We brought to our task almost 100 years of parliamentary experience. As well, we had the professional support of the most able people who serve us in this place. I mention this because of the many new Members of this House who came here 15 months ago full of high hopes and great expectations. I can say to them that the frustrations that they experienced are well known to us who were already here. They expected great things from us and their ongoing interest served as a constant reminder of the importance of our mandate and the challenge inherent in it.

The House will be interested in knowing that in the 55 formal meetings of the committee, which included visits to the national Parliaments of Great Britain, France, the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States, there was not one single division. There were no heated partisan exchanges. As a consequence, the committee was able to reach consensus on the 82 recommendations contained in the three reports. The result, in my opinion, is a package of reform which would change the way this place functions in an important and fundamental way—change the way it functions in an important and fundamental way for the benefit of all Canadians.

Therefore, tonight I express the hope that this will not be a partisan debate. Were we to engage in such a partisan exchange we would destroy not only the letter but the spirit of these reforms. We are not here to score partisan points in this debate. We are not here to discuss the benefits or emoluments accruing to Members. Nor, Sir, for that matter are we here to cater to the complacent and the self-satisfied.

The fundamental question that each of us should ask ourselves tonight is what do the people of Canada expect of us? Are we who are here on their behalf satisfied with the way we conduct the business of this nation? Are we satisfied with the procedures already in place to hold the Crown accountable for the way it spends the taxpayers' money? What you have before you tonight are the efforts of seven private Members who attempted in the recommendations of the committee to address these important questions.

I would like now to pay tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for it was the commitment of the Prime Minister to the people of Canada to reform Parliament that resulted in the setting up of the special committee. The first priority of this Government in the Speech from the Throne called for the setting up of this special committee. I quote directly from the Speech from the Throne of last fall:

> The central focus of this task force will be the enhancement of the role of the Private Member. From that prospect the task force will examine and make recommendations concerning the powers, practices, organization and resources of the House of Commons.

The Prime Minister never once wavered in that commitment. Not only that, he publicly supported the work of the committee throughout the life of its mandate. That commitment to this House by the Prime Minister can best be summed up by his words which, consequently, I found at page 823 of Hansard for December 3, 1984, one year ago, and I quote:

> —what is emerging is a conflict between Parliament and the executive. I stand fully for the rights of Parliament.

Never in the history of this place has a Government, and I pay tribute to the Government House Leader, moved so quickly and so positively to implement the recommendations of a committee of this House. The recommendations of the first report which are now in place are dramatic testimony to that fact. When the Prime Minister agreed to give the committee the broadest possible mandate, he was by his vision challenging this House to reform itself. I hope, Sir, that we as Members of this House are up to that challenge.

Let me say that if we were to identify a philosophic thrust to the findings of this committee, it would have to be its attempt to enhance the role of the private Member and to provide for greater accountability by the executive to this House and its committees. That is the heart and soul of the committee's recommendations. That is what we at least attempted in our reports.

We have already set up legislative committees arising out of the recommendations of the first report. Let me say to my friend and colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), that I believe it was a mistake on the part of the committee to recommend a floor on the size of those committees. In retrospect I believe that was a mistake. That would have been better left as a question to be negotiated by the Leaders of the House, through the work of the Striking Committee. I do not say that to address the configuration of this House because that would be a mistake, if we were to address the reforms to this Parliament. I say that because I think that is much better way to go about the business of the House. However, I would like to say this parenthetically: when we made that recommendation, we never envisaged a situation of having more than six or seven Bills before a committee at any one time, as that had been the record of the House up to that time. I would say to the House and to the leadership of the House that neither was it our intention that these legislative committees be struck after first reading. They were to be struck after second reading and that is clearly explicit in the recommendations of the committee. I hope the House will take that suggestion seriously.

I would like now to move on to the specifics of the Government's response to the committee's second and third reports. Time will not allow me to deal with all the recommendations, all the changes that have been made as a result of some of these recommendations, or every response of the Government for that matter. Rather, I would like to highlight some of the areas that the House may wish to reconsider, and indeed the Government House Leader in a spirit of reform may wish to reconsider.

To its credit, and to the credit of the Government House Leader, the Government is for the most part in the process of moving toward implementing many of the recommendations of the second and third reports. However, I am concerned about a number of areas and I will refer now to two recommendations contained in the second report.

The first concerns new voting procedures. I would like to have some explanation in this regard, that the 30-minute bell proposed in the Government's response would only be an interim measure in place until the House installed electronic voting devices. Otherwise, it would make no sense. After examining the experience of the electronic voting system in the U.S. House of Representatives, one would see that to have the machines activated for 30 minutes would really make no sense. What we are recommending here is that for the 15 minutes while the bells are ringing, the machines would be open and Members would come to vote. This must be taken as well in the context of the attitude of the House toward the convention of confidence, something which I believe has to change. We made no recommendations there but we addressed the matter in narrative form. The Minister has dealt with that as well.

I am also worried by the proposed changes in the Standing Orders as they relate to the new voting procedure. Paragraph 4 of the proposed Standing Order 13 seems to indicate that either the Government or the Opposition could delay any vote while the bells were ringing for a period of one day. I hope I am reading that wrong. This proposed change would certainly make the job of the Party Whips easier, but I think it would dramatically alter the accepted principle of the House and how it votes. It would be a backward step. For example, any contentious vote could simply be delayed until the Parties were satisfied they had the numbers here to deal with it. That is not reform.

In the committee's recommendations concerning the precincts of Parliament, we recommended an intendant. We did that because we were concerned that we had lost control over this place and its precincts. We acted from evidence presented to us by former Speakers and present Speakers. Things are happening here that do not have any reference to Parliament at all. Just a few months ago, they put a marquee tent on the grounds of Parliament, something which had no reference to this place. We had the sound and light show learning up the grounds of this place to turn the front lawn into a carnival without any reference to this place.

Surely we are responsible for this place and not the Department of Public Works or the bureaucrats from the National Capital Commission. I would plead with the Government not to tamper with that recommendation so that the proposed parliamentary intendant would become merely a co-ordinator between the Department of Public Works, the National Capital Commission, the Speaker of the House and the Speaker of the Senate. We want him to be in charge of this place, to execute our wishes on behalf of the people of Canada and to enhance and preserve this important part of Canada's national heritage.

Other than that, I am satisfied that the Government has moved with regard to the implementation of the recommendations of the second report. I hope the Minister or the House will reconsider those points, because the Government to its credit has not presented its response in a partisan fashion. It wants to hear from the House. I congratulate the Government House Leader and his colleagues for arranging for this debate.

The third report was tabled in the House on June 18 and is the basis for new provisional Standing Orders which will take effect next month.

One of the series of recommendations that we made in the first report was that all questions relating to confidence be removed from the Standing Orders. We did that because we felt that this was not the role of the Chair. It is not for the Chair to say when a Government should resign, when it has lost the confidence of the House or when it should not. That judgment and the responsibility for that judgment must be taken by the Government. Yet we have references to confidence restored to the Standing Orders by defining what is a free vote.

How can the Chair define what is or is not a free vote? How will the Chair be able to enforce the Standing Order if a Government is defeated on a measure which is defined in the Standing Orders as confidence yet the Government of the day decides not to resign? What happens then? The Chair is then left in the position of having a Standing Order that it in fact cannot enforce. I hope the Minister will give some thought to that.

We talked at great length about the myth surrounding questions of confidence that has grown up in this country. Governments should not have to resign when they are defeated on a Bill. All Parliament is saying is that we do not like the Bill, bring back a better one. If the Government gets defeated on a Budget, obviously it cannot function as it cannot get its Supply and it must resign. If it is defeated on a specific, explicit vote of confidence, then clearly it has to resign. But surely we should put in place reforms that will give the House an opportunity to express itself on legislation.

We know just as much if not more than those faceless people in the PCO who draft these Bills. Surely we should be given the opportunity to improve them. I would hope that the Government will take to heart the words of the eminent constitutional expert, Senator Forsey, who produced a 323-page paper for the committee on the convention of confidence. He said: "Questions of confidence and their definition are best kept out of the Standing Orders altogether".

If we adopted the attitude necessary to restore to the House a new approach to the so-called confidence convention, we would by that very fact be restoring to the House an important role in the legislative function, a role which I do not believe it now has because there are no surprises in this House any more. We know how we are going to vote on every Bill that comes before the House because the Whips are on on every Bill. We asked a representative from Britain about the three-line Whips. He said that they have used the three-line Whip there so often that it has become a feather duster. We have used the three-line Whip in this country on every Bill. It is about time we changed that.

If I want to vote against a Bill because it is not in the interests of my constituents that should not mean that I have no confidence in the Government I support; nor should it mean that I am a maverick who makes the headlines and the national news that night. When we in the House reach the stage that that fact no longer makes news, we will have achieved one of the greatest reforms in the history of this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: There are two other areas on which I wish to touch very briefly. We as a committee working with consensus felt that the heart and soul of parliamentary reform and the enhancement of the role of the private Member could best be done through a new committee system. We recommended a new Standing Committee system, and in order to ensure the independence of that committee system we recommended it be given its own budget, have its own ongoing mandate, be better equipped to hold the Government accountable during the examination of Estimates, and that Parliamentary Secretaries be excluded from membership on the committees.

There is a very important role for Parliamentary Secretaries to play and that is in piloting Bills through the legislative committees. In my view, they have no role on the Standing Committees. They may observe the proceedings but they should not in any way attempt, as surrogates of the Government, to interfere with the process of concensus and collegiality that will hopefully emerge from that new Standing Committee system.

• (1900)

Finally, I hope that the Government will accept our recommendations regarding Private Member's Business. Surely, that is something the House can deal with itself. My friend, the Hon. Member for Peace River, took the lead in putting those reforms together. It is one of the area, apart from the new committee system, about which we are most excited as members of the committee. We hope that the Government will give us a chance to function as legislators. The only way we can truly and fully function as legislators is if a new system with regard to Private Member's Business is brought in. In this way, Bills will have a chance to become law. The last Private Member's Bill which became law in this place was a Bill establishing the beaver as Canada's national symbol. Who will take us seriously if we conduct ourselves in that fashion?

I will not indulge myself on the time of the House. This is a special debate by Special Order. I have 20 minutes and my time is up. I wish to say to the House, the Government House Leader the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the Government how grateful I am for the opportunity which was given to me as one member of the committee to be a part of what I consider to be this exciting process of reform.

I hope in saying this that the Government will not lose the spirit which prompted it to start this reform process in the first place because if there is one thing this Government will be remembered for, among all others, it will be its determination to reform this place in order to make it more meaningful for the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this special debate tonight and I would like, at the outset of my remarks, to congratulate the chairman of the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons, the previous speaker, for the speech he just delivered, but especially for the outstanding work he has done as chairman of that special committee. In my view, he was an inspiration for all members of the committee and he prompted us to work in a non partisan fashion. Our job was excessively difficult in some regards but I believe the results have been well received and even applauded like no other report from a Parliamentary committee has ever been before.

The media unanimously paid tribute to the hon. member who presided over that committee and unanimously expressed the hope that the Government will implement as soon as possible the recommendations contained in what is commonly referred to as the McGrath report.

That explains why I was somewhat surprised, Mr. Speaker, when I read the response to the recommendations contained in the second and third reports from the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons, response which has been submitted to us last October by the Government House Leader.

I suggest the recommendations made public at that time by the House leader can be viewed in two different ways. On the one hand, one can say that the government seems to be prepared to accept almost all recommendations suggested by the special committee. This approach, this reaction is of course that of an optimist. On the other hand, a pessimistic or partisan member of Parliament could react in an exactly opposite way because when one examines very carefully the response of the government, one realizes that only one of the seven recommendations made in the second report is in fact immediately accepted by the government and that the six remaining are to be subjected to additional studies, consideration and discussion within the new Board of internal economy.

As for the third report from the committee, the government is telling us that it only accepts one third of the recommendations, that it wants to see further discussion about another third of the recommendations and that the last third is not accepted at all.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether, when rising tonight, I can consider myself an optimist or a pessimist. But I want to say this to government members, that we, as members of Parliament, every one of us, collectively, have a unique opportunity to operate a major, meaningful reform benefiting the institution of Parliament and all members, whether they sit on your right or your left, Mr. Speaker. And I suggest it would be unfortunate if, through misunderstanding or hesitation on the part of the government, we were to miss the boat on parliamentary reform.

I am prepared to accept the word of the Government when it says it is in a favourable frame of mind about this. However, I believe that this report which results from the assiduous work of all members of the special committee must be accepted in its entirety. The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that we have worked in a spirit of consensus, in a non partisan fashion. I am sure that the representative from the New Democratic Party who was sitting on that committee alongside with me would agree with me that we have agreed to some things in the best interests of Parliament even though we knew that for us, in the opposition, for the Liberal Party as well as for the New Democratic Party, some of these recommendations would not necessarily be well received by all our colleagues from the opposition. We accepted these compromises because, on the other side, the Government Members sitting in the committee were also willing to make certain compromises and non-partisan suggestions in the best interests of the Canadian Parliament.

The Government cannot now pick and choose in the document which has been presented to us and accept only those recommendations which it might find more interesting and reject other recommendations because they seem to favour the Opposition.

I believe that the balance which we have been able to maintain through the work of the Committee Members is a delicate one, and that it is essential that it be respected by the Government. Otherwise the package of recommendations made by the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons will make no sense.

If we were to accept only the recommendations which favour the Government, it is obvious that the objective of parliamentary reform would not be reached. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, what our Committee tried to do is to bring to bear an element of freshness, a new approach to Parliamentary procedure which puts more emphasis on the individual Member of Parliament. This does not mean the Ministers, Parliamentary Secretaries or Members of a political party, whether in the Government or in the Opposition, but the Members democratically elected by the public to represent their views in the Canadian Parliament. Throughout our work, we always kept one thing in mind, namely the obligation of parliamentarian to reassert the value of our institution in the eyes of the Canadian public. We should not delude ourselves. We have to face the brutal truth. Many Canadians have lost confidence in politicians. Many Canadians no longer see the Member of Parliament as someone with an important role in Canadian politics. If we want our democratic institution to have some meaning and usefulness, it is essential that we give back to the population a minimum of confidence in its representatives in the Canadian Parliament. I believe that this is still the fundamental purpose of parliamentary reform.

I would like to say that the first report to be approved by the Committee chaired by the former Member of this House who is now Senator Tom Lefebvre included a series of recommendations which were nearly identical to the recommendations accepted unanimously by the three political parties in the previous Legislature.

However, I have to say with some regret, Mr. Speaker, that three of the recommendations contained in this first report are not being rigourously applied and followed by this Government. The first of course concerns the legislative committees. We had recommended that legislative committees be created after the second reading stage, but that the Government also be able to decide after second reading that a bill would be referred to a Committee of the whole for consideration.

The Government obviously had a choice in dealing with bills. They could be referred either to a Committee of the Whole, to a legislative committee or even to a Standing Committee of the House. However, at the present time, there is a proliferation of legislative committees, much too many compared with what we had envisioned at the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, and certainly also with the views of the Lefebvre Committee, which had never recommended such a proliferation of legislative committees.

Yet, there are now 13 legislative committees, although seven only are active. Why were six other committees struck if they are not to meet and do worthwhile work? It is my view that something went wrong with respect to the spirit, if not to the very concept of the use of legislative committees.

Secondly, we had mentioned appointing Members of Parliament, Private Members, back-benchers to the Committee on Internal Administration, because as suggested earlier by the Hon. Member who spoke before me, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), it is important that Members of Parliament should control the administration of their own institution. Of course we have no objection to House Leaders from the three parties sitting on that Committee.

However, it may happen that they will not always be as nice and civilized as the three present House Leaders, and the spirit of cooperation now prevailing between House Leaders could also deteriorate. It would be too bad, and most unfortunate were the Committee on Internal Administration to become just another forum for discussion between House Leaders. I simply wanted to point that out, because we believe it is very important that the other committee members besides the two Ministers, the Speaker and Deputy Speaker who play an important role on that Commiteee, be actually Members of Parliament, not necessarily Officers of the House, but actual Members of Parliament.

Finally, the provision concerning Ministers' statements is something we wanted, but on this side of the House we have been somewhat amazed to see to what extent the Governement can take to the letter of the new procedure. What I mean is that Ministers' statements must be delivered in an orderly manner, and the least we can expect is that there should be some advanced notice because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, Ministers' statements are made after the oral question period, and proceedings go on after normal hours at 6, 6:30 p.m. We ask for advanced notice at least on the day before such Ministers' statements are made—I am not asking Ministers who will be making statements to send their documents, but at least to notify the Opposition that there will be a Minister's statement the next day—in order that on this side we may, at least prepare for the debates for a period somewhat longer than after 6 p.m. Those are the comments I wanted to make concerning the second report.

I want to commend the Government for deciding to proceed with parliamentary reform. The fact that they accepted the first report is a very clear signal that they wish to implement parliamentary reform, but one thing I woud like to suggest this evening is that in order to have a genuine parliamentary reform, the second and third reports have to be implemented almost entirely. Failing this, we of the Opposition will have been somewhat gypped in the co-operative effort made at that non-partisan committee to arrive at a series of recommendations which in my view are most fair to all Members of Parliament, whether we are Government or Opposition Members.

My major concern is with some proposals made in response to that report by the Government House Leader. I cannot understand in particular why he does not accept the suggestion concerning the in-depth consideration of the estimates. We believe—a view that was shared by all Members from both sides of the House—that the consideration of the estimates is practically a farce. The way it is done leads to a minimum of scrutiny in the discussion of the estimates of various Departments. And it is our view that strengthening the MP's role depends on the opportunity for that Member to make a more thorough study of the various expenditures of Canadian Government Departments. What we have suggested, in view of our parliamentary tradition and precedents . . . We did not want to change completely this review of budgetary estimates, but we thought that Committee Members who will look into these estimates should not only have the right or the privilege to put questions for a few minutes to civil servants or ministers, but also to ask a series of questions to officials concerning the activities and spending of their Department, and to obtain a written reply in time to make it possible for Committee Members to carry out a better informed and more useful study of a particular Department.

I cannot understand why the Government has not accepted this recommendation. I can assure the Government that this suggestion had been made not only to benefit Members of the Opposition, but also in response to the wishes expressed by Government Members. I dare hope that we can find a formula which will satisfy the Government so that these questions which could be tabled with the Clerk of the House in an appropriate form may be accepted and answered before consideration of the estimates.

Mr. Speaker, I see that unfortunately my time is just about up. To conclude, I should simply like to say that 20 minutes to describe the great experience which I have lived with my colleagues on the Special Committee on Reform is not enough. I want to thank all of them for their co-operation, understanding, and I hope that the Government will remember that this document is so valuable that it should be accepted in full, not just in part.

• (1920)

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin this evening by expressing my congratulations to the Government House Leader for instigating this debate before any resolution of the recommendations made to the House by the Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons took place. I am glad to see that this is indeed happening.

I also want to congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) with whom I have had the pleasure to work in two special committees dealing with parliamentary reform.

In that respect I want to say that tonight we are nearing the end of a stage which really could be said to go back to 1979 when the Hon. Walter Baker, the predecessor of the current President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), brought in a position paper on parliamentary reform of the Government at that time.

Since that time of course we had in the last Parliament the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures chaired by the former Member of Parliament, now Senator Tom Lefebvre. I had the opportunity to serve on that committee as the vice-chairman and as well in this Parliament as vice-chairman on the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons.

I recall these things because I want to be clear that what we are talking about tonight is the accumulated consensus of the opinions of many Members of Parliament from all sides of the House. If I understand the history of parliamentary reform correctly, we are nearing the end of what has been a truly remarkable process. Going back to the last Parliament, leading up to this very moment, we have seen a remarkable process whereby consensus rather than division and partisanship has been the rule of the day. I feel that I as a Member of Parliament have been privileged to be a part of that process for as long as I have. I estimate that I have probably attended about 95 per cent of all of the meetings that have been held on parliamentary reform since the bells rang for 16 days.

During that time I have had the privilege to see the best side of many Members of Parliament and the best side of what Parliament can be. I say that tonight because I am, as I hope it can be said of me throughout the process, not out to pick a fight with anybody. I do not want what I say tonight to be understood in that way at all, but I want to say some things in what I hope will be a strong and convincing way about how I think this process should come to a successful end. It needs to be nursed to a final conclusion consistent with the spirit that has imbued the process from the very beginning.

The Goverment has a special responsibility in this respect because if the process is to end as it began with consensus then the Government must not flinch as it faces the final stage of parliamentary reform—or at least the final stage in this stage of parliamentary reform, because we know that the process of reform is ongoing. The Government must not falter in the respect it has previously and consistently shown for the consensus arrived at by the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons.

It can fairly be said that the Progressive Conservative Party has demonstrated a consistent interest in and support for parliamentary reform. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to his credit, as was said by the Hon. Member for St. John's East, has made it a centrepiece of his claim to represent a new era in Canadian political life. I say to the Prime Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, do not back off now; reconsider some of the ways in which the Government's response to our final report needlessly tinkers with some of the recommendations, with little or no reason offered for doing so, in many cases; reconsider the ways in which it significantly violates both the letter and the spirit of our reform particularly as it pertains to the question of the confidence convention, and to the matter of parliamentary secretaries sitting on standing committees. I will elaborate in more detail in just a few minutes on those two matters.

But first I want to say a word about something that has arisen more as a problem than as a principle, and that has to do with the way the recommendation on legislative committees has unfolded. We know there is a problem with the legislative committees, that people feel Members are overloaded with work and that there are too many committees. I think we have to acknowledge a couple of things here, and make a few suggestions about which I think can be easy consensus.

First of all the committee, in its imagining of how legislative committees would work, always imagined the legislative committees working simultaneously with smaller standing committees. I understand the mechanics of what the Government wanted to do, and rightly so; to introduce our second report. So they did, and that brought about legislative committees. Our smaller standing committees were in the third report fully, so there was a chronological difficulty there. Let us keep that in mind when we are critical of the existence of legislative committees, as some Members have been. Hopefully it is only a matter of time before they exist alongside smaller standing committees. That will help to ease the problem.

It will also help to ease the problem if, at the same time as we initiate the next stage of reform, we also more to make the number of Members required on legislative committees more flexible. I do not want to second guess the work of the committee, but I think that we should have recommended more flexibility for the size of legislative committees. We did not, but I think there is a consensus in the House that it will be possible to have smaller committees for noncontroversial legislation and larger ones for legislation which is seen to be politically controversial.

I think there is also a consensus that there should be some kind of traffic control on the creation of legislative committees. There should be only a given number of legislative committees sitting at one time. There are various ways in which we could do that and I will not use up my time suggesting them. However, I think it is important for Members to realize that the problems with legislative committees are solvable and that we should not allow transitional irritants to lessen our enthusiasm for reform. My concern with legislative committees to this date has not been with the possibility of them working as we intended them to, but that in the short run they have made some Members skeptical about the reform process.

I will now turn to the two elements of the Government's response to our final report which I find to be the most troublesome. The first and the most troublesome has to do with parliamentary secretaries sitting on standing committees.

As you know, the committee recommended that there be smaller standing committees with seven members and the Government responded by recommending standing committees with eight members and parliamentary secretaries. We recommended that the committees have a form of tenured membership with Members selecting their own alternates. This will, hopefully, develop a sense of collegiality that will provide better scrutiny of and accountability for the various departments which these standing committees will mirror than we have seen to date.

I say to the President of the Privy Council that what all Members and the public imagine for these committees and, falsely, for present committees, is an independence from the Government which will be impossible if parliamentary secretaries are allowed to sit on those committees. I say that with no disrespect to persons who are presently or may in the future be parliamentary secretaries. It is just in the nature of the beast that this will be the case.

The Government argues that parliamentary secretaries will play an important role in liaising with the Minister. Mr. Speaker, if we get these new committees and if they are as important and as meaningful as we want them to be, the job of liaising with the Minister can easily be done by a capable chairman of a committee. The chairperson will still be appointed by the Government rather than by the Speaker as is the case with legislative committees. That chairperson can work with the Minister and the Minister will have more inclination to keep channels open with these new committees than he may have had in the past with former standing committees.

As long as there is a parliamentary secretary sitting there feeling, quite naturally, some obligation to defend Government policy, the Minister, or the department, and to report back to the Minister about what has been going on there will be inhibition of the free, frank and independent collegiality that we want to have developed on committees. It just cannot happen if parliamentary secretaries are allowed to be on committees.

Imagine a standing committee coming to a unanimous decision that a judgment or an action of the Government or a department is to be criticized. A parliamentary secretary could not very well make unanimous a recommendation of a committee which was critical of his Minister or department. Let us think about that recommendation because I believe it goes to the heart of reform. If the Government does not change its mind on that it will be very, very difficult for me to be supportive of any conclusion we arrive at. However, I will do my very best because I want this to result in consensus, if at all possible.

I would now like to speak about the issue of confidence. The whole gist of our recommendation up to and including the final report was to deproceduralize confidence. That is the reason we recommended that the language of confidence be taken out of the Standing Orders, and presumably that is the reason it was accepted. That has already been done. We did that because we wanted the question of confidence to be explicitly political rather than a procedural maze in which Members could find refuge when they wanted to as was often the case, and Members of all Parties were guilty of it.

Motions of supply on Opposition days were procedurally matters of confidence so people said that they had to vote with the Government even though they were really against testing the cruise, for example. That is one example. But people in all political Parties were guilty of using that procedural reality in a number of ways which debased the coinage, if you will, of what Parliament is all about, that is, standing up and being counted for what you really think about an issue and being answerable to your constituents for that.

What the Government proposes is not only a violation of what the committee recommended, but if the President of the Privy Council moves ahead with this he is asking for an incredible number of problems just in terms of trying to define what confidence is. As has been suggested before, having that in the Standing Orders and putting the Speaker in the position of having to rule on Standing Orders that deal with whether the Government will stand or fall is an incredible position in which to put the Chair. That is certainly quite the opposite of what we contemplated when we recommended that all reference to confidence be taken out of the Standing Orders and that only those motions that are explicit motions of non-confidence in the Government be so regarded. The Government will continue to have the freedom, at the political level, to say what is confidence and what is not.

The idea is to give the Government the flexibility to say that it pays attention to Parliament and because a particular Bill was defeated, either in the House or in committee, it will go back to the drawing board and have another look at it rather than being caught up in a codification of what confidence is all about.

I say to the Government House Leader, who I know has great respect for the common law tradition, that he should not try his hand at any other tradition at this point. I would refer Hon. Members to various studies conducted by Doctor Forsey and Doctor Norton for the special committee in which the case for this is outlined at great length and quite convincingly.

With respect to the question of recorded divisions, I could be satisfied if what the Government has recommended is seen as an interim measure and that it intends to go ahead with our recommendation of conducting a vote while a 15-minute bell is ringing. When that recommendation is finally implemented, we will not have the possibility of House Leaders deciding to defer a vote during the time it is being taken. That is possible in the Government's response. It may not be significant in this Parliament but one can imagine the problems that might occur in a minority Parliament where pressure could be on people overnight if a vote could be delayed by people interested in the outcome once the vote had started.

The Government's response with respect to the precincts of Parliament is a half-hearted acceptance of our recommendation for the establishment of a Parliamentary Intendant. I do not understand why the Government could not have accepted our recommendation to establish a Parliamentary Intendant and that we gather to ourselves all the various and confusing jurisdictions that now exist with respect to how Parliament Hill is administered. We would then have some control over our own lives. We would be accountable to the Canadian people for what is seen to be related to us. Too often we have been put in a position of not knowing what is happening. An example which was already mentioned is when construction was taking place about which we knew nothing.

If time permitted, I would comment on many other questions. However, I believe I have spoken to the two issues that are most important to me. They are the ways in which I believe the Government is tempting itself to set itself against the momentum which has been created for some years now. We have done so much and made so much possible that it would be a shame to fail in this eleventh hour. It would be a shame for the Government to fail by backing off in crucial ways as it is tempting itself to do. I hope that as a result of the debate tonight, and as a result of whatever process remains before there is final agreement, the Government will reconsider those very important areas that are now at variance with what the committee recommended.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to participate in this debate. I must say that this is a very special evening because in the six years that I have been in Parliament this subject has become a love of mine. It is a subject that is important to me and one that I think is extremely important, not only to this institution but to the people whom we represent throughout Canada.

Tonight I want to begin by acknowledging the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He is a tenacious, demanding task master and I think it is very much to his credit that we as a committee were able to come forward with these recommendations. He pushed and worked us hard. I often remember getting off an airplane after a hard weekend in my riding only to know that there was a phone call from the chairman with a message that we were about to go back to work. It was a tough ongoing process and I pay him the greatest compliment I can by saying how much we appreciate his work. It was because of his work that we have what is before us tonight.

I also want to pause for a moment to mention the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). When this debate began and the committee was given this job, I recall frequent comments that the Prime Minister, although new, would never go through with this change. It was said that he would pull the rug out from under us so that this would not happen. As stated by the chairman, the Prime Minister supported us throughout the process. He listened to our concerns and I believe he has responded to our report.

I also want to mention the Government House Leader who has made this debate possible. That in itself is a reflection of the kind of work we were doing in committee. We believed that when important reports came to the House there should be some discussion of those reports. Tonight we are seeing that in a real, intensive debate that gives each of us an opportunity to express our opinions.

I must also thank my colleagues from both sides of the House who worked with me on the committee. When we look at the membership of that committee we see a quite unlikely group to arrive at a consensus on a report. It is an unlikely group that would go through some of the discussions and decisions which we made without a vote to arrive at a consensus.

If one considers the structure of this committee, it is no accident that it arrived at many of the reforms and recommendations it did. For example, it is no accident that it was recommended that there be seven members on standing committees. We picked seven members because our committee was made up of seven members from all sides of the House who were able to get together to confront an issue that we all believed was important. Therefore, I want to say a very special thanks to each of those members.

I also want to mention the staff who worked with us, some of whom are watching the debate tonight from the gallery, some of whom are at the Table, and some who are watching on television. They gave their all to make this evening possible.

I want to mention one final group. As we went through this reform process, people talked about the responsibilities of the Government, the responsibilities of the so-called McGrath committee and the responsibilities of the House Leaders. However, throughout the whole report there is the responsibility of Members of Parliament.

Reform, no matter how wise, how effective and practical, will not work unless Members of Parliament have the courage and the desire to make it work. My concern is that once we move from this stage into practising some of the recommendations we have put forward on a provisional basis, the success of those recommendations will very much depend on the understanding and demonstrated concern of all Members of Parliament from both sides of the House.

Let me move to the issue on which I want to focus tonight. In many ways, I think this question personifies what we in the committee were trying to accomplish. The area I want to talk about concerns Private Members' Business. It deals with the whole issue we were trying to address in terms of parliamentary reform. I came here in 1980. Since then I have watched the process of Private Members' Bills and Private Members' motions. I have found it one of the most humiliating, frustrating and perhaps most useless processes in which any Member of Parliament can engage.

In his remarks, the chairman of the committee referred to the last private members' Bill that was passed concerning the symbolism of the beaver for Canada. That is a picture of what has been happening with Private Members' Bills but, more important, I think it is a picture of what has been happening to private Members in the House of Commons of Canada.

I have chosen tonight, in the few moments I have, to focus my remarks on this particular area and to put forward my concerns and ideas about why we have to proceed with the reform of Private Members' Hour. A Private Members' Hour with teeth and with opportunity for private Members would change the way that we as Members of Parliament look at this institution. It would change the way that the Government looks at private Members. As well, it would change the way Canadian people look at their own Members of Parliament, the role of MPs, the institution called the House of Commons, and the Government as well. It is crucial to come to grips with that.

For a few moments I should like to talk about some of the fundamental elements which I feel are absolutely essential in a proper and effective Private Members' Hour. The first element is that any subject an Hon. Member wishes to bring before the House has to have at least the chance of a vote. Otherwise, it is nothing more than talking in the wind, nothing more than speaking for the record, nothing more than rhetoric. It has no chance for action; it has no chance to demonstrate a concern, and it has certainly no chance to make a change to the country.

We have recommended that any Private Member's Bill which comes forward should go before a committee of selection, comprised of our peers, to discuss whether or not the Bill should have the opportunity to come to a vote. That is absolutely fundamental and essential. If that is allowed to happen, then all of a sudden there is a reason for those of us who are private Members in the House to take an interest in a subject, to seek a solution and to go out to try to achieve some action. That is the first element which I think is important.

The second one which I felt was important was the whole idea of other Members of Parliament being able to say "I support" the Hon. Member from whatever riding it may be. Then, as we begin to work, not only individually but collectively as Private Members of Parliament, we begin to impact on this institution and ultimately on the nation. My dream and my ideal would be to see an Hon. Member come forward with a Private Member's Bill, have some seconders sitting around him, but also someone from the other side seconding his or her motion. It would then demonstrate that private Members are trying to take control of some of the responsibilities given to them by their peers and by their constituents.

Another area about which we talked in this reform was that a Private Member's Bill, once introduced in the House, must have an opportunity for thorough debate. I have sat through Private Members' Hour here; all of us have. We have watched what happens. Hon. Members rise to speak on subjects which are important to them, only to have two or three speakers come after them often filling time, because if they manage to talk the clock out, the Bills die and the potential for opportunity or change is finished. Thus, all we have engaged in is an exercise in frustration. However, if we had the ability to vote, the ability to attract others to demonstrate their support for what we are working on and a designated time for debate, then Private Members' Bills would take on a whole new dimension.

I see you signalling, Mr. Speaker, that my time is coming to an end already. It is difficult, after the work we have done in committee, for those of us who love this institution and feel that the work we are doing here is important to express it in just a few moments. In closing, I believe that if we change the way in which Private Members' Bills and Motions are viewed in the House of Commons, we will change the way that Canadian people, our constituents and we, as Members of Parliament, view this whole place. Then we will have a House of Commons which relates to, brings dignity to and really accomplishes what the Canadian people dream about, talk about and hope for.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and those who worked with him on the McGrath committee stand in the company of a determined and dedicated few who continue to believe most fervently that Parliament, this greatest of democratic institutions, stands always in the need of reform. I believe the Hon. Member for St. John's East, himself an outstanding parliamentarian and a reformer, knows that the road to parliamentary reform is not one that is well travelled.

It was in the year 1830 that the Prime Minister of England, who was so out of touch with reality and with the demand for parliamentary reform in his country, was able to say in the House of Commons: "The legislature posesses the full and entire confidence of the country", and he was wrong. Two years later he was out of office and, in 1832, the Parliament of Great Britain got its first reform Bill.

I simply mention that because I believe that the citizens of Canada today know that their Parliament is not serving them as well as it should or could. This institution today, to a significant degree, lacks public confidence. It desperately needs to be changed. It needs to be reformed. If we do not understand that and do not believe that, then we too are out of touch.

The report of the McGrath committee is a radical report, but it is radical in the very best sense of the meaning of that word, that is to say, it goes to the root of the problem. This report does not merely tinker and dabble and rearrange our Standing Orders. Of course, the procedures and rules of our House are vital to orderly and democratic disposition of the nation's business. Our orders ensure as much as possible the smooth operation of Parliament, enabling the Government to govern but to do so under the close scrutiny of the peoples' representatives.

More than just procedural reform, the McGrath committee calls for attitudinal changes on the part of Hon. Members, Ministers, party Leaders and Whips.

Mr. Gauthier: I knew you would say that.

Mr. Penner: Of course the McGrath committee saw the need for more effective committees to monitor carefully the performance and spending of government departments. As much as we look to the Auditor General as one of our allies, we cannot rely upon him entirely to do everything for us. We, too, every one of us, have been elected as watchdogs of the public purse. We have a responsibility to do as good a job as we can and to be allies with the Auditor General to see that taxpayers get the best deal for their dollars.

With rare insight, however, the McGrath committee saw what is a central and persistent problem with the Canadian parliamentary system. Our parliamentary system is dominated, controlled, manipulated and at times even suffocated and exploited by a far too powerful executive branch of Government. The legislative branch in our system is alarmingly weak. There is in Canada a serious and extreme imbalance between the executive branch and the legislative branch. That is our essential problem.

What is the result? It is that we have a parliamentary system in Canada which is underdeveloped, immature, retarded and defective. For example, in what other Parliament of the world are Members referred to as sheep or trained seals? Can we imagine one of those appellations being applied to a Member of the United States Congress or even to most Members of the United Kingdom House of Commons? Certainly not. Among most MPs there is a prevailing sense of frustration. Ours is a full-time job to be sure, yet there is such limited room in which to manoeuvre as one seeks to serve his or her constituents. Around here, to have an independent mind, to have one'w own thoughts on some public policy issue, to buck Party disciline is to be what, a maverick, a loner? In our heart of hearts, do we not admire those who display such courage?

Just the other day magnificient words of respect were paid to our late colleague, Max Saltsman, a man who fought for himself, a man who acted and spoke always in the best interests of his constituents. Would not every one of us be proud if those kinds of words could be uttered about us when we are no longer active in this place or no longer present on this earth?

From the very outset the McGrath committee defined the problem as it saw it. I quote:

> The purpose of the reform of the House of Commons in 1985 is to restore to private Members an effective legislative function, to give them a meaningful role in the formation of public policy and, in so doing, to restore the House of Commons to its rightful place in the Canadian political process.

With this in mind, the McGrath committee examined the principle or the convention of confidence; that is, that every vote in the House of Commons is in some way a direct threat to the credibility, to the acceptability or even to the right of the Government to govern. What a ridiculous convention that is.

The McGrath committee concluded that Party lines would become more flexible if there could be a change of attitude on the part of MPs, the Government and the Party Leaders. That is the way to essential parliamentary reform rather than by simply changing the rules of procedure. The McGrath committee has argued very effectively and convincingly that it is up to Members themselves to prove their independent spirit and the Government should avoid raising the question of confidence at every turn. It does not serve it well, it does not serve Parliament well.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the ball is in our court. It is up to us as Members to reform this institution that I think most of us respect and even love. I wonder how we are going to respond.

Reform of the House of Commons

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I will be eternally grateful for having had the opportunity to serve on this committee. I would echo the words of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that it has been an opportunity to see the best of the institution and the best of the other Members of this House. I believe it is worth mentioning again that we brought together recommendations that should bring about sweeping reform, almost radical reform of this place, and we did it without a vote. It was a committee that represented all Parties of this House and we did it without a vote. If that, does nothing else, it ought to prove that we can get a lot of work done here without confrontation, argument and bickering if only we will get close enough to other Members to establish some kind of trust. We can set aside some of our ideological differences for the betterment of the institution and the country if only we will put some trust in other persons, get close enough so that we know them and have confidence in them. We can do away with the confrontation, accomplish a lot more and work for the welfare of our country.

There are three reasons I was interested in working on this committee. I want to say how pleased I was that the first working statement in the Speech from the Throne by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was the statement calling for the establishment of a task force that would enhance the role of the private Member. You cannot enhance the role of the private Member unless you free him. What you have to do is emancipate the private Member.

The private Member gains his authority from the people who elected him. When we come together as a House of Commons representing all of our Parties, representing the entire country, we become the aggregation of the voice of the people. However, to come here as a private Member and find that legislation and policy has already been drafted by people who were not elected and find that you are supposed to give the stamp of approval to something over which you had no voice is unsavoury. We need to emancipate him.

Therefore, it is central to any kind of reform that we deal with an ocean of confidence, as other Members have already said. We cannot free the private Member if at the same time we enslave him to the work of the bureaucracy. We cannot free the private Member if he is made to feel that he has to obey slavishly the Party line and thereby neglect the wishes of his constituents, the particular part of the country that he represents, and overlook the mandate that his people have given him in some cases. Therefore the notion of confidence is central to the emancipation of the private Member.

What will happen the first time a private Member or private Members vote against their Party? There will be first of all a psychological rupture within that particular caucus. Imagine what the press gallery will say the day after that vote has been taken. "Aha, there is a split in the Party ranks of the Government", or "The Liberal Party is split again", or "The New Democratic Party is fractured". If we are not careful, we will allow ourselves to be pistol-whipped by the press because we are afraid of the image we will create. Therefore, we will fall back into the chains and the slavery to which we have become so comfortably accustomed.

We will have to overcome that psychological slavery. There will have to be some political will on the part of private Members to take the initiative on a Bill on which they feel strongly to vote against the majority of their colleagues and their caucus. Some day that will happen and we will have to suffer the fall-out. We had better have the courage to do that.

I say to my colleagues that it is easier to accept the status quo. It is more courageous to adopt a change that will free us all. I would urge, as other Members have, that the notion of confidence be adopted in such a way that the Government or the opposition Parties will have to take the initiative to declare what is a matter of confidence in that instance. Therefore, my first concern on becoming a member of this committee was the motion of confidence, the opportunity to free us all and be able to represent our constituents in a much more accurate way than we have been able to do in the past.

The second reason I was concerned about this work was the whole notion of Orders in Council, the practice and use of Orders in Council, otherwise called delegated legislation. I remember several years ago talking about what we call the emergency planning orders and how easily the Government of the day slipped massive powers into its hands by an Order in Council which is not fair to call secret, but which was quiet, easy and had the force of law. There was no way in which the House at that time could overcome those Orders in Council. Now to find that we have the means of neutering those massive powers that the Government has accumulated, over the years, and the means of giving back to the Members the opportunity to negate some of those powers which the Cabinet has taken for itself, it is very important that when the Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments meets that it take the initiative to nullify those Orders in Council it finds offensive to the freedom of the private Member.

The third issue to which the committee addressed itself that I think is important is the matter of private Members as has been so well stated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). We must have a guaranteed vote. I can tell Hon. Members that I worked for six years on a private Member's Bill. I flogged the House with it. It was a Bill dealing with the matter of parental abduction. The former Government did adopt it as part of its legislative package back in 1982, something for which I am grateful. However, why should it take six years? Why should children in those six years have had to undergo the threat of abduction simply because the legislation referring to abduction happened to be a private Member's Bill?

If a private Member sees a need and wants to reflect a need, that is not a matter of Government policy but reflects a concern expressed in his constituency or in a narrow constituency across the country, why should he not have the opportunity to do so? I say to Hon. Members that the biggest problem that we in the House have had to face has been a commitment to the status quo. We need a commitment to changing the past. We cannot afford to be defensive about the flaws that we will continue to see in the Standing Orders we will bring forward. There are going to be mistakes made. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has already pointed out the flaws in some of the changes we have made. That is a human institution. It is a human committee. We will need to make further changes. We cannot afford to be defensive about the flaws in the system. We must take the initiative. We must have the courage to change the flaws before we get accustomed to them.

The greatest danger that I see is the commitment to the status quo. It is easier to stay the same. I would like to commend the Government and the Government House Leader for adopting the measures that the committee has presented through recommendations so that sweeping reform is now possible. I would urge that we not be committed to the present as it is, but that we continue to look for ways in which the role of the private Member can be enhanced so that he can be emancipated in order to represent the people of Canada in a much more accurate and wholesome way.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to speak on this debate this evening. At the outset, I would like to extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for the tremendous amount of work and effort he along with his committee has put into this report for the benefit of the House and all Parliamentarians. I would like to let him know that I as an individual appreciate it very, very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: I know one member of the committee a little better than I know others and that is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He has been a champion within our own caucus for parliamentary reform and has studiously apprised the caucus of the work of the committee as it went through this process. Individual members of my Party were kept aware of what was going on. I appreciate that as well as do other members of my Party.

If I may be permitted to do so, because it is key to the remarks I want to make this evening, I would refer to one of my first experiences on a standing committee of the House after I was first elected in 1980. When I was elected, like most Members of Parliament, I thought I was coming to the House of Commons in Ottawa to participate in great debate. I thought I was coming here to act as an individual Member of Parliament not only on behalf of my own constituents but in the best interests of Canada generally. I hoped in that role to do something to better the lot of all citizens around the world. I must say that that impression was rapidly savaged.

My clear impression of the first several years I spent in this place was that it was one long, continuous, all-candidates' debate, such as the ones we see during election campaigns. I saw very little evidence of Members of Parliament working together in the common interests of the people of Canada. We seemed to be much more interested in adopting positions as political Parties rather than as a group of people working in the best interests of Canadians, with one exception. There was one saving grace to that and it occurred on the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare.

My first meeting of a standing committee was of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. Stanley Knowles took me to that committee. Stanley had to leave and he said to me: "You keep an eye on things". So I said that was fine, but what I was supposed to keep an eye on I had absolutely no idea.

The then Minister of National Health and Welfare came before that committee and made a broad, general statement on policy. The Hon. Member for St. John's East decided to ask the Minister some questions; he did so. Then the Chairman said: "Mr. Young," and I said: "Yeah?" He said: "Would you like to ask questions on behalf of your Party?" The Hon. Member for St. John's East leaned over to me and said: "You're supposed to ask questions, Scotty".

I dreamed up some quick questions to ask the Minister which were promptly ruled out of order because I was not discussing some particular vote of which no one had ever heard except the Clerk of the Committee, and perhaps the Chairman of the Committee. So I got into a dispute with the Chairman and decided I should exercise my authority as a Member and challenge the Chair. The Hon. Member for St. John's East leaned over again and said: "It's not an NDP convention, Scotty. You can't challenge Chairs around here". The Hon. Member for St. John's East jumped in there because he knew I was a new Member and he argued for my rights as a Member of Parliament to ask the Minister questions. The committee agreed and I appreciated that. It was an example to me of how this place should operate. Every one of us should be supportive of each other, regardless of political Party affiliation.

Having said that, I would note that since the last election there have been some 100 new Members elected to the House of Commons. I think it has made a difference. It has brought a fresh point of view to this place, and certainly to Standing Committees. I have found the standing committees to be somewhat less partisan merely because people have minds which are more open than they were before. That is no reflection on the previous Parliament or the previous Government, because I do not think that had anything to do with it. It was the tradition and the history of this place that had led to the stifling of debate.

I have found that the newest Members of this place are less likely to fall into that trap. Certainly in committees on which I have sat Government Members have been more willing to go after the Minister involved if they did not like what that Minister was doing. They would question the Minister just as strongly as members of the Opposition were likely to do.

On the question of parliamentary reform, I had the opportunity to serve as chairman of a legislative committee which examined a Bill referred to it. That was a great experience. It is a refreshing approach to the way we do things in this place. I must admit that when I sat in the chair and called the meeting to order a few members who have been around the House for a long time looked at me in wonder as if to say: "What is he doing up there?" Eventually, one of them finally said it: "What are you doing up there?" I said: "Under parliamentary reform and the changes which have taken place in the House of Commons, the Speaker has appointed me as Chairman of this committee". "Yes?" they said. And I said: "Yes". I explained what was happening in terms of parliamentary reform. I have to hand it to those Members, it took them about ten minutes, but they finally accepted a member of the NDP chairing a legislative committee. As we went through the Bill a strange thing happened. Members of the committee no longer looked upon me as being a member of the New Democratic Party caucus. They started to look upon me as the Chairman of the committee. To people outside this place that may sound strange, but in here it is extremely important. Members from all sides of the House must participate in all functions of this place as equal and responsible Members.

The reforms which we have initiated thus far have taken us a long way down the road to achieving that end. A number of different Members have been appointed to chair committees. That does not mean to say there have not been problems. Of course, there have been problems. Change does not take place without creating some problems. That is so because what is happening is changing from something which is old to something which is new. In many cases that newness creates a resistance on the part of some people because they do not want to accept it.

That is not to say that some of the problems have not been real—they have been real. Personally, I think the size of legislative committees is far too huge. They are too unwieldy. I do not know why we need 20 Members to discuss a piece of legislation. There is an obvious lack of research capability in these committees. I would much rather see a committee have an independent reserach capability of the Members' choosing as opposed to the way it is done now. It would make the committees much more effective. What I mean to say is, put in place a reserach capability which is permanent, as is the case with standing committees, as opposed to having different researchers at different times depending upon the subject of debate.

I see some problems with respect to the matter of research and with the size of committees. The difficulties we have at the present time are the result of an overabundance of committees. This places tremendous pressures on the time allocation of individual Members. I think that will be straightened out when the second or third report of the committee is adopted.

I see that my time is up. I thank Hon. Members. I hope we can get on with it.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased indeed to speak tonight on the subject of parliamentary reform as I was appointed as a new Member of Parliament to sit with my colleagues on that Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform, and I wish to take this opportunity tonight to express my thanks first and foremost to the House Leader who gave me the opportunity to be a member of that committee, and also to thank with all my heart my colleagues, and in particular the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), and my colleagues here on the Government side who supported me at all times, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, I joined that committee as a new Member of Parliament with great expectations . . . and I had another problem: I was not very fluent in English.

The committee therefore was a tremendous school of parliamentary procedure for me as a newcomer to the House of Commons. I did not know at the time that I would become so deeply involved in parliamentary reform and procedure. That committee also gave me the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to get a free English course so to speak. I therefore thank my colleagues for their co-operation and help at all times so that I might become a full-fledged member of that committee like the rest of them.

In looking at this House tonight, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see that so many Members are present at 8:30 p.m. on a Wednesday night, and the reason is that they are interested in parliamentary reform. Not only are those Members interested, Mr. Speaker, but also all the Members of provincial legislatures in Canada. Other countries are also interested, as shown by the fact that the main debate at the 25th Annual Meeting of the Commonwealth Association which we hosted last summer centered around the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons. The private sector is also interested in parliamentary reform. The Hon. Member for Papineau and myself were invited not very long ago before a group of Montreal businessmen who are very concerned with the reform process, and who asked us to tell them about our experience; they asked us: What is in fact parliamentary reform, and what is it going to mean for us, as citizens, as business people? Most of those individuals come from time to time as witnesses before our committees and, with the advent of television in Parliament, those groups were not sure that their views, their suggestions were really considered by the Government, when they came before a committee.

So I was pleased to meet them, and of course, we told them about our experience with the work of the Committee.

My colleague from Peace River (Mr. Cooper) was ahead of me, Mr. Speaker, because it was important for me too to raise the matter of the Private Members' Hour, between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. I had myself the opportunity to experience recently the fact that after that one hour, after 6 p.m., it is over, it is gone, I do not know where . . . Mr. Speaker, one day, I would appreciate if you would show me the boxes of papers you must have in the anterooms of the Government. I would like to know what you do with all those documents, what happens to the incredible work done by Hon. Members to bring forward a notice of motion, to debate it, and to know how many hours our staff puts in to enable us to have an interesting debate, to get our bill passed. I am interested in the volunteer sector. I have another motion, Mr. Speaker. As long as I sit in this House, I will put forward motions to enhance the role of volunteers in our society, every six months, as long as that matter is not passed at a certain time somewhere, at the first or second reading stage, in a committee . . . I don't give up easily.

Now, I echo what my colleague from Peace River said about bills. So, in order not to repeat myself, because as you know, ten minutes is a short time, and I would have so many things to say . . .

Mr. Speaker, you know, according to an English saying, "You will never get another chance to give a first good impression." You will understand that. Well. When one comes to this House as a new Member, one is in for quite an experience. Now the biggest ceremony . . . Of course, the Clerk is a charming man who welcomes us with the usual courtesy, except that we are sworn in almost in secret. And when the Speech from the Throne, the most important part of our Government . . . here we are, we poor ordinary members, behind the curtains of the High Chamber of the Senate, trying to see what is going on inside, that is our first impression. You know, one feels pretty small in such large surroundings and our Government has agreed to the principle, for which I am very greatful, that collective oath taking ceremonies would be interesting for new Members of Parliament and even for those who have been around for a long time, and then the people of my riding would see me. The next morning, I got some phone calls: Mrs. Bourgault, I watched television, how come I did not see you, you were not sitting next to the Speaker, nor beside the Prime Minister. Where were you?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I did not dare tell them that I was at the back, trying to get a glimpse of what was going on inside the Senate Chamber. I could not tell them. It seems to me that I would have offensed them somehow.

I have too much respect for my constituents, and I am therefore very happy that in future, my colleagues, those who will follow us, the new Members of Parliament, will at least feel they are part of the big family and that together, we are sworn in for the good of all.

We have also dealt, Mr. Speaker, with the issue of the convention of confidence. Well, I do not want to repeat myself either. I share the views of my colleagues but I would like to add a few personal views regarding the concept of confidence. I have checked and since our proceedings are broadcast on television, a dramatic change has occurred. I was speaking today with the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), because we happened to visit my riding together and he told me that he missed those happy times when there were substantive debates, heartfelt discussions, when Members were rising and reacting on the spot. Now, some people are watching us on television. We now have the American C-SPAN Network that broadcasts our proceedings as well as, of course, Mr. Speaker, the great national show, Question Period.

Our constituents are always asking the same question: "What are you doing? How is it that when I visited the House of Commons last week, Mrs. Bourgault, you were not there?" I tell them this: "Listen, I sit on committees, but committee proceedings are not televised". Therefore, ordinary citizens do not know . . . There is in Weir, in my riding, a constituent who watches the oral question period every day hoping to see me doing something. So it is important, Mr. Speaker. Leaving aside the principle of trust, I will say that the TV broadcasting of committee proceedings would make it possible for Hon. Members to tell their constituents: "If you want to know what I am doing, just watch me tonight, at such and such hour, because I will be sitting on the Agriculture Committee, which is of great interest to my riding".

The fact is that, outside of Parliament, there are the committees. People do not know well enough how Parliament operates. There are people who come and see us, and they are astounded. Perhaps there should be a system which would make it possible for these people to say: "Well, that is what a Member of the House of Commons does in his or her everyday life. When the House opens its doors at 10 o'clock in the morning, he or she is sitting on a committee." Well, if some committee proceedings were televised, we could at least tell our constituents that we are working.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are trying to cut me off. I must regretfully say that I had a great many other things to say but I thank again the Government for allowing me to sit on that committee, and I hope that the Parliamentary reform . . . Mr. Speaker, I urge all Hon. Members to push for this Parliamentary reform, because it is far from being over. This process will certainly continue. Let us all try to sell this reform and make sure that the House becomes the major forum which all our constituents expect it to be.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. I regret Hon. Members have only 10 minutes because there is so much in this report to comment upon. It would take much longer than that to do justice to the recommendations. Although I was not with the Special Committee on Reform, chaired by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), I was with the Committee on Reform in the last Parliament. It is a subject with which I have been struggling within this House for many years.

Before we consider what the role of this House should be, I believe we have to come to some decision as to what the goals of this Parliament should be. It is only by having some idea of what the goals of Parliament are that we can construct rules of the House to achieve those goals.

In considering that matter, I think the first thing we must deal with is that the rules of this House cannot be evaluated in terms of how they best serve Hon. Members here. They must always be looked at as to how they serve the Canadian public. What is the Canadian public interested in? First, we must have rules in the House of Commons that enable Canadians to believe that we can do the job for them, that we can deal with public issues and develop public policy and pass legislation. We must have credibility in this institution. I am afraid that at the present time, many Canadians do not believe that this institution is doing the job for them which they want done. In fact, many Canadians hold this House in disdain, and that is regrettable.

I believe Canadians want to see a parliamentary institution where all of the issues could be raised, not only national issues, but local and regional issues. They want those issues fully discussed and finally resolved. They also want an institution where Hon. Members can keep in touch with them. For that reason, of course, we should not be sitting all the time. Because if we sat too long and too often we would become a ghetto here in Ottawa and would lose contact with the people we are supposed to represent. We have to consider that aspect in developing our rules. We must have an opportunity to keep in touch with the people we represent, and we should do that not only on a personal and individual basis but through our parliamentary committees, subcommittees and so on.

It is my belief that Parliament should seek to accomplish three goals. It should be a legislature, a watch-dog and it should control the public purse. As a legislature, it usually deals with legislation prepared by the Government. As the saying goes, the Government proposes and Parliament disposes. However, in order to do that in an effective way we should be able to deal with legislation as we really believe it must be dealt with. If there is something lacking, we should be able to amend it or defeat it without fear of defeating the Government. Unfortunately, that is not the case at the present time. As many Hon. Members have already said, at the present time all Parties vote in unison without any consideration of their personal feelings with respect to Bills or measures put before this House.

Our role as legislators has to be improved. As watch-dogs, we try to keep the Government accountable and responsible and we do that through Question Period and through Motions for Production of Papers. We also do it through Opposition days. That system can be improved as well. In Parliament we can control as well the spending of money by the Government. We do that through the Budget debates and Budget votes and by supply days and our votes.

To accomplish all of these tasks this House has to be an effective forum where we can discuss those issues and put forward all the pros and cons, the majority and minority views. Sometimes the debate becomes hot, and sometimes it becomes unruly. I do not believe Canadians should be shocked when that happens. I say this because people come to this House with strongly held views and policies. They come here with passion, in many cases. This is a place where those strongly held views result in confrontation. This is a place where we resolve those conflicting views. How fortunate we are that we have this House, when we consider that in countries like Lebanon, El Salvador, Ireland and Poland, and I could name many others, the great political issues of the day are not resolved in parliamentary institutions, but in the street and mountains with guns and bombs. So when things get a bit passionate here let us compare that with what we find in other parts of the world. Remember that of the 150 countries in the United Nations only 25 are democracies. Only 25 have forums like this where representatives can come together and fight out issues on the floor of the House in a very moving and passionate way. Once these issues are voted on and resolved here we accept them. We do not resort to terrorism, bombing or shooting it out in the streets.

I think that Canadians should understand that no matter how good our rules are, and I believe we need reform and I am going to get to that in a minute, there will always be partisan debate and strongly held differences.

Mr. Speaker, of course there have to be clearly understood and well defined rules, and we are dealing with that in this report. There has to be a balance between the Government and the Opposition, even when the ratio is 282 to 70. There has to be a balance between the front benches and the back benches so that the front benches are not in a dominant position all of the time. There has to be fairness to the third and fourth Parties. We have to consider, when we are adopting rules for this House, that there will not always be a majority Parliament. I have lived through three minority Parliaments. In one of those minority Parliaments there were four Parties in opposition. So when we are making the rules for Parliament we cannot just consider the stereotype that we have before us in 1985.

With respect to some of the specific recommendations in the report, I fully agree with the additional powers given to the committees, allowing the committees to commence investigations and studies and work on their own without references from the House. I fully support the fact that they are given independent research resources and so on, but I am not convinced at all that we need legislative committees. That is one proposal in the report about which the members of the committee will have to convince me.

At the present time the 282 Members of this House are spread so thin that we are not able to do the things that we must do as Members of Parliament. One must remember that as Members of Parliament we must be available for debate in this House. As well, at the present time we must be available to deal with 22 standing committees, nine special committees and, at last count, 15 legislative committees. We also have our caucuses and the responsibility to meet with lobby groups and groups coming here to make representations. We must return to our constituencies from time to time. We have Party responsibilities. We have many things to do as Members of Parliament and this proposal to add on legislative committees in my opinion is not well founded and is not reform. I am willing to listen to more debate, but I am not convinced that it is reform. It is almost as if those who made that proposal felt that over here we would have one group of Members who would serve on the standing committees and there would be another group over here serving on the legislative committees. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is the same Members who are expected to do both.

There have been days in the last few weeks when at nine o'clock in the morning we have had standing committees; at eleven o'clock we went to legislative committees that went on until five or six in the afternoon, and then we went back to standing committees again. I would like to hear more discussion on that.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to confidence, I fully agree with the measures that are put forward in the report on confidence. I wish I had more time to discuss them.

With respect to voting procedures, I like the electronic voting but I cannot accept the fact that the vote must take place in 15 minutes. That would never work in a minority Parliament.

My final word, Mr. Speaker, is that there are some good things in the report, but we need a lot more discussion in this House before we reach a consensus among 282 Members on what that reform should be.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words in connection with the report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, and also on the Government response to this report. Many important issues and recommendations are dealt with both in the report and in the response. To begin, I would like to congratulate the special committee itself and the chairman of the special committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on the outstanding job they have done. I would like to congratulate as well the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on being prepared to recommend the establishment of this committee and the adoption of the recommendations coming out of the committee. I would like to congratulate the House Leaders on their efforts to date in putting these recommendations into effect, and I hope that all three House Leaders will actually concur so that the recommendations can be put into effect.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: I am a new Member of this House, as you know, Mr. Speaker, but two of the areas that have been dealt with by the committee particularly stand out in my mind. The first is the right of the private Member to speak out on behalf of his or her constituents in this House, and I might say, particularly the right of the Government supporters to do that. That may be of a concern to Opposition Members but it is certainly of much greater concern to Government supporters.

As a new Member of this House I came here not knowing what to expect. I had great visions that we would be having new rules, that we would be having reform and that private Members would be able to speak out and speak their minds. I find, as we all have, that there are a number of barriers to this that prevent us from speaking out on behalf of our constituents as they expect us to do.

First, of course, is the whole concept of confidence itself, that parliamentary tradition and convention that says that every vote in this House is a vote of confidence, that if you vote against the Government the Government might fall and if you vote against the Government that is an indication that you do not have any confidence in the Government. That certainly is the number one barrier to a private Member speaking out on behalf of his constituents.

The second is perhaps the Government itself, and a number of the Hon. Members tonight have spoken about that. There is what I guess you would call a subtle pressure on the part of the Government to make sure that all of its Members speak with a common front. That is an understandable concern on the part of the Government because it has a legislative program, it has Government policies and it wants to see those policies and that program put into effect. So it is quite understandable that it wants to see them supported as unanimously as possible.

A third barrier to this whole process of speaking out on behalf of our constituents is in fact the members of one's own Party. There is within one's own Party a team spirit and a feeling that if in fact one speaks out and goes against the team that is breaking faith. So there is a group pressure, a peer pressure, if you will, to restrain particularly the private government Member from speaking out on behalf of his constituents.

A fourth barrier of course that has been mentioned also tonight is the press and the media. As soon as a private Member does speak out on behalf of his constituents, if it is in any way, shape or form in variance with the Government's position, right away the media seize upon those remarks as an indication that there is a division or a split and that perhaps that Member is a maverick. I myself have been referred to in the press in those terms and I undrestand what that means and what a potential barrier that is.

I guess the final barrier in my mind is the inhibitions of the individual Members themselves. I think when you add up all of these other barriers, the convention of confidence, the Government's feelings about private Members speaking up, their own colleagues' feelings about them speaking up and the press and the media, it is no wonder that individual Members have certain inhibitions about speaking their own minds and actually representing the true feelings of their constituents.

I have struggled with this problem since my arrival in the House of Commons. There have been a great many issues about which I have had some concern, and about which I know my constituents have had some concern. There have been a great many issues on which I have wanted to speak out. I did speak out on some of them and I felt the censure of the various barriers to which I referred as a result.

However, whether there are these inhibitions and barriers or not, it is clear to me that the people of the country, and certainly my constituents, expect me to speak out in their behalf. They expect me to speak up if there is a problem which affects them. If I do not, they do not understand. They do not know why I am not speaking out and representing their thoughts and feelings. They feel that perhaps I do not understand them. They feel that I am not sympathetic toward their concerns and views. They feel that I am not representing them properly and, at the bottom line, they feel that Parliament as an institution is not working.

I hope that this report and these recommendations are part of the answer to a great concern of the people of the country. They want to see their Member of Parliament, whether or not he or she is a Government supporter, speak out and represent their feelings and problems. That sort of thing can be answered in part by this report and by the Government's response, but it must be answered as well by the Parties in the House. It must be answered by the House Leaders. They must agree if we are to put these reforms into effect. I have heard a lot of comments tonight about how wonderful the recommendations are and how wonderful the Government's response is. However, the proof of the pudding is in the eating; it all depends on whether we actually adopt these recommendations. I trust that we will, after all is said and done.

There is one other thing in addition to that, Mr. Speaker. After we adopt these recommendations we will have to put them into effect—not only the words on a printed page but the spirit of them. Individual Members will have to be prepared to speak out to ensure that this works. I have with the existing rules and this is not very easy. I suspect it will not be very easy with the new rules either. If an individual Member speaks out he will feel the response from the Government, his Party and the media. All of the individual inhibitions which I mentioned will come out to stifle the spirit of these recommendations.

I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that we will be able to break out of those inhibitions, that we will have the courage of our conviction, that we will have the courage to utilize the rule changes which I hope will come. We must not do this in the way the Soviet Union does with its constitution, but in the way we in Canada and other western democratic nations have practised those things that are in black and white.

There is one other area which I think is very important, Mr. Speaker. I would like to commend the committee and the Government for the recommendations with respect to the parliamentary review of Order in Council appointments. I think that is very, very important. It was an issue in the election and has been an issue since. On September 9 the Prime Minister indicated that he was adopting those recommendations. I think it is essential that they be adopted as well as the other recommendations in order that, to use the Prime Minister's words of September 9, "We can revitalize the faith of the citizens of the country in their institutions and their government". Mr. Speaker, that revitalization is long overdue.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take very long, but there are some things I want to say. First of all I would like to congratulate the members of the committee for the work they did. Although I do not agree entirely with every recommendation, without exception I would be prepared to see all the recommendations tried in the form in which they were recommended. I entrusted that committee with the job of reviewing the procedures of Parliament. Having been a part of the committee at one point, I know that it worked diligently to come up with recommendations which seemed to fit the changing times. Therefore, from my point of view, that which they recommended should be given a fair trial. I think that on balance that is in fact what is going to happen.

The one aspect that is always difficult when dealing with recommendations for change is the diverse nature of the change and the need to co-ordinate and to understand how one change impacts on another aspect of political life in order to ensure that we do not unnecessarily add to the burden in one area in an effort to cure what may well be a problem in another area. That falls, in some ways, to the House Leaders, myself and my colleagues.

I want to deal with another aspect of parliamentary life which I believe is necessary to be dealt with now, and that is time allocation but not time allocation as we see it on an irregular basis when the Government and its predecessor bring forward a motion designating a day or two to complete deliberations on a Bill. That kind of time allocation inevitably leads to political confrontation.

It is not that about which I am talking. I am talking about the allocation of the time of Parliament and of the time of Members of Parliament. How can we best utilize the hours that we have available to us? How can we, as Members of Parliament, both in Government and in opposition, establish a system that will allow the various and many agendas which we establish from time to time, either on a partisan or individual basis, to be met and the results to be fruitful?

I want to set out a challenge. Time allocation is the responsibility of every Member of Parliament. It is not simply the responsibility of Government; neither is it the responsibility of the collective opposition. It is everyone's responsibility. It is our time that is being allocated.

I suggest that there are two areas in which self-discipline will bring about time allocation. The first is in the process of dealing with Estimates. I recall when I served in another place. We developed a process whereby, knowing how many hours were available for the consideration of Estimates, we set out the priorities of each of the three caucuses. We decided on an annual basis which Estimates we wanted to go into in some detail and which Estimates we were prepared to pass with less investigation. This meant that over the life of a Parliament all of the major Estimates received careful consideration in some detail and certain of the less major, although not necessarily minor, Estimates received lesser consideration in terms of the time allotted to them.

We did that in the following way. We submitted our priorities and a group chosen from Parliament sat down and in turn priorized. If the first choice was that of the Official Opposition, that was put down as the first Estimate to be considered, followed by an Estimate chosen by the Government and then by an Estimate chosen by the third Party. This process was continued until we had gone through each of the Estimates. We then decided how much time was required to give fair opportunity for careful scrutiny, while at the same time recognizing that it was not open-ended and that each Estimate had to be given some review. I must say, in all fairness, that this system worked.

I would like to suggest that in the new year we consider a system that would allow that kind of consideration. In return for doing that I would expect, however, that the Minister, the Deputy Minister, and the officials requested by the Opposition would appear before the appropriate committee for the duration of the time agreed upon for those Estimates. There would, in fact, then be an opportunity to discuss, not only the details but also the political decisions relating to the details. I would commend that to the House for its consideration in dealing with Estimates. I have only touched on it but I think it bears some careful thought. I believe it would add to the public's sense that we are indeed requiring accountability in expenditures. It would follow in some ways the model that has been used by the Auditor General in conducting in depth reviews in certain years and somewhat less in depth reviews in other years.

Let me turn to legislation, which is the next major problem. I believe that the chairmen of the committees that have now been established should, in themselves, form a chairmen's committee. When legislation is referred to a committee, the chairman should meet with the steering committee of that legislative committee and work out a time frame within which the deliberations can be concluded. The chairman should then sit down with the other chairmen and together work out the schedule of work, taking into account that certain Bills will take longer than others. Then, in the process, committees will be assigned some heavy work and some lighter work so that they will be able to proceed in a more orderly way.

I say to the Government House Leader in the most friendly way that it ought not to be necessary for the Government to move time allocation, except in the most extraordinary circumstances. I believe that we should be able, together, to look at legislation and determine how long is reasonable time for dealing with it at second reading. We should be able, without fear of criticism publicly or otherwise, to determine within the time frame that we know is the parliamentary calendar how much time can reasonably be allocated for dealing with a piece of legislation at a particular stage. If I may say so, I do not recall when I made this point some years ago and got the wholehearted support of the then Official Opposition. I might get it now, since the then Official Opposition is in Government, but I may not get it from the present Official Opposition. However, I believe that in the interests of Parliament we should seek that kind of understanding. The time we are talking about is not endless. The responsibility is to point out the flaws in the legislative program. However, the responsibility is to also deal with it.

I suggest that when these new legislative proposals come into effect, albeit on a trial basis, together we should consider the three suggestions I have made and make every effort to live by them. It should not be a practice to breach them; they should only be breached as an exception.

Having said that, I look forward to the trial period. It will not be easy. We have to be patient and we must understand that not everything will work exactly the way we anticipated.

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate tonight on parliamentary reform because I believe it is one of the most important issues that will be dealt with in the House. I want to commend particularly the committee and the chairman of the committee for producing what I believe will be important wide ranging reforms.

Each of us brings his or her own perspective in the House. I have had a rather checkered political career. In a very short period of years I have been in opposition, a Government Member in a minority Government, I have been out of office and I have been a Government Member in a majority Government. I think I have just about covered all the bases in a very few years. I have come to some conclusions about the necessity of parliamentary reform as a result of seeing Parliament from the different aspects I have experienced in those few years.

I want to deal with three issues that are in the report and one issue that is not in the report but that I believe is important to parliamentary reform. I believe that parliamentary reform is necessary to have an effective Parliament and effective Members. The first issue was dealt with earlier, but I believe I can put a different perspective on it. It concerns votes of confidence.

I do not want my remarks to be misunderstood by the Opposition, my fellow Members or the press. I am proud of the record of our Government. I think we have had a solid economic performance, with good legislation. However, let me say quite frankly that I think the record could be improved with respect to legislation we have presented.

In some cases, I think legislation should have been amended in committee. I am not quite sure that I am ready to say that legislation should have been defeated, but I certainly see some cases where Government legislation may warrant defeat. I am not out to end my political career in martyrdom by trying to pick a Bill with which to defeat my own Government, but I think we are talking about an important principle. Members of a Government Party or indeed members of the Opposition should feel free be able to vote against a Bill if they feel strongly about it. It is important to recognize the pressure that can be put upon Members both by their own Party and indeed by the opposition Parties.

The Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) said earlier tonight that the onus is on the Government to free up its Members. Well, I would argue that if the system is going to work, the onus is equally on the Opposition. The onus is on the Opposition because the first time a Government Member breaks ranks, the temptation will be there in the Opposition to talk about the Tories being divided again, to say that they cannot stay united and so on. It is in their interests that we not go back to that old system. That will force the system back into the rigidity which we have had in the previous years.

I do not believe it will be the end of the world if a Government measure is defeated. Margaret Thatcher has a majority Government comparable in numbers, at least, if not percentages, to that of our Government. However, she has lost a number of Bills since she has been Prime Minister. No one is suggesting that Margaret Thatcher is weak because one of her Bills was defeated. Perhaps it is a reflection of a strong Parliament and strong individual Members of Parliament.

If and when a Government Bill is defeated, let the Opposition not use that to point out that it is due to a weak Prime Minister. It may not be our Prime Minister. It might not happen until another Parliament. However, let the Opposition recognize that it is the way Parliament should function if parliamentary reform is going to work.

The second issue dealt with by the committee is the issue of smaller standing committees with broader powers which can produce wide-ranging reports. Something which has struck me since I have been in Parliament—I have been in three—is the high quality of Members from all Parties. I have had the opportunity to work on many standing committees. Recently in this House, I worked on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when we were producing a report on child benefits. I also worked on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when we were working on the investigation of banks, trust companies and insurance companies.

I could list the members from my Party who impressed me, but perhaps I could make my point better by saying that on the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee I particularly enjoyed working with the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) because I thought that together we were able to produce something that was useful. Similarly, in the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee I enjoyed working with the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to whom I never even had a chance to talk let alone get to know and find out how valuable and hard working she was as a Member.

The point I want to make is that I think we have a tremendous amount of talent in the House which, with parliamentary reform, can be used for the benefit of the country. As I see it, smaller committees with much more power can investigate matters that may not be that important to the Government of the day but can be important national issues on which there can be consensus. Just as the reform committee was able to produce some pretty revolutionary ideas, I see the same thing happening under the new standing committees.

The third issue about which I want to speak briefly is the matter of Private Members' Business and allowing some of it to come to a vote. The system we have now where basically the Government decides which measures come to a vote is wrong. It should be a committee of private Members that decides what measures warrant coming to a vote. There are many Members bursting with ideas here which could be accepted. Perhaps they will not bring in the wide-ranging Bills a Minister is expected to bring in, but they could bring in measures which are important for the country and improve the quality of life of many people, regions or whatever. Allowing Members to designate which Private Members' Business comes to vote is a very important part of reform. I hope we can approach that issue in as non-partisan a manner as we have the reform committee itself.

I indicated that I wanted to speak briefly on a subject which was not covered by the report. I think it is an important subject when it comes to dealing with the effectiveness of Members and of Parliament. It concerns recognizing that Members have different responsibilities which in some ways are reflected by the size of their ridings. I happen to represent the most populous riding of the country, which is now some 10 times to 12 times the size of the smallest riding in Canada. The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) represents a riding which I think is a little bigger than Europe. He has special responsibilities as a result of that. While those different demands on him are recognized in a very small way through the moneys available to Members, they are not adequately recognized. I do not think his ability to function as an effective private Member is really available to his constituents because of the constraints placed upon him. Certainly I feel the same, representing the largest riding in Canada.

I talked briefly about supporting or not supporting a Bill. I happen to support a Bill which is before the House right now dealing with redistribution. I also recognize that the new redistribution Bill cannot be brought into effect before 1988. I am somewhat terrified by the prospect of representing, not a quarter of a million constituents when the average is 85,000, but some 350,000 to 400,000 constituents by that time. In order to make Parliament effective, the House has to address the problem of what should be done for Members who represent very large geographic or remote ridings or Members who represent enormously growing ridings, so that they can be effective Members of Parliament, representing their constituents adequately and also representing their views adequately in a national forum.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on reform this evening. First let me say, "Amen and me too" to the last words uttered regarding the size of ridings and the facilities available to Members of Parliament, given various kinds of ridings—some of them are large and rural and others are heavily populated—and the current disparity which exists. That matter was not addressed in the report. I believe the House can address it by way of the Internal Economy Commission, if we have the political will to do so.

Perhaps I represent, in some sense, the majority of Members of Parliament in respect of this reform exercise. I am one of those who did not pay a lot of attention to the exercise. I am one of those who did not participate by taking the time to come before the committee to understand what it was about and to make my views known. I am one of those who very nearly was not here tonight because I thought that what would happen was esoteric and would not make that much difference.

A few days ago I read, from beginning to end, the report of the reform committee. I really read it, rather than quickly look at the major recommendations and not give much thought to the exercise. I became excited about the reform process when I read the report. When I came here in 1980, like many new Members I believed, contrary to that famous quote by someone or other who said that parliamentarians 50 feet away from Parliament Hill were nobodies, that to be elected as a Member of Parliament was a great honour and privilege and was quite a serious responsibility, by the very nature of the fact that my constituents saw fit in an election campaign to send me here. I truly believed that my voice would count for something and that I could in a substantial and real way, as could every Member of Parliament, make a difference. I believed that my being here would count for something and that I would have some input if I was prepared to work hard. I discovered that it was not the case that parliamentarians were nobodies 50 feet from Parliament Hill, that the opposite was true, and once we got within 50 feet of this place we became nobodies. In our ridings the understanding of the mandate given to us was fairly clear. It was to speak in the House of Commons, to participate in the decision-making process and to exercise, bearing in mind our constituents' views, our best judgment in the final analysis. As a member of the Liberal Government of the day—and I am sure it is no different whatever Government is in power—I discovered that in order to get along I had to go along. I discovered that if I exercised an independent point of view or judgment, I would be considered a rabble-rouser or a rebel because I would be bucking the carefully laid plans of the executive branch of Government, and there were no rewards for that kind of attitude.

What does that teach Members of Parliament? What does that tell us? It tells us that the House of Commons—and this is somewhat of an exaggeration—is a little like Beirut. There is a green line running down the centre carpet, and a Member in his own caucus and in his own Party is best rewarded when he aims his gun across the way and pulls the trigger, irrespective of whether or not in his own best judgment his energies are truly being well spent and in a way which represents the best interests of his constituents.

There is a real opportunity for all of us, as a result of the report, the excellent work of the McGrath Committee and all members who served on it, to make a change. That is not to say that we will function in a parliamentary system where we are all chums, where we agree all the time and where we always operate with a consensus. That will not happen. There will be times when we agree and when we disagree strongly. That is as it should be. However, we ought not to be disagreeing just for the sake of establishing Party lines and undertaking our responsibilities as Party people versus parliamentarians.

I have a couple of concerns to which I would like to see a positive Government response if the reform process is to work. One of those, and I believe the most important, is in the committee process and having parliamentary secretaries taken off those committees. I was a parliamentary secretary for three years. I will tell you what my job was. It was to understand the Minister's point of view, to understand what the Minister wanted to happen, to rally the majority of Members on the Government side, and I did that effectively, and to get the Bill through in exactly the manner in which the Minister proposed it or with the least possible change.

What happens when you set up that kind of system? Government Members initially resent being told how they should vote, what is acceptable and what is not. However, after a year find they cannot fight the system or, if they do fight the system, they are not rewarded. To the contrary, they become rabble-rousers in this place. They learn to come in, be a warm body, find out which way the Party is going and vote accordingly.

That is not because parliamentary secretaries have an inherent desire to run a dictatorial regime. It is not because the Government or even Ministers have an inherent desire to run a dictatorial regime. That is the system we have had. If we are going to continue to have parliamentary secretaries, and this is very important, sit on these committees, there must be an opportunity for Government Members and Opposition Members to reach a real consensus. Consensus means give and take. It means you do not get everything you want. However, you expect to see some sensitivity that at least people are listening to your ideas. Even if your ideas are rejected, there is some satisfaction in knowing that you at least had the opportunity, starting with the first clause of the Bill, to make your views known. Hopefully, people on all sides are listening to your point of view, accepting it or rejecting it for rational reasons.

I say to the Government House Leader that there is nothing more important, in my judgment, on the matters on which he reserved that needs to be corrected than this question. If this is not corrected, we will have changed the structure, but we will have presented a factor in the committee work that will make it impossible to have any kind of serious, objective consideration of government proposals.

It is strange when all of us realize that caucuses, which are the place where Parties should come together to develop policy, do not work that way. We all know what caucus is primarily used for, particularly if you are in Government. I have been there. Caucus is the escape valve where Members who cannot speak their mind because of the current make-up of the system go behind closed doors and let off steam. It is not only the escape valve but a red light indicator for the executive. The executive discover from time to time when matters are building up and the pressure is becoming extreme. That works in all caucuses, Opposition and Government. There is no better indicator that it is not just a minority of Members who feel the desire to operate as more independent agents or as agents of their constituents and their conscience in this House.

Tonight there is almost a magical mood in this House. I find it a fascinating experience to listen to parliamentarians on all sides. I sense the desire for real change. When the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) was in the chair, he did a fine job, enjoying the confidence of Members on all sides of the House.

I close by simply saying that the majority of Members of this place are not here. I suppose most of them are like me. They are either late coming to the reform process, they have not paid much attention, or they are so cynical about the current structure that they think nothing can make any difference. We must address the question of parliamentary secretaries, the question of confidence, and address something which is terribly cloudy in the reform process. People are venting their frustration in the wrong way. Legislative committees have got out of control. They are too big and too numerous. That must be addressed immediately.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it must indeed be a magical evening when I can stand up after the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and say I agree. For several years that has not been my experience and it is indeed a pleasure.

I sat here this evening remembering my sense of deep anguish during the constitutional debate and in the constitutional committee. My sense of anguish about the constitutional committee was that we had probably collected in that room from among the Members of the Senate and the House of Commons almost as good a group of Canadians in terms of their background and concern as was possible. We were able to call as witnesses the most informed group of Canadians in the country. When it came to amending that piece of legislation, the power did not lie with the Members who sat in that room. The power lay outside the room. We did not know who it was, but we knew that whoever it was, they did not have the time to listen to the witnesses, to share the sense of anguish or the sense of hope, whatever was there, and then use their judgment to produce a basic law for this country that would work.

What the parliamentary reform committee is proposing to this Chamber is not reform of the Chamber. It is a revolution for the Chamber. As is the case in all revolutions, you can espouse the cause, fire the guns and achieve the revolution, but there is a delicate period which follows as to whether the revolution will stick or disappear.

This evening I would like to direct by remarks, perhaps in a somewhat critical fashion, at some of the Government's response to some recommendations of the parliamentary reform committee. If we are really going to use the talents of the Members of this Chamber, and I concur with previous speakers who say that the notion of confidence and its use or abuse lies at the very heart of the reform process, we must not have the tendency to think of that sense of confidence simply in terms of votes in this Chamber. In reality, the useful work which Members will do is more often in committees. The executive branch of Government must have confidence in those committees and in the wisdom of those committees to do a lot of the work.

I was sitting here this evening wondering if I am ever going to see a Minister come before a standing committee or legislative committee and say: "Here is a piece of legislation which represents the best thinking of the executive branch. What I want from you is a lot of hard work to see if you can make it better. Do not come back to me and ask me about my judgment. Simply call your witnesses, hire your experts, sit in dialogue together, take that piece of legislation and make it as good as you can".

If that were the set of instructions to a standing committee or a legislative committee, it would make the world for all of us a great deal more satisfying. More important, it would make legislation better. Legislation would be more sensitive to the reality of all parts of this country. What we have had in place up to this point is a set of bureaucrats who live in Ottawa. They may be in Justice and do the actual drafting or they may be in a policy analysis part of Government. They live here in Ottawa, they are captives of the Ottawa television stations, radio stations and newspapers. They do not understand the reality of Canada. It is Members of Parliament who were sent here to reflect that reality. Whatever we can do in this new revolution to free those Members up to do their jobs will work in the best interests of all parts of the country. That delicate situation relies on the political leaders. The risks are greatest for the Government and less so for the Opposition, but the leaders of all three political Parties and the sub-leaders within those Parties must demonstrate in the things they say and the ways they act a commitment to the processes that are possible within this place.

The part of the report on parliamentary reform about which I have thought the most and about which I know the most is the part about the role to be played by committees in the future. I was pleased to see that the Government simply agreed with Recommendation 4.1 which sets out the role of standing committees. However, the Government then began to deal with the structure of the standing committee system, and there we begin to disagree. I would like to suggest to the Government House Leader and the House Leaders of the other two Parties that they think about that a little more.

The biggest deviation from the philosophy of the reform committee's report as it affects standing committees is the decision by the Government to go to eight-person committees rather than seven and to include the parliamentary secretaries as the eighth person. When the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Price), who had that kind of experience with the previous Government, laid out his concerns about it, I found myself nodding my head. I think he was dead on. There is a role conflict, and that is what the committee told us and what our experience has told us. I hope that the Government will reconsider that in what is an experimental year.

There is nothing that stops a committee from co-operating with a parliamentary secretary and nothing that stops a committee from bringing the parliamentary secretary forward as a witness. However, having a parliamentary secretary as a member of the committee creates a problem regarding the issue of confidence. That is its biggest flaw. There is as well a secondary flaw. Any time there is a committee with an even number of members, more pressure is put on the committee when it comes to creating a quorum. It is easier to get four out of seven members together than it is to get five out of eight. I would hope that the Government would reconsider and return to seven-member committees as recommended in the report of the reform committee.

The other major area of disagreement I have with the Government is in its comments regarding the review of delegated legislation. All of us know that we are in a situation in which 3,500 to 4,000 Orders in Council are passed per year. All of us who have served on the Regulations and Statutory Instruments Committee know that the impact on people's lives from the publication of regulations can be and frequently is absolutely enormous. The regulations are more important in terms of impact than the actual legislation itself in most if not all instances. To leave the job of reviewing those regulations to one committee, a joint committee of the two Chambers, is to ask that committee to do the impossible. With the new setup for standing committees, if the Government were to go along with the committee's recommendation that standing committees be given the responsibility for reviewing the regulatory environment related to their areas of responsibility, I suggest that possible mistakes could be avoided and certainly regulations would be better promulgated.

I would make a brief comment on legislative committees. I would like to see them have from 10 to 30 members rather than thee present 20 to 30 members, and I would like to see their composition cut across committees. Someone from the Justice Committee should sit on every committee, as should someone familiar with finance. That way we could put a screen across a piece of legislation containing all of the different emphases Members might have.

I sent a letter to the committee recommending that we bring back evening sitting hours. I did that because I believe that if the House were not so sit until 2 p.m. four days per week, the sense of push and rush that all of us are feeling would be relieved. I know the committee did not accept my view, but it is my feeling, having experienced both systems, that one of the reasons Members do not have the time to think carefully, consider and learn enough about much legislation, is that we try to put too many things into too few hours in the course of a normal week.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope a few of the members of the public who watch the House of Commons during Question Period and see us as being the most undisciplined day nursery in the country will have had a chance to listen to this particular debate. I think it reflects Parliament at its best and gives us a chance to talk about some very serious concerns.

We are trying to reform this place and we are trying to ensure that the momentum for reform which built up in the last Parliament is continued. I do commend the members of the committee for their leadership and I also commend the Government, not for all of its responses but certainly for the fact that it is prepared to go a substantial way toward indicating its support for the recommendations.

I would like to talk mainly about committees tonight. Certainly in recent weeks we have experienced overload because of the overlap between the legislative committees and the larger standing committees which have different timetables. We now know that it is possible for an Hon. Member to begin his day at nine o'clock in the morning and wind it up at 10 o'clock or 11 o'clock at night and to have been in the House or committees continuously during that time. Frankly, that is exhausting and is not good in terms of the quality of work we can do. I do not think we can sustain it. That is why I would like to talk in some detail about some of the specific recommendations and ideas that I hope will be taken seriously by the House Leaders and the Government.

First, it is important that the new, smaller standing committees be independent. I happen to feel that to have only seven members on a committee with a permanent attachment may not be sufficient. My experience on the Public Accounts Committee and other committees on which I have played a part is that it is a bit like tag-team wrestling. Members do have many commitments in their ridings for speaking engagements and those sorts of things. Therefore, it seems to me that in addition to seven members on the standing committees, we should have a permanent alternative group of another seven who have some greater privileges and access to the committee minutes and agendas than other members. It should be expected that those members keep in touch with those committees and work very closely with the members to whom they are an alternative.

I do not think that a parliamentary secretary should be a full member of a committee. If the Government wants to assign a parliamentary secretary to sit in on meetings of a standing committee, exercising the right of any Member of the House to be there, I think that is fine. However, to have parliamentary secretariess on the steering committee and giving guidance to committees will, it seems to me, essentially undercut the independence of the committees. I certainly endorse the comments of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and others on that particular question.

There is a danger in the fact that the legislative committees, because they are ad hoc and have no history, will not have give and take between Opposition and Government Members, something which I think makes a committee work particularly well. I am concerned over the fact that some of the committees on which I have sat have seen an effort by Government Members to guillotine debate and shut down the amount of time in which consideration of an important matter could take place.

Since there was no appeal, we wound up wrangling with each other and playing the kind of games that I think people are anxious to try to avoid.

While allocation of time is becoming more prevalent and the Government seems to have chosen to use closure on an almost continuous basis, there must be in committees some recognition of the rights of the Opposition as well. Given that there is no give and take because legislative committees are temporary, it seems to me that there should be some right of appeal so that Opposition Members may go to House Leaders and dispute decisions of legislative committees which seem to have been too rigid in terms of their allocation of time. It seems to me that we should not have a situation in which the Government is all take and no give in terms of the way the committees work, in terms of the witnesses they hear and in terms of the amount of time which is given to ventilate concerns over important pieces of legislation, such as the divorce legislation or the legislation dealing with family allowances. These issues will come up again and again.

I endorse the comments which suggest that the size of legislative committees should be made much more varied depending upon the importance of the issue and also upon whether or not an issue is controversial. Given that the committees have to work very quickly, consideration should be given to having research support on legislative committees and, occasionally, on standing committees, allocated to caucus, that is to say, on a partisan basis and not just allocated to the committee as a whole. With respect to particular Bills, there are times when we in the New Democratic Party, or members of the Liberal Party and maybe even Government Members want to develop a particular line of thinking. We do not have the resources in our offices to carry that out. Our caucus research staff is limited and cannot focus on these committees. Sometimes the hearings of a committee may go on for a long period of time and we need to have access to either partisan researchers, who are also attached to the Library of Parliament, or perhaps even people who come in on an ad hoc basis for particular considerations.

My next point deals with the question of timetabling. It is a long way from matters of principle. However, it is very germane to all of us who have experienced a meeting at 3.30 p.m., a meeting at 6 p.m. and a meeting at 8 p.m., have gone home exhausted and in a bad temper without having had a decent supper and not having been able to do a particularly good piece of work.

When the legislative committees began it was decided that they would sit when the House sat but the standing committees would not. I think that decision is wrong. At times standing committees took place on a very artificial schedule. They were blocked in to two meetings, one a 6 p.m. meeting and one a day-time meeting. They have important work and yet find it impossible to fit within that particular strait-jacket. We have had situations in the Public Accounts Committee, on which I sit, which needed to meet for three hours but was told it had to quit at 11 a.m. to make room for legislative committees, even though on certain days no such committees were scheduled after that time.

I suggest the balance has gone too far. I suggest too much day-time has been allocated to legislative committees and not enough to standing committees. I suggest something which is a great deal more simple and perhaps more manageable. I suggest that the mornings be given to the standing committees and that the afternoons be given to legislative committees exclusively, that is, outside of the time for Question Period. Then, in the evenings, when committees will only meet if they are particularly preoccupied with a subject, standing or legislative committees should be allowed to spill over into the evening hours, whether it be 6 p.m. or 8 p.m. We could see how that would work after a trial period of one year.

Some flexibility is in order because certain committees, such as the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, need a lot of time for their considerations. The Finance Committee, which is considering the Green Paper on financial institutions, needs a lot of time and should not have to be subjected to artificial limitations.

I am also concerned about the allocation of administration costs of the House of Commons to the committees. At the moment the cost for staff alone is estimated to be something more than $1,000 per committee meeting. That enters into the budget of a committee. That will make heavy costs which could be misunderstood and even discourage committees from meeting frequently, despite the fact that most of these costs are fixed costs of the House of Commons and not variable costs, as is the case with the cost of printing committee minutes and other matters which can probably be costed and charged to the committees. I am glad to see the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) nodding his head.

With respect to the question of costs, we should look at ways by which committees can reduce the costs of travel, possibly by having a stripped-down form of reporting and of translation or other means by which it is flexible enough for committees to travel without the feeling that it will cost $5,000 or $6,000 a day, a sum which is felt to be intolerable.

In the limited time I have available to me, I also suggest that we should be looking at ways by which committees can communicate what they are doing to the public and call for witnesses without the need to spend $30,000 or $40,000 to advertise in every major daily newspaper across the country. That could well come into part of the public relations effort within the Speaker's office. Perhaps there should be a weekly journal of Parliament which is easy to understand and which could include notices of committee meetings calling for witnesses or informing the public about consideration of particular pieces of legislation. We could then make that journal available at a low subscription cost to every public library and newspaper in the country. Something in that respect could be part of an effort which should be made in order to find means to communicate what Parliament is doing.

The suggestion that the parliamentary channel be expanded and turned into a sort of Canadian version of C-SPAN is a good one. The suggestion that committees be televised but that those televised versions of committees be run at night when the proceedings of Parliament are no longer on is also a good one.

The suggestion which I make now is that parliamentary notices with respect to committees seeking witnesses and so on should be on the parliamentary channel every morning between eight o'clock and nine o'clock. In this way people would know to look at the channel at that time. That should be encouraged.

The suggestion with respect to interpretive material on Parliament being televised on the channel and also in a Museum of Parliament, perhaps where the Postal Museum used to be, should be considered. The suggestion that we should try to find ways to interpret what this place is doing to visitors who come to Canada is something which is also a good idea.

Perhaps these ideas stray somewhat from what is contained in the report of the committee. However, I think they are all part of a desire that many members share, which is to make Parliament relevant and ensure that Parliament is seen to be relevant.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to participate in this debate with respect to the reform of the House of Commons. Since I became a Member of this House approximately 17 or 18 months ago it gives me particular pleasure to take part in a debate in which we are talking about reform of the institution which represents the people of Canada.

With respect to the proposal regarding the reform of the House of Commons, I would like to restrict my remarks to the recommendation of a standing committee which suggests that there be a standing committee on human rights established. I think it is important in 1985 that a standing committee on human rights should be established. I would like to elaborate on that point.

In 1982, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was passed by the House of Commons. There was a delay experienced with respect to one section of the Charter. I refer to Section 15. This section of the Charter refers to equality, that is, that every individual is equal before the law, has the protection of the law and receives the benefits of the law. This section of the Charter came into force on April 17, 1985. When it came into force, the previous administration had done little to prepare for this three-year delay. Of course, the delay was facilitated to change programs and laws in order that they could comply with Section 15. When my Party took office in September of 1984, very little had been done in terms of preparing legislation and changing programs to comply with Section 15 of the Charter. Thus, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) brought in an omnibus Bill which changed minor items. In addition, he established a parliamentary committee formed by members of all Parties of the House to review programs and legislation.

Last summer and spring I had the opportunity to serve as vice-chairmen of the subcommittee dealing with equality rights. As all Members know, this committee was charged with the responsibility of reviewing federal laws and statutes in order to determine if they conformed with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights. The work of our committee was crucial in helping develop a practical and sensible approach to equality issues under the Charter. Our report Equality for All covered a wide range of issues which demanded immediate attention.

I believe it is important for the work of the Equality Committee to go on, and it is important that that work go on here, in Parliament, carried out by parliamentarians. Therefore, I propose, consistent with the recommendations in both the McGrath Report and in the Equality for All Report, that a Standing Committee on Human Rights be established to deal with the important equality issues surrounding Section 15. The Equality for All Report listed three key reasons for an ongoing assessment of federal laws in light of Section 15 by a standing committee. First, a mechanism for public input into the process of addressing Section 15 to the wishes and needs of the community is very important. Under the current committee system, that mechanism does not exist.

Second, future Government policies or programs which are introduced into the House as legislation, may not conform to the Charter and, therefore, that legislation would merit scrutiny by a Human Rights Standing Committee.

Third, an all-Party committee would be in a position to review the Charter conformity of federal laws, providing the opportunity and enabling the examination of that legislation with input from witnesses attending that standing committee. That, in my opinion, would assist the Ministers of the Crown who are often consumed with the details and intricacies of the legislation. The standing committee would give us the overview representing all the regions of the country.

If there is one important message which came through loud and clear during the cross-country hearings of the Equality Rights Committee, it is that Canadians are very interested about how their Charter will affect their lives. Those concerns will continue to arise as our legal system grapples with the details and complexities of Section 15. Therefore, it is most important that Parliament deal with these issues as opposed to putting these issues into the hands of the lawyers or the courts. It is most important that we as parliamentarians continue to work toward practical application of the Charter which will fulfill the great principles of equality, justice and fairness for which this country has always stood.

The issues raised in the Equality for All Report represent only the beginning of a long and exciting process of clarifying our Charter and applying it to Canadian society. Let us make Parliament a part of that process by establishing a Human Rights Committee which will address the fundamental equality issues this country is now facing and those it will face in the future.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I take some pleasure in participating in this debate, mainly because the wisdom of whoever drafted the motion that this House take note of the matter of reform of the House of Commons has given us all a chance to address the issue of reform in the House, and many other matters.

Since the end of June of last year, we have been operating under a different set of rules. We adopted, I believe, on June 27, some modifications to our rules which were inspired, in part, by the special committee of the House chaired by my friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). These were supported, I believe by most Members of the committee—at least all those I have come in contact with—in the spirit of trying to make this place more relevant to the issues of modern society and more understandable to Canadians.

I do not want to address all of the issues because none of us could do that in just 10 minutes. But since we have been operating since June under certain rules, I would like, as Party Whip of the Liberal Opposition, to make a few comments on how we have done with the new rules since September. I do not believe we can operate without a foundation of trust among the House Leaders of the Government and of the opposition Parties. I believe there have been some elements of difficulty which have arisen from the fact that some rules were either misunderstood or applied unequally.

What in French, Mr. Speaker, would be referred to as "demi-mesures". I do not think that in this Chamber we can tolerate that when a parliamentary committee makes recommendations, Members only go along with what suits them and drop what does not.

This evening, there has been some discussion about the legislative committees. I believe there is a problem. We have 282 Members in the House, and two weeks ago I counted 51 committees including standing, legislative, special and joint committees, task forces and sub-committees; add to these the task forces of political parties that travel across the country and all the work that has to be done in committee and in the House. Members each have to do their share of a very impressive workload, something which I think is at times frustrating because we are not always able to work in the manner we would like and to see exactly where we are going.

Mr. Speaker, not long ago you sent me to England to see how legislative committees were handled over there. I appreciated this opportunity because I found that with 650 Members and a very impressive legislative menu, the people over there had managed to set up eight legislative committees, which they refer to as standing committees, and each committee receives the legislation which is sent by the House of Commons, and there is a line-up and people wait their turn to be heard. I think that is eminently sensible.

We did not do that. Every Wednesday, I sit down with the Government Whip and the New Democratic Party's Whip and we have to appoint Members to legislative committees, when the House has adopted a bill on first reading or the Member has presented a Private Member's Bill in his name. That is not what was recommended by the Committee on Parliamentary Reform. Somebody failed to understand what the Committee's recommendation was and this caused some problems. We are now stuck with an incredible number of committees and that has caused problems as well.

The other question I wanted to raise—and I realize I don't have much time—concerns Ministers' comments or statements. Ministers' statements are usually made on very short notice, and the Official Opposition and the other opposition have the right to reply, but the time spent on these statements is made up at the end of the day. Sometimes this may cause problems. A statement may take five minutes or half an hour, and this time is added on at the end of the day.

The point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, and I think you know what I am referring to because I already brought this up two or three times this week, or at least in the last few days, and that is that the provisions of Standing Order 46(7) provide that normally, the hour set aside for Private Members' Business... If I am a backbencher and I want to have an adjournment debate because I asked a question and was not satisfied with the reply, I have the right to ask for an adjournment debate, a late show.

I can request that a question be dated on the "Late Show", and at certain times it is allowed. Standing Order 46(7) says when there is a vote the "Late Show" shall not take place unless there has been a statement by a Minister and Standing Order 19(4) applies—then there is a "Late Show". Yesterday we had a typical example of that. I cannot understand the logic of that. I do not know who came up with that, that sometimes, when there is a Minister's statement of five minutes, we have "Late Shows", and other times when there is no statement there is no "Late Show". I do not understand that. Somebody must clarify for us some day why a private Member is entitled to a "Late Show" if a Minister makes a statement, in certain circumstances, and at other times he is not. This does not make sense, and these are the things we have to clarify. I hope the Government House Leader will take that into consideration when he comes in with his package, if he has one to present.

I just want to make a few comments during this opportunity we have at this time to address the question of reform. I have been here for 13 years, Mr. Speaker. Every time we have talked reform in this House we have had difficulties, because the opposition is too strong or the Government is afraid and we do not move. This time I think the Government has the proper atmosphere and the proper timing, and it should move. But, very importantly, we must be entirely satisfied that we have debated this question thoroughly.

Speaking for the members of my caucus, I do not think we can accept that some deal will be made somewhere, that it will come in a package at whatever time in the evening, and we will say we have agreed to these changes of our House rules. I think the Government has to come in with a package, and that the package must be debated in this House as it is tonight. I think it is a matter of eloquence, Mr. Speaker. The speeches I have heard tonight have been very eloquent and very interesting. I really must say that I have been here for some years now and I have heard some very, very nice statements and some very good ideas put forth by Members.

The point I really want to make clear to the House Leader is, and I think his little distrust comes from his misunderstanding of this point, that we want debate. Tonight 10 minute speeches are too short. I would like to have put questions to the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I would like to have put questions to the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet). We could not do it because of our constraints tonight.

I hope that if the Government House Leader intends to come in with a package of new reforms, these reforms will be inspired by this committee work, and that indeed the Government will read it properly, digest it properly and come forth, not with half measures but with full measures. Surely it is time we moved on reform, and that we created that type of atmosphere in which we all participate in a debate—not a monologue as we see tonight. I think it is good, it is interesting, it is eloquent, but I would like to have some real debate with some Members of the House. Those of us who cannot attend all of these committees need to have this debate in the House. We have to be able to discuss with our colleagues in the House the pros and cons, for example, of electronic voting versus manual voting versus lobby voting versus a whole system of improving the way that we vote.

I would like to see us debate these questions at the appropriate time, and I leave it in the House Leader's hands to arrange that. I repeat that the trust is his to take and to go with, and we will certainly work with him in the interests of House reform.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting discussion we are having tonight. I do not believe it can be tainted by any acrimony or any accusation of political binding. It has been in effect a free-wheeling, free-speaking debate.

I think we are attacking in this debate tonight some symptoms which we cannot get at by the reforms that have been suggested in the remarks of the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and to the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Their emphasis was not on the difficulty within the House, but rather was on the failure of the Parties concerned to allow input from backbenchers to obtain the consensus we are now seeking to obtain by parliamentary reform, when in fact what we need is an element of caucus reform which does in fact accommodate the opportunity for the individual to represent his policies, his principles, his own interests with Canada as a whole.

There has been some discussion as to what is a free vote and when should it occur. Let us suppose that we introduce into this House an opportunity for a free vote. Let us take some examples of legislation that has been dealt with in this House of Commons since it has been my privilege to represent my constituents.

Let us assume for the moment that we adopted the pattern of the United States Government where there is in fact a free vote, in principle, although I submit to you that most Members are bound by the principles they have espoused in their own constituency, that they are as bound in their voting by their own constituencies or their own districts as is any Member of this House bound in his vote as a result of his association with the Party and the constituency which he represents. It is a myth that it is totally free. There are a few people with stature who can in effect vote freely to their hearts' content, who will be returned to the Congress or the Senate of the United States, but there are only a handful of people who really have at their disposal a totally free vote.

I am going to make a suggestion here tonight which will not be acceptable to a great many people. I may get ruled out of order by some, or they might wish I would be. We have a bicameral system, and if ever there was need for reform it is that we reintroduce the intent of the bicameral system which was brought in with Confederation. There is an opportunity for the Senate to be given Green Papers, White Papers—whatever papers—for study and reference. I can think of no better work than that done by the agricultural committee when it studied soil erosion and prepared a report. I think that is typical of what it could do, and what it should do. This would relieve this House of those onerous duties that are beyond the capacity of most Members. It has been pointed out many times by many speakers on all sides of the House that the overload of committee work, plus constituency work, does render us to a degree incapable of serving all the purposes for which we are here.

We have heard some talk about what should happen to private Bills. I have had a little experience in this area. Let us be honest about private Bills. Some private Bills are introduced on principle. I think the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) who spoke earlier in the evening, espoused a principle in a Bill that he pursued for six years. I think it should have had the opportunity of a vote in this House—not a Party vote, not a vote on the whip at all.

I want to cite an example of a mischievous Bill which was introduced by one Ralph Ferguson who later became the Hon. Ralph Ferguson and the Minsiter of Agriculture. If ever there was a Bill intended to incite discontent in this nation it was that private Bill.

How then, Mr. Speaker, do we delineate between the mischievous Bills and those of principle which should have consideration? To say that private Bills should automatically be accepted by this House and go to committee is saying that every mischievous act of every mischievous Member, and there are many of us here who could be mischievous in opposition or in Government, should indeed be referred to committee for study. The Bill introduced by the Hon. Ralph Ferguson is an example of why, under no circumstances, should there be a carte blanche for private Bills to hit committee or the House in debate. How then do we sort out the mischievous from the sincere in principle?

I say to the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, through you, Mr. Speaker, that his is an honourable case, but all cases are not honourable. How many of us have participated in the preparation of private Bills which were intended to be mischievous and embarrassing to the Government? That was their purpose and there is no question about that.

Before I arrived in Ottawa as a Member of Parliament I had the privilege of sitting in a provincial Government. I think that Government had the answer to some of the problems which have been voiced directly and indirectly or insinuated. That Government allowed Party members the opportunity to participate and influence the consensus within their own Party and before virtually every piece of legislation was introduced in the House it was vetted in principle before the caucus or the caucus committee. That would remove a great many of the problems which have been voiced here. But it has not been the principle of the executive of the Party, let alone the executive of the Government, to vet its policies, legislation or principles before its own caucus or caucus committee with a particular concern of interest.

If a free vote had been introduced I believe there are two or three pieces of legislation which the Members from the Atlantic provinces would have rejected out of hand during the last Government. I do not see any other Maritime Members here. Oh, there is one at the far distant corner of the House, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), and there is one behind me from Prince Edward Island.

The health Bill introduced by the then Minister, Madame Begin, was one which deprived Atlantic Canada of badly needed money by virtue of its phraseology. Had the Atlantic region had a free vote in the House the Government of the day could not have passed that Bill in the form in which it did. Therein lies the difficulty of an area getting consensus in its own caucus, because had that area been able to achieve consensus and express the needs of Atlantic Canada that Bill would never have appeared in the House as it did.

One could go further than that and refer to certain pieces of legislation related, for example, to the fishing industry, a very major item in Atlantic Canada. The Member for Southwest Nova and I moved and seconded a motion for information in the fisheries committee. The results of that motion never came forward because the then Miniser of Fisheries blocked the information we requested. We should indeed explore what information can be obtained in committee. There is reform required.

However, let us not consider that we are part of a republican system. Before we go too far with the reform of the Hosue we must consider whether we are indeed trying to adopt republican principles in a British parliamentary system. there is room for changes. The Auditor General was mentioned tonight, and, as he said, it is impossible for a self-respecting member of the Committee on Pubic Accounts to nail down the information which gives rise to the allegations of the Auditor General. He made a charge with regard to the Dairy Commission of Canada. Unless we had a leaker within the Dairy Commission—one who would give us confidential information—we could not ask the right questions to learn why he made the charge, who was the culprit, and who should be dismissed. The Act, as it presently exists, does not serve the House of Commons or Canada.

These are areas which require reform, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for the opportunity to speak on this debate. However, let us not dream that we are a republican system—we are not. Until we change the minds of the Opposition Parties, the people, and the press, the free vote will depict split Parties, whether NDP, Liberal or Conservative. Let us face reality.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I really had not intended to say anything tonight, I had not even intended to be here, but I happened to walk into the parliamentary lobby and, not only did the sandwiches look good, the debate on TV was excellent. I am very glad I stayed. I join with other Members to say that it has been a most enjoyable and worthwhile session. We must have more of them.

I would just like to add a couple of things which I do not think have been covered. I also want to say something for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who wanted me to mention one point he did not have time to raise. He feels that we should have an on-going review of this institution and that once a year we should have an open session such as this to allow people to speak in a very non-partisan way and to share feelings, ideas, and inspirations.

One of the things which bothers me, and probably bothers most Members of Parliament, is the perception that most people have of politicians. I am sure there are many reasons for this. Most of the politicians whom I see here day after day work very, very hard and are pretty serious minded. We do not always think alike, but that is part of the system as well. However, the perception of the public seems to be that we are pretty irrelevant, perhaps opportunistic, and somewhat shallow and manipulative. I must say that I do not find that. I think we are a pretty noble bunch, on the whole.

I think that we need to show this kind of a session to the public occasionally. This is kind of an in-House meeting that we are having tonight. I do not imagine many viewers in the outside world are as interested in parliamentary reform as we are. However, surely there is some way in which we can get this kind of mood projected into some of our other sessions so that the public will see us a little differently. So many of the people I speak with think that Question Period is just a squabble. Every time I return to Ottawa my niece asks if I am going back to the "funny farm". I find that it is people who enjoy theatre and politics who really enjoy Question Period. An awful lot of people do not understand what we are getting at. Perhaps the commentators on TV could help us to explain that the Opposition has an important role to play in democracy by criticizing. Many people do not understand that. We must try to change perceptions a bit.

The point I really want to make has to do with the role of Members of Parliament other than in the House. I always feel that my first responsibility is to represent my constituency, to create a two-way flow between Ottawa and my constituents and make Government and Parliament come alive. I am wondering why the Committee on Parliamentary Reform did not deal with any of the responsibilities we have and the reforms that are needed in our roles in the constituencies. I imagine it did not have enough time.

We all tend to say that our ridings are all different; some are close to Ottawa, some are very distant, some are rural, and some are urban. I personally feel that we do not have enough common standards to follow. I would like to mention two or three things.

I think we would all agree that the MP in the local constituency office has a responsibility to provide accurate information about federal programs and legislation. Yet we do not always have the necessary tools to do this. I would like to have a regular report on what is going on in the House that we could make available to our constituents. We all do our own things in our householders which are slanted to our own perspectives. However, I think that something quite factual and direct is needed. I have had ethnic groups in particular asking for this. I think we could improve our information systems. I do not know what it is like in the riding offices of other Members. However, it is often very difficult to keep an effective information system operating when being visited by many constituents. I believe that system could be standardized to a greater extent.

I believe most Members would agree that Members and their staff in those offices should be available to act as ombudspersons. We have a problem-solving role to play, particularly with respect to federal issues. But we are also advocates for citizens and have a responsibility to bring the problems of our constituents to the attention of the bureaucracies. Of course, we must also represent our constituencies in the House.

I am not sure that all Members of Parliament have set schedules for the public to visit their constituency offices in order to see their Members. I realize that it is very difficult for Members who live on the West Coast to make sure that they can be at the office. One is often called back for votes and other matters. However, if we are going to make reforms in this area, perhaps we could set a standard.

For those of us who come from a distance, we can work much more efficiently by spending one week during a month in our riding. One can be available and accomplish much more, rather than recycling jet lag every two or three days. I suggest most Members would agree with such a procedure.

I believe there should be a general procedure by which Members have a monthly accountability session for their constituents.

Another question concerns how our constituency offices are used. I believe that, because my constituency office is paid for by the taxpayer, it should be available to be used almost as a community resource, provided it is in a non-partisan way. There may be ways in which we can relate to different community organizations. For instance, perhaps some offices could provide help with income tax matters, using volunteers. I recall having a UFFI information service from my office. It is a public office and I believe it should be available for community use.

Those are some of the questions that occurred to me. However, I am essentially suggesting that at some point this might be another chapter of the reform book. Again, I want to congratulate everyone who has done so much work for us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate. I only had an opportunity to listen to part of the debate tonight, but I was impressed with what I heard.

I think you would agree, Mr. Speaker, that in my 11 years in the House my role has not been one of speaking frequently in this chamber. One of the reasons I have not spoken frequently is that all too often these debates in the House are meaningless because Members are simply repeating what has been said by others. It is part of a game that is played between both sides of the House, and I do not like to participate in that game too often. However, this debate tonight is altogether different.

First, I want to congratulate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for allowing this debate to take place, as well as to congratulate the House Leaders of the opposition Parties for co-operating and allowing this debate to be held.

There are two areas I would like to address which have been of great concern to me in my years in the House of Commons. One is the role of private Members and the other is the role of standing committees. I am sure that when all of us come here in the first year we are rather impressed, but certainly dismayed by the lack of a role for the private Member. Many of our colleagues have spoken about that tonight.

I have been particularly impressed by that problem in the last year when we had a great influx of approximately 140 new private Members. I am deeply concerned about the degree of disillusion that I see among some of the very bright young Members in the House over the lack of opportunity they have to fulfil some of the aspirations they brought with them from their ridings. Perhaps those Members from both sides of the House feel that they do not have the opportunity to express themselves and be heard in an effective way by the powers that be. I have had the privilege of serving on both sides of the House and appreciate the problems faced by Members from both sides.

Let me compliment the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). He is one of the veterans in the House and, in being chosen as chairman of this special committee, has been able to exercise his experience over the years in helping to formulate some of these new recommendations. He and his committee are to be congratulated.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) suggested that perhaps the public was not too interested in what is being said here tonight. I do not believe that is true. Many of my more concerned constituents express extreme dismay when they learn that I come to the House to vote on an issue without even knowing what the vote is about. One simply comes in and follows the leader. As a private Member, one is not challenged to think about an issue; we can survive very adequately by voting as we are told by our House Leader. That dismays some constituents because they believe they have sent us here to express our views on issues and expect that our views will be heard and given due consideration.

One of the points that I believe the Hon. Member for St. John's East and his committee is attempting to make, and which I believe the Government in fairness is trying to recognize, is that we have a right to be adequately heard. I commend the committee on its attempt to allow a so-called free vote in the House, recognizing that there must be votes of confidence on certain issues.

I also recognize the caveat expressed by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) that we do not want to have a presidential system here. However, I believe that within the parliamentary system as we know it there is room for more involvement by private Members than we have had heretofor.

I am impressed by the committee's suggestion for the role of private Members in standing committees, including that there be seven Members on the committee, without a parliamentary secretary. I must admit that I have not given much study to that suggestion, but I like the idea and hope that the President of the Privy Council and his colleagues will reconsider their move to make it an eight-member committee.

It has occurred to me over the years, as it has to many of my colleagues, that private Members have very little opportunity to effectively influence legislation that goes through the House. Let us assume that the executive branch knew that it would have to gain individual support from Members on all sides of the House when bringing in legislation. If that had happened when the Liberals were in power there would not have been some of the bad legislation we have seen over those years. The same is true now. If we have not already done so, our Government may introduce bad legislation, because most government supporters feel obliged to support a government Bill. I hope there will be more opportunity for private Members to have input before legislation has been drafted by the Government.

As always, my colleague, the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), gave a most eloquent presentation tonight in which he expressed the importance of encouraging the Government to attend committees, asking those committees to convert its ideas into good legislation. I believe that such a process would result in attracting better Members of Parliament who would stay here. Furthermore, legislation introduced by the Government would be much better vetted and studied before being voted on in the House.

Without taking up more time of the House, let me say that I commend the committee, and its Chairman in particular. I hope the Government will see fit, in co-operation with the opposition Parties, to make some appropriate changes to the House which are long overdue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate tonight. I want to start by complimenting the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on his excellent work in reform of the House of Commons and on his contributions to this area in the past, as I think all other members of that committee merit praise for trying to make Parliament work better.

It is not often that we have occasion to participate in an excellent debate, as is the case tonight, in a manner which is far less partisan than is sometimes the case. I have been known to have been partisan on rare occasions myself, but I am very pleased to participate in this debate tonight without any partisan overtones. At least, I hope not to inject any of those overtones into my remarks.

One matter I should like to raise with the House concerns possible changes to Private Members' Hour. I had the honour and privilege of being elected at the municipal, provincial and federal levels. When I was in the Ontario legislature, I was very fond of the process by which it dealt with Private Members' Business.

In this House, Private Members' Business only lasts one hour, and it is toward the end of the day. In my view the present process here is nothing short of a glorified adjournment debate. When Private Members' Hour comes along everyone leaves. Everyone knows that there will not be a vote at the end. In fact, what we have is an adjournment debate which lasts an hour and 30 minutes instead of a 30 minute adjournment debate. I think that is very unfortunate.

The process in the Ontario Legislative Assembly—and I believe it still exists—was better than the one we have here. First, the debate lasted all afternoon, one day a week. There was a very good exchange in which four or five Members from each political Party participated. Also there was no such thing as talking out a Bill. At the end of the day there was a vote. Every Wednesday afternoon at 5.50 o'clock there was a vote. There actually had to be a conscious effort on the part of someone to defeat the Bill, if that was the case. It made for a very interesting afternoon. Often we saw Government Members voting with the Opposition and Opposition Members voting with the Government against one of their own colleagues, and so forth. It was truly a Private Members' Hour in that sense. There was no attempt at trying to be polite and speaking in favour of a colleague's Bill when one was really trying to talk it out, because the whole thing was an embarrassment or something like that. Sometimes this happens in the debates during Private Members' Hour in the House.

I note that good improvements are listed in the "McGrath" report, but I do not think that they go far enough. I hope we will take further steps to totally remove the partisan aspect. For instance, in that respect we could have no Whips at voting time. We could probably advocate that the Whips absent themselves from the House during the vote. Perhaps it would be symbolic, but it would be a good way of doing it. In the Ontario House, the Whips voted but they did not actually salute the Speaker prior to the vote in Private Members' Hour. In any case, I believe it would be an improvement over the system we now have.

I should like to speak briefly about the broadcasting of the House of Commons. The suggestion of televising parliamentary committees is not the way we should be going. I know that many people are in favour of it, but I tend to disagree. If we want to improve the availibility or the opportunity for Canadians to see their Parliament, we should use what we now have. In other words, often 6.20 p.m. or 6.30 p.m. when the House adjourns we could rebroadcast the House of Commons in the evening; we have the channel, and we have the facilities. We have everything. There is no reason that we could not repeat the process. Public opinion polls and surveys indicate that the majority of people watching the proceedings of the House of Commons are senior citizens. Why is that? It is because they are the ones who are at home in the daytime when we are on. Why not replay it at night when most people who work during the daytime can see it?

I should like to address the issue of the Clerk of the House. Of course I support the recommendations of the McGrath committee in that regard. In part, the report reads:

> The role of the Clerk of the House of Commons should be one of leadership and inspiration for all employees of the House. For this reason the Clerk of the House must be, and be seen to be, the principal permanent officer of the House, accountable to it, and its bodies, for operations of the House of Commons.

As the McGrath committee indicated, the most senior officer under your jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker, should be the Clerk. There should be only the Clerk with that level of importance relative to the staff of the House of Commons. For one thing, it would enhance the powers of Members of the House—and the McGrath committee agrees with that—in the sense that the principal officer who is concerned with services offered to Members is actually in the House of Commons, where Members can see that principal officer, where Members can easily dialogue with that principal officer, and where Members can easily explain to that principal officer when an ongoing process is not beneficial to Members of Parliament in general, or specifically to an individual Member. There has been considerable discussion back and forth, through previous Speakers and so forth, on this issue. However, I think the McGrath committee goes in the right direction on that recommendation. It is one toward which we should move swiftly.

I should like to speak briefly about Order in Council appointments. Of course we are aware of the recommendations in the McGrath report which basically indicated that some 1,900 appointments should be available for review and that some 64 appointments should be subject to the veto of the House. In other words, the House should have a veto over the appointment of officers of the House—the Clerk, the Auditor General and so forth. Because those people are officers of the House, I think that is the right way. I do not think there should be a veto over all political appointments. The mere process of recommending is the right way to go. However, in order for the process to work, the first thing we must do is put it into effect. Of course we have not done that yet, even though there has been a stated intent on the part of the Government in that regard. I think we should be moving in that area.

I should like to deal very quickly with the issue of office space for Members of Parliament. It has been the case in the past with previous Governments, and it is the case now with the present Government, that we see cabinet Ministers hogging space in the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings. I do not say that in a partisan way, because the situation was the same before. It is not right that a cabinet Minister who uses his or her office here for an hour a day should have eight rooms. Many times there are not even eight people in those eight rooms. At the same time I have, as do other private Members, two rooms in the Centre Block. Many times there are four permanent people there, myself and three staff, and some days there are two temporaries. There are actually six or seven people in those two small rooms in Centre Block. The Board of Health would kick us out if it had any jurisdiction over it. That is not right. We should do something in the very near future to reallocate space so that private Members can have a lot of room.

Looking at previous experience, for example in the Ontario House, cabinet Ministers do not have offices in the building at Queen's Park, but in the surrounding buildings. The Premier and Deputy Premier are the only two members of the executive council who have offices in the Parliament building. The others do not.

I bring those remarks to your attention, Mr. Speaker. I thank the House for listening. Again I would like to compliment all Members for the very good and fruitful debate we have had tonight.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will just say a few words as I'm sure other Members wish to speak. As I entered the Chamber, I thought of the rule of procedure which states that I should not walk between the person who is speaking and the Speaker's chair. As I walked in and thought about that, I also thought of the fact that if you look at the rules of procedure in Beauchesne or Erskine May, you see that practically everything we do in the House of Commons is out of order. I have noticed that you, Mr. Speaker, sort of try to coach the Opposition, saying they should ask questions about the policy of the Government. If you read the rules in Beauchesne, Erskine May or the leftovers of the British parliamentary system, you have to conclude that you cannot ask questions about Government policy in the future, that going strictly by the rules you can only ask questions about what the Government has already done. You cannot even entertain a motion in the House which deals with the expenditure of public money in any way, shape or form. I use that as an illustration for my few remarks.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member says "hear, hear". If he would listen, he might learn something. The Parliament in Canada is different from any other Parliament in the British parliamentary system. Our Parliament is a true definition of the word, coming from the French word parler, to speak. If you use the general term "legislature", which is a general term for all Parliaments under the system to which we belong, you would have to say that the British Parliament is a legislature. They legislate. Over the years we have developed a custom of really being a Parliament, to speak.

If you look at the British system and the Canadian system, you find that they have evolved differently. The Australian system and other systems have evolved to meet their own needs. In the British Parliament, there is no seat for you. There are not enough seats for all the Members. Here you take your seat and be part of Parliament and speak. Perhaps there's nothing left of a resemblance between the Canadian Parliament and any of the other so-called Parliaments in the British parliamentary system.

In changing the rules, I am willing to bet that you cannot find one legislature under the British parliamentary system that changed its rules to any degree through a committee of that Parliament. It would be a joke to go to the British Parliament and say that you have a committee of the House to change its rules. The way they change their rule is by having the academics, the outside people who are not a part of the parliamentary system, do that. They deride us as a Parliament in saying that this is a cumbersome system, a system in which nothing can be done. Surely Parliament is first and foremost a legislature. In practically all of the legislatures, a motion comes to a vote at the end of the sitting day.

The systems have evolved and you cannot compare one system to the other. To my knowledge, changes that have been made in other legislatures under the British parliamentary system have evolved in such a way that something else has taken the place of Parliament as we know it today. When looking at changes in our parliamentary system, perhaps we can borrow something from what these other legislatures have done. This brings me to the reason for my standing here today.

Given the fact that the only similarity we have is that the Opposition and the Government are two sword-lengths apart, that you are not allowed to lean on the rail, and you are not allowed to wear a hat in the gallery, perhaps we can borrow something from their committee structure. In the British Parliament, a member of the Government or a member of the Opposition are both equal the way the custom has evolved. The Speaker does not recognize a member of the Official Opposition, then the Opposition, and then get around to a government back-bencher. It goes right and left, right and left.

Something else that is completely different is that a Member has to give notice of a question. That is somewhat distorted because you can give any kind of notice that has something to do with your question. Government Members, who have no seat stand up as a matter of custom and adamantly criticize their own Government. That is a custom.

My point can perhaps best be described by referring to the chairman of this committee, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Every Member in this Chamber is frustrated. He has a great interest in a particular subject. For example, the Hon. Member for St. John's East has a great interest in search and rescue, as we all know. Everybody has a particular area of great interest which affects the people in their riding and their province. As things now stand, even with the suggested changes, their aspirations will never come to pass unless we have committees which can originate their own terms of reference totally to address immediate and long-term problems.

It does not matter whether the committees are called standing committees or select committees. I believe that could be borrowed from the British parliamentary system. We do not have rules whereby the media cannot tape record the proceedings or that do not allow for television cameras. Committees could be made the forefront of Parliament. I do not think Parliament would be robbed of anything other than to decrease the parler part of Parliament. It would decrease the amount of speeches given and the time spent in Parliament. Parliament would automatically adjust its time schedule.

That would require a great sacrifice on the part of the Government. It would require the Government to say to the committees that when something comes up, whether it be search and rescue tonight or tomorrow "buffalogate", a committee can at a moment's notice investigate that matter and have the power to call whomever it wishes before the committee and get the answers to both immediate and long-term problems, such as search and rescue in which the Hon. Member for St. John's East is so greatly interested. It would provide a forum in which the answers would eventually be given. If the Government would not want to make changes, it would certainly be embarrassed into making changes.

That is my contribution tonight. I could go on for hours on this matter. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps the only former Clerk of a provincial legislature to sit in the federal House of Commons.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) for his contribution to this very interesting exercise that we are going through tonight. As one of the veterans of this House, and as some people think the defanged tiger that does not have any teeth left, I wanted to listen and take in all the contributions of Hon. Members. I know that other Members will perhaps speak later, and I might provoke some to speak later.

I think this is a tremendous exercise and I compliment the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for holding this debate. Frankly, I would have liked to have gotten my notes into an orderly form so that I could have developed my speech in a logical fashion. However, I am not known to do that. Therefore, I come now to the heart of the whole situation.

First I would like to get my Christmas kudos out of the way. Without being facetious, I would like to compliment the Chairman of the committee. I do not usually give him compliments because, quite frankly, I find I usually take a different stance from the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). However, regarding his leadership of the reform committee that has produced the first, second and third reports which are the reasons why we are here tonight, I would like to give him, as well as the entire committee, my personal compliments.

I do not want to repeat this too many times, but I used to sit here listening to the then right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert who had been here longer than I. He used to talk about Parliament and I am going to talk about Parliament. One of the few reasons I want to stay here is to make sure that this institution is fundamentally reformed to reflect the body of opinion of Members of Parliament and is not just rubber stamping things that come from on high. That is the carrot in the sunrise that will encourage me to run again.

The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, whom I respect, has had an interesting political history. He is one of the few and at the moment the only former Clerk of a legislative assembly to be a Member of the House. He then warped the political label, but I do not care about labels.

Since we come to the House of Commons to vote on Bills that affect Canadians at large, we have to move to a mutation between a congressional and a parliamentary system. Unless Members of Parliament can rise in the House or contribute in committee on issues that affect their constituents or their own opinions without simply rubber stamping Bills, then this place is a charade.

I compliment the Hon. Member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) who talked a little about the words of a former Prime Minister who said that we are nobodies when we are 50 feet away from the House and somebodies when we are here. The 140-odd brand new Members of the House came here with such excitement, enthusiasm and idealism. Over a period of perhaps six months or a year, they found out that they are fighting the same parliamentary procedure that was the procedure at the time of Sir John A. Macdonald. Of course he was our first Prime Minister in 1867.

You know, Mr. Speaker, because you are relatively new to the chair and you are certainly relatively new to Parliament, as a defanged veteran, that you went through the depression and frustration of these 140 brand new Members who are representing all parts of the country. They came here thinking that they would change things and found out that they were in the strait-jacket of Sir John A. Macdonald.

The one thing I love about the McGrath report is its potential for the independence of Members. This independence is not to defeat Governments. I agree with my hon. friend for—I know him better as George but I have to call him the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate. When I think of Twillingate, I think of Pickersgill. He was one of the Hon. Member's predecessors. There have been too many Members. I am an old Member as this caucus of mine thinks. Frankly, though, in terms of parliamentary reform I am one of the youngest Members it will ever see.

What these new Members do not understand is what reform really is. Unless we can get in the Chamber and committees the right of Members to represent their constituents, regions and own consciences independently, then I would agree with the former Prime Minister who said that we are nobodies, but I would say that we are nobodies both inside or outside the House. We can change that around, and we have to change it around.

The mutation system to which I referred must apply to committees and we are trying to do that on an experimental basis in the Transport Committee in which I am privileged to be a participant. We are getting some expert information on issues of the day and we have to do that in a more organized way. Members of the House must come here to speak on Bills.

The matter is not too complicated. I would like this Government to continue in office for another 44 years. I sat in Opposition for 20 years and I do not want to switch back.

There are easy ways to effect reform. A Bill can be drafted by the bureaucrats and put forward by the Minister which may not find a majority vote in the House. This is not in the McGrath report but it is the easiest thing in the world. Sometimes the easy things are like Newton's Law. When something falls down, it means that gravity pulls it down. If we wanted to assess that like Einstein, we would have had an Einstein theory on why the apple fell to the ground, or why two feathers fell from the Tower of Pisa at the same rate. I do not want to deal with complicated matters like that.

Regarding parliamentary procedure, we must have the licence, liberty and independence of parliamentary debate. It will take time to happen. The fact that a Bill does not command a majority in the House of Commons simply means that it is sent back to the bureaucratic catacombs to be redrafted, after which it then gets the consent of the House. When a Government Bill goes down to defeat, I hope that in my lifetime as a parliamentarian there will be a procedure whereby, without any debate, the Speaker would ask if the Government has lost the confidence of the House. Without any hesitation or even a burp, the votes would return saying that the Bill was defeated but the Government had not lost the confidence of the House. It would be a clear message to send back to the bureaucracy and the ministry that the Bill be redrafted to command the respect and the vote of Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I know that my time is limited. I have so many things to say. When I heard there was a ten-minute limit on this crazy debate, which I am glad to participate in, I thought to myself that for me ten minutes is just like a burp.

My time is coming to an end in terms of this debate but I hope it is not coming to an end in terms of what I am trying to propose. You are the symbol of this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. I commend you and congratulate you for doing a very difficult job. I have sat here by the clock, close to the door, and I am gosh darned glad to be sitting here sometimes so that I can get out the door. Let us not kid ourselves.

I was in favour of bringing television cameras into the Chamber. I was on the committee which proposed such a move. I am telling Members of the House that until and unless, or unless and until, we reform our procedures, Members of Parliament who know the mechanics of expressing views will not be able to take advantage of the cameras. Why should I play the game like John A. Macdonald played it? I watched the debate for hours today. We have all the mechanics to do our jobs. The one thing that we do not have yet, and psychologically this debate may help us get it, is the assurance that in this age of change with a new Government we can instil and complement the work of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to ensure that Members of Parliament, be they in committee or in the House, can express their views and cause defeats, perhaps even of Government Bills, but not bring down the Government. I refer to legislation other than Speeches from the Throne, Budgets and tax Bills.

I can see you are getting anxious, Mr. Speaker. I wish to sit down myself. However, unless we do something of this order then we are a charade. I will stay here as long as I can to ensure that your disquiet with my time and not my words will see you become, in my lifetime as a parliamentarian, the commander of the Chair. You will bring back into focus—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member who is making a speech which the House is enjoying, but his time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that in looking at the clock I can see that it is nearly 11 o'clock and I know that I am competing with the national news. At this point in time I know what most of the ears of the nation are tuned into. However, it is still important for me to enter this debate.

What the debate and the underlying question with regard to it mean to me has to do with democracy in the sense of the distribution of power between the private and public arena. Most citizens are familiar with the fact that, by and large, civil servants and bureaucrats run the Government. It is civil servants and bureaucrats who largely frustrate the people we represent. Thus, reform of the House of Commons has to do not just with updating some quaint institution which is of interest only to the few of us who happen to be elected here and have the duty to serve here, but it is something which is central to the democratic life of the country.

As a Member of Parliament who has been here for a few years, but not that many, one thing I find shocking about this place is the lack of financial control which the House has over public expenditures. Parliament was born out of the recognition that the executive, the people who run the country and spend taxpayers' money, had to be accountable. If there is one thing that this place demonstrates it is the lack of accountability with regard to the expenditure of public dollars. Any real reform of Parliament has to increase accountability in terms of financial matters. It is not enough to have the Auditor General issue a report to Parliament once a year which is discussed in Question Period for one, two or three days and is then forgotten. We have to find some means, some mechanism, by which to examine in a thorough way the expenditures which are authorized by the House.

It is not enough to have just one committee, such as the Public Accounts Committee, perform such a function. All Members of Parliament and all committees of Parliament should be involved in a thorough analysis with respect to public spending. In today's political and social climate if we are to find the money which is necessary to meet the many needs of our constituents, then we have to demand a new excellence in public spending. We have to demonstrate to bureaucrats that as parliamentarians we will not put up with the waste of public dollars. We must ensure that public dollars are spent wisely and effectively. Any real parliamentary reform should first address the issue of financial accountability.

I would now like to address another area of parliamentary reform which interests me. It has to do with Order in Council appointments. Given the fact that bureaucrats have such a stranglehold on public power in the country, it seems to me we should find a way to subject senior bureaucrats, Deputy Ministers, presidents of Crown corporations and, since the introduction of the Charter of Rights I would say Supreme Court Justices, to some sort of public review as a part of the nomination process before they are finally put into their ultimate positions. These are people who carry real power in our society. They are the ones who make the real decisions. Their views and values should be examined in a public forum before they are given our blessing and those high positions. I would like to see us find a way for Order in Council appointments to be reviewed before the appointments are made. There is another function of the House to which we should pay more attention. That is the matter of petitions. With respect to the debate concerning family allowances and the debate on pensions, petitions played a significant role in the House. Petitions offer an opportunity for public input into the policy-making process. If petitions could come to this place asking specific questions of the executive, which Government Departments would have to answer in writing to the petitioners, then perhaps we could find a way for the public to have a more significant input into this place and into public policy.

The question of legislation in terms of Parliamentary reform has received a fair amount of comment. Primarily, it has been in terms of the freedom of the private Member to vote this way or that following his or her own conscience. I believe there is another aspect of legislation which has to do not only with our individual values but our collective values. As members of different political Parties there should be a way by which we could allow a real and significant impact on the legislation which comes before the House and the way in which it is drafted. Through our collective values, having been elected to this place, we should find a way by which we could have a greater impact upon the type of legislation which finally passes through the House.

I know that there is a negotiation process in this respect which goes on among House Leaders. Surely that process could be made more meaningful and could be handled in a way by which legislation would actually be amended, changed and improved upon, which could become a part of our policy-making and political process.

In conclusion, it seems to me that the question of parliamentary reform, whether it concerns financial matters, appointments of senior bureaucrats, public input or the type of legislation which is proposed by the House, is about democracy. It is about the private and public distribution of power. As an elected Member of Parliament, my commitment is to public power rather than private power. If we are going to have significant reform in this place, we have to bring decisions made by Government into a public forum. That really means bringing a lot of the decisions which are made by permanent members of the Civil Service into some forum for review by elected officials. The most important decisions which must be brought in for review are the financial decisions.

As I have said, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in this debate about parliamentary reform. I must say that if parliamentary reform is to be significant, then it has to impact, first, on how public dollars are spent. Unless we can raise the level at which we examine public dollars, and unless we can reach a new attitude with regard to the expenditure of public dollars, we will not have the resources to meet the needs of our citizens.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I listened at the opening of this debate to the very learned and carefully crafted remarks of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I feel a little humble with my few notes here in winding up the debate. I know that the Hon. Member for St. John's East was, and has been, totally wrapped up in the issue of reform of the House for a number of years. He sat as a Member from the Conservative caucus on the Lefebvre Committee, along with some other Hon. Members, and he contributed then, as he has contributed tremendously to this particular report.

History has shown us the evolution of the House of Commons. Some of us who have been in Parliament a little longer than others have watched it grow and change. Yet it is fair to say that many of the rules which were put in place by Sir John A. Macdonald are still with us. It is interesting to me that some of the changes which we recommended in our speeches this evening were some of the things I would have liked to have seen discussed at a little more length.

In looking at the index of our last report, I see such things as the disciplinary powers of the Chair and I think we could spend a great deal of time on that, given some of the unruliness in the House over these past few months. I look at things such as the reorganization of Private Members' Business. I have heard other Hon. Members comment on that at length and I do not intend to go into it.

A good deal of time was spent on the prayer in committee, as well as a good deal of time spent on many other items. I think there is a need for change there. Perhaps reports from official parliamentary delegations would do away with articles like the one in the weekend Citizen about the travels of Members of Parliament around the world. Perhaps if we had those reports in place at least some of the press who now know, but who like to print differently, would understand as well as know why those trips take place.

I could speak about all of the various things which took place in committee but I want to take a moment to talk about the committee system and tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am concerned that right now there is a great deal of criticism of the new legislative committee system. I believe we all have to be very careful and give that idea a good try. I know that as of today there is at least one Bill which is now going to be referred to a Standing Committee instead of a legislative committee. That concerns me. We have only had the legislative committee in place for a very short time and already we are short-circuiting it. I am concerned because the Hon. Member for St. John's East made the point that those of us who sat on the committee had an aggregate of about 100 years of parliamentary experience. I would hate to think that that much experience, having put some of these ideas in place, would be erased much too soon.

I would like to say again in my very brief remarks that when the chairman of the task force, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, said that there were no heated partisan exchanges in the committee, he was absolutely right. However, there were heated exchanges. They were not partisan but there were a number of heated exchanges. I am going to take about a minute and put on record, as I did on the 26th of this month in a Private Members' Bill, brief notice that I have a major disagreement with the report when it deals with the administration of the House of Commons. I have, perhaps, spent more time dealing with the administration of the House of Commons than most of my colleagues and I am sure that they get tired and fed up to the teeth hearing me talk about it. But, having been that close to it, I think I can say with some authority that the system we now have in place, the system which has been in place in other major western Parliaments for many years, is a system to which we must adhere if we are to retain the supremacy of Parliament and if we are to retain for Members of Parliament those services which they need and desire. I suggest that to go back to the old ways would get us into a great deal of trouble.

I could go on at great length about the many services which we have received as a result of the administration of the House of Commons and which have been in place effectively for five or six years. I would like to take a moment and compliment you, Mr. Speaker, for having had the courage to broadcast our Question Period to 22 million Americans last week. It seems to me that to have taken that step required a great deal of courage. To have the temerity to put our happenings over American television must have taken a great deal of thought. I could go on about that but, if I did, I am sure that some of my colleagues would want to hang me with the telephone wires which have been causing them all so much trouble this last little while, and I know they would not really want to do that.

I would like to say one other thing. At the table this evening were two of the staff who served us very well, and added to the 100 years of service which members of the committee had. The staff had a huge number of years. They served us with patience and willingness to put up with us and a willingness, where necessary, to argue for things they saw that we might not have seen. I want to give them a pat on the back as well.

I am proud to have participated in this particular task force. Hon. Members of the House must look at what we have put before them and understand that, whether they like it or not, we put it before them with the highest expectations, after giving it the most serious consideration, discussion, thought and argument. Nothing was put in that report lightly or frivolously, and as I said before there are parts of the report with which I disagreed. Nothing was put in that report without all of us putting a great deal of thought and effort into it. I would ask the House to give it a good try. Perhaps in a year or two years from now it may be necessary to appoint another similar task force to clean up some of the things we missed. The Hon. Member for St. John's East made the point to the Government House Leader this evening that in retrospect he saw a couple of items he would have liked to have changed, and there will be others. We did try, and tried hard, and I ask the House to give it every opportunity to work. If, down the road, the House thinks there needs to be a change, at least give us credit for doing what we could.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it was really a pleasure for me to be able to participate in this debate at this hour. It is somewhat late, but Members are still here and I think they might listen to a new Member who has comments to make on his experience in this House of Commons.

As I came here I had some expectations that we were going to produce something positive for our country. We have been doing pretty well in certain areas, but in others we can formulate criticism. That criticism is that as a Member of Parliament one has very little input into legislation. As the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) said, we are just rubber-stamping most of the legislation that is brought in through the Departments. The legislation is drafted by bureaucrats, and brought to a Minister, whether it is good or bad. If the Minister is weak he accepts that legislation and brings it to the House. Then we have to vote on it, whether we like it or not. I think this is the problem. This is the fundamental problem that we have to address.

Among the different systems in the world there is a system that exists in the United States where they have a separation of the executive branch and the legislative branch. If a Democratic Congressman is elected he can still vote with the Republicans, and if their President is a Republican he can still vote for that President on certain legislation. It does not mean that he is against his own Party. He votes for what he believes his constituents want. This is a fundamental point.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said the other day in the House, looking at the Opposition: "You are just trained seals". But I was sitting on the opposite side and I looked at the members of the Government and they were all applauding. The Member beside me said: "Look at those trained seals." Those are maybe not nice words but this reflects reality.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should continue in French. In my opinion, there has been very little debate this evening in the other official language of the country. We have quite a few new Members from Quebec. Those Members can contribute a lot to the democratic system of our great country. The only thing is they have to feel they are part of this great assembly which is the Parliament of Canada.

There was an election in Quebec two days ago. Unfortunately, I must say that the Conservative Party was not strongly represented in that election. It is really too bad, because democracy means more that the immediate vote or the immediate result. A great Party like the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada should have taken part in that debate in the Province of Quebec. It left the road clear for the Quebec Liberal Party and the Parti québécois. That is how we as a national Party came to be left out of that great debate in the Province of Quebec. This is to indicate that, as parliamentarians, we do not act freely. It is because the national Party had decided it would not be advisable to get involved in a provincial election that the federal Conservative Party refrained from supporting a provincial Party, the Conservative Party, and this is how it is not now represented in a province which will strongly influence the future of Canada.

This, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps . . . You will be wondering why I am talking about this, but I am doing it because a debate must be open, in Parliament we must be able to express ideas, try to sell them, debate them. Through the process of debate we reach conclusions which are good for the country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by saying that we have made progress in this Parliament. We have brought in some reforms, but those reforms do not go far enough. I would like to see that we are able to vote against the Government and that the Government is not defeated because of that. If we move in that direction we are going to help democracy and help our nation.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may in closing debate from our side, I would also like to join with the other members of the House in thanking the Members of the committee from all three Parties who put such effort into the report, and also to thank the Members of Parliament who contributed to the debate tonight.

I think it is fair to say that in the last election campaign all three Parties promised parliamentary reform. I think we have achieved remarkable progress because all three Parties have worked at parliamentary reform. I am sure that I speak on behalf of all Members of Parliament when I say that we shall all try to make these reforms work and that they are by no means the last of the reforms that we want to make. There are some kinks to iron out and I am sure that we will all work to find where those kinks are, to iron them out, and to proceed to further reforms. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: It has been a marvellous evening. Maybe the House would let me say that I have never missed the right to speak so much as I have tonight.

Debate on the motion before the House has expired. Pursuant to order made earlier this day, therefore the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

The House adjourned at 11.29 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-84

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek):

That, in relation to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this motion for time allocation on Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes, reflects the urgent priority the Government places upon getting this important tax legislation into committee for detailed examination.

The Bill touches upon a wide variety of issues, including tax fairness, fiscal responsibility and taxpayers' rights. There has been ample debate on the principles of the Bill. I would remind Hon. Members of the six-day budget debate which took place in May and early June, following the budget presentation. Since the introduction of the Bill on November 29, it has been debated on another four days. In all, about 50 Members have taken part in those debates. They focused on a wide variety of experience and points of view, and their comments are of course on the record.

It is important to note that on this occasion we are breaking new ground in the parliamentary consideration of tax law. For many years it has been the practice to conduct the detailed examination of tax legislation within the House of Commons itself, sitting as the Committee of the Whole.

Our new procedure calls for a reference to a committee where, unlike in the House, experts from the private sector can appear to present comments and suggestions from taxpayers and professionals who work in the tax field. Members are no doubt aware that, by agreement of all Parties, this particular Bill is to be sent to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, rather than to a legislative committee.

This committee procedure is a major step forward and should not be delayed. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated on Monday, when he gave notice of this motion, many taxpayers have already expressed to him their concerns about the timely passage of the Bill to provide some certainty in tax planning. Many of the measures are of major importance to the business community, particularly to small business enterprises. These will have positive effects on the economic growth of the country, and Canadians are already responding to them in job-creating and investment opportunities.

For example, there are the provisions regarding capital gains; small business bonds, extended for another two years; and special investment tax credit, extended until the end of 1986. Small businesses may now obtain equity financing from pension and RRSP funds. Artists will be able to write off the costs of creating a work of art in the year that the expenses were actually incurred. Previously, as the House knows, they had to wait until it was sold.

I should like to take this opportunity to point out briefly to Hon. Members that the Government's policies are already bringing about positive and encouraging results. We know that economic indicators show that Canada is well launched on the road to economic renewal. The prime bank lending rate is well down from previous levels, inflation is lower and mortgage rates have declined. Employment is up, consumer spending is up and confidence in the future is up. There is a feeling that our country is moving in a more positive direction. We are becoming more confident and productive.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) complained about the length of time taken to bring the Bill before the House. I suggest to him, given the size of the Bill and the wide range of issues it covers, that there was no inordinate delay. In addition to the extensive drafting involved, which incorporated many technical points raised in the post-budget representations to the Minister, a 150-page book of technical notes was prepared to explain the numerous amendments.

On the same point, other budget Bills of recent years have taken considerable time to prepare. The Income Tax Act revisions stemming from the Budget of June, 1982, which were not nearly as extensive as the ones now before us, did not arrive for first reading until December of that year. In the case of the April 1983 Budget, the tax Bill came to the House nearly eight months later. This indicates no unreasonable delay but rather, I would suggest, a commendable initiative in bringing forward this Bill. In the case of the 1983 budget Bill, the House completed debate on second reading in four days and spent only one day in Committee of the Whole. In the case of the 1982 tax Bill, six days we spent at second reading stage and six days in committee.

As I said, on this occasion the committee examination will have a far wider scope than anything done in past years, and it is important that we get to it as quickly as possible. Therefore, I appeal to all Members to support the motion for time allocation which will move the Bill expeditiously to committee.

