr. Speaker, that project should . . . by the end of the fiscal year, we will have a final answer concerning the location of that centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted.

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.08 p.m.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the week before we adjourned, the issue of Canada's sovereignty dominated the concerns of many Canadians. Despite repeated calls from the Opposition for the Government to come clean and tell the people of the country what will be on the table when free trade talks begin with the United States, the Government seemed satisfied with the answers it provided, as circumspect as they were. The country still wants a clear definition of what is vital to the national identity.

With the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saying one thing and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) saying another, it is no wonder Canadians believe the Government is either confused or covering up its real intentions.

Culture is the essence of sovereignty, Mr. Speaker. It is not a commodity that can be changed for the questionable favours of a neighbour. To put culture on the auction block is to put a "for sale" sign on our independence. The Government has already thrown out its own policy with respect to the book publishing industry to keep American interests happy. What next, Mr. Speaker?

Culture is a great contributor to the national wealth, spiritually and economically speaking. The Secretary of State for External Affairs says free trade talks could help the cultural industry grow and prosper by opening up the American market. Later he contradicted himself, saying that protectionist measures in the United States are the type that can be altered by the American Government. Why the indecision, Mr. Speaker? Culture is not a minor economic factor. The combined cultural industry is the fourth largest employer in Canada. The Government should immediately state that the cultural industries are not to be bargained away. Instead, our objective should be to increase—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

AIR SAFETY

LONG-RANGE RADIO NAVIGATIONAL SYSTEM—CALL FOR EXPANSION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canada's current non-directional beacon air navigation system places Canada in the steam age of flight. In this day and age air travel is a necessity, and all parties involved in this mode of transportation, including our federal Government, should be concerned with increasing air safety.

The Loran-C, long-range radio navigational system, is well proven and is a highly accurate system whose service, if extended, would increase air safety across the country. The aviation management committee of the Roads Transportation Association of Canada recently passed a resolution supporting the expansion of the Loran-C system. This system has the support of the provinces and the territories. The United States is currently testing Loran-C, with the U.S. National Association of State Aviation officials campaigning for its adoption.

With 55 per cent of flights in this country made below 5,000 feet altitude, and 58 per cent made under visual flight regulations, how can the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and his Department be strongly considering the Omega VLF system which is too expensive for the majority of general aviation pilots to consider?

The provinces see the need to adopt the Loran-C system. It is time for the federal Government to wake up to this need and improve air safety in Canada by extending the Loran-C system.

FINANCE

CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Canada's farmers, business people and investors were justifiably pleased when our Government introduced the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. On Budget Day this measure was greeted with a standing ovation in Parliament and resounding support across the country.

But what do we hear now, Mr. Speaker? From the opposition benches there is an open attack on both the principle and content of the capital gains tax exemption. Most recently in this House the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) boldly stated that our Government should rescind the capital gains tax measure. It would appear that in his zeal and enthusiasm, the Opposition Leader has forgotten the thousands of farmers and small business people who will benefit from this measure.

How can this big city corporate lawyer callously turn his back on the farmers and small-business people, particularly those in my area of western Canada?

Next door to the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, in the Party of perpetual righteousness, the NDP, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) told the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix newspaper this summer that the capital gains tax exemption was too generous for farmers, and he objects to the fact that it applies to other business gains.

Although the NDP is not in touch with reality at the best of times, on this occasion its members have shown their contempt for the initiative and spirit of free enterprise and business. Again, in trying to make the rich pay, these socialists are jeopardizing the very fabric of the Canadian way of life.

The Government is serious about the capital gains tax measure, and despite the misdirected efforts of the Liberals and the NDP, we will fight to save the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

NON SMOKING AREAS AND SMOKING BAN ADVOCATED

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, so much has been said, written, and discussed about this matter that I am reluctant to raise it in the House. I do so precisely because, while so much has been said, so little positive demonstrative action has been taken within our own definable area of responsibility.

I am speaking, Mr. Speaker, about the lack of enforced no-smoking areas in our parliamentary restaurant, our cafeterias, our committee and caucus rooms. While I do not quarrel whatever with the right of anyone to smoke, I know that smokers also agree that everyone has the right to breathe clean, toxic-free air.

One study has pointed out that in a smoke-filled room over an eight-hour period non-smokers will inhale as many noxious fumes, tars, nicotine and carbon-monoxide as they would by smoking cigarettes in the same period. That would make a non-smoker a two-pack-a-day person.

I would ask, in an attempt to protect the health of all Members and employees of this House, that early steps be taken to designate at least no smoking areas in all dining facilities, and to ban outright smoking in all committee and conference rooms where ventilation is either inadequate or non-existent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

RECOMMENDATION THAT CLAUSE 5 OF BILL C-70 BE AMENDED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the committee report on Bill C-70 is to be tabled later this day. As is well known this Bill is inhuman and unacceptable not only because it will deindex family allowances but especially because, under Clause 5, the Minister seeks discretionary powers to issue a presumption of death certificate to a family whose child has disappeared.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members—Tories included—seemed to be opposed to calling this Bill.

I would therefore urge all Conservative Members in the House to pressure the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) so that for once he will show compassion by introducing an amendment whose purpose would simply be to advise families of missing children to close the file rather than have the Minister issue a certificate presuming the demise of the child.

Mrs. Sirois' child has been missing for a year and yesterday she stated she will never accept that a Minister might declare him dead, because she still hopes her child will be found alive.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all Conservative Members to make strong representations to the Minister so that the Department might find a more acceptable and more human approach since this certificate can only—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

MUTUAL BALANCED VERIFIABLE NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREEZE PROPOSAL

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, at the very time President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev were meeting in Geneva, Canada failed once again to take up an opportunity to break the momentum of the nuclear arms race. At the United Nations First Committee, Canada voted no to a mutual, balanced, verifiable nuclear weapons freeze. Like the Liberals before them, Conservative Members continue to reject the almost universal call for the nuclear superpowers to freeze the testing, development, and deployment of nuclear weapons.

This year at the First Committee, our friends, including Australia, Norway, Denmark and New Zealand voted in favour of a freeze. A total of 113 countries supported the freeze and only 11, including Canada, voted against it. Despite the fine words of peace of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the earlier record of Canada's Disarmament Ambassador who supported a freeze when he was a Conservative Member of the House only two years ago, Canada has failed to take even this modest action to halt the nuclear arms race.

Canada can and must do more for peace than send the Prime Minister to Brussels to be debriefed by President Reagan. It is time for initiative and action. At the very least Canada should support the initiatives being taken by others at the U.N. and elsewhere. I urge the Government to change its vote when the freeze issue comes before the General Assembly of the U.N.

AIR SAFETY

EFFECT OF AIRLINE DEREGULATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, Dennis McDermott, President of the Canadian Labour Congress, made a statement on CTV's Question Period on Sunday to the effet that the recent increase in air accidents in the United States occurred as a result of its deregulation of the airlines. I feel that he is exploiting the public's natural fears regarding air safety, either in the cause of some personal vendetta or on the basis of a total lack of understanding of a very complex problem.

No union head in the United States has made statements comparable to those made by Mr. McDermott. Perhaps he is not aware of the fact that deregulation will create many new jobs in safety and in operations, and will bring flying within the reach of millions more Canadians.

The fact is that there has been no increase in accidents involving fatalities in the United States, or elsewhere in the world, in spite of our pereceptions based on the two recent tragic and terrible crashes and the fact that traffic has increased greatly. However, the United States is under fire for having failed to increase its safety facilities and personnel in proportion to increase traffic. I can tell Mr. McDermott that we will not make the same mistake.

Our record since partial deregulation over a year ago shows no increase in accidents in spite of increased airline activity. A perception of increased accidents has probably arisen because what are called incidents or near-accidents have been reported mandatorily since last June. As well, we are even now in the process of designing supplementary new radar equipment to improve air safety. Safety has been and remains our number one priority.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROPOSAL TO BUILD MICRO-CHIP RESEARCH CENTRES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the future success of practically all Canadian businesses will depend on their ability to develop or adopt innovations based on semiconductor technology. It is in this context that the Canadian Micro-electronics Corporation submitted its business plan a few days ago. The plan recommends the building of two advanced microchip research centres with the main purpose of training engineers and scientists in leading edge semiconductor technology.

The CMC plan calls for $155 million to be spent over five years to set up two centres designed to work on advanced silicon production techniques and process technology. Technology developed through these centres will be translated into the creation of wealth and new jobs. Economic analysis shows that 100 jobs in semiconductor research and development lead to over 31,000 jobs in the rest of the economy.

I urge the Government to consider favourably the proposals of the CMC. Investment in intellectual capital now will have high returns for our country's economic well-being and will enhance productivity and create new industrial opportunities. The business plan recommends Ottawa-Carleton as the best location for one of the research centres. I applaud this choice and strongly recommend that the Ottawa-Carleton region be considered for one of the facilities. It has the right infrastructure and expertise at hand to meet the challenges set by the microelectronics industry.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED RELOCATION OF ANIMAL PATHOLOGY LABORATORY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, recently citizens of the Town of Sackville in my constituency were informed that the federal Government intends to relocate the Animal Pathology Laboratory of the Department of Agriculture from Sackville to Charlottetown, a move which will likely cost the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $10 million.

Although the relocation is not scheduled to take place immediately, it is nonetheless a very serious blow to the Town of Sackville. In fact it would represent a loss of 18 jobs to a town already devastated by two important closures, not to mention the loss of part of its Canadian Wildlife Service staff, compliments of the former Minister of the Environment.

The laboratory was established in Sackville in 1948 for important reasons, but primarily because of the location and the presence of Mount Allison University. These reasons still exist today. The reason given by the Government for the relocation is that the lab should be located closer to the new veterinary college being built in Charlottetown. That reason is not good enough.

The Government says it wants to reduce the deficit and control unnecessary expenditures. It says that it is opposed to the costly relocation of facilities. Why then will it not act in this instance and cancel the proposed relocation of this facility? The taxpayers of Canada will approve—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NORTH AMERICAN AIR DEFENCE

CANADIAN POSITION ON PARTICIPATION IN UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. However, before I start I would like to say that this morning some members of the NORAD sub-committee were shocked when representatives from the Canadian branch of the Physicians for Social Responsibility, who are concerned with the prevention of nuclear war, and are recipients of this year's Nobel Prize, were gravely insulted and could not finish their presentation for peace to the committee. This was terrible, especially at a time when Canadians are pleased that, after a long period of cold relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, the two superpowers finally met in Geneva to start rebuilding the bridges for peace.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Chrétien: We are happy because of the vital rapprochement at Geneva this week. Is it the intention of the Government to pursue this rapprochement and to make sure that, through the NORAD agreement, Canada will be in a position to state clearly that we will not participate in any form of deployment of the star wars program, which is presently a stumbling block to any meaningful rapprochement between the Soviet Union and the United States?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the NORAD agreement which is now in existence is the agreement which was designed and negotiated by the previous administration of which the hon. gentleman was a member. That agreement is quite clear in its terms. It is not inconsistent with the often stated policy of the Government that there will be no Government-to-Government participation with the United States in the Strategic Defence Initiative but that it is a prudent course for the U.S. to be following at this time.

[Translation]

STAR WARS—CANADA'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, could the Deputy Prime Minister give the House the assurance that, at a time when we are negotiating renewal of the NORAD agreement with the United States, it is imperative that no activity should be deployed in Canada that would make us clear participants in star wars, since the Government has clearly established that even if we were in favour of this research which we do not want to do but the Government wants to do, the NORAD agreement would never allow the United States to use Canadian territory to further its strategic defence initiative?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is searching for a linkage which is simply not there. He knows that as one of the Ministers of the day who supported the agreement as it now stands. He also has, as do all Members of the House and the Canadian public at large, the repeated assurances of the Government that it is not the intention of the Government of Canada to participate on a Government-to-Government basis in the Strategic Defence Initiative. Equally often stated has been the Government's position that the U.S. pursuit of the Strategic Defence Initiative is prudent at this time.

REQUEST THAT REGISTRATION SYSTEM BE ESTABLISHED FOR CANADIAN COMPANIES PARTICIPATING IN STAR WARS PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he intend to consider a proposal according to which Canadians will be informed of any steps being taken by Canadian businesses to take part in the star wars research program? Is the Minister of National Defence prepared to consider setting up a system to register all companies that will take part in this research program, so that we will have accurate and public information on who these companies are and whether they are receiving assistance from a Government agency?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, by its very wording the question is hypothetical and based on an assumption which may or may not occur. I can only repeat once again that it is not the intention of the Government of Canada to engage on a Government-to-Government basis in the strategic defence Initiative of the United States.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DECISION ON IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister for International Trade is not in this Chamber, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Anti-Dumping Tribunal's report was used to justify lifting the quotas. Now, anyone who has read this report will realize that the conclusions arrived at are entirely at odds with the content of the report, which is absurd and an insult to the intelligence of Canadians.

Why did the Government follow these recommendations when it had the legal and constitutional authority to circumvent these conclusions and make a decision to safeguard the 20,000 jobs that are at stake?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman raises more of a debate than he does a question. The question was answered yesterday by the Minister for International Trade at which time the House heard him say that the policy was based on the conclusions in that report. The Hon. Member may take a different view, but that is the view of the Government which has been stated by the Minister in response to questions and in his statement earlier this week.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT HAS NOT TAKEN JOBS AT STAKE INTO ACCOUNT

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The second justification for the decision was the interests of the consumer. However, the Government knows perfectly that according to a study, eight out of ten Canadians supported the quota policy. It was also estimated that it will cost $3 billion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Tardif: Considering the present circumstances, why did the Government not make its decision exclusively in terms of the 20,000 jobs at stake in the footwear industry?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again the hon. gentleman's question is more of a debate than it is a question seeking information. He heard the Minister in response to questions which have been asked of him this week stress the importance of the consumers of Canada with respect to this decision. I heard him say, as I am sure the Hon. Member did as well, that there would be a savings resulting to the consumers of this country, 25 million of them, of half a billion dollars.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GENSTAR TAX RULING—AMOUNT OF TAX LOSS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we received no answer on the implications of the Genstar tax ruling so I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance a question. Before the tax ruling was made, did the Minister of State for Finance, or her Department, conduct a study on the tax lost to the people of Canada on this particular ruling? If she did, what was the amount of that tax loss? If she did not, why didn't she?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that that is not a subject which we, or any other Government, could responsibly discuss in this House. The amounts on tax rulings are confidential information. The tax ruling was made under the existing law within the purview of the Minister of National Revenue.

EFFECT ON REVENUE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the Genstar decision and the Government's change to capital gains legislation, the Minister's own tax expenditures from the last Budget indicate that this could cost well in excess of $1 billion. I don't think it is unrealistic to say that the implications of this tax ruling are horrendous in terms of lost tax. Is the Minister saying to us that she, or her Department, did not bother to carry out any investigation at all into what this was actually going to cost the taxpayers of Canada?

• (1125)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this Government did a great deal for tax fairness in the last Budget by closing some less legitimate measures, and the Hon. Member knows what they are. This is an ongoing process with us. Our departmental officials are constantly looking at tax policy and the implications not only for revenue but for fairness.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we found over the last couple of days, with the tax book coming out, that the number of Canadians in upper-income brackets not paying any tax at all increased 48 per cent over the previous tax year. Once again this particular ruling will result in many, many more people not paying tax.

I want to ask the Minister for the last time, is she saying to us that when the Government makes a tax ruling there is no calculation and no study, that it is an open-ended situation in the sense of what it will cost the taxpayers of Canada? We have seen a billion dollars given away time and time again in other tax rulings in the last few months. Is this an ongoing process?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do hope that this is the last time the Hon. Member asks that question. I would like to point out that it is this Government which said there will be a minimum tax in this country for the first time. The Minister of Finance has already assured this House that those provisions will be available very soon. The elimination of tax shelter financing on yachts and hotels, as well as action on the scientific research tax credit are just some of so many things this Government has done in the Budget. We are doing that on a continuing basis.

GOVERNMENT'S DECISION—INQUIRY IF PROVINCES CONSULTED

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Government's decision concerning footwear imports will have a very serious impact on the provinces which will be called upon to assume its social costs, could the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether, before making this decision, the Federal Government had consulted the provinces and, if so, what their position was?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman, indeed all Members of the House, would understand that I would not know the extent of consultations which took place between the Minister of International Trade and the provinces on this issue.

Mr. Ouellet: Why not?

Mr. Nielsen: I can take that question as notice and bring it to his attention. Why not? Because the responsibility for conducting those conversations and consultations with the provinces lies with the appropriate Minister.

[Translation]

INQUIRY CONCERNING MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. On the same subject, it is a well known fact that there will be many adjustment problems. Could the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether the Government intends to extend the mandate of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board for the purpose of allowing the affected communities and the laid-off individuals to adjust?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I can only draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the responses given yesterday by the Minister of International Trade when he outlined in some detail, I believe, the attention being paid to caring for the workers concerned should any disruption be caused as a result of this decision.

INCOME TAX

EFFECT OF TAX RULINGS ON INDIVIDUAL TAXPAYERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. Does she think it reasonable that low and middle-income Canadians should be asked to pay more income tax this year and next year and the year after while people like Genstar and O&Y have been able to use the tax system to avoid paying in excess of $1 billion in tax which ought to be paid to ease the burden on those very people?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, this Government has moved to help low-income people in a number of ways. I remind the Hon. Member about the change in the child tax credit. One of the things which I think is grossly unfair and misleading is a political Party which sends out envelopes that say "Taxation Notice" on the outside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

● (1130)

Mr. Deans: That does not match a political party which says it is going to bring about tax fairness and then imposes higher taxes on low-income Canadians and gives more to those who have.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): We now know that there are almost 50 per cent more Canadians earning over $50,000 who are paying no tax. We now know—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please! Just a question, please.

An Hon. Member: How's the Cadillac these days?

Mr. Deans: Very good, by the way. It cost me $5,000 second hand.

Does the Minister think it is fair that, having promised to put a minimum tax on those who paid no tax, the Government has allowed that group to increase by 50 per cent and, at the same time, allowed the corporate sector to rip off the public by more than $1 billion during the Government's first year in office?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised that the Hon. Member continues to raise this issue. Even today the papers quote the Canadian public as saying that the private sector is the place where jobs should be created. They have more confidence in the private sector than they have ever had before. We, too, have confidence in the private sector. That is where the jobs that we have been creating are coming from and they have been permanent, long-term jobs.

Mr. Riis: Genstar paid no tax at all.

Mr. Deans: No tax at all.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about tax fairness. The Government has done more for tax fairness and for job creation than any other Government.

Mr. Deans: Nonsense.

Ms. Jewett: It hasn't done a thing.

Mr. Deans: You shovel money to all your friends and rip off everybody else.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I liked you better with your moustache.

Mr. Deans: Typical Tories.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are no typical Tories; they are all lousy Tories.

Mr. Speaker: Please.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

CAPE BRETON ADVISORY BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I point out to him that the situation on the Island of Cape Breton has reached crisis proportions. Many thousands of people are unemployed and many thousands are turning to welfare.

Can the Minister explain to the House why it has taken in excess of 58 days for the recommendations of the Cape Breton Advisory Board, which was appointed by the federal Government and the Government of Nova Scotia, to be acted upon? It made 34 recommendations. I ask the Minister to inform the House why there is this delay when the situation in that economy is so devastating.

Hon. Jack Murta (Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I, as well as all Members of the House of Commons, sympathize with the concern which the Hon. Member has expressed. As the Member knows, the Government is committed to working toward development in the Cape Breton area. We are working as hard and as fast as we can. The Member's concern will be duly noted by the Minister. I assure him that we are doing everything possible to bring as much development and activity as possible into that area of Canada.

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—CANADIAN NATIONAL RAIL CONTRACT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In July of 1984 the Prime Minister made a commitment with regard to the Sydney Steel Corporation. As the Minister knows, the Premier of my province has been talking about a long-term contract for the supply of rails to CN. Would the Minister inform the House today what has taken place with regard to discussions between the Premier and the Minister with regard to Sysco supplying rails to CN?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that CN has been purchasing most of its rails from Sysco. Ongoing discussions have been taking place between CN officials and Sysco officials. I can assure the Hon. Member that, to the extent possible, CN will continue acquiring rails from Sydney Steel.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCOME TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. With regard to the horrendous matter of tax discounting, why is the Government allowing an American company, H&R Block, to rip off Canadian taxpayers through vicious tax discounting when it is forbidden by law to do so in its home country?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to my hon. friend that we have of course been involved in a great many consultations over the past few months throughout the country. We have announced a series of measures to correct the shortcomings of the system already in place. Moreover, we have announced the Government's intentions to protect the interests of Canadians, especially those with the lowest incomes.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE REPEALED

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must know that anti-poverty organizations and consumer organizations in Canada have rejected his so-called solution.

Mr. Riis: Everybody has.

Ms. Jewett: In view of the fact that tax discounting was created by law by the previous Government in 1978, why in the world can the Government not "uncreate" it by law today?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think we have announced a policy which gives consumers the right to equity and freedom of choice.

REBATE DISCOUNTERS—AMENDMENTS CONCERNING INCOME TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—I should say of Corporations.

Unfortunately, the Minister did not have enough courage and decided once again to compromise.

Firstly, could the Minister tell us why he did not have the guts to do as the Quebec Government did and ban discounters completely, and secondly, can he explain his announcement concerning amendments to his income tax credit scheme when the Minister of Finance says the opposite?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered the question.

As I said, we want to give consumers the right to a certain equity as well as a freedom of choice.

HIGH INTEREST RATES—REQUEST FOR APPLICATION OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, under the Criminal Code any lender who charges over 60 per cent interest computed annually is guilty of a criminal offence. [Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, if my colleague could be aware of all the terms and conditions of that policy, he would know that this announcement involved measures whose costs would be entirely within the limits allowed under the Criminal Code.

INSURANCE

UNITED CANADA COMPANY—TRUCKING COMPANIES' POLICIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With the seizure of the assets of Carrier Insurance by authorities in the United States, the Canadian subsidiary, United Canada, is left with no reinsurance other than a $2 million trust fund. Since United Canada insures about 40 per cent of the Canadian trucking industry, can the Minister explain the insurance status of these trucking companies? Are their liability and accident policies still in effect and, more important, are they viable?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, those policies are still in effect. This has obviously been a problem for the trucking industry and I understand its concern. I will be meeting with representatives of the industry later this morning. I have been steadily in touch with the industry this morning to attempt to come up with a solution.

ROLE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): In recognition of the Government's obligation to the protection of the public in these instances, what instructions, if any, have been given to the Superintendent of Insurance in the event of a series of large liability claims due to a spill or other such expensive accident which would use up the reinsurance trust?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the company has assets of its own so there will continue to be coverage beyond that which has been indicated in the press. I will be exploring a number of options for solutions with the trucking people. The Superintendent of Insurance is steadily in touch with the industry and is developing solutions now.

AIR TRANSPORT

MERGER OF EPA AND CP AIR OPERATIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister must be aware of the takeover of Eastern Provincial Airways by CP Air. The operations of EPA in Atlantic Canada will be merged with CP in 1986. There is a growing concern in Atlantic Canada that jobs will be lost in this merger.

Will the Minister examine the proposal for the merger of the operations of EPA and CP Air and take whatever steps he can to ensure that jobs maintained in Atlantic Canada with EPA, particularly at the Halifax International Airport?

• (1140)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern. Currently there is some restructuring of the airline industry throughout Canada. I note that while there has been a rumour that Air Maritime is going to be closing its operations, nothing official has been received by the CTC.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that there are several other carriers that are willing and anxious to get involved in providing that service, namely, Air Atlantic and Air Nova. Both have already applied to provide that service. Of course there will be new jobs created by those companies which will engage in that service.

TOURISM

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF JOINT STUDY GROUP TO DETERMINE BEST ORGANIZATIONAL STRUCTURE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Tourism, who has just returned from a federal provincial conference which I hope was successful.

My question concerns the National Tourism Conference held recently in Ottawa, where 350 members of the industry unanimously supported the following recommendation:

[English]

"We recommend that a joint industry-government task force be formed to determine an appropriate organizational structure for the tourism industry throughout Canada". Will the Minister act on this recommendation and, if so, when?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. We have acted on that issue and, as the Member knows, shortly after Question Period I will be making a statement on the tourism conference.

We have agreed to set up a group to study advertising from a national point of view, both provincially and territorially, along with the industry. Hopefully it will be in operation within a month.

GOVERNMENT'S PLANS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the industry representatives recommended a task force to look at the organizational structure of tourism. Is the Minister saying that such a task force will be formed?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, rather than setting up a task force to look at the whole question of the organizational structure of tourism, we are studying the tourist industry on a more specific basis. We have agreed to set up a working group who will look at the cultural aspects of tourism and how that can be promoted in a more beneficial way for the country. It will report back to the Governments involved and the people involved in multiculturalism and other cultural industries so that this asset which we believe is very beneficial to Canada can be given a greater profile in terms of advertising.

HEALTH

REPORTED APPROVAL OF DEPO-PROVERA AS CONTRACEPTIVE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Women are concerned about the imminent approval of Depo-Provera as a contraceptive in Canada, by the Department of National Health and Welfare. They would like the Minister to intervene and hold public hearings into this matter.

Is the Minister prepared to do that, particularly in light of the fact that Depo-Provera has been refused approval as a contraceptive in the United States because of a lack of adequate research? Furthermore, does he see the irony of two men in the Department of National Health and Welfare advocating a contraceptive with which women would take the risk?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the issue brought forward by the Hon. Member. Some of his points are valid but they are not all based on the actual case.

His concerns and the American example which he gave are valid. However, when he says that the decision is to be made shortly, or that additional information will not be required, I say that it will be some months yet. I remind him that a regulatory process takes place first.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister be a little more clear? Will he approve public hearings before there is any contemplation of approval of Depo-Provera for use as a contraceptive in Canada? If not, does he agree with the spokesman for the Upjohn company that this is simply a private matter between the company and the Department of National Health and Welfare? When will the women have the opportunity to have their input with ragard to this decision which affects them?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the regulatory process, including clinical tests and trials and the work at the health protection branch, is designed for protection and safety. That principle remains in place and is operative.

With regard to his specific request for public hearings, I remind him that the requirement for information to make judgments is still in place.

If he read the article in the paper today, he should not draw conclusions that the article is accurate or that the timing indicated in the article is also indicative of the reality. That simply is not the case.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROJECT TO BUILD SECOND CN MARINE FACTORY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. We are aware that the decision-making process related to the construction of a second ferry for CN Marine has been initiated. Can the Minister give us some information on when we might expect a decision?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question which I know to be very important for the workers in his constituency. We are now considering the matter and I shall be able to provide the answers he has requested within a few weeks.

HOUSING

PROPOSED SALE OF HABITAT 67 IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister responsible for Housing. Montrealers are rightfully proud of an architectural landmark that was built by the federal Government as part of Expo 67. Of course, that is Habitat 67.

We now know that the Government has decided to put Habitat up for sale and has received five offers to purchase. Why is the Government refusing to negotiate with the tenants of Habitat who have submitted an offer that has the immense advantage of protecting the architectural integrity of Habitat 67?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Housing, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representations to him. I would also assure him that the Minister is one of the ablest negotiators in the Government. I know that he will be prepared to carry out his responsibility in the most forthright manner.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION CONCERNING CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. While the Minister is chatting with the Minister of Labour, could she ask him why the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this case is violating its usual practice of first offering units for sale to their current tenants? And why it is considering letting a real estate promoter make a fast buck on the backs of the tenants? Would he be a Tory promoter?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to see that the Minister responsible for the CMHC reads the Member's question and gives it all the consideration that it merits.

MINES AND MINING

FALCONBRIDGE MINES LIMITED—IMPORTATION OF SCRAP METAL CONTAINING URANIUM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. I have given him notice of it.

Earlier this year Falconbridge Mines Limited was given a licence by the Atomic Energy Control Board to import 300,000 pounds of scrap metal. That metal contained 21,000 pounds of uranium. Falconbridge proceeded to smelt the scrap metal, thereby exposing the smelter workers to very elevated levels of radioactivity. Was Falconbridge given a licence to process uranium?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Copper Belt—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: It is Nickel Belt.

Mr. Layton: Nickel Belt, Mr. Speaker. The remark was only to credit my hon. friend for the fact that he constantly represents the safety of workers and I am proud to respond to his question.

First, I bring to the attention of the House that this was an incident that occurred in the spring of 1984, actually a full year and a half ago.

• (1150)

The importation of the scrap metal, including some uranium, was under licence from the Atomic Energy Control Board. Certainly there was no attempt on the part of the company to deceive the workers or anyone else. The barrels in which this material was contained, as it was imported, were clearly marked to show that radioactive material was included in very minor quantities.

Mr. Ouellet: Statements on motions.

Mr. Layton: It has been safely disposed of.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: At least he did not call me the Hon. Member for Black Belt.

PROCESSING OF RADIOACTIVE MATERIAL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. In view of the fact that that scrap metal contained 21,000 pounds of uranium, which is approximately 40 times higher than the ores of Elliot Lake contain, was Falconbridge given a licence to process material which was radioactive?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the regulations governing the proper disposal and use of waste uranium materials are under discussion with the provinces. I will be meeting with the Minister of the Environment of Ontario in the coming week to discuss it.

NATIONAL SECURITY

AIR INDIA CRASH—ALLEGED USE OF AGENTS PROVOCATEURS IN CANADA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question today is directed to whomever is answering on behalf of the Solicitor General. Yesterday, The Globe and Mail, in a story dealing with the Air-India disaster, indicated:

RCMP investigators believe Indian Government agents to be responsible for the bombings—

Is there any truth to this extremely serious allegation?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is not a customary practice in the House, when a matter involving the security of the country is raised with security implications such as the one raised by the Hon. Member, to respond to it in the House. I can only assure him that—and I am aware of that article in The Globe and Mail—any consular activities of any country which might interfere with citizens and residents of Canada would be inappropriate. If there is anything of substance to it, the inappropriateness of that action would be so. However, in today's Globe and Mail I noticed that there was a denial of that story by the RCMP and other parts of the Government.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR INDIA CRASH—INVESTIGATORS' VISIT TO TORONTO AIRPORT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I would like to know if it is true that Canada has refused permission for a team of investigators from Air-India to come to the Toronto airport to continue its investigation. If it is true, I would like to know why. Would the Minister explain whether he is trying to hide an apparent security lapse which exists at the Toronto airport, as was substantiated recently by the Canadian Air Line Employees' Association?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members of the House that we are not attempting to hide anything. The fact of the matter is that the investigating team for the Indian authorities visited not only the Pearson International Airport, but Mirabel and Vancouver. They had the full co-operation and support of Transport Canada and other government officials.

I think the Hon. Member is referring to the incident which occurred on November 5, I believe, when legal representatives of Air-India showed up at the Pearson International Airport, unannounced, wanting to do an investigation without any prior knowledge at all. They were not doing an investigation on behalf of the Indian authorities. In that connection, the Government of Canada responded and co-operated fully with the Indian authorities to ensure that all aspects of the investigation could be carried out.

EFFICIENCY OF NEW SECURITY MEASURES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there a question?

Mr. Ouellet: I guess I have the right to ask a question. Jesus!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: I was asking the question.

Some Hon. Members: Temper.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member had started his question and I did not hear him begin it, I apologize. However, I did not hear him begin the question, which is why I rose. Does the Hon. Member wish to repeat the question which he says he asked?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes. I prefaced my question by saying "est-ce que", which means in French: "does" the Minister—

NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

LIMITATION ON HIRING OF PERSONNEL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Minister is certainly aware of the significant contribution of the voluntary sector to our society.

Now, the survival of many community agencies in Quebec is being jeopardized by the rigid criteria set forth in her Employment Development Program.

My question to the Minister is this: Is she ready to change her program criteria to relieve community agencies from the requirement to hire only employees who have been unemployed for six months?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member was not in committee this morning when we had a very full discussion of this issue. The position was put very well by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie. I was able to respond at that time that applications coming in under the Canadian Jobs Strategy from municipal Governments and from non-profit organizations indeed amounted to something like 80 per cent of the over-all applications. There is no exclusion of non-profit organizations from the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

SITUATION OF LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the Minister's answers in committee this morning, and it is those answers which have many hundreds of organizations deeply concerned. How can the Minister help the long-term unemployed if there is no one to work with them or no one to train them? How can community organizations help people if they close their doors? Is this what the Minister really wants?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, applications come from a variety of organizations, including non-profit organizations. That is what the Hon. Member does not seem to understand. However, we ensure that the criteria which we are putting into effect are directed toward providing jobs for long-term unemployed people. What the Government wants to do is to help those who are most in need. That is why the criteria have been designed in the way they have. If one reads the newspaper this morning, one sees that in the Province of Quebec there is the largest number of long-term unemployed anywhere in the country. Those are the people whom we are trying to help most.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR WINDSOR RIVERFRONT LANDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The City of Windsor is committed to full development of riverfront lands which are held by CN, and feels that CN and the Government have a past commitment to help in realizing this dream. Will the Minister do everything he can to co-operate in realizing this project and putting it forward as quickly as possible, for the future of our community?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representation and discuss it with CN officials. I will be meeting with them early next week. I will certainly make the feelings of the Hon. Member known to them.

PROPOSED TRADING OF LANDS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since past Governments agreed to a trade of lands to assist this project, will the Government make a commitment of resources of similar magnitude and significance so that the project can be achieved, despite the fact that they have gone back on the commitment to a lands trade?

• (1200)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what significant commitment the Hon. Member is referring. I do know that CN has a vital interest in the development of the land in question in the Windsor area to which the Hon. Member referred. As I indicated, I will be very pleased to make sure his representations are made known to officials of CN as early as next week.

POINTS OF ORDER

LANGUAGE USED IN COMMITTEE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, you have often remarked on the desirability of all Members behaving in a mature and civil fashion toward one another, with which I totally concur. Would you draw these observations to the attention of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) and the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) who this morning in a meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the Hon. Member is making a reference to something that occurred in a committee. She knows that it would be improper to raise a matter of committee activities here, whatever her views of the views of others might be.

ALLEGED USE OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE IN THE HOUSE—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: May I now say to the House—

[Translation]

—that yesterday, at the end of oral question period, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) raised a point of order regarding the use of allegedly unparliamentary language by the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

I have now had a chance to consult Hansard, and my conclusion is that the words of the Hon. Member for Shefford can be interpreted in various ways. The reaction of a number of Members to the language he used created some disruption during oral question period. Considering that reaction, it would have been preferable for the Hon. Member to use a different vocabulary. Because of the various possible interpretations, I have not concluded that the Hon. Member must withdraw what he said this time, but I feel I must inform him it was on the borderline.

The Chair has reminded all Members of this House a number of times that the use of vulgar and insulting language does not contribute anything to the proceedings of this House and in fact reflects very badly on the dignity and reputation of this Chamber.

[English]

I am in receipt of a notice of a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has given me notice of his desire to raise a question of privilege at this time.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED RESTRICTION IN COMMITTEE TO AMENDING BILL C-66

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege that I want to raise is on behalf of the collective rights and functions of the House of Commons, which I believe have been restricted and undercut in the procedural activities of the Government concerning Bill C-66. Specifically, a share issue took place this past summer prior to any chance for this House to consider Bill C-66. The share issue took place not under existing law but under the terms put in the proposed new law, namely, Bill C-66.

Subsequently, when this Bill came before the Legislative committee to be considered, the fact of that earlier prior summer share issue was used as a threat and a barrier to our being able to consider fully and freely amendments made within the committee. I wish to give some specific evidence to that effect.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is the point of order?

An Hon. Member: It is a privilege question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not privilege.

Mr. Langdon: In particular, Mr. Speaker, I would point to discussions of the legislative committee on October 15—

Mr. Speaker: On a question of privilege that is being raised, I think the Hon. Member will know that before he can make the case with regard to whether a privilege was breached, he is supposed to put to me very quickly something on which I can make a decision as to whether there is a priori a matter the House should consider.

Therefore, I invite the Hon. Member to be as brief as possible.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, as I see the question of privilege it is that the Government, by its actions in setting out a share issue prior to consideration of Bill C-66 under terms which assumed the complete and detailed adoption of the Bill as it presently stood, made it impossible, quite explicitly, by bringing to the legislative committee the fact that the Government could be sued for its share issue in the summertime—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect that may all be true. What is the question of privilege, please?

Mr. Langdon: If I could finish—

Mr. Speaker: Sorry. May I say with great respect that the Hon. Member has something he believes in very strongly, and I accept that. He is embarking upon debate about whether the Government should or should not have done something. He is presumably asking me to consider a question of his privileges being breached. Would the Hon. Member come immediately, please, to how his privileges have been breached?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is not quite as easy a matter as points of privilege usually are. If you could give me a minute to draw the connections, please—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, it may not be easy to draw, but the Hon. Member has yet to begin to tell me what is the question of privilege. He must, at least, tell me please what the evidence he wishes now to adduce is supposed to prove.

Mr. Langdon: If I could summarize it very briefly, Mr. Speaker, it is my contention that the action which the Government took in the summer was followed up in the legislative committee with suggestions from Government spokesmen that amendments could not be considered by that committee as a result of action which took place during the summertime, making it impossible for the committee to consider fully and freely amendments before it. Amendments would have resulted, we were told by the Government, in law suits against the Government on the basis of the share issue put out in the summer.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member a question to help me? Is the Hon. Member saying that he was prevented from putting an amendment? Is he saying that something was done to prevent him from trying to put an amendment? I am trying to understand how he thinks his privileges have been breached.

Mr. Langdon: I make the point again, Mr. Speaker, that it is the collective privileges of the House I am raising which, I take it from Beauhesne, are something that can be brought forward as a question of privilege. The opportunity for the committee to give free consideration to all amendments that were put before it was restricted unduly by the actions the Government had taken. I can bring evidence to demonstrate that.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the argument, but on the face of it there is no question of privilege. As I understand what the Hon. Member said, a case was made in the committee that it would be wrong for the committee to do certain things and to adopt amendments. I take it that is the case he is making to me. However, he is not making to me a case that indicates that somehow the committee was prevented from amending the Bill. I presume it could have done so if the committee wished to do so. I take that from what the Hon. Member said. Therefore, with great respect, I think he is asking me to get into the areas of law or propriety. I think that is quite a different matter and goes well beyond the powers of the Speaker, who is restricted to dealing with questions of restrictions that relate to matters of privilege. I believe the Hon. Member is aware of that. Does the Hon. Member wish to add one more thing?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In point of practice, what I have described is more serious than you have interpreted it to be. It is that the capacity of the committee to consider amendments was severely and unduly restricted by the fact that the Government had taken prior action on this Bill in the summer which was subsequently brought back to the committee as a point of pressure against our considering such amendments. As I have said, I can demonstrate from the textual exchanges within the committee explicitly how this took place.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member thinks that the Government did something it should not have done from what he has told me. He wants me to find somehow that the committee could not have done what the committee wanted to do. I cannot find that from what he has told me. Therefore, I cannot find that there is a question of privilege. Presenting reports—

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard the Hon. Member four times.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I regret persisting but if the point is as you have raised it in your last comment that I have not been able to demonstrate that there is a case, I would say again that to demonstrate the case, I have to read the excerpts from what happened in committee, excerpts that will demonstrate the excessive pressure applied which restricted the ability of the committee to operate in a legislative function. The point I am making is that it was prevented and restricted from operating as a legislative forum. I will gladly read those points into the record if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest respect, I think that the Hon. Member is misunderstanding the question of privilege. If the Hon. Member is alleging that he or other members of the committee were threatened—I am now entering into what is called an obiter dictum—but he is not even doing that; he is saying that the Government behaved in a way that he thinks is improper. It is his privilege to think that. However, from what I have heard, I cannot find an argument that would sustain putting the matter to the House or suspending debate to put the matter to the House on the basis of what I have heard. Presenting reports—

Mr. Langdon: On a point of order, please, if I could Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Langdon: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's point of order?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is with respect to the points raised in your ruling and your comments—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member knows that no such comment is allowed. The Hon. Member may also know that this matter was reported on October 17, a month ago.

TOURISM

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE IN VANCOUVER—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF STATE (TOURISM)

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, knowing the interest in tourism of Hon. Members on both sides on the House of Commons, I am pleased to have the opportunity to report briefly on the results of the fortieth federal-provincial conference of Tourism Ministers held this past Tuesday and Wednesday in Vancouver. Hon. Members are undoubtedly aware that the meeting was the culmination of an extensive public discussion and consultation process which has taken over a year to conclude. That consultation process involved all the provincial and territorial Governments, all the major tourist associations and literally thousands upon thousands of Canadians.

The Government said from the outset that Canada's economic growth would be best achieved through a co-ordinated effort by the public and private sectors. The Vancouver meeting demonstrated a joint effort by all the levels of Government to respond to the advice that we received from the private sector. One result was a detailed statement of principles regarding the roles and responsibilities of the provinces, the Territories and the federal Government with respect to tourism.

By setting out their positions and views, Governments enabled the private sector to take directions in the full knowledge of the framework in which it operates. For our industry, this framework sets out the guiding principles for marketing and particularly consumer advertising and indicates that both orders of Government have a role to play.

The agreement also sets out specific actions for both orders of Government in research and the development of a Canadian product. It emphasizes that consultations among the various partners are essential and will take place. Finally, our agreement outlines government repsonsibilities in terms of the awareness of the general public and of visitor reception to this grand and glorious country of ours. Our agenda did not attempt to set out every action for every Government in Canada. What it did set out was a framework for doing business together in the future. That was but one accomplishment.

Knowing as I do the importance of the tourism industry to so many Canadians and indeed to so many Members of the House of Commons, I am pleased to say that the Government responded specifically and positively to the major recommendations put forward by the private sector over the consultation process. Those recommendations were for marketing, training, product development and research. Understandably, Canada's image abroad was the area of most interest throughout the consultations. We are all concerned of course about how others see us.

As Hon. Members will be aware, the Government has commissioned the largest tourism study ever carried out in the United States, our largest potential market. Its results are nearly all in and early next year, as I have assured my provincial and territorial counterparts, the information will be made broadly available not only to Governments but to industry and generally to any Canadian who would want it. The Government believes that one of our tasks is to ensure that accurate data is made available to our industries so that they can be best equipped to make the business decisions necessary to carry the industry forward.

At the Vancouver meeting Ministers also agreed that a more specific marketing campaign than those which have been held in the past is essential. The market-place is changing rapidly and dramatically and marketing programs have to respond to that reality. I assured my counter-parts that the federal campaign was developing along the lines suggested by them, which indicated a greater emphasis on destination and product-specific advertising which, of course, coincides with the research we have obtained over the past number of months.

Further, we agreed to consider how to involve the provinces and the Territories in the American launch of the federal marketing program which will commence in early 1986. Responding to the private sector's advice that a better co-ordinated marketing effort is needed in the international market-place, the Ministers agreed in principle to create an advertising council with both government, public and private sector members. The precise role and operations of the council will be developed over the next month or so; but the broad intent is to have Canada's major players who are involved in the international marketing of tourism to meet regularly in order to discuss their own plans and to comment on the plans of others. Hence, this will give us all a better understanding of the direction which we should be taking in terms of our international marketing. I believe this is a major step toward co-ordinating our efforts and perhaps in the long run toward integrating our various marketing campaigns.

Consultations suggested that the Canadian product line had to be improved and extended. In response, Ministers agreed that making more extensive use of Canada's cultural industries would be a major improvement. The rich mosaic of the country is one of Canada's most appealing qualities, both to the international traveller and buyer and to our own domestic consumers. Over the course of the next short period of time we will hold discussions with members of the arts and cultural communities across the country, with multicultural groups and, of course, with native cultural groups to ascertain how we can improve the role which we see as being important and how we can co-ordinate it. As has been mentioned, we will discuss setting the particular aspect of our unique land forward for our visitors to see.

I believe that the commitment to the tourism industry by the federal, provincial and territorial levels of Government has been made abundantly clear by the signing of subsidiary agreements valued at some $375 million. There can be no doubt that the Governments firmly believe in the economic potential of this industry, one which employs 600,000 Canadians and which generates economic benefit in the neighbourhood of $18 billion to $19 billion per year. I believe we have made significant progress over the past year in addressing the issues affecting the tourism industry.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the major efforts of my provincial and territorial colleagues, both in respect of their own jurisdictions and in support of federal efforts. The meeting was a good one. I can inform Members of the House that federalism in the country is alive and well. I have never seen a group of politicians from all poitical Parties work together as well as we did this past week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murta: Finally, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the industry and the thousands of individual operators who gave of their time and efforts, in many cases at their own expense, to come to the point at which we find ourselves with respect to improving this major industrial sector. Their advice went well beyond narrow interests. We have completed the major phase of our work, which was set out in September of 1984 which, in some respects, was a redirection of our industry.

We are now well prepared to enter the second phase which is, of course, the implementation process. However, consultation is and will remain a cornerstone of how the Government operates. I can assure all Hon. Members, and through them the industry interests that each of them represents, that I will continue to seek counsel and advice from all corners of the House of Commons and from all parts of Canada. It can be said to all those involved in the past process that significant progress has been made, progress resulting from joint efforts of the public and the private sectors. Tourism is well on its way to becoming Canada's number one industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on a matter of great interest to me, tourism. The report the Minister has just made does have positive aspects. What strikes me most is the Minister's intention to maintain consultations with the tourist industry. It would have been unthinkable to exclude the private sector from the decision-making process. In my estimation, the Minister's initiative as a whole is a step—I repeat, a step in the right direction, but I dare hope he will eventually go beyond the consultation stage and take action.

I should like to remind the Minister of his own remarks to the tourism conference delegates hardly a month ago.

[English]

This conference will achieve results. I expect you to give clear choices and make hard recommendations to me and my provincial colleagues . . . tourism's voice is really starting to be heard and this conference is a key opportunity for you to speak out before we convene in November to take the decisions that will give further direction to the industry. We will make the decisions that are needed.

I must say that hard decisions or hard recommendations were made at this conference but were not adhered to at the provincial-federal conference.

[Translation]

The Minister must wish he could take back his fine words which, in fact, did not cause much of a ripple in Vancouver. Truth to tell, I am disappointed but not surprised, for after all the Minister has the same shortcomings and feels the same pressures as his Conservative colleagues. One day they make tantalizing promises, the day after they conveniently forget them. It is a hazardous game which seldom fails to backfire. I have a telling example of that, Mr. Speaker, and I imagine that Members opposite still recall when they were on this side of the House. Be that as it may, we should not be overly concerned if some of them have a short memory, they will soon have an opportunity to sit across the way. It being so, I would like to remind them—and the Minister should indeed lend an ear—of the Progressive Conservative Party's position respecting tourism.

The present Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek), who was in the House a few minutes ago, will certainly be familiar with his own statements. Here are some of them:

Unfortunately the Minister did not come to grips with the major problem of the Canadian tourist industry, namely excessive taxes on hotel and restaurant services as well as on gas and alcoholic beverages which are driving the industry to bankruptcy.

Here is another one:

By freezing at their current level all taxes which are harmful to tourism and seeking ways to reduce them in certain sectors . . . in our capacity as politicians we have to realize that we cannot raise taxes without first knowing what their impact will be. We must stop milking businessmen for all they are worth.

And a third:

By taking " . . . steps to tackle the bane of tourism—overtaxation."

Mr. Speaker, I have many more such quotations and I could go on putting them on the record.

And I will continue with a quote from the Party Leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), of course, who promised during the election campaign that he would:

Review taxes on gas, alcoholic beverages, food and accommodation that are making Canada's tourist industry less competitive.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note how concerned the Conservatives were then about our tax system.

Those same Conservative Members have now made a sudden about-face. Today they are saying the exact opposite of what they said before, and worse, they are trying to evade the subject. This is not the way things are done, and the party now in power has no right to deal with the tax problem in this frivolous manner.

The Minister has repeated time and time again to the tourist industry that taxation is not a problem. Easy to say for him, but it just shows he refuses to face reality. Our taxes are too high here in Canada, and that is a serious problem. There are no two ways about it. It is as plain as the nose in your face. I do not understand why the Minister keeps turning a blind eye to this fact. You advised the industry to submit recommendations before the minister's meeting in Vancouver. These recommendations included one that was repeated many times, and that was to restructure the tax system.

At this point I would like to quote the President of the Canadian Association of Restaurant and Food Services, Mr. Robert Degrâce, who, in concluding, warned the Minister at the national conference:

● (1230)

[English]

At this Conference I have heard that cost is not a significant competitive factor. I want to tell you that it is, Mr. Minister. When are we going to look at the tax structure in Canada and their impact on the price of tourism services?

[Translation]

The Minister will agree that the message was clear. In any case, one cannot deny reality. Canadian products are becoming less and less competitive with American products. Even with our devalued dollar, we are still losing. First of all, if we look at the price of gas, which costs from 25 to 30 per cent more in Canada than in the United States. And then—

Is there a time limit, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Yes, the Hon. Member has the same amount of time as the Minister had to make his speech.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize my time was limited. Well, I just wanted to mention the price of alcoholic beverages in Canada, which is very high, and I would like to go on to discuss the impact of prices on the competitive position of our industry. At the present time, the industry is in the red. In fact, during the first quarter of this year, the industry's deficit had increased compared with the situation last year, during the same period.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister certainly missed the boat at his conference in Vancouver, since they did not deal with the problem of overtaxing the tourist industry, and I am thinking especially about the excise tax on gas, on alcoholic beverages, and the latest tax on airports and airplane tickets. In fact, in this respect, Mr. Speaker, their timing in perfect. Expo 86 will be opening next spring, and they have now raised the ceiling on the tax on airplane tickets. So now the tax on a plane ticket for a flight from Montreal to Vancouver has gone up from $30 to $52. Perfect timing indeed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to speak in the House, but I would have liked to hear more concrete recommendations, and I would have liked very much to hear from the Minister that he was going to act on a recommendation to form a study group that would examine the whole structure of the tourist industry in Canada, a recommendation made by representatives of the industry.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as spokesman of the New Democratic Party for Tourism. I am pleased this afternoon to reply to the Hon. Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta).

[English]

I would like to begin by saying, Mr. Speaker, that we appreciate the Minister's initiative in reporting to the House on this meeting with his provincial and territorial counterparts. The general direction of the Government's efforts in promoting tourism within Canada is, of course, one thing which, like motherhood and apple pie, is not very easy to question. The consultation process, indeed, has a great deal of potential in terms of unifying the efforts of different levels of Government and in moving the country's industry in a single direction, one which will, hopefully, benefit all parts of the country and all the Parties represented at such conferences.

Nevertheless, there are significant problems with the consultation and inter-ministerial process. These are problems which are worthy of remarking upon in this House. My understanding of the Accord is that it is largely a rewriting of the 1980 Accord which was signed in Saskatchewan, and while the consultation process, as I have said, has great potential, we must, of course, over the months and years to come, look for some realization of that potential and some achievement which can be directly traced to what after all is an expensive process in time and effort.

The Conference which was held here in Ottawa, I believe, last month, attracted considerable participation from the private sector. I would caution the Government that participation is not something which can ever be taken for granted. I am very glad to hear the Minister thanking the private sector for coming along in significant numbers and making a contribution. However, I caution the Government that unless there are results from such a process, the commitment of the private sector will diminish. The private sector, naturally, is looking for favourable results for the industry.

Frequent mention was made at that particular conference at which I attended several sessions—and I was grateful to the Minister for the invitation to do so—of the study which is presently being carried out in the United States, our largest market and presumably continuing to be so. The study was based on interviews and was done in considerable depth. The results will be shared throughout the industry and with our provincial partners. I think that such a study has great potential for revealing the reasons our American friends come to Canada in significant numbers, but it also has some potential pitfalls which I believe the Ministry would do well to review. I am afraid that when that size of a project is set in motion, it generates a sort of halo effect, an interest and receptiveness which might not necessarily be there when we come to the real life situation of making those hard choices and decisions as to where the holiday makers' earnings are going to be spent. For this reason I think the Ministry would do well to try to apply some control to those interviews and to review whether or not the results obtained are somewhat coloured by the very intimate and attentive manner in which the basic data is being gathered.

Turning to advertising, I am glad to see the Government's commitment to advertising in the international market. The previous Minister of Tourism made some good points when he made a critical review of some of the previous advertising. However, my understanding is that the 1986 Budget has been almost totally committed to international advertising, and if there is a lesson to be learned from the geography of our country, surely it is that we cannot take it for granted that Canadians are aware of the full range of attractions in their own country. We cannot take it for granted that Canadians will automatically consider Canadian destinations which might very well fill the needs and values that they are looking for in their vacation experience. Increasingly, of course, with the lifting of the ceiling on airfare taxes and the rise in the gasoline tax, we cannot assume that Canadians can afford to visit other parts of their own country.

I am glad to see that the conference produced an emphasis on the potential of Canadian culture to attract visitors. As one who represents more Indian people and certainly more reserves and bands than any other Member of this House, I was also pleased to see the emphasis on the involvement of native Canadians in tourism and not simply on exploiting them. Much more important, we are ensuring their participation and a fair share for them in the benefits from the tourism industry. However, I feel there are a couple of cautions which have to be made here. I do not think the traditional values of Canadian tourism and its attractions can be discarded. They have to continue to be emphasized.

[Translation]

When we review the main tourist features of Canada, we notice that moose, red-coated police officers and mountains attract a great many visitors from the United States, as well as countries of Europe and the Far East.

[English]

These are factors which cannot be ignored and must continue to be emphasized. Therefore, as I said to the previous Minister of Tourism before he was appointed Minister of the Environment, it is important that there be considerable coordination between those two Ministries to ensure that our national parks continue to provide a refreshing and innovative recreational experience of quality at affordable prices, without excessive barriers involving fiscal or non-fiscal control such as the rationing of visitors to national parks. We have had a commitment from this Government to increase training in the industry. That is good but it has to be put into concrete terms through funding because, by and large, it is fair to say that as a large country we do not have that intense awareness of tourism which our European competitors do.

My colleague from Westmorland-Kent addressed the problem of taxation and it is a very considerable one. The Government has not put into motion any form of study to determine whether the tourism industry does, as has been alleged, bear a disproportionate tax burden in relation to the total economic activity in the industry. The barriers to tourism which we have are large. They are large by virtue of geography, awareness, and by virtue of the fact that this country presents very disparate and different images. Let us see a Ministry which ensures that those barriers are not increased by making Canadian tourism non-competitive from the point of view of price.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REORGANIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Coporation, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Governmenlt Orders will be extended by 29 minutes this day. Therefore, Private Members' hour will begin at 4.29 p.m.

There are four report stage motions on Bill C-66. Motions numbered 1 and 2 will be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 3 and 4 will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Mr. Dingwall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think there has been a disposition, at least in my discussions with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. Tardif), to call it one o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give serious and affirmative consideration to this suggestion, knowing full well that we will make progress this afternoon. I am sure that was part of the discussions which took place with the Parliamentary Secretary. I see everyone nodding in the affirmative; I guess it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.50 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Canada Development Corporation

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are now on Bill C-66 and we will deal first with Motion No. 1. Mr. Langdon, seconded by—no seconder?

Some Hon. Members: Out of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I do not have a seconder the motion will have to be dropped.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed. Drop it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I have a seconder for the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must declare the motion dropped then. Still on Bill C-66, Motion No. 2, Mr. Langdon—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Here is someone now. Let us go back and start again. Do you want to start again? On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should go back and, by unanimous consent, start again with respect to Motion No. 1 now that we have a seconder in the House for the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-66, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 41 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"attached more than ten percent of".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the willingness of the House to recognize the difficulties of Friday lunches. We have here what appears to be, on the face of it, an innocent amendment which attempts to make a relatively small change in the existing Bill. It is a change which arises from the considerable difficulty which, I think it is fair to say, witnesses expressed throughout our hearings with regard to the logic of the 25 per cent rule. For Members of the House who have not been forced to dig into the arcane details of this Bill quite as deeply as I have myself and as has my hon. colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary opposite, the Bill seeks to set a restriction on how a private company can operate in this country, because CDC will be a private company in the future.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that there were Conservative Members who quite properly asked whether it was sensible to have any restriction of this kind in a Bill. This restriction of 25 per cent means that no single corporate entity can purchase more than 25 per cent of the shares of the privatized CDC. There were Conservatives who said that if this is to be a private company it should follow completely the rules of the private enterprise market-place. In response to that, the Minister and other Conservatives replied that it is important to have some kind of safeguard of the future independence of this corporation and of the capacity of the organization to enjoy the benefits of the outside shareholders, but not to be coerced overwhelmingly by those outside shareholders.

If this clause passes in its present form in the Bill as it is reported from committee, we will have enshrined a precedent in how we treat certain private companies in this country. To my knowledge and the knowledge of the legislative committee, there is not a single other example of a 25 per cent limit in existence in any legislation concerning private sector companies in this country. Indeed it would be the first time that such a procedure would be put into effect.

We believe that rather than put this new precedent into the books, we should look at the cases where we presently restrict private companies in certain ways. For instance, the figure used for the banks is 10 per cent. No individual or corporate group can have a holding larger than 10 per cent of the over-all shareholding. Therefore, we have moved this amendment to achieve that same kind of limited corporate partnership entry into CDC.

We do this for a number of other reasons besides consistency. First, the President of the CDC himself indicated that this would be best for the company. Second, we are concerned with a process which has taken place by which close to 15 per cent of the shares in this company have already come under the control of the Brascan group which has clearly indicated from its past that it is interested in restricting competition in an arrangement with the Kidd Creek mine which CDC owns.

In addition, it is quite possible that a situation could develop with a 25 per cent shareholding. We in the committee asked our witnesses about this and they told us what could happen when a company had a 25 per cent shareholding. A company like Brascan—we should be aware that Brascan played a major role in the shaping of this legislation—would be able to establish such a paralysis within the company itself that CDC would be forced to sell off the Kidd Creek mining properties to Brascan, in which it has always had such interest, in order to placate a partner that was not prepared to co-operate.

A partner that has only 10 per cent of the shares can prove to be helpful when problems arise. It can provide an incentive or apply some pressure on management to perform. However, when such a company can have 25 per cent of the shares, that useful pressure can be translated into a dangerous threat. Therefore, I urge Members of the House to accept the argument, which was put to us by the President of the Canada Development Corporation, that it would make sense to accept the logic we have applied in the case of the banks with a 10 per cent shareholding and accept this constructive and straightforward amendment in the first block of amendments to be voted on.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I also want to address a few remarks to this particular amendment. It should be noted that this amendment that was put forward by my colleague is his own amendment, unlike the others that will follow. They were really suggested by the President of the Canada Development Corporation while in committee.

The Hon. Member is correct in his analysis that the evidence which was adduced during the committee hearings with regard to the foreign investment factor in this particular Bill would lead one to conclude that a 10 per cent or perhaps 12 per cent or 14 per cent shareholding as would be more reasonable. The logic of the 10 per cent shareholding referred to by my colleague was echoed quite eloquently by the President of the Canada Development Corporation when we had an opportunity to cross-examine him before the legislative committee.

We also had an opportunity to cross-examine individuals of the divestiture committee of CDIC as well as officials of CDC and the Minister responsible. I believe that their arguments against the suggestion of foreign investment being less than 25 per cent—whether it is 10 per cent or the 14 per cent to which I alluded earlier—was practically null and void because on the subsequent day to the Minister's appearing before the committee, the President of CDC said that it was logical to live by the provisions of the Bank Act which provides for 10 per cent, and therefore why not provide for 10 per cent in this Bill?

While I rise to support the amendment, I also want to indicate my disappointment in the framework of the Legislative committees. I believe that those of us who have been in the Chamber for more than a year had hoped that legislative committees would function in such a way as to improve upon a Bill. However, when evidence was adduced from various sources in an attempt to improve the legislation, I say quite sincerely that we found to our dismay that Government Members were either under duress or some direction, which meant that the objective to improve legislation was not being achieved, notwithstanding that there had been a consensus about the new committee system of the House.

While we will support Motion No. 1, it was my hope that during our deliberations in the legislative committee there would have been a disposition by Members to recognize the benefits not only of the evidence which we put forward as Opposition Members but indeed of evidence put forward by individuals involved with CDC on a daily basis. They are the ones who have to live with this legislation in the market-place. Although they did not recommend it specifically, they found nothing inherently wrong with going to 10 per cent and felt that that perhaps would be the best way to proceed.

● (1420)

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Under the proposed amendment, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian investor might be barred from holding more than 10 per cent of the shares. The Bill as drafted sets the limit at 25 per cent. In my opinion, this has been the subject of lengthy debates in committee and we came to the conclusion that if a shareholder could not acquire more than a token CDC share he might find himself in a position where he would carry little weight with the board of directors who would then run the risk of keeping to themselves in their ivory tower.

When we considered the advisability of lowering the limit from 25 to 10 per cent, the main argument was that a 25 per cent holding might enable the investor to cash in his investment at consolidation value, which is important, and the other advantage was that no shareholder would be able to acquire all the shares. So there was an advantage on both counts.

Concerning the objections raised by my colleague from Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), I might remind him that the provisions of Clause 5(2) were mentioned on several occasions during committee proceedings, for they do establish mechanisms designed to stave off any prospective take-over by a group of shareholders. I would suggest that those clauses are good enough and would defeat any take-over attempt. With respect to the 10 per cent ceiling proposed under the amendment, I think the shareholders would be very hard pressed to participate fully in the activities of the CDC or convince management to steer a new course should it ever become advisable to do so. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about this particular motion. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member who just spoke, attempting to make a case for 25 per cent participation in CDC. Quite frankly, that debate has gone on in the House many times. I think the most obvious time that it occurred was in the last revision to the Bank Act. At that time witness after witness—and I cannot recall the exact number of witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—emphasized and re-emphasized the point that in something as critical as a bank, we needed at least a 10 per cent ownership rule. That simply ensures adequate participation so that there is not an overdue influence by any particular individual or group. I think 10 per cent is the general rule of thumb one would find not only in the Canadian banking system but generally around the world. It is considered to be a rate which provides for adequate participation in terms of corporate decision making and ensures a wide enough ownership base so that no individual, particular firm or particular group would have undue influence.

When the Government asks that this be 25 per cent, it goes against a trend with the new Government. The most obvious reflection of that trend was when the so-called Blenkarn report of the Finance Committee was presented. It was felt that all ownership provisions on financial institutions should be taken off; that if an Arab prince or an enterprising wealthy Hong Kong entrepreneur wanted to buy one of our major trust companies or banks, so be it; and that there was no concern about single domestic ownership, so much power in the hands of an individual, be he a Canadian or a foreigner. That betrays a rather interesting view of what is in the best interest of Canada and what is in the best interest of Canadian control of our financial institutions or other institutions.

It seems to me that there is a mind-set developing with the Government, saying that it has faith in the system, that if a single individual owns 25 per cent, that is fine; if a single individual owns the Bank of British Columbia, that is fine. Quite frankly, I do not think that is fine. I cannot imagine where one would find evidence to suggest that that is in the best national interest. Everything I have read, at least anything credible, would certainly indicate that that kind of concentrated financial, economic and therefore political power, seldom acts in the best interest of the country per se.

This is why the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has put forward a motion indicating that the 10 per cent rule should be followed in the case of CDC as well. I think we should give serious consideration to this particular proposal. If we really believe in building in a sense of fairness and equity into the corporate sector, this principle would be maintained by following the provisions of this particular motion.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments in support of the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon). The motion, as has been stated, would simply reduce the percentage of shares which could be held by any individual or group in the reorganized CDC from 25 per cent to 10 per cent.

The Bill is aimed at the privatization of the Canada Development Corporation. We have not seen any real justification for that, but presumably the Government would want to say that it is to lead to greater competition and to a possibility where more Canadians would have the opportunity to participate in one of the 10 largest corporations in Canada. This year, the corporation has total assets of some $7.8 billion. If we want to see that greater diversification, at the very least we should support a motion such as this one which would limit the total shares that can be owned by any individual or group to a maximum of 10 per cent. That is a very healthy amount which can be owned by any individual, group or corporation. Ten per cent seemed like a logical upper limit, a very generous upper limit, if we are concerned about reducing the amount of corporate concentration in Canada. I am not sure that is what members of the Conservative Party are interested in. If they look at the effects of the Bill, they will see that it will lead to greater corporate concentration.

We would at least like the same type of protection built into the Bill as is in the Bank Act, where any individual is limited to a total ownership of 10 per cent of the assets.

On that basis, I urge Hon. Members opposite to take very seriously the argument put forward by my hon. colleague and to support the motion.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Langdon) negatived.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-66, be amended in Clause 5

(a) by striking out lines 5 and 6 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"forfeiture of dividends, the removal from or refusal of registration of securities and for the sale of securities held or beneficially owned in contravention of the constraints".

(b) by striking out line 5 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"sons, owns more than 20 per cent of the".

● (1430)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendment that we have before us now is an amendment that comes to us directly from the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation, which has reviewed this piece of legislation carefully. The board of directors appeared before the committee to give their judgment.

This is a privately, entrepreneurially run corporation, which will shape the future of that enterprise. The board recommended that we accept this amendment. They did so very specifically because they believe the Bill as it is presently drafted does not protect the independence of the CDC and the capacity of the CDC to do a job for the country as a whole.

The board talked to us in committee about various recommendations. I would like to quote to Members of the House from the testimony of the President of CDC, Tony Hampson dealing with this amendment. He said:

We also recommend that subclause 5.(2) be revised to provide CDC with authority to sell shares owned in continued contravention of the constraint provisions of this legislation.

I asked Members of the House to follow this very carefully. He went on:

Without CDC having power to enforce a sale—

This is on the legal advice that CDC received. He continued:

—it would be possible for a shareholder to exceed the limits on share ownership and achieve control even though the excess shares could not be voted. For example, as now proposed, a non-resident investor—

This is not me speaking, but the head of the private corporation with whose affairs we are dealing in this Bill. He said:

—who accumulated 90.1 per cent of CDC's voting shares would have everything above 10 per cent neutralized;

That is, the last 80 per cent they could not vote but neither could anybody else vote those shares. Let me continue. He went on to say:

—but the unaffected 10 per cent holding would still outvote the shares held by all the remaining shareholders.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we are talking here about an extremely dangerous loophole in the Bill pointed out to us forcefully and unanimously by the board of directors of the Canada Development Corporation. They said that if we do not close that loophole and if we do not make it possible for the board to force those shares to be sold, which are held in contravention of the 10 per cent and the 25 per cent limitations, then they can be held on to. They cannot be voted, but because the company holds this vast number of shares, which it cannot vote plus a number of shares which it can vote, more than the remaining shares in the operation, it becomes possible for a single powerful company, either a foreign company or a single Canadian company, to take over the enterprise, despite the fact that the enterprise is set up to serve the country widely, to meet employment needs across the country and to fill a great many different business needs.