● (1110)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues in this House are amazed that the Government would seek to terminate the discussion in this House on the principles of this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a major amendment to our taxation system which will change many basic principles that have been an integral part of this system for many years. The Government wants to change these principles, and for our part, we wish to debate these changes in the House.

[English]

I find it incredible that the Government, having taken nine months to produce a Budget, having taken another six months to produce a tax Bill, given the obvious complexity of these fundamental issues of principle with which it was wrestling, would expect us to satisfy ourselves or the people of Canada, our constituents, that we had had a full opportunity to debate the principles of the Bill in this House for a mere 11 hours and 24 minutes. That is the amount of time devoted to this debate today. After 15 months of preparation of Budget, of drafting, we are given 11 hours and 24 minutes to debate the fundamental principles that are at stake here. It is outrageous.

Any reasonable person looking at this document with its 143 clauses going in the most detailed way into some parts of our system, which, as I said a moment ago in French, existed for many years, and being told that this document should be debated in principle in under 12 hours would find scandalous the treatment of Members on this side of the Chamber.

Let us look for just a moment at some of the issues in principle which we have only begun to debate. Believe me, we will serve the people of Canada well if we can dispose of some of these issues of principle in a positive way here on the floor of the House before moving this extraordinary document into committee.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) mentioned the lifetime capital gains exemption in Clause 58.

[Translation]

We have told the Government that this proposal has been badly thought out and that it is certainly not helpful for our taxation system at this time. We even suggested other ways of dealing with capital gains, not here in the House, but elsewhere. These are major issues which should be discussed here.

[English]

If they do not accept our word for it, what about the independent experts who have looked at this provision? The Canadian Tax Foundation met in Quebec City a few weeks ago. We have comments from Ernst & Whinney saying it "will have a disastrous effect structurally on the tax system". What could be more of an issue in principle than that this provision will have a disastrous effect upon the structure of the tax system? Let me quote more from this report of that meeting. It states:

> —after studying the proposal in more detail, the experts say it is badly flawed. As they wrestle with the massive legislation based on the budget proposal—which was tabled in the form of a ways and means motion last week—there is some embarrassment that they were unable to convey this message earlier.

They say it will create enormous complexity, that there will be scores of teams of tax lawyers, accountants and tax advisers seeking their way around the application of these provisions. They conclude that it will not in any way contribute to investment or job creation.

I find it interesting that the Minister of National Revenue, who has a vested interest in tax simplification, would come into the House this morning to deliver the message to us, his colleagues, that the Government wants to terminate debate. I would think the Minister of National Revenue would regard us as allies in this cause, trying to clean up this horrendous mess, make his life more simple and make the Tax Act more effective.

Mr. Deans: Not only allies but perpetrators.

Mr. Johnston: Not only allies but perpetrators, says the House Leader for the New Democratic Party.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, this proposal to change the structure of our law on capital gains is a fundamental matter of principle.

[English]

However, we have other issues as well. We have the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, something which the Government has determined it will eliminate. That plan was introduced to stimulate home ownership. It was designed to give young people the opportunity to save for their first home. That plan was introduced after much debate and much thought as a means of helping young people and of stimulating the housing sector of this country. There are major issues of principle involved in that approach.

Not only has it been eliminated, but the funds to be withdrawn from that plan are tax exempt under this proposed Bill and can be applied for any purpose whatsoever, completely and totally unrelated to the principle underlying the introduction of that provision in the first instance. I say to my colleagues on both sides of the House that surely that is an issue which deserves a full airing of the fundamental principles involved here on the floor of the House of Commons and not in committee.

Let me draw another example to the attention of the House, the reduction of the annual indexing. The tax brackets were indexed. In fact, that indexing was introduced by the now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), our Leader, then Minister of Finance back in the early 1970s. The whole purpose of it was to put some restraint on the amount of funds that flowed automatically into the coffers of Government through an erosion of spending power and the taxation of inflationary income. There is a fundamental principle involved. In fact, not only is that principle destroyed by this provision, namely to constrain Government to limit spending, but it represents a massive tax grab—massive. The Government's own numbers shown in the document which was leaked on or about budget night by the Department of Finance show that in the year 1990-91, an additional $4.3 billion will flow to the federal Government by virtue of the elimination of that provision.

Some spokesmen for the Government have had the gall to compare this approach to that which we took when we introduced the famous and very successful six and five restraint program back in 1982. There is a major difference in principle. The six and five program preserved full indexation up to 6 per cent and up to 5 per cent. It placed pressure and it gave a real incentive to the people of Canada, employers and employees alike, to bring down their demands, to take inflationary pressure out of the system. It was successful.

By 1983 when the 6 per cent number was there for the indexation of the income tax brackets, in fact inflation was lower. The result was, of course, that no one suffered. In fact, they still had full protection against inflation.

[Translation]

What we have here is the complete opposite. In this case, the taxpayers are automatically penalized because there is no protection against inflation under 3 per cent. It is therefore the complete opposite. This is another question of principle, a basic principle which concerns the indexation of our taxation system.

[English]

This very issue of indexation and what role it should play in our income tax system and in our various programs is one of great principle which in itself deserves at least 12 hours of debate in this Chamber. The thought presented by the Minister of National Revenue to this House and the motion to limit debate on a Bill of this importance, a Bill with this number of fundamental changes to our income tax system, is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take a long time dealing with this Bill but I would like to put on the record some concerns I have about the process through which we are going. This is not really a time to debate the Bill itself but rather to debate whether or not it is necessary for the Government to bring in time allocation in order to put forward its legislative program.

I think it is fair to say that the overwhelming majority of people in the country do not understand what is going on here. It confuses them when we claim, and I think quite fairly, that we can manage the affairs of the country but somehow cannot manage the affairs of Parliament. They see us constantly wrangling over whether or not it is necessary for the Government to proceed with its legislative program and what would be an adequate length of time for the Opposition to express adequately its concerns about what is contained in various pieces of legislation.

The other day as I was going through an airport, I met a woman who, after having watched parliamentary television, recognized me. She came up to me and said: "Can we talk?" I replied that I thought it reasonable that we should be able to do that. She said: "Why don't they grow up? Why don't they understand that we expect Parliament to operate effectively and efficiently?" I said that I had certainly raised that matter on a number of occasions as had others. She said that it was sad for the country that we are not seeing the right kind of behaviour.

By behaviour, I do not mean behaviour in the sense that people are misbehaving. However, we are not getting the kind of management in Parliament that we ought to have. The woman went on to ask me if I would raise the matter in the House, and I said that I most certainly would, and I have. It is important that we leave the right impression with the public, and we are not leaving that impression at the moment.

It is sad that part of the reason we face this so often is the inability of the Government to bring forward a legislative program at a time when it can be given the careful consideration that it deserves. I say to this Government, as I said to the previous Government that it is wrong to put complex taxation legislation before Parliament in the last three weeks prior to the end of the year and expect that parliamentarians will be able to give it the kind of careful consideration it must have in order to ensure that people do not have foisted upon them legislation that is inadequate.

It is not the preserve of the Government to decide whether or not legislation is adequate. Parliament is structured in such a way as to have Government put forward its proposals so that Parliament can then deal with those proposals. Parliament must be given sufficient time to deal with legislation in the depth necessary to come to grips with the complexities of tax changes. That is impossible for us if the Government and its advisers cannot bring legislation forward within a short period of time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the situation is very difficult for Members of Parliament and Canadian citizens. This bill is very complex. We must change the system immediately.

In the future, the Government should make its proposals and introduce its programs immediately after the Budget.

[English]

I believe that it is necessary for the Government to have its legislative program ready for introduction immediately after the budget debate. That is when we should be dealing with taxation legislation. I believe that it is not unreasonable to suggest to the Government that it should now embark upon a new system, a system which, out of necessity, should make the point with the civil servants who prepare both the Budget and the legislation that flows from it that legislation must be brought to Parliament within a maximum time of four weeks of the budget debate. The reason we are having to deal with time allocation today is that we did not get what we ought to have received early enough in the year.

I would like to go further by saying that it is not solely the responsibility of Government to manage the time of the House of Commons. When one manages the time of the House of Commons, one manages the time of all of its Members. It is therefore the responsibility of all of us to priorize the program of Government and to attempt wherever possible to move it forward, and to oppose it where opposition is necessary and desirable. It becomes therefore everyone's responsibility to pay particular attention to the over-all program the Government hopes to put forward and to work out a system among ourselves for dealing with that program. We cannot do that if we get the program in dribs and drabs. We cannot do that if we get the Budget in April and the taxation legislation that flows from it in December. How are we going to manage the time of Parliament if that is to be the case?

I hope, come the next session of Parliament beginning some time in the early part of 1986, that the Government will pay some heed to what I am suggesting. The legislation, if there is any, that flows from the Throne Speech should take no more than a month to introduce, and the legislation that flows from the Budget should not only be introduced immediately but should be dealt with forthwith. We ought not to be continually put in the situation in which we have been put over the many, many years of having to cram through at the last minute important, intricate, delicate legislation just because the Government or its advisers did not see the urgency of the matter and did not understand the complexity of the parliamentary system well enough to bring legislation forward in time to allow it to be dealt with.

This legislation can have and likely will have a detrimental effect on a large number of Canadians. How are they going to put their views before Parliament? How much time will there be for a committee to deal with this legislation given its diversity? How will people who have studied it have time to bring their concerns before the Parliament of Canada given that we are now entering the pre-Christmas season at which time the majority of people are already tied up with other important matters? Yet we are told that the legislation must be put through by the end of December which, in our case, means December 20.

I therefore plead, and if pleading will not do I do not know what else I can do, with the Government to change the system. I understand that it has been in place for years. I made the same arguments when the Liberals were in power. I suggested the same thing when I was a Member of the Legislature. I know it is difficult. I realize that those who—

Ms. Copps: But we listen to you.

Mr. Deans: My friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), said that she listens to me. I have never noticed any change in her attitude; but nevertheless maybe she did.

• (1130)

I believe that if the Government were to say to the draftspeople who draft legislation: "We need it by a week on Friday", then they would get it by a week on Friday. As long as we allow them to delay and procrastinate then, in fact, we will not have the legislation before us in time. That requires leadership. That requires direction. I ask the Government to provide both the leadership and the direction in order that we can manage the affairs of Parliament in a much more sensible way.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the points which have been made by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), as well as the points made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), illustrate in an effective way how the Government has sold a bill of goods to the Canadian people. The Government talked about openness. We have heard the Government House Leader say that he wants to have more discussion and more involvement by individual parliamentarians. We then heard the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) say this morning that he wants to cut, cease, abort the debate after only 50 Members have had a chance to speak. I am not sure whether the Government with its 211-person majority thinks that participation by 50 Members, many of them members of the Opposition, is enough. As was pointed out by my hon. friend from Saint-Henri-Westmount, the Government wants to cut off debate after 11 hours and 24 minutes.

The people of Canada should know that in the two tax measures which are before us specifically dealing with the issue of direct tax on persons and direct tax on corporations and government businesses the Government is cutting off debate after having spent only one hour on each $1 billion involved. We have been allowed only one hour of debate for every $1 billion which is being spent. For the Government to suggest that participation by 50 Members and debate of one hour for each $1 billion which will either be spent or taken from the Canadian people is adequate is to my mind an absolute farce. For the Government to suggest that it is somehow reforming the parliamentary process by insisting on a time allocation motion, the rebuttal of opposition arguments in the House, points to the fact that the Government has misled and lied to the Canadian people.

Let us consider the issue of direct taxes on corporations. Why is it that yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stood in his place in the House and talked about the wonderful minimum tax which will be imposed? He did not tell the Canadian people that, on balance, those people who will be charged the minimum tax will pay no more tax over the long term in their fiscal payments than they would have under the previous system. What he does not talk about is corporate taxation. What he does not talk about is the $7 billion which is currently sitting in deferrd taxes payable by 10 companies, the names of which I picked at random from Fortune magazine.

Ms. Mitchell: How did it accumulate? Under the Liberal regime.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says that the previous Liberal regime was responsible. As a matter of fact, she has not gone through Fortune magazine. She does not know the facts. If she or any member of her Party had taken the time to look, as have members of my Party, at a random selection of the Fortune 500, they would have seen that, according to the annual reports for 1985, Bell Canada Enterprises deferred taxes amounting to $1,693,000.

Mr. Orlikow: Because the Liberals gave them that opportunity.

Ms. Copps: This is because the Minister of Finance stood in the House and suggested he was bringing in tax reform.

We are here to debate the direct tax on corporations and Government businesses. Why does the Government not talk about the $7 billion in tax deferrals which have been given to Bell Enterprises, Commco, Great Lakes Forest Products, Imperial Oil, Inco, MacMillan Bloedel, Noranda, Norcen, the Oshawa Group, Tech Corp., Hiram Walker and Canadian Pacific? Why? Because the Government is not interested in real tax reform.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) on a point of order.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that naming companies and so on is the point of this debate.

Ms. Copps: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but it is very unfortunate that the Parliamentary Secretary does not even know what this Bill involves, because it deals directly with corporate taxes. Since we are discussing corporate taxes, it seems to me that this includes the taxes which MacMillan Bloedel, Bell Canada, Inco and Imperial Oil will not have to pay. It is unfortunate, but I can understand why the Progressive Conservative Members do not become involved with these issues, with the problems in Montreal East, with energy issues, and with the petro-chemical industry which is on the verge of disappearing in Montreal East.

I do not understand why they are not willing to become involved in these issues, just as they are not willing to become involved in the issues related to the footwear industry.

[English]

This morning, in the City of Hamilton, 70 per cent of the workers at a shoe heel factory will be laid off. The lay-off notices have already gone out as a direct result of the Government's lack of initiative on the quota issue. I wish to tell Hon. Members that Kinney Shoes is now buying all of its parts in Taiwan as a direct result of the Government's measure and initiative. Yet the Government tells the people of Canada that, yes, it is creating jobs. In fact, we heard the Minister of National Revenue laud the great economic record of his Government, a Government which fails to deal with the issues of the direct tax which is being imposed on people. The Government does not talk about the cut-backs with respect to family allowances or those which are being levied against every mother and child across the country by a Government which is still prepared to give a $500,000 capital gains write-off to the rich. It does not talk about the $7 billion in deferred taxes which has been given by the Government to corporations across the country, names of which I picked at random. I did not deal with all of the 500 in the Fortune 500. I picked only 10. As a matter of fact, if one looks at the full picture, the number of billions of dollars in deferred taxes, one will see that those taxes are far greater than any amount of money that the Government will be able to squeeze from the single mothers and families with children who are seeing their tax credits and child exemptions cut back because of the Government's policies.

I must say that when the Minister of National Revenue can stand in his place and suggest that 50 Members have participated in the debate and that it is time to shut down the House and time for the matter to go to comittee—

Mr. Gauthier: Only 32.

Ms. Copps: The Minister says 50. My Party Whip says 32. I trust our Whip's figures far more than those of the Minister of National Revenue. He does not even know how to get his appointment book straight.

As a matter of fact, 11 per cent of all MPs have spoken on this issue. Where are the Conservatives? Where are the trained seals on the Conservative side of the House? Why are they not speaking out to fight for their workers? We have not heard a word from the Conservative Members with respect to the shoe industry issue in the City of Hamilton, the seventh largest major employer in the city. Where is the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin)? Where is the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson)? We do not hear from them. They are too busy in a docile and knee-jerk fashion supporting policies of a Government which is prepared to destroy Canadian jobs and to send off all Kinney shoe orders to Taiwan.

The facts are in place. Kinney Shoes was a supplier to a Hamilton company which is now giving lay-off notices and what may end up in termination notices to 70 per cent of its employees. That decision was a direct result of this Government's refusal to protect the men's shoe industry in Canada. To quote one of the company spokesmen, the men's shoe industry in the country is dead. The women's footwear industry is not far behind. Yet we rely on those few in opposition—40 members of the Liberal Party and 30 members of the NDP—who have carried the responsibility, not only for dealing with this Bill, which, as I said, includes more than $11 billion in tax measures which are being either added or subtracted—and I can provide the figures to the House if Members would like to see them—but we are being permitted one hour of debate for every $1 billion worth of government expenditure or tax grab. That is from a Government which promised a new era of civility in the House. That is from a Government which promised to allow full participation by all Members. That is from a Government that was elected because people believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). People thought he was a man of his word. You may not have much in politics but what you do have is your word. If your word means something then people will support you. They may not always agree with your ideas, they may disagree with you on policy matters. I am sure that even in the Liberal Party from time to time we have disagreements on policy matters—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Beatty: Never. Tell us it isn't so.

Ms. Copps: If I am a person of my word, then the people of Canada will support me. Unfortunately, it has become clear that the Prime Minister is not a person of his word, and for that he will pay dearly.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to speak to the motion for allotting a limited period of time for subsequent consideration of the second reading stage of Bill C-84. As we know, the purpose of this Bill is to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act. This Bill is one of the major elements in the Government's strategy for injecting new vigour into the Canadian economy, hence the Government's emphasis on this legislation and the need for introducing a motion aimed at expediting its passage.

This Bill contains measures proposed in two Notices of Ways and Means Motions tabled in the House earlier this year, one a general Ways and Means Motion tabled on May 23 and the other a detailed Notice of a Ways and Means Motion tabled on November 21. The Bill is an integral component of a comprehensive strategy to secure durable economic growth and create jobs for all Canadians, and the Government's purpose in presenting this Bill is to provide a stable and consistent framework that will secure durable economic renewal. The major principles and broad parameters of this strategy were previously the subject of a clear and specific message when the Agenda for Economic Renewal was released in November 1984, and the first important measures were introduced when the Budget was brought down in May 1985.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the results are already being felt. The present rate of inflation is the lowest ever since 1971, and interest rate levels are such that major projects can now be undertaken. Of course the Opposition does not mention this, Mr. Speaker.

Since the Government came to office, the Canadian economy's performance has restored the faith of families and businesses in this country, and that is not being mentioned either. Economic growth has been far more vigorous than expected. Today, more than 300,000 Canadians who, a year ago, were unemployed have jobs. Consumer purchases, housing starts and investment are showing tremendous progress. The unemployment rate is still a little high but is dropping steadily, for the first time in ten years. This Bill marks a decisive stage in continuing our progress along the path we took on September 4, and its impact will undoubtedly be enhanced by the strategy already in place.

The Bill amends the Income Tax Act in significant ways, including a capital gains tax exemption of $500,000 that will encourage investment and enterpreneurship, although the Opposition prefers to take a distorted view of this measure. They cannot understand we are trying to work with and for Canadians. They cannot understand why a lifetime capital gains tax exemption of $500,000 is beneficial to business, to Canadians and especially to small businesses. Yesterday, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled his minimum tax measure, a measure the Liberals themselves had promised during the election campaign, instead of congratulating the Minister as the New Democrats did, they were complaining again. They can never find anything positive to say about what the Government does, and they have no alternatives to suggest either.

Mr. Speaker, these measures, which are aimed at increasing the fairness of the tax system in order to better protect the rights and economic effectiveness of Canadians, should be adopted as soon as possible.

Generally speaking, taxpayers will also get better protection with respect to search and seizure, audit and examination, and requests for tax information, and they do not mention that either. These are measures that tax experts and taxpayers have been asking for for ten years. This is the most extensive tax reform at the administrative level we have seen in the last fifteen years. They do not mention that and they did not even say once that it was a good measure.

An Hon. Member: They don't understand.

Some Hon. Members: They aren't even there.

Mr. Vincent: Right. There are not many on the other side either.

An Hon. Member: There is not a single Liberal in the House. Not one. Where are the Liberals?

Mr. Vincent: The Liberals? Mr. Speaker, they must be preparing speeches or looking for things to criticize.

As to the personal capital gains exemption, Mr. Speaker, it will indeed make it possible for us—and this is something the Liberals have never understood—to make the grade from a nation of savers to a nation of entrepreneurs.

Well, here is one coming in, not too bad.

It will give us an incentive to become more prosperous . . . Everything is just fine, Mr. Speaker. I like to have somebody in front of me when I speak.

Mrs. Mailly: We were getting bored, there was nobody.

Mr. Gauthier: Try to say something intelligent!

Mr. Vincent: I always speak intelligently. That is the difference! We were getting bored, Jean-Robert!

Mrs. Mailly: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, we believe that these new tax rules to encourage people to take risks and make productive investments are important. These things have not been emphasized, the Opposition has failed to understand them.

This Bill will help the Government strengthen the economy and improve investment prospects. As we all know, the more people will invest, the easier it will be to get financial backing at reasonable rates. The new tax rules will promote the investment of pension funds in the shares of small- and medium-sized businesses. These are good measures for all Canadians. First they will convince people that they should invest in small businesses, and then small businesses will grow more rapidly. Of course, the Opposition does not see it that way, and I am sure they will find arguments to say it is not good.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, more efforts will be made in research and development as a result of the new provisions concerning the capital gains tax, the elimination of restrictions in the definition of research and development eligible for tax incentives, and the higher ceiling on research and development tax credit. They have not said a word about, they did not even mention it.

A well designed corporate tax structure which reduces market imbalance to a minimum while appropriately rewarding risk takers contributes significantly to encourage private initiative. Mr. Speaker, reference has just been made to the minimum tax on individuals as compared with corporate taxes. Companies pay their taxes. All existing measures concerning corporations were not introduced by the Government that came into office on September 4. They were introduced by them, and now they complain that there are taxes to be collected. A tax system cannot be revamped overnight, but we did improve it a lot over the past year.

Mr. Speaker, the Government must be able to keep up the good work by adopting as soon as possible the measures contained in Bill C-84.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that those measures have already been the subject of four days of second reading debates, not to mention the fact that they had been discussed at length during the Budget debate last May and June. Under these circumstances, I should think that time has come to refer the Bill to committee so we might get an early start on the clause by clause study. This way, Mr. Speaker, Canadians will soon get to know the final wording of those important tax measures for which they are impatiently waiting.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, I went to the Ville-Saint-Laurent Board of Trade to meet tax experts who told me: Introduce a budget, but adopt tax laws within a normal period. Do not do as the former Government who used to wait two years or two and a half years. And that is again the purpose of this motion. But the people in the field, those the Opposition ignore, want to know what are the tax measures. All of them want to see a final text and want to see it implemented. That is what they want. They do no want to wait an additional six months. One must be aware of reality. One must realize that there are people waiting for these tax measures.

To conclude, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize a number of measures which demonstrate our Government's will to establish an equitable and well balanced tax system for Canadians.

[English]

This Bill contains measures to address our concerns for tax fairness. Through this Bill we have moved to prevent the use of income splitting to gain tax advantage. We believe fairness demands that the tax law be amended to correct this fault and stop those who have the resources to hire tax advisers from unduly abusing the system.

• (1150)

I listened to the whole debate on Bill C-84. I have not heard a single Member of the Opposition deal with it.

Mr. Gauthier: Because you are never here!

Mr. Vincent: I beg your pardon! I was here every time the House dealt with Bill C-84.

Mrs. Mailly: That is absolutely true. I can bear witness to that.

Mr. Vincent: Four days . . . I am not to blame if the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was absent. I have just told you so. During these four days, you had nothing to say, you only referred to capital gains.

Did you deal with the trusts' income splitting—

Mr. Gauthier: You are imposing a time allocation. Give us some time and we will deal with it.

Mr. Vincent: —which we have removed? Did you talk about that? No, nobody did. You did not talk about trust funds either.

Mr. Gauthier: You are imposing time allocation.

Mr. Vincent: Is it a good measure? Naturally, it could not be a good measure—

Mrs. Mailly: Because it was introduced by a Conservative Government, I suppose—

Mr. Vincent: Instead of coming forward with useful suggestions, you keep on saying that there is never anything good—

Mr. Gauthier: There is never much good in this Government.

Mr. Vincent: You did not even find the minimum tax scheme good yesterday.

[English]

Our concern for fairness also spills over into the area of tax administration. Any gains in substantial tax fairness would be inadequate without corresponding advances in procedural fairness.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I see that the time allocated to me has expired.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the other Members who have already spoken to add my protest to the way in which we operate in this Parliament. Despite the report of the committee which looked into changing and improving the procedures of the House, which we heard discussed in considerable detail last night, I do not think that anything which it proposed will change the very serious defect in the way in which we are operating today.

Surely the way in which the Government of Canada raises the funds it needs to provide services to the Canadian people is of the utmost importance. Surely the tax system, who pays taxes, and how much they pay ought to be discussed in great detail. We ought to allot all the time necessary for that. Instead, we have a very short period of time for discussion. The Budget was introduced in May and now, in December, we are dealing with the Budget and tax Bills under the gun. It must be done quickly and the Government has now moved to limit debate. Surely there is something fundamentally wrong with that.

I could not get up to speak without making a few comments about what I consider to be the phenomenal gall of members of the Official Opposition. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finally brought in a proposal for a minimum tax, an idea first brought forward by the Leader of our Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), which was endorsed in a television debate during the election campaign by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). We see defects in the proposal of the Minister of Finance. We do not think that it goes far enough and we believe that there are too many tax loopholes for individuals and corporations. That proposal was criticized by the spokesperson for the Official Opposition, the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston). Today we observed the spectacle of the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) listing 10 corporations, including CPR, Bell Canada and Dome Petroleum, just a few of the major corporations, which paid no real corporation tax at all because those taxes have been deferred indefinitely. The Member listed only 10 corporations. There are probably 100 corporations doing that. Instead of the $7 billion or $10 billion which she talked about, the figure is probably $30 billion or $40 billion.

How did that happen, Mr. Speaker? It did not happen just because we have had a Conservative Government for just over a year. It happened because for 25 or more years Liberal Governments brought forward Budgets and implemented provisions which permitted and encouraged corporations to do that kind of thing. Large corporations have not been paying their fair share of taxes for generations. It was Liberal Governments which permitted and encouraged that and the Conservative Government still is allowing too much of that to go on.

Our criticism of the Budget and of the tax measure is that the Government started with a completely mistaken objective in designing them. The Government believes that the reason we have unemployment and that the country is not operating at full capacity is that the deficit is too big. Well, Mr. Speaker, the deficit is not too big because we are spending too much money providing services and meeting the needs of the Canadian people. The deficit is big because the economy is not working at full capacity. The deficit is too big because we have more than 10 per cent unemployment and because our factories are working at probably only 65 or 70 per cent of capacity.

During World War II the deficit rose from less than 1 per cent of gross national expenditures in 1939 to 21 per cent in 1944. However, unemployment, which had been almost 11.5 per cent, fell to 1.5 per cent. The Government has followed the rhetoric of President Reagan and not the reality of what he does. It has been pointed out to us that the American economy has been growing and producing more jobs. President Reagan has talked about the evils of deficit financing by government. However, the Government deficit in the United States was $1 trillion when President Reagan took office and, at the end of eight years in office, that deficit will have doubled. While President Reagan talks about the need to cut the deficit, it will actually double.

What will the effect be of the kind of deficit cutting the Government has done? We will be told that we are making these criticisms because we are partisan and will not accept anything the Government proposes. I will put on the record the views of the United Church of Canada which issued an analysis of the proposed Budget shortly after it was presented in May. The United Church said that there is no decisive action toward ending poverty in the Budget and that, in fact, the Budget will deepen poverty in Canada. It stated that changes in the federal sales tax, for example, are regressive and mean additional tax cuts to poor families.

Not only did the Budget increase the sales tax by 1 per cent, it added a host of health and related items on which sales tax must be paid which were not previously included in the sales tax. This added cost affects poor people in particular. As a result of this Budget we will add to the several million people already living in poverty.

Instead of helping the poor, the United Church of Canada says that there is an erosion of social support. Instead of action against inequality, tax breaks are of greatest benefit to high income earners and corporations. These tax breaks will amount to billions of dollars. Rather than making a commitment to full employment and direct help with job assistance for investors, it places its faith in the private sector and trickle down economics.

The Government is taking credit for the fact that unemployment has come down somewhat—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the 10 minute period has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: One more sentence, Mr. Speaker. Unemployment is still over 10 per cent and all estimates show that in the years to come we will continue to have unemployment of more than 10 per cent. I say that that is shameful and unacceptable.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak today on second reading of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes. This Bill is part of our Government's plan to facilitate lasting economic renewal by improving tax fairness, controlling and reducing high deficits and stimulating private initiative. Its passage will provide the legislative authority for several changes to income tax measures outlined in last May's Budget.

Changes that will encourage private initiative will include $500,000 personal capital gains exemption, measures to encourage RRSP and labour and pension fund investment in small business, improvements to tax incentives available for research and development, and a special tax credit for investment in Cape Breton.

Changes to improve Government effectiveness include an increase of $140 in the child tax credit and increased tax assistance for the disabled and artists. I can empathize with both those areas, Mr. Speaker, and I will expand on that in a moment. Furthermore, there are clear limits on Revenue Canada's powers of search and seizure.

Changes that will help to control the deficit include modifications to personal income tax indexation, an end to the federal tax reduction and an end to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan.

The complexities of this Bill are obvious. Therefore, I urge the House to refer Bill C-84 to a legislative committee quickly, where it may be carefully and thoroughly examined.

Today, I would like to focus on the legislative changes that will aid artists, charities, small businesses and, time permitting, to examine the special investment tax credit.

Bill C-84 includes two measures that will aid the arts sector. Visual artists will be permitted to write off costs involved in creating a work of art in the year that the expenses are incurred. At present, they must wait until the work is sold. This alteration remedies the current rule that has caused difficulties for artists in valuing their finished works of art on hand, incurred expenses and the carrying of inventories for long periods of time.

This change will allow artists to write off the costs of creating art when they are incurred rather than when the art is sold and, very important, it will defer taxes in respect of the artistic endeavour until the artist realizes proceeds from the sale of his or her art. I believe that that is a tremendous change that will be applauded by artists across the country.

The second measure will permit an individual visual artist who donates his or her own work of art to charity after 1984 to elect any amount up to the fair market value of the work, as both the artist's proceeds of disposition and the amount of the gift. The current requirement has created an obstacle to giving by artists because the income inclusion often exceeds the 20 per cent limitation on the general charitable donation deduction and the gift can consequently cost the artist a substantial amount of money. This amendment alleviates the disincentive since an elected amount which is less than the fair market value of the gift will mean a smaller income inclusion and a greater use of the charitable donation deduction. This piece of legislation includes two measures of relevance to registered charities.

The first measure will permit registered charities, in the 1985 and subsequent taxation years, to engage in non-partisan political activities that are incidental to their primary charitable purposes or activities.

The amendment recognizes that it is appropriate for a charity to use its resources, within defined limits, for incidental political activities in support of its charitable goals. These activities would include advertising, rental of facilities or mass mailings to influence public opinion toward the organization's views on matters of law or Government policy related to its charitable purposes. I emphasize that it has to be related to the charitable purposes of that organization. Furthermore, this measure does not affect the present unrestricted ability of charity to provide information and express its views in briefs to Government to effect change in laws or policies.

The second measure concerns the donation of intangible capital property, such as shares, to charity. Currently, a taxpayer who donates tangible capital property to a charity is permitted under a present rule to elect to have an amount less than fair market value treated as both his or her proceeds and the amount of his or her gift. Bill C-84 will extend this special rule to donations of intangible capital property made after 1984 and will remove the requirement that the property be suitable for use by the charity directly in its activities.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated in his Budget speech, lack of access to start-up capital has been a constraint for many small and medium sized businesses. Our Government is taking strong steps to remedy this situation.

At present, farmers and small businesses can arrange financing of up to $500,000 under the small business bonds program, at interest rates that have typically been 5 to 6 percentage points less than they would otherwise have had to pay.

The small business bonds program was scheduled to expire in 1985. It has played a useful role in providing interest rate relief in cases where a business failure might otherwise have resulted. The program has been particularly important to agriculture and there is a growing awareness of its role in that sector.

Bill C-84 will extend the program for a further two years to cover debt instruments issued before the end of 1987. Bill C-84 also introduces measures which will allow taxpayers who have borrowed under this program to either refinance existing loans or obtain new loans at any time before 1988 where the borrowers are in financial difficulty.

Moreover, the present rules provide that the aggregate face value of all such bonds issued by the taxpayer and other related parties cannot exceed $500,000. The measures contained in this legislation ensure that a taxpayer in financial difficulty may issue a small business bond at any time after May 23, 1985, and before 1988 if the total principal amounts outstanding does not exceed $500,000.

The last measure I would like to mention briefly is the special investment tax credit. Five years ago a tax credit was introduced to encourage investment in areas of Canada suffering from high unemployment and low per-capita income. This tax credit was scheduled to expire on December 31 of this year. Bill C-84 extends the expiry date for one year to accommodate investments made on or before December 31, 1986. A further extension of the credit applies for buildings under construction on December 31, 1986. In such cases, the tax credit will be available if the property is acquired before 1988.

In conclusion, I move:

That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a), the House continue to sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing its consideration of the motion now before it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Would those Hon. Members who object to it please rise in their places?

Mr. Deans: I object to it most strenuously. It is an abuse of the House.

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There being fewer than 25 Members rising in the House, pursuant to Standing Order (9)(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been adopted.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, for a sixth time since this Government came to power, it is using its overwhelming majority in this House to gag Opposition Members. For the sixth time, Mr. Speaker! Is this the kind of democracy the Prime Minister had in mind during the election campaign? Is that the kind of civility he was also referring to during the campaign? I really wonder whether this Government has not decided, by using closure on every occasion, to prevent the Opposition from doing its work, notwithstanding the limited number of its Members.

Mr. Speaker, having Parliament gagged after just nine hours of discussion is truly a shame for democracy. Nine hours of debate on a piece of legislation that has scores of pages, hundreds of clauses.

A while ago, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), I believe, mentioned the fact that quite a number of items have not been considered, that the Opposition has not raised all the questions concerning some aspects of the Bill. That was to be expected, Mr. Speaker, because the debate has been going on for nine hours only, and because of the alternation of speakers from both sides of the House, it must be realized that the time needed for an honest, open and complete discussion of the Bill has not been made available, and the motion introduced by the Government House Leader is really a motion that I would brand as shameful for democracy and for the Government majority.

They are so imbued with power, they are so comfortable with their majority that they can no longer hear—I know that this is not your case, Mr. Speaker, but that of those backbenchers—they are so permeated with the power that has befallen them that they want to strangle democracy in this House by imposing closure—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the "father of the Quebec deficit" should be allowed to speak on this Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member needs to listen to a parliamentary debate or needs to go to the hospital for an injection because I believe there has to be something wrong buzzing between her ears. There has to be something that does not work well.

Mr. Speaker, if the Speaker will . . . I think it is better to leave it at that, yes, it will be better. Because if anyone wants to discuss the Quebec financial administration at the time I was Minister of Finance, I am quite ready to take up the challenge any time, either in this House or on TV—

An Hon. Member: Especially with her!

Mr. Garneau: Yes, especially with her.

Mr. Speaker, those back-benchers are so obsessed with their lust for controlling everything, for imposing their dictatorship over everything, that after only nine hours of debate on such a major Bill, they decide to gag this House.

I heard some of the Members say earlier that certain aspects of the Bill had not been dealt with. Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the reason why we are fighting this motion, to give those back-benchers an opportunity to explain, for instance, why the Government has decided to increase by $11 billion personal income taxes by the end of this decade. It would be important to have this provision fully discussed, and to be told why they are going to take $11 billion more from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers by the end of this decade.

I would like them to say, for instance, why they scrapped the plan through which young couples could accumulate funds in order to own their own homes eventually. In my view, it would be important for them to explain why young couples will henceforth be prevented from saving tax-free dollars for the purpose of buying their first homes. This will indeed mean an increased tax burden in the future, not to mention the negative effect it will have on home building in Canada, on jobs in the construction industry and on the quality of housing.

Mr. Speaker, had they not imposed closure, I suppose they would have explained why they chose by way of that provision in Bill C-84 and by way of changes in the family allowance scheme, why they chose to deprive Canadian families by the end of the decade of a little over $1 billion in benefits they used to receive as family allowances or child tax credits. This added together means a $1 billion loss by the end of the decade. It would be important for Progressive Conservative Members, who are so happy to sit with the majority, to explain to us why. Moreover, could we conceivably examine in only nine hours of debate all aspects of such an important Bill which contains hundreds and hundreds of clauses? Mr. Speaker, there is the whole aspect of capital gains, considering that the Government Party has been complaining for many years, and especially since the election campaign, about the extremely high deficit and what it costs Canadians in interest rates.

Well, I should like the Government to explain to us why, if it is so anxious to reduce the deficit, it has granted a capital gains tax break of up to $500,000 to the most affluent people in our society, a tax break which will result in a total revenue loss of nearly $5 billion by the end of this decade.

Yesterday, the Government announced a minimum tax scheme, and I urge all Hon. Members to read carefully the explanatory notes concerning farmers. I know that there will be temporary measures concerning farmers, but a farmer who has been told ever since the introduction of this budget that he would benefit from a capital gains tax exemption on the sale of his farm, and when we look now into the minimum tax scheme, we realize that this is a once in a life time tax break opportunity, and that if he has already used it as a great many other Canadian taxpayers have, he will have to pay an income tax of 12.5 per cent or even 25 per cent. I think that Government Members should explain that to us in the context of the capital gains tax, because an exemption is not a gift or something which happens at the time of death, because I do not see why a farmer should be penalized as a taxpayer for the rest of his life. Under this Conservative measure, he could not benefit from his investments. He would have to keep his tax break until he sold his farm to a son 25 years hence; if he has already enjoyed that tax break, he will be taxed up to 25 per cent or 12.5 per cent . . . The Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne), is signaling that such is not the case. He should read the document again and tell me today if it is not true that a farmer who has used his capital gains tax break will be taxed just as he would have been before this new measure when he sells his property at age 65. And Progressive Conservative Members have been bragging about the enormous benefits for farmers.

We on this side of the House did, and do, agree that farmers should not be penalized with respect to capital gains on the sale of their farms. We said in the past that we thought they should have owned them for a period of ten years or so in order to be subject to that provision, but the Conservatives after having done a flip-flop are bringing in a tax: they closed the front door and opened the back door. Those Government Members, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) and others, could use their allotted time to explain why, under what rationale, and how they can claim on the one hand that they are fighting the deficit and, on the other hand, that they are giving away some $5 billion in fiscal benefits. In my view, they should do that. I think you should explain why. And the Conservatives could also explain why, when they are so anxious to fight the deficit, they grant benefits to the rich, why they give close to $9 billion in benefits to the multinational oil companies.

Perhaps we could be told about that, and clearly nine hours of debate have not been enough because nobody has referred to that. Certainly there are measures the Conservatives would want to brag about more, and we have nothing against that. But in the Opposition, we believe our duty is to point to the weaknesses in any legislation. We know very well the majority will revel in the strong points, but go ahead, discuss them, tell the Canadian taxpayers by way of this debate why you are going to increase taxes, why you are going to deindex income tax tables, which will be costing taxpayers an extra $11 billion. Yes, you tell us! Tell us why you are going to add a surtax, yes, tell us, a surtax that will mean $610 million over the next two years. Tell us why you have removed the federal tax ... the federal tax reduction, which will be costing millions, that is $80 million the first year, $500 million the second year, $600 million the third year. Tell us why you will be imposing such taxes on Canadians.

You will say that it is in order to reduce the Liberals' deficit? But in the same breath you will be granting tax benefits to the rich and to the multinational oil corporations. I believe it is possible in a democratic debate to explain such flip-flops and contradictions that exist between on the one hand personal income tax increases and $1 billion cuts in family benefits, and on the other hand tax benefits that are handed out to oil multinationals and to the most affluent people. Concerning the capital gains tax, we are not the only ones suggesting that this makes no sense at all. My colleague for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) pointed out earlier in this debate, for instance, a most interesting report in the Financial Post, which gives the views expressed by tax experts.

This is not just a partisan debate whose only purpose is to hinder the Government, as these are tax experts who got together and who clearly said that, in spite of the fact that they will personally benefit from the Conservative Budget, because naturally, they will have to be consulted in view of the mess of the capital gains tax situation and they will make money, but in spite of these personal benefits, if I may quote from a Financial Post article written by Mr. Gordon Pitts about this meeting of chartered accountants:

• (1220)

[English]

"They will earn hefty fees", but just the same they say, and I have to conclude, "that the proposal is ill-conceived and poorly designed."

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals are not the only ones to say so. Closure is a disgrace for Parliamentary democracy and for the Conservatives, and the taxpayers will eventually be the ones to pay for it.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as other Members have mentioned in this House, this debate marks the sixth time in its brief and inglorious history that the Government has imposed closure on this House.

Mr. Boudria: You did say inglorious.

Mr. Parry: Inglorious is the word I used and inglorious is the word that I am prepared to justify. If my hon. friend wants to go further in his condemnation, he will have his chance later.

I was somewhat amazed to hear the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) in proposing this closure motion compare his Government's record to that of the previous Liberal maladministration, because, of course, it was precisely because this Government stated that it could and would perform better that it was elected with such a large majority. The improvements are really not worthy of the sort of trumpeting that the Minister gave to them.

Even those of us who were not in the House at the time know the record of the Liberal Government with its Budgets and how legislation sometimes never even made it to the House of Commons, how it was delayed for this and that.

Mr. Nunziata: Go easy.

Mr. Parry: The Hon. Member should ask me to go easy. This is a record that is worthy of further exposure and further examination.

This Government stated that it was going to do a lot better than that. We might categorize the improvement in the gesture of a well-known if not well-loved international leader as being a tiny little bit. That is all it is. For the Government to be introducing after such a short period of debate, barely into double figures in terms of hours, a measure which has such far-reaching impact—the Government says it is for the betterment, but we know, having done the calculations, that it will have far-reaching impact for the worst for the majority of Canadians—that it should have the nerve to introduce a motion of closure after barely double figures of hours of debate in this Chamber, does not reflect very well on this Government's stated commitment to consultation. First and foremost, it is in this Chamber that the consultation that the Government trumpeted so loudly should be taking place.

It is unfortunate that the Government has shown that it too is having difficulty in managing a parliamentary agenda. It is particularly unfortunate when we consider the very housekeeping nature, I would not use the word "trivial", but the fairly basic and simple nature of some of the legislation that has been put before us, that the lack of management of the parliamentary agenda should have led us to this point where we are debating closure of Bill C-84 which essentially enshrines the major Government budget measures in legislation. Just the size of Bill C-84 surely is illustrative of the importance the Government should give it in debate in this House. Just the thickness of that bill should give us an indication that it is something to be taken seriously and exposed to broad and far-reaching and, yes, let us not be afraid to use the word, lengthy public discussion in this Chamber.

When I look at the nature of some of the amendments, I have to acknowledge that they are worth while. Indeed, in my speech on the Bill I stated that if I was not able to say something good, I would not say anything at all. I mentioned that there were worth-while measures. We saw another one put before us yesterday. Of course, we have not had the opportunity to analyse it sufficiently. Again, it was a sign of some common sense in the tax system. The good effect of that common sense, I am afraid, is very much negatived by the bite which Bill C-84 proposes to take out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians. I was surprised to hear the use of that phrase criticized by a Member of parliament quite recently in the debate on Bill C-84 because I think most ordinary Canadians know that they are ordinary Canadians. They can tell when they come to do their income tax form not only where they stand in the relative strata of income in our society—where the top 10 per cent takes 40 per cent of the income and the bottom 20 per cent takes 4 per cent—they know where they stand and where they will be standing after this Government's Budget. It is not going to be in a position of relative advantage to where they stood before that Budget.

The proposal to take away the indexing provisions from the tax bans in the present income tax system, to cut out the first 3 per cent, can best be characterized as profiteering on inflation. If there is one thing on which the previous Liberal Government could be complimented, it is that it did have the intelligence to realize in the early 1970s that inflation was supplementing or swelling Government revenues to a degree that was inordinate. Inflation was taking too much out of the pockets of individual Canadian taxpayers. The Government of the time realized that those taxes should be indexed in order that the effect of inflation on income would not lead to an excess tax burden when considering taxation in relation to disposable taxable income.

I am afraid to say that that approach is now going by the boards. The deduction of 3 per cent from the indexing provisions means that we will be in the position that we were in before 1973 of the Government making a profit on inflation. I do not think that is progressive nor is it the sort of provision that we want to see in our tax system. I for one would like to see the House spend much more time debating that sort of measure.

Yesterday we heard the Government's announcement on the alternative minimum tax. I think it would be worth while to take a few minutes to juxtapose the effect that will have on the effect of the changes in the pension deduction limits particularly on those with higher incomes. When the Registered Retirement Savings Plan and Registered Pension Plan deductions combined reach the level of $15,500 in 1990, we can anticipate that far from the cut-off point today of someone who earns an average income of $50,000, Canadians earning up to $200,000 will have the opportunity through contributing to pension plans of sheltering as big a portion of their income as those making a contribution of $1,200 or $1,500 per year for a much more modest pension. I would like to put on the record the effect that this will have on earnings that are far from modest but not by any means the highest.

Before the Budget, someone earning an income of $80,000 per year would have protected through his pension contribution that which was allowable for the deduction and would have saved $1,761 in taxes. After the Budget, by 1990 they will be able to save $4,328 in taxes. These are figures put together by the National Council on Welfare, the contribution of which we acknowledge. That represents a very considerable increase in the tax break on RRSPs and RPPs. I do not say that that is necessarily bad. I do say that there must be further discussion on this sort of measure. This is the sort of thing that is worthy of detailed consideration because that $2,500 would make up a very substantial proportion of the income of a person on welfare. In fact, under the welfare regime in the Province of Quebec, I believe that that would pay for the welfare of a single person under 30. While those amounts may seem to those of us who are fortunate to have reasonably high incomes to be modest figures, they are in fact very significant figures when related to the other social goals and objectives to which we in this Party certainly subscribe and for which the Government has expressed support, support which we do not see in practical terms.

When I rose to speak in the debate the other day, I spoke at some length on capital gains. I heard my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), quote from the report of the Financial Post, from which I too had quoted, concerning the way in which the $500,000 capital gains exemption could be used. Since I last spoke, other examples have appeared in the newspapers of the way in which these tax loopholes may be used.

We heard of the example of a research tax credit that was being converted into Brazilian cruzeiros in order that the people who were investing the money could presumably profit from the forecast fall in the value of that unfortunate country's currency. That is but one example. I am sure there will be many other examples of ways in which present tax loopholes and the newly introduced capital gains exemption can be misused. That is why I feel that Bill C-84 deserves a lot more debate than the Government is prepared to allow.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Once again, Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in a situation where the Government with its huge majority decides to gag the Opposition. It is disquieting to note that this is not an isolated case. On the contrary, if we examine the Government record over the past year, this is the sixth time the Government resorts to Standing Order 80 to silence the Opposition and avoid a serious debate on important measures.

The first time the Government used this tactic was on Bill C-15, the Investment Canada Act. Then came Bill C-62, the employment equity legislation. As we recall, that particular Bill was badly drafted, it did not include any kind of enforcement mechanism, a Bill which was discredited by all the designated groups which were supposed to benefit from it.

After that we had Bill C-70 with its cut-backs and deindexation of family allowances: the Government chose to drop the guillotine, gag the Opposition and get the House to pass quickly that despicable Bill to which most Canadians are opposed. Then in turn came Bill C-80, the excise tax on drugs sold over the counter, the tax on all kinds of health products about which the public has again voiced strong opposition. The Government also ended the debate as soon as possible by imposing closure on the House of Commons with respect to Bill C-86 which will enable the Government to re-imburse the major depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and of the Northland Bank, people having deposits in excess of $60,000 which are not covered under deposit insurance. Again the public raised hell, so the Government imposed closure to silence the Opposition.

Here we are today with Bill C-84, a rather special piece of legislation. A simple look reveals that the Bill has 234 pages, 143 clauses, then a schedule with 11 more clauses. It is almost an encyclopaedia, Mr. Speaker, a telephone directory, a Sears catalogue, a Bill thick enough to make Government backbenchers understand our position. Indeed, as we hear in the TV commercial, "there is no need for a dictionary to understand that". It is a huge Bill which will affect every facet of taxation. The Government lowers the boom, not after two or three weeks of debates, but barely after two days, even before the end of the second day of debate. Earlier today my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said after nine hours of debate, if Hon. Members want to know, I checked with the Table officials. We had discussed the principles of this bill for exactly nine hours and 45 minutes when the Government decided to put an end to the debate. I am beginning to understand why. The more I look at this bill, the more I realize that it does not involve only one principle. There are 25 principles involved, as the bill affects many provisions of many acts including, naturally, the Income Tax Act, but also the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act.

It is therefore a very complex bill, and I believe that the reason why this Government wants to ram this measure through the House of Commons is that it includes atrocious proposals, the worst one being the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption that will benefit the rich. Naturally, this proposal has been hidden in this Bill. It has been burried with some 50 others. The Bill includes 69 proposals. We have spoken about the others and I can tell you all about them. Personal exemptions are being de-indexed. This is an underhand way to collect taxes without anyone taking notice. Deductions for dependent children will be reduced. All these proposals are hidden in this Bill. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members opposite do not want to hear the truth and that is why they have imposed closure. Indeed, that is why the Government uses closure more and more.

We have a Government which uses its enormous majority to force its views on the Opposition. Instead of being content to win one vote after another in the House of Commons, the Government wants to prevent the Opposition from having reasonable discussions about its legislation.

This Bill is so far-reaching that there can be no justification for cutting off debate after only nine hours and 25 minutes. It is unthinkable, Mr. Speaker.

A Canadian Press article had this to say:

• (1240)

[English]

It is a real disgrace. The Government is steamrolling the Bill.

[Translation]

This means that the Government is ramming the Bill through the House of Commons. It is exactly what is happening.

An Hon. Member: Using the steamroller.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Exactly, using the steamroller. You can correct me if you want, but what I am trying to do is to stop you from using your majority abusively. You will be held accountable not only for the way the country is being managed, but also for how the way you are dealing with the democratic rights of the voters we represent in this House.

I do not have much more to say. I think that I have made my point. It is a national shame that this bill is being rushed through the House of Commons. This is the thickest Bill, both literally and figuratively, that we have had in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to witness that.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my serious concern about the use of time allocation with respect to the measure which is before us. Last night those of us who stayed in this place quite late in the evening had a moving experience in talking about parliamentary reform. We had hoped that, perhaps, we could work together in a more positive way in the House to benefit all Canadians. Again, today, we have not only time allocation imposed but the fact that the debate will take up the lunch hour is symbolic.

I wish to concentrate my remarks pertaining to Bill C-84 on the social aspects of it. I wish to deal with the effects the Bill will have on child and family benefits. The Bill which reflects the Conservative Budget is really the beginning of a process of erosion with respect to family benefits generally. I wish to illustrate this point with several examples. It is not just I and my Party who say that this measure is a serious erosion of family benefits, it is all the social policy groups in Canada which have appeared both before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs and the legislative committee to which Bill C-70 was referred. There was not one witness who appeared before either committee who agreed with the measures being taken by the Government.

The combined package of tax changes which will affect the child tax credit, the child tax exemption and the family allowance is definitely an attack on families and children. In particular, it is an attack on women. I have said this before in relation to the family allowance issue. I say it now in relation to the changes and supposed reforms which are now before us. In my view they are not at all reforms to tax measures in a positive sense but something which will really hurt families.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that we are talking about not just average families who have to pay the costs of raising children and who have many more expenses and responsibilities than taxpayers who have no children at all, but we are talking about families which have several children and who are hurt several times over by the tax changes which will reduce benefits for families with children.

I would like to remind Members of the House about the very high incidence of poor families in Canada. The number is not decreasing in my Province of British Columbia. In fact, it is increasing. It increased 400 per cent over the last four years in British Columbia. There are over 4.4 million poor still in Canada and there are 1.5 million poor children. We hear these figures but I hope Hon. Members will take a moment really to comprehend what they mean.

We have already spoken about the family allowance which will be deindexed by 3 per cent. We will continue to protest this move. We have petitions flooding into our offices every day protesting such a cut. This is a measure which, by 1990, will take away $1 billion from the children of Canada. It will reduce the value of the family allowance, the only universal program which goes to all families. When representatives of the CLC appeared before the legislative committee they said that in 20 years' time, by the year 2005, the family allowance will actually decrease in value from $32, which it is today, to $18. That is a substantial decrease. If one thinks of the effect that this will have on families with several children, it can be seen that it is a major erosion in terms of the universal family program.

Of course, with regard to the Bill which is before us we are referring to tax measures. In this respect let us consider the child tax credit. We will agree, as will all the authorities, that this is a progressive tax measure. It is targeted at the low and middle income families in society. At any rate, it has been that in the past and according the Conservative Government it is really a program that is in place to help those in greatest need. The Government professes to be focusing on improving the child tax credit while it reduces other benefits to children. If we look at the measure before us more closely we will see that even the child tax credit, which will be increased next year, will be reduced in the long run. I would like to be more specific in this respect.

As I have said, the child tax credit will be increased by about $70 next year. I would like to point out that this increase will be cancelled by the sales taxes which the Budget will impose on these same families. Thus, poor families will not really have any more in their pockets. The amount of money will increase to $454 per child by the year 1987.

However, let us remember that the Conservative Government while pretending to give with the one hand is actually taking away with the other hand through the deindexation of the child tax credit. It will be reduced considerably. There will be a cap placed on the cost of living index with respect to the child tax credit by the year 1989. The eligibility requirements for the child tax credit are being seriously reduced. To qualify for the child tax credit this year a family will have to earn $26,500, which is just getting close to the average income. We would rather see that figure set at $30,000. However, the eligibility requirement is being reduced to $23,500. That might not sound like a big reduction in one year but if the deindexation is added to the level of the child tax credit the eligibility goes down year after year after year.

Let us listen to what the CLC had to say with respect to the child tax credit. It says that by the year 2005, in 20 years, the value of the child tax credit as a result of the measures in this Bill will be reduced to $326. It is projected that it will go down from $480 in 1988 to $384 by the year 2005.

Not only is the value of the child tax credit decreasing but the eligibility requirements are being drastically reduced. Families earning $13,800 will mark the eligibility level for the child tax credit in 20 years' time. That is down from $26,000. Even the poorest families will not be receiving the child tax credit by that time. This is something that is extremely serious. It is dishonest and hypocritical of the Government to say that the tax measures it is bringing in will benefit those in greatest need. It will not benefit those in greatest need. Instead, it will penalize them.

The National Council on Welfare says that by the year 1990 even the poorest families will lose $8 just in specific family benefits. And if you add all the other measures in the Budget, they will suffer even more. But that is reflective of Tory philosophy. There is no question about that. It is a philosophy which leads to finding $1 billion overnight to bail out the banks, at the same time taking $1 million away from Canada's children by 1990. It gives $9 billion to the oil companies and takes away the benefits from families. It is incredible that the Government can say that it is interested in strengthening families and in helping those in greatest need. These measures do not help families. In fact, they are very harmful to families and reflect the true philosophy of the Tories. They do not really care about people and families, particularly those people who are hardest hit.

We feel that the minimum tax is a step in the right direction, but is only a step, let us not kid ourselves. It has not erased the errors imposed on us by the Liberal Government. We feel we should reduce the marginal tax rate to the 1981 benefits. If we did this, we would have lots of money to improve family benefits, to increase employment programs and to reindex the family allowance. We would gain over $1.7 billion in revenue just this year if we went back to the 1981 marginal tax levels.

Even with the minimum tax, we will have money coming in which I believe should be used to do away with the deindexation of the child tax credit and the family allowance.

I have just a short time left to mention the child tax exemption. This is a very regressive measure. We said over and over in committee that this should be done away with, but only if we increase the child tax credit to cover the average and middle income families, and only if we maintain a fully indexed family allowance. The Government has not had the guts to do much for the child tax exemption. It will reduce it gradually by 1989 to the same amount as the family allowance. It will be deindexed as well.

Here again, this is an attack on taxpayers who have children. It is causing them to contribute, whereas those families who do not have children are not contributing in the same way. It is the middle income families which are hardest hit by these measures.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would very much like the opportunity to debate Bill C-84 but I am precluded from doing so because of the motion of closure which was moved by this Conservative Government. As a duly elected Member of this House, I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have a right to speak to the merits of this particular piece of legislation in order for my constituents, and others, to understand and appreciate where I stand and where the Liberal Opposition stands on this important piece of legislation. However, I am precluded from doing so because of this shameful, undemocratic motion put forward by the Conservative Government.

This is the sixth time since Parliament began a year ago that the Government has found it necessary to invoke closure, notwithstanding the fact that when that Party was on this side of the House it cried foul on the rare occasions in which the former administration invoked closure. The Conservative Government is showing contempt for every Hon. Member of this House. It is showing contempt for the democratic process and for Parliament. We have had only nine short hours of debate on a piece of legislation which implements the major budget measures which were introduced last May.

One could ask why this Government has decided to invoke closure after only nine hours of debate. Why is this Government so hypocritical when it comes to the issues of closure? I think the answer is obvious, and I am sure you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, when I say that the Government is doing so because it is embarrassed. It is because it cannot stand the heat of the criticism arising out of its Budget of last May. Hon. Members of the Conservative Party cannot stand up in this House and defend this Bill, so what did they do? They decided to cut off debate and preclude Hon. Members of this House from speaking to the merits of this particular piece of legislation.

When I say that my privileges are being breached, I am speaking for all other Hon. Members of this House who want to speak to this piece of legislation but who cannot, and it is a shameful situation. It shows the arrogance of this Government and the hypocrisy.

The people of Canada spoke on September 4 of last year. They clearly wanted a change and they got that change. They elected 211 Conservative Members of Parliament. But they also elected 70 opposition Members and one independent. The people of Canada did not elect a dictatorship, nor did they expect that a dictatorship would result. By invoking closure on this occasion, and on the five other occasions, the Government is leading Canadians to conclude that this Conservative Government would like to rule Canada as a dictatorship. The Opposition Party is essential. It is a check and balance that this Government, or any other Government, does not run rough-shod over the people of Canada. Why is this Government stifling debate on this particular piece of legislation? Why has it done so on five previous occasions, which I indicated is unparliamentary and undemocratic? It is the basis of a parliamentary system that the Opposition be heard but, more importantly, that it be given an opportunity to debate in this House items of concern to Canadians. What has happened is that closure is becoming the rule rather than the exception to the rule. All Hon. Members recognize that closure is a tool which may be necessary in certain circumstances. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that those circumstances are extreme circumstances when, for whatever reason, a piece of legislation must be passed and passed expeditiously. Closure is not meant, and was never meant, to be a tool used by Government to stifle healthy, constructive debate in this House. But that is precisely what the Government is doing with this piece of legislation.

This Parliament and our democracy can only work with a healthy and vigorous Opposition. Had it not been for the Opposition, the Government would not have backed down on issues like the deindexation of senior citizens' pensions. It was because of the work done by the Opposition in this House and in mobilizing public support for the position taken by the Opposition, that the Government eventually backed down. We had a healthy debate, a good debate, on the issue of deindexation of senior citizens' pensions. The Government realized that it had erred and it backed down.

All we are asking for now is the opportunity for Members on this side of the House to speak on Bill C-84. However, we cannot do that because the Government is using its overwhelming majority to cut off debate. It would not take long to give every Member of the House an opportunity to speak for 10 or 20 minutes on Bill C-84. In that way the Government could avoid being criticized for bringing in closure. However, the Government has decided to drop the guillotine on the Opposition members.

What is worse, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the Government is thinking of proroguing Parliament. It is obvious that the reason the Government is thinking of doing that is that it is without direction. It does not know where it is going. It realizes that its legislative agenda is stale. Yet, it wants to prorogue Parliament and give its Members a two-month vacation, but it refuses to allow members of the Opposition an opportunity to debate important pieces of legislation.

There is also a suggestion that the Conservative Government wants to extend the Christmas break by two weeks. I call that shameful. We could be here debating important pieces of legislation. I invite the Government, rather than extending the Christmas break, to restrict it in order to give members of the Opposition an opportunity to debate this piece of legislation. I want the opportunity to articulate the reasons why—you are about to cut me off, Mr. Speaker. You have indicated that I have one minute left in this very important debate. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you would be an accessory to this shameful act if you cut me off. I do not intend to sit down of my own accord. You are going to have to cut me off when my time expires on this particular motion. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you are being an accessory to this unparliamentary action by the Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite wishes to rise on a point of order. She, too, is now trying to stifle debate—

Mr. Blenkarn: You know better than that. Act like a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Nunziata: —on this particular piece of legislation. I want to be able, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, once again, I am amazed that this Government having such a strong majority should use a rule it so often disparaged in the past. I will always remember those thundering speeches, the unbelievable crises Parliament went through in the past when those Government Members were sitting on this side, in Opposition.

The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) made blazing speeches against a Government which, after weeks of debates, would decide exceptionally to make use of this Standing Order, and I repeat, after weeks of debates, hours and days and days on end, on subjects much less important than the one now before us.

But this Government has decided it had a program of action, and I see my good friend the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who is smiling. He is saying to himself: I will wear them down once more. And since they are good Opposition fighters, I will impose closure. Closure after closure after closure, five times within—

An Hon. Member: Six, six.

Mr. Prud'homme: —and this is now the sixth time. Five times before, and once again against such important pieces of legislation, where a small handfull of survivors if I may say so from that great landslide led by those Conservatives who had promised: "We will do better. The Liberals abused the rules, we will not do that." Well, Mr. Speaker, they are now abusing them, and it is regrettable that this House should be reduced to using such important rules, such—

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Prud'homme: You are not the Speaker, by the way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am the Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, and I respect you, but I do not like to be called to order by another Member.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is always with regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

It being 1.04 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 84 have now expired.

Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Finance), seconded by Mr. Jelinek, moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

Time Allocation

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

WOMEN

IMPACT OF ELECTION OF NUMEROUS WOMEN MPPs IN QUEBEC

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the presense since Monday in the Quebec National Assembly of a large number of women. As a matter of fact, 18 women have been elected.

An Hon. Member: —as Liberals!

Mrs. Pépin: No, 18 women altogether. Of course, we are still very far from equal representation, but this represents an increase which I wanted to bring to the attention of the House, the more so because it has been announced that a woman would act as Deputy Premier. I therefore congratulate the new Quebec Government.

An Hon. Member: A Liberal Government!

Mrs. Pépin: I want to emphasize also that beyond the mere number of women, what is important is the willingness to support women related issues. In this connection, we should deplore the defeat of several candidates who had vigorously and constantly worked for the advancement of women related issues: Employment equality, day-care centers, and half-way houses.

Women's group deplore the absence of Mrs. Pauline Marois and Francine Lalonde.

Concerning the project to include women in pension schemes, I should like to remind the people involved in federal-provincial discussions that women will not accept demagogic statements which are sometimes easy to issue.

In this context as in many others, it is not enough to come up with half-measures or empty bills which settle nothing, such as Bill C-62. Women are no fools . . . Consider yourself told once and for all! And again, I say bravo! to all the women who have been elected.

EMPLOYMENT

POSSIBILITY OF JOB LOSSES AT CN REPAIR SHOPS IN MONCTON—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House on the uncertainty which exists among working men and women at the CN workshops in Moncton, New Brunswick. These employees are aware that CN is currently reviewing its maintenance services and they fear that final recommendation to the Federal Government will be to close the Moncton workshops. The result would be a direct loss of 1,200 jobs. Already, Mr. Speaker, the CN has announced that it was laying off 225 workers.

On October 9, in reply to a question of mine, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated that the lay-offs in Moncton were the result of reduced railway traffic and wished that these lay-offs were only temporary. How does the Minister explain the fact that 140 of these employees have been notified that their dismissal is permanent?

So far, the Government has neither taken a firm stand nor assured the workers that it would preserve these jobs in Moncton.

Although these employees are disappointed and very concerned, it is with determination that they intend to continue to fight for the Government to preserve these jobs.

SHIPBUILDING

CN MARINE—AWARDING OF FERRY CONTRACTS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that the Canadian shipbuilding industry is in dire straits, to say the least. Because of the huge deficit inherited by the Government, government assistance has been minimized and this could close down or eliminate much of the shipbuilding industry in Canada.

How can our industry compete with other countries which give their shipbuilding industries massive subsidies, including concessionary financing and selling below cost? It is totally unrealistic to expect the Canadian shipbuilding industry to compete with predatory prices from abroad. There is no free market in shipbuilding in the world today.

A moratorium on foreign-built ships and offshore platforms and rigs being brought into Canadian registry is imperative for the survival of the shipbuilding industry.

Governments after Governments have urged Canadians to buy Canadian. This must apply as well to the Government to buy Canadian ships made by Canadian taxpayers.

• (1405)

The two large ferries that the federal Government is now considering for CN Marine must be made in Canada. This would provide 10,000 man-years of work and millions of dollars in tax revenue for the Government.

I strongly urge the Government to bring forth positive solutions for this important industry as soon as possible. Tomorrow may be too late.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

DOCUMENTARY FILM ATTACK ON WAR HERO DENOUNCED

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in 1982 the National Film Board produced a so-called documentary on the military service of Canadian war hero, Billy Bishop, V.C. Director Paul Cowan has used Billy Bishop as a tool to reflect his own views on war and the making of war heroes. A committee of the other place has examined the movie, and the script which has attempted to destroy the reputation and record of a great Canadian hero. It is a scandalous, misleading, and spurious twisting of fact.

For almost seven decades Canadians have known Billy Bishop as a hero of unqualified and unequalled calibre. Mr. Cowan has blatantly attempted to tarnish the war record of our hero through unsubstantiated comments by people who surfaced decades after the facts had been well documented.

The National Film Board has qualified its support for the film which was released as a documentary. This documentary should be withdrawn immediately and without reservation by the Government. Canadians did not make Billy Bishop a hero, as the film suggests. Canadians did not glorify a man who did not deserve recognition for his service to his country. The film documents Billy Bishop as a man who methodically tried to manufacture his own record. This is a slap in the face to Billy Bishop, and a slap in the face to every veteran who knew him. It is a slap in the face to his dedication to our nation's war efforts overseas.

The film The Kid Who Couldn't Miss is a travesty. More than 35 factual and historical errors have been isolated in this so-called documentary. The film—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

REPORTED PLAN TO CENTRALIZE GOVERNMENT POLLING

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, not content with flying in two jets, using a presidential podium, and flashing red lights in the grill of his limousine, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is now trying to control information by way of centralized public opinion polls.

The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) has reportedly given this measure his personal blessing already. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will now have the Big Brother himself in control of all information. Is it not a strange coincidence that the Tory pollster, Decima Research, will likely get the untendered lucrative contract for doing this? The information gathered could then be shared by the Government and the Tory Party.

There is another country in which Government and Party are synonymous. Although I will not name the country I will offer a name for this new agency. Let us call it "Pravda Canada". Polls will now run Canada, not the Prime Minister and not this Government, but public opinionpolls, of course by "Pravda Canada".

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCE—LETTER FROM SINGLE PARENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a letter from a constituent of mine in Aspen Park, British Columbia. It reads in part as follows:

I am a single parent with 3 children—I have been the sole supporter of these children for 8½ years.

I get $870.00 per month from Human Resources, plus the family allowance.

I pay $465 per month for rent, which is more than I can afford on Welfare.

My point in all this—is that I think it would really do us in if I lost the family allowance. We would not have enough money for groceries if that happened.

I would like Mr. Mulroney . . . and many others in their financial category to try to live on less than $1,000 per month and look after 4 people on that amount like I am doing. I would be willing to bet they couldn't make it.

This is a reality faced by thousands of families today. It is why the Government should rescind the deindexation of the family allowance. I cannot think of a better time to announce such a decision than 20 days before Christmas.

FISCAL MEASURES

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the important tax measure announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the form of a minimum tax for individuals earning over $50,000. The House will recall that in 1983, 7,036 Canadian taxpayers who had incomes of over $50,000 managed to pay not a cent of income tax, thanks to all kinds of tax deductions.

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of inequity and injustice Canadians were condemning. They asked for amendments to the Income Tax Act to close this loophole.

Mr. Speaker, this is now being done, and let me tell you I consulted with Canadians whose incomes were over $50,000. "We agree with the principle", they said, "and it is entirely fair and normal that Canadians should pay a minimum tax . . ." Those were their own words.

Our Government is on the right track with this measure, which is the kind of change Canadians have been asking us to implement. It was unacceptable that the rich could avoid paying income tax, and I want to remind Canadians that it was the Government opposite, the previous Government, that made this possible. We have put a stop to that now, and our new tax measure which is more equitable, will involve a minimum tax of between 24 and 27 per cent and collect $300 million for the federal treasury.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

DECISION ON IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about a matter that is of considerable concern to the footwear industry in my riding of Quebec East. I have complete faith in the Minister's decision on import quotas in the footwear industry.

However, doubts persist in the manufacturing sector. After consulting with the GRENICO and FLEET firms, I can inform the House I was pleased to be able to examine the issues and work together with these two businesses and their directors. I am convinced that under the new rules, both business and industry will experience new growth.

That is why I intend to follow developments in this area in co-operation with senior management, which will let me know about any signs of dumping in our area. I will also table a monthly report here in the House, under S.O. 22, to inform the House of progress being made under the new rules.

Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that our footwear manufacturers can prosper in a climate of healthy competition. However, we have a duty to protect the security and success of this important industry in my riding.

THE SENATE

SITTING HOURS IN OCTOBER AND NOVEMBER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Christmastime is fast approaching. No one understands what this means more than the many Conservatives who are surely dreaming of a trip to pork-barrel heaven, the red Chamber. Imagine waking up on Christmas morning, the phone rings, and that unmistakable deep voice of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says: "Good morning, Senator".

It is kind of like early retirement. After all, in November Senators sat for only six days, amounting to a total of 10 hours and 50 minutes. Combined with October's legislative sittings, a mere 21 hours were spent in debate during the last two months.

Among the heavy pondering of the Senators was whether or not Senators, and I quote the Deputy Government Leader of the Senate: "Can safely take the extra week without running afoul of public opinion". They were, of course, referring to the Remembrance Day recess. In fact the Senators could not even remember whether or not they had adjourned for one or two weeks in the past.

The cost of those 21 hours spent in the other place amounted to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I think the Hon. Member knows that he is verging on something which is in fact, by our traditions, out of order in terms of commenting on the other place.

CRIMINAL CODE

STIFFER PENALTIES FOR DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19 is tough. That is the message we want Canadians to understand about the new drinking and driving laws which came into effect yesterday, December 4. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) visits cities across the country over the next 10 days to publicize these new laws, let all Canadians be aware of the new, tough penalties for impaired driving; fines up to $300 for a first offence and a minimum of three months' suspension from driving, mandatory jail terms and much longer suspensions for second offences.

This legislation has had unprecedented public support from community groups such as MADD and PRIDE who have led the way, police, doctors, and even the distillers themselves. Only with tough penalties can we hope to reduce dramatically the tragedy and high costs of the loss of human life and suffering now caused by individuals who drink and drive.

Yes, as we approach the Christmas season, Canadians have much to rejoice about, but if you have had a drink to celebrate, stop. Before you go to your car, think. Do you want to face the costs of the fine, the increased insurance rates, the fallout of having your licence suspended and a possible jail term? Act, as this Government has done; please, don't drink and drive.

EXTERNAL AID

UGANDA—FUNDING FOR OPERATION OF CLINIC AND SCHOOL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, although Uganda is being torn apart by civil war, a Canadian couple, Jerry and Sarah Kambites, continue to operate a medical clinic and school on Bukasa Island in Lake Victoria.

Over the past two years Dr. Jerry Kambites has had some 25,000 patient visits in a small 12 foot by 14 foot clinic. He has immunized 2,000 children, and made 200 emergency trips across the lake in a 16-foot open boat with a 20 horsepower motor. Sarah Kambites helps to teach 210 students in a school building built by hand with lumber from local trees.

Canadians can be proud of people like Jerry and Sarah Kambites, but we cannot be proud of our record of support for them. They went to Uganda sponsored by Westmount Rotary under a matching CIDA grant. When Rotary asked that a Rotarian be named to the projects board, Kambites pointed out that this was not possible since their constitution called for a locally elected board and, obviously, there were no local Rotarians. The Minister of State for Mines at the time was the Rotary Club's contact person. When the request was refused, he threatened to cut off funding. In effect this is what has happened.

Both CIDA and Rotary International have an obligation to the Kambites and to the people of Bukasa Island. I call on them to get together to make sure that adequate funding gets through to the Kambites' project.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL SOVEREIGNTY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it looks like the entire Cabinet was invited to Chicago to have a good time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: They are out looking for John Turner.

Mr. Axworthy: I will address my question to the one Minister who obviously did not receive an invitation.

Some Hon. Members: Where is Turner?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the team is here. I would like to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who obviously did not receive an invitation.

The statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister reiterated for the hundredth time that the Government intends to protect cultural sovereignty during negotiations. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think it is time the Government spelled out what it means by "protecting cultural sovereignty"?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What do you think it means?

Mr. Axworthy: Could he tell us today whether the Government believes that it is essential that the present rules, regulations, and laws which protect Canadian content in broadcasting, Canadian ownership in publishing, and the advertising in Canadian magazines, are essential to the protection of Canadian cultural sovereignty?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman himself has admitted that nothing has been so clearly spelled out and so often and concisely put by the Prime Minister and other Ministers in the House than that which was indicated by the Prime Minister in Chicago. If the Hon. Member cannot understand that after hearing it a hundred times, I am afraid I cannot help him.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is dissembling. He knows full well that protection of Canadian cultural sovereignty means nothing unless we are prepared to specify that during those negotiations the Government will in no way change the rules and laws affecting our broadcasting industry, our publishing industry, and our magazine industry. We would like to have assurance that the negotiations will not change those particular rules and laws. Can we have that assurance right now?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's speech in Chicago should have set that kind of fear to rest once and for all. The cultural sovereignty of the country and its languages will not be bargained away. The Prime Minister said that, if there is any danger of that, there is no deal.

MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough that there is continuing confusion in the country, but we now have confusion in the Cabinet itself.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is only in your mind.

Mr. Axworthy: Yesterday in the Senate, in response to a Liberal proposal that cultural industries be excluded from the agenda, the Senate House Leader agreed and said that he supports that. Are we to believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Communications, or the Senate House Leader whose position contradicts what the Secretary of State has already said? When will this confusion be cleared up?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The only confusion, Sir, exists in the mind of the Hon. Member. The position has been stated and restated ad nauseam from this side. If the hon. gentleman cannot understand it yet, I cannot help him.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and is with regard to his statements yesterday about the Canada-U.S. defence agreements that were deleted from the list given to the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

We now know that the Minister's claims of national security were, at best, convenient excuses for his usual secretiveness, because the complete list was made public to members of the committee in 1980. Will the Minister explain why agreements that were made public in 1980 suddenly become secret in 1985?

• (1420)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Could you repeat the preamble?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is obviously a ridiculous tempest in a teapot that they are trying to exploit over there. The Hon. Member, and some of the media reports that I have read, fail to make that distinction between a list of the names of the documents and the documents themselves.

He is right when he says that the list of the names of those documents was released in 1980. I am surprised that that did not occur to him yesterday.

However, there is a distinction to be made between that and the documents. The documents that could be released were sent to the chairman of the committee, I believe. If there are other documents that the Hon. Member or members of the committee want to see that will be helpful and are within the power of the Government to release, we would be delighted to make that information available.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The only conclusion that can be drawn from the Minister's answers is that he does not trust the members of the committee. He does not even trust his own Tory members in the committee with the information that is either politically embarrassing or, indeed, affects national security. Will he simply tell us why he does not trust his own colleagues in the Tory Party?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I trust all Hon. Members in this House and those who sit on the committee particularly. Indeed, I trust them to the point where I offered yesterday to consider in camera briefings of the committee if that was its desire. I do not know how much more open we are expected to be.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: We are a very open Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I do not know why the hon. gentleman does not take me up on that offer. In any event, I will be before the committee next week; he can ask questions to his heart's desire and I will answer them all fully and completely, as is my custom.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

LEGISLATION'S PHILOSOPHY

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Hon. Solicitor General, concerns the subject of the Young Offenders Act. Much has been said about the shortcomings of the Young Offenders Act in dealing with what are often exceptional cases.

Will the Solicitor General tell the House, based on the findings from his consultations to date, whether it appears that the general approach taken in this legislation is effectively addressing the needs of young offenders, their families, and the criminal justice system, as was anticipated, notwithstanding the criticisms of law enforcement agencies across the country who have experienced a great deal of frustration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is long enough.

Mr. Jepson: —with certain aspects of the new Act?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the philosophy that underlay the Act as passed by Parliament was a good and sound philosophy. It is clear that there are some problems with administration.

Consequently, the Government has embarked on a process of negotiations which will culminate in meetings with our provincial counterparts and subsequent legislation being presented to Parliament. Our goal is to ensure that the Act will work in the way in which it was intended by Parliament.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—PRIVATIZATION STUDY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that the President of the Treasury Board would be here today, but he is not. I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister or whomever is filling in for the President of the Treasury Board.

We have been trying to obtain some crucial information pertinent to the giveaway of the de Havilland Corporation to Boeing. Yesterday we on this side of the House tried to get four or five documents and were turned down. There has been a study produced for the Privatization Secretariat that considered a number of options about the future of de Havilland—whether to keep it as a Crown corporation or to sell it off. There was a cost benefit analysis of both. Will the Government produce this study so that Hon. Members on all sides of the House can have a look at it and the people of Canada can understand in real terms what the options were?

• (1425)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. gentleman's question as a representation, but I draw his attention to the fact that the Prime Minister has indicated, as has the President of the Treasury Board, that all pertinent information will be available through the appropriate machinery of the House at the appropriate time.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF INFORMATION PRIOR TO COMPLETION OF DEAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Government having made its announcement, we think the appropriate time is now, not after the deal. Considering that the Deputy Prime Minister has used the phrase "at the appropriate time", as did the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister in the past, will he give us clear assurances today that before the deal is consummated that information will be made available to the House and to a committee of the House, so that we can have a solid assessment of what is involved before the Government signs?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): We have a solid assessment now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: We don't.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party says that he doesn't.

Mr. Deans: I said "we".

Mr. Nielsen: He is not in Government. Government has decisions to make, and this decision has been made on the proper assessment.

Mr. Deans: What about Parliament, Erik?

Mr. Nielsen: The machinery exists for this kind of information to be examined. He knows that. He has been here long enough to know that those normal channels exist.

Mr. Deans: Don't you believe in Parliament any more?

Mr. Nielsen: However, in genral response to the Hon. Member's question, I might quote from the Winnipeg Free Press in which it is editorialized that "it will be a hell of a deal for Canadians, who will have in place a company which is employing Canadian workers, selling Canadian product all over the world and paying taxes to a Canadian Government".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFORMATION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Deputy Prime Minister is quoting editorials, newspapers in Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg, Ottawa, and Montreal have all said that Parliament ought to have this information. Will he provide it before the deal is made?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I only repeat the answers that I made before. He knows full well that there is machinery in the parliamentary process for this kind of information to be made available, and it will be in the usual way that has been the time honoured practice of the House—

Mr. Broadbent: But you promised a change over there.

Mr. Nielsen: —as long as I have been here, which is somewhat longer than the hon. gentleman.

FOOD AND DRUGS

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM TUBERCULOSIS INFECTED HERD

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will direct my question to the Acting Minister. Published reports today indicate that Agriculture Canada has approved for sale to Canadians buffalo meat from animals infected with tuberculosis. One official in the Department of Agriculture says that there could be a risk to humans in eating this meat. Why has the Government allowed this meat, infected with tuberculosis, to be sold to Canadians, when its own inspectors are questioning its safety for human consumption?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question, what I understand from my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture—and he is unable to attend in the House because of other commitments—

An Hon. Member: Surf 'n turf.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —is that all regulations were followed—

Mr. Nunziata: That is what they said about the tuna.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —that pertain to the case. Also, the full letter of the law has been followed. If there is further information in this regard, the Minister of agriculture would be pleased to provide it.

UNSAFE FOR EXPORT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The buffalo meat was shipped to Edmonton after being processed in Toronto and was marked as unsafe for export purposes. Could the Minister explain why meat which is not safe to be sold for people to eat in other countries, is acceptable and has been approved for human consumption in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again the Minister of Agriculture will be willing to provide that information.

Ms. Copps: Pass the buffalo.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I would say to the Hon. Member that it would be best for him to convey or to ask those questions at that time.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—PRIVATIZATION STUDIES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Deputy Prime Minister. With respect to the sell-out of de Havilland, will the Deputy Prime Minister specifically undertake to table with this House now, before that deal is consummated, the studies about privatization of de Havilland in order that this House can be able to judge the wisdom of that decision before the deal has been put through by the Government without parliamentary accountability?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question three times now. The President of the Treasury Board has answered that question. The Prime Minister has answered that question. If there is any further doubt about the judgment call that was made, I might quote again the Winnipeg Free Press which states that "Lloyd Axworthy should be down on his knees on behalf of Canadian taxpayers thanking the Government for removing this millstone from around their necks."

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is the Deputy Prime Minister not aware that Paul Marshall, the head of the CDIC, said over television this week that if he had told Bob White in advance about the deal that Bob White would have screamed like a banshee and screwed the deal? Is he saying that if Parliament was told in advance that Parliament would scream like a banshee on behalf of the people of Canada, and screw the deal?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think that the reference to a banshee is a self-definition of the questioner. There was not a question there. I repeat to him that the information that is customarily placed before Parliament and its committees—

Mr. Deans: What are you hiding?

Mr. Nielsen: I am not hiding a thing.

Mr. Speaker: Order. House officers at least should know not to yell back and forth across the floor.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FORMER ENVIRONMENT MINISTER'S TRIP TO PARIS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. It concerns expenditures of taxpayers' funds by his predecessor who has since become the Minister of State for Transport, no doubt because of her great travel experience. In view of the fact that it has now been proven from official Government documents that the "April in Paris" trip had no reason to proceed and had been cancelled a long time before the Minister left, has the Minister yet asked his predecessor to reimburse the taxpayers of Canada for the total cost of the trip? If not, when does he intend to do so?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in international travel since of late he has become such an authority on the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McMillan: There is no new information in the public domain. We have always conceded that part of the Minister's travels were for tourism purposes, some very small part, for which she paid all the expenses herself.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, those comments certainly do not coincide with what the Minister had to say about his predecessor in his householder mailing.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE RESIGNATION OF FORMER ENVIRONMENT MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplemenatry for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In view of what Canadians now know, why does the Prime Minister not demand the immediate resignation of the former Minister of Environment?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is obviously not in the House today. The Hon. Member should know that it is his, and his prerogative only to respond to questions like that. It would be entirely inappropriate for me to do so on his behalf.

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM TUBERCULOSIS INFECTED HERD

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will know that a herd of 56 buffalo were quarantined after one died with TB. Eleven had positive tests for TB and six of those 11 were found to have lesions on their internal organs. Will the Minister confirm that the meat from this TB-infected herd was put on the market and sold to Canadians before Agriculture Canada had a chance to do the tests on the internal organs and verity that this meat was not in fact contaminated?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is an important question. Again, as has been stated in this House many times, the Department of Agriculture, as have other Departments such as Fisheries, has full responsibility for inspection. That question in terms of the inspection process would have to be directed to the appropriate Minister.

MINISTERIAL DISCRETION INQUIRY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Government of Canada has an absolute responsibility to guarantee that the food which goes on the table of Canadians is wholesome and pure. Will the Minister acknowledge at this point that the Minister of Agriculture was apprised of this situation and had a chance to exercise ministerial discretion on allowing that material to proceed to market? Can he confirm that for this House?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, again in terms of the wholesomness of food on Canadian tables and the safety, that is a mandate the Government is absolutely fulfilling. As well, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the record of Agriculture Canada, in fact since 1907 that record is very clearly established and it is a very good record. People in the industry know that. On the specifics as to action, the answer that I gave to previous questions applies.

INQUIRY IF STUDY WILL BE INSTITUTED OF POSSIBLE FUTURE MERGER OF GULF AND ULTRAMAR

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The dealings of the Gulf and Ultramar owners look so suspicious that today seven Liberal Members of Parliament from eastern Montreal requested an investigation under the Combines Investigation Act, and a letter has been sent to the Minister in this regard.

Is the Minister willing to follow up on this request and will he use all his powers as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to prevent this merger?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker I can say that this issue has been the subject of concern on this side of the House also and that the Government certainly did not wait for the Opposition Members to put pressure on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to take action. We have had consultations, and these concerns have also been raised on this side of the House by our own colleagues, especially the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier.

Naturally, the Hon. Member knows that it is the responsibility of the Director of Combines Investigations to take action as soon as he believes that there might be an infraction to the Act. As a precautionary measure, I asked the Director this morning for a report on this transaction.

If his conclusions and recommendations justify it, I shall consider it my duty to inquire further and to ensure that this matter is investigated.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S INTERVENTION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister may not realize that, under Section 7 of the Act, six people can request an investigation. Moreover, we do not want a simple check, but a formal investigation by the Director of Combines Investigations. This request has been presented in due form, and we hope that the Minister will act on it.

I would like to know whether the Minister realizes that the closing of this refinery jeopardizes hundreds of independent gasoline distributors in the Montreal region. Will the Minister use his powers under the Investment Canada Act to stop this transaction?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that we shall act as conscientiously as usual.

INCOME TAX

INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX—DEDUCTION FOR UPPER-INCOME EARNERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of Finance introduced his minimum tax proposal. He indicated that in the calculation of their tax payable, upper-income earners would get a $40,000 automatic deduction. In the interest of fairness and equity, and recognizing that all Canadians must pay their fair share of tax as well as a minimum tax, will the Minister explain why he decided to give upper-income earners this special deduction?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in designing this tax I looked very closely at the proposal that was put forward by the New Democratic Party as one of the elements that we analysed. If the Hon. Member would think carefully, he would understand that under their proposal, which said that anybody earning over $50,000 would be taxed 20 per cent on total income, he would see that that means that someone who is not paying any tax who earns $49,999 would pay no tax. A person earning $50,000 would pay $10,000 worth of tax on that additional $1 worth of income. I do not think that is fair, and I am sure the Hon. Member does not either.

CARRY FORWARD OF TAX DEDUCTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is playing a bit of a shell game. Our proposal was anything but what he has indicated. We felt that everyone should pay their fair share no matter what their level of income.

Would the Minister explain why he has included a carry forward provision in his proposal when he knows that even Ronald Reagan felt that it was inappropriate for the American minimum tax proposal? Why does the Minister allow people to roll ahead their tax deductions up to seven years if they cannot use them in one year now that there is a minimum tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on July 29, 1984, the NDP Leader called for a 20 per cent minimum tax on the incomes of those Canadians earning over $50,000. That is the proposal to which I was referring, and I think the Hon. Member should consider that proposal carefully when he reflects on his first question.

The reason for the carry forward is quite clear. There are a number of very valid social and economic objectives that are encouraged through the Income Tax Act. We do not feel that this minimum tax should be used to discourage that type of activity in the social and economic policy sphere. It is for that reason that we have allowed for a carry forward so that those incentives are not lost forever by those who will be asked to pay a minimum tax.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL ANNOUNCE CLOSURE OF PETROMONT AND UNION CARBIDE PLANTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that your Government has decided to close down the Gulf refinery in the east end of Montreal, to create 450 unemployed and contribute to the shutting down of the BASF Company in Laval, can the Minister tell us on what date he will announce the closing down of the Petromont and the Union Carbide plants in the east end of Montreal?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to state first that in his preamble the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie is once again trying to mislead us. The Gulf case is a matter involving two corporations. The Government of Canada is not and will not be closing down the Gulf refinery.

Mr. Speaker, on the other point, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie as usual is talking through his hat. We are in consultation with the BASF Corporation. This morning I met people from the petro-chemicals industry in Montreal and Toronto, and we are looking for a medium- and long-term solution, instead of doing what the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government did in the past, namely shut down refineries in Montreal, to the tune of three during the last three or four years.

REQUEST THAT ANNOUNCEMENT BE MADE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses, now that he is allowed to answer questions. Since you are saying you met people in the petro-chemical industry, people from BASF, did they tell you that your decision came too late, that they closed down because of the failure, the wavering and incompetence of your Government? Did they tell you that at Petromont, because of the Gulf and BASF shutdowns, even if you do not want to bring in solutions as fast as possible, could you tell us when you will be announcing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We already have two questions there.

Mr. Malépart: When are you going to announce—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN CHICAGO

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications who will know that the only way to ensure that our cultural industries are not bargained away in free trade talks with the United States is to keep them off the bargaining table altogether. Will the Minister tell us what the Prime Minister meant by what he said in Chicago last night? Does this mean that the specific industries of film, broadcasting, and publishing will not be on the bargaining table at all?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): In Chicago yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was perfectly clear. He dealt with the issue raised by the Hon. Member when he explained that everything that relates to our cultural sovereignty is not included in the negotiations with the United States.

[English]

MAGAZINE PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that answer very much. I would like to focus in on one specific industry and that is magazine publishing. Will the Minister give assurances to this rather precarious industry, that now holds only 25 per cent of the magazine market in Canada, that the postal subsidies will be continued, or is he willing to risk this industry losing its 25 per cent of the market and falling even further behind?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): It is evident and clear that from the moment we explain, as the Prime Minister did yesterday, that everything concerning our cultural sovereignty is not negotiable, it is up to us to decide what will or will not be negotiable. It is our responsibility, depending on the benefits which we can foresee, among others, for our cultural industries.

CLOTHING AND SHOES—REQUEST THAT DOMESTIC JOBS BE PROTECTED

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. I should like to call his attention on a situation which is continuing and which is entirely deplorable. For some time, I have been receiving complaints from consumers to the effect that imported pieces of clothing and footwear do not meet the specifications as described on the label.

Could the Minister advise the House wether he will take steps to protect jobs in the textile industry, given the importance of that industry which is vital to the survival of my constituents?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are extremely aware of the importance of both the textile and footwear industries to Canada. If the Hon. Member would refer to my speech of November 25 as reported in Hansard, he would see that I said that we intend to see that the footwear industry remains a viable industry, and the same principle applies to the textile industry. We are presently reviewing the situation in the textile industry. We are very concerned about the importation of goods from other countries which are not properly labelled or marked, and we are also addressing that question. We hope to be able to report further to the House within the next month or so.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—JOINT VENTURE INQUIRY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He has quoted from an editorial which indicated that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, should be on his knees. The fact is that the Government has cut the Canadian aerospace industry off at the knees. Was Boeing ever offered a joint venture by the Government of Canada and, if not, why was it not considered as an option?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): If the hon. gentleman does not care to believe the views and opinions of the Winnipeg Free Press with respect to his colleague who sits in front of him, let me quote the words of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, the opposition critic, who has said the following:

> I would much rather see a couple of billion dollars in our educational system bringing on our great human resources, than in the Canadairs and in the de Havillands. I say let's not displace private capital and if we can sell Canadair and if we can sell de Havilland, let's do it as quickly as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN FIRM'S INTENTIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we have had enough evasion. I would like a clear answer to the question. Rimgate Holdings has indicated that it was prepared to offer job guarantees but was never offered the same financial conditions as Boeing. Why was there discrimination against a Canadian firm?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member will not believe the Winnipeg Free Press with respect to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, nor the words of his colleague who sits on the front benches, let me quote the words of his Leader who has said the following:

> Canadair and de Havilland . . . are prime examples of what can go wrong when the government gets into commercial businesses and fails to exercise proper supervision and control.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FORMER ENVIRONMENT MINISTER'S TRIP TO EUROPE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Documents released by the Department of External Affairs today clearly prove that the trip taken last spring by the former Minister of the Environment was indeed touristic in nature and, in fact, the answers given at the time this issue was raised in the House were less than truthful and forthcoming. Since the Deputy Prime Minister has the reputation of being a slasher in Cabinet, can he tell the House if he thinks this is a good example which his Government should be giving to the people of the country with respect to this Government being able to spend like drunken sailors and get away with it?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the description given by the Hon. Member of my character. As a matter of fact, I rather resent the demotion.

I can tell the Hon. Member that, rather than spending money like drunken sailors, some control has been brought back to the management of the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Who are you kidding?

Mr. Nielsen: —in bringing its fiscal affairs into order. Every economic indicator and figure which one reads today bears out that statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF PORTION OF COST

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the Deputy Prime Minister this specific, uncalled for expenditure which cost the taxpayers of the country $64,000, most of it not paid for by the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rodriguez: Will the Government, and I am asking this of the Deputy Prime Minister, at least try to collect from the former Minister the money it cost for that part of the trip which her husband, her assistant and his consort, enjoyed at taxpayers' expense?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it was the hon. gentleman himself, in his preamble, who introduced the national economic argument into this exchange between us. I respond to him, since the gist of his question has been answered many times before, that the real output, as measured by constant dollar gross national expenditure, has gone from 1.6 per cent to 6.6 per cent on an annualized basis.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: Residential construction has increased by 52 per cent and economic statistic after economic statistic will bear out that statement.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Tory Minister of Development in the Province of Nova Scotia said the following:

—in the Maritime region of Canada we have a faced a very difficult task of developing an economic revival at a time when Federal support is a scatter-shot operation and less than adequate as a result.

Will the Minister tell the House when he and his Government will stop these discriminating policies against Atlantic Canada and fully restore transfer payments in the year 1986?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, far from being scatter-shot in our approach to the development of Atlantic Canada, we have introduced the most positive and most generous tax incentives in the Hon. Member's own area of the province, that is to say, the Cape Breton tax incentive. We have introduced a subsidy for electricity in Prince Edward Island. There is the Atlantic Accord and the offshore development funds in both the provinces of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. The Hon. Member continues to bring out this red herring with respect to our cutting transfer payments. I remind him that these transfer payments to the provinces will be increasing from $65 billion to $90 billion in total. That is a huge increase. I think the Hon. Member should remember that.

LEVEL OF FEDERAL PAYMENTS IN 1986

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Minister of Development in the Province of Nova Scotia disagrees. He said:

—is there anyone up there who will speak for the Hinterland—who will give such a voice to regional problems and legitimate desires as was given in the heat of an election campaign.

You have broken your election promises—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Why would the Minister—

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question, please.

Mr. Dingwall: Why will the Minister of Finance not live up to his election promises with regard to regional development? Why will he not answer the question with respect to restoring full transfer payments to the provinces for 1986?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member is $65 billion up to $90 billion not a substantial increase? Is that not a very substantial response to the commitment we have to federal-provincial transfers? I say it is, yes.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. As I am sure he is aware, last week in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated categorically that there will be no consideration given by Canada to voluntary restrictions on softwood exports to the United States, export taxes on softwood, to taxes on reforestation or to any other restrictions on Canadian softwoods. Just what does the Minister have on his agenda for the December 15 meeting with his U.S. counterpart! In particular, will he advise the House if he will make some kind of special offering of Canadian raw logs to the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will be the first to admit that I sometimes do not know everything that is going on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: We finally got a clear answer from the Government side.

Mr. Dingwall: That is enough.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: That is the most honest statement I have ever heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kelleher: This is obviously one of those occasions, since I am not aware of any meeting whatsoever which I am having with my counterpart, Mr. Yeutter, on December 15, nor have I even heard from Mr. Yeutter yet as to what he proposes to discuss if and when discussions ever take place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we are likely to hear some heavy breathing in a few minutes. The Minister sent me a note yesterday saying that he was meeting with Mr. Yeutter on December 15. I find it interesting if that is what is going on here.

Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said what he has said, I would like to ask the Minister for International Trade what he has on his agenda with the United States in relation to lumber. Will there be just a lot of heavy breathing down there?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has more problems than I have because I told him quite distinctly yesterday in my note that no meeting had in fact as yet been arranged and, as a matter of fact, Mr. Yeutter was not even returning from Europe until December 15.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUTURE OF FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. An article from Canadian Press published in Quebec newspapers last week has spread uncertainty among footwear workers. Mr. Minister—

Ms. Copps: That's true!

Mr. Bernier: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Hamilton East could listen too.

Mr. Minister, does the Government believe it is necessary to protect the footwear industry in Beauce, in Quebec and in Canada? If so, what sort of future is there for the workers in the footwear industry in this country?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we certainly do intend, and this Government has every intention, to see that the footwear industry is maintained as a viable industry. I would like to remind all Members of the House that, indeed, the tribunal, after its most far-reaching inquiry, found that with the exception of girls' and women's shoes it was able to compete world-wide with anyone else's shoe industry. I would also remind all Members of this House that they are still protected by a 23 per cent tariff.

GRANTS FROM SECRETARY OF STATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. There are rumours that the Conservative Government is preparing to cut grants from the Secretary of State to women's groups. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister could inform the House why the Conservative Government has decided to cut back and reduce grants earmarked for women's groups?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Outremont started by saying: There are rumours. I do not understand why she went on to say that we are going to proceed with cutbacks. I think we can both agree these are rumours and that we are not talking about cuts in funding for women's programs at this time.

• (1500)

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR GRANTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Could the Minister give the House the assurance that there will be no changes in the objectives and conditions of these programs, so that women's groups can still qualify for funding by the Secretary of State?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is only normal to reassess the criteria for programs like these that have been in existence for some time, and that will certainly be done, but it does not mean that women will not be entitled to available funding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps Hon. Members could carry this on somewhere else.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): If I can get the attention of the distinguished Government House Leader, I would like to ask him the customary question, which will enable him to describe the business of the House for the ensuing week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between the Parties with respect to second reading consideration and disposition of second reading stage of Bill C-83, an Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. As a result of those discussions, I would like to take this opportunity to announce a change in the line-up of business for this afternoon.

The first item which will be up for consideration will, therefore, be Bill C-83. Should we happen to complete Bill C-83, I will call Bill C-74, Bill C-79 and Bill C-70, which concern the Representation Act, the provision of compensation for depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank and an Act to amend the Family Allowance Act respectively. We will carry on in that sequence tomorrow.

Monday I would like to call Bill C-84 to have the final day with respect to the second reading stage of that Bill so that we can conclude it, hopefully, before the end of the day but, in any event, by the end of the day.

Tuesday, being the final day of the current Supply period, will be the final allotted day in the current period of Supply.

Assuming that we are able to make progress today and tomorrow, I hope that on Wednesday and Thursday of next week we will be able to complete consideration of the remaining stages of, first, Bill C-70 and, second, Bill C-79.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader will know that I wrote to him yesterday requesting that he give consideration to referring the pending sale of de Havilland to Boeing Corporation to a committee of the House for study prior to the sale being consumated. I wonder if the Government House Leader would undertake to raise that question with his cabinet colleagues and perhaps report back to the House on whether or not it can be arranged and an appropriate time found for the committee to commence its deliberations.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) have also asked that this matter be studied by Parliament, preferably by a parliamentary committee. I would urge the Government House Leader to give favourable consideration to this request as soon as possible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the message has been received and understood. I am just not in a position to respond yet. I want to carry out appropriate consultations with my colleagues to make sure, before I respond, I have an appropriate answer from my distinguished colleagues.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents from Penticton, British Columbia, who are of the opinion that the deindexation of universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment of child benefits are really an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. Therefore, they are asking the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases introduced in the last Budget.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition which states that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. I believe that in view of the fact that we now have more income from the minimum tax, I would join with these petitioners in asking the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance immediately.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): I also have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by a number of residents in my own constituency, and another petition from petitioners in various areas of Toronto. These petitioners state that they endorse the Ontario Coalition for Family Allowance and its representation to preserve and improve family allowance benefits and to withdraw the deindexation of family allowance as proposed in Bill C-70. This petition was circulated under the auspices of the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by some residents of Saskatoon who point out that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits which will reach $600 million annually by 1990, on top of sales tax changes and increaes, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases, are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low income households. They, therefore, call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and responsibility to present a petition dealing with the deindexation of the family allowance. This petition comes from the Canadian Union of Public Employees. These petitions are signed by the Office and Professional International Union of Office and Professional Employees and call upon the Government to withdraw the deindexing and return to the full indexation of family allowance.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and responsibility to present four petitions dealing with unemployment insurance. Three petitions come from the Unemployed Action Centre in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan and the other comes from the Labour Council in Ottawa.

The signators to all of these petitions call upon the Government to reverse its position with respect to pension income being used as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, which change is scheduled to come into effect on January 1, 1985.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): It is my duty to present a petition with a number of signatures from residents of Winnipeg with regard to the family allowance deindexation. This petition is in the traditional form, a form which I hope we will have an opportunity to re-examine at some point.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions from residents of communities of Parksville, Qualicum Beach, Errington, Lasquet Island, Lantzville and Nanoose Bay in the immediate vicinity of Nanoose. They are concerned about the test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They are concerned that the naval policy of the United States neither denies nor confirms the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels using the test range. They call for a full public inquiry with power to investigate the above concerns before the present agreement is renegotiated next April.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present petitions in support of the "Save our Shop" campaign in Moncton. The petition is signed by residents of Memramcook, College Bridge, Dieppe, and Moncton. The petitioners respectfully request and pray that the Government of Canada will bring an end to the constant rumours which strike fear into the minds and hearts of the employees and citizens of our communities by taking appropriate action to ensure that there will be no further downsizing or closure of the CN main shops in Moncton.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a very large petition from the residents of Skidegate, Masset, Port Clements, Prince Rupert, Kitimat, Queen Charlotte City and several other communities. The people who have signed the petition wish that a public inquiry be held regarding the Nanoose test range. In particular, they are concerned that radiation monitoring should be made public, that Section 1 of the agreement between Canada and the United States should be looked at again, and that the naval policy of the United States of neither denying or confirming the presence of nuclear weapons on board their vessels while in Canadian waters, particularly internal waters, is totally unacceptable.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of residents of the greatest riding in the country, that is, the riding of Hamilton East. All of these fine and intelligent people are calling on the Government to back off on its decision to cut back on family allowances as well as the child tax credit. They feel that the Government has misled the people and they call on the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to live up to their words that universality is a sacred trust. They add their voices to those of thousands of other people across the country.

CONCERN FOR FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present to the House a petition signed by approximately 647 citizens whom I represent in the federal constituency of Moncton. In this petition they express their concern for the future of the CN shops in Moncton and the 1,100 people employed there.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Essex County and Windsor which expresses the protest of our communities against the deindexation of the universal family allowance, against the cut-backs in the child benefits and against the unfair increases in taxes on ordinary Canadians. The undersigned, therefore, call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by residents of Summer Beaver, Ontario, a small community which is reached by neither road, rail, scheduled air service or television. Yet, even in this community the people realize that the Government's plans for family allowances constitute an attack on their living standards. They call upon the Government to rescind the deindexation of family allowances.

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post) moved: That Bill C-84, to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I am very pleased to be able to take the floor today and introduce Bill C-83, an Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

For the benefit of those who might not be too familiar with the tax rebate discounting practice, I would say that it enables a taxpayer who expects a tax refund to go to a discounter who will prepare his return and pay him cash on the basis of the expected refund.

[English]

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to be able to tell Members of the House that the measures we are proposing will remove the abuses that have grown up in this field. At the same time, consumers who want and need the services will be able to make a free and informed choice. Some have suggested outlawing the service entirely, Mr. Speaker. The Government has rejected this option. Even though that would have been very popular in some quarters, we firmly believe that Canadians should have the right to make such decisions and choices for themselves. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, they also have the right to be protected, and the measures I am proposing will ensure that low-income Canadians are not victimized by unscrupulous practices.

At this point I would like to summarize the main features of our comprehensive package of reforms. First, Bill C-83 will lower the maximum rate discounters can charge. Second, the Bill will provide for tougher enforcement and better administration. Third, we propose periodic payments of the child tax credit. Fourth, we will encourage and assist financial institutions to provide alternatives for discounting. Finally, we will ensure that Canadian consumers are fully informed about discounting and alternative options.

These are the elements of our program and I am convinced that they are both practical and equitable. They will, as I intend to make clear, eliminate the disadvantages of tax discounting while retaining its advantages. In short, they are shaped by the Government's approach to the establishment and maintenance of an efficient, equitable market-place.

I want to stress that this package of measures was brought forward with the advice and active co-operation of my colleagues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). I want to thank them in the House for their interest and support in this matter.

It is worth noting that although tax discounting has always been legal in Canada, the practice was not federally regulated until 1978 when the present Tax Rebate Discounting Act was passed. In 1979, the turn-around time for tax returns was 17 weeks. This has now been reduced by at least 50 per cent. Also, in 1979 only 7,000 people used the services of tax discounters. By this year the number of Canadians who have sold their tax refunds has grown to half a million. With so many Canadian consumers using the services of tax discounters, the Government wanted to ensure that their interests were being looked after in the best possible manner. As Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I decided to review tax discounting and update our present legislation in order to deal with current realities and initiate a wide range of measures in order to address the practice of tax discounting in its entirety.

As I mentioned, the Government is proposing five initiatives. The first two are legislative and are addressed by the legislation now before the House.

First, a new rate structure on the maximum allowable rate charged by discounters will be put in place by Bill C-83. The rate charged on any portion of a refund over $300 will be limited to 5 per cent. The rate for the first $300 of a refund will be 15 per cent, which recognizes the fee charged for filling out the client's tax return.

Second, proposed revisions in Bill C-83 will improve the Government's capacity to administer, detect and prosecute violations of the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. For example, the time limit on prosecutions under the Act will be extended from the present six months to two years.

Third, measures will be introduced at a later date to provide for the periodic payment of the child tax credit. These measures will ensure that recipients receive a majority of their child tax credit payment before income tax returns are due and will thus virtually eliminate the need to discount the child tax credit.

Fourth, through simple administrative measures we will be making it easier for financial institutions such as credit unions and caisses populaires to offer alternatives to tax discounting. For example, such institutions could offer loans at normal consumer rates on the strength of expected tax refunds.

Finally, we will initiate and stress information programs so that consumers who choose to use discounters will know what is involved and what their options are.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, consultation has always been the hallmark of this Government, and the measures proposed to revise the tax rebate discounting practice are indeed the results of many wide-ranging consultations. Before making any decision, we have had consultations with provincial Governments, discounters, social service agencies, consumers' associations, businessmen, Members of Parliament, and the Canadian public at large. A working paper was published last June and a special conference was convened in August of this year. The question was also examined at the Federal-Provincial-Territorial Conference of Ministers of Consumer and Corporate Affairs held last September 10. Those consultations made it possible to reach a general consensus, namely that it was necessary to reform tax rebate discounting. For practically all parties involved, the statu quo was quite simply unacceptable.

[English]

Undoubtedly, some will contend that the practice of tax discounting should have been abolished entirely. I am aware of the arguments for such a prohibition and I reject them. It is our considered view that Canadians must have the option of discounting money owed to them by way of any tax refund. To deny this kind of market choice to Canadians would have been unfair. Canadians should be free to choose discounting services if they want. The challenge was to reform tax discounting, eliminate the flaws in the way it is practised and leave a legitimate service in place. At the same time, we wanted to ensure that there was adequate protection for the consumer.

Likewise, it was argued that discounting of the child tax credit should have been prohibited. Again, our goal here is to prevent the diversion of child tax credit payments away from low income recipients. This will be done effectively and fairly through a periodic payment of the child tax credit rather than through a ban on discounting those credits.

From an administrative standpoint, such a ban would be impossible to define and enforce effectively. Because of the different types of tax credits under the present system, it was not clear what portion of the refund is a child tax credit. As well, such a ban would keep discounting legal except for those who appear to need it the most. That is precisely the kind of situation that leads to loan-sharking and rule bending.

Constant monitoring of complex laws and formulas would have been necessary. Even then, unscrupulous discounters who were faced with a demand for needy child tax credit recipients would have found ways to defeat the intent of the prohibition.

Furthermore, outlawing the discounting of the child tax credit would have made discounting available to all Canadians except low-income mothers. Imagine a child tax credit recipient going to a discounter and finding out, after her tax return had been prepared, that she could not discount the child tax credit. Instead of the large cheque which she expected, she would receive a bill of perhaps $30 for her tax return preparation. In my view, such discrimination cannot be justified.

Our solution is to pay the child tax credit periodically, thereby eliminating the need to discount the child tax credit.

Our approach has been to attack the cause of the problem rather than just its symptoms.

[Translation]

Thanks to the measures proposed in Bill C-83, Mr. Speaker, consumers will pay a lot less for the services of a tax rebate discounter. Under the new rates, the maximum a taxpayer will have to pay on a $1,000 reimbursement would be $80. These costs would include the preparation of the income tax return by the discounter. Under the previous rates, the consumers' cost was $150. This means savings of nearly 50 per cent. To set up this new rate, we have duly taken into account the limits imposed by the Criminal Code as well as the difference between a loan and a discount.

[English]

First, in contrast to normal lending practices, discounters prepare their client's tax returns. The fee for that service would normally vary from client to client but is always included in the discount rate. Second, when cash is advanced by a discounter there is no agreement on when the discounter will receive his or her money back. Therefore, a comparison to normal lending rates is difficult.

However, I would like to illustrate what will happen to such rates under Bill C-83. Assuming a turn-around time of eight weeks and a tax preparation value of $35 to $40, the discount rate proposed in Bill C-83 provides the equivalent annual rate of about 25 per cent to 30 per cent for a refund of $800. This rate is well below that in the current Act, and is also far below the criminal rate of 60 per cent. The discount rate proposed in Bill C-83 demonstrates a clear intention to rationalize discounting with the criminal law while appropriately accounting for the differences between lending and discounting.

Discounting is one alternative which consumers have to obtain needed cash. Other initiatives have been undertaken to make it easier for consumers to find alternative sources of immediate cash. I have mentioned that it will be easier for Canadians to get loans on the strength of their anticipated tax refunds. During our consultations, representatives of credit unions and caisses populaires told us that they would be willing to offer loans on tax refunds at normal consumer rates if there is enough demand within the community and enough co-operation and assistance from community organizations. These institutions themselves suggested a few administrative measures which could be put in place quite easily. For example, tax refund cheques could be sent directly to credit unions in repayment of loans, but not other correspondence which Revenue Canada might want to send to taxpayers. The Government will be taking such steps to help financial institutions to provide alternatives to tax discounting.

Some of the other items in the over-all reform package concern the provision of information. Freedom of choice works best when consumers can make informed decisions. We will provide facts about the true cost of discounting, alternatives to the practice, the availability of tax preparation assistance and the speed at which tax returns are normally processed. All these things should help consumers decide the options which are in their own best interest.

People should be aware that the turn-around time for receiving tax returns has decreased. I think there are many Canadians who, if made aware of this fact, would choose to wait what is now a relatively short period of time and claim their entire refund rather than go to tax discounters.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many community groups are now helping people prepare their income tax returns and I believe that is true all across Canada.

They could easily share their experience with credit unions and caisses populaires and thus contribute to the good operation of the new loan programs.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we believe that Canadians should be able to make free and enlightened choices. Which means that they must have available all necessary information, and we have a responsibility in this regard.

We will therefore launch a dynamic information campaign, so that all Canadian families will receive information on tax discounting together with their January family allowance cheque. We shall also be contacting interested groups, so they may properly advise their members.

Also Revenue Canada will offer Canadian taxpayers all the information needed through its extensive system of regional offices. Finally, we will make extensive use of the media to reach the public at large.

[English]

Related to the issue of making sure that consumers are well informed, the revisions which we are proposing to the Act will also contain specific provisions to ensure that people who use the services of discounters will be given all the information and documentation related to their transactions. In the past, people who used discounters often dropped off the relevant information, got their cash, and that was it. Some discounters even refused to give copies of the completed returns back to taxpayers. The new Act will require discounters to provide clients with copies of their tax returns and related information slips upon request. Furthermore, under Bill C-83, tax discounters will have a legal obligation to retain copies of all documents related to a discounting transaction. Thus, these will be available for examination by officials, if necessary.

It will also become an offence for a discounter to provide false information to a client or to an official. A common complaint which led to these measures was to the effect that the time limit on prosecutions under the present Tax Rebate Discounting Act was far too short. Indeed, in the past it was not unusual for suspicions to be raised about an unscrupulous discounter, only to have the time limit expire before the suspicions could be fully investigated. This will change, since Bill C-83 extends the time limit of prosecutions under the Act from six months to two years. In addition, the new Act permits income tax officials to disclose information necessary for enforcement to administrators of the Act.

In summation, the Government is presenting a complete package of initiatives to reform the practice of tax rebate discounting. Through Bill C-83 discounting will still be available but at a lower cost, and enforcement of tax rebate discounting will be beefed up. Canadians will therefore be able to make freer, more informed choices. The price of discounting will fall, which will help lower income Canadians who are the main clientele of discounters.

Free enterprise and consumer interest both depend on the provision of choice. The steps which the Government is proposing will ensure that better choices are available in the Canadian market-place, in that Canadians will have the information they need to take advantage of those choices.

The practice of tax rebate discounting will continue because it can still provide a service for which there exists a market demand among Canadians. At the same time, this total package of measures will correct serious shortcomings, the impact from which has been felt by those least able to bear it. It will protect both legitimate business interests and the consumer's right to fairness and choice. I am confident that it will receive swift passage by the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to replace my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), the Official Opposition critic for Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I rise today to speak about this bill because, as you will know, Mr. Speaker, our colleague is now convalescing. I am certain that the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic would have liked to have been here to take part in this debate and we all regret her absence from this House. I believe that all the Hon. Members here today will join me in wishing her a very quick recovery and a return to this House early in the new year.

I would like to apply myself, as my colleague would certainly have done herself, to making the most constructive possible criticism of the proposals and amendments regarding income tax discounting.

The speech made by the Minister today is well balanced, and I think that if he is a victim of circumstances, it is because he wants to please everybody at once, which is certainly very difficult to do in politics.

However, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that I am happy to take part in this debate since it concerns a Department which I have had the privilege and the honour to head in the past.

There is no need to remind this House that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was created by the previous Liberal Government, and today's debate confirms in my opinion the necessity and the appropriateness of having such a Department.

When the Minister announced his proposals regarding income tax discounting, many comments were made by various organizations. I believe that one of the most important of these comments, and I would like to repeat it in this House, is that the Minister apparently did not have the courage to go as far as he could have gone, and I would like to explain what I mean by that. Each year, Canadians must report their income, and several taxpayers are in a position to claim an income tax refund because they paid in too much. And if they paid in too much, it is because in many cases their income is so small the Government cannot ask them to contribute any more without jeopardizing their own survival.

We in the Liberal Party would like people who have paid too much income tax to get back this overpayment in full. Nobody in my view should be penalized or exposed to any income loss because of a slow-moving Government machine, in this case the Income Tax Refund Department of Revenue Canada which unfortunately may take not just weeks, but months to deliver. At the present time, such is the situation as we must admit, and the working paper published by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in June 1985 provides evidence of that. Mr. Speaker, the decisions announced by the Minister on November 21 do not address the problem from that angle. Instead, it accepts what I would call an improved status quo allowing or giving an opportunity to the most in need to go on using a service that is charging rates that are, if not criminal, at least too high for low-income people.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal Party feels the time is ripe for a specific policy that would allow those who are entitled to an income tax refund to receive the full amount, or at least as large a part as possible without having to wait far too long. And if that were impossible, there has to be at least a guarantee that the most in need are offered one of the most competitive rates, rather than what could be called loan shark rates.

What I think is needed is an overall vision, an overall understanding of the problem and its solutions. It is my hope that this House, and especially the Government will wish to relinquish that piecemeal approach put forward by the Minister, and take alternatives that may require more courage indeed but that will prove more fair and just for all the taxpayers involved.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to dwell too long on the history of that problem faced by this House. But as far as the assignment of income tax refunds is concerned, the situation now is different from the one we had in 1978, when the Act went into force.

In the early seventies, the practice of tax rebate discounting was not regulated or even recognized by law or by a professional association. So it was not unusual for people seeking instant tax refunds to be charged 40, 50, 60, or even 65 per cent of the rebate expected. Calculated over the long term, these rates were entirely out of proportion to the amounts being discounted. Tax rebate discounting was criticized because of its usurious rates and what I would qualify as fly-by-night operations. It was therefore not surprising that a number of organizations defending the interests of low-income groups made representations to the provincial authorities, who then, for various reasons, made their own representations to the Federal Government, asking it to take steps to deal with the abuse occurring in these operations.

That was the situation we had in 1978. The phenomenon was not very widespread but demanded immediate attention. The Tax Rebate Discounting Act was a way to regulate these activities by putting a 15 per cent limit on the rates that could be charged for early income tax refunds. In fact, the cost of filing the income tax return was included in the 15 per cent, and everyone expected this practice to cease and disappear altogether, since the profit margin had obviously become too narrow for anyone to get a reasonable return. That was unfortunately not the case. On the contrary, the legislation gave an aura of legitimacy to the practice of tax rebate discounting and more and more people were using this service. When the child tax credit came on the scene, it made the business expand even more and became a kind of bonanza for all those establishments involved in the discounting trade. Mr. Speaker, at the time, the Tax Rebate Discounting Act was adopted unanimously. In fact, it took only 25 minutes for the House to adopt all three stages of the Bill.

This time, I don't think a decision should be made without careful consideration. We want legislation that considers all aspects of the problem and the potential consequences in relation to the various options available. I think this can be achieved by sending the Bill to a legislative committee, far removed from partisan considerations. I believe the Minister is acting in good faith, and I think the Minister has a problem that he wants to solve in a fair and equitable manner. And I hope the proposals we will make within the framework of a legislative committee will be given due consideration and, if possible, accepted by the Minister. We hope that witnesses will appear before the committee when it examines this legislation in detail.

In 1981, need I remind the House, the legislation was amended so that the 15 per cent charged to cover the transaction not be considered as criminal. Calculated on a yearly basis, this rate could reach over 60 per cent, which is now considered an illegal rate in Canada. At the time, all this appeared quite acceptable because there were still relatively few customers. I must say that because of the economic crisis which we lived through in the early 1980s, the increased number of unemployed, the high rate of inflation and the reduction in the purchasing power of most Canadians, many people decided to avail themselves of tax rebate discounting services to make quick transactions or to meet, in a number of cases, their most basic needs. It should be recognized, therefore, that the cession of the right to an income tax reimbursement has now become an instrument which makes it possible for a number of taxpayers in need of cash to find some at this time of the year, and I think that this time of the year is a good sales season because of the cut prices offered consumers by both manufacturers and retailers. We must therefore recognize that these services have become greatly popular. But this should not prevent us from considering the economic predicament of the people who avail themselves of these services. In fact, two-thirds of the customers of the tax rebate discount industry earn $8,000 or less a year.

In 1985, we have experienced the fourth consecutive year in which the number of Canadians living below the poverty line has increased. There are now approximately 4.35 million Canadians living below the poverty line. Included in this important group are women who are heads of single parent families.

I am very sensitive to the fact that poverty has become a woman phenomenon in Canada. And if the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) was here to deal with this Bill, I am sure that she would pay special attention to this phenomenon and explain it far better than I. And I feel that we, as Parliamentarians, and especially the Minister, on behalf of the Government, should deal with these 33.5 per cent of poor families headed by women, and that we should not overlook this context when we deal with the income tax rebate discounting problem.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to poverty, because it is the most disadvantaged who generally use these services. As a matter of fact, the percentage of male clients who declared an annual income of less than $8,000 was 61.6 in 1983. More disquieting still, the percentage of female clients who declared an annual income of less than $8,000 was 82 in 1983.

In fact, the average income of all clients is $5,573, whereas the average income of all female clients is $1,625. It tells us a lot, Mr. Speaker! It is obvious that the underprivileged are the main users of the services of that growing industry. More specifically, female heads of single-parent families constitute the majority of those users.

Can we still say that the measures introduced by the Minister improve the ot of discounters's clients? One thing we can say for sure is that these measures will attract even more clients. It is my opinion, but not mine alone, for discounters themselves think so. Most Members will agree that it is impossible to save money with incomes like that. Most people with such low incomes live in dire misery. Can we really talk about protecting the consumer's choice, as the Minister tells us in such cases? We in the Liberal Party do not believe there is really a choice to be made. That is why the rates the discounters ask for their services must be, in our opinion, as low as possible when they are figured out on an annual basis.

What makes the matter even worse, in my judgment, is the growth of the industry.

In 1979 there were 7,000 discounting transactions because, as compared with today's figures, in 1985, there have now been 515,000 transactions.

I suggest that such a phenomenal growth can only endure, given the Minister's propositions. All the more so since he said he intends to advertise and tell the public about this service. Well, I hope Canadian taxpayers will not have to foot the advertising bill.

I hope the Minister will make agreements with the industry—doing very well as it is, thank you—so that it will pay for the advertising campaign. In my estimation, those firms should pay for the information we must give the public in that field.

It is important to realize that if we cannot or do not want to abolish this service, we have to make sure that the rates stay as low as possible.

I see no reason to believe the Minister received any overwhelming support from the Provinces, or for that reason from the various interest groups on those proposals.

The various interest groups' response to the working paper was not as spontaneous and unanimous as stated by the Minister. Quite the opposite, many spokesmen for the low-income class felt that the solution was wrong, because they would have preferred a total ban on discounting, in conjunction with a faster income tax refund procedure.

Provinces also were not unanimous, because Quebec as we know does not allow that kind of operation. Any amount owed citizens by the Government is deemed unassignable in Quebec. And at this moment, two other Provinces have some doubts, because they are considering measures more stringent than those announced by the Minister, and I understand they are even considering outright banning of such practices.

[English]

We should remember that in the United States, such a practice does not exist. I would like to cite the following American legislation:

> Any person who is an income tax preparer who endorses or otherwise negotiates (directly or through an agent any check made in respect of the taxes imposed by subtitle A which is issued to a taxpayer other than the income tax return preparer) shall pay a penalty of $500 with respect to each such check.

[Translation]

I think that the United States, which we could call the cradle of free enterprise, are giving us a very good example in that respect. Indeed, the Americans would not allow that kind of operation, recognizing that overpayments to the state belong exclusively to the overpaying citizens. They do not accept that such funds be diverted, and there is a fine for violators that discourages any discounting operation. In my view, such an example should motivate the Minister in this debate.

Finally, I would like to outline the proposals we could put forward, in the Official Opposition, and it is indeed my wish to be somewhat more specific as to our position on that issue of the assignment of rights to income tax refunds.

Concerning the announcement made by the Minister that the child income tax credit would be paid in a number of instalments, this is not enough in my view. The idea certainly is interesting, except that the income tax child credit is still discountable. Low-income groups and Provinces would hope for a ban on any discounting transaction of that credit. It is also the opinion of the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, and the prohibition must also apply to the child tax credit, otherwise, we have reason to believe that there may be further abuses in the future.

Moreover, in my opinion, the rates are still too high for most customers of this service. If you want to borrow $1,000 or even $2,000, you will discover that not many Canadian banking institutions are willing to lend you the money. The efforts made by the Minister show that he is aware of these difficulties. However, we are going to find out that interest rates on these loans are relatively high since they apply over a one year period.

This is why, after the bill has been referred to a committee, we intend to move an amendment to provide for a maximum set rate.

The Minister has used all his accounting expertise to try and keep the amounts as low as possible, but I think that when he is dealing with amounts of over $300, if there is no set maximum rate, some people may lose too large a part of the money which is theirs and which should come back to them, if not in its entirety, at least as completely as possible.

The problem of discounting, and I shall close with this in a short while, hides another problem, that of providing access to financial institutions for small wage-earners. I do not necessarily want provisions in this regard to be included in this legislation, but I simply want to point this out and to make sure that the Minister will accept to consider this issue in the near future.

Our Party will want to look closely at the cost of the proposed measures to the Canadian taxpayer, as compared to the cost of strict cancellation. I believe this would be most interesting and useful for the Members of the legislative committee.

I think the Minister will want, also, to continue having a yearly study of the tax rebate discounting industry in order to get an idea of the impact of the proposed measures and to find out the social and economic characteristics of consumers. This could be done with a view to taking action should the problem get larger and more serious, instead of getting better.

If the child tax credit is excluded entirely from any discounting transaction, I believe that we should continue paying it in one or at the most two payments, rather than in a series of installments, because studies have shown that the money is used to buy more expensive goods like furniture or appliances, to pay dentist's bills or to get essential clothing for the smaller children in the family.

To sum up, I think I should repeat to the House that it is very important to us that we exclude the child tax credit from any tax rebate discounting. I hope the Minister will be willing to try and convince his cabinet collegues of the necessity of it. If he fails to do so, the Bill he is defending today will not have the results he is seeking. I think that when the original Act was passed unanimously at the end of the 1970's, we were all convinced that it would resolve the problem of the neediest in our society. We soon realized that such was not the case.

I dare hope that the Bill introduced by the Minister will not result in a proliferation of tax rebate discounting activities in Canada. I hope that this Bill will make it possible, as suggested by the Minister, for Canadian taxpayers to get their refunds more quickly and also provide a better protection for all those who unfortunately cannot wait for their income tax reimbursement, want to get their cash as soon as possible and who, therefore, rely on companies which provide them with a service at a cost, which, in my opinion, is much too high. It is with this in mind that I conclude my remarks. I wish to assure the Minister of the constructive co-operation of the Official Opposition, provided he accepts a number of amendments which we feel are absolutely essential.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my comments in respect to this Bill by protesting the timing of its presentation. We now know how poorly Parliament acted in 1978 when it passed the legislation which this Bill proposes to replace. In 1978 the Bill was passed in just 20 minutes by the House. The entire policy-making process in the Civil Service and the working out of the details took just one month. We are now repeating the same process because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has delayed so long bringing this Bill forward.

I asked the Minister questions about this a year ago and brought to his attention the dimensions of the problem. I told him of the thousands of people who are adversely affected by the law. I was told then that the Minister was keeping a close watch on the procedures and that he would be doing something fairly quickly. We were then told there would be a discussion paper in June. Of course, the discussion paper did not appear at that time.

We were finally promised that we would see a Bill in September. We did not receive the Bill until the end of November and we are debating it today for the first time. We are debating it with a gun to our heads because we are told it must receive second reading today. We are told that if the Bill does not reach committee and if it is not dealt with there and brought back before Parliament adjourns for Christmas, in January when the tax returns go out people who have used discounters in the past, and who will probably want to use them again, they will be able to go to the discounters who will be able to charge them the fees at the old rates which were so reprehensible. Thus, we have to agree to get this Bill through today, although we are not satisfied with it.

We do not think the Bill deals with the problem as it should, and neither do different organizations in the country. I refer to the consumers' associations, the church organizations, national anti-poverty organizations—the Minister is shaking his finger. We have talked to these organizations and we know what they have said. What they have said is that they want this Bill through, not because they think it meets all the problems but because the provisions of this Bill are better than the old one. It is not because they are satisfied with it.

I ask the Minister why we had to wait until the end of November to deal with the problem? After all, the problem was brought to the attention of the former Government. If I have the time, I may have something to say about the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and what he said on this subject when he was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: do it now.

Mr. McDermid: Don't wait for spring, do it now.

Mr. Orlikow: I am being encouraged to do that now. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), wrote to the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Papineau. If Hon. Members will give me a moment I will find the document to which I refer.

Mr. McDermid: We will give you all the time you need.

• (1610)

Mr. Orlikow: It was written February 8, 1983 and concerned the Tax Rebate Discounting Act. The then Minister replied on March 7, 1983. I would like to read one paragraph from his letter. He said, and I quote:

> While the 15 per cent rate may not satisfy all interested parties, it allows legitimate lenders to carry on business, and accordingly allows Canadian consumers to decide whether or not to use a service which is now controlled by legislation.

That is what the Minister said then.

Mr. Ouellet: That sounds like a good answer.

Mr. Orlikow: And that is exactly the kind of answer which we are getting from the present Minister who says he wants the free enterprise system to work, that he wants people to have a choice. But telling people that they have a choice in this kind of situation reminds me of a saying by that famous French author, Anatole France. He said: "The laws of France permit every French person, rich and poor, to exercise the option to sleep under a bridge, if they want". This Bill gives people an option but the Minister knows very well that the only people who are likely to exercise that option to go a tax discounter are not the wealthy people, not the middle income earners, nor even the working people who have full-time permanent jobs. The people who go to the tax discounter—and the numbers have been doubling and tripling every year so that we are now talking about close to a half a million people—are the poor people, the people who are living on welfare, the single mothers who have children. They have living on the edge of poverty. They are living in a crisis situation. When it comes towards the fourth week of the month they have run through their welfare cheques. They are the people who go to the tax discounters and they are the people who are going to continue to go to the tax discounters and will continue to be ripped off by these tax discounters.

We are talking about a very large amount of money. It is pretty obvious that these hundreds of thousands of Canadians who go to tax discounters have been paying, as we have all said, extremely high interest rates for loans. Because that is what they are; they are loans from the tax discounter and those companies are getting rich.

Two of the richest companies H & R Block, and Ben-Tax, which is a subsidiary of Beneficial Finance, together handled more than 80 per cent of discounting transactions in 1983. These two companies have increased their volume of business over the past four years and their profits have soared dramatically. H & R Block recently reported its profits for the year ending April 30, 1985. These reports make interesting reading and I hope the Minister will pay some attention to them. Its revenues were over $59 million, up from $37 million the year before. Revenues from tax discounting were $25.2 million, up from $18.2 million. Profits were $5.9 million, up from $4.9 million. So there was a 38.5 per cent increase in revenue from tax discounting operations in one year.

That is what we are dealing with. We are dealing with the problems and difficulties of close to half a million of the poorest Canadians who are being ripped off by corporations. I cannot blame the corporations. They are operating under the provisions of the laws which we enacted in 1978 and they will operate next year under the provisions of the laws we are going to pass this month. However, they are making tremendous profits from the backs of the very poor.

We ought not to kid ourselves that these are anything but loans, and I say forced loans given to the very poor by these tax discounters. The Department has always known this. When the previous Bill was being debated in 1978, a representative of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said: "This type of transaction is a disquise loan. It may have a term of two months or an indeterminate term, but it is nonetheless a loan transaction". What we are proposing today is to make some changes in the amount of payment which will cause the interest rate to drop somewhat.

Revenue Canada has, by its efficiency, shortened the period that people have to wait to, in many cases, four weeks or a little less. If we take into account the fact that it no longer takes eight or more weeks to deliver these cheques, the real interest rate is very high.

Under the old provisions a formula was included for the calculation of the interest rate in Schedule 1. It is this simple interest rate which has led to a good deal of confusion because it was always presumed that tax returns would take four months to be processed. In the debate which took place in committee in 1978, a Government witness said that the assumption in the Act is that there is a term of four months. That is the outside limit of what it would take for a return to come back. So on every form which was printed, in accordance with Schedule 1 of the Act, a box had to be filled in for the customer showing the discount at an annual rate, and giving the standard annual interest rate for the calculation. So the tax discounter was able to reprint it in his form, and we have a sample from Ben-Tax showing the real interest rate to be 62.8 per cent. That is a lot of money to pay for a loan to a clerk making the minimum wage.

This 62.8 per cent, as large as it is, not an accurate rate of interest for those transactions, because in the vast majority of cases it did not take nearly that long to deliver the cheque. Today Revenue Canada processes returns not within four months but within an average of four weeks. We have been informed that Revenue Canada processed the first 31 batches of 1984 returns in an average of just 4.3 weeks. This is particularly relevant to our discussion because the T-1 specials under which most child tax credits are claimed, have been processed in 3.7 weeks and the T-1 general form has been processed in an average of 4.7 weeks.

So we can see that the old interest rates in the Act, as it was, were dangerously misleading, and though the 62.8 per cent interest which those companies charged exceeded the minimum interest rate under the Criminal Code, it required a special provision in the Act to exempt this rate of interest in tax discounting transactions.

What are the true rates of interest we are talking about? We went to the research branch of the Library of Parliament and asked them to prepare some calculations for us. We appreciate the help they gave us. They said that under the old interest provisions, which this Bill will change, the annual interest rate was 62.8 per cent for a four-month term, 91.6 per cent for a three-month term, 165 per cent for a two-month term, and 600 per cent if it were processed in one month. Mr. Speaker, discounting at 15 per cent really means loans at interest rates of between 62 and 600 per cent. Under his new proposal the Minister is still permitting the 15 per cent charge on the first $300. Under the so-called reform which the Minister is bringing forward the new rates are blended rates because, as I have indicated, the amount charged is 15 per cent on the first $300 and 5 per cent on the balance.

Again we asked the Library of Parliament to analyse the new rates for some typical amounts. They said that for a $100 rebate processed in four weeks the interest rate would actually be 727 per cent and so on. These rates are grotesque rip-offs of the people who can least afford it but have no other choice if they need the money immediately. It is a revelation to some of us that so many poor people need money immediately, especially to some Members who have not paid attention to the problems of their constituents.

The Government does not seem to worry about that. Two-thirds of the people who used discounters in 1984 had incomes of less than $8,000. They are the working poor and the people on welfare. Waiting for money is a hardship for most of them and the supposed choice of using or not using the discounter is really no choice at all for many of them because they live so close to the poverty line.

When the Conservatives were in Opposition they were critical of the system we had. The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was very indignant about the role being played by tax discounters. He was quoted in The Citizen on February 23, 1983, as saying that it is a shame and a tragedy that taxpayers have to give up $150 of their $1,000 tax refunds. Is he not ashamed of the fact that today, under the proposal made by the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the same taxpayer with a $300 refund will lose the same 15 percent which he lost three years ago? Is it not a shame that the improvement of Revenue Canada in processing tax forms really means that tax discounters will be lending at even higher rates than previously because they will get their repayment that much faster?

A committee of this House expressed itself very clearly on tax discounting. In its report on child and elderly benefits dated April 2, 1985 the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs said:

> The federal Government, in consultation with the provincial Governments, should take steps to outlaw tax rebate discounters.

That is a committee on which the substantial majority of members were and are Conservatives. They got the same information that was available to the Minister and they recognized the tremendous injustice in the system and called for the outlawing of the tax rebate system.

The Government has made much of being the champion of taxpayers in the country with its taxpayers' bill of rights. When I look at what the Minister is proposing in this Bill I have to assume that when the Conservative Government was talking about the taxpayers' bill of rights it was talking about a bill of rights for taxpayers in the middle and upper income brackets. We do not find any mention of taxpayers who use income tax discounters in this document, but surely these taxpayers should be protected too. Presumably this Act is supposed to protect their rights, but does it do that? Let us test that assumption.

A person using a tax discounter is entitled to a professional evaluation of his income tax in return for paying his fee for service. Of course, this does not happen. Any person in Canada can operate as an income tax discounter and have no standards to meet beyond the ability to lend money. A person using a tax discounter should not have to pay interest rates higher than the Canadian law allows. This does not happen either since the Act with which we are dealing today specifically excludes the Criminal Code provisions forbidding interest rates higher than 60 per cent.

A person should have an alternative to using a tax discounter. This, of course, is what the Conservatives promised with its slogan of "free choice". However, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not delivered that. There are no provisions in this Bill or any other that would make an income tax return collateral for a loan at commercial rates. The Minister has talked prior to today and again today of getting credit unions and caisse populaires interested in these kinds of loans, but we have yet to see any firm commitments and programs which will make an alternative to tax discounters possible on a large scale. Surely the Minister and his Department had the time to meet with the credit unions, the caisse populaires and the banks to work out, if possible, a system whereby people who needed to get their money quickly could do so and at a legitimate rate.

We can also ask whether people who use tax discounters get the same kind of consideration which the declaration of taxpayers' rights says they are entitled to from Revenue Canada. Are they entitled to full information, impartiality, courtesy, consideration, and the presumption of honesty, all of which the declaration states? We know they have not had that up until now. Although the Minister said in his speech today that he was going to try to provide some of these factors, they certainly do not exist at the present time.

That is not the reality of tax discounting which is really far closer to the atmosphere of a pawn shop than an office at Revenue Canada. The truth is that tax discounters have a minimal law to satisfy in terms of service. As I have indicated, by using the figures of H & R Block, they do extremely well by doing as little as possible. This legislation does not ask much of them.

We believe that this Bill does not deal with the problem. We say that knowing that we have the support of many organizations which have expressed their views. We know that the consumers' association is not satisfied with this Bill. We know that the National Anti-Poverty Organization is not satisfied with the Bill. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial Ministers of Consumer Affairs cannot be satisfied with this Bill because they were unanimous in their belief that at least the discounting of child tax credits should be prohibited. The Minister did not listen to them.

This Bill does not meet the needs of the Canadian people who have been hurt so much by the process of tax discounting. It was bad in 1978 and became a tremendous tragedy with the implementation of the child tax credit. It was that provision which led to the tremendous increase in the number of people who go to tax discounters. The ones who are hurt the most are those people who must use tax discounters because the only income tax refund they get is from the child tax credit. They still will not be dealt with fairly as a result of this legislation.

This debate concerns what really happens to the child tax credit as an effective social payment and how it is delivered to Canadian mothers, particularly low-income mothers. The child tax credit in its present form of a refundable tax credit on federal income tax has been in place since 1979. It is not accident that the increasing value of the child tax credit has coincided with the growth of income tax discounting.

The refundable credit was valued at $218 in 1979 and will be worth $384 in 1985. It will be enriched further until 1988 to offset losses of family allowances indexing and will then be capped at $524 in 1988.

Clearly that credit is an important social program and has been equally important to income tax discounters since it has fueled the growth of tax discounting. For example, 43 per cent of all those who used a tax discounter in 1983 claimed a child tax credit and 83.5 per cent of women who used discounters claimed the child tax credit.

There is a clear link to low incomes for child tax credit claimants who used discounters. In 1983, 21 per cent of women claiming the credit had family incomes below $2,000. Imagine a family with an income of less than $2,000 having part of their tax credit discounted. Not only is it a disgrace that we permit that tax credit to be discounted, it is a disgrace that they have such a low income. As well, 24 per cent of women claiming the credit had family incomes below $2,000 and no spousal income. Women who have income like this have no attraction to discounters beyond the child tax credit and other credits.

Obviously, we are talking about the very poor, people who desperately need money. They will likely be ready to file a return in January before Revenue Canada is prepared to handle the return unless this Bill, with all its deficiencies, is passed within the next couple of weeks.

There is no freedom of choice for these people. No bank will give them credit for a loan. There is no way that they can use their income tax return as security except by going to the tax discounter. The only choice these people have is between one discount and another, and all their rates are extortionate.

We now have some idea of who is getting hurt by tax discounters when we see that in 1983, 45,000 women with no spousal income and personal incomes below $2,000 used tax discounters. We also know from the same records from the Ministry of Consumer and Corporation Affairs that of the $41 million earned by tax discounters, between $15 million and $20 million came from child tax credits. That is almost half. It is quite clear that this program is haemorrhaging in its waste of public money.

This Bill does nothing to rectify the situation. Despite the Minister's statements about freedom of choice, it does not give a woman with little income beyond child tax credit a low-interest alternative. There is no way that she can use her tax return as loan security. There is no ban on tax discounters taking child tax credits although this was a proposal agreed to by Ministers of Consumer Affairs in Manitoba last September. There is even a delay on the new payment scheme for child tax credits which will not go into effect until 1987. These tax discounters do not only rip off the child tax credit, because many provincial Governments have provincial income tax credits designed to help those who are less well off. In British Columbia there is the renter's tax credit. In Alberta there is a renter's tax credit. In Ontario, there is a property tax credit, a retail sales tax credit and a pensioner's tax credit which was later replaced by a grant. In Manitoba there is a property tax credit and a cost of living tax credit.

According to the Canadian Tax Foundation's book, Canadian Tax Policy, it has been demonstrated that these tax credits inject fairness into the tax system in these provinces by providing: "The greatest relief for lower income tax payers and the least relief for high income tax payers". The Canadian Tax Foundation study makes no mention of what happens when tax credits from the provinces are discounted and 15 per cent of these benefits are still taken away on the first $300 from those who qualify.

It is not surprising that the Minister of Consumer Affairs in Manitoba, Mr. Rowland Penner, was quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press in February of this year as saying:

> These are supposed to be benefits to help the really poor. If they are losing as much as 15 per cent of this support program then we are failing recipients to that extent.

This legislation is failing the poor. We now have the means to rectify this failure but it is not accomplished by this Bill. The Government's defence of the integrity of tax credits is to allow a charge of 15 per cent on the first $300 and 5 per cent on the rest of the refund. It is still failing the poor.

By this lack of consideration for provincial jurisdiction in income tax matters, the federal Government is telling the provinces that they must abandon tax credits if they wish to see the integrity of their programs protected. It also means that the approaches toward a negative income tax system for helping the poor is hopelessly vulnerable to tax discounters.

This is how the authors of Canadian Tax Policy summed up the impact of Canada's tax system on the working poor:

> There is virtually no federal program designed to assist the working poor. They do receive preferential treatment under the personal income tax system and may be tax exempt owing to various deductions and exemptions. But they do not receive income transfers. Some provinces (for example, Ontario) provide a modest amount of tax credits to low-income persons, ostensibly to offset provincial sales and property taxes.

Rather than those people benefiting as the provinces have proposed, they are ripped off because the Government will permit tax discount operations to continue.

It is quite obvious that what little the tax system is prepared to transfer to the working poor will still be subject to the activities of the discounter. Is that how the Conservatives wish to treat the vast numbers of people who keep small and marginal businesses operating in Canada? Those poor people who will be ripped off will have less money to purchase goods from small businesses.

Bill C-83 comes no closer to helping the working poor. In fact, tax discounting will make the situation far worse for the working poor.

Canadians cannot afford this legislation. The poor cannot afford to be short changed as they will be under the provisions of this Bill. We say that it is wrong to permit discounters, including some of the largest companies in the field, to make the kind of profits they have made. This Bill fails to address this very poor situation.

We believe that tax discounting should be outlawed as it has been in the United States and the Province of Quebec. If the Minister is not prepared to outlaw tax discounting completely, he should certainly have followed the advice of the provincial Ministers of Consumer Affairs who said that the discounting of the child tax credit should be prohibited. This Bill does not fulfil its proposed purpose and we intend to vote against it.

CANADA PENSION PLAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation to amend the Canada Pension Plan Act to

1. provide more flexibility so that all contributions can be taken into consideration at the discretion of the Minister; and

2. extend the time in which an individual can apply for a disability pension to 12 months or such longer period as approved by the Minister.

She said: Mr. Speaker, Canada's provincial Treasurers will be meeting with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in Edmonton soon and an important item on the agenda will be amendments to the Canada Pension Plan. The Canada Pension Plan was introduced in the mid 1960s and improvements or amendments to it have always been slow and difficult to realize. This is so, in part, because of the requirement that all amendments be not only approved by Parliament but also by two-thirds of the provinces with two-thirds of the population of Canada.

Another difficulty in bringing about improvements to the Canada Pension Plan has been the financial reason. Over the years provinces have borrowed very extensively from the Canada Pension Plan. I believe the cumulative amount which Ontario has borrowed over the years is now at about $14.5 billion. Under those circumstances, the provinces tend to resist any further costs.

The Canada Pension Plan provides workers and their families with a basic level of earnings related protection agains the contingencies of retirement, disability and death. The Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform which reported at the end of 1983 raised the question of whether disability benefits belong in a pension plan, but did not make a recommendation on whether disability provisions should continue to be found within the Canada Pension Plan or should be in a separate program. However, the committee did recommend an increase in the amounts and it that respect I quote from the report:

—current benefit levels do not reflect relevant living standards. As MPs we believe that a significant and early increase in disability benefits is essential.

The question of disability benefits was also discussed by a special committee which considered matters relating to the disabled and the handicapped during 1983. That committee had some very far-reaching recommendations which I hope we will see in law fairly soon. One of them was that a comprehensive disability insurance program be established and integrated with the Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan. Another was a proposal to change the definition of disability so that it would exclude fewer people. Another was to allow earnings on a sliding scale while a person is in receipt of benefits. These are all very progressive recommendations but what we are left with now is very much more restrictive.

Disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan consist of a flat rate portion and an earnings related portion of 75 per cent of the imputed retirement pension. Disability benefits are payable in the case of severe and prolonged disability as a result of which the person is incapable regularly of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation. Clearly, that is a very restrictive definition.

First, the words "incapable of pursuing substantially gainful occupation" imply, really, giving up hope. The injured person is unwilling to face the fact that he or she may be unable to pursue any gainful occupation. Relatives are willing to encourage that kind of expectation. Doctors are reluctant to take away hope from people. So what tends to happen after the disability is that the patient tries every conceivable chance of rehabilitation and further treatment. He tries to go back to work and then a year has passed and he or she is no longer eligible for benefits because the application must be made within 12 months of becoming disabled. That is in the statute and there is no ministerial discretion. That is the first matter which I would like to see changed. I would like to see greater flexibility in the time for applying for disability benefits.

The second matter concerns the requirement that the contributions to the Canada Pension Plan must have been made in a fixed timeframe. The timeframe varies but essentially, for most people, they must have contributed within five of the last 10 years. Women, particularly, often fail to qualify, if we take on the year they have been ill and then, perhaps, four years when they may have been home with young children. Time and again they have failed to qualify even though they may very well have had 10 years of contributions. The contributions should be looked at in another timeframe.

Having dealt with a number of people who have lost their eligibility to Canada Pension disability benefits, either because of the 12 month limit or because of the timeframe in which they should have contributed, I am proposing that the Government include in its next meetings with the provinces for discussion proposals to bring some flexibility into these two matters in particular.

These are two very specific issues, and while my motion only concerns those two issues, I am not, of course, suggesting that that is the end of the debate on the needs of the disabled. I would in fact like to see a much more comprehensive plan in place, as was advocated by the all-Party committee on the disabled. However, I think the proposals I am putting forward are simple and practical and it might be possible to get agreement on those with the provincial Ministers concerned.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) which would essentially, if it were to be adopted by both the federal and provincial Governments provide more flexibility so that all contributions could be taken into consideration at the discretion of the Minister and, second, extend the time at which an individual could apply for a disability pension to 12 months or such longer period as might be approved by the Minister.