CDC, as Members of the House know, is a holding company which has under its auspices such important businesses as Connaught Laboratories, producing insulin in Canada, Polysar, producing artificial rubber, Petrosar, producing specialized chemicals, and Kidd Creek Mines in northern Ontario, which has perhaps the richest concentration of lead zinc mines and smelters in the province. CDC is an important company. Yet the small technical loophole identified by the lawyers of the Canada Development Corporation leaves completely open the possibility that our purposes as a House in trying to build in some safeguards, safeguards that will keep this company Canadian controlled and will keep it subject to 25 per cent control, will be contravened.

This corporation could be subject to a back door raid which would take it out of the hands of people here in our country. It is not a loophole which would have jumped off the page to me as I read through the legislation, but it is a loophole which the corporate lawyers of CDC themselves take very, very seriously. It is a corporate loophole which the entire board of directors of Canada Development Corporation requested us as a Parliament to correct.

I hope that with that kind of support from the groups of people, who will hopefully make this company a success in the future, Members of the House will be prepared to accept the amendment which follows the wording proposed by the CDC board and will give CDC the protection which it requests from this kind of back door raiding practice.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the proposal as suggested by Mr. Hampson, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canada Development Corporation, would ensure that no one, or several affiliated companies if the parent company holds less than a 50 per cent interest in each of the subsidiaries, would be able to take control of CDC.

Anyone with any background in business knows that one need not own 50 per cent of the stock to control a company. In that regard the 20 per cent restriction which the President of the CDC proposed was, in my view, a very wise move to ensure that CDC does not become a puppet of other corporations. That, of course, would reduce the chance of having monopoly situations arise.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is actually Motion No. 2(a) with which we are presently dealing, or are we in fact dealing with (a) and (b)?

M. Hnatyshyn: Both. They are lumped together.

Mr. Langdon: I see.

Mr. Dingwall: I hope that will not be taken off my time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It won't be included because it was probably constructive.

Mr. Dingwall: As I said earlier, this particular amendment was suggested by the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canada Development Corporation.

It was interesting to note that during the deliberations of the legislative committee, the President and Chief Executive Officer of the CDC came before the committee with the clear impression that it was his duty and moral obligation to present for committee members ideas and suggestions which he believed would improve upon the legislation without deviating from the Government's objectives. It was his clear understanding that he was to appear before the legislative committee to make suggestions and draw to the attention of members ways in which this Bill could be improved. He did make a number of suggestions and this is one of them.

Government Members, and particularly the Minister responsible, were of the view that if this amendment as suggested by the individuals who work on a daily basis with CDC was accepted, it would somehow interfere in a negative way with the prospectus which was offered earlier by CDC. That argument is a fairly substantive one. Government Members spoke of the right of rescission or damages if in fact there was an amendment made which would subsequently interfere with the prospectus. In that case, there is provision under the Ontario Securities Act for individuals to take action against the Government.

The President and the Vice President and General Counsel of the Canada Development Corporation came well equipped to the committee meetings. They retained the services of a very prominent and distinguished law firm by the name of Fasken and Calvin. This law firm spelled out very clearly that the amendments that were being sought by the officers who were entrusted with carrying on the activities of that corporation would in no way interfere with the prospectus, thereby giving right to individuals to activate the provisions of the Ontario Securities Act. A legal opinion was written by that very distinguished Canadian firm involved in the securities business. I quote from page 6 of this opinion which was filed for all committee members to read:

> The proposed change in the definition of "associate" in the Bill to trigger associate status at 20 per cent rather than 50 per cent ownership of a corporation would not, in our opinion, give rise to contractual rescission rights.

That is very clear. Not only do the Chief Executive Officer and the Vice President and General Counsel of the corporation say that, but a prestigious and distinguished law firm says that those amendments will in no way destroy, defeat, impair or inhibit the objectives of the Government. It is merely a provision designed to improve upon the legislation.

It surely was the intent of the McGrath committee when it established the new rules for legislative committees that individuals would come before Parliament in a non-partisan manner to make suggestions to improve upon legislation. In this case, we have three clear and unequivocal examples of support for a particular amendment designed to improve upon the legislation.

What happened in committee? I do not want to rehash for all Members what happened in committee. However, the amendment was defeated. We are now trying to bring it to the attention of Hon. Members that surely there must be a time for Parliament to put aside partisan politics and accept the recommendations and legal opinions of the experts who are trying to achieve something that will be for the betterment and not for the detriment of the Government.

I do not want to jump to the conclusion that some backroom discussions have taken place with certain individuals. However, there is evidence to allow one to conclude that perhaps something of that nature has taken place over a period of time. The amendment sought by the President and Chief Executive Officer of the CDC is clear. He has a legal opinion to back up his submissions. I think in the interest of Parliament and in the interest of improving legislation, which I believe all of us wish to do, we should accept this amendment which has been offered by members of the Canada Development Corporation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will keep my remarks regarding this particular motion very brief in order to allow us to deal with them all today. I will confine my remarks, by and large, to Motion No. 2(b). This motion contains quite an extraordinary suggestion, one made by senior representatives of the CDC in order to guard against a very peculiar takeover potential.

I appeal to my colleagues opposite, many of whom understand and are active participants in the business world and know full well that in business as it is practised in Canada today, the 20 per cent ownership rule is considered quite usual and acceptable. Based on that assumption, I have a question to ask. I have to ask what on earth would motivate government Members to introduce the 50 per cent rule unless they plan to open up a loophole that would allow for back-door takeovers or the concentration of power.

I see that my friend, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), is laughing at my concern over increased financial and corporate power in Canada and the falling of more and more power into the hands of restricted numbers of individuals. The Hon. Member might think that that is funny. With all due respect, he might find that humorous. However, when businesses like Cadillac-Fairview start warning us that a number of these practices will result in increased corporate financial and political concentration of power in Canada, I do not find it to be a laughing matter. I do not find that humorous. I do not find it at all encouraging in terms of the direction in which the country appears to be moving.

● (1450)

Mr. Graham: Not like Russia at all.

Mr. Riis: No. I guess my friend across the way is a supporter of the Soviet Union's system of economics. I will allow him to take his turn and explain. In a sense, I suppose we are moving toward more and more control being placed into the hands of a single individual, whether it be an individual entrepreneur, an individual business or perhaps even the state. The Conservatives are taking us into an interesting development these days. I do not know what they are using for their models, perhaps the Bronfman group, the Laurentian group or maybe the role of Conrad Black. Perhaps they are using as their model some of the state governments in Eastern Europe, or perhaps even the Soviet Union. I do not know but I find the development ironic.

I would like to explain step by step what is really going on here.

An Hon. Member: This is incredible!

Mr. Riis: My friend across the way says that this is incredible. I agree that it is unbelievable in terms of what the Government is attempting to do. At the present time we have a situation in which firms and associate firms together can own more than 25 per cent. In other words, there is a 25 per cent rule in place. The associated firm is usually limited to a 20 per cent participation. The Government now wants to increase the 20 per cent participation level to a 50 per cent participation level. The point I am trying to make is that Brascan, which now owns 26 per cent of Noranda, could purchase 25 per cent of the CDC and Noranda could purchase 25 per cent of the CDC. Brascan literally controls Noranda with a 36 per cent ownership. The point is that right now Brascan and Noranda together could control 50 per cent of the CDC. Brascan already controls Noranda. We are saying that, in a sense, with the present proposal before the House, Brascan could control 50 per cent of the CDC. It could own 50 per cent of the CDC.

I see my hon. friend shaking her head across the way. Perhaps she can explain where my logic is incorrect. If I am not incorrect and if the Government is saying it accepts the notion that Brascan can, should and may control 50 per cent of the CDC, then this is a dangerous signal to be sending out across the country. It concerns me very much.

Again, in its wisdom, management has suggested that we use the 20 per cent rule. I appeal to my business colleagues across the way to use the 20 per cent rule which is found in all aspects of prudent business practices in our country. Why is it that the 20 per cent rule is not being followed today? In a sense, a step is being taken which could quite easily and quite likely result in Brascan controlling 50 per cent and owning 50 per cent of the CDC. I have posed two or three questions to my hon. friend and I will sit down now and listen to her response.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to answer my hon. friend's question about concentration of power.

In speaking to the first amending motion, I referred to Clause 5(2) which gives to the Corporation, and protects certain powers that an ordinary corporation would not have. I think that what is already in the Bill provides that the Corporation will be able to protect itself against this kind of activity.

Mr. Speaker, the motion now under consideration is divided into two parts, and I would like to say a few words about each one.

First of all, in the motion numbered 2(a), we see that if the clause were amended, this would enable the Board of the CDC to sell all shares held by shareholders who failed to comply with the ownership provisions and to strike these shareholders from the Corporation's records.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to make the CDC a corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act. I think that if we consider the amendments being requested, few businesses of this kind dispose of such powers of confiscation.

With this amendment, the CDC would be drawn even further away from the Canada Business Corporations Act.

As for the second half of the motion, its effect would be to create a partnership between two corporations if one of them, or the enterprises with which it is associated within the meaning of the definition provided in the same clause, own more than 20 per cent of the other corporation's voting shares. At the present time, the clause provides a ceiling of 50 per cent on ownership of shares of an associate corporation.

This proposal also has the same effect as the first part of the motion, namely that it goes against the purpose of the Bill which is to make the CDC as much as possible a corporation that would normally come under the provisions of the CBCA. Under this legislation, to control means to own more than 50 per cent of securities to which are attached votes that may ordinarily be cast to elect directors of the Corporation. This definition corresponds to what is provided in provincial legislation on corporations and securities and in the Bank Act.

Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that members of the Legislative Committee have had ample time to discuss this motion in committee and did not decide to adopt it, I cannot concur with this motion.

[English]

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, again, I wish to urge Members opposite to look closely at the amendments put forward by my colleague and to consider the process in which we are involved. I ask them to consider whether or not we are really concerned about seeing wider ownership of the corporation or if we want to see much more concentration in the Canada Development Corporation.

It is interesting to note that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon), pointed out in committee that four out of the seven members of the divestiture committee which was set up to look into the reorganization of the CDC were associated with Brascan. This gives weight to the questions which have been raised about the possibility of the Brascan group gaining control of the CDC.

It is important to remember that these amendments were first suggested by the board of directors of the CDC as an attempt to close a loophole which would permit one corporation, for example Brascan, to gain complete control of the CDC. This is quite apart from the present restrictions and what they are supposed to do. Under the loophole, one corporation can purchase more than 25 per cent of the shares even though it would not be able to vote those shares. The amendment provides that the company would have the right to insist upon the sale of those shares held outside the restrictions which this Bill purports to impose.

The second part of the amendment would change the definition of an associate from one holding more than 50 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation to one holding more than 20 per cent of the voting shares of the other corporation. What we all recognize is that 50 per cent ownership is not needed for effective control of most corporations. Even 20 per cent gives control in many cases, particularly if other shares are widely held.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) asked the Minister a question in committee with respect to the situation regarding Brascan, Noranda and MacMillan Bloedel. I would like to quote from the proceedings of that committee where the Hon. Member said:

> Perhaps I could ask the Minister this question, to take a specific question. Forty-nine per cent of MacMillan Bloedel is held by Noranda Mines. It therefore does not come under paragraph (f) as an associated company. In your opinion, would MacMillan Bloedel be deemed to be associated under paragraph (h) and therefore prohibited from buying a big chunk of CDC in addition to the 15 per cent or 25 per cent that Noranda may have?

The Minister responded:

> Mr. Chairman, that is the type of thing I think if those circumstances arose . . . Clearly, if the company were concerned, they would have to go to their counsel and ask for an opinion. Now, you asked me in the situation you have outlined to give an opinion. I do not intend to give that type of opinion. You have the clause here. There are paragraphs (a) to (h) dealing with the interpretation of what associate is with respect to the whole associated status in the clause itself.

● (1500)

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), very properly pointed out that the Minister was in effect abdicating in saying they would have to go before the courts to determine what Parliament intended with this clause.

What we are trying to do with this amendment is to make it very clear that we do not want to see that kind of corporate concentration. We do not want to see CDC fall into the hands, or effective control, of only one corporation or one group of corporations. Hon. Members opposite are very concerned about what they would consider excess Government control of the CDC. I think they should be equally concerned about excessive corporate control by one corporation or one group of corporations. On that basis I urge those Hon. Members to look very seriously at these amendments and to support them.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Langdon) negatived.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary, on a point of order.

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation among the three parties, and I think that if you ask the House, you will find there is unanimous consent for the following motion:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Orders of this House, when the House has completed its consideration at the report stage of Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, provided that no divisions have been deferred pursuant to Standing Order 13(3), it shall proceed immediately to the consideration of the third reading stage of the said Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now debate Motion No. 3 and Motion No. 4 together. They will be voted on separately.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-66, be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 9 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"by-laws inconsistent with any such provision or continue the Corporation under the laws of any other jurisdiction."

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-66, be amended by adding immediately after line 9 at page 8 the following:

"9. The Corporation shall not sell, assign, transfer or deliver control of all or a substantial portion of its property other than

(a) in the ordinary course of business or as security for a bona fide loan or other financial assistance; or

(b) to an affiliate as defined in the Canada Business Corporations Act, of the Corporation and, if a sale, assignment, transfer or delivery of such control to an affiliate occurs, then such affiliate shall be bound by the provisions hereof."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the curious situation which leaves a New Democratic Member of Parliament acting as spokesperson for the Canada Development Corporation before the House is something which leaves me mildly embarrassed although, frankly, only mildly embarrassed because I think the CDC has, on balance, an excellent record in the contribution it has made to our development and to our independence. It has the capacity as well to withstand political pressure which was demonstrated so bravely during the past Government when the attempt was made to put Mr. Maurice Strong in as chairman of CDC and the present president of the CDC, Tony Hampson, fought that political incursion as energetically and as effectively as one could possibly hope to see from any private sector company worth its salt.

Therefore, I am actually one Canadian who is proud of the contribution which CDC has made to our country and I am one who looks forward to tremendous contributions from it in the future if it is safeguarded, its independence is protected and its management capacity to take risks, the long-term view and to look at our country as a place to grow in, is protected by us, the Parliamentarians of Canada.

With that in mind, I come to these last two amendments. So far we have been speaking about differences of opinion. We could have a 25 per cent limit or we could have a 10 per cent limit. We have been speaking about the differences which might exist in defining an associate company and about the question of whether there is a loophole which exists in some of the existing wording, with some of us saying, yes, and some of us saying, no. Now we come to something which is far more crucial. It is a set of loopholes in the existing legislation which one could drive a rather large World War II blimp through. These are not loopholes you drive trucks through. These are massive loopholes. They are loopholes which open up the possibility that this whole Bill which we have painstakingly worked on could simply come to mean nothing to CDC because it is left open within the legislation that all of the CDCs assets could be transferred to another jurisdiction. At that point all of the safeguards which we have put into the Bill throughout our work in committee will simply disappear.

The Canada Development Corporation, perhaps, will be sold to South Carolina and the Carolina Development Corporation will from now on run Kidd Creek Mines, various chemical plants in Sarnia and the labs in Toronto which discovered insulin. It is possible that the assets could be sold into a different jurisdiction over which this whole Bill which faces us would no longer be applicable. Therefore we must have a clause inserted into the Bill to prevent that before it becomes law. The president of the Canada Development Corporation, speaking on behalf of the entire Board of Directors of the Canada Development Corporation, said that under the present wording of Bill C-66, the Council—that is the Council of Directors of CDC,—believes that there is nothing to prevent a future board of CDC, whether or not acting on behalf of a dominant domestic or foreign shareholder, from subsequently obtaining continuance in another jurisdiction but without the share constraints of Bill C-66, and that an amendment should thus be made to Subclause 8-2 to prevent CDC from being continued away from foreign jurisdiction.

● (1510)

I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker. I am not a businessman. I am not someone who regulates stock exchanges, thank God. However, I am someone who takes seriously the measured words of one of the most respected businessmen in this country when he says this Bill is not going to be worth a hill of beans if we do not close some of these loopholes. He even comes forward and says here is precisely how we can do it. He is giving us precise wording which will not benefit CDC itself, but will benefit us as parliamentarians in putting forward legislation which we would not want to see become the laughing-stock of this country. Therefore I plead with Members opposite, as part of a new approach to the analysis of legislation, to look very, very seriously at and accept this small amendment from the CDC board. Accept it not because it comes from us but because it comes from the CDC.

Further, I would argue that Motion No. 3 is complemented by Motion No. 4 which says that:

The corporation shall not sell, assign, transfer or deliver control of all or a substantial portion of its property—

Again, outside the country. This is very straightforward and I wish the committee had accepted it. I trust it would have accepted it had it not been for the unfair pressure by the Government saying that it had already put out a share issue and if we make changes in this Bill it will damage that share issue. It would make it possible, the Government said, for people to sue the Government because the details of the share issue are different from those of the legislation when it is passed. Therefore, I urge Conservative back-bench Members particularly to take seriously this message from one of the most prominent, indeed one of the best of the private corporations we will have in the future. I ask them to resist this blackmail message from the Government that we cannot change this legislation in even a tiny respect simply because the Government inappropriately, improperly and immorally placed a share issue on the market this summer before any of this had come before this House for discussion. I hope that those deeply persuasive arguments, based as they are in the tenets of firm Ontario Conservatism, will somehow have an effect on my fellow Members today.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, again I rise to speak to these two motions which, although not consequential, are in many ways interrelated. The arguments we received in committee for rejection of the amendments put forward by the CDC were much in line with what I said regarding Motion No. 2: Somehow the amendments being put forward would interfere and give rise to civil actions under the Ontario Securities Act because a prospectus had already been issued and any changes or amendments to the Bill would be a material change and therefore the provisions of the OSA would be applicable. Unfortunately for the Government, a legal opinion obtained by senior members of the CDC disputed that statement regarding this particular measure. This amendment, if approved by the Government, would not, as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) said in giving evidence before the committee, be a material modification to the Bill.

It seems to be quite logical that this amendment falls in with the objectives the Government initially announced regarding this legislation. The Government is restricting ownership of the shares in that only 25 per cent can be held by foreign interests. There is a certain make-up or splitting of the shares. However, the Act is silent on the continuance of the corporation in another jurisdiction. It was interesting to read the testimony of the senior legal counsel for the CDC who said very clearly that in his view he was not seeking a major amendment. I think I am quoting him correctly and if I am not, I am sure Government Members will jump to his defence. This amendment just seems so logical given the objectives and thrust of the Bill. I assumed from our deliberations, when he made his comments and saw the amendment, that he thought it would follow and follow very quickly. Unfortunately, once again, we saw in the legislative committee a stonewalling by Government Members notwithstanding the judgment of outside legal counsel, the chief executive officer of the corporation, Opposition MPs and researchers that we understood very clearly the logic of this amendment.

It does not make sense that under the Canada Business Corporation Act you have certain restrictions but when you give the corporation the opportunity to continue that legislation under another jurisdiction the provisions we have all talked about, the restrictions on the shares, no longer are applicable. It seems to me to be a fairly substantial loophole. I cannot understand it, particularly when we heard the Minister himself say what he hoped to achieve by way of the CDC. What he has argued for in this Bill goes out the window because the Government refuses to put in a clause regarding continuance under another jurisdiction.

● (1520)

My colleagues to the left who have mentioned various corporations could, perhaps, argue that a deal may be coming down of which we are not aware. However, Mr. Speaker, that is only speculation or, as your predecessor would say, obiter dicta. When you lack logic or reason, when you lack legal, expert, or business opinion which says that what the Government is doing is correct, it leads one to conclude that perhaps there is some justification for being really concerned as to where the Government is going with this particular piece of legislation. I think the Parliamentary Secretary has handled this particular piece of legislation fairly well. Surely she and her colleagues can see the merit of the amendment unless, of course, what we saw displayed at committee is, in fact, what is taking place within the boardroom and the administration of the CDC; that the left foot does not know what the right foot is doing and the Minister does not know what either foot is doing.

I have no hesitation in supporting this amendment but it surprises me greatly that the Government has chosen to act with some degree of irresponsibility with regard to the provisions for the continuance of this corporation in another jurisdiction.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is a particularly important amendment. I am sure that Government Members will support it once they have had a chance to clearly evaluate the motivation behind it. It was recommended by a number of witnesses who suggested that this was in fact the appropriate step to take. If we fail to accept this amendment, there is more possibility that the CDC could be transferred into a totally new and different jurisdiction. To put it bluntly, Mr. Speaker, with the present legislation the possibility does exist for CDC to find itself under the jurisdiction of a province or perhaps even a foreign government.

I remember my hon. friend, the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) speaking out for many, many years on the concern that is being raised by Hon. Members that we might lose the ability to benefit, through our own regulatory system, from these kinds of economic endeavours. I would expect him to have some words to say on this motion for sure.

One wonders what hesitation the Government has in accepting an amendment which keeps the CDC within the Canadian federal jurisdiction. As I understand the motion, it does nothing more than that. It is not that we assume that there are all sorts of bogeymen out there prepared to take immediate advantage of what may be a loophole, but, nevertheless, that possibility exists. People who understand the role that the CDC plays in the country and ought to be playing in the future are concerned that we close off the possibility of transferring the jurisdiction of a corporation so important to the development of Canada, even with its restricted powers. We must ensure that it remains within the federal jurisdiction, closing off the possibility for the control of power to be transferred to a provincial or even foreign jurisdiction. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I urge my Conservative colleagues to endorse this motion put forward by my friend, the Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to speak to the Motion No. 3, whose purpose is to prevent the federal Government from losing jurisdiction over the CDC.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a closer look at Bill C-66, we see that clause 5.1(d) already provides that the articles of continuance shall contain: "provisions respecting the enforcement of the constraints imposed pursuant to paragraphs (a) to (c); According to sub-clause 8(2), the Corporation "shall not amend any provision included in the articles of continuance in compliance with any of paragraphs 5(1)(a) to (c) or make any articles or by-laws inconsistent with any such provision."

Therefore, if the Corporation came under a provincial jurisdiction for instance, it would nevertheless have to meet the requirements concerning ownership already provided for under this Bill.

Motion No. 4 deals with the sale of assets under extraordinary circumstances as defined in the Canada Business Corporations Act which states that any sale that does not occur in the normal course of business must be authorized by a special resolution calling for at least a two-third majority vote.

The CDC is a holding corporation and its assets are made up of shares from other corporations. The normal activity of such a holding is to dispose of these shares from time to time.

The constraint as proposed could create a certain ambiguity concerning the powers of the CDC to administer assets and make it impossible for the Corporation to act in the best interests of its shareholders. Strictly applied, it could freeze the CDC in its present structure. This would go directly against the interest of the shareholders who are now interested in the CDC because it is involved in share investments and will improve and rationalize its portfolio to maximize its profitability.

In view of what is already provided for under the Act, Mr. Speaker, I must oppose the proposed amendment.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this amendment to the legislation before the House. It seems as though you were ready to ask the House to vote on this measure. Due to the importance of this measure, it is important that we give it more consideration and not sweep it through the House quickly.

My colleague proposed this amendment to the legislation in order to remove some of the glaring weaknesses in it. It is foolhardy and even tragic that the Government should seek to weaken and destroy the Canada Development Corporation which was originally founded in order to increase the control of the Canadian economy by Canadians. Since the major manufacturing industries of the country are owned by foreign investors it is important to have as many public policy tools as possible which enable us to strengthen Canadian control of the Canadian economy. Without Canadian control of the economy, Mr. Speaker, our political sovereignty is a hollow shell.

Canadians call upon Members of Parliament day after day to provide for their basic human needs, to remove the indignity of unemployment from the community. There is no way in which we can effectively respond to those appeals from Canadians for action without having control of our own economy. As long as the Canadian economy is controlled in New York in the headquarters of multinational corporations rather than on Canadian soil, there is no way in which we can effectively meet the needs of Canadians and respond to their cries for help. It is shameful that the Government is moving to weaken Canadian control of our economy at a time when we need to have control over it in order to provide for the needs of our people. The Conservative Government seems to have sold out the notion of Canadian control in the interest of worshipping the free market idol. It believes that if everything is left at the hands of the market-place and every decision is made by the private sector, the needs of Canadians will somehow be served.

Our Party recognizes that competition, in its proper place, can play a useful role and that the private sector has an important task to perform in the Canadian economy. However, the private sector with its private firms cannot serve its purpose in the Canadian community without being given direction by the Canadian people through the instrument of representative Government. Therefore, we hope that the Conservatives will abandon their ideological blinders and realize that if we are to have a genuine Canadian economy we must have control of Canadian industry.

It is important for us to have effective public policy instruments that will allow us to increase Canadian ownership of Canadian industry. Instead, the Government is weakening those instruments that will achieve Canadian control and is giving control of our economy to the private sector. It is handing the future of the Canadian economy to individual firms and multinationals and abandoning its responsibility for steering the Canadian economy in a direction that will provide employment and serve the interest of Canadians.

Large multinational firms have their own interests. They seek to make a profit and expand. While those interests sometimes serve our national interests, it is not always the case. Unfortunately, there is an assumption with the free market ideology that the interests of private firms will always be the interests of the community. That is simply not the case. It has been proven by the Canadian experience. We know that in an economy such as ours, with a large percentage of manufacturing owned by foreign investors, employment in Canada is exported to the parent firms in the United States when there is a downturn in the economy. It is no longer acceptable to Canadians to suffer the vagaries of economic downturns and to have a lack of control of the Canadian economy. That is why we support the Canada Development Corporation and have suggested amendments that would strengthen the legislation before us in order to allow ownership of the CDC to stay in Canadian hands and continue to be an instrument of public policy.

Why would the Government want to weaken the CDC? Why would it want to weaken an instrument it has to ensure Canadian control of the economy? I can only assume that the Government is blinded by its own ideology and belief that prosperity can only be achieved through the free market system. The free market system is important as long as it serves the community interests. However, in order to achieve this, we must have public policy instruments that will ensure that the private sector serves the public interest. That is why we have moved these amendments to strengthen this legislation. That is why it is important to increase Canadian control of the economy rather than abandon that objective.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Langdon) negatived.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be amended by adding immediately after line 9 at page 8 the following:

"9. The corporation shall not sell, assign, transfer or deliver control of all or a substantial portion of its property other than

(a) in the ordinary course of business or as security for a bona fide loan or other financial assistance; or

(b) to an affiliate as defined in the Canada Business Corporations Act, of the corporation and, if a sale, assignment, transfer or delivery of such control to an affiliate occurs, then such affiliate shall be bound by the provisions hereof".

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Langdon) negatived.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time? Now, by order passed earlier this day?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. While the Speaker was reading the motion, the Member of the NDP stood to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my understanding that the Member of the NDP wishes to speak on third reading. We have moved concurrence.

[Translation]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved: That Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged today to take part in the closing debate on Bill C-66 which will pave the way for the sale of the Government's Canada Development Corporation shares and the continuation of this privatization process.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) would have liked to have been here to express his own views on this Bill. Unfortunately, that was impossible.

Bill C-66 went through all stages quickly, but with proper consideration. This turn of events attests to the over-all support of the House as well as the efficient and stimulating manner in which it was dealt with. Most Hon. Members endorse the CDC privatization in principle, which happens to be a major element of the policy we announced in the May Budget.

Briefly I should like to go over the main provisions of the Bill. As I said, the first consideration is the transfer of federally-owned CDC shares to private interests. First and foremost the Canada Development Corporation is one of the major companies on our national market and it will now be able to operate on the same footing as other similar conglomerates. Under the existing CDC statute only Canadians may be shareholders, and no individual or group is allowed to own more than 3 per cent of the shares. Once the Bill becomes law, these restrictions will be more flexible and any Canadian citizen will be able to buy up to 25 per cent of the shares.

In the case of non-residents, 10 per cent will be the individual limit but such shareholders as a whole will not be permitted to own more than 25 per cent of CDC shares.

It has been suggested that a 25 per cent limit for Canadians is too high and would allow a single person to gain control of the CDC.

It has also been pointed out that there should not be a limit on the number of shares and that people should be able to buy and sell them like those of any other company. A ceiling of 25 per cent was chosen by the Government to reflect the balance needed to prevent a concentration of shares and to give certain shareholders the opportunity to play a more active role in the corporation. The conscientious debate we had on this issue in Committee confirmed the acceptability of the proposed limit.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it was also important to allow the CDC access to foreign capital while preserving its Canadian nature. On this point also, opinions were sharply divided. The Government set this ceiling based on similar provisions in the Bank Act. The limits provided in this Bill as concerns the ratio of shares held by non-residents alone or as a group will enable us to limit at three to one the proportion of Canadian and foreign shareholders.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, what we are doing today is a very important part of the mandate of our Government since we are providing for the eventual privatization of a public corporation. I believe that Bill C-66 has now received the consideration it deserves, for which I am grateful to my colleagues on both sides of the House.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first I pay tribute to the Parliamentary Secretary who has shepherded this Bill carefully forward in the period since the Minister's illness. Today is her accomplishment in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: None of the criticisms which I will now go on to make are directed at her personally.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Perhaps you should look at me when you are speaking.

Mr. Langdon: That is true. Let me start with the basic point at issue here. There are many ancillary points and side-issues, such as the procedures which the Government has followed, the question of Brascan and so on. I will talk about them, but they are side-issues.

At the heart of our concern about the piece of legislation has been a Canada Development Corporation which will be able to play a creative role in the future, similar to the creative role which it played in the past.

Many Hon. Members of the House were not Members when the Bill was first introduced. At that point, I had the privilege of being a member of the press gallery. I recall the sense of delight at seeing an initiative taken that would try to create something which, at that stage back in 1970, was absent in Canada—the creation of a highly entrepreneurial business-oriented corporation in an attempt to fill the gap that is so apparent to us.

Canadian capitalism has had its weaknesses historically. That is why 55 per cent of our manufacturing industry is foreign owned. It is not because foreigners have come here and preyed on us like some kind of creature from the deep. They have come here because we invited them, and we invited them because we did not have powerful, risk-taking private companies which were able to push forward various developmental ideas across the country. It is partly because of that gap and partly because of that absence that I am a social democrat rather than a Conservative. In other countries and in other places I could as easily, with the kind of respect I have for the contribution whcih private sector enterprise can make, have been a Conservative. However, in Canada, with the weakness of our capitalist sector, we have required Government leadership and support to build strong agencies of development. Historically we have needed them, whether we are talking about our history of railway building, our history of building the broadcasting system or our history in the 1970s of building an entity in the private industrial sector like CDC which would become a dynamic, effective, independent private firm.

That independence is important because it is an independence which permits the company—and Tony Hampson has talked about this, and I give him respect for it—to take a longer view. It can take a view which says that we do not have to get back our profitable returns within five years, that we do not have to look at each project which comes before us as a possibility as something that will be a money spinner in five years or six years, and that we do not need high discount rates on projects which will permit us to launch investments. It can take a view which says that we are prepared to look at the long shot, that we are prepared to take some chances, that we are prepared to take some risk, and that we are prepared to believe in our country and in the capacity of our country.

That is something which Hon. members on all sides of the House have learned to respect about the CDC over the years. There was a time when the CDC might have looked like another Liberal creation to pension off some political hacks who could not make it elsewhere. However, Tony Hampson prevented that from happening. He said: "No matter how good Maurice Strong is, he is a political appointment; he is not a businessman, so I won't have him".

The consequence has been a business which has proved itself. It has not proved itself as a great money-maker. CDC will never be a high-flyer in the business world, because it believes in looking at the long run and at taking some risks. It believes in the future of the country and in building that future step by step.

We have to recognize that there are concerns now as a result of the piece of legislation that that contribution to the future of the country, that commitment to the long-term view and that willingness to take risks, will be threatened, reduced and perhaps ultimately eliminated.

● (1550)

The workers in the industry are concerned. I have a letter before me from the Energy and Chemical Workers Union which was written to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) in which the union says:

> The Energy and Chemical Workers Union is concerned about the possibility of the so called "privatization" of the Canadian Development Corporation and in particular its holdings in the Polysar Petrosar Development in Sarnia.
> We believe that Polysar has developed a viable, sensible and uniquely Canadian multinational Corporation which is of value to all of Canada and all Canadians.
> We believe that part of the reason for its development in the manner that has been achieved has been because of the support and approach taken by the Canadian Development Corporation. Polysar has developed into the world's largest synthetic rubber manufacturer and has a marketing network throughout the world that is second to none.
> We believe that you should not disturb the type of relationship that our country has with any artificial change such as the so-called "privatization" of the Canadian Development Corporation. We believe that Canadians have been well served by the Organization as it stands and we think it should be encouraged and fostered in its present structure and not permitted to be moved into a new and artificial relationship within the Canadian corporate structure.

Yet that is what is taking place, Mr. Speaker.

This past summer, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, CDIC, recommended specific ways in which CDC should be opened up more to the influence and control of other private sector companies, other corporate empires in Canada.

When a share issue was put before the market in conditional terms this past summer, almost 15 per cent of the shares of CDC ended up falling under the control of the Brascan group, a group which itself had before that approached CDC and asked CDC whether it would be willing to join into a partnership between the Kidd Creek Mine in northern Ontario and Brascan's Noranda mining interests. This would have resulted in a significant reduction in competition in Canada. That is all on record in the committee hearings.

CDC said: "No, we want to keep our independence and our operation, providing as many jobs and as much competition as possible in northern Ontario". Brascan Noranda as a group holds almost 15 per cent of the shares and there is the possibility by this Bill that the percentage of shares could be increased to 50 per cent, because Noranda is not considered an associate of Brascan by the definition in the Bill, despite the clear, clear evidence in the corporate world that Brascan does control Noranda. We could find CDC controlled very much by Brascan because it has been established under terms set down by the CDIC divestiture committee which itself is dominated by four of its seven members from the Brascan group.