As the Hon. Member for Trinity has already pointed out, the Canada Pension Plan has a very stringent definition of disability. It can only be applied to persons who can never again be re-employed. We also know from a whole variety of reports which are available to Governments, both provincial and federal, that among those individuals who have been unfortunate enough to leave the workforce because of a disability and have applied to the Canada Pension Plan for a benefit under that plan there is widespread poverty. Those persons are poor for a number of reasons. First, because they applied for a disability pension under the CPP they are not permitted to accept any form of work while they are in receipt of the benefit and, second, of course—and this has been argued very strongly in the Obstacles report, to which the Hon. Member for Trinity referred—is that simply because you become disabled does not mean that your expenses come down, by any means. In fact, more often than not when one is disabled one incurs additional expenses which an able-bodie person would not normally have.

I was a member of that special committee, along with other Members from all sides of the House, and in our report we said that within the insurance companies, disability is called "the living death" because the family of the disabled person is deprived of a regular income as if the person were dead but is left with equal or greater expenses because the person is still living. That may be a harsh way to put it but I think it is the reality of many people once they become disabled on the job.

There is also no doubt that trying to reform Canada's pension plan is an extremely slow process. I recall that when I came here in 1980 there was the National Pensions Conference. I was fortunate enough to be a delegate from the House to that conference. To say there was no consensus arrived at at that conference would not be to exaggerate. But something which did come through from the conference was the need to reform Canada's pension system. Since then we have had the second national conference on pensions, and we still have not arrived at any form of consensus.

In fact, I just quickly ran through some notes I had on pension reform and found that the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, Monique Bégin, announced proposals on December 7, 1981 while she was at the United Nations. She set out a whole series of proposals to improve the disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

The following day there were news reports emanating from the Treasurer of Ontario at that time, Mr. Frank Miller, who very bluntly and strongly said that he did not think that disability benefits should properly fall under the Canada Pension Plan but should come from somewhere else. He did not define where the "somewhere else" would be. I just say that to illustrate the difficulty there is in getting provincial-federal agreement on improvements to the Canada Pension Plan, and that is required as we all know under that plan.

In spite of the special committee on the disabled, and announcements from Ministers of National Health and Welfare over the years, including the present Minister, not too much has been accomplished. I believe that is why I and other Hon. Members welcome the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Trinity which will again give us the opportunity to speak about some of the problems associated with that issue in the House and, hopefully, bring some pressure to bear on the Parties who are responsible for the negotiation to go at it in a much more serious way.

We all have constituents who have had great difficulty with the Canada Pension Plan. When they have attempted to apply for a disability pension they found out fairly quickly that the interpretation of the section of the Canada Pension Plan means that they have to be practically comitose in order to receive a benefit. If they are fortunate enough to receive a benefit, the benefit itself is totally inadequate to allow a person to live with any degree of dignity or financial independence.

The proposals in the Obstacles report received broad support from provincial Governments, the federal Government and all kinds of Canadians. Yet, those proposals have not yet been adopted.

In February of 1983 the advisory committee on the Canada Pension Plan, which reports to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), presented the Minister with further proposals on how to improve disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. In that report it was pointed out that there was widespread poverty among persons in receipt of that benefit.

They made two suggestions to improve that. I will use the figures that they used in 1982, although they are out of date now. They said that disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan could be improved by increasing the flat rate component from its present level of $70.68 per month to a much higher level such as the equivalent of the Old Age Security pension of $227.73 per month which prevailed from January to March of 1982.

The second recommendation was that raising the earnings-related component from 75 per cent of the contributor's imputed retirement pension to 100 per cent—that would be from $230.74 a month to $376 per month—would make the benefits to these individuals equal to a benefit that they could receive at age 65. It would, in effect, double the pension income for disabled individuals.

This is something that is sorely needed. This has been recognized by many groups and individuals who have been requested by the Government to conduct examinations into the Canada Pension Plan and, indeed, the entire pension system. I think the House would be doing a service to Canada's present disabled, as well as future disabled Canadians, if we were to agree today to refer the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. In that way we could once again ensure that the problems faced by that group of Canadians are receiving the kind of public attention they fully deserve.

I do not think I need say too much more. I think the Member who introduced the motion put the case very well. I only wanted to indicate my support for that measure.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can only applaud the motion by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Ms. Nicholson) regarding the advisability of expanding eligibility for disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. However, I think this measure alone would not solve all the problems connected with disability coverage, and I would prefer to seek a solution based on a comprehensive review of our disability benefit system.

Before examining the system and its shortcomings, I would like to give a brief overview of the situation facing many disabled individuals. First of all, it is extremely difficult to establish an accurate profile of the disabled in Canada. It is difficult because we have no single definition of what disability is. Even programs for the disabled are based on widely varying definitions of disability. Furthermore, our statistics on the disabled population in Canada are very limited. However, the few data we do have point to a situation that is extremely disturbing. It is estimated that about 12.5 per cent of Canadians are disabled to some extent. Eighteen per cent of disabled individuals between the ages of 15 and 64 have a serious disability. It is also true that both the percentage and the seriousness of the disability increase with age. For instance, it is estimated that only 5 per cent of the disabled are under 15, while about 30 per cent are over 65.

Economically speaking, the disabled are certainly one of the least advantaged groups of our society. There are a number of factors that account at least partially for this situation. We see that the unemployment rate among disabled individuals who are able to work tends to be higher than among the general population. It is also true that individuals who are unable to work usually have a very low income. According to a 1981 survey of recipients of disability benefits under the Canada Pension Plan, their average income from all sources was equal to or below the low-income threshold established by Statistics Canada.

The precarious financial situation in which the disabled find themselves is not due to a lack of Government programs for this particular group. The disability benefits system in Canada includes a range of programs that provide workers with income protection in case of disability. However, the most effective programs have been designed to meet specific objectives such as protecting workers in case of accidents on the job or meeting our obligations to disabled veterans.

I would now like to give a brief description of the main programs that constitute our existing disability benefits system. These programs can be classified in two major categories: general disability programs and category programs.

The general disability programs are those under which benefits are payable regardless of the cause of disability. It is the case, for instance, of the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan. Those are mandatory social insurance programs under which wage earners and the self-employed have guaranteed coverage in case of disability. Eligibility for disability benefits however is strictly limited because of the limited scope of the definition of that word as used in those plans.

There are also voluntary private insurance programs for prolonged disability. These programs cover about 43 per cent of the work force. Generally speaking, they provide a substitute income roughly equivalent to 60 to 75 per cent of the income earned before disability. It should be noted however that such programs provide for an integration formula under which benefits are reduced when the recipient gets other disability benefits.

Social assistance is the last program in the category of general programs. Social assistance benefits are paid to the needy, no matter what the cause may be. These programs are administered by the provinces, but the federal Government shares the costs.

As to the second group of programs offering income protection in case of disability, it also includes so-called category programs. These programs pay benefits to people in particular circumstances. An example would be the system of provincial workers' compensation programs. They compensate workers who suffer from disability due to a work accident. Category programs also include disability pensions paid to veterans, car accident insurance plans, and compensation for victims of criminal acts.

This description of the Canadian system of disability benefits would indicate that ours is a relatively complete and efficient system. I am sorry that I have to say that such is not the case, unfortunately. Our system has major short-comings which can be grouped around three major problems. The first of these problems stems from the difficult task of determining what a disability is. The universal income related programs such as the Canada Pension Plan, the Quebec Pension Plan or the long term disability insurance plan essentially provide benefits in case of a very serious disability, but do not provide any benefit to people suffering from a partial disability.

Specific programs providing compensation for work-related or automobile accidents provide benefits in case of total or partial disability. However, these benefits are paid only if the disability is the result of a specific cause, like a wound suffered or an illness incurred on the job, or in an automobile accident.

In fact, it is not always possible to identify the single cause of disability. For instance, certain types of cancer can be the result of smoking and or working conditions. When in doubt as to the cause, unfortunately, the application for benefits may be turned down. Naturally, this all or nothing approach is a source of much criticism.

The second problem concerns the target population. People who are not earners can hardly expect protection except for provincial social assistance, legal aid, or private insurance programs. The problem concerning self-employed workers is different. As I said, nearly all wage earners are covered by the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. They can also receive benefits as compensation for a work-related accident or under a private insurance plan. The fact that these people are seeking similar objectives inevitably result in an over-lapping protection. Such a situation generally arises when an invalid person is eligible for benefits under more than one program. Some of the results of this over-lapping of measures are an increase in administrative costs for the system and a more complicated procedure for the applicant.

The third and last major short-coming of our system, but not the least, concerns the limit of benefits paid. It should be emphasized first that the level of these benefits vary widely from one program to another. The programs which cover the greatest number of people are unfortunately those which also pay the lowest benefits. In fact, the social assistance program which has the widest coverage provides only a minimum income to the needy. Social assistance benefits are subject to a means test and do not take into account the salaries previously paid to the worker.

As for the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, they provide a level of income based on previous earnings. The maximum amount of the disability benefit in these cases represents approximately 20 per cent of the average industrial wage. In addition, the great majority of recipients have benefits much lower than the maximum amount of benefits payable. About 14 per cent of disability benefit recipients must depend on provincial welfare programs to meet their needs. This clearly indicates that the level of disability benefits under the CPP is quite inadequate.

On top of this problem, there is the difference in the disability benefit rates of the two plans. I am certain that this question will be debated during the federal-provincial discussions on pension reform. Moreover, neither plan offers complementary programs to meet special needs.

Workmen's compensation programs also replace, but more substantially, the previous earning income of the disabled. However, the maximum level of benefits is limited by the ceiling of insurable earnings which varies with the provinces.

However, these programs offer the most comprehensive range of services to meet the special needs of the disabled.

Private insurance programs for extended disability also provide a very high rate of replacement of previous earnings. However, there is little protection against inflation in the long term. On the other hand, these programs pay benefits related to special needs under certain circumstances.

I trust that improvements can be made to the existing system. Indeed, this is why the federal and provincial governments are actively working on a comprehensive review of disability benefits. Under its terms of reference, the task force must identify the weaknesses of the present system and define possible options to provide a complete disability insurance system. The task force is expected to report to the federal and provincial social services ministers by the end of this year.

[English]

Mr. Girve Fretz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the motion today presented by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). The Government recognizes that Canada's disabled population needs improved assistance. We are already taking steps to facilitate this goal.

In this regard I would like to draw the attention of Hon. Members to changes to the disability tax deduction which were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget address of May 23, 1985.

Effective for the 1986 and subsequent taxation years, this special income tax deduction will be available to any individual who is certified by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) as being a person who, during the year, was suffering from a severe and prolonged mental or physical impairment. This is a major improvement in that currently only the blind and those who are confined to a bed or wheelchair are eligible for the special disability deduction.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out, if the effect of the disability is to markedly restrict the person in activities of daily living, and if the disability has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of at least 12 months, the person will be eligible for the tax deduction. About 185,000 people are expected to benefit under this broader definition, a substantial increase over the 65,000 current claimants.

There is no doubt that one of the major problems facing the disabled today is inadequate income support. The above change is evidence of both our recognition of this serious problem and our commitment to find a solution. Nevertheless, the Government knows that despite the fact that a myriad of programs exist to assist disabled persons, this group remains among the poorest people in Canada.

I think it is obvious that the motion before us today is an attempt to alleviate this situation. The Hon. Member has identified the Canada Pension Plan disability provisions as being in need of improvement. Her criticism is not with the level of benefit or the definition of disability which are the two areas most commonly looked at with regard to CPP disability benefits. Instead, I think the Member has asked the Government to modify the eligibility criterion that requires a disabled CPP contributor to meet the minimum contributory requirements and to extend the date at which disability can be deemed to have occurred. These are two changes which, even though they may seem of minor significance at first glance, could improve the financial situation of at least some disabled persons.

Before commenting in detail on the two proposals contained in this motion, I believe it would be useful to first review the current legislative requirements for the receipt of a CPP disability pension. As well, I want to outline for Hon. Members why legislators at the time the plan was introduced in the mid-1960s chose the criteria they did.

In order to qualify for a disability benefit, the CPP currently requires a contributor to have contributed for a minimum of five calendar years and the lesser of: 5 of the last 10 years and, in total, at least one-third of the number of years in the individual's contributory period; or 5 of the last 10 years and, in total, at last 10 years.

The underlying rationale for these minimum contributory requirements was twofold. First, it was felt that because of the substantial flat-rate benefit which makes up a portion of the CPP disability pension, it was only reasonable to require that contributors demonstrate a substantial attachment to the paid labour force.

Second, given that the CPP is designed to provide contributors and their families with a measure of protection against the loss of earnings income, it was felt that a test of recent attachment to the labour force was not unreasonable. However, since the introduction of the CPP in 1966 the minimum contributory requirements have been criticized and proposals have been made for changes.

I am sure that it will not surprise Hon. Members to hear that the Hon. Stanley Knowles, who is well known to all of us for his concern and efforts on behalf of disadvantaged Canadians, made one such proposal as far back as 1977. During a 1977 meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, Mr. Knowles suggested possibly reducing the minimum contributory requirement for receipt of a CPP disability pension to one year. At that time the then Minister of National Health and Welfare agreed to refer the subject to the Canada Pension Plan advisory committee.

In a June 1980 report to the Minister, the advisory committee rejected in principle the proposal by which a single year's contribution to the CPP would entitle a contributor to coverage at any future date, regardless of the contributor's future labour force participation. The committee felt that some test of recent labour force attachment was still required. Instead, what the committee recommended was that the current rules be maintained and supplemented by an additional rule which would allow a contributor to qualify for disability coverage if he or she had made one valid contribution, either in the year of disability or in the immediately preceding year. This proposal was formally submitted to the provinces for consideration.

In this regard, I should point out that a major change to the CPP requires the approval of both the federal Government and two-thirds of the provinces having two-thirds of the Canadian population.

However, a decision on this and other CPP disability benefit improvements was deferred until such time as a federal-provincial study could be completed on the feasibility of introducing a comprehensive disability protection scheme.

As Hon. Members may remember, such a scheme was recommended by the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped in its 1981 report, Obstacles. I believe that report has been alluded to in the Chamber today. I am pleased to note that the study is expected to be submitted to federal and provincial Ministers of social services by the end of this year. This study, along with proposals to improve CPP disability benefits, will be included in upcoming federal-provincial consultations on comprehensive pension reforms.

In addition, it may interest Hon. Members to know that the minimum contributory requirements for receipt of a disability pension under the Quebec Pension Plan were amended effective January 1, 1984, for persons between the ages of 60 and 64. Persons in that age group, who are no longer able to do the job they had prior to disability, are entitled to receive a QPP disability pension if they have contributed to the plan for a minimum of seven years. However, while the recent labour force attachment test has been abolished under the Quebec Pension Plan, it must be kept in mind that it is only for a small group of QPP contributors, the near elderly.

Let us now turn to the Hon. Member's suggestion that there be an extension in the time limit allowed for the determination of when an individual can be deemed to be disabled. Currently, a CPP contributor cannot be deemed to be disabled earlier than 12 months before the month of application for a disability pension.

At the time the CPP was introduced, legislators recognized that in many cases disabled persons would not apply for CPP disability benefits as soon as they became disabled. There could be many reasons for such a delay, not the least of which is the fact that it takes time to recognize and accept that one meets the severe and prolonged definition of disability under CPP. Thus, it was felt only reasonable to allow some measure of retroactive determination. However, while some retroactivity was desirable, it was recognized that it would be very difficult in many cases to determine exactly when a contributor became disabled for CPP purposes. A maximum of 12 months prior to the month of application was deemed to be a reasonable length of time to allow for a retroactive determination of disability. As Hon. Members can appreciate, it would be difficult to administer a provision which had no fixed date.

The Hon. Member's motion suggests that the time period be left up to the Minister's discretion, but I am sure that we can all recognize the potential inconsistency of protection that such an approach could create. Nevertheless, it may be that a longer period of time should be allowed, such as 24 or perhaps even 36 months, and that this issue could be included in the federal-provincial consultations on CPP changes.

There may be another reason disabled workers are not applying for CPP benefits as soon as they might. I think we should ask ourselves whether Canadians are delaying application for CPP disability benefits through ignorance. Is it that they are unaware of the protection afforded by the CPP? If so, this is the problem that must be dealt with. Canadian workers and their employers pay for the CPP. They pay so that when they meet one of the contingencies for which a CPP benefit is available they can receive the needed earnings replacement the CPP provides. New and innovative efforts are being made by the Department of National Health and Welfare to acquaint CPP contributors of their rights under the plan. Those who are entitled to CPP benefits should apply for and receive these benefits at the first opportunity, and every effort is being made to ensure that individuals know this.

The Hon. Member is to be complimented today for her concern for Canada's disabled. I assure her and all Canadians that the Government shares this concern. Every effort will be made to bring about much-needed improvements for disabled persons in the very near future.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak today on the broader issues associated with the motion to amend the Canada Pension Plan put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

In response to the concerns raised in Obstacles, the report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, federal and provincial Ministers of social services agreed in February, 1982 that prior to proposing any legislative initiatives, they would establish a joint federal-provincial task force on income protection.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the study was to identify means to provide adequate benefits to all disabled and handicapped Canadians, both in and out of the work force.

• (1800)

[English]

The first phase of this study was completed as mandated with the task force submitting its report to Ministers in September 1983. I understand that the Ministers have agreed to continue the work of the task force. It is expected that the second phase of this study will be completed in time to meet the December 1985 completion date.

In closing, I want to emphasize that this Government is prepared to make specific changes. I compliment my colleagues from Trinity on her excellent motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT A) REQUEST THAT EUROPEAN TRAVEL VOUCHERS BE TABLED BY MINISTER B) DEMAND THAT TRAVEL DOCUMENTS BE PRODUCED

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend the few minutes allotted to me to deal with the trips made last summer by the Hon. Minister for Environment, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

Several documents were obtained recently under the Freedom of Information Act, which clearly show that although the main purposes of the trip made by the Hon. Minister, despite the fact that such purposes and such meetings had been cancelled to the Minister's knowledge, she nevertheless decided to travel "through the Europes". As it seems in this matter, the more documents that get out, the clearer it becomes that originally there was a reasonable purpose, an official purpose for the Minister to go to Europe. We can appreciate that the Minister added to that official activity other ones of a personal and touristic nature, which she probably intended to carry on at her own expense. It appears however, that when the main reason for the trip was cancelled, the Minister was in quite a dilemma, namely: should she then forgo the interesting, entertaining, touristic part of the trip? And this is where, unable to resist the temptation, she decided to proceed nonetheless with her European tour.

I have here a few documents that are interesting to quote. For instance, I have in hand a telex from our embassy in Stockholm to External Affairs here in Ottawa, dated March 27, which was before the April trip, and I am simply quoting from the telex:

[English]

There is a 98 per cent chance that the Stockholm ministerial meeting will be postponed. Please advise if we are correct in presuming that if the ministerial meeting is postponed, Minister Blais-Grenier's visit to Sweden will also be postponed.

[Translation]

The embassy was them assuming that were the official part cancelled, the Minister would forgo her trip. But we know that the opposite happened. Indeed, the Minister went in spite of that.

I have here another telex to External Affairs from the Canadian embassy in Moscow: it may sound a bit strange but I should like to quote a few words from it. It is stated that certain Soviet officials whose names I will not mention since they are not needed for the purposes of the discussion, "cannot therefore greet Mrs. Blais-Grenier in Leningrad, although the Soviet party appreciates the touristic character of the visit to Leningrad". Those are documents written by federal officials.

I have another one here sent to Helsinki from External Affairs, in which one instruction is given:

[English]

—would like to emphasize the private nature of the trip.

• (1805)

And at that point, the Minister having requested that the host country look after hotel reservations:

[English]

We are advised that Moscow will not process item like this. Please contact Intourist in Helsinki for arrangements.

So even host countries did not want to get involved.

I could go on with that kind of quotes. But I feel that what we now need to know is, what did the Minister pay for herself, because we have several invoices which we examined and it does not appear that during the entire trip, except for one part that is quite identifiable where the Minister visited Corsica at her own expense, it seems. And there, I believe it because no invoices were tabled or obtained under the Freedom of Information Act to indicate that the Canadian taxpayers paid for anything with respect to that trip. So that part of the journey, where she went to Corsica, is not involved.

But, on the other hand, for all the other parts of the two trips we know of, the one in April and the one in June, we have hotel vouchers showing continuity. We have limousine vouchers, and there is no evidence whatsoever as to how the Minister herself would have paid part of the costs. So we are wondering what part the Minister should pay back to the Canadian taxpayers.

Finally, I would simply stress that coming from a Minister in a Government that is preaching austerity, restraint, it is bad example to go sightseeing at the taxpayers' expense. In my view, on the one hand the Minister should reflect on what she did, and on the other the head of the Government should put out stringent guidelines to make sure such things do not happen again.

[English]

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to listen to the piety of the Member of a previous Government that on average spent at least 40 per cent more on travel than this Government.

In specific answer to the question of the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and in further response to the question that was asked some time ago, since the question was first asked several significant pieces of information have been proffered publicly as far as possible. I have in my hand documentation which provides details of the Minister's personal expenses. As the Hon. Member will know, it is not possible to table these in the House because they are in fact personal expenses.

There has also been a further public indication of the second official invitation from Sweden, which accounts for the Minister's visit there. In addition to that, we have had further indication of the significance of the visit the Minister made to France for a cultural occasion which was well recognized and appreciated by people from France and Quebec. I think that those pieces of information, on scrutiny of the Canadian public, if they are exposed, will provide the information for which the Hon. Member has asked.

AGRICULTURE—FARM DEBT—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) FARM GROUPS' DEMAND

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on November 25, I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) as follows:

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. A week ago Saturday, 800 farmers demonstrated in front of the Minister's constituency office in St. Thomas to protest the lack of action on the farm debt crisis. Can the Minister say when the Government is going to take action as demanded by the seven responsible farm groups, on a comprehensive farm debt moratorium and farm credit arrangements legislation?

I did not get much of a response from the Minister that day, and I will refer to that later.

Essentially, many of the people who were at that demonstration were tobacco farmers from that area as well as beef farmers from the Bruce Peninsula and the Bruce-Grey riding. They were all protesting the lack of action on the part of the Government on farm credit legislation and on the extension of the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation loans to other loans. Of course, we received no answer from the Minister.

The demonstrators who are in front of the Parliament Buildings today are mainly tobacco growers. It is little wonder that they are demonstrating. They have seen a litany of broken promises. For instance, back in June, 1984, they met with the then Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) and the then Minister of Agriculture. At that time the Minister gave a commitment that there would be national marketing and legislation for tobacco.

• (1810)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wrote a letter to a Mr. Garry Balthes in November 1984 which reads:

Dear Garry:

Thank you for your letter of August 14.

I was pleased to have an opportunity to meet with you and your co-workers from the concerned farmers group during the campaign, and can assure you that our government will be acting quickly to establish a National Tobacco Marketing Agency, as well as other measures designed to assist tobacco producers.

A rally took place on November 9 at which about 800 farmers protested and demanded action. One of the farmers with whom I communicated is in his seventies. He said that it was the angriest and most ugly farm demonstration he had seen since the 1930s.

Last weekend, on November 30, there was another rally in Delhi. I asked the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk why he did not attend that rally. I did this because farmers were contacting me to complain about the fact he was not attending. Of course, he brought in the explanation that he had to go to a Santa Claus parade in an adjoining community.

Next Tuesday, December 10, there will be an even larger rally here in Ottawa to protest the lack of action with respect to the establishment of a farm marketing agency and all of the other things which farm groups are waiting on. They are waiting because of a litany of broken promises and broken commitments by the Government.

When we raise the subject in the House the Minister just gives a smart alec answer such as he did on November 25. On that day he said he did not take any action because the House was not sitting that week. That type of answer may receive great guffaws and a great response from back-benchers on the government side, but it certainly does not give the Minister credibility. Nor does it put him in a favourable light with farmers who are facing the most devastating financial crunch since the 1930s.

What we see from the Government and the Minister is a litany of broken promises and broken commitments. We have not seen any action with respect to establishing any of the agencies about which the Government has talked. The farmers are getting bloody mad. They will continue to rally. They will continue to demand that the Government take action. They were promised this years ago. Then the Conservatives came to power and the action is simply not forthcoming. It is just stall, stall, stall. When action does come about it is in the form of a dribble and really amounts to no action at all.

I am acting on behalf of these people tonight demanding that the Government move ahead with these demands and keep the commitments it made, not only in the election campaign but several times since. There has been no action forthcoming up to this point in time.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has to forgive Government Members if at times we do not take him seriously. It is difficult to appreciate someone who was in Government for so long and who accomplished so little; he tries to tell the Government, or impress upon us, the serious nature of the problems in the field of agriculture.

It is not difficult at all for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), or for most Members on this side of the House, to appreciate the serious problems in agriculture which have arisen over four or five years of constant neglect by the previous Government. I do not say that in defence because, in fact, I think we have a record which is now evolving. Because of the time I will only list two or three items in this respect.

In the recent past we made a payment of $40 million on the federal level under the ASA, because Bill C-25 was passed. We can now make quarterly payments to red meat producers.

• (1815)

We do have an enabling legislation for the tobacco marketing board—

Mr. Foster: How does that help our cow-calf operators?

Mr. Gurbin: In conjunction with the provincial governments those programs in fact are there.

Mr. Foster: There is nothing for the cow-calf operators, and you know it.

Mr. Gurbin: There is also $150 million for drought relief for the western farmers. I am going to stop there, Mr. Speaker. There are many more things which could be mentioned but I know that they upset the Hon. Member for Algoma. But he talked about them for two or three years and did not do a bloody thing about them. What I would like to say very quickly, because the time is running short, is that the amendment which will be necessary to the bankruptcy legislation is being considered by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The question of urgency is there and is impressed upon the Government. We have been in government for 15 months now and during that period of time—

Mr. Foster: There is no act yet. It's been promised since last July.

Mr. Gurbin: —in discussions with different groups the importance of the bankruptcy legislation has been understood, as well as changes to the Farm Credit Corporation. A private sector group has been established which has given its recommendations to the Minister. In close consultation with the Minister of Agriculture the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) understands we need that legislation in order to deal with that very significant segment of the agricultural population which will not, in fact, be accommodated—I agree with the Hon. Member for Algoma on this point—by the traditional measures because in fact they have been allowed to sink so low under the previous Liberal regime.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.18 p.m.

THE ECONOMY

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—PROPOSED ACTION PLAN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after two months of uninterrupted and repeated requests from Members of the Opposition and the Montreal East survival committee, the Government has just announced the creation of a six-Minister Cabinet committee to provide assistance to the Montreal region, mainly to Montreal East which is now experiencing a situation likely to result in the loss of 5,000 jobs.

For openers, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the House and one of the people responsible for the survival committee, I would like to serve immediate notice on those Ministers that the workers will simply not stand still while this third committee runs around in circles. I would also advise the committee and its chairman, the President of the Treasury Board, that one more study is not going to help Montreal East. First, the Government must give Montreal East a Zone-IV designation to make all industries and workers eligible for the best grant programs. Second, the Government must cancel the Gulf sale to Ultramar and let Gaz métropolitain buy the refinery and protect jobs. Third, the Government must immediately award contracts to Montreal East's Canadian Vickers under the TRUMP or Multi-Ship programs. Fourth, the Government must immediately convene CN, VIA Rail and CP representatives so that they may award contracts to Bombardier, Canadian Steel Wheel and La Forge. Mr. Speaker, on Monday—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his allotted time has expired.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE—TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this morning's Globe and Mail reports that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce intends "to split its shares and increase its dividends as signs of a turnabout become more apparent". This bank can afford to raise the dividends on shares but refuses to deal with its employees in a fair and equitable manner. The Commerce is well known for maintaining a ghetto of low-paid employees, the majority of whom are women, and of practising tactics of intimidation toward pro-union workers and favouritism toward others.

On a number of occasions the CIBC has been found guilty of unfair labour practices. I have written the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) asking him to improve labour relations within banks through stronger legislation. This week the Minister responded to me by indicating his unwillingness to take such a step. I again urge the Government to set up an inquiry into the labour practices of all banks and to improve the Canada Labour Code by introducing meaningful first-contract legislation so that the banks will be forced to negotiate fairly with their employees.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT—CREATION OF JOBS NATIONALLY

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, Canada is becoming a land of opportunity again. Since this Government was elected, 416,000 jobs have been added to the labour force, 83,000 of which were added in November alone. The unemployment rate has fallen from 11.6 per cent in September, 1984, to 10.2 per cent now. Youth unemployment has declined more than two full percentage points. The total of unemployed people has fallen by 148,000 persons. The job-creation rate since the last general election has been four times better than the job-creation rate in the entire 55 months of the previous regime.

Not only is this a trend across the country but, according to the Canada Employment Centre, in Canada's seventh largest city, of Scarborough, this national trend is evident locally. Since September, 1984, the number of Scarborough employers seeking help has increased by one-third over that of the previous 14 months.

This should not be written off as a world-wide trend with no Canadian component. According to current statistics, Canada is reducing unemployment faster than any other western industrial country except The Netherlands. This dramatically improved employment picture shows that we are fulfilling the commitment we made to the Canadian people—that we would renew the economy and that we would do it by making this a country for doing business, for making investments, and for expanding opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

INTERNATIONAL YOUTH YEAR

RECORD OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, as 1985 draws to a close I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the youth of Canada for the outstanding contribution they have made during this International Youth Year. In addition, I would like to commend the Government of Canada and the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne) for the positive programs put forward to assist the youth of Canada with their varied and imaginative projects.

Prior to my election to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, I was actively involved as an educator for 31 years. During that time I had the privilege of working with thousands of young people in both academic and social surroundings. They are genuinely committed to Canada's future. More youth in Canada today are in school and are staying longer. Clearly today's Canadian youth represent the best educated and best trained generation our country has ever produced.

One day, many of the leaders of today's youth will be the leaders of our various levels of Government and industries, making the difficult yet necessary decisions which will affect the economic prosperity and social activity of our great country. It is our duty as parliamentarians to ensure that not only our young people but youth throughout the world inherit a future which is filled with hope and a global security secured in peace and compassion.

It is in this spirit that I urge the Government to make representations at the United Nations to have 1986-1996 declared "International Decade for Youth". It would be a fitting tribute to our youth—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

PERMITTED IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN MAGAZINE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Hustler magazine issue is a classic example of the hypocrisy of the Government. It claims it is concerned about the importation of pornography into Canada. It says it cares about the issue and calls it an issue of paramount urgency. Yet the Government has done absolutely nothing with respect to this disgusting and revolting magazine, in particular the December issue of the magazine.

Last Friday the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) promised the House that a report would be forthcoming by Monday. Some five days later we still do not have that report. It would lead one to conclude that the Government simply does not care about this most important issue.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) suggests we should simply ignore the matter and it might go away. However, that is not the proper course of action as far as we are concerned. Definite action must be taken immediately. The magazine entered Canada because of the gross negligence of the Government. We now find that the Government is planning to cut back 1,152 jobs in the Department of Customs and Excise. While we need more Customs inspectors the Government is planning on cutting back.

The Conservative Government should hang its head in shame for not taking immediate steps to ensure that this magazine is taken off the shelves. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

BIG NUMBER OF JOBS CREATED SINCE ELECTION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, the latest employment figures show that the Government is making every effort to meet its commitment to create jobs. Last November, 83,000 new jobs, most of them full time, were created thanks to Government policies.

Since September 1984, when Canadians voted for a new direction from a Conservative Government, we have helped 416,000 Canadians to find jobs, 416,000 Canadians who were previously unemployed and who would certainly not have found work if a Liberal Government had been in power.

Mr. Speaker, even the Opposition with its complaints and criticisms will admit that this is an unprecedented figure. The Government is living up to its slogan of jobs, jobs, jobs. Unemployment insurance benefits have gone down by 5 per cent since last August.

And it is not only in relation with job creation that this Government is putting Canada back on the map. I would like to point out that the federal deficit for the third quarter amounted to a seasonally adjusted figure of $25 billion, which is 19.4 per cent lower than during the previous quarter.

This Government is restoring the Canadian public's confidence in the economy, Mr. Speaker. We are doing our job!

DAY CARE

NEED FOR INCREASED FACILITIES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, today I wish all my colleagues a very happy St. Nicholas Day. The tradition of that fine old soul who cared so much for all children reflects the best of human nature. It is no wonder that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his wife chose to name their newest son Nicholas.

Nicholas is a very fortunate little baby who gets to go to work with his mother. Mila is a very unusual working mother who, unlike most women, has the opportunity to bring her son into the workplace. We presume Nick's father is sharing the parenting during his frequent absences from the House. Mila feels she and Nicholas are advocates for child care which will magically take place on its own. Will every plant have an assembly line of cribs alongside the word processors?

The need for accessible, affordable day care is urgent. Women are working hard and carrying double burdens. Some 60 per cent of working women are married and one-half of their families would be poor if they were not in the workforce. Two income are necessary today just to survive.

Children must not be victims of poverty. We must provide quality child care now. If Mila Mulroney wishes to play an advocate role she should insist the federal Government move quickly to ensure universal, publicly-funded day care for all of Canada's children.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

RATIONALIZATION POLICY

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, following upon commitments made during the last election campaign, this Progressive Conservative Government has taken concrete steps to rationalize and enhance the role of Crown corporations in the Canadian community of 1985.

This party has always favoured the existence and operations of those corporations provided they agreed with our national interests. In the course of that review, we have reached the conclusion that some of those corporations were no longer serving the purposes intended or that their objectives had been reached and their participation in national life was therefore no longer required or desirable.

This is why we proceeded with the winding up of four inoperative Crown corporations; with the winding up of corporations that no longer answered the purposes of public policy; and also with the sale of Northern Transportations Company Limited, Canadian Arsenals and de Havilland as well as Canadian Government interests in the Canada Development Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to bringing nearly half a billion dollars into the Federal treasury, those sales, sale proposals and winding ups will reduce by some $700 million this year the Canadian Government's financial needs. They will also help us reduce the deficit by another $350 million during the 1985-86 fiscal year.

Moreover, those moves show that we have no intention of maintaining an unnecessary presence in industries that do not require direct public sector involvement.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM HERD EXPOSED TO TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the health of Canadians and the damage inflicted upon the agricultural industry by the neglect of the Minister of Agriculture. Can the Minister confirm that two Conservative Members of Parliament from Ontario, namely, the Hon. Member for Peterborough and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, met with the Minister and made representations to him concerning the infected buffalo meat? Can he further confirm that those Members of Parliament were concerned as early as October 15 that TB infected meat was going to be permitted for sale, potentially jeopardizing the indusjtry and damaging the health of Canadians?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the opportunity to respond. I apologize for not being in the House yesterday. However, I was in the marathon meetings with representatives of the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board, as well as the companies, attempting to arrive at a settlement for the 1985 crop. Indeed, I am pleased to report progress.

I do appreciate the response of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in taking notice of the questions, and I want to acknowledge as well the representations made to me on the dates to which the Hon. Member refers by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North and the Hon. Member for Peterborough. In addition to that, if my memory serves me correctly, I believe representation was also made to me by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming.

Within seconds of notification of this information, I contacted my senior officials. I requested them to apply the letter of the Act with respect to this particular situation. I can assure the Hon. Member that we have one of the finest meat and food inspection services in this country. It is widely recognized throughout the entire industry and it is respected throughout the world.

RELEASE OF MEAT FOR SALE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister knew of the potential health hazard, and in view of the fact that the health test being done was not even completed as late as yesterday, my question is very simple. Why did the Minister allow the meat to be sold when he did not have full knowledge of what the health implications were? Could he also tell us if this is another case of the Government giving the benefit of the doubt to the corporate sector against the health of Canadians? Is this another case of the tuna affair repeated?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is utter nonsense, as well as most of the observations made by the Hon. Member. He should know—but I can tell by some of his comments he doesn't know—that the Meat Inspection Act, which has been in effect for 75 years, and which was amended on May 8 of this year with the support of all Parties, does not extend ministerial authority to me to overrule my inspectors.

MEAT QUALITY STANDARDS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Concerning again the tainted buffalo meat, the Minister was aware that this meat was not to be sold abroad. Exporting that meat would have been prohibited. Importing it would also have been prohibited. If it is not good enough for foreigners, why is it good enough for Canadians? Is the Minister using the same logic that his former colleague the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans used in making his decision?

● (1120)

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member was aware of the provisions in the Act and of the spirit of the international convention, he would not pose that question because for a good number of years that practice and procedure have been used. If a carcass goes through the inspection and requires additional inspection; i.e., a lesion is found in the carcass, then, of course, it is condemned. If a lesion is found within an organ the proper procedure is always followed, as it was in this case, and it is sent to a laboratory for testing.

The Hon. Member indicates that the tests have been completed. They have not. They were sent to a laboratory in Nepean where a series of tests is carried out. I am advised that the results of the final tests will not be known for four, five, or six weeks.

Mr. Tobin: That's ridiculous.

Mr. Wise: All of the tests that have been completed have come back negative. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that during the debate on that issue the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is reported at page 4536 of Hansard as saying that:

> Liberal Members do in fact acknowledge that the meat inspection system in this country is indeed excellent.

Where does he stand? Is he for it or against it?

Mr. Boudria: It was, before you came along.

PROVISIONS OF MEAT INSPECTION ACT AND REGULATIONS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Government obviously does not learn from its mistakes. It is not satisfied with unloading tainted tuna on to the Canadian public. It is now questionable buffalo meat—surf and turf.

Is the Minister aware of Section 474 of the Meat Inspection Act and regulations which state that, if any lesions are found, total condemnation of the herd is required?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the Act and of the regulation.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why not act?

Mr. Wise: I say again that I have full and complete confidence in the meat inspection system in this country. Ministerial authority is not given to over-rule my inspectors. I simply ask them to apply the full letter of the law and, if they find anything questionable, to err on the side of health and public safety. This course of action has been followed for 75 years. It has served the industry, the Canadian public, and the international marketplace well. There is a great deal of respect for this system across the country and in the international marketplace, although it may not be shared by Members opposite.

CONDUCT OF TESTS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, lesions indicating the possible presence of tuberculosis were found in six of these animals. Yet the meat was released before the final tests were completed. If the Minister is satisfied to say that there was no tuberculosis present in these animals, why are the tests still on-going?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): It is very simple, Mr. Speaker. The tests have nothing to do with the condemnation of the meat, but have everything to do with wiping out tuberculosis in the bovine herd across the country. That is the reason for the test of the organs. I think we should recognize and compliment the meat inspectors across the country because they contributed in a major way to the very rapid and significant decrease of bovine TB in humans.

DISCOVERY OF LESIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. When lesions are found in a carcass or on the vital organs of a carcass, is it not standard practice for the inspectors to set that carcass aside until the laboratory work on those lesions has been completed? Why was that not done in this case?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): To be perfectly honest with you, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the Hon. Member a definite answer to this.

Mr. Tobin: That's ridiculous.

Mr. Wise: As I have indicated, I was informed of this situation at the beginning. I have sought advice subsequent to that as late as yesterday and this morning. I am informed that the normal, traditional procedures were used in this case as they are used day in and day out. Thousands of livestock carcasses move through our slaughter plants on a daily or weekly basis.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In another New Brunswick case the Prime Minister said that it seemed "pretty damn obvious" to him that a certain parcel of product should not have been released before the laboratory tests were completed. This is also the case in this instance. Does the Prime Minister honestly believe that he can retain a Cabinet Minister who will allow Canadians to eat meat that may have been diseased, who released it for the use of Canadian consumers before the laboratory tests on a herd that was found to be tubercular were completed so that we knew whether or not these particular carcasses were affected?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I always welcome the opportunity to answer questions, but I welcome this one with a little more enthusiasm.

Mr. Althouse: I wasn't asked of you.

Mr. Wise: Let me indicate that our record is the finest in the world.

Mr. Althouse: Not to me it isn't.

Mr. Wise: I said that we have had 75 years of this, and the normal accepted procedures in this case have been followed as they were in the last 75 years.

Hon. Members should be aware that there has not been one single documented case since the introduction of the Meat Inspection Act, the application of that Act and the application of those regulations by our federal meat inspection officers in the last 75 years—

Mr. McCurdy: You could be the first.

Mr. Wise: —of bovine tuberculosis transmitted to humans from meat that has been inspected by our inspectors.

I think that is a tremendous record ando ne that should be acknowledged.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISPOSITION OF CARCASSES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister explain specifically why those five or six carcasses in which lesions were found in their vital organs were not set aside?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I told the Hon. Member that I could not give him a direct, honest answer, and I want to give him an honest answer. For all I know, at the moment, maybe what the Hon. Member is asking about was done. Give me an opportunity to find out. Give me 15 minutes after Question Period and I will give you the answer.

SALE OF MEAT TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, what an incredible admission of incompetence, for the Minister to stand in the House and say: "I don't know why but I am perfectly sure everything is fine with that meat".

An Hon. Member: Ask a question.

Mr. Tobin: The Minister's Pontius Pilate routine won't wash. The buck stops with him.

Why, in the face of representations from Members of Parliament, representations from the buffalo herders industry—

An Hon. Member: It is Question Period, not debate.

Mr. Tobin: Why did the Minister allow that meat to go to market without having the results of those tests on six animals, tests, incidentally, which indicate from the animal that died in New Brunswick that TB was present in that herd? Why was that meat product allowed to go on the plates of Canadian consumers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I had a choice between following the recommendations and the advice of my inspectors or that of the Hon. Member, it would be a very easy decision. I would choose and would rather err on the side of competence, and I would err on the side of a proven record.

INSPECTION PROCESS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, what we have just heard from the Minister is that when two Members of Parliament representing buffalo herders in their districts tell a cabinet Minister in the Government that their people say there is a problem, you don't listen. What you are saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the Hon. Member had a long question the first time. Could he now ask his question, please?

Mr. Tobin: Is the Minister of Agriculture telling the House that he is satisfied that the inspection process that allowed this buffalo meat to go to market, in the absence of complete tests, is the same process and involves the same standards that are applied to all red meat inspection in this country? Is that what he is telling the House?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, briefly, that is exactly what I am telling the House, and I say it with a great deal of satisfaction and confidence. If there is any question in the Hon. Member's mind, there isn't in mine. Just look at the record. There is no question that the record is fantastic.

The Canadian people have been well served by it, I think the Government has been well served by it, and I am sure that I, as Minister of Agriculture, will be well served by it too.

HERBICIDES

IMPORTATION OF ALACHLOR

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, first it was Tunagate, and yesterday it was TB dinners. Now we have to add to the regulatory mess this Government has produced the importation of the pesticide alachlor after a previous Government ban.

Just who is running the ship at Agriculture Canada when, in spite of a ban, unspecified amounts of a cancer-causing pesticide already contaminating our drinking water are allowed into the country?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am in control of Agriculture Canada. I make no apologies for that whatsoever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is anyone is control of the NDP?

Mr. Wise: After years of public neglect and inaction, Mr. Speaker, we took action and appointed the Pesticide Management Advisory Board for the first time in our history. In addition to that, I appointed the Alachlor Review Board, another major step in the interests of public health and safety.

As far as the information that I have this morning, that to which the Hon. Member refers is inaccurate.

BAN ON USE OF HERBICIDE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, let us see how accurate is the information which the Minister has available to him.

Will the Minister determine the whereabouts and the amount of alachlor presently in the country? Will he immediately place a complete embargo on its use and on the entry of any further supplies of it until the outcome of the Review Committee's activities is known?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is outdated. We have already done that. We took action, I believe, on February 25 this year.

HEALTH

INQUIRY WHY BUFFALO MEAT NOT USED FOR DOG FOOD

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as reported in the media this morning, Department of National Health and Welfare veterinarians are said to have declared that the meat should have been destroyed or used for other purposes: for making dog food.

Could the Minister tell the House how he had the nerve to allow this meat to reach the tables of Canada, after Government experts had said it should have been destroyed or used to make pet foods?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of some observations that have been made across the country from various sources. I watched a comment or two made by a veterinarian, I believe, in western Canada and I immediately drew that information to the attention of my senior officials. I was told that these observations are made from time to time by various people in the industry and various people in the profession.

I am advised that the individual whom I saw has admitted that he is not an expert in the area of meat inspection.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF POSITIONS OF TWO MINISTERS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans had disregarded his own officials' recommendations for returning the tuna to the shelves, while the Minister of Agriculture dares not overrule his officials' recommendations in order to protect public health.

How is it that we have this difference between the two Departments?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to explain the difference. The only fact is we have an excellent record. We have the finest system in the world. I do not have ministerial discretion under the Act. I think that should provide the answer.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that there is so much criticism contrary to what was said when we amended the Act on May 8. I have quoted the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I quote now the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre:

> Members of Parliament, farmers, meat packers, processors and consumers are convinced that we have the makings of a very good meat inspection system.

And listen to this, Mr. Speaker:

> If it is not the best in the world, it is certainly among the best in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: I have another quote. I can go on, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

DISPOSITION OF BUFFALO CARCASSES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I find it very interesting and deeply disturbing. We now know the Minister knew about the situation in general on October 14. He has just stood in the House, and I want to verify this, to say that he did not know up until today, and still does not know, and is now telling the House of Commons and the people of Canada, that in spite of carcasses being found to be infected, what happened to those carcasses afterwards. Is that right?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Partly right, Mr. Speaker, but partly wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: It is pretty serious stuff.

Mr. Wise: What I have not clarified is whether the six carcasses having organs containing lesions were detained for a period of time. That is what I am saying. I have offered to supply the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre with that information.

Hon. Members mistakenly take for granted that simply because an animal entering a plant has a positive test it is infected with TB, but that is not the case. It may or may not be the case. As to the other inaccurate conclusions which Hon. Members are drawing that a trained qualified veterinarian can tell visually whether a lesion is active or is a TB lesion, that is not known until those organs are forwarded to a lab for tests. This is being done now.

There are a series of tests, four or five to be exact, some of which take a long period of time. I understand there is one test for which the results are not yet in. Three or four tests on lesions from those animals have up to this point in time been negative.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, this is becoming too long. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has a supplementary question?

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on this important matter.

We now know the carcasses found to be contaminated were in fact sent to western Canada, sold in western Canada, and have now been eaten. We have an acknowledgement from the Minister that in the middle of October he was aware of the general circumstance. He has admitted now in the House that nothing was done to ensure the carcasses were destroyed, that he did not even pursue the matter to find out whether the meat was on the shelves, or what happened to it.

Does the Prime Minister accept this as responsible behaviour from a Minister? If he does not, will the Prime Minister take steps to change this Minister as he did with a previous Minister in the Tunagate affair?

Mr. Skelly: It is pretty damned obvious that the meat should not have gone on the table.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Parliament passed an Act of Parliament in 1907 which set out terms and conditions of the Act and set out its regulations. The law has worked perfectly over the ensuing 75 years. Earlier this year we took the initiative and amended the Act to legalize some of the practices and procedures which had been used over time by our meat inspectors, to give them legal authority to ensure greater public health and safety. I have difficulty with this, Mr. Speaker, but the Member must have respect for this Parliament and he must have respect for legislation passed by this Parliament, particularly if that legislation has worked so well over the years.

The Hon. Member must also accept the fact that that Act does not give me ministerial authority. I checked within seconds, less than a minute, but the only authority I have, which I utilized within seconds of being advised by three colleagues, was to call my senior officials. I was going to make them aware of the situation but they already knew about it. They already had these animals in detention and had known about the problem for a long time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Scarborough East.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Sorry.

EMPLOYMENT CREATION—UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I prevail upon her to help me with my mathematics this morning. In view of the 83,000 jobs which were created in the month of November, a figure of which I am sure the Minister can be justly proud, why was there not more than a .1 per cent decrease in unemployment?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is because 83,000 more Canadians had the confidence to enter the labour market as new participants this month.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: The reason they did so—

Mr. Rodriguez: That is what the Liberals used to say.

Miss MacDonald: —is because they can see that the economy is growing, that the Gross National Product is up substantially this quarter, that housing starts are up, that retail sales are up, that inflation is down and that interest rates are down. All of that is having a very dramatic impact on the growth of jobs—some 416,000 since we took office, and 83,000 this month alone.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Miss MacDonald: Those figures include women, young people and adult men, the whole spectrum—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM HERD EXPOSED TO TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The subject matter, as was evident in previous questions, is the tainted bufallo meat. The Prime Minister knows that the Minister had knowledge of tainted meat which may or may not have been exposed to tuberculosis, therefore causing grave dangers to the health of Canadians. He knows that the Minister refused to intervene, to stop it from going on the market. I suggest to the Prime Minister that this amounts to gross negligence, and I ask him to intervene and have this Minister removed from the Department of Agriculture.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this meat is not tainted; this meat is not tainted.

Mr. Deans: How do you know?

Mr. Wise: The only thing that is tainted about this is—

Some Hon. Members: How do you know that?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: If I had a buffalo sandwich right now, would you eat it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If Hon. Members keep shouting, it will indicate that they do not want to ask questions. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wise: I thought I had answered that, Mr. Speaker. I have indicated that this meat is not tainted. The only thing which is tainted is the comments of the Hon. Member opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MEMORANDUM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the microphones be fixed, please?

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the meat is not tainted, could he explain to the House why tests are presently going on? While he is on his feet, will he undertake to table in the House the memorandum or the letter which he received from his officials, saying that they believed that the meat was safe to put on the market? Would he do the honourable thing and table that?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my initial reaction would be that I would not have any hesitation in tabling the information which I received from my officials. I want to put a condition on it; I want to have the opportunity to check whether or not it is appropriate, whether or not it is proper. There would not be any hesitation on my part with respect to the actual handling of this case by my inspectors.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF MATTER

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The first thing he should know is that the Minister of Agriculture knew in advance, before the product was sold and distributed to Canadians, that the carcasses and the entrails showed lesions. Does the Prime Minister not think that the Minister should have at least recommended that these carcasses be put aside? Further, does the Prime Minister not think that it is pretty damn obvious that this stuff should not have gone on Canadian tables?

An Hon. Member: Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot hear him because the microphone is not working.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is a bit of a technical sound problem, but I just want to respond to the Hon. Member by saying that I think he made some observation that I did not admit the effect, and I think that was part of the thrust of the questions of the Hon. Leader of the NDP. Nothing could be further from the truth. I took the first opportunity I had today, in response to the opening question, to acknowledge that fact. I complimented my three colleagues on the interest which they took in this subject. Within minutes—actually, it was within seconds—I made a call to my senior officials and asked them to use the letter of the law to thenth degree to ensure that public health and safety were assured. Upon checking it from time to time, I am fully confident that indeed this was done.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER UNDERTAKE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he undertake an investigation, since the herd originated in New Brunswick, to ensure that there was no influence exerted by officials of the Government of New Brunswick on a decision not to recommend that the herd be held and quarantined?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the NDP had better make up its mind. A couple of months ago it was criticizing the Minister of Fisheries for overruling his health inspection officials, and now it is criticizing the Minister of Agriculture for following, to the letter, the advice and judgment of his departmental officials.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: You are a bunch of hypocrites. You are a bunch of hypocrites, trying to play both sides of the street. Make up your minds, because you are going to lose on both sides.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

LONG-TERM GRAIN SALES AGREEMENT CONCLUDED WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Minister is aware that the international grain market is extremely competitive and that the possible lack of market is of great concern to Canadian farmers. In view of those facts, would the Minister comment upon the recently announced Canadian-Soviet Union agreement which was concluded yesterday?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is precisely correct. There are some concerns over the lack of markets because of the international situation and the large stocks of grain which exist around the world. In spite of that, and because of our record of performance in the past and the good relationship which the Canadian Wheat Board has with the Soviet Union, and the export pace in particular, yesterday we were able to conclude a long-term grain sales agreement which will see us being able to sell grain to the Soviet Union at the same clip or the same rate as we have in the past five years.

The House should know that the Soviet Union is our major customer. Last year it bought a third of our grain. This stands very well in terms of supply. We are concerned about the price which is very low, but we should be able to sell our grain as we grow it. That, in turn, will help us in terms of jobs. What we do in agriculture filters throughout the whole economy. It is very good news not only for farmers but for the economy in general.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATIONS

SALE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, my hon. friend from Papineau, acting on behalf of seven Liberal Members from the Montreal area, laid on the Table a request that your department investigate the Gulf-Ultramar deal. Is the Minister ready to inform the House today whether he has recommended the investigation of this transaction and if so, when is it to start?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize the Minister discussed this matter, but I would like to reply, partly because it also involves Montreal East and job creation.

Today, the Government of Canada was able to announce that 83,000 new jobs have been created in Canada, which means 416,000 new jobs since this Government was sworn in. It is important to emphasize, and I think the Hon. Member will agree, that 130 of those new jobs were created in Quebec, and that the previous Liberal Government created an average of 673 jobs per month in that province. We have created 9,002 per month, so that our average for Canada and Quebec is fourteen times what was achieved by the Liberal Party.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this kind of fooling around is just what is making the Prime Minister's popularity go down in the polls.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SALE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, if the Prime Minister will give him a chance to reply. Is the Minister going to order an investigation into the purchase or transaction involving Gulf and Ultramar, considering that 450 jobs are at stake, yes or no?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I believe I already answered that question yesterday. I also said that we did not wait for the Opposition Members to put pressure on us to order an investigation. Yesterday we asked our Director of Combines Investigations to conduct a study of this transaction. His conclusions will be available shortly, and we shall then decide accordingly.

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM HERD EXPOSED TO TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister has indicated that when he looked into the matter that was brought to his attention, he found that he did not have authority to stop the sale. Did he then go to the Prime Minister to seek such authority?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, the thought never crossed my mind. Since the Hon. Member has brought that matter to my attention, I would think that it would be a very foolish thing to do.

CONDITION OF MEAT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given that the Minister has indicated that he did not have the authority to stop the sale, does the Prime Minister feel that meat that could not be exported in the condition it was in, and could not be imported in the condition that it was in, was fit for Canadians to eat?

Mr. Skelly: Pretty damned obvious it shouldn't have been on the table.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question. There is a long-standing tradition that, if a carcass is abnormal, it is required that it receives further, supplementary, or secondary inspection.

Mr. Gauthier: After it's eaten?

Mr. Wise: It requires supplementary or secondary inspection by well qualified inspectors. This practice has been in place and has served the industry extremely well over the years.

Mr. Deans: Do you think meat that can't be exported or imported can be eaten?

Mr. Wise: If that carcass requires supplementary or secondary inspection, we have an international agreement or understanding that that carcass is made available on the domestic market but it is not made available to the export market. That is in regard to a long-standing law in this country and a long-standing agreement in the international market-place.

Mr. Deans: Well, change the law.

Mr. Wise: What's wrong with it? It has worked well.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Have some respect for the law.

Mr. Deans: I have respect for the law. Why should Canadians eat rotten meat?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EMPLOYMENT POLICIES OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and incidentally has nothing to do with meat inspection. Do the latest employment statistics show that, in general, the policies being pursued by the Government of Canada are on the right track?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that you had stopped these hostile questions. In point of fact what it does indicate is that we sought election on a policy of job creation and we have created more jobs in 14 months than the previous Liberal Government did in 55 months.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think it is important to point out that our job-creation rate—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know the Bad News Bears don't like it. I know the Liberal Party does not like to hear good news, but our job-creation rate is 400 per cent better than that of the Liberals.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISCLOSE NAME OF CORPORATION THAT ALLEGEDLY WITHDREW $10 MILLION FROM CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday we witnessed a pitiful performance on TV when two Ministers of this Government appearing before the Estey Commission were unable to answer any of the specific questions put to them, as if ignorance were the golden rule of the Government to shirk its responsibilities. Since yesterday the Minister must have found time to look up the name of the company which managed to withdraw the $10 million, so I would ask her to tell the House the name of this financial institution or whatever which withdrew $10 million from the Canadian Commercial Bank after the liquidation process had been started, and what the Government plans to do to recover that money?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as usual the Hon. Member gets his information from the wrong source. This was a misrepresentation of what actually happened. It was an institution that had a note mature after September 1, and there was no withdrawal.

INQUIRY CONCERNING MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE TO ENSURE RECOVERY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the questions put before the Estey Commission yesterday were very specific, yet the Minister is telling us this morning that the question of the judge was unfounded and that there was no $10 million withdrawal. Did I understand the meaning of her answer and, if indeed the $10 million withdrawal was nothing more than a maturing note, what steps does the Government intend to take to recover the money?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have explained to the Hon. Member that there was no misrepresentation by the judge or at the inquiry and that the information that was made public misunderstood the nature of the evidence and the difference between a note maturing and a note being withdrawn. It is perfectly straightforward, as I am sure even the Hon. Member must understand.

SALE OF BUFFALO MEAT FROM HERD EXPOSED TO TUBERCULOSIS—APPLICATION OF ANIMAL DISEASE AND PROTECTION ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Earlier he told the House that he did not have authority to quarantine the carcasses of the herd in question. That is true if the Minister was acting under the Meat Inspection Act. However, will he acknowledge to the House that there is other legislation, namely, the Animal Disease and Protection Act, within his Department that does give him the authority not only to quarantine a herd but also to quarantine the carcasses? Since he had that authority, why did he not use it?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I checked into that. Again, the information I have is that there is some question about whether or not—

Mr. Skelly: Some question? Why didn't you exercise some judgment?

Mr. Wise: —whether or not the ministerial discretion is extended under the Animal Disease and Protection Act. However, at that point, which I believe was October 11, a decision was made by the meat inspectors of the branch to place the herd under detention and subsequent quarantine, and to do that they used the authority of the Meat Inspection Act.

EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is extremely serious so I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. It is now clear that the Minister has finally admitted that he had authority to act under another Act—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He said the opposite.

Mr. Broadbent: He said that there was discretionary authority. Since there is, under an Act that was passed by Parliament, the authority for the Minister to use judgment to quarantine carcasses, does the Prime Minister accept having the Minister neglect his responsibility in such a serious matter? Will the Prime Minister answer that question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just because you say something doesn't mean it's true.

Mr. Skelly: We know when you say something what it is.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have some real difficulty following the reasoning or lack of reasoning in the Hon. Member's question. I have indicated previously that there is indeed some real question as to whether or not there is ministerial authority under the Animal Disease and Protection Act. However, there is no question at all about ministerial authority existing under the Meat Inspection Act as it does not exist. Under that Act the decision was made which authorized the federal inspectors to move forward, in detention and in quarantine, to apply the thrust of that Act and the regulations which are in place all across the country, and which have been in place for a long time in all our packing plants. There was no exception in this case whatsoever, other than the fact that, without exception, the full thrust of the letter of the law is always applied by all inspectors at all times in all plants across the country. Look at the record; it is 100 per cent. What else do Hon. Members want?

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents who call upon the Government to change its philosophy and allow for continued indexation of family allowances.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility to present a petition from petitioners in Newfoundland concerning the Maritime Experimental Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, who are worried about the naval policy of the United States which neither denies on confirms the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels using the test range. They call for a full public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated.

CONCERN ABOUT FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege once again to present petitions on behalf of constituents of the federal ridings of Moncton and Westmorland-Kent who express their concern with regard to the future of the CN shops.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is also my honour to present a petition in the House of Commons today. I believe this is the tenth time I have risen in the House to present a petition with respect to the Government's plan to cut back and deindex family allowances. The people who have signed the petition on behalf of Canadians everywhere call upon the Government to protect the full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind some of the unfair tax increases which make this drastic cut necessary.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition. I think it is particularly appropriate on St. Nicholas Day that we be concerned about children and families. The petitioners who have signed this petition, mostly from my riding of Vancouver East, call upon the Government and the House of Commons to reconsider Bill C-70 and reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from a number of residents in Spadina complaining against the Government's intention to reduce the family allowance which will work a great hardship on low-income families, especially at a time when this is seen to be completely unnecessary because of the Government's generous hand-outs to the oil companies and the banks. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly with a great deal of satisfaction that I address the House on the third reading stage of Bill C-74. I truly believe that parliamentary scrutiny has assisted the Government in ensuring that this particular Bill provides for fair and equitable representation of the people of Canada long into the future.

As I pointed out at the second reading stage of the Bill, one of the objects of this Bill is to ensure that the increases in the size of the House are not sudden and explosive but, rather, that they proceed at a measured pace while at the same time ensuring fair representation for all parts of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has had an opportunity to make an in-depth study of all questions related to this Bill.

In June 1985 I had the honour to table, on behalf of the Government, the White Paper on Redistribution which the committee had considered before the parliamentary recess.

After weighing the committee recommendations, the Government made a number of amendments to the Bill. The Government took advantage of the committee proceedings on this Bill to re-examine certain basic questions and fine-tune some of its provisions.

[English]

I think the process undertaken with respect to this Bill is a worth-while example to keep in mind as the House proceeds with parliamentary reform. Parliamentarians were involved at the beginning of the development of the policy, as well as during consideration of its implications in public hearings of the committee. I am well satisfied that the committee was able to give ample and serious consideration to the implications of the Bill, both before it was introduced in the House and after it was referred to it by the House.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the committee for their long and diligent efforts in ensuring that all parts of this country will, for the foreseeable future, have fair and equitable representation. I would particularly like to thank the Hon. Members for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), Algoma (Mr. Foster) and Churchill (Mr. Murphy), whose contributions were invaluable to the study of the Bill.

When the House was considering the report stage of the Bill it was my pleasure to be able to move two motions which I believe improve the Bill. One provides for faster growth of the size of the House of Commons after the first redistribution, but it has a negligible net result after the third redistribution for which we have population projections. In other words, we are fast tracking the increases.

[Translation]

As a result of this amendment to the basic formula, the seat distribution in the House will reflect more closely the national population ratio in each province.

Considering the many compromises which have been reached with respect to the principle of representation by population, this measure is the only one under which the representation of each province is fair and equitable.

● (1210)

[English]

I want to assure all of my colleagues that the Government would not have agreed to such an amendment if it had in any way made the proportional representations of the provinces any worse, based on the current population projections. I can say with some confidence that the position of the provinces is improved after the redistribution, which will follow immediately upon the passage of this Act. And in subsequent redistributions, the proportion of representation of provinces is, in almost every case, enhanced over and above their current representation in the House.

Of course, the only estimate of the number of seats each province will be assigned, which is based on actual population figures, is that which is based on the 1981 census, and these estimates will only become a reality after the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commissions have done their work.

I am sure you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the other amendment to the Bill made at report stage, which concerned the duties of the electoral boundaries commissions, gives much stronger and clearer instructions in the implementation of their mandates. I was pleased to be able to move this amendment on behalf of the committee. The commissions will now be required to consider community of identity and community of interest as well as determining what a manageable geographical size would be for large, northern, rural and sparsely populated constituencies prior to making their decisions as to the distribution of seats within a province.

I believe this amendment, which the House has adopted, strikes the appropriate balance between the independence of the commissions, which is essential if we are to maintain a method of impartiality in the delineation of constituency boundaries, and the desire of all Hon. Members to ensure that the unique characteristics of communities within their constituencies are taken into consideration in deciding where constituency boundaries will be drawn in the future.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Hon. Members who participated in the report stage for their valuable contributions.

It is essential that Hon. Members understand the part which this legislation plays in the over-all package of reform of the House of Commons. As I said at the second reading stage of this Bill, the difference between this piece of legislation and the formula which is currently in place is that we provide for a significantly smaller number of Hon. Members.

At the same time, it is our hope that the role of Hon. Members who will be coming to Parliament in the future will become more meaningful as a result of the other reforms, some of which are already in place and others which I anticipate the House will adopt in the not too distant future. It is in this context that I urge Hon. Members on all sides of the House to give speedy passage to third reading of Bill C-74.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, before I start I would like to announce that upon concluding my comments, I intend to move an amendment, and I am saying this so the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will not be taken by surprise.

Typically, the debate on this subject, which is always an important one, also tends to be somewhat embarrassing when we are talking about redistribution, since often, provinces that should normally get more members get less, other provinces in the same position do not get the number to which they are entitled, and there are also provinces that should get fewer Members but get more because of certain provisions in the Constitution. We all know that under the Canadian Constitution, no province can have fewer Members than Senators. Thus, and I think this is a sign of healthy federalism, the Province of Prince Edward Island cannot have fewer than four Members because the Constitution clearly says it must have four Senators.

It is also true that these provisions in the Constitution Act may eventually protect the position of New Brunswick which has ten Senators and which from now on should never have fewer than ten Members. The same applies to Nova Scotia which now has eleven Members and ten Senators, and thus can never have fewer than ten Members, and Newfoundland, which has seven Members and can never have fewer than six because there are six Senators from Newfoundland.

Furthermore, there are large areas, like the Yukon, that would normally have only one Member or no Members at all, and which are given one because that is the absolute minimum. And we all know the Hon. Member for Yukon. As I said recently, the Northwest Territories are represented by one of the Members I see here in the House, sitting on the Government side. Normally, because of their numbers, the Northwest Territories should have only one Member, but for all kinds of reasons which I heartily approve, we have at least two Members from the Northwest Territories, even if they do not have the population to warrant that number.

So there is constitutional protection for some provinces, a certain understanding for the particular situation in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and we must therefore conclude that what we have here is not the sacred principle of representation by population, since we already have quite a number of exceptions which I just mentioned. I repeat, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, for different reasons, and under the Constitution, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick in fact all the Maritime Provinces have safeguards, irrespective of their population.

If we had adopted the Bill tabled by the previous Government, we would have 310 Members after the next election. There was a lot of debate on this matter, because of the very quick progression from 310 to 343 or more in 1991 and 369 in the year 2001. And although the debate was quite heated among Members of the various parties, it was not a partisan debate. There are a number of questions: Are we not progressing too quickly? Do we want a huge House where the Maritimes and francophone groups will be swallowed up completely? I will get back to the issue of Quebec francophones later on.

So we would have a House that would be far too big. But the previous Government had followed the legislation and was forced to have a number of Members under an older legislation which had been adopted when we had reached 282 seats in the House and which stipulated an increase to 310 and so on.

I was here at the time when there were 264 seats and there was a new distribution. I had tried to make a point at the time and failed . . . and we saw the House go from 264 seats to 282 and Quebec obtained one out of the 18 new seats. I felt at the time that the number of seats in the House should have been frozen forever at 264 and that through comprehensive constitutional amendments, we should have continued to protect the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, the Maritimes, while adding a new factor, that is recognizing the fact that Quebec is, for historical reasons, the national homeland of Quebecers and Francophones; however, I failed to convince the House at that time. Now, we should have been presented with a Bill which, if we did nothing, would increase the number of seats to 310 by the next election. The map is already drawn. All parties, the Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives and the socialists have discussed this issue and agreed that it was out of the question for the number of seats to increase immediately from 310 to 343, 369, etc.

So, at one point, and I would not want to put the blame on anybody, it was agreed that the sacred principle of proportional representation could be discarded for economic reasons and in order to protect the Maritimes, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, and that we should adopt a new formula.

The Hon. President of Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) put forward a first proposal. He said: We will not increase the number of seats to 310, 342, 343, or 363. We are going to find a new formula and here is what I suggest. He then moved to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privilege and Election. We are not going to think in terms of 28 new seats, but only seven. At the time, we were considering six new seats: two for Ontario, two for Alberta, two for British Columbia which had experienced for a couple of years an enormous population increase. Until 1991, we will add a couple of new seats, but we will make a point of slowing down the increase in the number of seats, while still protecting the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and, for constitutional reasons, the Maritimes.

But, at the very last minute, this solution which had appeared reasonable to me and my colleagues from the different provinces was changed at the Committee on Privilege and Election, and the number of seats which was supposed to be six or seven, none for Quebec, but because we are reasonable people, we understand that 28 . . . We would have had 4 more if we had applied the old formula, but we must nevertheless understand that Western Canadians—

• (1220)

[English]

We have to understand that western Canadian citizens would have felt absolutely outraged not to be given some more seats. We in Quebec, being reasonable, understood that Quebec would have no seats and that we would move slowly and all the new seats would be given to western Canada and Ontario. A formula was found. There were to be two new seats for Ontario, two or three for Alberta, and two for British Columbia. We, being reasonable, said that if the Government did not want 310 seats, that was fine because, as I was saying earlier, 310 would lead to 343 and 369. Now, toward the very end of the debate the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), an hon. gentleman, good leader, and good friend, made a new proposal at the last minute. He said that it would not be six or seven now but 13, and the 13 would be divided—

Four seats for Ontario, five for Alberta, four for British Columbia, none for either the Northwest Territories or the Yukon, none for the provinces that are protected by the Constitution, the British North America Act, I mean Prince Edward Island and the other provinces which now have a sufficiently high level of population not to need protection under the Constitution. But zero for Quebec. Zero out of six or seven. I understand that the proportion will be the same, and I know that my colleagues are saying: Yes, the proportion is the same, so what difference does it make? However, I believe that we would be justified in thinking that there is more protection in a small assembly, where a single voice has more opportunities to be heard, than in a very large assembly with the same proportion of Members, where it is much more difficult to defend your point of view. If we reach nearly 310 seats instead of the 289 proposed initially and if the province of Quebec receives no additional seats . . . I ask the Government at least to consider this point since we had agreed, and clearly agreed—I emphasize that this was unanimously agreed in the beginning—to have 310, 343 and 369 seats with four additional seats for Quebec each time. Quebec would have had 75, 79, 83 and 87 Members depending on whether the total number was 310, 343, 369 or 340.

We had decided to freeze the number of seats for the following regions: Prince Edward Island, because of the Constitution, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Northwest Territories, represented partly by our Inuit colleague, Yukon, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The number of seats for all these regions was to be frozen, and with each increase in the total number of seats, the additional seats were to be proportionally distributed among Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta.

We had agreed to this formula as it was a reasonable figure. However, the Hon. President of the Privy Council is now changing the formula and saying: It will no longer be six and seven Members, but thirteen new Members, and 298 in 2001. I think that we are getting increasingly closer to the 28 formula since this will apply immediately, probably for a single election. We are now in 1985 and we are still talking about the census of 1981 and we shall be in 1986 in three weeks' time. This redistribution will take two years, which brings us to 1987-88, and will be based on the 1981 census. There will already have been considerable population changes when the Chief Electoral Officer announces to the House of Commons that he has a new electoral map which will be completely outdated already, as, admittedly, it has always been in the past. I have witnessed three redistributions and I am well aware that the 1971 redistribution applied to the elections in 1979. I have therefore no lesson to give to anybody. However this seems quite strange, and in any case, the process takes too long.

My point is that there were amendments proposed which were rejected and which seemed to support what I am trying to prove today. I spoke in English in support of the residents of Northern Ontario because I believe that this is the essence of Canada: You do not have everything you want, I do not have everything I want, but if we are reasonable and work together, we can have something worthwhile.

[English]

That is Canada for me. You are not totally happy and you do not have everything. I do not have everything and I am not totally happy. Let us talk about it and, reasonable as we are, see whether we cannot agree to come to a conclusion that will be totally acceptable to everyone.

I have to be careful because my dear colleagues across the way are listening attentively. It is thrilling, but it is also disturbing to my line of thought. You may have noticed that I have been talking for quite a while without using a note. The pure British parliamentary system demands that you speak only from copious notes. I must get back on the track or I will get lost. They are even telling me how to dress and comb my hair, but I was not elected to be an actor, I was elected to do a job.

• (1230)

Mr. Prud'homme: I am quoting a colleague of mine who said that before.

I will get back on the track because, as the first speaker, I have unlimited time. That is under Standing Order 36 (1) in the rules of the House.

Having said that, I willingly give my support. I stated this earlier in French, and since some people do not follow the translation all the time, and I do not want the people of Quebec to think that I use double talk, I repeat that I have given my support for an amendment to protect northern Ontario because I believe that that is what Canada is all about. We are concerned about protection for certain reasons; protection because the Province of Prince Edward Island is too small, protection for the Inuit in the North, and while it takes much heart for me to say this, protection for the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). He will have his seat forever, even though his riding has a small population. That is what Canada is all about. Having given my full support to and understanding for the people of northern Ontario, perhaps they can attempt to understand and support my efforts. That is what life is all about, not necessarily making a trade, but supporting each other.

Unfortunately, the amendment was defeated. However, the President of the Privy Council introduced an amendment that I personally did not dislike, whereby the commissioner who will draw the boundaries will have to remember that it is the wish of the House of Commons and of parliamentarians, duly elected, that not only the facts, figures and lines be taken into consideration but that history and culture also be considered. As I stated earlier, I am somewhat concerned about what this means. Does it mean that there will be a rich district in Toronto and a poor one; a totally Greek district, an American district and a Lebanese district? I represent all these groups in Montreal. Surely that is not the correct meaning, unless I misunderstood the President of the Privy Council. I hope I did not misunderstand him and that that was not his intention.

[Translation]

In Quebec for instance, it has often happened that it made sense geographically to say that a certain town would belong to a certain constituency, although culturally, traditionally, all the influences would link that town with another area.

This is why I would like the commissioners to understand the wishes of the House, and because the poor fellows will have to read our debates in order to understand the intention of Parliament, well, I hope they will understand the intentions of the Hon. President of the Privy Council when he puts forward his motion which has been accepted or apparently is most acceptable.

I therefore regret that the motion, in order to protect Northern Ontario . . . but since it has been debated, we hope the commissioners will understand also that if they do not do so, this will have to come back before the House for debate, ultimately, before making official what they will want us to make official.

What I would like to do with the amendment I will be introducing at the end of my remarks, in a spirit of broad understanding—

[English]

I will say it in English. I want people, especially those who may not receive as many seats as they had expected, to understand that the amendment I will put forward is presented in good spirit.

In my career I have spoken to more than 200 groups in western Canada and I can say that I have great affinity for western Canada. The full caucus of the Official Opposition visited British Columbia very recently. We had a very successful visit with our Leader in Vancouver Quadra for a long weekend. The press was magnificent, the reception was magnificent, and I think no one will say I am out of order when I use this occasion to encourage all Canadians to visit Expo '86. Our caucus intends to return to British Columbia to see that great achievement of British Columbians.

British Columbia is so far away that sometimes Ottawa means nothing to many British Columbians. When they talk about the people in eastern Canada I know that they are referring to Ontario, not Quebec. When they refer to these "dominating" eastern Canadians I know they refer to Toronto and do not have French Canadians in mind. Sometimes they believe that we want to shove French down their throats, but now they understand that this is not the case. As long as one is bilingual inside one does not need to speak both languages. I say to western Canadians that as long as the meaning of bilingualism is understood we do not expect people to speak both languages. Many people do not accept that principle of bilingualism, including some Members of the House. I will not mention their names but there are some who are reluctant to accept that principle.

I say to British Columbia that they should have all the seats that would be made available and none of them should go to Quebec, as long as everyone else remains the same. Every time seats are added they should go to British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario. I think it is only fair that British Columbia and Alberta receive a good percentage of any new seats that are added because they have the population.

However, there should be other criteria than population. If we consider population as the only criterion, everyone will want to return to representation by population. If this principle were applied, it would mean there would be only one seat for Prince Edward Island. No one would care what people in Prince Edward Island thought because it had only one seat. That is why there are four seats for Prince Edward Island. No one would care about the Maritime provinces because they would have only 25 seats according to their population. That is why I believe we should protect these areas.

That is why also I believe we should make an effort to protect northern Ontario. I say this in English because I hope and have faith that English Canada will understand that we who believe we are part of the growth of this country also feel we should not be lost. British Columbians feel lost because of geographical reasons. People from the Yukon and Northwest Territories feel lost because they are distant and only have three seats. The people of the Maritimes feel lost because of their small representation. The people of northern Ontario, with their immense geography, feel lost because they only have 11 seats. It is my understanding that northern Ontarians do not feel they are taken into consideration when decisions are made in southern Ontario. I believe that all Canadians must be reasonable and understand that there should be give and take when it comes to representation. I am prepared to repeat that in French.

[Translation]

It is my view that each and every time there is a redistribution, we should give all the new seats to those Provinces which need it most for geographical reasons, even if it is only partly for that, namely British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario—although I am not contradictory—provided that this is not a huge number of new seats.

So this is why we believe that the first proposal put forward by the Hon. President of the Privy Council made tremendous sense. This is why we accepted it, this is why we discussed it in committee. I know of Government Members who were on that committee and who accepted it, because that was reasonable in the Canadian sense of the term that we really appreciate. Canadian common sense.

[English]

It is funny, the kind of notes one receives sometimes. A dear colleague of mine says to talk until December 20. I do not need to be encouraged. I may try, but I do not think I will succeed. The House has been kind in listening so far, so listen some more.

I believe that the first proposal of the President of the Privy Council was reasonable. It was to add six seats first, then seven seats. No one disagreed. There was nothing for Quebec. The Hon. Member over there should get up and protect northern Ontario. My ears hear him. I will not mention his name because I do not want to split our friendship, but he is an Hon. Member of the majority. I recognize voices now. Within three years, I will recognize faces because I like to know who is who. The Member should not provoke me because I speak in my own style.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I am getting in good shape to remind the Member of his obligation as a northern Ontarian. He should stand up and protect northern Ontario. I am not from Ontario. I am from Montreal. I stood up in this House to protect the rights and the privileges of northern Ontario. I do not want it to be badly treated by the new law. Hon. Members should not push their luck too far.

Mr. Gauthier: The Member for—

Mr. Prud'homme: No, I do not mention names. That is not my style. It might be yours. If you like to, you can stand up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Members of the same Party should not be interrupting one another.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I hope the President of the Privy Council will understand that my amendment is made in good spirit. It will not take a long time. All he has to do is to say yes. We do not even need to vote on it. But let us return, reconsider, come back right away and pass the law. I am making a proposal and I do not think any of my colleagues will disagree with me—hopefully—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: The first proposal of the President of the Privy Council was highly acceptable and highly reasonable. I do not know what has happened. Nobody knows what has happened. There were few opposition members present when it was put forward. I have to admit publicly that one of our Members was temporarily absent travelling across western Canada with an agricultural committee. You cannot ask us to do more than to go and be on the spot to find out what is going on. The Member, who was also looking for this amendment to the Representation Act, was in western Canada. It was accepted, fine. But it is not in the spirit of the agreement made at the beginning.

[Translation]

The view that prevailed in this House and led the President of the Privy Council to say we would not go to 310, 343, 369 seats, was to reduce, without being unfair to the large, growing Provinces, to reduce the number of Members in this House, to exercise restraint, to say that we will freeze all Provinces, including Quebec, the Maritime Provinces and the North West Territories, Yukon, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and every time there are additions, and new seats are added, they will be given to those Provinces which actually have a larger population. After all, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that Ontario has more than 8,500,000 inhabitants, and Quebec 6,300,000 or 6,400,000. I think that from now on, with the new Government which has just been elected and which I welcome, Quebec will no longer lose its population. In my view, this will put an end to instability in Quebec and that loss of population experienced for reasons you all understand—

[English]

For reasons everybody understands, Quebec has had a decreasing population over the last 10 years. I do not want to debate that point although I would love to. I believe now that Quebec will not go on suffering from a decreasing population. Many people who left for political, economic or linguistic reasons will come back as long as they understand it is a new Quebec. I say that in English. It is a new Quebec, sure of itself. People are welcome to come back.

Let me repeat, I do not understand what has happened. A fine agreement was suddenly changed at the very end.

A good friend of mine from Alberta and another good friend from British Columbia have just come into the House. I am very happy that Alberta and British Columbia are getting the seats to which they are entitled, or a part thereof. I say part of the seats to which they are entitled because we are to receive nothing in Quebec. If we increased the number of seats to 310, Quebec would receive four. At the moment, the new proposal of the President of the Privy Council says that instead of an increase of 28 seats, there will be only 13. That is almost half. Out of the 13, nine are going to British Columbia and Alberta, none, however, to Quebec. It is not unfair, but it is surprising that at the last minute a good agreement which was giving two and three seats to Alberta and British Columbia is now giving five and four.

I would hope—

—Mr. Speaker, that the President of the Privy Council will look into this matter during the weekend. Of course, if we could continue the debate until 4 o'clock . . . in any case, I hope Members from the other provinces will understand that we are rather surprised, we who come from Quebec. Yes, we are surprised. I am not naming names, I said that I would just make a general reference. What do you think? I know my Quebec colleagues will have to go back to their ridings and explain this new legislation that first gave us four Members out of 28 and now gives us 0 out of 13. I realize that mathematically, this can be explained differently, but 28 = 4; 13 = 0. There is something there I have trouble understanding, and my Government colleagues may wish to help me in this respect.

Furthermore, and I almost forgot to mention this, Mr. Speaker, the change is for twenty years. We know now that in the next twenty years, there will be two seats more next time and 298 seats in the year 2001, but what we do not know is whether there might not be an increase in Quebec's population, as I explained—

[English]

As I was explaining earlier, there is a new era. Thousands and thousands and thousands, tens of thousands, left Quebec for Ontario. Most likely now some want to come back.

The Minister from British Columbia just came into the House. I would like him to know that I have said very nice things about his province and about Expo 86. I invite every Canadian to go to see that. Our caucus went to British Columbia. We were well received. We will return, not for politicking but to see a achievement in British Columbia.

I look at my hon. colleague. I prefer to call people by name and to say Madam Margaret Mitchell, but the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) knows we went to Vancouver. The people are nice and it is a nice city. The exhibition will be great and I want Canadians to see it.

As Chairman of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services I say that we have allowed Members to use the householders to announce Expo 86. This is an exception. I want the Minister from British Columbia to listen and to know that we are sensitive to the wishes of Members. We have allowed Members to use their householders to announce Expo 86. We believe it is a Canadian show, a Canadian institution and a Canadian achievement and that people should know about it.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): The show is over now.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, if my colleague calls that a show, I may become partisan now. He knows me well enough to know that. I have tried to keep the debate non-partisan so we can reflect together.

[Translation]

We must reflect together, because my hon. friend, and I could name names, is going to have to field a number of questions in his riding: Why, when we used to be entitled to four out of 28, do we now get zero out of thirteen? I won't name your riding today. It is Friday and let's be nice. But I can certainly make sure some of your constituents are going to ask: What is going on? I wish someone would explain this legislation because it is the most obscure legal jargon. You will never be able to figure out the number of seats, just by reading Bill C-74. You have to multiply, substract, figure out the percentage, and the average voter, the average Canadian like me who reads this Bill is going to say: But what does it mean? He will have to get out his calculator, work with percentages, divide, multiply and substract. It is drafted in pure legalese. But what is not immediately apparent is the fact that there will be thirteen new Members—not one of them from Quebec.

Well, I am a little concerned, for as good Canadians and in a spirit of understanding we had agreed to six, then to seven, and now we are going from seven to thirteen seats and, on top of that, it will be for twenty years, not only ten.

So naturally I am asking myself: Well now, what happened?

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: My colleague is using a colourful language and I think I would endorse what he has just said. Indeed, I will move away from the camera field . . . here he is and he supports my claims, as do my other colleagues.

I therefore think we ought to be very prudent, very understanding. The people of western Canada are now quite pleased. I am looking at them, they got what they were asking for, or most of it. It is true because 310 seats were proposed in the Bill, including 27 in British Columbia, and they will end up with 26.

The Bill provided for 310 seats. I did not read the documents, I might be wrong, but I do not think so because my intuition tells me that British Columbia was to have 33 seats, and it will now have 32. I can understand why they are satisfied and pleased. They must have made representations to the right people and they won their point.

That is what politics is all about. It is a refined and polite game but also a game of power play where you tell somebody: Come sit over here, I have something to say to you. Well, if they were able to talk loudly enough to get practically everything they wanted . . . The Province of Ontario was to have 105 seats. Their voice did not carry that far, because the will only have 99. Quebec, yes, thank you for reminding me, none—

I can easily see that Westerners agree with the Bill. As far as I am concerned, I became involved in this debate at the very last minute because it is not my responsibility as critic for CIDA, or as Chairman of a legislative committee where Your Honour was kind enough to appoint me, to study the legislation on equity. Anyway!

Speaking of equity, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I should not have started with that, since I am Chairman of the legislative committee on the legislation on equity in employment, employment for women, visible minorities, the disabled, the handicapped and native people. Well, as Chairman of the committee, thanks to Mr. Speaker who was kind enough to appoint me because after all I am in Opposition, I owe it to refer to equity. I should have proceeded in an orderly fashion, but I was asked at 11.45 a.m. to speak on the matter. So I went about compiling my notes, but I should have dealt first with equity.

Therefore, do you feel it is fair—

[English]

I will say it in English because I have learned a lot from English Canada. Fairness or fair play is very British, very English. I only ask: Is it fair that Quebec, which was supposed to get 4 out of 310 seats, will now get zero out of 13?

I am not quarrelling with my very esteemed colleague from Alberta. I am not upset they got almost what they wanted. However, in turn, I want them to understand that I have double the reason to be careful. First, I believe in fairness. Second, I am what is called in English a French Canadian. I do not want anyone to become excited. I am not responsible for the English translation. In English it is French Canadian, but in French, I am a Canadien français. I did not do the translation. It should be: a Canadian of French language. I have visited western Canada during the last 22 years where people say: "Here comes the Frenchie" and all that.

Mr. Gauthier: Frogs.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, they are nice out there, because we could call them "plum puddings" and all that. However, I will say that I think it is not fair.

[Translation]

It is not fair. And I am questioning the fairness of this Bill, and I wonder whether a few extra days of reflection . . . I am not sure whether the Bill should not be sent back to the Standing Committee which went over it, so that Clause 2 only could be looked at, and returned with a report. I think we would then be responding to the wishes of the Government and the people who want a new redistribution legislation. Otherwise, we will go on speaking of equity, and at some point, we will be speaking again and saying it is not fair. There is something I do not understand. Well, I will tell you. We agreed that it was fair to have six or seven seats redistributed to people who really, honestly . . . I am speaking French, I am speaking to my Quebec people to whom I belong, I am a Quebecer. So I say: There are Members here who represent a much larger population. Nevertheless, if we want Canada to be a viable country, there should not be parts of the country with the feeling of being completely absent from the House of Commons.

So, from the standpoint of equity, I must say that I am very much surprised that we should find ourselves at the last moment, with a small change which has raised doubts in my mind and because of which I am now speaking in this House to ask whether it would not be fair to dwell on it a little longer.

[English]

Would it not be fair equitable to ask the committee to look into one clause again and to reassess the true intention, which was to diminish as much as possible the greater number and, second, to consider that western Canada indeed had a good cause? To be part of Canada, one has to show an understanding of feelings which exist so far away. Consideration has to be given to western Canada, consideration has to be given to northern Ontario and so on. However, je répète as a French Canadian.

[Translation]

We have the same fears as people in northern Ontario, except that theirs are based on geographical reasons, and ours on nationalistic grounds. We tell ourselves: In the end, there will be only a few of us in this Parliament. The presence in this place of French-speaking Members whose ancestors founded this country, along with our English-speaking friends naturally, is an aspect of the Canadian experience which it is very important to understand.

French-speaking Members have to feel comfortable in this House. They must not feel, even though this might not be the fault of their English-speaking colleagues, that they are an endangered species in this country.

We want to make people in Prince Edward Island happy by telling them: Even though you are entitled to only one Member, we are going to give you four because you are protected by the Constitution, which states that a province cannot have fewer Members of Parliament than senators.

As for me, I am going to suggest something—

[English]

To show my good spirit, I will say it in English. I would like to propose an amendment, seconded by either the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) or the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) or the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) or the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) or the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). You can choose whomever you want, Mr. Speaker. In any event, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following therefor:—

[Translation]

My colleagues will see that this is quite reasonable.

[English]

It continues:

—Bill C-74 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for reconsideration of Clause 2 thereof.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The amendment is as follows:

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis), seconded by Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity), moved the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and by substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for reconsideration of Clause 2 thereof.

Is that correct? The debate will continue on the amendment.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When I left the Chair at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) had just introduced an amendment. The debate is on the amendment.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak on the third reading debate on Bill C-74, an Act which will affect redistribution for the next number of elections. Before I speak about the Act itself, I would like to spend a fair bit of time on the amendment before us. In introducing the amendment, the Liberal Member who spoke on behalf of his caucus said that the Government had changed the rules at the last moment and that for some reason the Liberal Party was unaware of the amendments and felt now at third reading that it was necessary to introduce a motion to send this matter back to the committee.

Let me explain some of the history of this particular piece of legislation. This legislation was introduced by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for pre-study last May and the committee had a chance to study it in June. It was brought back to the House this fall, at which time we had one-day's debate and sent the matter to committee for further study. It was the request of the NDP and Liberal caucuses that a number of witnesses should appear before us to talk particularly about fairness within this legislation.

Quite a few speakers from all parts of Canada and from most provinces including the Province of Quebec, came before us to discuss the proposal. The one thing that the vast majority of witnesses who came before us said was that the legislation was unfair to the provinces that have growing populations. Not only had a cap been put on the size to which the House can grow but those provinces with growing populations like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia would, once the national quota had been decided, only be given one-half of the increase to which they would have been entitled. In other words, if the Province of Ontario were to receive 10 more seats because of its growth in population, it would only be given five more seats. If the Province of Alberta were to be entitled to two seats, it would receive only one. If the Province of British Columbia found itself in a situation in which it should receive four seats, it would receive only two. Almost every witness who came before the committee made that very point, and for very good reason. We were guaranteeing Prince Edward Island four seats. We were guaranteeing Quebec a certain number of seats and that that number would never decrease. We were guaranteeing Manitoba and Saskatchewan that they would keep the number of seats which they presently have regardless of what happens to the population of their provinces. Proportionately, if the Province of Quebec decreased in size in terms of Canada's population, when compared with the rest of the country, it would maintain its 75 seats, which is what it has at the present time. However, the large provinces, the ones which are growing, would be doubly penalized. First of all, they have no guarantees that they should increase at the rate by which they should increase according to strict representation by population, this was being denied because we were guaranteeing Quebec and almost all the other provinces that they would never lose seats. That was one penalty which was imposed by the legislation in its original form.

The second penalty is one I mentioned earlier. That is to say if British Columbia, as a result of this Government's devised formula, was entitled to four more seats, as a result of a clause in the original legislation, it would only be given two more. In other words, not only would those provinces not receive the six or eight seats which they should receive if we were going strictly by representation by population, but after the new formula came in, which guaranteed the non-growing provinces a certain number of seats they would lose, they would receive half of the seats to which they would be entitled.

We brought witnesses before the committee who made the same point. They said that something had to be done in order to protect the small provinces. They said that we had to accept the senatorial floor and that it seemed reasonable to accept the new grandfathering clause. This clause brought in other provinces in order that their present representation in the House of Commons would be protected, and the minimum number of seats which they had would always remain at that number. This would be the case regardless of what happened to the population of that province.

Through my encouragement and that of the Liberal Party in committee the Government brought forward an amendment which at the present time the Liberal caucus is opposing. I ask Members of that caucus not to pretend to be ignorant. Members of the Liberal Party should not pretend. For the most part they had members in the committee who were making the argument which is now being argued against by them at this time. At the report stage of the Bill which is before us, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who was the lead spokesman for the Liberal caucus as far as this legislation is concerned, said:

> Many witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee indicated that Rule 3 was unacceptable and would face many court challenges.
> That rule would put a cap on the number of seats for provinces like Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia and would only entitle them to half the additional Members to which they would be entitled pursuant to straight representation by population.

He went on to say:

> I commend the Minister's decision to remove Rule 3 in Clause 2 of the Bill—

The remarks which I have just read are found at page 8801 of Hansard for November 26, 1985. Just two weeks ago the spokesman for the Liberal Party got up in the House at the very beginning of the debate at report stage and commended the Government for this amendment, an amendment of which I certainly spoke in favour. I had a similar amendment on the books.

Let us go somewhat further. Let us take a look at the amendment put forward by that Liberal Member at that time. He proposed an amendment which was essentially the same as the amendment against which the Liberals are now speaking.

Mr. Tobin: Shame.

Mr. Murphy: I think the Liberal Party owes the House an apology.

Mr. Tobin: We are sorry.

Mr. Prud'homme: Make your speech, I will answer you.

Mr. Murphy: I listened to the great eloquence of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) who spoke before lunch. He talked about fairness to Quebec. I understand that sentiment because I also come from a province which has some concerns about the amount of representation it will have in the House of Commons in the future. I also undertand the historic situation, just as I understand the historic arguments which have taken place in the country with regard to the relative strength of the population of Quebec as compared to that of the rest of the country. So I have an understanding of the Member's concern.

It is a legitimate concern. It is a legitimate argument which he makes. Unfortunately, he is making it at the wrong time. We had a committee which met not only last June to look at the Bill but which heard witnesses in October. A clause-by-clause study of the Bill was conducted in November, and the President of the Privy Council, a gentleman whom I do not often defend in the House, on the first day of that study indicated he was willing to move with respect to this basic unfairness in which Alberta, B.C. and Ontario would be penalized since they would receive only half the number of seats to which they would be entitled under the quotient formula which was being devised. This was announced by the President of the Privy Council on the first day on which the committee commenced its clause-by-clause study. That was not the last day of the committee hearings. I was the only member of the Opposition who showed up for each and every hearing. One Member of the Liberal Party showed up for a mere five minutes.

At the committee hearings we went on further to discuss other concerns which members of the Conservative Party and Members such as myself from the New Democratic Party had with the legislation. It was not a surprise. It was not a last-minute announcement. For that matter, I have in front of me a photocopy of an article from the Ottawa Citizen concerning this meeting. I am sure Liberal Members in the House, at least those who have their glasses on, can see that it is not a small article. It is entitled: "Three Provinces to Get More MPs under New Plan".

Mr. Tobin: Scandalous.

Mr. Murphy: It is a Canadian Press story. It was published in the newspaper and members of the Liberal caucus should have been aware of it. If they cannot attend committee hearings, they should at least be able to read the newspapers.

Let them not pretend that there was not an opportunity to make this motion at some other time. Let them not pretend that they did not know that the Government had made this move almost three weeks ago. Let them not pretend that their own critic when he rose in the House on November 26, 1985 did not propose a similar amendment, one which they are now arguing against. Let them not pretend, for whatever political reasons they have that that same Member, the Hon. Member for Algoma, did not actually commend the Minister for his amendment.

The amendment which is before us at third reading stage of this Bill, a time when we are normally closing down debate, may be legitimate in terms of some of the emotional concerns of the people of Quebec. I tend to think there is some legitimacy in that argument. However, I am concerned that by shirking their duty for the last three weeks, members of the Liberal caucus really have no right to insult the House by moving the amendment which was brought forward at this time.

I would like to comment on some other matters. I believe I have made my point in terms of where the Liberal caucus failed to perform the duty for which they are elected and paid and for which they now do not show a great deal of concern. This legislation is not perfect. We did have the advantage of pre-study. All three Parties made representations. Witnesses came. We have the opportunity to study the legislation in October and November when it came back in legislative form. I must congratulate the Minister on accepting two amendments which I suggested and putting them forward; first, the amendment which would take away the penalty from provinces with growing populations and, second, the amendment which states that the commissions which are set up to determine the boundaries in each of the 10 provinces and the Territories, "shall" consider certain things such as community of identity and of interest, history and culture, as well as the manageable geographical size. The previous legislation, and this legislation as it was originally presented to us, only stated that the commissions "may" consider those very important aspects. We heard from Members of both the Conservative and Liberal Parties, as well as myself indicate that in some cases those commissions which determine boundaries did not take into consideration any of those factors.

After hearing from witnesses and having discussed our concerns, the Minister rose in this House and accepted the amendment that the commissions "shall" consider these items and not "may". Hopefully that directive to the commissions will be taken very seriously. It is very important to the people of northern Ontario that they have ridings which are of a reasonable geographical size, that there is some understanding of the French and English mix in those areas and of the tribal council formations so that, for instances, all the Cree are not split into two or three different ridings even though they may be of the same tribal formation. In Manitoba, the French, German and Ukrainian minorities should have some feeling that they are not going to be split up among 7 or 8 different ridings. Those things are now to be considered, which is something the previous legislation did not insist upon.

Those are very important concerns and I am glad that after the committee process the Government was willing to accept some of the reasonable amendments made by opposition Members and by witnesses who came before us.

I still have some concerns about the legislation, and I have expressed those concerns in the past. I believe the legislation is very fair in terms of what it does, based on the 1981 census. In other words, Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario, as well as the other provinces, will be treated quite fairly under these rules, based on the 1981 census.

I do have some concerns in terms of what will happen in the long run as far as it affects the provinces with growing populations. We have an artificial quotient in this operation which does not allow for the fact that populations may grow very quickly in some provinces, and we should, perhaps, be increasing the size of the House much faster than the Government now anticipates. That is one concern.

My other concern, although it is not directly related to the legislation, certainly relates to what the Government said in introducing this legislation. The President of the Privy Council and other Members of the Government who spoke on behalf of this legislation, talked about making the House of Commons work better. They said we do not need a House with a 100 new Members over the next 20 years. That is quite a reasonable thought. Obviously, the larger this House gets, the more difficult becomes the role of an individual Member of Parliament. That is understandable.

The second point made was that it was necessary that we spend the money not to increase the number of Members of Parliament but to make sure the Members of Parliament who are here at the present time, or who will be here as a result of this legislation, have more money to do the work they should be doing. We want Parliament to do a better job as we adapt the rules of the House of Commons. The Government to date has encouraged changes to make the role of the back-bencher on all sides of the House a more effective one, not only in looking at Government expenditures, but in looking at legislation itself. Those are very fine words, but in the area of actually providing extra resources for Members of Parliament, the Government has yet to act. I know that the Board of Internal Economy is looking at the staff salaries of Members of Parliament and considering their travelling privileges. It is looking at how the new legislative committees will work in terms of the resources those committees will have. But the Government has been in power for over a year now, and little has happened. As one Member of Parliament I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am on twice as many committees as I was previously but I have the same resources to work with. One of the rationales of this legislation is to restrict the growth of this House of Commons to 13 Members, after the next commissions have finished their work. If we believe we are doing that to make Parliament work better, then there should be pressure put on the Government to "cough up", to provide the resources which are necessary so that we can do what the Auditor General said we should do, and do it more thoroughly. We need the resources to look at the expenditures of Government and to make sure that tax expenditures are reviewed by Parliament. We must be able to take a technical piece of legislation, understand what it means, and make the appropriate amendments before that legislation passes. If that is what we in this House are to do—and I think that certainly makes a great deal of sense—then we must have the tools to do that job.

We are not talking about plush offices or cheaper meals in the Parliamentary Restaurant. We are talking about adequate staff, adequate space for them, and salaries which will enable us to hire experts in certain fields. We will then be able to do the work that everyone says we should be doing, including the Auditor General, the Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, and, I am sure, the vast majority of citizens of this country.

I want to say that in general I do accept this legislation, as far as it affects the census of 1981 and the next redistribution. I have expressed on a number of occasions some of my concerns with regard to how the legislation will affect the future of Canada. I think there are still a few flaws which could be dealt with later. I would urge that we move quickly on this legislation. I would like to express some very deep regret that the Liberal caucus is now aware of problems it sees with the legislation which, I suspect because of its own lack of work, it did not see at the appropriate time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make a brief comment. I sat here today agreeing with everything I was hearing from the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). That is the second time this week I have agreed with a speech of an Opposition Member.

Mr. Murphy: I may have to retract.

Mr. Hawkes: I hope that my own colleagues do not get too nervous about that.

In the last Parliament I was one of those Hon. Members who were involved in both committee and in the Chamber with respect to the previous arrangements which had been put in place in 1968. For the 1981 census they had created what we viewed, at that time, to be an enormous problem of lack of fairness in the system. It is a real pleasure to see the Bill as it now is at third reading stage. The lack of fairness as a result of the 1968 changes in the law have been recognized by the House Leader, the witnesses, the committee and members of all three Parties. As the Member for Churchill says, it may well be that what we are doing here today may have some unintended consequences related to fairness or the lack of fairness for the census in 1991 or in 2001. I have faith that Parliaments of the future will take steps similar to this one to put a fair system in place. I urge Members to let this Bill pass quickly so that the commissioners can get on with the job and can restore the basic sense of fairness.

In closing, I would like to ask the Member a short question. It is his view that the testimony was quite consistent and clear that the present arrangement protects the rights of smaller population centres like the Northwest Territories and Prince Edward Island. Is it a fair over-all conclusion that the Member believes that for centres of greater size from Quebec right through to Saskatchewan this is a fair proposition for at least the next decade?

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is certainly what I meant to say in my speech and I think that message got across. As I said in my conclusion, my concern is not with what will happen as a result of the 1981 census, but with what might happen 10 or 20 years in the future. I have expressed that concern on a number of occasions. However, I do believe that the legislation before us, in its amended form, is certainly a lot better for the protection of provinces with reduced populations and gives some protection to the provinces with growing populations. Because of that I have not engaged in any particular fillibuster to keep this debate going. I recognize from the history of what has happened that the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) is quite correct. The House has dealt with legislation with regard to redistribution every 10 years over the last while. I suspect that, if we do find some unique features in the census of 1991, we will have new legislation in the House to deal with it at the appropriate time.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I am very prompt to answer the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and to make comments. He is in total and full contradiction. The other night his own colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), the President of the Privy Council and others participated in a debate on reform of the House of Commons. Now that fine gentleman is blaming the Member for Saint-Denis who is using third reading debate to try to make a good law much better. Why do we have third reading? Why do we have the Senate, the Chamber of sober second thought? We have them in order to make laws better and better. The Hon. Member has understood nothing of the process. I am deeply shocked. Now the Member will understand why his Party will never make inroads in Quebec. He dares to come here and say that the people of Manitoba have great feeling for the minorities, the French, the Ukrainians and the Germans.

[Translation]

I am going to repeat this for Quebecers because these are not the feelings of your Frenchspeaking colleagues on the other side. They do not say: You, the minorities, French, Ukrainian and German. There are two groups in this country, my honourable colleague, which are called the two founding peoples, and they believe that they are entitled to some protection, one more than the other because we live in North America, and a small handful of them believe that this should be taken into account in the House of Commons. We take this under consideration, and generously so, in the case of the Northwest Territories, and we do the same for the Yukon, because we understand.

[English]

We have deep feelings for Prince Edward Island. We believe in that kind of protection. I see him dare to get up and ask the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) if he thinks this is fair for Quebec. The Member for Calgary West is very well served, thank you, and he is asking the Member for Churchill whether he thinks Quebec is well served. I think you should allow us to say if we are well served or not. Of course, Mr. Speaker, some of them are very happy. I will be a little bit more partisan in the weeks to come.

In the actual Chamber Alberta is receiving 21 seats. I think it is unfair to give it less than what it wanted, but under the first and second formulas proposed by the President of the Privy Council it was to receive 23. Under the proposal of the past Government it was to receive 27 seats, and now it will receive 26. That is almost 100 per cent. At the moment British Columbia has 28 seats. The Member said I did not do my duty. He quoted all kinds of incorrect figures. He did not do his duty. I did mine.

I am not speaking for all Liberals. This is the right of every Member. Members are fighting like hell for new rules in the House. They want reform of the House and more individual rights for Members, and yet the Hon. Member attacks me saying that I did not read newspapers and that I was not present at committees. As the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said, the real Chamber is the House of Commons, not the committees. I learned from John Diefenbaker that third and final reading in the House of Commons is the final court. The Member had better learn about the practice of the House of Commons.

At the moment the Province of British Columbia has 28 Members. Under a formula of the President of the Privy Council it was to receive 31, and under the proposal of the past Liberal Government it was to receive 33 seats. Now, with the new and final proposal it will receive 32 seats. That is almost 100 per cent. The Member said that British Columbia will receive only half of what it was supposed to receive. If he reads his own "blues" he will see what he said. At the moment Ontario is to receive 95 seats. Under the first proposal, which we would have accepted with pleasure, because of fairness—and the gentleman is not going to teach me any lessons on fairness, I can assure you of that. I have been in the House of Commons practising Canadianism every day of my life. Under the first proposal, the Province of Ontario was supposed to receive 97 seats, and under the proposal of the past Government, it was to have received 105 seats. Now it will receive 95, plus 4, making a total of 99, which is less than what it is entitled to.

I would like the Member for Churchill and others to understand that we were in full agreement to give more respect to western Canada. Lest he allow them to believe otherwise, I will repeat clearly and strictly in English to British Columbians and Albertans that I want a fair deal for them. That is why I said that any new seats to be added to the House of Commons should be given to British Columbia and Alberta and that there should be nothing for Quebec. I hope this will be clearly understood.

However, this is a package deal for 20 years. We do not know what will happen in the Province of Quebec after the census of 1991. I think we should let the law take its course as usual and every 10 years there should be a new distribution. There is now a new Government in Quebec. Many people left the Province of Quebec for reasons that I do not want to debate now. We are of the feeling that now we will have a stable, federalist Government in the Province of Quebec. That will help to add to our population. People will return and the economy will improve.

The Member wants a package deal. I think he should defend the rights of the Province of Manitoba. That is fine, I agree. Under the Liberal regime, which the Member decries so much, Manitoba was to receive 15 seats instead of 14.

Mr. Murphy: Fourteen.

Mr. Prud'homme: It was 15. You do not even do your homework.

Mr. Murphy: You're wrong.

Mr. Prud'homme: Manitoba was to go from 14 seats to 15 and now it will be stuck with 14. I will not take any lessons from the Member from Churchill, I assure you.

Mr. Murphy: Do your homework.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to my hon. friend from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) this morning and to his comments this afternoon on what was said by the New Democratic Party Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and I would like to raise some of the points that are relevant to this debate on third reading, and especially the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Saint-Denis, and I intend to do so in more or less the same spirit my hon. friend did this morning, before another speaker injected a dose of partisanship in the debate.

Mr. Speaker, the legislative process includes tabling a Bill for first reading, a debate on the principle of the Bill at the second reading stage, then in committee, and finally, we have consideration of the third reading stage in the House. Whether or not there was debate or discussion in committee, if there is a reason for debate at the third reading stage, it does not matter what went on before. If we perceive certain injustices and want to correct them, we have to do so at this stage, because if we keep silent now, it will be too late, and neither public opinion nor the attention of our colleagues will have been drawn to this important matter.

I would like to elaborate on the basic arguments and point out that the Bill to proceed with a revision of the electoral boundaries readjustment process was examined by the previous Parliament, that is, Parliament as it was constituted before September 4, 1984. At that time, the Bill proposed that the total number of Members in the House would be 310, meaning that Ontario would have 105 Members instead of 95, Quebec 79 instead of 75, Nova Scotia one more which would make twelve, New Brunswick would still have ten, Manitoba would have one more, bringing the total number of Members from fourteen to fifteen, British Columbia would go up from 28 to 33, Prince Edward Island would still have four, Saskatchewan fourteen, Alberta would go from 21 to 27, and Newfoundland from seven to eight, while the Northwest Territories and Yukon would have two seats and one seat, respectively. It goes to show that the Liberal Party in this House does not really have to listen to NDP Members lecturing on fairness, particularly the Hon. Member for Churchill. Under the proposal then made by the Liberals it was indeed acknowledged that, owing to the increase in population in the western provinces, they were entitled to have additional seats, proportionally more than Quebec, for instance, so the number of seats in Alberta would go from 21 to 27, whereas Quebec would gain only four and go from 75 to 79.

The new Government was elected and, after reflection I would imagine, it was anxious to leave its own imprint so it decided that 310 seats was too much. They did not want to have so many Members sitting in the House. It was a moot point. Apparently, they wanted to keep the number of Members at a more reasonable level and freeze it for a while. I take it for granted that they drew their inspiration from lofty sentiments devoid of pettiness, and simply wanted to proceed with the reform in a new context, even though the Tories had earlier given their support to the Bill providing for 310 seats. In that same line of thought we might ask the Hon. Member for Churchill this question: Since the Bill had been widely accepted, why bring in a new one? As it happened, first they proposed six more seats, going from 282 to 288, then later on 289. Considering that the increase in the number of seats was rather minimal, our Members on the committee reported to our caucus and, in a spirit of fairness, we agreed that certain provinces would not have more, that Quebec would have no more than 75 because only six or seven seats were to be added to the representation in the House of Commons. There were other priorities as a result of population changes, particularly in Alberta and British Columbia.

We may have missed a few committee hearings. That's possible, Mr. Speaker, in view of the large number of committees sitting; we may have missed part of the debate, but who would blame us today at the third reading stage of the Bill to draw our colleagues' attention to an issue, nonetheless major, since there will be a membership increase from 285 or 286 to 295? So we are beginning to get significantly closer to the figure initially proposed, and according to this new redistribution where 13 instead of just 6 new seats are added, the Province of Quebec would get none, and furthermore the number of seats allocated to each province would be frozen up till the year 2001.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we the Liberals in the previous Parliament had shown concern for equity by proposing an increase in the number of seats for Ontario from 95 to 105, for Alberta from 21 to 27, and, as you will recall, a very large Quebec caucus in the previous Parliament had agreed to these proposals. But now we are reaching 295. Some will argue in terms of proportion or percentage, but there is much more than percentage involved here: it is a matter of whether 75 out of 295 is as good as 77 out of 313.

In my opinion, this is not the way to look at the problem, especially since the legislation will freeze the whole redistribution of seats for a very long period, that is up to the 2001 census, and inview of the time frame, it might take us to an election held in 2005 or 2006; as a Quebec Member sitting in this House in two, three, four or five years down the road, I would not want my fellow Quebecers to ask me: "What did you do? You did not do your job, you did not point that out to Parliament, you let that happen and now we are penalized", because what we want to bring out here is the matter of equity.

Speaking of fairness, there is another point in this Bill which bothers me, and it is the fact that from now on, if it were adopted as is, the report could be dealt with only in Committee, and we know that it is much more difficult to bring something to the attention of the public at large by a debate in Committee than by a debate here, in the House, which is supreme in our legislative process. Because, in a Committee which is always made up of a majority of members representing the Government, there may be abuses, and the only way to bring the reality of a debate to the attention of public opinion is to hold it right here. A different political party may some day be in a minority position in the House and wish to bring its views to the attention of the public and perhaps emphasize some inequities . . . You know that, in the House, Hon. Members do not always sit on the same side. Sometimes, following election accidents, they move from one side of the House to the other, and I think it is essentially a matter of justice because, in a democratic system, there is nothing more basic than the way citizens are represented.

We agree that there must be a connection between the evolution of the population and the change in the number of seats; we agree that the smallest provinces must be guaranteed a definite number of seats. If, following the evolution of population throughout this country, the number of seats in a province such as Prince Edward Island came down to one seat, the elected representative for that province would have a hard time representing it. Therefore there is more than representation by population to be considered in this debate. There is a matter of fairness, of justice and the need to maintain open options for major groups. I think that Quebec as such, which understands and recognizes that other provinces must have more seats, would not want to be deceived. It would not want its number of seats to be frozen for the next 20 years or more and have to live with it.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that if we had maintained the original proposal allowing for six or seven new seats, we would not be debating this issue now, at least not because of us. But I feel that because the number of seats was increased from six to thirteen, from seven to thirteen, and that the number of Quebec seats was frozen until 2001, this is an important matter which does not reflect the fairness and balance that should characterize such a bill.

I said, Mr. Speaker, and I will say it again because the interpretation given a while ago by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) is an indication of the way our remarks could be used, but I emphasize again that we agree that British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario should have more seats. When we look at the present situation, we realize that the number of Alberta seats would increase from 21 to 26, which is pretty close to the 27 seats which the Liberals had proposed. When we Liberals were proposing that the number of seats be increased to 310, Alberta would have gone from 21 to 27 seats. In this Conservative legislation which proposes that the number of seats be increased to 295, Alberta goes from 21 to 26 seats. We fully agree with this change. However, we do disagree about the fact that, when it was proposed that the number of seats be increased to 310, Quebec would have had 79 seats, while now that there are to be 295 seats, Quebec will have a zero increase for the upcoming 20 years.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make these comments not to start a war between regions but to show how important it is for legislation to be, and to appear to be, fair and equitable. If not only this equity, but also this appearance of equity is lacking, it is very hard for a piece of legislation passed by the majority to be accepted by the public.

I want to repeat that we are definitely opposed to Bill C-74 as it now stands and that we strongly support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) that this Bill not be read for the third time now, but that it be referred back to committee so that the question raised by this Hon. Member and myself may be reexamined to ensure that the equity factor is respected and that everyone in this House, on both sides . . . Indeed, this issue extends beyond party lines because, whether we are Conservatives, Liberals or whatever, we all represent the interests of our respective Provinces. This is a fundamental issue which goes beyond party politics. I wish and hope that the majority and my colleagues from Quebec, to whatever party they belong, will be willing to give us a second chance to amend Clause 2 of the Bill, so that, if and when Bill C-74 is approved, it will have the support not only of the majority, but of all Members of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cadieux): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, since you are also Chairman of the Quebec Conservative caucus and a distinguished Member of this House, I am happy to see you in the Chair this afternoon because your presence will lighten the atmosphere in the Chamber and abate the restiveness I felt a while ago.

Whenever a Member of the New Democratic Party makes this sort of speech, I cannot help but rise to remind him and his colleagues that as long as they hold such views, they will never make any inroads in Quebec, and the Conservatives may be assured that the fight in Quebec the next time will be between them and us. If there is this same attitude about the francophone minority in the Hon. Member's Province, I can imagine what must be the feelings in Quebec.

But how placid, how serene it is to hear the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) say yes, with a blunt, almost unkind frankness to some of us who may have let something slip by at some point. He tells us composedly: Listen, that is the parliamentary process. We have a third reading. When I brought forth the Bill, clearly I considered it as something perfect, otherwise I would not have put it before the House.

Then the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—

[English]

The President of the Privy Council who is always calm, saw that there may be an agreement not to go to 310 seats, as my colleague said, and very rightly so. Very calmly he went around and we said: "Oh, maybe six. We will not fight". Then he said six. As the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said, six does not seem to be fair for British Columbia and Alberta. I repeat again and again, we were very fair. I look at the Member for Alberta. Alberta would have had 27 Members under the old formula. British Columbia would have had 33 Members. That was fair. But the President of the Privy Council said that we will have a resolution for six or seven. The idea behind that, which seems to have escaped the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides pointed out, was to have a manageable House of Commons. Therefore, the idea came of seven Members given to three provinces, that is, priority to western Canada.

After deliberation and listening to witnesses—as the Member of Churchill rightfully said, those of us who were not in committee listened—the President of the Privy Council came up with another idea of 13. At that time it is possible that a Liberal was absent. It is quite possible. I said so myself. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), together with the Member from Laval-des-Rapides, were travelling for two weeks in western Canada as the special caucus of the Liberal Party of Canada on agriculture. They were there to learn from westerners what was going on. From that they were to report to the Leader of the Party and to the House of Commons. I admit that the Member was not here. Thirteen was the number agreed to in committee. Now we are at third reading. As the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides said, and I wish to echo him, we are here to make comments on his speech.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides suggested: We thought that over, and suddenly we realized it was no longer the idea of having a smaller Chamber which had prompted us to agree, but a question of adding on and on and on. At that point we started asking questions. But that is the reason for having a debate. John Diefenbaker himself always said so. I learned that from him.

[English]

As I was saying in French, John Diefenbaker taught me a lot. The Member comes from his province. He should be proud that I will quote the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: He said: "This is the place to debate". My colleague from Laval-des-Rapides was telling me that with this new reform, the House almost does not count any more. It is committees after subcommittees, after legislative committees, after permanent committees, after House of Commons and Senate committees and after travelling committees. Nothing is going on in the House. We have a golden opportunity to show that the House of Commons still counts, that the House of Commons is the last place and it counts. It is food for thought for the weekend.

Here is another Member coming into the Chamber. I congratulate him because he is the new Minister from British Columbia. I am sure he would have agreed with me had he heard me this morning because I was reasonable and humble.

• (1500)

I am ready to admit to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and his colleague from British Columbia that we may have been temporarily not at the right place. I admit that. Canadians like people who can show some humility. I know it is very difficult for an NDP Member to admit that he may have been absent. An NDP Member is never wrong!

Ms. Mitchell: That is right.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is why they will never win any in Quebec—

—they are perfect. What should I tell you? But on this side, we thought that the further we go with the debate, the more we realize this could be improved. Mr. Speaker, this is what we are trying to do. This is why we are making comments. This is the reason why my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), took part in the debate, and I share his view. I think he is a sensible man and we should listen to his comments and act in a non-partisan way as I tried to do this morning, to be completely non-partisan, like the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Because of him, the debate will go on much longer.

[English]

I suggest that if the President of the Privy Council wants this Bill, he had better talk to the Hon. Member for Churchill. We can talk and talk and talk on this Bill. The longer we talk, the more Hon. Members on both sides will say: "Maybe we are going too fast". I repeat again that that is why it takes three readings. Otherwise, we would have one reading or two readings of a Bill. The reason for three readings, plus the Senate and the Royal Assent is to ensure that we are not making a mistake. We are being asked for a blank cheque for 20 years. Perhaps we thought it was all right yesterday, but we have been reflecting upon it. I see the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) smiling. He was an understanding person when it came to the aspirations of Quebec. I am sure he may have some sentiments in his heart today which suggest that I may not be that wrong. He is a fine gentleman who understood the aspirations of Quebec.

And not only aspirations but concerns. I know there are concerns in Quebec, and when there is reference to representation, suddenly people wake up, and say: "Wait a minute". Great politicians did understand that. The Hon. Robert Stanfield also could well understand that, about Quebec's aspirations and concerns, and I can say that you are being told about Quebec's concerns without any lies or reservations, since I am echoing them in all fairness to our friends and colleagues and to the people of British Columbia and Alberta.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, certainly it was not my intention to speak again on the Bill.

Mr. Prud'homme: Oh, you will.

Mr. Murphy: However, the Hon. Member who just spoke made a comment at the end of my speech which I was unable to rebut.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) also made comments toward the end of this speech to which I should like to refer. In both cases, he made personal references which suggested that if that was the way I felt about minorities in my province, we would never get elected in Quebec. I take those comments as a personal affront. He was in the House, as were many other Hon. Members, when we unanimously passed motions on the French language services issue in Manitoba.

Mr. Prud'homme: I was just commenting upon what you said.

Mr. Murphy: The Prime Minister at that time, Pierre Trudeau, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaking on behalf of the Conservatives and I spoke about the fact that we had to recognize the rights of the French minority in the Province of Manitoba and that we should be giving encouragement to that province to pass that constitutional amendment.

Mr. Prud'homme: Congratulations.

Mr. Murphy: I tell the Hon. Member who just spoke that that took one hell of a lot of more political courage than many Members show in the House from time to time. I do not want to hear from him, in his belated defence of the Province of Quebec—

Mr. Prud'homme: You will.

Mr. Murphy: —a suggestion that I have not had the courage to fight for the minority French population in my province.

Mr. Prud'homme: I did not say that.

Mr. Murphy: He inferred that.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or a question of privilege.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order, I believe.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes. I would like to state more clearly that never in my life have I accused the Hon. Member. I only made a comment on what he said, as he will see from the blues.

[English]

I never said anything like that. I respect the Hon. Member for his courage.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. Order, please! I believe the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis knows very well this is debate, so I will ask the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)—

[English]

I ask the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to conclude his comments.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I do not have much more to say. However, I want to indicate to those representatives of the Liberal caucus who are now speaking out that this is not a matter which was dealt with in committee when their Members were not in attendance. The amendment to which they are now objecting was not passed then. That did not happen in committee. There was an announcement made in committee that an amendment would be brought before the House, but the amendment itself was passed in the House without opposition.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of speaking once before on the Bill, at which time I spoke about the inequality or injustice it would create for representation in western Canada. The more one reflects upon the Bill, the more one sees that it is really bad, not just for one part of the country, but for the country as a whole.

The first reason the Bill is bad is that it goes against the very principle of representation by population. We all know what that means. We all know that the current legislation would provide for a large increase in the number of Members in the House of Commons, would provide for equitable representation throughout the country and would, with increases in the population, keep the numbers of people in constituencies at fairly manageable levels. We would not end up with wide disparities, where some constituencies have a population of 60,000 or 70,000 people and others would have a population of 120,000 or more. It is quite clear that a Member of Parliament with some 50,000 to 70,000 constituents can get around to see them fairly often, certainly more often than a Member of Parliament who represents twice that many constituents. The basic principle of representation by population is designed to ensure that each citizen has a Member of Parliament with whom he can get in touch, someone who can stand up for him in the House of Commons and represent his interest.

Ms. Mitchell: And she.

Mr. Berger: Pardon me?

Mr. Murphy: He or she.

Mr. Berger: He or she. When the numbers of Members of Parliament do not keep pace with the increase in the population, the result is unfair and unjust to many constituents across the country. That is the basic principle which the Bill violates.

In addition, as I mentioned the last time I spoke on the Bill, the legislation which is presently in force would see the numbers of Members of Parliament increase from 282 to 310 and there would be increases in the representation of many provinces. The example that I gave last time which I would like to repeat today is that Alberta would have had 20 seats in the next election if we went with the increase to 310 Members of the House. If this Bill which the Tories have presented is passed, rather than increasing its representation to 27 Members, Alberta's representation will only go to 25 Members.

I have been to Alberta on several occasions in the past year. I went to the fine Cities of Edmonton and Calgary and I spoke to a number of people who told me that with the legislation that had been passed by the Liberals, they would have had more seats in Calgary and Edmonton than they receive under the Bill before us today. The same applies to British Columbia. British Columbia would have had 33 seats if the Liberal legislation remained, but if we let the Tory Bill go through, British Columbia will only have 31 seats so it will have two seats less.

How can we figure this out? This is the Party that told us it wanted to give an increased voice to western Canadians. Now it is depriving western Canadians of representation in the House of Commons. Does that make sense to anyone? We can think of all of the arguments that were made over the past number of years about western alienation and about the fact that the prairie provinces and British Columbia did not have an adequate voice in the councils of this nation and more particularly in the federal Government. What was the reason for that? Naturally, westerners felt that the previous Liberal Government—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It didn't care.

Mr. Berger: The Liberal Party did not have much representation from western Canada. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) says that we did not care. I beg to differ. I think that in our own way, we tried to do justice to the whole of the country and to all regions. Perhaps we were not understood but that is another matter.

As I was saying, the political reality was that the Liberal Government did not have much representation from western Canada. As I recall, we held two seats in Manitoba, the only seats we held west of the Ontario border. There was a feeling, right or wrong, that when it came to making the decisions of the federal Government, the only provinces that counted were Quebec and Ontario.

What happened as a result of the election of September 1984? The Conservative Party had great representation from out West and expected to form the Government. All the western MPs figured that they would now have a chance to form a Government which truly represented the interests of western Canada. However, they made a slight miscalculation. They did not realize that Quebec would go along with them. Quebec likes to be on the side of power. Quebec journalists constantly say that Quebec—

[Translation]

Quebec voters are very sophisticated. When the Liberals are in power in Quebec City, we vote for the Tories in Ottawa. If the Conservative Party rules Quebec, we want the Liberals in Ottawa. When a Conservative wave seemed to be sweeping the country, Quebecers wanted to be on the Government side. So what did they do? In their wisdom, Quebec voters elected 56—

Mr. Grisé: Fifty-eight.

Mr. Berger: Fifty-eight Tory Members. I thank the Hon. Member from Chambly. Quebec elected 58 Members because it wanted to be on the right side.

[English]

So members of the Tory Party woke up on September 5 and saw that they would form a Government which represented not only Ontario and western Canada but Quebec as well. I must say that this is healthy for our country. If it had to be that way, it was best that it turned out that way for a few years anyway. However, the western MPs, editorialists and western Canadians wondered what would happen now that there is another Government which is largely made up of representatives from Quebec and Ontario. The people from western Canada again, in the new Conservative Government, are in the minority.

I have not had the privilege yet in my parliamentary career of being a member of a Cabinet but I have spoken to some of my former colleagues from Nova Scotia who told me—

[Translation]

—I remember talking to Mr. Lessard recently, the ex-Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who came from . . . I stand to be corrected but I think the riding of Marcel Lessard was Lac-Saint-Jean. Marcel told us that when decisions were being made in Cabinet and a Minister from Nova Scotia or a Minister from eastern Quebec made personal representations, he was up against six or seven of his colleagues from Montreal or Toronto, so you can easily guess what came out of such meetings.

[English]

It has ended up that regional interests do not have an adequate voice in the federal Cabinet or in Parliament

If the Government would allow the Liberal legislation to go ahead, more seats for Alberta and British Columbia would be provided. What will we end up with? The Tories are now proposing a Bill which would provide for only 25 seats for Alberta as opposed to 27 and 31 seats for British Columbia as proposed to 33. Because this Bill violates the principle of representation by population, it is a bad Bill. As well, it is a bad Bill because it deprives the region and in particular western Canada from increased representation in the House.

We have also seen that it is a bad Bill for the people from my home Province of Quebec.

[Translation]

As the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) pointed out this morning, as a result of the existing Liberal legislation there would be 28 additional seats in the House of Commons, 28 seats which would be added to the 282 we now have so that the number of seats in the House of Commons would increase from 282 to 310. Quebec would have four more seats, which represents 14 per cent of the 28-seat increase. Out of the 13 seats which would be added to the House of Commons under the Bill proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Speaker, not one would go to Quebec.

So where is the fairness in that? Under the Liberal Bill Quebec would get 14 per cent of the new seats, but under the Bill of the Progressive Conservative Party Quebec does not even stand to gain a single seat.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we get from a Government whose commitment during the last election campaign was to defend the interests of Quebec!

● (1520)

[English]

There is a third reason for this Bill being an unjust Bill. It is unfair to another region of the country in addition to being unfair to western Canada. It is unfair to Quebec.

There are a number of other reasons which I could mention with respect to the Bill being unfair. One of them is something which flies in the face of all of the undertakings and commitments made by the Conservative Party in the last election campaign. Members of that Party proposed to enhance the role of Parliament. They proposed to give Parliament greater weight in the decision-making process. In the recent past the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons has been greatly hailed. I have my doubts about how many of its proposals will actually reform this institution. In any event, we will be dealing with that legislation over the course of the next few weeks.

The Conservative Government was elected on a promise to enhance the role of parliamentarians by giving more importance to this institution. We must remember that under existing legislation the report of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission, once it goes through the process of studying the boundaries in the country, has to table its report in the House of Commons where all MPs have the right to stand up and speak on behalf of their constituents and bring up objections which they may have to the proposed boundaries. I have lived through one of these commissions. I do not know whether many of the newly-elected MPs have had the same experience. I lived through one several years ago. I would like to tell Hon. Members a bit about how these commissions work.

A Bill is passed in the House of Commons and an electoral boundaries commission is set up. Commissioners are appointed in each province. Before they hold hearings they consider the results of the last census. They take the Act of Parliament which requires them to increase representation in the House to accord with the increase in population as contained in the last census. They consider the existing boundaries of existing constituencies and go about their work. They sit in some office building some place and spend several months drafting the boundaries of the constituency according to Parliament's wishes and according to the changes in the population as represented by the last census. The results of their work are then published. The day on which one receives a new map of one's constituency is quite a day for a Member of Parliament. Sometimes half of one's constituency has been taken away, and other times it is even more than half. There have been cases where whole constituencies have been wiped out as a result of movements and changes in populations, not only in provinces but in cities. As an example, in my City of Montreal, the east end of that city has lost 100,000 people over the course of the last 10 years. These people have moved to the West Island, to the South Shore and to Laval. There have been tremendous shifts of population within the Island of Montreal.

The commissioners perform their work based upon these shifts in population. They then table the new riding boundaries at which time the public finds out in some cases that a constituency is no longer there or that it has been moved a couple of miles away.

I conclude by saying that when the work of the commission is done it is only fair that parliamentarians have an opportunity to speak on behalf of their constituents and bring to the attention of the House their concerns with respect to the proposed changes. Under existing legislation an opportunity is provided for full debate on the changes proposed by electoral boundaries commissioners. Under the Bill which is before us the governing Party which upholds democracy and the parliamentary process removes the possibility of debate from the House of Commons. The Government now says that the report of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commissioners will be referred to a parliamentary committee and that this committee will have 30 days in which to study the report. After 30 days that is it, everything goes through. It does not matter if one has an objection. It does not matter if one is concerned about the work of the committee. It does not matter if as an MP you are concerned about the fact that your constituency has just disappeared. As an MP you have only 30 days to express your objections and then the law stands, as do the changes.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you regard this as a good example of the principle of democracy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk).

Mr. Suluk: I have only one question. It relates to what the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) said with respect to this bill not being a good Bill. He has said that it is a bad Bill because it does not conform to the principle of representation by population.

My question relates to the fact that I represent only 20,000 people. I believe that the riding of Western Arctic does not have many more people than my riding. I suppose it does not matter that my riding covers three time zones and extends from James Bay to the North Pole and from the southern part of Baffin Island to the Beaufort Sea. I suppose if we are to follow the principle of representation by population to the letter we should eliminate the federal ridings of Western Arctic and Nunatsiaq and tack them on to the Yukon. Then, we would have fair representation.

Since the Hon. Member says that Bill C-74 is a bad Bill, because it does not conform to the concept of representation by population, I would like to ask him whether or not he feels that Yukon and the Northwest Territories have too much representation. Could we not say, therefore, that since the southern parts of Canada are the most heavily-populated areas of the country that all sparsely-populated areas of the country, which would include northern Quebec, northern Labrador, parts of Newfoundland and perhaps some parts of northern B.C., do not deserve any real representation by any Party? In light of what the Hon. Member has said, could the Hon. Member please enlighten me in this respect? If he does not think that the present representation by population is the right way, what does he think would be a more fair way?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) for his question. I agree wholeheartedly with what I believe he was getting at in his comment. Representation by population is a cardinal principle in any democratic system of Government. In my comments I was obviously referring to the heavily-populated areas of the country in which some urban areas and some urban constituencies have from 150,000 to 170,000 people living within one constituency. I was saying that when it comes to constituencies of that nature, the principle of representation by population has to be respected. It is the foremost principle which has to be respected when it comes to urban constituencies. I see that this Bill is a deviation from that principle.

When it comes to the remote areas of the country, there are other principles which one must take into consideration in a country like Canada. I certainly do not think that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories—to answer the Hon. Member's question directly—have too much representation. On the contrary, I would probably say that they do not have enough. The Hon. Member would probably say that and I would agree with him. Coming from a remote area such as the Hon. Member comes from, he probably feels very lonely in this House and probably would not object to having another one or two Members of Parliament to represent his part of the country. In a country like Canada, we have to make accommodations of that nature. I would ask the Hon. Member whether Bill C-74 helps him in that respect. Does it provide for increased representation in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Suluk: We're doing okay.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member says he is doing okay. If that is the way he wants it, that is fine, but I would say that it probably would make sense to deviate from these principles in order to provide for extra representation in the remote areas and to give the Yukon and the Northwest Territories a greater voice in the House of Commons.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) and a lot of what he said had been gone over earlier in the second reading debate and in committee. I do not think there is any disagreement that rep by pop is the basic principle. However, because of the history of the development of this country, there have been certain shifts away from that. We have made allowances for Prince Edward Island, for the Arctic and for the Northwest Territories as the previous speaker indicated. We have made allowances for the Yukon and we have made allowances with the Senatorial floor. Therefore, we recognize that rep by pop is the base and there have been certain historical and constitutional requirements which have made it necessary for us to deviate from rep by pop.

To my way of thinking, the Hon. Member's argument against the Bill at this stage comes down to one argument, which is that it is unfair to the population of Quebec. Has the Hon. Member had a chance to compare the figures in terms of what has happened to the representation of the province of Quebec under the amalgam method passed by the previous Liberal Government, and the legislation as it is before us at the present time with all the amendments? Has the Hon. Member considered what percentage of House seats Quebec would have had under the previous Liberal legislation as compared to this legislation in 1981, 1991 and 2001? If the Hon. Member and his Party had been in committee and had picked up the charts which were available, they would have found out that by using the same population numbers, under the Liberal legislaiton which was passed in 1974, Quebec would have had 25.5 per cent of the seats. It would have had almost the same percentage under this present legislation. In 1991, under the Liberal legislation, it would have had 24.1 per cent of the seats. Yet under this new legislation, it will maintain 25.3 per cent of the seats in the House of Commons. Further to that, if the population figures are correct as far as the year 2001 is concerned, under the Liberal legislation, the percentage of seats held by the province of Quebec would have decreased to 23.5 per cent. Yet under this legislation, Quebec will be ensured 25.2 per cent of the total seats in the House of Commons.

What I am saying is that under this legislation—and this is the point I was making—populations with a smaller percentage of the total, which includes Manitoba and Quebec, will have a higher percentage of the total number of seats in the House of Commons. Therefore, I wonder why, at this particular date, the Hon. Member and others are all of a sudden concerned that Quebec is being treated unfairly. If anything, under this legislation, it has a larger percentage of the total number of seats in this House of Commons.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to this very late date. As far as I am aware, this Bill is still before the House and we still have the right to speak on it. I did not think there was any rule or law of the House that one has to get up at a certain time or at a certain stage of a Bill in order to speak on it.

As far as my basic concerns about this Bill, the last time I spoke on it, and I spoke at that time very briefly, I spoke about the problem which I saw with respect to Alberta and British Columbia. I mentioned that again today. I would simply ask the Hon. Member to accept in good faith the fact that when on several occasions I was in western Canada in the past year, people expressed concern to me saying that in Calgary they would have had more seats than they are going to get with this Bill which has been proposed by the Conservative Government.

When I rose today to speak, I was expressing these concerns. I also see problems, yes, in relation to Quebec. I look at—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Debate. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

Mr. Clément M. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak in this debate and would have preferred a chance to comment on various statements, especially the one by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). However, since that time was allotted to the other side, I will speak in the debate.

I understand why the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) wanted to prolong this period, until December 20 if possible, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) exclaimed at the beginning of the debate before lunch.

Hon. colleagues, I have a suggestion. You should have asked your research staff to do some work for the Hon. Member for Laurier, because to the rest of the House, it looked like he was going to use his 20 minutes to try and put us to sleep.

Mr. Speaker, when the Liberals and the New Democrats say their speeches or comments are devoid of partisanship, don't believe it, because it will be a very frosty Friday when that happens.

I heard them talking about Quebec, defending motherhood issues. Defending is a cinch the way they do it.

● (1540)

Historically, our Liberal colleagues were able to stay in power thanks to the Quebec vote—which they had the misfortune to lose, to their great chagrin—and partly with votes from Ontario.

So that is why we hear this "as Quebecers" over and over again. Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian, a Canadian representing a Quebec riding, and working within a Government elected by all Canadians, I also realize that the new proposal works out to zero. As for of equity, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was talking about equity. As he said earlier, when we were working together in committee, we accepted and recognized, in terms of equity and also in terms of the economics of the question, that this Bill . . . that there would be six, seven or eight Members. We all agreed. And we spoke as Canadians. And as Canadians, including the Members from the Province of Quebec, we agreed to pass . . . at that point there was no question of partisanship. I agree there was no partisanship at all. But I heard them just now, reminding us that with the Liberal Party's Bill . . . and so forth and so on, the same old song. They cannot hide their partisanship.

The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) said earlier that Manitoba had only two seats. Mr. Speaker, I am sure only the Liberal Party could put up with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) in Manitoba. On this side of the House, we can do without.

Mr. Speaker, I would not want to abuse the time of the House, but I must say I am quite disappointed that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was not able to accept our recommendations to increase the number of seats in the House by six or seven, because I want the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis to know that we had done so for the sake of fairness and not partisan purposes.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is what we want!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): If we could return to this debate—I challenge members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to show evidence of their fairness.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I gladly accept this challenge. I am sure that I could convince also my party colleagues. We should like to return to the main proposal. If I may, and if our Standing Orders allow it, I would like to return to the Bill and examine again and amend clause 2 to allow for an increase of six or seven seats. That is exactly . . . I am sorry. I listened carefully to what the Hon. Member had to say, because this is one of his first speeches. I must admit that I do not know where he is going with his representation. I have not understood anything of what he was saying, because if he claimed that we are against six or seven, it is exactly the contrary. That is what we would like the Committee to return as a proposal to the House, because the six or seven new seats on which we had all agreed without partisan consideration, have been changed. Now, it is 13. It is to these 13 new seats that we object.

[English]

My colleague, the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) was right when he said that if the formula of 310, 343 and 369 had been applied, Quebec should have refused. That is why I am so much in favour of putting it aside. The more we debate, the better you will understand why I am so energetically in favour of another revision. The 310 led to 343 which led to 369 while the number of Members from Quebec was being reduced all the time. I was not in favour in the 1970s of in favour of enlarging the House of Commons from 264 seats to 282. I would not have minded if Quebec had lost one or two seats out of 264.

[Translation]

I would not mind if Quebec was to lose. At the time, I had lost the debate. But when the number of seats in the House increased from 264 to 282, there had been a debate. I remember quite well that it was Mr. Ovide Laflamme, my Quebec colleague who has become a judge—I must trust my memory, because this happened 15 years ago—who, together with Mr. MacEachen, now a Senator, had found this 282 formula which would bring the number of seats to 310 and 343. At the time, I could see that Quebec was losing ground each time. But it is on the 25 per cent that I should like to bring the attention of my colleagues, but I will not, because he would like me to lose my temper. But for the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté), 25 per cent of 400 seats and 25 per cent of 262 seats, it is not the same thing. Do you understand? It is still 25 per cent and it seems fair, but I say that in a parliamentary sense, the bigger the House gets, even though our percentage remains at 24, 23, 25 or 25.1, psychologically, the reduction is not in the interest of our nation, one of the two founding peoples. The other founding people know very well how to defend themselves, and I am not here to defend both people equally, but the way I see it, there is a reduction and we had an opportunity of making an intelligent move which was at the same time equitable for Westerners and did not put us, from Quebec, in such a minority position that we would have been lost in the great number of members of the House. That is why I jumped in at the first opportunity. I had several private conversations with the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I am a gentleman. He could rise and say it is not true. I saw him several times and said: Listen, I will do what I can to help you about the six and seven issue. I am not against it because there is the matter of maintaining a balance between equity and our identity as Quebecers. We feel we are different, and we are, and we think the more redistributions there are, the weaker our group gets. So let us not weaken its spirits by having a large House and making us only 25 per cent of a great number. We should keep the total number as close as possible to 289. If my colleague, who is a gentleman, could rise and take perhaps only a minute to say that I am acting in good faith and that I tried . . . I am not pleased when I hear him say I am being partisan. That is enough to make me partisan and then he would see the difference. I am only trying to see—late in the day perhaps, but that is precisely why we have a third reading stage—how we could reset our sights. I would appreciate an answer on that. Basically, I agree with him. I do not see why he is saying that we disagree, this is exactly what I want, that we come back to the 6 or 7 spirit and that the number of seats increase very gradually. I do not want any decrease. Even if, comparatively speaking, we are a little less numerous than we were, I do not want a reduction in the number of Quebec Members, of French-speaking Members in this House. It seems to me that Quebecers should understand that. Should I be more explicit? If such is the case we will have to start another debate, and you know what that means.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté).

He said, a little earlier, that it was with some sadness that he learned that the President of the Privy Council was not following the original project which would have increased the number of seats by 7. I would like him to explain to us—in substance, because I, too, would like to get away from any partisanship—what he meant and why he felt some disappointment.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): The fact is that the 6 or 7 proposal was accepted in the beginning because we wanted, as the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said earlier—

Mr. Prud'homme: That is what I still want!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): —to keep the House to a reasonable size, and also a bit for economic reasons, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) pointed out. It is in this context that I worked with the Committee in the beginning and that is how we all wanted this to be done. This is why I said earlier that I was sorry this proposal was not accepted and the increase is now going to be of 13 seats because it does not meet the criteria of equity, and to a lesser degree, of economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

• (1550)

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I wish to resume the debate at the very point where the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) left it when he replied to my question. In fact, this Bill has travelled a strange road. Originally, the purpose was to prevent the number of seats in the House of Commons from increasing too quickly because the hybrid formula now being considered provided an increase from the present number of 282 to 310. The original bill proposed an increase to 289. In fact, I agree with the Hon. Member of Lac-Saint-Jean that an increase of seven seats is acceptable. This would reflect what happened in the Committee and it is therefore more acceptable for those of us who sat on the Committee.

However, what worries me the most about the new proposal which would increase the number of seats from 282 to 295, which means an increase of thirteen rather than seven, is where these six additional seats will go. British Columbia will have two, and so will Alberta and Ontario. I do not want to be a bad sport and to seem envious of these provinces which are to receive additional seats. Let them have their seats! What worries me is that, while six seats are being added, not a single one will be for my province. This is not what had been suggested originally by the Committee. We could have fought about this in committee but that is not how it happened. It is therefore not surprising that the Quebec Members should rise, and I am happy to see that there are also Members on the Government side who share our concerns. I am going to try and speak as calmly as possible without making any partisan comments.

As it is often pointed out, Quebec is not like other provinces. That Province is the centre of French culture in Canada, and as such, whenever there have been redistributions, debates centering on the redistribution of seats, that point always has came up. And it must do so once again.

I say without being chauvinistic, it is clear that Quebec has a special role in Canada. It is the anchor point of the French-speaking community. Furthermore it is the critical mass of the French-speaking community in Canada. I say it is the anchor point because minorities outside Quebec expect the latter to remain strong, because if Quebec does not survive as an entity, that is the end of the French-speaking community in Canada.

Of course this is disquieting. An increase of only seven seats, from 282 to 289 already was not too generous for Quebec. But if six other seats are to be added to that without a single one going to Quebec, someone has to speak up. I represent a Quebec constituency, and I could not face my constituents without at least having risen in this House. I am not sure this will change the views of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Ever since September 4th, last year, I have been getting used to constantly losing votes in this House. This is something that will happen again. As I said, I would not like Quebecers to say: When that was going on, our elected representatives were asleep. We are not asleep, our eyes are wide open, and we are trying to bring this home to the Government.

I am happy to see that we have the support of certain Quebec Members who, although from the Government side, as the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, have the courage to rise and point to what is going on. I am not yet sure what kind of result this will have, but it shows that Quebec Members from all sides of the House are alerted to what is going on and are looking for improvements.

You see, when we started discussing the issue in this House, Mr. Speaker, on second reading and then in committee, everyone agreed that we should alter a course which we from the Liberal Party had brought in through the amalgam method proposed here by Minister MacEachen and which, as we now realized that things have changed, would have brought upon quite a rapid increase in the number of Members in this House. But above all the Government is concerned with the matter of costs, and we must also realize that financially things are not what they used to be. Money is getting scarce.

However, if we start playing around with the amalgam formula and changing it, we automatically get another set of problems, because there was a very good reason why, according to the formula, the number of Members would increase very rapidly, as well as related expenditures. This was because the formula was intended to closely observe the basic principle of representation by population. And I must say that as soon as we get away from this method, which has its shortcomings, we automatically start tinkering with the principle of representation by population.

For instance, when the Government decides to include in the Bill before the House a measure ensuring that no province will lose a seat, even if according to census figures the population of that province has increased at a slower rate than in other provinces or even decreased.

Make no mistake: it is a kind of political protection the Government is giving itself, because if a province were in danger of losing a seat, and this happened about ten years ago in the House, I was there, and I am referring to the Province of Saskatchewan, well, there would have been an uproar. It was the Hon. John Diefenbaker, that famous Member from Saskatchewan, who objected.

However, one cannot expect to win on all counts when in Government. Where decisions are made, the political price has to be paid occasionally. Therefore, when the Government wants to obtain political protection, that is, assuring some provinces that they will not lose any seats even when their population is decreasing, this automatically comes up against the first basic principle as stated by the President of the Privy Council, that is, the principle of representation by population.

Once they refuse to accept that a Province may lose seats, for political reasons, and I understand that, they are in effect tampering with a basic principle. This is one of the things in that Bill I do not like.

Moreover, there already were other things in the Act about which there is very little we can do. We could always do something, but it would be difficult. There is the question of the Senate minimum. Prince Edward Island, for instance, should have one constituency based on its population. It has four, since it has four seats in the Senate. And the Constitution provides there can be no fewer Members of Parliament than Senators.

There again, this is a reality about which we are already departing from the basic principle of representation by population. So I submit that right from the start there were realities of that kind that were hard to cope with, without the Government stepping in to protect Provinces likely to lose seats. And when I say this, I am not thinking of any Province in particular. Quite possibly, the population in my own Province might some day, five or ten years down the road, increase at a slower rate than other provinces for all kinds of reasons. Quebec would then be the one to lose a seat. But, that's life. If we accept the principle of representation by population, we have to accept the consequences.

However, I do rise to protect my province when the formula is suddenly amended after the proceedings in Committee, to add six additional seats, none of which will come to my province and when, because we are a minority in this House, we certainly do not have the power to have this changed.

I therefore ask as sincerely as possible to the President of the Privy Council to reconsider his proposal to add six seats more than originally planned. If he would be so kind, so generous and so wise as to come back to his original proposal, under which the number of seats would increase from 282 to 289, he would avoid an extended debate in this House. He would have a better chance of gaining the support of the opposition parties. This is indeed why—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes, you may conclude very quickly if you wish, but you have only a few seconds to do so.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): In that case, Mr. Speaker, I have just made an appeal to the President of the Privy Council asking him not to add these six seats as I believe that it would penalize my province. I think that my message was clear and I shall let you do your job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROVIDING DEFENCE OF THE ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of providing adequate defence of the Arctic Archipelago.

National Defence

He said: Mr. Speaker, the intention this afternoon is to focus debate in this Chamber on the special question dealing with the defence of the far northern reaches of Canada. It is not a motion that is likely to be voted on by the very fact it is so broadly worded.

Not that long ago, Sir, I had the good fortune to tour parts of the Arctic with General David Battye in connection with the construction of the north warning system. I must say we were very well received wherever we went. People were pleased with the attitude of the new Government especially in those areas dealing with the maximization of local employment opportunities and local entrepreneurial opportunities with the new north warning system. We know that it is going to be done in a much different manner than with the old DEW line. During conversations with people at that time, we met with some who lived in areas north of the DEW line. To them, the DEW line was quite a way south. They said to us: "Are we not deserving of some form of defence in the area that we live? Is it right that in a case of attack the first element of any strategy is to abandon us to the enemy with the first line of defence being along the DEW line, located at roughly 70 degrees north?" I think they have a very good point. They deserve to be protected just the same as those living in metropolitan areas to the south.

It is not my intention this afternoon to be too critical of the Government because I know the Government has made vast improvements to our northern defences in just a short time over and above those of the previous Government which allowed defences to become rusty. There is no doubt about that at all.

Northerners were very pleased with the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) not that long ago in the context of Canadian sovereignty. The announcements made at that time will go to alleviate some of the deficiencies to which I have referred to quite an extent. For example, increased surveillance flights; more military exercises to be held in the North and of course, the construction of a Class 8 ice-breaker now underway. That ought to have been done a long time ago but was neglected by previous Governments.

I am not unmindful of the expenses that defence establishment cost. There is an obvious need for Canada to share those expenses with the United States of America. A good example of this is with the north warning system that comes as a result of the memorandum of understanding signed in Quebec City between the leaders of Canada and the United States last March.

We also must take into account special Canadian requirements over and above those of our friends to the south. My suspicion with respect to the north warning system is that if it were not necessarily a joint venture and that if cost were not such an important consideration, the north warning system would not follow the 1950s DEW line along the seventieth parallel, but rather it would go along the extremities of Canadian territory. The line would stretch from Inuvik in the west northeastward up to Alert at the top of Ellesmere Island, then possibly it would come down along the east coast of Ellesmere Island and Baffin Island, or it might even go around Greenland and come down the east coast of Greenland. There is valid criticism that can be made with respect to the north warning system, that we are superimposing 1980s technology on a 1950s geographical location. If we were able to do things in a way to maximize the Canadian interest, would it not be better, Mr. Speaker, to detect and engage enemy aircraft or enemy cruise missiles before they reach Canadian territory rather than to penetrate, in certain cases, many hundreds of miles into Canadian air space, over Canadian territory until being picked up by the DEW line? We could then launch successfully, I would hope, interceptor aircraft from locations even farther south than the DEW line and destroy the incoming threat. One of the difficulties is we would presumably be shooting down nuclear equipped missiles or bombers equipped with nuclear bombs over Canadian territory. Admittedly, it is not a densely populated area but the people who live there are of particular importance to me and my colleague because they are the people who vote for us. We feel if at all possible they should not be subjected to that type of threat.

The present detection system, the land-based radars that are necessarily used in the North are expensive, and we know that. Maybe we can improve our detection methods for the Arctic Archipelago by trying to improve the over the horizon backscatter system that works in more southerly attitudes so that it can work in high latitudes. Presently it is affected by ionespheric disturbances. If we could get over that problem, we would have a cheaper system for surveillance for detection in the very high Arctic. It is admitted the present north warning system is only an interim measure and that eventually the detection system will be satellite based, which will give us good coverage over the whole of Canada.

If we look at the existing military presence in the Arctic Archipelago we find there is very little there indeed. The only permanent military establishment is the communications research station at Alert. It can be noted, as an aside, that Alert is some 300 miles closer to Moscow than it is to Ottawa. There is not much else. There was another communications research base in Inuvik, not in the archipelago but close to it. That was closed or is in the process of closure right now.

Maybe we ought to think about the idea of having airports in the Arctic Archipelago from which F-18 aircraft could operate if the need arose. At the present time I can think of only one, the airport at Resolute Bay. There is one airstrip and no real alternate. Maybe some of the existing strips in the archipelago could be upgraded so that they could be used as forward operating locations.

There has been a continuing debate over whether or not you need a full-scale military base in the Arctic islands. I have never been able to determine whether or not that is necessary, but it is something about which military people have been talking for quite a number of years.

• (1610)

I should like to quote from an article which appeared in The Citizen of Ottawa in March, 1983. It was entitled "Canada needs military base in Arctic: ex-defence chief" and read:

> Canada still needs the armed forces base in the far north that he promoted unsuccessfully in the early 1970s, General Jacques Dextraze, former chief of the defence staff, said Thursday.
> Dextraze told the Senate subcommittee on national defence that "there is a great necessity to have a continuing presence up there."
> The retired armed forces chief admitted that much of Canada's defence effort has to dovetail with planning by the United States for the defence of North America "but there are things that are purely national, things we must do as Canadians".
> Dextraze said he selected Devon Island, on the Northwest Passage in the High Arctic, for the site of the proposed base—

The whole debate over what we need for the defence of the Arctic Archipelago has gone on for some time. It is not a new issue. I understand that Doctor Harriet Critchley has been an advocate of better defence of this area.

I have some quotations going back to October, 1981 from Le Droit to which I should like to refer.

[Translation]

> The Great North, a dent in Canada's armour.
> —Brigadier-General Clay Beattie, DND Director General of Planning, said that if we were to neglect the north in might become the Maginot Line of the Atlantic Alliance.

And he goes on to say:

> Colonel James Cameron, a retired officer who served in northern Canada, does not mince words. "I think it is absolutely shameful that we do not have more control over that region", said the former officer in a Toronto interview. Colonel Cameron is now on the board of the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies—

[English]

They are examples of where in years past this matter has been under debate by people who have given it a lot of thought.

The Arctic Islands are becoming increasingly important as a repository of strategic resources. There are vast oil and gas reserves which are in the process of being delineated in the Sverdrup Basin. There are billions of barrels of oil and trillions of cubic feet of natural gas. There were large hydrocarbon deposits in the Beaufort Sea, to the south of the area about which we are talking today. There were also mineral deposits in that area. In my opinion these assets are well worth protecting. There are also important shipping lanes in the area. The Northwest Passage is becoming a throughway, through the middle of the Arctic Archipelago.

It seems to me that military thinking in Canada has always been focused on Europe. We do not really give too much attention to the polar areas. Earlier this year, I had the opportunity to accompany the Secretary of State for External Affairs on a trip to the Soviet Union. Of course, they are very concerned with Europe over there, but at the same time they are giving a great deal of attention to polar matters. A lot of research is going on, some of which is presumably to increase the total of human knowledge, but not without military significance at the same time. There is a lot of research into meteorology and there have been hydrographic surveys in the polar region. When we talk to senior Russian officials on the subject of possible conflict between the two superpowers, they immediately think in terms of action over polar areas. It is a state of mind which is very apparent over there, whereas in Canada it is something we tend to neglect and think in terms of traditional roles in Europe.

In case there was ever a conflict in polar areas, we have to try to think about what that might entail. Obviously, the first is the use of aircraft, missiles, in particular cruise missiles and bomber aircraft. We can neglect intercontinental missiles because they go away over the top. There are also some other things which might happen. There is the possibility of the occupation of the archipelago. At the present time it is not defended. It would be fairly easy to do that. What might happen is that if there was an altercation in Europe, a diversionary tactic such as the occupation of one or two communities in the archipelago could take place. The result of that would likely be that Canada would withdraw its troops from Europe in the face of public opinion and utilize them for the defence of the Canadian North. We have to take into consideration the possibility of using an attack on the Arctic as a diversionary measure. I would not like to see Arctic communities in that area being held hostage under those types of circumstances.

There is the idea of the archipelago surrounding seas being used as a submarine operating area. I refer to a May, 1983 article in The Citizen entitled "New attack subs planned to hunt Soviets in Arctic". The story is datelined Washington, and reads:

> The U.S. Navy is designing a new attack submarine to hunt missile-carrying Soviet subs that operate extensively under the Arctic ice pack and use it as a sanctuary, the top navy commander said Wednesday.
> Admiral James Watkins, chief of naval operations, said nuclear-powered 688-class Los Angeles attack submarines have put increased emphasis on patrolling under the ice to deny the Soviets a safe haven from which they could threaten America with nuclear attack.
> Watkins described the ice pack as "a beautiful place to hide" for Soviet submarines equipped with intercontinental range nuclear-tipped missiles that could be used as a second or third-strike reserve force in the event of a nuclear war with the United States.

We have to think of the archipelago in all these terms. Unfortunately, the situation exists now with respect to naval warfare. At any rate, if there ever was a naval confrontation in the Canadian Arctic between the two superpowers, about all we could do as Canadians would be to sit on an ice floe and keep score.

I hope I have brought into context or focused attention this afternoon on the defence requirements of a very important part of Canada, a part of Canada which is becoming more important from day to day, a part of Canada of great strategic importance. In my opinion, today the Arctic Archipelago is an area which we should not and cannot neglect any longer from the point of view of defence of our nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on bringing this motion before the House this afternoon. It gives us an opportunity to discuss the Canadian Arctic Archipelago. It is a very important subject in the eyes of Canadians as well as in the international community.

The Hon. Member would have been interested in being in Washington this week with the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The Northwest Passage and other items were brought into focus in what really amounted to an all-Party, united debate in the State Department in Washington. It is too bad that that meeting was not able to go on the record.

Having commended the Hon. Member for bringing the subject before the House, there are two things that my Party would want to put on the record regarding our concerns that this motion not be used in an unlimited fashion to justify something else down the road. Just because we agreed with this blanket motion that was brought before the House by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, we do not want to find ourselves in a situation of agreeing to other things.

Number one, of course, is the reaffirmation that we do not want to see this motion used to allow participation in the Strategic Defence Initiative involvement in the North. I think perhaps the Hon. Member who brought forth this motion may very well be in agreement with that as well. In conjunction with that, we would not want this motion used to allow Government-to-Government research in SDI. I believe that issue was very well put to rest in the middle of 1985.

Our second major concern over the motion would be that we would not want this motion used in any way to involve Canada in any form of anti-ballistic defence. The Hon. Member touched upon that issue and mentioned in particular the problem that would exist in the case of intercontinental ballistic missiles.

In all honesty, I think the Hon. Member would agreed that the present Government has not done wondrous things for the northern part of Canada. He gives the Government full credit for having brought in the north warning system. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic knows very well, as does every well informed Canadian, that 90 per cent of the north warning system was already planned when the new Government took office. The new Government added such things as the forward-operating locations and it dressed it up a bit but basically, the entire north warning system was the product of the former Government. Let this Government not take credit for everything.

Conservative Members went around during the last election campaign saying that they would commit to a 6 per cent real increase in defence spending and they sent that propaganda into every mailbox of every member of the Armed Forces. Where do they stand on that issue today? The real growth in defence spending has been 2.92 per cent.

Mr. Kilgour: Where were the Liberals?

Mr. Hopkins: When the Liberals were defeated on September 4, 1984, the real growth in national defence spending was 4.1 per cent.

Mr. Kilgour: And the year before?

Mr. Hopkins: Let us go back to 1979 when the NATO Ministers agreed to 3 per cent real growth in spending on national defence. That was a NATO agreement. Canada and the United States are the only two countries out of the 15 countries that were members at the time that lived up to that 3 per cent real growth in defence spending. The only thing that is going to save this Government from putting a blemish on that record is inflation dropping enough to push real spending up over the 3 per cent level.

Members of the Government Party talked much about that commitment during the last election campaign. Since the election, both in the House and out, they have been using all kinds of rhetoric to build up the perception that they are doing wondrous things for the defence of the country. They should be ashamed of themselves for building up in the minds of the people the thought that they are doing great things.

I was quite interested in a comment I heard from some members of the Armed Forces in Europe. About a month or two following the election, a new shipment of goods arrived in Europe. One corporal who was on hand said that it did not take the new Government long to start operating because all this new stuff was coming in already. Of course, that new stuff had been ordered by the previous Liberal Government a year or two ago. Everyone in the House knows how long it takes to receive equipment. With all the red tape involved in purchasing defence equipment, it is a good thing that we are not in a war.

Let us go a little further than that. New trucks of all sizes have been delivered to military bases across Canada and Europe. Those 2,761 two-and-a-half-ton trucks alone were ordered by the previous Government and the last of them have come on stream in the last year and a half. As well, there are the new tanks that were purchased by the Liberal Government. The Liberal Government purchased 18 long-range patrol aircraft, the best equipped and best working aircraft for our surveillance system over the North Atlantic that could possibly exist. Representatives of other NATO countries have looked at these new aircraft, gone up in them and they really like that package.

We want to remain aloof from star wars and ballistic missile defence systems so that we as a Canadian nation can retain our individuality in matters dealing with external affairs. As soon as we lose the sense of independence we have in forming our own foreign policy, then we will no longer have any influence on the other Parliaments of the world.

Let us return to the time when the tanker, the Manhattan, went through the North escorted by a Canadian ship. In the summer of 1985, the Polar Sea went through the North. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the American Secretary of State met in Washington three months before that voyage took place. What good did their discussions do? The Amercians went ahead and sent the Polar Sea through Canada anyway. They would not listen to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As a result of the Manhattan voyage, the Americans knew that they could not dictate to then Prime Minister Trudeau on foreign affairs. If there is one thing that the Americans know for sure today, it is that Ronald Reagan has the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in his hip pocket.

Mr. Kilgour: Horse feathers!

Mr. Towers: Rubbish!

Mr. Hopkins: I know that that bothers Hon. Members opposite but it is time that they recognized the facts of life.

The reason we should be seen as independent in our foreign policy is that Canada must continue to work toward an arms control agreement. The moment we are seen to be a dishonest broker in the middle of those nations in the world today, we will no longer have that influence to work with them in a constructive way. I think that Canada is the nation which should be out there leading the middle powers and, indeed, working closely with the Third World countries, to put the heat on the two major powers in the world to come to an agreement and to come to grips with their SDI programs. I want to be honest and realistic about this. Let us not always talk about the American SDI system when we talk about SDI. Let us also recognize the fact that even though one does not hear about it because it is bad propaganda, the Russians have their own SDI system on which they are doing research. We cannot go around as naive individuals in external affairs today. We need aggressive people on board. We need to have our own national independent policy on external affairs. We must have credibility in the eyes of the people with whom we are working. That credibility means that we be seen as our own person and as our own nation. I think that is extremely important today.

I wish to place on the record an excerpt from an article which appeared in Maclean's because I think it is important. This is an article which appeared in the November 2, 1985 issue of Maclean's with respect to a leaked document to Cabinet. The article states in part:

—Maclean's has learned that the federal cabinet has been presented with a package of sweeping proposals that would greatly expand Canada's military presence in the Far North—both as a demonstration of sovereignty aimed at impressing the United States and because of concern over Soviet submarine activity in the Canadian Arctic.

The proposals, outlined in a secret external affairs memorandum to cabinet, suggested a $4-billion program over the next decade to improve Canada's capacity to detect and attack foreign ships that infiltrate the nation's arctic waters. Among the proposals: between $2 billion and $3 billion for the construction of four nuclear-powered submarines that could operate for unlimited periods under the ice.

The memorandum also recommended a range of initiatives to upgrade Canada's surveillance of the Far North. These included the launching of a $350-million satellite designed to provide year-round radio images of the Northwest Passage, as well as the installation of underwater listening devices to monitor key bodies of water in the arctic archipelago and provide "trip wire" warnings of submarines passing through Canadian waters.

That is a good program as outlined. The only trouble with it is that someone leaked it from Cabinet and it has turned out to be somewhat of an embarrassment because the program was written up on the understanding that the money would come from existing funds. If $4 billion is to be taken from existing funds by this Government from whom will it be cut? Where else can this money be taken from? Will bases be closed up in Canada in order to pay for this program? Any program which is put forward without having the dollars to back it up is not really a serious proposal at all.

Having put my Party's conditions on the record and having said that we in the Liberal Party are interested in continuing to upgrade defences, we support the North Warning System, of course, wholeheartedly. We do so because, as I stated in my opening remarks, some 90 per cent of it is our product anyway. We are very much in favour of continuing purchases in conventional defence since we have made many of those in the last number of years.

I think that in the field of external affairs we will have to make sure in the years ahead that we are our own person and that we do speak for Canada and that we do have our own individual external affairs policies. We must ensure that we press for arms control and that we work with other countries in the world. We cannot work as an individual but as a unit with other countries in the world in order to impress upon the two major powers that the only sane way to go, the only way for a sane society to go, is to sit down and come to arms agreements over the next few years. I hope that our Canadian Government will take this seriously. I hope that it will come forward with more dollars with respect to the purchase of conventional defence items in the country and that it will place emphasis on our reserve units in Canada, something with which I am in wholehearted support.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) for assisting me to catch a plane because I have to leave a few minutes early. I promise to refrain from any hostilities today toward my Liberal colleagues. In fact, I intend this speech to be non-hostile all around. I wish to thank and commend the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) for having brought this matter before the House for at least a short preliminary debate. His motion is very clear and to the point. I believe it has generated a very useful debate. The motion is simply:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of providing adequate defence of the Arctic Archipelago.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic has presented one version of the deterrent view and presented it quite well. Our Liberal colleague has presented another version of the same deterrent view. I wish to present the views of some people in Canada who are much concerned with that, because of where they live, who have still a different view.

I had the good fortune in September to go with the Standing Commitee on External Affairs and National Defence to Yellowknife to hear eight briefs of local residents there, beginning with the leader of the legislature and continuing through seven other briefs. I stayed in Yellowknife the second day rather than going up to Cambridge Bay and I forewent my per diem, as the rules require, because I wished to pursue also the question of housing in the Arctic. I was able to join with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic in a discussion of that a few weeks ago.

What I wish to present now is the gist of three of the briefs that the committee received that day: one from the Dene Nation and the Métis Association jointly; one from the Inuit; and one from the Committee for a Nuclear Free Western Arctic of the NDP.

I think the most important of these is not, in fact, the brief from some Members of the New Democratic Party but, in fact, the brief of the Dene Nation and the Métis Association. I think Members may recognize that the recommendations they have put forward are not primarily involved in the dispute that we have here in what they call the "South". I understand that even Edmonton is way down south to the people in Yellowknife. So, of course, we are, I guess, close to the South Pole. But they do represent a people who have been here for many thousands of years, a people who have had a good deal of experience with war and with peace and with negotiation. Although they are a small group within Canada, the Dene, the Métis and the Inuit are, in fact, a majority of the population of the Northwest Territories, including the archipelago, about which the motion speaks.

I think the comments that they have made deserve to be heard by the Members of this House and by the Canadian public. Since the brief runs to several pages, I wish to give only the recommendations. Their first recommendation may seem rather trite at first. It is that the Canadian defence policy be reviewed in consultation with the Canadian public in an open forum. I say it may seem trite because the committee in which I am not able to participate most of the time is working very hard on doing just that consultation, or consultation covering a very important part of that. The reason the recommendation is not trite is because the open forum is not nearly so present as I believe the Dene and Métis people wish. That is one reason I wish to speak to it today.

The next three recommendations, I believe, give the heart of their point of view. The second recommendation states:

That those who wish Canada to pursue a policy of deterrence and co-operation through NORAD and NATO be invited to convince Canadians that that direction, or some variation of it, continues to be the correct one to take.

Hon. Members who have spoken have spoken on that assumption and with that view. The third recommendation states:

That those who support non-alignment and or neutrality be invited to convince Canadians that that direction or some variation of it, is the better one to pursue.

The fourth recommendation states:

That the defence policy be reviewed and re-established before the next NORAD Agreement is signed.

I believe that is a remarkadly useful statement in that it says clearly, in a few words, that we should debate the basic principles of our defence policy. I feel we should pay some attention to the Dene nation and the Métis Association. They gave consideration to the more specific aspects of the matter as well. They recommended that a soci-economic agreement on the north warning system be developed between Canada and the Government of the Northwest Territories. They agreed with the Government spokesman, with the Mayor of Inuvik, and with the Chamber of Commerce of Yellowknife, that people of the Northwest Territories should have a greater voice in what is done there. They go on to recommend:

The agreement should provide for a special advantage for northern workers and northern contractors to obtain jobs and business opportunities both during the construction stage and after completion. Training for the permanent jobs should begin immediately.

The sixth recommendation is:

That all aspects of the eight-year program of modernization of the DEW line be subjected to an environmental assessment and review process and provide information and assurances in the same way that is expected of industry.

Many others spoke to us that day about the same matter. They said that it is their land, they live there, and whatever defence policies are being carried out should take account of the people who live there. It is not a no-man's land.

They address the larger scene and recommend:

That Canada and all Canadians refuse to become involved in the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (Star Wars).

Not only the Canadian Government, as was the declaration made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but all Canadians should refuse to become involved.

The eighth recommendation is as follows:

That the Prime Minister undertake a "peace mission" to attempt to convince both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. to stop their research and activity aimed at the militarization of outer space.

The ninth recommendation is as follows:

That if a new NORAD agreement is negotiated that a clause be included which states that Canadian participation does not include a commitment to take part in any Strategic Defense Initiatives and further does not include any commitment towards basing anti-ballistic missiles in the north or in Canada at any time in the future.

That is, again, a very plain declaration in which many Canadians are interested. I hope Canadians will understand that one of the representative bodies of Canada's first people has taken a very clear stand on that matter. They conclude by recommending:

That if a new NORAD agreement is negotiated that a termination clause of 12 months or less be included as it is in the 1981 agreement.

They state the "1981" agreement, but I believe it was 1980.

I believe the Dene nation and the Métis Association should be heard. I want to comment also on the brief of the Inuit. They did not speak so specifically as the Dene nation and the Métis Association but they did make some general points which ought to be heard. They say that for the Canadian Inuit, the fundamental concern is real participation in the development and implementation of Canadian policy in the Arctic with respect to national defence. They say that in terms of national defence, the Inuit form the front line of Arctic sovereignty and security. They do not want to find themselves in no-man's land. They do want a stronger role in determining the fate of the Arctic.

The Inuit people through their organization have commented, and will continue to comment, and I hope we will listen to them. If an Inuit representative in Parliament wishes to speak on their behalf, I will listen to him with great interest, as I am sure will other Hon. Members of the House. In the few minutes I have left, I want to quote also from a brief which was prepared by the Nuclear Free Western Arctic Committee of the New Democratic Party. It is concerned with indications from Canadian, and particularly American publications, that the role of NORAD may be changed in the circumstances of SDI. It raised a question—

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say quite simply that the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk) wishes to speak. What the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is saying, I would submit, has nothing whatsoever to do with the motion before the House. My point of order is in respect to the relevance rule, in other words, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I understand.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern for relevance and I have chosen this material because it is relevant to the basic thrust of the motion with which we are dealing which concerns the type of military defence in the far north, specifically in the archipelago. That basic defence at present is proposed to be characterized primarily by NORAD, or by the north warning system, with what at present is an unclear and developing relationship to SDI. This concerns the archipelago as well as the whole of the Arctic. Therefore, the possibility that NORAD, the north warning system, and the archipelago will be involved not in protecting Canada against a first strike by the Soviet Union, but in responding to a second strike by the Soviet Union after a first strike by the United States, is very relevant to the people of the archipelago, as well as to the rest of the people of Canada. The point being made by this committee of residents in the Western Arctic is that the rule of NORAD in continental air defence must be re-examined in light of evidence which suggests that NORAD could play an integral part in provoking, not preventing, a nuclear war. This is of acute concern to people who are living in Mackenzie River Valley. I believe it is of equal concern to others who live in the Northwest Territories, including the archipelago. The committee went on to say:

In order to understand the role of NORAD in the 1980 and beyond it is necessary to consider American developments in nuclear weapons systems under the Reagan Administration. These include the MX land based missile, the Trident D-5 missile and the B-1B bomber. The NAVSTAR Global Positioning System, a satellite based navigation system soon to be in place, will ensure that these latest innovations arrive on target.

These technological developments, specifically the MX and Trident D-5 missiles, are particularly destabilizing in that their sophistication and accuracy give the Americans the confidence to strike at Soviet land based missiles and command posts with probable success.

What is under consideration there is a first strike. They go on to suggest that in that case the role of NORAD is not to protect North America against a first strike whether it is based on the land perimeter of the Arctic or on the perimeter of the archipelago, but that the role of NORAD would then be only to defend Canada against a second strike by a Soviet missile or bomber force that would have been decimated, but not totally destroyed, by an American first strike. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, they recommend that the review of Canadian participation in NORAD should ascertain the degree to which present arrangements contribute to the support of an American counterforce first strike and to strategic defence. Canada should end its involvement in any activity that furthers these aims.

Those briefs were presented to our committee and were available for public review. I would urge Members of the House and members of the public to consider the opinion of those people who are representative of quite a number of the people who live in our Arctic areas, including the archipelago.

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, with the short amount of time remaining I will only attempt to make a few comments, and not necessarily to use up the remaining time. I do wish to make a few brief comments in relation to the position of the Inuit because that has been mentioned quite a few times. After all, the subject matter of the motion of the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) is concentrated in my riding.

There are two basic representations which are normally made. First, from the special interest point of view, presentations to any governmental agency are normally prepared by consultants. What the consultants say, and what the people actually wish to say, are usually two different things altogether. Unfortunately, in Canadian political circles we normally hear what the consultants and politicians have to say. I participated in a seven-community tour from Inuvik to Pelly Bay this fall and I visited some of the high Arctic communities this summer when the issue of the Polar Sea first came up.

What I will be saying may never have been said before by a politician. When I was in Pond Inlet and Arctic Bay this summer an old Inuit told me that during World War II when they were issued with old .303 rifles and some rounds of ammunition they were instructed that if they saw any suspicious looking people, presumably Germans or other enemies, they were to shoot them. They took those instructions very seriously.

Professional Canadians or writers may not think much of that. In fact, I read a comment in News of the North by some people who made a bit of fun about the old-time "rangers" as they are called and how they were referred to as the first line of defence and what the heck could they do with cruise missiles anyway.

The point which I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the Inuit in the central Arctic and high Arctic have said that they appreciate very much what the Canadian Government is doing for them because they know that they cannot defend themselves with Russia being to the north of them. They appreciate Canadians spending millions of dollars to defend their area as well as Canadians in the south. Many of the older Inuit people are very nationalistic as far as the military is concerned. It is unfortunate that all we ever hear about are those on the negative side.

If I correctly understand comments of other politicians and Canadians in general, I believe they are saying that they want only to give the Armed Forces the ability to say: "The Russians are coming, the Russians are coming", and not the ability to do anything about it. We call ourselves a nation and yet we do not even want to be able to defend ourselves. We only want to be able to tell our neighbours to the south that the Russians are coming or that their cruise missiles have been fired.

Is that all that we want to do as Canadians? I wish that those who have more of a say on this issue would understand this side of the argument. Every time there is any form of Canadian military activity there are demonstrations in the streets and on the parliament grounds. We must decide whether we wish to be able to defend our own country.

As I mentioned before, I do want to give some of my colleagues an opportunity to speak so I will conclude my remarks.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I offer a few comments in this debate. I am sorry that the hour is so near to five o'clock. I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), for bringing this very important matter before us. I also appreciated the remarks of the Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk).

I am sorry that the Liberal critic did not stay around after his few remarks as I had a few comments that I wanted to direct his way. He was busy taking credit for the north warning line. I am sure you need not be reminded, Mr. Speaker, that the country had 23 years of comment and very little action. In the Liberal Party's concern for defence there is a lot of talk and no action. We took office and we took action. The Liberal Member also spoke with pride about the fact that no one could tell his former Leader, Mr. Trudeau, anything. I agree. Had he stayed long enough, in 1984 the people would have told him something that he could not have ignored. However, he left his Party to reap its rewards.

The matter of defence in the Arctic is extremely important. Having spent 18 years in our Navy I can comment with some knowledge. It was always a matter of great concern to me and to my naval colleagues that our capacity to function in the Arctic was negligible. Our Air Force had a limited capacity, but the capacity of our Navy was nil. The Liberals, who pride themselves in restoring the service to a measure of capacity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour allotted for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques) (p. 9037).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques), seconded by Mr. Gauthier moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I therefore declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is now on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1220)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) rises on a point of order referring to the Special Order, which will be dealt with and adopted by the House later. It will come up when we finish with this matter. The Order which is before the House at the moment for decision reads: "and referred to a legislative committee". We will cope with the procedural issue after the vote has been taken.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) (for the Minister of Finance) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It had been my intention to arrive here at eleven o'clock in order to speak on Bill C-84. However, for one reason or another the bells were not working on the seventh floor of the Confederation Building, at least in the part of the building in which my office is located. They were fixed last week and they are not working again.

It is bad enough to have time allocation with respect to this Bill in order to limit debate but in a situation like this, many of us—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: It is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker.

Many of us who wanted to speak on this Bill were prevented from doing so because the bells were not working.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I would ask Your Honour to see that something is done about this. We are losing important points with respect to legislation such as this because it is being rushed through quickly, but if the bells are not working, then we are put at a still greater disadvantage.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member makes the point that the bells on the seventh floor of the Confederation Building are not working. Of course, I would be happy to look into that matter. They should be working.

I remind the Hon. Member that the bells are a reminder that the House is sitting and that the sitting of the House commences at eleven o'clock regardless of whether or not the bells ring.

I see the necessity of having all the bells working as best they can. We will be happy to check into the matter.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by Special Order, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak on third reading of Bill C-74 since this Bill is an important one to every Member of the House of Commons regardless of the constituency he or she represents.

This is a Bill which will affect all provinces in one way or another. In some cases it will provide a floor with respect to the number of seats. In other provinces there will be an actual increase in the number of seats. In fact, the Government brought in one amendment, and I also have an amendment on the table relating to removing the cap with respect to the number of seats for Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. However, the second amendment is of equal importance.

In this Bill the Government adopts a policy of providing a floor for the number of seats which will be provided to provinces such as Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Of course, the Senate floor does exist at present for other provinces in Atlantic Canada, namely, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

This Bill tries to restrict the growth of the House of Commons and does this by using a much higher quotient of 87,000 persons per riding whereas, under the existing amalgam program, at least in Ontario, we would have a quotient of some 80,000 or 81,000 persons per constituency. The net effect of that change for northern Ontario, I am sure, will be to reduce the representation by at least one seat in this redistribution, and as we go forward into other redistributions, it will have the same impact. That is why I proposed an amendment which would provide a floor of 11 seats under the representation which we receive for northern Ontario. It is a vast geographical area, comprising 88 per cent of the land mass of the Province of Ontario. Surely, a minimum of 11 seats out of the Ontario allocation which, under this Bill, with the amendments which have been introduced, will be increased to 99, would be something that is not harmful to the more rapidly-growing areas of the province, yet would provide us with the kind of representation we have had for the past 10 or 12 years.

I was really disappointed when all Hon. Members of the Conservative Party, including the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) and the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Kelleher), voted against the amendments, one of which was presented by myself, the other presented by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). We will now likely see in the next redistribution a loss of at least one seat and perhaps more. The problem with that is that we have five large cities in northern Ontario. They are very easy to serve in terms of geographical area, but it is a problem with the other six cities which represent the vast far flung regions of that area of Canada. If we try to expand those constituencies in the rural areas, we end up with an unmanageable size of constituency.

There are other problems with the Bill as well. With the existing amalgam formula we have legislation which is all but complete. Certainly, it is 90 per cent complete. All that remains is to have another debate in the House of Commons to hear objections of various Hon. Members to that redistribution. The commission would obviously want to do some fine tuning of the recommendations which will be made by various Hon. Members of the House and then we will be able to proclaim the Bill. The existing amalgam formula sets out a larger House with more Hon. Members from across the country. Certainly, this will provide additional Hon. Members for the new committee system we have, committees which at present are not well manned.

If the amendment to Bill C-74, put forward by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), is defeated and the Bill is not sent back for further investigation and review, it would result in at least $6 million being spent for the establishment of new commissions for representation in each province across the country. The impact of that, for instance in Ontario, would be to reduce the number of Hon. Members under the existing redistribution from 105 Members to 99 Members.

Quebec will be reduced from 79 seats to 75 seats. Nova Scotia will be reduced from 12 seats to 11 seats. Manitoba will be reduced from 15 seats to 14 seats. The floor would apply in the case of Saskatchewan. Newfoundland would be reduced from eight seats to seven seats. Of course, the impact of that will be to cause a great deal of confusion because most constituencies across the country have already been through the redistribution process and they will have to go through it again if this Bill carries. We will spend another $5 million or $6 million to carry out a new redistribution.

I suppose the most difficult problem is that the impact of Bill C-74 would be not only to reduce the amount of representation in the country, but that the redistribution will come into effect sometime in the summer of 1988. No one knows when the next general election will be. However, there is a good chance it will be sometime in the spring or fall of 1988. So we face the prospect of seeing the redistribution take place during the summer of 1988, and if an alection is fought in the spring of 1988, it will be on the basis of the existing boundaries, which means 282 Members of Parliament. If it is fought in the fall of 1988, it will be fought on the basis of 295 Members of Parliament. If it is fought during the summer, each political Party in the House will have to go through the exercise of establishing new constituency associations. The Government will have to go through the exercise of appointing new returning officers for any election which is carried out in the fall of 1988. We will see mass confusion during the summer of 1988 if an election is not carried out on the existing boundaries.

So we have to ask ourselves why, with the redistribution almost complete under an existing law which was agreed to by all Hon. Members, we are seeing this redistribution being brought in now. Is it the case of a desire of the Tories to gerrymander the riding boundaries? Is it an attempt to have new electoral redistribution commissions appointed by the Government? We really do not know the answers to those questions. We have many questions to ask of the Government with regard to the legislation which is now before the House.

Members on the Government side will have to ask the questions relating to the large northern ridings because they have often spoken in principle about having adequate representation from those constituencies. Yet, when the Bill was before the House with amendments last week, Members on the Government side voted against those amendments. In the next election campaign it will be very interesting to see how the Government justifies that action by its own Members.

Those are a number of the factors which must be taken into account when considering the amendment of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis which reads:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the words "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Privilege and Elections for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 2".

The Member is, of course, referring to the formula section of that Bill. The Bill also provides that debate by Members would take place in committee rather than in the House. It can be argued that the committee has a more casual atmosphere in which it is easier to argue the amendments. On the other hand, the individual Member does not have the advantage of being able to put his case to the entire House, but only to a committee of the House of Commons.

Those are some of my thoughts at third reading stage of the redistribution Bill. I am very disappointed that government Members were not willing to consider a floor for the number of ridings to be provided in northern Ontario. If we lose one seat in this redistribution and perhaps another one in the redistribution after the 1991 census, I know that municipal associations, political Parties, and many people in the North will be very disappointed and concerned that the Government voted against the amendments which would have provided for a floor in the number of seats.

The population of northern Ontario is approximately 780,000 people. The average population per riding in New Brunswick is 69,000. New Brunswick is being guaranteed 10 seats. The principle of a floor has been adopted by the Government for a number of provinces. It seems to me that that same argument could be applied to northern Ontario which takes in most of the geography of the province. Yet the Government saw fit to turn down that argument in the vote last week.

I know that other Members want to speak on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, to argue that the Bill should be returned to committee for further debate and consideration. I hope the Government will give all possible consideration to that. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make a few additional comments on Bill C-74.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions for the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He has taken the lead in the Liberal caucus in studying this legislation and has, of course, been involved in the Committee on Privileges and Elections for many years. He, therefore, knows that we did a prestudy of this legislation in committee last June, that we heard witnesses in October, and that we started a clause-by-clause study of the legislation in November.

Did he not, at report stage, agree with the Government amendment which would take the cap off and allow Ontario, Alberta, and British Columbia to receive the full number of seats they were entitled to under the Government's formula? Would the Member not agree that he proposed an amendment very similar to that himself when the legislation came back to the House for report stage and that members of all three Parties agreed to that change at that time? We allowed it to pass without a recorded division.

Because of that, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering why, at third reading stage, the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and others started to talk about the possibility of providing more seats for the Province of Quebec. I am wondering why that presentation was not made at report stage, during committee, or at some other time by the Liberal spokesman.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was not here to listen to the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), but I know that he makes very good arguments in any debate.

I am sure that when he spoke on Friday afternoon he made some very, very good arguments. I am sure he was arguing that the formula which the Government has proposed to the House is simply not as fair to the Province of Quebec as was the existing amalgam formula.

When you look at the figures you can see that under the new formula Quebec will lose four more Members than it would have under the amalgam formula. It is obvious that the Hon. Member would come to the conclusion that that is not very fair to Quebec. After all, Quebec has a special position in Confederation because of the linguistic aspects. In previous redistribution formulas Quebec has often had a base of 74 or 75 seats.

I do not find the arguments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis to be wrong in any way. I am sure he put them very well and argued them very effectively. If he says that the new formula adopted by the Government contains inadequacies, then I am sure the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) would agree. He supported my amendment for a floor in the representation of northern Ontario. I believe that all of the arguments from this Party have been completely consistent, very well reasoned, and very well argued.

• (1250)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as a Member from Quebec I want to tell the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that these proposals with respect to redistribution have had many changes. First there were the proposals which were made last year, then the Government issued a paper and subsequently a Bill. Changes to that Bill were made in committee.

Unfortunately, because there are so few Opposition Members who must be in so many committees and try to be in so many places, it is very difficult for us to keep up with every change in every Bill. That is my situation and, as a Quebecer, I am disturbed that there is no increase in seats for the Province of Quebec.

The Government says that the proposals in its Bill, compared to the proposals of the former Government, will result in important savings. Since the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has been actively involved in this legislation, will he tell us whether there are any cost benefit studies with respect to this version of the Bill which will indicate where those savings will be? Second, does he believe that this question of redistribution should be decided on a cost benefit basis alone? Are there not political reasons which go beyond cost savings in questions such as this?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) because he makes some very pertinent arguments.

In its brief presented to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Commission, the CLC criticizes the 57 per cent growth of the Prime Minister's Office within the past year as well as the addition of electronic mailing equipment to the Prime Minister's Office at a cost of approximately $8.9 million. Arguments certainly were put before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections about those costs. Clearly there are additional costs associated with additional representation. Surely, however, the Parliament of Canada is an important institution and an increase in costs on a percentage basis would not be as great as the increase in costs that the Prime Minister's Office experienced in one year.

Furthermore, it seems to me that we should not consider these costs solely on a cost benefit basis but we should also take into account the over-all adequacy of representation in the Parliament of Canada. I believe that the committee did not question in great detail the Government's figures with respect to cost benefit.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was thinking about the whole issue again on the weekend. In fact, my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) gave a very clear picture of what parliamentarians are thinking. This morning, I would like to ask my hon. friend from Churchill (Mr. Murphy) again to consider what third reading means as defined in the new Standing Orders. It means that Members are supposed to have more input in the business of the House. As I said earlier, in the House our court of last resort is the third reading stage. My hon. friend will have to agree on that point. After reviewing what was done in the past, as did the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, I reached the conclusion that we should give this matter further thought, and that is why I moved my amendment, requesting that Clause 2 be referred back to committee for reconsideration, which would also give us time to reconsider the issue of Northern Ontario.

If the Hon. Member thinks this legislation works well in Manitoba, that's fine, but I say to him that the people of Northern Ontario do not believe they have been well served by this legislation. In fact, you moved amendments that were voted down. I think this is a way to go over the entire debate on Clause 2.

At this point, I would ask my colleagues from Quebec, and I see there are some in the House, the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mrs. Blouin), and I would like to draw their attention to this issue, and I wish they would take a minute to consider what exactly will happen. It is true that we have had some kind of agreement among the parties, that instead of going from 282 Members . . . we would not go up to 310.

If we had gone up to 310, Quebec would have had four more Members. We said we did not want the House to increase from 310 to 343 to 369 by the year 2001. That was too much, it was too expensive and it didn't make any sense. The individual Member's voice would be lost in the general clamour. So we were going to try and find a formula that while dealing fairly with the demands being made by the West and Ontario because of their larger population, would also help us reduce the number of Members. That was the origin of the initial proposal to have six Members more, then in the course of the debate we got as far as seven Members, and then on second reading, after hearing all witnesses, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) came in with another proposal, when he said it would not be six or seven but thirteen. So the people said: Why not! Fair enough, 13 will do. But now we are thinking it over, after all that is the purpose of the third reading, I am asking myself why we are here on third reading, Mr. Speaker. To think it over, that is why.

Upon reflection, we came to the conclusion that, if Quebec were to have four more seats under the previous Liberal formula, four more seats out of 28, it is now rather strange that we should not even get one out of 13. We had all agreed to an averaging formula under which Ontario would have two more Members, Alberta three more, and British Columbia two more. We thought it was fair and reasonable because of the increased population.

But we have to remind ourselves that, according to the Liberal formula boosting representation to 310 Members, British Columbia would have had five more seats. Now it will get four more. According to the previous Liberal formula, Alberta was to have six more seats, now it will gain five new ridings. I can understand that those people—your colleagues, my friends from Quebec—would not disagree today since they get practically as many new seats under the new formula as they did under the other one. But Ontario should feel short-changed since it was supposed to get ten new Members under the old formula and now it ends up with only four. And again I remind you that the old formula gave four new seats to Quebec, while the new formula of the President of the Privy Council works out to zero.

So it is a matter of equity. That is why I think the committee should reconsider this provision, and we will see what they decide whenever we do get back to third reading.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) wish to reply?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has made some very cogent arguments that the formula has some inadequacies.

It would have been easy to stay with the 310 seats as proposed in the existing amalgam program. That redistribution could have proceeded and been completed within the next year. It would have given the constituency associations across the country enough time to reorganize so that they would be aware of what the boundaries would be if a general election were to be called in the summer of 1988. However, in this case, the existing boundaries will be in place until June or July of 1988, when a redistribution will come into effect. The boundaries will change and there will be that many fewer seats throughout the country. I think the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis has made a good argument for maintaining the existing amalgam formula.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair intends to recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on debate after the recess.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SMALL BUSINESS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House the poor performance of the Government in administering the Native Economic Development Program. This Program was an initiative of the previous Government. The Program was established to support and promote the economic development of native people. Applicants are becoming increasingly frustrated with the inability of the Minister responsible, the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Bissonnette), to deliver. Months go by without any decisions.

One such casualty of this snail's pace decision making is the Yukon Indian Development Corporation. Its application has been in the system for 14 months. It was approved by the program's native advisory board over a year ago. Still, it awaits the Minister's decision.

In addition, Sir, there are over 50 proposals that have been submitted under the community based element of the program. Only two have been approved. Now we learn that this entire element in the program is being frozen.

I call upon the Minister and the Government to make up their minds. Do they want this program to continue? It could be the vehicle for moving forward native-operated businesses in the country, if the political will is there.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EAST TIMOR—CONDITIONS FOLLOWING INVASION BY INDONESIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I must confess to a deep sense of shame that I have sat in this House of Commons for over five years and never once have I raised the subject of East Timor. Neither has any other Member of my Party, of the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party.

Ten years ago, with no advance preparation, Portugal withdrew from East Timor, a colony it had occupied for over 400 years. Indonesia moved into this vacuum and invaded. Since that time one-third of East Timor's 650,000 people have either been killed or starved to death.

East Timor has the highest infant mortality rate in the world. Of every 1,000 babies born, 211 die before their first birthday.

In 1978, Glen Shortliffe, Canada's Ambassador to Indonesia was given a conducted tour of East Timor. He was shocked by the desperate need for food, clothing, and basic medical care. His report to the Canadian Government has never been released.

In spite of this genocidal oppression, the East Timorese have continued guerrilla warfare against the Indonesian occupation. Canadian officials have regarded the Indonesian takeover as a fait accompli. They do not think this slaughter on an isolated island is important enough to disrupt our growing trade relations with Indonesia where Canada is now the third largest investor and where last year we hosted—

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the Hon. Member to advise him that his time has expired.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

REPLIES TO QUESTIONNAIRE DISTRIBUTED IN CALGARY EAST

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, recently I distributed some 57,500 copies of a questionnaire throughout my constituency of Calgary East dealing with matters of concern to most Canadians. Approximately 5,400, or some 9.5 per cent, were completed and returned. Since this is a very gratifying and representative return, I now wish to share the results with all our Members.

The questions, with the results, are as follows: Do you think free trade should exist between Canada and the United States? Answer: 73 per cent, yes; 13 per cent, no. Are you in favour of Canada participating in the Strategic Defence Initiative, SDI that would shield North America from any external missile threat? Answer: 73 per cent, yes; 17 per cent, no. Should the federal Government sell part of its shares in Petro-Canada to the Public? Answer: 73 per cent, yes; 17 per cent, no. Should shares in Petro-Canada be given free of charge to Canadians? Answer: 29 per cent, yes; 61 per cent, no. Are you in favour of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler being extradited back to the United States? Answer: 93 per cent, yes; 4 per cent, no. Are you in favour of capital punishment being fully restored in Canada? Answer: 83 per cent, yes; 10 per cent, no. Are you in favour of abortion on demand? Answer: 47 per cent, yes; 41 per cent, no.

I hope the Government takes note of these figures and acts accordingly.

THE FRANCHISE

SUPPORT FOR DENIAL TO FEDERAL PENITENTIARY INMATES

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, a recent federal court case involving the rights of prisoners to vote in the Quebec election has reopened the issue of granting prisoners the right to vote. I believe, for the sake of law-abiding citizens everywhere, that we should not allow convicted prisoners in federal penitentiaries the right to vote in federal elections.

Our society is built on the rule of law and adherence to a set of fundamental principles of justice and order. Therefore I find it incomprehensible that an individual, who has violated the rights of others and has clearly disregarded the responsibilities of citizenship, should be given a right so fundamental to the duties of good citizenship.

Surely we put people in jail to punish them. Surely that punishment involves denial of the very rights and privileges these people choose to abuse by committing a crime. I believe it offends every Canadians's sense of justice and morality to consider even allowing a convicted murderer like Clifford Olsen the right to vote.

We must take a stand now to uphold the values and principles of law-abiding Canadians and say no to the granting of voting privileges to convicted criminals.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Canada's tobacco farmers have waited long enough for the Government to make a decision to proceed with the establishment of a national marketing agency which will help producers get a fair price from the multinational corporations which deal in tobacco.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) says that he does not want to lose his job by setting up an agency. In response, I would remind him that in the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to establish a board. More recently he advised a tobacco farmer from Port Burwell that the Government would act quickly to establish a national tobacco marketing agency.

The Government must start making decisions and must start soon, or the continuing uncertainty will not only affect our tobacco farmers but all other farmers and businessmen who are waiting to make important business decisions.

The bottom line is that the Government promised to establish an agency for tobacco farmers. Where is the action? In June, 1984, the Conservative Party, when in opposition, prevented the Liberal Government from passing legislation which would have allowed this issue to be resolved long ago. The Tories caused the delay then and they are causing the delay now. Without immediate action we could see 600 tobacco farmers going out of business in the very near future.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SPACE TESTING OF PENCILS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of all Canadians the contract held by Greenwich Canadian Testing of Western Ontario, from Government of Canada file reference No. 27ST; March 1985, and the research and development publication entitled Canadian Probes in Space: New Instruments Developed for Space Research. This contract for $6,600 is for the following:

> Research relating to the development of methods of testing and analysis of pencils.

No doubt the method of testing pencils is something the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has long cherished learning more about. Our national pencils should no doubt be of the highest quality, easy to sharpen, capable of going up and down on paper, as well as leaving clear lines when going in circles. The eraser, of course, should be well attached to ensure that no time is lost in correcting Government errors. For a Government so set on red ink and red circling, one would hope that some of the 66,000 pencils to be tested will be red.

To be serious for a moment, for a Government which is prepared to slash pensions and family allowance, for a Government set on selling out our country to the lowest bidder, as in the case of de Havilland to Boeing, for a Government which will allow tainted tuna and buffalo onto our kitchen tables, let us hope that the Prime Minister is having these Government pencils tested to get the lead out and do something good for Canada.

MEAT INSPECTION SYSTEM DEFENDED

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, during the questioning on buffalo meat, and again this morning, the Chamber and the people of Canada witnessed an attack on the meat inspection system of Canada. The attack was fuelled by a desire for political gain, but was based upon ignorance of the disease tuberculosis and of the meat inspection system.

The meat inspection service of Canada has handled thousands of similar cases in cattle herds in its history. Meat inspectors, many of them veterinarians, have applied their judgment to decide when meat from animals exposed to any disease is fit to eat. When tests are ordered, they are conducted primarily for disease control reasons, not for meat inspection purposes. Through this scheme, the meat inspection system has played a large role in nearly eradicating tuberculosis in cattle and, as a result, in much of the human population.

I agree with Dr. Brian Wurtz, President of the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association, who has publicly aired his support of the meat inspection service. Why should a different system be proposed in this case? Our system is successful. It is renowned around the world. It is a crime against every Canadian to smear a good service and to spread false rumours about such a fine system, for purely political reasons.

MINES AND MINING

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian mining industry produces some $45-billion worth of mineral products each year. This represents about 11 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product, and the sale of these products accounts for some 30 per cent of Canada's exports. Despite this, the mineral industry has experienced more difficult problems in the last four years than at any time in the last 50 years.

The Government has been doing much to help the industry through this difficult period. Federal-provincial mineral agreements have been signed with nine provinces, including recent agreements with Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia. The capital gains tax exemption and the fuel tax rebate have been very beneficial. Most beneficial, however, have been the mining flow-through share arrangements for exploration expenses which have stimulated exploration all across Canada, and in particular in the Province of Quebec.

In the past year the federal Government provided over $1.3 million to Canadian universities for crucial research in the earth sciences. Work by the Geological Survey of Canada has identified the biggest offshore coal field in eastern Canada, and stimulated a major gold exploration program in northern Saskatchewan. Unique solutions were found to assist production at Faro in the Yukon, and the construction of a new lead smelter at Trail, British Columbia. These and other measures have considerably improved conditions for the Canadian mineral industry during one of the most difficult periods in its history.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON SECURING BENEFITS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to protest changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which will come into effect on January 1, 1986. These changes will cheat Canadian workers of benefits for which they have paid and were expecting. On that date, early retirement pensions will be counted toward reducing the granting of unemployment insurance benefits even when the individuals involved are ready and willing to work.

I would like to protest these measures not just because of the unjust principle on which they are based but also because this action was taken unilaterally by a Government which said it was going to consult. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has stated repeatedly that consultation took place before these measures were introduced. These changes were certainly not endorsed by the participants in the Government's economic summit which took place last March. In fact the only clear agreement which came out of that summit was a petition signed by two-thirds of the participants calling on the Government to revoke these changes. No studies were conducted to determine the impact of these changes on older workers and on the different regions of the country.

The Government has turned a deaf ear to the many protests which were made against these policies. On January 1, older workers will be dealt a serious blow unless the Government listens to reason. I am asking the Government to withdraw this foolish policy before it is too late.

IMPROVEMENT IN SASKATCHEWAN ECONOMY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, despite often publicized difficulties facing Saskatchewan agriculture, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the general state of the economy in my home Province of Saskatchewan. The economy in the province has been improving since the election of this Government. Employment continues to climb. A total of 17,000 new jobs were created since the election of the Government. Bankruptcies were down 10 per cent in the first 10 months of this year. Business investment intentions are up 9.6 per cent over last year's levels. Housing starts in October alone were up a whopping 237 per cent.

In the energy sector, in the first 10 months well completions totalled 3,085 compared to 2,420 over the same period last year. This represents an increase of almost 28 per cent since the election of the Government.

There is also the energy Accord and what it has done for western Canada. Oil trade has been freed up to provide strong encouragement for investment. The Western Accord recognizes Saskatchewan's desire for a policy relying less on Government handouts and intervention and more on the opportunities of a free market-place. It is measures like these that have led to a growing, vibrant, improving Saskatchewan economy.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION—PROJECTED LOSS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, who is just taking his seat.

Some 4,500 Canadians work in my constituency at the de Havilland plant. They want to know the truth, as do the rest of us, about the proposed sale of this company to Boeing of Seattle. Instead of being given the facts and documents to examine, all we have been given so far have been press releases and statements, such as the statement made in the House last week in which the President of the Treasury Board said that de Havilland was projected to lose $200 million in 1986. Is it not a fact that the Burns Fry prospectus commissioned by the Government and circulated to possible purchasers of de Havilland projected a loss of $14 million—not $200 million—for 1986, and profitability for the following years?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from our projections that de Havilland would have been in a loss position for 1986, depending on the source of the estimate, of between $50 million and $75 million, and it would have required an additional $125 million of cash injection. One has to add those $200 million to the $800 million of taxpayers' money which has already gone into de Havilland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFORMATION SUPPLIED TO BIDDERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is a big difference between a development investment and a loss. Why did the Minister say in the House that the loss would be $200 million, which he now admits is wrong? I ask him again this very simple question. Did not the Burns Fry prospectus project a loss for the company of $14 million in 1986 and profitability thereafter? Will the Minister not admit that it was $14 million that was projected to bidders?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when $200 million has to be taken out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that fund which is the money of the taxpayers of Canada, and put it into de Havilland, that is $200 million which cannot go for other purposes of policy which this Government is pursuing.

REQUEST FOR FURTHER DISCLOSURE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think we have a neat admission that the House was misled—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Kaplan: —last week over the statement that the loss would be $200 million.

In view of that, and in view of all the other questions which are being asked about this deal, why will the Government not agree to give us the facts before it is too late? As an official of Boeing said over the weekend, the deal is still open, it is not signed and they can still walk away from it. Why does the Government refuse to allow the Canadian people to look at this deal and also look at the other options which are available?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have looked at the options. We are satisfied that this is a great deal for Canada and we have announced it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: I would like my hon. colleague across the floor to remember the statements made by his own colleagues. I talk about his Leader, for example, who said in May of 1984:

> Canadair and de Havilland . . . are prime examples of what can go wrong when the Government gets into commercial businesses and fails to exercise proper supervision and control.

His colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, said very clearly:

> I say let's not displace private capital and if we can sell Canadair and if we can sell de Havilland, let's do it as quickly as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TERMS OF SALE

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the actual sale price of de Havilland was $90 million. The Government pretends it was $155 million. The remaining $65 million is to be forgiven, according to the Government, if Boeing invests in new contracts to the Canadian aerospace industry, five times that amount over the next 15 years. My question to the Minister is this. Why was the ratio of five-to-one set so low? Why did the Government of Canada say to Boeing: "Look. All you need to do is spend $325 million over the next 15 years on new contracts to the Canadian aerospace industry and we will forgive $65 million"?

• (1420)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in essence, $325 million to create new jobs, new jobs in the industry and new jobs from coast to coast in this country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, Boeing claims that its major corporate divisions invested, or spent in the last six years, an average of $133 million per year on new contracts to the Canadian aerospace industry. That is a 30 to one ratio. That is $2 billion over 15 years.

Why did the Government of Canada say to Boeing: "Boeing—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Boing!

Mr. Baker: "—you can actually decrease the amount of your investment in Canada by—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question?

Mr. Baker: Why did the Government of Canada say to Boeing: "Boeing—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Boing!

Mr. Baker: "—you can decrease the amount of your spending in Canada by 85 per cent over the next 15 years and we'll still forgive that $65 million"? That is ultra-light bargaining with a 747 company.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to believe that there is only one clause in this agreement. There are a number of other clauses.

Mr. Manly: Santa Claus.

Mr. de Cotret: We have given them to you. Let's talk about the world product mandate. Let's talk about retaining technology in this country. Let's talk about creating new jobs and let's talk about the new investment which Boeing is going to make.

Mr. Robichaud: What about Santa Claus?

Mr. de Cotret: Let's talk about the jobs which will grow in Downsview. Let's talk about all the other elements in that deal which make it a great deal for Canada and for Canadians.

CANADAIR—USE OF SITE—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES' JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week we learned of the Government's intention to get rid of 25 per cent of Canada's aerospace industry in the case of de Havilland. My question today concerns the other major producer of aircraft in Canada, namely, Canadair.

[Translation]

Does the Prime Minister know about the definitive version of the development plan adopted recently by the Montreal Urban Community, which provides that Canadair's present facilities will be closed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have to inform the Hon. Member that I am not aware of any such program or project, and that if one exists, it is not in line with the policies of this Government.

[English]

POSITION OF MONTREAL URBAN COMMUNITY CHAIRMAN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the plan which includes reference, not once but several times to the removal of Canadair from Montreal. Considering that the Chairman of the Montreal Urban Community is Pierre Desmarais, the same man who was president elect of CDIC and Chairman of the Board of Canadair, is it conceivable to the Prime Minister that the Chairman of the Montreal Urban Community, who is making the recommendation for the shutdown or removal from Montreal of Canadair, could be doing so when, at the same time, as President of Canadair, he would not have been reporting to the Government of Canada?

An Hon. Member: It will take you a while to figure that one out, Brian.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It is true that we have managed to persuade Mr. Pierre Des Marais II to become involved at the federal level and take over the responsibility for this major corporation. Mr. Pierre Des Marais II is a man who is very respected in Quebec and in Canada. His duties formerly involved working for the Montreal Urban Community, and Reports on the subect may have been prepared at that time.

However, as far as Canadair and the development of Montreal are concerned, I think the Government's objectives become clear if we look at the announcement made last Friday in Montreal by the President of the Treasury Board, namely, that a departmental committee has been set up to oversee a new dimension of economic recovery in Montreal. That is what we want to do: create jobs in Montreal. We want more jobs, not fewer jobs for Montreal. And that will be the result of this Government's policies.

DEVELOPMENT PLAN INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the Prime Minister that the plan looks extremely serious indeed. The development plan which has already been adopted includes having the land presently occupied by Canadair turned over for the development of a housing project, the complete elimination of runways and, furthermore, refers to two federal Departments having been consulted in the development of such a plan. Has it been brought to the attention of the Prime Minister by the two federal Departments which were consulted in the development of this plan that the idea seems to include the complete shutdown, or removal from Montreal at least, of Canadair and the 5,000 jobs that go with it?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is false and my hon. friend knows that it is false.

Mr. Broadbent: What's false? It's a question.

Mr. Mulroney: We have no plans for removing 5,000 jobs from Montreal. The Member has supported a Government which, in the last five years—

Mr. Broadbent: Deal with the question. Never mind you or rhetoric. That wasn't the question, buster.

Mr. Mulroney: —created 600 jobs a month in Quebec, and we have been creating 7,000.

Mr. Broadbent: Deal with the question.

Mr. Mulroney: That's the difference between—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Why do you traffic in these falsehoods trying to scare people?

Mr. Broadbent: Listen to the question.

Ms. Jewett: You're on thin ice.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He deals in falsehoods.

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about, Clark? You guys try to find out what's going on around here.

Mr. McDermid: Who published it?

An Hon. Member: His hairdresser.

Mr. Deans: I'll tell you one thing, my hairdresser has more sense than the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: Ian, don't get angry now. Your hair will curl.

Mr. Deans: You don't know what you talking about.

Mr. de Jong: Does he ever?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! None of this is helpful. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

MEAT INSPECTION STANDARDS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister and the Member for Hamilton Mountain could exchange the addresses of their hairdressers at a later date so that we can get on with Question Period.

Mr. Deans: I don't have mine travel with me at least.

Mr. Axworthy: My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Last Friday he said in the House that our inspection standards for meat are beyond reproach, that, in fact we have the best in the world. Yet, the Minister would know that officials of the European Economic Community have now submitted a report to our Government indicating that our meat inspection practices are, in fact, substantially below standard. As a result, they are threatening to prohibit the export of Canadian meat products to that community.

What action does the Minister intend to take based on that report? What does he intend to do to ensure that we do not lose that $40 million meat export market to the European Economic Community?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the display of ignorance put forth by opposition Members last Friday was shameful, shameful, shameful, and nothing less.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: That display of incompetence has been condemned by the Ontario Veterinary Association, the Canadian Veterinary Association—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Order! Answer the question.

Mr. Wise: —every sector in the food industry, and by the Consumers Association of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: In this country we have the finest food inspection agency to be found anywhere in the world. Its record has been nothing short of excellent. It has been that way for 75 years, remains that way today, and we are going to ensure that it continues that way in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY REPORT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture's defence is laudable but it is not applicable to the question I asked. The fact is that there is now a report prepared by the European Economic Community threatening to prohibit our meat exports to that Community because of our standards.

I will repeat the question which I asked the Minister. What does he intend to do about the report? Does he intend to take some action? Does he intend to assist the meat packing industry to upgrade its standards so that we will not lose a $40 million market to the European Economic Community?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the matter to which the Hon. Member refers is not unusual. We visit plants in other parts of the world and representatives from other parts of the world visit ours. No final decision has been made. However, I can tell you that if they eventually decide to delist our plants, we will go back over there and apply their standards to their plants. I do not think they will stand up. We will not turn our back on the Canadian beef industry like that Government did. We are going to support it.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ALLEGED DEVELOPMENT PLAN OF MONTREAL URBAN COMMUNITY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister deals again with Canadair. If that corporation is not to disappear from Montreal, could the Prime Minister explain to the House how the development plan which was published last week under the authority of Mr. Pierre Des Marais II, who is also Chairman of the Board of Canadair, some three hundred thousand copies of which were distributed in the Montreal area, clearly indicates that the land occupied by this corporation will be used as residential area for condominiums?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the document in question. It is possible that one of the proposals that have been put forward . . . was that another location would be considered, Canadair being situated very close to a growing municipality in the North-Western part of Montreal. This being said, however, Mr. Des Marais was not speaking today on behalf of the Federal Government and I can say that the Government's position is that which I announced in reply to a question from your Leader, namely, that we are going to increase the number of jobs in Montreal and not reduce it, as the Liberal Government did.

FUTURE OF CANADAIR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We wonder whether Mr. Des Marais was speaking on behalf of the Montreal Urban Community while sitting on Canadair's Board of Directors. My question is this: Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the Canadair jobs will remain on their present site and tell us what steps the Government will take to ensure that the Montreal Urban Community will drop its plan to have Canadair transferred or closed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we do not have the authority to interfere with the affairs of the Montreal Urban Community. This is a creature of the provincial Government. We are not at odds or at war with the Montreal municipal government or the Montreal Urban Community. Quite the contrary, we are all working together to attract industries and jobs to Montreal. I suggest that the best indication or confirmation of this is the relatively unusual creation of a departmental committee, chaired by the President Treasury Board, to attract new industries and to reinforce existing ones, including Canadair.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A year ago he promised to establish a national marketing agency for tobacco. On November 6, 1984, he said in part: "I can assure you that our Government will be acting quickly to establish a national tobacco marketing agency". A thousand farmers who are demonstrating on Parliament Hill today want to know why the Prime Minister has broken his promise. Can he explain?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would examine the record I think he would come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister and the Government do not break their promises but keep them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: One of the first pieces of legislation that was passed in the House by this Government amended the National Farm Products Marketing Act to allow the tobacco industry to proceed with the formation of whatever kind of national agency they so desired.

One must remember, and the Hon. Member should recognize, that the companies sought and received a court injunction. Therefore, the court injunction ordered the National Farm Products Marketing Council to reopen the hearings. Unlike some of the cabinet Ministers in that Government, the cabinet Ministers in this Government have respect for the courts. I hope the Hon. Member has some respect for the courts because I am confident that the Canadian people do.

COST OF PRODUCTION FORMULA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the court injunction relates to the cost of production formula. The Canadian Egg Marketing Agency was set up in 1972 and did not get its cost of production formula until 1975. Yet the agency went ahead without that.

Why is the Minister not going ahead to establish the agency in any event? He does not have to wait until that issue is resolved, and he knows it.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that there is a difference between chickens and tobacco and eggs and tobacco.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: I hope he does but I don't know.

Mr. McDermid: Don't bet on it.

Mr. Wise: I wonder if the Hon. Member realizes that the campaign for the national chicken marketing agency began in 1971. We put it into place when we were in Government in 1979.

There is no question that the Minister can proceed to proclaim an agency. However, what would one have other than an empty piece of paper? Nothing happens until you either have the signature of the producing provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec or letters of commitment that they would live under the terms of that agency. That has not happened yet.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—USE OF SITE—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: You are too busy writing the question.

Mr. Deans: I was trying to think of how to ask the question so I might get an answer for a change. I will ask it as straightforwardly as I can.

It concerns the proposal for the use of the land currently being used by Canadair for the building of aircraft. Will the Prime Minister guarantee us now that he is aware of no plan to take Canadair out of Montreal now or in the future?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question on three occasions. The objective of the Government is to create jobs. The previous Government created 673 new jobs a month in Quebec, whereas we have created 9,286. In other words, we have beaten the Liberal performance by 14 to 1, and it would not make any sense to reverse that trend. We will co-operate with all authorities to increase, not decrease, the number of secure jobs in Quebec. As to the document mentioned by the Hon. Member, I did say to his colleague that I have not had an opportunity to take official cognizance of it. I will be pleased to have a look at it but, unless I am mistaken, it is not a document of the Canadian Government.

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given the seriousness and the potential impact of such a proposal to build housing on the land presently used by Canadair, will the Prime Minister undertake to refer two matters to a committee of the House of Commons: first, the whole question of the sale of de Havilland which will have an impact on Canada's aerospace industry; second, the question of the possibility of the alternative land use of the Canadair property? Will he refer those matters to a committee of the House of Commons now in order that all of the necessary questions can be asked and all of the necessary answers obtained to assure us that there are in fact job guarantees for the people in both of those plants?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if somebody comes along and makes a suggestion in regard to—

Mr. Broadbent: Somebody? He is the President of Canadair.

Mr. Mulroney: If somebody makes a suggestion, representing another agency—in this case representing a municipal agency—in regard to something that is owned by the Government of Canada, it is up to the Government and no one else to make a determination in that regard.

I can tell you that we will make our determinations in the national interest and not pursuant to a request from a municipal body, no matter how important that body may be. We own the land—

Mr. Deans: I know that you own the land.

Mr. Mulroney: We will not turn it over to anyone. It is land of the Government of Canada. It belongs to the Queen and it will remain that way.

You are asking me about de Havilland. On December 9 I received a letter from the President of the Aerospace Industries Association of Canada which says that the Board of Directors of the Aerospace Industries Association of Canada, representing 165 aerospace companies and 45,000 employees: "Congratulates your Government for a decision on de Havilland which we believe will be beneficial to our sector and thus to the Canadian economy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is the answer.

TRADE

STATEMENT OF QUEBEC PREMIER DESIGNATE ON FREE TRADE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

I think the Prime Minister should realize that when the private sector, in casu General Dynamics, left Canadair to Montreal, there were only 700 employees, and the Canadian Government took over the company and raised the number of employees to 7,000. I hope we do not see the same process repeated in the future. I do have a question for the Prime Minister regarding a statement by Premier Bourassa on the weekend, when he declared that negotiations with the United States on free trade . . . Does the Prime Minister agree with the Quebec Premier Designate who said that these negotiations will necessarily lead to a customs union and, eventually, to a monetary union, which means that Canada will lose its freedom of movement and its political institutions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again, my hon. friend is raising two points. As for his first one, his reference to Canadair and de Havilland, I would like to draw his attention to one of his own statements made on May 11, 1984, when the Hon. Member said as follows:

[English]

In regard to Canadair and de Havilland, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice said:

If they keep losing money and money and money, at one time we'll say, 'that's enough'.

[Translation]

That is what you said. And now you are changing your mind. That's what Turner said.

[English]

When is enough enough?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Mulroney: Eight hundred million dollars; $1.8 billion; $2 billion; $5 billion—bingo? When is it enough?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We campaigned in regard to a proposal in regard to Crown corporations which was clear cut, and we have done precisely that. Those decisions were taken in the national interest to secure jobs in Canadian technology, and that is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: As far as the second part of my hon. friend's question is concerned . . . I beg your pardon?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think I have to say to the Right Hon. Prime Minister that it is time for a supplementary question.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister made a speech. We said we were to sell de Havilland and Canadair, not give them away to American companies. We had a plan to put the two together to sell to the Canadian people. That is a hell of a difference in terms of policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming less a Question Period and more a speech period. I wonder whether we could have a question, please.

[Translation]

FREE TRADE—POSITION OF TWO PREMIERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Does the Prime Minister intend to recognize, before proceeding with negotiations on free trade with the United States . . . does the Prime Minister of Canada intend to meet with the Premier Designate of Quebec, who has now taken the same position as the Premier of Ontario, and before proceeding with negotiations with these two premiers, and with the Americans, does he intend to obtain the consent of these premiers or at least recognize that they have—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure to meet the new Premier Designate for Quebec again. I read his statement which is certainly not as unqualified as my hon. friend would have us believe, and we intend to obtain the necessary explanations.

As for the second aspect of his question which deals with de Havilland and Canadair, I would like to draw his attention to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount, speaking on behalf of his Government in this matter, who said on May 7 of this year, and I quote:

[English]

Instead of continuing to underwrite hundreds of millions of dollars in de Havilland and Canadair losses, I'd sell those companies and I'd put the money into education and training—

That is what the Member for Westmount said.

Mr. Chrétien: Not to give away.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what the Member for Westmount said. That is what the Leader of the Opposition said. Now they have changed their minds.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East.

NATIONAL REVENUE

AMOUNT OF UNPAID TAXES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. As the Minister knows, 10,000 individuals and firms owe the Government, on an average, $155,000 in unpaid taxes.

The Minister of Finance in his May Budget projected collecting an extra $400 million. Last year the amount of uncollected taxes, taxes not in dispute, increased by $400 million. Can the Minister explain this?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my hon. friend opposite that the collection of taxes under present circumstances has got to be tempered with a certain amount of justice and fairness. While there is at the present time a considerable amount of money outstanding, the tax base has also increased.

As the Hon. Member undoubtedly knows, because he keeps himself well informed on these matters, there have been injected into the system a number of collectors who are just now being integrated, and we expect to see an improvement in these outstanding taxes in the near future.

EMPLOYERS' FAILURE TO REMIT EMPLOYEE DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. In the interests of keeping myself informed—I have given notice of my question to the Minister's office—last year the figures released indicated that some 119 employers failed to remit more than $328 million in deductions from employees to the Government. Can the Minister provide the House with the current figures of the number of employers who have failed to remit employee deductions, and the amount owed?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. friend that I appreciate receiving notice of his question. Members of the Department are presently collating and collecting these figures. They will be available for the Hon. Member and for the information of other Members in the near future.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SELECTION OF NEW HEADQUARTER'S SITE IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It involves the building of a new CBC site somewhere in Metropolitan Toronto.

In view of the fact that the City of Scarborough, the Seventh largest city in Canada, I might add, has kindly offered 11.5 acres of prime downtown land linked by rapid transit to the rest of Metro, and in view of the fact that the utilization of this land would clearly save taxpayers over $100 million, can the citizens of Scarborough anticipate an early positive response from the Minister?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, indeed in early September 1985 I met with a delegation of Members from the Scarborough area who submitted a proposal for the establishment of the CBC Broadcasting Centre in their area instead of Toronto.

As called for by the Act, I forwarded that information and proposal to the President of the CBC. The latter has been considering that proposal and should report in the near future to the Government which will decide accordingly.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

FAILURE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT TO RECOGNIZE RIGHTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the failure of the British Columbia Government to recognize aboriginal rights in that province is creating quite an alarming situation verging on a crisis?

Could the Prime Minister tell the House what strong action he proposes now so that British Columbia and Canada can get together and settle these outsanding native claims? That is what a majority of the citizens of B.C. and what a majority of members of this House want.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been in British Columbia this past weekend. He has been having additional meetings today, possibly even at this very moment. These issues are high on his agenda. I think it would be appropriate for us to have a personal up-to-date response when he returns.

RECOGNITION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: No, it is not. It is not good enough because aboriginal rights are part of the Constitution of Canada.

How long, I ask the Prime Minister, do the Haida people and the other Indian people of British Columbia have to wait before their legitimate constitutional rights can be recognized? How long must they wait? They will not come crawling. They will never do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should bear in mind that the Prime Minister at the last constitutional meeting had a meeting with the Premiers and the meeting with the native leaders of Canada. He put very clearly both his personal imprimatur and the Government's commitment on a resolution of those issues.

As well, additional meetings were agreed to for 1987. I can say from the Prime Minister's point of view and from the Government's point of view that it is an ongoing issue.

On the second question of whether it is not enough, the Hon. Member should keep in mind that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is right now in British Columbia dealing with those issues. That is what the Hon. Member called for. That is what he is doing, and that is enough.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It follows on the question of the Hon. Member for Algoma, to which the Minister responded that he was constrained in terms of a tobacco marketing board because of a court order. That court order was granted more than a month ago. Will he tell us whether he has instructed his marketing council to reopen the hearings into cost of production formulas so that the process can get under way and farmers in fact can have a marketing agency this winter?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Send Svend.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there needs to be a little clarification; I think there must have been some misunderstanding of my answer to the Hon. Member for Algoma. I indicated that I had the option to go ahead and proclaim the agency. I cautioned, though, by asking what we would have if we did not have participants in that agency. Therein lies the problem. We have to get the signatures, or at least letters of commitment, and the Hon. Member knows that. Also, I wish he would repeat the second part of his question.

Mr. Althouse: I will do that privately with the Minister.

REQUEST FOR IMPORT CONTROLS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Because the court order was attempting to mete out what was called natural justice, in the interest of natural justice is the Government now prepared to put temporary border controls on the import of tobacco so that when the board comes into effect both sides will be on an equal footing?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that was not the second part of the Hon. Member's question. He asked whether or not I had instructed the National Farm Products Marketing Council to proceed. Of course, as he should know, it is not the decision of Agriculture Canada or the National Farm Products Marketing Council to decide whether or not to appeal. It is the responsibility of the Department of Justice. He will know that they have decided to appeal the court injunction. I believe the hearing dates commence in the first part of February. However, we have been cautioned not to proceed with the cost of production hearings pending the outcome of the hearing.

Mr. Althouse: By whom?

Mr. Wise: By Justice.

VIA RAIL

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Although many of us had hoped that VIA Rail would look favourably upon commuter traffic in southern Ontario, it is distressingly clear that that is not the case and that VIA does not see business opportunity in the Toronto-Guelph-Kitchener region. Would the Minister give consideration to making representations to his provincial counterpart for improved service in that part of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows, after years of Liberal neglect, the Government has taken a number of initiatives to revitalize rail passenger service in the country. A number of steps have been taken, including the restoration of services which were dismantled by the former Government. New locomotives have been ordered. I hope that we will be in a position soon to announce the placement of an order for new transcontinental equipment as well. The Hon. Member should also be aware that the drafting of the new passenger rail Act is in its final stages. Many attempts are being made to improve the attractiveness and thereby the ridership of VIA Rail. Finally, the Hon. Member should be aware that the mandate of VIA Rail is to provide inter-city services, not necessarily commuter services.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FUNDING OF ANGLOPHONE GROUPS IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week, after the Quebec election, his Secretary of State stated that because the Liberals were elected in that province there could be reductions in federal programs funding official language minorities, contrary to the promises which he made to the Anglophones in that province during the election campaign. Is the statement of the Secretary of State an indication that the Government is about to renege on another promise to the Anglophones in the Province of Quebec, or was the Secretary of State speaking out of turn? If so, would the Prime Minister please correct him?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Hon. Member may have read last weekend, but I have made no statement whatsoever which could raise any doubt about the assistance to minorities, and this had nothing to do with the election of a Liberal Government in Quebec. In any case, we are now reviewing all these policies. We and the former Government had signed certain agreements and these are still effective. They include $210 million for official languages programs, of which a good part is allocated to the English-speaking minority in Quebec. In addition, we have just approved specific projects, some of which are also for Quebec. This has nothing to do with the elections. I repeat that I would like to know what newspapers the Hon. Member has read. He should perhaps read them more carefully!

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what he said to the press, but the reports of what he said have disturbed many Anglophone groups in the Province of Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Did you hear that in Straight from the Heart?

Mr. Allmand: I would like him or the Prime Minister to make an absolutely clear commitment that there will be no reductions or no new impediments to the funding of programs for language minorities in that province. That was never done in any other province after an election.

Some Hon. Members: What is your source?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I myself and the Government are not in the habit of assessing subsidy programs, especially where official languages are concerned, in front of the press. We announce our decisions to the press and comment on them, but that is not when we make the decisions. Certainly not! We have undertaken a review, but this has nothing to do with the election of a new Government in Quebec or with the official languages policies of the Federal Government. What I know is that any reconsideration of our support for the minorities, whether the French-speaking minority outside Quebec, or the English-speaking minority in Quebec, is out of the question.

AUDITOR GENERAL

ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS IN PETRO-CANADA ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA CASE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns a written decision handed down by Associate Chief Justice James Jerome on Friday, indicating that the Auditor General now has a specific right to examine all cabinet documents related to the 1981 purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. Given that judgment, will the Government now be providing complete and total access to those documents to the Auditor General of Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Justice, I would advise the Hon. Member, as he is well aware, that the decision has just been received. I am advised that the Legal Branch of the Department of Justice is presently reviewing the decision. The Hon. Minister of Justice will be reporting to the House in due course in respect of that decision.

IMPLEMENTATION OF COURT DECISION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, with respect, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the campaign he promised the complete access of the Auditor General to those documents. In light of the decision by Mr. Justice Jerome on Friday, can the Prime Minister of Canada now say to the House that the Auditor General will have complete and total access to all relevant documents in the purchase of Petrofina by Petro-Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat my earlier answer. The Minister of Justice just received the decision on Friday. It is a complex matter. Surely we are entitled to have time to study the implications of that decision. We will be reporting to the House in due course.

LABOUR RELATIONS

APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR IN CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE DISPUTE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. The current labour dispute involving Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce employees at the Visa Centre in Toronto has become bitter, with tension and confrontation mounting on both sides. Has the Government considered any action to mediate in this dispute and to help find a settlement as quickly as possible?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, it is a dispute which has been going on for several months. At the request of both parties on December 4, last Thursday, Labour Canada appointed a senior mediator, Mr. Henry Bartenbach, to mediate in that dispute. The discussions are resuming between the two parties, and I would like to reiterate that this appointment was made following a request from both parties that a mediator be appointed to assist in the negotiations.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question also relates to the Canadair file, and it is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Canadair is one of Boeing's major sub-contractors in Canada, and now the sale of that company or of de Havilland threatens a number of jobs in Montreal. Here is my question to the Minister: Why does the Minister jeopardize the existence of more than 325 Canadair jobs by failing to exact contract guarantees whereby Boeing will continue to award sub-contracts to Canadair and in Montreal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is false. The agreement concluded or being concluded between Boeing and de Havilland does not in any way jeopardize jobs at Canadair. Quite the contrary! Canadair will develop new markets as a result of the deal and, as in any other aerospace industry, it will create new jobs.

• (1500)

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): The Minister has said that he has received verbal assurances. This Government is expert in obtaining verbal undertakings. I would simply remind the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Berger: Is the Minister telling us that he has faith that a multinational company will make the jobs of workers in Montreal its number one priority? Is that what he is telling the workers of Montreal to do, to rely on a leap of faith by this Government?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite. It is not a leap of faith, it is a leap toward the future and a very great leap for that industry. I would like to quote very briefly from the letter of the Aerospace Industries Association of Canada, which reads as follows:

> Boeing's commitment to assign the world product mandate for commuter/STOL aircraft to de Havilland is particularly encouraging, for this will mean ongoing and a potential increase in research and development with de Havilland. Very positive effects will also be felt throughout our industry from the additional commitments made by Boeing to increase the level of Canadian content in its products, and to proceed with development on the new 50-seat version of the Dash 8.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Minister that the time provided from Question Period has expired.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, December 6, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form. The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Price) by filing with the Clerk of the House also meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House petitions from people in various parts of Ontario. The operative clause is that the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions to present signed by residents of the Churchill riding and also of other parts of Manitoba expressing their concern with the federal Government's decision to deindex the family allowance. Among the groups that have presented petitions to me are people from the St. Joseph's Ukrainian Church, the First Baptist Church of Thompson, the St. James Anglican Church of Thompson, the reserve community of Shamattawa and the community of South Indian Lake, the community of Leaf Rapids and the community of Thompson.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise again today to present a number of petitions in support of the CN shop workers in Moncton. Those petitions are from citizens of Haute-Aboujagane, Cap-Pelé, Pointe-du-Chêne, Moncton, and Riverview. Those petitioners are quite disappointed about conditions prevailing at the CN shops in Moncton and ask the Government to assure those people that the jobs will be protected.

[English]

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to present a series of petitions to the House from constituents residing in the Moncton federal riding as well as the neighbouring riding of Westmorland-Kent expressing their concern with the eroding work base and the future of the shops in Moncton.

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present from residents of British Columbia concerning the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, asking that the agreement be made public, and asking that the procedures for and results of radiation-monitoring tests of these waters, be made known. The petitioners are concerned that the naval policy of the United States which neither confirms nor denies the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels is unacceptable, and the call for a public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated.

[Translation]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table today a petition from a group of citizens from Verdun-Saint-Paul who are asking the Government to restore full indexation of family allowances and to withdraw the Bill amending the 1973 Family Allowances Act.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a number of petitions from Debden, Saskatchewan, Edmonton, North Battleford and Prince Albert, all of which call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to table a petition signed by approximately 90 Canadians who feel that they are shareholders in de Havilland and they call upon the Government of Canada to cancel the proposed sale of de Havilland to Boeing. Incidentally, 90 per cent of these petitioners are involved in the aviation industry in Thunder Bay.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and an honour to present a petition from citizens of the community of Thunder Bay, some 150 persons, protesting the deindexation of the family allowance, protesting that the deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credits so that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990, and calling upon the House of Commons to re-establish full indexation of the family allowance.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present to the House a petition from residents of York West who are calling on the Government to take another look at its regressive decision on deindexing family allowances to the tune of some $55 million and calling on the Government to maintain the promise it made during the election campaign so vividly and candidly not to touch the family allowance or the senior citizens' pensions. The deindexation moves of the Government are simply shocking and it should be ashamed of itself. Canadians from York West are asking the Government to be sensitive to the needs and aspirations of people from one coast to the other.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which I am pleased to present from people in Essex-Windsor stressing their opposition to the cut-backs in child benefits, to the reductions in family allowances and to the increase in tax breaks for people through capital gains tax changes. This particular petition has been organized by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

1. Since the June 14, 1985 deadline for repayment of cash advances, how many producers have been deemed to be in default?

2. What is the estimate for producer defaults for the 1985 crop year?

3. In (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 (d) 1984, how many producers defaulted and what was the deadline for repayment in each year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): 1. As of June 14, 1985, there were 2,392 producer accounts placed in default. These producers had over 40 per cent of their advance outstanding on May 15, 1985, the date the letter requesting repayment within 20 days was sent.

As of July 12, 1985, there were 1,090 producer accounts in default. These producers had under 40 per cent of their advance outstanding on May 15, 1985. Producers who had selected barley permits were excluded from the first two deadline dates.

As of July 31, 1985, there were 217 producer accounts placed in default. These producers held selected barley permits.

2. It is estimated that interest imposed on accounts placed in default for the 1984-85 crop year will total $2.5 million.

2. For the same years, on the average, what portion of the original loan was left outstanding when the penalty interest was imposed?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): 1. The amount of interest collected from producers whose accounts were placed in default, for the crop year,

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, again I rise to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when the Government intends to reply to the very embarrassing Questions Nos. 450, 451, 452 and 453 standing in my name and relating to the travel expenses of the former Minister of the Environment who is now the Minister of travel—I'm sorry, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you want the Taiwan trip or just the one—

Mr. Boudria: I'll exchange bills with you. Mine cost nothing.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is probably the Hon. Member who is embarrassed because Questions Nos. 450 and 451 were ruled out of order by the Table Officers. I would tell the Hon. Member that Question No. 452 has been allowed to stand and is being worked on at the present time.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) rising on a different point of order?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary should know obviously that those questions were not ruled out of order. They were simply renumbered. I want to ask him again—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I specifically asked the Hon. Member if he was rising on a different point of order. I take it he is now attempting to engage in debate with the Parliamentary Secretary about facts as opposed to questions.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a different point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when the Government will answer Questions Nos. 486 and 487. These are questions relating to the expenditures of the former Minister of the Environment, the present Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), concerning her travel expenditures.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, certainly Questions Nos. 486 and 487 are the Hon. Member's reworded questions which were originally ruled out of order. We are taking a hard look at his second effort.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 31

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 31, I ask leave to move that this House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the proposed sale of de Havilland by the Government to Boeing of Seattle.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) gave me the required notice of his intention to request an emergency debate under Standing Order 31. The purpose of that order, as I think all Hon. Members know, is to provide a means of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. One of the conditions laid down in the Standing Order is that the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency calling for immediate and urgent consideration. The matter proposed by the Hon. Member as a subject for emergency debate is certainly an important one. However, I do not think that it conforms to the concept of a genuine emergency as envisaged by the Standing Order.

Furthermore, this important matter was debated very recently and was taken to a vote. It was the subject chosen for an allotted day on Tuesday, December 3, and the House, through its vote, has already expressed a view on the matter. The Hon. Member is, in fact, asking for another debate on the same issue in the form of an emergency debate. In the circumstances, I cannot find that the application meets the requirements of the Standing Order.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial cencus, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, this debate is about representation and how the people of Canada can have their views put forward, how decisions can be made and how the country can be run. Today, in the House, we have seen evidence of how difficult it is to obtain information from the Government and how unwilling it is to provide us with the necessary documentation so that the House can review the sale of de Havilland and matters referring to Canadair. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have no alternative but to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Angus), which was negative on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are resuming debate on Bill C-74 which is a matter that has received much consideration in the House. Unfortunately, the House Leaders of the Parties have been unable to reach an agreement with respect to the completion of this debate.

I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among representatives of the Parties in the House and it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 82 or Standing Order 83 with regard to the allocation of time at third reading stage of Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census.

Therefore, at the next sitting of the House, it is my intention to propose the following motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84:

[Translation]

That, in relation to Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

[English]

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. (b) Request for committee hearing; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Grenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Trade—Canada-United States negotiations—Prime Minister's speech in Chicago. (b) Magazine publishing industry.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, what we have just heard must be one of the most shameful actions taken by the Government to date.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: Let me say why it is so shameful. Redistribution is a matter of great concern to every Member of Parliament. It is not a matter that is central to any policy or platform outlined by the Government of Canada and time allocation ought only to be imposed with respect to matters that are absolutely essential and central to the policy of the Government. Those matters are very rare because as far as I know, the Government does not have a manifesto or policy to lead the country. It is wandering around in darkness, grasping at straws here and there, trying to pretend that it represents leadership. This matter is not central to the Government but one which is of concern to every constituency in this country and to every Member of Parliament.

We know that in theory the readjustment of political boundaries is a purely technical exercise. It could be considered even more so in this day of high technology when all of the necessary information can simply be fed into a computer. However, Members know that this approach is unacceptable. Although no one wants to see constituency redistribution dealt with in a partisan fashion, we know that the redistribution of boundaries is a highly political issue and a concern to every Member of Parliament. It is of concern to every constituency in this country and an issue that is fraught with many hazards.

I never believed for a moment that the right of Members of Parliament to express their grievances and raise their concerns would be cut off—quillotined—in this objectionable and unworthy fashion. The Government says that it believes in Parliament. Before the Conservatives became Government, I recall when they often talked about their belief in an open Parliament and that Parliament should have the opportunity to express its views. Yet closure is being imposed and debate is being limited on a matter of great concern to individual MPs. The opportunity for Members of Parliament to express their concerns on behalf of their constituents is stifled.

Let me return to the theme about avoiding partisanship in the redistribution of boundaries while at the same time emphasizing that it is a political issue. I use the word "political" in the best sense of the word, being of concern to all citizens. The House will be aware that in 1964 it was the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill who brought in the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act that we are amending today. When the House resumes consideration of this Bill, I want to begin at that point and tell the House where we have moved from that moment and how we have come to this very dark time in the history of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on Today's Order Paper.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consent of the House to permit me to withdraw Bill C-233.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I would like to know exactly what is on the menu this afternoon.

[English]

I would like to know exactly what is going on. I have given my consent to withdraw the Bill of the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) and I have given my consent to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) to withdraw his Bill. I would have preferred to have a package deal and to know exactly what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence to withdraw his Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and Bill C-233 withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether I could have the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with Motion No. 248.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) seeks the unanimous consent of the Chamber to move Motion No. 248 on the Order Paper.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, with your great patience, I will be helpful this afternoon. Again, I would like to know what the full package is that is being proposed to the House. We have given consent to one Member to withdraw a Bill, and we have given consent to another Member to withdraw a Bill. Now we are giving consent to a Member to introduce a motion. Is there something else, Sir? I give my consent so far.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Am I correct in assuming we now have Motion No. 248 on the floor, that the House will proceed to debate the said resolution and that any Member can participate?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I would like to seek unanimous consent to be a joint mover of Motion No. 248.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that Motion No. 248 be put to the House at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At long last we know what is the package deal. First, is that what will be debated this afternoon? Second, will the rules apply, meaning there will be speeches until six o'clock? Or, perhaps we may consent to terminate before six o'clock. Most likely I will give my consent even to terminate before six o'clock. However, I would like to participate in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: With all respect, the Chair is trying to deal with this matter in the order in which the motions are sought.

Mr. Prud'homme: Unusually.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it there is unanimous consent for the introduction of Motion No. 248 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard). I see there is a technical difficulty. I must propose the question.

I take it the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence is seeking the unanimous consent of the House to be indicated at this point as the joint mover of the motion. Is that correct?

Mr. de Corneille: That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give its consent for that procedure?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CITIZENSHIP

ADVISABILITY OF PROCLAIMING RAOUL WALLENBERG AN HONORARY CITIZEN OF CANADA

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval) and Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence) moved, seconded by Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain), that:

Whereas during World War II millions of Jews were exterminated in death camps at the hands of the Nazis in then occupied Europe;

And whereas hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews were facing extermination in 1944 through deportation to Germany under the orders of Adolf Eichmann;

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg as Secretary of the Swedish Legation went to Hungary in the summer of 1944;

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg, with extraordinary courage and with total disregard for the constant danger to himself, saved the lives of almost one hundred thousand innocent Jewish men, women and children, a considerable number of whom now live in Canada;

And whereas the Soviet Union, in violation of Raoul Wallenberg's Swedish diplomatic immunity and of international law, seized him on January 17, 1945, with no explanation ever given for his detention and subsequent imprisonment;

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg has been a prisoner in the Soviet Union since 1945;

And whereas reports from former prisoners in the Soviet Union, as recently as January, 1981, suggest that Raoul Wallenberg is still alive and remains a prisoner;

And whereas history has revealed that heroic acts of salvation were tragically rare during the massacre of millions of innocent human beings during World War II;

And whereas the significance of this symbol of humanity's concern for its fellows has been reduced by the wall of silence that surrounds the fate of Raoul Wallenberg;

Now therefore the House of Commons resolve that the said Raoul Wallenberg is hereby declared to be an honorary citizen of Canada;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the said Resolution by filling in the blank with the words, "Senate and the".

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise in the House today to shepherd the motion to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg to be an honorary citizen of our country, the legendary hero who, jeopardizing his own safety, saved the lives of more than 100,000 Jews towards the end of World War II.

I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Eglington-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) who, like me, worked long hours to introduce this motion. I am particularly grateful to him for agreeing to withdraw his own Bill so as to rally the general support for this new motion. Finally, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who, as spokesman for his Party, supports this motion so that we have unanimous agreement to acknowledge the humanitarian deeds of this heroic man whose exact whereabouts are unknown.

For many of us who did not live through the sufferings of that war and whose knowledge about it came from books or news reports we may have read or seen on this subject, the name of Raoul Wallengberg may wery well be lost in the utter desolation of that tragic conflict. Any yet, to those thousands of Jews who owe their lives to his personal interventions, as to thousands of others, Raoul Wallenberg has always been the epitome of determination, tenacity, courage, stamped with the seal of heroism.

Mr. Speaker, all the merits which Raoul Wallenberg righfully deserves have long since been acknowledged. As early as in 1945, a Svenska Daqbladet editorial writer had this to say about Raoul Wallenberg:

• (1710)

[English]

An eternal glory surrounds his name and his memory. The refugee organization of the United States has also expressed its admiration for his achievement, which is called one of the world's greatest individual performances.

Even more recently, in 1981, Mr. Speaker, he received another honour when the President of the United States, Mr. Ronald Reagan, granted him honorary citizenship, which honour had only been bestowed once before in 200 years of American history, when honorary citizenship was granted to Sir Winston Churchill, during his lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to give a detailed list of all the acts of bravery of Mr. Wallenberg. Everyone has seen the televised series or read the book.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the House so wishes, I would like to move the following motion:

That:

Whereas during World War II millions of Jews were exterminated in death camps at the hands of the Nazis in then occupied Europe:

And whereas hundreds of thousands of Hungarian Jews were facing extermination in 1944 through deportation to Germany under the orders of Adolf Eichmann;

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg as Secretary of the Swedish Legation went to Hungary in the summer of 1944;

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg, with extraordinary courage and with total disregard for the constant danger to himself, saved the lives of almost one hundred thousand innocent Jewish men, women and children, a considerable number of whom now live in Canada;

And whereas the Soviet Union, in violation of Raoul Wallenberg's Swedish diplomatic immunity and of international law, seized him on January 17, 1945, with no explanation ever given for his detention and subsequent imprisonment;

Raoul Wallenberg

And whereas Raoul Wallenberg has been a prisoner in the Soviet Union since 1945;

And whereas reports from former prisoners in the Soviet Union, as recently as January, 1981, suggest that Raoul Wallenberg is still alive and remains a prisoner;

And whereas history has revealed that heroic acts of salvation were tragically rare during the massacre of millions of innocent human beings during World War II;

And whereas the significance of this symbol of humanity's concern for its fellow has been reduced by the wall of silence that surrounds the fate of Raoul Wallenberg;

I therefore move, Mr. Speaker:

That the said Raoul Wallenberg be hereby declared to be an honorary citizen of Canada.

[English]

This year marks the fortieth anniversary of the end of World War II. It would be fitting at this time to pay tribute to the heroic achievements of Raoul Wallenberg. Modern society has already drawn its lesson from history. Today we should look up to Raoul Wallenberg for our inspiration.

By granting honorary citizenship to Raoul Wallenberg, Canada would of course be honouring Mr. Wallenberg himself, but by recognizing his work, Canada would also confirm its commitment to protect human rights and freedoms, to which we all aspire.

[English]

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, it is a very great honour for me to co-sponsor this resolution proclaiming Raoul Wallenberg as an honorary Canadian citizen. It is a great significance that it is sponsored by members of the three Canadian political Parties, and that hopefully it is enjoying the consent of the House of Commons today and will enjoy the consent of the honourable the Senate tomorrow on International Human Rights Day, 1985. I am proud, as a member of the Liberal caucus, to be associated with my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) of the Conservative Party and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) of the New Democratic Party, in sponsoring this resolution. In so doing, we not only enshrine Raoul Wallenberg's name into our Canadian history, but his name will enshrine ours. To paraphrase Abraham Lincoln, the world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it will always remember what Raoul Wallenberg did to salvage the dignity of the human spirit. Still today, much of the world lingers in the darkness of oppression. However, human rights will ultimately prevail and the dawn will surely come. Brightly will it shine upon the tombs of heroes. Thus will shine the dawn.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with other Hon. Members of the House of Commons on this occasion. There are occasions recorded by historians when individuals, without regard for personal safety, put everything on the line for their fellow man. The opportunity for adequate recognition of actions such as these are few, and the sacrifice that goes with such actions is frequently lost in the books which record it. Today, we in the House of Commons have an opportunity to correct or at least to recognize both of those situations.

Raoul Wallenberg, it goes without saying, showed remarkable courage and bravery on behalf of Jews who lived in Hungary during the Second World War. That this is well recorded and documented, no one denies. Today we can recognize his incredible commitment to humanity.

Raoul Wallenberg could have lived in Sweden in a life of relative comfort throughout the Second World War. He need not have faced what he ultimately faced.

This act we propose today is unique and I contend that it is, however, a fitting act. I urge my fellow Members of Parliament to extend to Raoul Wallenberg the highest honour available to us—our desire to share our citizenship.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my comments, I asked a few questions when the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) moved that his Bill be withdrawn.

[English]

It was to withdraw Bill C-234. I will read what was on the Order Paper because I think it is very important in terms of what I would like to say today:

> Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration of Bill C-234, an Act to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg to be an honorary citizen of Canada.

I said that if I had a chance to speak, I would give my consent, and I did. The new rules provide that every Member can give consent or not, unless we change the rules.

Then my colleague from Toronto, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), asked for similar leave from the House in terms of his own Bill. The Order Paper reads:

> Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration of Bill C-233, an Act to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg to be an honorary citizen of Canada, and requesting his return to freedom.

There again I gave my consent. Because I wanted to speak on the Bill, I had prepared myself to do so. Those Bills were to be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. However, I gave my consent, because you are damned if you do and you are damned if you don't. Because I believed so strongly in the day which we will celebrate tomorrow, I thought it would be in bad taste for me not to give my consent. We knew what the debate was to be all about.

The Hon. Member for Laval read his own motion, as did the Chair, so I will not read it. It is similar to the motion presented by my colleague from Toronto. Therefore I will not read his motion.

I have no doubt as to the qualifications of Raoul Wallenberg. Tomorrow, many Canadians just like many colleagues of ours from the three political Parties, will begin to know who Raoul Wallenberg is. People ask who Raoul Wallenberg is. They would like to know more about him so I will say more.

• (1720)

The reason I wanted to send the two Bills standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) and the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) to committee is that for many years, I wanted to find a way to honour people who deserve it, either because they had rendered some service to Canada or because they had worked beyond the call of duty in the cause of human rights. I was going to propose today that we send the Bill to the Committee on Multiculturalism, a new committee, to have it look into how one could be made an honorary Canadian citizen and to consider Mr. Raoul Wallenberg as one of the first recipients of the honour.

Since we were not told this by those who proposed the motions, I will do so. Canadians would like to know that this is a very exceptional gesture on the part of Parliament. This will be the first time ever an honorary Canadian citizenship will be given to someone in the world. We were not told that.

I would like it to be on record that all of what is taking place tonight is supposed to have been debated in each of the three caucuses and debated in the Senate. It was debated in caucus as we were told by the Hon. Member who spoke just before I did. He also said that he already has the assurance that the Senate will give its consent. That means there must have been much agreement before today, much of which I am totally unaware. I would like to be on record saying that I was totally unaware of much of that agreement.

In the few moments left to me, I would like to reflect on what will happen tomorrow, December 10, 1985. I recall that tomorrow is to be Human Rights Day. I recall that many people have spoken on this issue before. It is not a new issue and Canadians should be told that. I would like to put on record some of the history behind the Raoul Wallenberg motion so that people do not feel that they have been taken by surprise.

On October 7, 1980, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence, spoke on behalf of freeing Mr. Wallenberg from the Soviet Union. I would like to render homage to a very fine old colleague of ours, Dr. Stanley Hudecki, the former Hon. Member for Hamilton West, who on November 18, 1980, also raised that issue. I would like to put that on record for those who tomorrow will begin to ask who is Raoul Wallenberg.

On December 10, 1980, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) raised a question as to the fate of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg. On December 18, 1980, the same question was raised by David Smith, a colleague of ours who was defeated, the former Hon. Member for Don Valley East, on Order of the House No. 43.

Canadians will want to know who this person is who will be the first person ever to be made an honorary Canadian citizen. I would have preferred to have had a much larger debate on this issue and a much larger audience because we are about to give what I consider to be one of the best citizenships in the world to this person.

On August 4, 1982, my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), also raised the question of Raoul Wallenberg. Since then, no one has asked to give him Canadian citizenship. Now I come to the words of a very important, fine gentleman, our own Mr. Speaker. I would like to render him homage and read part of what the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) said on May 17, 1984, as recorded on page 3822 of Hansard, in the first mention of offering Raoul Wallenberg Canadian citizenship:

> Mr. Speaker, the League for Human Rights of the B'nai Brith, supported by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Swedish-Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese-Canadian National Council, and the Fédération Internationale des Droits de l'homme, have asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) to declare Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada, and I wish to add my voice in support.

He went on to speak quite well and quite extensively on the matter.

Today my colleague went second. I would like to render him homage because on April 15, my colleague went first by introducing Bill C-233, an Act to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada and requesting his return to freedom. This motion was immediately followed by that of an esteemed colleague of ours, the Hon. Member for Laval, who on April 18, 1985, suggested the same thing. That was the first time we started talking about honouring a foreigner as an honorary Canadian citizen.

I make no secret of the fact that I would have preferred to send the entire matter immediately to a committee of the House with instructions for the committee to inform us of how in the future we should proceed in honouring honorary Canadian citizens and to recommend as one of the first, if the committee so wished, Mr. Raoul Wallenberg. Some people, in their wisdom, decided to proceed otherwise. That is why there was a slight confusion earlier in the debate when we had to ask consent of the House to withdraw a bill, consent of the House to withdraw another Bill, consent of the House to introduce something that could only be introduced at the end of December and consent of the House for something that would have to be introduced again at the end of December. I went along with that, but I would like to be on record, for the benefit of colleagues of mine who may still have some doubt, that I believe very strongly that one of the greatest sicknesses that must be fought continuously is anti-Semitism in the world. If Raoul Wallenberg was able to do what he did, it is because there were people called Nazis who in their fury wanted to dispose of a certain group of people known as those of the Jewish faith. I believe this must be denounced and for that reason, Raoul Wallenberg could qualify as one of the first honorary Canadian citizens.

Having said that, I would like to repeat that I want to know something of which only the House Leader and my two colleagues could inform me. Is this the way we will proceed in the future? When I am not a Member of the House of Commons, others will need to know how to proceed when they want to honour someone as an honorary citizen of Canada. The way to proceed would be to present Bills or motions and to ask for the generous consent of all Members of the House for the great qualification which some people may have in order to proclaim them honorary citizens.

I repeat that I do not oppose the motion which is before the House. I think it would be impossible for me to oppose it, although in reading it I find it difficult to understand why one would want to honour someone by including certain of the divisions which may have taken place. Some people say Raoul Wallenberg is still alive, which is mentioned in the Bill. I also do not think it is necessary to talk about the Soviet Union in a Bill which proposes to honour someone in Canada. To say what he has done would have been sufficient and positive. The anti-Soviet sentiment in the Bill is not my style. I believe we must keep the door open in respect to talks between the two big powers.

If it is true that Raoul Wallenberg is still alive, that he is in prison and that the Soviets know his whereabouts, then there are many ways in which to honour him other than the way which is proposed. However, I am not the master of this place. Each Member has his own way in which to proceed. This is not my way.

I would like to conclude by saying again that tonight I have been asked by Members: Is it the first time we will have a Canadian citizen—

[Translation]

I would like to tell the House that what we are now doing is to honour someone whose actions will be described tomorrow in the newspapers and to honour him not only as an honorary Canadian, but as the first ever honorary citizen of Canada.

[English]

There are only two honorary citizens of the United States. The Americans have used this great gesture only twice. The first time was to proclaim Sir Winston Churchill an honorary citizen. Of course, to me, that concept is universal in the western world. The second time it was utilized was to honour Raoul Wallenberg.

I hope my two colleagues who have proposed this Bill are aware of the hearings which took place before a subcommittee on human rights, part of an international organization connected with the committee on foreign affairs of the House of Representatives in the United States. A person who was saved in Hungary by Raoul Wallenberg when he was 15 years of age later became a congressman in the United States Congress. He is a Congressman for the State of California. He was very diligent in his representations with respect to Raoul Wallenberg. President Reagan signed a Bill with respect to proclaiming Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen.

I was asked several months ago how we in Canada can honour Mother Theresa in a very concrete way for the great work she does. She is alive. We sometimes prefer to honour those who are dead. However, we do not know whether or not

Raoul Wallenberg is dead or alive. I know members of his family are still alive. I know he helped a great many people who are now Canadians. I know some of them. Some of them are Hungarian of Jewish religion who now live in Canada, some in Montreal.

I think Raoul Wallenberg is properly suggested for such an honour. Perhaps the nest time the occasion arises we could look around the world and choose someone in order to show that Canada is a country which stands not only for human rights but that it is a country which does a great deal for its neighbours, as Mother Theresa is doing. To me that is very important.

On the eve of that great day, December 10, I would like Canadians to reflect on what human rights really means. There are too many people in the world who are too selective with respect to coming to someone's defence. Whose human rights are we ready to defend? There are many people who organize groups for the defence of human rights of this and that. On the eve of that great day I think Canadians should reflect not only with respect to the human rights of a group, because there are many, but on the human rights of individuals. Many people have come forward to say that in the Middle East there are issues with respect to human rights which should be raised in the House of Commons. I wish to echo those sentiments here today. I hope that my colleagues in the House will learn that when we talk about human rights we should not be selective. We should talk of human rights in general. When we consider honouring someone we should do so in particular, as the House has done today in honouring Raoul Wallenberg.

I now know the road to follow, and for the information of those Canadians listening and who will read this debate, in order to honour a second or third person as an honorary Canadians, one must go through the House of Commons. One must find a champion in the House of Commons who will put forward a motion. I intend to propose one with respect to Mother Theresa. Then one must ask the permission of one's colleague to withdraw his Bill and then ask the three Parties for unanimous consent. If the case is a bona fide one we can then proclaim the person an honorary citizen. Then, around the world, we can say that in Canada we not only honour our own citizens but people from outside of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Messrs Guy Ricard (Laval) and Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence), seconded by Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain), moved that:

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the said Resolution by filling in the blank with the words, "Senate and the".

Is the motion agreed to?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would suggest that we call it six o'clock. We could proceed with the Adjournment Debate. We have one Parliamentary Secretary here to answer the questions. I would undertake on behalf of the Government to make sure that if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Forrestall) is not here on time, we will certainly make arrangements to accommodate Members who are on the "Late Show" today.

That would be the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS THROUGH TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I wish tonight to take Members back for a few moments to the great Mississauga train derailment of a few years ago. I know that you can recall the time, Mr. Speaker, just as vividly as I can and just as vividly as can the people of Missussauga, the people from Metropolitan Toronto and the people from the areas surrounding Metropolitan Toronto. This was a great jolt to the people of Mississauga, Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding areas.

• (1740)

Before the Mississauga train derailment, there had been on a number of occasions in the past in Canada and in the United States—and, for that matter, in other parts of the world—other catastrophes of this sort where there were chemical spills, explositions, fires and great devastation as a result of train derailments. I suppose we in the Metropolitan Toronto area felt that this kind of thing could never happen to us. Perhaps we were asleep at the switch and were not paying too much attention. But, certainly, the Mississauga train derailment jolted our attention. It caused all of us to reappraise the situation and think for the first time about what could really happen in these cases.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that at the time of the Mississauga derailment we were faced with, first, an explosition, then a fire, then the escaping of chlorine gas which caused the evacuation of a great many people. In fact, 225,000 people in Mississauga were evacuated for a period of some six days. That, of course, changed the way in which the people of Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding area thought about this whole problem. Many citizens immediately became concerned and, as a result, organized a variety of citizen groups to try to deal with the situation and spearhead some changes in the law. Second, they inspired local Government to become concerned enough to try to bring about some changes. Third, the provincial Government was inspired to get involved as well. Finally, of course, pressure was put on the federal Government of the day to investigate the situation to see what could be done.

Out of all that came the Grange Royal Commission of Inquiry which looked into the Mississauga disaster. During its investigation it found a great many individual problems with the transportation of dangerous goods and commodities through the Metropolitan area. One of the major problems it found was that dangerous goods were in effect being shunted back and forth through the heart of Metropolitan Toronto, not for any specific purpose, but just because it was convenient for the train to take the goods through Metro Toronto, bring them back and then, perhaps, take them back and forth three or four times befor they were marshalled on to their ultimate destination, which may have been western Canada.

Out of the Grange Report came a number of recommendations, many of which have already been dealt with. But there is still a major problem because there are still many carloads of dangerous commodities being shunted back and forth through the heart of densely-populated Metropolitan Toronto every day of the year. That is of particular concern to my constituents because the train derailment in Mississauga was only about 30 minutes away from the heart of my constituency. My constituency has the main lines of two of the major railways the CPR and the CNR, running right through the Don Valley which cuts through the middle of my constituency and I suspect there are dangerous goods being transported on those rail lines right at this very moment. Obviously, that is of concern.

The backyards of some of my constituents abut the railway right-of-way and if anything happens they would certainly be in the front line of a disaster. But it is not just the people whose backyards abut this area who have a problem, it is everyone within one or two miles of the area. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, we can have something called a "bleavy" when there is a derailment of a train carrying dangerous goods which causes an explosion that perhaps can cover one or two miles, devastating and wiping out the population in that area.

What can be done about that? There are a number of things which can be done and right now the Toronto Board of Education is doing one of those things, that is, carrying out evacuation drills. It is teaching the children how to evacuate the schools in the event of a spill of chemical materials near a railway track.

There are other things which can be done as well. The speed at which the trains are moving could be slowed down. There could be a rerouting of those trains and in fact a relocating of the rail lines themselves. Recently, there have been a couple of inquiries by the Railroad Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission which is looking into the situation. There was one in Metropolitan Toronto where it was decided that nothing would be done, and another in Vancouver and Victoria where it was decided that as of the 1st of January the transportation of dangerous goods through the high-density areas of Vancouver and Victoria would be banned.

It is time we addressed this problem in Metropolitan Toronto. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on December 4, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) what he was doing about the situation. He indicated in reply that he intended to set up a task force to deal with the problem. That task force, we hope, will be forthcoming before the end of the year. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary tonight will be able to tell us when we are going to have that task force, what the terms of reference will be, whether it is going to deal with the question of rerouting or relocation and whether it will deal with the question of speed.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this is the Christmas season. It is the season of hope, and I trust that the Parliamentary Secretary will give us hope tonight for a safer 1986. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the citizen groups which has been dealing with this matter in Metropolitan Toronto, MTRAC, or the Metropolitan Toronto Residents Action Committee, is looking for some answers, as are all of the people in Metropolitan Toronto, and I trust that we will hear those answers from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. colleague's remarks. I would like to take notice of his comments. Six p.m. came rather sooner than we had expected this evening and, unfortunately, the Parliamentary Secretary could not be here at this time. However, we will definitely take notice of the remarks and give an answer back to my colleague.

In view of the fact that our colleagues opposite who had given notice that they wanted to ask a question on the Adjournment Debate are not here, although the Parliamentary Secretary is here to answer one of the questions, I suggest that we will co-operate with the Table in rescheduling tonight's Adjournment Debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.48 p.m.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), may I say that since today is the last day of supply the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply Bill. In view of our practices, may I have the consent of the House to distribute the supply Bill now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to this opposition motion. I wish to preface my remarks by saying that I do so with a degree of sadness, a sadness brought on by the terrible economic plight with which those of us who live in Atlantic Canada are presently confronted. It is a serious situation, serious enough that it has caused various politicians of different political stripes to condemn the national Government for what I believe is an abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada.

Those of us who are elected to this Chamber bear a heavy responsibility, a responsibility which we must seriously accept. In accepting it seriously we must be able to stand in the Chamber and, I believe, stand for our regions. This is, in fact, the essence of Confederation. Canadians in the Atlantic provinces have grown to expect the best health care possible. They have grown to expect an opportunity to work in their own region. Yes, they believe it is their right under the Constitution and under previous Parliaments to be able to acquire a good education which does not leave them at a disadvantage when compared with other Canadians. To borrow a phrase from Aristotle:

If liberty and equality are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons share in the Government to the utmost.

For all men and women to be truly equal there must be economic and social equality. It is with this particular thought in mind that, some years ago, my Party created the Department of Regional Economic Expansion as a cornerstone of national public policy to provide opportunities to those of us who live in the Atlantic region. There is no Member on either side of the House who would say that it was implemented without any flaws. There were flaws. However, it was a real attempt to eradicate, if you will, some of the economic disadvantages in the country.

The present policies of this national Government in Ottawa can best be described, as I have said before in the Chamber, as being akin to the trickle-down theory of economics. It is thought that somehow the economies of Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa will create sufficient wealth that it will trickle down to the hinterland of the country. The fact is that that philosophy which pre-dated Mr. Diefenbaker did not work then and it will not work now.

I pose two questions for Hon. Members to consider. First, can and should the federal Government wash its hands of direct responsibility for job creation? Second, is community preservation or place prosperity the sole concern of local and provincial Governments? I think the answers to those two questions are obvious to those who have watched and witnessed the policies of this national Government. It does not believe that as a national Government it has the responsibility to protect community life throughout the country. Nor does the Government believe, because it has not put in place policies with regard to job creation in Atlantic Canada, that it should. In fact, it has been said by one of the centralist Premiers that the job strategy program of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is fundamentally flawed. The facts which I will share with Hon. Members in a moment will show that to be the case.

My sentiments as expressed here this morning are not of a partisan nature. The sentiments which I express are shared by the Premier of Newfoundland, the Premier of New Brunswick and, yes, not by the Premier of Nova Scotia but by his Minister of Development. Here is what he said a few days ago when addressing a group in Halifax:

Is there anyone up there who will speak for the hinterland . . . who will give so much of a voice to regional problems and legitimate desires as was given in the heat of an election campaign?

That is a quotation from the Hon. Roland Thornhill, Minister of Development for the Province of Nova Scotia. He, too, recognizes that the disparities in the country are not closing. In fact, they are increasing in number and growing in length.

Atlantic Canadians feel adrift. They feel they are left to drift by this Government, which they have catalogued as an elitist and centralist Government which believes its constituency to be that of The financial Post 500. The facts bear this out. In Nova Scotia the rate of unemployment is stuck at 13.6 per cent. In New Brunswick 15 per cent of the workforce cannot find jobs. In the past year Prince Edward Island has seen its level of unemployment rise over 3 percentage points to 16.3 per cent. In Newfoundland the rate is 19.5 per cent. However, that does not tell the whole story. Unemployment in western Newfoundland has shot up from the unacceptable level of 20.7 per cent a year ago to 22.9 per cent last month. Northern New Brunswick has been rewarded by the Tory Party with an increase in the jobless rate from 18.2 per cent to 19.1 per cent. My own constituency in the Island of Cape Breton has seen its unemployment level in 12 short months go up from 19.1 per cent to 24.6 per cent. There have been 4,000 people added to the unemployment roll in 12 months.

Has this been raised only by a Member of Parliament in the Opposition for the benefit of the House? What have other individuals said? I would like to quote a statement made in 1976:

> It is beyond my comprehension how any government can restrain expenditures in an area of the country which has an unemployment rate of 13.9 per cent. It is in fact positively cruel and inhuman for any government to apply the restraint policy equally across this country as though every section of it is the same. It may be a policy of restraint that is quite active for provinces like Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan perhaps where there are now high unemployment figures, but it is not proper to apply it blindly to Newfoundland which has an unemployment rate of almost 14 per cent.

That statement was not made by myself. It was made by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). But that Minister now has the audacity to sit in Cabinet in this Government and watch the unemployment rate in his own province go from 14 per cent up to in excess of 20 per cent.

We saw this type of attitude in the previous Government of 1979 and we saw this attitude prior to 1968. We know what the Canadian people in Atlantic Canada did to that Government when it came to re-election. I ask sincerely, Mr. Speaker, where is the federal representation in the Cabinet of the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Nunziata: There isn't any.

Mr. Dingwall: Are they asleep or are they grossly negligent?

Mr. Nunziata: Both.

Mr. Dingwall: I have to say with conviction, with sincerity, and with the facts as evidence thus far, that the case is obvious. The Government is grossly negligent, insensitive and it has abandoned the people of Atlantic Canada.

I would like to talk about transfer payments for a moment, if I may. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a decision to cut $2 billion from transfer payments. He used weasel words at the First Ministers' conference, but it was not good enough. The Premier of New Brunswick zeroed in on the effects these cuts in transfer payments would have on the Atlantic region, and they will affect hospital care and post-secondary education. For Members of Parliament to suggest otherwise, is wrong. It is wrong, in fact, because it will be devastating to those of us who live in Atlantic Canada. The Finance Minister of New Brunwsick denounced the unilateral decision of the Minister of Finance by saying: "I think we will come to a time when we realize that the honeymoon is over. Federal-provincial relations have to be on the basis of fairness and equity". Yet the Minister of Finance, aided and abetted by the Prime Minister and his Cabinet, unilaterally expedited cut-backs in transfer payments.

The Premier of Ontario at the First Ministers' conference said: "These cuts which were announced without consultation, speeded up by a year without discussion, will weaken our country in the very areas where we must martial our greatest strengths". When the Minister of Finance sat in opposition, he condemned the six and five program as predatory federalism. All of a sudden we find it is not a short-term measure which we implemented some years ago, it is a fact. It is a fact with which the provinces are going to have to live until the end of the decade.

Then there is the commitment made by the Prime Minister on July 26 of 1984 when he said, and I quote:

> A PC Government is committed to respect the federal obligation to fund provincial health care through Established Programs Financing, and make additional funds available to the provinces on a cost shared basis for the establishment or enrichment of programs being most likely to improve the general level of health and limit long-term costs. This determination to be made following a national conference of Health Ministers and health care professionals.

That is what our Prime Minister said in July of 1984. He was committed then but he is not committed now. When I say that this Government has abandoned the people of Atlantic Canada, the evidence is clear and unequivocal.

The equalization payments do not touch each and every province in the same way. We in Atlantic Canada, because of our history, our geography and our small population base, have had to depend upon the federal Government to provide the necessary moneys for the necessity of life. There is nothing wrong with that. There is nothing immoral about providing Canadians in that particular region with the opportunity to have the basic services of life, just as the federal Government has provided, through the John A. Macdonald policy, tariffs and regulations for central Canada. Government after government has provided the Auto Pact for central Canada. The national Government has provided billions upon billions of dollars for the western farmers. All of this is good, Mr. Speaker, and ought not to be denounced, but the Atlantic provinces will feel the cut-backs in transfer payments the most. As parliamentarians we mistakenly think that only provincial Governments will be affected. In fact, we are cutting back on services to people who live in Halifax and to people who reside in Moncton, Shediac, Corner Brook, and Summerside, P.E.I., because their municipalities will have to cut back.

Today on the front page of The Chronicle Herald it says: "Municipalities hope to head off 'severe squeeze' ". The President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities said that he fears municipalities will be the ultimate financial losers as Ottawa goes ahead with plans to cut the level of transfer payments to the provinces beginning early next year.

In a weak economic region like Atlantic Canada the effect of the national Government unilaterally terminating moneys to the citizens will be real, obvious, and immediate. There is no fairness, Mr. Speaker. That is not what the Constitution says under Section 36. Members opposite who were here for the debate on the Constitution will recall what that section says. It talks about equal opportunity for all Canadians, regardless in which region of the country they live. I am ashamed that the national Government is pursuing that route. I am ashamed of the Government Members of Parliament and, from my perspective of, the weakest federal cabinet representation from Atlantic Canada in the history of Canada.

The Government may want to laugh and try to push aside the effect of the role of the national Government, whether in terms of transfer payments or regional economic development. However, I will read a few lines to give Hon. Members a better appreciation. This is what they say:

> The federal Government's presence in the region, along with transfer payments, have also contributed substantially to closing the gap with the national average on a number of fronts in the provision of public services. For example, between 1962 and 1979 the Atlantic provinces moved considerably closer to the national average in health and education expenditures. Newfoundland, for example, now has a per capita education expenditure level within 7 percentage points of the national average. In the health field, its per capita spending moved from 46 per cent of the national average to 81 per cent in the same period.

If those are not clear, unequivocal facts with regard to the importance of transfer payments to the Canadian mosaic, I do not know what is.

It does not stop there, Mr. Speaker. With regard to transportation, Bill C-75 singles out Atlantic Canadians to bear the brunt of cost increases. What about the federal Department of Regional Industrial Expansion? There was a $450 million cut in that Department, and now there is another $2 billion cut-back by the national Government. Where is the equity and fairness? There is no fairness. That is clear and obvious. I could go on with program after program. Housing has been absolutely devastated.

Let me conclude by asking what the Government has done. I opened my remarks by referring to the trickle-down theory of economic for Toronto, Montreal, and Ottawa. The Government has lived up to that. It provided a $500,000 capital gains tax for the wealthy in the country. It provided a $2 billion bonanza for the multinational oil companies. Because of its incompetence, it has provided a $1 billion bonanza for our banks. The Government is going to build a $500 million ship. That, in my view, is a totally wasteful expenditure. The Government has increased taxes for low and middle income Canadians who will be paying an additional $1,500 by 1990. The Government tried but failed, because of the persistence of this Party, to cut the pensions of our senior citizens.

The motion is clear and unequivocal. The facts are clear and unequivocal. The action and lack of action by the Government is clear to the people of Atlantic Canada. The Government has abandoned the people of Atlantic Canada and has not demonstrated any political will to create the jobs and economic opportunities that Canadians have a right to expect.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short comment. I must congratulate the hon. gentleman on his speech and on his motion, which reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of the political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

While the Hon. Member was speaking I was thinking about the gross negligence to which he referred. I was informed this morning that the Government of Newfoundland has made representation to the federal Government that it would pay for the mothballing of the Come-by-Chance oil refinery. In a private communication to the federal Government, the Government of Newfoundland said that, if required, the people of Newfoundland will pay the entire cost to the Government of Canada, through Petro-Canada, to mothball that refinery to prevent a contract being awarded by Petro-Canada to scrap it.

The hon. gentleman mentioned the signing of agreements. Under the Atlantic Accord we have only until February 11 to get industrial capacity in place because that is the trigger date for that agreement. We are supposed to see a Bill in the House but we have not seen it or any notice of it. Just imagine the Newfoundland Government having to suggest that it will use the money of Newfoundland taxpayers to mothball a refinery! Petro-Canada has informed the Minister that it does not want to do that but wants to scrap the refinery. In the same proposition communicated privately to the federal Government yesterday the Government of Newfoundland said that it would be willing to buy the refinery if all else fails.

This certainly drives home the point of gross negligence which the Hon. Member made. He said that there has been no responsibility shown by the Government and that there has been a lack of attention. As the hon. gentleman asked, where is the federal representation? Will the Hon. Member tell us where the federal representation is that we are supposed to have from Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief comment and then try to answer the Hon. Member's question. He must understand that the national Government is not putting forward its policies by accident, but rather by design. It is very clear what those policies are.

The Government wants the people of Atlantic Canada to migrate out because this is a centralist, elitist Government. The Government wants several communities in the country to form what it believes to be the new Canadian mosaic. People in Newfoundland do not really count as far as the Government is concerned. People in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and P.E.I. do not count because such are the social policies of the Government. If you cannot get a job in Atlantic Canada in the private sector, you go to Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa. The policy thrust is to have the people migrate out, and this was designed purposely rather than by accident. Unfortunately, those so-called representatives from Atlantic Canada, whether they be back-bench MPs with very little to say about economic policy, or cabinet Ministers, are not prepared to stand up for our region.

The representation that I condemn has also been condemned by the Nova Scotia Minister of Development, a Tory Minister. He has castigated his federal MPs for not doing their jobs. It could not be any clearer than what came from the First Ministers' conference, that is, that nothing for the region was recommended by those Members in either the November, 1984 statement or the May 23 Budget. There is no representation, none whatsoever, just bodies.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member why he was not making these representations when he was sitting on the Government side of the House in the presence of two former Premiers from Atlantic Canada and two in the other place. These representations were not made at that time when there should have been competent representation from those Members on that side when they were sitting here. Why did he not mention in his remarks this morning that the payments to various funds benefiting Atlantic Canada were increased in the Budget by $500 million when compared to the Budget presented at the time he sat on the Government side of the House, supported by, we presume, four former Premiers of Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman might want to review some press clippings and speeches I have made with regard to development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. McCain: When you were in Government.

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps he would avail himself of that opportunity if he would like to take the time. As well, I was on the record very clearly when we brought in legislation regarding changes to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. I said very clearly, like my colleague from Egmont, that those changes ought to be reviewed on a 12-month basis, and if it is not working, it should be scrapped. That is what we said when we were in the Government. If there were mistakes made in the past to which the Hon. Member has alluded, then for God's sake—

Mr. McCain: You made them.

Mr. Dingwall: —do not make the same mistakes. Two wrongs do not make a right. The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. He talks about increments in transfer payments.

Mr. McCain: Half a billion.

Mr. Dingwall: Half a billion. That is not going to suit your province, which will have a $17 million cut-back in transfer payments. It will not suit the Province of Nova Scotia, which will have to resort to user-fees in its hospitals and will have to jack up tuition fees in its universities, fees which are already the highest in Canada. It is painfully obvious from the question coming from the Hon. Member that there is no representation on the federal side. That is very clear from the question he raises and from its tone.

Mr. Jardine: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment. It is difficult to sit here and listen to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) make such broad-brush statements on Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Dingwall: They are the facts.

Mr. Jardine: Broad-brush statements. It is very difficult to do so without making reference to my own particular riding. That Member is the spokesman for a Liberal Government which wanted to close Canadian Forces Base Chatham. However, it was this Government, of which I am a member, that saved that base and some 350 jobs. Had that base been closed there would have been a decrease in the population of my riding of some 3,000 people.

He also talks about inaction on the part of this Government of 15 months while overlooking the inaction of his Government, certainly in my riding, for the past 16 years. Over the last 12 months housing starts in my riding have been up 187 per cent. That was unknown in the past 16 years. I could go on and on but I know you want to give the Hon. Member time for rebuttal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Very short rebuttal, please.

Mr. Dingwall: I guess it is fitting that that Hon. Member at least rises in his place and poses a question.

Mr. Boudria: For the first time.

Mr. Dingwall: Not necessarily the first time, probably the second. However, it is good to have him raise a question. He talks about his constituency but fails to mention it is his Government which refuses to act on the proposal we put forward regarding Renous, New Brunswick. However, I am not suggesting he would like to mislead the House in the broadside he just delivered. It is also particularly fitting for this Member to have asked a question because he wanted to deindex family allowances. It was his Party who was in favour of deindexing senior citizens' pensions. However, is this Hon. Member now standing in his place and saying that the Premier of New Brunswick is wrong when he says the federal Government has cut back on regional economic development and is cutting back on transfer payments? Is that what the Hon. Member is trying to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have looked forward to participating in this debate on the motion put forward by my colleague from Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Boudria: A very distinguished colleague.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, a very distinguished and articulate colleague. He has certainly pointed out the very severe situation in Atlantic Canada under this Government.

Consideration of this motion condemning the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada is certainly very appropriate given the situation today and what we have seen in the last few months. We in Atlantic Canada of course are fearful of what this Government holds in store for our region. I know some of my Atlantic colleagues on the other side also share our concern because they, too, go back to their ridings and regions on the weekends and I am sure their constituents are telling them exactly what they are telling us.

We in Atlantic Canada are facing a desperate situation. We come from a region which is very rich in history, culture and tradition. We have been proud, of course, of our accomplishments over the last number of years. We are equally proud of our way of life. We are very proud people when it comes to earning a living from the land and the sea. However, we who live in Atlantic Canada have found things extremely difficult in this last year or so. Conservative policies and priorities are not designed to foster prosperity in the Maritime provinces.

We see this Government reacting and responding to the needs of big business. Our area of the country does not have big businesses such as we see in Toronto, Montreal and some of the western provinces. Most of the businesses in our area employ from 3 to a maximum of 200 people, although very few businesses employ 200 people.

The Government's policies do not respect our heritage and life-style. As the Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) stated, the Government's policies are likely to shrink our communities and our population. In my opinion, its policies will certainly not enrich our communities.

What does one do if one cannot find a job in one's home town or home province? I assume the Government is telling the young men and young women of this country that they should find a job elsewhere, in Ontario or out West. We went through that syndrome in the 1940s and 1950s. I was one of those who experienced it. I had to leave home at 16 years of age and hitch-hike to Toronto in order to find a job because there were no jobs in my region of my province. If I was able to find a job it was only for $2 a day and I have the documentation to prove it. Furthermore, I was probably more fortunate than many others because I was single male.

While we are obviously not working for $2 a day any more, wages have not improved very much in Atlantic Canada since then. It is not so much a question of money as the fact that there is no way to earn a living.

The private sector in Atlantic Canada is not a dominant force as it is in the rest of Canada. The Government must recognize this fact because it also applies to areas like northern Ontario and parts of the Province of Quebec. Not all of us live in the Mecca of the golden triangle in this country. My friend opposite, the chairman of the Quebec caucus, is nodding his head in approval because he understands what I am trying to say.

Neither was the Province of Alberta always prosperous. I remember working in northern Alberta for very little money in the 1960s. However, at least I could find a job there. That is not the situation today.

As the Member of Parliament for Egmont, I receive many letters from my constituents and meet literally hundreds of people who come to my office looking for jobs. The Government's job creation strategy is not accomplishing what we want in Atlantic Canada. Let me read a letter that I received on November 16 from one of my constituents. It states:

Dear Mr. Henderson,

I am writing you concerning the unemployment problem in our district. I have been unemployed for one year. My U.I. benefits are running out at the end of the month.

I have been looking for work for one year and have not had any results. Most of the feedback I have received is that most of the projects are only for those receiving social assistance and therefore I am not available for work.

This bothers me very much as I am very willing to work and I cannot. I would like to know how you feel about this serious problem in our West Prince district as well as our country, and what else can I do?

I would appreciate if you would answer my letter. Thank you.

Sincerely,
Linda Ellis.

That letter is from Oleary, P.E.I.

That is one example of what is happening in my region. I am glad to see my colleague from the opposite side, the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns), in the House. If we wants to admit it, I am sure he would agree that the situation is the same in his riding. The tobacco farmers were here yesterday demonstrating their plight. The farmers in my province are selling potatoes for 2 cents a pound, which is 3 cents to 3.5 cents a pound below the cost of production.

This weekend I witnessed something which I have never seen in my life. A farmer in my area went to a small general grocery store to deliver potatoes. He took in a 50 pound bag of potatoes for which the grocer paid him $1.20. That is 2 cents a pound, plus 20 cents for the paper bag bearing the name "Product of P.E.I.". That farmer was accompanied by his 9 year old son, who wanted a couple of chocolate bars at the store. The farmer bought the chocolate bars for his son and it cost him $1.20. I believe that puts the situation faced by farmers in this country and in my province into perspective.

The Government must do something about this. We are not here to act on a partisan basis because we must do the very best we can for the people who need the most help. We must point out to the Government that it is not addressing the real issues. It does not understand the plight of the farmer in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It does not understand the employment situation.

Last month unemployment in my province went up two points, from 13.3 per cent to 15.3 per cent. While that is a provincial unemployment rate, I guarantee that the unemployment rate in my riding and in the riding of the Hon. Member for Cardigan is 30 per cent. There are communities in my riding consisting of 80 or 90 people not one of whom is working. Thankfully, most of them are receiving unemployment insurance. However, the Government is conducting a witch-hunt into the unemployment insurance program. It has a committee that is travelling to Atlantic Canada to discuss the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The Premier of New Brunswick made a statement to that committee and pointed out very clearly what the impact of tampering with UIC regulations would be on Atlantic Canada. The only alternative to UIC in Atlantic Canada would be outright welfare.

What is the purpose behind the Government's policy? I am pleased that two cabinet Ministers from Atlantic Canada are in the House today to listen to our opinions. Since they are in a position of power with the Government, I hope they will attempt to persuade Treasury Board and their cabinet colleagues that we are correct in saying that there is a serious situation in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. They are the representatives of Atlantic Canada in a position of power. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) was a former cabinet Minister in the New Brunswick Government. He has provincial experience, as I have. He understands the difficulty provincial Governments have when the federal Government tries to cut back on transfer payments. I would like to hear the Minister tell me and tell this House today whether the cut-backs in transfer payments are going to hurt New Brusnwick, as his former Premier has indicated. I challenge him to do so. If he does not say it will hurt, he is not telling the truth, or the Premier of New Brunwisck is not telling the truth. I believe what the Premier of New Brunswick is saying is correct.

I know the Minister of State for Forestry will rise in his place today and state unequivocally that the proposed reduction in transfer payments is nothing more than shifting the tax burden from the federal Government to the provincial Governments and ultimately to the taxpayers of Atlantic Canada who will have to pay more. That is the bottom line. It does not matter to whom you have to pay taxes, it is the amount you have to pay that counts. If the federal Government is not meeting its commitments to the provinces and it is not meeting its commitments through the provinces to the municipalities, then the services Atlantic Canadians receive will have to be taxed, either transferred from the federal Government to the provincial Government or to the municipalities. That is what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) elaborately pointed out earlier.

I come now to cut-backs. In my province, living on an island similar to that of Newfoundland, we have the problem of transportation. We cannot get into our automobiles and drive from Halifax to Vancouver without paying a toll.

It is bad enough for the Government to increase ferry rates to Prince Edward Island, which in turn increases costs in agriculture, fishing and tourism, but these increases hit the ordinary Prince Edward Islander who wants to be part, and is part, of this country. In my opinion, he is discriminated against because that person from Prince Edward Island has to pay to go to Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick or to Pictou, Nova Scotia. Not only are the costs increasing rapidly but the service is deteriorating.

The Government, instead of doing something, changes the name of a Department or of a Crown corporation to make it look as though it were the Government's. CN Marine is now going to be Marine Atlantic, or something like that. It is the same thing. Changing the name will not make any difference. The same charges and the same deterioration in service will occur.

CN Marine has laid off 40 employees just recently. We have cut-backs everywhere we look, a job here and a job there in the Public Service. Atlantic Canadians can no longer stand that. The Government has to get wise, and the two cabinet Ministers sitting over there have to be the ones to make the Government listen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: They are the ones, Mr. Speaker. We have only one economic portfolio in Atlantic Canada.

An Hon. Member: Half of one.

Mr. Henderson: Yes, half of one, because it is the Minister of State for Forestry who has a budget under the Minister of Agriculture. I suppose that in some way you cannot really say we do not have at least one economic portfolio.

Here is an area about which something should be done by this Government. Someone has to be around in the corridors of power in order to point out these things clearly and directly to the new Government. It is obvious that the people we face here every day in the few front benches along with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) do not understand what we are trying to get across. They do not understand the plight of the fishermen in Newfoundland, or else they would have put another $100 million into the small craft harbours instead of cutting the fishery budget. If the Government had understood, it would not have abused user fees on agricultural products nor would it have increased gasoline prices and ferry rates or allowed a deterioration in service brought about by the decrease in crossings. The Government should understand what real Atlantic Canadians are thinking and saying.

I can tell you there will be a judgment day, Mr. Speaker, for those Members of Parliament from Atlantic Canada on the Government side, and it may come a lot quicker than they think. I can tell you that the people in Cape Breton, the people in Nova Scotia, including Halifax, and the people of New Brunswick are telling me that they are embarrassed by the kind of representation they are getting here in Ottawa.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Henderson: I could go on, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I know, but we now have questions and comments.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) who is the only Member from Prince Edward Island representing Prince Edward Island's interests in this Parliament. Would the Hon. Member avail himself of the opportunity to explain the problem of potato inspection fees? Perhaps he could take a few minutes of our time because it is an important issue.

We have heard in this House from the Member on previous occasions that the added cost of potato inspection fees on Prince Edward Island, in view of the present economic circumstances of that industry, is devastating for Prince Edward Island's potato farmers.

While the Hon. Member is on his feet, would he indicate to the House whether this issue of potato inspection fees is a partisan issue? Or does it transcend Party politics? For instance, does the Premier of Prince Edward Island agree with the principle of potato inspection fees? Would the Hon. Member care to elaborate on those two items?

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for his question and remark. First, I must say that the Premier of Prince Edward Island and his Minister of Agriculture have been on record as opposing user fees or inspection fees for potatoes. Indeed, the Legislature of the Province of Prince Edward Island was unanimously opposed to such inspection fees. I cannot however say on a number of issues whether the Province of Prince Edward Island was against some of the other user fees that have been implemented by the Government over the last year or year and a half. Politicians there are the same as we are. Politicians represent people and they should be getting the message.

As far as the provincial Government of Prince Edward Island is concerned, it got a clear message in the recent by-election. People are not happy with its performance inasmuch as two Members from the Liberal Party were elected to represent them. I am not sure whether it was totally as a result of inaction by the Province of Prince Edward Island, or whether it was due to some of the penalties which the federal Government placed on the backs of Prince Edward Islanders. I suspect quite strongly—and this is certainly what the people are telling the provincial Government and me—that the federal Government in Ottawa, which happens to be of the same tripe as that provincial Government, is not listening to Prince Edward Islanders. They certainly must be getting the message.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to meet the challenge of those people who indicated that I would not get to my feet to speak on this particular debate. I certainly welcome the opportunity to correct some of the impressions which have been left in the House. I listened to the sweeping—

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Minister knows that this is the period for questions and comments. There are still five minutes or six minutes remaining for questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech. I hope he is not entering into debate at this time.

Mr. Merrithew: No, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to make some comments. I have listened to the sweeping generalizations and the condemnations. One might ask the question: Where were they when their Party was in power in the House? I was on the receiving end of the rancour, hatred and antagonism shown by the previous Government toward all provinces in Canada. I sat through many meetings and I watched the way in which that Government treated the provincial Governments.

Yesterday, I had the privilege of signing, on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), a $30 million industrial development agreement. In case those Liberal Members do not think that this is very much, the daily newspaper today in New Brunswick indicated that it was $30 million for the New Brunswick industry.

I happened to be the Minister of Commerce and Development when the previous agreement ran out—not last year, not the year before, nor the year before that, but in 1980. As hard as we tried to get the previous Government to sign a new agreement, it refused to do so.

Mr. Mayer: Shame on them.

Mr. Merrithew: The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) indicated that he was in favour of small business. We in New Brunswick know what small business is all about. We developed the best small industry financial assistance program in Canada. In 1980, the previous Government let it lapse and said: "If you don't like it, lump it". The poor Province of New Brunswick had to pick up the cost of that industrial development program.

Hon. Members have referred to unemployment this morning. Between 1980 and 1984, there was not one net job increase in Atlantic Canada, certainly not in the Province of New Brunswick. At least, in the past year, we have created 14,000 new jobs in the Province of New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Merrithew: Perhaps the Hon. Member should have it drawn to his attention, as was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Jardine), that Saint John had one of the highest rate of new housing starts in Canada this year.

I do not know how the Liberal Party, that opposition Party, can have the audacity and gall to talk about forestry when it has not had the decency to ask even one question of the Minister of State for Forestry in the House in the past 15 months. When we assumed power 15 months ago, the previous Government had in place about a quarter of a billion dollars in forestry agreements. We now have $1,057 million worth of agreements with the provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Minister has completed his comments, does he have a question?

Mr. Merrithew: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question. I would like them to comment upon the unemployment figures. Have they read the Statistics Canada figures which were released on Friday, the figures indicating that unemployment was down in New Brunswick? Perhaps the Hon. Member for Egmont could respond to that.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am going to answer him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, that is fine. Just one moment, please. I have extended the time by a few minutes for the Hon. Member because of the Minister's comments. I would like to hear every Member from that particular area comment and ask questions, but there are only so many minutes allowed for each Hon. Member.

An Hon. Member: That would be fine, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Not at this moment.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased to respond to those comments. I am glad that I was able to get the Minister to his feet, because we have not heard a thing from him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: As far as asking him a question is concerned, he is really only in charge of the forestry service. My gosh, he is a glorified bureaucrat with a chauffeur; that is all he is.

The Minister referred to the unemployment figures. He should read the latest statistics, which indicate that in new Brunswick unemployment is up and that in Prince Edward Island it is up by two percentage points. Does the Minister read what is going on? What about the CNR lay-offs in the Moncton ships? What is happening there? Is the Minister saying anything about that? His colleagues are trying to get something going. Why is he not fighting the battle for them? He is asleep at the wheel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes).

Mr. Henderson: While the Minister is running around cutting ribbons, I would like him to comment upon the frigate program in Saint John.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When we started the debate this morning, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) stood, and the Conservatives were asleep at the switch. The Hon. Member from Charlottetown was not on his feet; he was sitting on his fanny. I think the Chair should recognize someone in this Party—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member will be recognized following the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes).

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely delighted to enter into this debate.

Mr. Nunziata: It is about time.

Mr. McInnes: This is the first opportunity. I am also delighted to associate myself with the remarks of the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew). He is the first Minister responsible for forestry in the Government of Canada in 20 years in recognition of the fact that forestry is the number one industry and a major employer in Canada. I cannot understand where our friends opposite were when they were in a position to appoint a Minister responsible for forestry.

Mr. Merrithew: It was neglected.

Mr. McInnes: Yes, it was a resource which was neglected for far too long.

Mr. Tobin: He is a Minister of State who works for John Wise.

Mr. Dingwall: He is a phantom; he is here but he is not all there.

Mr. McInnes: Our Government is ensuring that this very valuable resource will receive the detailed attention which it deserves.

Mr. Nunziata: The lights are on but nobody is home.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If there are questions and comments, Hon. Members can wait until after the Minister has finished.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the interest of keeping the record straight—and we want to listen carefully to what the Minister is saying—would he please refer to the Minister by his proper title, which is Minister of State reporting to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise)?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that is a point of order, but go ahead.

Mr. McInnes: I must confess, at the outset, that I will not be able to shout as loudly as my friend from Cape Breton-East Richmond. However, I hope the quality of my remarks will testify to the attitude and performance of the Government of the last 14 years, relative to the motion before the House.

I am very pleased to note that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has finally come out of the bottle. It is as though he has been encapsulated for the period of time he has been sitting in Parliament. Let the record show that he was a Parliamentary Secretary in the previous Government. I made inquiries as to the volume and effectiveness of any arguments which he advanced. Did he advance those particular suggestions to his colleagues when they had the opportunity to act?

• (1210)

Mr. Tobin: All the time.

Mr. McInnes: I can only conclude that that was not the case because the evidence indicates that the Hon. Member and his colleagues indeed failed Atlantic Canada. Albeit there were two temporary interruptions, we are left with the result of 23 years of mismanagement, neglect and abdication of responsibility by those who had the opportunity to do something.

The way our friends used to deal with the problems in Atlantic Canada was pretty much the way they dealt with problems in the rest of Canada. That is what the people of Canada rejected in 1984. The people said that they had had enough.

In the olden days, when we were nearing election time our friends would say that they would initiate programs to help Canadians and Atlantic Canadians. What did they do? They threw some money here, they threw some money there, they painted pretty pictures and they built some buildings. However, what did they do for the long-term viability of Atlantic Canada? Nothing, Mr. Speaker. The situation today is that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are 80 per cent dependent on Government revenues. Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are 90 per cent dependent on government revenues. For 23 years, there was an erosion of the creativity, willingness, capital and dedication required to make Atlantic Canada a full partner in Confederation. This was not always so.

At the time of Confederation, as the Minister of State for Forestry will know, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were two of the wealthiest provinces in Canada. Nova Scotia was the fourth largest trading partner in all of the world. What has happened since that time? There has been an abdication of responsibility on the part of the Government. There has been an erosion in the climate necessary to encourage private capital in Atlantic Canada, private capital that would create jobs and make manufacturing industries available in order to sustain long-term growth.

In 1984, the new Government decided that the ad hoc policies of our friends had obviously not done the job. In 1983-84, the federal Government awarded 29 federal grants to the Province of Nova Scotia. I would like to tell the House of the way those grants were administered in Nova Scotia. Of those 29 grants, 23 were given to the Cape Breton riding represented by the then Deputy Prime Minister. Every single one of those 23 grants went to the particular town in which he resided.

What was the reaction of the people of Canada to that? They said: "Thank you very much, we appreciated your effort, but you have done nothing for us. What have we got to show for it? What manufacturing industries do we have which will produce jobs for the long term? What infrastructure have you created which will minimize the everlasting, long-term, predicted unemployment rate to which we have been subjected?" The people asked where the grants were for Yarmouth, Bridgewater, Guysborough and Amherst. There were none. They all went to the riding of the then Deputy Prime Minister, obviously to no avail.

Mr. Tobin: That's untrue.

Mr. McInnes: I forgot. The riding of my friend, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton East Richmond, also received two of the 29 grants, and the other four were given to other parts of the province.

My friend is berating this Government because in 14 months it has not waved the magic wand and created 100 per cent employment. That is not our objective. The Government could create many more jobs overnight by throwing away money for three-week, six-week and 12-week projects as did the former Government. However, at the end of those periods of time to which those particular programs were directed, the people would be back on the dole. That is the reason for the captivity to subsidies which forms part of Atlantic Canada.

I would emphasize that Atlanticc Canada is absolutely dependent on Government revenues. Because of that, the people of Canada said: "No more, you have to try something else". Indeed, that is what this Government has undertaken. The objective statistics are there to show that the proof is in the pudding.

Interest rates are down 3 per cent. Investment intentions are up by 22 per cent and in Atlantic Canada they are up by 14 per cent. The unemployment rate is down by 1 per cent and the employment rate is up by 3 per cent. When there are 53 per cent more housing starts this year than last, when retail purchases are up by 27 per cent and when small businesses in Nova Scotia indicate that they are going to make 24 per cent more capital expenditures than they did last year and create 42 per cent more jobs in the next year, that is an indication that the people have adopted the policies of the Government, policies on which they can rely because they know that they will not be changed in the middle of the game. The people recognize that we are creating a climate of confidence in order to induce investors, not only from the Atlantic provinces but from all over, to invest in Canada.