It is a rather sad, tawdry example of conflict of interest, unfortunate to see staining this Bill before us here in the House of Commons but it is the reality.

Let us take a look at that CDIC divestiture committee. One member of that committee is Trevor Eaton, President and Chief Executive Officer of Brascan. He is also a member of the board of Noranda. I remind Members that the divestiture committee not just only sets the regulations for privatization but came to us and testified in contradiction to the CDC itself, putting its weight as a divestiture committee directly and powerfuly into the legislative process, despite the fact that it is dominated by the very enterprise that would benefit by these takeover provisions.

Our records indicate that Mr. Marshall, a second member of that CDIC divestiture committee is the President of Brascade, another subsidiary of Brascan, another member of the board of directors of Brascan and a member of the board of Noranda. A third member of that CDIC divestiture is Pat Keenan who is also a director of Brascan. A fourth member, A. Turmel is a director of Noranda. We have four out of the seven people on this committee dominating that committee who come from the very set of companies which will benefit from the rules set up with respect to the privatization provisions of CDC. This is a stained and tawdry side to what could have been a straightford privatization that many of us would have supported.

What is worse is the process by which this Bill has been brought before the House of Commons, as I indicated to the speaker this morning, has been at best something that can be called improper by the people to whom we referred the Bill at the Library of the House of Commons. The process has been described as having followed improper procedure.

We have a Bill in which the Government, before the Bill had even been considered at all by the House of Commons, issued a prospectus which had the details not of the present law governing CDC but of this new law. The Government then used the fact, blackmail, that share instalments had been sold to tell us in committee that we could not fully and freely consider amendments that were brought forward, because any amendment which had any substance to it at all would have the effect of giving to those shareholders, who had bought in instalments, the right to sue the Government of Canada for misleading them during that summer period when the share instalments were originally issued. As a new Member of Parliament, to consider that I am creating legislation with that kind of axe hanging over my head, with that kind of unfair, undue and unjustified pressure facing the committee and with that kind of explicit point brought before us by Government lawyers and the Minister, I for one do not find this to be the way parliamentary consideration of legislation should take place. I for one was not elected by the voters of Essex-Windsor to simply rubber stamp legislation which the Government tells us we cannot change because it has already taken steps based on the proposals that are before the House. Governments should not act in that unfair manner.

● (1600)

To sum up my argument, there are serious threats to the independence of this company, an important company for the future of Canada. There are clear threats coming from Brascan and Noranda. There are threats coming from the companies that themselves dominated four out of seven positions on the CDIC divestiture committee which shaped the details of this Bill.

We in the House have not had a chance to consider these various detailed points without pressure and without being pushed by the Government because of its past improper action leading unfortunately to what I have to consider to be a shameful piece of legislation over which we in the House of Commons will hang our heads in the future. We could have done it better. We should have done it better. Canada and the CDC would have been far better off if we had done it properly rather than under the pressure of a Government that is acting in a far too high-handed manner for a Government yet so young.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of words to say concerning this particular piece of legislation. I think everyone will agree that the Government of Canada is bringing in this legislation in this fashion because it has a philosophy which was proclaimed during the election campaign and re-established by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and that philosophy revolves around getting rid of Crown corporations and having Crown corporations play a lesser role in the economy than they did previously. Of course, there have been contradictions to that philosophy.

The people of eastern Canada were somewhat surprised to see the Government announce recently that it would create a Crown corporation to run CN Marine. People wondered where the Government's philosophy went. They wondered why the Government was creating a Crown corporation when its policy was against the creation or existence of Crown corporations. The reason the Government created that Crown corporation was to save some $20 million through layoffs.

It is not so much the actual policy of the Government about which we are concerned but it is the way in which it carries out its policy. When doing away with the CDC, the way in which the Government does this has a lot to do with whether or not it accepts the doing away with that Crown corporation. For example, does the Government allow foreign investors to have shares valued at 25 per cent? That is one good question. Why would the Government sell the shares at a time when those shares would be valued at less than their proper value?

We are removing an instrument that existed within the system to assist Canadian industries that were in trouble at times. The Canada Development Corporation has stepped in many times over the years to be of assistance to certain sectors of our economy. Coming from eastern Canada, I think particularly of the fishing industry. As all Hon. Members know, the CDC played a very important role at various times in that particular industry. We have seen that situation change. The CBC was involved in financial problems of the fishing industry and then another Crown corporation called Fishery Products International, partially owned by both Governments and by the private sector, was created.

The Government's philosophy of carrying out its mandate by getting rid of Crown corporations just does not make sense in some cases. No matter which way we look at Crown corporations and the measures brought in by the Government, we are looking at layoffs. We are looking at layoffs at a time when layoffs should not be taking place.

We can take a look at the involvement of the CDC and the Government in the fishing industry. A recent announcement was made that the Government would put $100 million into Fishery Products International which operates on the East Coast of Canada. At the same time, the Government announced that it would close down 15 communities in which there were fish plants. Why did the Government announce that?

This particular branch of the fishing industry had been invested in by the CDC. Then another Crown corporation was created in order to try to keep the fish plants open. The Government Crown corporation had a social responsibility to the people who lived in those communities, to the workers there and to the very existence of those communities. The Government came through with money, yes, $101 million, but then it agreed that 15 communities should lose their fish plants. In other words, the Government indicated in its press releases that it would get rid of the unprofitable fish plants and sell those to private enterprise. The Government said publicly that it would sell unprofitable operations to the private sector. Someone in the private sector would have to think twice before investing in something that is not profitable. The entire procedure that was used was absolutely ludicrous. Then the Government set a time limit of two or three years on some of the sales. Then the Minister rose in the House to say that we did not know if these fish plants would close because if they did it would be perhaps two or three years down the road.

I would like to congratulate a certain Member of the House who just happens to be a Progressive Conservative Member. I think that he deserves some credit in that he was able to salvage a fish plant that was due to be closed in his riding. I am speaking of an Hon. Member who sits opposite and represents the South Coast of Newfoundland. The philosophy of the Government of Canada is wrong. In saying that you will create a Crown corporation or allow it to continue as long as it saves money and as long as there are lay-offs, you can then turn around with the same philosophy and same standard and say: "All right. If you have a Crown corporation which is in trouble because of tariffs from another country we do not really want to get involved in that. That Crown corporation still has to break even".

I am thinking about the Canadian Saltfish Corporation having tariffs imposed against it. The Government could simply wipe its hands clean and say that that is the policy of the United States Government and the Canadian Saltfish Corporation will have to sink or swim. It must be realized that the Saltfish Corporation covers only a certain section of the coastline in the country, namely, the north shore of Quebec, all of Newfoundland and Labrador. In this case tariffs are imposed against a Crown corporation which competes against a private enterprise which does not have the same tariffs imposed against it. It is quite logical for one to see the inequity in that particular system. It surprises me that the Government would take that attitude since it is not only my riding affected but the riding of the Prime Minister.

The list goes on. We can consider the case of the CBC in this regard. The budget of that corporation was just cut. It was told that it would have to live within certain confines. It was told to make decisions now with respect to what it would close down and cut off in terms of its programming but it must live within certain guidelines.

I do not disagree with the philosophy of this piece of legislation. I do not disagree with it at all. However, I do disagree, as do members of my Party, with the way in which it was undertaken and the timing with which it was presented. I disagree with certain provisions of the Bill. We have all heard of the suggestions made by experts in the field who have suggested amendments. The Government has turned around and has said that it will ignore those amendments. Whereas I agree with the general principle of the Bill I will have to vote against it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and say a few final words with respect to this Bill. To make it perfectly clear to Hon. Members, I do not want to talk out the Bill. I believe there is an understanding that we will wrap up the proceedings this afternoon with respect to the Bill.

However, I do wish to put on the record a few final comments. We are dealing with Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation. We have heard a considerable amount of debate which was intended to point out why this particular move of the Government is an inappropriate one. I wish to back up for a few moments because people often ask: "What problems are we facing today?" They ask why it is that Canada seems to have such a difficult time not so much getting back on the track but simply on to a track. I do not think we want to go back on to the old track because that did not seem to be taking us any particular place. We want to get on to something new, a new track, a new development. We want to see the development of some new vision and the unfolding of new programs in order to get us there.

People often ask me what the problem is. They ask me: "Why is it that other countries seem to be able to do so much better? Why is it that other countries seem to be able to have an economy which thrives and develops as opposed to what has recently taken place with respect to the shoe industry in Canada?" The Government is cutting off the quotas with respect to shoes which means a few thousands workers will be put out on the street. What I am concerned about is that while we are simply cutting off workers in the shoe industry we have nothing to offer them in lieu of this abandonment. It seems to me that if the Government is phasing out quotas over a period of time that it would be more appropriate for it to phase in another program so those workers would have something to look forward to. They could be retrained in other areas. However, the Government is simply hacking off the quota system and saying: "That is the way it is. That is the invisible hand of the market-place about to play its role." That is really problematic.

Obviously, one has much to say about Bill C-66. I believe it would be appropriate to allow the Bill to continue on to its eventful demise, in terms of the progressive motions and amendments we have put forward. I will sit down and save my comments until another time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion), seconded by Mr. Layton, moves that Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be now read a third time and do pass. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 13(3) the recorded division stands deferred until 6.00 p.m. on Monday, November 25, 1985.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, on this day's Order Paper there are three motions in amendment at the report stage of Bill C-79.

Motion No. 1 seeks to impel the Government through the CDIC to make cash advances to the uninsured depositors of the financial institutions in a different manner than that which is envisaged by the Royal Recommendation attached to the Bill. It appears to the Chair that this is an imposition on the financial initiative of the Crown. In this regard, I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation No. 540.

Also, the Hon. Member's motion seeks to offer an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause, which cannot be done. I would refer Hon. Members once again to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation No. 773(9).

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 will be debated together and a vote on Motion No. 2 will dispose of Motion No. 3.

I see that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is not in the House. Is there unanimous consent to have the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) move the motion on her behalf?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. George Baker (for Miss Nicholson (Trinity)) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-79, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 6 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the Bank Act, the Minister shall cause to be published in this year's Public Accounts a list of all depositors to which a payment was made under this Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason for the introduction of this motion is pretty clear. It is that we do not know who will receive the funding which the Government proposes. In other words, we all know of the system which is in place in the country which will pay depositors when we have a situation such as that of a bank failure. People may be reimbursed for their deposits up to the sum of $60,000. Those people are insured under the provisions of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. We know that system and that it is in place in this country. It is a safety mechanism so that Canadians can feel assured that when they do put their money into a financial institution they will be reimbursed if there should be financial problems with that particular institution. However, the Government of Canada is not only going to pay the amount of money which legally has to be paid under the Deposit Insurance Program, but those depositors who have money in the bank far above the limit will now also be reimbursed by the Government. We have to realize the difference between the first insurance program announced by the Government and the other insurance program which has always been in place. The difference is quite simple. In the first instance of the Deposit Insurance Corporation, a fee is paid by the bank on the amount of deposits which are held in that particular bank to the tune of a percentage of 1 per cent. That is how that fund is maintained. If the Deposit Insurance Corporation happens to get into financial difficulties and has to overdraw that account—in other words, if it is costing more than is being sustained by the payments through the banks—then, of course, there would be a deficit in the account. We all know there is a deficit there now, perhaps to the tune of just over $1 billion give or take $200 million or $300 million. Then, of course, the Government supplies the funds directly to the Deposit Insurance Corporation to make those payments. We have, therefore, a self-sustaining fund. The Minister will have to bring in a Bill increasing the percentage of pay-in by the banks because of the deficit position of the Deposit Insurance Program.

• (1620)

However, what we are talking about in the second insurance program is a decision by the Government of Canada to make enormous payments. In some cases these payments will be made to organizations which represent a lot of people and everyone can see that that certainly is warranted. Also included in that list are individuals, foreign interests and people who perhaps put enormous amounts of money into the bank for a particular financial reason at a particular moment in time. Why, then, is the Government strapped into this? It is because the Government, through the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), made a clear statement to the people of this country that there was no problem at all with the Canadian Commercial Bank. This Bill is before us because there was established a moral obligation on the part of the Government to bring in this particular Bill to pay off those depositors who had enormous amounts of money in that Bank. In other words, the Government brought in a Bill to bail out a bank saying that the Bill will do the job. Thereby, in its statement and its actions it morally committed itself to do what it is doing now.

Most people would agree with the pay-out which would go to certain organizations who represent a lot of people. However, who disagrees with releasing the names of those people who will receive the millions and millions of dollars? Surely, there is a principle involved here. This is the taxpayers' money. How can the Government hand out money in the form of a cheque without saying who it is giving the money to? What organization, credit union or group of people would say that they did not want their names released to the public?

The Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance said that the reason they could not give us the names of those large depositors is because it violates the secrecy provision of the Bank Act. But where is the bank? Does the Bank Act cover the Canadian Commercial Bank right now? Will it cover the Canadian Commercial Bank in six months' time, in one year's time or in two years' time? When we have no bank in existence, how is the secrecy provision of the Bank Act an excuse for not releasing the names of those people, some of them multimillionaires, who will receive taxpayers' money from the Government? The Government turns around and says: "Oh, no. We are not going to let you know who these people are". However with the Freedom of Information Act, one can get the name of a fisherman who has been paid off for his salmon licence by this Government for $500. According to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, however, we cannot get the names of the people who will receive these large amounts of money.

That is basically the reason for the amendment which has been proposed by the Official Opposition critic on this particular matter. It is a simple matter of saying that if we are going to do an extraordinary act, we must justify it to the taxpayers of this country. It matters not why we had to do that act. We all know why the Government had to do it. It was because the Government made an error. It made a political judgment which was a tremendous error. I am not going to stand in this House and say that the error was the responsibility of the Minister of State for Finance. She was not present when the decision was made for the bail-out and therefore, she personally is not morally responsible to pay off all of the rich people, the foreign investors and all of the organizations which had money in that bank. Neither is the Minister of Finance morally responsible. He was not at any of the meetings when the decision was taken to bail out the banks thus committing the Government to that moral obligation. In fact, we do not know who was responsible for that decision. All we can do is guess. The person responsible for committing this Government to a moral obligation to pay off people who had more than $60,000 in this bank, we suspect, is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

We suspect there was a phone call which went from someone in the Alberta Government to the Prime Minister and the decision was made against everyone's recommendation. It was made against the recommendation of the banks which participated because the bank representatives have said so. Everyone washed their hands of the decision. The decision was made, we suspect, by the Prime Minister, who made himself a moral obligation on behalf of the Government to pay off foreign investors, and multimillionnaires, using the taxpayers' money, without releasing those names to the taxpayers. That makes absolutely no sense whatsoever. My time has expired but perhaps I can continue this interesting discussion at the next sitting.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 2 and 3 should be debated together and, as I did not read Motion No. 3 before the debate, I will do it now.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-79, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 6 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the Bank Act, the Minister shall cause to be published in this year's Public Accounts a list of all depositors to which a payment was made under this Act."

NATIONAL HERITAGE

NAMING OF BUILDINGS AND COMMITTEE ROOMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should recognize the historical significance of former political leaders by adopting a policy of naming buildings and significant chambers or committee rooms after them, thereby recognizing their contribution to Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Members of the House for the interest they have shown in this motion. The idea for this actually began several months ago when I was taking part in Canada Day celebrations in White Rock when all of us at that meeting were expressing our appreciation for our heritage and the opportunity to foster an appreciation for that heritage.

Communities across Canada are light-years ahead of our national institutions in giving recognition to leaders in their communities who have contributed to the cultural and historical wealth of that community. I had to point out during those ceremonies the irregular way in which Parliament has handled the recognition of political leaders here in Ottawa with respect to the naming of buildings or erecting of monuments to their honour. I pointed out that we on Parliament Hill have used all of our imagination to name some of our buildings. There is one building we call the East Block. Isn't that great? Isn't that imagination? Then we went even further, and on the opposite side of Parliament Hill we named the building the West Block. There is imagination. Does that not tug at your heart-strings? When we bought the Wellington Building we reached deep into the soul of our nation and called it the South Block. All the while the tourists and school children come to Ottawa to visit Parliament Hill to see these institutions and what do they hear? East Block. West Block. South Block.

We tend to wonder why Canadians do not have an appreciation for their history. Our neighbours to the south are at times jingoistic or chauvinistic about their history but we are just the opposite. We tend to depersonalize our history at every turn. In our Charter of Rights and in much of our legislation we want to present ourselves as being interested in the individual, the human being. However, when we come to our history, we try to depersonalize it as much as possible. Therefore, I want to emphasize the fact that here on Parliament Hill we ought to be laying the cornerstone of appreciation for our heritage, our history and our traditions.

That is the background to the motion I have presented, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that our people have a textbook understanding and appreciation of our history. It is not a human understanding. What would it be like if school children visiting these buildings, instead of hearing East Block, West Block, Room 209, Room 269 or Room 371, they were to hear the names of historical leaders of our country who have contributed so much to our welfare and well-being today? I am not for the present trying to assign names to buildings or committee rooms, but I am asking the Government to take the initiative and assign the responsibility to a relevant group to make sure that we recognize those people in our history who ought to be remembered for their contribution and assign their names to the relevant buildings and committee rooms.

For example, on Parliament Hill we give no recognition, beyond perhaps a monument, to our first Prime Minister. Would it not be appropriate, for example—and I say only for example—that the East Block, which houses the original Cabinet Room and offices of the first Prime Minister, as well as the offices of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to name that building the Sir John A. Macdonald building? Would it not be appropriate to name the West Block after Sir Wilfrid Laurier, our great Prime Minister from the turn of the century who really guided our country through 12 or 15 very important years for our nation? Would it not be appropriate that what we now call the South Block or the Wellington Building be called the Sir Leonard Tilley Building? He was one of the Fathers of Confederation who, incidentally, gave us our national motto. As a reward for that gift he has practically been forgotten.

An Hon. Member points out that off the Hill there are buildings named after historical figures. Is that not ironic? There are buildings named after key historical figures across Canada but on Parliament Hill we forget them. We have the Sir Guy Carleton Building downtown, as well as the C.D. Howe Building. But on Parliament Hill we ignore them. Why not name the room where the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration meets, after Mr. Sifton who really changed the course of history by introducing imaginative immigration policies which opened up western Canada? Why not name the room where the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs meets after Sister Marguerite Bourgeoys, that great pioneer of health care in the City of Montreal in the 1700s? She was a trail-blazer and the only place you can find Sister Bourgeoys is in the history books or if you go to the east end of Montreal. Would it not add something to the history of Canada if, as school students come up on the Hill, they hear that a committee room has been named after Sister Bourgeoys? They would ask why the room was so named and the guide would have an ample opportunity to go into the historical significance of and contribution by this great person. Why not name the room where the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture meets after George Brown who founded one of our great newspapers and added to the communications system of our country?

I do not want to take up much of the time of the House but I wanted to leave with the House an understanding of what we could do to personalize history by naming our buildings and many of our committee rooms after those historical figures who have contributed so much to our country. I believe that there is general agreement among the Parties to accept this motion as a direction for the Government. There may be other speakers who want to contribute to the debate but, if there are not, I would ask for the relevant motion to be put.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I certainly agree in principle with his motion. I do not think there is anyone in the House who could disagree with it in principle. In his speech he pointed out that the Americans have a much better sense of history than we have in Canada in that they have named their buildings after distinguished Americans. I would like to ask who the White House is named after. Maybe the Member can think about that.

Certainly we recognize that there are distinguished Members from all political Parties who could very properly receive recognition, either by having a building named after them or a room in one of the buildings. Perhaps some of the more difficult rooms to find in the West Block could be named after some of the Members who are seldom found in their seats in the House. Maybe they have been lost there all these years. It is hard to say.

I can think of a number of people whom I would like to see so honoured. I think of Agnes Macphail, J. S. Woodsworth, Tommy Douglas, David Lewis, Stanley Knowles and M. J. Coldwell as well as people from other Parties.

Mr. Keeper: How about Louis Riel?

Mr. Manly: Well, Louis Riel was a distinguished Member of this House. He did not distinguish himself in the House as much as he did outside, but he was certainly a distinguished Member of the House and I think he is generally recognized now as being a great Canadian. I would, however, like to ask the Hon. Member who would make the decision as to what building is going to be named after whom.

An Hon. Member: The Government in power.

Mr. Manly: Someone over there said "the Government in power", and that is the very concern that we have. There must be some kind of an arm's length procedure developed in order that this would not simply become the equivalent of a Senate appointment or another form of patronage. I think all Members would agree that the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson was a great Canadian and a worthy Canadian after which to name either a building or an airport. However, those of us who sat in the last Parliament remember the bad taste that was left in our mouths when the Toronto International Airport was named after Lester B. Pearson because it was done in such a way that its prime function seemed to be to enhance the fortunes of the Liberal Party in Toronto. Being a good Liberal, Mr. Pearson, perhaps looking down from Grit heaven, may not want to have it any other way. I do not know.

Mr. Keeper: You mean looking up.

Mr. Manly: I do not wish to get involved in a discussion of our three-story universe as our terminology obviously betrays us. I think it is very important, if we are going to name buildings after people, that we do not descend to the type of procedure which leaves people feeling other than good about the name that is used. We want the name to honour the building as well as the building to honour the name. We also want to have a sense of appropriateness. The Hon. Member who spoke before suggested some possible names. The John A. Macdonald Building for the East Block seems reasonable. Due to the number of Private Members' Bills presented by people who want to bring back the noose, I was wondering which of the present Tory Members might want to have a future gallows named after them.

On a more serious level, Mr. Speaker, I think we all recognize what the Hon. Member said about Canadians having a sense of history and wanting to have some public recognition of that. On that basis, I am very happy to support the motion and would urge that any provisions made to implement it would be at arm's length from the Government to avoid any hint of patronage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has brought up a very relevant point. The intent of the motion is certainly to enhance the appreciation of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this on a point of order? Is there unanimous consent for the Member to speak?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

Mr. Friesen: I just wanted to answer the question that the Member put to me. I think he has raised a very relevant point. The naming should be done in a similar manner to that in which major residences in the Ottawa region are cared for. There is a group of eminent citizens whose job it is to look after the cultural heritage without considering political inferences. After all, that would have the result of destroying our appreciation of our heritage rather than enhancing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired.

It being 4.45 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe) moved:

That this House regrets that the Prime Minister has once again broken an election campaign promise, this time by failing to maintain quotas on imports of shoes and by compounding this betrayal by failing to make adequate provision for the thousands of workers whose jobs are adversely affected.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to put this very important issue before the House of Commons, today on Monday, November 25, 1985, a few days after hearing an announcement that has practically lifted all quotas from shoe imports.

As the motion indicates, the Prime Minister went to the Eastern Townships in May 1984. We must understand that textiles, clothing and footwear are extremely important industries that are very job intensive and absolutely essential to the economy of the Eastern Townships.

Last week, when the decision was known, certain people close to the Prime Minister claimed that Mr. Mulroney had never made a commitment and that the Prime Minister had never promised he would maintain or extend the quotas. Therefore, with your leave, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a document which I find very significant, very interesting and very revealing, concerning the announcement or commitment made by the Prime Minister at the time. I am going to quote from a newspaper article reporting on that commitment, and it says: "A Conservative Government would not lift import quotas set by this country with respect to footwear, textiles and clothing". The quota policy would remain as such, said Mr. Mulroney, who stated he was not in favour of free trade in these particular sectors. He added that he would not alter his position, despite possible pressures from Common Market countries and the United States to reduce quotas on footwear and textile products imported into Canada. He added: I will certainly say so to President Reagan when I meet him in Washington next month. I will see to it that our interests are protected at all times. Friendships like ours are worth something, he said. Neighbours like us are worth a lot, maintained the Conservative Leader.

Mr. Speaker, today, although there might be a case for saying that Mr. Mulroney, the Prime Minister, did not make a firm commitment specifically concerning the footwear industry and did not make a firm commitment on the issue of extending quotas, if we put his commitments and his statements in their proper context, bearing in mind that the footwear industry is a very important sector in the Eastern Townships, I do not think there can be any ambiguity or confusion: this was indeed a very formal commitment.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as indicated in the motion, we are still faced with a very serious situation where this Government has literally betrayed the trust it received from Canadian men and women on September 4, and it has done so in an area where the consequences will indeed be disastrous.

According to the most optimistic figures given last week by the Manufacturers' Association, in the very near future only about 4,000 out of 20,000 jobs in the footwear industry will be left. What is extremely discouraging and disheartening, along with the catastrophic reduction in the number of jobs in the footwear industry, is the fact that in a great many cases, these industries cannot expect to obtain any kind of substitution or solution or remedy, since most are located in areas away from the large urban centres, areas where it is extremely difficult and problematic to interest investors in investing in replacement industries, to make up for the jobs lost in the footwear sector.

Mr. Speaker, this forecast for the footwear industry seems much closer to reality than what the Government appears to be saying. We must understand that the previous Government set these quotas, which were renewed for three years at a time, and when this Government came to power, the quotas were to continue until the end of May, 1986. One of this Government's first decisions was to shorten very significantly the deadline for the quotas by making them end on November 30 of this year, which is this week.

The study used by the Government in making its decision, the anti-dumping report, was released last June. Therefore the antidumping report conclusions were known as early as last June. So why did the Government wait until the penultimate week of November to make its position public? Respectfully, Mr. Speaker, we maintain that its mind was set, that the decision had long since been made, but it waited until the last minute in the hope that consumers, workers and the industry would not raise too much of a fuss about this totally catastrophic conclusion.

• (1110)

Government Members have two explanations to justify their decision. First they tell us that the most sweeping and comprehensive study in this field does recommend the outright abolition of quotas. That is their main argument, their first excuse to do away with quotas. Then they go on to maintain that, over the last eight years, Canadians have paid the astronomical amount of $400 million to $500 million more than it would have cost them had quotas not been in force.

In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, both arguments can easily be demolished in either case. First, concerning the antidumping report, the reader will be amazed at the findings if only he goes to the trouble of reading it very carefully page after page. I would even say that its conclusion flies in the face of logic with respect to the main thrust of the report. The best way to substantiate my views on the famous antidumping report is to quote parts of it.

This can be found on page 132: "If unrestricted and quota imports are added up, it becomes obvious that over-all imports soared by 10 million pairs since 1980, an increase of 23 per cent." One has to admit that imports rose considerably between 1980 and 1984 when they were subject to quotas. It being so, how can anybody conclude that imports will not go up if they are not restricted? To me that is a rather illogical statement.

Here is another passage of the antidumping report, from page 49 this time: "Since direct imports enable retailers to avoid paying the importer's margin, in all likelihood they would boost both their volume and share of imports if there were no quotas." Here again it does not quite jibe with the Government position.

A further quotation: "Net Government receipts would be higher after the removal of quotas, mainly as a result of more tariff levies due to rising imports."

One last extract from page 62 of the famous antidumping report goes like this: "It can be expected that quota removal—immediate, total, partial or gradual—will spur imports, and manufacturers might well decide to become importers since the different economic climate would pave the way for a new market approach".

Mr. Speaker, I could go on like this for half an hour or three quarters of an hour, quoting and repeating statements and findings which abound in the antidumping report, finally to conclude that they openly contradict the logical arguments from which they are derived. It seems to me this would have been a good reason for the Government to reject this study, for indeed it would not have been the first time a Government had turned down a study however complete and exhaustive it might have been. The interest of workers and their jobs was the issue, but the Government is hiding behind what is clearly an unacceptable report.

They do not hesitate to pick out only those parts of the report which seem to strengthen their case, going as far as to stress the second argument to the effect that consumers have shelled out $400 million to $500 million simply because of the quotas.

The anti-dumping report—and I think that the government should be honest enough to recognize it—mentions that this assessment is not at all scientific and is based solely on studies which have every chance not to be valid, and that it is an affirmation based on an approximation. On the one hand, there is nothing final, specific or especially scientific about this assessment.

On the other hand, let me tell you that according to a study or analysis made by an organization representing thousands of people in order to refute this argument, there will be some $3 billion in social cost over the next eight years following the Government's announcement. Canadian men and women will pay as much as $3 billion in unemployment insurance and welfare benefits over the next eight years following the measure which was announced last week and which will result in the very short run in a loss of several thousand jobs.

Mr. Speaker, there is another reason, as basic as the first for which I feel that the decision announced last week will not benefit consumers or serve their best interest.

One need only visit shopping centres to realize that almost everywhere people use Canadian products, Canadian footwear as points of reference.

I am sure that my hon. colleagues opposite have had that experience too: a pair of Canadian shoes is offered at a price of, say, $79.95. Right beside it is a pair of imported shoes with a price of $69.95. Consumers are therefore attracted by the imported product which is $10 cheaper than the Canadian product. I suggest that people who are not well informed will not see much difference between these two products. The Canadian man or woman who chooses the imported pair of shoes will feel he or she has saved $10.

However, what one should know, Mr. Speaker, is that the retailer who is asking $80 for the Canadian product paid approximately $40 for it. On the other hand, he is asking $69 for the imported product for which he has paid $15 or $16. The retailer, therefore, will do everything to try and convince consumers to choose imported goods.

Mr. Speaker, you certainly realize that, so far, the Canadian consumer in my example is clearly ahead, for he has saved $10. But what about the respecting quality of the two pairs of shoes? I suggest that the Canadian product is of much better quality than the imported product. I also feel that getting rid of this point of reference would be extremely dangerous, for as soon as retailers will no longer use Canadian products for comparison, consumers will have to pay the price, and a very high one at that.

There is another angle to this situation. I would ask my Hon. colleagues of the fair sex to visit chain stores and to go shopping for a pair of women shoes. You will find out it is extremely difficult, extremely painful. Salespeople will even tell you that Canadian products have no style, that they do not keep up with the latest fashion. They will invoke all kinds of arguments that are simply not relevant. Only someone who does not know anything about that field could make such statements. The products we make here in Canada are equal or superior in quality to what the import market has to offer, and there is only one reason we cannot find Canadian women's shoes in the stores. It is purely and simply because the retailer does not get a mark-up comparable to the one he gets on imported shoes. It is due exclusively to the fact that on shoes made in Canada, his mark-up or profit margin is only 50 per cent while it is much lower on imported shoes.

• (1120)

On the other hand, we must also understand that this is a very special sector where retailing is virtually under the control of a few big companies. Independent retailers, even though they number more than 4,000 in Canada, did not have a say in that matter nor any chance of expressing their opinions and even at that level, the decision the Government announced last week will prove disastrous. We will see small independent retailers close their business in the next few months and weeks. They will be replaced by the big chains that import and control the retail market, and believe me, their main objective is not the interest of the consumers, but their own profit, first and foremost the improvement of their businesses' viability, at the expense of the ordinary consumer.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is a disastrous decision. On the other hand the only alternative indicated in the Minister's statement where three aspects of an already existing program are mentioned in a solution which is already available to my riding. I come from an asbestos-producing areas and in view of the difficult times experienced by the asbestos two or three years ago, we became a designated area which is to all practical purposes what the Minister is now offering the workers in the shoe industry. In conclusion I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those measures have not changed the situation a iota nor resulted in any permanent job creation because the problem is due to an economic slowdown in the asbestos sector. Now this is the alternative which is being offered to the Canadian industry shoe workers.

Mr. Speaker, as we shall learn about the closing of one or more plants in the months ahead, I hope that the Government, in all fairness will reverse its decision, and will come up with one based on the interests not of the importers but of the workers, male and female, from Quebec, Ontario and any shoe manufacturing area in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully while the Hon. Member was speaking about this issue, and I believe that if he is so deeply concerned, it is because of the geographic location of his constituency. In his motion, he mentions an election campaign promise. I would like him to tell me what promise or what commitment the Liberal Party made regarding footwear import quotas during the campaign and where I can find it because, when I was preparing my intervention for today this week-end, I tried to find the commitment of the Liberal Party as concerns footwear quotas and I found nothing. I was trying to explain... May I continue with my question? I was trying to explain why, very often, Governments have a tendency to do such a thing as referring the issue to a tribunal when a difficult decision has to be made, and I would like to point out in passing that newspaper reports are generally quite favourable to this decision because the medias believe that it shows courage. We then have to ask this question: What was the commitment of the Liberal Party as regards footwear quotas during the last election campaign? I would like to know.

• (1125)

Mr. Tardif: I would like to thank the Hon. Member opposite for his interesting question. I shall simply tell him that the quotas were established, maintained and reinstated under the Liberal Government on the one hand. On the other, and I invite the Hon. Member to listen carefully to what I will tell him, when the quotas were about to be lifted the last time, the Government was under the same pressures as you were. The difference was, Mr. Speaker, that this political party, and I am speaking of course about the Liberal Party, included men and women who had the courage to protest strongly against the decision made by Cabinet at the time and to say: "If you put this forward, we shall not support it." This is easy to verify; it is on the public record. If you are in the least interested in this issue, you can check these facts by simply asking for the documents. You will then see that the Government reversed its decision and re-established the quotas for the industry. Moreover, I would like to remind you that there had been a demonstration on Parliament Hill involving 5,500 workers from Ontario and Quebec, as well as four Liberal Members of Parliament, even though their party was in power at the time. The demonstrations included myself and three of my colleagues, and even some of your own colleagues. Some of your colleagues were even saying at the time: "If the country had a Progressive Conservative Government, you would have not only quotas, but also a clear and precise policy. There would not be such loopholes as now exist under your Government."