We in the Atlantic provinces recognize that some of our very best employers and indeed some of our finest corporate citizens are from other lands. In Nova Scotia, Michelin is the largest employer. Nova Scotia Forest Industries and Bowater Mersey are good corporate citizens in Nova Scotia. In New Brunswick, there is St. Anne-Nackawic, the pulp mill, and in Prince Edward Island there is Usen Fisheries Ltd. These are just a few examples of the employment records of some of our fine corporate citizens. There have been too few citizens of that kind from foreign lands investing in Canada, and more particularly in Atlantic Canada, in the past number of years. This has been because of the National Energy Program and the Foreign Investment Review Agency.

We in Atlantic Canada welcome investors from other lands. Because we have done away with the FIRA and NEP legislation, which was inimical to the wellbeing of our area, we can recognize that we have had large and very substantial increases in inquiries into the possibilities which exist in the Atlantic provinces. We recognize that there are no quick fixes to 23 years of Liberal mismanagement.

We recognize that in order to ensure our long-term credibility and viability, a new approach is required. That is what we have undertaken to do. The budget measures announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last May as well as the amendments and comments he has made from time to time indicate that the entrepreneurial spirit will be the driving force in Canada and particularly in Atlantic Canada. Small business will be encouraged by the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption.

It comes to mind very quickly that there was a notable deficiency in the remarks made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. He spoke about all of Atlantic Canada but he neglected to mention one geographical location. I refer to his own riding and the constituencies in the area of Cape Breton. There we have undertaken the most daring initiatives which have ever been undertaken by any Government in Canada to encourage industry to invest. The tax havens and the incentives which have been put in place there have compelled and attracted more inquiries for one geographical area in six months with regard to investment possibilities and employment opportunities than in any other area of Canada. Indeed, some of the results have already been shown. We are not very happy with what has occurred in that area today. It takes a long time for a company to determine what possibilities are available, what financing is available and what the strength of the labour force is.

People always ask the question: "What about the people?" What this Government is saying is that we believe in people. Canada is not just woods, forests and mountains; it is all of that, and we are blessed with those resources. However, Canada is people. My colleague, the Minister of State for Forestry, other Atlantic Ministers, all our colleagues and I myself can testify and say to the House that we believe in equality in capability and the entrepreneurial spirit of Atlantic Canadians. We know that they can take the opportunities which we are presenting to them and that they will capitalize on them over the long term to the benefit of all Atlantic Canada.

The Hon. Member opposite has come out of the bottle after seven years in the House on behalf of Atlantic Canada, after having sat on this side and after having failed to do something when he was in an ostensible position of influence. We say to the House that we recognize that, given the opportunity, Atlantic Canadians can respond. We will reduce their dependency from 80 per cent and 90 per cent to something approximating the national average. It is a matter of the entitlement of Atlantic Canada to participing fully in Confederation on an equal level. I am not speaking of doing this through subsidies, unemployment insurance or welfare. Atlantic Canadians are proud. They recognize that they have the brains, and have been obliged to export them because there has been a lack of incentives. There has not been the opportunity to create possibilities in Atlantic Canada because the former Government and those Hon. Members opposite who have spoken this morning failed to respond when the need was so apparent.

I would now like to deal more particularly with what has happened in some of the Atlantic provinces. I have spoken of the general situation. However, in order to ensure that the entrepreneurial spirit and private sector employment will take place, we have fertilized the climate in these particular provinces and we have put in place certain programs. Obviously, there will be a tremendous increase in employment opportunities in Newfoundland in terms of the offshore. There will be opportunities in Nova Scotia as a result of the new frontier policies which were recently announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). The Government of Newfoundland almost seceded from Confederation when it endeavoured time after time and year after year to secure an agreement with the federal Government relative to the resources which so rightly belong to it. In less than one year in office this Government consummated an agreement to ensure that the resources and the employment opportunities will stay with Newfoundland. We have said: "It is yours". Plans are now under way to fulfil that mission.

In addition to that, a $300 million development fund has been given to the Province of Newfoundland in order to enhance its employment opportunities and in order to bring its oil and gas on shore. In addition, in Newfoundland, there was an injection of $93 million into Fishery Products International for the purpose of putting it on a competitive basis and ensuring its long-term viability. That was a grant of funds by this Government to a company in a province which is deserving. Given the five-year plan which was before us, we have been enassured that it will be able to compete on a national and international level and that the subsidies which have been given to it year after year will be reduced and new wealth will be created in the province. Indeed, it will be the mission in the long-term objective of Newfoundlanders and, indeed, of all Atlantic Canadians, to pay more taxes. They want to pay income tax because that means they are enjoying prosperity. That is the opportunity we wish to give them.

Only this week in Cape Breton my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), announced a new Cape Breton Enterprise Development Agency. We have given a tax holiday and tax incentives to Cape Breton, but in order to ensure that opportunities are promulgated and made known to all Canadians and other investors from other lands, this particular agency has been given a mandate of $25 million to ensure that the world knows of the possibilities for this particular area. Up to this time there has been some difficulty in knowing what was available by way of Government programs because such a mish-mash of relief and assistance had been advanced over the past few years that no one really knew what was available at any particular time to any particular investor. Thus, one-stop shopping has been created by the establishment of this particular agency.

I now wish to talk about small business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but his time has expired. We are now into the time for questions and comments. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns), the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). Will Hon. Members please govern themselves accordingly. The Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) has the floor.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly nice to hear the truth from the Hon. Minister from Halifax instead of the sweeping generalizations of questionable fact as put forward by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I appreciate the remarks which the Minister has made in regard to the labour force and the increasing number of people working in Atlantic Canada as opposed to the suggestions made by the Hon. Member opposite with respect to migration from eastern Canada. I am not surprised that he speaks in terms of migration and in terms of abandonment, because no one in this House knows more about abandonment than the Hon. Member's Party. That was clearly demonstrated, of course, not so much in Atlantic Canada, but in western Canada over the last few years of the Hon. Member's Government when it abandoned the people of western Canada and forced them to move to places such as Saudi Arabia, South America and so on.

I wish to make the point that the former Government certainly abandoned many Canadians. I think the Minister may agree with me when I say that our Government has continued to encourage ecnomic development, job creation and the promotion of the general well-being of the people of Atlantic Canada. In fact, if we look at a few statistics—and I hate to bore the House with statistics—we find they speak for themselves. In July of this year the labour force in Prince Edward Island totalled 64,000. It was at an all-time high. It was up by 3,000 persons over the previous year. In the month before, it was up by 3,000 over the previous year as well. In May, it was up by 5,000 over the previous year. It was up by 4,000 in April, 5,000 in March, 4,000 in February and 3,000 in January. So, indeed, there has not been an outright migration. I wonder if the Minister can confirm that that same kind of economic resurgence is occurring in other areas in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I certainly can. I want to say that the positive economic statistics which were spoken about by my friend can be partly attributed to some of the following programs. Under the Small Business Loans Act, this Government has awarded 3,186 loans to various firms in the four Atlantic provinces, for a total amount in excess of $98 million. Under the Industrial and Regional Development Program, there have ben 209 grants which total in excess of $88 million. Under the ERDA agreements, there have been nine agreements in Newfoundland for a total of $235 million. In Prince Edward Island, there have been 12 agreements for a total of $103 million in federal contributions. In Nova Scotia, there have been eight agreements for a total of $140 million. In New Brunswick, there have been eight agreements for a total of $195 million. That comes to 37 agreements for a total of $673.3 million in federal contribution, and yet my friend opposite says we have abandoned Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is tragic to realize that one can take a rookie Member of Parliament, give him a car and a chauffeur, and call him a Minister. He arrives in this Chamber and begins to sound like the perennial parrot repeating the lines written by the bureaucracy which represents the interests and the market-place mentality being put forward as by this administration. That is not only tragic, it is disappointing when one listens to responsible voices in Atlantic Canada, including the voices of—I nearly choke on the words—four Progressive Conservative Premiers now elected in Atlantic Canada to the Chamber of Commerce to the Transportation Commission and to the Economic Council of the Atlantic provinces. We listen to all those voices commenting on the direction taken by this Government in abandoning the regional development policy and abandoning the tools which allow an area of high disparity to develop. After listening to those words, the Minister opposite appears to be like a speck in a snowstorm, blowing against the wind and, like a speck in a snowstorm, I predict he shall be buried come the next election.

In prefacing my question, I want to say to the Minister that Hon. Members on this side are not asking today that a magic wand be waved and that A.B.C. directives be followed and all will be well, prosperous and floating in the fat of the land. As the Minister said, it is not that simple and it is not what we are suggesting. Hon. Members opposite, by the way, Mr. Speaker, are not suggesting we were floating in the fat of the land previous to the last election. We understand and recognize we were not. We do not make any other case. What we are saying is that there is the philosophy that everyone, no matter where he or she lives in this country, has a right at least to equal opportunity—and only opportunity and not guarantees—to develop their full potential, and that those kind of programs which provided access to opportunity ought not to be destroyed. That is what we are saying and the Minister has failed to come to grips with that.

Could the Minister tell us whether he has heard the voice of the Premier of Newfoundland, Premier Peckford, a Progressive Conservative; the voice of Premier Lee of Prince Edward Island, a Progressive Conservative; the voice of Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, a Progressive Conservative, and the voice of Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia, a Progressive Conservative, all of whom have said that the projected cuts in transfer payments are in essence a transfer of the federal deficit on to the backs of provincial Governments? And if that occurs, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) insists that it will, we are going to see a reduction in education, which provides our young people with the ability to go out and compete in the market-place, and hospital care for our people.

Has the Minister heard these voices? Is he making their case in Cabinet? Does the Minister accept the reasoning that the cut-backs being proposed will ultimately send Atlantic Canada on a treadmill into the past rather than being able to march confidently into the future?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond. I would suggest to Hon. Members that an increase in federal transfer payments of $25 billion over the next five years will very adequately pay for any demand for hospital and educational services.

Mr. Tobin: There is a cut in transfer payments.

Mr. McInnes: In my own particular Department of Supply and Services, in order to ensure that Atlantic Canadians prosper, the Government is going to spend an additional $50 million in Atlantic Canada in the ensuing year. We have also undertaken a program of education so that small business—which is where the opportunity is in our province—

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McInnes: We are allowing small business the opportunity—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if this process is going to be worth-while, the Minister ought to answer the question about transfer payments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services has the floor.

Mr. McInnes: What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, given the opportunity for our policies to work, the requirement for transfer payments will be mitigated, given time. We are going about the Atlantic provinces, as indeed we are in other parts of Canada, with programs on how to do business with the federal Government in order to ensure that small business, which is the essence of Atlantic Canada, has the opportunity to participate. That program has started and will accelerate over the next year.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the new, so-called "rookie", Member of Parliament for Halifax (Mr. McInnes), the new Minister of Supply and Services, because he is showing good leadership and good fiscal management in his new portfolio. I wish him continued success.

What the Minister did not point out is that we are again talking to the provinces. The various Departments of the federal Government have met consistently and regularly with their counterparts in Atlantic Canada, more so than the Liberals ever did. The Liberals totally ignored Atlantic Canada for decades.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business recently released statistics from a survey it did of its 750,000 members concerning the capital gains exemption of $.5 million which will encourage investment to diversify the economy. The CFIB survey showed that as a result of this, more than 55 per cent of small business owners are likely to expand their operations; 20 per cent would start a new firm; 16 per cent would buy another firm and 24 per cent would invest in someone else's business. Does the Minister of Supply and Services not feel that this is contributing to a new level of confidence in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. McInnes: Mr. Speaker, I think that is corroboration, testimony to and further evidence of the fact that the policies started by this Government 14 months ago are indeed working. Every month when Statistics Canada brings forth the economic indicators, we see that everything that should be up is up and everything that should be down is down. Bankruptcies are down, inflation is down and employment is up. Investment opportunities are up. Everything is up. The Minister from Cape Breton-East Richmond will know that in Nova Scotia small business intends to hire 24 per cent more people this year than it did last year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will allow a short question by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Minister is wrong. I did mention my constituency. I did talk about Cape Breton in my opening remarks. Second, I have not been a Member of Parliament for seven years. Third, I am not a Minister, I am the Member of Parliament for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

My question is this. Does the Minister agree or disagree with the Premier of New Brunswick when he says unequivocally that unilateral cut-backs in transfer payments will cause New Brunswick to implement user fees or higher tuition fees? Does he agree or disagree?

Mr. McInnes: I was present at the First Ministers' conference, and all the Premiers, in varying degrees, commented on the transfer payments. The feeling was about fifty-fifty, a matter of degree. Some were more strident. The essence of all the comments was: Would you entertain continuing transfers at the same level for a year? When they received the explanation from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that in our current circumstances we were not able to do so, that was accepted. There is now a spirit of co-operation and consultation and we will continue to consult.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, one of the changes in the way we debate was that after speeches of 20 minutes we have a 10-minute question and answer period. I want to tell you that one of the phoniest exercise we have is when a regressive Conservative gets up and asks Ministers all sorts of nice pat and puffy questions so he can blow his horn. He says unemployment is down, bankruptcies are down. Well, in the Gallup polls the Tories are down, and you are going to go lower, brother.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not a regressive Tory, I am a Progressive Tory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, some would say Progressive Tory is a contradiction in terms. The two are mutually exclusive.

I listened to the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and he sounded so much as if we were back in 1972, 1973 and 1974 when the Liberals were sitting over there and the Conservatives were sitting in opposition. The Conservatives were raising the same sort of questions about Atlantic Canada, and members of the Liberal Government were getting up and thumping themselves on the back, breaking their wrists over what a great job they were doing in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Mayer: And you were sitting there with the Liberals in 1972.

Mr. Rodriguez: To hear the Tories today you would think they just discovered Atlantic Canada.

I thought I would participate in this debate because whenever I go to Atlantic Canada I feel very much at home. Atlantic Canada is much like the area I come from. It is very much like northern Ontario. We, just as in Atlantic Canada, have developed from the exploitation of our resources, fishing, mining and forestry. One thing we do not have in northern Ontario is agriculture, but to an extent we are very similar. We in northern Ontario feel the same way Atlantic Canadians feel about their place in the sun called Canada, their role in helping to develop this great nation. In other words, we feel we have been short-changed.

I know Atlantic Canadians are getting the impression, if they do not have it already, that they are not participating fully in the development of our country. We see southern Ontario as the ace in the deck of cards. All our resources are taken out of the ground and the trees are cut down and sent to southern Ontario to be finished. There is little or no manufacturing at all in our area. All of the research and development and manufacturing takes place in the southern part of this province. Having watched this for some time I feel it was a deliberate strategy in developing the southern part of the province. For Atlantic Canada it would be central Canada which is being developed at the expense of the hinterland. Indeed, things like freight rates were put in place by Government fiat, and they discriminate against those two parts of the country, Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario. It locks us into forever being hewers of wood and drawers of water. We have not eliminated these trade barriers and hinderances.

I will give you the specific example, Mr. Speaker, of the steel industry. As far as I know there are no iron ore deposits in southern Ontario. They are in the North. The iron ore is mined and shipped to southern Ontario. Bill Davis built Nanticoke, a brand-new operation, to finish steel. Why was that not done where the ore was mined? I suspect the same thing has happened in Cape Breton. That part of the country was sacrificed to develop the steel industry in the Hamilton area. This is all the design of the past. Fish were caught and shipped to the United States to be processed and canned there. The value of secondary processing was added there. All the people in Newfoundland were good for, under the old structure, was to catch the fish, gut them, cut off their heads and tails and ship them south. Then we have the forestry. What a scandal! There was never any plan or program for harvesting the forests of Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario. The only plan was to cut them down as quickly as you can and ship them out. As a result, there were serious problems in New Brunswick with the spring run-off where the trees had been cut. There was no program to plant a tree where a tree was cut. When the people concerned discovered the disaster, they turned to both the provincial and the federal Governments for money to replant trees.

Much has been made of unemployment figures. I want to put some unemployment figures on the record which came out of Statistics Canada last Friday. The national unemployment rate is 10.2 per cent. The adjusted figure in Newfoundland is 19.6 per cent, the same as the previous month. In Nova Scotia it is 13.5 per cent, up by .4 per cent from the previous month. In New Brunswick it is 15.2 per cent, up by .2 per cent. In Prince Edward Island it is 15.3 per cent, up by 2 per cent from the previous month. This did not happen overnight. This is the result of years of attention and concern by both provincial and federal Governments to make sure that the economies of those provinces were developed with the best interests of the people at heart. But often times, and we can look at history, it was the Governments of those provinces which sold the people out. They were amply aided and abetted by the federal Government. The history is clear. Look at Joey Smallwood's performance in Newfoundland. He ripped the resources out of the ground and sold them out. He had no concern for the health and safety of the people. I went to the little town of St. Lawrence in Newfoundland. In the graveyard one sees the results of the lack of concern by a provincial Government for the occupational health and safety of the folks. The federal Government gave a company concessions to exploit that resource with no concern for the people. Members in the House should hang their heads in shame.

I know that my good friends on the Liberal benches are sincere folks, but federal Liberal Governments and provincial Conservative and Liberal Governments should hang their heads in shame. Is Joey Smallwood's resettlement plan to move everyone in from the outports so different from what Donald Macdonald is saying in his latest report? He says that we should give them relocation grants to move them out. He is an up-dated Joey Smallwood. That is the mentality. They do that instead of tackling the problem.

I would like to put a shocking statistic on the record. Income per capita in Newfoundland is 65.3 per cent of the national average. In Prince Edward Island it is 67.9 per cent, in Nova Scotia it is 78.5 per cent, and in New Brunswick it is 71.8 per cent. The earned income per capita as a percentage of the national average is 59.2 per cent in Newfoundland, 60 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 74.1 per cent in Nova Scotia, and 65.4 per cent in New Brunswick. This is a most shocking statistic which speaks volumes of provincial and federal Government in action.

Unemployment insurance payments per capita as a percentage of the national average are 260 per cent in Newfoundland, 216 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 141 per cent in Nova Scotia, and 205 per cent in New Brunswick. Individual subsidies per capita are 190 per cent of the national average in Newfoundland, 233 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 295 per cent in Nova Scotia, and 295 per cent in New Brunswick.

All that did not happen in 14 months, as the motion of my hon. friend, the Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), would suggest in its political thrust. It did not happen in 14 months of Conservative rule. It happened in over 100 years of provincial and federal Conservative and Liberal rule. That is the reality. I do not think that the Government has yet recognized that Canada is diverse. It says it in all its rhetoric, but I do not think it has really impinged on its consciousness that this is indeed a diverse country, not only geographically, but in its human and natural resources as well.

As I watched the implementation of DREE and its conversion to DRIE I had the impression that the thinking was that a federal policy or program should apply equally to all parts of the country and that all the decisions have to be made in Ottawa. It has not occurred to the Government that there is something called "decentralization". It did not occur to Governments of the past, nor has it occurred to the present Government, that there is a thing called "economic planning". I know that to many of these Conservatives the words "economic planning" are an anathema. However, it seems to me that Atlantic Canada is now reaping the harvest of the lack of economic planning or economic strategizing of the last 100 years. The Government has always followed a "top down" approach. You throw a few dollars at the top and let it trickle down.

DREE was developed by a Liberal Government specifically for Atlantic Canada to try to implant some secondary manufacturing industries. As demands on the federal Budget grew, DREE started to diminish. I would like to give my hon. friends some figures which I got from a speech given by the Chairman of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. He pointed out that in 1972 DREE expenditures were 67 per cent of UI payments and that by 1982 the reduced DREE expenditures were 10 per cent of the UI payments. In other words, unemployment was becoming a far greater industry than anything that DREE could create.

The Government is now contemplating changes from a central position which will only exacerbate an already serious situation. One example is the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. They do not take into consideration the fact that fishermen in Newfoundland are hardly likely to get 20 weeks of insured earnings this year.

Mr. Tobin: Ten.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are lucky if they get ten. We have heard of the heart-rending situation of the gentleman who gave up his kidney to his sister and could not qualify for the 15 weeks of sick benefits. I sat in the House in 1978 when the Liberals were trying to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. They had all sorts of reports that said employment was great in Atlantic Canada. They were going to cut back on part-time workers. I remember that we fought that tooth and nail, but they got their way. The pot cannot call the kettle black here, Mr. Speaker.

Another change that is coming is the attack on the deficit. One of the greatest transfers of money is the transfer payments to provincial Governments through subsidies. May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have two minutes remaining in his speech plus a ten-minute question and comment period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock today.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

STATE OF ECONOMY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): "Prince Edward Island and Atlantic Canada agriculture and business alike will die a natural death unless we can change the philosophy of our federal politicians and bureaucrats". That warning came from the President of the P.E.I. Federation of Agriculture last spring.

We have only to look at the Island's potato and tobacco industry to see the truth in these words. The potato industry has hit rock bottom. Prices are low and there are no buyers. Even if farmers could sell their crops, it is hardly worth it. Farmers are getting between 1.5 cents and 2 cents a pound for their potatoes. The cost of production is between 5 cents and 6 cents a pound. Who can afford to stay in business with those returns?

The future of our primary producers is bleak. Farmers who have never owed a cent in their lives now tell me that they cannot even pay their bills. They are in serious trouble and in danger of losing their farms.

We grow the best seed potatoes in the world but we cannot even sell those. Our marketing techniques are outdated. The Europeans are capturing all of our markets.

How does the Government respond to this depressing situation? It hits them when they are down, with inspection fees, increased fuel prices, and a user pay policy.

This country needs a policy that shows respect for our primary producers. We do not need a policy that puts them out of business. We need to beef up our marketing techniques. Farmers need national marketing boards to guarantee them at least the cost of production. The Government must act immediately.

The family farm is disappearing, farmers are going bankrupt, and the Government is doing nothing about it.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN UNIVERSITY INVESTMENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, today we celebrate the 37th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Thus it seems an appropriate time to reflect briefly upon the referenda being held on university campuses on disinvestment of pension funds in South Africa.

I am shocked that members of some university faculty associations, faced with the moral choice, have determined to settle the matter by referendum. On reflection, however, I should not be surprised. The issue of apartheid is not whether it kills and oppresses millions only because of the colour of their skin. It is essentially whether there exists the moral fortitude to reject the perpetuation of the moral equivalent of slavery when what is at stake is corporate or individual financial gain.

Doubtless there will be those who find solace in the argument that sanctions such as disinvestment will hurt blacks more than comfortable profitable neutrality. They will have few qualms in disregarding the assertion by leaders of the front line states or by 73 per cent of black South Africans that sanctions, including disinvestment, will damage them less than the other sacrifices demanded by the fight for freedom.

There is no moral dilemma. It is a question of justice for others or profit for oneself. The moral choice is clear. The ultimate victory of the oppressed is assured. They who value profits over human justice will ultimately lose, not only virtue, but profits.

INCOME TAX

INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, this Government is keeping a major campaign promise by introducing a minimum personal income tax effective January 1, 1986. This measure is another key element of our economic renewal program. In fact, this formula reflects, in a very sensible and effective way, the principle of equity on which our economic policy is based. Its purpose is to ensure that every year, high income Canadians bear their fair share of the tax burden.

This minimum tax on the rich is aimed at taxpayers with very high incomes, who will no longer be able to escape paying income tax, and at large corporations that will no longer get tax rebates upon the sale of assets. This reform of the tax system will make the system more equitable and provide for stronger economic growth.

The Bill presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is aimed at closing a tax loophole that made it possible for thousands of citizens well versed in the art of claiming tax deductions to avoid paying income tax.

The Government is also aware that existing tax incentives were introduced for valid economic and social reasons. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the minimum tax will have a carry-forward mechanism to ensure that the value of tax incentive deductions and credit is not lost.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR APPLICATION TO BALTIC STATES AND UKRAINE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, 40 years ago the Baltic states of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania were annexed by the Soviet Union.

Three years later and 37 years ago today, on December 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations unanimously adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. That Declaration calls upon all of the United Nations member states, including the Soviet Union, to guarantee to every human being freedom of opinion and expression; freedom of thought, conscience and religion; freedom from torture or cruel or degrading treatment of punishment; freedom of movement; freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention; right to a fair trial; the right to a public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal; the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and the right to a nationality.

Thirty-seven years later the people of Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania and the people of the Ukraine are still waiting for the restoration of those rights and freedoms. Canada has spoken out and acted strongly on behalf of human rights in South Africa. We must speak and act just as strongly on behalf of human rights in eastern Europe.

ENERGY

DELAY IN SIGNING AGREEMENT WITH NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on March 28, 1985, the Minister of Energy signed away billions of dollars to the oil compagnies. After accomplishing that task, she said that a new agreement with Nova Scotia was "next on her agenda". She needed, however, "a weekend to rest". It is now December 10 and there is still no deal. Nova Scotia's Energy Minister now says that the deal will not be ready until the new year. It sure has been one long weekend.

Why is it taking so long to sign a deal with Nova Scotia? Maybe it is because of what the federal Energy Minister's policies have done to Nova Scotia. Thanks to the new policies there is only rig operating off the coast of Nova Scotia. There were nine last year.

John Beddome, President of Dome Petroleum, says the new policy means a gain in western Canada but: "It comes at the expense of Nova Scotia's hopes for its Venture project at Sable Island."

Allan Ruffman, Vice-President of Geomarine Associates Limited, says that oil and gas activity off Nova Scotia will be cut in half in 1986, following a steep reduction this year.

Informetrica predicts "meagre growth for Nova Scotia's economy" this year.

Perhaps one of the stumbling blocks in signing the deal is just how to compensate Nova Scotia for the revenues lost compared to its 1982 deal with the former Government. But how do you compensate for completely destroying oil and gas activity off the coast of Nova Scotia, Mr. Speaker? The Minister may need a few more weekends to think about it.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

REMUNERATION OF FORMER ENERGY CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I was flabbergasted this morning, as I am sure were many of my colleagues, when we learned that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), has been using the taxpayers' money to pay members of her staff salaries well above the levels set down by the Treasury Board.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources paid Mr. Harry Near $50,000 for only four months work as her Chief of Staff last year. On an annual basis, this works out to $150,000. Mr. Near's contract was extended for an additional two months, for which he picked up the tidy sum of $22,000. Outrageous, you say! Incredible! But wait, there is more. The Minister of Energy used the taxpayers' money to pay Mr. Near another $25,000 for six weeks' work last spring, and another $10,000 for four weeks' work this past summer.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre was the only government Minister to make a special request to the Treasury Board for additional sums of taxpayers' money to pay her staff salaries well above the guidelines. This Minister is single-handedly giving a new meaning to the old cliché that it pays to have friends in high places. If you are a friend of the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker, it not only pays, but it pays handsomely.

What sort of signal does it send out to ordinary Canadians when they find out that the Minister of Energy is spending their hard-earned tax dollars on huge salaries for her friends? Last week my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), accused the former Minister of the Environment of spending taxpayers' money like a drunken sailor. I would like to point out that at least drunken sailors spend their own money. The Minister of Energy would do well to remember that.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the figures published recently by Statistics Canada for housing starts in this country during the month of November.

These figures indicate an increase of 58 per cent, that is, an annual seasonally adjusted total of 197,000 housing starts, compared with a total of 125,000 last year.

In urban centres with a population of over 10,000, the number of units increased from 8,647 in 1984 to 14,260 in November 1985. This represents an increase of nearly 65 per cent. The number of single-family dwellings under construction in the same centres over the same period increased from 5,271 to 8,125, an increase of 54 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this increase in housing starts is largely due to our policies to promote economic renewal. Falling interest rates, more stable prices and a series of favourable economic forecasts have made it attractive for Canadians to carry out their residential construction projects. This country is caught up in a new wave of optimism.

Mr. Speaker, these new projects are not only a boon to home builders but also to manufacturers of household appliances, surveyors, architects, moving companies and the general public.

CRIMINAL CODE

STIFFER PENALTIES FOR DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-18, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, contains stiffer fines and tougher jail sentences for those persons convicted of dangerous or impaired driving. These changes, which came into effect on December 2, 1985, will be welcomed by all Canadians. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has shown real leadership in taking the necessary initiatives to get these improvements into law.

I was with the Justice Minister at Queen's Park yesterday when he and the Attorney General of Ontario spoke of the objectives and importance of this new legislation. The scope of criminal liability has been expanded where an impaired driver has caused injury or death.

The sentences will be much tougher for dangerous or impaired driving offences. For instance, dangerous or impaired driving causing death now carries a maximum penalty of 14 years. The RIDE program which began in the City of Etobicoke, Ontario, in 1974, together with this new legislation, will most certainly go a long way to deter dangerous and impaired driving and thereby save the lives of many innocent Canadian citizens.

CN MARINE

FERRY SERVICE LAY-OFFS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my profound disappointment with the treatment which some workers in my riding are receiving at the hands of the Government.

As if the cuts at the Canadian Wildlife Service in Sackville, the lay-offs at the CN shops and the relocation of the animal pathology lab were not enough, I have been informed that CN Marine is laying off nine employees at the ferry crossing from Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, to Borden, Prince Edward Island. The Government is showing no mercy. It is cutting left and right with absolutely no feeling for the welfare of the people it is affecting, with absolutely no concern for the damaging effect it is having on the less developed regions of the country which must rely heavily on federal Government dollars and federal jobs to keep their economy afloat.

The People of New Brunswick cannot understand the action of the Government because they were led to believe that more jobs would be coming their way. Instead, the Government is cutting jobs, and the Government is deceiving and mistreating the people of Atlantic Canada.

CLAIM TO ACT AS OFFICIAL OPPOSITION DISPUTED

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, last October 7 the publisher of The Citizen of Ottawa was interviewed on the French language program "Le Point". I do not know to what extent Mr. Keith Spicer spoke for the rest of the media during this interview, but he must certainly have spoken for The Citizen, which is the most widely distributed newspaper in the nation's capital. Accordingly, his views and approach to publishing are of importance to the House and to the country, no matter in which language they are stated.

Today I should like to isolate one unequivocal statement which he made during the interview that sheds light on his perception of the role of The Citizen in national politics. In response to a question regarding his newspaper playing the part of the Official Opposition, he replied:

> For lack of a real opposition, we had to perform this task and, quite so, Mr. Turner and his team have not. There is not even a particularly biting attack, and for lack of a true opposition, I think it is reasonable for the press to step in.

I should like to remind Mr. Spicer that the Opposition in the House has earned the right to the title not only of Official Opposition but that of Loyal Opposition, by going to the citizenry for its mandate. This gives opposition Members both the right and the obligation to criticize, within the boundaries of remaining loyal to the basic principles of our Constitution.

Mr. Spicer has no mandate from anyone except his shareholders and, as a good entrepreneur, no obligation to be loyal to anything except his profit and loss statement. The more I read his coverage of real events and some non-events, the more this becomes apparent.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AWARD TO INCO FOR INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY—SIZE OF LAY-OFFS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, last month Inco Ltd. was given an award by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in the productivity category of the Canada Awards for Excellence competition. In giving this award to Inco, the Government ignored a basic fact: the increase in productivity was accomplished by Inco wiping out thousands of jobs over the past five years.

• (1415)

It is the workers of Inco who should be given an award for increased productivity. Indeed, they are so productive that they produced themselves out of a job. Inco's award came less than three weeks before it announced yet another round of workforce reductions. No doubt the company is going for the gold medal in next year's competition.

In giving the award to a company which has cut its workforce from 34,000 to 14,000, the Government is sending a clear message to the private sector that the more workers who are laid off, the more productive is a business. It seems to me that instead of rewarding companies which lay off workers, the Government should realize that Inco has made its wealth on the backs of the workers and that this company has a responsibility to the community to make alternative employment available.

Awards should be given to Inco the day it stabilizes its employment and provides for secondary mineral development in Canada. In the meantime, the silver medal ought not to go to Inco but the Government should distribute silver medals to all laid off and retired workers of Inco as they are the real winners in the productivity sweepstakes.

COMMUNICATIONS

REPORTED PUBLIC OPINION POLL ON TELEPHONE RATES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and deals with the Government's survey to determine just how big will be the telephone rate increase the Government plans to foist on Canadians. This is a very bizarre way to test our pain threshold.

The telephone is the lifeline to the outside world for senior citizens and shut-ins. The telephone is the life-blood for small businesses and charities. Can the Prime Minister justify even contemplating the doubling of the rates for basic telephone services for small businesses, senior citizens, and people who are too ill to leave their homes? How can he justify spending taxpayers' money to promote such an unjust and unfair plan?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications will be in the House momentarily.

Some Hon. Members: Here he is.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Indeed, my colleague is here right now. Possibly he can carry on and finish the beginning of a very excellent answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this question which refers to a survey by Decima Research, ordered last spring by the Department of Communications, does not in any way alter the responsibility of the CRTC which is to set telephone rates in Canada. The survey is part of a series of studies ordered by federal-provincial committees and by the CRTC to provide the broadest possible base and a maximum of information for defining a Canadian telecommunications policy that will be in the interest of Canadians.

[English]

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, considering that the Minister just sent back a decision by the CRTC—

—I would like to know, and my question is directed to the same Minister... Last year, Bell Canada's profits were around $940 million. The elderly have received pensions that are below the poverty line.

Considering these figures, could the Minister explain why he is considering a plan that will increase the cost of local telephone services to consumers by $720 million?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, since it is not the Government's responsibility to set telephone rates in Canada, it will be a pleasure to refer your question to the CRTC, for consideration.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REJECT POLL FINDINGS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I find it fascinating that the Minister is turning over the CRTC's questions. The Minister's actions speak much louder that his words. I would remind him of his secret cabinet document.

I would like to know why the Minister undertook such an expensive poll. Now that he has done so, will the Minister reject that poll and reassure all Canadians that there will be no increase in local telephone rates this coming year?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is not for me to reject or to confirm a survey. I can discuss the methodology used in the survey. However, as long as the answers were given in accordance with the methodology used, I cannot approve or disapprove of the way Canadians respond to a survey.

Furthermore, the Government promised last spring to review our telecommunications policy in Canada. We have approached this issue bearing a number of basic principles in mind, including that of providing Canadians with a universal service at reasonable cost. This review of our telecommunications policy is being carried out with the provinces, who have a major responsibility in this area, and an important phase in this review will be the federal-provincial conference next February.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—BOEING'S ELIGIBILITY FOR PUBLIC FUNDING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday the Minister emphasized the large amounts of money which he said the taxpayers would save if the Government sold de Havilland to Boeing. It seems that Boeing will be putting very little into de Havilland compared to the amount of money which the taxpayers will have to put into it under the deal which the Government has accepted. Has the Minister done any calculations with respect to the amount of money the taxpayers of Canada will have to put into this company after the sale to Boeing which will become the owner and beneficiary of all the profits of the company? Does he know and can he tell us how much Canadian taxpayers will continue to put into the company over the next five years?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, certainly an awful lot less than was put in by the former Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: I think I have mentioned in respect to this type of question in the House time and time again that, under Boeing, de Havilland will be eligible, like any other corporation, for the various programs of this Government. To the extent it wishes to invest, grow and create jobs, it will be eligible for all the assistance for which any other corporation in the country is eligible.

COST TO TAXPAYERS INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is just not credible that the Government has made a big deal like this without having done a calculation with respect to how much the taxpayers will be called on to put into it.

Can the Minister confirm a calculation which I have done—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —which shows that over the next five years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I think the Canadian people would be happy to have the Government's calculation. I insist the Government must have done one. Does the Minister dispute that the cost to the Canadian taxpayers with respect to selling this company and continuing with Boeing as the owner, if things go well, will be something in the neighbourhood of $580 million over the next five years?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is trying to suggest that there will be a cost to taxpayers with respect to this transaction.

Mr. Broadbent: He is right, too.

Mr. de Cotret: This transaction is a good deal.

Mr. Blaikie: That is what you said when you bought your Edsel.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: I would like to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared in Winnipeg's Free Press:

If that happens—

Mr. Frith: Never mind the editorial, give us a cost analysis.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. de Cotret:

—Boeing will have got itself, in the words of UAW Canada President Bob White, "a hell of a deal." But it will also be a hell of deal for Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret:

—who will have in place a company which is employing Canadian workers, selling a Canadian product all over the world and paying taxes to Canadian governments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEGOTIATION OF SALE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that with the kind of write-offs he has given Boeing it will make profits for the next 10 to 15 years and not have to pay a cent in taxes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Move General Motors to Saskatoon.

Mr. Dick: Are you in the UAW's pocket?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: They are testy over there today.

Mr. Broadbent: Tory herds are difficult to control.

I do have a question for the Minister. Will he confirm that in the negotiations with respect to the sale of de Havilland to Boeing the Canadian side did not even raise the question of job guarantees or a buy-back provision in the event of a shut-down by Boeing? Will the Minister confirm that?

• (1425)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of job security was obviously brought up. It was a central concern of this Government, as job creation has been throughout our mandate. It was brought up and we are assured that the best job security for the employees of de Havilland is exactly the kind of deal we made with Boeing, with its financial and marketing strengths, the world product mandate, and the technology which we retain in Canada. That is where the real job security will come from.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has just said that the best job guarantee is no guarantee because he knows, unlike the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement and other deals which have been made for the transfer of ownership, there is not a guarantee written into that agreement. The Minister knows that.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since we learned this as a result of Paul Marshall's briefing late yesterday to Members representing all Parties in the Ontario Legislature—which was a meeting I just learned about—does the Minister think it appropriate that Members of the Canadian House of Commons have to learn through private contacts with people in Toronto what a federal Crown corporation is doing? Why is that information not provided to the Canadian House of Commons?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that before we announced the transaction, complete folders of the available information were made available to all Hon. Members of this House.

An Hon. Member: You can't read.

Mr. Broadbent: No. Folders with nothing in them don't matter an awful lot.

FINALIZATION OF DEAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister knows that Mr. Marshall gave Members of the Ontario Legislature all kinds of information yesterday which is not available to Hon. Members of this House. Will the Minister confirm that if the Government of Canada does not finalize this deal by the end of this month, it is going to cost the taxpayers of Canada another $60 million? And does that explain why the Government is in such a rush to make a bad deal with Boeing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are making a great deal with Boeing, and we are making a great deal for Canada. Again I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press:

> Instead of sniping and complaining, Ed Broadbent and Lloyd Axworthy should be down on their knees on behalf of Canadian taxpayers—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Is that your briefing note?

An Hon. Member: On your knees, Ed.

Mr. de Cotret:

> —thanking the Government for removing this millstone from around their necks. And Bob White should be down on his knees thanking Boeing for giving his . . . members a chance to continue applying their skills in a productive enterprise which now has the chance to be an asset rather than a burden to the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, when his colleagues are prepared to let him ask a question.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

CAPE BRETON ADVISORY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that his economic policies are not working in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Unemployment is up, and it is up substantially. I would like to ask the Prime Minister why the recommendation of the Cape Breton Advisory Committee—the appointments to which he made—of $600 million for short-term job-creation programs has not been acted upon by his Government, particularly in view of the fact that 4,000 additional Canadians in that area of Canada are unemployed as opposed to last year? Why is the Prime Minister dragging his feet on this most important initiative?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First, Mr. Speaker, the indication as set out by my hon. friend that the economic policies are not working is, of course, demonstrably false—demonstrably false. This Government has created more jobs in 14 months than the Liberals did in 55 months. That is the reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It will interest my hon. friend because it will interest anyone who is hopeful about the welfare of Canada, to hear some fact which just came out moments ago. Housing starts during November were at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 197,000, up 65 per cent over last year. Starts of multiple-unit dwellings were up 82 per cent—

Mr. Hovdebo: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: —over last year. This is very good news for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: They don't like that.

Mr. Mulroney: It is consistent with all—

An Hon. Member: They don't like success.

Mr. Nystrom: How about the Gallup poll, Brian?

An Hon. Member: They can't stand good news.

• (1430)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I know the doomsters and gloomsters of the NDP do not like good news, but hang on to your hats because you are going to have nothing but good news from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the very excellent question raised by my hon. friend concerning Cape Breton Island—

Mr. Nystrom: Gallup poll, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: "Gallup poll", he says. The NDP stumbled from lack of success—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will participate in the debate this afternoon regarding the disasterous economic conditions in Atlantic Canada. That is the economy to which I am referring. We need more jobs in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick.

Why is the Prime Minister reneging on the recommendation of a committe, which he appointed, for $600 million in short-term job creation? He appointed a bunch of Tory hacks. Why does he not listen to them for a change?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with and accept as valid the observations of my hon. friend regarding Cape Breton, for which not only the Government but this House must do more. This is a very important area of our economy and it has been left out of the renewal of economic life in this country where 416,000 new jobs were created since this Government came to office. I will acknowledge that Cape Breton has not received its fair share of those jobs, but I can tell you this. We will make sure, with your help, that Cape Breton indeed receives its share, which will be a lot more than it ever got from the Liberals. That is for sure.

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND TO BOEING—REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION DETAILS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Prime Minister says we will be getting nothing but good news in the future. All I want is some information.

The Minister indicated on December 3 that details of the arrangement between de Havilland and Boeing would be made available. Given that, is he now prepared to put before this House all of the relevant information regarding the negotiations which have taken place to date between de Havilland and Boeing so that the House of Commons, representing the people of Canada, can make an evaluation of whether or not that is good news?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked, and asked, and asked, over and over again.

Some Hon. Members: And not answered.

Mr. de Cotret: It has been answered over, and over, and over again. The answer is very simple. The details of the sale of de Havilland to Boeing will be made available according to normal procedure at the normal time and in the normal forum.

BRIEFING OF ONTARIO POLITICAL PARTY LEADERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, why are the Leaders of the three Parties in the Province of Ontario being briefed on the details of this deal and the Minister refuses to give the same information to the Members of the House of Commons?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been questions over the last week and I have given all the information that is available publicly to Hon. Members. So I think the premise of the question is entirely false. Furthermore, there was a full day's debate and a vote on this issue in which this House expressed its faith in the Government's action.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS TO ASSIST INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. After making firm commitments with respect to Quebec's petrochemical industry, the Government is worrisomely silent about the break-up of two important links in the petrochemical chain, namely Gulf and BASF, and it unduly puts off announcing a lasting solution to Petromont and, indirectly, for Union Carbide.

Can the Prime Minister tell us whether his Government is still determined to promote and maintain a third Canadian petrochemical centre, in Montreal, and what immediate steps it will take to prevent the dismantling of that whole sector in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we intend to continue the sustained efforts which we have made since taking office and which have resulted in the creation of about 9,000 new jobs in Quebec every month, as compared with the 673 jobs created monthly during the four and a half years of the previous administration.

Our performance has been impressive, but with respect to the question raised by my colleague, I intend to meet with the Premier of Quebec in the near future and hold further talks about this important matter.

INQUIRY IF PRIME MINISTER WILL MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF PÉTROCHIMIE ACTION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Prime Minister is undoubtedly aware, the inaction of his Government has led to the establishment of a common front in Montreal yesterday—it is called Pétrochimie Action—and this group is expected in Ottawa tomorrow. I want to ask the Prime Minister if his generosity and sense of responsibility will be strong enough to prompt him to meet with those people who will be here tomorrow to share their concerns and disarray with him. It is five minutes to midnight for those workers, Mr. Prime Minister, and their children are looking forward to Christmas. Will he have the generosity to meet with them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): When those workers do get here, Mr. Speaker, I hope my friend will remind them of two things: one, the new Government's first move was to set aside several million dollars to help Petromont, while at the same time the outgoing Liberal Government was telling Petromont workers: No, it is over, not a nickel. That is what you did for Petromont and those workers will certainly remember that. You in the Liberal Party of Quebec are all hypocrites!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, both sides.

INQUIRY IF CANADAIR WILL STILL BE OWNED BY CANADIANS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Everyone was delighted to hear the announcement by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion—my question is directed to the Prime Minister—that, despite the Montreal Urban Community's plan to turn Canadair's facilities into a housing development, Canadair will remain in Montreal. However, since the Minister also announced that Canadair will be sold, could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that Canadair will remain in Canadian hands and not be sold to foreign interests?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Leader of the New Democratic Party who is doing his best to make people panic, raised a non-issue when he used a document produced by a municipal body in Quebec to draw some very definitive conclusions with respect to Canadair. Well, for years the Government of Quebec printed maps that showed Labrador as part of Quebec. But it didn't change a thing. It didn't make Labrador part of Quebec! And when the Leader of the New Democratic Party produces a document that says a municipal body in Montreal is going to close down Canadair, that is just as far from the truth!

[English]

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer my question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

• (1440)

Mr. Cassidy: He also ignores the fact that this particular plan was distributed to 300,000 homes in the urban community of Montreal in the last week and a half. It tells people of a very carefully worked out plan to replace Canadair with residential housing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Rodriguez: Settle down over there.

Mr. Speaker: The Member will ask his question immediately, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Prime Minister at least assure the House that Canadair will not be disposed of the way that de Havilland was without an opportunity for this House and a committee of this House to examine such a deal in advance of being presented with a fait accompli?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the House and everyone who watched it yesterday is aware of the vexatious way in which the Leader of the New Democratic Party sought to sow fear and confusion in the minds—

Mr. Broadbent: What nonsense. We asked you to guarantee it and you did not answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: —of Quebecers and Quebec workers. I thought that that was unseemly, unfair, and unworthy of the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Orlikow: We don't need lectures from you.

Mr. Mulroney: —who ought to know full well—

Mr. Broadbent: Don't give me lectures on worthiness.

Mr. Mulroney: —that all of the leading economic indicators in the country are going the right way. Thousands and thousands of jobs are being created. I know it causes him heartache. He does not like good news.

Mr. Hovdebo: Order!

Mr. Mulroney: I can guarantee him that the Progressive Conservative Government has no lessons to learn—

Mr. Riis: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: —from the NDP in regard to protecting the jobs of Canadians and Quebecers.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON FUTURE MANAGEMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Deputy Prime Minsiter.

Mr. Speaker: One.

Mr. Gauthier: You're only allowed one.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In that case I had better go to someone who has only one question. Order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am trying, Mr. Speaker. My question for the Deputy Prime Minister concerns a recent report about the National Arts Centre, and I emphasize the word "National". Does he or the Government have any intention of accepting the recommendation of the Handleman task force to turn the National Arts Centre over to local municipalities or to the National Capital Commission?

Mr. Fulton: He's sowing fear.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as part of the program review that was mandated by the Prime Minister a year ago last September, some 19 study teams, with over 102 private sector members and roughly the same number of public servants, have produced hundreds and hundreds and hundreds—

Mr. Broadbent: That's 300.

Mr. Nielsen: —of alternatives, options, and suggestions with respect to solving the very real problems with the wide array of programs that have been examined. Cabinet is addressing those matters one by one. At the proper time the decisions will be announced—

Mr. Gauthier: That's enough, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: —as the very attractive decision on the rationalization of real property was yesterday by the Minister of Public Works and the President of the Treasury Board.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS IN MONCTON

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question which I asked the Minister last October 9, the Minister indicated that CN lay-offs in Moncton were a result of a decline in traffic and that he hoped the lay-offs would not continue for a long period of time. Can the Minister then explain why 140 of the 225 workers who were laid off were informed that their lay-offs were permanent? And that, Mr. Prime Minister, is not good news.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is fully aware of the decline in CN traffic and of the fact that the available workload requires some adjustment in the work force.

Ms. Copps: You're too busy running around arresting people.

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Mr. Mazankowski: CN is currently conducting an internal assessment of its maintenance requirements. I suspect that that evaluation will be completed some time early in the new year. At that time we will be looking at various options. I will certainly take the Hon. Member's representations and convey them to the management of the CNR. That is something that the Hon. Member for Moncton has been doing a very good job of, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ASSURE PROTECTION OF JOBS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, there is a cloud of uncertainty hanging over Moncton right now. There are over 1,000 jobs on the line. When will the Minister take a stand on this issue and assure those people in Moncton that their jobs will be protected? This, Mr. Minister, would be very good news.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member, as I have assured the Hon. Member for Moncton, that I share that concern. The fact of the matter is that there is a serious decline in traffic. An internal assessment is being conducted. I am sure that at the appropriate time after making the evaluation CN will take the necessary action to ensure that it can provide the necessary services where the workload so requires.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to make the Hon. Member's representation known to the management of CNR. I want to assure him and the people of Moncton that I am deeply concerned about ensuring that we have an adequate presence in Moncton because it is a railway centre and a very important transportation centre in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

COMMUNICATIONS

PUBLIC OPINION POLL ON TELEPHONE RATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Communications. A recent decision of the CRTC refused an increase in the rates of B.C. Tel and turned down the application of CNCP to enter into competition in long-distance telephone rates. What reason would the Minister have for commissioning the poll done by Decima, which tells the Government that the public will accept increases of 10 per cent to 20 per cent a year for the next five years in telephone rates, other than that he has already decided that he is going to permit substantial increases in home telephone rates, and cuts in long-distance rates? If that is the policy, when will he announce it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I may remind my hon. friend it is not for the Minister of Communications to regulate rates in the telephone sector in Canada. It is not the Minister's responsibility but that of the agencies or the provinces or the federal Government, through the CRTC, and these rates are determined through a process of public hearings and decisions by the CRTC or provincial agencies.

The Minister of Communications is responsible for providing, in consultation with the provinces, consumer groups, the telephone companies and Canada's business sector, for an in-depth review of our domestic telecommunications policy. We have been working on this since last spring, and the federal-provincial conference to be held next year in February will be an important step in this review. Surveys and studies that have been ordered either by the CRTC, the provinces or—

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, any change in the regulated Bell Telephone rates will affect all other areas in Canada which are serviced by private or public systems because they are all partners in Telecom Canada. Would the Minister give his assurance that before any major changes are made they will be discussed and approved by the provincial Ministers of Communications as well as the CRTC?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the provincial ministers will be discussing the direction and basic principles of Canada's telecommunications policy, and not CRTC decisions, which would be against Canadian law.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council. Yesterday the House passed a resolution declaring Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada. Mr. Wallenberg is probably still in the Soviet Union and the resolution has been sent to the other House so that it can become a bicameral resolution. Can the House Leader tell us when he expects that resolution to come back to the House?

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—FUNDING OF MODERNIZATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directd to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He has said that he favours financial assistance for the second phase of the modernization of the Sydney Steel Corporation. The Premier of Nova Scotia has said that since October he has had a deal on this financing, yet the Prime Minister has recently said that there was no deal. Why, after 14 months of the Government's mandate, has it not been able to enter into an agreement for the funding of the second phase of the Sydney Steel Corporation modernization?

● (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Because I said no such thing, Mr. Speaker. I had a very effective meeting with the distinguished Premier of Nova Scotia in Halifax two weeks ago. We dealt in substantial measure with the Sysco modernization as well as other projects designed to be of deficit to Cape Breton. I believe that you will be seeing some very positive results in the near future.

IMPLEMENTATION OF TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Cape Breton-East Richmond said, the Prime Minister established a Cape Breton advisory task force. The Government has only managed to put one of its 34 recommendations into effect. When will the Government implement some of the other 33 recommendations, including the modernization of Sysco? When will this happen, because you know the situation is bad and you know that the need is there?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I do indeed, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend is quite right that the need exists and it is serious and urgent. Some of the fiscal measures that we have introduced have not been as attractive to industry in the short term as we would have liked. Consequently we are looking at that and a number of other measures designed to be of assistance to Cape Breton.

I do not think there is anyone in the House who would deny that Cape Breton has gone through a very special kind of misery in the last couple of years and we all very much want to be of assistance. I can assure him that I work with all Members of the House and the Premier of Nova Scotia to bring about a much better resolution of the difficulties on Cape Breton Island.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

THREAT OF QUEBEC MOVIE HOUSES BOYCOTT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister about the threat of a boycott by American Majors against Quebec movie houses. Has the Prime Minister already spoken or will he speak to President Reagan to ask him to ensure that the Americans respect fully our Canadian culture, especially in instances where Quebec has taken action to promote an independent culture?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that last week in my speech at the University of Chicago, I made very clear statements of principle about the vital dimension of our cultural sovereignty and the determination which the Government of Canada and all Canadians will show to ensure its preeminence at all times.

[English]

INDEPENDENT DISTRIBUTION OF FILMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, that was an answer to a different question, perhaps. We were very pleased to see the statement about cultural sovereignty. However, in view of the fact that there is a proposition about independent Canadian distribution, what chance will there be if the Prime Minister does not stand up to the Americans when the crunch comes? When the provinces or the federal Government want to promote an independent culture, is it not his job to stand up to defend them and fight for particular cases and not just spout the rhetoric of independence?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the report submitted publicly by the task force on the status of the cinema industry in Canada. As agreed by the task force and the province in Halifax, this report is a working paper which will be used by the provinces and the Canadian Government to analyze the situation, and it will certainly be an important tool at the Federal-Provincial Conference next February, which will deal with both the publishing and the movie industries in Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TASK FORCE ON CHEMICAL ACCIDENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary. Last year, after the disastrous gas leak in Bhopal, India, a committee was established by Environment Canada to look into the potential for a similar disaster in Canada. Has that committee made any recommendations to the Government and when will those recommendations be made public?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, following the tragic Bhopal accident of December, 1984, the Minister of the Environment established an industry-government task force which had three working groups looking at the potential for and handling of chemical accidents in Canada. That working group has reported with a working document which has now been sent by the Minister of the Environment to provincial Governments, municipal governments, the Canadian Labour Congress and others. We expect to have a final report by the end of January, 1986.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today thousands of farmers from the Maritimes and central Canada are on the Hill demanding that the Government keep its promise to establish a national marketing board for tobacco. They are also concerned that the Government will sell them out in the free trade negotiations with the United States.

Will the Prime Minister guarantee that the Government's promise to establish a national marketing board will not be sacrificed at the altar of free trade in the negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is just about now speaking to 1,500 or 2,000 representatives of the agricultural community at a very important national forum, the Outlook Canada Conference.

Ms. Copps: Look out.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Mulroney: There is a melody in the air, Mr. Speaker. It must be Christmas.

Mr. Gauthier: There is a flat tire over there. That is the problem.

Mr. Mulroney: I had the pleasure of meeting briefly with the leaders of the group on Friday, after Question Period. The Parliamentary Secretary has met with them today, as will the Minister of Agriculture after his appearance. Hopefully this matter will be resolved. The meeting to take place between the procedures and the companies is scheduled for tomorrow. Hopefully a resolution of this very difficult and long-standing problem will be found.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Prime Minister wrote to one of the farmers and guaranteed that he would act quickly to establish a national marketing agency. Why should the farmers believe that the Prime Minister will not break his promise now? Is the Prime Minister prepared to speak to the farmers who are rallied in front of the Centre Block this afternoon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would such an Hon. Member cloak his question in such a spurious manner? He knows full well the reason for the dilatory tactic is because it is before the courts. It is something over which we have absolutely no control. You know that and you are willfully misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Ms. Copps: Kick the hypocrite out.

Mr. Manly: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Members will please come to order. I must ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to withdraw his last assertion.

Ms. Copps: Hypocrite, that is what you are.

An Hon. Member: Throw him out.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister will know that it is entirely out of order to use the phrase "willfully misleading the House". I would simply ask him to withdraw the phrase.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if I violated a rule of the House and used the word "willfully", I withdraw it without reluctance.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENTS INQUIRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs. Some time ago the Minister of Agriculture declared a moratorium on farm foreclosures by the Farm Credit Corporation, and the Canadian farming community has been awaiting announcement of further action ever since. Will the Minister tell us if it is the Government's intention to reintroduce the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act which had all-Party agreement in the last Parliament to handle the farm debt through debt review tribunals, with the power to provide for debt composition, debt set aside and interest reduction?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to inform my hon. friend that we have been aware of the situation for several months and have created an advisory committee to this end. We expect the committee to be submitting its recommendations within the new few weeks and we shall then take action accordingly.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF MORATORIUM ON DEBT REPAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Government be extending a moratorium that now applies to FCC loans to cover all farm loans until such time as the Government makes a decision on farm debt policy, or is the current round of foreclosures the Government's policy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture will be back in the House tomorrow and I will take—

Mr. Althouse: Is it government policy?

Mr. Mulroney: —notice of the Hon. Member's specific question.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DISABLED PERSONS—GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS AND ASSISTANCE—STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, thirty-seven years ago today an historic document was proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The thirty articles of the Declaration set out a comprehensive framework for rights and freedoms. It covered the traditionally cherished and most commonly mentioned rights and freedoms, which are essential to the guarantee of individual liberty within a society.

For its part, Canada has a major and continuing commitment to the principles contained in the Universal Declaration. This commitment is perhaps best exemplified by the historic step which we took, as Canadians, in entrenching the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Constitution of Canada. For it was in making the Charter forever a part of the supreme law of Canada that we acknowledged our desire as a people to achieve social justice and human dignity as realities for all Canadians. These are not merely high-sounding phrases or legal abstractions. They represent our commitment as a nation to live in harmony and to thrive together as a community. As such, they offer an important living example for greater harmony within the world community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: The Universal Declaration was one of the first international documents that gave recognition to the evolutionary nature of human rights. As stated in its preamble, it set forth:

A common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations.

In many ways, it became both a catalyst and a benchmark encouraging states to improve their human rights records and giving them an appropriate tool to measure the progress they had made. It is indeed fitting that we honour and commemorate the symbols and spirits of this important document.

[Translation]

Today, on the 37th anniversary of the Proclamation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, of announcing a new initiative by this Government, an initiative that is a direct response to the concerns of the United Nations and that is in line with Canada's historic commitment to human rights. This initiative concerns a very important part of our population, namely, the disabled.

Earlier this afternoon, I had the privilege of tabling the United Nations Declaration on the World Decade of Disabled Persons.

At least 14 per cent of Canadians have a disability. There are the hearing and sight disabled, there are people with reduced mobility and people with mental health problems or a mental disability. The report Obstacles, published in January 1981 by a parliamentary committee, gave a clear indication of the many needs of disabled persons that were not met by either the public or the private sector.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the United Nations have proclaimed the period 1988-92 to be the Decade of Disabled Persons. The U.N. has prepared a world action plan in this respect.

[English]

In proclaiming Canada's participation in the World Decade of Disabled Persons today, we also proclaim our commitment to a set of principles that will govern our participation. These principles recognize the value and the need for disabled persons to be active participants in all those areas relating to the development of implementation of policies, programs and services which affect their lives.

To assist in this self-determination, our Government is initiating an innovative program of community support to disabled persons and their organizations. Detailed information of this new program is being distributed to Hon. Members this afternoon.

This new initiative will provide for the first time significant resources in direct support of Canada's disabled persons.

I am pleased today to inform you, Mr. Speaker, and through you all Canadians, particularly the 3.5 million Canadians who are disabled, that the Government is committing more than $16 million for the next five years to assist them in more fully participating in Canadian society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: This represents a fivefold increase over that which the previous Government has made available for this purpose.

Our strategy for change, consistent with the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the election campaign, is threefold.

One, for the first time, it is a collaborative partnership among federal and provincial Governments, business, labour, religious institutions, educational institutions, service groups and, most important, disabled persons themselves.

Two, it promotes the capabilities of disabled persons to participate more fully in Canada's economic and social life by providing a significant infusion of financial and technical resources to organizations of disabled persons to carry out activities in such important areas as research, teaching and organizing at the community level.

Three, it involves more effective planning and co-ordination of federal Government initiatives.

In this regard, I am pleased to announce that above and beyond this Government's commitment to community groups, a permanent secretariat is being established within my Department to advocate the needs of disabled persons within and among Governments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: As part of the Government's new strategy, we will continue to ensure that meaningful consultations are conducted with representatives of the disabled persons community to ensure that our actions as a Government reflect their genuine needs and desires in their quest for full citizenship.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada has chosen to highlight the decade by launching its own action program. As Minister responsible for the status of the disabled, I will hold consultations in 1986 with a view to convening a federal-provincial-territorial conference on the status of disabled persons. In addition, I will have a series of meetings with the private sector during that year. Those meetings will complement others with charitable organizations and public authorities, and they will enable us to draft and implement a national action program designed to honour our international commitment with respect to the World Decade of Disabled Persons.

In addition to the measures already mentioned and the commitments we made in the Speech from the Throne, I am responsible for establishing a plan to follow up on the recommendations contained in the "Obstacles" report which has been left in limbo. This plan will also feature a number of new initiatives we might take to meet the challenge of the Decade of Disabled Persons, within the parameters of the world-wide action program concerning handicapped people.

• (1510)

[English]

Upon completion of this commitment on behalf of our Government, the report will be submitted to the parliamentary Subcommittee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. Together, the subcommittee and I can measure the progress of our society in meeting the greater goals of full participation and equality of disabled persons.

In my view, the initiatives I have just announced give strong support to the principles which underlie the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. I am sure Hon. Members will support these measures to enhance the quality of life for disabled persons in Canada and will regard them as a fitting tribute to the Universal Declaration.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to reply to the statement of the Hon. Minister. Indeed, he selected a very appropriate day to make such an important representation on behalf of the Government. It being Human Rights Day throughout the world, it is most fitting for him to have chosen it to discuss the human rights of a very important segment of our community—disabled persons who have made a contribution to society. As he pointed out, they represent a full 14 per cent of the population. I congratulate him on recognizing this day and choosing it to make his announcement in the House.

Also I recognize his observations regarding the importance of the Proclamation of Human Rights and the decade of disabled persons which began in 1983. They deserve being brought to the attention of our population. Also the House of Commons should be further sensitized to their importance. We agree with the objectives which the Minister set forth, and it is important to congratulate him on whatever intiatives are now being undertaken.

I thank him as well for bringing to my attention, at least an hour or two ahead of time, his comments and views so that I could have an opportunity to read them and attempt to reply. On behalf of the Official Opposition, I commend him on his concern and his announcement.

However, it is fitting at this time to point out a number of our concerns. We are pleased with the announced commitments, but we still have to say that it is time to act. We welcome the revelation that some $16 million will be made available to programming over the next five years. The Minister said in his statement that it was five times the amount passed by the previous Government. However, in the areas of employment, income tax and transportation, as well as in those areas under the office of the Secretary of State such as consumerism, indeed tens and tens of millions of dollars have been spent. This does not mean that more money should not be given; on the contrary.

Of course this is not a new initiative. The decade of disabled persons began in 1983. We remember that Governments of Canada in the past were concerned about the subject. In fact, in 1980, before the decade or the international year of the disabled was thought of, the previous Government brought into play a committee which made representations in a report entitled "Obstacles". That report suggested many things which needed to be done. We are working on those things, and I understand that the Government will double its efforts to clean up those recommendations which have not been dealt with. Indeed, I welcome the Government to the decade which began in 1983. I know the Government of Canada has been concerned about the matter since 1980 in an active way.

Specifically, it is time to act. I say to the Hon. Minister that we have seen some action. As I mentioned, the Obstacles Report called for action. Since that time the Government has been in receipt of other reports such as the Abella Report and the Equality Now Report of 1984, as well as recommendations from the Committee on Equality. I hope the Minister takes into account that words are not enough. Actions were demanded in these reports. They asked for laws which provided mandatory compliance in the field of employment, so that people would not only find out that their employers had been given a memorandum to follow guidelines but that they were given directions and were required by law to obey them and give equality to the handicapped. Leaders of the handicapped groups have time and again indicated that mandatory action was required. This is what the Abella Report demanded. I would say that mandatory compliance is important in the field of employment.

On November 26, I had the opportunity in the House to comment on a Minister's statement. It was given by the Hon. Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). I pointed out to her that action was required, not merely repetition of a press release some six months before that time. In the field of transportation, those working for or with or those who are themselves disabled want to ensure that there are mandatory requirements for carriers to provide equality of access now. They want that now, not later; they want it to be mandatory, not just guidelines.

On this important day we are happy to hear that the Government has made a clear and forceful commitment as to the direction it will take. The Official Opposition will support it. However, it is not enough to suck the bullet; they have to bite it. We want them to bite it and get on with the job of making certain that mandatory laws protect the handicapped. We do not want nice wishes and pious concepts. Therefore, we call upon the Minister to go forth with what he is undertaking. We wish him well. We will co-operate with him in any way we can to further the commendable objectives which he set forth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Minister on his statement. However, in doing so, I express one regret—and it is not primarily the responsibility of this Minister—that it has taken two years for a response to the UN Declaration. Therefore, rather than having 10 years to do what we hope to accomplish, we will now have only eight. Perhaps that was the responsibility of the previous administration, but nevertheless I think it is worth noting.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, most disabled persons are in a very difficult situation. The need to consult them is obvious. The program and the policies must reflect the urgent needs of those people. The Government must feel a responsibility to keep an open line of communications with their representatives.

[English]

With this in mind, I would say that in reading over the Minister's report, I noted a number of places indicating a desire to consult with those who are handicapped. I urge the Minister to do what I am sure he will be doing in any event, and that is, to seek out those who are the representatives of the handicapped like COPOH which has done such magnificent work here and to involve them in the process from the very beginning.

Going beyond that, I suggest to the Minister, if I may be so presumptuous, that in establishing the permanent secretariat, he hire the handicapped. The handicapped could and should make up that secretariat. They would then have a first-hand knowledge of the kinds of problems with which they are going to have to deal. If it has not gone too far yet, and I hope it has not, I would ask that the Minister take into consideration that recommendation which I offer on behalf of myself and of my colleagues.

I suggest to the Minister that beyond the consultation process with the provincial and territorial officials leading up to the possible convening of a federal-provincial-territorial conference to deal with important issues facing disabled persons, he involve disabled persons in the planning of the conference. Make sure that if the secretariat does, as I have asked, reflect those who are indeed disabled, that they be the persons who undertake the planning and travel across the country to meet with the representatives of provincial and territorial Governments. While doing that travelling, the travel problems confronting the handicapped will become part of the considerations of the conference itself. I urge that that be done.

I would like to deal with the entire question of developing an implementation plan for the outstanding recommendations of the Obstacles Report. I might say that that report is one for which there has been a great deal of support over the years. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), who worked so very hard during the deliberations on behalf of those who are disabled, would want me to say that when the implementation plan is being considered, it should be considered by the disabled. Let them be the ones who determine the pace and methods of implementation. Let them be the ones who make the recommendations, because it is in fact much more difficult for someone without a disability to understand the complexities of the issue than it is for a person who has to face the problems on a day-to-day basis.

These are not criticisms of the Minister's report by any means. My remarks are intended, I hope, to give a slightly different focus which will make the exercise that is about to be engaged in a much more meaningful one. As a simple gesture as evidence of the goodwill the Government no doubt feels, I would ask the Minister if he would once again do as I have done in the House of Commons, and that is, to seek from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) one small change to the tax legislation, a change that will eliminate the sales tax on replacement parts for wheelchairs. It is not a big change, neither is it a costly undertaking. However, it is something that we could do right now to show that we are serious. It is something that we could do that would indicate that not only are we getting on with finding new ways but we are going to solve one of the old problems in the process. I would ask the Minister to do that.

I commend the Minister for allotting new money for the program. I think it is fair to say that while it is a substantial amount of money, it will not be enough. It never is, but it is a substantial increase over what the previous administration and even this Government had been allotting over the years. I am positive that with that money, disabled groups themselves will be able to seek out solutions and ways of representing their needs.

On behalf of my colleagues, we welcome the report and ask that the matters I have raised be given careful consideration and be implemented if possible. We ask the Minister to report back if he finds that some of them cannot be implemented so that we may understand why that is. We ask further that that simple gesture through the tax structure be made early so that people can see that the Government stands for more than just rhetoric. The Minister will have our co-operation in making sure that we get the kind of program that we ought to have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and duty to present four petitions, one from Halifax, Nova Scotia; one from the Bricklayers', Masons' & Terrazzo Workers' International Local No. 1 in British Columbia; a petition from Toronto; and a petition from the Brantford area. All of these petitioners ask the Government to rescind its decision which comes into effect on January 1, 1986, whereby pension income will be considered employment income for unemployment insurance purposes.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty as a parliamentarian to present a petition signed by 10 persons from the National Capital Region who request the Government to withdraw Bill C-70 from the legislative process.

[Translation]

IMPORTANCE OF AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS IN FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present to the House a petition signed by 250 farmers of the electoral constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell who urge the Prime Minister to give his personal assurance that none of the agricultural programs will be sacrificed in the free trade negotiations with the United States.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour once again to present three petitions which are concerned with the deindexing of family allowances. The first one is from the Minister's own Province of Manitoba and is signed by a number of people connected with business and professional women's clubs and the St. John Ambulance Association. They are imploring the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances because this deindexation will have a very negative effect on women and families. I also have a petition from Burnaby, Surrey and Richmond in British Columbia which asks for a reindexation of family allowances, and another one from Vancouver East.

I am glad the Minister is present in the House. We are presenting many, many petitions every day on this subject and I hope that the Minister will reconsider his decision.

• (1530)

RAIL PASSES FOR CP PENSIONERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by over 500 of my constituents who ask that this House reinstate the rail passes for CP Rail pensioners and their survivors.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions to present signed by residents of both Thunder Bay-Atikokan and Thunder Bay-Nipigon. It is my duty, honour and pleasure given the importance of this issue that I present petitions signed by 150 residents of northwestern Ontario who protest the decision of the Government to deindex the family allowance. They call upon the Government to recognize that the changes which are being made, including those to the child tax credit, will leave even the poorest families worse off by 1990 than they would be if the indexation of family allowances was continued for all. They call upon the House of Commons to maintain the full indexation of the family allowance.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Again today, Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the workers of Moncton by presenting two petitions from residents of Caissie Cape, Moncton, and Hopewell Cape. All those people are worried about the current situation in the CN shops; they would like the Government to commit itself by guaranteeing that those jobs will remain in Moncton and will not be transferred elsewhere.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions signed by a number of residents from my riding, other people from the City of Winnipeg and people living in the province of the Minister involved respecting family allowances. The petitioners point out that by the year 1990 even the poorest families will lose as a result of the changes which the Government is putting into place. They also point out that the cut-back with respect to child tax benefits, along with the sales tax increases, will be a heavy burden on middle-income Canadians and that these changes are unfair in the face of the budget hand-outs in terms of tax gains.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to enter a petition from residents of Spadina riding objecting very strongly to the Government's Bill which will reduce the family benefits. They point out that by 1990 this will take $600 million from families with children, including the poorest families. This is on top of sales tax changes and increases that hurt them, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases which hurt low and middle-income people and benefit upper-income people. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Today, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty, to present to this Honourable House a petition circulated by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and signed by residents of Fort Frances and Devlin in my riding, who urge the Prime Minister of Canada to withdraw Bill C-70 immediately.

[English]

CONCERN FOR FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of the residents of the greater Moncton area. CN is the largest industrial employer in New Brunswick and, in particular, in the Moncton area, with 1,100 to 1,200 workers. Some 600 to 700 job losses will occur as a result of public and private sector losses in income of $32 million in the area as a result of CN's decision. I wish to present this petition on behalf of residents in the Moncton area who are concerned that the Government come clean with a statement as soon as possible indicating that the jobs at the CN shops in Moncton will be maintained because of the regional economic importance of these jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining question stand?

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to try and find out once and for all from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) how he is planning to dispose of the Daly Building in my riding. Question No 261 has been on the Order Paper since February 6, 1985.

I am trying to find out what will become of the Daly Building. The newspapers are full of stories and we would like to know what the facts are. Could the Minister give us an answer, so that we can forget about this question and do something with the Daly Building?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to discuss that matter with the Minister.

I ask that all the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 25 minutes this day.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, just prior to lunch I was saying that the economic mess which presently exists in Atlantic Canada in terms of unemployment and lack of economic activity did not arise over the last 14 months. In fact, it has arisen over the past 118 years of Conservative and Liberal federal and provincial rule. In fact, the responsibility now rests with this Government to do something about it. It simply cannot escape its responsibility by dumping on the previous Government. The challenge is now with it. In fact, it has embarked on a course which can only be more disastrous because, in fact, it will now attack this great deficit. It wants to attack this deficit having, of course, over the years followed a trend which has moved to individuals and Governments in Atlantic Canada depending on transfer payments. The Government is now going to attack the deficit. It is going to look to the private sector, which is virtually non-existent in Atlantic Canada. It will cut the deficit which can only further exacerbate the situation for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I notice you are giving me a signal. I wish to close with the words of Elizabeth Beale, who is the Chief Economist for the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. She put it very succinctly when she said:

Because of this dependence on government, deficit reduction could have a proportionally more severe effect on Atlantic Canada than elsewhere. Stated intentions in several areas have already given indications of the potential effects of deficit reduction (for example, changes to UI benefits, higher user fees for transportation and agricultural services, reduction of transfers to provinces).

I think she has hit the nail on the head. It means that this Government has got to commit itself in a real way to changing the economic base in Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for his speech. All the citizens of Newfoundland, and myself, have been waiting with bated breath to hear the position of the New Democratic Party on the decision of the current administration to abandon regional development policy in the country. I know that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is a fairly genuine fellow. He speaks his mind and calls it the way he sees it. So I was particularly delighted that if there were going to be a spokesman for the NDP today in this debate that it would be the Hon. Member. In Atlantic Canada, but in Newfoundland in particular, we have been wondering where the New Democratic Party stands on this issue.

● (1540)

It was with some regret and disappointment that we noticed that despite the very great and real concern of the New Democratic Party for the people of Newfoundland, the leader of that Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) did not have time during the last federal election to visit Newfoundland. Perhaps that is understandable. However, we have been left since that time, until today, with a degree of doubt about the interest and position of the New Democratic Party with respect to federal government policy and its impact on Newfoundland. During the course of the last election campaign not a single hour, day or minute, regrettably, was spent by the Leader of the NDP in the Province of Newfoundland putting forward the policy of his Party.

That having been said, I want to say to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that I appreciate what he said because I realize, as he does, that the record of any administration, including previous Liberal administrations, cannot be a perfect one. I recognize, as he does, that the statistics held up to the light of day are not numbers to jump up and down and cheer about. However, I hope the Hon. Member will agree with me that current measures are being undertaken by this Government to take away the basic underpinnings of a policy which recognizes regional disparities where they exist and attempts to attack those disparities by providing special incentives.

We speak today about Atlantic Canada, and I wonder if the Hon. Member will agree that the basic policy which is currently being undertaken by this administration is not only going to affect Atlantic Canada but will affect northern Ontario, the eastern part of Quebec, the Northwest Territory and part of western Canada. It will affect areas such as Prince George where I was a few weeks ago. I hope we are going to be successful as Members of Parliament on all sides of the House who come here with a genuine dedication to improve the lot of people no matter where they live, in spreading this message. It is not just an Atlantic Canada problem but a problem for all of Canada. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on that particular proposition.

Mr. Rodriguez: I thank my hon. friend for asking me a question under the guise of a speech. Let me first say to him in reply to the preface to his question that we have found out that it is not what one says during a political election campaign which counts. It is one's performance in between elections. I want to tell the Hon. Member that in my capacity as chairman of the Atlantic caucus of my Party, I went to Labrador and listened to what the people had to say, which was not unlike what people were saying to me in my own area of northern Ontario.

We recognize that in fact Government has to take a more active role in establishing community development funds. It may be that the Government has to participate more with ordinary citizens in developing the resources for the benefit of people in the community. One of the things we discovered is that often times the decisions with respect to economic development are made here in Ottawa and it takes a long time for the message to get back. I was in Cape Breton not too long ago and I heard of a paramount example of this with respect to Millie's Potato Chips. The gentleman who owns Millie's Potato Chips wanted to build a plant at Port Hawkesbury and applied for a DRIE grant. The decision had to be made here in Ottawa and something like two months elapsed before it got back to Cape Breton. The fellow decided he could not wait any longer and put the plant in Ontario. Decentralization of decision-making with respect to economic development through the various agencies of the federal Government must be paramount. People at the local level must have an input. We do not need to appoint a whole pile of Tory hacks which, in the past, used to be Liberal hacks, to these boards which make the decisions.

Mr. Darling: What about the NDP hacks?

Mr. Rodriguez: We believe the local people can make the decisions with respect to economic development. We believe that there should be a provision of funds for co-operatives in community enterprises. That's where it is at. We cannot depend upon a large corporation to come and create jobs. It is not going to happen that way. It has not happened with Inco. Inco is cutting back jobs in my own area, so we cannot expect that.

We believe there should be reduced taxation for co-ops and community enterprises. We think that is where the incentives should be. We believe that a lot of times individuals in the communities of northern Ontario and Atlantic Canada who have good ideas cannot get financing because the banks want all sorts of ironclad guarantees and collateral. Poor folks in Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario do not have that kind of collateral. We need to have capital made available to ordinary individuals so that they can get into a small business and create some employment.

We believe we can restore the forest lands of Atlantic Canada. I mentioned before how they have been raped. One can trace the history of it. It goes right back to decisions of provincial and federal Governments of the past. We believe there should be $200 million injected into Atlantic Canada to start the restoration process. We believe that there should be a program for co-operative management of private wood lots. That is an activity these people can get into but they do not have the wherewithal to involve themselves. We believe that an investment of $150 million should be made immediately to develop such programs as the salmonid enhancement, the rehabilitation of the natural habitat, and improved marketing. Some of that is already going on in Cape Breton and in St. John's, Newfoundland.

Mr. Tobin: St. John's is not Newfoundland. It's a very small part of Newfoundland.

Mr. Rodriguez: I say to my hon. friend in all honesty that what we need at this point in time has to be a marshall type plan to get Atlantic Canada back on its feet. It cannot be the drop down, fall down theories we have followed in the past. They have not worked because as we created some activity, we found that the greater part of our economy slipped back. We must make a concentrated attack on this problem. No longer can we treat Atlantic Canada as if it is some Third World colony of central Canada. It seems that is what we have been doing. We have been sending it foreign aid and what we need is a thought-out economic strategy with economic development plans attached to it so we can get on with the business of creating employment in that area. That is what people want. They want a job and they want dignity. They do not want hand-outs from the federal and provincial Governments.

Mr. Tobin: Well said.

Supply

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on his speech which I believe contained some insight. However, he talked about a martial plan. Instead of sending in the marshall, the problem is that this Government has sent in the sheriff. The sheriff has said: "We are taking back and repossessing everything you have".

Just to put into perspective the resolution which is before us today, let me say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Question Period painted a glowing picture of what is happening with respect to job-creation in Canada. He quoted this from The Globe and Mail: "Creation of 304,000 jobs drives unemployment down". If the Prime Minister had read on to the last four paragraphs, I think he would have put into perspective the resolution we have before us today. As a graphic example of what we are talking about, The Globe and Mail stated:

Still, the silver lining has a cloud. The job creation machine appears to have ignored residents of Canada's hinterlands. Raw figures show that between November, 1984, and last month, most of the new jobs were packed into the country's heartland, while the demand for new workers petered out going either west or east.

If the growth in jobs had been evenly spread across the country, each province would have one share of the new jobs roughly equal to its share of the labour force.

In the past year, Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick were the biggest winners.

All got more than their share of the new employment. Together they have almost two-thirds of the labour force, but picked up almost 84 per cent of the new jobs in the past year.

Here is the message I want to get across, Mr. Speaker:

The outermost provinces—British Columbia, Alberta, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia—did worst. With 26 per cent of the work force . . . they got only 8 per cent of the new jobs.

When the Government talks about the rosy picture across the country in job creation, we have to put it in perspective and illustrate the figures which point out why we have this resolution before the House today.

The people of the Atlantic provinces have always struggled to stay afloat. However, since this Government took power there seems to have been a consistent policy of taking away whatever life preservers we have had. The problem is that there is an ideological inflexibility over there. There is a flaw in the policy which says that somehow the private sector is going to solve all our ills. For the first time in 30 years in this country there is no regional development policy. My colleague from Cape Breton said it was our Party which created the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. That was a victory for regional development. However, there is now in Canada no policy for regional development and that is why the Atlantic provinces are suffering. You cannot inflexibly apply one policy all across Canada. Canada is a collection of regions and the Atlantic provinces have always depended on public sector support to shore up the weak private sector. There is nothing wrong with putting the private sector front and centre, but in the Atlantic provinces the private sector is weak and there has to be Government involvement. In the past there has been Government involvement but it is absent now. In the meantime, the Government programs we have depended on have been cut back.

Let me start with the Established Programs Financing, transfer payments, because therein lies the greatest tragedy of all. There will be less money going to the Atlantic provinces, including my own, than had been anticipated, hoped for and expected. As a result there will be increased charges for hospitals and post-secondary institutions. Young people, the real hope for Atlantic Canada, will have a tough time getting the education and training they need. In the long run the most tragic cut of all will be that cut in the Established Programs Financing.

I want to look at the cuts in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Something like $25 million will be cut from that Department which is so important to my province. There will be lay-offs in the Department, about 170 people across Canada. Some provinces depend more heavily on the fishery and it is logical to assume that we will probably lose more of those civil servants in the Atlantic than elsewhere in Canada. Therefore, the cuts in the area of small-craft harbours and lay-offs in the Civil Service will add to an already disastrous situation. As well, the issue of factory-freezer trawlers emphasizes again the insensitivity of this Government to what is needed in Atlantic Canada. If this approach to factory-freezer trawlers is allowed to be developed, if more licences are issued, it will have a devastating effect on the northeast coast of Newfoundland which is in my riding. If factory-freezer trawlers are allowed to multiply, the whole inshore fishery along the northeast coast will be devastated, indeed wiped out. The only alternative for these people will be what my colleague from Cape Breton mentioned this morning, an exodus from the Atlantic provinces to elsewhere in Canada. That none of us can tolerate. There are no plans to help the people on the northeast coast who will be dislocated because of these trawlers. There are no programs for retraining, for developing alternatives in the inshore fishery. No examination, no plan, and that is where the Government stands condemned on this whole issue.

The Government has not only not responded to the long-term problems in the fishery, it has not responded adequately to emergencies. In October I raised in the House with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) the disastrous situation in the inshore fishery. There was no crop there this year. The fish did not come inshore. Many people along the northeast coast and in other parts of Newfoundland and Labrador will not qualify for unemployment insurance. In October I told the Minister not to wait until the end of the fishing season, but institute work programs now and give these people a chance to have an income this winter. The Minister waited until the fishing season was over and responded with too little, too late. We received $9.5 million which I estimate is half or less than half of what is needed to do the job in job creation in the Newfoudland fishery. The Government was told about this but it did not react to a real emergency and for that it stands condemned as well.

In addition, the regular job-creation program is not working. This year the Minister built a training component into what is the successor to the Canada Works program. If you are going to apply for a job-creation project now in Newfoundland or the Atlantic provinces, you have to show you can train people for long-term jobs. It is naive and nonsensical to apply a policy like that to the Atlantic area. There is no way that kind of training program can be built in. The Government and the Minister have to realize that. She has to change the policy, and reinstitute Canada Works if workers in the Atlantic provinces are going to get jobs and have the income they need over the winter. This job development program has to be changed, this training component has to be wiped out, and we have to get back to the job-creation programs we had previously. As well, the situation in youth job creation is bad. I want to read some figures from the Minister's own Department which show that under Challenge '85, Newfoundland young people earned less money per hour, worked for a shorter period of time, and earned less over-all than young people anywhere else in Canada. Young Newfoundlanders earned an average of $1,232 compared with a national average of $2,000. Newfoundlanders earned an average of $4.09 per hour compared with a national average of $4.73. If we add that to the figures I read from The Globe and Mail earlier we can see that there may be an advance in other parts of Canada but it has not happened in Atlantic Canada. Indeed, that area of the country is slipping farther behind. In the meantime, no action has been taken to shore up the economy with public sector support which we so badly need. As a matter of fact, programs which had been announced have been cancelled. For example, a federal prison announced for central Newfoundland has not gone ahead. It was announced one year ago last fall and this is December, 1985. We still have no word on that project. This is the kind of public sector support we need to create jobs in the Atlantic area and that is the kind of project this Government, with its private sector ideology, has cancelled.

The only thing that the present Government is hanging its hat on in Newfoundland, as far as I can see, is the Atlantic Accord. Given the situation now with OPEC and the prospects for world oil prices, the development of Hibernia, as much as I want it to go ahead, is questionable. It is certainly questionable if we see it as the total economic saviour of Newfoundland. Newfoundland may get $200 million a year from the Hibernia project, but the deficit of Newfoundland is something like $300 million a year. If the present Government is hanging its economic hat on the Hibernia development, it will be sadly mistaken. We need the kind of public sector input which my Party put into my province when it was the Government of Canada. It instituted a water system in Port aux Basques at a cost of $6 million, a music school at Memorial at a cost of $2 million, a world-class marine institute at a cost of $47 million, and an ocean industries agreement to help small business get a leg up in going after jobs in the offshore.

The Liberal Government instituted a tourism agreement at a cost of $14 million to help small business to respond to the increased traffic in the Atlantic area, and a minerals agreement which prompted exploration which resulted in finds such as the gold deposit on the south coast of Newfoundland. That minerals agreement was made at a cost of $21 million. The Liberal Government made the Burin Peninsula agreement at a cost of $28 million which has resulted in the start-up of projects such as the mine at St. Lawrence. There was a rural development agreement which funds incentives by volunteers all over the province. That involved a cost of $18 million. There was also a roads agreement.

Those are the kind of projects, programs, and policies that the Liberal Party had when it was the Government of Canada and that is the kind of public sector support which is absent now. The Government has even cancelled a very important project, the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation. I asked the previous Minister of Fisheries and Oceans about that and he confirmed that the $15 million which had been set aside to create the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation has evaporated. It no longer exists. The Government has been in power for over a year and we still do not have the vehicle which is so important to northern Newfoundland and Labrador.

Fisheries Products International has just said that it will be getting rid of 23 plants. Many of those plants are in small communities which are very vulnerable indeed. Without support, help, confidence, and money from the Government, there is no way that those plants in those communities can survive. They need the Northern Fisheries Development Corporation which the present Liberal Party proposed but which the Government has not seen fit to proceed with. Indeed, it has seen fit to spend that money elsewhere.

In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, the north is probably the hardest hit of all. The people in the north are usually the forgotten people of Canada. I speak not only of the people in Labrador, but those in Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories as well. The deregulation of transportation will mean increased costs for people in the north because they depend so heavily on air transportation.

I would like to point out one particular issue in the north which I believe needs immediate attention by the Government, that is the isssue of taxation of northern benefits. In his economic statement the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that he would continue the moratorium, that is the nontaxation of northern benefits such as housing and travel until the end of 1985. We are getting very close to the end of 1985 and there has been no statement from the Government as to what it intends to do about the taxation of northern benefits.

This is not a national issue in the country, but the people who live in Whitehorse, Yellowknife, Old Crow, Labrador City and Goose Bay, as well as some people in northern New Brunswick and northern British Columbia are very, very concerned about this particular issue. It particularly affects mining communities such as Farrow in the Yukon. There are special benefits for people who live and work in the north and the Government must say very clearly that in the future, as in the past, those benefits will not be taxed because, if that happens, it will put an increased economic burden on people at a time when they can least afford to bear it. The Government must measure up to its responsibilities in the north. It is one thing to let the Polar Sea go through the Northwest Passage, but it is another thing altogether to take money out of the pockets of people who live in that area.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in defence of the motion before the House today, I have tried to say that the record of the Government in the Atlantic provinces is, indeed, utterly dismal. The people know it. That is why the polls show that, although there are only four points separating the two Parties nationally, there is a ten-point spread in favour of my Party in the Atlantic Provinces. That seems to me to be as dramatic an indication as any that I can use of the knowledge of the people that the present policies are not going to work and that the Government has failed to live up to its responsibilities. I find it amazing that a Government with such an overwhelming mandate to govern should dissipate that right to govern so quickly.

What the Government is doing to the economy of the Atlantic area is even more serious. If the present Government policies of user-pay, deregulation, cuts in government services and private sector front and centre at all costs are not changed, corrected and reversed, the Atlantic provinces will slide silently into the Atlantic Ocean. If the Government continues on that course, it will see that happen. At the very least, it is ignoring the Atlantic economy, and at the worst, it is goring the economy of the Atlantic area.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

Mr. Binns: I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). He suggested that the record of the Government is dismal in the Atlantic area. He did mention the Atlantic Accord, but suggested that the Government is hanging its head on that particular measure with little to back it up. I do not think that is the case at all. I think the Government can hold its head high over the Atlantic Accord which is an outstanding agreement when you consider the benefits that will flow to Newfoundland in particular and to the Atlantic area as a whole.

I will mention a few of the other benefits which the Members from Newfoundland may like to be reminded of. Just a few days ago the Minister responsible for CMHC entered into an agreement whereby a new $700,000 senior citizen housing unit will be built in Mount Pearl in conjunction with the Legion in that community. There was a recent announcement on the launching of a new ferry vessel, Caribou, at a cost to the federal Government of approximately $121 million. The Government of Canada made an investment in the equity capital of Fishery Products International to put the company on a sound footing for the future. That was an investment made in the last eight weeks of some $76.7 million. There was an official ceremony celebrating the completion of the highway connecting Conception Bay south to the Trans-Canada highway, which project cost a total of $12.8 million. The federal contribution for that was some $9.6 million. Just recently there was the official opening of the Newfoundland-Labrador Institute of Fisheries and Marine Technology.

● (1610)

Mr. Tobin: Liberal policy.

Mr. Binns: That was a total cost of $42 million, $29.7 million of which was from the federal treasury. On November 1, there was the official opening of the new music school building at Memorial University. The total cost was $5 million with a contribution from the Government of Canada of some $2 million.

On November 5, there was the official opening of the National Research Council Institute for Marine Dynamics, including the world's largest Arctic vessel research facility and ice tank. The cost to the Government of Canada was $55 million for that one project alone. On November 18 there was the official opening of the Marine Emergency Duty Centre. This is another program costing some $4.2 million.

In that list from the last eight weeks there is nearly $300 million worth of federal contributions to Newfoundland and Labrador. I think that is a remarkable and significant record.

Let us look at some programs for fishermen and fish plant workers because all of us know that it has been a difficult season for Newfoundland fishermen. In June, the Government instituted a special program for inshore fishermen who were prevented from commencing the inshore season by unusual ice conditions. That program was instituted to give such fishermen payments equivalent to the payments they would have received under the UI program if it was applicable. As a result, some 5,854 fishermen were assisted at a cost of $4.7 million.

I could go on at some length. I am sure Members opposite would want to be reminded of the commitment which the Government of Canada has continued to make to the Province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Tobin: Previous Government.

Mr. Binns: Of course, these are events which have taken place within the last eight weeks.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member has a duty to respond on behalf of his Party. However, being the Hon. Member that he is, I also know that he would not want to mislead the House. He is in very great danger of doing that.

I happen to know whereof I speak because I served as the Newfoundland Minister in the previous administration. The reality is that every project he has mentioned, with the exception of the injection into Fisheries Products International, was implemented under the previous Liberal administration. The Caribou project began under our administration. I happened to sign the Conception Bay highway agreement myself. That is a matter of record. The Marine Institute, costing $47 million, was money that was commissioned by us and indeed the construction started when we were the Government of Canada. I was at the opening two weeks ago.

The music school was another project that started when we were the Government of Canada. The National Research Council goes back beyond my time to the time of Don Jamieson. The Marine Emergency Centre was instituted by Jean-Luc Pepin when he was Minister of Transport. All of those projects began under a Liberal administration and that was exactly the point I was making. We are public sector conscious whereas the Government is private sector conscious.

It is important to emphasize that the only thing the Hon. Member mentioned that his Government did was to inject $105 million into Fisheries Products International. It is also important to note that as a result of that, it has drained every single cent of economic development money for all of Newfoundland for this year. There will not be another project. It is important that all those people from Newfoundland who are watching and all those in the Chamber realize that the $105 million comes from an economic development envelope that is put aside every year for every province. As a result of that injection into Fisheries Products International there is no more money for economic development projects in the Province of Newfoundland.

If I am wrong, I would like someone opposite to correct me, but I believe that the fact is that that $105 million injected into Fisheries Products International is not new money but money from the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion under the economic development envelope for economic projects in Newfoundland. This means that there will be no new initiatives such as the ones we have taken in the past. That is the reality and the truth.

Mr. Henderson: Would the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) comment on the opinion of Mr. Peckford, the Premier of Newfoundland, and give us his opinion on the total effect of the issuance of the factory-freezer trawler licences? How will it affect plant workers in Newfoundland and indeed the inshore fishery of Newfoundland? Does he see that as being a long-term threat to the inshore fishery?

There are those who believe that the capital cost of bringing in factory-freezer trawlers may well put extra pressure on the fishing industry and indeed allow for further quotas for factory-freezer trawlers in order to make them economically feasible in the long term to te detriment of the inshore fishery?

Mr. Rompkey: There is no question that it will be an either/or situation. You cannot catch fish twice and you cannot process fish twice. If they are caught offshore, they cannot be caught inshore and if they are processed offshore they will not be processed inshore. There is no question that there is a threat to jobs in inshore plants.

My greatest concern in this whole debate about factory-freezer trawlers is that there has been no enunciation of any long-term plan for the inshore fishery of Newfoundland, for the people in the plants and the fishermen. No one has given any thought to that.

Those are the people who are in jeopardy and they are among the most disadvantaged and vulnerable groups anywhere in Canada. The real tragedy today is that no one in Government is giving thought to what will happen to the inshore fishery, particularly along the northeast coast of Newfoundland. I have not heard one word in this whole debate on factory-freezer trawlers addressing that situation.

There is no question that it is a threat and the Government must live up to its responsibility and make clear its intention for the inshore fishery, particularly for the northeast coast of Newfoundland.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Member for a very articulate and succinct speech, especially in light of the rebuttal wiht the ridiculous claims made by Members opposite. They are so desperate to find something good to say that they had to go back to the Liberal record to find some positive announcements to recant.

I know that the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has made the same inquiries as I have. Has he received any assurance from the Government of Canada, despite repeated requests by us and the people living in the area, about the future of the northern fisheries development corporation? This project was conceived under the last administration, during the time he was in Cabinet, but we have heard nothing about it ever since.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) points out an issue that is important to him and myself as well as the people we serve together. As I said in my speech, if nothing is done 23 plants will be cut adrift by Fisheries Products International. Fisheries Products International says that it will be getting rid of these plants because they are non-productive.

If no plan is put in place, those small communities in his riding and mine will not only be vulnerable, their whole economic base is in danger of being destroyed.

We have proposed a public sector corporation, a northern fisheries development corporation. Not only has the Government not put this in place, it has taken the $15 million which we had put aside to fund that corporation and used it elsewhere. That cannot be excused and must be condemned.

My hon. friend and I must continue to fight to establish that northern fisheries development corporation for plants on the northern peninsula of Newfoundland and along the coast of Labrador. Only with that kind of support will those people who are very disadvantaged and vulnerable be able to survive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, even after what we have just heard, it should not come as a surprise that I welcome this opportunity to inform the House that the Government has not abandoned the Atlantic provinces, as claimed by the Opposition.

The Conservative Government has now been in office for fifteen months, and I think Canadians know what we have done and the results we have achieved.

Before elaborating on the situation in the Atlantic provinces, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a general overview of the national situation, which in itself constitutes a very encouraging indicator of our economy.

I would remind the House that unemployment has dropped 1.5 per cent since we came to power. This is remarkable progress indeed, at a time when our economic recovery is still somewhat shaky.

During the first quarter of 1985, the GNP growth rate increased 33 per cent compared with the first quarter in 1984. During the same period, interest rates fell, dropping from 11.25 per cent at the end of 1984 to their present level which is around 10 per cent. In August 1985, retail sales increased by 12.6 per cent over the previous year, and things are continuing to improve.

These figures are enough to make the Opposition blush with embarrassment, since they are supported by the projections of the Economic Council of Canada, which is announcing ten years of steady growth, moderate inflation and a progressive decline in the unemployment rate.

The ECC is predicting an average annual growth of 3.5 per cent during the next ten years, a rate of inflation of less than 4 per cent and a drop in the unemployment rate which should stabilize at around 7.6 per cent between now and 1991.

And now I would like to get back to what has been done to help the Atlantic provinces. The Government of Canada has signed an agreement with Prince Edward Island on electric power rates. This step involves funding of over $50 million and is aimed at bringing down existing power rates in this province. One of the aspects of this agreement is a provisional, shared-cost subsidiary agreement, with a budget of $8.5 million, of which $6.8 million is being provided by the federal Government. Furthermore, a special advisor has been appointed to explore all possible avenues regarding a long term solution to the Island's energy problems.

This Government has signed agreements on tourism and market development, within the framework of the general agreements. It has also provided $4.5 million to establish a new meat processing plant to replace the Canada Packers plant.

The Government has provided this province with funding totalling $103 million under the Economic Regional Development Agreement.

As for Newfoundland, last spring, the federal and provincial governments signed a joint agreement under which $180 million will be set aside for improvements to Newfoundland's road network. Under the ERDA, $150 million will be injected into upgrading the Trans-Canada Highway and $30 million will be allocated for roads in Labrador. The federal contribution amounts to $112.5 million; in addition, $93 million have been allocated to the Goose Bay airport development project, and a $6.5 million contribution has been used to improve the quality of Channel-Port-aux-Basques municipal drinking water.

All told, under the regional economic development agreement, the federal Government will have invested over $235 million in Newfoundland over a five-year period.

Members of the Opposition also referred to Nova Scotia. In May 1985, eight new members were appointed to the Cape Breton advisory committee to consider ways in which the federal and provincial Governments might promote employment and long-term economic development in Cape Breton.

The Canadian Government has also approved the final project for the construction of a second access tunnel to the Donken-Morien underwater coal deposits at Cape Breton.

Drilling for this 3.5-kilometre tunnel will take a year, at an estimated cost of $16 million. Capital expenditures fall within Devco's current budgetary appropriations and, in line with our terms of reference, the tunnel drilling project attests to the federal Government's commitment towards Cape Breton. It will boost the local economy and create 100 jobs in the Glace Bay region.

Under the regional industrial development program, the Government gave Nova Scotia Pulp Limited about $4 million to upgrade its pulp and paper plant, make its operations more profitable, and thus contribute to maintaining jobs in the region of Port Hawkesbury.

Again in May 1985, DRIE gave a $1.5 million grant to Glace Bay's Highland Fisheries for the construction of a modern fish processing plant valued at $6.3 million. Thanks to that assistance, the plant will have 180 employees before the end of 1985.

In July 1985 the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) announced Government support payments to complete the federal assistance program made available to Cape Breton under the regional industrial development program and other DRIE projects. These support payments and the Cape Breton investment tax credit which then increased 50 to 60 per cent have turned this region into a haven for investors.

Both Governments agreed last June to act jointly to bring forward various economic development projects under the Canada-Nova-Scotia Economic Regional Development Agreement.

The new action plan proposes cooperative efforts under the two subsidiary agreements on technological transportation and innovation. The signatory Ministers took this opportunity to change the priorities of the ERDA to reflect their views about the importance of consultations with the native people and the visible minorities of the province about ERDA issues which concern them. Indeed, we saw at the recent First Ministers' Conference that these are priority issues for the province. The subsidiary agreements already signed under the ERDA have a total value of $205.5 million, of which the Federal share will be $140 million.

The Cape Breton Advisory Committee created by the two Governments and chaired by Mrs. Theresa MacNeil is a perfect example of federal-provincial cooperation. Last September, the committee submitted a report based on its consultations with Cape Breton residents last summer. The recommendations contained in this report have been carefully evaluated and have already influenced the decisions of the Federal Government. For instance, the boundaries for the Cape Breton tax credit have been extended to the Mulgrave Region in the Southwest, and the benefits of the tax credit have been increased.

Last Friday, on December 6, a new agency called Enterprise Cape Breton was created. Its purpose is to stimulate economic development in the region. While this is a federal initiative, the participation of the private sector and the province will be welcome and even essential. Based on the one counter formula, Enterprise Cape Breton will enable eventual investors to be better informed about DREE programs and services, and will operate with a $25 million budget, which is double the budget of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Enterprise Canada will also launch major promotion and marketing programs to attract investments to Canada.

If we look at all these projects, we can see that our federal projects have already begun to create jobs in Cape Breton, as indicated by the announcement of $10 million worth of industrial development and expansion projects.

Last June, Magma International Inc. signed a memorandum of agreement with the Federal Government to locate in Cape Breton. Magma is a company which has been very successful in operating small semi-independent facilities, for instance in Southwestern Ontario. It is considering the construction on Cape Breton Island of a center similar to the one it already operates in Ontario for training in state-of-the art technology.

Again in Nova Scotia, over $1 million have been allocated for repairing the Port Hawkesbury road, and $200,000 for developing an industrial area in Antigonish. Those amounts have been expended under the Canada-Nova Scotia supplementary agreement on the Strait of Canso.

And to promote access to modern technology, a $34 million economic and regional development agreement was signed with Nova Scotia in July 1985 to set up computer and high technology training centers. Ottawa will assume 70 per cent of the cost, with the Province contributing the other 30 per cent.

Again under ERDA, the Federal Government has therefore injected another $140 million in Nova Scotia.

Let me turn now to New Brunswick. A $32 million supplementary agreement was signed in November 1984 relating to tourism, with a $22 million federal contribution. And, yesterday, on December 9, $30 million were allotted for industrial development in that Province, with the signing in Fredericton of an industrial development supplementary agreement. The federal Government will provide $21 million through MIRD, and the Province $9 million.

Under another agreement signed in May 1985 under IRDP, the Canadian Government will contribute $42 million, $10 million of which are refundable, for the setting up in Newcastle of a coated paper mill. The Acadia Paper Company is being financed by Repap Enterprise Incorporated from Montreal.

That project will provide employment stability to more than 1,600 forest and mill workers, and involves the hiring of 1,000 person-years during the construction phase. An estimated 125 permanent jobs will thus be created.

The Canadian Government has provided that Province with $215.7 million under ERDA.

Mr. Speaker, from January 1984 to March 1985, 3,100 loans totalling $98 million were guaranteed under the Small Business Loans Act in Atlantic Canada. Under the Industrial Regional Development Program, we have been able to contribute a total of $90 million for 209 projects.

Mr. Speaker, more than any other Government, this Government has promoted an exchange of views and improved relations between the federal Government and the provinces. For the first time in the history of this country, the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee responsible for Regional Economic Development, the Hon. Sinclair Stevens, scheduled regular meetings with his provincial counterparts. Since the first meeting in Ottawa in January 1985, meetings have been held every two months in provincial capitals across the country to discuss the difficult problems of regional development. These meetings provide an opportunity for discussing economic development and for setting up a development policy adapted to the needs of the various regions of this country. These meetings provide a forum for discussing questions such as co-ordinating assistance to small businesses through partial decentralization of the Industrial and Regional Development Program, reducing the number of regulations and the paper burden for small businesses, co-ordinating investment promotion activities and consulting on federal proposals for revising regulations for the transportation industry.

The Ministers responsible for regional economic development have agreed on a workplan for dealing with three broad objectives connected with regional development, namely, attracting and especially maintaining investment in all regions, enumerating obstacles to interprovincial trade as well as the various ways in which it could be enhanced, and preparing a data base on regional development. Two federal-provincial task forces have been created to examine these issues, and their reports will be submitted for consideration by the Ministers at their next meeting in January 1986.

Mr. Speaker, we have never seen the like of the economic potential that exists in the world today. Canada must take advantage of these opportunities and carve out its share of the market.

In concluding, I still wonder why Opposition Members are not prepared to invest their energies and work together with the Government to ensure that programs and initiatives produce results as quickly as possible, for the greater benefit of all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson).

● (1630)

[English]

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Concerning the situation in Cape Breton, obviously her speech was written before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) answered a question in the House today. Quite clearly he stated that very little happened to improve the economy of Cape Breton, or indeed Atlantic Canada, in the last year and a half. It is in that context that I mention her Department obviously wrote her speech yesterday. That she had to rise and read that speech is not good enough for Atlantic Canada. The people of Atlantic Canada are looking for some action from the Government. They are not looking for words. Actions speak louder than words.

On the very important issue of transfer payments to the provinces, I have in my possession a clipping from The Evening Times Globe of Saint John headed "Baxter Blasts Federal Cuts". Mr. John B. M. Baxter, Q.C., the Minister of Finance for the Province of New Brunswick, is reported as follows:

> New Brunswick's health and education programs are "at serious risk" under an inflexible plan for slashing $2 billion from transfer payments to provinces advanced by federal Finance Minister Michael Wilson on Wednesday—
> Depending on what method Wilson ultimately employs, Baxter says New Brunswick could lose either $60 million or $120 million in health and education transfer payments.

Those are the comments of the Minister of Finance for the Province of New Brunswick. We have heard other Ministers and Premiers from Atlantic Canada state clearly that cuts in transfer payments will affect Atlantic Canada. In fact, they will affect most provinces, but certainly Atlantic Canada.

How can the Hon. Member rise in her place today and say that what the Government has done in the last year and a half is beneficial to Atlantic Canada? How can she justify that? Also I would like her to justify how job-creation programs, such as the new Canadian Jobs Strategy invoked by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), will help my province and the Province of Newfoundland, which is in such bad shape that it will take 10 years of good Liberal administration for it to experience decent economic times?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What a dreamer!

Mr. Henderson: How can the Hon. Member say that the new Canadian Jobs Strategy of the Government will be beneficial to my Province of Prince Edward Island when unemployment is the highest it has been since 1980?

[Translation]

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I must say that the question of my colleague makes me smile. When he talks about a Liberal administration whose benefits we are reaping today, I think he is right. The problem we are experiencing in Cape Breton, indeed in all Canadian provinces, has been created by a Liberal administration which was in office for over 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Quite true.

Mrs. B. Tardif: If something is now going wrong, particularly in Cape Breton, he might perhaps ask more questions and direct them to the Party he represents.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, order, please.

Mrs. B. Tardif: I was asked two questions in this long introduction. The first one was specifically related to Cape Breton.

Surely my colleague knows the special measures taken by the committees representing local interests, the provincial Government, which made their representations to the federal Government. They are now under review and should give some results.

When we talk about concerted efforts and co-operation with the provinces and local interests, it shows that we favour that kind of intervention, and local authorities make recommendations likely to meet the needs of the people.

As to what you refer to as losses, concerning equalization payments, I think it has been pointed out on several occasions that equalization payments had not been reduced, but there has been an indexation readjustment.

If you think the problem is peculiar to your province or to the Atlantic region, I can say it exists as well in Quebec, and that too may very well be due to the former administration which left us with a deficit which Canadians now want us to cut down.

• (1640)

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question in light of the fact that she is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can she tell the House when the people of Cape Breton can expect Phase II of the Sysco plant to be announced?

[Translation]

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, the matter will be studied and an announcement made in due time.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief so my colleague will have a chance to ask a question as well. First I would like to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary on her presentation to the House this afternoon. I know the very difficult position she is in, being forced to read the script that has been written by officials of her Department. It is difficult to read from a document one does not really understand, talking about an area about which one knows nothing while giving a speech and trying to make it interesting. I think the Hon. Member has shown a particular degree—

Mr. Horner: You don't know anything.

Mr. Tobin: When I don't know, I don't rise to make speeches written by someone else. I think the Parliamentary Secretary has shown a particular degree of backbone in attempting to carry this through. Having sympathy for her plight. I congratulate her.

Nevertheless, because this is an educational time for the Parliamentary Secretary, who I am sure has a genuine interest in Atlantic Canada, I am sure she will one day speak her own mind in the House on matters affecting Atlantic Canada. I say that sincerely.

If the Parliamentary Secretary attended Question Period today, she would have heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in response to a question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), admit in the House in a very quiet tone that indeed the Cape Breton Development investment credit is not all that we would like it to be and that there has not been the kind of response that we wanted to see. The Prime Minister said that we are going to have to review the program.

Given the Prime Minister's admission that the special programs that were created, in the words of the Parliamentary Secretary, to create a paradise for investors, and given the fact that the Prime Minister himself and not a junior Minister has admitted that that program has failed the people of Cape Breton, will the Parliamentary Secretary give us an assurance now that if the matter will be under review and a more realistic, serious, sober attempt will be made to provide assistance to the people of Cape Breton, that review will be conducted in public in Cape Breton and people living in that region who have ideas, practical life experience and suggestions will be given a chance to be heard? It is obvious that this investment scheme will be scrapped by a Government, the Prime Minister of which has admitted it has failed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Very, very rapidly, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mrs. B. Tardif).

Mrs. B. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I would remind those who think the results of the May Budget have not been all that exceptional that last Friday, Cape Breton Development Investment was set up. We have also had the report by the task force headed by Mrs. MacNeil which made its recommendations. Here again, the Government has demonstrated its desire to ensure that the initiatives to be taken by Cape Breton will produce results. Our objective is to draw attention to the programs that exist today in Cape Breton.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in this debate today for more than one reason. One reason I am pleased is because it is a good and relevant motion and I thank my Liberal colleagues for having moved it today. The motion reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

I had the opportunity to visit Halifax, Wolfville and Sackville last week. That was not my first visit there but it was my most recent one. Actually, my great, great grandfather, Daniel McDonald, was a merchant in Halifax and I wanted to go back to see how the city was doing. According to the people I met there and to the newspapers and other media that I saw, it is not doing quite as well as the rest of Canada.

There are three points to be raised today. I am especially concerned with housing and I was astonished to see the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) who is responsible for housing quoted as saying that there is no housing crisis in Halifax. What a frivolous statement he made. I will return to that point in a moment.

I was very pleased to see the local action that is being taken by people from those communities to create housing. They are not creating very much housing because their resources are limited but I was interested to see the action that they are taking and I will return to that in a moment.

As someone who is now living in and for two or three generations has belonged to what they call Upper Canada, I was embarrassed to see the financial fix in which Canada has put Nova Scotia. Of course, this is so not only for Nova Scotia but the other Atlantic provinces and I will return to that in a moment. The responsibility for that does not rest only with the previous Governments, it rests with the present one as well.

First, regarding the matter of the crisis, I visited Hope Cottage in downtown Halifax where Father McKenna explained that in 1982, 30,000 meals were given to homeless men; in 1984, 60,000, or double. If there are twice as many meals to be given to homeless men in 1984 as there were in 1982, how can we say that there is no crisis?

In fact, 35 responsible groups from Metropolitan Halifax including church groups, housing societies, health associations, welfare rights groups and the district labour council combined last summer to issue a report on the housing crisis. These are some of the things they mentioned: the cost of a three-bedroom apartment averages between $550 and $750 per month with many higher than that and single rooms cost $80 per week and up. Rents like that can be found in the City of Toronto but what cannot be found in Toronto is the large proportion of people whose incomes do not allow them to pay those prices. There are some but not in the proportion that exists in Halifax. It is pointed out that to afford that sort of accommodation, according to federal standards, a family's income should be between $26,000 and $36,000 per year.

They point out that federal funding for things like non-profit and co-op housing, which is the most reliable form of housing to provide for low income people and for middle income people, has been cut systematically during the last two years. It was cut by 25 per cent in the last year alone by this present Government. Only 252 new units have been constructed in the last five years in the Halifax district.

The crisis is not just a matter of buildings; it is a matter of what happens to the people who are either forced to live in poor buildings or forced to give up other necessities to live in a decent building. They catalogue the results, they summarize them: increased homelessness, families living in one or two rooms, family breakdown, physical and mental health deteriorating, unnecessary hospital admissions where the hospital keeps a child in hospital at great expense to the public because there is no heat or proper sanitary conditions in the home to which the child might be returned, food money getting spent on shelter and the frustration—frustration of the tenants, frustration of the homeowners in dismally poor homes, frustration of the workers, the human service workers, who are trying to hold the fabric of society together because they do not have the resources.

It has been demonstrated statistically over and over and it has been repeated in this House that the Atlantic provinces do not have the resources available to use for their own benefit. It is not that they have no natural resources. It is not that they have no good workers, willing and capable workers, but that they do not have the benefit of their natural resources and their labour resources. One measure of that is the figures from Statistics Canada which tell us that in Nova Scotia the income per capita is only 78.5 per cent of the average for all of Canada. Now, at that, they are better off than the other three Atlantic provinces. That is a long way down from average. The earned income per capita is only 74 per cent. Again, Nova Scotia is better off than New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, but it is only three-quarters of the average of Canada. Unemployment insurance payments per capita are 141 per cent of the national average, almost half as much again as is needed for the rest of the country. Again, the other provinces are in worse condition but Nova Scotia's condition is bad enough. The subsidies that are required per capita are 295 per cent of what is required in the other provinces. I will come back to that point again; but I want to mention the local drive, the local energy, in Wolfville.

I was shown what they call the small houses. These are houses locally designed. They are not CMHC houses; they are locally designed. There is one large room. They call them hearth houses, one large room where people cook, eat, and generally live and recreate and there are two small bedrooms, 600 square feet roughly. Now, by Toronto standards, that is a very, very small house. These are houses for people who are living outside Wolfville. They are living up in what they call the Mountain. They are replacing houses that were equally small but dreadfully, dreadfully poor houses with the wind blowing through, houses with one wood stove and a stove-pipe for a chimney set too close to the door. In wintertime there are not only tragedies of people who freeze for lack of fuel but people who burn because of the rickety stove in their house because they cannot afford better. Lack of decent water supply, lack of decent sewage arrangements. In these new small houses they have decent water supply. They have decent sewage arrangements. The houses are airtight, the heating equipment is modern and it has a brick chimney. The house is safe, comfortable and clean. It is of a design that many of the poeple there are used to. It is not only in Nova Scotia. When I lived in the Gatineau Valley for three years, I found that most of the farmhouses pratically worked with that design. They had a parlour but they never used it except when the minister came. He only used it once, found it too cold and then spent with the rest of the family his time in the kitchen or dining-room. It is a good local effort and it did not cost the CMHC one cent. They neither used CMHC money, a CMHC guarantee nor a CMHC design. It was guaranteed by the local government.

In the city I saw Adsum House, a refuge for women. If you read the newspapers in Halifax you know it is badly needed, Mr. Speaker. I take my hat off to the people who keep that house going on a dreadfully small budget.

I saw co-ops, co-ops with 40 or 50 units that had been built in the last few years and one of them just being built, Seaview Co-op, again, with a great deal of local labour. In that case they had some help from CMHC but, as I say, that help has been declining.

The local people are trying to do what is needed. As I said before, they are in a condition in which it is not possible for them to get the full benefit of their local resources, whether it is natural or human. I want to demonstrate that in the case of one shocking example, the shell homes in Sackville. These are homes that were built a dozen or so years ago with CMHC initiation. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation built a shell and then conveyed it to a future homeowner on the understanding that the homeowner finish the shell inside and out, furnish it and so on. They are called shell homes. The roofs were so badly built that they are falling apart. They are rotting. They were built with moisture barriers above and below. There is no ventilation and they are rotting. I stood in the bedroom and looked at the plank that had been put in to hold up that part of the roof. The roof was sagging on each side of the plank. When I looked outside the roof looked like a ploughed field. This is one of 23 houses on that street, on that block. These were built under CMHC direction, that is, by Ottawa. They were inspected, so to speak, so we are told. Homeowners told me about seeing the day they came to take over the house and the inspector drove out, never walked close to the house, simply met the builder in his car out on the road and signed the final document of approval. He had never inspected the buildings then or before.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues are saying that it is shameful. I agree. I am particularly ashamed because the company that built those houses is a Toronto company, or was, before it went broke. There was a rip-off. Quite plainly there was a rip-off by that company building a substandard house and making whatever arrangements resulted in no inspection, getting clearance from CMHC for what it did and sticking the local homeowners with the garbage and, eventually, with the bills because now they are having to pay $10,000, $15,000, $18,000 to put on a new roof. One who was waiting for negotiations with CMHC waited too long and the roof fell in on her while she slept. She had to put a new roof on without any assistance from CMHC. Only three years ago one of these houses was resold. CMHC renewed its certificate of approval for that building which it knew was rotten. The officials of CMHC knew the building was rotten, mainly the roof, but not only the roof. There were problems with the windows, the doors and the floors. If we take away the roof, the walls and floors, the house is all right but one cannot live in it. CMHC knew it was rotten yet it gave a certificate of approval to deceive a co-op into buying that unit from the former owner. Therefore there was a connivance between the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Toronto builder to cheat the people of Sackville. This concerns not only Sackville but houses in other provinces. We do not know where. CMHC knows, but it is not telling. We do not know how many shell homes were built and how many people were caught in that shell game which CMHC mastermined.

• (1700)

Those people are mostly poor. One of them said he had to double his mortgage to put on a roof. Another lady had applied for a RRAP grant but could not get it because she is too poor. Her husband has nothing but a disability pension. She could not repay the loan part so she is not entitled to receive the grant part. How she is going to put a new roof on her house, no one has told her. But the final crunch in this disgrace is that the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), responsible for housing and for the CMHC, is copping out. In March the local Member of the Legislature wrote to him about the problem. In April the Minister of Labour responsible for CMHC, thanked him for his letter and said that senior officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing had been requested to conduct an investigation into the problems outlined in the letter, including the aspect of CMHC responsibility for inspection of the houses. He said: "They will be contacting your office to obtain the names and addresses of home owners that are known to you". He also requested that the corporation examine mechanisms and programs such as may be available to provide assistance to the home owners. He said: "I expect to be able to provide you with the results of our investigations by early June". That was the Minister's signed promise. He never lived up to it. On June 18, Mr. Gordon Walt of CMHC in Ottawa telephoned the local MLA to tell him that a formal letter would be sent to him within the next two weeks in response because the inspections had been completed and it was agreed that the houses were in poor condition, particularly with design and maintenance problems. On August 8, the MLA, Johm Holme, wrote again to Mr. Gordon Walt. He said: "During our conversation of a few weeks ago, you indicated you would shortly be forwarding to me a copy of the interim report on the problem with shell housing in Sackville, Nova Scotia". He continues: "I've learned from Mr. Green in the Halifax CMHC office that he has not yet received the report but that the case has been referred to Vickie Garland of Social Housing for Block Funding". But still no report.

On August 15, Mr. Walt writes back to Mr. Holme. He says: "I have requested that Mr. McKnight's office reply directly to your August 8 letter which has been forwarded to him". On September 11 there is still no report. But Sylvain Lasnier, a special assistant to the Hon. Minister of Labour writes to Mr. Holme on behalf of the Minister: "I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 8 concerning new houses built under the shell housing program. You can be assured that your correspondence would be brought to the Minister's attention at the earliest opportunity". I do not know where the Minister has been since August 28 but it would seem that he has not been in his office because he has not responded. On August 28, in fact, Mr. Holme wrote again to the Minister. He said: "It's my understanding from talking to Mr. Walt and other CMHC officials that the investigation and preliminary report were completed in early June". He asks for the report which the Minister—not an official—had promised him. On October 17, Mr. Holme writes again to the Minister: "Further to my correspondence of that date, I would like to inform you of a situation of which I've only recently become aware". He mentions a new development regarding that co-op house. He asks again for the report which the Minister had promised he would have in June.

Finally, there is again a letter from John Holme, MLA, on November 5 to the Minister: "In addition, I again ask that your Department provide me with a copy of their report prepared by your staff on the problems which exist with shell housing in Sackville". As of last Wednesday, no report had been received by John Holme. In other words, the Minister has decided it would be wiser not to issue the report he promised. He has offered a miserable $50,000 to put the roofs on 23 houses. That is $2,000 for a $10,000, $15,000 or $18,000 roof for poor people who were not responsible for its condition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Horner): I am terribly sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has elapsed.

Mr. Heap: Can I just finish briefly, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Horner): Yes, you may.

Mr. Heap: What I wanted to say is that is the situation up to date at present. This Government, which the Progressive Conservative Party inherited and which enjoys spending the loot in all the ways Government spends the loot, has inherited the debt and obligation to put the roofs back on these houses in Sackville and in other parts of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Let me begin where he began, by pointing out that the motion before the House relates to economic opportunities for Atlantic Canada. I want to say two things. First, the Hon. Member has not addressed in any way, shape or form the serious matter of equal opportunities for Atlantic Canada. Instead, he related to us his trip in which he visited two of the wealthiest areas of the Atlantic Provinces, namely, the City of Halifax and the Town of Wolfville. He indicated the dire straits in which people found themselves in those urban centres. I want to say to this man who emerges from the heart of the City of Toronto that we in Nova Scotia do not think that the City of Halifax is in the dire straits which the Hon. Member apparently saw. In fact, those who traverse Yonge Street and the other parts of the City of Toronto, would probably welcome the opportunity to come to the City of Halifax and see the beauty and splendour and magnificent development which has taken place there within the last eight years. Particularly since the advent of the John Buchanan Government in the Province of Nova Scotia, the city has actually blossomed. Hotels are constructed, freeways have been built. The city is in magnificent shape and is acclaimed by one and all to be one of the most magnificient cities in North America.

I would like the Hon. Member from the City of Toronto to stand up in this House of Commons and say that the City of Halifax does not compare in every way and in every detail with the City of Toronto or any other city in North America. I would like to ask him if his point was to discredit the area. The Town of Wolfville, the home of Acadia University, is one of the nicest towns in the whole of eastern Canada and does not deserve to be maligned in that way by the Hon. Member.

I simply want to ask the Hon. Member what does he know about Howland Drive in Sackville after a two hour journey up and down the street? What has he done? What has he written to the Minister responsible for housing? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what he and his colleagues in the New Democratic Party have done to the residents of Howland Drive, those unfortunate people who have a real problem which requires a real solution. They have made the case public. It is a kind of living off the avails of misfortune. It is the kind of thing the New Democratic Party has practised in this House and across this country since Adam was a boy. That is its point. It picks up destitute people, fans their case across the country and then tries to take credit for resolving it. The very fact they bring it to the public's attention in that way prevents a solution. What happens to a public servant when you accuse him of all kinds of wrongdoing like the Hon. Member for Spadina did in this Chamber and as his colleague, John Holmes, did in Nova Scotia in the media? The civil servant becomes defensive, refuses to co-operate. They take legal action, consult lawyers and say they cannot accept responsibility for this horrible situation. That is what happens. The matter becomes a stalemate and you cannot get a favourable answer from the official concerned. They deny any knowledge of it.

• (1710)

The case the Hon. Member mentions arose in 1972 and involved Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, as he said, it was a Toronto contractor who was the author of this terrible misfortune. He disappeared, probably into the confines of Spadina, and cannot be found. These other people are left with the problem. However, some of us are working diligently to provide a solution notwithstanding the posturing of people like John Holmes and the Hon. Member for Spadina. We want to resolve the problem, not live off the avails. Answer that.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to answer the Hon. Member on several points. He accuses me of hobnobbing with the well-to-do as well as meeting the poor. In fact, I met some of both. I made no comment on the general nature of Halifax. However, I did find that the Mayors and Wardmen, four of them, of Metroplitan Halifax agreed there is a housing crisis.

They agreed with the housing coalition. Of course the Hon. Member is then in a spot. He has to back his Minister who says there is no crisis. However, I said nothing about Halifax and Dartmouth and other cities which is not being said by people such as the mayor, the leading clergy, responsible academics, homeowners, tenants and the homeless in those cities.

As to exposing the facts about shell homes and shell games in Sackville, the Hon. Member has acknowledged this problem came to light in 1972.

Mr. Crosby: Originated.

Mr. Heap: I heard from homeowners there about their efforts to try and get an answer from the Hon. Member, their MP, and how he turned them off and snubbed them. I understand why the Hon. Member is very defensive. He knows he has not done his job as their Member of Parliament. He knows his Minister has let them down and broken his promise to issue a report. He is thoroughly embarrassed by the fact his Government is just as irresonsible as the Government which preceded it.

Mr. Crosby: Not as irresponsible as John Holmes.

Mr. Heap: The only way he can cover up is to make a thundering speech about someone who wants to get a legal defence and suggest that the rotten contractor, whose address is in Willowdale, must be hiding out in Spadina. Quite possibly he is. He went broke and we have a lot of poor people in Spadina. I am not afraid to admit we have poor people in Toronto. The point I was trying to make, and I am sorry the Hon. Member was so frantic that he would not get the point, is that money which should have been spent to fully benefit some people in Nova Scotia was instead partly drained away to Toronto not only by a shady contractor but by an irresponsible CMHC for which the present Minister has accepted full responsibility. Therefore, he cannot get out of paying his moral debts.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I usually accept criticism gladly but I do not like to accept misrepresentation of the facts. I know that could not possibly be deliberate on the part of the Hon. Member so I will offer the further comment that we have been working diligently with the homeowners on Howland Drive to solve their problem.

Mr. Heap: That is not what they said.

Mr. Crosby: What prevents solution of the problem is the fact that the officials of CMHC will not admit any of the facts which the Hon. Member presented to the House today. However, I will be very glad to take his allegations—he used the words "cheat" and "malice"—and present them to officials of CMHC. Perhaps, given what appear to be outlandish statements on the part of the Hon. Member for Spadina, officials of CMHC will be required to search their records and their consciences to determine whether or not they ought to acknowledge more responsibility. However, for the Member to stand in this House and accuse any Member, and particularly the Government as a whole, of not recognizing their obligations when he well knows it is the officials of CMHC who deny any responsibility—

Mr. Heap: Where is the report that was promised eight months ago?

Mr. Crosby: The Hon. Member well knows the status of CMHC. It is probably one of those many Crown corporations like Petro-Canada and CBC which are constantly defended by Members of the NDP. They constantly demand that these Crown corporations maintain their independent status and freedom from political intervention. That is why the Minister cannot call the shots. It is the officers in the corporations who are calling the shots and I object to that.

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), moved earlier today, would see the House condemn the Government for abandoning the people of Atlantic Canada and for a lack of political will to provide jobs and economic opportunities. I believe the Hon. Member had his tongue in his cheek while speaking. If he did not, perhaps he should have, because I know that he knows that this Government has done an awful lot toward fostering economic development in the Atlantic region over the last 15 months. In fact, the Conservative Party is fully committed to development of the Atlantic region and my province in particular. I am very pleased that in just over one year we can point to a great deal of success in the development of Prince Edward Island and the Atlantic region.

One of the first items of priority for our Government in Atlantic Canada, and P.E.I. in particular, was to overlook the formula of the Hon. Member's Government concerning equalization payments to the poorer provinces. Despite the fact that Liberal legislation would have seen us in a very serious situation because of declining equalization payments, our Government overlooked the formula and added money to the pot. We recognized that the Atlantic provinces needed the financial assistance, which should have been there anyway, to ensure they continue with full economic development. Prince Edward Island alone received some $2 million we would not have otherwise received only through the good graces of the Conservative Government on this side of the House.

There were many other issues addressed in the last year. To start off with the fishery, I was very pleased that the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans moved quickly to resolve a long-standing problem which had not been addressed by the former Liberal Government. We were denied crab licences for years and years despite successive requests to Liberal Ministers of the day. Can you imagine a province in the middle of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, completely surrounded by water, with a crab resource off its shores and the Government said no, we could not have access to that fishery? The Conservative Minister quickly redressed that problem last fall. He gave us 16 exploratory permits and that led to landings of approximately one million pounds of snow-crab. That translates into a lot of economic returns for my province. It meant jobs for fishermen, their helpers on the boats and plant workers on shore. Those plant workers were not just in P.E.I., they were in neighbouring provinces such as New Brunswick. Based on the success in year one I think we will see this Government continue to aid that fishery in our province because the resource is there. I know that that is not a major cost to government, but it is simply a matter of doing justice to the provinces.

Today opposition Members bewailed reductions in transportation services. I would like to speak for a few minutes about some of the things that have happened in my own constituency which indicate that transportation services and facilities have not all been reduced as has been suggested by Hon. Members. For example, after the election last fall the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) moved quickly to ensure that we had additional ferry crossings from Wood Island, P.E.I., to Caribou, Nova Scotia. At that time there was a crisis in terms of getting agricultural products, highway material, and many items required by industry generally, from Nova Scotia to P.E.I. The additional crossings were allowed at considerable expense to the federal treasury.

That was not all, Mr. Speaker. During the winter months negotiations continued between the Department and Northumberland Ferries Limited, the carrier, and as a result we had better service last summer. There were additional crossings between P.E.I. and Nova Scotia which produced direct economic benefit to my constituency as well as the entire province. When the ferries are not running or are making less crossings, we feel the impact immediately. When the ferry runs open up, our economy opens up. Tours can go in and out and people can access markets more easily. The Government has shown leadership in that area.

Not only has the Government improved service, but it has entered into negotiations with Northumberland Ferries for the construction of new vessels for that run. Currently negotiations are under way which could result in two 150-car ferries installed for the run between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. That would be a tremendous economic benefit to my province.

Another transportation matter which is important to the constituency of Cardigan is that the Government, through the Minister of Transport, approved a $5.4 million contract for the reconstruction of the Georgetown wharf which was burned a few years ago. That wharf is very important to the eastern end of the province. Georgetown is a deep-water harbour used to load potato boats and pulp boats. It is also used by the Georgetown shipyard for repairing vessels which dock at the wharf. The port is used to unload asphalt, oil, and gas for a local oil company. That initiative, which was delayed, postponed, and pushed around with a long stick by the former Government, was acted upon quickly by the Minister of Transport. He has come up with funding for that very important project. In addition, he has approved the expenditure of $2 million in the town of Surrey for expansion of its wharf facilities. That is another benefit to the transportation industry and the fishing sector.

The Government has also assisted the agricultural industry. The hog industry in Prince Edward Island has been in crisis due to the fact that our main processing plant, a Canada Packers operation, was due to be closed by the owners. The plant was an antique, unable to keep up to standards and inspections which was losing money year after year. The provincial Conservative Government moved quickly after the decision by Canada Packers to ensure that the plant did not close and that our hog industry would not suffer serious consequences. It moved quickly in concert with producers of hogs and beef cattle, but it could not get the co-operation of the former Liberal Government.

I am pleased to say that once the federal Government was elected serious negotiations began between the province, the producers, and the federal Government. Those negotiations resulted in $4.5 million of federal money being spent for the construction of a new plant which is now nearing completion. That plant will be paid for by hog producers, beef producers, and the province. The plant will actually be operated by Canada Packers under an agreement to manage and market the product from that plant. That has enabled us to consider expanding our hog industry and, more important, it has enabled us to save the existing industry.

I would like to mention a few more economic initiatives so that people will not get the idea that only a few things have happened. In the last 15 months $6.8 million has been made available to P.E.I. for industrial competitiveness programs. There has been an expenditure of $3.2 million for IRDP offers. A commitment in the amount of $10 million has been made to the Atlantic Veterinary College in Charlottetown. There has been an allocation of $7.3 million for a new terminal building at the Charlottetown airport. There has been an allocation of $1.8 million for the dredging of the Summerside harbour so that it can receive potato boats necessary to export our process. There has been an expenditure of $.35 million to establish the Eastern Ventures and Development Corporation in my constituency which is now providing funds to enable small businesses to start up. There has been a provision of $8 million to CFB Summerside in order to establish a mess and hospital facility. Federal money amounting to $5.8 million has been allocated under a new tourism agreement which will allow us to continue to build on the tourism base which already exists in the province. Five million dollars has been spent on marketing and $5.2 million has been spent on industrial milk assistance. There has been a $7.5 million expenditure on fisheries and a $13.6 million on forestry.

That is all federal money committed by the Conservative Government to ensure that jobs are created in P.E.I. It is just one more indication of the fact that we have not, in any way, shape, or form, abandoned economic priorities in Atlantic Canada.

I have not mentioned the big item yet, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative Government acted on a commitment made by our Leader prior to the election to address the very serious problem of electrical energy costs in our province. P.E.I. has been plagued for years by the highest electrical rates anywhere in Canada. The Liberal Government refused to help the province to address that problem. I sometimes think that was because it did not want the provincial Conservative Government to get any credit for being able to get such an agreement. Although I hate to say it, Mr. Speaker, I think that economic development was being sacrificed for political credit. I hope that this Government never stoops to such a low.

This fall an historic agreement was signed. It will create jobs because lower electrical energy costs mean that our industries can be competitive. Some $50 million has been allocated to the federal-provincial agreement. That will offer up to 40 per cent assistance to manufacturers and processors who will be able to increase their industrial competitiveness. Over all, consumers of electrical energy will benefit by approximately 20 per cent.

Job creation has been talked about by Members opposite all day. They have suggested that jobs are not being created in Atlantic Canada and that the Government has abandoned its commitment for the creation of jobs. Once again, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, the Government has moved away from the old band-aid approach of job creation. Job creation funds have been restructured so that we will no longer have make-work projects and dead-end jobs but will be able to assist people who want to be trained for permanent jobs in the private sector and want to assist in the growth and development of our economy. We have committed equal dollars to the training and development of unemployed Atlantic Canadians.

Last summer, Challenge 85 was introduced. That was an important variation of the old summer job-creation projects. For the first time substantial money was made available to the private sector to employ people. Some of that money has led to more permanent work. It has provided students with training in the private sector which will give them opportunities in the future. That is a substantial departure from the old job creation projects which were simply government projects that led nowhere and had no lasting benefit.

I just mention the new Canadian Jobs Strategy as well. An agreement was signed between the federal and provincial Governments for an approach to economic development and job creation in the Atlantic area. That was unheard of under the former Liberal Government. Some 1,000 projects have already been approved in the Maritimes. Contrary to opposition statements, it is clear that we have not abandoned job creation in Atlantic Canada. One only need look at the Statistics Canada figures for proof. In July this year, Prince Edward Island had the largest labour force ever. There were some 64,000 people in our labour force. That does not suggest a migration from the province as suggested by the opposition earlier or abandonment of the province. It shows more health in our economy than ever before.

• (1730)

Even though there was high unemployment in November, which we do not want to endure, it is important that we look at all of the statistics. There were 57,000 people in the labour force which is up by 3,000 over 1984. Employment was also up by 1,000 people over November, 1984. Our participation rate was up by 1.7 per cent. These figures which are similar for the last 12 months show that more people are working. The labour force is increasing, there is greater involvement in our economy and more economic activity is taken place. Our Government has had a good record, especially in its first year, after so many years of Liberal neglect of Atlantic Canada.

I am not pretending that problems do not exist in my province or the Atlantic area. I will not begin burying my head in the sand and suggesting that all is well and good. We intend to address those problems just as we did with respect to those items I mentioned earlier.

There is no question that we have problems with agriculture. Today, some 24 tobacco farmers from my constituency of Cardigan were present on Parliament Hill and in the House. They were here because they are concerned about the tobacco industry in Canada, particularly in Prince Edward Island. They are considering the advantages of establishing a national marketing agency.

I believe it is important that I point out that the Government acted early to amend the National Farm Products Marketing Act to enable tobacco to be included among the commodities where a national marketing agency could be established. That development has been held up by a court injunction. However, I believe that justice will prevail and the growers will be able to make the right decision in regard to the tobacco industry in the months ahead. I look forward to closely working with them.

The other day I rose under the provisions of Standing Order 22 to speak to the House about the pending financial disaster facing our tobacco producers. I suggested to the Government that growers will have to be compensated for loss of productive capacity. I will continue to press the Government on this important issue.

Similarly, our potato growers are experiencing serious difficulties, with three years of prices well below the cost of production. In fact, it cost roughly 6 cents to produce a pound of potatoes but our growers are only getting 2 cents to 2.5 cents for their commodity. It would not take very long for even the strongest producers to run far into the red and border on the verge of bankruptcy. Indeed, some have already gone bankrupt.

The federal and provincial governments, along with the growers, must work diligently to ensure that the potato industry in my province does not collapse. The potato industry is the backbone of the Prince Edward Island agricultural industry. When one thinks of Prince Edward Island, one thinks of potatoes and lobsters. Thank goodness that lobsters are strong this year because potatoes have not been strong for three years. It is a serious situation and I intend to work side by side with the growers in the potato industry to ensure that they get the kind of assistance that is necessary.

Even today, representatives of the P.E.I. potato industry met with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Once again, the Government is showing its concern for the province. I believe that it will act by providing appropriate assistance in the very near future. The opposition is wrong. The Government has not abandoned Atlantic Canada but has perhaps done more in one year than the last 10 years of Liberal administration.

If the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond reflected on his motion for a moment, he would probably withdraw it, realizing that he has made a serious error. If he will not withdraw it, perhaps he will amend his motion to condemn the former Government rather than the present Government for abandoning Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is the second time today that the Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns), in searching desperately to find an example of positive programs that have been undertaken by the current administration, has had to reach back to the days of the Liberal administration. In the case of Newfoundland he read a list of six projects, all of which were undertaken by the previous Government.

In the case of Prince Edward Island, he talked about the veterinarian college, the Charlottetown airport, the move of Veterans Affairs, the dredging of Summerside Harbour and about CFB Summerside. All of these projects were initiated under the able representation of my colleague, and seat-mate, the Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson).

Members opposite could learn a lesson from him. As a Member of the Government and a Government supporter, he was never one to sit by silently when policies were being contemplated that were not in the best interest of his constituents. It might come as a shock to back-benchers opposite, particularly Members from Atlantic Canada from whom we have not heard, that Members of Parliament such as the Member for Egmont understood that while his loyalty and responsibility was to the development of the nation, he must speak with a particular voice for the people of his riding. He did so even when he found himself in conflict with the Government of the day. That is why we have such a list of progressive and positive projects which have contributed significantly to the Province of Prince Edward Island. I should say, with a degree of modesty, that the same is true in the Province of Newfoundland.

The motion today reads:

> That this House condemns the Government for its abandonment of the people of Atlantic Canada in its demonstrated lack of political will to provide jobs and other economic opportunities to the people of that region.

Ever since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivered his economic statement, or mini-Budget, to the House in November, 1984, the policy in this country has been to move toward the notion of user pay. This is a notion which for the first time in decades espouses the belief that we are no longer willing to pay a price to ensure that all Canadians, no matter where they live, no mater what their economic circumstances, shall have certain basic rights and services afforded to them by the national Government. The policy being enunciated by the Progressive Conservative Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), follows a philosophy that the price of providing basic equality for Canadians wherever they live in this country has suddenly become too high.

• (1740)

We have a Government that is going to cut by way of transfer payments not luxury items, not four-lane highways, not tourism development dollars but education and health care. We are saying to the people who live in the poorest provinces of Canada that they no longer should expect to move in those two fundamental primary areas toward a sense of equality with people who live in the wealthier parts of this country, quite the opposite. "You should expect if you live in an area of disparity, of high unemployment, an area with a relatively low degree of wealth, that services will degenerate, regress. People should check with their fathers and grandfathers, their mothers and grandmothers and find out what it was like 30 years ago because we are taking you back with this policy of the Government."

In 1976 a Member of Parliament stood in this House and talked about his concern that the commitment of the Liberal Government of the day toward regional development was being diminished. He said:

> It is beyond my comprehension how any Government can restrain expenditures in an area of the country which has an unemployment rate of 13.9 per cent. It is, in fact, positively cruel and inhuman for any Government to apply a restraint policy equally across this country as though every section of it is the same. It may be a policy of restraint that is quite apt for provinces like Ontario, Alberta and Saskatchewan, perhaps where are now high employment figures but is not proper to apply it blindly to Newfoundland which has an unemployment rate of almost 14 per cent.

Those words were spoken in 1976 by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the former Minister of Finance, now the Minister of Justice. He was talking about Newfoundland with an unemployment rate of 14 per cent and saying that the province could not afford a policy of restraint.

That 14 per cent unemployment has now become 20 per cent. The roar of the Member for St. John's West in opposition to Government restraint and cut-backs at 14 per cent in 1976 has now become a whimper, a pathetic whimper of approval for restraint and cut-backs at a time when my province is experiencing, nine years later, unemployment of 20 per cent, and unemployment on the increase in the last 14 months since this Government has taken office.

What does the Government do? It wields a surgical scalpel. It cuts. It has gone through the fat and the meat. It is into the bone, and still it cuts deep into the marrow, Mr. Speaker. What do we mean? In Newfoundland we talk about marrow. Do we mean that the people in Newfoundland can no longer afford to have two cars? Is that what we mean? No, Mr. Speaker. It is not what we mean. That is not marrow. That is fat. Do we mean that the people of Newfoundland can no longer afford to buy three Canada Savings Bonds so will only buy one? They cannot afford any right now, but that is not marrow either. That is also fat. The fat of the land is something we only dream about these days in the Province of Newfoundland.

When I say that this Government's economic scalpel has cut right to the bone marrow in the Province of Newfoundland, what I mean is that Newfoundlanders are beginning to lose hope. They are being swept up in a tide of cynicism, anger, frustration and hopelessness. Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are becoming convinced that they are the human disposables in a society being crafted by a Government that bows down before the altar of market forces, in a world that must conform to the theology of user pay and to a throw away society. There is nothing so tragic as a people without hope.

There can be no greater waste anywhere in our society than in a young mind afflicted with the curse of cynicism. There are too many tragic people in my province. There are too many good young minds that have been poisoned by the frustration and anger that comes with cynicism.

You know the cynic, Mr. Speaker. Every Member in this House recognizes a cynic when he sees one. He is the young man or young woman who does not trust anybody, the person who believes that nothing he or she can do will change anything, the person who believes that everyone is out for himself or herself. The cynic is seduced by the option of copping out, seduced by the option of sitting on the sidelines and condemning all of those who would attempt to chart their own course and who attempts to fasten the fabric of society in which they live.

The message of the Government is to cut, cut and cut some more. If you are patient enough, if you bow down before the altar of market forces and believe in the philosophy of user pay, one day down the road, somewhere, God knows when, it will all be all right, you simply have to have faith.

As this Government begs for faith, the ranks of the cynics are swelling and we are losing the most important resource this country possesses, the good young minds, the heart and soul of the country, which is eating itself in frustration and anger in a sense of hopelessness.

I say to the Government, as has been said to the Government by the Conservative, same stripe Premier of Nova Scotia, by the Conservative same stripe Premier of Newfoundland, by the Conservative same stripe Premier of Prince Edward Island, by the Conservative same stripe Premier of New Brunswick, by opposition leaders in all four of those provinces and by the Atlantic Provinces Chambers of Commerce, the Transportation Commission, and Economic Council, indeed the voice of the people of Atlantic Canada, that this policy is not going to work.

The people of Atlantic Canada unquestionably would prefer to live in a society where they would not need to have a hand-out, and would unquestionably prefer to be giving, contributing to the pot that sits at the centre of the country, not depending upon the wealth of those elsewhere. Until that day arrives, until we find in a very complex and difficult world, a changing world, the kind of solution that allows us to make the contribution we want to make to the nation as a whole, do not in the name of some ideological political philosophical doctrinnaire position about the market-place take away from Atlantic Canada the underpinning of our economy, socially and economically. Do not say to our young people, those who just want a chance to have the dignity of a job and the dignity of a paycheque, that they are part of a disposable society. That is the greater tragedy being inflicted upon Atlantic Canada with the economic measures of this administration.

I give way in the hope that my colleague the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) will be able to add his voice to this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on the last point made by the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) I will speak for only 10 minutes and allow the remainder of the time to go to one of our colleagues.

I rise in this debate not as someone new speaking on opposition days with concern about Atlantic Canada because when the previous Liberal Government was in power our caucus was making exactly the same kind of resolution in the House. Many of the items I will speak about relating to Government neglect, taxation policies and the way the Government's actions have impacted on the people of Atlantic Canada are the same types of things that I was saying four years ago in a similar debate.

• (1750)

The problems in Atlantic Canada are not new. Historically they have not been caused by any one Government. However, the people of that region are legitimately concerned about them. Their concerns have been expressed in the House over a number of years. The people of the region have every reason to expect that the Government will not neglect or continue to neglect their problems. They have every reason to expect that we, as a Parliament, will actually deal with some of the proposals.

It is with that in mind that I wrote to the chairperson of the Standing Committee on Regional Development. I asked for that committee to travel to Atlantic Canada to take a look at what was happening. I indicated that we could use another in-depth study of the area. I suggested that if the committee did not have the time to tour all Atlantic Canada, it could use the very tragic situation of Cape Breton as a study model. I hope Hon. Members of all three Parties support that committee spending time to consider the situation and to make an extensive tour of the Cape Breton area. Other colleagues in my caucus have written to the same committee asking for an in-depth study, so that the people of the region could make presentations. I hope the committee will take the opportunity to visit there and to conduct a very intensive study.

I have visited Atlantic Canada a number of times in the last three months. For that matter, I have made three trips in the last 75 days, for the sole purpose of hearing what the people had to say about the Government and what was happening to them. I visited Cape Breton as well as the mainland of Nova Scotia. There are many concerns, some of which resulted from the May 23 Budget. For example, the workers at the heavy water plants were laid off and only heard that fact as they listened to the budget speech on television. They were certainly affected by the actions of the Government. Two weeks prior to the presentation of the Budget, they were told by a Minister of the Crown that before anything happened to the heavy water plants they would be consulted. Also they were told that other job programs would be in place before anything happened to them.

Let us look at what happened. That is not what the Government in fact did. The more than 600 people working in those two heavy water plants turned on their television sets on budget night and heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), with that one line in his Budget, tell them that their jobs had disappeared. It was a shameful action. It was a cruel and harsh measure. Even if the Government believed that it had to take that step, it could have been more concerned about how it dealt with the people affected. They should not have been required to turn on their television sets that night to hear from the Minister of Finance, without any explanation or expression or concern, that their jobs and, in many cases, their homes in those communities had disappeared. That harshness or cruelty is typified in many of the decisions made by the Government.

Mr. Boudria: Shame.

Mr. Murphy: It is not only the present Government. As I said in my introductory remarks, it has not been only the Conservative Government. The Liberals cannot pretend, despite the mutterings of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), that these problems are new ones.