I recognize that the previous Government established quotas. I recognize that these quotas were not perfect and that the situation was not what it should have been because of certain loopholes. As for you, you are getting rid of the quotas, and as for the few that remain their effectiveness is still limited by an obvious loophole, as big as the House of Commons. Here is a very simple example of what I mean: You say that girls' and women's footwear are subject to quotas. What about unisex footwear? It will naturally be classified under boys' or men's footwear and will evade the quotas. These quotas are therefore of no value and no interest to the manufacturers.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to invite those of you who are concerned about the shoe industry to do what we did ourselves and to oppose your Government if you want to protect the jobs in this industry.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the same subject. We made, I believe, three main mistakes in the Canadian strategy regarding the shoe industry.

The first one was the removal, by the Liberal Government, of quotas on leather shoes between November 30, 1981 and July 9, 1982. Imports increased dramatically during that period.

The second, Mr. Speaker, mentioned in the report itself, is that before 1981 there was no restructuring in that industry. That is what the report says. It means that after four years of quotas, there has been no change whatsoever. Modernization, which should be at the centre of any effective strategy in this industry, did not take place.

The third mistake—and this is also mentioned in the report, I believe—is that the quota system set up after 1982 was too weak. We find that in the report. As a consequence, had a high level of imports despite the quotas. Given all these mistakes and difficulties, is it possible for a Liberal Member to say that it is a Conservative rather than a Liberal problem?

• (1130)

Mr. Tardif: This is a good question, Mr. Speaker, as it gives me the opportunity to make a short comment. New Democrats can say whatever they want because they will never be more than fifteen or twenty. But the answer to the question of the Hon. Member is yes.

Shoe manufacturers, Mr. Speaker, want 50 per cent of consumption. However, statistics show that they have, at this very moment, only 40 per cent, and the Government wants to reduce their share to 9 to 12 per cent. This is what is offered to the manufacturers. Under the Liberal Government they had between 48 and 40 per cent of consumption. It is a whole lot more than what is being offered to them now. Nobody is perfect. Personally, I would have preferred a 50 per cent share for a period of five years. Nevertheless, they had 40 per cent and they are now given only 10 per cent.

[English]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the decision to abolish quotas in the shoe industry made by the Minister last Wednesday is a perfect symbol of everything which is wrong with the present Government. On the one hand, it reveals the insincerity of the Government in terms of promises which were made during the election campaign and, on the other hand, it reveals its insensitivity to Canada's working families. Finally, and perhaps ultimately most significantly, it reveals the incompetence of the Government when it comes to important economic decisions. I would like to comment on all three of these matters.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government is not taking its promises seriously. On the contrary it makes no bones about breaking them. In Sherbrooke, last year, Mr. Mulroney, then Leader of the Opposition, had promised that a Tory Government would maintain quotas on footwear imports, that he would not give in despite pressures from the EEC and the United States. Mr. Mulroney had then understood that a committee set up by the Liberals could suggest the removal of quotas, but in spite of the promises made in Sherbrooke, in spite of a promise as a new Government, the Prime Minister is implementing the recommendations of the Liberal committee. In reaching such a decision, he has deceived Canadians, he has betrayed the workers in the Canadian footwear industry.

[English]

In sector after sector, promises made in a particular part of Canada to a particular group of Canadian workers during the election campaign, are now being broken. The most relevant and recent example is, of course, what we are debating here today, the promise made to men and women working in the shoe industry and related industries that quotas would be maintained. This promise, it appears, was rather cynically given before the election and cynically ignored afterwards.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that my Party takes election promises seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I see the snickering Tory to the left—physically in the House, of course—because his Party obviously does not take its promises seriously. I say to the Tories opposite, because they often like to accuse us of being big spenders, that I am proud to say that the New Democratic Party in 1984, in terms of the costs of its programs which were published before the election, probably came in at the lowest cost of all three Parties. We took care in what we had to say and I just wish that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) had taken care in what he had to say in 1984 and had carried it out in 1985.

I do not want to dwell on that particular point, but it is something I take very seriously indeed. If we are going to encourage constructive thinking about politics, if we are going to have serious debates on the future of our nation, politicians have an obligation to mean what they say, to say what they mean, and if they are elected, to carry out what they promise the people of Canada.

I would like to turn to another aspect of this question of the performance of the Government which is revealed in this latest decision.

[Translation]

Such a decision shows insensitivity towards laid-off workers. According to the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada and unions operating in that sector, the removal of quotas on shoes will result in the closure of many factories and ultimately in massive lay-offs. Mention has been made of the loss of some 10,000 jobs, 8,000 of which would be in Quebec and probably 5,000 or so in the Montreal area.

In addition to jobs directly related to the manufacture of footwear, the same percentage of jobs, that is 50 per cent, are also threatened in the related industries of tanning and supplies. The manpower in that sector recognized for its great stability is very concerned. Having worked during their lifetime in that sector, workers are worried because they may find it very difficult to find other jobs. They are right.

We should consider also the effects on the communities. For twenty years or so, the factories producing footwear and soles have left cities to relocate in smaller towns in Quebec as well as in other provinces. If those factories have to close, increased unemployment in those communities will reduce the purchasing power of residents which will directly affect the economy of those communities.

In short, we are forsaking that industry, those towns and those workers.

● (1140)

[English]

The report contains a little noted comment which I want to stress today. The Minister has not alluded to this very much since he made his decision. The report says: "The upheavals caused will certainly be significant for the industry and the workers affected". The people who made this report were well aware of the consequences for the men and women in the industry.

The decision is not only insensitive to workers in the communities affected, it is also economically foolish. The simplicity and insensitivity of the Government, I regret to say, is equal only to the simplicity and insensitivity of the commentators who have discussed the Government's decision. A frequently stated, sometimes unstated, assumption about the economic process we are now going through—and it directly pertains to this particular decision—is that the Government of Canada must come down, on the one hand, for completely free trade and, on the other, for some kind of permanent quota system. There seem to be, in this Government's mind as in that of previous Governments, Liberal and Conservative alike, only two industrial options. There is the passive industrial option which sees the future of Canada hiding behind high tariff barriers. That, more or less, has been tried in this country in the past. The other passive industrial option that this Government seems to be aiming towards is the removal of all barriers, to throw open our country to the winds, to use a delightful euphemism, which prevail in the world economy. I want to stress that both those options are essentially passive in nature. However, in my judgment, no nation in history has come to a position of significant economic prowess by following either of those options, not in the ancient world nor in the modern world. I say to the Minister that these two options are not the only ones open to Canada. There is a third option.

The Government of Canada can play an active, constructive, and imaginative role on a sector by sector basis with the private sector. Together they can work out a strategy for this country in its approach to the world economy which rejects the dual forms of passivity involved in hiding behind a protective mechanism for an indefinite period of time, or throwing caution to the winds and throwing open the doors to the forces of the world economy.

This decision illustrates the Government's tendency to head towards free trade, not having thought out the consequences. The Minister is right when he says, as he does, that the quotas have not really worked. We have had them in place for eight years and the Government's view is that if the quotas were going to work, they ought to have worked by now. Some facts are very pertinent to this argument. First of all, as the Minister knows, some $17 million was allocated under CIRB to this industry. He also knows that during the quota period a very small percentage of the money allocated for modernization has actually been used. In fact, if I remember correctly, only $2.2 million has been used. Therefore, the point is that the modernization process has just begun. Only a small percentage of the money has been used in the way it was intended to be used. However, what does the Government do when it is faced with this reality? It throws up its hands and says, "We have tried, it has not worked, so we will just stop the whole thing and throw the economy—that is these workers we are talking about, men and women and their families as well as their communities, I remind the Minister—to the whims of the market." This is a classic example of what the Liberals have done historically in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I welcome the participation of the Conservatives and Liberals in this debate.

Mr. Foster: We started it.

Mr. Broadbent: You started it, I agree. I say to my Liberal colleagues on my right that I want them to join in the debate. I know they moved the motion. I want them to talk about the issues. The reason I say that we have a typical Liberal solution here is that the Liberals historically threw money at a problem for a number of years and then, if it did not resolve the problem, they went on and did something else instead of trying to make it work. The key point I want to make is that instead of abandoning the program when we know a majority of the firms have just started to carry out the required modernization, we should be encouraging the completion of this process. The Minister knows and the report shows that these firms are now spending the money allocated for modernization. If we do not encourage the completion of this process, we will just be wasting the money which has been spent so far. Beyond that, most significantly, we will be wasting the lives of the men and women who are going to be losing their jobs. We do not think that makes economic or social sense.

I cannot put too much emphasis on this point. We had in place a good model of industrial planning which ought to be applied to other sectors. I agree that the firms involved did not respond quickly enough over the past eight years. But, by God, we had begun to see a different approach in other industrial countries—Japan sure as hell, to put it bluntly, would not have thrown its workers out on the street. It would not have just abandoned money like this. We had a good process. The industry was slow in responding but it is doing so now and we should be completing the process to keep those jobs and make this industry competitive in the modern world. The option is really not the kind that the Minister and the Government want to give us. In the near future we want to have quotas in this industry abolished. We want to have the industrial modernization process which was started with this program carried through. Instead of doing that, the Minister is simply abandoning a good idea. In the traditional Liberal way he has thrown some money at it and when that did not produce results in the short run he has stopped it entirely. That is not good planning at all.

I will give one other example of the incompetence that is illustrated by this decision. I regret to say that it is my view that the decision of the Minister and the Government on this issue was shaped simply because of a failure to believe in industrial planning in a mixed economy which plays an important role. The other key factor was the process that is under way for negotiations with the United States on free trade. We are doing all the wrong things. One day we give up Canadian content in the automotive sector, losing Canadian jobs in the process because it does not seem to be compatible with the American model of a comprehensive free trade agreement. Another day we sacrifice Canadian shoeworkers on the altar of the wonderful free trade market. All of this fits into the American strategy but does not fit at all into the Canadian strategy.

While we are busy sacrificing sectors of Canadian workers, significant American figures are talking about getting a resolution of certain bilateral issues such as the importation of logs, pork, and so on. Before the talks commence in a serious way they would like to get the issues resolved. The Conservative Government is busy giving up the interests of Canadian workers in advance. All I can say is that this is no way to conduct major negotiations which go to the heart of the future of the country.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the decision taken last Wednesday was bad in both the short run and the long run for Canadian workers in the shoe industry. It was bad for what it says about the Government's view of industrial planning and bad in terms of revealing its attitude toward negotiations with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). Does he have any concern for the consumers who have paid roughly $500 million because of these tariffs and would continue to pay that amount of money in the future?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, of course I have concern for the consumers. If the Member reads the report, as he has perhaps already done, he will notice that the report itself says that the Canadian producers did not increase their prices during the period of the quotas. Therefore, there certainly was not an increase in prices paid, which had a negotiative effect on consumers during this period.

It seems very clear to us in the New Democratic Party that in approaching the economy of Canada one has to look at it in terms of broad concerns, consumer concerns, worker concerns, employment concerns and community concerns. When we address that issue we are prepared to say that there may be some costs to a consumer in any part of Canada to maintain industry in the country. There are only one or two raw materials that we could not get cheaper elsewhere in the world. However, we made a decision a long time ago that a country is about creating opportunity for men and women to work and that is our priority.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am frankly amazed at what I have been hearing from the Opposition spokesmen on footwear. I am amazed and I am disappointed.

Mr. Boudria: How do you think we feel?

Mr. Kelleher: There seems to be a knee-jerk response on the other side to every positive action the Government takes. If we are for it, they are automatically against it, even if what we are doing was their policy when they were in office.

Mr. Riis: What about your minimum tax proposal?

Mr. Kelleher: Is this responsible opposition? I suggest it is not. Is this in the interest of the Canadian people? I suggest it is not. Is this the desperate attempt to grab headlines for their narrow, partisan interest? Now we are getting closer to the truth. They are suffering from footwear and mouth disease.

Mr. Boudria: Who wrote that?

Mr. Hees: He wrote it himself.

Mr. Keeper: Take the boot out of your mouth.

Mr. Kilgour: We listened to Ed without heckling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please!

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, as I have listened to the debate on footwear over the past few days in this House two things have struck me: The opportunism of the Opposition, an opportunism extending to cynicism, and the lack of sensitivity of the Opposition. It is out of touch with Canadian consumers and Canadian life. Of course, that is nothing new. The other day the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) accused the Government of practising "abstract economic theology". The Government practices nothing of the kind. We deal in economic realities.

Mr. Boudria: That is a euphemism for selling out.

Mr. Kelleher: In this case we are dealing with a 223-page report by the Canadian Import Tribunal which heard 72 witnesses and received 39 written submissions. After the report came out we consulted on its findings with all parties concerned. Abstract economic theory is not our bag. That is what the previous Government practised from its oracle on "Mount Saint Elsewhere". What was the NEP but abstract theory? What was FIRA?

Of course, theory is not involved in the attacks that my hon. friends in the Opposition have been making on the Government's footwear policy. Here they have been forced to resort to smoke and mirrors and to plain political opportunism. Take the charge made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has broken an election promise made on May 4, 1984. Let us look at the facts.

On May 4 of last year the Liberals were in the middle of their leadership campaign. On May 4 elections were nowhere in sight.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: To continue the chronology, it was not until several weeks later, on June 14 of 1984, that the former Government called on the Canadian Import Tribunal to examine the state of the footwear industry and report its findings within one year. It was not until July 9 that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, having just been sworn in as Prime Minister of Canada, dissolved Parliament—which he could not sit in anyway—and called the election that put the Government in office with the largest majority in the history of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: Now we skip nearly a year. On June 14 of this year the Canadian Import Tribunal, having conducted the most thorough study of the footwear industry ever carried out by any inquiring body, handed down its report. After a full year of study it found that most of the footwear industry no longer needed the protection of import quotas. Indeed, it could no longer benefit from quotas.

● (1200)

Had the tribunal found that import quotas were still desirable, I can assure you that the Government would have followed its recommendations and left them in force. That, incidentally, is more than what the previous Government did. In an earlier inquiry into footwear, the tribunal ruled in February, 1981, that the removal of quotas would be harmful to the Canadian footwear industry. Despite this finding, the then Government, in its wisdom, took the quotas off and then had to restore them in a few months. This was the Government that now sits as the Opposition, for very good reason, and whose international trade critic stood up the other day to accuse us—in his entirely unparliamentary word, as recorded on page 8637 of Hansard—of "treason".

By now Canadians are aware that what we have done on footwear is to put into force the recommendations of the Canadian Import Tribunal, a tribunal established and appointed by the previous Government. I would point out that its studies of the footwear industry were exhaustive and that its recommendations were specific and clear. Under the circumstances, I find it extremely difficult to understand how the Liberal Party can adopt a position of opposition on this measure. I suspect some of its own Members may be as confused by its stance as I am.

In light of the fact that the tribunal found that four of the five categories of footwear producers are now able to stand up to foreign competition, is it the Liberal Party's position that we should ignore the tribunal's recommendations and continue quotas that have cost the consumers of Canada up to half a billion dollars in the past eight years? Is that what the Opposition is saying?

I am also surprised by the stance taken by speakers representing the New Democratic Party. This is the Party that says it represents the "little guy". It is the "little guy" who will benefit most from the removal of quotas. Their shoes will cost less and they will find a greater selection to choose from, particularly a greater selection of lower cost footwear because the quotas had the effect of keeping out lower cost shoes.

Perhaps it is the confusion of the two opposition Parties that has led their members to be so intricate and selective in their attacks on the Government's footwear policy. Whatever the cause, their selectivity has been exquisite. I know that they have read the tribunal's report, because they keep citing it with what sounds like approval. However, what they pick out are brief passages—a sentence here, a phrase there—that, taken out of context, would make it appear that the tribunal agreed with them. It did not.

Let me cite one example of this superselectivity. The other day the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) cited a passage from the tribunal's conclusions to support his concern for the workers in the footwear industry. I certainly do not object to the Hon. Member being concerned, as I too am always concerned for workers in the industry. However, the passage that he cited was a sentence in the middle of page 57. It reads as follows:

> The producers who have been identified as particularly vulnerable are smaller producers located principally in Montreal, although smaller producers in Quebec outside Montreal and perhaps also in "Ontario" may equally be at risk.

That is where he stopped. But let me read the next sentence in the report. It is as follows:

The distributions of employment by size of firm indicate that the number of workers represented by these producers is not large.

The next sentence reads:

The individual and social costs arising from loss of employment have been examined, and, in the case of Quebec, the net benefits to workers from leaving the industry are all positive.

Positive? How could that be? The tribunal offers some explanation in the Appendix section, which nobody of course has quoted. It points out that wages are low in the footwear industry, and that few workers stay at their jobs very long. Turnover is extremely high. It ranges from 56 per cent a year at the low end up to 230 per cent at the high. Two hundred and thirty per cent means that the average worker is on the job less than five months before he leaves.

In the tribunal's opinion, in other words, footwear workers taking advantage of Government programs to find new employment and upgrade their skills would be better off than they are now. That is what we intend to do for them.

The Opposition, of course, has ignored most of the tribunal's findings. It does not mention that the entire industry is still protected by 23 per cent tariffs on imported footwear, which is more than double the tariff in the United States and nearly triple that of western Europe. The Opposition cites only brief selected passages from the report, and only to try to add authority to its own curious case. I suggest that this is not proper opposition.

For the record, let me cite the tribunal's main findings. They start on page 56 of the report. The tribunal has concluded that certain sectors of the footwear industry, in the absence of special measures of protection—that is, quotas—are capable of competing successfully against imports, namely men's/boys', children's/infants', slippers/house footwear, special purpose footwear and skates. The tribunal has also concluded that women's/girls' footwear production remains vulnerable to injury from imports. The tribunal does not believe that the more vulnerable producers could expect to survive by virtue of a complex phase-out formula if they cannot compete in conditions created by a simple and straightforward process of lifting quota constraints. Accordingly, the tribunal proposes that the quotas allocations bearing upon the women's footwear sector be increased by 10 per cent per year in each of the next three years.

Hon. Members will appreciate that the Government gave the women's/girls' footwear producers, which account for roughly half of the industry's production value, more protection than the tribunal recommended. Instead of raising quotas 10 per cent a year, we are doing it more gradually, by 6 per cent the first year, 8 per cent in the second and 10 per cent in the third.

Let me stress that the Government is committed to preserving and creating jobs for Canadians. We are committed to doing this in the footwear sector and in all sectors of the economy. One of the most effective ways of creating jobs is by improving our trade performance. As I have reported to the House, the Government is involved in a great many actions to do just that.

I suggest that the Opposition should be reminded that trade is a two-way street. We cannot expect other countries to buy our goods if we will not buy theirs. I would point out that the Opposition is carefully ignoring the fact that our trading partners are not at all happy at our decision to keep import quotas on ladies' and girls' shoes. The European Economic Community has already signalled its intention to invoke its own right to retaliate against another three years of quota by imposing restrictions on goods we export to them. I have already heard from some companies in industries that have nothing to do with footwear that they are afraid of losing their markets in Europe. If they do, they will have to lay off workers in turn.

We in Canada have been through this before. As I pointed out last week, at the time the present footwear quotas were extended to November, 1985, the European Economic Community threatened to retaliate. It threatened to raise tariffs to prohibitive levels on Canadian petrochemicals, steel products, kraft paper, furs and other products. This could have cost us $150 million a year in sales to Europe. Is the opposition saying that they are not concerned with the jobs of Canadians who work in these sectors? Do they really not care about steel workers and petrochemical workers, for example? The message is really very simple. If you provide too much protection for one industry, you will pay for it in others.

• (1210)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: This is a message that the Opposition does not seem to understand, but it is a fact of life. The Opposition, however, is having trouble relating to the everyday life of Canada or to the aspirations of Canadians. On this footwear issue, the Opposition has become irrelevant to Canada. It is, to put it in footwear terms, out on a limb.

The nation's press keeps up, however, and for the edification of some members of the Opposition, let me quote what some of the newspapers are reporting.

In Montreal, a La Presse editorial of November 21 read:

Ottawa has finally decided to save the Canadian footwear industry. Import quotas had created an unreal world in which the Canadian producer somehow managed to sell his production. The consumer had limited choice and high prices. The end of quotas is to the consumers' advantage and promises a new horizon for producers who can turn out quality shoes—Ottawa has taken a decision that is in the interest of the country as a whole.

What about this article from the November 22 Ottawa Citizen? it reads:

It took some nerve for the Government to drop barriers to footwear imports. The domestic industry, with visible political muscle, had been lobbying hard against the move for months. But abolishing footwear import quotas will benefit consumers—and the industry itself.

Also on November 22, Don McGillivray, the economist columnist for Southam Press, wrote:

The Tory Government has done the right thing—and a brave thing—in deciding to phase out shoe import quotas.

The Government has dared to provoke the wrath of a small, well organized and vocal section of the country to do the right thing on behalf of the consumers.

And so on, Mr. Speaker.

There has been a lot of loose talk in this House about broken promises.

Mr. Broadbent: There certainly has.

Mr. Kelleher: Let me conclude by talking a bit about promises kept, Mr. Speaker. The Government promised to get the Canadian economy moving again, and the figures speak for themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: In the 14 months we have been in office, we have created one-third of a million jobs, and unemployment has dropped from 11.6 per cent to 10.3 per cent.

When we came into office, the prime lending rate was 13 per cent. It has now dropped to 10 per cent, making it much easier and more attractive for business to invest in its future, and for Canadians to get mortgages and personal loans.

To get things moving again, we also concluded two oil agreements, the Eastern and Western Accords, replacing the destructive national energy policy of the previous Government. We did away with the Foreign Investment Review Agency, replacing it with Investment Canada. As a result, we are already beginning to get healthy doses of new foreign investment that will create jobs in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: That is not true. Investment is down, not up.

Mr. Kelleher: We promised to put an end to the system of Government by fiat and introduce an era of national reconciliation, of consultation with all Canadians. We have done that.

Mr. Foster: Wait until Friday.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I have every respect for the fact that the Opposition cannot automatically be expected to approve everything that we do in Government. I wish the Opposition would, but I know it will not.

Mr. Foster: Go down to the Maritimes to witness the First Ministers' Conference.

Mr. Kelleher: I have little respect for an Opposition that attacks everything the Government does automatically and without question. It is too late to ask opposition Members to modify their stance on the footwear issue. They are already committed to it, but it may not be too late to ask them to think a bit more carefully in the future for their good as well as for the good of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question. I preface it by saying that his quoting of a couple of editorialists and an economic writer simply confirms my opinion of both those people and of the Government. It is hardly a persuasive argument to take one very traditional voice to support another traditional voice.

I want to ask the Minister to deal with one matter that I raised in my speech. No doubt it was an oversight on his part that he did not deal with it in his comments.

I pointed out that the industrial restructuring program involved in this sector had, in terms of usage of funds, used only about one-seventh of the money allocated, and that, although late in starting—and that has to be noted—the vast majority of firms now have a sort of three year modernization program under way. Since the Government was committed to the modernization of the industry and since the industry has now just started to implement these modernization programs, would it not have made much more sense for the Government to ensure that funds were spent and the industry modernized instead of, in effect, just abolishing the program now and hoping for the best?

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I did not ignore what the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party said in his speech. I heard him, but perhaps he is right, I should have answered earlier. I am glad now I have the opportunity to do so because I do not agree with him.

With the greatest respect, I feel he is wrong and what I am saying is backed up by the finding of the tribunal itself. You have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the tribunal found in four of the five categories that restructuring had, in fact, been done. It had been completed and the industry in those sectors was able to compete. That is why the tribunal said quotas were no longer required in those sectors and should, therefore, be removed. The move was not premature.

The tribunal said that quotas had been given their chance to operate and had operated so well and so effectively in those sectors that protection was no longer needed. The tribunal said that they should be abolished, them, and we have concurred.

The tribunal found that the womens' and girl's shoes sectors were not ready yet to compete, and that restructuring had not been completed. I agree with my hon. friend that in some areas restructuring had not been completed. I agree with my hon. friend that in some areas restructuring had not been completed and that is what the tribunal found. It said that those quotas have to be kept on for another three years, exactly what the Government is doing.

I would point out that in those areas where there may be some disruption—and I say it will be minimal because the tribunal feels that these sectors will be able to compete—the Government, together with the assistance of my hon. colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), who is in the House this morning, has put together an excellent package of support programs not only for the workers in the industry but for the companies themselves, and now, through a new initiative of my colleague's Department, for the community itself. This is very beneficial.

In some small towns the shoe industry is the only industry. The former Government did not seem to be concerned about what could be done for those communities, but our Government has been concerned and we have implemented programs. Indeed all three, the workers, the community and the companies, will be taken care of by the package we are proposing.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Minister. Maybe he was not in politics in May 1984 but I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it happened by chance in your own riding.

The Prime Minister was very clear. Now, I did not know that there was a difference in the meaning of statements depending on where they are made: if you say something in a given place, it does not mean the same as when it is said some place else.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is doing exactly what he blames us for, namely he is referring to specific sections of the Anti-dumping Tribunal's report. He takes press clippings and quotes some statements as they suit him.

But there is a constant element in the whole matter. Without quoting, because it would take too long, I remind you that on pages 52, 54, 67, 50 of the anti-dumping report, there is the unequivocal statement that thousands of jobs will be lost because of the decision you have made.

Therefore, I want to ask the Minister the following question: How many jobs will be lost because of your decision? You seem to say on one hand that there will be none. On the other hand, you say that your colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), has put together an execellent package. Therefore, will there be any jobs lost or not? If there are, how many lay-offs are anticipated? What are you going to do about the extremely painful situation in which those families who are faced with the prospect of losing their jobs in the near future find themselves?

● (1220)

[English]

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I know the Opposition does not like this, but I have to keep referring back to the tribunal's decision. That inquiry took over a year, with over 72 witnesses appearing and more than 39 written briefs submitted.

An Hon. Member: You said that already.

Mr. Kelleher: That tribunal, as a result of its inquiry, said that quotas should remain on ladies' and girls' footwear. Again, Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that the production of women's and girls' shoes represents approximately 50 per cent of all shoes in Canada, with over 50 per cent of that particular production being carried on in the Province of Quebec. Given that quotas are continued on that production, there obviously is not going to be a loss of jobs in that segment of the industry.

With respect to the other sectors—and again I know you do not like to hear this—the tribunal found that no quotas were needed. It was found that those sectors of the industry did not need production; that they could withstand the rigours of competition. Those other sectors of the industry had restructured and updated themselves and, therefore, any disruption which would occur in those sectors, sectors in which quotas had in fact been removed, would indeed be minimal.

This Government has a concern for workers, communities and companies. Every job is precious to the person holding it, and we agree with that. Therefore, this Government wishes to put into a place a package to assist those people.

Surely to goodness you are not standing up and being critical of this Government for putting in place a package to assist people and communities and companies in the event that lay-offs do occur?

That assistance is something that this Government is proud of, and you should applaud our actions in this regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister recognize that the Government had the legal capacity to dismiss the recommendations of the Anti-dumping Tribunal? And where is the logic of his argument? I do not understand your logic. You say: We are competitive enough to face the international market. On the other hand, you say: We will face the consequences. I hardly understand your logic and I would like to hear your comments in that regard.

[English]

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raises this point about our having had the legal right not to accept the recommendation of the tribunal.

Mr. Speaker, I categorically disagree with him on that point, with great respect. The Ministry of Justice has given us a very firm opinion in that regard, and it is that, in the absence of a finding of inquiry—I repeat, in the absence of a finding of injury—under the legislation now in existence, we cannot legally impose quotas. I again remind the hon. gentleman that in four of the five categories involved, the tribunal found no injury. Therefore, in respect of those categories, we could not legally impose quotas.

I further point out to him that the legal opinion goes on to state that even in those cases where we can impose quotas, it is only for a maximum of three years.

So, not only have we done what is correct legally, we have done what is correct economically and what is in the best interests of the consumers of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a very major issue as it affects the constituents of the riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.There are some 400 jobs in the constituency I represent in this particular industry.

I had a conversation this morning with both shoe factories in my riding, and I am particularly concerned for the situation of the employees and management of the Alexandria Footwear factory.

Alexandria Footwear is a company owned by Rosita Shoes, and the products from that factory are most commonly known as Adidas Shoes, Adidas being, if not the best, one of the best shoes made in this country in the category of athletic footwear, and the same is true of the other shoes produced by that factory as well. Adidas shoes have gained a good reputation among all Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in hard economic times. Conditions are difficult. Notwithstanding the fact that the consumers are aware that Adidas shoes are the best, they are at times faced with the hard reality, because of the economic times, of having to opt for a less expensive product. Because of the hard economic times, the consumer will often opt for the imported product, a product which is manufactured at a lower cost outside of this country.

Mr. Speaker, as of 1983 there were 172 shoe manufacturers in this country, 41 per cent of whom were located in the Province of Quebec, 56 per cent in the Province of Ontario, with the remaining 3 per cent being located in other parts of Canada.

In that year, there were in this country some 3,500 jobs in the tannery industry and some 16,000 jobs in the shoe industry.

So, close to 20,000 jobs are at stake in this industry in our country. We produce some 35 million, 36 million pair of shoes, at an estimated value of close to $1 billion.

As one can see, this industry isn't small potatoes. It is a very important industry for our country, or at least it is for those of us in the Liberal Party. Quite obviously, the Members opposite think otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, this debate today is, in large part, about truth and honesty, and one's ability to keep one's promises.

Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure you are aware of this—of the promises that the Tories made last year. You are aware, of course, Mr. Speaker, that I listed these promises in a little booklet called 338 Tory Promises, copies of which I will gladly give to any Hon. Member or any member of the public who writes to me. I will gladly send out a copy of this book listing the 338 Tory promises, most of which have been broken by now. Those that have not yet been broken will probably be broken in a very short time.

• (1230)

Miss MacDonald: You'd know all about it.

Mr. Boudria: The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is listening very attentively. She was probably at the meeting in Quebec on July 26, 1984. If she was at that meeting of the Quebec caucus, she would know that a press release entitled Progressive Conservative Agenda for Government was released that day. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Dollar (Mr. Weiner) recalls that day. This press release deals with policy area in the textile and apparel industries. That does not directly involve the footwear industry but an interesting promise was made regarding this area. Promise number one was fair trade but not free trade.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I repeat, fair trade but not free trade. That promise was made on July 26. Today the Tories are selling off our shoe industry because it is hindering the free trade negotiations undertaken by the Tory Government.

The second promise contained within the press release deals with stability through the rigorous enforcement of our existing international rights and obligations, including if necessary the establishment of global quotas and a controlled increase in import volumes. What is so controlled about the dismantling of the system that now exists? Opening the flood gates hardly constitutes control in my book.

What have the Tories done since they came into office? They have broken just about every promise they made. Of course, I cannot say in the House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is a liar because you would not allow that, Mr. Speaker. However, I will say that the promises that were made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry, but neither could I allow an Hon. Member to do indirectly what he is not permitted to do directly. I would therefore ask the Hon. Member, knowing that he knows the rules full well, to respond.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw that remark, but I will continue in my remarks to doubt the sincerity of the promises that were made. If the Prime Minister were Pinocchio, his nose would be a foot long and I will leave it at that. The promises that were made have certainly not been kept to the satisfaction of my constituents.

If any cabinet Minister thinks otherwise, let him or her come to Alexandria with me tomorrow to speak to those workers. I challenge any cabinet Minister to go there first thing tomorrow morning. I will even drive any cabinet Minister there. It is only an hour's drive from the national capital. Of course, no one will take me up on that offer, I am quite sure.

Miss MacDonald: It's the threat of driving with you.

Mr. Boudria: I note the remark of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She has an expensive limousine at her service. She can cause the undue expense of having two cars drive to Alexandria rather than one. After all, the Prime Minister uses two jets to fly around. Perhaps, if the Minister wants a repeat performance, she could use two cars to drive to Alexandria to speak to the workers. Whether we go in one car or two, I am still willing to go to Alexandria to speak to the people accompanied by any cabinet Minister who wishes to take the opposing view by telling us why those jobs in Alexandria should be lost. I make that challenge to any cabinet Minister.

[Translation]

I was saying earlier that I questioned the honesty of the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign. I would like to read a few words taken from the Sherbrooke newspaper La Tribune, and I am sure that you are familiar with this quote, Mr. Speaker: "The quota policy would remain as it is, guaranteed Mr. Mulroney, who said that he was not in favour of free trade in this sector of activity."

The interview has to do with the footwear industry. This promise was made in Sherbrooke by the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party who is now Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to read from another Canadian Press report and also from another article published in La Presse of March 25, 1985, in which the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion apparently stated that the Canadian textile, clothing and footwear industry should probably be guaranteed a share of the local market for a long period. This was last March, and I am now wondering whether a long period means six months in the mind of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. If it was deemed necessary, according to this interview with the Minister last March, to guarantee these jobs for a long period, why did he, also, break another promise made to the Canadian people?

[English]

Some Hon. Members have mentioned today that public opinion was not behind an extension of these quotas. I would like to disagree with those who have said that for the following reasons.

[Translation]

A survey was carried out from September 16 to 20, 1985, by the Decima Research Firm of Toronto. I would like to read a few findings of this survey. The question was asked as follows: "According to some people, the Government should make use of quotas to protect the Canadian industry against foreign competition because it is important to protect jobs in Canada." People were then asked to choose one two alternatives, namely to protect jobs for Canadians or to provide greater access to less expensive products. Of the people surveyed, 66 per cent told Decima that they favoured the protection of jobs for Canadians. This means that two-thirds of Canadians do not agree with this decision made by the Conservative Party.

The following question was also asked and I quote: I would like now to ask you a few questions about the Canadian footwear industry. How important is the Canadian footwear industry to the Canadian economy and to employment in Canada. Is it very important, rather important, not very important, or not important at all? Taken together, the answers "very important" and "rather important" accounted for 84 p. 100 of all answers to that particular question.

And further on the following question was asked: In your opinion, how important is it for Canada to have its own footwear industry? Once again, 86 p. 100 of the people surveyed answered that it was very important and rather important that Canada should have its own footwear industry. And this Government is suggesting that it was sensitive to public opinion.

I heard the Hon. Minister make such a statement a while ago. If he is so sensitive to public opinion, why is he going against it?

[English]

I think the Government is trying to impose a death sentence on this industry, an industry that is very important to my constituents and many others. I know which Conservative Members represent ridings which contain shoe factories. Most of them have not spoken today. I know that I cannot say that some Hon. Members are not present in the House, but I will just say that some of them will have difficulty speaking on this issue this morning.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), in reading from his speech earlier this morning, said that the decision of the tribunal was that on which he was hanging his hat. The tribunal had decided that we did not need quotas for four-fifths of the industry and that we needed to retain quotas for the other one-fifth of the industry. The Minister said that because the tribunal said it did not need quotas the Government would remove them. He has also said that for the sectors in which they are needed the Government has decided to increase them. On the one hand he is saying that where the tribunal has said no, he is agreeing with them. On the other hand he has said that where the tribunal says yes, he begs to differ with the tribunal and advocates something different. There are inconsistencies in the answers of the Minister.

The Minister also stated that no jobs would be lost and that his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has all types of programs to accommodate people who will be losing their jobs. If no jobs are to be lost, then why would the people who are losing their jobs need to be accommodated?

In another contradictory statement the Minister said that people who lose their jobs in the shoe industry are better off elsewhere. Since when does it pay more to be on unemployment insurance than to be working? I would like the Minister to answer that question later. Since when it is more beneficial to be without a job than to be with one? That is voodoo economics from the Tory Party. Perhaps I should tell every one of my constituents who is about to lose his or her job that they should place their names on the Tory patronage list since that seems to be the only fruitful job-creation program the Government has created thus far. Many people have found jobs that way. In fact, more people have found jobs in that way than under all the other government programs combined.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) put it very well when he asked his question earlier this morning. He spoke about the cost to the consumer. I do not think that the cost to the consumer was a big factor in this issue. Even if it was and is a big factor Canadians have known for quite some time that it costs more to be a Canadian than to be an American. Having had the opportunity to move to the United States at some time in the past, many of us have chosen to remain in the country knowing that it costs more to stay. For my constituents and I, and on behalf of my Party, I would like to say that even though it does cost more, it is a price worth paying to be in this country.

The Government has dragged its feet for too long on this issue. Today in the Minister's response it was obvious that he had foot-in-mouth disease. It is obvious that the Tories will be given the boot over this issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

[Translation]

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) discussed—

[English]

—truth, honesty and the ability to keep promises. Can the Hon. Member explain what type of truth and honesty was involved with his Party and its ability to keep promises when we consider the situation of the implementation of wage and price controls in 1974? The Liberal Government promised it would not bring them in. In the 1970s the Liberals promised that they would wrestle inflation to the ground. In 1979 they promised that the price of gasoline would never be more than 18 cents a gallon.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's comments are not relevant to the motion before us today.

[English]

Mr. Schellenberg: I am coming to the point, Mr. Speaker. I thought that I might as well make a bit of a preamble since members of the Opposition seem to enjoy preambles.

The final point I wish to make is with respect to the promise made in 1980 to build a pipeline to Vancouver Island, which never saw the light of day under the previous Government. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has just returned from the West. I am sure there was truth, honesty and promises discussed in Vancouver over the week-end. When we speak about countervailing duties and the possibility of the threat of lumber quotas being imposed by the Americans against our own forestry products, how can the Hon. Member ask the Americans not to do that if we continue to prop up Canadian industries with quotas of our own? How can the Hon. Member explain that to the citizens of western Canada and, indeed, to all Canadians?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it may come as a surprise to the Hon. Member that, in large part, the shoes we import do not come from the United States.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose the same questions to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) as those I posed to the Hon. Member from his Party who spoke before him. I ask the Hon. Member if he agrees with what I have to say. The three major problems which have put the footwear industry into the difficult position which it now faces are as a result of, first, the decision of the Liberal Government in 1981 to abolish entirely quotas on leather shoes. This was a decision which was in effect for eight months and which led to massive increases in importations into the country. It hurt a great many firms. Second, I deal with the failure of the policy with respect to the industry to push ahead restructuring of the footwear companies involved during the first period of quota protection from 1977 to 1981. Third, the fact is that the new system of quotas put into effect in 1982 did not cover many of the most dangerous and difficult imports which have to be faced by our footwear producers in the country. Is it not the case that the serious crisis which the footwear industry faces is very much the creation of Liberal government policy and Liberal Government mistakes?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Hon. Member was on the side of the Tories or on the side of the workers in the shoe industry. I am still uncertain as to which side he is on. However, I would like to answer his questions in any event. He asks if I am satisfied with the fact that quotas were removed in the past. The answer is obviously not. That is why we placed them on again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: That was obviously unsatisfactory. In this respect I hope that the Tories will have the same sense as we had, although one cannot equate Liberal common sense with Tory common sense. Needless to say, I wish they would have the same sense.

The Hon. Member asks whether or not the measures which were instituted with respect to modernizing the industry were successful. He asked whether or not it was complete and so on. No, it is not complete. The CIRB program was a rather successful one. It is interesting that at the time when the industry needs it the most the Government has abolished it. In the near future the Government will disband CIRB. In that respect what the Tories have done is doubly wrong.

With respect to the loopholes in the present legislation, yes, there are loopholes. I have advocated tightening them up, as have others, but we still have 40 per cent of the market and not 12 per cent which could very well come to pass under the present Tory policies. If the quotas were so bad, the industry would not want them to be retained. In those terms they were obviously successful. However, they could have been made even better. I say to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party that 40 per cent is better than 12 per cent, but I would like to see 50 per cent.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), for questions and comments.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his excellent speech and inform the House that if all Members showed the same courage in defending the interests of Canadian workers, wherever there are shoe factories in this country, we might get a better decision from the government than we have now.

My question is as follows: I assume you have had a chance to meet with your constituents who work in the footwear industry. In the light of the Minister's comments, in which he seemed to be saying that people working in the footwear industry were cheap labour working for very low wages, do you feel that the people working in this sector are satisfied with the kind of wages they are getting, and do they look to the future with confidence, as a result of the promised measures that are supposed to provide solutions to all their problems?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his very apt question. First of all, regarding the working conditions in the shoe industry in my riding, and the level of satisfaction or dissatisfaction of those who work there, I have had three meetings with workers from my riding in the last three months, and I also tabled in the House a petition signed by 1,000 constituents, requesting that the quotas be maintained, and most of them were workers in the industry. So that is what the workers in my riding want.

As for wage conditions, there have been no strikes in this industry in my riding for quite a long time, Mr. Speaker, and although like people anywhere else, workers would like to earn more, they would have been quite happy to keep their jobs, a possibility if the Conservative Government had not taken this particular action. It is too bad that with all the information the Government is getting from Opposition Members who have factories in their ridings, it has not bothered to ask Government Members for information, because there are a number who also have general factories in their ridings. If the Government had done so, the story would have been quite different.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney).

[English]

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prescott very kindly offered to drive one of our Ministers to his riding to meet with some of the workers. May I ask the Hon. Member, whose concern for Canadian workers is so touchingly expressed, whether the car in which he would drive the Minister is Canadian made and whether the shoes on his feet are made in Canada? He should know the answer to that because those shoes are in his mouth so often.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the maiden question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) who had such difficulty in being recognized because he has never aksed a question before. I want to tell the Hon. Member that, yes, my car was made in Canada. It is an Acadian. It was made in Ste. Thérese, Quebec. It is not one of those expensive American limousines which are driven by cabinet Ministers. And the name of my riding is Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, not Prescott. And my shoes are Canadian made.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) announced last Wednesday the new footwear policy adopted by the Government. This policy represents a major step forward in the implementation of the agenda for the economic renewal of Canada which was made public a year ago. I would like to address today some of the most important elements of the new footwear import policy which have a direct bearing on the mandate of my Ministry.

As a Minister responsible for consumer interests and competition policy, I have a keen interest in trade policy, since such policy can greatly influence the state of competition in Canada and the welfare of Canadian consumers. From this perspective, I am supportive of trade liberalization measures which contribute to increase the choice of products available to Canadians and foster a healthier state of competition in the Canadian economy. On the other hand, I am generally opposed to the imposition or extension of trade barriers such as global quotas which impose heavy costs on consumers and stifle competitive forces.

I have been particularly interested in the formulation of the Government policy on footwear because it is an important question for all Canadians and because it illustrates so well the difficult choices which Canadians will have to face in the years to come. What I would like to do today is to explain to the House why I believe the Government's decision on the footwear sector import policy is the right policy. In what follows I shall focus my attention on the effects of the prior global quota regime and contrast them with those which the new Government policy are expected to have on consumers, retailers and the footwear manufacturing industry.

The consideration of the relative costs and benefits of global quotas, particularly as analysed by the report of the Canadian Import Tribunal, has been a major factor in the formulation of the policy adopted by the Government. Before I turn to these questions, I would like to point out that the previous Government, which assigned the Canadian Import Tribunal to review the industry's positiion, was clearly aware of, and concerned with, the costs associated with the adverse affects of a global quota policy when it directed the tribunal to take, and I quote:

—into account the various elements that affect the retail price of footwear in Canada, examine what impact the import quotas on footwear have had on the operations and levels of activity of importers, wholesalers and retailers of these products in Canada and on the prices paid for footwear by Canadian consumers—

To emphasize its recognition of the seriousness of these costs, the former Government went on to conclude its instructions to the tribunal in the following terms, and again I quote:

—in the event of a determination of injury or threat thereof, recommend a formula by which the special measures of protection could be phased out through a progressive liberalization process covering a period of not more than three years, by which time the Canadian industry would be required to face international competition without special measures of protection.

I believe that the previous Government was receptive in setting these terms of reference. The new policy we have adopted, which is based on the findings of the tribunal, is consistent with the analysis behind these instructions.

[Translation]

As Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker, I am particularly interested in the impact of quotas on Canadian consumers.

Though it is widely acknowledged that over-all quotas might protect the industry to a certain extent, they do have unfavourable effects on consumers by forcing them to pay more for goods which do not necessarily meet their needs and tastes. Shoe import quotas are not an exception to this general rule.

Evidence adduced during public hearings held by the tribunal clearly shows that quotas were responsible for higher prices for both imported and Canadian-made shoes. By restricting the supply of imported shoes, quotas make them more expensive and consumers are encouraged to buy domestically produced shoes which are relatively less costly. Stronger demand for Canadian shoes is the signal our manufacturers need to boost production and increase prices.

But quotas have a more subtle and pernicious effect than a simple across-the-board price increase: they create an artificial shortage of imported shoes, and import permit holders benefit from a shortage premium whcih amounts to an additional income. This is reflected in the difference between the price which the permit holder is able to buy his footwear on the national and world markets, and the price which he can sell them to Canadian wholesalers and retailers.

The quota system having thus given import permits a financial value, it is understandable that the holders, who have obtained these permits on the basis of their purchases over the preceding years, are unwilling to use them to purchase cheap footwear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Minister, but it being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

SPORTS

B.C. LIONS TRIUMPH IN GREY CUP FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, 21 years often implies a coming of age, so yesterday, in Montreal, the B.C. Lions, who roared in 1964, finally came alive again in 1985. After 21 years they have returned the Grey Cup to British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: All British Columbians who sat in the stands yesterday, or watched the game on television, felt a surge of western pride rising once again. As politicians know only so well, you cannot beat winning. Even our Liberal friends, if they were here, those who participated in that PR junket to B.C. on the weekend, would now probably be more aware of what a frosty Friday is like in Vancouver. They, too, I am sure, felt overwhelmed by the enthusiasm and pride which spread through British Columbia yesterday when our Lions ate the Hamilton Cats for brunch and we could truthfully say once more: we are the best.

Tomorrow a victory parade in Vancouver will provide a second opportunity for residents of Vancouver and the Lower Mainland to show their support of and gratitude to the B.C. Lions and this special all-Canadian sports competition in which the Canadian Football League enables us all to participate.

I was impressed, too, by the very special sportsmanlike behaviour of Canadians from across the land who attended yesterday's game. As I left the stadium surrounded by orange—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ABSENCE OF COMPANY CHARGED IN PCB HIGHWAY SPILL

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, a trial is now taking place in the town of Kenora where the defendants have not even bothered to show up. The trial involves the spill of polychlorinated byphenols along the Trans-Canada Highway last spring by a company which has since ceased operations and apparently vanished. Among the charges brought against this company, four involve the offence of unlawfully permitting the discharge of materials contrary to the Ontario Water Resources Act. These charges contain a provision for fines and jail sentences if the defendant is found guilty. If, however, the defendant is not to be found in court on the day of the trial, something is clearly wrong.

S.O. 22

The spill of PCBs along the Trans-Canada Highway last spring illustrated for all of Canada the need for thorough and enforceable environmental protection legislation. The fact that those responsible for that spill did not come to court to answer the charges is an affront to the people of northwestern Ontario and the people of the country. It is an affront to all who have had to put up with this irresponsible activity, and to the laws of this country and the Province of Ontario. It clearly illustrates the need for tighter registration and bonding of carriers of dangerous goods.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—EMPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES POLLING COMPANY

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I was shocked, as I know all Canadians who read the Canadian Press report were, to learn that the NDP, the supposed defenders of Canadian jobs, have been employing a U.S. pollster for the last 18 months when there are Canadian firms that can do the job.

Mr. Blaikie: What's the matter? Are you anti-American?

Mr. Pennock: This comment is according to their own Party's secretary in British Columbia.

Mr. Blaikie: They are our best friends.

Mr. Pennock: Is this the same Party that sits here, day in and day out, accusing the Government and the Prime Minister of selling out to the United States or allowing Americans to take away Canadian jobs? What hypocrisy!

Mr. Blaikie: You are anti-American.

Mr. Pennock: While the NDP has been blowing hot air, we in the Government has been creating jobs for ordinary Canadians; 333,000 of them since the election.

Mr. Blaikie: I want it on the record that he is anti-American.

Mr. Pennock: On the two major obstacles to economic recovery we have achieved signifcant results since the election. Unemployment has fallen from 11.6 per cent to 10.3 per cent, and for the first time in four years the federal deficit is showing signs of shrinking rather than expanding. If the NDP strives to be a credible Opposition, it should at least be consistent in its own hiring and practise what it preaches.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF CALGARY AFTERNOON RADIO PROGRAM

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, a matter has been brought to my attention concerning a change in afternoon programming on the CBC AM radio in Calgary. The former 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. time slot was looked on as an oasis of relaxation, with a solid core of easy listening and interestingly varied music which was interspaced with quiet comments by a knowledgeable host. The change has been dramatic! Unhappy callers refer to music that is ear-splitting and raucus, and to a hostess who constantly interrupts with personal opinions. Most of the callers are from households which have been long-time supporters of the CBC, and they feel these changes have taken away the core of their pleasure in CBC listening.

[Translation]

I strongly urge the Minister to raise the matter with the President of the CBC in order to restore the afternoon programming to comply with the tastes of its listeners.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—EFFECT OF CUT-BACKS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have received a number of letters from people in the country and I would like to read one of them to you. It concerns Public Service cut-backs. It says:

Dear Sir,

I wish to strongly voice my opposition to the recently announced cut-backs, lay-offs and contracting out in Veterans' Affairs.

In the House of Commons Debates for October 17, 1985, page 7754 on "Public Service—Career Planning for Employees Facing Layoffs (B) Job Security", Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board) is quoted as saying:

> "We appreciate that this is a delicate matter but there does not appear to be long lines of people pounding at our doors saying that they have been mistreated."

Consider me in line, pounding at your door! Service to veterans is why Veterans Affairs exists. Any cut-backs reduces that service.

This letter is signed by Mrs. Jeanne M. Bowles. I have similar letters from Mrs. Magaret Taylor, Sandra Messer, Agnes Marquis, Patricia Lamb, Louise Bolduc, and Gail Robertson, all employees of the Department in the area of Saint John, New Brunswick.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CUTTING OF AUXILIARY SERVICE AT GILLAM, MAN.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, last weekend Canadian National announced that it would be cutting auxilary service at Gillam, Manitoba. The auxilary is an emergency response train which goes out to deal with derailments and other emergency situations. Under CN directives an auxilary unit must be ready to leave its site within one hour. However, by removing the auxilary unit in Gillam, the nearest auxilary unit is something like 48 hours away. In other words, if there is a derailment on the major line—the only line into Churchill, Manitoba—during the grain season, it is quite possible that that line could be shut down for over a week.

The Government was notified on October 11 that this was a possibility, that CN was contemplating this move, and yet it did nothing. At the very time when we are looking for a method to ensure that grain can leave the country, all three ports of exit are in a situation in which they can be closed down. I think it is time that the Government acted seriously with CN, the Seaway, and all companies involved in exporting our grain to make sure that we have the ability to export our grain in the fastest and most efficient manner.

CANADA COUNCIL

FUNDING OF CULTURAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss a matter of grave importance to our cultural community. The new funding method of the Canada Council, which was adopted earlier this year, threatens the Cultural independence of our museums and galleries.

[Translation]

For more than twenty years, those institutions who have proven themselves have been receiving annual grants from the Canada Council. There is now a new four-part application process to obtain financial assistance. Therefore, from now on, the Canada Council will be the one to decide what exhibitions the public should see.

[English]

The effect of this new method is devastating. The museum community has found it to be more costly, and more difficult to plan its budgets and programs. For example, the Edmonton Art Gallery has already been forced to postpone many important exhibits because of Canada Council's unexplained refusal to fund them. The Gallery will incur a deficit of up to $130,000 in 1985, in large part as a direct result of Canada Council's new funding policy for major museums.

The Edmonton Art Gallery is not alone. The future remains bleak for all museums in Canada because the Council has recently stated that it will not review its new policy for two years.

I ask the House, should an appointed body such as the Canada Council have such discretionary power over the cultural make-up of our museums and galleries? It should not be up to the Canada Council to decide what exhibition is or is not worthy of funding. I say that our local art and museum patrons should make this decision.

S.O. 22

PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR SMALL AND MEDIUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted to rise in the House today by more good news on the economic front. A recent Gallup poll commissioned by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association proves that Canadians share the Government's conviction that the private sector is the key to economic recovery and sustained growth.

The poll results show that since 1982 the number of Canadians who believe that business is the key player in an improved economy has tripled. In addition, the number of Canadians who believe that only Government can provide the solution to economic problems has dropped by 20 per cent in the same three years.

Evidently, Canadians support our Government's policy of providing encouragement and incentives to small and medium-sized businesses. There is good reason for that support. Since September, 1984, 333,000 new jobs have been created in Canada. Unemployment is down by 1.3 per cent since the 1984 election. The response of small and medium sized businesses to the Challenge '85 program was overwhelming. Working together with provincial and federal Governments, these businesses created 100,000 jobs for Canadian students, 14,000 more than 1984's summer program.

The May 23, 1985, Budget contained many measures designed to encourage small and medium businesses. Those measures were greeted enthusiastically by the private sector then, and now Canadians across the country believe that 100,000 smaller businesses hold the key to our future prosperity.

Smaller businesses are the key to Canada's economic prosperity. Together, they and our Government will ensure our future security.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

NECESSITY TO PROTECT SECURITY OF NATURAL GAS SUPPLIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, last week in Calgary, Douglas Fenton, president of Alberta and Southern Gas Co. Ltd., told the National Energy Board that it should abolish the requirement that Canadian natural gas consumers should be guaranteed a 25-year supply before exports can occur. He believes that Canada should increase its exports substantially, forget the guarantees of security to Canadian consumers, and provide unlimited exports of natural gas to the United States market.

It seems strange that a Canadian company would advocate unlimited sales to the United States and have little regard for the security of Canadian consumers. However, what the president of Alberta and Southern Gas Co. did not make public at the National Energy Board hearings was that his company is 100 per cent owned by Pacific Gas and Electric Co. of San Francisco. His gas company is a subsidiary of the U.S. gas company. He was really being a mouthpiece for the U.S. parent company, saying to forget Canadians, their future and energy security, and sell Americans as much natural gas as possible, as cheaply as possible.

It may call itself an Alberta gas company, but it really is a U.S. gas company. When the president of the company calls for more exports to the United States, I trust that the National Energy Board will recognize just who is doing in the talking.

TERRORISM

TRAGIC END TO HIJACKING OF EYPTIAN AIRLINER—LOSS OF CANADIAN LIVES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canadians were shocked and saddened to learn today that two Canadians were killed by terrorists who hijacked an Egyptian airliner and forced it to land in Malta. The Official Opposition and, I am sure, all Members of this House wish to express sincere condolences to the Leonard family. I would like to express the hope that the Government will do everything possible to assist the family in their time of sorrow.

Is it the intention of the Government to make sure that the family will be assisted in every form possible to help them in these very difficult circumstances?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Members of this House and everyone in the country share the sense of outrage and regret at the events in Malta and the death of two innocent Canadians.

Today both the Prime Minister and I were in touch by telephone with the parents and grandparents of the two Canadian victims and have, as the Hon. Member has suggested, indicated to them all of the co-operation of the Government of Canada and, indeed, all of the support of the Parliament and the people of Canada would be with them.

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT HAS MADE REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT OF GREECE CONCERNING ATHENS AIRPORT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his statement. I would like to ask him a question on one of the problems which has led to this tragic situation.

As Hon. Members know, the Athens airport has been the site of several such attacks. I would like to know whether the Government has already made representations to the Greek Government authorities so they will make sure this airport will not be used again for similar highjacking attempts. Tragic incidents have occurred in recent months and it is with deep sadness that we were witness to a repeat of similar incidents over the weekend. Had the Government already made representations concerning the safety of Canadian travellers who use the Athens airport?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Along with the other countries of the world, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to find out exactly where the terrorists boarded the aircraft. At this moment it is not at all certain that it was in Greece.

INQUIRY IF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT WAS CONSULTED AND CONSENTED TO ASSAULT ON AIRCRAFT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to the information I was given, the Canadian Government knew that Canadian passengers were on the Egyptian aircraft before it was stormed? Was the Canadian Government consulted before the Egyptian commandos stormed the aircraft and did it agree to this attempt to free the hostages?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, there was no time for further consultation. Consultations were held only between the Egyptian forces and the Maltese authorities. There were no other consultations.

[English]

I should simply say in addition, Mr. Speaker, that all of us naturally deeply regret the loss of life. All of us know that terrorism and hijacking have to be stopped.

A very difficult decision was taken by Egyptian authorities on the ground, under pressure, on the basis of the best information available to them in the circumstances. I do not think it serves anyone's interest for us to try to second guess the wisdom of that decision.

OWNERSHIP OF QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—OFFER OF MEDIATION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It has been reported today that the Government of British Columbia has turned down the offer made by the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to mediate in the South Moresby-Lyell Island dispute. What proposal can the Prime Minister put forward now that would resolve this tragic and troublesome dispute in British Columbia?

● (1420)

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I might be allowed to respond to the question of my hon. friend by saying that the process which was initiated a few days ago is still in train. There have been some discussions with all parties, and I will be maintaining my contact with those parties. I am hopeful we will be able to arrive at an opportunity for a meeting to bring about some process of mediation.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): I should like to come back to the Prime Minister. Last week the Prime Minister was asked on several occasions to intervene personally. It seems that we have reached an impasse, and I am wondering whether the Prime Minister would agree, when he meets with the Premier of British Columbia, to take up this matter with him personally, before the situation gets entirely out of hand and becomes even more tragic than it is at this very moment.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, as it is my responsibility, asked me to participate in this matter, and I suggest that before people rush to the judgment that we have reached an impasse, they allow the process which is currently in train to proceed, in the hope that it will yield some results.

ATTENDANCE AT PROPOSED MEETING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I think all Members of this House were very pleased with the Minister's decision last Thursday night to begin negotiations on the comprehensive claim of the Haida people to the Queen Charlotte Islands, particularly in relation to Lyell Island and the South Moresby conflict.

But, to use the Minister's own words, as of Thursday night the situation was dangerous. As I am sure he is aware, a few moments ago another 19 Haida Indians were arrested.

I am wondering whether the Minister can bring us up to date, in relation to tomorrow's proposed meeting, in terms of whether or not any of the players involved—Western Forest Products Limited, the Haida Indians, or the B.C. Government—have agreed to come to such a meeting in Vancouver or Victoria tomorrow?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the only thing I can do at this time which might be useful is to tell the Hon. Member that the people who are concerned with this have asked me, along with the Minister of the Environment, to continue the process toward a meeting which could begin a process of mediation.

I was in communication just prior to Question Period with members of the Haida Indian Band, and as well there was communication earlier today with the Government of British Columbia. Also, two other parties have indicated an interest in such a meeting.

I think it is far too early to arrive at any conclusions. I am hoping to have another day or two in order to arrive at a situation in which the opportunities may become more clear.

ARREST OF ELDERLY INDIANS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the situation, as I know the Minister knows, is extremely urgent. I am wondering whether he can tell the House whether there are any additional administrative or constitutional powers, given the special relationship that this House of Commons has with the Haida people, that he might be able to make use of in this situation.

As we know now, 35 Haida Indians have been arrested in recent days, some as old as 80 years of age.

I am wondering whether there are some powers or initiatives, aside from the negotiation process, that the Minister might be able to use during this very crucial period so as to assist the Haida people in this very urgent situation.

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, at this point I think everyone would agree that the most important thing to be achieved is a meeting of the parties. If there is some further power or substantive support that I might need from the Members of this House, I know that I can call on it and receive it. But I think at this point the single most important step we can take is to have all Members bend their efforts to achieving the meeting of the parties involved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

EXPORTS OF LUMBER TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Reports out of Washington indicate that the U.S. senior trade representative, Mr. Yeutter, is going to his Cabinet tomorrow to discuss a whole set of new proposals to reopen negotiations with Canada on the lumber trade, including the discussion of stumpage fees, and that this is a prior condition to Congress being asked for approval to proceed with the general trade negotiation.

Have we indicated to the Americans our agreement to a new round of negotiations, including the discussion of such subjects as stumpage fees?

And given that it is a matter clearly within the provincial jurisdiction, have we gained the approval of the provincial Governments that such negotiations can proceed at this time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, of course, is deeply concerned about the threat to the Canadian forestry industry that emanates from the United States. We have made it clear to the Americans, as they have made it clear to us, that there is no linkage at all between the resolution of that question and any negotiations on trade that might be entered into between the two countries.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES TRADE REPRESENTATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): The American chief trade representative, Mr. Yeutter, has already stated that the matter of Prentice-Hall, the matter of patents on pharmaceuticals, and the lumber trade must all be resolved before the U.S. side will undertake to go to Congress for approval to start negotiations with Canada on a trade agreement.

I ask the Minister again: are we agreeing to such negotiations on lumber, on Prentice-Hall, on pharmaceuticals? And do we consider that to be an unfair representation as a condition for getting into the trade talks which this Government has proposed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made a proposal to the United States with regard to discussing trade rules and trade negotiations. In so far as this Government is concerned, there will be no conditions involved from the American side that we will be accepting on those negotiations. I think it may be that the Hon. Member, without intending to do so, misread the intent of Mr. Yeutter's remarks.

LOGGING ON LYELL ISLAND—ARREST OF HAIDA PEOPLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to preface my question by commending the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the commendable initiatives he took prior to the weekend regarding the difficult situation which affects the Haida people and others on the West Coast. More than 19 Haidas were arrested this morning. These particular people are well known for their peacefulness, and many of the people who are being arrested are elderly. Considering that, and considering the fact that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development just said that we should all be making our best efforts to get negotiations under way, would the Prime Minister consider phoning directly to the Premier of British Columbia to ask for his Government's participation in these important negotiations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question. It is a troubling situation and we are doing our utmost to resolve it in an appropriate manner. The Minister has handled this situation with sensitivity thus far and I would hope the House would allow him to pursue his initiative in that sense.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am sensitive to the Prime Minister's choice of words and to the delicacy of the situation. Given the urgency of this matter for the Haida people and for the others involved, if the Minister's efforts with other Ministers in the British Columbia Government, efforts which have already been considerable, do not bear fruit by tomorrow, will the Prime Minister at that point consider contacting the Premier directly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I think my hon. friend would allow, the question is hypothetical. I will be guided by the good counsel of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and we shall not hesitate to assume the responsibilities incumbent upon the Government and Parliament of Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMAN'S LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on November 8, a 31-year-old fisherman from Newfoundland, Harvey Hawkins, travelled to the Toronto Hospital for Sick Children to donate one of his kidneys to save the life of a 14-year-old girl, his younger sister. Because he did that, the Unemployment Insurance Commission cut off his unemployment insurance payments.

My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has received notice of this question and has had time to consult her officials. Will the Minister exercise her ministerial discretion by reinstating Mr. Hawkins' unemployment insurance benefits, the only income he receives which allows him to pay his bills and support his family?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I too have concern and sympathy for the case that has been raised by the Hon. Member. As he knows, the Unemployment Insurance Act makes no provision for special and deserving cases of this kind, and neither do I as Minister under the Act have any discretion to act in these cases. However, that is one of the reasons why a case like this must be directed to the Commission of Inquiry on the Unemployment Insurance Commission which may see to it that such discrepancies do not exist in the future.

In the meantime I can tell the Hon. Member that we are taking two steps. One is to ensure that the provinces concerned offer social security payments to Mr. Hawkins during the time he is in hospital. The second is to ensure Mr. Hawkins that, on his return to Newfoundland, he will be guaranteed work under the Canadians Jobs Strategy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF BENEFITS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to figure out what is going on here. If a man rushed into a burning building to save a child, he would receive the Governor General's Medal for bravery. This man does not want a medal. He wants the income back which he rightfully deserves. Given the fact that there was a problem with the operation and it is now Mr. Hawkins who is on the kidney dialysis machine in the General Hospital in Toronto, will the Minister use whatever discretion is required, either through Cabinet or not, to reinstate this man's benefits for the sake of compassion? Has the Government no compassion for the invidivual any more? What is going on? We want an answer and we want it now. This man is worried about his bills. He is worried about supporting his family now. He cannot get the $620 from welfare.

● (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not need any lessons in compassion from the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I say to the Hon. Member that the discretion which I am denied as a Minister under the Act is because his Government, when in office—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: —took away that type of discretion. I do not have it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I also say to him that we will take steps to ensure that there is support for Mr. Hawkins, and work for him. I am not sure that when the Hon. Member's Party was in Government that it would have taken those steps.

ELIMINATION OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Doe she remember the promise he made in Sherbrooke on May 4, 1984, when he was campaigning for election in which he said that a Conservative Government would not abolish the import quotas in the footwear and textile industries? Now that the Minister of International Trade has announced that the great majority of the affected quotas will be abolished, will the Prime Minister tell us why he has failed to keep the promise that he made when he was looking for the votes of the workers in the footwear industry?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I have previously advised the House, there were no broken promises. We are not a Party of broken promises.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kelleher: Where and when quotas are required for the protection of the industry, we will keep them in place. That is exactly what we did. The tribunal said that they were required for children's and women's footwear and we kept them in place. The tribunal said that they were not required for the other classes of footwear and we took them off. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that where they are not required we should add another $500 million cost to the consumers of the country? I say no.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I hope to reply later to the Hon. Minister's question at a more appropriate time.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Prime Minister as to whether he has abandoned another of his Ministers who happens to be away on sick leave. I am referring to the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who said on this subject only in June of this year—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Heap: —that what you were talking about then was saying—and he was referring to the removal of the quotas—there will be no footwear industry—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am in some difficulty because this is becoming quite a long preamble to the Hon. Member's supplementary question. Is there a question?

Mr. Heap: My question is: As well as abandoning the policy of his Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, has he also abandoned the absent Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no and no.

STATIONING OF TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT OFFICERS IN EMBASSIES AND CONSULATES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Noting that technology development and transfer must be a cornerstone of an industrial policy, can the Minister tell the House if our Government is putting technology development officers in place in our consulates to assist in the exchange of transfers of technology? If so, when will this plan be in place?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed doing that as a means of encouraging Canada's ability to take our place of leadership again in the international markets. There have already been six technology development officers designated for embassies or consulates around the world designed particularly to try to help Canada's small and medium-sized businesses which we want to help encourage to become part of international trade and international markets.

PRIME MINISTER'S TRAVELS—USE OF AIRCRAFT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In August a member of the Prime Minister's staff assured the Canadian media and the people of Canada that the practice of flying two jets to bring the Prime Minister to a destination—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: —would be cancelled and that the procedure was never authorized by the Prime Minister in the first place. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether on his last trip to Florida he was personally aware that his aircraft was followed by another jet belonging to the Government of Canada? What does the Prime Minister intend to do about this practice?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since the matter falls within my jurisdiction perhaps the Hon. Member would be enlightened, as the journalist and others who followed that line were not when they wrote this story, that a flight was neither authorized nor requested but was pursued in the normal course of meeting training requirements.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The laughter of Members opposite just—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It just happened to go to West Palm Beach.