I should like to return to some of the concerns which I heard expressed in Atlantic Canada. I wrote to various Ministers about these concerns. For example, I wrote to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) about Sydney Steel Corporation and CN orders going to European manufacturers. That was not something new. The problems with Sydney Steel have existed for years. When the Liberals were in Government, we asked questions about Sydney Steel. We asked where was the money for phase two and when real action would take place on their commitment to those people. We are still awaiting that action. We were promised by the previous Liberal Government—and now the Conservative Government is promising it—that there would be money for phase two, yet the people of Sydney are still waiting. They were told that the decision would be made soon. They were told that in September and in October. They were told that a decision would be made before the end of October, and later they were told that it would be by the end of November. However, that decision has not come about. The previous Liberal administration and the present Conservative administration have talked a lot about Sydney Steel but have refused to act.

I have also written to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) about the workers in the heavy water plants in Cape Breton who were laid off. Many of the problems faced by those people were not only as a result of new Conservative measures respecting unemployment insurance. They also exist because there were cut-backs in the unemployment insurance program by the previous Liberal Government, and the Conservative Government continued along the same path.

I have written to many Ministers. For example, I wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). I wrote to the Minister of Transport about CN Marine and staff reductions in North Sydney. I have written to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and to the Minister of Finance. I have written many letters, such as the one to the Minister of National Revenue about the heavy water plant workers. I have been trying to point out that these people are facing serious problems. They are not new problems. No one can pretend that they came about on September 4, 1984 with the election of the Conservative Government. These are problems on which the Conservatives are now making very harsh decisions, very harsh on the people who live in those communities and work in those operations. They are a continuation of the years of neglect, the years of failing to come to grips with regional economic expansion. We must remember that the Liberals were in power for most of that period of time.

One of the most harsh decisions in so far as Atlantic Canada was concerned was when the previous Liberal decided to dismantle the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. That Department was incorporated within the new Department, at which time I rose, as well as others, and explained that in the long run less money would be going into the hinterland areas such as Atlantic Canada and more money would be going into large industries in the heartland. This means that as the country continues to grow, the hinterland areas will continue to be ignored. That is what has happened.

I attended as an observer at the First Ministers' Conference, and Conservative Premiers from Atlantic Canada said that we were suffering because the money for regional development was not keeping pace with other government expenditures. That was said by Conservative Premiers. They told that to the Conservative Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and other Ministers such as the Minister of Employment and Immigration. They said that the money was not forthcoming in the same proportion as it used to be. This results from the fact that there is no Department of Regional Economic Expansion with a specific mandate to ensure that the interests and concerns of the people living in those regions are looked after.

Again this is not strictly as a result of the neglect shown by the Conservatives. It is also a result of a decision made by the Liberal Government and a trend started by that Government to reduce the total amount of government expenditures directed toward regional economic expansion.

Before I sit down, and I made a promise to a Liberal Member that I would give him an opportunity to speak before the debate ended, there is another item regarding Atlantic Canada about which I should like to speak. It is one of the reasons I went to the First Ministers' Conference and that is the Government's announcement in the Budget that it would be reducing expenditures for transfer payments by $2 billion annually. Transfer payments provide the money that goes to post-secondary education and medicare.

• (1800)

It does not matter to me that the Government is pretending that this is not a cut. I know that when they were in Opposition, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) were two of the chief critics of the Liberal Government when it did the same thing. Those two Ministers sat right here on the front benches and called the MacEachen Budget a cut that was breaking faith with the provinces. That is what they said then. Each of those Ministers said something to the effect that that would result in the closing of schools and the loss of beds for hospitals. I find it quite interesting that the Ministers who are actually responsible for health care and for providing money for medicare and post-secondary education are saying exactly the opposite now that they sit on the Government benches.

It is apparent, particularly in the area of medicare, that because of our growing population and because of the growing technology in the health field there are going to be cost increases in the field of health care, cost increases which will be much higher than the increase in the cost of living. For the Prime Minister to address the premiers and the House of Commons by saying that the Government will cover the cost of living and therefore the provinces should be grateful is for him to try to sell a myth. In fact, we know that the cost to the provinces for medicare and post-secondary education will increase by more than the cost of living.

For the Minister of Finance to say: "It's all right, boys and girls, it doesn't matter because we are going to cover at least the cost of living," ignores the fact that he is transferring the burden from the federal tax base to that of the provinces. The provinces will have to make up that shortfall. There is no region in Canada that will suffer more from that than Atlantic Canada. That is something with which the Government will have to come to grips. The Government broke a promise to the people of Atlantic Canada and that is something which will be remembered.

I recognize that there is not much time left in this debate and I will sit down soon, but in closing, I do want to say that the Government broke faith in so many areas that there really does now exist the cynicism about which the Liberal Member who spoke previously spoke so eloquently. However, Liberal Members must share much of the blame for that. They have to share that blame with the Conservative Members. What the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Health and Welfare and saying is exactly the opposite of what they said when they were in Opposition and that breeds cynicism. It certainly breeds cynicism in the area of this country which needs the most assistance in order to develop in its own way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking my hon. friend from Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for leaving me some of his time, and I would like to take advantage of the few minutes I have left to take stock of the situation. I would have liked to do so in greater detail, but I will do what I can in the circumstances. Mr. Speaker, if I were to paint a picture of everything the Conservative Government should do for Atlantic Canada, I think it would not be a very happy one, with very few bright spots.

Not a day goes by in Atlantic Canada without people asking me, when I am there: Why are we being ignored? Why have people forgotten we exist? Mr. Speaker, it is not just me—it is also what the people down there think. Not long ago, according to the results of a public opinion poll, the popularity rating of the Conservatives in this region dropped to 33 per cent. The Liberals went up to 43 per cent. And no wonder. It is because this Government has done nothing except implement negative development policies in our region. Especially if we consider the question of regional economic development and what has been done for the Atlantic provinces. The Budget was cut by $450 million. In the Atlantic provinces, the conclusion is that the Government is ignoring us and has forgotten that we exist. Mr. Speaker, the Government wants to let the market forces act, and we all know what happens when you do that. The large urban centres are the winners, and disadvantaged regions like ours are the losers.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has no regional development policy for the very simple reason that to have such a policy, one must first have the political will to help these regions. And that is exactly what this Government lacks.

Another example to explain why people in Atlantic Canada have lost confidence in the Government, is what is going to happen to transfer payments. We are told that these payments will not be reduced. No indeed! They will not be reduced, but just the same, it is going to cost New Brunswick about $120 million. And they say: Don't worry, it's peanuts.

I continue, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about fisheries which happen to be a labour-intensive sector in Atlantic Canada, yet the only thing they managed to do was to cut the budget for small craft harbours, and then they decided to ask the fishermen to pay for certain projects such as dredging and wharf repairs. It is totally ludicrous to expect low income fishermen to finance projects which are the responsibility of the Government. Even more so when we consider the program to help fishermen build their own boats—there is no money left!

Our fishing fleet will gradually become obsolete and there will be no money to replace it.

[English]

Let me say a few words about the CN shops in which 225 jobs have been lost. The Minister cannot today explain why this is so and he does not want to take any position which will guarantee to the people of Moncton that those jobs will be protected.

[Translation]

And then, Mr. Speaker, another example in the tourism sector where all projects under IRDP agreements have been shelved. I must say that we in New Brunswick were seriously affected because they did not care and we had to wait for a whole year before job application forms were even available.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to refer to the unemployment insurance file. They are now talking about re-examining the unemployment insurance program. It is criminal to consider making changes before finding something to give work to our people.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by quoting a passage of La Sagouine which adequately describes the actions of this Government:

Sure enough, they say that promises will be made right, left and centre during the election campaign . . . You will get everything for nothing because you are first class citizens with the right to vote . . . It does not change anything, once the election is over the Government is too busy and could not care less about us.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There might be a disposition to allow the vote just recorded to be applied to the remaining two, namely, Vote 1(b) under the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and Vote No. 51(B) under the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Speaker: I take it there is that disposition, I suspect with the addition of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) in the opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—BREAST IMPLANTS—REQUEST FOR STRICTER CONTROL AND ADDITIONAL RESEARCH FUNDS

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak today about an important problem which affects more than 17,000 women each year in Canada, including 7,000 in Quebec. I wish to call the attention of the House to the breast implant studies submitted to me a few weeks ago by Dr. Robert Guidoin, an eminent researcher at the Experimental Surgery Department of the Université Laval in Sainte-Foy.

As a woman, I am very sensitive to this serious issue, which jeopardizes the health of many Canadian women each year. I made a statement about this last week and asked a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to find out what had been done following my many interventions in this regard.

If I raise this issue once more today, it is because I consider that all Members of this House should be made aware of the urgency of undertaking a vast study program on breast implants used by surgeons, and especially on the need to regulate the quality of these implants.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare now provides no control over silicone implants used by surgeons.

Research clearly show that, during the two years following the initial operation, inadequate silicone implants can rupture or leak, causing considerable damage to the tissue of the patient who must then be hospitalized for additional surgery.

Mr. Speaker, the optimism with which the use of medical silicones was greeted has now been tempered by caution in view of the various types of evolutive complications associated with them, such as calcification, distortion and proliferating encapsulation.

Of the implants examined, 21.7 per cent have shown signs of encapsulation, and this does not take into account the fibrous capsules sent by themselves. A slight difference was noted between intact and damaged implants. Intact implants showed fewer fibrous capsules, or 13.9 per cent, than the damaged ones, which showed 38.2 per cent.

As for mineralization, it was found present not only in the fibrous capsules, but even on the very surface of the implants. Of all implants examined, 48.1 per cent showed mineralization of the implant itself and 11.8 per cent of the fibrous capsule. The conclusions of the analyses show that intact specimens seemed to be more mineralized than the damaged ones. The proportion was 50 per cent in the first case and 40 per cent in the second. In addition, implants of the Heyer Schulte brand showed 80 per cent mineralization compared with 38.1 per cent for Dow Corning brands.

The results of these analyses show the serious problem raised by this surgery. After such an operation, the health of women is seriously threatened and this raises grave doubts about the safety of medical practices in this type of surgery.

• (1855)

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is urgent to make additional funds available in order to undertake immediately a major research program to remedy a situation which jeopardizes the health of thousands of women each year. I also ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare to establish very precise regulations to adequately control the implants used by surgeons.

The studies on breast implants are of vital importance and I deplore the short-sighted attitude of the Department of National Health and Welfare toward this type of investigation.

The best proof that studies to develop better regulations and control have been so far neglected by the Department is that the most recent research project entitled "Breast implants: their characteristics and behaviour in situ" presented last May by Dr. Guidoin to Departmental officials was categorically turned down.

As Dr. Guidoin told Dr. Sheena Lee, Head of the Research Administration Division, it is a great disappointment to realize that this research project was not recommended for financial assistance under the National Health Research and Development Program.

This project seems to have been taken lightly and indicate a complete lack of communications between the various divisions of the department. I find most regrettable this situation which might have serious consequences for Canadian women who will have to submit to this kind of surgical operation during the forthcoming months and years. These negative effects might be even worse than those we have been able to assess so far.

I therefore ask the Minister to take action to remedy this situation as soon as possible. He should take steps to make available additional research funds immediately and implement regulations very shortly. I call for much stricter control to rectify the intolerable situation which exists now.

Because we need to protect the health of a great many Canadian women, including a large number of Quebec women, I urge the Minister to take the necessary steps without delay. This situation which endangers the health of women should not be tolerated any longer.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to answer a question by my hon. friend from Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), on a subject of great topical interest.

Mr. Speaker, reconstructive surgery has become common place. Every year, thousands of Canadian women undergo such surgery in an attempt to recover their normal appearance. Some of these treatments are simple and effective, while others are complex and sometimes unpredictable. And some only provide temporary improvement and require frequent surgical touch-ups.

When the purpose of the operation is to correct a deformity or disability resulting from an illness, accident or the removal of a malignant tumour, medical expenses are refundable on the same terms as all other essential health care. However, if a person decides to undergo plastic surgery although his or her appearance is quite normal to society, it is up to that person to pay the cost. However, any complications due to plastic surgery that was not successful may be refundable if harmful to the health and well-being of the person in question.

Breast reconstruction is practised throughout the western world. The destroyed tissues must often be replaced by a permanent implant designed to give the breast a normal appearance. These implants come in the form of bags filled with a liquid and are permanently attached within the breast. Various methods are used to manufacture these medical aids, and since the end of the sixties, a variety of models have been available.

Mr. Speaker, at the present time, products of this kind must be imported. All must comply with the Food and Drug Act and the regulations on medical instruments.

However, until now, only the new implant devices available on the market since 1983 have been subject to a pre-marketing examination. Very few have been introduced up to now. In fact, most of these products were introduced before the regulations were amended in 1983.

On the basis of reports from abroad on breast implants and unfavourable reactions to these devices, the Department of National Health and Welfare decided to look into the matter in 1982. A study conducted in Canada at the time revealed a certain degree of dissatisfaction within the medical community. Generally, it has been found that the results obtained by breast implants were not spectacular, but that there was no need to take corrective action. The Health Protection Branch was recently advised of unfavourable reactions to these products. The reports submitted raised once more the doubts already expressed about the quality, durability and long term safety of certain breast implants.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare is now reevaluating the need for research in this area with a view to improve the quality and safety of breast implants used in Canada. It should be possible to achieve a decrease in the morbidity and costs associated with the treatments, the new surgical interventions and the readaptation of patients who are unfavourably affected by reconstructive surgery. We have to find mechanisms to make good use of the experience of research centres and doctors specialized in this field. As in any highly sophisticated branch of medicine, their participation is essential.

AIRPORTS—AUTOMOBILE RENTAL POLICY. (B) REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago I raised with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) a matter concerning the policy regarding car rental agencies at airports. At that time I requested the Minister to postpone the bidding which was imminent and to refer the matter to the Transport Committee. I made the allegation that as a result of the way the regulations had been written the only Canadian national system, Holiday Rent-a-Car, would not be eligible to apply in relation to key airports in the country and that, in fact, the only Canadian national system could not long survive. In fact, that is exactly what has happened in this last year. Because Holiday Rent-a-Car was not able to apply for positions at the Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal airports we no longer have a Canadian-owned national car rental system today. In fact, the Holiday Rent-a-Car system has essentially gone belly-up. Most have sold out to Thrifty's or Hertz and a few are left hanging on as independents.

Essentially, Government policy destroyed a small Canadian car rental system. What we have left is car rental systems owned by foreign multi-nationals. This comes from a Government which paid a great deal of lip service during the last election to taking Government regulations out of the marketplace, and allowing a freer market to exist by giving encouragement to Canadian industry. It is a shame to see that the actual results of its policies has been the suppression of the Canadian car rental system.

Some 80 per cent of the car rental business is done out of airports, which is now totally controlled by foreign-owned multi-nationals. The small independent car rental companies are being strangled to death.

• (1905)

This is a situation made worse by the new policies put into effect by the major airline companies. For example, the Aeroplan which Air Canada operates is attracting most of the car rental business to the national and international chains. Small companies which are not part of a national chain are not eligible to participate in the Aeroplan. Therefore, only companies which provide a national service are allowed to participate in the Aeroplan. Small independent locally-owned and Canadian-controlled companies are not eligible and are being squeezed out.

It is also interesting to note that Budget Rent-a-Car has now become the largest of its kind in Canada. All the regulation changes, and even counter space, which Budget Rent-a-Car requested have been given to it. I must express concern and some suspicion that there might be some political connection between this Government and Budget Rent-a-Car. It may be that at some time in the future when someone writes his memoirs we might get the full story of why Budget Rent-a-Car was allowed counter space at the Toronto airport and why it was given all of the changes in regulations it asked for, because those regulations which were allowed to stay in place killed the major Canadian competition so that today we have Budget Rent-a-Car as the major care rental agency and we have no Canadian car rental system left.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little strange, and I am not all that certain it is a wise use of the chamber's time, to be discussing a matter which was thoroughly dealt with and which, I believe, took up some considerable amount of time both in the House, in the Senate and in the Standing Committee.

However, notwithstanding that, I can refer the Hon. Member to the very ample explanation given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) a little over a year ago in response to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on November 22 and on November 29 in committee. At the same time Hon. Members availed themselves of an opportunity to meet for an extended period with the Minister to discuss this matter. Indeed, I myself responded to the Hon. Member at some length in this very chamber.

The Hon. Member should rest assured that every possible effort was made to accommodate Holiday Rent-a-Car within the parameters of the policy—and I think this is most important—without being unfair to other bidders.

The car rental policy was carefully scrutinized by this Government in 1979 and, after consultation with industry, a workable and fair policy was in fact developed and put in place. I might also add that during the time of the previous Government an extensive review of the policy was conducted over a two-year period. I do not, therefore, believe that any useful purpose would be served by the Hon. Member's request that this matter be referred to a Standing Committee on Transport at this time.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH IN CHICAGO. (B) MAGAZINE PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question I raised on December 5, which I wish to expand on this evening, concerns cultural sovereignty for Canada and free trade. The question was directed to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and he gave the best answer I have ever received in this House on the issue. He referred to the Prime Minister's assurances which were given in Chicago that anything concerning cultural sovereignty would not be on the negotiating table. I wish I could be more relaxed and confident that this very good answer is really the answer of the Government because we are still receiving messages of a different sort from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Recently a meeting was held with leading representatives of the cultural community with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was thought at the meeting that the idea was adequately put across that they did not want to have any part in negotiations for free trade. They thought that that had been well understood. However, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was quoted after the meeting as saying: "They are prepared to work with the Government in negotiations as we prepare our case".

As a result of that statement, or misunderstanding, a very noted writer, Graham Gibson, who was part of that delegation replied that they all tried, apparently in vain, alas, to persuade Mr. Clark that cultural matters must not be negotiable. Moreover, he said, if the Government did place culture on the bargaining table, it would encourage concerted opposition from our community. We have very little to gain and, most probably, much to lose if Canada allows cultural matters to be a part of negotiations. They were unanimous in pointing out that it was not greater access to American markets that we need, but fairer access to our own. That has been the message from cultural groups across the country to this Government.

• (1910)

I have been raising the issue in the House and it needs to be raised again. Canadians want access to Canadian markets. Canadians want to communicate with other Canadians. Access to American markets is the icing on the cake. It is desirable and certainly very possible in some industries, some being more appropriate than others. However, they do not want to sacrifice their ability to reflect Canadian problems, to be Canada's image, in order to gain more access to American markets. American films made in Canada with American stars, American signposts, American licence plates and American flags are not Canadian culture. The fact that they will sell well in the U.S. because they appear to be American films, even though they are produced here simply to take advantage of certain economies, may be well and good economically, but it is not Canadian culture and not what we want.

Canadian artists are worried about cultural sovereignty being bargained away. They are also worried about cut-backs and Canadian culture being cut away. Last year cuts to the CBC were in the order of $85 million and more cuts are expected this year. There are rumours of substantial cuts for the National Film Board and the National Arts Centre. We are worried that promises made at a very general level are not implemented in practice. For example, the publishing policy announced by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) last July. We have a very specific case involving Prentice-Hall which has not been resolved. We are worried when it comes down to cases the Government will capitulate to pressure from the Americans and the goal of repatriating our culture will not be met. Just today we had some excellent recommendations from the film industry task force concerning film distribution being Canadian-owned and controlled.

Will the Government act? It certainly has not shown it will act promptly in defending Quebec's film policy. There is a proposal that the National Arts Centre cease to function as a centre for Canadian culture and excellence and instead simply be a place for cheaper imported shows. In other industries that is called dumping, but in Canadian culture it is simply, according to the Americans, the opportunity to treat the Canadian market as an extension of their own. There are rumours of a freeze in Canada Council funding. That would be a real cut-back because expenses are going up and last year the Council suffered a real decline. There had also been a long-term erosion of Canada Council funding under Liberal Governments. We are really concerned about that.

The second very specific question I raised with the Minister concerned subsidies to our magazines. There was no answer at all from the Minister. We have a growing magazine industry. It is not flourishing yet. Only one-quarter of the magazines on our news-stands are Canadian with the balance overwhelmingly American. However, that is an improvement. We have seen a large number of magazines coming onto the market because of a policy introduced by the previous Government involving postal subsidies and the policy on advertising in Bill C-58 which freed up a lot of advertising money for Canadian periodicals. We now have a relatively strong, certainly a growing industry. Some 186 new periodicals appeared after 1977. We have now a total of 5,000 titles. The industry employs 25,000 people with a payroll of $500 million. Subsidies are absolutely essential if this industry is going to continue, especially the smaller and newer Canadian magazines. They would fold if it were not for the subsidies. Of course, if the subsidies were removed it would be cheaper for magazines to distribute by a private, commercial delivery system in the city and our Post Office would be left with the expenses of rural deliveries. This is a very vital, growing part of our culture and we want it to get the attention it needs from the Government. We have had enough rhetoric. We need practical policies. They are going to cost money, but the cultural industries repay that money six-fold. We want to see action on this front.

• (1915)

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say how much I welcome this opportunity to speak on a question that we, as a Government, consider so fundamental. We all recognize that the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is very interested in our cultural sovereignty. I had the privilege of serving with her on the sub-committee on the revision of the copyright law. I remember in particular one day in Montreal when she stood down the Yankees, and she did it with fierce Highland pride. I congratulate her and assure her that this is also a central concern of the Government as we prepare to begin negotiations with the United States.

I hold the view that in the exchange between the Hon. Member and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) on December 5 the Hon. Minister clearly and unequivocally defined the Government's position on cultural sovereignty. Furthermore, he reminded the Member that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) had raised this same question in his speech in Chicago last Wednesday evening. The statements of the Minister and of the Prime Minister should, as far as I am concerned, dissipate any doubts in this regard. Nothing related to our cultural sovereignty will be part of these negotiations with the United States.

I will take the liberty, Mr. Speaker, of repeating the Prime Minister's statement. He told his audience on December 4 in Chicago that "when it comes to discussing better trade rules for cultural industries, you will have to understand that what we call our cultural sovereignty is as vital to our national life as political sovereignty". To me that is a formal engagement on the part of the Government to safeguard Canada's cultural sovereignty. That should make us all very pleased.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) also referred more specifically to the Canadian magazine industry. Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure her that we look upon the profitability of our periodicals and of the whole Canadian publishing industry as one of our major priorities in the cultural realm. The Government's commitment became a reality last July when we announced a clear and specific policy on non-Canadian investment in the publishing industry, and we expect to take other such constructive initiatives.

Referring to publishing and other Canadian cultural industries in the context of negotiations to liberalize trade with the United States, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) stated on December 5 that "it is up to us to decide what will or will not be negotiable". It is with that in mind that our Government will make every effort to protect our cultural sovereignty and the instruments through which we express it, such as periodicals.

[English]

We believe that it is in formulating effective policies clearly defining our cultural objectives that we will succeed, on the one hand, in ensuring the viability of our cultural industries and, on the other, in taking the fullest possible advantage of enhanced trade.

In keeping with the Government's intention to reduce the federal deficit and the desire to minimize government intervention in the private sector, the Minister of Communications has committed himself to rationalizing the Postal Subsidy Program. This program, which is over 100 years old, has never been thoroughly and completely reviewed in the past. In June, 1984, the consulting firm, Woods Gordon, published a report based on a study of the Canadian periodical publishing industry conducted on behalf of the Department of Communications. This study was instrumental in the formulation of a national periodicals policy being developed at the Department of Communications by departmental staff.

In May, 1985, the Minister of Communications commissioned some consultants to conduct an evaluation of some aspects of the Postal Subsidy Program and to appraise what would be the impact of substantial postal tariff increases on the publishing firms currently registered in the Postal Subsidy Program. The findings and results of these projetcts are also being examined and we should be in a position to determine if we could reduce the Postal Subsidy Program's budget, and by how much, without affecting the dissemination of information in Canada through the printed media and the economic viability of the Canadian publishing industry.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern, indeed outrage, over the situation confronting my province, particularly the Island of Cape Breton. Yesterday we had an opportunity to debate a host of issues of particular importance to Atlantic Canadians. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted in Question Period yesterday as well that the economic policies he put in place are not working in Atlantic Canada, particularly in my constituency of Cape Breton-East Richmond. One year ago there were approximately 14,000 people unemployed in that area. Today, as a result of Government policy, there are an additional 4,000 unemployed. The unemployment rate has risen to an all-time high of 24.2 per cent, surpassing, unfortunately, that of the Province of Newfoundland.

We continue to hear cabinet Ministers from Atlantic Canada saying yes, the economic policies of their Government which they have put in place will assist those of us who reside in Atlantic Canada, only to hear their Prime Minister disagree—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

DELAY IN ESTABLISHING NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this week more than 900 tobacco farmers from Quebec, Ontario, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia came to Parliament Hill to demonstrate in favour of a national tobacco marketing agency. The Conservative Government's failure to provide these farmers with the right to form a marketing agency is yet another broken election promise. After more than a year the Government continues to delay while the tobacco farmers' livelihood is threatened.

The Minister says he will ensure that the existing provincial boards will reach an agreement with the manufacturers. This is exactly what they had last year, and it is not good enough. These farmers need a national agency to bargain on their behalf, an agency with power to restrict production and to restrict imports of tobacco. They do not need to be locked in a room under the old rules until they give in to the manufacturers. They do not need to be threatened by the riot squad. This latest Conservative tactic is too reminiscent of South Africa.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: It also reminds us of how the military dictatorship of Argentina governed that country. Under the guise of maintaining normality they suppressed wage demands, removed most of the controls on foreign investment, and crushed public demonstrations with shows of military force. This is regretfully a type of action which our Government now appears to be embracing. These are not normal times for farmers, but they deserve a lot better than threats.

INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

DEFINITIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was International Human Rights Day, as announced by the United Nations Organization.

The day before, I had the privilege of presenting a motion on behalf of the Government, expressing recognition for the efforts of Raoul Wallenberg to save hundreds of innocent Jews, men, women and children, from genocide during the Second World War.

Mr. Speaker, the meaning of the word "human rights" may vary, depending on the person who uses them. To some people, these terms are closely linked to the politics of an oppressive regime, of pseudo-liberation organizations which typically engage in violence, assassination attempts and crimes of all kinds. To others, they represent the basic freedoms, the freedom to be, to act, to speak and to worship.

To me, these words also mean the right to life, growth and self-determination.

Unfortunately, too many peoples are helpless to defend their rights and remain deprived of those rights. However, Mr. Speaker, the day will come when people of goodwill will force the oppressor to respect the rights and freedoms of the individual.

ENERGY

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY OIL UPGRADER AT LLOYDMINSTER, SASK.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 an agreement was signed by the federal Government and the Governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta to build a heavy oil upgrader at Lloydminster, Saskatchewan. As conventional supplies of light crude oil in western Canada are gradually declining, we must replace these resources by upgrading our heavy oil resources. Not to do so would be to turn back the clock and cause us to become increasingly dependent upon foreign crude supplies.

The construction of the Husky Lloydminster upgrader and associated field facilities will generate significant direct and indirect employment benefits for Alberta and Saskatchewan. Much of this employment will involve highly skilled engineering and technical expertise. In addition, large indirect benefits will be generated in Ontario and Quebec where much of the hardware for the project will be manufactured.

Cancellation of the Husky project will cast a serious shadow over all major non-conventational oil and gas development projects now in the planning stage. These projects are both capital and labour intensive and, as such, will provide the backbone in the "engine of future economic growth" for Canada. We hope the Government of Canada is going to stick to its signed agreement and proceed with the project as intended.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the sale of de Havilland to a U.S. multinational corporation reflects the Tories' blind quest for privatization and commitment to satisfy U.S. interests at all costs. However, all the costs involved are Canadian costs. There is the lack of job guarantees, the huge investment Canadians have made in de Havilland, the loss of precious and unique research and technology, the timely development of markets for its products, especially with the introduction of deregulation, and the fact that de Havilland represents one-quarter of the Canadian aerospace industry.

de Havilland went from a wholly Canadian enterprise which inspired a sense of national pride and national achievement, to a simple number within a conglomerate of companies whose future importance can be changed or ended dramatically based on the whims of its U.S. corporate bosses.

• (1410)

de Havilland's sale is Canada's loss. It not only reminds us of the Avro-Arrow tragedy, but also brings back to life the Conservative Party's opposition to our own Canadian flag, our own Canadian anthem, our own Canadian FIRA, and our own Canadian Constitution, and now it is opposing our efforts to own and control our own Canadian aircraft industry.

The Government has brought shame once again to our Canadian identity and to the principle of Canadian sovereignty. Canadians will not forgive nor forget this regressive, un-Canadian policy move by this regressive Government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—ATTACKS ON TAMIL POPULATION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Tamils of Sri Lanka are being forced to flee their homeland in fear for their lives. A demonstration yesterday on Parliament Hill by several busloads of Tamil-Canadians dramatized their concern about attacks on their compatriots in Sri Lanka. They presented evidence which Amnesty International has gathered that the Sri Lankan army is resorting to torture of Tamils and other persons in military camps. The Prevention of Terrorism Act passed in 1979 has encouraged Sri Lankan military and police personnel to make random attacks on Tamils. Regulations have recently been issued to control the inquests into the deaths produced by this violence.

Sri Lanka has been a large recipient of Canadian aid for more than 30 years. The Colombo Plan is, in its very name, a reminder of these links. These Commonwealth ties should only make us more sensitive to the use of irregular and arbitrary violence by those who are responsible for law and order in Sri Lanka. I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to ensure that Canadian aid, including trucks, is not used in this proto-civil war in Sri Lanka. I call on him to encourage the Government of Sri Lanka to avoid the kind of irregular violence that has disfigured the life of so many countries in these last years.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

MEETING BETWEEN HAIDA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, over the past month many Canadians have been deeply concerned as they have watched events unfold on Lyell Island in the Queen Charlottes of British Columbia. The issues involved are complex. Many people are directly affected by activities on South Moresby and are concerned about its future. These people include the Haida people, loggers, residents of the Queen Charlotte communities, and those proposing a park on South Moresby.

Obviously the escalation of confrontation and disregard of law are no way to resolve the conflicting points of view. A few weeks ago our Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and our Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) offered their good offices to mediate the dispute. I am pleased that over the past weekend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development met with representatives of the Haida people and then with representatives of the Province of British Columbia and has indicated his commitment to further discussions with respect to the federal Government's involvement in the land claims process of the Haida people.

Fortunately, yesterday the Attorney General of British Columbia and representatives of the Haida people met and, from all accounts, had fruitful discussions on matters under provincial jurisdiction. A provincially appointed study group is also examining the possibilities for mixed uses in the region including logging, mining, tourism, and the protection of wilderness. The magnitude of the problem is such that a negotiated settlement is the only answer.

As we well know, a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. Let us applaud all parties on being willing to take the first step.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CALL FOR RESTORATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, recently thousands of people in our country were shocked and saddened when a Canadian woman and her child were murdered by terrorists in Malta. It was a dastardly act, and just punishment must be meted out at least to endeavour to ensure that such a tragedy will never happen again.

But, the terrorists in Canada are just as bad; like Brown and Peters who murdered a young wife and later a teenage girl and burned their bodies after satisfying their lust; like Clifford Robert Olson who deliberately planned and then abused and killed at least 11 boys and girls, one only nine years old.

But, what do we do with these terrorists in our country? We put them in jail, feed them the best of food, provide amusement, and even connubial trailers at the taxpayers' expense, and then, in a few years, we set them free.

The people of Canada are just as frustrated with Canadian murderers as the people of the world are with international murderers, but the bleeding hearts have taken over in Canada. They call capital punishment "revenge" when it is "deserved punishment". At least 70 per cent of the Canadian people want capital punishment restored. A dead murderer will never kill another human being.

• (1415)

Let us restore capital punishment and tell the terrorists of Canada and the world that the punishment for anyone who deliberately plans and kills another human being will be death—d-e-a-t-h.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—TERMS OF SALE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. When I was on the West Coast I arranged a meeting in Seattle, Washington with Mr. Thornton Wilson and Mr. Frank Shrontz, the Chairman and President respectively of the Boeing Company. I arranged the meeting to discuss the purchase of de Havilland. Later I was advised that these two gentlemen did not feel free to discuss the deal because they had been advised by the Canadian Government that it would not be in their interests to do so.

Why will the Prime Minister not reveal the terms and publish the agreement of sale so that Members of Parliament and Canadians generally can see the terms of the sale? Why has his Government imposed a conspiracy of silence on the Boeing Company of Seattle?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the mere fact that the President of Boeing Canada was at the press conference and freely answered questions obviously shows that the premise of the Hon. Member's question is false. There is no conspiracy of silence whatsoever.

Furthermore, we have been answering questions in the House for the last 10 days about the details of the deal. It is a deal that is good for Canada.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXAMINATION OF ALL TERMS OF DE HAVILLAND SALE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the agreement with de Havilland was important enough for the Prime Minister to answer this question himself.

Although Canadian taxpayers are the real shareholders of de Havilland, the Government is refusing to reveal the terms of the deal to the Canadian people.

I shall repeat my question to the Prime Minister. Is he going to allow a parliamentary committee, as he promised during the election campaign, to examine all the terms of this agreement and to call as witnesses the executive officers of Boeing in Seattle, Winnipeg and Toronto?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Right Hon. Member that the actual terms of the agreement were made public. They were made public in this House. The actual terms of the agreement have put an end to expenditures that had become an incredible burden on the Canadian taxpayer in recent years, and which totalled more than $800 million. It is an agreement that will save Canadian taxpayers several hundred million dollars in the years to come. It is an agreement that will create jobs. It will create investment. It will keep an important Canadian industry alive and well.

[English]

PROVISION OF TAX INCENTIVES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is an extraordinary situation when a company belonging to the people of Canada is being sold, yet the people of Canada through their representatives in the House cannot see the terms of the agreement.

The hon. gentleman talks about the Canadian taxpayers. According to what we have been able to calculate from the vague terms that have been rendered public, the Boeing Company will receive tax incentives and grants to the amount of about $600 million. How can the Minister justify that, when there were Canadian purchasers available to buy this company who were not asking for that type of guarantee or that type of incentive at all?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, once again the premise of the question is wrong. We looked at the various bids. They were considered by a number of outside experts. We selected the best bidder in the best interest of Canada, Canadians, and of taxpayers.

FUTURE AIRCRAFT PURCHASES BY AIR CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Air Canada estimates that in the next 10 years it will buy a billion dollars worth of big jet planes. These planes are made by Airbus in Europe, McDonnell-Douglas, and Boeing. Canadians will want Air Canada to buy the best planes at the best price.

● (1420)

Has the Minister considered that those jobs at de Havilland, are now a hostage for Boeing to put pressure on the Canadian Government and Air Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —to buy Boeing's planes and to buy them at Boeing's prices?

Mr. McDermid: Are you ever desperate.

Mr. Kaplan: Did the Government consider this compromise to our independence and our integrity? What is there in the deal to be sure the independence and autonomy of Air Canada and of the Government in this purchase decision will be preserved?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can honestly answer the gentleman that there were no such guarantees sought by Boeing, no such guarantees offered by the Government of Canada, and there is no link between this transaction and any future Air Canada purchases.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, although the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion told this House on December 11 that the transaction will be reviewed by Parliament before completion, the Government is moving back on that deal. If this deal is so bad, why will the Government not submit it for a review by Parliament before closing, and honour the promise made by the Minister on December 11?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that members of the Opposition have made up their minds about this matter. We have had a full day of debate. We have had a vote in this House approving the deal.

Mr. Chrétien: When?

Mr. de Cotret: Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, the Government made up its mind to go ahead and sell de Havilland to Boeing because it is the best thing for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

1984 PROPOSAL TO MERGE DE HAVILLAND AND CANADAIR

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with respect to the sell-out of de Havilland and the possible sell-out of Canadair. I would like to point out to the Minister that this House has not had a single opportunity outside this Chamber to question Ministers or to question the people involved in the sale of de Havilland.

On August 21, 1984, the Minister, speaking for his Party, said:

—that a Conservative Government will set up a separate Crown corporation for Canadair and de Havilland—that the Government would make them commercially viable and would continue to do so into the next century.

Was that an election promise on behalf of the Conservatives? Will the Minister explain why it has now been broken?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to answer the Hon. Member's question. That possibility was discussed time and time again and it was examined. We found that the potential of selling de Havilland to Boeing in a separate transaction yielded more significant and positive results for the aerospace industry in Canada, as it itself has indicated to us, and to Canadians in general. That is why we acted in that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Maybe I could direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. The Minister said that the Government has changed its mind on policy important to the future of the aerospace industry. You promised an aerospace strategy and have abandoned it. Is it not right that you should at least take such an important change of direction in policy before a committee of this House, rather than abandoning the strategy without explaining why?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again the premise of the Member's question is wrong. This was not policy. I have just explained to the Hon. Member that we looked at the situation and we felt in the best interests of the Canadian taxpayer, whom we happen to represent, by the way, that the deal we are proposing to conclude is the best one for Canadians throughout this land. That is supported by the aerospace industry itself, and most of the editorials that have been written across the country also support it.

ACCOUNTABILITY OF CROWN CORPORATIONS TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is for the Prime Minister. Your Government, your Party promised—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —to keep this industry Canadian. You promised to keep it in the Crown corporation's hands.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the House is reacting to the fact that the Hon. Member should know that questions should come through the Chair without reference to individuals.

Mr. Cassidy: I apologize. Through you, Mr. Speaker, on August 21, 1984, the now Minister of Finance said:

> We will increase the acountability of this and all other Crown corporations to Parliament.

Was that a Conservative promise with any credibility or was that, too, just another broken promise as has been demonstrated in this House for the last week and a half?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have had many opportunities to discuss this transaction in the House. Many opportunities will come again through the normal procedures which this House has in place. We are selling de Havilland to Boeing because it is a good thing for Canadian taxpayers.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you quote?

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, the Hon. Member likes to quote. Let me quote from The Gazette for December 4:

> This is a commercial venture best left to people with skills and training acquired in a commercial environment rather than to bureaucrats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST THAT STUDIES BE TABLED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Today the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives released two major economic reports indicating that any Canada-U.S. trade agreement would be an economic tragedy for Canada, clearly contrary to the assertions of the Government. The only response we have had from the Government so far has been a speech in New York, a speech in Chicago, and now an ad supplement in The New York Times which highlights the Prime Minister as the head of Canadian operations of a North American trading company.

When will the Government table all the studies it has prepared relating to the job impact of a trade agreement? When will the Prime Minister schedule a major debate in Parliament so that we will know what is going on?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last time the Hon. Member rose to make a projection—

Ms. Copps: A junior vice-president of the trading company.

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Mr. Mulroney: There is the sweet voice of Christmas coming. The last time he rose to make a projection, I think the record will show, was in November of last year when he predicted that, as a result of the economic policies of the Government, 200,000 jobs would be lost. In fact 416,000 new jobs were created. He was wrong by almost three-quarters of a million jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It will not come as a surprise to anybody—

Mr. Hopkins: Part-time jobs.

Mr. Mulroney: —to hear that the Hon. Member is wrong again and railing against the United States. The only person who is surprised and upset by that is his brother who is working down there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I think that the family should stand up and turn back that "dirty yankee money", right now!

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: We have put in place—

Ms. Copps: The Schefferville lackey.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question.

Mr. Axworthy: After that tirade, what could one say?

Some Hon. Members: Then sit down.

Mr. Axworthy: We do have a lot to say. I do not like to correct the Prime Minister, but the last time I made a speech, I predicted that the Tories would fall 10 percentage points in the polls, and that has come true.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPEARANCE OF CANADIAN NEGOTIATOR BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Seeing that the Prime Minister has refused to answer the first question, will he answer this question?

Mr. Shields: We want Tom.

Mr. Axworthy: Three weeks ago he gave a direct commitment in the House that Simon Reisman, the negotiator, would appear before a parliamentary committee. Can he now answer the question? When will Mr. Reisman come before that parliamentary committee so that Parliament and the Canadian people know what the Government plans to do in its deal with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that we have dropped 10 points in the polls. Better now than during an election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Wait until the next one.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Ms. Copps: It is a bottomless pit.

Mr. Rossi: Canadians will remember you.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Don't get excited, Mr. Rossi.

[English]

Mr. Reisman will be available an appropriate time.

Mr. Axworthy: When is appropriate?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member says "when is appropriate?" As soon as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry and the Leader of the Opposition are in the House on the same day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TURKEY—TRANSFER OF CANADIAN FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Last December the Secretary of State for External Affairs promised to look into the gift of 20 CF-104 Starfighters to Turkey and halt the transaction "if it would increase tension in the area". Will the Associate Minister of National Defence tell the House why the Embassy of Greece has not been contacted about this matter for two months, expecially since Greece still contends that this gift is "changing the balance of power in the Mediterranean"? I read in the newspaper just today that its request for one-half of these planes had been turned down.

● (1430)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that when the CF-18s were destined for Europe in 1981, in keeping with NATO policy, we made an offer to the three southern-tier countries—Portugal, Greece and Turkey—of surplus CF-104s. Only Turkey responded to that request. We are honouring a commitment in which all NATO partners are involved.

When Greece expressed some concern about the balance, we acknowledged that, in fact, it is necessary to be even-handed and that some of the assistance granted to these southern-tier countries by NATO countries has been less than even in its impact. As a result of that, we are engaged in discussions with Greece to provide it with spare parts and engines for its aircraft, plus other equipment, in order to strengthen its capabilities, since it is an important part of the NATO deterrence.

At the officials level in Brussels, and in Athens, in fact, very amiable discussions are ongoing now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF UPGRADING AIRCRAFT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the Government realizes that what it is doing may very well be heating up an already very volatile political situation, in view of the fact that we also have 600 Canadians in Nicosia.

Will the Minister tell the House why his predecessor said last year that the cost to the Canadian taxpayer for the upgrading of these Starfighters would be approximately $6 million when we now learn that the cost has soared, in just a year's time, to $17.5 million?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the relationships in that part of the world, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that when I was in Brussels last week I had lunch with the Minister of Defence for Turkey and the permanent representative of Greece. The three of us discussed this question. I can assure the Hon. Member that none of the tensions about which he is talking exist in regard to what Canada is attempting to do.

In terms of how much it will cost, my predecessor, the former Minister of National Defence, when answering that question was giving the dollars involved in terms of the cost of inspection for the first 20 aircraft. As the Hon. Member should know, that is required after 200 hours of flight time. The remaining aircraft, their transference and all the support account for the difference of an additional approximately $11 million.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PARTICIPATION OF NEW BRUNSWICK IN FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT—NOTIFICATION OF CANADIANS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, Premier Johnson of Quebec stated that he had not been told on November 6 that New Brunswick would be taking part in the Francophonie Summit, and today the Prime Minister stated he had duly informed him of the fact.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House why he kept the people of Canada and Quebec in the dark between November 8 and the provincial election?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, just to show how the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice insists on short changing the Members of this House by refusing to examine important issues and by failing to consult, before he rose in the House, the transcript of a press conference held on November 8, 1985, here in Ottawa, where, in answer to a question from a reporter, referring to the fact that earlier that day or the day before I had announced that Quebec would be taking part in the International Francophonie Summit, I said the following: I can say that discussions are under way with the Government of New Brunswick for the purpose of concluding an agreement that will ensure its participation in the summit. That is crystal clear, and the Government's intentions were clearly established and announced, contrary to what the Hon. Member just said.

PARTICIPATION OF NEW BRUNSWICK IN FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister state before this House whether he did or did not clearly inform Premier Johnson of New Brunswick's eventual participation in the summit? And if he did, which means he had already decided that New Brunswick would be at the summit, why did he not announce that fact at the same time as Quebec's participation, instead of trying to help Premier Johnson win an election he ultimately lost?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would spend more time here instead of selling his book across the country, he would be better informed on the issues of the day.

In fact, I said this: I am very surprised because the federal Government's firm intention of also authorizing New Brunswick's participation was clearly expressed in the normal course of negotiations leading up to the Ottawa-Quebec agreement. At all times and in all circumstances, the federal Government's intention has been clear. To us, there are only first-class francophones, not first- and second-class francophones. There are only first-class francophones in Canada and they are all going to be represented.

ENERGY

SASKATCHEWAN HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT—PROVISION OF LOAN GUARANTEES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question on the Husky Oil upgrader in northwestern Saskatchewan is directed to the Minister of Finance. While the Government has enacted some historic energy proposals, it is understandable that the Minister is now reviewing carefully the loan guarantees made by the previous Government with respect to this proposal. Will the Minister tell the House if the Government will undertake loan guarantees for this vitally needed energy development?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member I can assure him that there are very careful studies going on at the present time with respect to the Husky upgrader with the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and their officials. They are assessing a review which has taken place on the financial capabilities of this project and will be reporting in due course.

Mr. Gormley: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Oral Questions

FAMILY VIOLENCE

BADGLEY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS ON CHILD ABUSE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Recently a conference was held here in Ottawa and the participants were very angered because children continue to be sexually abused, prostituted, and even murdered, while the Badgley recommendations which were tabled over a year ago continue to be ignored by the Government. When will the Minister, in co-operation with the Minister of Justice, introduce the necessary legislation which was recommended by the Badgley Commission and appoint a commissioner to help counteract child abuse?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate to the Hon. Member that when the Badgley Report came down a number of the recommendations were recommendations, for example, to the Minister of Justice and to the Department of National Health and Welfare, to name just two, as the Hon. Member and other Members of the House will know. The Government established an inter-departmental committee to examine not only the recommendations but the proper response. That work is going on now. I hope, as she does, that a satisfactory response can be made very shortly.

NATIONAL CLEARING HOUSE INQUIRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that we already have in place one clearing house on family violence which could be expanding in terms of some of the public education work, information systems, and even national training. Why has the Minister cut back on the national clearing house on family violence when he should be expanding it to help with the very serious problem of child abuse?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we will look at that question and at what the proper response will be. Generally, I think we would accept as a society that the best response would be at the community level through organizations which have experience in these areas. If one looks at that approach and at the report of the Badgley Commission, I think that before too long the Government will have a response. I keep in mind, as I hope the Hon. Member will, that the response will have to be such that there should be help for children and battered children rather than simply looking at it as a financial matter. I think it goes much deeper than that.

INDUSTRY

QUEBEC PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR POLICIES

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, in answer to a fundamental question about the future of Quebec's petro-chemical industry, he gave me the usual line that it was all the Liberals' fault. I would like to inform the Prime Minister that it has now been fifteen months, and that it is high time he took on his responsibilities as Leader of this Government. And that is why I am asking him again today: Can his Government state quite honestly that, as he promised, it will adopt every policy necessary to maintain and expand the petro-chemical industry in Quebec, and especially in Montreal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that it was uphill all the way in this respect for the new Government, since the Liberal Government had officially announced its decision to close down the petro-chemical industry in Montreal. Yes, that is what they said. The Liberal Government told Montrealers they would not get another red cent for this very important industry in their city. So this was a tremendous problem for us. The first thing we did to try and held this important industry which had been abandoned by the Liberals was to inject $15 million into Petromont in September 1984. And now, Mr. Speaker, I intend to see the Premier of Quebec in the near future to discuss the matter further with him, since he is an interested party.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF QUEBEC PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, it is there for everyone to see in the Progressive Conservative Party's literature that they intend to establish policies to promote the petro-chemical industry in Quebec, and the Government has not done so. What I want to ask the Prime Minister . . . You may want to meet with the Premier of Quebec, but on December 15, Mr. Prime Minister, workers in the petro-chemical industry are going to go home with their termination papers in their—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lapierre: Is the Prime Minister prepared to meet today with representative of these workers who are sick and tired of his beating around the bush? They want action. What is he going to do?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, action, action like the false promises the Liberal Government made to workers in the petro-chemical industry . . . Yes, that is what you did! Besides, the figures show that in Quebec, the previous Liberal Government created 673 new jobs a month, while we have created 9,286. That is the difference.

Mr. Speaker, I insist that without this unfortunate decision by the Liberal Party to shut down the petro-chemical industry in Montreal, we would not be in the mess we are today. Thanks to you!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Two studies have now been released, one by the Ontario Government and one by the Centre for Policy Alternatives, both warning that hundreds of thousands of jobs in branch plants will shift to the United States. Does the Prime Minister agree with the following statement:

> Free trade with the U.S. is like sleeping with an elephant . . . He is going to roll over in times of economic depression and they are going to crank up those plants in Georgia, North Carolina and Ohio and they are going to be shutting them down up here.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will agree that it is a very elegant statement, but I must tell my hon. friend that I think I have seen the study to which he refers, but I am not sure. I noticed one reported in the Toronto Star today which was billed as some great study put out by a research director for one of our leading trade unions. I think we can understand where they come from. Just look at Jim Laxer.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER ACCEPT CONCLUSIONS OF STUDIES OPPOSING FREE TRADE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, of course the statement I quoted was made by the Prime Minister before the election.

Mr. Mulroney: That's why I said it was elegant.

Mr. Langdon: He went on to say that if the elephant ever rolls over, you're a dead man. Will the Prime Minister now agree that he was right then, and accept the conclusions of these two new studies, one by the Ontario Government and the other by the Centre for Policy Alternatives, that show that free trade will be an economic tragedy for Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what is it in the NDP socialist psyche that makes them so insecure? We are going to have to hire babysitters for you people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Why is it that you are so timorous? What is the matter with you? They are afraid to compete. They want walls and protectionism. This country, Canada, can be strong and vibrant and can compete with the world and create new wealth and new jobs. That is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT DISPOSED TO LET GAZ MÉTROPOLITAIN BUY GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. I have to tell you that the workers who are here now and who expect to lose their jobs must find your performance rather pitiful, not to mention the Conservative Members who are frolicking while those workers' jobs are on the line.

Mr. Prime Minister, the National Assembly of Quebec will adopt a unanimous resolution urging you to intervene and block the sale of Gulf to Ultramar. Is the Prime Minister prepared to do just that through Investment Canada and cancel the deal between Gulf and Ultramar so as to enable Gaz métropolitain to buy the Montreal East Gulf refinery?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): As far as I know, the Quebec National Assembly has yet to be called. Are you telling me that you are in the secure possession not only of the truth but of the Speech from the Throne as well?

Because we never . . . on the contrary, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the workers are watching us. The workers of Quebec know that only 673 jobs were created between 1979-80 and 1984, just as they know that any attempt to get Quebec City and Ottawa to co-operate was thwarted by the Liberal Government, whereas we have begun a new era of co-operation with the duly elected Government of Quebec, and we intend to work together in this case as well.

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT DISPOSED TO STOP SALE OF GULF TO ULTRAMAR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I will get a hold of myself, but I wish you would ask the Prime Minister to be frank for once in his life, if he can.

Mr. Prime Minister, we are not joking, and this is not a Conservative caucus. The Gulf workers want to know right now: Can you announce today that you will step in and block the sale of Gulf to Ultramar to enable Gaz métropolitain to buy the refinery and save 450 jobs? Can you have human feelings? We are talking about 450 individuals.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to convince the refinery or union workers who are here. They know the situation. They know that four similar industries had to close down: three did so as a result of unilateral decisions by the Liberals, there is one left and we are trying to save it in co-operation with the Quebec Government. Our approach is directly opposed to what yours was—we are saving jobs instead of exporting them elsewhere.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT DISPOSED TO INSIST ON CANADIAN CONTROL OF FILM INDUSTRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications, who said he wanted to consult with his provincial counterparts before commenting more specifically on the recommendations made yesterday by the Task Force on the Film Industry.

My question is about the principle. Does the Minister agree with the principle the task force is proposing, namely to eliminate vertical integration in the industry and insist on Canadian control over the film industry?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the film industry—and I will explain why it is essential to work together with the provinces—the federal Government has very specific responsibilities in the production area, and through Telefilm, the National Film Board and the CBC, we invest money in this industry. The Department of Finance has a regulatory role from the taxation point of view.

As for the distribution aspect of the film industry, this is a responsibility that, it is broadly agreed, belongs to the provinces. And that is why the Government of Quebec has adopted legislation concerning that aspect, and why other provinces can take similar action. If we intend to achieve the objectives mentioned by the Hon. Member, I think it is essential to define, not a national policy, set up by the federal Government, but a Canadian policy that will provide a framework for the provinces and the federal Government to work together on various objectives, including the patriation of our cultural industries. That is how we want to work. That is why the February conference is so important.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Supplementary.

REQUEST CONCERNING GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF CANADIAN FEATURE FILMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary about a matter that does not require the participation of the provinces, and I am referring to the proposal to set up a feature film fund.

Does the Minister intend to grant the $60 million recommended by the task force for financing Canadian feature films?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Communications and the Minister received the report during the day yesterday. It has been published and we are going to read it, analyze it and report to Cabinet, which will announce its position.

PUBLIC WORKS

SALE OF GOVERNMENT REAL ESTATE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works.

[English]

I was pleased to hear about two decisions which resulted from the work of the Nielsen task force; first, the control of most real property will be under the Treasury Board and, second, property management in construction projects will be centralized under the Department of Public Works. Besides providing better control, will the bureaucracy be down-sized?

An Hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: Order.

Mr. Attewell: And what will the savings be to taxpayers? Merci, le président.

An Hon. Member: Your French is worse than mine.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): It is a great pleasure for me, monsieur chairman—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Perfect English.

Mr. La Salle: It is a great pleasure to have an intelligent question.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Nielsen task force reported on the importance of doing away which duplication in real estate, a sector which henceforth will be under the responsibility of Treasury Board within which a specific office will identify—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. La Salle: I think it is important that all Hon. Members be made fully aware that this office will also identify Canadian Government surpluses.

With that in mind, it becomes clear that such rationalization of construction and services within Treasury Board and Public Works Canada can only result in substantial savings for all taxpayers.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

SITUATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In November of this year Premier Bennett said he would not negotiate with the Indians of British Columbia until they abandoned their claim to having any aboriginal title in that province. While the Minister was in British Columbia, did he succeed in getting the province to change its mind and agree that there are aboriginal rights in British Columbia and that those rights have constitutional validity?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I believe the Hon. Member may know, I spent most of my time in all of the meetings dealing with the question of process and the question of a pause in the activities on Lyell Island. That is because the important thing from the point of view of the Haida people, the Government of the Province of British Columbia, as well as the federal Government is to be able to begin a process by which all of the issues which affect the Haida people, and other people who have a concerned interest, will be able to proceed in a way which will satisfy their concerns.

POSITION OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate what the Minister was able to do, but would he not agree that until the Government of British Columbia recognizes that there are constitutional aboriginal rights there can be no just resolution for the Haida people, or any other people of Indian ancestry, in the Province of British Columbia?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. The Province of British Columbia does in fact recognize constitutional aboriginal rights. In fact it agreed to the amendment when it was brought forward in 1982.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—LUMBER EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On November 26 the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote to me and stated definitevely that the lumber issue is now Canada's number one trade problem with the United States. As the Prime Minister knows, the President Reagan raised this with him yesterday on the phone. What precisely is on the agenda for the lumber discussions with the U.S. administration? Since the Minister for International Trade says he is going to proceed with those talks, I would like to know just exactly what is being offered? Does it include United States access to Canadian forest lands and to raw logs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question, and others, have been clearly answered by the letter which President Reagan sent to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Rostenkowski, in which he pointed out that, notwithstanding the existence of mutual irritants which may exist on both sides of the border, it is his view that the trade discussions should proceed because the ultimate conclusion would, hopefully, be beneficial to both sides and ought not to be interrupted by this.

The position of the Government of Canada is that we will, of course, maintain very vigorously the position the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and others, have advanced in regard to timber and other matters.

AGENDA FOR TALKS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My question is again directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs is on record in this House as stating that Canada will in no way consider any protectionist measures proposed by the U.S. Congress against our softwood exports, would the Prime Minister explain just what forest industry related items are going to be on the agenda for the talks which the Minister for International Trade is proposing, particularly in light of the comments made in this House and outside by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't see anything either troubling or inconsistent in anything which has been said. The President wrote, as he must do constitutionally, to Congress, seeking authorization to negotiate a bilaterial trade arrangement, if it can be done. I reported to this House on September 26, along similar lines.

We will sit down with the provinces, as agreed, within the next 90 days, as we will in parallel fashion after the Americans receive their approval, if they do.

Mr. Fulton: What about wood?

Mr. Mulroney: And not just wood. Timber is a very high priority with us. It will be pursued with the greatest of vigour and, I hope, ingenuity as well, so that the very valid position put forward by the Government of Canada and by the producers in British Columbia and elsewhere, will prevail.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

REMUNERATION OF FORMER ENERGY CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and in her absence—although there is a "surfer" sitting in her seat—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: —I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who is in charge of cutting everything. It concerns the outrageous expenditure of funds paid to Mr. Harry Near to be the Chief of staff of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at a salary equivalent to $150,000 a year. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House how he can justify that kind of expenditure of public funds when he and others are trying to cut back on salaries of floor cleaners and others who work for the Department of Public Works? Where is the priority of the Government?

• (1500)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Hon. Member asked the question because it will give me a chance to make three points. First, Mr. Near was paid from the Minister's exempt staff salary budget and no extra funds were paid. Secondly, he took a pay cut to work in the Minister's office. Thirdly, and most important, he was hired to do a job, to set up the Minister's office, and to act as a senior policy adviser on the Western Accord and Atlantic Accord. All Canadians know the success of those two Accords, and I think we got good value for money spent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary.

ATTITUDE OF CERTAIN MINISTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Mr. Speaker: That question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

BOVINE BRUCELLOSIS ERADICATION PROGRAM—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this brief opportunity to draw Hon. Members' attention to a very small celebration which took place just across the Ottawa River earlier today. It was a gathering of which all Hon. Members can be proud. Agriculture Canada's Food Production and Inspection Branch hosted a luncheon to pay tribute to all those in our beef and dairy industries, the veterinary services of every province and private veterinarians, who, together with the staff of my Department, have eradicated bovine brucellosis from our national cattle herd.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Virtually every Canadian beef and dairy farmer deserved a place at that table. Without their complete co-operation, success would have been impossible.

Bovine brucellosis is a serious and contagious disease which causes abortions and production losses in cattle. It also causes undulant fever in humans. One hundred cattle-producing nations have mounted eradication campaigns. Of these, only the Scandinavian countries, Switzerland and, this year, Canada, have reached the goal. We in Canada have mounted an animal health program which stands as an international bench-mark. The eradication campaign began in 1957 and was waged step by step, province by province and, in truth, farm by farm. From the Magdalen Islands to the Queen Charlotte's, some 39 blood samples were taken, infected herds were quarantined and infected animals destroyed. Certification and testing were required to move cattle between provinces. All animals were tested before sale at auction markets. By 1981 we had narrowed the disease down to only 83 herds nation-wide. Today the number of infected herds is zero.

I believe all Hon. Members can appreciate the magnitude of the task, but what are the benefits of success? For producers it means free movement of cattle throughout Canada. For exporters it means one more bargaining chip in the competitive world market-place. For Canadian taxpayers it means the saving of millions of dollars in compensation payments. Last, but not least, it removes the threat of undulant fever from producers, veterinarians, meat-processing workers and Canadian consumers. Now that we have achieved a nation-wide brucellosis-free status, we must not let down our guard. Only with constant vigilance will it remain a disease of the past in Canada.

In conclusion, I invite all my colleagues in this House to join me in congratulating all those who worked so hard to gain this victory. The brucellosis eradication program stands as a model of what industry and Government can do when they work together in a co-operative effort.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's announcement of Canada's brucellosis-free status certainly is a happy day for Agriculture Canada, the livestock industry and the provincial veterinary services who participated. Eradication of this desease in Canada is very imnportant because in the past many farmers were put out of business because of the loss of milk and calf production. That was the situation when I entered veterinary practice back in about 1957. I questioned at that time whether an eradication program was possible because of the infectious nature of the disease. However, the program moved forward and it has been a model of success even though it was a massive undertaking. It is interesting that we were able to achieve this in Canada, being the second largest country in the world. The other countries that have achieved this status have relatively small cattle populations and are themselves relatively small geographically.

The benefits of this program flow not only to farmers and the agricultural industry at large. Thousands of Canadians have spent much of their lifetime suffering from constant fever and discomfort as a result of undulant fever. However, it does bode well for our agricultural future because our cattle can now move freely within the country as well as to world markets. Meat production and dairy products are an important part of our agricultural industry.

I would like to pay tribute to Dr. McGowan and the hundreds of veterinarians across the country who made this success possible, as well as the advisory committees who assisted and advised the Department and provincial Governments involved. I do not know exactly who was at the Minister's celebration luncheon today but I would like to pay tribute to Dr. McGowan's predecessor, Dr. Ken Wells, who was our veterinary director general for many years. He was instrumental in establishing many programs to improve the health of animals in this country and, at the same time, improved the health of people as well.

I would like to sound a note of caution for the future, however. We know this Government is hell-bent on cutting back and privatizing everything in sight. We know the Nielsen task force is cutting some $58 million from Agriculture Canada's budget as well as deindexing the budget's purchasing power by another $10 million or $15 million. If any of this $60 million to $65 million cut-back were made in the budget for research into animal disease control, it would do a terrible disservice to the future of the agricultural industry in Canada. You can count on our side of the House opposing any such cut-backs in that regard. However, the eradication of brucellosis in our country is a significant development for agriculture and human health in Canada. I want to express my congratulations and good wishes to everyone who has made this possible. They should be justly proud.

• (1510)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in 1950 the first step in a national program to eradicate bovine brucellosis, or Bang's disease, in Canada's national herd was taken. Thirty-five years later we have declared a victory over that disease. That step, a federal-provincial initiative for a national vaccination program, required wisdom, dedication, and courage. It recognized that the disease was a serious problem. That part was easy. However, it also recognized, quite correctly, that it was fitting, proper, and necessary for Government to take the initiative in eradicating this disease.

It was not left up to individual producers to pursue their own short-term interests. The problem was not left up to veterinarians to tackle if and when they were called upon to do so. Neither was it left up to the provinces. The success of this national program depended upon all of these people, but it would never have got off the ground without the decision to take direct government action to solve the problem. Members of the former Health of Animals Branch, individual farmers, the dairy and beef industries, federal and provincial veterinarian associations, and especially the federal Department of Agriculture, contributed greatly to the eradication program.

We must continue to work together to ensure that this disease is not reintroduced into the national herd. We must maintain our stringent testing programs on new entrants to the national herd from outside of the country. We must continue to monitor the situation to ensure that infections do not cross the border through wildlife. We should, as well, assess the relative importance of other diseases to determine if similar efforts should be mounted against them for the long-term benefit of everyone in Canada.

I make these comments because today the Government seems committed to reducing the role of government in Canada and to reducing the amount of money that it spends on research into disease eradication and control. Sometimes the Government tries to justify all of these cut-backs by claiming that it will reduce the deficit. Too often, however, these cut-backs in Government programs have more to do with ideology than with common sense or good science. The Government seems intent on reducing the number of people working in a given Department, whether or not this serves to reduce the deficit, and whether or not they are involved in good work necessary for the well-being of society.

The present Government should take the brucellosis eradication program as an important lesson for the future. It is not good enough simply to turn important decisions over to the private sector. These kinds of decisions cannot be made by the private sector and this kind of result cannot be achieved by it. The Government should sit up and take notice of this great victory. Many more problems could be eradicated in the country with a similar co-ordinated approach under government management and direction. Cut-backs to research in disease control should be reviewed with the successful brucellosis control program in mind.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and various other areas of Montreal. The petitioners are asking that the Government of Canada abandon its regressive decision to deindex family allowances. This decision, if implemented, would reduce the buying power of the truly needy in Canada.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to present to the House a number of petitions that I have received in my office urging the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to fulfil their promise not to deindex family allowances. I have petitions from the riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore, one from Surrey-White Rock-North Delta in the west, another from residents of the riding of Regina East, and another one from the riding of Trois-Rivières in la belle province. I have another petition with regard to the deindexation of family allowances from Portneuf. I have one from the riding of Charlevoix, one from Halifax, one from the riding of my Leader, Vancouver Quadra, and another one from the riding of Broadview-Greenwood in the Toronto area. The last petition, Mr. Speaker, is from the riding of Laval.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of the Cercle des fermières de Sainte-Dorothée, which concerns family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have some petitions on the deindexation of family allowances. The first petition is from residents of the God's Lake Indian Reserve at God's Lake Narrows. In the petition Chief David Nazzie says the following: "Native people are the first peoples of Canada and we were stripped of our dignity, our rights, our heritage, our pride—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is becoming a speech as opposed to the presentation of a petition.

Mr. Murphy: In presenting this petition the Chief asks me to indicate that the Government still wants what the people on that reserve have left.

I have another petition with regard to the Government's plan to deindex family allowances. It is from the riding of Dauphin-Swan River. The people in that riding indicate that they want the Government to rescind its decision and also to rescind the unfair tax increases which the Government is imposing on people who need the money the most.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present two petitions to you and to the House. One is signed by petitioners from the province of New Brunswick and the other is signed by petitioners from the Province of Alberta. All of these petitioners, as well as Canadians from coast to coast, are petitioning the Government with regard to its proposal to cut back on the full indexation of family allowances. They join with many other Canadians in protesting this move.

CONTROL OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House petitions from The Reformed Congregation of North America, The Chilliwack Central Mennonite Brethren Church, and The Emmanuel Church. All of these congregations, which are located in Chilliwack, British Columbia, urge the federal Government to strive to establish clearer obscenity legislation and to enforce stricter control of pornography.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from residents of eastern Ontario who ask the Government not to go ahead with its Bill to deindex family allowances partially.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Coquitlam, Delta, Burnaby, and Surrey, all of which places are in my area of British Columbia. The petitioners ask their Members of Parliament to present a petition, and I have the honour to do so. They call upon the Government to rescind its legislation which would partially deindex what we and they believe should be a universal family allowance.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to present. I have one from Toronto, one from Thunder Bay, one from the Brampton area, and one from Newfoundland. All of the signators to these petitions condemn the Government for having deindexed family allowances. One petition lists 28 names, one lists eight names, one lists 12 names and the last one lists three names. All of the petitioners call upon the Government and Members of Parliament to maintain full indexation of family allowances so that people in the country can get what they are entitled to.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to present today. The first group of petitions raises with Members of the House the concern about the deindexation of the universal family allowance, in particular that deindexation will take about $600 million away from children by the year 1990 on top of all the other increases in costs that have come with recent budget proposals. Therefore, they call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increase. These petitioners are from all over British Columbia.

My second petition is from Women Against the Federal Budget. It is distributed by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and signed in large number by women throughout British Columbia. They are concerned that children are everyone's responsibility and that all parents should receive Government assistance. In fact, they call for higher than present family allowances rather than the reduction proposed by deindexation in order to protect all children in Canadian society.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as we are nearing Christmas season it is almost our last chance to present a petition on behalf of those residents who do not want to see the heart cut out of our family allowance benefits. This petition comes from a number of residents of the great Province of Quebec, calling upon the federal Government to renege on this anti-Christmas notion of cutting back on the increases of family allowance. Don't let the Grinch steal Christmas. Bring back full indexation.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to present a petition on behalf of residents of the federal riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie. There are 25 signatures, and these residents want the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions, including one from the federal ridings of Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton North; another petition is from the riding of Outremont, my hon. friend's, and another from the federal riding of St. Paul's; another petition is from the riding of Ottawa-Carleton; another is from Scarborough West in Ontario; another is from the riding of Spadina in Ontario; another is from the riding of Halifax in Nova Scotia; another is from the riding of Moose Jaw in Saskatchewan; another is from Regina West and the last petition is from the riding of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, all these petitions ask the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from a number of citizens in the riding of Spadina, in other parts of Toronto and also in the City of Scarborough. They are all concerned with the Government's Bill to deindex family allowance partially and with other legislation to increase taxes that will bear heavily on the same people. They point out that this is an unfair tax, particularly on women and children and that by 1990 all families with children will be losing money because of the Government's program. Therefore, they petition this House to see to it that this immediate family allowance Bill is withdrawn and also that the tax increases are rescinded.

[Translation]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of tabling four petitions, the first of which is signed by residents of Ottawa who humbly ask that full indexation of family allowances be reinstated.

[English]

RAIL PASSES FOR CP PENSIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): My second petition is signed by residents of Thunder Bay. It calls upon Parliament to assist pensioners and survivors of CP Rail pensioners in convincing that corporation that the proposed withdrawal of family travel passes is unfair and a breach of the company's implicit contract with those said pensioners when they were working for that company.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): My third petition calls upon the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

And finally, Mr. Speaker, my fourth petition, signed by residents of Hamilton and Stony Creek in Ontario, asks the House to withdraw the proposal to deindex family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present on behalf of the citizens of Prince Albert and the Village of Birch Hills. The citizens are concerned about the cut-backs in family allowance and the tax increases. They call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and riscind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present two petitions from the City of Regina. The petitioners call upon the House to maintain full indexation of family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases, for all of which they and I are duty bound forever to pray.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions, both from residents of British Columbia. The first is from Women Against the Federal Budget. It has been distributed by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. It points out that children are everyone's responsibility and that all parents should receive Government assistance whose value is at least as high or higher than the present family allowance level. Therefore, they strongly oppose the budget proposals to reduce the cost of living protection for family allowance and demand that these proposals be withdrawn as soon as possible.

My second petition is also signed by citizens of British Columbia. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases, pointing out that these tax increases will fall unfairly upon the people who can least afford them and that the accelerating cut-backs in child welfare benefits—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming somewhat of a speech.

[Translation]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have the honour of presenting a number of petitions on behalf of the undersigned who belong to unions including the Canadian Paper Workers Union and the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

Whereas the reduction in family allowances and increases in taxes are unfair and intolerable, faced with these presents from the Budget—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

[English]

I have a feeling that the Member is reading the petition instead of summarizing it.

[Translation]

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions. I have grouped them and I will do this very quickly.

The undersigned humbly ask that full indexation of family allowances be reinstated and that unfair tax increases be revoked.

[English]

The second petition comes from a number of petitioners in my own riding. I have received a very large number of them which I have grouped together. These petitioners point out that the cut-back in family allowance is unfair and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as a tax-free capital gains give a way of up to $500,000 and a greater RRSP deduction for high-income recipients. Accordingly, the petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Third, I have a number of petitions from east Toronto, from a variety of areas. The petitioners point out that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in public support for child benefits are unfair and that they are an attack on women and families—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member is still reading the petition. I take it that she is presenting petitions on one subject. She knows that she should simply indicate where they are from. It is supposed to be a brief presentation.

Ms. McDonald: I have a number of petitions on this subject but they are slightly different. They are from all over the country and point out different matters. I am summarizing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is entitled to present the petition and what it prays for. To put the comments, preambles or "whereases" in advance of the petition by means of a speech is entirely out of order.

Ms. McDonald: These petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance.

[Translation]

I have the honour of presenting another petition in French, in which the undersigned ask that full indexation of family allowances be reinstated.

Mr. Speaker, this petition is from residents of Ottawa.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I now have another number of petitions from citizens of my own riding, again on indexation. They are asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These are all petitions on the same subject as far as I can tell. The Hon. Member should know that all she has to do now is to indicate she has other petitions to table which should take no more than about 10 seconds.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, next I have petitions, again on the family allowance, you are quite correct, which come from Ontario residents, in Simcoe and Brantford, demanding full indexation of the family allowance.

The next one I have, with a good 10 signatures—

Mr. Speaker: Further petitions.

Ms. McDonald: These are from—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

RRSP DEDUCTIONS FOR HIGH INCOME RECIPIENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, first I have a petition to present which challenges the greater deductions in RRSPs for high income recipients. It comes from people in Wallaceburg, Comber, Chatham, Ridgeway, Tillsonburg and Blenheim, parts of which are within my constituency and parts of which are outside.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): The second petition I have to present, Mr. Speaker, is against the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits on top of sales tax change increases, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases, all of which are seen as unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low-income households. It comes from Tillsonburg, Wallaceburg, Chatham and London.

GOVERNMENT HAND-OUTS TO OIL COMPANIES AND BANKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): I have a third petition, Mr. Speaker, which deals specifically with the $9 billion in hand-outs to the oil companies and the billion dollar bail-out of the banks. It expresses opposition to those bail-outs. The petitioners who have signed include people from Whitby, Weston, Woodstock, Tillsonburg, and from my former home town of Kitchener so I am particularly pleased to make that presentation.

[Translation]

REPEAL OF TAX ON CAPITAL GAINS OF $500,000

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of Ottawa concerning the repeal of the tax on capital gains of $500,000.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the last petition I have concerns the de-indexation of family allowances. This petition also comes from Ottawa, and in it we learn that all petitioners are against this policy from which only the rich stand to benefit.

[English]

SALES TAX AND EXCISE TAX INCREASES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have two or three petitions. One is from Delta, Fort Langley and Surrey. The petitioners are praying that the Government of Canada rethink its decision to increase the sales tax and excise tax indicating that they are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low-income households.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Surrey, British Columbia. The petitioners therein pray that the Government reconsider the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits which are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers.

From Delta, British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, the petitioners pray that the Government reconsider the deindexing of family allowance and are concerned that the deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit, and that even the poorest of families will be worse off by 1990.

I have a petition from a large group of women from British Columbia who indicate that they oppose the budget proposals that reduce the cost of living protection in the family allowance and demand that this proposal be withdrawn by the Government of Canada as soon as possible.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to present the petition signed by people living in Guelph, Ontario and London, Ontario who call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases. They believe family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and will fall further and further behind.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to the House of Commons from——the Coalition des femmes pour les allocations familiales, from Quebec, a number of petitions stating their belief that society is responsible for children, that the principle of universality must be maintained, therefore that they are opposed to Bill C-70 on the deindexation of family allowances.

[Translation]

[English]

The second group of petitions I have is from people in Guelph and Toronto who call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

The third petition I have is from Operation Justice, families with children. This petition asks the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I be clear whether that is a petition to Parliament or to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

Mr. Cassidy: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it is in order, but the petition is certainly given to me as a Member of Parliament for communication to this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Member by raising it attests that it is in order, I take it? I think the Member knows that.

Mr. Cassidy: I think that is determined by the Chair afterwards, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about the intention of the petitioners who wish to acquaint this House of Commons with their opposition to the deindexing of the family allowance.

The next two petitions are from a number of petitioners in Toronto and in Fort Erie who express concern over the cut-back in family allowance which in their view, is inequitable and unbearable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, I take it that all of these petitions are on the same subject?

Mr. Cassidy: —and express—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that all the petitions are on the same subject, in which case the Member knows that he simply has about 10 or 15 seconds to indicate that he has a large number of petitions that he wishes to table.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in that case I will conclude by tabling petitions from the Province of Quebec demanding that Bill C-70 be withdrawn, and by tabling further petitions which come from my riding of Ottawa Centre and other parts of Ottawa expressing opposition and asking that the deindexation of family allowances be rescinded.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 57 residents of the great village of Toronto who suggest strongly that the Government has made a mistake in its attempt to deindex family allowances. They call upon this House to reinstate full indexation.

I have another petition signed by 26 residents of the Mississauga area of Metropolitan Toronto who suggest that the deindexation of family allowance will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit. They call upon this House to reinstate fully indexed family allowances.

Finally, I have a petition signed by 50 residents from the communities of Downsview, Willowdale, Cooksville, Scarborough and Don Mills, all in the Toronto area, who also call upon the Government to rescind this attempt to deindex family allowances.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the honor to present petitions from residents of northern Ontario protesting the decision of the Government to deindex universal family allowance. These petitioners point out that the deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. These petitioners, over 150 of them, call upon the House of Commons to re-establish indexation of the family allowance. They live in the ridings of Thunder Bay-Atikokan, Thunder Bay-Nipigon and Cochrane-Superior. They are to be found in the City of Thunder Bay, Nalalu, Kaministikwia and in the outskirts, in Dorion, Hurkett, Red Rock and Nipigon, and in Cochrane-Superior, at Heron Bay and Longlac.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for the travelogue.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several different petitions. They are only some of literally hundreds of thousands of petitions which have come to the offices of this caucus. I know that many more have been sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The first petition is from the community of Mount Pleasant, which is in my riding of Vancouver East. It states that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. Therefore, they call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

The second petition is from quite a different group in North York. It asks the Prime Minister and the House of Commons to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. Also it says that this budget measure will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987. Mostly women from North York signed this petition.

The next petition is from Women Against the Federal Budget. It is signed by quite a number of women from the regions of North Vancouver, Seymour, Vancouver Centre, Vancouver-Kingsway, Vancouver South and Winnipeg, Manitoba. The Women Against the Federal Budget say: "We, the undersigned, believe that children are everyone's responsibility and that all parents should receive Government assistance, whose value is at least as high or higher"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member is engaging both in making a speech and in reading the petition. I ask the Hon. Member to make a summary of the petition, please.

Ms. Mitchell: The petitioners ask that the budget proposals which will reduce the cost of living protection of the family allowance, be rescinded. They demand that they be withdrawn as soon as possible. No time like today.

The final petition I should like to present today is from Surrey-Delta in British Columbia, among other regions such as North Vancouver, the City of Vancouver itself and Burnaby. This petition indicates that cut-backs in the family allowances and the tax increases are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs of $500,000—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has indicated where the petition is from.

Ms. Mitchell: They call for—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions today. In the interest of saving time, I will present them together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: These petitions are signed by citizens of Ontario from London and Woodstock, in addition to others from Thorold, St. Catharines, Welland and Niagara Falls. The petitioners express their grave concern about the Government's intention to deindex family allowances and its intention to increase taxes. They ask that the House of Commons take action to rescind those measures.

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadians in my constituency. They protest the sale of the de Havilland Corporation, a company owned by Canadians, to a multinational corporation with its headquarters outside Canada. They ask that the Government make public all details of the purchase and sale, so that Canadians can see the exact terms which have been agreed upon.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several constituents, protesting the sale of the Havilland. They ask the Government to make the details of the memorandum of agreement public, so that they will have all details of the options in the disposition of de Havilland.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 12 minutes this day.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 382 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 382 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

2. What portion of the funding is remaining from the total allocation?

Return tabled.

[English

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I placed a question on the Order Paper on May 31, 1985, dealing with Public Service superannuation, pension plans and everything else. It is quite an important question. I am beginning to become a little impatient as to whether or not we will get the facts. I plead with the Government to give us those facts. I was told two or three weeks ago that I would get them. Would the Parliamentary Secretary please talk to the appropriate people and get us, before the end of the year, the facts we require to make a judgment?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that up with the appropriate authorities.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise once again to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why he is not answering my questions concerning the travels of the now Minister of State for Transport. I have asked for the answers to these questions on numerous occasions.

I placed a simple question on the Order Paper on March 6 asking: Did the Prime Minister go to Jamaica? Why can that question not be answered?

Mr. Benjamin: He cannot answer it.

Mr. Boudria: He probably does not know the answer. Also, Question No. 313, standing in my name and dated March 28, involving the cost of redecorating and refurbishing cabinet Ministers' offices, has not been answered.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it is probably because they were left in such a mess, but I will take the questions under advisement and look into them.

Mr. Boudria: That is an accusation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Boudria: You are in a mess; you can't even provide answers, you are so disorganized.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Boudria: He is making accusations. I have been polite to him. I will have to start getting partisan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I may have to check the "blues" to make sure that I heard the Hon. Member correctly.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: There are nine report stage motions on today's Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973.

Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), gives to the Chair some procedural difficulty, in that appears to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown and goes beyond the purposes as laid down in the royal recommendation attached to the Bill. Further, it seems to go beyond the principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading, therefore I intend to rule Motion No. 1 out of order.

With regard to Motion No. 2, also standing in the name of the Hon. Member, it is unclear to the Chair whether or not this motion infringes on the royal prerogative of the Crown. It is the Chair's intention to give the benefit of the doubt to the Hon. Member and to allow Motion No. 2 to be put to the House. The motion will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motion No. 3 in the name of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) seems to encroach upon the financial prerogative of the Crown and, as the Hon. Member would know, that is unacceptable. Therefore I also intend to rule that Motion No. 3 is out of order.

[English]

Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 are in order and will be debated together and voted on as follows:

(a) Motion No. 4 by itself.

[Translation]

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 will make it unnecessary to vote on Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 5 will call for a vote on Motion No. 6.

• (1550)

[English]

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 6. obviates the need to put the question on Motion No. 7. A negative vote on Motion No. 6 requires the question to be put on Motion No. 7.

(d) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 7 obviates the need to put the question on Motions Nos. 8 and 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 7 requires that the question be put on Motion No. 8.

(e) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 8 obviates the need to put the question on Motion No. 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 8 requires that the question be put on Motion No. 9.

Therefore, unless there are some other comments my intention would be to begin with—

Mr. Redway: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Motions Nos. 8 and 9 stand in my name. I would like to withdraw Motion No. 8 on the understanding that Motion No. 9 will have an opportunity to be put in the event, I take it, of a negative vote on Motion No. 7. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to be careful about these arcane matters.

Yes, the Hon. Member is correct about the consequence. Therefore, I take it the Hon. Member is seeking the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Motion No. 8.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not such consent.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Excuse me. I am getting confused with respect to the effect of the votes. The Hon. Member will know that his practical solution is not to put Motion No. 8. There is nothing to withdraw since it will be up to him to decide whether or not to put it at the time. Therefore, if he chooses not to put it, it will not be put.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is a much simpler point of order.

Given the complexity of Your Honour's ruling, short though it was, would it be possible to provide me with a copy?

Mr. Gauthier: And us as well.

Mr. Deans: In this way I could take a brief look at it and try to understand exactly what the implications might be as a result of what, no doubt, is a very learned ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I would be perfectly happy to do that. Do I take it that the Hon. Member wishes to reserve his right to make representations with regard to Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3?

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Then may I suggest to the House that we begin with Motion No.—

Mr. Gauthier: Motion No. 2.

Mr. Speaker: In my view, Motions Nos. 1 and 3 are out of order. Motion No. 2, in my view, is questionable. On that basis, I am prepared to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. Is there any objection to that?

Therefore, I suggest that we start with Motion No. 2 and provide those affected—

Ms. Mitchell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if you could explain your views a little further in regard to Motion No. 1, which is my motion, and also Motion No. 3, both of which were accepted in committee. The reason I am wondering—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the Hon. Member that I believe her House Leader was suggesting that he and others might want to see the words of my ruling rather than having me repeat what I have just said. May I suggest that it would be most efficient to begin, therefore, with Motion No. 2 and distribute the ruling.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you are a genius. This is, indeed, an unclear amendment. I think it should be explained by the Hon. Member in order to make it clear. I would like to hear arguments with respect to why Motion No. 2 should be accepted. I do not understand it myself.

Mr. Speaker: I take it we have a suggestion that Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 be stood down, that we begin the debate with Motion No. 4, and that my ruling be distributed. I take it there is no objection to grouping Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 for debate.

Therefore, my intention is to distribute my comments and begin with Motion No. 4.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East) moved:

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-70, be amended in Clause 4

(a) by striking out lines 39 and 40 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"person or institution is entitled and where that person or institution has not been convicted of an offence under section 20 in connection with the obtaining of the allowance, the Minister shall remit all of the allowance or amount in excess of the allowance in any case where these result from a calculation based on a new certificate issued pursuant to subsection 15.1(2); in any other case, the Minister may remit all or any portion of the amount or excess of the allowance where the Minister is satisfied that".

(b) by striking out lines 10 to 16 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) (for Mr. Malépart) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-70, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 14 to 47 at page 3 and lines 1 to 8 at page 4.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East) moved:

That Bill C-70, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 20 to 47 at page 3 and lines 1 to 8 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"15.1(1) Where a child has, either before or after the coming into force of this section, disappeared under circumstances that raise a presumption that the child is dead, the Minister may apply to a court of competent jurisdiction in the province or territory where the child usually resides for an order declaring, according to the law of the province or territory, that the child shall be presumed to be dead; thereupon the child shall be deemed for all purposes of this Act to have died on the date stated in the court order.

(2) If, after obtaining a court order under subsection (1), the Minister receives new information or evidence that the date of death is different from that stated in the court order, the Minister may, with leave of the court, apply to the court for an order to vary, amend or revoke the order previously made, in which case the child named in the court order shall be deemed for all purposes of this Act to have died on the date so stated in the new court order.

(3) If, after obtaining a court order under this section, the Minister is satisfied from new information or evidence that the child named in the court order is alive, the Minister shall forthwith cause to be paid any allowance that would have been payable in respect of the child if the order had not been made.

(4) Subject to subsection (3), the Minister is bound by the law of the province where the child normally resides in respect of the issuance and revocation of death certificates and the making, variance and revocation of orders of presumption of death."

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) (for Mr. Malépart) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-70, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 26 to 47 at page 3 and lines 1 to 8 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Minister may, five years after the disappearance of the child, issue a certificate declaring that the child is presumed to be dead and thereupon the child shall be deemed for all purposes of this Act to have died on the date the certificate is issued.

(2) If, after issuing a certificate under this section, the Minister is satisfied from new information or evidence that the child named in the certificate is alive, the Minister shall forthwith revoke the certificate and cause to be paid any allowance that would have been payable in respect of the child if the certificate had not been issued.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the Minister is not bound by the issuance or revocation of a death certificate by any other authority." "

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved:

That Bill C-70, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 26 to 47 at page 3 and lines 1 to 4 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Minister may determine the date for the purposes of this Act on which the child's death is presumed to have occurred, and thereupon the child shall be deemed for all purposes of this Act to have died on that date.

(2) If, after having determined such a date, the Minister is satisfied from new information or evidence that the date of death is different from that previously determined, the Minister may determine a different date, in which case the child shall be deemed for all purposes of this Act to have died on that different date.

(3) If, after having determined such a date, the Minister is satisfied from new information or evidence that the child is alive, the Minister shall forthwith cause to be paid any allowance that would have been payable in respect of the child had such determination not been made."

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that these latter motions would have been spoken to following the debate with respect to the deindexing part of the Bill. As I am sure Your Honour is aware, Motions Nos. 4 to 8 deal with a part of the Bill which was quite complicated and quite difficult when we were in committee. It was difficult for us to understand at first, but we then started to gain more understanding from witnesses, resource people and those with legal expertise. After that we became much more aware of the complexity of these motions.

For example, we were told that Motion No. 4 was a housekeeping motion. Yet, when we looked into it more carefully we saw it is the intention of this clause to tighten up the wording to ensure that the Minister could not use presumption of death certificates, which are allowed in Clause 5, to collect overpayments from parents. When speaking to this particular motion, it is rather important that we talk about the presumption of death. We in committee had a very serious concern about whether or not this should be under the jurisdiction of the Minister. The advice that we received which was different from the advice I know the Minister's own legal experts gave him, was that the whole question of presumption of death was a provincial matter and not a federal matter and that only in very, very rare instances should it be considered under federal legislation and then only with the permission of the provinces.

● (1600)

I would like to refer to some of the documents at which the committee looked and which were put on the record of the committee. The first deals with evidence regarding life and death in Ontario, and this comes from the Canadian Encyclopedic Digest (Ont. 3rd). It says there that presumption of death falls under provincial jurisdiction. Another document, Title 146, Vital Statistics, from the Canadian Encyclopedic Digest (Ont. 3rd), supports the same position. It indicates that the Vital Statistics Act provides the central statutory framework for the regulation of vital statistics in Ontario and that official records of birth, marriages and deaths have been kept in Ontario since 1793. Again, this substantiates the fact that the whole question of presumption of death is a provincial and not a federal responsibility.

References in the Quebec Civil Code also prove beyond a doubt that the matter of presumption of death is not a federal matter but a provincial matter under the Constitution. The federal Government is certainly interfering in provincial responsibilities by dealing with this matter.

Another item I would like to bring to the attention of the House is the Uniform Law Conference of Canada recommendation dealing with the Uniform Vital Statistics Act. Section 13 of this Act defines registration of death and indicates that the death of every person who dies in the province shall be registered under this Act. That again, according to the legal authorities that we consulted, shows that the whole question of presumption of death is a provincial and not a federal matter.

I would also refer to the Uniform Presumption of Death Act proceedings from 1976 and this comes from the Uniform Law Conference of Canada. This also recommends that the whole question of presumption of death should carry through as it does under the common law, which stipulates that someone is presumed dead after being missing for seven years unless there is proof to the contrary. It seems therefore that this falls exclusively within provincial jurisdiction unless there is evidence under statutes to the contrary. The federal Minister should not be overruling common law which indicates that a person must be missing for seven years before he or she is presumed dead. Under this Bill, the Minister would intervene and in his own judgment decide when a missing child would be presumed dead. This is in conflict with both the common law customs as well as the documents of provincial Governments to which I have referred. It also presents a conflict of interest for the Minister since, on the one hand, he has the responsibility for paying family allowance payments to parents whose children may be listed as missing, and, on the other hand, of withdrawing that payment if the children should be presumed dead. This Bill will give the Minister the authority to determine at what point a child is presumed dead, a considerable authority to take upon oneself.

I would also like to refer to the standing joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which indicated that the issuance of death certificates is the responsibility of a judge and should not be the responsibility of a Minister. It should not be left under administrative discretion but rather should be a judicial process.

In February, 1978, the standing joint committee established criteria which should be used when scrutinizing statutory documents and instruments. Part 6(a) of Section B of the joint committee's document indicates that one criterion should be that we should consider whether or not the Bill makes the rights and liberties of the subject dependent upon administrative discretion rather than on the judicial process. In this case, of course, it will not be a judge who will make the decision but the Minister. As well, considerable discretionary powers are given to the Minister, and I would like to return to that when we deal with some of the other motions that are before us.

We are particularly concerned about Clause 5 of the Bill because, as I said, it would tighten up the wording to make sure that the Minister could not use presumption of death certificates which would follow to collect over-payments from parents. In committee, we heard from parents connected with Childfind, an organization established in both eastern Canada and British Columbia, and I understand that it has developed a national network. This organization is very concerned because many parents with missing children feel that they have been left alone. They feel that once a child is missing, all supports are pulled out from under them. The police will usually help them to search for missing children for a certain number of weeks, but then they slow down and in fact to all intents and purposes stop looking for missing children.

We also heard how important it is that parents have money to continue to search for missing children. That is why we feel it is important that the family allowance be continued during the period a child is missing and until the child is proven dead. The parents have to pay for photographs and long-distance telegrams and telephone calls. There is much concern about this. We object to the clause as it stands and that is why we have presented the amendment in Motion No. 4.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government has made many promises which it has broken. There is an illustration of one of these broken promises in the legislation which is now before the House at report stage. Not only has the Government broken specific promises about family allowances but it has shown its true colours. Its true constituency is not composed of average and poorer Canadians but of those Canadians who are better off. Parliament will see Bill after Bill delivering goods to that constituency.

We see another broken promise in the case of the sale of the de Havilland Corporation to Boeing Corporation of Seattle. The Government is free to break its promises. It is free to tell the Canadian people one thing and to do another. It has control over this Chamber and eventually it will get its way here. Under the Financial Administration Act, the sale of the de Havilland Corporation is entirely within the control of Cabinet, not the House of Commons, to settle. But we believe that it does not have the authority or the power to keep the Canadian people in the dark about the terms and conditions of the de Havilland deal.

Mr. Redway: Point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Kaplan: —in view of its refusal to allow that, I move that this House do now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) but the Hon. Member—

Mr. Gauthier: He's moved a motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Kaplan: I moved a motion before you recognized him.

Ms. Copps: He moved a motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) rose on a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: No, it was on debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please. He rose on a point of order and I attempted to interrupt the Hon. Member for York Centre so that the Hon. Member could rise to speak. I have no knowledge of what the point of order is. I can understand full well that the Hon. Member for York Centre, being in the middle of his speech, could not very well understand what was said by the Chair, as is usually the case, anyway. Having said that, I believe the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Point or order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will recognize the Hon. Member for York East—

Ms. Copps: Point of order—

Mr. Andre: You are not at Queen's Park now.

Mr. Deans: Let's hear what's happening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I will hear the Hon. Member for York East on his point of order and we will take it from there.

Mr. Gauthier: No, absolutely not. Absolutely not.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gauthier: We will follow one set of rules in this House—one set of rules for all of us.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there is one set of rules for all of us.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I will not sit down. This is a show of partisanship on your part.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: I will not sit down. You guys can yap all you like over there and I will not sit down. I will give this guy a piece of my mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: The hell with you guys if that's all the respect you have. There's a limit to what I'll take.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please.

Ms. Copps: A motion to adjourn is not debatable. Any idiot knows that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. For some very odd reason something seems to be happening.

Mr. Deans: What is it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Let's just take a minute here and recall the events as they are seen by the Chair. The Hon. Member for York East rose in his place on a point of order. The Chair attempted to recognize him.

Mr. Kaplan: He did not.

Ms. Copps: He did not recognize him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Please.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let him say something. You will get your chance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): And we haven't yet heard that point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: You don't have to hear it. You have a motion before you.

Ms. Copps: There's a motion before the House.

Mr. Gauthier: You can't have two motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I recognized the Hon. Member for York East on his point of order and I intend to proceed and hear him on that point of order first of all. All Hon. Members in the House could very well see that that was the situation. That is the decision from the Chair from which the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) knows very well there is no appeal.

Mr. Gauthier: I'm not appealing anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Well maybe the Chair has another impression.

Mr. Gauthier: I'm making a point, Mr. Speaker. I will make it now if you will sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): We are here discussing points of order and their precedence. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier will be patient, as all Hon. Members of this House should be, I will hear the Hon. Member for York East on his point of order—and I presume the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is also interested in hearing what he has to say on his point of order—and we will then take it from there. Thank you.

Mr. Redway: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In connection—

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a question of privilege this time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I must raise a question of privilege so I can draw your attention to the following. There are rules in this House. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) had the floor. He presented a motion. As soon as he finished speaking, Mr. Speaker—I ought to know what I am talking about—immediately after he presented his motion, the Hon. Member rose and you gave that Member the floor. There is no debate on this kind of motion, Mr. Speaker. One cannot even raise a point of order on an adjournment motion. It is not debatable.

Ms. Copps: He is right.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), also on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I had the floor, and it was clear that you tried to give the floor to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), to let him raise a point of order, but meanwhile, before you gave him the floor, I had the floor, and I presented the motion before the Hon. Member was given the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Right!

Mr. Kaplan: So I had the priority, my motion came first, but I was interrupted, which is a breach of my privileges—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I hope that the matter can be settled once and for all after I have stated the facts as I, as Speaker, see them, and it is the Chair who will decide ultimately.

While you had the floor, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) suddenly rose on a point of order. I tried to recognize him. You continued to speak. As far as I am concerned, you never moved a motion and I rose to interrupt you and bring to your attention the fact that—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Just a moment please. Let me finish, because it is I, as Speaker, who has the final word and the Chair is stating the facts.

I then recognized the Hon. Member for York East. I have every intention . . . I will not change my decision—the Chair will not change its decision—to hear him. After the Hon. Member has spoken, perhaps all Members of the House will have the patience to listen to him—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please! We will all have the opportunity to listen to him; then the Hon. Member for York Centre may have something else to add and will have the opportunity to continue his speech. Let us proceed in an orderly fashion.

The Hon. Member for York East has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rose to point out the fact that we are debating Bill C-70 and before the House are motions to amend Clause 5, namely Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9. All of the remarks of the Hon. Member should be directed towards and be relevant to the issue before the House, which is Clause 5. In fact, the Hon. Member's remarks were all related to something apart from Bill C-70 and something apart from Clause 5 and the motions which have been moved to amend it.

I ask you to rule him out of order in that regard. However, I suspect that this is academic because I am sure that we are going to have some action on the part of the Hon. Member since he undoubtedly wants to go to his Christmas party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gauthier: See what I mean?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Let's try not to get into any more trouble than we already are.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, this is a repeat. I move that this House do now adjourn.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Ms. Copps: Table the de Havilland documents. Table the memorandum of agreement, the Tory rip-off, the Tory sell-out.

An Hon. Member: Table the noise over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Ms. Copps: You don't have the guts.

An Hon. Member: Just because you are wearing red doesn't mean you're a Santa Claus.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That having been said, I have in hand the motion moved by the Hon. Member and I would draw to his attention the fact that he needs a seconder, who I presume will not be difficult to find. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is a volunteer to second this motion.

Therefore Mr. Kaplan, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those against please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Kaplan), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Before the vote is recorded I must advise the Table that the vote by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) may not be counted. He entered the Chamber late.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I noted that while the vote was being taken a number of Members left their seat and were wandering through the House. I noticed that all of them were new Members of the House. It may be apropos that the Chair explain our procedures.

Mr. Speaker: I think all Members know that if they leave their seats during a vote they nullify their vote. The Hon. Member is asking that all Members be reminded that they should remain in their seats throughout the calling of a vote.

I declare the motion lost.

Prior to resumption of debate may I advise the House that I intend to hear arguments, if there are any, or discussions with regard to procedural admissibility at the earliest possible moment, presumably at eleven o'clock tomorrow if the matter is called again tomorrow.

Resuming debate.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 which you grouped for debate earlier today.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Minister but may I also advise him and others that I have received a representation with regard to that grouping. I propose that matters continue as they are but I gather that one or more Members wish to make a representation tomorrow concerning the grouping itself. I think it would be appropriate, when we are hearing procedural arguments, to hear what Members wish to say. So I will hear that tomorrow but at the moment we will resume debate on the group as I indicated.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is helpful, Mr. Speaker. I hope my comments will be equally helpful to the debate tomorrow. With the Chair's permission, to facilitate the work of the House, I intend to advise the Chair which clauses in that grouping the Government would be willing to accept.

The subject matter of these amendments has been a matter of intense discussion. Not only that, committee members tried to address an issue of growing concern, namely, how do parents best respond to a case of missing children. I want to emphasize to Members that the Billand our amendments relate only to any action concerning the payment of family allowances. With all due respect, the Hon. Member speaking for the NDP broadened the issue to one of provincial jurisdiction which is not at all at issue here. Let me give Members an explanation of the present legislation and then explain what the amendments we are willing to accept will do in future.

I want to set the framework very clearly on this basis. First, in no way are the changes in Clause 5 intended to reduce the amount of payment. That is the first point that has to be made. As well, we did not in any way look at those clauses as a cost-cutting exercise. That is the second point which has to be made. Finally, when we are dealing with a certificate of presumed death, it does not relate to provincial jurisdiction or any work which might be done by provincial coroners in any way. It deals only with the payment of family allowances. That is the third point that has to be made.

Let me explain the present situation. Under the present legislation a parent or guardian is eligible for family allowance payments if that parent or guardian is responsible for a dependent child below a certain age. When a child is missing the Minister of National Health and Welfare has one month before family allowances are no longer paid if it can be shown that those parents or guardians do not have expenses for and do not have direct care of that dependent child. What is happening, Mr. Speaker—Could we have some order?

• (1750)

Mr. Speaker: I think that is a fair request. Could the meetings that are going on be held somewhere else, please?

Mr. Dingwall: We are talking about the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Well, only one person in the Chamber is supposed to be talking about the amendment at one time.

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, he was talking? I am sorry.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): With all respect, Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious issue. Members have approached this issue in a very serious way and I want to help the House.

The second point that must be made in terms of the present legislation is that the Minister, the Department, and the Government have no authority to extend payments to a family beyond the month. That is obviously not acceptable. Payments have been made for up to six months but not, in the true sense of the words, by legislative authority. I think most Members would understand that it was a humanitarian response. As we looked at the amendments to the family allowance legislation we thought we had to go further, especially in view of the unfortunate increase in the number of missing children.

The theory behind the amendment was that when a child was missing and its body was found at a certain date the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have the discretionary power, for family allowance purposes only, to declare the presumption of death on the date the body was found. In that way the parents would not have to repay moneys for the period of time that the child was missing. I think that is a humanitarian response to a very difficult social issue.

That is the intention, Mr. Speaker. With all respect, I believe that the wording does that, but some people will argue that it is archaic. Therefore, in order to facilitate the work of the House and the committee, the argument is to use the words which are in the legislation because they are judicially parallel to legislation now on the books. The question is whether we can improve on it. We have looked at this very seriously. I hope that this may assist you, Mr. Speaker, and all Members in tomorrow's discussion.

The Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has indicated that he will not move Motion No. 8. That is acceptable to the Government. When we come to that point, we will accept Motion No. 9. The Member for York East has been very helpful on this issue.He has been working hard on it. I believe this helps in terms of clarification. I think there is a general understanding that the words of the amendment of the Hon. Member will resolve the issue more fully than would those in the original text. I want to convey to the House that that is what we intend to do at the appropriate time. I thank that Member and others for bringing this matter to our attention.

I stress again that this is for family allowance purposes only. I obviously cannot deal with provincial jurisdiction. I think this is helpful and I thank Hon. Members. I also thank those who appeared before the committee as witnesses who tried to convey to us how we could resolve a very difficult issue.

There are, however, different situations. One example is the tragic Air India crash. I think that most people would accept the presumption of death of all on that aircraft. That would enable us to close those accounts in consultation with the parents who experienced the tragic loss of a child. That is obviously a case in which children are missing for other reasons. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Motion No. 9 meets those conditions. I thank the House for giving me the opportunity to explain it.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few words with regard to this particular grouping of motions. As has been pointed out, the motions which have been grouped concern more than one clause. The Minister referred to one particular clause, but the motions which have been grouped deal with two separate clauses. In the debate on this particular grouping no one has yet referred to the main amendment moved to Clause 4. Perhaps I could refer to that for just a moment.

I see one basic thing which is wrong with the motion submitted by the NDP. I think it is the same error as that made by the Minister's Department in the wording of the Bill. It is not a major point but it certainly illustrates the faults of the Government. The word "remission" is used rather loosely. The word "remit" is used in the wording of this particular clause as meaning that the Minister would cancel the amount owing the Crown. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the word "remit" does mean "forgiveness", such as in the forgiveness of sins. Perhaps that is what the Minister was referring to in illustrating the point. Certainly the word "remittance" would mean that you are making a payment. Is there any other definition of "remittance"? Of course there is not.

Therefore, the word "remit" that is used in this particular clause is somewhat confusing. I wonder what a judge would say if he were presented with an argument based on the word "remit". "Remit the amount" would mean to pay the amount in one case and to forgive the amount in another. That is the standard wording used in other Bills to cancel amounts owing. For example, under the Unemployment Insurance Act "to forgive an amount" means to cancel that amount. There is certainly a major fault in this particular clause.

It is strange, Mr. Speaker, that the Government says in one section with regard to the Government's responsibility that there should be ministerial authority to forgive an amount of money owed the Crown because of an overpayment and then, in another branch of his Department, namely in the disabilities section, the Government creates a deal with provincial Governments whereby the amount owed by this Department for disability can be transferred to the treasury of a provincial Government because a person was paid welfare payments. As the Government took over we saw increased co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments in taking the majority of a man's cheque to which he was entitled. The disability which is owed to a gentleman under Canada Pension is being paid to a provincial welfare department because he just happened to be on his back, sick and had to collect social assistance in the meantime.

The Minister and Government then seek praise for bringing in this particular clause. No one disagrees with its general intent. But the Government forgets what it has also set in motion in other branches of his Department.

The clause which is used here states: "Repayment of the amount or excess of the amount which caused undue hardship to a person or institution". That clause is used in every regulation of the Government of Canada in order to forgive an amount of money owed the Crown because of hardship. I have not seen one case since the Government came to power when it used this wording to forgive amounts of money owed the Crown by a poor person who was obligated to repay as a result of a regulation of the Government. There has not been one case pursuant to any regulation in the Unemployment Insurance Act by which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) or any other Minister of the Crown have acted to forgive amounts owing because of undue hardship to that person or institution. The Minister only stepped in because a Member stated that the Minister could not allow this to happen because of a legal question.

Under the previous Government, Ministers acted on a weekly basis to forgive amounts of money owing to the Crown under this section. Not only did the previous Government have compassion, it listened to representations made not only by Liberal Members but Conservative and New Democratic Members as well. We were a compassionate Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The Minister ought to stand in his place and explain what the word "remit" means in this clause. Is he asking us to forgive his sins in other parts of his administration? What is the meaning of "remit"?

While he is explaining that, he should tell Canadians why there is this double standard. Why is he allowing amounts of money owed with respect to disability pensions to be passed over to provincial Departments of Social Services? Why is there a sweatheart deal with the provinces?

The gentleman to whom I referred does not even get his disability cheque any more. It goes to the provincial Department of Social Services. Of course, this is called provincial-federal co-operation. We support the clause in the Bill but we wonder why the Government applies this double standard. Since this clause is in effect in regulations under other acts of Parliament, why has the Government refused to act in cases of undue hardship to Canadians? The answer is quite simple. It is not a compassionate Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the spirit of generosity that pervades this place today, as we lead up to the Christmas season, and so that all Members from all Parties can continue to be—

Mr. Nunziata: Enlightened.

Mr. Tobin: Enlightened is too gentle. In order to broaden our vision and understanding, I ask unanimous consent that we hear more of the treasured words of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Can we have unanimous consent?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Government is here to work and I do not give unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, while I suspect that anyone attempting to follow the Member for Gander-Twillingate might not succeed at this time of the evening, I will attempt to make a few comments. I want to discuss the Minister's interjection which he made a few moments ago with regard to the possibilities for some changes to the Act. I want to do so from the point of view of the appropriateness—and the legality perhaps—of the Minister issuing a death certificate. According to my understanding of the existing legislation, the Minister has the authority to discontinue payment.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Has to.

Mr. Deans: Has the authority.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Must.

Mr. Deans: And has the authority to discontinue payment. The Minister nods his head in the affirmative. He now has the authority to discontinue payment in the existing legislation. I do not believe it is necessary for the Minister to enter into any kind of presumption of death. The Minister can discontinue payment because the child is no longer in the custody of whoever has that child's custody.

I suggest that there are two arguments with regard to the inappropriateness of a Minister taking it upon himself or herself to assume death. My opinion, which is backed up by certain legal opinion, is that the right to determine death and to note it in law is the right of the provinces because they have the sole jurisdiction over the registration of births, marriages, deaths and all vital statistics. Therefore, it is not necessary for the Minister to make any presumption or assumption of death and consequently it is not necessary for the Minister to make any reference in this Act to the authority to make that assumption.

For example, in the case of the Air India disaster, the Minister said that he would assume that everybody died. I suggest that it is not his assumption to make, as a matter of law. He can discontinue payment because anyone entitled to payment under this or any other Act could be assumed not to be in the custody of the person under whose custody they were intended to be. Legally, however, he should wait for the official notification of the determination of death from the appropriate jurisdiction before he draws that conclusion.

I admit that there is certain merit to the Minister's concern. I acknowledge that it could be assumed that a child could have died on the date the body was found. I appreciate the concern he has shown in that regard. However, I suggest that in order for the Minister to assume death he must wait for whatever documentation is issued from whatever jurisdiction, whether it is a province, a state or another country, to show that death has occurred before he can make that assumption. That is how the Bill before us is somewhat flawed and why I would ask him to consider this question overnight. I will have more to say about this tomorrow. The Hon. Government House Leader says that he would like to have a couple of words before we adjourn.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A couple of words.

• (1810)

Mr. Deans: I want to assure the Government House Leader that it is my intention to spend an hour or even more with him after we adjourn. If he has two words that he wants to whisper in my ear, he can do so. I know that he is saying how much he admires me. He has been saying that for a while. He must be after something.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: This is really a serious matter, Mr. Speaker. I want it to be dealt with seriously for just a moment. I do not mind the jocular nature of the exchange, but it is a very serious question. If we write into law that the Minsiter has the right to assume that death occurred without having the appropriate certification to prove it, then I suggest the Minister is acting improperly and illegally. I make that point to him. I suggest that that is the case. I suggest it is not necessary for him to be in that position.

I am satisfied that the Minister could achieve the goals that he has set out, many of which we do not disagree with, without making the assumption that this Bill would allow him to do that, and perhaps incorrectly. I make the point that in the case of a body being found, of course, the certificate of death would be immediate and, therefore, the decision could be taken forthwith.

I believe it is six o'clock. I would prefer to make the points after I have made my arguments on the grouping of the motions. Could I call it six o'clock and I will complete what I have to say tomorrow?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6.12 p.m., this House therefore stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.12 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-70

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in hope of solving what I can see will become a problem. You indicated yesterday that you were going to hear procedural arguments on C-70 today. I would submit that the argument might be better if it could be heard now for the following reason. I think you will have to consider the argument once it has been made and then rule on it. Given that there can be only one debate because of the nature of the grouping, the whole argument will be redundant by the time we make it if the Speaker then requires time to consider it while the debate is going on. It sounds a little complicated, perhaps it is just a lack of sleep or something, but what I am trying to say is that I would like very much if the Speaker would consider hearing the arguments before we proceed to debate, and sufficiently in advance of the debate, in order that time be allowed for the Speaker perhaps to seek some advise and consider what he has heard. I make that point.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the point. I tried to indicate yesterday that I would hear the matter at eleven o'clock if it were called. I was trying to be very careful yesterday in my wording. It was late last night, I agree.

It would have been my intention to have thought about the arguments for a little bit and perhaps make some comment at three o'clock. In the context I think I can still hear the arguments at the beginning of the debate when it is called and make a decision as expeditiously as is appropriate for the Chamber. Another technical difficulty would be to hear argument on Bill C-70 when it is not called. However, I could not do that as it would not be in order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-74

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, one sitting day shall be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to debate our desire to place time allocation on Bill C-74. I first want to put some specific things on the record and then refer to the general question of time allocation.

The House will understand that the amendment presently before the House is a proposal to send the Bill back to committee. I will first review what has happened to this particular Bill. It received exhaustive study when the Government tabled a White Paper on redistribution prior to the Bill being introduced. It was, in effect, pre-studied. The Bill itself had intensive study in committee over the course of six weeks. Witnesses were called and their testimony was given careful consideration by both the committee and the Government.

As a result of those deliberations and the contributions of many expert witnesses, the Government proposed two amendments to the Bill, at report stage so that this Bill which goes to the very root of Parliament, that being representation, would be readily acceptable to all concerned. During the debate on second reading and in committee the members of the Official Opposition made the point that the Bill as written was a violation of the principle of representation by population. That matter was addressed and that aspect of the Bill was deleted. We made the changes necessary to correct that situation.

Therefore, I submit that in proceeding to amend the Bill to coincide with the views expressed by the members of the committee and the witnesses who gave evidence, the Government has now responded to the concerns that were expressed. It is our position that it is not necessary to send this Bill back to committee for further study for the reasons I have already listed. We are now trying to wrap it up.

It is important for the House to understand that if the issue of representation goes to the very heart of Parliament, we have to approach that issue properly. That means putting this Bill in place so the various electoral commissions can fan out across the land and construct the boundaries of our ridings in such a way as to be as fair as possible to all Canadians. That process can only start if we get this Bill through. Therefore, I find the disarray among the opposition benches to be unfortunate for the people of Canada. I find that this filibuster which is under way is harmful to the issue of representation which is, as I say, the very essence of Parliament.

I now want to deal, if I may, with the question of time allocation. It is quite obvious to everyone in this House that there is a difference between debate for the purpose of examining an issue and the filibustering which is going on now. There is a difference between debate to allow public opinion to formulate—which is what we did with the White Paper, second reading debate and committee study—and pure delay and filibuster. We put this motion forward with the feeling that this particular Bill has had all of the discussion necessary. I feel that it has had all the discussion necessary and that it is very, very vital to representation.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to predict what we will hear from the Opposition in the next hour and 50 minutes. I would like to remind the House of what happened when we moved time allocation on the employment equity Act and of some of the things that were said by the Opposition during that debate with regard to what the Government was doing. Opposition Members used inflammatory terms such as "howls of outrage" and "guillotine". They said that they had only had a few days to debate the Bill. They said: "Our Party has had only 14 Members speaking on this Bill". There were many other words of the same character used.

It is important to realize that on the day allocated for the final debate on the Bill, debate was to close at 4.45 p.m. and Hansard of November 21, 1985, shows that debate closed at 4.30 p.m. because the Opposition did not put up any more Members to speak. After having complained about time allocation, the Opposition could not fill its roster of speakers for a full day of debate. That is important to remember because we are going to hear a lot of complaints about how we are choking off debate, but when it comes to debate they do not have the bodies here.

Lest you think this does not happen often, let me refer you back to December 5 when the Government introduced time allocation on the Income Tax Act. I would like to read from Hansard of December 5 some of the comments made by members of the Opposition. The Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said:

> Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I and my colleagues in the House are amazed that the Government would seek to terminate the discussion in this House on the principles of this legislation.

He said that they wished to debate the changes in the House. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said that they wanted to debate whether or not it is necessary for the Government to bring in time allocation. All of the Members complained about time allocation. Referring to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay), the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said that the Minister "wants to cut, cease, abort the debate after only 50 Members have had a chance to speak". The Member took issue with the figures of our Whip and said that only 11 per cent of all MPs had spoken on the issue.

The Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) spoke and said that he considered that the Government had phenomenal gall to do this. The Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said:

> Mr. Speaker, for a sixth time since the Government came to power, it is using its overwhelming majority in this House to gag opposition Members.

He said that that is truly a shame for democracy. He spoke about having had only nine hours of debate.

I want to refer you back to eleven o'clock on Monday morning of this week, Mr. Speaker. At that time the final day of debate on this Bill on which everyone claimed we were choking off debate, was called. What happened at that time, Mr. Speaker? At 11 a.m. the Income Tax Act was called under Orders of the Day. What happened as reported in Hansard is as follows:

> MR. SPEAKER: Is the House ready for the question?
> SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.
> MR. SPEAKER: The question is on the amendment.

Since not everyone was here at that time I will explain what happened. The Opposition voted against the amendment, but did not even have five Members in the House to call for a recorded vote. We then moved to the main motion which everyone wanted to debate. We called for the question on this important Bill which the Opposition had not had enough time to read and review. Once again, Mr. Speaker, no one rose to debate, so the question was called at eleven o'clock in the morning when the day's business began. During the previous week the Opposition members had complained that the Government was cutting off its chance to debate this Bill. Having had lots of notice of their opportunity to debate it on Monday morning, they were not here.

I caution the people in the House today and those watching it on television to remember that the Opposition will howl about the Government allocating a certain amount of time to debate. However, on the last two occasions that we moved allocation because the Opposition was filibustering, it did not have its members in the House to debate the question. I, therefore, pre-empt that argument right now, Mr. Speaker. I would like to announce that we will be voting to allocate an appropriate amount of time for debate on a Bill which has a great deal of study through a White Paper, committee, and at second reading stage. It is about time we got on with the business of the House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader (Mr. Lewis) is hell-bent on closing debate on the redistribution Bill. I would like to point out that this is the first time in history that a Government has moved to bring in redistribution so rapidly and without concurrence from both sides of the House. With 211 Members of Parliament, the Government feels that it can do anything, regardless of whether it is fair and equitable and regardless of whether the Opposition supports the Bill. This is the final nail in the coffin of the consensus approach to redistribution. This is a bad day for Parliament and for the consensus approach which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about during the election campaign. He talked about reforming Parliament and about a new civility.

I have here the 338 Tory promises which were made during the election campaign. If you look through this directory of campaign promises you will not see anything about redistribution. You will not see anywhere in that directory of campaign promises that the Government planned to move away from the amalgam formula or that it was going to reduce the amount of representation in the House of Commons. However, today there is a motion before the House to close this debate.

The Parliamentary Secretary talked about having this Bill passed and having the redistribution commissions fan out across the country. This Bill was supposedly introduced to save money. However, a redistribution commission has already fanned out across the country. It has held public hearings, gone through a massive advertising process, and heard objections by Members of Parliament. Those debates have commenced. Only another two or three hours of debate is required in the House of Commons and redistribution can go ahead immediately. Within a year redistribution would come into effect. Riding boundaries would be newly proclaimed and local riding associations could be established.

With this Bill the House of Commons will be chopped down in size by 10 Members of Parliament. Outlying areas of the country will lose representation because of the reduction in the number of Members of Parliament that will be provided through the new redistribution. It will cost at least $5 million or $6 million to establish those new commissions. We will have to come back to the House of Commons for further debate, but rather than debating this matter in the Chamber itself, it will take place in a parliamentary committee.

We must question why the Government is in such a hurry to carry out this change and reduce the representation in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member opposite talked about the Opposition not being able to have enough members here. That is true. Sometimes we do not have enough members to cover every parliamentary committee. There are only 70 members on this side of the House. However, the Government Party, with 211 Members of Parliament, sometimes had only one or two members in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections when this Bill was being discussed. It is rather interesting to note that even with its massive majority, which it is using to impose closure, it is unable to provide a quorum at parliamentary committees. We should keep that in mind when we are considering this matter.

I am also concerned about the power of the Government as it relates to this proposed new formula for representation. In the report stage we were able to suggest certain amendments which would have provided additional floor representation for areas like northern Ontario, which has been an issue for many years. When the Bill was first introduced I made representations and wrote to Tory members on that committee, asking them if they would support an amendment to give us a floor of 11 seats for northern Ontario. While I received support from members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Liberal caucus, I certainly did not receive support from the Government caucus. One can see from the vote taken on that day a couple of weeks ago that all the Tory members opposed that floor.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said that this Bill would be a great move forward and it would provide a floor under the representation for provinces like Manitoba and Saskatchewan, based on the present representation in the House of Commons. While the principle was acceptable and desirable in some cases, it was not in others.

According to this current redistribution, which will almost certainly take place, we will lose representation because Ontario will lose six seats from the present redistribution which is going ahead. Tory members from northern Ontario will have to explain not only to their own constituents but to others throughout the North why they spoke and voted against that representation. It will not only affect representation in this redistribution but will continue to do so in each succeeding redistribution. The average number per constituency will be 87,000 people. After 1991 it will be 95,000, and then 99,000 people. Under this scenario, unless there is some magnificent new resource development, we will likely lose representation from an area that encompasses 88 per cent of the land mass of Ontario.

The Government's closure motion is unacceptable. The Bill, rather than being forced on the House of Commons, should go back to the committee because it is ill-conceived. If it passes, we will see new redistribution commissions being formed across the country costing another $6 million. This redistribution will come into effect during the summer of 1988. There will be massive confusion regardless of whether we are with the old boundaries or the new boundaries because that will most likely be the year of a general election.

I hope the Government will not force this resolution on the House of Commons through this closure motion today.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is the sixth time that the Government has moved a time allocation motion in this Parliament. Most of this has occurred recently. At a time when we are supposed to be discussing parliamentary reform and recognizing the rights of individual Members of Parliament to state their opinions and change legislation, the Government has a secret agenda which is to ensure that it can use its majority in the House to prevent any adequate discussion of legislation. This has become increasingly evident.

We only have 10 minutes each to speak on a time allocation motion but if time permits I will quote what Conservative back-benchers in opposition said about time allocation when it was introduced in the House by the previous Liberal administration. It is very ironic to see that same Party using time allocation on a regular basis.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) listed occasions when the Government had brought in time allocation and the Opposition was unable to continue debate even though there was approximately a day left for debate in the House of Commons. I do not believe that represents any lack of interest by the Opposition but, rather, explains the real situation in the House of Commons.

There are 211 Government members and an Opposition, divided between two Parties, with 40 members and 30 members. Not only must those Opposition members serve on the old standing committees of the House of Commons, under the new rules they are serving on the numerous legislative committees as well. This creates a problem.

While I would criticize Liberal members for their initial lack of participation with respect to Bill C-74, we must recognize that when there are only 70 Opposition members divided between two Parties who must have representation on the various committees of the House, there will be times when the Government is in a position to use its majority to exhaust the number of our speakers on a particular Bill. The Government could have us sitting on so many committees at a particular time that it would be almost impossible for us to have a Member in the House who has not already spoken to a piece of legislation.

● (1130)

That is part of the reality of the situation. Instead of continually using time allocation when the Opposition in the House of Commons is so small, the Government, if it believed in democracy and the parliamentary reform package about which we have talked so much lately, would not be using the manœuvre that it uses so often.

Earlier I said that I would be quoting comments of Conservative Members of Parliament about time allocation. The first person I should like to quote is the new Government Whip, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). He said:

> Closure is the mechanism put in place by the Liberal Party to shut us up. It is a disgrace to Parliament . . . to my constituents and to Canadian citizens at large . . . It should not be permitted in the House.

I should like to turn to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), one of the more eloquent Members. When he was in Opposition, what did he say when the Government brought in time allocation?

Mr. Rodriguez: What did he say?

Mr. Murphy: He said that it was "a sneaky, dirty trick", and referring to the Minister who brought in the motion, he said: "You are a snake". Those quotations indicate the hypocricy of Conservative Members who spoke against time allocation when in Opposition but use it now that they are in Government on a continuing basis.

A lot of time was spent in committee looking at this piece of legislation. Witnesses appeared before us. Amendments were accepted by the Government. We, as a House, passed some amendments and defeated others. All that happened. As I have done on other occasions, one can lay blame on the Liberal Party for not attending at committee when it is necessary. One could lay blame on certain members of the Liberal caucus for not understanding what was being debated in the House at report stage. I have done that in the past. They should have been aware of what was happening when the legislation was brought back to the House. However, we are now in third reading and have to recognize the right of the Liberal Party—and I am certainly not a defender of that Party—to change its mind and to discover things in the Bill which affect the Province of Quebec. They want an opportunity in the House to make their points. Also, those of us who think the Liberals are wrong in what they are saying should have an opportunity to make our points.

We are speaking out about a Bill which affects a very fundamental issue—how we determine representation in the House of Commons. It is an important piece of legislation. It not only affects how many seats each province has, but it effects how power is distributed in the House of Commons. The more seats we have and the more seats we are guaranteed in the future will have some influence on power in the House. Just as important is that we consider how a Member of Parliament is able to represent his constituents. That is reflected in the rules affecting the redistribution of seats in Bill C-74. It is important that we understand what we are doing and that the public understands it without any misconceptions.

As I have said, I am very happy with the amendments to which the Government agreed which were made at the request of the Opposition. I support those two amendments, but I cannot support the legislation because, although it is sound legislation for the next redistribution based upon the 1984 census, there is no guarantee that it will be sound in the long term. The Government has created a flaw by dividing the population of Canada by the number 279. That is based upon a formula which knocks off two seats for the Northwest Territories and the seat in Yukon. Those seats are guaranteed, but the present population of Canada, based upon the latest census, is divided by 279 to determine theoretically the average seat size in Canada. That sounds good on paper, but it does not recognize that when the House has 293 or 296 seats in the future, there is no rationale in the world for using 279 as the denominator. The House would already be 16 or 19 seats larger than that particular figure. Since it has been guaranteed that no provinces will lose any seats, a strain or artificial limit, in terms of numbers of seats, is placed upon provinces with growing populations.

We should have a chance to express that concern in the House, and we should look at some way of resolving it. The only reason I have accepted the legislation, even though I intend to vote against it, is that it is okay for the next 10 years and it might be okay in the future depending upon what happens with population. However, it is a flawed piece of legislation. If the Government were wise, it would look at ways of removing those flaws rather than depending on the fact that 10 years from now some future Government could change the legislation, which has been the argument of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

In closing, I should like to say that time allocation has been introduced six times. The Finance Committee, which is considering Bill C-84 containing 235 pages, is choking off debate after three days of study. What are we doing? Why do we even talk about representation in the House of Commons if the Government is to continue to use its massive majority to choke off any legitimate chance to study important legislation such as the changes to the Income Tax Act in Bill C-84? It is a massive piece of legislation. It contains 235 pages and hundreds of amendments. The Government will not let a committee of the House do a thorough job of looking at government expenditures and the raising of taxes, the very things which Parliament was set up to deal with in the first place. Parliament was set up to deal with these matters, and the massive Conservative majority is being intolerant of the rights of the minority.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me this opportunity to speak to the motion for time allocation on consideration of Bill C-74. The amendment presently before the House is a proposal to send the Bill back to committee.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill received exhaustive study when the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections examined the Government's White Paper on redistribution. We spent hours and even days on this exercise, Mr. Speaker. You know, the people on this committee are sensible and practical, with a few very rare exceptions. If the people of this country, if business people were to see and try to analyze the behaviour of certain Liberal Opposition Members in certain committees, they would be flabbergasted and absolutely speechless. These people on the other side of the House have become experts in wasting the precious time of Hon. Members of this Parliament. They make a habit of indulging in useless verbiage.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Privileges and Elections also studied the Bill for a period of six weeks, I repeat, six weeks, during which a number of witnesses were called and heard. Testimony was given careful consideration by both the committee and the Government. Following the deliberations of the committee and testimony by expert witnesses, the Government proposed two amendments to the Bill at the report stage, to ensure that the legislation would be readily acceptable. Very serious testimony was given. The witnesses who appeared before us were reliable. They adduced a number of useful elements that gave us a broader view of the Bill and helped us form an opinion.

During the debate on second reading and in committee, the Liberal Opposition, and I repeat the Liberal Opposition, made the point that the Bill as written was a violation of the principle of representation by population. All witnesses who appeared before the committee indicated that the root of the problem was a section of the Bill which subsequently was removed. I think you follow me. I think you understand.

Then the Liberal Party critic—

An Hon. Member: It isn't easy.

Mr. Bernier: It may not be easy to follow, but in any case, that is what happened. I am referring to the sequence of events.

The Liberal Party critic proposed exactly the same amendment which is now being openly criticized by his colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). That same Member is now proposing that the Bill be sent back to committee. It is all quite confusing! Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we have here another example of a party that is disorganized, in complete disarray, and poorly led. The people in the Liberal Opposition are incapable of agreeing on the right orientation for their policies. It is obvious that confusion reigns. There must be a lot of unhappy people in that caucus, and if they aren't unhappy, they don't realize what is going on. Either one or the other.

Mr. Robichaud: Certainly not!

Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, by trying to adjust the Bill to reflect the views expressed by members of the committee, the Government, and I am very happy to be sitting on the Government side, the Government responded to concerns that have been clearly explained. It is unnecessary to send the Bill back to committee for further study. It is a waste of time and energy.

The only reason it was necessary to move time allocation for this Bill is the fact that the Liberal Opposition—in disarray as usual, as we see here today—decided to continue an obstructionist policy that is both unjustifiable and foolish, as you will agree, Mr. Speaker. They are doing this to the detriment of a large majority of the population that supports the Bill as amended.

While it must remain neutral, the Chair can see that you are ridiculous. I trust it is a mental comment he can make. And I hope that the people watching us on television or listening here in the gallery, and there may not be enough of them this morning to witness how ridiculous the Opposition is, I hope they realize, Mr. Speaker, that the useless verbiage of the Liberals contributes nothing to this country. In my opinion, we should proceed without paying any attention to their insinuations.

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, when the Government House Leader brought in time allocation, or closure, on Bill C-74 earlier this week, I cannot deny to the House that I was highly agitated, irritated and quite hot under the collar. I want to say that I am more calm and collected now, but in exactly the same frame of mind. I am strongly opposed to what the Government is doing in forcing Bill C-74 upon us without allowing the full and adequate debate which this Bill deserves. I want to say again that we have not had adequate opportunity to present the case referred to by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), namely, that in the Province of Ontario more than 80 per cent of the land mass constitutes northern Ontario and the more than 800,000 people who live there ought to be guaranteed a floor in the same way as provinces which are smaller in size but of approximate population. We still want to make that argument. We in Parliament still believe we can convince enough Hon. Members in this House that that argument is sound and ought to be considered.

At one point a Government Bill was brought in by a previous administration that almost became the law of the land which would have done that for northern Ontario. It failed. In the dying days of that Parliament—which lasted from 1974 to 1979—when unanimous consent was required, it was withheld by one Hon. Member and that Bill failed to become law. We would not have this problem now if that Bill had been accepted.

Members of Parliament from northern Ontario still want to make their case in this House. I believe we have allies on the opposite side of the House as well as on this side. We would like to hear those supporters make their case and we would like to convince the Government that it should change its mind.

I want to be very clear that when we talk about closure or time allocation, I do not want to be a ranter or a raver, as has happened in some speeches in the past with respect to time allocation. I am not unalterably opposed to the use of this parliamentary device to bring the House of Commons to a moment of decision. I am not at all opposed to that. After all, it was a Liberal Government which brought in the change in the parliamentary rules to allow for the use of what was then Standing Order 75(C). But when did we use Standing Order 75(C)? We used it when all of the arguments had been made and remade, argued and reargued.

Mr. Nickerson: Just like this time.

Mr. Penner: Not like this time at all. We used time allocation when we had a Government which did not have a huge, vast majority. When we have a large number of Members of Parliament in the two opposition Parties—or three opposition Parties as the case has sometimes been—and arguments are being repeated, that is the time when closure or time allocation can be introduced. For example, if both sides of the House were almost even, if there was a majority of seven or eight Hon. Members, and debate on an important Bill had been going on for several weeks, perhaps then the Government could bring in time allocation. While there may be some perfunctory protest, we could understand that there comes a time when a decision can be made. But when there are 70 Members of Parliament on this side of the House—30 members of the New Democratic Party and 40 members of the Liberal Party—and time allocation is used excessively, as has been done in recent months by this Government, then we have to start to ask the question, why is time allocation being used excessively?

When the voters of Canada gave the Conservatives such a massive majority, why, then, would they not, in the parliamentary tradition, allow a smaller Opposition the opportunity to express its views on very important Bills? I want to illustrate that we have not had that opportunity. Let us take a Bill which is so important to the taxpayers of this country as the bank depositors Bill. I am sure you followed that closely, Mr. Speaker, but did you know that we did not, even at second reading stage, debate the main motion? Time allocation was imposed before we had finished debating the amendment which was introduced by my Leader. The main motion had not even come to the House for debate and time allocation was brought in. Does that not bother Hon. Members opposite? Are they not wondering what the Government they support is doing?

Let me give another example. There was a wimpy little Bill brought into this House. It was hollow and a sham. There was no substance to it at all. It was the employment equity Bill. Members on this side of the House were beginning to get the message to the country and to all Hon. Members that there was no employment equity in that piece of legislation at all. Time allocation was imposed on it. Why was time allocation imposed on it? Because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) was becoming embarrassed by the truth.

Again, I am not always opposed to time allocation. When the Government brought in time allocation on Investment Canada, I think it was right to do so because to do away with FIRA and substitute it with Investment Canada was something Government members said they would do during the election campaign. They said that they did not believe in protecting the economy of Canada from foreign ownership and control. That was their policy. I do not agree with it. In fact, I am opposed to it. However, they brought in time allocation because that legislation was central to what the Conservative Government stands for. They said that they believed in opening up Canada and that if something looks good and is for sale, they should let anyone in the world buy it. I do not agree that they should sell things at fire sale prices. However, the Government decided to move closure because that policy was absolutely central to its program. It was part of its manifesto, as much as manifestos exist in this country.

By the way, I hope someday someone will bring in a law that provides that when a Party runs in an election, it would have to have something resembling a manifesto, not just 380 loosely strung out promises. There ought to be some central policy for which a Party stands. The only policy I was able to detect during the last election campaign was that government Members wanted to open up Canada. They brought in Investment Canada and they brought in time allocation on its legislation.

How can Government members justify bringing in time allocation on Bill C-74? It is not a Bill that is in any way central to the executive branch of Government. It is not part of a Conservative Government program or platform that was introduced to the country. It is not even a matter for the executive branch of Government to decide. It is a parliamentary question.

When have we ever proceeded with the question of redistribution without seeking agreement among the Parties in the House? That agreement is central to the parliamentary process. We do not use such a heavy, powerful weapon as closure on a measure that is parliamentary in nature and not related to the program of the Government.

I would tell Hon. Members opposite that they should call a halt to this because they are doing themselves great damage. Do Hon. Members know that there are now suspicions that the reason they are bringing in time allocation on this redistribution Bill which they want so badly is that they want to do some gerrymandering? Yes, I have heard it said that they want to appoint these commissions and have them re-arrange the ridings in such a way that it will somehow be to the advantage of the Conservative Party. I am not making that allegation right now. However, I am telling Members opposite that I have heard it. It has come to my attention, and people have asked if that is what the Government is up to. People have asked why the Government is not allowing Members of Parliament to speak their minds on something that is as important to every Member and every constituency as is redistribution. They are asking why the Government would bring in time allocation on a Bill like that.

There are suspicions that what the Government really wants to do is to remove all of the returning officers in all of the ridings so it can extend the patronage system into every constituency with the appointment of new returning officers. I have heard that allegation. I am not making it but I am telling Hon. Members that it has been brought to my attention. People are asking if that is what the Government is up to. I mention these allegations simply because I appeal to Hon. Members opposite to get some control over their front bench.

Let time allocation be used responsibly. The Standing Orders exist for a purpose. There are Bills on which the Government has every right and justification to use time allocation, and I will say so when I believe that it is right. However, in the case of Bill C-74, a very serious mistake is being made. The people of the country will not like it. We in the Opposition say it is wrong, and I ask if there is some way that this can be reconsidered. Is there some parliamentary tactic whereby we can withdraw this time allocation measure and have a full and complete debate so we can reach an agreement as to how the electoral boundaries could be redistributed? We must move by consensus and not by having a decision forced upon us.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise to spend a few moments speaking on time allocation. In the process, I must remind Government members that many times in the past, they were riled at the sitting Government because of this measure. In fact, I believe a Liberal Government once lost power because of time allocation.

My predecessor, the Member who represented Prince Albert before me, was a very great parliamentarian and had a very great deal of respect for Parliament and what it stood for. He made hundreds of statements about the strength of Parliament, and I believe it behooves us all to spend some time reading what he said before Parliament, what this Government is denying. On May 17, 1956, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker made a speech before Parliament regarding the process of closure. I would like to put on the record some of the things Mr. Diefenbaker said at that time because they were right at that time and they are right now. The Party that put those statements before the House at that time is denying them now. He suggested the following:

—by the application of closure in the way in which it was effected, not for the purpose of interfering with unnecesary debate but rather designed to secure silence—

He went on to say:

—and to use Parliament as an institution in which the government may produce what it will, is able to propound any proposition it likes and, because of its majority here to know that, regardless of whether or not there is any support for it, the majority will carry it through.

That is exactly what we are facing with this Government. Regardless of whether or not it has the support of the country in bringing something before Parliament and forcing it through, it will use its majority to force it through.

I wish Government members would remember that even if they do hold 211 seats, only 50 per cent of the people voted for them. A good portion of those people voted for the Conservative Party not because they wanted Conservative policies but because they wanted the Liberals out. They should remember when they are putting things before the House, passing Bills and using closure that they do not have the support of the majority of the people. The majority of the people did not vote for their policies and in many cases did not vote for the policies which they are forcing through the House by using closure.

I go on to quote from the words of Mr. Diefenbaker who was speaking of Mr. St. Laurent at that time, but what was right and proper then is right and proper now. He said:

—that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should abdicate his belief in democratic principles and deny those in opposition the right to advance their arguments and to educate public opinion or to find out why there is such solicitude on the part of the members of this government.

Mr. Diefenbaker recognized the responsibility of the Opposition to educate the public. The only way that the 70 members of the Opposition can educate the public is to have the opportunity to debate the Bills which come before the House in order to show the people of Canada that the Government is using its massive majority to stifle knowledge—to stifle the flow of information to them. We abhor this type of approach to legislation, that is, the closing off of debate and the withholding of information from the people of Canada just so that the Government can get its particular ideology through the House, an ideology for which 50 per cent of the people of Canada did not vote.

● (1200)

I would like again to quote Mr. Diefenbaker who said:

I ask the Prime Minister today to tell this House why he is so fearful of the facts; why he was afraid to allow the true facts of this nefarious scheme to be elucidated? I ask why he found it necessary, and the members of his Government found it necessary, to muzzle the representatives of the people in advance of anything in the nature of a filibuster or an interference on the part of the opposition with the policy and program of the government. I ask him to explain that today, for certainly the day of silence is past. Are they afraid of the truth over there? Is that why they hide behind the caricature of Parliament which they have substituted by the adoption of the parliamentary form of closure in a way that it has never been adopted before?

Those were the terms Mr. Diefenbaker used in castigating the St. Laurent Government. What he said then is true today. The Government has not given the Opposition the opportunity to put before Parliament and the people of Canada the truth about situations with which it is dealing within these Bills, this in light of the fact that 50 per cent of the people of Canada did not vote for the policies which this Government is putting forward.

I go on to quote the words of Mr. Diefenbaker as follows:

Only once in history was it ever adopted in our country during the progress of a resolution, and then only after more than 10 days of debate.

What do we see with respect to the closure motion which is before us? Debate with respect to the Bill went on for eight hours—a mere eight hours. The Government then decided it should put forward its closure motion. What I am speaking about today is not the decision of the Government to use closure once but to use it six times in a matter of a couple of months. It uses it to force through legislation for which 50 per cent of the people of Canada did not vote. As 70 members of the Opposition here it is our duty to ensure that the people know that this type of legislation is being put before the House of Commons. They should know enough about it to put the type of pressure in place so that these measures will not be forced through Parliament.

In Mr. Diefenbaker's speech on the closure motion he finally made this statement:

Why not throw the key of parliament away? . . . Lock it up and throw the key of parliament away.

Those are the words of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker with respect to what the Government of the day was doing. It is what this Government is doing today—what it has done six times in the last couple of months. This Government is muzzling Parliament. We might as well take the key and throw it away. The Government is locking the opportunity of Parliament with respect to placing information before the country and it is throwing away the key.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased today to rise to speak against the motion to refer this subject back to committee. I am glad to see that there are so many members of the Opposition here, in fact, more than were here to vote yesterday. There has to be a reason for that.

An Hon. Member: We are always here!

Mr. Thacker: I cannot be sure whether they are here to—

Mr. de Jong: Have you anything instructive to say?

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: On the other side of the House, a reference was made to the presence of Members in the House today, but let me tell you, we always have three times the attendance of the Conservatives, in spite of their large numbers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think that is a valid point of order.

[English]

Mr. Thacker: I assume they are here because they do not want to work until 1.04 p.m. Perhaps that is the reason. If so, we would like to ask them to change their minds—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Thacker: Why do we not work those extra four minutes so that the House can go on to the regular business at three o'clock? Are Members opposite here because they want to extend the day into the afternoon in order to pull a trick such as they did yesterday and waste the valuable time of the House and in so doing insult every Canadian who sent us here to work?

Mr. Angus: It's your closure motion.

Ms. Copps: You are on closure!

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Thacker: I wish to address the comments of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) since he made some severe allegations. While he denied he was personally pressing the argument, he stated he has heard that the reason for pressing this Bill forward is so that the commissioners can conduct a gerrymander in the country. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior acknowledged that he knows far better than that because the commissioners in this land are often judges, men and women of impeccable quality. What they did in my province before the last election was to start in the southeast corner and move through it township-by-township until they reached the average size of the riding. In this way they worked their way through the province. To make any allegation that the commissioners are doing a gerrymander does a severe disservice to the country.

Why are members of the Opposition opposing the passage of this Bill? It is hard to imagine that here we are in 1985 and the Constitution of the land declares that after each ten-year census, which was completed in 1980, there has to be a redistribution. After the census of 1980 the commissioners spread out across the country and returned with a proposal which would have given many more seats to western Canada. When one talks about raw, ugly politics, one will find it there. The Liberal Party did not want the redistribution after the 1980 census because it would have given more political power to western Canada, that is, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The Liberals stalled that Bill. Indeed, they refused to pass it in order for it to be put in place for the 1984 election. They committed a gross insult to every single western Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: I appreciate that there are only 40 Liberals who sit in this place today. One of the reasons that there are only 40 and none of any consequence from the West is this great insult. Thus, here we are in 1985, a new Bill has been presented to the House but only after a White Paper has been produced. The White Paper had enormous coverage and input. A Bill was then drafted which went to committee. Witnesses came before the committee and explained how they felt the Bill should be changed. The Government House Leader incorporated those changes and the Bill was then brought for debate. Now we see this mindless ringing of bells and the opposition Members not being prepared to make their arguments and then vote on the Bill.

Mr. de Jong: Look who's talking! Boy, a Tory concerned about ringing bells!

Mr. Benjamin: You should know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Thacker: I can tell all Members that those bells would ring another 15 days if the Liberal Party ever came to power and put in place a national energy program which robbed and raped one region of the country. It was absolutely against all Liberal principles, and many Liberal Members, some of whom survived the last election, agreed with that again and again.

• (1210)

I agree with time allocation. It is important to get this Bill through. The commissioners will have to fan out across the country to do their work. After they have done their work it has to be put into legislation. A Bill has to be presented in the House and there will then be all sorts of consideration and debate. We need to have this legislation so that new riding associations can be created, the boundaries can be changed, and the moneys can be adjusted and allocated between the various associations so that Canadians can get used to the new ridings in order to cast their votes properly in 1988 or 1989. Therefore, I stand in favour of this motion and make no apologies.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the first sign when someone knows he is in trouble is when he starts using bullying tactics.

Mr. de Jong: The Liberals know. This man speaks from experience.

Mr. Axworthy: Over the past few weeks we had closure on the income tax Bill. That Bill was of incredibly vital concern for every Canadian citizen. It had hundreds and hundreds of tax measures which needed careful examination by Members of Parliament. However, this Government ordained that closure be applied before anyone has had a chance to make his or her voice heard and before a committee of parliamentarians could exercise their duties as elected representatives to examine public expenditures on behalf of their constituents. We have closure being applied, as my friend from Cochrane-Superior pointed out, to Bills which were not of urgent necessity. This is becoming a bad habit. The Government is doing this because it has lost its ability to manage the House. The Conservatives have lost their ability to organize their own caucus in such a way as to put together properly a parliamentary agenda. As a result, they are exercising this kind of defensive bullying tactic. In the meantime they are doing something very serious to this Chamber.

You realize, Mr. Speaker, that every time a Government makes a decision like this it sets a precedent. Do you remember those brave words in the election campaign when the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he was going to return civility to Parliament? He used the wrong word. He has returned buffoonery to Parliament. He was going to make Parliament the chief decision-making body of the land. He was going to restore its dignity. He was going to give individual Members of Parliament a new sense of responsibility in exercising independent judgment. What has been the result? Four closure motions in the last two weeks. Is that not an interesting exercise of giving this body a new sense of dignity and responsibility? What an incredible travesty. What hypocrisy. Members opposite have the nerve to make those kinds of claims and then walk into this House and exercise the guillotine without even having the honesty to blush when they do it.

The Conservative Member who just spoke tried to put the best face on this thing. We have to let the electoral commissioners go to work, he said. However, there was a well-constructed and well-debated distribution plan which had already gone through all the parliamentary steps and which would have ensured that there would not be uncertainty in the next election. However, this Government threw it out. Members opposite changed their minds.

That Member said the Opposition was responsible for stalling measures which would have given more representation to western Canada. However, he forgets that the Bill which had been debated and was in its final stages gave far more seats to western Canada than the Bill we are now debating. Where has he been? If he really was interested in his own Province of Alberta, or the other provinces, he would know they had more seats under the 1984 Bill than they have under this Bill. Instead, they have gone through a number of variations on this theme. They brought in something first involving 287 seats and now 295. What is more, Members opposite have not given Canadians in the different regions the opportunity to understand their shenanigans, to find out what they are about. They are denying the fundamental right of this House to be the crucible in which that kind of information is properly discussed and communicated to people across this country. They are afraid. They really are afraid that they cannot control the power of public opinion.

As we pointed out, Members opposite brought in a wonderful Bill dealing with employment equity with a lot of glitz and glamour. In fact, it was a mere piece of cosmetics which had nothing to do with the recommendations of Judge Abella. When they found that the cosmetics were quickly wiped away, they brought in closure. They were not prepared to accept the judgment of the Canadian people as it was expressed in this House. They could not take the heat. In so doing they are denying once again the responsibilities of this Chamber.

Perhaps the most important break with precedent, the one that will haunt this Chamber for many years to come, is the fact that they have taken something which has for decades been a matter of all-Party judgment and agreement and are turning it into a partisan division. This is something which affects every Member of Parliament regardless of Party, platform or attachment. It goes to the fundamental rights of representation with which we are deeply concerned. By doing this they will produce a spectre which will hang like a shadow over Parliaments to come. They are politicizing something which should not be political because it goes to the basis of our Constitution and the fundamentals on which our country is based, how people are heard and represented. With this closure motion they are not giving the proper opportunity for the dialogue and dynamics which take place in this House where a proper agreement can be reached between Members of all Parties.

Why is this Government so willing, indeed anxious, to tamper with a tradition and convention which has been one of the touchstones of parliamentary democracy for so many years? Is it because the Government does not care? I do not think that is the case because many Members in the Conservative caucus, Members such as the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), have exemplified over their parliamentary careers a dedication to this House. I think they are once again responding out of a sense of fear. The Government has gone through a period of total unravelling, total and complete disarray, and it now wants to get its house in order. It must show that it is being decisive and get all this legislation passed by the Christmas break. In other words, in serving its own political expedient ends of trying to get back some control of its agenda, it will victimize this Chamber. It will put this Chamber and its traditions on the altar of its own communications strategists. That is a terrible way to try to govern the country.

The Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) suggested that the backroom strategists who run the computers and public opinion surveys are saying that the Government is going to be in deep trouble in the next election and that it can save its skin by altering boundaries. The Members opposite cry: "Oh, no, it is not possible". If that is the case, why did they introduce an amendment to Section 13.1(b) to change the formula by which those alterations can be made, to break away from the formula which said that boundaries must be fixed as closely as possible to representation, and to say that we are going to have more flexibility? That is a terrifying word.

It is not unknown in the history of this country or of other democracies for that to be the ultimate power of an executive in trouble and fearful for its life. The last resort of scoundrels is the gerrymander. The last way that they can protect themselves is by trying to rearrange and reorganize boundaries to suit their political interests. That is the problem. Mr. Speaker, that suspicion will remain because of this closure motion. They have set that motive in place and their actions speak louder than their words. Moving this motion and imposing closure on something which they know, deep in their hearts, they have no business imposing closure on, is going to haunt deliberations of those commissions and will create a suspicion across the country as to what is really afoot.

We are going to be very careful, Mr. Speaker, to watch that they do not do it. We hope that in these last moments some sense of the tradition of this House will prevail and members of the caucus will realize that if there is any motion on which closure should be withdrawn, it is on this Bill.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have never seen more disreputable behaviour by a Government than that which we are witnessing today. This is the sixth time since the Government has been in office that it has introduced closure. There are 211 government Members and 70 opposition Members, yet the Government has to use closure to crush the Opposition. I could be very flattered by the fact that the Government has to use this sledgehammer to crack the Opposition. I could be very flattered that we are doing such an effective job. However, what is the Government afraid of? It is afraid of democracy.

The government Members ran around through the summer of 1984 saying that they would find a new way. Is this the new way? This is the way the Liberals did it and the present Government criticized them at that time. This is not the new way, but the Liberal way. They are a bunch of retread Liberals over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, can you imagine a responsible Government bringing in closure on a redistribution Bill which denies representation by population? That is what Bill C-74 really does. It flies in the face of "rep by pop". The Government is bringing in closure to snuff out what some might consider the ultimate in a democratic system. Members of Parliament come to this place to represent the population of the country.

The Conservative Member who spoke talked about the bells, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: He's a ding-a-ling.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Hon. Member says he is a ding-a-ling. I cannot say that, Mr. Speaker, and I would not countenance that remark. Another Member over here said that he has the "clapper". Well, I do not know that, Mr. Speaker. I cannot countenance that remark either. Members of the Government are the worst examples of the abuse of Parliament. I was not in the House at the time, but the way in which they caused the bells to ring some years ago was a good example. Members of the Conservative Opposition at that time ran up and challenged the Speaker, shaking their fists at him. And now, in their puffed up hypocrisy, they are saying that they are the defenders of democracy. Mr. Speaker, they have abused democracy six times. They have taken closure to new heights and have abused it to the lowest depths. They are now bringing closure into the committees.

Mr. Manly: Shameful.

Mr. Rodriguez: Bill C-84, comprised of 235 pages, hands out the greatest amount of taxpayers' money to Tory hacks and flacks and friends. The Government introduced closure on that Bill even though it had been brought into the House only on November 27. The Government wants that Bill to be out of committee and into the House by next Monday. Government Members should hang their heads in shame that they have to resort to these undemocratic processes to get Bill C-74, a measly seven-page Bill, passed. Why do they have to do that?

Ms. Mitchell: They're afraid.

Mr. Rodriguez: Parliament resumed in September of 1985 and it took the Government six months to bring Bill C-84 to amend the Income Tax Act before the House. They are now saying that they must get it passed before the end of the year. They are saying the same with respect to Bill C-74 after having frittered and dithered away the time of Parliament.

Now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says he wants to prorogue the House so that he can start with a clean slate, a tabula rasa, so that he can give a new direction. Is this part of a machiavellian plot by the Prime Minister to show Canadian people how decisive he is? Is he really hurting because all those who watch Parliament see how indecisive he is? He wants to clear the desk. He wants to get rid of the tuna and the buffalo. One would have thought they had done a good job of getting rid of the buffalo some years ago. Now he wants to clear the table of the bungling on the deindexation of old age pensions. He wants the people to forget that. He wants to clear the Opposition off the table, but he is not going to do that, Mr. Speaker. We will not let him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I call upon members of the Opposition in the House to band together to prevent this juggernaut from destroying democracy in Canada through the use of the closure procedure which has been embarked upon.

• (1230)

I have been asked why the Conservatives have dropped to 40 per cent in the polls. It is a very good question. The reason is that they do not know how to govern.

Mr. Manly: Why do they still have 40 per cent?

Mr. Rodriguez: I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are giving me two fingers again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member wishes, I will give him a whole hand. The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know that it means two minutes, Mr. Speaker, but I am glad I was not getting one.

The reason the Conservatives have dropped to 40 per cent in the polls is that they have substituted the skill of governing with the use of closure. It is that simple. Even with 211 Members in the Government, they have not honed the skills of governing. They have not understood that the Canadian way is the way of compromise, taking a little bit and combining it with what they want. Instead, the Conservatives bulldoze their way through Parliament. That reflects a lack of confidence on the part of the Prime Minister. He lacks confidence in his ability to govern. Therefore, his gang who sit behind him and around him—

Mr. Lewis: And around you.

Mr. Rodriguez: —decide to ram through Parliament legislation like Bill C-74, Bill C-84—give me another Bill.

Ms. Mitchell: Bill C-70.

Mr. Rodriguez: And Bill C-70. They just ram those Bills through. The Government knows that it should not proceed in this fashion. Members opposite are laughing because they think it is a big joke. However, 1988 will be here soon and I predict that they will be sitting on the Opposition benches again. If they continue in this way they will be punished by the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, that is well deserved applause for great oratory. At least, on the face of it one would think it was great oratory. However, when one realizes what was actually said, it does not really amount to very much.

Most of what we heard this morning was wind and puffery, to use the words of the Hon. Member himself when making reference to other people. Last Monday, when the vote came up on Bill C-84, he had an opportunity to display his commitment to what he is saying. He mentioned Bill C-84 in his presentation and said that the Government used time allocation on Bill C-84 in order to cut off debate. He used his great oratorical skills to say that the Government would not let the Opposition represent the people of Canada and their constituents. However, what happened on Monday morning? A whole day was set aside for further debate on Bill C-84, an important matter of income taxation. Where was the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)? Where were his colleagues from the New Democratic Party and his side-kicks from the Liberals Party? They were not to be seen. There was not one Member from that side of the House who wished to rise in his or her place.

Furthermore, when the vote was called, where was the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt? He must have been asleep somewhere at 11.30 on Monday morning. It is clear in Hansard, in the record of those who voted, that only 40 out of a possible 70 Opposition members voted. The name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is nowhere to be found in that list. That is what we are facing.

It is great oratory to be sure and makes a great impression on television. However, when the time comes for substance, that substance is lacking in the extreme.

Returning to the matter under discussion, the issue on which parliamentarians are being asked to vote is whether we want the question to be put. I believe that I have a rather easy task before me in persuading Members of the House of Commons to vote in the affirmative. I believe that when the vote is counted we will see that all those thinking Members of Parliament will have voted in the affirmative. I am even confident that we will see some Members opposite vote in the affirmative.

When one looks at the Members opposite, one can see that quite a few of them are perhaps too far gone to see any reason. I see the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). We dealt with the Member for Nickel Belt previously. There is not much hope for them. The Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry have been here too long associated with the Liberal Party. They have become contaminated.

However, there are one or two Members opposite with a vestige of intelligence left, I am sure. They will be voting with Members on this side of the House on this question. We know why there are so many Members opposite in the House in these last few minutes of this debate. We know why they came here. They do not want to sit here until four minutes after 1 p.m. in order that Parliament can do its work, get on with the business and do a good job for the people of Canada. The only reason there are so many of them here is to prevent us from doing that. However, in the process they must sit there and listen. The Hon. Member for Windsor West is not listening, but those who do will learn something.

They will regret having done this dirty work of sitting there and preventing the vote from taking place at four minutes past 1 p.m. When the vote is called, they will realize their mistake.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The venerable Member with all his years in the House should no doubt be aware of the fact that it is against the rules to comment on the presence or absence of other Members in the House. I hope he will return to the relevant issue, which is the question of the Government's attempt to cut off debate with its massive majority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying and I agree with her. We will carry on with debate.

Mr. Nickerson: Of course, the Hon. Member is quite right. It is not necessary to comment on her presence or absence because people can usually hear whether or not she is present.

The eminent Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) gave a very lucid explanation earlier today of the debate that has taken place so far. He explained in great detail the opportunities that were afforded to parliamentarians from all sides, particularly in the Opposition. In fact, Members on this side went out of their way and actually sat down and kept quiet from time to time simply to allow members opposite an opportunity to speak. We have a great respect for the institution of Parliament and we went out of our way to give them ample time to express their views.

We have heard members of the general public speak on this issue. There have been commissions travelling around the country. It has been a matter of continuing debate, practically year after year. Everyone has had an opportunity to make his views known and has been sucessful in doing so. The Bill was initially formulated after wide consultation. It had the tacit agreement of almost everyone in Canada even before it was introduced. When it was introduced, arguments were made, and it was shown that technical improvements could be made here and there. Then what did the Government do? It brought in amendments to reflect those concerns. The Government has been listening to people. We have been doing precisely what we have been accused of not doing by the Opposition.

• (1240)

The Bill does for representation in the House of Commons exactly what Canadians want. The objective is to keep the number of Members within reason. Surely that is what most Canadians want. They did not want the House to grow, over a period of years, into a House of 500 or 600 Members. They wanted a reasonable lid kept on that. That is precisely what has happened. They wanted, in general, representation by population with each Member representing more or less the same number of constituents. They wanted exceptions made in special circumstances, for example, Prince Edward Island and its historic right to four Members. They wanted special considerations for the very large northern ridings. That is precisely what is contained in the Bill. We can never get it absolutely perfect. We cannot expect everybody to agree on it. However, the Bill is surely the best fit and should be voted on as soon as possible, so that people will be able to get their affairs in order and start arranging for the next election. These things come upon us from time to time. There will be no necessity for one for the next 3.5 years, but at least we will know where we stand.

I see you, Mr. Speaker, signalling that my time has come to an end. I had much more to say of great interest and importance. Perhaps the next time we have a debate on time allocation, which I am sure will happen because of the mindless opposition of hon. gentlemen and ladies opposite, I will continue with my additional important observations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Now let us hear a real speech.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who spoke before me tried to speak quietly and passionately and tried to speak about parliamentary reform in the Chamber. However, those words will not hide what the Government is attempting to do. The Government is attempting to crush parliamentary debate in this Chamber. I feel a responsibility, before the Tory closure axe falls once again on this Chamber, to rise in my place and to speak, not necessarily to Bill C-74, but to why the Government is once again introducing closure.

In September, 1984, Canadians elected a Government. Notwithstanding the fact that I felt Canadians certainly understood what they elected, the fact was that they had an absolute majority in the House and that it was inconceivable for any opposition Party to win any votes. We accepted that because we accepted the verdict of Canadians that September. What we do accept and what Canadians did expect, even though we might not be able to win a vote, is that we should have the opportunity, the obligation and the right to be able to speak. We should have the right to be able to debate. We should be able to articulate the aspirations, the problems, the difficulties and the feelings of Canadians from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: That is why we are here. Each of us, all 282 Members of Parliament, represent a constituency. Everyone, whether he or she is in Cabinet or not, is on an equal footing because we each represent constituents. When the Government says that it has had enough and that it will move closure, it is in fact telling Canadians that we do not want to hear any more, that somehow we have made up our minds, that somehow we have conducted a poll and we know what is best. That is not parliamentary democracy. We in this Chamber are a vehicle for Canada. We are not here in isolation. That is the problem with the Government—isolation, isolation from the people who live on the streets of the country. They are isolated from those aspirations. That is why the polls are going down. They have seen nothing yet because it is a bottomless pit. We will see in 1987 and 1988 the bottom of that pit.

It goes to the heart of parliamentary democracy. Closure, very vividly and very boldly, once again shows Canadians another broken promise of the Government. It was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Conservative Government, who went from coast to coast and said: "You elect us, and you elect an accessible Government. You elect us, and we will give you an open Government. You elect us, and we will give you a Parliament which will work on behalf of you, on behalf of every single Canadian. You elect us, and we will be able to reform Parliament to meet your aspirations". Canadians are asking: "What happened on the way to Parliament Hill? What happened to those promises? What happened to those commitments which he made across the country?" Then he has the audacity to stand in his place and say that the Hon. Member from his Party did such a great job in trying to introduce parliamentary reform, on the one hand, and introduces closure, on the other hand, for the sixth or seventh time. If that is not the height of hypocrisy, then I do not know the definition of the word "hypocrisy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the definition of hypocrisy, even from a hypocritical Member of Parliament—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Lewis: I am not—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Lewis: No—

Ms. Copps: Retract.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to hear the point of order, please.

Ms. Jewett: It is not a point of order, I am sure of that.

Ms. Copps: Withdraw.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, using a moment when you were distracted, unfairly and improperly accused the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of hypocrisy. The Hon. Member is making a good speech, but he got carried away. He should be forced to withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will check the "blues". The Hon. Member has the floor. If there is a problem, I am sure the Speaker or the occupant of the chair will look after it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Deputy Government House Leader, in raising his point of order, made what I consider to be a totally unwarranted and improper reflection on the Chair. He spoke of the Chair being distracted while something was said. The Chair is always vigilant, especially yourself, Sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I submit that far worse than an unwarranted allegation of hypocricy is the reflection the Deputy Government House Leader and Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader made about the occupant of the chair by talking about the occupant of the chair being distracted. I repeat, Sir, that the Chair is always on duty, it is always vigilant, and certainly when it comes to yourself, Sir, you are never distracted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think enough has been said. The Hon. Member for York West.

Mr. Marchi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but I am surprised that he would rise in his place. That, too, is simply another form of parliamentary closure and harassment.

Mr. Speaker, you know, as well as I do and as well as Canadians do, when you are promised something, when a Government makes a commitment, or when a Government goes across the country and says to each and every constituent, You have a sacred trust with me, don't you worry", and then comes into Parliament and delivers another bag of goods, what that is called. If you do not like "hypocrisy", you can call it what you will, but Canadians know what the colour of this Government is.

• (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I see nothing wrong with "hyprocrisy" as far as Beauchesne is concerned. Will the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) remain in his seat, please? I see nothing wrong with the use of the word "hypocrisy" in Beauchesne's parliamentary rules, in the fifth edition.

An Hon. Member: Especially when it's true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Especially the way it was used. I do not see a problem with the word "hyprocrisy" at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and Merry Christmas to you as well. What we fail to see is that the only people who do have a problem with hyprocrisy are Canadians because they were misled about the change which was promised by the Conservative Government. Hon. Members opposite can smile, but they will not be smiling for long.

We can also talk about closure. When the Government invokes closure on Bill C-74, a Bill which is to determine how Canadians elect representatives, it is really going a bit too far. We heard from previous speakers that this Government has invoked closure before, whether it be a bank Bill, a Bill dealing with senior citizens' pensions or a Bill on family allowances. The Government has tried to stifle debate. We have stood in our places and argued against that on behalf of Canadians. But when the Government comes to Parliament and tries to invoke closure on a Bill which is to determine the men and women who are going to represent Canadians in this institution, then I tell Hon. Members on the Government side that Canadians will not tolerate it. Canadians will not accept it.

Canadians have experienced better Government. They have experienced broad liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: When?

Mr. Angus: Not in my lifetime they haven't.

Mr. Marchi: Canadians have experienced a Government which has delivered what it said it would deliver, nothing more and nothing less. Previous Governments had the responsibility and the vision to take this country exactly where it told Canadians the country would be taken. That is why—

Mr. Lewis: That is why you have 40 Members.

Mr. Marchi: —successive Liberal Parties have formed Liberal Governments on a national basis. That is why the Conservative Party has surely been a footnote or hiccup in the history of the political landscape of this country. That is the destiny of this Government.

Canadians will not tolerate or trust a leader, a Party, or a Government which invokes closure on Bills which cuts pensions when they said they would not, on Bills which affect taxes—

An Hon. Member: And family allowances.

Mr. Marchi: —and on Bills which cut family allowances, when they said they would not. The Government talks about free trade and puts everything on the table, and who knows what is under the table.

Mr. Lapierre: Right.

An Hon. Member: Call in the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Marchi: Christmas is a time which we enjoy with our friends and families, but I would submit that in this Chamber, Christmas is also a time for Governments to reassess their position. The Government started off badly and is finishing badly. The Government is going from bad to worse, and Canadians will not tolerate this Government in office for much longer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the Hon. Member to know—if I may have a word—that I was very vigilant. I have given him an extra minute and 15 seconds in order to make up for the lost time.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to join in this closure debate as we come towards the hour of one o'clock, which gives me the opportunity to continue the debate following the statements at 3.30 p.m.

The question of closure is a very important one in this House and across this land. It is important because it means the shutting off of debate by Members of Parliament who are here to represent the views of all their constituents—not just those who happen to have cast a vote in their favour in the last election, but every man, woman and child in their individual ridings. It is ironic that this Government has put closure on a Bill which decides how those people will be represented, how many people will have to come together in a riding to elect a member and to be served by him or her. That is what Bill C-74 is all about.

The Government has seen fit to bring forth closure to reduce the amount of time we have to debate this Bill, which I believe is not of sufficient urgency that it must be passed by Christmas. I think, in fairness, we could have had further debate, we could have talked more about the question of representation in northern Ontario, as well as representation in the northern parts of all the provinces, so that we could ensure that all Canadians have the same value of service whether they live within a mile of the constituency office of their Member of Parliament or whether they live a thousand miles away. So I believe it is important that this Government should allow the debate to continue. It is very inappropriate that it has cut off the discussion.

I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) in contributing to this debate and in the discussion on the point of order regarding the word "hypocrisy". He made the argument that the people of Canada no longer trust a Government that uses closure. I think he might want to reflect on his own comments. As we see by the number of Liberals who were returned to this House after his Party formed the Government, it is true that Canadians do not trust a Party which uses closure. But the Government opposite is using closure far more often than did the previous Government. It uses closure far more often than is necessary.

We have three years to go in our legislative timetable. We know that Governments cannot change the world during their term, but what we do ask is for a process which allows us to think matters through, to have an exchange in this House which allows us to share points of view, to question proposals by the Government and to offer alternative approaches. That is how the people of Canada want to see this Parliament work. They do not see us as three Parties in a particular room. They see us as a group which has been elected collectively to make laws for this country and to ensure that these laws not only reflect the wishes of the marority while protecting the interests of the minority, but that they are workable and make common sense. By bringing in closure on this Bill, the people of Canada have been told by the Government that that is not how this Parliament works. They are telling the Canadian people: "The Conservative Party is the Government and we are going to darn well do what we please regardless of how the Opposition feels and regardless of the long-term impact".

When the commissioners have gone out and drawn the boundaries, the hearings have been held and Bill C-74 comes back to Parliament, it will be in place for quite some time. So it is extremely important that we have the opportunity for a full debate in order to ensure that all of our concerns, not just the concerns of those on the opposition benches, but the concerns of Government members who represent some far-flung areas of the country, are properly debated and considered. We should have some flexibility so that we can come up with a Bill which works for all of Canada and which will protect the interests of all Canadians, no matter where they live in this country.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, and I will complete my speech after the statements this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As vigilant as I am, I notice that it is getting awfully close to one o'clock. The Hon. Member will have six minutes and perhaps 15 seconds remaining—the Table Officer informs me it is four minutes and about 12 seconds.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock today.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been consultation between the Parties and it has been agreed that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will make a statement at this time. I believe if you ask for unanimous consent, it will be given.

Mr. Speaker: Shall I take it, therefore, that there is a request for unanimous consent to go to Statements by Ministers at this time?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have discussed this with the House Leaders of the opposition Parties and the agreement which we have made is that, by unanimous consent, a statement will be made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) which will be responded to by representatives from each of the Parties. The time used by these statements will not affect the full time allowed for Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 22. In the way in which we have in the past, we will move everything back and have a full Question Period. This will be at the expense of government time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This is understood?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, by unanimous consent, I recognize the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Newfoundland Air Disaster

DISASTERS

CRASH OF CHARTER AIRCRAFT CARRYING UNITED STATES MILITARY PERSONNEL, AT GANDER, NFLD.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I rise to inform the House of the tragic loss of life as a result of the crash of a U.S. military charter DC-8 aircraft at Gander, Newfoundland, this morning. On behalf of the Government of Canada, and I am sure of the entire House and all Canadians, I offer deep and heartfelt condolences to those families which have been so tragically touched by this accident.

This morning the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sent a personal message of condolence to the President of the United States. The Prime Minister also spoke directly with Ambassador Niles to express his sorrow on behalf of the Canadian people.

Earlier today the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) called his counterpart in Washington, Mr. Weinberger, to assure Mr. Weinberger of Canada's complete co-operation in the investigation now under way. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) also discussed today's tragedy with Mr. Schultz, the U.S. Secretary of State, this morning in Brussels.

The aircraft involved was an Arrow Airlines DC-8 on charter to the U.S. military. On board were 250 U.S. military personnel returning from peacekeeping activities in the Sinai, along with eight crew members. The aircraft was en route from Cairo to Fort Campbell, Kentucky, with refuelling stops at Cologne, Germany, and Gander.

Preliminary information indicates that, after refuelling, the aircraft took off from Gander at approximately 6.45 a.m. local time. After clearing Runway 22, the aircraft crashed in dense bush on the shores of Gander Lake approximately one-quarter of a mile from the airport.

The crash fire rescue units at Gander responded immediately and were at the scene eight minutes from receipt of the alarm. The response consisted of six firefighters, one first response truck, two large foam trucks, one water truck, and one structural fire pumper. Further airport emergency procedures were implemented according to plan, and municipal fire-fighting assistance reported to the scene.

An intensive, all-encompassing independent investigation is now under way to determine the cause of this tragedy. A preliminary Canadian Aviation Safety Board response team is at the scene. A follow-up support team is scheduled to be in Gander later today. The U.S. National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration have also dispatched officials to the scene. Transport Canada's Emergency Air Operations Centre has been in operation since 7 a.m. this morning. Pending fuel analysis, Pit No. 8, the refuelling station used by the aircraft at Gander, has been closed.

• (1405)

In conclusion, I repeat our expression of sorrow and sympathy to all those who have been touched by this tragedy. During this season, when family is of such importance, we mourn with them over the loss of their loved ones.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) on behalf of all Canadians for his prompt response and reporting to the House of Commons on the tragic accident which took place in Gander, Newfoundland, this morning. On behalf of the Official Opposition I wish to join with the Minister and all Members of Parliament in expressing our condolences to the people of the United States and, in particular, to those families who lost loved ones this morning.

I note, as the Minister has noted, the response and the efforts made this morning by the Ministry of Transport firefighters in Gander in very difficult circumstances, and also the co-operation which existed with municipal officials in attempting to save the lives. Unfortunately, that was not possible. I thank the Minister for the briefings which his officials and his Department provided this morning. We look forward to receiving continued updates on this sad and tragic event.

I simply say that the Province of Newfoundland has had a long history of association with the U.S. military, with air bases in Goose Bay, Labrador, Stephenville, Saint John's, and the military presence in Gander as well. I say on behalf of all Newfoundlanders that we regret this tragic accident very much. We express on behalf of all Canadians, but in particular the people of our province who have had a close association with the people of the United States, our condolences today.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, we too wish to thank the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) for his statement, and echo his expressions of sorrow to the people of the United States and to the families and relatives of those who perished. Our Leader has personally conveyed our condolences to the American Ambassador.

At this point I wish to pay tribute to something accomplished by the 101st Airborne Division with respect to its role as peacekeepers as a result of the Camp David agreement. Canada has had many years of experience in peacekeeping under the United Nations and knows what it is like to earn recognition throughout the world for being not only a peacemaker but a peacekeeper. That type of accolade is deserved by the 101st Airborne Division peacekeepers who served in the Sinai over the past number of years.

I wish to say to the Minister that we support him in a full investigation and inquiry which will have to result from this accident. We hope that the results will be made public so that we can make greater efforts to ensure that this type of tragedy, no matter what the cause, does not happen again.

Again, on behalf of my colleagues, we express our sincere regrets and condolences to the people of the United States and to the families and friends of those who perished.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, would it be appropriate for all Members of the House to rise for a moment's silence?

[Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

UNITED NATIONS

NUCLEAR FREEZE RESOLUTION—CALL FOR CANADIAN SUPPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this week at the UN delegates will be asked to vote on the Sweden-Mexico nuclear freeze proposal. This resolution will urge the United States and the Soviet Union, as the two major nuclear weapons states, to proclaim an immediate nuclear arms freeze as a first step towards a comprehensive program of disarmament. At the First Committee of the UN vote held this year on November 20, 113 countries voted in favour of this significant resolution. Unfortunately Canada was one of 11 countries which voted against.

I would like to take this opportunity to call on the Government of Canada to direct our representative at the UN to join with the vast majority of other delegates around the world in voting for the freeze resolution. Only by taking this important step will Canada be recognized as a nation committed to world disarmament and peace.

REFUGEES

GUATEMALA—KIDNAPPING OF WOMAN HOLDER OF REFUGEE VISA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Beatriz Barrios Marroquin, mother of two young children, was kidnapped yesterday by four armed men some hours before she would have left her home in Guatemala City to enter Canada with her visa as a refugee. Ms. Barrios had already been politically kidnapped a month ago, tortured, then released through her family's influence. Wishing to become a refugee in Canada, she was barred because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. MacDonald) decreed early this year that all Guatemalans must obtain visas before arriving in Canada.

Although Canada votes for the annual UN resolutions condemning Guatemala's brutal repression, although Guatemalans have not abused visitors' rights entering Canada, although thousands of Canadians warned and petitioned the Minister that imposing visa requirements would endanger genuine Guatemalan refugees by exposing them to observation by the death squads when they arrange for their visas, the Minister nevertheless imposed the visa requirement endangering refugees like Ms. Barrios. Therefore the Minister now shares responsibility for the fate of Ms. Barrios and ought now, in all conscience, to withdraw that visa requirement for the protection of other refugees.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED ESTABLISHMENT OF TOYOTA ASSEMBLY PLANT IN CAMBRIDGE, ONT.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, today the Toyota Motor Corporation announced it will build an automobile assembly plant in Cambridge, Ontario. This $400 million investment will provide employment for 1,000 workers producing 50,000 passenger cars per year, and will commence operation in 1988. This is great news for Cambridge and the adjacent Kitchener-Waterloo area, and indeed for Canada as a whole.

Since taking office last year, and with the cancellation of FIRA and the immediate creation of Investment Canada, the federal Government has been working hard to ensure that Canada offers a healthy investment climate, thereby encouraging companies from other countries to locate here. One by one we are seeing this effort produce results.

Today's announcement by Toyota is the latest evidence that Canada is indeed an ideal country in which to invest. This will mean jobs, jobs for construction workers, plant employees, car dealerships and the many auto parts suppliers of Waterloo County. In fact the economic spin-offs will have an enormous impact upon all areas of Cambridge and Kitchener-Waterloo economic life, including small business, housing, retail outlets, schools, hospitals and so on.

Toyota is to be congratulated. Its decision is a tremendous vote of confidence in the Canadian economy in general, and in the skill and hard work of the people of Cambridge and Kitchener-Waterloo in particular.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we recently saw how once again, Canadians recovered their confidence in Canada's economy and in the future. Another series of figures published by Statistics Canada confirms that our economic situation is very encouraging. I am referring to the data on automobile sales for October. These figures indicate a 14 per cent increase over the same month in 1984. This considerable growth in new car sales is a clear sign that Canadians have once again become confident in the future and are willing to make substantial purchases. This renewed confidence will be an additional boost to the economic recovery now underway.

In fact, this renewed confidence in the Canadian economy has a positive impact on the small- and medium-sized businesses that work as sub-contractors for the big car manufacturers.

Mr. Speaker, in my riding, I have two businesses that specialize in this sector and are expanding at a tremendous rate.

This is something to be proud of and emphasizes the positive aspects of our improved economic situation here in Canada.

It has been a long time since the people of this country saw such a good performance by their federal Government. Everywhere people are saying the Conservatives are doing a good job. Of course, there are still a few problems here and there, but our Government has an attentive ear, and with the co-operation of labour and management, we shall find solutions to those problems.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS—CORRESPONDENCE OF MEMBER FOR LANARK-RENFREW-CARLETON

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to your attention a letter that was sent to the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) by the Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). This is what he had to say about the shoe industry in this letter dated September 18:

> On October 23rd, 1984, I wrote to you, Sir, as our new Minister for International Trade, and asked that if we are really serious about maintaining employment in this country, and if we are serious in ensuring that our domestic footwear manufacturing industry is competitive, then rather than a 2 year, 3 year, or 5 year quota period, I believed we should have a 10 year quota period in order to encourage the appropriate investors.

I wonder what happened to that Member, Mr. Speaker. The letter continues:

> Further, on May 2nd, 1985, I wrote once again supporting a letter from our colleague, Roch LaSalle, on this matter, and again pointed out that I believed 10 years was necessary if we were seriously going to approach this problem, and try to give the appropriate lead time necessary for proper investment to bring the Canadian industry into line with the competition.

Mr. Speaker, 10 years was shortened to roughly 10 weeks after this letter was sent because of what happened to the shoe industry.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PROTEST AGAINST GOVERNMENT LEGISLATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, many social policy groups, women, poverty groups, unions, and churches have joined forces again to protest the treatment of children and families by the Government and the cynical myth of its consultation. Their anger is repeated by over 40,000 citizens who have petitioned the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full benefits to families. The Government ignores this unanimous consensus as it proceeds with legislation to deindex family allowances.

Women's groups protest the deindexing because it attacks women, especially homemakers and those raising families on their own. Poverty groups and social reformers deplore the additional hardship this puts on poor families. Catholic Bishops condemn deficit reduction policies that put restraint before human needs.

By proceeding with Bill C-70 the Government has given its message to Canadians that children are not important and parenting deserves decreased support. Canadians will long remember Christmas of 1985 when the Conservatives took benefits from children. The silent victims are kids.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, for the last few days this House has been subjected to both Liberal and NDP rhetoric concerning the Government's sale of de Havilland to Boeing. Through their usual manipulation of the facts they give the Canadian public the impression that the Government is selling off one of our most prized possessions for a ridiculously low price. The Opposition has made de Havilland appear to be Canada's "Jewel in the Crown". Nothing could be further from the truth.

What the opposition Parties neglected to tell the Canadian public was that over the last 11 years the Canadian taxpayer has poured over $800 million into de Havilland and it is still losing money. Last year this company lost $40.3 million, and in the first nine months of this year it lost another $55 million. How long do Canadian taxpayers have to pump their hard-earned tax dollars into such a venture?

As reported in The Globe and Mail today, even the Liberal Premier of Ontario recognizes the necessity of selling Crown corporations, such as its Urban Transportation Development Corporation, which no longer fulfil a public policy purpose. It is interesting to note that in an edition of The Toronto Star this week it is mentioned that as far back as 1974 the federal Liberals pledged that they would sell de Havilland back to the private sector. Now the federal Liberals are crying about de Havilland's sale. What a bunch of hypocrites.

Unlike the Liberal and New Democratic Parties, which are both well known for incompetence in fiscal matters, we in the Progressive Conservative Party believe that Canadian taxpayers should get value for their money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIVE PEOPLES

JAMES BAY-NORTHERN QUEBEC AND NORTH-EASTERN QUEBEC AGREEMENTS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to talk about the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, the Northeastern Quebec Agreement, and political autonomy. As you may know, the James Bay Agreement and the Northeastern Quebec Agreement are the first two over-all settlements of territorial disputes in Canada. They were signed in 1975 and 1978. These agreements are still the most wide-ranging settlements ever concluded with native peoples. They deal with all aspects of Northeastern Quebec economic, social and political development.

The agreements define the structure within which Northeastern Quebec is to develop so as to enable Indian communities and interests to develop and progress in accordance with their own plans. Canada and Quebec also benefit from the agreements as a result of the economic fall-out which Canadians reap from Northeastern Quebec hydroelectric projects in Abitibi.

As to political development, the agreements provide for the establishment of a public administration over Inuit territory and political autonomy over Cree and Naskapi territory.

The Cree-Naskapi Act was adopted in 1984, and it applies exclusively to Northeastern Quebec. Cree and Naskapi bands already enjoy legal autonomy status, more decision-making authority, grants and other benefits.

Other bands will soon be entitled to similar benefits as political autonomy becomes reality elsewhere in Canada, in keeping with the policies announced by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON CIVIC AIRPORT—INVITATION TO MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is no Minister who has the responsibility or speaks for Hamilton. The local Progressive Conservative Members are either being ignored or saying nothing. Therefore, I want to issue a personal invitation to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) to visit the Hamilton Civil Airport with myself and members of Hamilton City Council.

The Minister will no doubt be aware that at the moment only 34,000 people per year are travelling through this airport. It is an absolute white elephant and unless the federal Government comes in with a program for a free-trade zone, or for the use of the Hamilton airport as the third expanded airport to cover the Toronto International Airport, the airport will be a disaster.

The Minister is also aware the Purolator has attempted, through negotiations with the Minister, to establish its eastern operation there. Unless it is given a positive answer within the next two weeks we will see several hundred jobs leaving Hamilton.

Since the so-called political Minister for Hamilton has done nothing in this effort, I urge the Minister of Transport to intervene personally and come to Hamilton airport to save those jobs and give Hamilton airport a chance to become the full-fledged international airport it should be and should have been when the $50 million expansion investment was approved.

Government Members have done nothing on this issue. Perhaps the Minister could personally intervene. I am issuing him this invitation to come to Hamilton before Christmas to see the very desperate situation in Hamilton.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED DELIVERY OF CHRISTMAS FARE TO EMBASSIES IN LATIN AMERICA

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, over the past couple of days a very strange and unusual story has come to my attention. It would appear that the humanitarian efforts of a woman in Regina have been caught up in the delivery of External Affairs Christmas treats to our embassies in Latin America.

According to a source, 1.5 tonnes of wine, cheese, fruit and Christmas trees are being flown by a National Defence aircraft on a navigational training exercise to such capitals as Guatemala City, Georgetown, Brasilia, Ecuador, and Bogota.

When my office attempted to contact officials from the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs, we were given various different stories. At first they told us they did not know what was on the flight. Then we were told that at times they have carried personal packages of embassy personnel but only if they are packed in small boxes and weighed a specific amount. Another person from the Department of National Defence stated: "Goods which could not be purchased locally" would be on that flight and: "Yes, if there are no Christmas trees in Bogota, that might qualify".

Presence in Gallery

Meanwhile, only some of the relief aid that had been gathered for the victims of the Columbia volcano will be on that flight. I would like to know if it is the policy of the Government to fly wine, nuts, cheese and Christmas trees to our embassies while relief aid takes a back seat. It should become Government policy to co-ordinate training missions with relief agencies that have aid to be shipped to disaster affected areas.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SARNIA-LAMBTON DRINKING WATER—TEST RESULTS

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely delighted to report to the House very positive news from Sarnia-Lambton. Results of exhaustive and detailed tests of water samples from eight water treatment plants from Lambton to Windsor confirm that area drinking water is absolutely safe.

● (1425)

The Ministry of the Environment tested samples at treatment plants at Windsor, Sarnia, Walpole Island, Wallaceburg, Amherstburg, Stony Point, Mitchells Bay, and Stag Island. The tests all showed absolutely no traces of dioxins and no hazardous levels of the other 109 chemicals and organic compounds for which tests and analyses were made.

Finally, we have solid factual evidence which defeats the negative hyperbole and speculation of those relatively uninformed people who made short visits to our area for press conferences, merely to cast aspersions on our area. Their comments never appeared to be backed by any factual information. Perhaps they will now take note of this scientific information.

Few people have been told that the quality of water in the St. Clair River has actually improved over the last several years. Many enjoy sport fishing, and hundreds participate in our salmon derby. We are known as the beautiful "blue water land", and we are working hard to develop it as a tourist area.

I will continue to make every effort to maintain the good name of Sarnia-Lambton, because I know that we have earned such a reputation. I will not stand by as others smear it.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

Mr. Speaker: May I draw the attention of Hon. Members today to the presence in our gallery of the Hon. Haig Young, Minister of Public Works for the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—REQUEST FOR REVIEW BY INVESTMENT CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join with other Members of Parliament and all Canadians in saying that our hearts go out to the families of the American servicemen and women who lost their lives this morning in Newfoundland. I echo the very eloquent words of the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port-au-Port-St. Barbe who replied on our behalf, and the representative of the NDP.

My question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I think he will have recognized by now that the opinion of his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, to the effect that the de Havilland transaction is not subject to review by Investment Canada, is wrong. Will he ensure or guarantee to the House that the transaction will indeed be reviewed by Investment Canada and that Investment Canada will render public its report, particularly in respect of the other bidders who tried to enter a bid for the purchase of de Havilland and were unsuccessful because they were not given a fair hearing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the transaction is reviewable by Investment Canada. As to the results of the review under the Investment Canada Act, normal procedures will be followed, and they are not made public as a matter of course.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Check with your seat-mate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance asks me to check with my seat-mate. I want the President of the Treasury Board to check what his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, said in the House on December 11.

REQUEST THAT ALL OPTIONS BE EXAMINED BEFORE CANADAIR IS SOLD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure the Government of Canada is going to act more sensibly in the case of an eventual sale of Canadair.

Would the Minister allow Parliament, the Government of Quebec and Canadair workers to examine all possible options before a decision is made on selling Canadair?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. colleague that all representations by other levels of government, other countries or other groups interested in the eventual privatisation of Canadair will be welcome, and we will certainly give them our undivided attention.

POSSIBILITY FOREIGNERS BETTER INFORMED THAN CANADIAN BIDDERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The Government has provided no information, either to the Government of Ontario or to the workers at de Havilland, and we want to avoid this kind of situation in the case of an eventual sale of Canadair. My question is as follows: Why are the big multinationals like Boeing better informed about the facts and events than Canadian citizens and Canadian companies? Why are foreigners better informed than we are?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's premise is totally false. I have said in this House, and I say it again today, that during the past year, we have been in touch with more than 130 potential buyers, both Canadian and foreign. Those who showed an interest had access to the information required to enable them to tender an offer to the board of directors of the CDIC, as required.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES CHEMICAL TOXICITY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The gravity of the situation is pointed out in the report just released by the Royal Society of Canada and the U.S. National Research Council. It points to the chemical toxicity of the Great Lakes as being the worst on the continent. Would the Minister admit the mistake his Government has made so far in cutting toxic research programs and reinstate the programs, and the people affected by these cuts, in this very vital area of public health?

● (1430)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think if the Hon. Member has had a chance to read the report he will know that the authors of the report stressed that the problems with which we are dealing go back many years. It does not have to do only with decisions made by this Government or, for that matter, by the previous Government.

Because of the urgency of the situation—and it is a sense of urgency we shared even before the publication of the report—this Government has begun to put in motion the plans which we hope to bring to Parliament early in the new year which will be the most progressive, cradle-to-grave management of toxic chemicals in the western hemisphere.

Mr. Caccia: I want to remind the Minister that we did not cut the toxic research programs whereas his Government did. Therefore he has an obligation.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Since the report was published yesterday by prominent scientists on both sides of the border indicating the gravity of the situation, would the Minister tell us what action he intends to take?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of what action I intend to take. It is a matter of what actions I am already taking. I have met with the top representatives of all the chemical industries in the country. I have mobilized a team of people from labour, industry, and provincial officials from across the country for the purpose of putting together a regime which I think will be a credit to the Government and to the people of Canada.

We are going to revamp all of the laws within the federal Government having to do with toxic chemicals, focusing in particular on the Environmental Contaminants Act. Those amendments will be brought forward in the House before too long. I urge the Hon. Member who raised the question to get the support of his Party behind those worth-while reforms.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—WORKERS' TELEGRAM OF PROTEST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I have just learned that in Toronto, just before noon, over 2,000 de Havilland workers, representing one shift only, have signed a telegram addressed to the Prime Minister expressing their opposition to the Government's negotiated deal with Boeing. What this means, since it is only one shift, is that the vast majority of de Havilland workers are opposing what the Government plans to do in terms of their employment.

Given the opposition now of those workers, clearly expressed, which adds to the questions the deal, will the Minister commit himself, and the Government, to bring all the aspects of which have been raised about the financial aspects of this deal before Parliament before it signs a final agreement?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, why does the Hon. Member try to create insecurity in the minds of the workers?

Mr. Broadbent: Insecurity?

Mr. de Cotret: Why is he out there all the time spreading information which will make the workers less secure? Under Crown ownership, in Canadair more than 2,000 jobs were lost between 1981 and 1983. Let the Hon. Member talk to those people. Let him talk to those people from de Havilland who lost jobs on what they think about job security under Crown ownership. And then let the Hon. Member tell those employees that with the Boeing deal, with the world product mandate, with its access to foreign markets, they are getting more job security than they ever had before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister that he is the one who is insecure in this situation.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TALK TO WORKERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering the Government talked a lot about consultation before the election, and talked a lot about it since the election, and the men and women whose lives are going to be directly affected by this decision are in opposition to the Government, will the Government—and the Minister, specifically—at least have the integrity to go to de Havilland and explain its case to the workers? Will he do that?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): The case, Mr. Speaker, was explained to the workers in a number of working sessions, and all available information will also be made available to the workers. They are going to be fully briefed. They have been fully briefed.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They have?

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, they have been fully briefed. We have maintained our commitment to keep the workers abreast of what we were doing and why this deal was good for them, good for the company, and good for Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, maybe the workers at de Havilland know a little better than the Minister about the facts of the case. The fact is that Boeing in the United States just in the last four years laid off 20,000 employees. That is 20,000 Boeing lay-offs in the United States. Maybe the Canadian workers have a right to be concerned about what this Government is doing now.

Mr. Deans: It has a world product mandate.

CLOSING DATE FOR SALE CONTRACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Will the Minister confirm that the termination date, the date beyond which the Government cannot go to extricate itself from this deal, is March 3, 1986? Will he also confirm that if the Government comes to its senses, in our view, and wants to get out of the deal—in terms of the contract which has been signed—it in fact can do so with a minimal cost, paying the cost only which would cover incidental fees like legal costs and public relations? Will the Minister answer both of those questions now?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will answer both questions. First, it is interesting to see the Hon. Member following so closely the progress of a corporation outside the country. I would like to point out that in Canada Boeing created new jobs.

An Hon. Member: In Winnipeg.

Mr. de Cotret: In Winnipeg. The Hon. Member should talk to the people in Winnipeg and ask them if they are happy.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. de Cotret: In answer to the Hon. Member's second question, we have no intention whatsoever of extricating ourselves from this deal. It is a good deal for Canada and we are going to go ahead with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT OPERATIONS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. He should know that the Boeing Corporation has a very strict research and development policy under which all research and development operations are based in the United States. Has the Government of Canada ensured that this policy will change vis-à-vis de Havilland? And what are the conditions in the Government's agreement with Boeing that guarantee that de Havilland's research and development operations will remain and be developed here in Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, the understanding with Boeing clearly indicates that the research and development which is done by de Havilland Canada will stay in Canada by virtue of the fact that it is incorporated into the Dash-7 and Dash-8, which will continue to be produced with a world product mandate at Downsview.

Mr. Broadbent: There are no guarantees for R and D.

Mr. de Cotret: In the case of augmentor wing technology, the rights to that technology belong to the Crown.

Mr. Deans: It already has a world product mandate.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF GUARANTEES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are concerned about the next generation of technology. We want to know what is going to happen with the planes after the Dash-7 and Dash-8. If the Minister has assurances that research will continue and expand in Canada, will he do the right thing and let Canadians know the nature of those guarantees before signing a final agreement with Boeing? Let us know what those guarantees are. Will the Minister table them in the House?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have the guarantee of the world product mandate. We have the guarantee of retaining our technology in this country. We have the guarantee of increased R and D in de Havilland in Canada and that, from a high tech point of view, is a very good deal.

Mr. Broadbent: There isn't a guarantee.

DATE OF DECISION TO SELL

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I am going to give him a little respite from the questioning. I just want some information. At what date was the decision made to see de Havilland, and when was de Havilland given the directive to open its books to the corporate planners and accountants of the—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hovdebo: —bidding corporations?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the exact dates, I will be happy to take that under advisement and give the Hon. Member the specifics. In terms of the decision to privatize de Havilland, it was a decision taken by this Party. It was discussed at great length during the election campaign—

Mr. Broadbent: Right, at whatever cost.

Mr. de Cotret: —and announced very shortly after we took office.

• (1440)

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since Section 99 of the Financial Administration Act requires that directives to Crown corporations be tabled before the House, would the Minister please tell us why those directives regarding the sale of de Havilland have not been tabled before the House?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, it is not a directive to de Havilland. It is the shares in de Havilland that were held by the Crown through CDIC which are being sold.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

ROLE OF PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last September in his deathbed repentance on patronage, the Prime Minister said:

Many of these steps are long overdue, and heaven knows this Government—

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Ms. Copps: Believe me, if you shush me you're not going to shut me up so you might as well quit it right now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: It's about the only thing that the surfers in this Parliament can do.

The Prime Minister stated in September that the Government has had cause to regret the absence of those steps. Is it not in fact true that, according to leaked documents that came from the Prime Minister's Office today, the Prime Minister himself was in control of the patronage monster to the point where he approved, not once but twice, every single patronage appointment that crossed the Government's desk?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to say for the record that I would not dream of shushing the Hon. Member, at any time. In regard to the question she raises, as my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, knows full well, custom requires that the Prime Minister sign all Orders in Council and that is the only reason for the involvement. All Orders in Council in this regard are submitted by the Ministers. They represent the very best people available in the country, and we are honoured that so many have accepted our invitations.

REPORTED LEAKING OF DOCUMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in his former incarnation as a member of the Opposition, the Prime Minister said: "There's no whore like an old whore". Is it not true—

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

An Hon. Member: He said it.

Ms. Copps: Is it not true that the Prime Minister—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's a sexist statement.

Mr. Gauthier: Why did he make it then if it's sexist?

Ms. Copps: Is it not true that he has personally had a hand, not once but twice, in every single patronage appointment that has been put forward by the Government at least since last January when that memo was written, or does the Prime Minister deny the existence of the secret memo from his office?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the preface was inelegant and tasteless and the question was false.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: You'd love to rewrite this one, wouldn't you?

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment and it deals with the report released yesterday by the Royal Society and the U.S. National Research Council. I would like to ask the Minister more specific questions than those that were asked by the Hon. Member for Davenport.

Will the Minister fully reinstate the research that was associated with the herring gull program, and will he fully reinstate the proposal having to do with the Toxicology Research Centre in Guelph? Both those programs are in keeping with the recommendations for expanded support for research made by that report. It seems to me that the least the Government could do at this point is to announce the restoration of those programs.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's high regard for both those programs. Regarding the first one, the Government has already restored much of the funding but I am looking very carefully at ways in which our limited budget can be applied to that area and related areas. I would like to stress, however, that those two programs, though worthy in themselves, would not deal with more than a small part of the total problem that was addressed by the report to which the Hon. Member made reference. We are looking at a broadly based approach to the total problem of toxic chemicals both in the Great Lakes and in other bodies of water.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, a broadly based approach is a good thing, but part of a broadly based approach is not only a legal approach in terms of amendments to the Environmental Contaminants Act but also a research based approach. I noticed that the Minister of Finance turned around to say no to the Minister of the Environment. I want to say to the Minister of the Environment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Blaikie: I want to ask the Minister of the Environment—

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Blaikie: Will he make a commitment now to restore those two programs? In particular, with respect to what he said about the herring gull program, he knows that only one out of the six people employed there has been rehired. That is the least he could do in response to this report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have caused a complete review to be made of all programs and policies within my Department in connection with various restraints including those presented by the Deputy Prime Ministerial task force on program review. I am assessing the two programs to which the Hon. Member has made reference in connection with that total review which I expect to be completed within the next six weeks.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FOLLOW EXAMPLE OF EEC BILATERAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

Last November, two textile plants, Doric and Celanese, some of whose executives are here in the House today, merged to form the Monterey textile plant, their main purpose being to compete with cheap imports from Asia.

Has the Minister considered following the example of certain Common Market countries who have concluded bilateral agreements with Eastern European countries in the textile and clothing sector, for instance, West Germany has an agreement with Bulgaria, and there is also Turkey which subsidizes shipping costs. Does the Minister intend to follow that example or take other appropriate measures in order to enable Canadian companies . . .

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his question was long enough.

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly aware that the Canadian Textile Institute is meeting here today and that it is its 50th anniversary. I congratulate the Institute on that.

Certainly we have every desire to assist the industry. We are doing this through the renegotiation of the multifibre agreement and entering into restraint agreements with individual countries with low-cost exports. In addition to that, we are prepared to assist the institute with its exports through our PEMD Program and our Fairs and Missions Program, as well as through our trade offices abroad.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ROLE OF PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade as well. Once again a Government Minister has made a speech on trade in the United States while we cannot get answers or information in the House. Once again that statement contradicts previous positions.

Does the unilateral assertion made by the Minister for International Trade yesterday that there is recognition by all provinces that there will be only one negotiator at the table not fly in the face of the commitment made by the Secretary of State that the negotiating process would be worked out with the provinces over the next three months, and does it not abrogate the fundamental principle of the Halifax agreement that the provinces would have full partnership in the negotiating process?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, not at all. Unfortunately, and I do not blame the Hon. Member for this, The Globe and Mail only quoted the last half of my sentence. First, I was asked whether or not the United States had made any representations to me about provincial involvement in the negotiations. I replied no, and went on to say that we have reached an agreement in Halifax at the First Ministers' Conference, I believe two weeks ago now, that the provinces would have full participation but there is a recognition by all of the provinces that there will only be one negotiator at the table and that will be the federal Government. There is no departure whatsoever from what we agreed on in Halifax.

CONSULTATION WITH PREMIERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for giving us the full benefit of the entire statement. It still does not answer the question of whether or not this interpretation by the Minister is, in fact, agreed to by the provinces. Before the Minister gave the statement that it is recognized that there will be only one negotiator, did he take the trouble to consult with provincial Ministers to gain their approval for this type of statement or, in fact, did he once again ignore their interests and concerns?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would again advise my hon. colleague that there has been no departure whatsoever. We agree and will fully participate with the provinces in these negotiations, as we have said. We have agreed that there will be a 90-day period within which to do this. I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that I had lunch today with Mr. Reisman—

Mr. Broadbent: That's nice!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: I am sorry the Hon. Member was not invited. I obviously forgot.

Mr. Axworthy: Maybe next time.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Who paid?

Mr. Kelleher: Since he was not at the lunch, I want him to know that Mr. Reisman has already sent out letters to the provinces inviting them to meet with him prior to Christmas to commence the 90-day participation period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. I do not have a copy of The Globe and Mail article. I have a copy of the Minister's speech—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —in which he says that this agreement in no way diminishes the primacy of the federal Government in leading the negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McDermid: Read the whole thing!

Mr. Langdon: Where in the Halifax statement, which was agreed to by the provinces, is there any reflection of this type of primary role for the Government being laid out? Did the Minister not in fact mislead his audience in New York?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, not at all. I would like to read from the paragraph which precedes the paragraph read by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. McDermid: We're going to get the whole thing out yet!

Mr. Kelleher: I can start right from the beginning, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: Just table it.

Mr. Kelleher: It's a great speech, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Kelleher: I will read just one sentence. "The Prime Minister and all of the provincial Premiers met recently in Halifax and agreed to work very closely together on all aspects of the negotiations".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely at that point that the Minister went on to say that that represents the primacy of the federal Government. In addition to that contradiction, why has the Minister contradicted the Secretary of State for External Affairs who told me on December 2 that this principle of full provincial participation would be worked out over the next 90 days? Why did the Minister unilaterally decide to set out its terms in New York just 15 days later?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in case no one has noticed, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I do not have any disagreement. We agree with one another completely on all matters of Government policy. I agree that we will work out this deal with the provinces during the next 90 days. As I have pointed out, we commenced that process yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FOOD AND DRUGS

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES—LEVEL OF ETHYL CARBAMATES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister recently released a press statement having to do with ethyl carbamates in alcoholic beverages. What consultations did the Minister have with respect to the wine-making industry and with the Province of Ontario before he established the levels which were set out in his statement? Will these guidelines apply to the sale of all wines in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure Hon. Members know, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines has been a strong representative of the interests in his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I commend him for it.

I wish to tell him that the federal Government has guidelines. That is our responsibility. It is not a matter of consensus. We have presented that before the judicial inquiry in the Province of Ontario. Additionally, there were meetings yesterday between my own officials and the LCBO. I believe this afternoon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be making a statement at Queens Park with respect to the same issue in order to present it from a federal point of view. I think we are okay.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

EFFECT OF CHANGES COVERING EARLY RETIREMENT PENSIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On January 1 the Minister will implement changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will count early retirement pensions as income, thereby robbing thousands of Canadians of their paid-up unemployment insurance even though these Canadians are ready and willing to work. Considering that many groups and individuals have continually protested these changes, will the Minister withdraw these measures scheduled for January 1 now and refer them to the Forget Commission, which she has appointed to study the Unemployment Insurance Program?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will remember, this change was first announced on November 4, 1984. However, in order that it be implemented fairly across the country, we have delayed the implementation until January 1, 1986, to ensure that people have adequate lead time to deal with this matter.

As far as the Forget Commission is concerned, I have asked it to review all aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Program. If the Commission wishes to deal with this matter as well, then it will certainly be entitled to do so.

INCREASE IN NUMBERS OF OLDER UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have continued to protest against these changes since last year. Does the Minister not realize that in the last two years the rate of unemployed older Canadians between the ages of 45 years and 64 years has gone from 7.5 per cent to 9.4 per cent and that another 77,000 older workers have been classified as unofficially unemployed? If she will not listen to me, will she at least listen to these older Canadians who need their pensions and unemployment insurance benefits to survive until they get new jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have heard from many Canadians, including many Members of the House of Commons, about the inequities which exist in the Unemployment Insurance Program. We have moved to try to redress some of those inequities. We hope that the results of the Forget Commission and its recommendations to Government will further that cause and, in fact, reduce and eliminate some of the inequities which continue to exist.

Mr. Allmand: That does not make sense at all.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES DISPUTE—ADVERTISEMENTS SEEKING WORKERS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister is aware that employees of Pacific Western Airlines is in a strike situation with its workers. Is the Minister also aware that this company is advertising in Seattle, Los Angeles, Portland and San Francisco for sheet metal workers and aircraft and avionic technicians, in spite of the fact that Manpower Directive, Chapter 17, specifically states that temporary work authorizations cannot be issued to people from outside of Canada to take the jobs of striking workers?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Labour, may have more specific details on this subject. I am certainly not aware of individual advertisements which are placed in papers either domestically or internationally by individual firms. However, it is not the mandate of the Department of Employment and Immigration to interfere where there are labour negotiations ongoing or where there are strikes or lock-outs.

● (1500)

ENTRY OF BOEING TECHNICIANS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Chapter 17 of the Manpower Directive says that you may not issue temporary work authorizations to people from outside the country. That being the case, why was Boeing allowed to send eight Americans to Canada to work on PWA planes during this work stoppage?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the Hon. Member knew that negotiations are resuming between the parties to this dispute he would not be asking these questions at this time in a very difficult manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: You mean when they negotiate you can break the law?

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR CHANGES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that from time to time provincial and federal Governments put in place agricultural stabilization programs because of climatic or economic conditions. In such cases arbitrary lines necessarily need to be drawn. Will the Minister ask his officials to start the process of putting in place individual personal data so that stabilization programs can relate to specific conditions rather than regional conditions which, by their nature, tend to be unfair?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can tell by the nature of the question that the Hon. Member knows exactly what he is talking about. I can assure him that that information is partially available to us now. Our work in designing the amendments to the Crop Insurance Program to provide additional coverage will give us an opportunity to complete exactly what the Hon. Member has requested.

SOCIAL SECURITY

JANUARY FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With increasingly arrogant regularity the Government is using its large majority to run roughshod over the rights of opposition MPs, not only on the floor of the House but in committee, to force closure on Bills dealing with deindexation of family allowances, complex tax laws, and redistribution.

Will the Minister confirm what his officials have told me, that the rates being used for the January family allowance cheques have been set at $31.58 which reflects the Government's intention to deindex family allowances? In other words, the Government will pass that legislation without worrying about what Parliament and coalition groups have to say. Come hell or high water the Government is going to do what it pleases.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the legislation he refers to was announced in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. There was a six-day debate and this House ruled on the Budget through a number of votes. We then had first and second reading of Bill C-70 and the House availed itself of that opportunity for debate. That Bill went to committee where there was an extension of the time originally agreed to in order to deal with the Bill.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Bill then came back to the House and we were willing to debate it yesterday, but the Liberals moved adjournment of the House. They did not even want to meet and talk.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Then the Hon. Member has the audacity to say we should not pass it. They do not want to work, and they do not want Parliament to meet.

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister's failure to reply to my hon. friend's question confirms that his Government has already decided that as of January 1—

Oh, come on, that is the question! Right!

Mr. Speaker: The question please, and right now!

Mr. Malépart: I will repeat what I said to wake up the Progressive Conservatives. My question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Now!

Mr. Malépart: My question: The Minister confirmed that your Government decided to increase by 31 cents—

Mr. La Salle: Is it a question, or isn't it?

Mr. Malépart: My question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

SYSTEM OF MAKING APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. A classified document dated January, 1985, has surfaced from the Prime Minister's Office. It outlines the PET system—Patronage for Every Tory. Can the Prime Minister confirm the existence of this document and tell us how different this system is from the Pierre Elliott Trudeau system of patronage?

Mr. McDermid: Better people.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, the Pierre Elliott Trudeau system of patronage was kept alive by a coalition with the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: He did not appoint any New Democrats.

Mr. Mulroney: It was sweethearts on parade. There they were.

The Liberal system was historic, overwhelming, and debilitating, as exemplified by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, and massively repudiated in the last election campaign. This Government has done infinitely better.

REQUEST FOR REFORM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is pretty damn obvious that there is no difference between Tory pork-barrelling and Liberal pork-barrelling.

Mr. Speaker: Language, please. Just a question, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Can the Prime Minister give this House and the Canadian people the assurance that he will keep his campaign promise and reform the patronage system so that we do not have to wait until every living Tory has been appointed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that no amount of sweet-talk from him is going to get him an ambassadorship.

An Hon. Member: Unless we want to start a war.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Even if Ed asks us to give him one.

Mr. Mulroney: There is an opening in Fort Chimo I want to talk to him about.

It is widely known, Mr. Speaker, and generally accepted across the country, that this Government, through the efforts of the Hon. Member for St. John's East, in co-operation with other Members, has brought together—

Mr. Blaikie: Don't pretend that you accepted our recommendations because you didn't!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: The last thing this country needs is a socialist having a cardiac arrest in this House. That would be one of the most unpleasant sights of all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: There goes my ambassadorship!

ENERGY

SASKATCHEWAN HEAVY OIL UPGRADER PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. She will know that Alberta and Saskatchewan are not happy with the federal Government's decision to review the support package for the Husky Bi-Provincial oil upgrader. The Minister said she would have a decision on this package by early December. When is the Government going to come forward with a decision and live up to the commitment by the former Liberal Government so this project can get under way?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the allegation that anyone is unhappy with our energy policy I can refute by referring to an editorial in the United States Oil & Gas Journal which says:

The engine of energy security—petroleum exploration—is humming in Canada and sputtering in the U.S.

It goes on to say:

The administration of Brian Mulroney is living up to its promise. Canada is better for it.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government is stalling. It is sloughing off a decision on this upgrader. Alberta and Saskatchewan are not happy because of that. The people in Lloydminster are suffering. When is the Government going to approve this package so this project can start and these much needed jobs can be put in place?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been continually told about the report on the risk assessment of this project which was signed days before the Liberal leadership convention and could have consequences for the country which involve a very high risk. We have already explained to the House that it was only prudent to look at the terms of this agreement which was signed in a highly political environment by the former Government. We have also advised that the risk assessment has been completed and is being studied by our Department. Meetings are scheduled to take place shortly.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

HOUSING PROJECT IN SACKVILLE, N.S.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Minister of Labour who is responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. CMHC contracted for the building of at least 23 shell houses on Howland Crescent in Sackville, Nova Scotia, in about 1972. Due to the faulty and poorly inspected construction permitted by CMHC, these roofs are now so rotten that the present owners must replace them.

Will the Minister tell the House why CMHC and he have declined to bear the cost of replacing these roofs and why he has declined to send a report to the local member of the legislature which he promised to do half a year ago?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to correct the Hon. Member, CMHC did not contract to build the houses, but provided loans to the shell housing program. CMHC did an inspection for value because of the mortgages ensured by the mortgage insurance fund. The builder built the buildings.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, CMHC has contacted half of the individuals, has inspected the homes, has offered to provide additional RRAP money, and has offered to assist in refinancing the mortgages even to the point where CHMC will attempt to capitalize the interest so that there is not an undue burden on those homeowners.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of 35, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, December 11, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Certain petitions presented by Hon. Members for York West (Mr. Marchi), Laval (Mr. Ricard), Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), Skeena (Mr. Fulton), Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry), Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), and Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Vézina) by filing with the Clerk of the House also meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR CORRECTION OF STATEMENT BY MR. DE COTRET

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of Question Period. Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) would like to correct a statement made while giving an answer rather than mislead the House. The Financial Administration Act specifically states that if a directive is given to the Crown corporation the House must table that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. This is not a question of order, this is a matter for debate or opinion.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a question of order. I take it the Hon. Member disagrees with the validity of the answer of the Minister. He has the right to use the "Late Show" for that, as he knows. This is not a question of order.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I then rise on a question of privilege. He did mislead the House. Perhaps he would like to correct it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the Hon. Member that he does have the option of using the "Late Show" if he does not like the answer he got. If he is now raising a question of privilege in an attempt to make a comment about another Member, I would remind him that I cannot hear that as a matter of privilege. I, therefore, suggest he avail himself of the procedures of the "Late Show".

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader what business he proposes for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray) for asking that question. As Hon. Members know, we are approaching the time when the House would normally adjourn for the Christmas recess. Therefore, we have a very ambitious legislative program, with which I know Hon. Members will want to co-operate. As Hon. Members know, we are now dealing with a motion with respect to Bill C-74, the Representation Act, 1985. Following that we will continue with report stage of Bill C-70, the family allowance Bill. That will be followed by Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors in the CCB.

There are also other budget related Bills in committee and, in the interest of the taxpayers of Canada, I am anxious to have progress made on these items of legislation, which include Bill C-82, with respect to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, and Bill C-84 with respect to the Income Tax Act. I think it is in the interest of the people of Canada that we make progress on those Bills before Christmas.

We must also deal with Bill C-83, which we have debated at second reading, which deals with the tax rebate discounting legislation and legislates charges to be made by tax discounters to taxpayers who use their services. That Bill should be in place from the beginning of the year to protect the people of Canada.

There are also items of very considerable social significance which I think the people of Canada would like us to complete before we adjourn for the Christmas recess. I refer to the legislation to amend the Divorce Act, the Divorce Corollory Relief Act, and the Family Order Enforcement Assistance Act. On each of these Bills there has been substantial and good input in committee and on the floor of the House. This is very important legislation which is being awaited.

There is also legislation in committee which is to be reported out. I commend to the House and to the Opposition House Leaders legislation with respect to the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act to do away with the problems with respect to gating and keeping dangerous convicts out of society. There is also important legislation with respect to the RCMP which is to modernize and make more effective and more in the interests of the Canadian public the procedures and provisions with respect to the operation of that very distinguished national police force.

Perhaps we can complete this business by the end of this week.

Mr. Blaikie: We will never get it done if you keep talking.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to point out as well, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to have the reform package put into effect for the time when the House resumes sitting. There is also, Mr. Speaker, item No. 59 on the Order Paper which is in my name. If there are any additional items which we think we can accomplish before Christmas, I will certainly advise the House and the House Leaders of the opposition Parties.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Government House Leader to give us his priorities. If he has any sense of realism about the operation of the House, surely he will set forth a clear-cut realistic set of priorities which we can consider.

In that connection I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether he realizes that the current excessive and abusive use of closure and time allocation is poisoning the atmosphere of the House, is undermining the role of Parliament, and is not making it easy for progress to be made.

I also want to ask him if he will tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that to prepare family allowance cheques on the basis of a law that has not passed, and may not pass by the time the House adjourns, is an abuse of Parliament and is contemptuous of Parliament. Finally—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. I am sure all these matters are important to all the House Leaders, but it seems to me that this is beginning to be a meeting of House Leaders on the floor of the House as opposed to a discussion of the business that is actually scheduled, which is what we are supposed to do at this time. I, therefore, recognize, for the moment, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much time. I would acknowledge that the package of the Government House Leader is ambitious, but manageable in certain circumstances within a reasonable period of time. I would like to ask him, however, if, in an effort to try to accommodate his desire to see progress made on all of those matters, he might be prepared to respond to two questions. First, he knows that there have been some requests from this side of the House for certain changes to legislation which he has already mentioned. Does he know whether the Government is prepared to accept changes, for example, to the Family Allowances Act along the lines of what was requested?

• (1520)

The second question is of equal importance and can be dealt with immediately, I believe. He will recall that approximately a week and a half ago I wrote to him with regard to the problems of the sale of de Havilland to Boeing Corporation. I asked if he would consult with his cabinet colleagues and perhaps respond to me. The request that I made on behalf of my colleagues was that a committee be structured now to review all of the relevant documents pertaining to that sale.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With great respect to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I must call him to order as I did with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). It seems to me that these are not questions about business scheduled for debate but in fact a House Leaders meeting on the floor of the House of Commons. May I suggest that these matters should be discussed by the House Leaders somewhere else?

Mr. Deans: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to discuss them somewhere else. Do you have any place in mind?

I asked the same question last week. We are near the end of this session. All I want to know is if the committee will be struck and, if we have an answer to that, will the documents be forthcoming? If they are, I am sure that we could deal quickly with much of the legislative package.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, since we are entering the festive season I will not respond in the way I might at another time. I simply say to the Hon. Member that he must have been listening to questions and answers during the course of Question Period over the last week and a half when he has asked precisely those questions. I think those questions have had adequate response.

I find it difficult, when the Hon. Member writes me a letter and then stands up the same day on the floor of the House of Commons to ask one of my colleagues the same question, whether I am supposed to respond or—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must also interrupt the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) as I did the other two House Leaders. It seems very clear to me that it is not a discussion about what is scheduled but a discussion about what might be scheduled, which is more appropriate for a House Leaders meeting.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just want to conclude by saying to the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition that we have attempted in all instances to have a very full and long debate. We have provided ample opportunity for virtually every Member of the Opposition to participate in legislation.

When I listed the items I did, I would like to say to him that naturally we would like to pass the legislation I listed, but I am prepared to discuss the matter with him in order to see whether we can make progress before December 20 or to see what steps will have to be taken if we do not reach December 20 without making good progress on these pieces of legislation. Those questions are in the hands of the Opposition and we are prepared to be as co-operative as ever.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, since Bill C-74, the redistribution Bill, is primarily a parliamentary matter and it is parliamentary tradition to proceed by way of agreement on these matters, would the House Leader take this opportunity now to seek unanimous consent to withdraw the time allocation motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this tradition was not followed by the previous Government. All I can say with respect to this legislation is that I have taken more steps by allowing pre-consideration before I even introduced the Bill last spring. This fall, I allowed additional witnesses and an extension of time.

The strange thing about this Bill is that I responded to the request of the Liberal Party and made the amendments that were requested by their spokesperson, the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). Now they have the audacity to stand up and say that those amendments which I brought in because of their request are the reason they want this Bill to go back for further consideration. What hypocrisy.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

REVIEW OF HOUSING PROGRAMS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF LABOUR

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to describe to the House this afternoon new initiatives resulting from a review of the housing policies of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which represent a national direction for housing solutions. These changes in direction are the result of an extensive process of policy review and consultation with interested groups, the private sector and the provinces.

Shifting needs and priorities require that Governments re-examine their policies, however comfortable it may be to continue with the status quo.

The housing programs now in place have succeeded in adding considerably to the stock of housing available to Canadians in almost all income groups. At the same time, many of these programs have become enormously expensive and, while expanding the housing options of middle-income Canadians, have had an unacceptably modest success in helping those lower income Canadians who must look to Government for affordable housing.

On assuming responsibility for CMHC, I asked that current policies be reviewed to determine their effectiveness in dealing with the major areas of need. I wanted this re-examination to draw on the experience of all Canadians who work with CMHC to deliver housing, build and market the housing, and receive housing, and all those who have acquired an expertise in the field of social housing policy.

In January of this year I released a consultation paper setting out what were seen as the three main challenges facing us. Those challenges were: the need to establish clear objectives for federal housing policies and programs; the establishment of clear priorities for federal housing expenditures; and the requirement that programs achieve our objectives in a cost efficient manner.

I met extensively with social housing and rehabilitation groups, industry and mortgage lending associations and organizations representing the poor, the elderly, the disabled and aboriginal peoples. They all participated in the consultations. The consultation process was open to any group or individual who wished to participate. We have had the benefit of many views and perspectives. I thank and acknowledge those groups for their contributions, for their dedication to the Government and to providing social housing, and the time and effort they spent during the consultation process.

At the same time we were engaged in intensive discussions with the provinces. If the provinces and the federal Government work together and pool resources, we will be able to eliminate areas of duplication and a greater proportion of Canadians will benefit from the programs established.

My Parliamentary Secretary and I met personally with some 21 groups active in housing. In October, my staff and senior federal housing officials met with some 15 groups. I received over 300 written responses, including 50 briefs and 250 letters. Furthermore, over the past year, over 70 federal-provincial meetings on housing have been held. This includes two conferences of federal, provincial and territorial housing Ministers. I also meet bilaterally with each of my provincial and territorial counterparts.

As well, I benefited from a review of federal housing programs carried out by a task force set up by my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). Many of its conclusions were similar to ours and are reflected in the new policies. The social housing directions I will now describe are based upon the points of consensus which emerged from these consultations. The major changes relate to the mix of social housing programs and those assisted under them, to the participation of the provinces, and to the role of co-operative housing.

First, the federal Government will provide a new package of social housing programs with all assistance directed to households in need, that is, all those who are unable to obtain affordable, suitable and adequate accommodation in the private market. This represents a significant improvement over previous programs, under which only a third of the total units provided went to households in need. This will enable us to reduce the level of outstanding need by less than 2 per cent per year.

There will be two packages of social housing programs—one for urban areas and one for rural areas. The package for urban areas will include three programs—a new non-profit housing program, a rent supplement program and improved renovation assistance.

The new non-profit housing program will be used to increase the supply of affordable units. Unlike the Section 56.1 program, which is funded through a reduction in the mortgage interest rate to 2 per cent, assistance under the new program will be based upon the difference between project costs and revenues generated by the application of the rent to income scale. Assistance will be directed to households in need.

The rent to income scale will provide, as it does now, that tenants will not pay more than 25 per cent of their income for rent. A rent supplement program will be provided to subsidize rents in regions where an adequate supply of accommodation is available, but it will be targeted to households which cannot afford that accommodation. The current program, which has proved cost effective where used, is being substantially expanded. We are making a number of significant changes in federal renovation assistance. The assistance is designed to bring substandard housing up to minimum health and safety standards. The present approach in designating areas under the urban program is being eliminated, and assistance will be available and targeted to households in need, without geographic limit.

There are significant alterations to the rental RRAP program. To prevent excessive rate increases and the displacement of people who need help, as has often happened under the present program design, assistance will be increased from an average of $3,500 to $12,000 per unit. Assistance levels will depend on the relationship between the rents of the property involved and the local market rent. Assistance will be directed to the older, lower-cost housing stock occupied largely by low-income households. A new renovation plan to assist the disabled will raise maximum funding from $1,500 to $5,000. RRAP in rural areas will remain unchanged, as will the home ownership-rental component of the rural and native housing program. We will also be undertaking a demonstration program in rural Canada to provide up-front funding for materials, with the clients or communities providing the labour.

The particular mix of these programs to be used in various areas of the country will be based upon an assessment of the housing needs which must be addressed, the availability of accommodation in the private market and the specific requirements of groups with special housing needs. This will ensure that the strategies followed will be cost effective and flexible.

In my consultations I received strong representations calling for the continuation of some income mixing to avoid low-income ghettoes and the community resistance they may generate. I want to make clear that directing assistance to households in need does not mean a return to the discredited versions of public housing. The definition of those in need is broad enough to allow for a considerable range of income groups to be served. It allows us to continue to assist the working poor, as well as senior citizens and families on welfare.

Also, under the new arrangements with the provinces which I will be outlining, there is the possibility of income mixing beyond those in need, although in such cases federal subsidies would not apply. An emphasis on smaller projects, plus the income mixing features of the new co-op and rent supplement programs, will continue to facilitate the integration of assisted households into the community.

The second major departure in social housing strategy relates to the participation of the provinces. To increase the resources available and to reduce duplication, we are prepared to negotiate a package with any interested province which would allow the provinces and the federal Government to work in a closer partnership. I must emphasize that this does not represent a transfer of federal responsibility for social housing to the provinces. To improve efficiency, we are prepared to agree to provincial delivery under certain specific conditions.

Increased provincial financial contributions, ranging from 25 per cent to 50 per cent, will be required. In addition, a joint three-year planning of social housing strategies will be undertaken to ensure that federal housing objectives and accountability requirements are met. Present delivery groups such as private non-profits, co-ops and native groups will continue to be involved. I expect some provinces to participate in this arrangement. Where provinces wish status quo, the federal Government will continue to be responsible for delivery.

The third significant change from the current social housing strategy is in the area of co-operative housing. The federal Government has been instrumental in fostering the co-operative housing sector. However, while co-operative housing provides security of tenure for some low-income households, its main objective has been to provide security of tenure for moderate and middle-income households as an alternative to home ownership. The measures we are introducing, which are being developed in close consultation with the co-operative housing foundation, recognize these two objectives and provide a level of assistance intended to help that group of people with incomes above those in core need that are unable, through no fault of their own, to afford home ownership. This will be achieved through a new co-operative housing program based on index-linked mortgages and subsidies. Some units will also be eligible for rent supplements to enable low-income Canadians to enjoy the benefits of co-operative living.

I should like to talk about two other areas in which we are taking new directions—market housing and housing quality. The objective of the federal market housing policy will be to assist in developing a climate of stability to allow builders to respond to the demand for family homes for ownership. We will not be introducing programs to stimulate home ownership artificially or the private rental housing market. Should future circumstances compel us to consider such measures, the Government would act only after consultations with industry and the provinces. We will be working to assist Canadians to finance their homes by promoting the availability of stable, long-term mortgages and access to high ratio mortgage financing. We expect mortgage-backed securities to permit longer-term mortgages, and we will continue to provide public mortgage insurance as a means of providing high ratio loans.

I believe there is a clear need to continue federal leadership in the role of housing research and development while improving co-ordination of research initiatives with the provinces and the industry. I propose to set up a housing research committee to co-ordinate federal, provincial and industry involvement in housing research. Also, options for improving CMHC's inspection service and the materials evaluation service will be reviewed.

These and other initiatives will enable the federal Government to use the present level of funding to concentrate on helping the one million Canadian households which do not enjoy acceptable affordable housing. While the private market, if permitted, can provide most Canadians with comfortable, quality housing, all levels of Government must be prepared to work together and join their resources to assist those Canadians who do not have the income to secure that type of housing.

I think the process just concluded has been useful and effective. It is important that our housing policies be based on a genuine and realistic consensus as to what can be provided with the resources available through Government. I am willing to meet again, after an appropriate period, with the groups and individuals involved in the consultations to discuss and evaluate the success of the new direction we have taken.

I believe these changes are necessary and represent a fair allocation of housing dollars among competing interests. I look forward to continued contact with all of those who, by providing me with their ideas, have contributed to this national direction for housing solutions. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank those individuals who have assisted me greatly over this period of time.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we have just found out today that a Minister is quite prepared, like Pontius Pilate, to wash his hands of the whole issue of social housing for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised that the Minister would say he did hold consultations. He even claimed he was party to such consultations—

[English]

"My Parliamentary Secretary and I met personally with some 21 groups active in housing." When I was in British Columbia about three weeks ago, I met with nine groups in a day. The Minister is presenting an extremely major document which will change the face of housing policy across this country after meeting with only 21 groups?

Mr. McDermid: How many were national groups?

Ms. Copps: Let us hear about the kind of consultation the Minister had with the handicapped. What kind of consultation did he have with those people? Even though our phones were down for one of the two hours I was trying to prepare my response, I managed to contact a representative from COPO, with which I am sure the Minister is familiar because it is a coalition which represents provincial disabled organizations across this country. Was Mr. Lorrie Beachill contacted by the Government? Yes, officials got in touch with him in November asking him to consult with them the next day. When he was unavailable that particular day, they never met with him.

Mr. McKnight: Not true.

Ms. Copps: The Minister states that is not true. In fact, I spoke today with Mr. Lorrie Beachill and he told me he was not contacted.

Mr. McKnight: On October 24 we met with the coalition of provincial organizations of the handicapped.

Ms. Copps: In fact, he was in Toronto and unable to meet with the officials and was never contacted again. Susan Kitchener, of government relations with the Ontario March of Dimes was not contacted even though the Government trumpets its actions in the area of changes in housing for the handicapped. What the Minister did not tell the House was that it was this self same Government which cut back the CMHC funds which had been available by regulation to the handicapped when they used to be treated like every other citizen. They had the capacity under past Liberal Governments to qualify for funds in the same way as any other housing organization but they were gutted by the Minister and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the current and past program was replaced with a $1,500 subsidy which they are now talking about increasing to $5,000.

We know at this point in time from the figures which came out today that we are at a four-year low in terms of vacancy rates. What the Minister has produced is essentially a housing policy for developers. Let us look at the increase for RRAP funding on a unit basis. What the Minister did not tell the people was that as a result of the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Deputy Ministers' cut-backs, the RRAP funding was gutted by 25 per cent by this Government. Now the Minister is suggesting that on rental units, the amount of money available will be increased to $12,000 per unit, which presumably will go to benefit the landlords. Pure and simple mathematics will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if we are going to have $12,000 allocated per unit and the Budget is cut by 25 per cent, thousands fewer Canadians will be able to take advantage of the RRAP program as a direct result not only of the Minister's announcement today but because of the other housing cut-backs.

The Minister talks about the new relationship with provincial Governments. We know that the Government is on the verge of signing an agreement with the Province of British Columbia in the area of social housing. Let us take a look at the record, and what this Minister is prepared to do in terms of passing the buck to provincial Governments. In 1979 the federal Government gave British Columbia control of senior citizens' housing. The track record of the Government of the Province of British Columbia in 1974 was that 1,300 units were put on the market. In 1978, 1,700 units were put on the market. In 1979, it shrunk to 600 units. In 1980 it was 250 units. In 1983 it was 350 units. If we look at the records of the provinces, and at the amount of money spent in 1984 on a province-by-province basis per capita for housing, we find the two worst producers at that time were the Province of British Columbia and the former Conservative Government of Ontario. That was at a time when the soon-to-be-appointed President of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation was the Minister of Housing. We saw the social credit Government in British Columbia spend an abysmal $13 per person on housing in 1984. The Government of Ontario spent a paltry $19 per person.

I understand the Minister did not want to announce the appointment of the new president of CMHC this week and that it may be coming next week, but the very same person who had the power to reduce the expenditure to $19 per capita in the Province of Ontario is going to now head the corporation which will be negotiating with the provinces the transfer of responsibility. That will mean places like British Columbia, which has no commitment to social housing, which does not believe in social housing, which is against it, will be able to negotiate the transfer of those responsibilities.

The Minister attempts to pass this as a sop by saying that for the first three years there will be a conditional agreement and there will be discussion between the provinces and the federal Government. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I was in British Columbia, the message was loud and clear from the provincial Government of British Columbia: "Hands off social housing". There was a time in this country under previous Liberal Governments when the development of social housing stock was a responsibility. But with this document, in one fell swoop the Minister is saying that we will attack the problems of the market-place by rent supplements and by hand-overs based on the difference between the cost of a project and the income of a project.

The Minister suggested that is not going to lead to ghettoization but if you were a project manager, Mr. Speaker, and the amount of money you will get from the Government is directly dependent upon the income levels of those people in the units, obviously, the lower income you can find for the unit, the more Government subsidy you will see. We will see a return to the kind of ghettoization which resulted from a national housing policy put in place in the 1960s which saw all low-income people lumped together in one building, in one subsidy, in one development. We can look at Regent Park in Toronto. We will be creating more and more Regent Parks at a time when non-profit organizations and social housing organizations will not have the capacity to develop the kind of base budgets which have allowed this country to accrue a certain level of housing stock over the last 25 years.

If there is one thing of which this country can be proud and has been proud it is that we have been world leaders in the development of new approaches to housing. We have not wanted to stick all the poor people on the same block. We have believed in a mix of people and we have funded mortgages which have allowed church organizations, municipalities and non-profit groups to develop projects which can integrate into the community those people of low, medium and higher incomes. We have done this because we believe it is important to have that kind of integratioin. With this policy, we will see in one fell swoop the kind of ghettoization about which even the Minister made reference in his speech.

The Minister said that a number of organizations spoke to him about the difficulties inherent in the kind of policy that he is now attempting to introduce. He suggests that he received strong representations calling for the continuation of some income mixing to avoid low-income ghettos and the community resistance they might generate. However, he provides a caveat to that. He says that the definition of those in need is broad enough to allow for a considerable range of income groups to be considered. The Minister is an intelligent man and he recognizes that this policy will lead to ghettoization. The Minister suggests that provinces will have the opportunity of allowing other people to get involved in projects, people who may not specifically meet the Government's income-mix requirements. However, he also says that in such cases, federal subsidies will not apply. In other words, unless every future housing program across the country is directed specifically toward the ghettoized kind of Regent Park mentality on which we gave up a decade ago, it will not be eligible for federal subsidies.

I would like to know from the Minister the definition of need. When he dealt with the definition of need in the RRAP program, he said that anyone earning over $13,000 was no longer eligible for RRAP funding. That was his definition of need six months ago. In fact, I believe the Minister should have tabled those requirements with the statement he has made.

The Minister also talked about making different determinations in different areas of the country depending upon the vacancy rate. According to the most recent, hot-off-the-wire story from November 20, 1985, vacancy rates have dropped to a four-year low across the country. In the Chicoutimi-Jonquière region, the vacancy rate is 3.2 per cent. In Edmonton, it is 4.4 per cent; in Windsor, it is .7 per cent, in Ottawa, it is .9 per cent; in St. Catharines, it is .3 per cent. I would like the Minister to table in the House a list of the areas across the country in which he believes there is an adequate housing supply because those particular designations have not been made in his statement.

What most frightens me is the suggestion made by the Minister that this program will now be targeted only to those who need it most and that the passing over of responsibility from the federal to the provincial Governments is a positive thing. In some provinces, this will be the case. In the Province of Ontario, I know the Liberal Government will use its housing money in a wise fashion but I also know that for the last 43 years, there was a Conservative Government in Ontario that did not believe in social housing and wanted to direct all subsidies toward developers. With the introduction of this document which is clearly focused on rent subsidies and specific income unit supplements, the Minister is saying to the developers that they will have a heyday because the Government will give them hundreds of dollars per unit in rent supplements for those people who cannot afford to pay.

There are groups and organizations which have developed a policy for national housing. They have created projects with perhaps only 25 per cent low-income residents. I can think of First Place and St. John's Place in my own riding, the kind of housing organizations which deliberately decided to have a mix of those people who were needy, those who were less needy and those who could afford to pay market rents. Those projects will no longer be viable as a result of this program because the funding from the Ministry will be directed only toward those occupants who are in the low-income category. Quite clearly, that spells the death of social housing and the development of a national housing stock, something which has been a hallmark for Canada.

Over the last six months, the Minister has denied that he was meeting with the provincial Governments in an attempt to pass off responsibility. We have seen that that is exactly what he intended to do as he indicates right here in this document. We know that British Columbia is about to sign an agreement. Further, we know that there are other provinces across the country that are looking at signing agreements in the very near future, agreements which will spell the end of a national housing policy.

The Minister has made a differentiation between the funding available for rural and urban Canadians and for that I applaud him. However, I think the Minister should further recognize that there are provinces in this country that cannot, on their own, afford to develop the kind of housing policy that was made available because successive Liberal Governments believed that the national Government had a responsibility to balance inequities from coast to coast. Does the Minister really believe that the Province of Newfoundland has the financial resources to carry on the kind of housing program that would have occurred under federal jurisdiction? That is simply not the case, and I say that this document is a sell-out of 25 years of housing policy which has created not great housing, not even good housing but better housing for thousands of Canadians who could not afford housing and who will not be able to afford it now because the money will be going to the developers and to those people who least need the help.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, over the past year and a bit, we have been able to observe that the Hon. Minister has indeed worked very hard on the housing end of his portfolio. I do credit him with taking his responsibility very seriously. There are some good things in this report and I will note some of them later. However, I am disappointed in the report as a whole.

The Minister gives no estimate of cost except by indicating in one line that there will be no more money provided than there was in this past Budget, the low point for housing efforts on the part of the federal Government for many, many years. He gives no indication of the number of units that will be provided. He talks about the million people for whom the private market does not provide but does not at all ensure that his program is intended to provide for all of them. In fact, his presentation appears to be an attempt to defend the private market with its great boondoggles over the past 30 or so years in which not only the federal Government but the Ontario Conservative Government participated heavily. Things like the MURBs, the assisted rental projects and the limited dividend projects were all programs for impoverished developers like Trizec, Cadillac Fairview and Meridian.

The tenants know where the money went. The billions of dollars went for housing subsidies and it did not go to the co-operative movement, the non-profit housing or low-income tenants. At a time like this when it is reported that the poor as a proportion of the Canadian population have increased to one-sixth of our population, there is to be no increase in the money supplied for housing, no assurance that there will be more social housing provided and no program for indicating which portion of what the Minister calls the core poor will be helped. He will use the poor, though, as an excuse for cutting back on certain aspects of the social housing program which have been extremely valuable to the life of cities like Toronto which I know and other cities which I have visited.

• (1600)

He pats himself on the back for his consultative approach. Although it was an energetic approach involving a good deal of hard work, it was not consultative. It was elitist; it was secretive. It may have been clever market research reaching out to find out which individuals or which leaders of which groups might agree with the things that he chose to do, but he carefully prevented the groups from being able to consult effectively with them. He would say: "Now, I might do this for you but don't tell anybody about it".

When my office tried to get some of the studies, some of the briefs which were presented, his office presented so-called legal objections. Somehow or another they were not able to send us those briefs. He has bragged about the confirming study that was done by his colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). My office has been trying since the summer to obtain a copy of that study from the Deputy Prime Minister's office and has been told that the study was not yet complete. Perhaps it was completed last night.

The program consists of doling out small amounts of help to some of the most obvious needy groups as an excuse for turning the very major part of responsibility for housing back to the private market, which has already failed in the matter. It is misleading to say that all the money spent in the past many years did not increase the housing stock and reduce the need very much when he knows full well that the reason was that it was not spent for the purpose of meeting need but for the purpose of increasing profits.

I am relieved to hear the Minister assure us at last that rent geared to income contributions of low income tenants will not be required to exceed 25 per cent. I hope he will be firm with the Minister responsible for housing in British Columbia who does not agree with that. However, he has not indicated what the areas will be which are adequate where there will be no social housing built or what the areas will be that are inadequate where there should be social housing built. He has not even indicated the criterion for that. He has not defined the areas. He has not said how long the supplements will last.

It is also good that he has decided to remove the limitation of urban RRAP so that the rehabilitation programs are no longer confined arbitrarily to certain city areas but can be extended as needed in the regions around the cities. However, there is the question of how he will control the use of the increased per unit allowance for rehabilitation. Who is going to get the money? Will it be non-profit groups, co-op groups or will it be speculative builders and renovators for profit? How is he going to carry out his intent of making sure that the low income tenants benefit by that program or, indeed, that the low income tenants are allowed to remain in the buildings once they have been upgraded?

The biggest disappointment in the Minister's statement is his blind and unexplained reliance on rent supplements. There is plenty of evidence which I would have thought the Minister would have reviewed to show that rent supplements are a failure as a way of providing social housing or as a way of providing for those who cannot, at present, afford decent housing. I want to refer not to a study by a New Democratic Government, not even to a study by a Liberal Government, but I want to refer to a study by a Conservative Government, the Government of Ontario, in 1981, whose Standing Committee on the Administration of Justice published the results of an exhaustive review of the programs in operation of the Ontario Housing Corporation. In this study they state, and I quote:

> The Ministry of Housing support a variety of public-assisted housing programs, but give preference to non-profit, co-operative housing and OHC owned and operated public housing. The current rent supplement program should be phased out gradually and the units should be replaced by others provided under alternative programs.

Their principal objection to rent supplements goes directly contrary, on the basis of their study, to the principal argument commonly used by the Minister and his associates in the building industry. Their principal objection is that it is not cost-effective. Their further objection is that there was no long-term investment achieved and no increase of housing stock. They do acknowledge that in the early 1970s with high vacancy rates and lower housing costs the increasing real incomes and relatively low inflation rates made this assumption seem not unreasonable. However, under present conditions, and likely future conditions, low income households are generally not experiencing real increases in income but their housing costs are rising in real terms.

The same finding is made by another Government which is not considered left-wing, that is, the Congress of the United States. In their study of rent supplement programs they came to the conclusion that the rent supplement programs resulted in higher rents than would have been charged without rent supplement. The premium, they said, averaged 24 per cent higher than comparable, unsubsidized housing in the market leading to an estimated $213 million extra cost to the public for the approximately 250,000 units provided in 1980.

Two Governments have done careful studies of rent supplements and found that they are a failure. Yet, the Minister is moving to use rent supplements, in part, as a substitute for what these other Governments have found worked better. It is very disappointing.

In regard to RRAP, one question that the Minister teases but does not answer, as I said before, is: Who will get the $3,500 to $12,000 per unit? There are in Ontario alone tens of thousands of rental apartment units jerry-built during the 1950s and 1960s with the get-rich-quick programs provided by the then federal Governments which now need rehabilitation. The question is: Will RRAP be used to rehabilitate those and so increase the equity of the landlords, or will the rehabilitation funds be used to enable the residents of those buildings to buy those buildings and operate them as non-profit or as co-operative corporations, which has been found to be the most efficient way to ensure maintenance?

The Minister has not explained what he means when he says that assistance level would depend on the relationship between the rents on the property involved and the local rent. In other words, is he saying that if the rents and the maintenance are low there will be no rehabilitation grant?

On the matter of the disabled, it is good that he has again raised the grants for disabled housing to compensate for the previous cut. However, the aid he gives should be directed to the needs of the disabled, and not, as in the case of COPOH, the needs of the non-disabled. That is to say there are things that are needed in houses of the disabled that are not needed in ordinary houses, such as paved driveways. The Minister should have some regard for how that money should be used.

The Minister has claimed that co-op housing has not met the low income target. In fact, co-op housing as designed by the several Governments, including provincial Conservative Governments, has provided, on average, for 40 per cent to 50 per cent of its units being rent geared to income, which is meeting the target group. They did not put them into ghettos of 100 per cent rent geared to income units. However, the terms the Minister tosses about with respect to moderate and middle income are so undefined that even when he talks about the working poor we do not know which groups he intends to benefit beyond the absolutely rock-bottom core welfare poor.

It is also disappointing that the Minister talks about consultation with the provinces and the industry but never about consultation with the tenants who have organized in many parts of this country, or non-profit and co-operative societies. In other words, he will sit in a back room with the builders, bankers and provincial colleagues and not seriously listen to those in the community who are making an effort to produce a great deal of low-cost housing.

This is a very disappointing report. The Minister says these initiatives are going to provide housing for the people who need it. However, he has not explained how it will meet the needs of one million people, which he admitted to. He also has not explained how his programs will in any way meet the need of the people in the Atlantic provinces where 80 per cent of the economy is dependent on Government expenditures. Housing is in desperately short supply there. This is an admission of failure by the Minister.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-59, an Act respecting Customs, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Vancouver, New Westminster and once again a large number from Surrey. They feel that the cut-back in family allowances and the tax increases are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as $500,000 in tax-free capital gains, greater RRSP deductions for high-income recipients, billions for the oil companies and the $1 billion bail-out of the banks. They ask and pray that we reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my first petition is signed by residents of Niagara Falls and they call upon the Government to rescind the Bill to partially deindex family allowances. It is a regressive step.

I have a similar petition signed by people from various parts of southern Ontario. I have as well a third petition whose operative clause is: "Wherefore the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases." These citizens of Canada reside in the City of Woodstock.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present even more petitions calling for the reinstatement of full indexation of family allowance payments and rescinding of unfair tax increases.

CONCERN FOR FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of 26 residents of Moncton, New Brunswick. They call upon Parliament to stop any moves to downgrade in any way the CN shops in Moncton, New Brunswick.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions from the Wynyard-Mozart area in my constituency which call upon the House of Commons to note that family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit. Even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. As well, changes to the tax system will reduce by $600 million annually the amount of money families have to spend on their children. They call on the Parliament of Canada to therefore reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases proposed in the last Budget.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of different petitions. The first one is headed: "Please help save baby bonus indexing". It calls upon the House of Commons to save Canada's family allowance program. It also voices displeasure at the federal Government's unfair taxation of ordinary Canadians while providing billions in hand-outs and loopholes to the rich. Quite a number of people from Edmonton and other points in Alberta have signed this.

The second petition is from the community of Hastings-Sunrise in my riding. It also calls on Members of the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

The next petition comes from Downsview, Ontario, Ward 5. They ask that the House of Commons restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. This budget measure will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987.

I have a further petition, if you will just bear with me on this, from Quebec and it says that—

[Translation]

Wherefore the undersigned humbly ask for the restoration of full indexation of family allowances and the repeal of unfair tax increases.

[English]

There is another one from Dorval, Quebec, which is similar and I will not—

Mr. Murphy: Read it for us, please.

Ms. Mitchell: —torture you with my French.

Finally, I have another petition from the Grandview community in Vancouver East which calls on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation and deplores the other budget measures which are so hard on families, particularly on children.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions on the issue of the Government reneging on its election promise when it decided to deindex family allowances. It is interesting that the petition, from the City of Thompson, Manitoba, was circulated by the senior citizens of that city, indicating the appreciation they had for the people of that city who helped them to protect their pensions. They wish that Canadians would do the same.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Further petitions without speeches.

Mr. Murphy: I also have a petition signed by residents of the City of Flin Flon who ask that the Government reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases in the May 23 Budget.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): On a different matter I have a petition signed by a number of workers in Manitoba who protest the Government's decision to calculate pension benefits and severance pay in determining UIC payments. It is very hard, especially for older Canadians, to get jobs and they need to keep their pensions and severance pay without being penalized.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Moncton who protest the Government's partial deindexation of family allowances. They ask that these allowances be fully indexed to the cost of living. They point out that 16.2 per cent of families in New Brunswick live below the low-income cut-off line and that all low and middle-income families will be hard hit by this deindexation. As in duty-bound your petitioners will ever pray that this Government will come to its senses.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two series of petitions from a group of senior citizens in Prince Albert, as well as people from Dartmouth, Windsor, Halifax and Liverpool, Nova Scotia. Both petitions call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

The other series of petitions come from Downsview, Ontario, as well as from New Brunswick, mostly from Fredericton. They call upon the House of Commons to restore full indexation of family allowances and child tax credits. They suggest that $55 million will be taken from family benefits by 1987.

• (1620)

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of British Columbia who are very troubled about the procedures regarding radiation monitoring in the waters adjacent to the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They wish that the results of these radiation monitorings would be made public. They, therefore, after outlining their concern in much more detail, request the House to hold a public inquiry, before the present agreement is renegotiated, with power to investigate the above concerns about the said test range at Nanoose Bay and to make recommendations thereon. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions on the matter of family allowances. One is from residents of Calgary who argue that the proposed cuts in the family allowance unfairly bear on women and children and are particularly unfair in view of the increased tax benefits being given to the rich such as through the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech instead of a summary.

Mr. Heap: They therefore pray, Mr. Speaker, that the House rescind these laws.

I have another petition to the same effect, which I will not read, from citizens of Nova Scotia.

I have another petition which is in a different language, Mr. Speaker. It says that the undersigned ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit as this Budget matter will take away $55 million from family benefits by 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a speech. Does the Hon. Member wish to conclude with a summary of the petition as opposed to reading it?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I was only reading the actual petition, not the "whereases". It is simply the request of the petitioners—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that what is permitted is a brief, brief summary and perhaps a short recitation of the petition actually prayed for, not the "whereases", the concerns, or the comments.

Mr. Heap: The "whereases" were not in it, Mr. Speaker, only the petition. Could I say, on a personal note that this is very important to me since I have just had my eleventh grandchild.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, would the Hon. Member please resume his seat?

Ms. Copps: Seek the unanimous consent of the House. It is his eleventh grandchild.

Mr. Speaker: Did I understand that the Hon. Member for Spadina was trying to seek unanimous consent to wish his grandchild well? Consider it done.

CONCERN FOR FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the action taken by Moncton residents who are very concerned about the current situation at the Moncton CN shops. The petitioners decry the inertia of the Government and request that the Minister do something to protect the jobs of the shop workers.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a number of petitions which I have received on the issue of family allowances. The first one is from citizens of Toronto and ridings which include Don Mills, Willowdale and Rexdale. These petitioners point out that the deindexing of the universal family allowance and massive cut-backs in public commitment to child benefits are an attack on women and children, especially single-parent mothers. Accordingly, the petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance, and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of Tillsonburg, Simcoe, and Brantford, also on the subject of family allowance. It is a similar petition so I will not go into the substance, but these petitioners also call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the other tax increases.

[Translation]

Third, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from Port Dover residents who request that family allowances be fully indexed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions signed by a large number of residents in the area of Kingston. They call for full indexation of the family allowance and point out that the cut-backs in child benefits on top of the sales tax changes and increases constitute an extraordinary burden on middle and low income households.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition from residents of Ottawa who request that family allowances be fully indexed—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All the petitions are on the same subject. I take it the Member knows that she should simply indicate that she has other petitions and that should be the end of it. It should take her no more than about five seconds.

Ms. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While some of these petitions are on the same subject matter, they are different petitions. The next petition is also on family allowance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. McDonald: I am just going to say where it is from.

Mr. Speaker: They are all on the same subject matter. I think the Member has admitted that. Could she please be as brief as possible.

Ms. McDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The next petition is from petitioners in the riding of Rosedale. I also have a petition on the family allowance from residents of Hamilton.

Mr. Malone: Thank you. Next.

Ms. McDonald: I am being very brief. I cannot help it if we have a lot of petitions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. McDonald: The next one, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please! The Hon. Member knows that a petition filed with the Clerk at the table has exactly the same effect. I, therefore, suggest that she may wish to file with the table the remainder of her petitions. Order, please.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was provoked by these people.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I, therefore, suggest that she may wish to file the rest of her petitions with the table.

I wish to inform the House that, because of the ministerial statement, today's sitting will be extended by 44 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.44 o'clock p.m.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on October 17, 1985, I tabled the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. Today I would like to move that that report be concurred in.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am naturally very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this report. I know that the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments worked very hard to prepare this document which is now before the House. I think the members of that committee are to be complimented on their efforts. There were two reports made on the same day, Mr. Speaker, and we are now dealing with concurrence in one of those reports. I think it is commendable that the committee could make two reports on the same day.

I intend, Mr. Speaker, to hold the floor and discuss this at length until we have a message from the other House. I will be pleased to discuss the things which the Patent Act goes into. The Patent Act requires a register of patent agents on which are to be mentioned the names of all the persons entitled to represent applicants in the presentation of and application for patents before the patent office.

It is very important that we have, in Canada, a patent system which does not allow for interference with the very important Canadian patents which exist, and also does not allow for interference in things which are going to take place later this evening. I want to take some time to discuss this. I am pleased that my hon. friend has seen fit to move concurrence and give me a chance to debate it. Had we moved immediately to the vote the bells may have rung. I want to take this opportunity to thank him for being so observant as to give me the opportunity to debate this very important matter of the Patent Act until there is an interruption.

● (1630)

I would point out that prior to 1923, any person appointed in writing by a patent applicant could represent that applicant in the presentation and prosecution of a patent application. There was a subsequent change and the committee has quite properly pointed out that according to Section 57 of the Patent Act, it was enacted that:

A register of attorneys shall be kept in the Patent Office on which shall be entered the names of all persons entitled to represent applicants in the presentation and prosecution of applications for patents or in other business before the Patent Office.

That is a very important change that this Parliament brought into effect in order to protect—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Parliamentary Secretary is going to insist on reading the Patent Act, he has an obligation to at least be entertaining.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have made an effort to be entertaining on easier things than the Patent Act. This does strain one's credibility. I do not have the same familiarity with the Patent Act as my hon. friend across the way. I am working my way through this as a lawyer who was recently defrocked of his Queen's Counsel by Premier Peterson. We all come to the House in sorrow these days. We used to practise as representatives of the Queen, another representative of whom will be coming through the door in a minute. Now we must practise without that honour. Since the matter has been brought up, the Hon. Member who moved concurrence in this report was also a Queen's Counsel. He has now been defrocked by the Premier of Ontario and he paid good money for that gown.

When we practised law we often thought about the Patent Act and Section 23. I suppose that on occasion we were frightened that we would be asked to advise on it.

In any event, once we got through with that Section of the Patent Act, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments dealt with the provisions of the United Kingdom legislation which is referred to on page 2 of this very important report.

That committee did not take its obligations lightly. The then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who I believe was Mrs. Erola at that time—late of this House and late of the riding of Nickel Belt—replied that her Department was advised by the Department of Justice that Sections 153 to 156 of the Patent Rules were validly enacted pursuant to Section 12(1)(a) of the Patent Act and were intra vires the Act. I would point out that the relevant correspondence is appended to this report. Members opposite could be sitting in another committee meeting instead of hassling me. Then they would have something else to concur in.

Page 4 of the Report contains some items that should be taken into account. The executive is now asserting—

Mr. Blaikie: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has only one oratorical equal, the Hon. Roy MacLaren, the former Member of this House who was equally entertaining.

Mr. Lewis: You have said a lot of nasty things to me in your days here but that is about the worst. That is close to a question of privilege. I am not sure that I could wear one of those double-breasted suits. I am waiting for them to come back into style.

The Hon. Roy MacLaren wrote a book about the new liberalism. I think the subtitle is "Life with 40 Members in the Dark". Roy has gone on to greater things. He was a good colleague and ran in the last election, but ran into a little difficulty as did many of his colleagues. They were here yesterday, wearing carnations. I should state for the record that there was a party yesterday for those who won and those who lost. Unfortunately, there were more there who lost than won. It is a party with which we, as colleagues, did not interfere. There was no loud clanging of bells during that party and I do not think you will find that there will be loud clanging of bells tonight either.

In any event, before my hon. friend interrupted, I was dealing with paragraph 4 of the report. It states:

While the Executive is now asserting that authority for the rules under Report is to be found in Section 12(1)(a) of the Act, the Committee notes its position has not been consistent in the past.

Let me talk about consistency. We have seen the Hon. Members of the Liberal Party decrying the sale of de Havilland. At the same time, the Premier of Ontario wants to sell UTDC. In this morning's Globe and Mail one can see the comments from Tuesday's Hansard in the Ontario Legislature where Ontario Premier David Peterson, speaking to the proposed sale of UTDC—

Ms. Copps: UTDC was a P.C. boondoggle and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: We never had any boondoggles when we were in Government. We just had successes in Ontario. It is nice to have the Hon. Member with us after a distinguished career in the Ontario Legislature. I am just trying to think of what distinguished it.

I was going to say that on June 10, 1948—

Mr. Foster: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the Hon. Member clarify if this is the first time in history that the Government is filibustering a report like we are dealing with this afternoon?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Simcoe North, on debate.

Mr. Lewis: That is too much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today we were accused of cutting off debate and rushing legislation through Parliament. Earlier today the Liberals and NDP said that we are choking off debate in Parliament. Now we are debating. You cannot have it both ways. Either you want to debate something or get at the business of the day. Some Members of the House would do well to bear with me as we discuss the Patent Act.

I want to remind the House that in 1954 the Governor in Council purported to revoke the Register of Patent Rules, 1948 of his own authority. That was quite a constitutional problem because not everyone wanted him to revoke those rules. However, the report goes on to state:

> These Rules were made by the Commissioner pursuant to the regulation-making power delegated to him by Section 15(2) of the Patent Act and can only be revoked by the Commissioner. While the approval of the Governor in Council is required for the making, amendment of revocation of regulations under Section 15(2), this is not to say that the Governor in Council may substitute himself for Parliaments's delegate. If authority is wanted for this proposition, it can be found in section 26(4) of the Interpretation Act—

● (1640)

This is where we get to the power:

> Where a power is conferred to make regulations, the power shall be construed as including a power, exercisable in the like manner, and subject to the like consent and conditions, if any, to repeal, amend or vary the regulations and make others.

Then we come to the meat of the report in which we are concurring:

> Your Committee is of the view that the revocation of the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1948 by the Governor in Council was without legal effect and that until such time as these Rules are revoked by the Commissioner of Patents, they must be regarded as being legally in force.

That is why we must have the debate today and air this question for the benefit of the House and the entire country.

Mr. Tobin: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: They will never get my FCA. Where was I?

An Hon. Member: Start over.

Mr. Lewis: I was talking about the fact that the committee indicated that until such time as these rules are revoked by the Commissioner of Patents, they must be—

Mr. Kaplan: We will send a copy of your speech to your constituents.

Mr. Lewis: —regarded as legally in force. That is the key. The House must actually look at and consider whether these rules are in force. Can the Commissioner of Patents revoke them or are they regarded as being legally in force? The committee came out with a recommendation. We have to decide whether the House, all 282 of us, will back the feelings of the committee that the provisions of the Patent Rules which regulate the registration of patent agents be formally revoked and that the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1984 be amended by the Commissioner of Patents so as to bring them into conformity with current practices under the Patent Act. I should like to make a personal aside here. This patent matter is a pretty complex one. When someone came to those of us who practised law—and I am sure the Speaker and other Hon. Members who practised law will remember such occasions—with a patent question, we always turned it over to an engineer. For the engineers in the House, I will say that was a disaster. Anyway, engineers have to do something, and as long as they took the Patent Act out of my hair, I was happy. Anyway, they all trucked down here to Ottawa, because most patent agents seemed to operate in Ottawa, to consider what rules to use. They wanted to know whether they should use the Register of Patent Agents Rules, 1948 or whether they should go to the Commissioner of Patents and say: "Did you revoke the rules?"

Ms. Copps: The family allowances are being cut back, and you are blithering about the Patent Act.

Mr. Lewis: This is important stuff. For example, people go out and buy motorcycles. They may be sitting on motorcycles on a magazine cover some day. If that were to happen, they would want to know whether the motorcycle was properly patented in Canada. They would not want to be sitting on an unpatented motorcycle. For crying out loud, those things can happen to people. Where was I?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Start from the beginning.

Mr. Lewis: In case anyone has lost my train of thought, I want to point out that there was a slight grammatical change in the legislation which was passed in 1923. It was not exactly the same as the legislation which was passed in 1869. One cannot read the report all at once; it has to be digested piece by piece. I should like to point out to the House a case considered by the House of Lords, to which reference is made on page 2 of the report where it reads:

The provisions of the United Kingdom legislation dealing with the registration of patent agents were considered by the House of Lords in Institute of Patent Agents v Lockwood—

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just wanted to say that I have always wondered, up until now, why he got paid an extra $15,000 per year.

Ms. Copps: Now I really do not know.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I am getting paid an extra $15,000 per year for this, somebody is slipping the other $6,000 because it is $9,000. If the Hon. Member can find the other six, I hope he will let me know. My bank manager and my wife both want to know.

Mr. Tobin: Just $9,000 too much.

Mr. Lewis: I will speak until the arrival of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. It will give me a chance to return to the case in the House of Lords, Institute of Patent Agents v Lockwood. Lord Watson, a great guy and a great fellow on the Patent Act whom we all remember, said:

—the main intention of the Legislature appears to have been to protect poor inventors from being robbed by unskilled patent agents who failed to make a specification and claim in such a form as would secure to them the fruits of their invention.

Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, is that someone at the door?

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan that the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now resume debate with the expert on patent law.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, At the time we were interrupted with a message from Her Majesty, we were discussing Lord Watson. He was on one of these pages but I do not know where he is gone. Anyway, let us talk about patents in general.

Mr. Deans: You have 30 seconds. Tell us all you know.

Mr. Lewis: I did that, and then I went on.

I have had an opportunity to put a few remarks on the record about this very important committee, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulation and Other Statutory Instruments, which often does work which goes unnoticed by this House, and by the country, and I think we are fortunate that on this particular day, in view of the other things we could be debating, that we have been able to respond so quickly to the concurrence moved by my colleague in this report. The House knows that had we continued on to Orders of the Day, we would—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately, the Hon. Member's time has expired. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). He has indicated to the House today his deep knowledge of the Patent Act. His elocution, I think, is admired by all of us as well as his depth of knowledge and his ability to convey very complex issues in a very straightforward and understandable manner. I think the House has been well advised by the manner of the Hon. Member's approach.

I think that is in keeping with his reputation in the House of not only being a very fine constituency person, but also someone who understands all aspects of the House. He is truly a man of the House of Commons. We on this side of the House are pleased that he is the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council. It is unfortunate that comments were made by Hon. Members across the way about the extra money he receives as Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Deans: Why is he pointing this out to everyone?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It should be pointed out to the Liberals that it should be more because of the fine work he has been doing. I think most Hon. Members would understand that that is a recommendation which would find much favour on this side of the House if Liberal Members would care to move it, something which I am quite sure they will consider most seriously.

● (1700)

The point on which I would like the Hon. Member to elaborate is the entrepreneurial spirit. We want to unleash the entrepreneurial spirit and there are many Canadians who we believe are waiting for that change and happily have adjusted to it. For example, if we were to take a look at the growth rate over the last year, we would find that Canada has had a good year. Canada has seen growth rates only comparable—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Questions or comments directed to the Hon. Member are, I believe, what are in order and I would ask that the Minister be called to order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is correct. I would ask the Minister to comment or ask a question on the excellent speech made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for pointing this out. For those of us who were Members of the House at the time and not in Queen's Park, I think we will recall that when the 10-minute rule came into effect, it was for two purposes: for questions and for comments.

Ms. Copps: Relating to the speech.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Precisely, and that is what we are doing. It is important for Hon. Members to know that and I am pleased that you have pointed that out, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying, before I was so rudely interrupted although I am becoming almost used to it from that Hon. Member, that—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I realize that the Tories are having their Christmas party today and I realize that it probably started early. However, given that the Minister who is making these comments and allegations is the person who is about to bring in a cut-back on family allowances, it would seem to me that the House should be moving on to the important business and should cut out this garbage which is being viewed by the taxpayers as an absolute waste of money.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a quite separate point of order and I think it is in fact a point of order. My recollection of the 10-minute question and comment period provision is that it was for the purpose either of putting a question or of making a brief comment and that it was intended that the 10 minutes would be shared among a number of Members from both sides of the House. Knowing that the Hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Epp) is always fair minded, I would simply ask him if he could perhaps draw his question to a close reasonably quickly in order that other Hon. Members might have an opportunity to take part.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that intervention and it was again of the calibre that we have come to expect from the Hon. Member who made that contribution here in the House. However—

Mr. Deans: Will you cut it short? That's all I want to know.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I was talking about the entrepreneurial spirit and the growth. There have been more than 400,000 new jobs created. The bank rate is down 3 per cent. The unemployment rate is down 1.2 per cent. Retail confidence is up. Canada has had a good year. That being the case, perhaps the Hon. Member could expand on unleashing even further this entrepreneurial spirit.

I was made aware of a case of a gentleman who works for the railways and had observed during a prairie winter the concern—

Mr. Robichaud: He's not working any more, he's been laid off.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, no, the concern about the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister. Could I ask the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) to answer, please?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity. The Minister was talking about unleashing the entrepreneurial spirit that has taken hold since we took office. He spoke of the 416,000 jobs we created as against the piddling number of jobs which were created by the previous Liberal Government. This is due to the low interest rates which we have achieved. It is due to the vast number of housing starts and the general confidence in the economy that every Canadian feels. One might ask oneself what this has to do with the Patent Act.

Mr. Deans: That might well be a good question.

Mr. Lewis: This is the point: when we unleash that spirit, people start inventing and they need to have patents.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: There has been a flood of patent applications because of the fact that we have unleashed that entrepreneurial spirit. Interest rates are down, jobs are growing, and as the Minister quite rightly points out, we want to be able to deal with this.

When this committee brought in this report, one of the first things we said to ourselves was that we will discuss concurrence without any difficulty at all because we feel that when important work like that is done by a committee, we as a Government should respond. Therefore, we came here to discuss concurrence in this report rather than have the bells ring unnecessarily, something which might have interfered with other things. We decided we would discuss the matter here. I know that that is to the regret of some Hon. Members.

How can an Hon. Member move concurrence in a report and not debate it? We were shocked. It was so shocked it took me a minute to rise. The Hon. Member who spent all that time on committee with the report wanted to move concurrence without discussing it. That is simply unheard of so I sprang to my feet to discuss it with vim and vigour.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is now about two weeks before Christmas and I realize that there is a lovely, friendly spirit of conciliation and co-operation in the House. However, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) really believes that the load of information that he has just dumped on the floor of the House of Commons is really worth the paper that Hansard is going to have to use to print it on. It seems to me that he has simply wasted the time of the House of Commons when there are extremely important issues before us.

Next week the Government wants to bring in the tax discounting Bill. Why does the Hon. Member not talk about that? The Government wants to gerrymander all the ridings across this country. The Government wants to cut back on family allowances. There are important national issues facing this country and the Parliamentary Secretary is contenting himself with spewing garbage all over the floor of the House of Commons. Why does he not get to the point and allow the people of Canada who pay his salary to get their money's worth?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I would say that it is well known in this House that no one knows so well what to do with a load as that Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. My friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), says that his comments were directly tied to the Bill because of the flood of patents which resulted from the new entrepreneurship which resulted from the new economic prosperity. If it is true that there is this new economic prosperity with more people working and all of the economic factors are performing as he said, why then is the Government increasing taxes and decreasing family allowances?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that my hon. friend the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), a good colleague of mine, asked that question.

Mr. Deans: I knew you would be.

Mr. Lewis: The answer is very simple.

Mr. Deans: I would hope so.

Mr. Lewis: We were left with a horrendous deficit because of 16 or 17 years of flagrant Liberal spending without knowing where the money was coming from.

Mr. Deans: Profligate.

Mr. Lewis: Profligate, thank you very much. For that reason, we have had to increase taxes. When the Liberal Government was not spending profligately, it was making profligate statements like the one made by the Liberal ex-Minister of the Environment.

We regret that we have had to make some adjustments in the taxation system. However, the people of Canada will know that we are making every effort to get the deficit under control. With the employment rate going up and the unemployment rate coming down, revenues will increase. In due time we will have the deficit which was left to us by the profligate Liberals under control. At that time we will see consideration given to social spending which will look after everyone whom we can look after. However, when we do it we will do it on a reasoned basis. We will not spend money with the same reckless abandon for which the diminished number of Liberals were responsible. I say diminished because they went into the last election with 147 Members. Some 18 of them caught the Titanic out of the harbour and went on to greater rewards. Out of the 147, less 18, we have this motley bunch. Thus, Mr. Speaker, what can I say?

• (1710)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate briefly in this debate because of the fact that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has used a clearly obstructive tactic in moving this particular debate. People who are watching this debate will not understand that the normal courtesy is that if there is a motion for concurrence with respect to a joint committee which has been traditionally a non-partisan and productive committee, and not for the purpose of trying to obstruct the business of the House, the Hon. Member need only have consulted with your humble servant. I would have been glad to speak to the appropriate Minister to see whether or not we could have had concurrence. In order to use an obstructive tactic the Hon. Member moved the motion with respect to this matter without notice. I have indicated to his House Leader on many occasions that if that were to be the tactic it is simply unacceptable. If there are to be motions of this sort and if we are to operate in this way and give notice to each of the other Parties respecting the business of the House, there takes a kind of mutual trust. I have tried to keep my side of the bargain with respect to this matter and have tried to give as much notice—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —to Members of this House as to what the business is and what motions will be moved. I was very much taken with the statement by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who is sitting with her soul-sister—soul-brother—

Mr. Deans: I beg your pardon. I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I object to the reference to my soul.

Ms. Copps: Separation of church and state.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As I say at meetings of House Leaders: "May God have mercy on us". I agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, which is what possessed me to stand up and speak now.

Mr. Deans: You are possessed!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is time to get on with the business of the House. It is time to get on with the legislation which is before us. It is time to make progress before Christmas. I will accommodate the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I would not have done this if she had not spoken. Therefore, I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Deans: It is the very thing you were trying to avoid.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1840)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 6.44 p.m., it is obvious that the House cannot proceed to the Orders of the Day. Therefore, under the terms of the Standing Orders, I declare that the motion has lapsed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 is deemed to have been moved.

SHIPBUILDING—DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY FOR SHIPBUILDERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have been on the floor of the House several times to ask the Government about its plans for a development strategy for shipbuilders and drill-rig builders. It is a matter of considerable concern to the workers in my riding, since the survival of many hundreds of jobs will depend on this policy.

All Members of this House have one major concern, which is to create and preserve jobs. The shipbuilding and ship repair industry is now in a position to create jobs. Canada's most efficient shipyards have adopted modern technology and advanced management techniques.

Versatile Davie of Lauzon is foremost in its field. Its shipyards have been in operation for more than a century. The material and human resources involved in this shipbuilding complex are practically unique in North America. Today, it has Canada's most advanced facilities for modular construction. A ship is built in sections, in several workshops, and then assembled in one central workshop. However, even the use of this technology does not guarantee jobs for our Canadian shipbuilders.

In recent months, the daily media across the country have reported on the precarious position of our shipbuilding industry. As far as ship building is concerned, order books are at their lowest level since World War II. Because of the deficit it inherited from the Liberals, our Government cannot directly inject new funds into this industry. Our budget situation is such that we cannot provide the kind of assistance received by certain foreign shipbuilders.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at new orders for Canadian ships and orders for ships built abroad and registered in Canada, we see that imports are ten times as numerous as orders placed with Canadian firms. In 1984, new orders in Canada totalled six ships, together representing 29,200 gross tonnes, while ships built abroad totalled 235,975 tonnes or 18 ships. During the first half of 1985, commercial orders placed with Canadian shipyards totalled three ships, together representing a capacity of 3,138 tonnes.

Mr. Speaker, if we compare the assistance offered by the Canadian Government to our shipyards with that received by our competitors abroad, we see that nearly half the foreign countries offer direct aid of as much as 50 per cent of the price of the ship, while in some cases, very generous use is made of indirect subsidies. In addition, our Canadian industry also has to cope with protectionist measures. A study published this fall, under the title "Shipyards in Quebec and Canada—Situation and Prospects", shows how Norway was able to make the exploration of offshore resources benefit its shipyards, by demanding that test drill rigs, for instance, be built in that country. The demand for ships is picking up in Canada, but this demand is almost entirely met by imports. Direct grants available in foreign countries and preferential financing arrangements make it possible to buy ships at prices which are often below Canadian costs.

I have already indicated to the House how important it is for our Government to be able to propose a strategy to all shipbuilding interests. Our shipyards could achieve a better performance than other undertakings in various production sectors. The federal Government and the provinces have given generous support to foreign car manufacturers to encourage them to build Canadian plants which are not likely to create more than a few thousand jobs, whereas shipyards and related industries now employ 20,000 workers and could create more jobs.

It is therefore important for the Government to promote through judicious policies a resurgence of Canadian commercial demand for our shipbuilding industry, and it is also important for the Government to develop a ship and drilling platform import policy because there is a need in Canada for all kinds of ships and offshore oil development equipment. All we have to do is to ensure that this demand will be met by the Canadian industry, and not by foreign shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, if we have been able to correct and improve the international competitiveness of other sectors of our economy, we can do the same for our shipyards. The Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has already shown his commitment to the future of our shipyards.

• (1850)

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, on March 23, 1985, the Minister reminded the House about the $15 million support granted to the Versatile company so that it might purchase the Davie shipyard in Lauzon. By providing such support, the Minister showed the interest of the Canadian Government in the future of this key industry.

We are about to enter the second phase, Mr. Speaker. There will be other achievements. These decisions will ensure the stability of this sector of our economy and the profitability of our shipbuilding industry.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Minister will soon announce his shipbuilding development policy to the Canadian public.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has spoken about an important problem which is of serious concern to us. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion is well aware of the problems of the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and this is why he has had numerous discussions with representatives of shipbuilding companies and of the unions.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague for Lévis is very concerned about this issue, but there is no easy answer. The Government has already contributed to the survival of this industry as its own orders account for the great majority of the contracts of the industry at this time. The Government has also shown flexibility in its contractual relations with shipbuilding companies. For instance, the Government accepted to renegotiate its contracts with Halifax Industries Limited so that this company would be able to complete ships it was building for the Coastguard in spite of financial difficulties. The Government also accepted to make the acquisition of Davie Shipbuilding by DOME easier under the tribal class ship retrofitting program and allowed Pictou industries to take over the Government work contracted to Ferguson industries.

The Minister and the Government will continue to support the shipyards through public contracts. The Polar VIII icebreaker program is now under consideration and the patrol frigate program is under way. Together, these programs represent 10,000 person-years of employment. In addition, the Government supports the industry by granting ships a tarriff protection of 25 per cent and drilling platforms a protection of 20 per cent, which is the highest level of protection in the world.

However, commercial contracts are also necessary to ensure the long-term future of the shipbuilding industry. Because of the drop in world demand, coupled with an increase in the building capacity of countries such as Korea, competition on all world markets is fierce. The OECD has noted a 50 per cent decrease in the cost of ships between 1980 and 1984 and a general decrease in world capacity since 1976. This decrease is especially apparent among Western European shipbuilders, whose business has fallen by as much as 66 per cent. In spite of these decreases, a surplus capacity of over 20 per cent persists and keeps costs low. In view of this, we must see to it that Canadian shipyards operate at a very high level of efficiency without imposing an economic burden on the users of ships built in Canada.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is holding meetings with the private sector to discuss problems faced by Canadian shipyards and to receive suggestions as to how all parties concerned may look for a solution that will prove to be viable in the long run.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reassure my dear colleague for Lévis, and also give him the assurance the Minister will not hesitate to get in touch with his colleagues in this House as soon as a solution has been found.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS (A) INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT DISPOSED TO INSIST ON CANADIAN CONTROL OF FILM INDUSTRY. (B) REQUEST CONCERNING GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF CANADIAN FEATURE FILMS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I raised yesterday a question concerning the report published the day before yesterday by the Task Force on the Film Industry. That group has done an excellent job, because it has made a strong and in-depth analysis of the problems of this industry. The actual situation points to the third-rate status of the film industry, in which 97 per cent of profits made in Canada are going to the United States. Indeed, Canadian moviegoers are supporting the American film industry.

Now, part of the profits have to be re-invested in Canada for Canadian production. Canadian film producers have no access to the Canadian market. Canadian films take up only 3 to 5 per cent of screen time, and account for only 2 to 4 per cent of titles available on videotapes. Canadians are confined to marginal positions in their own country, and viewers are essentially funding foreign productions. This is why the Task Force has recommended that the Government issue a clear policy statement on Canadian control of film distribution.

American film distributors are now treating Canada as part of their domestic market. When they get distribution rights on a film or a videotape for the United States, they also insist on getting the same rights for the Canadian market. Even Canadian producers are compelled to grant Canadian rights to an American distributor to have access to the American market. This is no longer acceptable. It never was.

Canada is the only country in the world which accepts such a denigration of its cultural sovereignty. We have here in Canada a situation of vertical integration between film production and distribution, which means that the multinational corporations controlling the distribution of films are the same ones that produce them.

Of course those corporations do not promote films produced by other firms, whether they are independant Canadians, the National Film Board or small Canadian film companies.

Vertical integration in the film industry is no longer legal in the United States, because of the harmful effects of that kind of monopoly or duopoly, which comes to the same in this case.

American film multinationals are now enjoying in Canada benefits that are illegal in the United States. We must tell them: The End. Access to the Canadian market must be controlled by the Canadians themselves. We must make sure that in the future, part of the profits are reinvested in Canadian productions. Canadian control of film distribution will allow Canadian producers to negotiate for Canadian distribution rights of foreign films and videotapes. Canadian control will put an end to the monopoly enjoyed on Canadian soil by American distributors.

Canada is a nation with a population of 25 million people living next door to a large country with 250 million people. No country with that kind of population can develop a film industry without Government intervention, which means financial support and regulation by the state.

All European countries, even those with populations larger than ours, have developped their industry with state-support measures. We have started with initiatives for promoting the production of films.

Now without the means to provide for the distribution, such measures remain useless. The Task Force has in addition, suggested creating a fund to finance Canadian feature films. Even with other proposed measures, such as increased private investments, co-productions and sales abroad, the Task Force feels that public financing will be essential. More specifically, it advocates a fund of $60 million per year. The Task Force notes that 40 or 50 feature films must be produced if we are to play a significant role with respect to movie theatres and pay television.

This is only 5 per cent of the amount paid out every year by moviegoers in Canada. The Task Force notes that in other countries, higher amounts are earmarked for production. We are aware here of the necessity of serving linguistic and cultural communities. Consequently, it recommends that special attention be granted to French-language and regional productions.

Unfortunately, there is no reference to the fact that very few women have access to capital for the production of films, especially costly ones such as feature films. Or course, the contribution of the Provinces is essential for a film distribution policy, but we should not delay granting the required funds. I would have been more satisfied, if the Minister had given us a more constructive answer.

[English]

We have heard enough about good intentions for action. The Minister knows these problems and he knows them well. They have been talked about in his Department for a long time. I dare say his Department has had a copy of this report for a while and he has had time to think about it. The excuse that consultations must be held with the provinces just cannot last too long. It would be far better for the Minister to take some leadership, to say that this report contains good recommendations so as not to close the door on every nuance or, perhaps, the recommendations could be improved upon in particular places. He should be showing some leadership and say that this is a part of our culture that must be reclaimed. If he wants to be serious about bringing back Canadian culture, as we brought back our Constitution, this is the place for him to be acting. The time is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) and his Parliamentary Secretary entirely agree with the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mrs. McDonald) about the Canadian cultural sovereignty objective.

[English]

I can honestly assure the Hon. Member, and I remind her as well, that one of the commitments this Government made as a Party prior to the election, and one which it has consistently honoured, is that of national reconciliation through negotiation. Consultation with the provinces is an essential part of that mechanism.

Yesterday, the Hon. Member raised two questions with respect to the recently report of the Task Force on the Film Industry. One was with respect to whether or not the Government subscribes to the view expressed in the report that measures should be implemented to eliminate vertical integration in the film industry. The second was with respect to whether or not the Government will grant the $60 million the task force identifies as necessary for the financing of feature films.

On the principle endorsed by the report that vertical integration be eliminated, the House will appreciate that the measures necessary to accomplish such a major structural change in the industry will involve the co-operation of two and possibly three orders of Government. The responsibility for distribution and exhibition in the film industry falls largely within the competence of the provinces. Any action taken on recommendations of the task force which fall within these areas will require concerted action. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has already conveyed the task force report to his provincial colleagues and plans have been made to meet with his counter-parts from the provinces to discuss the matter. The course of action to be taken by the Government of Canada will be decided upon following this meeting and pending analysis of what would be involved in implementing the recommendations of the task force.

It would be premature to predict the ultimate position of the Government of Canada on the vertical integration question. It is certainly fair to say, however, that the Minister of Communications is well aware of difficulties posed for the Canadian industry by its present structure and is intent on rectifying those structural problems as far as it is possible to do so.

In addition to seeking the advice and assistance of his provincial colleagues, the Minister will be consulting with his colleagues in Cabinet, particularly the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté), who is responsible for competition policy, and with the industry itself in order to determine the most effective response to the recommendation.

On the matter of the recommended fund for the financing of feature films, the task force has obviously recognized and documented a serious need. The implementation of such a fund, however, is a costly measure, both in terms of where the resources might be found and in terms of assuring that such a measure would, in fact, complement other forms of assistance now in place. The Minister and his Department will be looking at that recommendation very carefully over the coming weeks and his conclusions will be brought to Cabinet for review. They will obviously have to be considered among all the other demands on the public purse. However, the Minister's commitment to the betterment of the Canadian film industry is firm. He will do all in his power over the coming months to assure that the industry has the resources it needs to develop its evident potential.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.05 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

DELAY IN ESTABLISHING NATIONAL TOBACCO MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this past week we have seen over a thousand farmers on Parliament Hill protesting the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have not kept their promises to establish a national tobacco marketing agency. On Tuesday of this week the comments of the Minister of Agriculture contradicted those of the Prime Minister on Wednesday that the delay in establishing the national marketing agency was due to a court injunction relating to the cost of production formula, and said that the delay was due to a lack of support by the producer groups from the five provinces concerned.

Berry Murray, the Chairman of the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board, said on Thursday that he now has letters and commitments from all five provincial producer groups to support a marketing agency. The Government has the support of these producers so why does it not move to establish this marketing agency? It is because it does not want a national marketing agency. That is why it has appealed the judge's decision on the injunction relating to the report on the cost of production formula.

Marketing boards do not fit into the Prime Minister's agenda on free trade with the United States. This is the first casualty on the altar of free trade.

How many more national marketing boards will be bargained away in the free trade negotiations? No one knows. However, we do know that the Government and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture do not keep their promises.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—DISCLOSURE OF OUTSIDE ACTIVITIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, on September 9 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tabled before the House of Commons several documents explaining initiatives the federal Government intends to take in the area of public sector ethics.

Basically, we support those initiatives but let us not, in the process, go overboard and use public disclosure as a weapon to intimidate the public service.

I refer specifically to the requirement that all public servants declare their outside activities to a designated officer who has the right to make the decison on whether those activities are in conflict with the employee's duties and responsibilities. Does coaching a hockey team seem like an unacceptable activity? The guidelines do not say one way or the other, but a designated officer may.

The protection of democracy is the responsibility of this Chamber. I call upon the Government to review the procedures by which it will implement its public service conflict of interest guidelines. Unacceptable activities must be defined to give civil servants some feeling that they are not subject to the whims of their superiors.

THE ECONOMY

EDITORIALS IN CERTAIN NEWSPAPERS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, our Government had told Canadians it would create a new national consensus, spur the economic recovery and, finally, make it easier for all Canadians to become fully aware of the state of the nation.

Over the past ten days, ten editorialists from each of the ten Canadian provinces have attested to the fact that our national economy is back on the right track, and that Canadians throughout the country now readily close ranks and feel more prosperous.

Mr. Speaker, I am referring to the editorials of the following newspapers—from the Pacific to the Atlantic: the British Columbia December 6 Times-Colonist, a positive report on de Havilland; the Alberta December 5 Calgary Herald, a positive report on the economy; the Saskatchewan December 3 Reader

Post, a positive report on our communications policy; the Manitoba December 5 Winnipeg Free Press, a positive report on privatization; the Ontario December 6 Toronto Sun, a positive report on the minimum tax; the Quebec December 12 Gazette and La Presse, a positive report on the Francophonie Summit; the New Brunswick December 3 Telegraph Journal, a positive report on the new alcohol legislation; the Prince Edward Island November 29 Guardian, a positive report on financial co-operation with the provinces; the Nova Scotia November 25 Chronical Herald, a positive report on deregulation; the Newfoundland December 3 Evening Telegram—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

EXTERNAL AID

DELIVERY OF SUPPLIES TO COLUMBIA BY DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE AIRCRAFT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my outrage at the statement made in the House yesterday by the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) when he distorted the facts to the point where Members of the House and, indeed, the Canadian public were left with the impression that the Government had kept humanitarian supplies off a Department of National Defence aircraft bound for Columbia on a training flight.

I want to set the record straight by telling the House and every Canadian that all humanitarian supplies collected by the Saskatchewan Food Bank that met Columbian needs were put on board that Armed Forces aircraft. In fact one of the organizers of the Saskatchewan Food Bank, Mrs. Burke, has expressed her gratitude for the prompt and helpful response by the Canadian Forces in this matter.

In my opinion this is a fine example of what can be accomplished when Government and private organizations such as the Saskatchewan Food Bank collaborate together for the benefit of those less fortunate than ourselves. It is about time that facts were verified before such frivolous allegations are made.

INDUSTRY

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH EMPLOYEES OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Last Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, Quebec's petrochemical industry workers, mostly Gulf employees, had an opportunity to meet with the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). During the meeting the Prime Minister told them that Gaz métropolitain's bid was not serious.

Today, Mr. Armand Galipeau of Gaz métropolitain has contradicted the Prime Minister by stating that his company did submit a truly reasonable and serious bid as early as December 1.

Mr. Speaker, along with all Hon. Members, I am sure, I deplore the fact that the Prime Minister would choose to play games with the workers and be less than honest with them.

Mr. Speaker, I dare hope that Government Members will use today's questions period to shed light on the matter, and that the Prime Minister will apologize to Gaz métropolitain and the workers, if indeed he made a mistake.

HEALTH

DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE BY NATIVE PEOPLE LIVING IN URBAN CENTRES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the National Association of Friendship Centres officially released its final report on the Urban Research Project into Drug, Alcohol and Solvent Abuse.

This study found, among other things, that the problem of drug and alcohol abuse by native people who migrate to urban centres remain, tragically high and that no programs exist in those centres to offer specific assistance in either preventative programs or direct counselling.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has had a copy of this report for two months and has declined on three separate occasions to meet with representatives of the NAFC to discuss the findings and the necessary response to them. For a Minister who campaigned on a platform of more consultation with the Canadian public, this is a poor track record indeed. The following quotation from this report will, I hope, remind the Minister that his personal attention to this national problem is required immediately:

● (1110)

> The Urban Research Report tells of Indian men, ordered by the courts to refrain from alcohol consumption, who have sought death rather than face going "cold turkey", of women who have chosen to terminate seven-month pregnancies than discontinue their addictions, and of five year old children sniffing the contents of a can of PAM and suffocating.

Drug, alcohol, and solvent abuse constitutes a national tragedy. No group in society is more vulnerable or more affected than native people who have moved to urban centres. This Party calls upon the Minister for action.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, today the Polish community of Toronto and throughout the world commemorates the fourth anniversary of the imposition of martial law in Poland on December 13, 1981.

Recently General Wojciech Jaruzelski tried to gain some semblance of respectability by travelling to France, yet Poland remains a repressed state. There has been no attempt at reform to cure the economic malaise or the cultural and political repression. The Education Act of July, 1985, requires that all academics travelling to the West on exchange programs be approved by the Communist Party; 360 political dissidents are under detention; more and more citizens are being brutally killed for their opposition to the regime; and last month 40 outspoken opposition intellectuals were purged from senior administrative posts in universities.

General Jaruzelski is under the mistaken impression that by visiting western leaders he will be absolved of all wrongdoing and that memory is generally short in the West. The image of a uniformed lawman in dark glasses will not fade, certainly not in the minds of Poland's people.

Let us not be fooled by the extrovert image Jaruzelski tries to portray. There is no normalcy in Poland at this time. The grim truth is that repression in Poland is more intense. Today all Canadians must lend their support in spirit to the people of Poland. We join—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENERGY

INCREASE IN PETROLEUM REVENUES AND EXPLORATION

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Ontario consumed 26 billion litres of oil and 660 billion cubic feet of natural gas in 1984. In my riding in London, Ontario, we look to our domestic producers for competitive prices and reliable supply, but under the NEP of the past, local supply in a depressed market could no longer be guaranteed.

Earlier this week a constituent came into my office with some startling energy statistics from the semi-annual report of the Petroleum Monitoring Agency for the first half of 1985. It revealed that petroleum revenues were up by 7 per cent; that cash flow had increased by 19 per cent; that this increase in cash flow was being pumped right back into upstream expenditures; and that reinvestment, capital expenditures, and exploration were all on the rise.

The Canadian oil and gas industry has entered into a growth cycle, unmatched even by our American neighbours, as a reesult of the new policies of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney). Canadian supplies of oil and natural gas are recognized as the most reliable supplies of any country.

I want to quote from a recent editorial in the Oil and Gas Journal, dated November 25. It reads:

> The administration of Brian Mulroney is living up to its promise. Canada is better for it . . . A much more confident industry is responding by spending more in Canada.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EXPRESSION OF GOOD WISHES TO HON. ROBERT BOURASSA AND NEW QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I want to join many Canadians, especially those living in Quebec, in extending our best wishes to the new Government of that province and its leader, the Hon. Robert Bourassa, to whom we wish every success in achieving his objectives which have the approval of the people of Quebec.

The election of a new Government in Quebec marks the end of a period when all the energies of the Quebec Government were concentrated on separating the province, sooner or later, from the rest of Canada.

This philosophy of the Parti Québécois Government was at the root of the many confrontations seen between Ottawa and Quebec during the past nine years. The constant conflict was due to the fact that even the slightest skirmish was used as a pretext to challenge Canadian unity.

All Quebecers listened confidently when their new Premier expressed the hope that before the end of his term, he would be able to sign the Canadian Constitution Act as patriated by the previous Liberal Government of Canada.

Quebec and its new Government want to make the Canadian federation work, and if symbols mean anything at all, Canadians will be happy to hear that their flag has now been restored to its place of honour next to the blue and white flag of Quebec.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, the latest economic indicators show that the economy of Quebec continues to progress steadily in 1985.

Since the election fourteen months ago, we have created 130,000 jobs, an average of 9,286 new jobs per month. The unemployment rate dropped from 12.8 per cent in 1984 to 11.8 per cent in November 1985. Between January and September 1985, the total value of building permits rose from $2.4 billion to $3 billion. The increase in capital spending will be around 8.7 per cent, of which 12.8 per cent in the private sector, in 1985. This last indicator shows that the private sector is responding favourably to the first steps taken by our Government.

According to a survey, 37 per cent of small—and medium-sized businesses intend to increase their capital spending by the end of the year. Furthermore, 26 per cent of these businesses intend to hire staff and 41 per cent to increase their operating capital.

The estimated value of delivered goods throughout the entire manufacturing industry increased $611 million between September 1984 and September 1985, an increase of 12.7 per cent.

Retail sales increased by 8 per cent between September 1984 and September 1985.

During the first ten months of this year, the bankruptcy rate dropped 13.1 per cent, compared with the same period in 1984.

These figures show once again that the economy's performance has improved considerably since the election—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to inform the Hon. Member that her time has now expired.

AIR TRANSPORT

AFTERMATH OF NEWFOUNDLAND DISASTER—EFFECT OF DEREGULATION OF AIRLINES IN UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister for his prompt report to Parliament yesterday on the tragedy in Gander, Newfoundland, and to indicate to him that I am sure all Members of the House support the intensive and wide-ranging nature of the investigation that he has launched into yesterday's tragedy.

Canada enjoys one of the safest and best regulated air transport industries in the world. I am sure the Minister shares my conviction that we want to keep it that way. I would ask the Minister whether the investigation into the causes of the accident which will deal with Egypt, West Germany, and Gander, will also examine what effects deregulation of the airline industry in the United States has had on safety and maintenance.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the members of his Party in this very tragic incident. As the Right Hon. Member knows, the investigation is being conducted under the authority of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, which is indeed an independent investigatory body. It would seem to me that, given the magnitude of the tragedy, it will be looking at all aspects of this very disastrous accident, and I think it is worthy to note as well that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has indicated that it will engage in a public inquiry to ensure that all aspects of this terrible tragedy are examined with thoroughness and the utmost intensity.

INTRODUCTION OF DEREGULATION LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is a good answer and I commend the Minister for it. The Minister does, however, propose to deregulate totally the airline industry in Canada beginning in 1986. I understand that he is preparing a Bill modelled after the total deregulation of the airline industry in the United States, which began in 1978.

The Minister was informed by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Papineau and the hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe, last Monday night that the Liberal Party would be producing a dissenting opinion on the report of the Standing Committee on Transport regarding the issue of deregulation. Would the Minister agree to delay introduction of this legislation deregulating the airline industry in Canada until such time as there has been a thorough investigation of the effects of deregulation on air safety and maintenance in the United States?

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is really unfortunate that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is attempting to cloud this issue. We are not talking about deregulating safety standards in any way, shape, or form in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We are talking about economic regulatory reform. I have stated time and time again that, if anything, we will be enhancing safety, as has been indicated in the past by the passage of the aeronautics legislation, which is the most progressive aeronautics legislation in the world. We have introduced amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, which, again, has the paramountcy of safety in mind. There will be further legislative measures to stengthen our ability to ensure that safety standards are maintained and understood.

As well, the right hon. gentleman might very well want to look at the record of statistics in the United States, which does not bear out the suggestion he implies that deregulation in the United States has caused more accidents and more casualties. I would challenge him to check the record before he makes such an assertion.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE STUDY EFFECTS OF DEREGULATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. He is aware that members of the Transport Committee from all three Parties have indicated to him the timeframe given the committee to study the effects of deregulation of the transportation industry in Canada was indeed short and restrained. The Minister is also aware that for this reason, among others, both Opposition Parties are producing minority reports on the committee's work. Would the Minister agree to give the Transport Committee the time necessary to travel to the United States in order to study the effects of deregulation on safety in that country and report back to Parliament, before he introduces legislation deregulating the airline industry in this country?

I say to the Minister that the committee draws no conclusions in advance. The committee merely submits to the Minister that we have an obligation to learn from the American experience—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, the Hon. Member's question is becoming a little long.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member's question. He is obviously confused about the process. The process that we are undertaking in terms of rewriting national transportation legislation is really unprecedented in this country. This Government has put forth a position paper for public debate. The legislation is not even drafted as yet. We are awaiting the comments of the standing committee and the reaction of the public. We will certainly welcome the minority reports, if that is what the opposition Parties choose to do. However, there is no legislation before the House. The legislation is not yet drafted. There will be ample time to deal with these issues.

I repeat, and I think the Hon. Member shares this view, that the urgency of moving to update the transportation legislation in this country to the effect that it will reflect the realities of the 1980s and 1990s is long overdue.

LENGTH OF COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member shares the view that we have to move with progress; but the Hon. Member believes we should do it with our eyes fully open. I wish to say to the Minister that he knows that this committee and members of it have requested an opportunity to study the effects of deregulation on safety in the United States. I would like to quote—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I quote from a witness—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member is embarking on a long preamble. Will he put his supplementary question, please?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister again if he does not agree that a one-month timeframe for a standing committee to study a document which took the Minister 15 months to prepare and release to the public is not unduly short. Would it not be worth our while to study the experience south of the border before we introduce deregulation in the airline industry in this country? That is all we ask, with no conclusions drawn before we have had a chance to look at the record south of the border.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to stonewall progress on the initiative that we have undertaken, so be it. That is fine. We indicated last February that we would move to reform the legislative and regulatory mechanisms which govern transportation in this country. We invited public response at that time. We produced a position paper. It has been widely debated. We've gotten the views of the Standing Committee. We've gotten the views of industry.

• (1125)

I understand some 177 briefs were submitted to the Standing Committee on Transport. I have had something like 150 briefs submitted to me personally. Surely that should form the nucleus of drafting the legislation.

All Hon. Members will then have an opportunity to debate the issue and to engage in further hearings, if that is the desire of the committee.

COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Minister that I said "members of all three Parties" and I indicated the time was too short. I ask the Minister if he believes that a Standing Committee on Transport which is studying the most important reregulation or deregulation of the transportation industry, visiting only three centres in this country and now being refused permission to go to the United States to study an environment where the experience has been in place since 1978, is an acceptable way to proceed? In a desire to help the process to produce better legislation, I ask the Minister to allow this committee to go south of the border to have a look at the experience in the United States before we proceed with legislation in this country.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a member of the Standing Committee, and he may very well be on the Steering Committee. With his Johnny-come-lately attitude, perhaps he may want to go back to the Steering Committee and make that a formal request. That is the process which should be followed.

I don't dictate what the Standing Committee does. It should be done through the aegis of the Chairman of the Steering Committee. The Hon. Member should know that.

Oral Questions

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. There are a large number of unanswered questions with respect to the Government's sale of de Havilland aircraft to Boeing, and those questions must be answered before that deal goes through.

Mr. Deans: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Will Parliament be able to review the memorandum of understanding with Boeing in the de Havilland sale before the deal is closed? And if so, when?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about a lot of unanswered questions.

Mr. Fulton: That's right.

Mr. de Cotret: In this House—

Mr. Gauthier: That's par for the course.

Mr. de Cotret: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier says this is par for the course. It certainly is for this Government.

Mr. Fulton: That's right. Two strikes now.

Mr. de Cotret: In this House we have talked about price, valuation, book value—

Mr. Deans: No, we've talked about it.

Mr. Gauthier: We've talked about it.

Mr. de Cotret: —tax implications, credit notes, world product mandate, technology guarantees, Government equity, future Government infusion, royalties, product liability insurance, corporate liabilities, Government programs, Canadian content—

Mr. Fulton: What are you, a lexicon?

Mr. de Cotret: —supplier commitment, R and D, technology guarantees, insurance—

Mr. Deans: You haven't talked about it; that's the problem.

Mr. de Cotret: —new investment, upgrading of the plant—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. de Cotret: If the Hon. Member has further questions to ask, please ask the questions and I will answer them—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we have asked the questions about all these matters, but the Government has refused to answer them or to refer everything to a parliamentary committee. These questions also concern the sale of Canadair.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TAX CONCESSIONS FOR BOEING AND DE HAVILLAND

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second question is as follows: Are the figures for the tax concessions and financial benefits—estimated at $600 million—Boeing stands to receive as part of this transaction correct? If not, what is, according to the Government's estimate, the figure for the concessions and financial benefits we are giving Boeing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the preamble to the question put by my hon. friend from Ottawa-Centre, I must say that it is entirely false. We have answered all these questions I just enumerated.