Mr. Nielsen: —illustrates their complete ignorance of the subject matter with which we are dealing. The fact of the matter is that the flights which have been made by members of this Government this year as compared with the last year of the Liberal administration are down almost 40 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED INTO USE OF TWO JET PLANES FOR TRANSPORTATION OF ONE PERSON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of National Defence personally give this House the assurance that he will enquire into this matter, a coincidence that cost the Canadian taxpayer $11,000 to have two jets for one person?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to conduct an inquiry to inform the hon. gentleman that training flights are conducted by our Armed Forces with the whole range of its aircraft throughout the world, not just in the United States and Canada. This was a regular training mission which was in that part of the country. I do not know why the hon. gentleman does not do a little homework and bone up on these things so that he can become familiar with them.

INQUIRY IF PRIME MINISTER REGRETS PROMISE MADE AT SHERBROOKE CONCERNING QUOTAS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. After his extensive reply, any Canadian would want a frank and forthright Government in this country. After the decision made last week regarding quotas in the footwear industry, is the Prime Minister going to say he regrets the promise he made on May 4 of last year, in Sherbrooke? Does the Prime Minister regret his promise?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on May 4, 1984, we made a statement which was an accurate reflection of our philosophy and our policies. On June 14, a few weeks later, the Liberal Government instructed the Canadian Import Tribunal to review an agency whose members were appointed by the Liberal Government, and instructions were given to review this matter. A year later, the Tribunal appointed by the Liberals submitted a report that formed the basis for this decision. So there has been no change in policy, and there is this new and important dimension that was added by the Canadian Import Tribunal. Nevertheless, the Government's policies are aimed at improving conditions and providing more assistance for these advanced technology industries in creating jobs not just in the Eastern Townships but across the country.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Langdon: What the Prime Minister in fact is saying is that he is pleased to implement a Liberal policy initiative. I think he should regret that.

TEXTILE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Does following a course behind a Liberal policy in that case also mean that the Prime Minister's promise to maintain textile quotas will be similarly abandoned as a result of Liberal moves which were put in motion to review that policy? Is that promise made to the voters of Quebec also to be abandoned?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the textile industry, and the policy with respect to that industry, is presently being reviewed by the Government and several members of Cabinet. I can tell the Hon. Member that we are well aware of the concerns of the industry and of the workers employed in that industry. We are deliberating on the matter very carefully and I hope that within the next while we will be able to announce a decision to this House on what our policy will be with respect to that industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA—NEWS MEDIA RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed tothe Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the beginning of November the Government of South Africa imposed restrictions on the news media which seriously curtail the flow of information about the violence in that country. Would the Minister tell the House what impact this ban is having on our ability to be kept well informed on the internal situation in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Government and the people of Canada continue to have the capacity to be well informed on events in South Africa.

I want to take this opportunity to say that this Government deplores the continued erosion of civil rights in South Africa as was indicated most recently by the ban upon the freedom of journalists. The way to have the truth be known is not to try to control the media. What the Government of South Africa should do if it is concerned about world opinion is change the basis of its policy rather than try to restrict the people who report it.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my questions directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last June the Minister promised a fair deal for natural gas consumers. It seems that this fair deal meant freezing the price even though the world price for natural gas is going down everywhere else. Will the Minister listen to the Deputy Minister of Energy for Ontario and allow distributors to reopen negotiations so that consumers can look forward to a greater savings than the measley $9 a year which they will be saving on their heating bills this year?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am afraid the Hon. Member is misinformed. I did listen to the Minister to whom he refers, and I gave him exactly what he asked for, which was the kind of service he felt that Ontario would benefit from. What we need now is for the Government of Ontario to meet its commitment to change its legislation and its regulatory framework in order to allow those benefits, which are now available, to be passed on to the consumers. That is something the Government of Ontario has yet to do.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not dealing with the question. The fact is she didn't give consumers a fair price and she didn't reduce the price. Will the Minister go back to the drawing board, reduce the price of natural gas to consumers, and give them a fair price as she promised in June?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are not interventionists like the Liberals before us. We are trying to get Government away from the drawing board and that is what we have successfully done. In terms of benefits to the consumers, as of last November 1 there have been benefits available to consumers through direct sales as soon as the Governments of Ontario and Quebec make the appropriate changes to their legislation and regulations.

Oral Questions

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY BE REPLACED

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware that at the very time he was in Brussels hearing from the President of the United States about new efforts at the Summit to reach international understanding, stability and peace, two of his caucus colleagues were displaying arrogance and scorn toward the Physicians for Social Responsibility and other Canadian groups—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense.

Ms. Jewett: —engaged in the same search? Will the Prime Minister ask his colleagues to refrain from destroying legitimate public input and, indeed, his own commitment to the search—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the Hon. Member is raising again a matter which occurred in committee. I think she knows that that is really not a matter which should be raised here. Does the Hon. Member have a question of policy?

Ms. Jewett: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

May I preface my supplementary question by saying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: —that this is based on newspaper accounts—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That does not help, either. I invite the Hon. Member to put a question.

Ms. Jewett: Would the Prime Minister at least consider replacing the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence with someone who is prepared to listen to Canadians' views about vital defence issues such as the prevention of nuclear war?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend would probably agree with me—because we have been criticized for it—that there has probably never been a Government which has listened so carefully and so thoughtfully to Canadians, and that includes listening to the Hon. Members of the House. But particularly in the area of foreign affairs, with commitees travelling across the country, with White Papers being presented, we have actively sought for, and obtained, the input of Canadians on this matter and we will continue to do so.

Ms. Jewett: Try your colleagues.

Mr. Mulroney: I think my colleagues on this side of the House require no lessons from members of the NDP.

Ms. Jewett: Well, it won't happen again, I hope.

Mr. Crosbie: Stop breaking the rules.

Mr. McKenzie: There's no place for communists in here.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you go back to South Africa where you belong?

ANNUAL OECD REPORT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the annual report of the OECD. The organization for Economic Co-operation and Development based in Paris conducts ongoing economic research and does analysis between and assessments of the economic performance of various countries in the world. At this time, generally, an annual report is forthcoming. Has the Minister received such a report? And if he has, how does Canada rate in the assessment of the OECD?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. At this time of year there is a report which is done by the OECD on the policy direction which the country as followed, as well as the economic prospects looking a year ahead. While I am not able to release this report at this point in time, I have seen a preliminary draft and I can assure the Hon. Member that the preliminary views expressed by the OECD are extremely positive as far as Canada is concerned. It has confirmed that the policy direction which we set out on November 8 last year in the Economic Agenda Paper is the right policy, and that it is producing tremendous results for Canada.

FARM DEBT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. A week ago Saturday, 800 farmers demonstrated in front of the Minister's constituency office in St. Thomas to protest the lack of action on the farm debt crisis. Can the Minister say when the Government is going to take action as demanded by the seven responsible farm groups, on a comprehensive farm debt moratorium and farm credit arrangements legislation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the representation made by the Hon. Member on the subject. He will know that we have taken to this point in time a long list of initiatives to benefit the agri-food industry and we are quite prepared to take further steps very shortly.

● (1450)

FARM GROUPS' DEMAND

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, seven responsible farm groups demanded action within a week. Why has the Minister failed to meet the legitimate demands and deadline which the farmers put before him at that meeting?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had any memory at all he might be aware of the answer. The simple fact is that that was done on a Saturday, the four o'clock Friday deadline, and it just so happened that the House did not sit that week.

GENSTAR TAX RULING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will recall moving very quickly once the research and development loophole was brought to his attention, but only after it cost the federal Government many hundreds of millions of dollars. After considering the Genstar tax ruling and recognizing that it will cost the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars as other companies take advantage of that ruling, does the Minister support that new loophole? If so, why? If not, what action is he taking to close it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I read the media reports on this particular transaction and I have requested information from the Department. There is an in-depth review going on right now and I hope to make some comment in due course.

CHEMICAL SUBSTANCES—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Chemical substances are now being developed for which there are no national standards. As this is an urgent matter, will he direct his Department to establish these standards for the protection of the health of the people who take their water from the St. Clair River and the Great Lakes?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question has perhaps been prompted by certain observations made by the Law Reform Commission in this regard. My colleague, the Minister of Health, and I have established a high-level task force which met several times in September and October and will be meeting again on December 17. We hope that very early in the new year we will have recommendations from that task force which we can bring to Cabinet for early changes to the Environmental Contaminants Act.

ST. CLAIR RIVER POLLUTION—INVESTIGATION OF INDUSTRIAL PLANTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in view of the understandable preoccupation of communities which take their water from the St. Clair River, is the Minister willing to say whether he will also launch an investigation into the activities of industrial plants along that river in Sarnia which are upstream to the communities taking their water from this river?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I always welcome thoughtful observations from the Hon. Member and others on all sides. This one is no exception. However, I urge him to make it clear in all his public statements, including here in the House, that the drinking water from the St. Clair River meets all of the vigorous and rigorous international standards laid down by the World Health Organization. The responsibility for testing the quality of drinking water as opposed to the St. Clair River water in general rests with the Ontario Government. However, I am working hand in glove with my Ontario counterpart to make sure that high standard is met on an ongoing basis well into the future.

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTERS—RATE OF INTEREST CHARGED TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On Friday he said, in connection with his proposals to deal with tax discounting, that they would put this form of loan sharking entirely within the limits allowed under the Criminal Code. Surely the Minister knows that the average refund is just over $700. Tax discounters using his formula will be able to charge $65 to process the refund. Since the Department now says that the refunds go out in a month, these people are really charging an interest rate of over 100 per cent. Is the Minister satisfied with that?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I believe that last week we announced a decision, following consultations that were very thorough and that were also instrumental in correcting certain discrepancies in a system that was inadequate to start with, a decision that has also helped to reduce costs, if we consider the Tax Rebate Discounting Act, for all Canadians and especially those on low incomes.

[English]

POSITION OF CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says he had intensive consultations with various groups. Did any group such as the Consumers Association or the National Anti Poverty Organization, any group except the tax discounters, tell him they were satisfied with the proposal he made?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): I think there are many associations that have stated their satisfaction with the Government's decision, because it introduces measures that will provide for freedom of choice and at the same time discourage this practice, to a certain extent.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER LAY-OFF STUDIES MADE BEFORE DECISION TAKEN ON QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

Before breaking his election promise and betraying working men and women in the footwear industry, could the Minister advise the House whether his Department had carried out studies to determine the number of people who would be laid-off as a result of last week announcement?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, once again I reiterate that in no way have we betrayed any employees of the footwear industry. Indeed, we are very cognizant of their concerns and their jobs. The tribunal looked into this whole question fully. They found there would be no loss of jobs because the industry could now meet the competition. Any loss would indeed be minimal. As you know, my hon. colleague, Flora MacDonald, has already announced and put in place—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Name dropper.

Mr. Kelleher: I am sorry. She has put in place many programs which will assist these workers in the rare event it is required.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION ON SUBJECT OF SHOES FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The new policy provides for a meek protection concerning shoes for women and girls.

I should like to know what the Minister intends to do to avoid the loopholes following his last week decision. What is he planning to do in order to block any loophole in this area of activity of the Canadian footwear industry?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any loopholes in the tribunal's decision. They found that the women's and girls' shoes category needed protection. They asked that quotas be retained for another three years. We agreed to do that. Not only that, we agreed to phase quotas out much more slowly than the tribunal recommended. Obviously we have their concerns at heart.

ENERGY

GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO STOP CLOSURE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I was recently in Montreal in connection with the Grey Cup Game which incidentally we—I mean, British Columbia—have won and to meet the workers of the Gulf refinery in Montreal East.

What is the Minister going to do now to keep the Gulf refinery in operation, in view of the promise she made to the Gulf workers? What is the Minister planning to do now to keep this refinery in operation?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join with the Hon. Member in expressing our great satisfaction with the fact that British Columbia won the Grey Cup.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The vote was fifty-fifty in Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I am sure he will agree with me that it is a great start to our year of Expo '86 in Vancouver.

As to the Gulf refinery, the Hon. Member already knows that it is at my request that Gulf is keeping the refinery open so that potential buyers can emerge and commercial transactions can be considered.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING BE BANNED

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Income tax discounting, lending money against the borrower's expected tax refund, cost Canadian taxpayers $41 million last year. In view of that fact, will the Minister agree that attempts to regulate this practice are not working and it is time to bring it to an end?

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered this question on a previous occasion. We have made this decision following consultations in the best interest of taxpayers, especially those with a small income.

[English]

IMPACT OF DISCOUNTING ON LOW-INCOME TAXPAYERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): The Minister's proposal to allow discounters to keep 15 per cent of the refund on the first $300 means the tax preparers will continue to make their money mainly from the poor. Will the Minister not reconsider that decision, especially since 15 per cent over four to five weeks, annualized, is a rate above what the Criminal Code allows?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I believe we have established a policy which has sensibly and substantially reduced the cost of income tax refund discounting. We allow discounting services, but we continue nevertheless to protect consumers against abuses.

PRIVILEGE

NOTICE OF QUESTION RESPECTING INTERJECTION OF MR. McKENZIE

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) on a question of privilege.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there was an interjection which I believe denied the privileges of every Member of this House. I would like to give notice of a question of privilege on the interjection of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboia and will raise the question of privilege tomorrow after we have all had a chance to read the "blues".

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, my riding is Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

Mr. Broadbent: How did you know whom she was talking about?

Mr. Foster: We all heard you, Dan.

Mr. Axworthy: We don't have to read the "blues" now.

Ms. Jewett: Maybe I don't have to wait.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not quite sure what the Member is proposing to raise later of which she is giving notice. If it is a question of order or a question of language, I may have missed something but—

Mr. Axworthy: We all heard it.

Mr. Gauthier: We all heard it.

Mr. Speaker: —I am perfectly happy to let her bring her case before the House tomorrow.

Ms. Jewett: That is fine, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: She will realize that it may not be a question of privilege, but may in fact be a question of order that should have been brought today.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Oh, it is a question of privilege.

TERRORISM

EGYPTIAN AIRLINER HIJACKING—DEATHS OF CANADIANS MOTHER AND SON—STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I regret to interrupt the Minister, but I ask Members of the House to have their conversations elsewhere, please, including those who are having them behind the curtains who cannot hear me because they are talking.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a statement on the tragic deaths of a young Canadian mother and her infant son. Although we are awaiting formal identification by the husband and father, our information is that Mrs. Valinda Leonard and her infant son, Andrew, of Beiseker, Alberta, were killed in the hijacking of the Egyptian airliner to Malta. I wish to express my own deepest condolences and those of the Government and of the people of Canada to her family. I also, Sir, want to pay tribute to the manner in which the family has responded to the stress and tragedy of this weekend.

No nation is immune to the scourge of terrorism. Two innocent Canadians now join the list of victims of this international brutality. The Government of Canada condemns the hijacking of the Egyptian airliner and profoundly regrets the tragic loss of life which ensued. This most recent incident again demonstrates the urgent need for concerted international action to combat acts of terrorism. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) raised this issue before the United Nations General Assembly. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has proposed changes affecting international air travel.

With our friends and allies Canada is pursuing other concrete measures to combat terrorism. Senior officials of my Department will be meeting in Bonn on December 10 and 11 to continue consultations with our Summit Seven partners. We will continue to pursue vigorously all available means to eliminate the scourge of terrorism and to bring to justice the perpetrators of these brutal acts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in offering, as I already said during oral question period, my sincere condolences to the bereaved family.

I agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs that this is a phenomenon that is becoming increasingly widespread, and we can no longer consider ourselves immune to this kind of occurrence. Here in Canada, we thought we were entirely immune to this kind of violence, but not long ago, the airport in Toronto was used in what increasingly appears to have been a similar act of violence, when an Air India jet crashed in the North Atlantic and another similar tragedy occurred at the airport in Tokyo, in connection with a plane coming in from Vancouver. This is not just an international problem, and I agree with the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it is a very difficult question and one that is becoming more and more apparent, even in Canada.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is listening with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because two Canadian lives were lost on the island of Malta on the week-end. However, only a few months ago, a very large number of Canadians lost their lives in the North Atlantic. The impression now seems to be that the disaster was even worse than a hijacking, since there were ammunition and explosives on board the Air India plane.

Of course, international action is extremely important. We must pursue the policy of refusing to offer asylum to persons who resort to this kind of violence.

[English]

I think it is extremely important that asylum not be given to any of these people. When I was Minister of Finance and attended the Bonn Summit, we were already discussing this matter. We had a full session on international terrorism. I think we have succeeded somewhat in that there are now very few countries, if any, which will welcome hijackers and give them asylum. It is of fundamental importance that people who get involved in these tragic events know that there is no place they can land safely anymore. I hope the lesson of last weekend will help to deter some people.

However, we must ensure that these people cannot get on planes anymore. I think that was the problem in Athens last weekend. That airport has been subject to many such incidents. I think we should put pressure on the Greek Government. Over the weekend some people in France were advocating that we should cut transportation to these airports by Canadian planes if Canadian citizens are to be safe. However, we cannot give lessons to anyone else if we are faced with the same problem in Canada. I know that the Government of Canada and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will be dedicated to curing this problem which does exist in Canada. The other day there were some—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do this with great regret, but I think the Hon. Member knows that responses are to be approximately the same length as the original statement. I am going to ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) if he could conclude briefly.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I will conclude. I have made my point and everyone understood where I was going. I just want to say that this is a very serious problem. This is the type of issue on which we should work together, because loss of life should not lead to political confrontation. Therefore, let us find a solution in Canada as quickly as possible.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I wish to join the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in expressing our very deep sympathy to the family and friends of Mrs. Leonard and her infant son who lost their lives in this very great tragedy. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said earlier today, we cannot second guess the wisdom of the Egyptian decision, nor should we now assume that all the blame should rest on the Athens airport. There is nothing conclusive about that and I was distressed to hear such a suggestion.

• (1510)

At the same time, as the Minister has noted, we must make an urgent and concerted international effort to find solutions to this horrendous problem of international terrorism. At the close of his statement, the Minister said that we will be acting with our friends and allies. Since I do not know how broad that phrase is, I hope he also means that we will be acting with all members of the United Nations who are concerned about the very great growth in international terrorism.

I will discuss with my colleagues the possibility of striking a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to assist the Minister in this matter in any possible way.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POLLUTION IN WABIGOON AND ENGLISH RIVERS—CLAIMS SETTLEMENT—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that an agreement has been reached to settle finally the mercury pollution claims of the Grassy Narrows and Islington Bands in northern Ontario. I am sure that all Members will be as delighted as I am that today, 15 years after the discovery of the mercury pollution in the Wabigoon and English Rivers, this Government, the Province of Ontario, Great Lakes Forest Products Limited, Reed Incorporated and the two Indian communities can all say that we have achieved a settlement that is fair and honourable.

Sixteen million six hundred and sixty-seven thousand dollars will be provided in compensation to the two bands. Of this amount, Canada will provide $2.75 million, Ontario will contribute $1.66 million, $6 million will come from Great Lakes Forest Products Limited and $5.75 million from Reed.

This money will be transferred to the bands, to be used for purposes of social and economic reconstruction. Two million dollars of the total will be paid into a special fund to compensate individuals with health problems attribuable to mercury poisoning. This fund will be administered by a board appointed by Canada, Ontario and the two bands.

Many individuals, representing all the parties, have played an important part in hammering out this agreement. However, let me pay special tribute to my own representative, the Hon. Justice Emmett Hall. When I appointed him to act as my special representative in this matter, negotiations were at an impasse. Justice Hall shouldered an immense burden and acted with complete conviction to work out an agreement acceptable to all parties. I say this, not to detract from the role of the other negotiators, but to indicate my own personal profound gratitude to Emmett Hall, who, at the age of 87, has now yet another accomplishment to add to his distinguished career.

Finally, I want to say to the Indian people in those communities that we know the hardship and despair that they have experienced during the past 15 years. I and many Canadians have felt shame that situations like these could develop in our midst. We do not forget those 15 years, but we do celebrate a new beginning, a new future for these, our first citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, it was in the period from 1963 to 1970 that approximately 10 tons of mercury were dumped into the Wabigoon-English-Winnipeg river system from a chlor-alkalai plant, part of a paper-mill complex at Dryden, Ontario.

This mercury was absorbed into the biota of the river system, rendering fish in the river system unfit for human consumption. The Indian people at Whitedog and Grassy Narrows who had worked as fishermen and tourist outfitters lost their jobs.

Grassy Narrows, an Ojibway Indian village, had to be relocated. A traditional community was transformed into one which was programmed to self-destruct.

Joblessness and pollution led to horrendous economic and social disintegration and health problems. The communities of Grassy Narrows and Whitedog became pathological places with alcohol and drug induced violence, child abuse and a large number of children who were taken into care by the Children's Aid Society.

It is essential to note that the horror and death were not the tragic norms before the river was poisoned. It happened after.

As far back as 1977, the Grassy Narrows and Islington Bands initiated legal action seeking $25 million in damages. The settlement which has been announced today will probably be accepted and I certainly want to commend the Minister and his special negotiator for the work they have done. Of course, it has yet to be ratified by the band members of Grassy Narrows and Islington, but I think all Members and the Minister himself will agree that this money can never replace all that has been lost.

Is $16 million really fair compensation to a people who have been deprived of their livelihoods, their pride, their self-determination and their self-sufficiency? The compensation package will certainly help to alleviate much of the pain, but can it restore the loss of hope? That remains to be seen.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I and I am sure all Members of the House and the vast majority of Canadians join the Minister in welcoming the settlement which he has announced today. Yet the overwhelming sentiment with which I am left is one of amazement that an injustice of such proportions and such devastating effect was allowed to persist for such a period of time.

The fact that it took 15 years to reach a settlement with the bands for the injuries done to their people, of whom scarcely a family or person was left untouched, is something which will remain as a stain on Canada's record both in environmental and human terms. I am saddened to see today that these bands are not clear of further threats from the environment. They are not clear from the threat of possible PCB pollution from the possible siting of a PCB storage dump near to the water course that brought them the original tribulation of mercury pollution.

I am glad to see the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), in a speech only last week, recognized that corporate polluters will continue to try to get away with activity in Canada that would not be permitted in other jurisdictions.

The nature of the injustice done to the people of the Islington and Grassy Narrows communities was cataclysmic. It was poisoning that led to a complete disintegration of the social fabric of those communities. This has been well documented in a couple of books which many Members of the House will have read. The relocation, the social fragmentation and the break up of the clans are well documented. The social and human losses were further aggravated by the economic losses which the bands suffered.

As the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) points out, money cannot bring back the way of life that those people enjoyed before this pollution took its terrible toll. I believe money is best left uncommented upon because only time will tell if the compensation has been in any way adequate. However, I should note that the figures provided to the Minister do not add up. There is half a million dollars unaccounted for.

As I said, the health problems were enormous and I am glad to learn that the Province of Ontario has given its commitment to top up the original fund of $2 million, once it has been depleted by claims of residents of those communities for the injury done to their health.

● (1520)

I would be remiss if I did not recognize John Olthuis and Bruce Crofts who worked on behalf of these bands for many long dedicated years and who put so much of themselves into this final solution, as we hope to see it.

I would also recognize Chief Arnold Pelly of Grassy Narrows and his many predecessors, particularly Simon and Steve Fobister, as well as Chief Roy MacDonald and his predecessors of the Islington Band at White Dog Falls for the efforts they have made. Above all I should recognize them for keeping the coherent efforts and commitments of their communities in working toward a solution when the frustration and exasperation which they felt might so easily have deteriorated into action against society and against those who inflicted injustice on them. I am glad to see that we are taking the first steps to correct this historic injustice.

I am sad to see that in many ways the Indian people continue to have second-class treatment from our society, though I do not allege it is on the level of what was inflicted upon the two bands.

When we see communities without the services which all of us take for granted, a community such as that of Lubicon Lake which does not have a land base, and communities such as Shoal Lake where economic development is stymied by the failure of the Government to live up to the previous Government's commitments, then we must acknowledge that there is still work to be done.

I am glad, therefore, to recognize this settlement and to add my Party's support of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions here signed by residents of Ottawa and also signed by some public health nurses working in my riding in Toronto. These people are calling for the withdrawal of the deindexation of family allowances. The nurses point out that for many of the welfare families with whom they deal, family allowance money provides food for the last one and one-half weeks of the months.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions, one from the University Women's Club of St. Catharines and another one signed by several persons in southwestern Ontario. The operative sentence in the petitions is "wherefore, the undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases".

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF TEST RANGE AT NANOOSE BAY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of the Nanaimo-Alberni riding concerned about the Canadian Forces maritime experimental and test range at Nanoose Bay, concerned about the United States of America's policy of neither confirming nor denying the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels and urging that there be a full public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands who are concerned about the family allowance deindexing proposal of the federal Government. They point out that this places an unfair burden upon low-income families, especially when coupled with the tax increases, and the unfairness of this is compounded when it is put side by side with the tax benefits made available to corporations and wealthy people. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents who are concerned about the deindexing of family allowance, particularly when you put it on top of the sales tax increases, the increase in excise tax and other stiff income tax increases. They are asking the House of Commons, particularly the Government of Canada, to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases introduced in the last Budget.

MAIL DELIVERY IN SWIFT CURRENT, SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the Trail subdivision in the City of Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

They protest the lack of door to door mail delivery to their area and ask this House to address their concerns.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from senior citizens clubs in LeRoy, Lanigan and Spalding protesting the effort by the Government to deindex the family allowance similar to what the Government tried to do to senior citizens pensions some time ago. They point out that the cut-backs are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs, such as half a million dollars in tax free capital gains taxes, greater RRSP deductions for high income recipients, millions in hand-outs to oil companies and billions of dollars in bail-outs to the banks.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the House at this time that because of the ministerial statements, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 19 minutes today.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ESTABLISHMENT OF MEMBERS' INTERESTS REGISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual consultations between the Parties. I think you will find a disposition at this time, by unanimous consent and without debate, to allow passage of the item of business under Government Order No. 60 standing in my name. I move:

That the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services consider matters related to the establishment of a Register of Members' Interests, and report on these and any other matters relating to registration of Members' interests, including the form and content of such a register, considering among other matters relating to the registration of Members' interests, the following:

(a) remunerated directorships of companies, public or private;

(b) other remunerated positions or offices;

(c) remunerated trades, professions or vocations;

(d) the names of clients when the interests referred to above include personal services by the Member which arise out of or are related in any manner to his or her membership in the House;

(e) any payments or any material benefits or advantages received from or on behalf of foreign Governments, organizations or persons;

(f) land and property of substantial value or from which a substantial income is derived; and

(g) the names of companies or other bodies in which the Member has, to his or her knowledge, either himself or herself or with or on behalf of his or her spouse or dependents, any beneficial interest including—among others, shareholderings—of a nominal value greater than one-hundredth of the total capital assets of the company or other body; and that it report on the form and content of such a Register not later than December 31, 1985; and

Provided, that notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when the final report of the Committee is completed, the Committee shall report its findings by depositing the said report with the Clerk of the House and it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 266.

[Text]

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN COUNCIL ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 266—Mr. Young:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare receive a report from the Canadian Council on Social Development with respect to a study on the cost effectiveness of providing alternatives to the institutionalization of mentally disabled persons and, if so, was there a dissenting opinion to the majority report and what was the nature of that opinion?

2. Does the Minister intend to initiate a pilot project to determine the cost effectiveness of providing comprehensive services to assist mentally disabled individuals to participate fully in their communities and, if so, in which community or communities will such projects be initiated and what will be the commencement and completion dates?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Canadian Council on Social Development (CCSD) has submitted to the Minister of National Health and Welfare its report on a cost effectiveness study of providing alternatives to the institutionalization of mentally disabled persons and a dissenting opinion to the report was not submitted.

2. No decision has yet been taken with respect to pilot projects.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—IMPORT QUOTAS

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe):

That this House regrets that the Prime Minister has once again broken an election campaign promise, this time by failing to maintain quotas on imports of shoes and by compounding this betrayal by failing to make adequate provision for the thousands of workers whose jobs are adversely affected.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I resume my remarks where I left off this morning when I was talking about the impact of quotas on Canadian consumers. As I was saying, since quotas have given a monetary value to import permits, one can easily understand why those who have obtained such permits on the basis of their purchases in previous years would rather not use them to buy cheaper shoes. They will prefer to buy more expensive shoes to take full advantage of their limited number of import permits.

Undeniably this strategy serves the interest of importers, but it has a significant and undesirable social effect on the price of various categories of imported shoes. Since high-priced imported shoes bring in a higher shortage premium to begin with, importers have a tendency to buy more of them. They cannot do that unless they buy smaller quantities of cheaper shoes, because their import quotas are limited. In turn this reduced supply for buyers of cheaper shoes leads to higher prices on the domestic market.

Therefore the result of quotas is to lower the supply of cheaper shoes imported into Canada and increase their prices as compared with those of other categories of imported shoes. It is particularly detrimental to poorer consumers who are least able to afford them.

While it is hard to determine exactly the total costs of quotas to consumers, the research conducted on behalf of the tribunal shows how substantial they are. According to those reviews, since 1968, consumers have paid out between $450 and $500 million more than they would have had there been no such quotas.

Mr. Speaker, the quota system not only increases the price of shoes, both imported and Canadian, but also lessens the choice for consumers. Indeed, retailers cannot buy freely abroad because of those quotas and Canadian manufacturers are unable to offer items comparable with foreign production in all styles of footwear. In addition, price increases and restrictions in the variety and availability of shoes have probably helped reduce the total demand of shoes by almost 12 per cent since 1978.

This Government's new policy on quotas will phase out the costs incurred by Canadian consumers. This policy furthers their interests especially where low-income consumers are concerned.

• (1530)

Although some larger retailers benefited from the global quota regime, the retail sector as a whole was hurt by that policy, with the greatest competitive harm having been experienced by the small independent retail business segment.

To understand the impact of the global quota regime on the retail sector, one must keep in mind that quotas create product scarcity. Quota allocation is costly to obtain, and a quota regime introduces rigidity in the characteristics of product supplies. Because the cost of acquiring quota allocation is independent of the volume of imports, it represents a heavier burden for the small independent retailer and weakens his ability to compete. Because quotas create product scarcity, they force smaller retailers to offer a narrower product range than their customers wish, thus reducing the retailer's ability to compete and thereby diminishing the value of his investment. Because quotas introduce rigidity in the supply of imported product, retailers are unable to respond to changes in customer demand, thus reducing the competitiveness of both the retail and manufacturing sectors.

Because quota permits have been allocated mainly on the basis of historical import performance, new entry into the retail business has been discouraged artificially. Quota limitation also has a dampening effect on the ability of existing business to expand. Without the freedom to enter and expand or exit and contract, competitive forces do not work—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt my colleague halfway through his reading, but we have been here in the House in excess of a year and this is an opposition debate that is taking place. We have heard the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) read a statement, and we are now hearing another Minister read a statement. There is a place for that. My recollection of the rules—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been in this House for a long time and should know that his is not a point of order. If he would like to bring that matter up at another sitting, that is fine; but not at this time.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over-all, the net effect of quotas has been to increase the concentration in the retail sector and to reduce competition. Quotas have also had an adverse effect on employment in the retail sector. Restricted supply means fewer sales—and at higher prices, of course—and fewer sales means retailers need fewer stores and fewer employees.

The new policy combines some special measures of protection so that Canada will continue to incur some of these costs at the retail level. However, the new policy adds protection for about half the industry, and we can expect to achieve improved levels of competition and some expansion in the retail sector, particularly by smaller retailers.

Moreover, to further improve the competitiveness of this sector, the new policy will reduce the restraints on entry and expansion by allocating, wherever possible, new quota resources to those who do not enjoy quota rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like, if you would allow me, to consider in greater detail the consequence of our decision on the footwear industry and show you why we believe that our policy will be beneficial.

In view of the state of this industry and of the substantial costs of the quotas for the consumer and the distribution sector, three basic questions arise: What were the reasons originally for imposing quotas in this sector? Have these quotas had the expected effect on the industry? Is extension of the quotas desirable? In other words, do the benefits for the industry justify the substantial costs for consumers and the rest of the economy? These are the three questions which I now want to discuss, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that they go to the heart of the matter.

As indicated this morning by my colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher), footwear import quotas were first imposed in 1977 under Clause 19 of the GATT. This clause provides that a signatory country may, in an emergency, impose comprehensive quotas on the import of certain items when these imports cause or threaten to cause serious prejudice to a national industry. It is generally agreed that this protective measure must be temporary and not last any longer than necessary to enable the national industry to adjust to international competitive forces. At no time is it provided that the quotas can become a permanent protective measure. It is generally estimated that the adjustment process should normally last three years. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the footwear industry has already enjoyed eight years of protection, and some of the Members opposite would like this protection to be extended for at least five more years. In view of the considerable costs of such a protection for consumers and the Canadian economy as a whole, we have to ask ourselves, as we have in fact done, Mr. Speaker, whether it would truly be in the interests of all Canada to extend these measures, which risk becoming a crutch for the industry. If this industry has adapted to market conditions, protection is no longer necessary. If it has not yet adapted after eight years, we have to wonder whether it will ever adjust or whether quotas really are the appropriate remedy.

In the light of testimonies given during the public hearings held by the tribunal and of the conclusions of its analyses, the answer is clear. The industry has indeed adjusted, but it has done so in spite, rather than because of the quotas.

My time is getting short, Mr. Speaker. To conclude, I first want to summarize the main findings on which the policy of our Government is based. First, we noticed that the extended quota period which the industry has been enjoying since 1977 imposed considerable costs both on the Canadian consumer and on the Canadian economy as a whole. Secondly, it is clear that the quotas brought only meagre benefits to the Canadian consumer and that they slowed down the necessary restructuration in the industry instead of making it easier. Finally, there is no doubt that the extension of the quotas could only perpetuate those costs and delay all the more the required adjustments.

The conclusion to be drawn from these findings is clear, Mr. Speaker. Even without considering our international obligations and the substantial cost of the retaliation measures our partners threatened to use, it is clearly in the interests of the country as a whole to eliminate as quickly as possible the present quota system. This is both a matter of economic sense and of social justice.

Mr. Speaker, our decision on this question is an essential element of the Agenda for Economic Renewal of the Government. It illustrates our determination to adopt a structural adjustment policy taking fully into account the crucial role of international trade in the Canadian economy and the interest for Canada to work together with its trading partners to gradually eliminate tariff and non tariff barriers which hamper international trade and penalize the most dynamic elements in our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments; the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

• (1540)

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to draw the attention of the House on the most unusual fact, I believe, that the two Ministers, in speaking on behalf of the Government, made almost identical speeches. I have reached the conclusion that both statements had probably been written by the same civil servant.

Having said this, I would like to come to my question: The Minister's speech, as well as his colleagues, has an amazingly ambiguous flavour. You seem to be saying, and you are indeed saying in a way that there won't be any adverse effect as the industry is now able to face the competition. This is a point of your argument which you rest on and supposedly confirm through the antidumping report. On the other hand, you say that should there be adverse effects . . . Listen, it could happen, should there be adverse effects, support measures will be taken to help the men and women who will lose their jobs. Am I to understand that you made that decision without knowing, without assessing, without quantifying its impact in terms of employment? And here is one last question: If within a year it appeared that your decision caused thousands and thousands of people to be laid off, would you agree to review that decision on the basis of the fact that it had indeed a very severe impact on the workers and industry in Canada?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to my hon. friend that we felt there was indeed a possible injury to Canadian consumers. I should like also to indicate to him that this economic tribunal which was created a year ago has received over 72 reports, heard over 39 appeals and representations and come to the conclusion that there exists a part of the industry which has been fully renewed and which has adapted to international competition, but that another part of the industry still needed protection. Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members are aware that under the GATT agreements, no protection can be granted to an area of activity unless there is evidence that there exists a need for protection; otherwise, we would be faced with absolutely devastating consequences.

So the Government has decided to accept the recommendations of the economic tribunal again in the best interest of Canadian consumers, and that is what I tried to establish in my remarks by emphasizing the benefits for Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that on the whole and in the future, this decision and its impact will clearly benefit Canadian consumers who, because of the quota system, had been in the past at the mercy of rising prices, and who will from now on have access to a wider variety of shoes of better quality at a lower price. Because we should not overlook the fact that the cost which these quotas represent for importers is passed on to Canadian consumers in a sector of higher priced shoes. Canadian consumers, therefore, could not buy the cheaper shoes because, not being imported, they were not available on the Canadian market. It has been established and I think that studies have clearly demonstrated that these quotas had a yearly impact of between $80 and $85 million on Canadian consumers. As a Conservative Government, we feel that these measures must be changed again for the benefit of Canadian consumers.

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, both this Minister and the Minister who spoke this morning put forward an argument which suggested that quotas were being kept for those parts of the industry that had not yet modernized or received Government help for restructuring and that the quotas were being eliminated for those parts of the industry which had received such restructuring help. I would like to make a brief comment before I come to my question and point out that first, the tribunal report itself does not talk in those terms at all. Its reasons for making the exception for women's and girls' shoes have nothing to do with the question of whether or not modernization has taken place. The tribunal makes it quite clear that the substitutability factor is of greater significance in that case.

I would also like to note that we have been able to receive data from all the Quebec firms in the footwear sector which have received assistance from the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board up to the end of 1984. There is a total of 10 such Quebec companies. Four of those companies are exclusive producers of women's shoes. The other five companies produce combinations of men's and women's shoes. The suggestion that somehow the industry had been helped with respect to men's and boys' shoes but not with respect to women's and girls' shoes and therefore the distinction was kept is simply not accurate. In fact, the Government has made a decision which has abandoned the shoe sector, parts of it a little faster than others, because of a commitment to ideological purity rather than to economic common sense.

In making this decision, did the Cabinet and in particular the Minister who has just spoken look with any kind of seriousness at the paragraph contained in the report of the import tribunal which tells of what took place in the United States when quotas were removed from shoes in that country? I would quote from page 33 of the report of the tribunal as follows:

> The U.S. experience following the removal of orderly marketing arrangements in 1981 shows that manufacturers, in the absence of important restraints, have greatly expanded their imports. This might have happened in Canada as well if quotas had not been imposed. Thus the benefits of quotas to domestic production may be underestimated if quotas have, in fact, prevented a major shift towards imports.

I put it to the Minister and the House that that is what we in Canada will face. We will face a massive explosion which will force the Government into ignominious retreat in six, eight or ten months' time. It will force the Government to impose these quotas again. I simply hope that the red faces and the sense of shame that will be apparent at that point will somehow make up a little bit for the thousands of lives which will have been damaged in the intervening period.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we did not create that tribunal, the former Government created it and gave it a special mandate. Let me quote a part of that mandate which reads as follows:

> —in the event of a determination of injury or threat thereof, recommend a formula by which the special measures of protection could be phased out through a progressive liberalization process covering a period of not more than three years, by which time the Canadian industry would be required to face international competition without special measures of protection.

● (1550)

They were temporary measures which were put in place eight years ago. The tribunal made its recommendation by stating that a sector of the industry has been able to come to a point where it could meet the competition but that only part of it need be protected. As the tribunal says, this protection could not go beyond three years. Obviously, we gave all benefit of the doubt to this sector. We hope that it will come to a point where it will be in a position to compete on an international basis in three years.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The time allocated for questions and comments is now over.

I now recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to support this motion from the Liberal Party which is condemning the Government for breaking the promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he promised shortly before the last election that he would not take off the quotas on the footwear industry. The Government chooses to get into an argument about whether it was really the previous Liberal Government that caused the problem or not. I am not interested in trying to sort out how much each of those two Governments was responsible for.

What I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is that the decision of this Government, which was a free decision, it was not in any way compelled or constrained, they had their options, as all other Governments do, including the Governments of countries like Taiwan, which sells shoes here but forbid us to sell shoes there, they had their options and they chose to cut off most of the quotas and thereby they chose to cut off an unknown number of jobs. It has been estimated that as many as 10,000 jobs will be lost. We don't know certainly, but we do know that when the previous Liberal Government four years ago cut the quotas off, within three or four months 3,000 jobs were lost. I remember the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) when he sat on this side of the House making that very complaint. I wonder how he is going to feel now when thousands of jobs are lost by the action of a Government of which he is a member.

We have heard an estimate that the quotas have cost the consumers $500 million. That is an estimate. There is another estimate that removing the quotas will cost the consumers $800 million in lost jobs and benefits because most of them were not top-paid workers but reasonably well-paid workers. Unemployment insurance, welfare payments and, of course, lost taxes will represent a great loss than is estimated for the cost of having the quotas on. They are both only guesses, Mr. Speaker. What is at stake here, as my colleague has said, is really the doctrinaire conviction of this Government that it should give all the benefits to the entrepreneurs at the expense of those who have to live by their wages and salaries.

The injury has already begun. We have people saying there is no injury expected to the industry but the injury has begun. I pointed out two or three weeks ago that several thousands jobs have already been lost in this industry in Ontario and Quebec because buyers have held off buying in anticipation of this decision by the Government. Therefore, we have already lost jobs and we will lose more jobs now.

The tribunal report is quoted and yet the tribunal report acknowledges on page 42 that the decrease in domestic production in the face of increased import competition—they already said there would be a surge—may be expected to be significant. Farther down they say the dislocation associated with this process of adjustment will be severe in the case of those enterprises and those employees directly affected. There are many other places in which the tribunal acknowledges that there is going to be injury. It is therefore frivolous of the tribunal report to say in its recommendations there will not be and of the Cabinet, the Government, to say there will not be.

The tribunal report also shows something else quite interesting, that is that the quotas were so mishandled and so misconceived under the previous and present administrations that they benefited the large importers and some of the large retailers chains such as F. W. Woolworth under the name of Kinney more than they benefited the producers they were intended to benefit.

This will continue, Mr. Speaker, even without the quotas. What happens is that the importers may mark up 100 per cent a pair of shoes that cost $15 to make in Canada. They may be sold for $30, the mark-up going to the trade, the commercial end. However, on a pair of shoes made abroad for $7 and also sold for $30, there is an extortionate mark-up, a mark-up of $23 instead of $8. That is where the consumers may be losing. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the tribunal report shows that the footwear industry has done better than average of Canadian industry of keeping its manufacturing costs down. Between 1974 and 1983, the total economy moved from an index of 132 to 290, whereas the footwear productivity and prices moved from 133 to only 262. The footwear producers were more efficient than the total economy of Canada and more efficient than manufacturing. That went up to 298. Whereas they started at 132, 138 and 133, the total economy went to 290. Manufacturers went to 299 and footwear went only to 272. Therefore, it is not the manufacturers who have been gouging the consumers, it is the importers, the very ones who are holleryng for the end of the quotas. The recommendations of the tribunal and the decisions of the Cabinet simply do not fit the facts that even the tribunal admitted.

I want to go into a much more serious matter, one that the tribunal seemed to take no interest in whatsoever. Three-quarters of the imports into Canada last year came from five countries. Out of 53 million pairs, Taiwan sent 17 million; Italy, nearly six million; South Korea, over 11 million; Hong Kong, over three million; and Brazil, over three million. That is three-quarters of the imports. We are told we have to be competitive and this is where the tunnel vision, the dogmatism of this Government, is disastrous for Canadians.

Taiwan is a country in which the Government is ferociously anti-labour. When I visited there two years ago I talked with clergy who had been in jail several times for the crime of trying to help workers organize unions. Taiwan is a low wage country. Hong Kong is another low wage country, not as low as some others in the Pacific but still relatively low. Brazil is a low wage country. In many of these countries, Mr. Speaker, the average wage for producing shoes is about 70 cents, one-tenth of the average wage in Canada. Seven dollars, the average wage in the footwear manufacturing industry, is not an extortionate amount of money. If the worker brings in $14,000 a year gross, he is not living high off the hog but he might be above the poverty level. To cut him to one tenth of that, 70 cents, which is the Government's idea of competition, would ruin not only those workers but much more of Canada.

● (1600)

I have not mentioned Italy. I have referred to the bad labour conditions in many of the countries in the West Pacific. Italy, of course, is a European country and we may suppose that, therefore, the labour conditions there are comparable to the labour conditions in Canada. They are not. I quote from the Anti-Slavery Society for the Protection of Human Rights in its report for 1980 to the United Nations Working Group of Experts on Slavery. In its opening statement it states:

When you buy your next pair of shoes stamped "Made in Italy" spare a thought for the thousand of child workers of Aversa, near Naples who most likely helped stitch, glue and finish them, in conditions which would have been entirely familiar to Charles Dickens.

Child labour is a growing trend, according to this document. It is fundamental to the organization of production and profits within the contemporary Italian economy. The children who were interviewed by representatives of this society started working from the age of 10 and up. Most children were working a six-hour day although in some cases they worked more than nine hours. All children worked a six-day week and all were poorly paid. The children's weekly earnings ranged from 7,000 lire to 15,000 lire per week, and thus always fell far short of the basic legal minimum wage paid to adults which is 75,000 lire per week.

It is reported that as adult unemployment rises in Italy, the employment of children at a small fraction of adult wages is also rising. The conditions of work are very severe and health hazardous. The society quotes one of the child workers as saying:

The place where 25 of us worked was 10 metres by 2.5 metres high and it was impossible to breathe because of the glue fumes. Our cloakroom was a tiny room in which the gum and solvents were also stored; when work was over and we went to get changed, we would find our clothes damp, cold and reeking of gum.

Italy is a civilized country. We have to ask ourselves, are there no laws? The answer is, of course, that there are laws. The report of the society states, and I quote:

—the enforcement of the legislation protecting children is in the hands of the Labour Inspectorate; its effectiveness is handicapped, for it is understaffed and overburdened with work. According to Dr. F. Coppola (Departmental Head of the Provincial Inspectorate of Labour, Naples) in Naples up to 1975, four officials were allocated exclusively to the child labour sector.

The report continues:

—the position is summarized by Neapolitan journalist Eleanora Puntillo: "In my opinion there is no point in talking about legislation. When the law is so systematically and widely infringed, it is as if it did not exist".

What about the international labour organization and its conventions? The fact is that Italy has not yet ratified the ILO Convention No. 138 on the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment.

We are talking about competitiveness. We are not talking about a Third World country coming out of starvation. One of the oldest developed countries in Europe, Italy, is using the labour of children for as much as six hours or more per day, six days a week, paying about one fifth of the minimum wage for adults. It is using these children in conditions which none of us would want to see our children endure even if we were willing to take them out of school at the age of 10 to send them into the factories. Some of these conditions are deadly. I quote again from the report of the Anti-Slavery Society:

—the extensive use of poisonous glues in the cramped conditions of the leather workshops is a major health hazard and liable to cause glue polyneuritis. This is a disease caused by poisoning from toxic substances within glue vapour; it affects the nervous system causing paralysis of the joints, disability and muscular pains accompanied by cramp and swelling. Untreated, the disease can result in death. Over 25 per cent of the workers affected are under fourteen and although there have been several cases of glue polyneuritis over the last five years, it is still not treated as an industrial disease.

Those are the competitive conditions which this Government is asking us to match of a country where the police smash and jail trade union organizers such as in South Korea, of a country where 10-year-old children are forced to leave school in poisonous atmospheres so that it can sell cheap shoes abroad. If our Government wants Canadians to take their children out of school, not just to do work at home because that is already happening in Spadina and in some parts of Montreal, but to go into the factories and into the sweat-shops, as happened 200 years ago in Britain, then the Government will find itself alone in Canada because Canadians do not want that. Canadians are willing to pay a decent price to get a decent wage.

Recently, the Ontario Federation of Labour sent a telegram to the Prime Minister saying: "As the representative of 800,000 Ontario workers who are also consumers, the Ontario Federation of Labour opposes strongly the removal of import quotas for shoes and footwear. To remove the quotas is not only to jeopardize thousands of Canadian jobs but to subject consumers to the whim of foreign producers. Canada needs its own footwear industry." Very few of those 800,000 workers in Ontario work in the footwear factories of Spadina and Guelph and the other cities of Ontario. All the other workers agree, as workers and consumers, that we need to have our own footwear industry where we, as Canadians, can be responsible for the health conditions, for the wages and for the minimum age at which people can be economically compelled to go to work. The issue is much wider than Ontario. A few weeks ago there was a poll by Decima. One of our colleagues today was concerned about polling being done by an American firm. This, I believe, is a polling outfit which is used by the Government and I trust it is Canadian. The Decima poll finds that 80 per cent of Canadians are willing to pay the prices for shoes necessary to enable the Canadian industry to survive. It was a multi-question poll. For example, a total of 66 per cent consider that import competition is a very serious threat to the Canadian footwear industry. Sixty-six per cent say that the Government should protect Canadian jobs with quotas. The numbers vary throughout between 66 per cent and 80 per cent. That is a poll which represents not Ontario only, not Quebec only, but all of Canada.

A phoney crisis has been created by the shoe importers with their extortionate mark-ups of 300 per cent or more. It is the same in the garment industry. I have gone to a store to buy a sweater and on the same rack there are sweaters from Taiwan, Canada, Germany, United States and other European countries. They are identical and they all sell for the identical price. They are now trying to blame that on the manufacturers. The same sort of situation exists in the footwear industry. In effect what they are saying is: Cut wages. I visited Chile this summer where the Government did the very same thing. Our ambassador told us that the Chilean Government was right to cut the wages of the Chilean people so they could compete, and that Canada must do the same thing. Their competition has been so successful that Chilean workers must now produce three tonnes of copper in order to earn as much money as they did for one tonne of copper five years ago. We do not prosper by cutting our wages so as to force other countries to do the same thing. Therefore, I ask the Government to seriously reconsider the disastrous road it is going down, look at what is happening in Chile, Italy, Taiwan, South Korea and Brazil, and stay away from wage cutting which is what this quota cut really means.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean J. Charest (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to speak to the Opposition motion because it deals with a matter that is very important to the region I represent and to my particular riding.

In the Eastern Townships there are many industries in the so-called traditional sectors—textiles, clothing and footwear—and these have existed for a number of years.

Since these industries were first established, we have experienced a number of disruptions in our economy, culminating in the 1981-82 recession which had an absolutely devastating impact on this region.

At the time, the parties concerned ordered a study by the Gaucher-Pringle company, which reached the conclusion, after a survey of the region's economy, that although the industrial base was more or less diversified, the number of jobs in the traditional sectors—textiles, clothing and footwear—tended to outnumber those in other industries, in other words, although there was a range of various types of industries, jobs tended to be concentrated in the traditional sectors. Needless to say, the shoe quota issue and the whole matter of import quotas for textiles and clothing has always been a matter of concern in the Eastern Townships, and especially in Sherbrooke and the surrounding area.

That is why I am making an exception today, because, as Hon. Members are aware, as a rule I do not rise in the House, out of deference to the Chair, to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all the Members of this House, and I am making this exception because the question before the House today is so important that I feel I must rise to speak on behalf of those who elected me as their representative here in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, give a short history of the quota system, as many others have done before, but I shall be very brief. We in the Eastern Townships, like other regions in Canada, have had shoe quotas since 1977, except for a period of eight months when they were suspended by the previous Liberal Government, and these quotas will be in effect until November 30 of this year. I would like to emphasize that point because I think it is important. Earlier this morning my colleague from Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) referred to that situation and said he was proud of the fact that he and some of his colleagues had openly defied their own Government. Well, there is one thing he forgot to say this morning, as someone has already pointed out, and I would like to refresh his memory once again. The fact is that the then Liberal Government had lifted the quotas despite a favourable decision of the Canadian Import Tribunal, unlike the situation at this time. It was the other way around: the tribunal had ruled in favour of maintaining quotas, but the then Liberal Government went right ahead and abolished them. In that context, I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe and those of his colleagues who had the courage to face the facts did the only thing they could do as representatives of their regions. Considering how unfair the situation was, I think they probably took the best course under the circumstances. In any case the Government changed its mind after eight months and finally adopted a quota policy.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, the man who was Leader of the Opposition at the time came to Sherbrooke in May and had to say clearly where he stood with respect to footwear and textile quotas. His position was that his Government would not tamper with quotas.

Eventually, in June 1984, the previous Liberal Government once again asked the Canadian Import Tribunal for a study and, in June 1985, the CIT made its recommendations and then the Government took action.

I believe that, in this context, it is essential to re-evaluate or re-examine the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe. To be even more specific, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that most of the workers in this industry—I have the feeling that I am repeating myself, but I think that this should be repeated if we really want to understand the problem—are older than the average and the majority of them are women, in most cases with little education, often because they did not have the opportunity to attend school very long. In the Eastern Townships, we often see people aged 42 or 43 in these industries because they have had to start working very young to support their family. In view of the situation, it is silly to concentrate on a single aspect of the problem when we are speaking about these issues, whether we are dealing with the footwear, the textile or the clothing industry. All aspects should always be considered if we sincerely and honestly want to solve the problems which exist in these traditional sectors. We must never forget that this issue involves our regional development policy. The issue also has an extremely important social aspect in the case of the workers whom I have already described. There is also the whole context of international competition from imports.

Mr. Speaker, to come back to what the Gaucher-Pringle report said at the time, it was necessary to get out of these sectors, to diversify into much stronger industries, and the situation is the same here as elsewhere. The report also mentioned high technology and the fact that something had to be done to stop the region as a whole from depending completely on traditional employment sector.

Mr. Speaker, as most Members of this House, I believe, I was fascinated by the reaction which followed the decision made by the Government, and I would like to examine this reaction briefly. The Manufacturers Association squarely stated that it would mean the death of the industry. As for the Retailers Association, its members agree with the decision, they approve of it and some of them even go further. Even after the announcement of the decision made by the Government, certain retailers believe that the Government will do more, and I would like to quote from an article in The Globe and Mail of Thursday, November 21, 1985:

[English]

A spokesman for the Canadian Importers Association said he is afraid that the Government may have a hidden agenda that will see the inevitable surge in imports following the end of quotas used as an excuse to slap them on once again.

[Translation]

The Consumers' Association of Canada, on its part, agrees with the decision. If we look at our trading partners, we see that the Americans who supply only 4 per cent of the shoes consumed in Canada and the European Economic Community which accounts for 60 per cent of our imports of ladies and girls shoes, indicated that they intend to retaliate. In this context, Mr. Speaker, the motion of my hon. colleague and the reaction of the Official Opposition did not surprise me. On this side of the House, we are used since September, since November 1985, since we are sitting, to seeing the opposition Parties systematically take views opposed to ours. Frankly, we are sorry to see them contribute so little to this debate. Today's situation is not uncommon. They are only doing what they have always done. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention on the reaction of editorialists, because it is even more interesting.

Frédéric Wagnière, in the Thursday, November 21 issue of La Presse, says:

Finally, Ottawa has decided to save the Canadian shoe industry.

And he concludes:

Ottawa is only taking a decision which is in the interest of the whole country and it is now up to the shoe industry to stand up on its own without any help from the Government or the consumers.

In the Friday, November 22 issue of The Gazette, we read:

● (1620)

[English]

But the government made the right decision, hard though it was.

[Translation]

Also in The Gazette dated November 22, Don McGillivray, political analyst for Southam News, was writing:

[English]

The Tory government has done the right thing—and a brave thing—in deciding to phase out shoe import quotas.

[Translation]

In The Ottawa Citizen dated November 22, it was stated:

[English]

But abolishing footwear import quotas will benefit consumers—and the industry itself.

[Translation]

In The Gazette dated November 23, Marie-Josée Drouin, a respected and well-known economist, also wrote that the Government has made a sound decision.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully summit that there must be something unusual because the Canadian Manufacturers' Association has said publicly: This will be the death of the industry. Consumers think that we have made a fine decision. On the one hand, all the editorials which we have read until now say that it is a good decision. On the other hand, the unions say that it is a bad decision which will kill the industry.

I think that all the Members of this House, under these circumstances, should ask themselves serious questions. How is it that on one single issue, people can hold so divergent views? I for one, Mr. Speaker, do not pretend to know everything from instinct, but I will honestly and sincerely say that the decision made by the Government, if I only consider the interests of my riding and its residents, is not exactly what I would have liked myself. When we have such immediate interests, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to take the opposite view. With that in mind, I promised during the election campaign and subsequently to meet with the people and to tell them I would uphold their views with the decision-makers. On that point, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I am not going to wait until this coming December 4 to meet with the footwear employees who will come to Ottawa. Contrary to others, I have met with them during the election campaign and several times afterwards. I promised them as their representative that I would uphold their views. Now, today, considering what newspaper editors have to say, what the Manufacturers' Association and the Opposition are telling us, what will are we to do about that decision? Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that even though it does not suit me, there is justification for that decision which was made by a Minister who has assumed his responsibilities, who, and I witnessed that personnally, has listened carefully to all those concerned with the sector, and who is saying: Now, 55 per cent of Quebec's production, for instance, consists in women's and girls' shoes. Approximately 50 per cent of Canada's production consists of women's and girls' shoes. The quota which have been in place for a number of years do not seem to work, or they have worked to the extend that the Canadian Import Tribunal, after having conducted a study . . . it was not commissioned by us but by the previous Government. The results of the study commissioned by the previous Government have been submitted. In that context, the Tribunal is telling us that manufacturers should be able to compete in four categories.

Moreover, we have had regional development programs which were successful. I have in mind among others the CIRB, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, in which this Government has reinvested $63 million to allow it to fulfil its mandate as promised. However, Mr. Speaker, to return to more immediate concerns, those of my area, I repeat I am not totally satisfied with that decision, but, good grief, one is seldom totally satisfied with any decision, even less so in this House.

The Santana factory, in my area, which I consider as one of the best makers of footwear and winter boots, makes shoes for women and girls. Ninety per cent of its production is in that category of products. It will, therefore, get a protection for a period of three years.

The Fanec Company, with some fifty employees, also makes women's and girls' shoes and will also get the protection. The same is true for Becwith-Bemis and American Biltrite which make components.

Which means that in my own area, if I consider my immediate interest, some 90 per cent of the production is made of women's and girls' shoes.

What is more important, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has demonstrated both wisdom and vision by announcing at the same time that, to improvise as little as possible and because it is concerned about workers' interests, the Government had set up adaptation programs. That is a major aspect of its decision.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we should not overlook the fact that there remains a 23 per cent custom tariff on footwear generally. We can appreciate this tariff when we realize that the average for the manufacturing industry in Canada is approximately 9 per cent. I think that the average is 9 or 10 per cent both in the United States and the European Common Market.

Mr. Speaker, what disappoints me most in this debate is the lack of straightforwardness on the part of Opposition Members on such an important issue and constant harping about jobs. I think for instance of my hon. colleague, and I should be quite surprised if all Members of the Official Opposition agreed with this motion which was moved today and cast their votes on this motion. I need only think of the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who, in 1981-82, was openly against a quota system for the footwear industry, just as he was against a great many other things. Now that he is in the Opposition, things have changed. They have come to realize that. It is like for the workers in the textile and clothing industry. They never mentioned them at the time; now, they have just discovered them. Well, between 1974 and 1984, 35,500 jobs were lost in Canada in the textile and clothing industry. Yet, not a word. All these jobs disappeared, and they never raised a finger. But now that they are in the Opposition, they suddenly wake up and realize the situation, when they have no responsibility . . . It is easy to blame the Government without ever offering any alternative solution. They suddenly discover that there are workers in the textile, clothing and footwear industries.

I doubt whether the footwear workers will ever forget that in 1981 the Member for Shefford was not on their side when he was in a position to make decisions but refused to do so. I also think that the footwear workers should also know that the Members of the Official Opposition cannot all be in agreement. It is impossible.

This morning, I was sent a speech made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) in Vancouver where people are generally in favour of free trade. He said:

[English]

I made a personal submission to the Macdonald Commission at the time I was Minister of Economic and Regional Development and Science and Technology in the Trudeau Cabinet. In it I said:

[Translation]

And then the former Minister referred to the facts, he spoke about free trade and our trade exchanges with the United States and other countries. And God knows this is at the core of today's issue! Well let us hear what he said to those people in Vancouver, to the Vancouver Board of Trade as recently as on November 22:

[English]

One of the most basic choices facing Canadians is whether to remain an outward looking trading nation fully participating in the international economy, or to go in the direction of self-sufficiency and protectionism.

[Translation]

And this is what we are discussing today.

[English]

I have no difficulty with this choice nor do I think that Canadians have much doubt where their longer-run interests lie. The benefits of international trade are simply too apparent and outweight the cost of adjustments to change in world markets. What I believed then I believe now. Macdonald has corroborated that view.

That is what the Hon. Member for Saint Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said last Friday in Vancouver speaking against protectionism to the Vancouver Board of Trade while on Monday in this House his Party has presented a motion that goes completely the other way. I will be happy to see him get up in the House and vote for this motion today. If they are sincere, for once they can put their money where their mouths are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Calgary East (Mr. Kindy).

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) on his eloquence. I think that he is quite able to defend the interests of the people in the Eastern Townships. He is quite sincere. He also knows that you cannot have commercial relations without some free trade. You cannot live under constant protection.

I would like to ask him one question: Does he believe that it was in the interests of the population in general and the people in the Eastern Townships that we acted as we did in providing certain quotas for women's and girls' footwear?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his question.

I mentioned earlier that I was not entirely satisfied with the decision because there are many textile workers in our region and I would have liked more to be done for them. I say so quite frankly.

I think that the Minister said certain things on which we should concentrate more, including the need to implement retraining programs if there are problems. Second, the Minister and the Government plan to ask importers to be careful about what they will do in the next few months, otherwise I imagine that the issue of quotas might be reassessed.

Based on the success achieved by a similar program for the automobile industry, I think it fair to say that, if we can judge the future by the past, we can hope for a number of things to come out of the notice given to these importing countries by the Government.

Generally, I find the situation difficult, and, to be frank, the people in general and the footwear workers of the Eastern townships were expecting more. However, to be fair, an editorial published today in La Tribune of Sherbrooke, the newspaper which serves my own constituency and that of my colleagues for Richmond-Wolfe and Shefford, says the following:

"In deciding to phase out import quotas in the footwear industry, the Federal Government is going in the right direction, but without enough precautions." When the author speaks about precautions, he is referring to the situation of workers and to retraining programs. I believe that today's editorial describes fairly well the concerns of the workers. However, there is one thing that I would like to make clear, namely that, in the future as in the past, I shall look after them and monitor closely, as it is my duty to do, what is going on in the industry to ensure that the quotas will be applied fairly and equitably in the interests of the men and women employed in the footwear industry.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to congratulate the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke on his fine speech. It will allow the Hon. Member both to support his Government and tell his constituents: "I have, indeed, stood up to denounce the decision." That kind of performance, Mr. Speaker, reflects very well this Government, which is quite able to say yes to those who want to hear yes, and no to the others if that is what they want to hear.

I would have just one question to ask to the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke, if I may, Mr. Speaker. The promises made by the Prime Minister were made in Sherbrooke before La Tribune.

Will the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke tell this House whether his Government has made any promises to men and women working in the shoe industry?

Mr. Charest: As you very well know, when this statement was made by the then leader of the Opposition, your Government had not yet ordered a report, or requested a decision by the Canadian Import Tribunal. One month later, your Government ordered that report, and the tribunal rendered its decision.

Those are the circumstances surrounding that statement and in all fairness, would the hon. member not recognize that quotas were not abolished in the Sherbrooke area, that 90 per 100 of the production has been maintained? Under those circumstances, the leader of the opposition, now Prime Minister, was right when he made such a statement. He kept his word. And his statement could very well be interpreted that way.

But both the Hon. Member and I wish to be a frank as possible in the course of the present debate. I do recognize that we expected more. But he must view the global picture on that matter and the situation of all our workers as well as those in his riding, at the Brown Shoe Company, which has received many contracts from the federal government to manufacture army boots. That plant was awarded many contracts from the government since September and contracts are more profitable than quotas.

I suggest that workers in this area have been granted a fair deal under the circumstances. We were and we still are interested in granting some measure of justice to that industry as a whole, and particularly in the allocation of quotas. Both the hon. member and I know the problem and want to remind the House as well as the minister that it is not only a matter of having quotas as such but a matter of allocation. That is where the problem arises. Since those quotas have been maintained, I think that we must see to it, the Minister and both of us, that they be fairly allocated in those sectors.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) on a supplementary question.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister mentioned the fact that the Government was not in a legal position to overrule the recommendation of the Anti-dumping Tribunal. I know that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) is a prominent lawyer, and I have in front of me a number of legal opinions stating unanimously that the Government was indeed legally entitled to overrule the recommendations of the Anti-dumping Tribunal, and I would like to know, in the light of his statement a few moments ago to the effect that if conditions change, it will always be possible to backtrack and review the decision, how he reconciles his own assertion, his own statement, with a statement by the minister this morning in which he said that in this matter the Government was not legally empowered to overrule the recommendations of the Anti-dumping Tribunal?

Mr. Charest: I do not think people should be misled either. There is nothing cast in concrete forever, and since there was a decision by the Tribunal, since it was given that mandate once, I presume it could be done another time. You have done it as a government. So why should we prevent it from doing so another time in another context? If the Minister does come to the conclusion that it has to be done, I suppose that at that time the legal problem you mentioned will easily be overcome.

But before concluding, I would like to tell you just one thing. By drafting your motion as you did, and I feel this is unfortunate, you, as a lawyer too, missed a golden opportunity to rally a number of members who would have supported it if you had drafted it in a way that would have allowed many of them to support it. Even the whole Government might have supported you indeed if you had introduced a motion that really was in favour of footwear workers. But you chose differently, you decided to be downright partisan—without being concerned with workers, and in just taking into account your own political assets and your own interests, as the drafting of the motion eloquently illustrates in saying that this House regrets that the Prime Minister has once again failed to maintain quotas and broken . . . Once again it is the old Opposition rhetoric.

Well, let me give you a good piece of advice, my good friend, three years is a short time. You may think that it is by yelling and doing what you are doing that you will be reelected, but in spite of whatever may happen in this House, it would come as a big surprise to me if people in the eastern townships were to vote for people who have nothing else to do but whine around because times have changed, and I think they will continue for a long time to cast a conservative vote. And I for one shall vote against that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Questions and comments are now over.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You have just announced the adjournment debate. In my experience when there is an opposition day and a vote follows, we have, I thought, always suspended the adjournment debate. You have though just told us there would be an adjournment debate tonight.

Would you look at the rules and can you reconcile for us Standing Order 19(4) and Standing Order 46(7). We need to understand clearly that on an opposition day with a vote that we should not expect the adjournment debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been here for quite a few years. He realizes that Standing Order 19(4) and Standing Order 46(7) are new rules that have been implemented for the last period of time.

I am sure this point is being considered under the new rules to come into effect after we recess. I think the Hon. Member should bring it to the attention of people in the House who are responsible for the changes to the rules. I agree with the Hon. Member. I hope he gets the ear of other people in the Chamber.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—IMPORT QUOTAS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe):

That this House regrets that the Prime Minister has once again broken an election campaign promise, this time by failing to maintain quotas on imports on shoes and by compounding this betrayal by failing to make adequate provision for the thousands of workers whose jobs are adversely affected.