As for the Hon. Member's supplementary, it is entirely unfounded as well. There is absolutely no basis for the figure of $600 million. The agreements we made with Boeing and de Havilland do not in any way involve $600 million. I never saw this figure and never heard about it, and I would ask the Hon. Member to tell us on what he based his estimate. I know nothing about this figure.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to send the statement of the $580 million which we have calculated the Government will be contributing.

BOEING COMPANY'S REPORTED HIRING OF PROPELLOR ENGINEERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board a question. Eight months ago the Boeing Corporation won a $2 billion contract from the U.S. Navy to build propellor planes. Does the Minister know that Boeing came to Toronto, set up shop at the Triumph Hotel, which is three blocks away from de Havilland, raided that company for propellor engineers, and hired away ten of them who have now moved to Philadelphia? They were propellor research experts at de Havilland. They are now working in Philadelphia in the company's research centre there. Is the Minister aware of that? Does he not realize that any multinational corporation can raid the technological resources of a branch plant or division in Canada? Does the Minister approve of that? What assurances are—

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that was two questions which were long enough.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that. However, what better way to prevent that than by having that deal, that natural fit between de Havilland and Boeing go forth? They will then have the expertise in-house and they will be able to use the technology, expertise, and engineering capacity of de Havilland to help their own exports in their own markets. That is the proof.

RESEARCH CAPACITY OF DE HAVILLAND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister tells us that he has put enough facts on the table. However, as a result of this deal is there now an assurance that Boeing will not move the research capacity and talented bank of expertise established here out of our country? Has that been guaranteed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question yesterday. Not only will the R and D done at the moment by de Havilland in Downsview, Ontario, Canada, be maintained, but it will be enhanced. That is in the understandings that we have with the Boeing Corporation. Can I be any clearer than that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let's see the understanding. Let's see the document.

JOB SECURITY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. He says that he welcomes questions on the de Havilland giveaway to Boeing. Well, he is going to get them.

Our third question is as follows. What assurances, if any, did Boeing offer the Government in relation to job guarantees and security for de Havilland's 4,500 workers?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, quite honestly, I think I have answered this about 10 times over the last few days in this House. The only guarantee for job security that one could reasonably expect is that which comes from a world product mandate; the ability to sell our planes throughout the world through a well-known and most successful aircraft manufacturer.

Let me emphasize for the Hon. Member's information that under Crown ownership there were no employment guarantees. The Member ought to talk to the more than 2,000 employees of de Havilland who were laid off when it was Crown owned. They will tell him that there was no guarantee at that point. Now, with the financial and marketing expertise behind Boeing, they will have more job security than they have ever had before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNION REPRESENTATIVES' REQUEST FOR MEETING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question, our fourth question, is directed to the same Minister. Why did the Government refuse to meet with representatives of the United Auto Workers who requested a meeting weeks in advance of the sale?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, over a year ago we announced our intention to privatize a number of Crown corporations. We reiterated that intention in the Budget of last year. We welcome any representation by any group anywhere in the country that may have any interest whatsoever in what we are doing on privatization. Those concerns will be considered fully in any negotiations that take place.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTBACKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. We now know that in November, the President asked all Government departments to cut what was left of their budgets by another 1 to 3 per cent. Incidentally, a 3 per cent cutback amounts to one billion dollars, exactly what this Government will have to pay for the problems they had with the banks. I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether he thinks it is fair that workers in Montreal East, women, the elderly, farmers and farm workers should have to pay for the bank fiasco that was created by this Government owing to its lack of surveillance in this area?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I don't think it is exactly news that for more than a year, the Conservative Government has been trying to control federal spending and to reduce the enormous deficit we inherited from the previous Liberal Government. It is in the course of this exercise, an exercise that has been going on all year, that we asked the departments to reduce their daily operational spending by an additional amount, to ensure that funds not spent at the end of the year are saved to keep the deficit at I would not say an acceptable but at least a tolerable level, considering the legacy we received from the previous Government.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just confirmed that there will be at least a $200 million cut in job programs under unemployment insurance. I ask him again whether he thinks it fair that the women, the senior citizens, the farmers, the workers, and the unemployed of the country have their programs cut so that the Government can come up with $1 billion to bail out the banks.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is totally false. I have never admitted, confirmed, nor said any word about the things contained in the premise of the question. I am saying that the Government is committed to good management, to maintaining expenditures within reasonable levels, and to reducing the deficit to make the country economically prosperous once again, something which was not done by the Party opposite when it was in Government for years and years before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—FUTURE UPGRADING OF PLANT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the President of the Treasury Board on the de Havilland-Boeing deal. This is our fifth question. How much has Boeing committed to the up-grading of the de Havilland plant? Why did the Government inflate its percentage of defence industry productivity program support to 50 per cent to help finance it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows, as I have stated in the House time and time again, that the de Havilland Corporation, under Boeing ownership, will be allowed access to every existing Government program. It has committed to improving the Downsview plant in terms of its existing capacity. It has committed to making significant new investment in the productive capacity of de Havilland Canada. As such, it will be eligible for the Defence Industry Productivity Program which, as the Hon. Member surely knows, makes advances which are repayable to the Crown over a period of time.

INFORMATION PROVIDED TO PROSPECTIVE BIDDERS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, our sixth question is as follows. Why did the Government give Boeing access to financial information that it denied to Rimgate Holdings of British Columbia?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to clarify a point. We have talked time and time again in the House about Rimgate from British Columbia or where have you. The major shareholder of Rimgate is a company from Europe called Fokker, which is a direct competitor of de Havilland because it produces a product similar to the Dash-8, a 50-seater STOL aircraft. Certain information on the competitive elements was withheld, but no financial information was withheld. I would just say that if Rimgate wants its offer to be discussed publicly, since I cannot do it, let it make it public and then let the people of Canada compare it to the Boeing offer and see which is the best.

HATE LITERATURE

POSTED IN MOSCOW FOR DELIVERY IN CANADA

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Canadians of Ukrainian descent are being bombarded with unsolicited hate literature which is postmarked Moscow. Is the Minister aware that this literature is circulating in Canada and, if so, is he prepared to take action to stop this propaganda from filling Canadian homes?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that I share his concern that this type of material appears to be circulating. I can give him my undertaking that I will immediately direct our officials to check the situation and see whether there are prohibitory tariff items which will allow us to check this material, and report back to him.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT BILL C-70 BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but, in his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Government has imposed closure on several Bills, the most unfair being Bill C-70 to de-index family allowances.

The Opposition has been urging the Government to withdraw the Bill. Women, mothers, unions, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops just wrote to the Minister and asked him to drop the Bill. When will the Government do the honourable thing and withdraw this Bill?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is away on Government business this morning, may I say that we have had a very substantial opportunity to debate this legislation. Indeed, the study time in committee was extended by its membership in order to accommodate the representations that were made. So I say to the Hon. Member that we have listened to the representations and made a decision to proceed with this legislation in order that we may put into effect the budgetary provisions contained therein.

BISHOPS' REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in a letter dated November 15 the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops said:

—society must not succumb to an ideology of restraint that subordinates human dignity and human needs to abstract economic theory.

They are still awaiting a reply to this letter, by the way. Will the Minister do the honourable thing and, if he is not going to listen to us, at least listen to the special needs of this country at Christmas time?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, naturally these representations, made by a variety of groups, are important. However, we also have an obligation to redirect our resources to those most in need, the low-income earners with children. That is what this legislation is doing and we intend to proceed with it.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—STUDIES OF CORPORATION'S ASSETS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Canadians want information on the de Havilland-Boeing deal made public. They want it tabled in the House of Commons. Our seventh question is this. Why will the Government not table studies done by experts related to de Havilland's assets, studies such as those done by Reed Stenhouse, Burns Fry, and Arthur Andersen?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, for the seventh time to the seventh question, we will make all information available following the due process and procedures of this House. Apart from the full day which the Opposition took up on this topic in the House, there will be further and ample opportunity, certainly during the committee study of the estimates, to go through all the details of the deal. When the deal is concluded all the details will be available in committee.

PRIVATIZATION SECRETARIAT STUDY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the eighth question, and probably for the eighth time, is this. Why will the Government not table the study done by the privatization secretariat which reviewed the options surrounding the de Havilland deal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we as a Government are trying to give you all the information possibly available at this time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Table those two agreements, that is all you have to do.

Mr. de Cotret: We will certainly not table cabinet documents in this House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are not cabinet documents.

Mr. de Cotret: We will offer you all the information to specific questions. Please ask them. You keep hiding under procedural issues. You have not asked a simple question in the last ten days. I will give you numbers.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY IF GAZ MÉTROPOLITAIN MADE OFFER TO PURCHASE GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I should think I do not have to explain to anyone in the House to what extent the Gulf refinery is, or rather was vital to the economy of Montreal East.

I would like to know from the Minister whether Gaz métropolitain—many such rumours are circulating—did make an offer to purchase the assets of Montreal's Gulf refinery in November, and whether it is true that a more generous offer was made on December 1 to purchase these assets so as to keep the refinery operating and protect the jobs of the 450 workers?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to be aware of the fact that the Government of Canada does not own the refinery in question and is therefore not in a position to accept offers for the refinery. If a potential buyer of the refinery had an offer to make he would, of course, have made the offer to the owner of the refinery, Gulf. Since, apparently, there was no transaction between any company other than Gulf and Ultramar, we can assume that the offer to purchase accepted by Gulf was the one made by Ultramar.

REPORTED OFFERS BY GAZ MÉTROPOLITAIN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, that is not the question I asked the Minister. I have asked a very simple question. Is it true that Gaz métropolitain made an offer in November and another offer in early December to buy the assets of the Gulf refinery in the east end of Montreal? That is the only question. Is it true an offer has been made?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I just explained that if he wants to know if an offer was made for the refinery he should direct his question to Gulf. I was not made aware of all the offers made or rejected. This was a deal between one company and another company. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would not be involved in a transaction between two private companies.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PROPOSED MERGER OF DE HAVILLAND AND CANADAIR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, an unanswered question which has been put before.

Some Hon. Members: Nine!

Mr. Hovdebo: Okay, number nine. Why did the Government abandon its election campaign promise to create an aerospace strategy which would combine de Havilland and Canadair into one Crown corporation?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I have answered that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodriguez: We did not get an answer.

Mr. de Cotret: The Minister of Finance talked about that. I talked about that. Obviously we looked at that alternative. It was judged not to be in the best interests of Canadians. It was judged not to be in the best interests of Canadian taxpayers. It was judged not to be in the best interests of the industry. It was judged not to be in the best interests of the employees. We found that the best deal we could possibly make was the deal we are making now with the Boeing Corporation.

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—EMPLOYEE OWNERSHIP OPTION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Number ten, Mr. Speaker. Why was the employee ownership option suggested by Frank Stronack of the CDIC rejected in the de Havilland deal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the possibility of selling de Havilland to its employees was looked at very carefully. It did not meet the basic criteria we were trying to fulfil, namely, to give de Havilland access to—

Mr. Deans: To give it to a U.S. company.

Mr. de Cotret: Would you let me finish the answer, please?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Do you want an answer? You have been asking me for answers all week. Do you want answers?

There were two important elements which had to be fulfilled: giving de Havilland access to a world-wide marketing organization of a first class nature—

Mr. Deans: They already have that.

Mr. de Cotret: —and financial strength to go ahead with its R and D and technology development program.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if this is such a great deal for Canada, as the Minister has tried to outline this morning, why will he not publish the deal? Why will he not give Parliament a copy of the acquisition agreement and a copy of the memorandum of understanding with Boeing? If it is such a great deal, let us know what it is. Will he also let us know what conditions still have to be fulfilled between now and when the deal finally closes in about 80 days?

• (1150)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, all of the specific items that pertain to the deal were answered in the House earlier. They include the price, the book value, the tax issues, the credit notes, the world product mandate, Government equity, the royalties, the product liability insurance, the corporate liabilities, the Government programs, Defence Industry Productivity Program, EDP, Government content, supplier commitments, R and D, insurance, new investment. If the Hon. Member needs any more I will refer him to public information that was made available to all Members of the House.

It was reported again in the Financial Times this week. All the details are available. When the final deal is concluded, hopefully at the end of the year, the details of that deal which can be made public from a commercial point of view will be made public.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO SHAREHOLDERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the shareholders in this deal are the people of Canada through Crown corporations. The shareholders have a right to know the conditions against which their company is being sold. The simple and direct way to do this is to table the documents. What is he hiding?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the shareholders in this country are fully aware of what we are doing.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They sure are.

Mr. de Cotret: We are putting a cap on a bottomless hole that sank more than $830 million of their money into a corporation that has, to the end of December, a book value of $140 million and only because there was a capital injection of $200 million during the year. We are telling the taxpayers of this country that we are putting an end to an endless flow of taxpayers' dollars—an estimated $200 million into that company next year—and making it profitable and good for the employees and Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF TOXICOLOGY CENTRE AT GUELPH, ONT.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the Canadian Centre for Toxicology at Guelph. It is my understanding that the board of that Centre now intends to raise all of the capital privately in order to build the Centre. Therefore, will the Minister give some assurance that requests for research funding as such would be looked on favourably by his Ministry?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the matter very carefully and with a sympathetic eye. As the Hon. Member will know, the Government has put a high priority on toxicology research and in fact established a $1 million fund last February for that purpose, especially in the wildlife area.

However, we are conscious of the need to consider individual proposals in the context of an over-all program rather than making separate ad hoc decisions. The Hon. Member can be sure that the individual proposal to which he has referred will be considered in that light.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we have asked 10 questions intended to elicit information with regard to the de Havilland sale to Boeing. All that we have found out is that the Minister does not intend to tell Parliament the nature of the deal until it is completed. Why does the Minister not feel it appropriate that the Parliament of Canada should be given access to the documents that will result in the sale of the Havilland to Boeing prior to the sale being completed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. We are selling a commercial enterprise under the terms and conditions that we have outlined to every Member of the House. When the final details are completed we will be more than happy to advise everyone in the House of the Commons, the dotted "i"s, the "t"s and so on. You know all of the information that can possibly be germane to the public debate at this time.

REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF INFORMATION BEFORE COMPLETION OF SALE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, why is the Government not providing the information in advance of the deal being closed? Do you not believe that Parliament has a right to know what the Government of Canada is doing?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, for once I find myself in total agreement with my hon. colleague. The Government has a right to know.

Mr. Deans: Parliament.

Mr. de Cotret: I want to assure him that the Government does know.

The supplementary question will be obvious, Mr. Speaker. Very soon they will ask the Minister of Finance to refer his budgetary proposals to a cabinet committee before he presents them to the House. We are managing the Government in a management-like fashion. We are concluding a deal that is good for Canadians, and we will proceed with it.

RIGHT OF PARLIAMENT TO INFORMATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that this is not a private deal among friends in the Cabinet? This is a sale of a public company to a private operation from the United States. Why does Parliament not have the right to know?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is a very good question.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that it is a very proper question. When the Liberals purchased de Havilland why did they do so through a devious fashion and not introduce it in the House at all? The purchase was not introduced or discussed in the House. If it is such a good question, why did the Liberal Party, the Government at that time, not follow the advice it is preaching right now? Where are we?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GAZ MÉTROPOLITAIN'S PURCHASE OFFER FOR GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Wednesday, the Prime Minister announced to workers that Gaz Métropolitain had not made a serious offer. Today, the people at Gaz Métropolitain are contradicting the Prime Minister's statement and saying that they did make a serious offer and they even mentioned that they were in touch with your office. Could the Minister inform the House who is telling the truth in this matter, the Prime Minister or the people at Gaz Métropolitain?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained to the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada does not own this refinery. Therefore, offers to purchase this refinery would not be made to the Government of Canada. Offers to purchase the refinery would, of course, have been made to the owner of the refinery, which was Gulf. At no time did I or any other member of the Government receive an offer to purchase a refinery that we do not own.

REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING OFFER—MINISTER'S ROLE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister deny that her colleagues, the Conservative Members for Assomption, Duvernay and Mercier, discussed the Gulf refinery question and the 35,000 barrels with Gaz Métropolitain in her office? Does the Minister want us to believe she was not aware of the matter?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is obviously forgetting that it was at my request that Gulf delayed the shut-down of the refinery for two months so that new buyers could come forward. This is certainly more than the Liberal Government had done for the three refineries that had closed down when the Liberal Government was in office. They refused to intervene in this way.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

UNITED STATES SPACE STATION—POSSIBLE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Science and Technology. It is my understanding that the Government of Canada is to decide whether it will participate in the United States space station. I believe that not participating would be missing the boat. Will the Minister indicate when that decision will be taken?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has a memorandum of understanding with the United States in terms of active participation by Canada in the space station effort. The Cabinet is presently seized with the proposal that I have laid before it, and a decision will be made some time next month.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF OFFICIAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Environment Canada's senior scientific adviser in Ontario, Doug Hallett, has resigned today after high level ministry criticism of him for sharing information with the public, especially via The Journal last week. Will the Minister request that Dr. Hallett stay on, and will he give Dr. Hallett the public vote of confidence that his dedicated work so clearly deserves?

• (1200)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am at a distinct disadvantage in doing justice to the Hon. Member's question, because I do not have a letter of resignation from Dr. Hallett. It may well be that in the last few hours he has indicated his intentions to resign. I have no information that such a resignation is related at all to criticism of his actions, much less from me.

INVESTIGATION OF ST. CLAIR RIVER CHEMICAL CONTAMINATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to inform the Minister that in fact the resignation has taken place, confirmed by his office this morning, and is tied to that criticism. Is it fair that Doug Hallett should lose his job while Dow Chemical prospers? Is it fair that communities down river from the blob should have to lose their faith in that investigation going forward with full support from the Ministry? Or will the Minister make an effort to get this key man back into the team?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can give a categorical commitment to the Hon. Member that nobody within Environment to my knowledge—certainly not I—asked for Dr. Hallett's resignation, much less encouraged it. In my case, I have not even received it.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that you have responsibility for all the accoutrements in the House of Commons. For the last 12 days the halls were decorated very beautifully. It certainly added to the Christmas spirit around here and, by the way, it cost taxpayers $18,000 to decorate the halls. However, this morning I came along and everything has been removed—the red carpet, the Christmas trees and the lights. Does this have anything to do with the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) entertained last night, or is it that the Grits stole Christmas?

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two petitions from residents in the riding of Saint-Maurice who strenuously object to de-indexing of family allowances. As you know, pressure is increasing in this area. For instance, this morning we read in the papers that the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops has once again asked the Government to withdraw this Bill.

Petitions

I would like to table a third petition, this one from the people of Shawinigan South, and another one from the people of Shawinigan and Grand'Mère, asking the Government to stop this legislation which will have a very negative effect, especially on single-parent families, and emphasizing that Canadians want to keep the present system which is fair to all families in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to table these two petitions on behalf of the people of Saint-Maurice.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. The first group of petitions is signed by Canadians who are expressing their concern about the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits reaching $600 million annually by 1990. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases. The petitioners are principally from Ontario, communities such as Lakefield.

I assume that my second petition will meet the requirements of the Standing Orders. Some people did not include their addresses, but it is a petition called "Operation Justice". The petitioners ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) particularly to reinstate full indexation to the family allowance and the child tax credit, because they feel that the tens of millions of dollars which will be taken away will harm families.

I have another petition which is principally from residents of British Columbia.

Mr. Boudria: Name them.

Mr. Fulton: Well, they are principally from North Vancouver, Burnaby and other areas of the province. They are concerned, as well, that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits will take $600 million away from children by 1990. The petitioners also call for the reinstatement of full indexation of the universal family allowance and for the Government to rescind its unfair tax increases.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present. They call upon the House of Commons to reinstate fully the family allowance and child tax credit. The petitions have been signed by people in the communities of Downsview and Scarborough, Ontario, as well as people in the communities of Parson's Pond and Portland Creek, Newfoundland. They pray that the House of Commons will reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and will rescind the unfair tax measures which the Government is contemplating.

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, workers at the CN Moncton shops are continuing their efforts to make the Government understand their concern about the jobs in these shops. That is why today, I am tabling a petition on behalf of more than 800 people in the Moncton area.

[English]

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND CORPORATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a large number of Canadians. It is probably the first of many petitions to come. They protest the sale of the de Havilland Corporation to a company with headquarters outside Canada. In addition, the petition urges that the Minister and the Government make public the deal which apparently has been signed with Boeing, so that all Canadians can see what in fact the deal is all about.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have two groups of petitions to present. The first group deals with the unemployment insurance program. The petitions are signed by residents of Orillia, Ontario; by individuals in Stratford, Ontario; by members of the United Food and Commercial Workers Union in Ontario; by residents of Dryden, Ontario, in northwestern Ontario; and by residents of Toronto. All the signatories to these petitions call upon the Government to withdraw its proposal that pension income should be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, because that provision is scheduled to come into effect on January 1, 1986.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my second group of petitions comes from residents of New Brunswick, Ontario, Newfoundland and British Columbia. All the signatories to these petitions decry the fact that the Government is deindexing family allowances. They call upon the Government to restore full indexation to the family allowances.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions on two different subjects. The first group of petitions comes from Regina, Saskatchewan, North York and Downsview, Ontario and Victoria, British Columbia. Some 175 to 200 petitioners humbly pray that the House and the Government maintain full indexation of the family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases.

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have received as well a number of petitions containing several hundreds of names on an entirely different subject. These residents of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia humbly to change the schedule of the ferry service between Borden, Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentime, New Brunswick, back to its original schedule and to maintain services and maintenance as they were a year ago.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to avail myself of my right to present to Parliament a number of petitions. The first is entitled "Operation Justice, Families with Children". It is signed by numerous residents of North York. They ask that full indexation of family allowances be restored.

I have another petition from residents of Vancouver. They ask that full indexation of family allowances be restored.

I have as well a petition from numerous petitioners from Coquitlam and Burnaby who are asking that the indexation of family allowances be reinstated. People from St. Gregor are also petitioning Parliament to reinstate full indexation of family allowances.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it all these petitions deal with the same subject. The Hon. Member knows that he should simply indicate where they are from.

Mr. de Jong: The last one deals with the same subject matter and is signed by residents essentially from Lake Lenore, Saskatchewan.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions concerning deindexation of family allowances. The first one comes from Brampton, Mississauga, Don Mills and Bramalea, Ontario. It calls for full indexation of universal family allowances and asks the Government to rescind unfair tax increases.

The second petition comes from Wai Kay Lai, Sin Fa Lai, K.K. Lai and Wai-Keung Lai. This is a Chinese-Canadian family in my riding who ask that family allowances not be deindexed because it will have a particularly bad effect on the poorest families. Of course, many immigrant families with several children will suffer particularly.

The next petition is from the Grandview community of Vancouver East. It states that family allowance deindexation will not be offset by the child tax credit and that this will have a particularly bad effect on women and children, especially single-parent mothers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it all these petitions have to do with the same subject. The Hon. Member should know that once she has indicated the subject once, the proper course of procedure is simply to indicate where the rest of the petitions are from.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, the next petition is a different one. The undersigned ask the House of Commons to restore full indexation of family allowances and child tax credits.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have just indicated to the Hon. Member that she should simply indicate in this situation where the petitions are from. Otherwise she is indulging in a filibuster. Therefore I suggest that she indicate in about 10 seconds where they are from.

Ms. Mitchell: I was trying to point out that this is a different petition. It concerns the child tax credit. It also states that the budget measure will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987. It calls for removal of these measures.

Finally, I have a petition from Strathcona by many new Canadian families asking that the Government reconsider and reindex—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Strathcona, thank you.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege of presenting a petition this morning. It is a double privilege when one is able to present a petition in the presence of one of the signatories. This petition is from residents of Madsen, Red Lake, and other towns in Ontario who call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions in the same form concerning the matter of family allowances. These petitions are from New Westminster and Vancouver, British Columbia, as well as Brampton, Acton, and Willowdale, Ontario, and Riverview, New Brunswick.

Mr. Murphy: How about one from your grandchildren?

Mr. Heap: Not at those addresses.

The petitioners ask Parliament to rescind unfair tax increases and reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances.

I have one other petition in different form from residents of Ward 5 in North York, specifically Downsview, Ontario, which asks the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a number of petitions. The first is from Peterborough and Fraserville, Ontario. The second one is from Parson's Pond, Newfoundland. These two petitions request the Government to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

The other petition I have is from "Operation Justice, Families with Children" and is signed by a group of citizens of Downsview, Ontario. It requests the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to reinstate full indexation of family allowances.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions on the subjects of family allowance, child tax credit and unfair tax increases. The first petition comes from the Social Action Ministries of the Anglican Church of Canada. It points out that the cut-backs in family allowances and the tax increases are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as tax-free capital gains and greater RRSP deductions for high-income recipients. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

I have a similar petition from residents of Broadview-Greenwood, my own riding. I have a petition of similar wording focusing on family allowances and tax increases, from residents of Chatham, Ontario. Next I have a petition which focuses on family allowances, tax increases and the child tax credit. These petitioners are from Halifax and Dartmouth.

[Translation]

Next, I have a petition from Ottawa residents who are asking to have full indexation of family allowances reinstated.

[English]

I have further petitions focusing on family allowances from residents of Kingston, Enterprise and Amherstburg, Ontario. I have a similar petition from a number of residents of Thunder Bay, Ontario. I have another petition from residents in Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must ask the Hon. Member to conclude briefly.

Ms. McDonald: I have another from Mississauga; another from Ottawa and Chatham; another from Dartmouth and Halifax. I have another petition from residents of Regina with a large number of signatures. Finally, I have some from a variety of places in Ontario including Chatham, Toronto, Salem and Newmarket.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which also relate to a concern that Canadians from coast to coast have been showing about deindexation of family allowances. The first one calls on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases. That petition comes from Bramalea, Brampton, Mississauga and Weston.

The second petition comes from a number of residents in the City of Toronto and Woodstock. I have a third petition which also addresses the question of family allowances and calls on Parliament to rescind deindexation of universal family allowances. It is signed by a number of residents from the City of Toronto.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the next petition has been signed by many residents of Longueuil, Saint-Hubert and Montreal who insist, in French this time, that the full indexation of family allowances must be restored and that the unfair tax increases must be repealed.

The next petition, Mr. Speaker, deals with the same matter, namely the deindexation of family allowances, and it bears the signatures of people from the Montreal region—Laval, Montreal North, Saint-Louis-de-Terrebonne and Ville d'Anjou—who are all strongly opposed to the deindexation of family allowances.

• (1220)

[English]

I have another petition also on the same subject signed by a number of Canadians from Kitchener, Woodstock—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member will be able to conclude. He has indicated that they are all on the same subject. Perhaps he might just state where they are from.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had done that. This is on the same subject and it is from Woodstock.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have here a couple more petitions signed by residents of the City of Montreal and related to the question of de-indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Finally, I have petitions from the West Island of Montreal, from Beaconsfield, Kirkland, Dorion, Châteauguay, St. Jean and Dorval, all of which oppose the deindexing of the family allowances.

INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-6 (from the Senate), an Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, a Convention between Canada and the Co-operative Republic of Guyana and an agreement between Canada and India for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be read the first time.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I also want to say a few words on this motion to concur today.

One of the most serious problems facing Canadian agriculture today is the farm debt crisis. This report was presented to the House of Commons on April 1, 1985, and had a great deal to say about the farm debt crisis. The report was supported by the majority of Government Members and proposes among other things a massive program of farm agri-bonds to assist those farmers facing serious financial difficulty.

Today's farm debt crisis is the most serious situation which has faced Canadian agriculture since the 1930s. A recent report prepared by the Farm Credit Corporation identified 170,000 farmers, those with gross sales of over $15,000 and less than $30,000 from farm income, and gives a very scary picture of the farm debt crisis. The report indicates that 39,000 farmers face serious financial difficulty. These are not part-time farmers, these are the youngest and most technologically advanced farmers in Canada. On average, they have 10 or 11 years of experience in farming and are the most productive farmers in the country. Interestingly enough, they produce half of all the food produced in Canada.

The debt crisis facing Canadian agriculture is very serious. The FCC report came out a year ago in November and was recently updated, so this is not something that has been suddenly sprung on the Government. It indicates that of the 39,000 farmers facing serious financial difficulty, 5,500 have less than 15 per cent equity in their farming operations. The Farm Credit Corporation suggests that these 5,500 farmers, our youngest and most productive farmers, are technically bankrupt and that there is no way they can hang on to their farms.

There is a second group of farmers identified, those with a farm equity of between 15 and 40 per cent. The FCC study indicates that there are 10,000 farmers in that group and that they are experiencing serious cash flow problems in the order of shortfalls of $14,000 to $21,000 per year. We can see what a very, very difficult situation that group of 10,000 farmers faces. The third group mentioned by the FCC has a farm equity of between 40 per cent and 55 per cent and there are some 23,500 of those farmers. They have an annual cash flow shortfall of between $5,000 and $11,000 per year.

I suppose that if this were a short-term, one-shot occurrence, something might happen in the long haul. However, the report put out by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) at the Farm Outlook Conference this year indicates that realized net farm income is forecast to drop to $3.7 billion in 1985, down 14 per cent from 1984. Realized net farm income really has not risen very much over the past several years. That is why the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of the House of Commons prepared this report last April.

The report to which I just referred recommends, as the Government promised in its election campaign, a program of agri-bonds. This would be a program financed and operated by the Farm Credit Corporation. It would be used to assist those eligible borrowers, farmers in serious financial difficulty, and would provide funding at an 8 per cent interest rate for up to five years in an amount of up to $300,000 per farmer. The treatment of the interest expense would be non-deductible and the tax treatment of interest income would be non-taxable. The program would operate for one year. It would be a one-shot program but the benefits from the rescheduling of debt would be felt for five years.

The committee held hearings over several weeks. I believe that every major agriculture group in the country came before the committee to make presentations. We heard from the provincial Governments, the Farm Credit Corporation, the Ontario and Canadian Federations of Agriculture, the prairie grain pools, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Institute of Agronomists and many other responsible groups. They all made their representations to the committee.

● (1230)

I think the views of Canadian agriculture groups and other non-agriculture groups were quite well canvassed. I hope that we will receive support from the House of Commons for concurrence in this report. This would be a signal to the Government that we want action in respect of the farm credit crisis. As the report of the Farm Credit Corporation indicates, without action there will be many young farmers—the real cream of our agriculture group—who will face the loss of their farms.

There is not one member of the committee who believes that farmers who have lost all equity can be saved by the program recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. There are some farmers with off-farm income who will probably not require any assistance. From its studies the committee believes that there is a group of farmers, possibly 12,000 to 14,000, whose situation is such that they could be assisted. I hope that the Government will take action. We fully expect that it will.

I believe that every member of the committee and every Member of the House thought that there would be action in the Budget on May 23. We were disappointed, as was every farm organization in the country, in that Budget. It took no action whatsoever with respect to the farm debt crisis. In fact, it worsened the situation because of the downward trend in international commodity prices. We had thought that there might be assistance in terms of the farm debt crisis. We thought there might be some assistance in terms of the input cost side of agriculture. In fact, there was little funding for the Farm Credit Corporation. Its budget was slashed from $494 million for the year 1984-85 to some $90 million for this year. The input costs were increased by nine cents a gallon effective September 1, which will cost some farmers $1,200 to $1,500. The sales tax will also be increased on January 1, which will not only affect farm fuels but all farm input costs from the cost of new tractors and new combines to all input costs which farmers have to face. In fact, the situation has been exacerbated.

The committee report also dealt with the question of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. A large percentage of farmers work off the farm. They are moving into farming or have to work off the farm. Many of them become caught in the maze of regulations with regard to section 31. In this respect the committee recommended an increase from $5,000 to $10,000 of expenses which could be written off against off-farm income. There has been no action taken by the Government in this respect.

One section of the report which the Government adopted is the section dealing with the capital gains exemption for farmers. Of course, this is not a measure which will affect farmers exclusively. It is something given to everyone. However, it was given to farmers initially and it is to be phased in for other sectors.

We held our breath somewhat last week when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought in the minimum alternative tax. We thought that if the Government were to keep faith with its election promise this minimum alternative tax would somehow not break the promise in relation to the capital gains exemption for farmers. In fact, the minimum alternative tax nullifies a good portion of the capital gains exemption which was provided for farmers. Thus, we face the prospect of the minimum alternative tax being applied to all farmers. This is important because farmers depend on whatever equity they have on their farms when they sell it for retirement income and for pensions. Often they do not have enough actual cash-flow or free funds to contribute to a registered retirement savings plan. However, they plough back their profits into the equity in the farm. We now face the prospect of the minimum alternative tax applying to farmers and those who depended on the exemption will now have to pay the minimum tax unless they sell their farms within the 18-day period between today and the end of the year. That is the only way of which I am aware whereby they can avoid paying this tax.

I hope Hon. Members will support concurrence in the report. We we are aghast at the cavalier, callous and irresponsible way in which the document referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and prepared under the name of the Minister of Finance deals with taxation issues and agriculture. If there was ever a document that was stacked against farmers it is this document. It is entitled Taxation Issues in Agriculture. It portrays farmers in a most unfair way in terms of their financial situations. It compares, for instance, the net worth of the average farmer with an employed person. It compares the value of an economic farming unit with the value of a house owned by a homeowner. In this respect it takes the average value of a farm in the year 1981 and compares it to the average value of a Canadian home in 1977. Because of this, the popular press reports that the average farmer is eight times better off than the average homeowner. That is a most unfair approach. If a comparison is to be made, one should compare a farmer with someone who has a capital intensive business. This is what farmers face. Then, we have the media saying that farmers are eight times better off than the average Canadian.

A second aspect of the report which was carried fully in the popular press was with respect to the average farmer earning twice as much as the average Canadian. If the comparison were done with an average Canadian with a capital investment of $400,000 or $500,000, depending on the region of the country, I am sure no disparity would be found. In fact, I believe it would be found that the small-businessman with a similar capital investment is doing much better than the farmer. This is certainly true for the year 1985 in which the average realized farm income has dropped by 14 per cent.

The third unfair presentation which was made portrays the average farmer paying only half as much tax as the average Canadian. Of course, the whole document prepared by the Minister of Finance is negative toward any of these issues.

• (1240)

I think the committee worked very hard, hearing from many responsible witnesses, and putting together a report which would be beneficial to Canadian farmers. Yet, the Government acted on the report in only one case, the capital gains exemption, and that was not exclusive for farmers and it was immediate rather than being phased in over a five-year period. However, much of the benefit will be nullified by the minimum tax which the Minister introduced on December 4 and which will come into effect on January 1. So there is not much time for the individual farmer to take advantage of the benefit.

There are many aspects of agriculture which make it urgent that the Government move on these several issues. The Minister has promised some action since last January on the farm debt crisis. We thought there would be action taken in the budget to implement the recommendations of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

On July 10, the Minister announced that he would bring in farmer creditor loan legislation which would allow for an independent review of farmers facing foreclosure. Unfortunately, there has been no action taken on the amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. The Minister keeps promising action but there has been no legislation brought forward. I really gave up on the Minister about three weeks ago because he seemed to be waffling when the question was put to him in the House by another Hon. Member as to whether or not he would actually bring in that farmer credit arrangements legislation.

I brought in my own Private Members' Bill, Bill C-253, which would provide for farmers to apply to a court for adjudication. I would hope that if the Minister cannot get around to bringing in his own legislation, the Government would agree that my Bill be considered by the House of Commons and acted upon. The situation is urgent. I indicated that something like 23 per cent of our farmers face serious financial difficulty. That is an increase of some 4 per cent over last year at this time. The situation is not getting any better and I believe the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has made some good recommendations to the Government which would ease some of the pressure on farmers. The Minister should move on the farmer creditor arrangements legislation as well. The Minister has promised all these things and we really want to see some action by December 1 because farm credit loan payments come due now.

Back in September when the Minister put the moratorium on the farm credit foreclosures, they were running at 14 per week. There were 670 foreclosures awaiting action by the Government at that time. It seems to me that just putting a moratorium on foreclosures does not solve the problem. We must bring in a program of assistance such as was recommended by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I would hope that we would get concurrence in the House so we can bring pressure on the Government to act on these recommendations.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) what he thinks the effects of a real debt set aside program would be, if it were brought in? I know it is not one of the recommendations, but it was discussed fairly extensively in the committee and there is a mention of it in the report.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, when representatives of the Farm Credit Corporation were before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, they pointed out to us that in the current situation it is very difficult to write down a debt. If the corporation writes down a debt for one person, because it is a government agency, it has to write it down for all individuals who have debts and who would demand it. It seems to me there would be an advantage in a pre-bankruptcy or pre-foreclosure arbitration procedure under the guise of a court of law. In that kind of setting the FCC would be in a position, under the arbitration of a judge, to do that.

My Private Members' Bill, Bill C-253, foresees the possibility of a farmer, who is facing foreclosure, serious financial difficulty or bankruptcy, being able to apply to a court of law, and rather than the bankruptcy court, it could be done by the district court in each area. For instance for a farmer in Kenora-Rainy River who is facing serious financial difficulty of that magnitude, to have to come all the way to Toronto, if that is where the bankruptcy court is, would be a most unfair arrangement. So I would recommend that it be made possible for the farmer to make application in the county or district court in his area for an arrangement and that this very action, provided it was accepted by the court, would stop all foreclosures for a period of time during which the trustee would be able to arrange a meeting between the creditors and the farmer who is facing foreclosure. If they came to an agreement of a breakdown, a debt set-aside or a debt set-aside in principal for a period of time, that agreement then would be simply filed with the clerk of the court. The judge would not be involved at all. It would just be a binding civil agreement. Of course, it would have to be a viable situation where the farmer was left with enough working capital to continue his operation.

It seems to me that there should be provision for that kind of arrangement, because when a foreclosure or bankruptcy takes place, often the farm is tied up for several months, or even years. A lot of the assets are frittered away or stolen, or just walk away overnight. The FCC claims that in every foreclosure or bankruptcy its average loss is $90,000 to $100,000. Obviously, foreclosures and bankruptcies are not very profitable for the FCC and probably not very profitable or successful for the banks as well. I do not suppose the recommendation would be successful in every case, but it seems to me that in a lot of cases if the clock were stopped pending negotiation with the creditors, it would work. And I think there would be a 90 per cent or 95 per cent success in the Farmers Creditors Arrangement Act, but if it did not work, then it could go to a judge who could either arbitrate the situation or appoint a professional or expert panel of farmers, people from the FCC, people who are knowledgeable about the local situation and the viability of local farms. The judge would have to treat the creditors, the farmers, fairly, but an expert panel could make sure that the farm was viable in the long term.

I believe there is a place for this kind of legislation. It was before the House in June of 1984, and the Minister promised it in July of 1985.

Mr. Hovdebo: I do not want to be argumentative, but I guess this is the place to be argumentative. In committee the need for financial institutions to take some risk in the operation was brought to our attention very forcibly on several occasions. The bankruptcy procedures and the attempts to solve the problem do not stop the clock. Does the Member not think that a debt set aside program which does not necessarily reduce the principle but deals effectively with the accumulating interest should not at least be the very minimum risk that a financial institution should take when making loans?

Mr. Foster: I think the Hon. Member makes a very good argument. In the pre-foreclosure arbitration procedure which I have been recommending, about 90 per cent of the arrangement would be a voluntary agreement between the farmer or fisherman and the creditor. It would simply be filed with the clerk of the court. If I understand the Hon. Member's question, if such a thing actually went to arbitration by a judge, it might well be proven that it would be unwise to ever write off any principal. The principal would be maintained but the interest would stop accumulating for a certain period of time. The value of such a procedure would be to have a voluntary agreement between the creditor and the individual facing foreclosure. Obviously, if you go through the foreclosure or bankruptcy procedure there will be massive losses.

Farm property values have dropped dramatically by 25, 30, or even 50 per cent. Obviously, if the property is sold through a bankruptcy procedure there will be big losses. The Royal Bank claims that its losses are in the order of $45 million this year. Should those losses be to the benefit of the farmer taking over, or should they accrue to the benefit of the person who has been farming the land for the last eight, 10, or 12 years and working his heart out to make it succeed?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are delighted that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) brought this motion forward because it will permit us, throughout the course of the day, to show the House and Canadians who might be watching how farmers and businessmen in the country are in very deep trouble indeed. They are in deep trouble because of what the Liberal-NDP coalition did to them from 1972 until the present. I will set that forth when we resume at two o'clock.

Other speakers from our Party will rise and show how concrete and positive action by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Government is getting farmers turned around. Prospects are more optimistic today than they were a year ago and they will be a lot more optimistic in another six months.

Members in the House appreciate fully why the Hon. Member is rising on a concurrence motion today. However, members of the public may not. I want to point out to them that this motion was filed on April 1, 1985. Therefore, the Member's sudden-found interest on December 13, 1985, is not due to any genuine, real concern for the farmers of the nation, because this motion has been sitting on the Order Paper for eight and a half months.

Mr. Gauthier: We were waiting for you to act on it.

Mr. Thacker: The Government has moved on all sorts of issues. The only reason this motion is raised today is to allow the Opposition to waste another day. It is ironic that opposition Members would want to waste time on a piece of legislation that will give every individual in the land, whether or not they are farmers, a $500,000 capital gains tax relief. By virtue of their birth in this nation, everyone now has the right to build up a $500,000 pool of capital that the nation cannot touch. They can then be truly free from the ravages of Government. They can tell the Government to get out of their lives, that they have made their own pension plans and that they do not need the Government.

The Opposition does not like that, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt in my mind that the Liberal and NDP philosophy is to make everyone come to the Government for grants. They want everyone to be beholden to the Government, because that is control. The Conservative philosophy is to make everyone independent so that they can tell the Government to get out of their lives.

We know that the Opposition is not happy with the fact that the unemployment rate has dropped dramatically in the country and that interest rates have dropped. That has done more for farmers than any other action a Government could ever take. Interest rates would not be down if the Liberal Party were still in power. The National Energy Program would still be in place in this nation if the Liberal Party were still in government. Over the course of the afternoon we will be able to show how things are improving.

It is not only farmers who are in trouble, Mr. Speaker, but our senior citizens and our young people who want to build a future. How can you build a future when 30 cents of every tax dollar received by the Government goes to people who have enough money so that they can lend it to the Government in an absolutely guaranteed investment? If you had a million dollars, Mr. Speaker, why would you put it in a business when you could lend it to the Government and get an absolute guarantee of return with no risk or exposure at all? That is the problem.

We will show that for 15 years the Liberal Government turned on the printing press to make all sorts of lovely programs. With the low tax rate, people had a cash flow. They took that cash and paid too much for land and too much for businesses. Just as has always been the case throughout history, when a Government turns on the printing press it leads to inflation, which leads to high interest rates, which leads to an adjustment—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Do you have something to say?

Mr. Kilgour: I don't think you have either, Marcel.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, do you? If you have nothing to say, I may have.

Mr. Kilgour: Give us your point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I just wanted to make sure that I heard correctly, because I was distracted by the Hon. Member from Edmonton.

[Translation]

Did the Hon. Member say that no Government ought to stay in office for more than 15 years? Because I think it bears directly on the remarks I intend to make later on. Is that what he just said, that after 15 years a Government should never—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest this is not a legitimate point of order.

In any case, it being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had the floor.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, when we broke for lunch I had just begun my address. I was pointing out how the motion before us today is a concurrence motion that has been on the Order Paper since April 1, 1985. Therefore, I wanted to demolish, first and forever, the claim by the Hon. Member for Algoma that he was genuinely interested in farmers. The real reason the motion is before us is to block us from getting to the Orders of the Day which would allow us to pass a Bill that would result in farmers and everyone else receiving $500,000 worth of capital gains tax relief.

Mr. Boudria: Why didn't you move it earlier if you are so smart?

Mr. Thacker: The Government wants every Canadian, from the moment they are born, to have the privilege and right of being able to build up their own $500,000 pool of capital that the Government cannot touch. Just to show how fragile that right is, it was barely presented in the House when the Liberal Government of Ontario moved in on it. People can be sure that whenever they elect a Liberal Government their personal pension plans will be in jeopardy.

Not only are the farmers in trouble, but so are senior citizens, young people and business people. Not only are farmers going bankrupt. The pure and simple reason for this is the direct result of 15 years of inflation. History has shown us that it has happened before with other Governments in other countries. Whenever a Government turns to a printing press for its money and at the same time becomes involved in deficit financing, just as sure as day follows night, there will be inflation, high interest rates and the adjustment phase such as this country is in now. It is my opinion from my reading of history that this Government is handling that adjustment phase better than any other.

The farmers are not guilty of any serious wrongdoing. They are the most productive members of our country. During the last 15 years, farmers have increased the size of their operations, increased their capitalization and their productivity. They have also been very creative in moving into other crops and making the adjustment far better than have other sectors of our society.

The segments of our society that have been unable to make this adjustment are those who have come under a public regulatory system, public grant system or subsidy program. Their adjustment phase has not stopped, but simply has been delayed. Those sectors face much greater difficulty when they come to that adjustment phase.

How were the farmers able to deal with that adjustment phase? The Government offered many popular programs while maintaining a low tax. This gave everyone the perception of being wealthy. The country seemed very prosperous because we had an enormous cash flow as a result of a low tax and numerous programs. People then paid too much for the land. For instance, in my part of the country, the price of land went from $100 an acre to $1,500 an acre. Even under inflated prices there was absolutely no way it could be paid for. Yet people had to buy because the cost would be even higher the next day. People also paid too much for businesses.

We were ultimately faced with the deficit as a result of the trickery and deceit which the Liberal-NDP coalition began on the Canadian people in 1972. We had the perception that we were well off while the Government was borrowing money. Beginning in 1970, some 5 per cent of tax revenue went to service the debt. It began to rise to 10 per cent, 15 per cent and 20 per cent until over 35 cents of every tax dollar must now go to service the debt. This means that people with wealth can, with no risk, responsibility or exposure, simply lend their money to the Government rather than invest it to create jobs. Therefore, the rich become fabulously rich while the middle class is eroded.

I ask Canadians if senior citizens are better off for having had that 15 years of apparent affluence under all the programs offered by the Liberal-NDP coalition. The answer, in the long term, is no because we cannot allow that debt service to increase.

If everyone is better off from the deficit, why are so many people going bankrupt today? I recall the year 1969 when there was an absolutely balanced Budget. We used to have balanced Budgets in this nation. The $35 billion annual deficit is a product of the Liberal-NDP way of governing. We used to have a small national debt, with only 5 per cent of tax revenues paying that debt. At the same time we had all of the social programs, including old age security, Canada Pension and vast amounts of money going to our universities. Those of us who went to university had 10 jobs waiting for us when we graduated.

One must ask why these groups are going belly up when the Government has borrowed over $200 billion allegedly to help them? The fact is that Governments cannot proceed in this fashion. The irony is that the ordinary Canadian is the one who must always pay. That is what is significant about the election in September, 1984. While it is possible for Governments to get away with deficit financing to buy their way back into power from time to time, ultimately the people will realize what has happened and will regain their sovereignty. They took back their sovereignty in 1984 and that is why there are 211 Members sitting on the Progressive Conservative government side of the House. Canadians have exercised their sovereignty because they knew this deficit financing was jeopardizing not only their future but the future of their children and grandchildren. Canadians made an enormous statement in the last election, and I believe the Government is handling the adjustment process well.

It is clear that the deficit cannot be abolished overnight. The entire income tax system raises $35 billion to $40 billion. In order to wipe out the deficit through the progressive income tax system, taxes would have to double. Obviously this cannot be done because there would not be enough disposable income. I believe the Budget of the Minister of Finance is a very good combination of measures that will wipe approximately $4 billion off the deficit in this fiscal year and $8 billion next year. The deficit will not rise in a geometric fashion but will level off and begin to decline. While we are beginning to get positive results for the future of our children and grandchildren, the unemployment rate is declining because the fiscal climate of the country has changed as a result of the election of a Conservative Government. People are generally optimistic about the future of this country and are therefore prepared to make an investment. This is leading directly to jobs, which is our main concern. Increased employment means greater tax revenue and less money spent on unemployment and welfare. We are in an upward spiral and at the end of three years this country will prosper. That is what makes the Opposition unhappy because they prefer to see people in dire straits so they could show how their Government, like the great Liberal Governments of the past, could save them.

• (1410)

Dealing with the third report of the Finance Committee on tax issues in agriculture, I assure the Hon. Member for Algoma that the Government has acted and will continue to act. Subsequent speakers will explain it point by point. whether it be the capital gains tax and the freedom that will give us, drought payments, stabilization, the Farm Credit Corporation and its moratorium, the advisory boards to help make that adjustment phase fair to the banks and to individual farmers, the small business development bond which has been carried on, interest rates which have dropped, or Revenue Canada. I have not received a letter on Section 31 for weeks and weeks, because Revenue Canada is more fair, equitable and reasonable in its treatment of farmers.

Mr. Boudria: That is nonsense.

Mr. Thacker: I have not received a letter for weeks and weeks on that particular issue. If he has received letters, let him rise—

Mr. Boudria: Yes, I have.

Mr. Thacker: Let him send copies to the Minister.

Mr. Boudria: I have, and he has not done anything about it.

Mr. Thacker: The Government is prepared to respond. For 15 years the Liberal solution to everything was to create a marketing board. The red meat industry did not want a marketing board. Within one year of becoming the Government, the Minister of Agriculture has a red meat stabilization program which he and the Minister from Ontario have signed. Hopefully other provinces will join very quickly.

I can continue by referring to the minimum tax which will not affect farmers. It will not affect anyone who has been paying taxes. The minimum tax will get those people who were not paying taxes because they had enough cash flow to takee advantage of all the "incentives" brought in by the Liberals. Now they seem to think they are loopholes. Those people will pay a minimum tax.

So that other Hon. Members can be heard, I will sit down. However, before doing so, I should like to move the following motion:

That the motion for concurrence be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs presented to the House on Monday, April 1, 1985, be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the said Committee and that it be an instruction to the Committee that they have the power to amend the same so as to recommend expeditious passage of legislation to give effect to the budgetary measures providing for an exemption of up to $500,000 from capital gains for the proceeds of the sale of farm property."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, are there copies of the motion for us to study, in both official languages?

Mr. Prud'homme: We would like to know what is going on this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will know that Members are not required to present motions in writing in both official languages. I have a copy of the motion in English. Of course it will be circulated; that is perfectly reasonable. As far as I can tell, from looking at the motion, it appears to be perfectly in order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it that some of us would like you to read it, Mr. Speaker, so that we can hear the interpretation and find out exactly what the motion is all about.

Mr. Speaker: Fine.

Mr. Prud'homme: Very slowly.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), seconded by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), moves:

> That the motion for concurrence be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs presented to the House on Monday, April 1, 1985, be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the said Committee and that it be an instruction to the Committee that they have the power to amend the same so as to recommend expeditious passage of the legislation to give effect to the budgetary measures providing for an exemption of up to $500,000 from capital gains for the proceeds of the sale of farm property."

Therefore, the question will now be on the amendment. On debate, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to have a copy of the motion, if possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Your Honour has deemed the amendment quite in order. That is fine. As you were able to see, we raised no objection. Now, we were prepared to deal with the main motion, and to avoid Members of both the New Democratic Party and the Official Opposition being called out of order for failing to deal with the amendment—for lack of relevancy, as the English say—I ask the Chair to allow us a few minutes of silence, in a friendly manner consistent with the holiday spirit, in order that we may receive the motions and find out what they are all about.

We had not been notified, we were not at all aware that such an amendment would be introduced, and in order to avoid being called out of order for not speaking on the amendment, we should like to have a copy . . . I see that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) agrees with me. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) prefers to read the original of what he is supposed to deal with this afternoon, because he is much more able to do so in his mother tongue. I think it is only regular and normal—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Can I try to help the House, if I may? I take it that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who was about to rise on a point of order—and I am interpreting—was about to ask me to reserve my judgment as to whether the motion is in order until such time as he can see it.

Mr. Gauthier: That is my point.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I recognize the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides for the purpose of continuing debate. The motion will be circulated, and I will withhold a ruling as to the admissibility of the amendment in final terms for five minutes. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

Mr. Thacker: Filibuster!

Mr. Gauthier: It is debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Even though I represent an urban riding, Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the accusation levied by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) who has spoken before me, that we are involved in filibustering. Mr. Speaker, the amendment has just been moved and we do not have a copy of it in either official language, and we are already being accused of filibustering. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Hon. Member should be called to order and invited to be careful of what he is saying, because as representatives of urban ridings in Montreal and elsewhere, we have as much interest in the well-being of the Canadian farming community. I suggest the Hon. Member is foolishly accusing us of filibustering.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is well aware that this is not a point of order. Order, please!

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has the floor.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for raising that point, especially since the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills

(Mr. Thacker) accuses us of not liking farmers. I may remind the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, if he would listen for a minute—

An Hon. Member: He doesn't know how!

Mr. Garneau: I had a chance to visit his riding not long ago, where I even met dozens of sugar beet producers in Lethbridge—

Mr. Boudria: And Taber!

● (1420)

Mr. Garneau: —and Taber . . . who were very concerned about what was happening in the farming sector. And if anyone here does not seem to be concerned, and, to speak with the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, doesn't like farmers or doesn't want to support them, I may remind the Hon. Member that he would be better off looking after the sugar beet producers in his riding who are out of work. That enormous plant that is usually a hive of activity at this time of the year is now empty. Dead. Nothing is happening. And what are farmers asking this Government to do? They are asking this Government to take a stand and to pay the money they owe these farmers according to plans known and approved by the Government and by all farm producers. How come the Government decided unilaterally not to pay these subsidies? That is one of the questions the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills should have answered, if he was so concerned about the interests of farm producers, and especially sugar beet producers, because that was one of the issues brought to our attention and discussed at length. At this plant, not only are sugar beet producers completely idle, not only are they in dire financial straits, but in addition, this plant that employed hundreds of people now only employs a few units to do the usual winter maintenance work. Mr. Speaker, this is appalling, and I think the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) would be the last person to make the kind of comments he made in this House. I believe today's debate is entirely justified, because since April 1, we have had a report before the House that has been adopted unanimously by all Members, with both regular and substitute Members numbering Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats in their ranks. For example, I see that a number of Conservative Members were in attendance, including the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns), the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Caldwell), the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson), and the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) as substitute member, therefore representatives from all regions, many from the Conservative Party, some NDP Members, and Liberals as well. This report, Mr. Speaker, which was tabled in the House on April 1—

An Hon. Member: It was unanimous.

Mr. Garneau: —and which was unanimously adopted by all Parties, what did it recommend? There were eight specific propositions in the report, and some of them concerned the matter of loans to farmers, for example, agri-bonds as they are called, offered to investors on special terms.

Some propositions had to do with the Farm Credit corporation, others were about capital gains, and I would just as soon have spoken to the motion rather than take part in the main debate because that motion is as hypocritical as they come, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Garneau: Yesterday the Chair admitted that the word "hypocrisy" was not out of order, but this one is really unacceptable because, as we are about to recommend a reference to committee to consider the impact or advantage of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, we are faced with a ways and means motion introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in which he announced a new minimum tax on capital gains, yet they were supposed to be exempt as a result of the May 23 Budget. It was announced with fanfare on May 23, and Conservative Members proudly said: This was one of our election promises, a $500,000 exemption on the sale of a farm. Well, Mr. Speaker, we found out later on that the $500,000 exemption was available to anyone, not just farmers, so that a bona fide farmer aged 30 who intends to sell his farm when he gets to be 65 will have financial operations like any other worker. He can have capital gains on his investments, and after reaching 65, when he sells his farm, if he has already taken his $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, he will no longer be eligible in spite of what our colleagues opposite tried to suggest during the whole budget debate, and more recently, after the announcement made by the Minister of Finance in this House. Indeed, I would like to suggest to farmers who want to sell their farm to do it right now, before December 31, because if they sell before that date and have a capital gain, they will not have to pay any taxes, but if they sell after January 1, they will have to pay the 12.5 per cent minimum tax.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Garneau: The Government will provide a tax benefit with one hand and take it back with the other. When the Government says that the farmers will benefit or when the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills tells us that we should reconsider the report to determine whether it would be better to grant a capital gains tax exemption of $500,000—

An Hon. Member: Instead of $400,000.

Mr. Garneau: —instead of the $400,000 exemption recommended in the report, I find it completely ridiculous that this is all that the Conservative Government, through its spokesman, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, has found to shelve this report, which was approved unanimously by all committee members, including the Conservatives.

Why reject the work of the committee members? We can now see a bit more clearly what the Conservative Government is trying to do. The Conservative Members who were acting in good faith and who thought that they had a role to play as Members of Parliament went to the meetings of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, analyzed the situation, heard representations by many people and groups and sat from March 6 to 27 for one, two, three or six sittings. They heard the advice of independent experts, they found that certain things were reasonable, and with the NDP and Liberal Members, they made certain recommendations to this House. Now, the Government sees that it is stuck with recommendations made by its own Members and it is trying to shelve those recommendations. It is the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, the great defender of Western sugar beet producers, who is now stuck with the dirty job of proposing that the report be shelved so that the Government can get rid of recommendations made by its own Conservative Members which it does not want to implement.

These recommendations contained in the report tabled in this House on the 1st . . . Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member to my right can rise later and use his 20 minutes—

Mr. Boudria: To the extreme right!

Mr. Garneau: Yes, to the extreme right. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are other Members, including the one who used to be Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance before losing his job, who could perhaps tell us at what date the Quebec farm producers will benefit from the rubber cheque of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle).

I meet with Quebec farmers occasionally and this very directly involves financing, Mr. Speaker. I meet with farmers who tell me: We voted for the Conservatives because the present MP for Joliette, the present Minister of Public Works promised us a $13 million cheque. During the election he was going around waving a cheque that big, on which this was printed: "Pay $13 million to pork producers". Mr. Speaker, today is December 13, 1985, a year and a few months have gone by, nearly a year and a half since Quebec farmers, pork producers were promised that $13 million cheque, and they are still waiting for it. It seems that the cheque from the Minister of Public Works has bounced. The usual term for it is a "rubber cheque". I hope Tory Members from Quebec will address that matter.

But there are very serious financial problems in farming. There are people who say that this only concerns Western Canada. It is true that in Western Canada, because of the drought situation and the grasshoppers which plagued a major part of the crops, many farmers are in dire straits. But that problem also exists in other parts of Canada. This is why Members who sat on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic matters have been well advised to make specific recommendations to the Government concerning farm financing, and it is clear that if the report were implemented, many sectors of the farm industry, many types of products and most farming areas in Canada would benefit.

Of course, even if there is no direct reference to farm marketing boards with respect to tobacco producers, it is clear that those producers, who were on Parliament Hill a few times these last few days, would benefit from the financing proposals that were made or the implementation of some of the provisions also concerning the interpretation of Section 31, for instance, by Revenue Canada. I am sure that many farm producers would benefit if we could only respond to the rather serious issue that was raised in that report concerning farm bankruptcies and the way we treat people in difficulty during the conciliation period, that is between the moment when the financial institution says it will tighten the screw and the moment when a concrete and specific step is taken.

• (1430)

Everywhere we went in Western Canada, all agricultural communities mentioned that problem—and on their behalf I raise the issue before the Government Members—the seizure of property and machinery practically carried out overnight in some cases. They are not trying to suggest that financial institutions have no rights, but they would like to be able to talk things over and see whether it might not be possible to find alternative solutions, not so drastic solutions which would give a fighting chance to farmers who find themselves in a financial bind—and they do not deny that they are in trouble—more often than not because they acted on the advice of Government officials and experts from financial institutions. All they want is a little more time, something along the line of the private Member's Bill sponsored by my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster). I hope the Government will take it under consideration, a form of cushioning measure we might say, to avoid situations such as a farmer being seized overnight and losing some of his machinery or part of his herd. The report does contain very good suggestions, but the Government might not be prepared to implement them holusbolus. What we would like is to have somebody from the Government side—like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) or his representative, or again the person responsible for the wheat pool, or others like the Parliamentary Secretary—who would tell us why the recommendations cannot be accepted, including those concerning financial matters. Perhaps they will have perfectly acceptable reasons.

On thing for sure is that those recommendations were drafted after long studies and consultations with a number of experts. Should the Government choose not to implement the eight recommendations, or only some of them, it seems quite logical to me that it should explain its position very clearly to Members of the House and the Canadian people.

Why, for instance, did the Conservative Party make recommendations during the election campaign—and I am sure you are familiar with the document containing 338 Tory promises? They made crystal-clear promises to the agricultural community, about the so-called agri-bonds, among others.

The Conservative Members who sat on this committee were so convinced that the Conservative Party's program was meaningful, that in the report submitted by the Committee on Finance, Trade, and Economic Affairs and dealing with agricultural financing, we find a recommendation made in the Progressive Conservative Party's campaign platform.

The report was tabled on April 1, the Budget was brought down on May 23, and the Minister of Finance failed to keep his election promises and failed to act on the recommendations made by his own Conservative colleagues who sat on this committee.

I wish someone would tell us why your campaign platform promised farmers it would create tax-free bonds that would enable farmers to borrow at 8 per cent. Why did they make this proposal during the election campaign? Why did the Progressive Conservative Members make it again in the report tabled here in the House on April 1? And why did the Minister of Finance fail to include this proposal in his Budget on May 23? It would be interesting to know who is telling the truth when and why. Did he have a good reason?

I suppose they could take each of these proposals, like a number of proposals that are both in the Progressive Conservative Party's programme and in this report, and perhaps explain why they refuse to implement them.

Earlier, the previous speaker raised the question of the debt load. Mr. Speaker, I would like to consider for a moment and comment on what was said by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and I would like to say—I only have one minute, so I will have to make it short—that a Government that wants to fight the deficit and trim spending does not give billions of dollars to oil multinationals, it does not give tax benefits to people who are making billions of dollars in capital gains—to be forced to deindex family allowances for those who need it most. If they are concerned about the deficit, they should be consistent, and farmers who saw the same Government spend one billion to bail out the banks cannot understand why it refuses to implement the proposals contained in this committee's report.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before we go to questions and comments, I wonder if we might deal with the admissibility of the amendment. I have accepted that there is a question and comment period. Therefore, on the admissibility of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) wishes to make a comment.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I confess that the time between the moving of the amendment and my making this particular point has not been sufficient for me to do an in-depth review of all of the many and various precedents which one might want to cite in a situation such as this. I do, however, want to begin by pointing out that it is unusual to have a motion put at this point to recommit, if one will, a motion already before the House back to a committee with instruction. In an attempt to find similar circumstances, I had to review the question as it is addressed both in Erskine May, Twentieth Edition and in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition.

You will know, Sir, I am sure, since you have looked at this on numerous occasions before, that the whole matter of instruction addresses itself almost entirely to the question of how one deals with Bills. There is no reference that I can find to how one deals with a recommittal of a committee report. I am making an assumption, therefore, which I contend should hold up, that the same rules that apply to the recommital with instruction of a Bill should apply equally to the recommittal with instruction of a report from a committee.

Having made that point quite clear, I hope, I want then to refer if I can, Sir, to page 229 of Beauchesne's, Citation 756 under the heading Instructions. The citation reads as follows:

> An Instruction is a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might otherwise not do.

I contend that this instruction is out of order. It is out of order because the committee could, quite clearly, when it was deliberating, have done the very thing which the instruction proposes it should now consider doing. In fact, when this matter was before the committee, the option to do what the Hon. Member now wants the committee to consider doing was already before it.

One must assume that since all Hon. Members of Parliament are intimately familiar with the rules, the committee would have considered, or at least some members of the committee would have considered, the appropriateness of making the recommendation which the Hon. Member has now suggested it should consider making. Therefore, I would argue on the basis of redundancy that to suggest that the committee now do what it otherwise could have done, or at least to consider doing what it otherwise could have done and obviously rejected, makes the motion redundant.

To back up my argument, I would draw to your attention, Sir, in Erskine May a somewhat similar case which appears on page 545 where, though not using the word "redundant", Erskine May chooses to use the word "Superfluous". I think it fair to say, once again recognizing that there is no direct, identical comparison to be made anywhere with what we have before us, that we have to look at the rules as they are applied in similar circumstances.

• (1440)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are talking about a Bill.

Mr. Deans: It is talking about a motion. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of all learned Members, to "superfluous" in subclause (2) at page 545 which reads in part:

—notice has been taken that the powers proposed to be conferred by the instruction are within the competence of the committee, the Speaker has declined to put the question.

In a nutshell, my argument is quite simple. The House of Commons cannot second-guess its committee and ask it to consider something which it could have already considered but chose not to by way of a referral with instruction. I think that is quite clear, both from reading Erskine May and Beauchesne's.

I do not want to belabour the point. I am sure the weight of the argument which I have put before the House will render the motion, which is an interesting motion, out of order. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to consider it in light of the comments that I have made.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this is an important point which deserves the full and considered attention of the House. It should be very thoroughly considered. I would like to refer Your Honour to Citation No. 756 and Citation No. 757 on page 229 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Citation No. 756(3) reads as follows:

There are two types of Instructions—permissive and mandatory.

Citation No. 757(1) goes on to state:

The object of a permissive Instruction, which is the more ordinary form, is to confer on the committee authority to do something which, without the Instruction, it would have no power to do.

If we look at the wording of the motion it states:

"the Third Report of the Standing Committee . . . be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the said Committee and that it be an instruction to the Committee that they have the power to amend the same—"

It is clear from the wording of the motion that we are dealing with an effort to send the committee what the citation from Beauchesne's calls "permissive instruction". If that is the case, I submit that the motion is clearly out of order because it asks the House to instruct the committee that it has the power to amend a report that the House is now considering. Certainly, this is something which the committe already has the power to do and which it had the power to do at the time it was preparing the report which is before the House. I think we, as well as yourself, Sir, must take notice—judicial notice, if I may put it that way—of the fact that the members of the committee were fully aware of their powers and authority and, yet, they chose not to write a report covering the point in the motion, which its mover wishes to have the committee consider.

May I again say that the mover of the motion has not drafted his motion in a form which makes the instruction it seeks to give mandatory. The motion does not say that the committee must do what is in it and nothing else. In effect, it simply reminds the committee that it has the power to amend the report which is now before the House in a certain way. This is something that the members of the committee must have known. The power in question is one which the committee has always had.

Mr. Deans: Ignorance of the law is no excuse.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Therefore, I submit that this motion is out of order. It is a permissive instruction, or attempts to convey a permissive instruction. Because it does so in a way which attempts to confer on the committee something which it already has the authority to do, I respectfully submit that you must rule this motion out of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I am fully prepared to rule on the matter. I think the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will be arguing against the argument which has been made and I think I can save him the trouble. I am sure he has a creative argument to make. Both Members have made creative arguments thus far. I want them to know that I am sure it is not because today is Friday the thirteenth that we are getting into these types of matters.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) have made persuasive arguments relating to Citations Nos. 756 and 757 of Beauchesne's. I remind the Hon. Members that these citations refer to committees studying Bills and are therefore the instructions that the House may or may not give to a committee in advance of the study of a Bill.

I remind Hon. Members that they may want to refer to Citation 660 of Beauchesne's, which I think governs the matter rather successfully. Citation 660 reads as follows:

When the motion to concur is moved, the House may refer the report back to the committee for further consideration or with instructions to amend it in any respect.

That seems to me to be entirely clear. The point of that, I suggest to Hon. Members, is that the intention of the restrictions on the power to instruct with regard to initial study is logically to say that if a committee had the power to do something, it made no sense to give it an instruction to do that since it had the power. However, once the committee has reported, it has no power over its report; only the House has power over the report. I would like to suggest to Hon. Members that the House must have the right, in logic, to refer a report back for reconsideration of the report in whole or for reconsideration of any clause, otherwise the House would be bound to deal with only the report the committee submitted. Clearly, the House cannot be bound simply to accept or reject a report on a matter. The House itself cannot amend the report. However, it can clearly refer a report back for amendment, either minor or major, or for complete reconsideration. Those are the practices and traditions of this House.

The committee's right of decision on the matter is by no means constrained, no matter what the House has asked it to reconsider.

Therefore, I find the amendment entirely in order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to reflect on your order in particular. I wish to draw to your attention a point which I do not think has been considered. The citation to which Your Honour has been good enough to refer us states:

When the motion to concur is moved, the House may refer the report back to the committee for further consideration or with instructions to amend it in any respect.

I respectfully submit, Your Honour, that the motion before us does neither.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It does both.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It does neither. It does not ask—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member is now making an addendum to his earlier argument. I have read Citation 660 in total. I am perfectly satisfied that the amendment is entirely in order. I can find no other interpretation of Citation 660 other than to allow the House to send the matter back in any way or in any form for any consideration that the House intends.

Are there questions or comments with regard to the speech of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau)? The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) especially as they related to the situation in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). Although the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills said that things are much more optimistic today in farming than they were a year ago, the last time I had an opportunity to visit Lethbridge it was the first time in 60 years that it was not possible to plant a sugar-beet crop there. The whole sugar-beet industry in Canada is very much in doubt. It involves hundreds of jobs and thousands of acres of land. The central point is whether or not the Government will be bringing in a long-term sugar-beet policy and whether or not it will be making a stabilization payment for 1983. This has been in doubt for at least six months now. I know that the Hon. Member has been making great representations. We have been making great representations, as have other Members. Yet, the government fails to move. I am interested to know what the Hon. Member feels about this situation since I know he has had a chance to visit plants there to meet with the growers and talk about the entire situation.

The same problem which exists about the agricultural stabilization payment for 1983 for sugar beets in southern Alberta applies in British Columbia with the B.C. fruit growers. For the first time in history, the claim of the B.C. fruit growers for their agricultural stabilization payment has been adjudicated at 80 per cent rather than 90 per cent, which is doing the fruit industry in British Columbia out of $12 million this year. It seems most unfair that we have a Tory Government which comes in and just refuses to make those agricultural stabilization payments, which I believe is exacerbating the situation. The farm debt crisis is putting young farmers out of business, and I would just like to know the thoughts of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) because I know he is very interested in this matter.

Mr. Garneau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in the sugar-beet industry. For years, when I was sitting in another Parliament, my responsibilities kept me in touch with the sugar-beet industry. As you know, for years, in the Province of Quebec we had a plan. It was established in 1944. A certain number of farmers have been involved in this plan. Many families earned their living through the sugar-beet industry. Now they have the same kind of problem in Quebec that is being experienced in Lethbridge.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) will certainly recall, because he has studied the matter, that a couple of questions have been raised by the producers. First, they are angry at the Government because it did not pay the subsidies which were supposed to be paid to the producer, and those subsidies were for the 1983 production—not the 1984 production. Normally, this should have been paid in the fall of 1984 or early in 1985, but we are at the end of 1985 and those stabilization payments have not been made, and they should have been made according to a plan which was in force for years.

I do not know why the Government, which had that kind of contract with the producers, made the decision on its own not to pay in accordance with a plan which exists. The producers in Lethbridge are very angry at the Government because the money which is owed to them is being taken away. Second, the producers want an answer for the future. What will happen in the future? Will they be in a position to produce? Are we going to have a sugar industry in this country? This is the question which is on their minds, and it is the same question which the producers in Montreal are asking. The answer is in the hands of the Government. It is talking about a long-term plan or policy for the sugar-beet industry. But the industry may have to wait and wait and wait.

You know very well, Mr. Speaker, how important it is for your own riding that an answer be given to those producers. This is why I cannot understand the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) being so arrogant in his remarks. He is in a position to defend those producers. He should defend his riding instead of fighting against the former Government which was defeated on September 4. If the Liberal Government committed sins, it has paid the price. Now the responsibility is in the hands of the Tory Government. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills belongs to the Tory Party so he should bear a part of that responsibility. He should be just as responsible as this Party is because the problem has not been settled.

Those producers now have another problem. Some of the sugar beet producers want to sell their farms. They do not know if they will be able to benefit from the capital gains tax exemption.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills proposed sending this report back to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That committee is actually discussing this issue. The Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is studying this issue now. We were there yesterday and we will be there next Monday to study the $500 capital gains tax exemption. I do not know how this report can be sent back to the committee when the decision is going to be made on Monday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), on questions or comments.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate my hon. friend from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) on his excellent speech, and I would like to ask—

[English]

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the rules are clear that when we are into the ten-minute question and comment period, the time is to be distributed equally between the Parties. You have already recognized the Liberal Party for the first question, Mr. Speaker, and the next question should either go to the New Democratic Party or to the Government Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is quite correct in his interpretation of the rule. However, the only person I saw rise in the whole House to ask a question happened to be the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russel, and he has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to congratulate you on your ruling. It was very objective, as usual.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). Does he think it is appropriate for the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) to tell us that the economy of the farming sector "is doing better" at this point in time when the sugar-beet producers are going under in his riding, and when we have heard representation after representation from the constituency he represents telling us how badly the agricultural sector is doing under the Tory Government? Can the Hon. Member tell us specifically how anyone can say that the farming sector is doing better when there was a press release from the office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), dated December 9, entitled "Farm Income Drops 14 per cent in 1985 to rise 1.6 per cent in 1986", when we know that the cost of living is going to increase by three or four times that much? Can the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides give us his opinion as to how the comments of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills relate to the information I have just given?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gave the answer in his question. The only reason the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills spoke as he did is perhaps for partisan reasons, otherwise, I cannot see, after the 15 days I have spent in western Canada where I met with farmers, and after having read, as the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) did, the press release from the Department of Agriculture, how he could have spoken as he did. The Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) also spoke about borrowing, the debt, and the deficit. Unfortunately, I do hot have time in this debate to comment on that. However, the Member may rest assured that if I hade another 10 or 15 minutes I would be very pleased to discuss this and ask him a few questions about it.

• (1500)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments in this debate. I think it is eminently logical for this motion to be before the House at this time. The report we are discussing was placed before the House in April. We were hopeful that it would be used in the Budget process and one of the recommendations made in the report was put into effect on May 24. We have waited for another six months and have seen no more action. I think it is, therefore, eminently logical for the motion for concurrence, which would instruct the House to take some action on the report, to be before the House at this time.

Before I go into the three issues which are considered in the report, I would like to say that we must look at the financing of agriculture. However, the financing of agriculture is only one issue. We should take a global look at agriculture. We should look at the costs of inputs, the cost of financing, and the price of the products that are being sold. We put band-aids on finance and other problems in farming, the net result being that we have an increasing number of bankruptcies every year.

The Government has often said that things are improving greatly because there are fewer bankruptcies this year than last. The reason for that is that once a fellow is bankrupt, he is bankrupt, and does not become another bankruptcy statistic the year after. Consequently, there are fewer farmers who can get into the position of finding it necessary to file for bankruptcy.

The Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) moved a motion which is obviously a delaying tactic. The Government does not want to vote on concurrence in something it does not want to put into effect even if it were concurred in by a majority of Government Members. The two members of the New Democratic Party were not entirely satisfied with what is in this report, but in order to give it the power of unanimity it seemed worth while to compromise to some extent and make it a unanimous report. It did not do us much good because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) took action on it only in the area of a capital gains tax exemption. It has been part of the New Democratic Party's policy for many years to have a $400,000 capital gains exemption for farmers only, not for Florida condominiums or speculative stocks. We suggested that small businesses and farmers be allowed an exemption of up to $400,000 as was recommended in this report.

The Hon. Member spoke of redundancy a little while ago. With that in mind we should take a good look at the amendment he moved to the motion. That amendment deals with the one recommendation with which the Minister of Finance did deal, the $500,000 capital gains exemption. He dealt with that on March 24. How redundant can we get? We are to send this report back to the committee and ask it to make recommendations to the Minister of Finance for legislation which will provide for an exemption of $500,000 for farmers. The legislation for that is presently before the House.

It makes good sense for us to be debating this, Mr. Speaker, and it makes good sense to concur. I abhor the idea of the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills that we should refer this back to committee, therefore delaying concurrence and delaying the giving of instructions to the Minister of Finance to bring forward the recommendations which were suggested by the committee.

The farm economy has been suffering for many years. I suppose that the last few years have been the worst, maybe because we are getting down to the bottom of the barrel. From 1942 to 1952 we had what everyone in Canada considered to be a balanced economy. According to the available statistics, at that time Canadian farmers earned about 6.3 per cent of the national income as opposed to the national product. Since 1952 the income of the farming community has declined to less than 1 per cent of the national income. That is the basic problem with which we are dealing. We are not giving farmers enough return for their products. We can deal with financing and a number of other things, but the bottom line is that we must deal mainly with the return for farm products.

I was speaking about the lessening of the proportion of the national income earned by farmers in the last 30 years. Conversely, it is very interesting to note that in the period from 1942 to 1952 financial institutions earned about 1.26 per cent of the national income. In those days all sectors thought they were doing well. I suppose that in 1953 the economic situation in the country was as well balanced as is possible. Everyone, including the labourers, union and non-union, considered that they were doing pretty well. Since then the income of farmers has gone down by 85 per cent.

From 1942 to 1952 financial institutions earned 1.26 per cent of the national income while in 1982 they earned 10.7 per cent of the national income. Last year they got 9.6 per cent of the national income. If you have been reading the papers recently, Mr. Speaker, you will know that the banks in Canada have declared the best year they have ever had, so they are obviously earning over 10 per cent of the national income. The portion of national income for the farmers has been reduced by 84 per cent while the banks have increased by 661 per cent. It is obvious that something must be done about financing. Since it cannot be solved entirely in this fashion we must take a global approach toward farming.

One of the three items on which the committee made recommendations was the possibility of agri-bonds. The committee supported that concept but the Minister of Finance has not acted on giving us an agri-bond program which would have provided relief to some farmers and made it possible for them to survive. The committee suggested a maximum amount of $300,000 per borrower for a maximum term of five years, with a yield of 8 per cent. This would have been handled by the Farm Credit Corporation and would have been tax free as far as the lender was concerned. It would have provided relief to farmers in dire straits.

The Minister has not acted on this recommendation although every member of the committee, including 16 Government members, unanimously recommended agri-bonds as a form of relief for farmers. Where are those 16 Tory Members today? They should be advocating that the House vote for concurrence in this Bill. Instead, the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills presented a motion to send it back to committee so that the Government will not have to react and vote against its own recommendations.

Mr. Thacker: We will vote for the amendment.

Mr. Hovdebo: The only reason the amendment was moved is to delay concurrence. It is a method of filibuster.

Mr. Thacker: Read the motion.

Mr. Hovdebo: If the motion had been allowed to come to a vote, the Government would have had to take action on it. The 16 Tory Members who were on this committee would vote for this recommendation. It would have been a message to the Minister of Finance to implement an agri-bond system as the committee recommended.

The report also contains a recommendation about Section 31 of the Income Tax Act concerning mixed income for farmers. This relates to farmers who must work part time off the farm in order to survive. Some 25 years ago these farmers were allowed a possible $5,000 in deductible losses.

Recently, full time farmers have had to work off the farm. While he is still losing money, he is no longer allowed that $5,000 deductible loss against his outside income. Our recommendation in this report was very modest. We suggested that it at least be doubled so that the first $5,000 be recognized as a loss and 50 per cent of the next $10,000 be recognized as a loss for deduction purposes. Again, the Minister ignored this recommendation and 16 Tories would have voted against the Government and the Minister. That is why the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills moved the motion before the House, in order to delay the concurrence in this report.

The third recommendation of the committee concerned capital gains tax. We recommended $400,000 capital gains tax exemption. However, the Minister gave farmers, speculators and people with condominiums in Florida a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. The motion by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills is redundant. He has recommended that we send this report back to the Finance Committee and ask it to recommend something which the Minister has already done. The Minister has already implemented a capital gains tax exemption in his May 24 Budget and that measure is presently in legislation before the House. The motion means nothing because it is redundant. It is absolutely clear that this is a filibuster to ensure that there is no vote on concurrence in this report. A vote on concurrence will split the Hon. Member's Party because there are Members who support these recommendations and obviously those who do not because the Minister will not implement those recommendations.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) told us how farmers were having difficulty surviving at this time. I believe people across this country who do not know farmers are making a number of incorrect assumptions. They believe that since a prairie farmer has $500,000 worth of land he should be prosperous. However, the farmer cannot eat the land and will not be able to produce if he sells it. While farmers in southern Saskatchewan may have had an investment in their land worth $500,000 at one time, they do not have enough money to feed their families. Other farmers who used to depend on the production of their land in order to survive are suddenly finding themselves in a position where they can no longer make payments on their investment in that farm.

Farmers can no longer live on their equity. While they may be able to borrow on it, conditions such as drought and high input costs will not allow them to survive for very long if they begin to live on that equity. Those farmers who live on their equity soon face bankruptcy.

The committee's recommendations in this unanimous report were ignored. I suggest that it is quite proper, after being ignored for six months, to move concurrence and thereby instruct the Minister of Finance to take action on the two recommendations which he has ignored so far.

• (1520)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) could comment upon another aspect of the matter with which I think we are dealing. It has been a desire of all Hon. Members to see some parliamentary reform. There is a desire that Members of Parliament become more capable of representing their constituents rather than being caught in the straight jacket of being a member of a political Party, of a Government or of an Opposition. Unless we are able, as ordinary Members of Parliament, to get out of these straight jackets, Parliament itself and the parliamentary process become more and more obsolete. We are the representatives of the people, first and more foremost. We deal on a daily basis with the problems of constituents back home. There is the basic belief that the system can only operate if the input from the people's representatives becomes the most important input in the decisions made by Parliament.

We have seen an honest attempt to bring about parliamentary reform. Surely a key element of that is to strenghten the committees, to allow greater independence by committee members and to sit together as Canadian men and women representing their constituents, not as governments Members or opposition Members or as Liberals, New Democrats or Tories. We were elected by our constituents to sit down together to tackle the everyday problems faced by them.

The Finance Committee is doing an important job. It recognizes a tremendous need out there. As my colleague has stated, it has brought together a modest package but an important package or a "first step" type of package. Now we hear the Government saying no to this basic form of parliamentay reform. It is refusing to deal with the recommendations of the committee.

Could my colleague comment upon what he feels this signifies? Does he feel that the whole experiment in reforming Parliament is in essence just a farce and window-dressing and that the Government has no intention of allowing individual Members of Parliament to have greater powers?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that very philosophical question. He hit on a very important point. We were operating to some extent under the old rules in this case. I am sure there was a certain amount of difficulty on the part of Conservatives when it came to accepting the unanimity of the report, because it was not entirely in line with the basic philosophy of their Party. They looked at it, accepted it and reported to the House with the hope that the Minister would act on it.

I hope that some time in the future—and this follows on the question of the Hon. Member—a committee such as the Finance Committee can report and instruct the Minister, the Government or the Cabinet to take action. To some extent this kind of philosophy would be much more helpful.

The report had the backing of 20 Members who were perhaps not intimately related to agriculture but knew a lot about it because of their positions in the community. They hoped that the report would be acted on. Concurrence in it would have amounted to instructions to the Government to act on it. By not acting on it, the Government is making a farce of its so-called recognition of parliamentary reform.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) because he is from the Prairies. He realizes the difficult situation faced in the southern parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan with regard to the drought this year. A tremendous opportunity would have been available if the third report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs had been adopted. It would have benefited some of those struggling producers. They would have benefited by the 8 per cent money proposed in the agri-bond program, which is an integral part of the third report.

I believe the Hon. Member has correctly assessed the amendment we are debating. In fact it is a deliberate move by the Government to pigeon-hole the report rather than to come before Parliament for it to be voted on. I do not believe many Hon. Members would vote against the report because it recommends an agri-bond program, as was recommended in the Conservative manifesto. The report recommends an agri-bond program on a case by case basis or on a selective basis to assist farmers facing serious financial difficulty. The amendment essentially pigeon holes the whole report and sends it back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That committee is already debating Bill C-84, to provide for the $500,000 capital gains exemption on the sale of farm property. It just avoids the question of concurring in the motion before Parliament.

I would be interested in knowing the views of the Hon. Member with regard to the minimum tax. Does he feel that some farmers who will be retiring feel betrayed by the minimum Tax? There was a promise to provide a capital gains exemption. As I read the minimum tax provision, it will at least apply, under some circumstances, to those who are not paying taxes otherwise. Many farmers, because of desperate economic situations, will not pay any significant level of income tax because the profits are just not there. They will feel betrayed if they should sell their farms, realize a capital gains and be caught up in the minimum tax arrangement, after the Government promised a capital gains exemption.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, members of the farming and small business communities have felt betrayed for many years. A large group of people across the country take what they make and return it to their businesses and farms in order to build them up. It was very logical to give them the exemption which allowed them to make use of the gain they had saved over the years. When they got out of farming or out of a small business, they could use the money as a little nest-egg on which to retire.

In the case of the minimum tax, it ends up being a typical situation of giving with the one hand and taking away with the other. I highly recommend that the Government move on it, particularly for small businesses and for farms. It should provide for certain capital gains exemptions of those particular types. Otherwise, the one recommendation which the Minister of Finance took from this report will have been negated by the minimum tax. The minimum tax is a good idea. It should be in place. However, if you do it to hurt the people who cannot afford it, then you go against what you said you were going to do.

• (1530)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to speak in this debate. I must say, though, that I wish I were speaking on the main motion rather than the amendment. Of course, the amendment was presented in an eloquent manner by my good friend and distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who obviously knows a lot about agriculture. He wanted the farmers of this country to benefit as much as possible from agricultural programs. He wanted them to benefit from the worth-while recommendations made unanimously by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. However, what did we see? An attempt to filibuster on the part of a Tory Member. He does not want this issue resolved. He does not want the farmers to have more. He wants to delay. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? A Tory Member attempting to delay legislation. That is something Government Members usually accuse Opposition Members of doing. Today in this House we have witnessed a Tory Member attempting to send a Bill back to committee because he did not want to deal with it. He would not have had the courage, the intestinal fortitude, to vote against a Bill which would have obviously benefited the farmers of his riding.

How did we get into this mess? How did we get ourselves into such a quandary? Let me review it for you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you will remember this vividly and objectively, being the non-partisan person that you are. During the summer of 1984 the Tories made several promises to the farmers of Canada. Actually, they made promises to everyone.

Mr. Robichaud: How many?

Mr. Boudria: I may have brought it to your attention before that the Tories made 338 promises. I just happen to have here a little booklet entitled "338 Tory Promises".

Mr. Robichaud: Two hundred or three hundred?

Mr. Boudria: That is 338.

Mr. Tobin: Were they sacred trusts?

Mr. Boudria: Some were sacred trusts and others were just regular generic Tory promises. Some, of course, were very important. A number of them were contradictory. Yes, 113 were to spend more money and five to spend less. Two were to increase revenue and 26 to decrease revenue. Then the Tories wonder why they cannot realize their election program. Small wonder. You do not do half of it if you try to do the other half. That is how bad it is. My good friend from Westmorland-Kent asks if there are any promises for the banks. They are not in here. Perhaps it is an oversight on my part. It does not say in here: "We promise billions of dollars to the banks."

Mr. Tobin: Anything on capital gains?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, there is something on capital gains. There are all kinds of promises here for farmers. Let me remind you of some of those promises although I am sure you remember them most vividly because you were subjected to hearing that partisan rhetoric just as I was.

Promise number one in agriculture is to abolish the capital gains tax on the sale of farm property for continual agricultural purposes. Remember what that says, it is abolished provided the land remains in agriculture. What did the Tories do? They abolished it partially and for everyone, including the owners of racehorses in the U.S., owners of villas in the Caribbean, the owners of castles in Spain, or what have you. However, only partially for the farmer. Then what did they have the unmitigated gall to do? Last week, when they found out the tax breaks they were giving to their rich friends were unacceptable, they partially taxed back some of their rich friends but at the same time viciously attacked the farmers. That is the Tory record. They made promises to reduce the price of gasoline. Would you believe that from a Government which has raised the price of gas 18 cents a gallon since it was elected? The Tories also promised a system of agri-bonds for the farmers.

They promises to revise Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. Those are the promises listed in the book of 338 Tory Promises. Incidentally, if you or anyone else out there wants a copy of that book all you have to do is write to my office, no stamp necessary, and I will gladly send you or anyone out there a copy of the book of 338 Tory Promises.

Now, let us go a little further. On September 27, 1984, a report was made by the Farm Credit Corporation stating very clearly that action was necessary by the Government to resolve the agricultural crisis. Not rhetoric, not promises; the election was over. No more promises. From that point on we needed action by Tories. I know that is contradictory in a way, but we did not get anything anyway. On September 27 the FCC released this booklet called Farm Survey. Let me read some of it to you. It says that in January, 1984, the total assets controlled by Canadian farmers amounted to $116.3 billion. That was $1.2 billion less than it was some three years earlier. In spite of the fact that the price of everything was going up, the price of farm land was going down. The value of the farmers' assets was under downward pressure because of a difficult economic situation. It said—

[Translation]

And I read here in one of the tables, that over a three-year period, the farmers' net value fell from $99.8 billion to $95.6 billion, a $4.2 billion drop. This shows the kind of impact which the economic situation has had on farming.

And a little later, Mr. Speaker, in November, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) began slashing expenditures. Whom did they cut first? The rich? Not at all. Whom did they slash?

Mr. Lanthier: The Prime Minister and the Ministers.

Mr. Boudria: My colleague says the Prime Minister and the Minister. Not at all. The Prime Minister's Office was increasing by 157 per cent at the same time . . . Yes, 157 per cent. While they were cutting off $6.2 million from the dairy industry program, at the same time, Mr. Speaker, in a single move the Prime Minister's expenses were increased, and the grants to Canadian farmers facing financial difficulty, which I just identified very clearly were reduced. Something like $9.4 billion were slashed from the Department of Agriculture, which was providing very worthwhile services to farmers. What did the Tory Members do? They commended the Government. Is it possible to be that partisan, Mr. Speaker? The Tory Members commended the Government for cutting grants and subsidies to farmers.

[English]

The Tory Members of this House move around the place to sit behind cabinet Ministers. The surfers, as we affectionately call them, the people who came in with the tide and who will go out with the ebb-tide at the next election, why were they not speaking on that day? Why were they just sitting pretty behind cabinet Ministers trying to get themselves on camera? If they wanted to get themselves on camera why did they not stand up and defend the interests of their voters? That is what they said they would do when they ran for office. No, the Tory Members did not do that.

Let me proceed. In January, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) allowed this particular document, Tax Issues in Agriculture, to be released. This particular document spoke of the fact that farmers were, in the Minister's view, not that badly off. The document indicated that the state of full-time farmers were relatively comparable to that of other sectors which included full and part-time workers, and that therefore they were all right. That kind of logic escapes me. Full-time farmers are compared to part-time workers and all kinds of other insignificant and ridiculous comparisons are made in this document. I would suggest that the Minister of Finance should have read it before he released it because his name appears on it.

In any case, the document to which I have just referred went to the people of Canada. I distributed 1,500 copies of it in my riding because I wanted the people of my riding to know what the Government was saying about farmers. Obviously this caused the Minister of Finance considerable embarrassment. He did not know what to do. After all, he had fallen into this trap. The Government House Leader decided that we would have a Standing Committee make recommendations that would serve two purposes. First, it would get the Minister of Finance out of trouble, and second, out of this we would create programs that would help out the farmers and the Government would be able to fulfil some of its campaign promises.

You recall, Mr. Speaker, the promises that I enumerated earlier. Some of them dealt with farm finance, Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, refinancing farmers in difficulty with the assistance of agri-bonds and, of course, the capital gains issue, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), just reminded me of very eloquently.

The committee came up with recommendations which are listed in this report here. That is why we are here today. Just to remind Hon. Members, we are here to ask for concurrence in a report that was agreed to unanimously by a group of Members of Parliament who sat on a committee. These Members from the Conservative Party, the Party that I represent and the New Democratic Party worked very hard. Much of the partisan rhetoric was left aside so that Members could concentrate on agriculture. I must admit that upon occasion, I became frustrated in that process but, nevertheless, in the end we came out with a report which made eight recommendations, three of which dealt with the issues I raised only a moment ago, the amendment of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act to make it fair, refinancing schemes such as agri-bonds and the relieving of retiring farmers from the capital gains tax burden.

We have now settled what it is that we want to do today. All we want is to have the House concur in or agree with the fact that a Parliamentary Committee unanimously decided that this kind of process would be beneficial for our farmers. What have we seen? We saw a Tory Member who represents an agricultural community, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), wanting us to delay that report. He is attempting to filibuster the process. Shame on him.

When the committee was making its deliberations, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture made an excellent presentation to the committee. The Federation indicated that the $3.8 billion net realized income from farming in the year 1984 was 29 per cent lower in real terms, which means adjusted by the Consumer Price Index, than it was in 1979. The salaries of farmers have gone down by 29 per cent in five years. The Hon. Member across the way wants us to delay this process. What is he waiting for? Does he want everyone to go bankrupt?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is quite important that the Hon. Member who is speaking appreciate the content of my motion. The motion is to refer the matter back to the committee so that the committee can recommend expeditious passage because his Party is blocking things and is not letting us get to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: First, Mr. Speaker, we are not discussing a Bill at this particular point in time. We are discussing concurrence in the very worth-while proposals that were brought to our attention by the very distinguished Hon. Member for Algoma Perhaps the Hon. Member across the way could listen. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as you said, that was not a point of order. It was not even a good point.

Let me return to what I was discussing before I was so rudely interrupted. On May 23, the Government presented a Budget. The Government made us wait the longest time in history before presenting a Budget and now we know why.

Mr. Tobin: They laid an egg and it was rotten.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That gestation period was surely long but the results were not worth waiting for.

Regarding the Budget, the National Farmers Union said on May 28 the following:

> There were a great many hopes riding in the farm community for some positive policies to surface in the May 23 Federal Budget which would bring relief to many hard-pressed farm families in financial distress. Instead, many are now faced with the threat of early liquidation and foreclosure.

That was the National Farmers Union's introduction to its comments on the Budget. Now the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills wants us to further delay implementation of the measures in which we are ready to concur today. He wants the committee to agonize even longer on the matter.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, of the resolution of the Glengarry, Prescott and Russell Federations of Agriculture and what these federations had to say about the Budget. I will read this resolution to you, Mr. Speaker, because I know you are very interested in it. The resolution reads:

> Moved by: Peter Romme
> Seconded by: Laurent Souligny
> Whereas Mr. Brian Mulroney during the last election campaign made a written promise to provide agriculture with long term—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I recognize the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that the Prime Minister must be referred to as the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, even when one is quoting from a document.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has a valid point. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on the same point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Do I understand the complaint is that my colleague was referring to the Prime Minister rather than to his title as Right Honourable for she is referring to the Prime Minister as being Brian Mulroney. Could she explain!

[English]

Mr. Boudria: I was reading from a document, but of course, I will say that the Right Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Mulroney):

> —during the last election campaign made a written promise to provide agriculture with long term financing at stable and affordable rates—

I know that this is embarrassing for Hon. Members across the way. The resolution goes on to read:

> Whereas farm financing was not addressed in the recent budget,
> Therefore we, the members of the Glengarry, Prescott and Russell Federations of Agriculture jointly demand that the Prime Minister of Canada fulfill his campaign promises and be it further resolved that we demand that the cuts of 60 million dollars in the Agriculture programs announced November 8th 1984 and the proposed 50 million dollars cut in the May 23rd budget be cancelled and that full funding be immediately restored to the Agriculture Department.

This resolution was agreed to at a joint meeting of the Federations of Agriculture of the Counties of Glengarry, Prescott and Russell. They approved it unanimously. If Tory Members say that the Budget received over helming approval, the three agricultural federations of the riding which I represent sure did not feel that way. That is not what they said about those Tories. With what are we faced? We are faced with more bad news from the Tories—more bad news from a Government which has so savagely attacked the agricultural sector and everyone else.

An Hon. Member: Come off it!

Mr. Boudria: In conclusion, I would like to tell Hon. Members that I am ashamed of the actions of the Government with respect to not wanting to help the farmers of the country, probably as all Hon. Members are. This is unacceptable. We need action from the Government. The farmers need help. We need help and we need it now from the Tories.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my comments will be brief in that I wish to hear from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—

Mr. Benjamin: Regina West.

Mr. Tobin: He claims that he represents Regina and Winnipeg some days so I made a choice.

I wish to make a brief comment. I come from a part of the country in which we do not have as large an agricultural base as that which exists in the ridings of Hon. Members who have spoken this afternoon. However, I do have a goodly number of farmers who are struggling to build an agricultural base in my province where the agricultural tradition is not a long one and where the industry is not all that developed. I speak of the west coast of that great Province of Newfoundland. In particular, I speak of areas such as Cormack, the Humber Valley and the Codroy Valley in Newfoundland where farmers are struggling to make a go of it. As one who does not profess to have a great deal of knowledge—at least as much knowledge as I would like—about this industry and as one who has sat today in this House in order to broaden that fledgling base of information which I do have, I found a great cloud of darkness and confusion being lifted as I listened to the eloquent words of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) and, indeed, the words of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), as they made clear to me something which I found difficult to comprehend. That is to say that we actually have before us a report from a committee of Parliament containing the recommendations of all three Parties with regard to improving the lot of those primary producers in the country who give so much and put so much back into the land. Having produced this report, and having made eight recommendations in a spirit of non-partisanship, reform, renewal, hope, help and recognition of the contribution of farmers, we now have Members opposite refusing to implement the proposals put forward during a quiet, serious, sober and responsible moment by all three Parties.

I can only say that is a shattering realization for a Member such as myself who does not have a great deal of knowledge about this industry. I say that from the point of view of a Member who presumed that work in this place was goodwill from every corner attempting to improve the lot of all. It is a shattering experience, one from which I hope I shall be able to recover in due course.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell if he will join with me in stepping aside in order to allow my good friend from Regina and Winnipeg to give us the benefit of his wisdom this afternoon until four o'clock.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, briefly, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his excellent remarks. Without speaking any further, I know, of course, that the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) would want me to say all kinds of things with respect to transportation issues. However, I will delay those remarks for the moment in order to give an opportunity to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to speak. He is obviously knowledgeable with respect to agricultural issues. He will give us the benefit of the information which he is willing to share with us at the moment.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my experience in the House so far has been that whenever there has been a unanimous report from a parliamentary committee placed before the House a motion for concurrence has been moved and the mover spoke for a few minutes. Then, there would be some kind of agreement through various means with respect to there being no further debate and the House would unanimously adopt the report in concurrence with what Members from all Parties on the committee had to say. Today, that has not been the case.

There is not any other sector in our economy which has had to take lower prices and deal with higher costs than our farming and fishing sectors. All other sectors of the economy, whether it be doctors, lawyers, trade union members, bankers or whoever else have been able to set prices. They were price-setters and not price-takers. Members of our agricultural and fishing communities have had to be price-takers while their costs have increased.

The report which is being discussed attempts to deal with this unfair situation in our economy. The report deals with the problem of the capital gains exemption regarding farmers. In order to utilize this exemption a farmer would have to quit farming. A fisherman who wishes to take advantage of the capital gains exemption would have to quit fishing in order to do so. However, a speculator in real estate and land only has to sell a property to someone else for a capital gain and take advantage of the exemption. We have always advocated that as long as a farm, fishing or small business enterprise remains within the family there should be a $500,000 exemption. We tried to persuade the previous Government in this respect. It would not go along with us. However, the Party which now forms the Government thought it was a great idea a couple of years ago. We have not heard anything with respect to this subject since. It will give the $500,000 break to any and every one with respect to capital gains.

I invite the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) to blow the dust off his copy of the Carter Commission Report of 1966. A buck is a buck no matter how one earns it. When it is earned through speculative capital gains it should be taxable from the very first dollar. In the case of a family farm, a family business or a family fishing operation which stays within the family and is passed from one generation to the next, then surely capital gains should not apply unless and until that farm, fishing or small business enterprise leaves the hands of the family and is sold for a capital gain.

Another matter which needs to be dealt with is that with respect to the requirement upon financial lending institutions to renegotiate loans which are out to the farming and fishing communities in the country and implement interest rates of 8 per cent, as is recommended by members of the committee. There are still some loans out there with interest rates of 18 per cent to 20 per cent. There have been crop losses and falling cattle prices. Farmers are losing their farms and their machinery. They are not able to function. Lending institutions must be prepared to take the bad with the good, just as our farmers, our fishermen and our small-businessmen have had to do. They cannot have it both ways. They want to collect the top dollar and yet they are not prepared to collect fewer dollars when the person who owes them money is getting fewer dollars. Surely something along this line must take place in a civilized society no matter what political Party is in power.

The Tories across the way epitomize the whole business of greed and selfishness. They ask: "What is in it for me?" They say: "To hell with everyone else". In order not to step on the toes of its friends in the corporate and lending sectors, this Government will go along with that. There is no way that members of the Government will step on the toes of organizations which are hurting the very people they purport to represent. This type of tragedy has to stop. I hope that over the next few days we can resume debate on the report which is before us and pass it with the unanimous consent of the House without a vote. Then, the Government will have no choice but to act on it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE HIGHER WHEAT SALES RETURNS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved:

That, pursuant to Standing Order 71(1), a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a Bill with the objective of providing wheat producers with higher returns from wheat sales for human consumption in the domestic market place while avoiding undue hardship to processors and consumers and other wheat users.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present this notice of motion specifically on behalf of wheat producers in my constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek, but generally on behalf of all wheat producers in Canada. The intention this afternoon is to focus debate in this Chamber on the special question of what is a fair return to the Canadian wheat farmer and how can Government ensure that fair return without inflicting undue hardship on processors, consumers and other wheat users?

In using Standing Order 74(1), I bring forward a motion that this House appoint a committee to prepare and bring in a Bill to study the intention of providing that fair return to the Canadian wheat farmer. The report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons has clearly stated that there should be more importance attached to Private Members' Business. We all know that in the past, private Members' Bills seldom, if ever, came to a vote. In putting this motion, I ask that a committee be appointed in order that we can have all-Party input into the formulation of a Bill which, hopefully, can be passed and passed in the best long-term interests of all Canadians, wheat producers and consumers alike.

Since August 1 of 1980, the domestic wheat price has been fixed under the Canadian Wheat Board Act between a maximum of $7 a bushel and a minimum of $5. Canadian mills buy wheat at prices set within this range by the Canadian Wheat Board. The formula price is set based on an average of the Thunder Bay and Pacific export prices weighted by volume of exports through the respective ports. On September 15, the price for October, November and December, 1985, was set at $218.71 per tonne for approximately $5.95 per bushel.

In putting this motion, I want to address and identify clearly the farm income crisis facing Saskatchewan and Canadian agriculture, with particular reference to the grain farmer. Between 80 per cent and 90 per cent of the Canadian wheat crop is marketed internationally and accounts for much of Canada's favourable balance of trade in agriculture. However, record world wheat crops have increased stocks, depressed prices and lowered the expected volume. In my Province of Saskatchewan there are approximately 66,000 farmers, and the average farm size is approximately 1,000 acres. The average capital investment is about $480 per acre. Last year, in 1984, Saskatchewan farmers grossed approximately $4.3 billion in farm income. Operating and depreciation expenses came to $3.3 billion, leaving a net realizeable income approximately $1 billion which, divided amongst 66,000 farmers, gives a per farm average of $15,000.

This year, 1985, projections are for $3.8 billion in cash receipts and $3.5 billion in operating and depreciation, leaving a realized net income per farm of $5,500. From this sum, the farm family is to make payments of principal and to meet all of their other expenses, food, clothing, utilities and so on. To sum up, then, in 1985, in Saskatchewan, realized net income before various agricultural support programs such as crop insurance, stabilization and drought assistance, is a loss of some $400 million. Total realized net income after these agricultural programs is $360 million or $5,500 per farm. This sum represents the farmers' labour. It also represents the return on a capital investment of almost half a million dollars per farm.

By way of contrast, the minimum wage in Saskatchewan is $4.50 an hour. At 40 hours a week, an individual on the minimum wage would receive some $9,360 per year without any capital investment whatsoever.

Moreover, the farm cost price squeeze is manifesting itself in lower farm land values. As asset values and equities erode, so does the individual wealth of farmers, the value of the security they have offered for loans, their ability to borrow and to invest, and their everyday consumer buying power. The results, then, is that not only farmers but manufacturers, small business people and all those dependent on farmers also suffer. Clearly, it would be nice if there were an international minimum price for wheat, a substantial price in the international market. But Canada cannot unilaterally impose such a regime on the world. With export prices at depressed levels and facing ever increasing competition from other countries, the only hope for a reasonable price at this time rests with a domestic pricing policy.

Regardless of whether an international grain agreement can ever be worked out, we must seize the initiative internally, within our own country, to deal with the only aspect of wheat pricing over which we do have some control, namely, the price of wheat for human consumption within Canada. I, therefore, urge discussion and inquiry through the establishment of a parliamentary committee to investigate whether the Canadian consumer ought not to pay a modest increase in the price of bread and cookies, on the understanding that the entire benefit, or at least the greater part of the increase, will be paid to the wheat producers.

Good wheat has an extraction rate of approximately 72 per cent. Therefore, one bushel of wheat weighing 60 pounds produces about 43 pounds of flour which, in turn, produces approximately 67 16-once loaves of bread. According to these Wheat Board calculations, a $1 per bushel increase in the price of wheat should only result in an increase in the price of bread of 1.5 cents per loaf.

Clearly, the wheat producer today needs $10 to $12 per bushel domestic wheat. A $5 a bushel increase would result in an income gain of approximately $367 million annually for wheat producers in Canada and would manifest itself in an increase to western Canadian producers of roughly 40 cents per bushel and something in excess of $1 a bushel for Ontario producers.

Not only would these increases provide an immediate shot in the arm to farmers but, in turn, to those who depend on the farmer; the implement dealer, the small business person and, indeed, virtually every other Canadian. Furthermore, as Carter and Schmitz pointed out in their paper entitled "Domestic Wheat Prices and Farmer Income", if the milling and baking industry passes 100 per cent of that $5 a bushel increase on to consumers, the price of bread should rise only by 7.5 cents per loaf.

Currently the farmers' share in a 24-ounce loaf of bread is less than two slices, not enough to make a decent sandwich. The farmers' share of retail sales value of products made from soft wheat is even less. According to the Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board, the percentage value of wheat and sweet cookies is 1.1 per cent; in solid cookies, 2.7 per cent; in crackers, 8.2 per cent and in 100 per cent wheat cereals, 4.9 per cent.

We ask for a fair return to the producers for their wheat and a fair price to the consumer. We have serious concerns about the effect of the various spreads and add-ons and margins which affect the shelf price of baked goods between the farmer and the ultimate producer. Even a cursory examination of the past will indicate that, as wheat prices have increased, so, too, have bread prices. However, have you also noticed that as wheat prices decline the price of bread continues to increase? Mr. Speaker, any way you slice it bread prices in Canada have in fact risen by some 50 per cent over the past five years while the price of wheat has declined by some 22 cents per bushel over the same period. It is imperative that ways be found to ensure that the bulk of any increase finds its way back into the producer pool.

According to Statistics Canada the Canadian consumer spends only 11.8 per cent of disposable income on food at home, or 15.7 per cent combining home and restaurant. We, as Canadians, have one of the highest standards of living in the world and I do not think it unfair or unjust to ask that the consumer pay a modest increase in order to subsidize the producer. Indeed, in 1980 and earlier years it was expressed, quite correctly I think, that the farmer, under the old two-price Wheat Act was forced to sell his wheat at a price well below the world price, which in turn subsidized Canadian consumers. Mr. Speaker, turn about is fair play. Now we ask the consumer to help out. In this country we have a cheap food policy. The percentage of our disposable income which we spend on food is the second lowest in the entire world, second only to the United States.

If a $10 or $12 domestic wheat price were instituted and the increase in a loaf of bread reached 10 cents, the average consumer purchasing 50 loaves per year would suffer an increase of $5 on his annual grocery bill. I do not think this would cause any great hardship. The cost of non-staple items such as beer, cigarettes, and liquor is continually increasing. People grumble, but they still buy.

If we, as consumers, do not help the Canadian farmer, we will eventually cut our own throats because we will eventually become dependent upon food supplies from other countries and at that time we will discover that there is a very real cost to food. We will all wind up carrying the economic and social costs of farm failures.

I was advised a short time ago that the Canadian Wheat Board has fixed the price of Canadian wheat at the mills for the next three month period. Indeed, there is good news because the increase is approximately 95 cents a bushel over the September fixing, with the result that the domestic wheat price under the existing program should rise to about $6.90 per bushel. While this is good news indeed, it puts the domestic wheat price almost at its limit of $7 per bushel. That, Mr. Speaker, is not enough and clearly does not meet the purpose of the motion which I have put before the House.

In April a Private Member's Bill was put forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) with regard to parity pricing. That was referred to committee by an all-Party agreement. The intention of the Hon. Member, to secure a better return for producers, is a worthy one which I share. Clearly, I believe the price of domestic wheat should rise to a least $10 per bushel, but I do have a lot of difficulty with the concept of parity and all the complications which seem to attach to it, many of which were addressed in that debate. It is not my intention to debate the meaning of "parity" here. My notice of motion is simple and straightforward. It is directed at the domestic selling price of wheat used for million purposes. It can be a very simple program to administer and to implement and, in keeping with the rules pertaining to private Member's activity, it will not result in any cost to the Government.

The proposal, however, is not without some problems. I fear that the intermediaries between the farmer and consumer will seize the opportunity, as they have done in the past, to piggy-back substantial price hikes on to the wheat price increase. It would, therefore, be most desirable if the industry would restrain itself in these circumstances to simply passing on the wheat price increase to the consumer without building on to it. Should this motion be passed today, it would be the task of the committee to hear the various points of view on this.

Another problem area relates to imported wheat products into Canada and our exports to the United States. Obviously, some of our trade could be jeopardized and there would be an increased demand in Canada for imported wheat products, particularly on the west coast. This would be another area for the committee to address.

I noted with interest the proposal put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Shellenberger), during the debate on Bill C-215 wherein he spoke of placing some sort of retail tariff on baked goods. While there may be some constitutional and legal impediments to this, again I believe the concept is worthy of study by the committee.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate my belief that the farmer is the backbone of the country. There is no other sector which pays full measure for all to its inputs and yet has no say whatsoever on the price of its products. Since time began the farmer has paid the full price for combines, trucks, automobiles, and tractors. He pays full price for manufactured products and processed foods. In fact, he often pays more than the full price for many items such as clothing and shoes which have been protected by subsidization, quotas, and tariffs. All the farmer wants is his cost of production plus a reasonable profit. There is no other business or industry in Canada that does not require the same thing. How else can they stay in business?

Producers are interested in a fair price. They are not talking about forcing bread prices sky-high so that children will starve. Consumers in Canada pay less than in any other country in the world, save one. We ask a fair price today to avert problems tomorrow, both in terms of price and supply. Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this motion is intentionally quite narrow. It is not an omnibus Bill which is difficult to deal with. It is concerned with wheat, specifically the approximately 10 per cent of Canadian wheat production that is consumed in Canada by humans. It is not concerned with any vague concept of parity. It simply addresses the need to bump up the domestic wheat price as a shot in the arm to help save a productive sector of Canadian agriculture, the sector which faces a vicious cost-price squeeze.

I do not intend to use all of my time, Mr. Speaker, because I want to hear from representatives of the other Parties and, hopefully, to have a vote on this motion. I would like to close by saying that there is nothing unduly complicated about this matter, other than to avoid undue mark-ups in the processing and distribution of baked goods, thus to ensure that the consumer will see every cent of the proposed increase accrue to the benefit of the Canadian producer, those same producers who, in other better times, have heavily subsidized the consumer. I, therefore, respectfully ask all Parties to honour the spirit of parliamentary reform and to recognize the desperate plight of agriculture by supporting this motion for the establishment of a committee to bring in a Bill to provide for a higher domestic wheat price.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) for bringing to this House the excellent motion that he did. If I have any reservations about the motion they are not about the mover or his intention, but about what will happen to this motion assuming that Tory members of the House will not talk it out and will allow it to go to committee. Recalling the debate which took place only moments ago in this House, Mr. Speaker, it is only too clear to all of us that, notwithstanding the spirit of parliamentary reform to which the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek referred earlier, and notwithstanding the good intentions of Members on all sides of the House, many times our good intentions are lost. They are lost because, even though we sometimes pretend to have the spirit of reform, many times the parliamentary system is run by the wishes of a Government official, of a cabinet Minister, or of the Prime Minister against the wishes of the vast majority of the Members of the House. I say this to remind the Hon. Member not to raise his hopes too high even though I believe his motion is quite acceptable and one that all Canadians would easily accept.

I am a strong supporter of marketing boards and supply management in this country to ensure that our agricultural sector remains vibrant. Therefore, I can assure the Hon. Member that I support his motion and that I want the retention of our institutions which have been established to provide for fair and worth-while marketing of our agricultural products both domestically and externally.

The farmers of my constituency do not grow wheat but many other products that are regulated through various systems of supply management and other means. They are worried that with the Government's present spirit of deregulation they may be abandoned in the process. I trust that rather than being deregulated or lost, our agricultural sector will be improved. The few areas of agriculture which have any kind of prosperity at the moment are those which have a means of controlling the return to farmers.

The motion today deals with the marketing of agricultural products generally but specifically with the marketing of wheat. I want to make my comments brief for two reasons. I think many Members should participate in this debate and I want to ensure that this motion today goes to committee. It will not be talked out by Members from this Party.

As the Hon. Member has pointed out, we know that the price range for wheat now varies between roughly $183 a tonne and $257 a tonne. The wheat that is used for the production of bread, although it is a small percentage of the total sales, is significant. If it was increased in terms of its relative profit potential it would greatly assist farmers. Indeed, the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has indicated to the House how small a return a farmer receives for the price of a loaf of bread.

There was a song written by Murray McLauchlan some time ago entitled "A Farmer's Song" which perhaps explains best the frustrations sometimes felt by the farmer. Part of the song says that at a time when everyone is taking so much, the farmer is the only one who has given anything back. That expresses very well and far better than I can, how important the agricultural sector is to our country.

We are told by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) that a 60 pound bushel of wheat makes enough flour for 50 24-ounce loaves of white bread. The farmer's share of the price of one of these loaves is very small, not much more than one slice. The Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek said very appropriately that it is not even enough to make a sandwich. The industry that makes the bread, the industry that transports it and those who retail it to Canadian consumers would not take one or two slices as their share. Otherwise, the farmers would have many more slices. Unfortunately, that is not the case.

The Hon. Member is aware that the farmers are in a difficult squeeze at this time. His proposal today will provide some worth-while relief to wheat farmers but the problems of the farm industry are far deeper. I do not say that to demean the importance of what the Hon. Member has suggested because I feel it is worthy of our support. However, I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House some of the difficulties facing our farmers.

Let us consider the value of assets, liabilities and the net worth of farmers producing all crops. For instance, the net worth is increasing at a rate far less than the rate of inflation and in many cases the value of assets is actually declining, not even taking into account inflation adjustment. The plight of western farmers is even worse because of the difficult climatic situation they have had to deal with over the last couple of years. Yet farmers in all sectors are in a difficult situation.

My colleagues and I had an opportunity recently to tour western Canada. We conducted a two-week study of the crisis in the agricultural area. I can tell you that what we heard was indeed testimony that came from the heart of the farmers and their representatives. Their story was not very cheerful. They face a very difficult situation in terms of their debt load, their return on their investment and the price of their product which seems to be going nowhere but down. Their input costs are increasing. The price of fertilizer is increasing unreasonably. The price of petroleum and other products which are used so extensively on the farms are constantly on the increase. Indeed, as was mentioned earlier, the real inflation adjusted price of wheat has lost relative value in the last number of years.

I hope other Members will make their comments brief in the spirit of co-operation so that this motion can be referred to a parliamentary committee today. I hope that the motion by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek fares better than motions that I and others in the House have moved in an attempt to provide better farm financing help for farmers.

Earlier today Members of the House representing agricultural constituencies were faced with a situation whereby another Member, in his attempt to assist a cabinet Minister, introduced a motion to delay a measure that we wanted implemented to help the farmers. That does not speak very well for the reform of this House. It is my hope that we will not see this again, not only in the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek but in any other unanimous report of a parliamentary committee.

I wish the Hon. Member all the best. I hope his motion will pass today and that it will be sent to committee. I indicate to him my support as a member of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, to ensure its swift passage in committee. Hopefully we will obtain unanimous concurrence in the House once the report of that committee returns.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes to speak on the motion. I support it, but there is much which could be said about this particular matter. My concern about the motion is that it is a little too narrow. For instance, the Hon. Member suggests that all wheat farmers want is the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. No truer words could be said about wheat farmers, but the same could be said about barley farmers. In my part of the country, barley is a more important crop than wheat. The same thing could also be said about canola, which is also a more important crop than wheat in my area. In his suggestion of parity pricing—and parity pricing is a recognition of the cost of production plus a little profit—the Hon. Member is putting before the House, and hopefully before committee, a recommendation which will assist a large group of farmers on the Prairies.

The Hon. Member made many arguments for parity pricing. These arguments have been made across the country before. Farmers do much more for Canada than many people realize. For instance, in the last few years, more than half or at least half of the foreign exchange which has come into the Government has been from the sale of farm products. In fact, a large portion of that foreign exchange has come from the grain industry. If we suddenly had no grain to sell or we continued to sell it at an unprofitable level, as has been the case in the last few years, the amount of foreign exchange will be reduced and eventually we will be the captives of the countries to which we ship our grain.

We are asking the user to pay for the cost of production of wheat used domestically, plus a little more. The Hon. Member very eloquently made the point that that would raise the price of bread only a few cents, if it was transferred directly to the farmer from the miller. I could make the same point in terms of barley. If we increased the cost of malt barley by about $5 per bushel, 40 cents would be added to the cost of a dozen beer, as malt barley is used to make beer. Most people who eat bread, drink beer and use other Canadian products would be quite willing to pay the extra price if they were assured that the money would be going to the primary producers or farmers, not being diverted to middlemen along the way.

Farmers are an important part of our economy. I am glad the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) made a plea for assistance to farmers. I hope his motion, as well as Bill C-215, the parity Bill, in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), go before a committee or subcommittee where witnesses will be called. Then we will be able to look at it in the same way as we are presently looking at the stabilization plan and, hopefully, when a recommendation is made by the committee, the Government will act on it in a manner different from how it acted on the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs regarding agri-bonds and Section 31.

We must remember that one farmer feeds approximately 72 people. If we pay him parity price, he buys the products and services on the market. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek will recognize more than others in the House that if we pay the farmer well for his products, he will go out and buy a truck or an extra combine. A plant in Welland, Kitchener, Oshawa or Windsor has to produce that truck or combine. He will purchase products produced by the rest of the country. Sometimes I think we are bailing out the wrong people. Perhaps instead of bailing out Massey-Ferguson, we should be bailing out farmers, or at least paying them enough so that they can purchase the products they need.

There is one thing about farmers: They never let money stay in their pockets. One can tell the prosperity of a farm community by the number of pick-up trucks on Main Street. In a good year they are all new; in a bad year they are two years to three years old. We should assist the economy of Canada by ensuring that farmers obtain the cost of production plus a little more.

If the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is part of the committee, I am sure he will support the same kind of approach for other products; in fact, if possible, for all products. He suggested that it was complicated. Perhaps it is, but the situation will be much more complicated if we reduce the number of farmers out there.

In the last six years to ten years, the farm debt in Canada increased from $7 billion to $21 billion. In fact the 1983-84 figure is something like $28 billion. Even when farmers looked like they were prospering on the farms in the last few years, that was not the case. They were prospering on borrowed money. We must do something about that. The way to do it would be to give them enough for their products so that they could pay off their debts.

Earlier today I expressed, I suppose one could say, the horror of recognition that in the last 13 years the percentage of the national income of farmers had gone down from 6.3 per cent to less than 1 per cent, while that of the banks and financial corporations had gone up from 1.26 per cent up to over 10 per cent. Just last week the banks told us they had the most profitable year ever last year. The farmers had their worst year ever. There is something symbolic about that but we have to deal with that issue separately. We could partially solve it by making it possible for farmers to get enough of a return on their products to pay off that debt. In Saskatchewan in 1966 there were 85,686 farmers. Today the figure would be somewhere between 60,000 and 65,000. The interest on the debt I was talking about has increased over those same six years by 322 per cent. That has become a major part of the reason why farmers are not making a profit. I am using Saskatchewan figures because I am most familiar with them and we are talking about grain farming, and the cost of petroleum products in Saskatchewan in that period of time rose 284 per cent; fertilizer rose 218 per cent. Chemicals rose 274 per cent. The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek suggested that the farm production has not paid for those increases. If you look back six years you will find the prices we were getting for farm products then were better than what we are getting now, not just for wheat but for all those farm products. The grain from my farm has sat out in a swath for almost two months. We got 50 bushels to the acre but we are selling it for a dollar eighty a bushel because it is almost unfit for human consumption and good only for feed. That will not be taken care of to any extent by this Bill, it needs to be taken care of by stabilization or insurance payments. However, this motion would make me and I guess the farmers of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta and Ontario who raise wheat feel much more secure than we do under present circumstances.

We as farmers are told we are producing too much. At the same time we are told that the people of the world are starving. Surely in this day and age of great advances in communications and transportation we can do something about that. Not too long ago experts from the Bank of Canada suggested that half the family farms in Canada should disappear. That is the kind of support we seem to be getting from some of the institutions which should be giving us a great deal of support. We should approach this whole idea of farm structure a little more globally. For instance, right now we are told that countries around the world cannot buy our wheat and other products. That is true, they cannot. However, companies like Bata Shoe and Union Carbide go to those countries and produce shoes or other products which they ship back to Canada to be sold. They are priced here as though they were made by people who were paid the going rate for wages in Canada. I lived in Nigeria a few years ago and the going wage was 15 cents an hour for a worker in a Bata factory making plastic shoes. Those shoes were sent to Canada and we paid the same price we would pay had the shoes been made here in Canada. We have to do something about that. That is the kind of global approach we in this House should be taking.

I got a little off the subject, Mr. Speaker, but I am going to support this motion in the hope that it, along with Bill C-215, will go to committee where we will get the kinds of suggestions which will allow our farmers to survive. If we do not, we are going to have a lot less farmers than we have now. We have to do exactly what the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has suggested and give the farmers enough for their products to pay for the cost of production and leave a little bit for the farmer to live on.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to join in the discussion on this very important problem. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) on his motion today. I would also like to allay some, not all perhaps, of the fears expressed by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) when he suggests that other grains should be included in such a Bill. It has been my experience that wheat has always been more or less a price-setter. When the price of wheat improves so does the price of other grains. Therefore I think we can set aside a lot of his fears if we take action on this Bill.

It is good to see that the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is supported by his political friends from Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan as well as his friend in the neighbouring riding of Medicine Hat. That shows the strength and support the Hon. Member has in the presentation he makes today. In view of the fact that the Government is prepared to accept this motion as presented by the Hon. Member, may I call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following one. Mr. Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek), seconded by Mr. Towers moved:

That, pursuant to Standing Order 74(1), a committee be appointed to prepare and bring in a bill with the objective of providing wheat producers with higher returns from wheat sales for human consumption in the domestic market place while avoiding undue hardship to processors and consumers and other wheat users.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 4.50 p.m. the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 16, 1985

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER THIRD READING STAGE OF BILL C-74

The House resumed from Thursday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

That, in relation to Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1967 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, one sitting day be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) was in his place. I would like to move:

That the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate be now heard.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You can't make a motion on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: With respect, that motion is entirely in order under the circumstances as the Hon. Member had not begun his speech.

The House will know that when there are two people rising at the same time, the Speaker chooses someone to speak. I reviewed the list and there had been a Liberal and New Democrat and now a Conservative. However, it is reasonable to rise on a point of order prior to the commencement of the speech, and our practice is to allow a motion of the kind that has been put.

Therefore, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

• (1110)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The six minutes remaining under Standing Order 84 had expired, but I chose to wait a little longer to see if the Whips would present themselves for the matter on which the bells had begun to ring at 11.05 o'clock.

It seems clear to me that I have no choice in this matter but to interrupt the bells and advise the House that, it being 11.15 a.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 84, have expired. Therefore, I believe, I must declare the motion under which the bells originally rang lapsed and, under the terms of that Standing Order, I interpret it as my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Accordingly, the question is the following one: Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Crombie, moves:

That, in relation to Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, one sitting day be allotted to the third reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Time Allocation

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 11, 1985, consideration of report stage of Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee; and Motions Nos. 4 and 6 (Ms. Mitchell) Motions Nos. 5 and 7 (Mr. Malépart), and Motion No. 9 (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Speaker: Prior to resuming debate, I did indicate that at the earliest possible moment, I would hear procedural arguments with regard to other matters.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could begin with respect to the procedural arguments. In reviewing the motions to amend Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, you indicated, Mr. Speaker, that you had some procedural reservations with respect to certain motions. I must agree with you that these motions seem to be procedurally defective.

With respect to Motion No. 1, I think you will find that not only is the purpose of the amendment difficult to grasp but it seems to be technically defective inasmuch as it makes reference to the repeal of subsections without—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask Hon. Members who are sitting beside the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to hold their meeting some place else since their microphones come on at the same time as the microphone of the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I thought my voice sounded awfully melodious this morning. It is the voice of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle), that I was hearing.

I think I will repeat the point I was making in case you did not catch it, Mr. Speaker. In Motion No. 1, the purpose of the amendment is difficult to grasp, but in addition I think it is technically defective inasmuch as it makes reference to the repeal of subsections without making reference to the sections themselves. Clearly, if we were to allow such an amendment to be made to the Bill, the Bill would become unintelligible since we would not know which sections to repeal.

I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances, the provisions of Citation 773 (4)(b) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition would apply. That citation reads as follows:

> An amendment may not make the clause which is proposed to amend unintelligible or ungrammatical.

It is clear to me that this motion suffers from that very deficiency. However, if I understand the intent of the amendment, it would seem that the intention of the Hon. Member is to restore full indexation of the family allowance, whereas the principle of the Bill, as agreed to at second reading, is to provide for the partial deindexation of the family allowance. Clearly that is contrary to the principle of the Bill, and so it would then seem to me that Citation 773(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition would be applicable in this instance.

With respect to Motion No. 2, I feel I must agree with you again, Mr. Speaker, that the proposed amendment should be found to be out of order inasmuch as it provides for partial indexing for only one year and that is, as I have pointed out with respect to Motion No. 1, contrary to the principle of the Bill which provides for partial indexing without a time limit. Therefore, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5) applies in this case. That citation reads as follows:

An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the Bill, or which would reverse the principle of the Bill as agreed to at the second reading stage is not admissable.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that this motion suffers from the same technical defect as Motion No. 1. Obviously, the same citation would apply in this case as applied in the case of Motion No. 1. As well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, it is a long established parliamentary principle that, as explained in Citation 424(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, if any part of a motion is out of order, the entire motion is out of order. Therefore, I believe that on these three grounds, you would have to find that Motion No. 2 is irregular and thus cannot be received.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Motion No. 2, I thought you had said that the motion would be debated and voted on separately, and that was a ruling the Chair had made. I am just wondering if we are going to start debating all over again these questions on which you have already ruled.

Mr. Speaker: I think we would be in some difficulty, if that were true, in hearing any of this argument. I received representations from the House Leaders and at the time I specifically indicated what my intentions were on Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3, but I did not intend that that was final if there were procedural arguments that Members wished to present. That is what I meant by saying that it was my intention to do so. Therefore, I take it that comments with regard to Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are entirely in order.

I also received a request from the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to make a procedural argument with regard to the grouping of Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9, with the indication that Motion No. 8 would not be put. I indicated that I would be willing to hear that procedural argument.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am in some difficulty because we have already started debating Motion No. 2. By starting the debate on a ruling—

Mr. Speaker: Am I confused? I thought we were still on the grouping of Motions Nos. 4 through 9 for debate. I am not aware that we have called Motion No. 2 yet. The argument that is being made to me about the grouping of Motions Nos. 4 through 9 was to be deferred, because if they are found to be within the group, then it is all right because the debate has already started, and if they turn out not to be within the group, it is all right also because the debate has started on the group, whatever the group turns out to be.

[Translation]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Motion No. 3, proposed by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Its purpose is the same as that of Motion No. 1, namely, to reinstate full indexation of family allowances. This is clearly contrary to the principle of the Bill, which is to partially deindex family allowances for an indefinite period.

Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that if Motion No. 1 is out of order because it is contrary to the principle of the Bill, Motion No. 3 should also be considered out of order, for the same reason.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and—

[English]

—I will address those three particular items. I will be interested in hearing the arguments with respect to grouping but I subscribe to the grouping of as many orders as possible, obviously.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to interrupt proceedings if I can avoid it, but the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised his point of order precisely at the moment when the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) was saying something about Motion No. 2. For my benefit, could he repeat that, please?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it depends upon what you had heard. I think I was just concluding with regard to Motion No. 2. I will simply repeat the last part of my presentation with respect to that item. I quoted Citation 773(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and in addition to that I said that this particular motion suffers from the same technical defect as I indicated exists in Motion No. 1, and so the same citation that I had quoted for Motion No. 1 would apply.

• (1150)

Also, I referred Your Honour to the long established parliamentary principle set out in Citation No. 424(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which states that if any part of a motion is out of order then the entire motion is out of order. Essentially, I believe there were three grounds with respect to that motion which would lead me, and I hope Your Honour as well, to conclude that Motion No. 2 is irregular and, therefore, not valid for the purposes of this debate.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with two matters which you have before you. I had not intended to deal with Motion No. 2 until the Government House Leader indicated some opposition to allowing debate on the motion. I would submit that Citation No. 773(5) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is not applicable in this case. It states:

An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to at the second reading stage is not admissible.

I respectfully submit that Motion No. 2 does neither of those two things. What it does is to establish a grandfather clause. It says that the principle established in the Bill shall only be in force and effect for one year.

Mr. Speaker: Do you mean grandfather or sunset?

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, I meant to say sunset clause. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It establishes a sunset clause. It states clearly that the principle is not negative inasmuch as the Bill we have before us will, in fact, become law, but that this particular law will be in effect for only one year. At the end of one year, if it is the Government's wish to continue with the law, it is its prerogative to bring forward subsequent legislation, which would again put into force the provisions of the legislation which we now have. I submit it does not negative the principle of the Bill in any way. In fact, it allows the Bill to pass in the form in which it was presented to Parliament and in the form in which it was approved at second reading. It simply establishes that this particular law will have to be reviewed again at the end of a one-year period.

I now wish to deal with the grouping of Motions Nos. 4 and 6. I will leave it up to my colleagues in the Official Opposition to deal with the other groupings. I suggest it is not appropriate to debate these motions together inasmuch as although they deal with a related subject matter, they do not deal precisely with the same subject.

I will deal first with Motion No. 6 because I think it is important. In this respect we are dealing with a constitutional question. We are dealing with whether or not it is indeed appropriate for the Minister to have the power to determine in one form or another whether a person who, until that point in time was in receipt of family allowance, will be considered to have died. We are suggesting that the issuance of a certificate to that effect is the prerogative of the province in which the death occurs and that it is not the prerogative of the Minister under this or any other Act to undertake the issuance of a death certificate. We suggest this subject should be debated separately. It concerns a serious question of constitutionality which we believe should be debated in the House of Commons. I am prepared to concede that we may not win the argument but, nevertheless, I think the argument should be allowed to be made and to stand on its merits separate and apart from Motion No. 4.

Motion No. 4 deals with the question of the Minister having the power, which is a separate matter. If the Minister than has the power to do certain things, what are those things which he could do? I believe the Minister said in committee that this, in fact, is a housekeeping question. He may be right. What we are trying to do in respect of Motion No. 4 is, in essence, to regularize what is happening to the extent that that can be done.

Therefore, I submit you are correct in suggesting that the motions should be voted on separately, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought that, since the principle flows backward in the Bill, if you will, Motion No. 6 should be voted on first, followed by Motion No. 4. The debate on Motion No. 6 as to whether or not the Minister does have the power to do what he is attempting to do should be heard separately from the issue with respect to what he can use that power for after the law has been passed.

Incidentally, we accept your ruling with respect to Motion No. 1. Your Honour's decision with respect to allowing debate to take place and a vote to occur on Motion No. 2 should stand.

The debate should continue and the vote should take place with respect to whether or not this law should be enforced for one year or until some decision by someone to terminate it takes place. Motion No. 6 should stand separately and be debated separately. Then the question of constitutionality can be dealt with separate and apart from the effect of the legislative change which is being asked for.

Finally, we ask that Motion No. 4 be debated separately because it, in fact, is the motion which will determine how the Minister will use the power if such power is granted.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a word or two to what has already been said. I would also like to bring up a different point completely. It has to do mainly with the grouping of the motions. I am sure all Hon. Members will agree that it us up to Your Honour to make a decision with respect to how the groupings should be made. I believe all Members will also agree that when a grouping takes place it should be in respect of the same subject matter.

I wish to point out that although the previous speaker said the subject matter is related, I differ with his argument. The subject matter is certainly related, especially in respect of Motions Nos. 4 and 5. Although the wording in two or three lines is similar, the clauses which they propose to amend are completely and utterly different. There is absolutely no similarity whatsoever between Clauses 4 and 5. Clause 4 deals with remission of amount owing. Clause 5 deals with the presumption of death. There is not only that to consider, Mr. Speaker, but the remission of so-called amounts owing is an entirely different subject from the matter dealt with in Clause 5. Clause 5 deals with a presumption of death, while Clause 4 deals with amounts paid out to persons who are not dead. In other words, it is certainly a completely different argument which has to be presented. The subject matter is completely and utterly different. Therefore, I respectfully submit that Motions Nos. 4 and 5 cannot be grouped together.

The second question is with respect to what happens then. I presume that, if Your Honour agrees with the arguments presented on the groupings, you will determine what will then happen with respect to all Members who have already spoken to the groupings. I presume that you will keep in mind that some of us have simply spoken on the broad principle of one or a portion of one of the motions. Therefore, I submit that those who have already spoken not have their time taken away speaking on the motions but that they be permitted to speak 10 minutes on each of the motions contained in this resolution before the House.

• (1200)

Generally speaking, I disagree that the subject matter of the clauses is related, as the New Democratic Party said. The subject matters of the clauses are not related. Therefore, even if the wording of the motions is similar, the Speaker should not consider whether or not the motions are acceptable as a grouping because the subject matter is entirely different and the amendments have a completely different impact on the clause that is under consideration. But even so, the actual wording of the motions is not similar, either, not to mention the fact that the motions have a completely different impact on the clauses being discussed. As the Speaker said, the Chair simply made a temporary ruling on the groupings to be followed by the hearing of arguments and further examination.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members. Let me be absolutely clear about this procedure for future. I clearly said about Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 that I had an intention. I did in fact group Motions Nos. 4 through 9 and then received a request with regard to the right to put some argument with respect to Motion No. 6. I am perfectly willing to hear that argument.

Having now heard argument on Motion No. 4 and Motion No. 5, I am prepared to consider those motions. But I do not want to leave the impression that I wanted to create a practice of temporarily grouping motions in advance of hearing argument.

I will reserve on all the arguments and be back to the House later as soon as I have considered these matters. Therefore, I suggest that we resume debate on the grouping as it currently stands.

When we last considered this matter, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) had the floor. Had the Hon. Member concluded or does he want to conclude now?

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I believe I only have a minute left—oh, four minutes left. That is even better. I might as well use it all up, then. Truthfully, I do not propose to use all that time. I did put before the Minister on the last occasion on which this legislation was before the House, the whole question of the presumption of death. That is an issue, I believe, which should be resolved once and for all. I submitted to the Minister the views of this Party that the presumption of death and, therefore, the issuance of a certificate has been the prerogative of the provincial or territorial jurisdictions within which the death occurred. I suspect, even going beyond that, that in the case of deaths which had occurred, or were presumed to have occurred in jurisdictions outside of Canada, it would be necessary to obtain the death certificate from that jurisdiction before a decision could be made to discontinue the payment of family allowance.

I would submit, if I may, that it would be inappropriate for us to give to the Minister, in legislative form, the power to make a presumption and issue a certificate inasmuch as we would come into conflict, I believe, with a very serious constitutional question. I would ask the Minister that he not proceed with that inasmuch as he already has the power now to discontinue payments for any child who it can be proven is not in the custody of the person to whom the payment is normally made. With that power, the Minister is able to achieve all that is required of him at the moment.

I accept his argument and concede that in the case of—and he used this example—the Air-Indian disaster, it could be reasonably assumed that everyone on the plane died when the plane went into the ocean. However, I believe there is still the necessity to ascertain exactly who was on the plane. I would respectfully submit that that is not something about which assumptions should be made.

One should not assume the identity of the people. Nothing should be done until, at the very least, a coroner establishes, to the extent it can be done, who was on that particular aircraft. That was done with respect to the Air India crash. Even though the bodies were not all recovered, that was done by looking at the list of passengers and the appropriate documentation which it was necessary to file before the plane embarked upon its fatal journey.

I say to the Minister that we would much prefer that he operate with the power he now has, that he recognize the potentiality for constitutional dispute. Not only is there the Constitution within Canada but there is also a serious question of jurisdictional dispute between the Government of Canada issuing a certificate of death, on the one hand, and a jurisdiction outside of Canada which would have the authority and the requirement to investigate into the facts surrounding any death of any person, and clearly establish for all time who it was that died before any action taken by the federal Government could be considered legal and, therefore, proper.

Having made those few brief remarks in summation, I would ask the Minister to give some consideration to my argument. Perhaps he could operate within the laws which now exist without making these changes and running the risk of the problems I anticipate he could have.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-70, the Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, came on for second reading in the House, there was a considerable amount of debate which revolved around Clause 5, the whole question of the presumption of death and of the issuing of a death certificate by the Minister. A number of members spoke with respect to this clause and expressed their deep concern about the idea of the issuing of a death certificate. It was not, in the terms that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) expressed today, the constitutional question, but it was in terms of the impact and trauma which the issuing of a death certificate has on the family which is involved in receiving those payments.

Although a number of Hon. Members referred to this problem, I was particularly struck by the comments of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) when he said in the debate that he had had the experience of having to convince the powers that be that some senior citizens were really alive. Can you imagine the feelings of a lady receiving a notice from the Government of Canada, through a bureaucratic mix up, that her husband, who is sitting right beside her, is dead? That is the sort of problem which the Hon. Member pointed out has been occurring, and could occur, under a similar type of legislation to that which already exists in the Old Age Security Act and in the Canada Pension Plan legislation.

There is a provision similar to the existing Clause 5 of Bill C-70 in both of those Acts. The problem, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan is one which struck me particularly at the time. When the Bill was referred to committee, that problem continued to reoccur. We continued to have people make representations about that aspect of the issuing of a death certificate, and in fact there were representations made to the legislative committees dealing with the subject by a number of organizations and people on that very issue. Particularly, they came from the Child Find Organization in British Columbia, in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba and in Ontario. They all expressed concern about this aspect of the legislation. In addition, the Children's Aid Society expressed similar concerns. As a result, I felt we should try to come up with different wording to achieve the necessary purpose the Minister and his Department had in mind, that of the need for a final determination even though a death certificate had not been issued. That need arises when a child disappears and there is evidence to indicate the child is dead. The Minister and his Department would be in a position then to suspend payment of the family allowance, but they would not be in a position actually to cancel the account and stop paying once and for all. It was with that in mind that the Minister and his Department wanted to introduce this concept in the same way as it exists already in legislation covering old age security and Canadian Pension Plan payments.

An effort was made in committee to come up with new wording. A number of drafts were prepared and discussed with the Minister and his officials. Unfortunately, although I put forward an amendment at that time somewhat similar to Motion No. 8 as it is originally on the Order Paper, there was no agreement as to whether or not this was appropriate wording to solve the problems involved. However, after long negotiations and a total of seven separate drafts put together by myself and the Department, the Minister agreed, as he very kindly indicated in his opening remarks the other day, that Motion No. 9 standing in my name was acceptable as an amendment to the Bill. Therefore, Clause 5 would be amended by Motion No. 9. This is a very commendable action on the part of the Minister. It shows a real willingness to deal with the problems and concerns of the public. It tries to resolve them in a way which will solve the Department's problem while at the same time being sensitive to the concerns of the people of this country. What has been achieved here is a solution which will accomplish both those ends. That is why I put it forward and I hope the House will adopt the motion as indicated with the support of the Minister and the Government.

I would like to address for a moment or two the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain concerning the constitutionality of this issue we are dealing with. It seems to me that his concern and the legal opinion he has obtained rests entirely on the question of the division of powers between the provinces and the Parliament of Canada regarding the issuing of a death certificate; What we are talking about here, of course, is not the final, absolute death certificate. We are talking about a departmental procedure under this legislation which deals strictly with this legislation and not with the final death certificate. We are only talking about a procedural matter here. Even that, and even the concern regarding the death certificate, I submit has been overcome by this amendment, Motion No. 9. We are no longer talking about a death certificate. A death certificate will not be issued by the Minister at any time as a result of this procedure. There will be a determination or fixing of a date by the Department as to when payments will stop. There are provisions to change that date if circumstances warrant. It is not a death certificate, it is only the fixing of a date in order to solve a procedural problem which the Department has. There is no constitutional issue here in any event, even if there was one originally, which in my opinion there was not.

Having said all that, it would be my fervent hope that the House will see fit to adopt Motion No. 9 to accommodate both the concerns of the Government and the families involved, thereby showing that the Government and this Parliament are sensitive to those concerns.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) made a very good point regarding death certificates. Obviously, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) cannot issue a death certificate. Under our common law system, the provinces are responsible for declaring that a person is deceased, and I think it is then up to the courts to confirm the declaration.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on amendment No. 4, of the grouped amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Mr. Speaker, Clause 4 is concerned with remission. The explanatory notes tell us that this is a new clause and that the amendment would allow for the remission of amounts in certain circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a closer look at this clause, we see that its purpose is to tighten up the wording so that the Minister cannot invoke presumption of death of the child as provided in Clause 5, on which I would like to comment later on. Otherwise he would have the power to require that parents repay certain family allowance payments made during the previous months.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion before the House, we cannot ignore the issue of presumption of death of the child. I did not have a chance to go to committee, but I know it is a matter that raised considerable debate. The legal advisers had a chance to explain, and the Minister's legal advisers also commented on the subject, and they all said, as far as I know, that of course the Minister does not have the right to make the presumption of death of a child. As I said before, under our common law, this right belongs to the provinces, and we on this side of the House believe that if the question is not dealt with by the province it should be dealt with by the courts, in other words, not the provinces but a judge in a province should be authorized to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to the Conference on Conformity and Uniformity in Canadian Law. Section 13 of the Uniform Vital Statistics Act defines the conditions for registration of deaths and requires that the decease of any person occurring within the province be recorded as provided under the Act. Here again, according to the legal experts I consulted, it is clear that presumption of death is a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

In my experience as a Member, Mr. Speaker, I often came across similar cases, for example respecting old age security pensions, where cheques were still being addressed to the names of retired people after death. The province failed to tell the federal Government about such deaths—and it is the province's responsibility to do that—so the payments continued. There have been cases of fraud. Some of the circumstances are unbelievable, and I remember a case in my constituency which cost thousands of dollars to a person who did not know that he was actually carrying out a fraudulent operation when selling food to an institution for retired people, because the cheque deposited to pay for the food was made out to the name of someone who had been dead for almost a year. The Minister of National Health and Welfare could not say that someone had died, she did not even know about it. It is up to the province. Under provincial common law the province is responsible for dealing with such matters. I would not want anybody to think we want or wish the Minister would assume that right.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to remind you that, in the opinion of the Joint Standing Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, as it is specified in the proposed amendment, a judge must issue the death certificate and this procedure should not come under ministerial responsibility. This is further support to the argument whereby the Minister should not have the right to presume death, but that ought to be done by the judge of a court.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill also has constitutional implications and in my opinion, is subject to certain sections of the Constitution. For instance, I have in mind Clause 5 of the Bill, the clause which concerns the presumption that a child is dead and which reads as follows next to the heading "Presumption as to death of child":

Clause 5: New. This amendment would allow the Minister to presume a child to be dead where the Minister has reasonable grounds to believe that the child is dead.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are particularly concerned about Clause 5 which deals, as I said, with a provincial jurisdication. I suggest it is up to the courts to rule whether a person, even a child, is deceased or not. I do not think that we on this side would want to leave things as they stand now in Clause 5 and allow the Minister to declare that such a person is presumed to be dead and, consequently, to take away from the parents any family allowance to which they were entitled.

We feel, therefore, that it is important to keep on paying family allowances when a child has disappeared. On this, I feel it is normal to appeal to the Minister and tell him: When a child has been lost or absent from his home for a long time, any parent would continue searching for him. As parents, there are things we must do, for instance, cooperate with the police in their efforts to find the child. Also, incur legal and travelling expenses to hasten the return of the disappeared child and ensure a serious and thorough search. The bereaved parents have to pay for a great many things, including photos, telegrams, telephone calls, fees to people who specialize in these things.

Having been involved for 11 years in education, Mr. Speaker, I remember the great many phone calls I received from concerned parents who find that, at 6 o'clock in the evening—it gets dark very early in January—their child had not yet returned from school. What do they do in such a case? Generally, they call the police, the school board or the school principal, and a great many other people. They anxiously look everywhere and face various problems. I suggest, therefore, that the expenses they must incur searching for their children could be reduced somewhat if they continued receiving family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to deal any further with this motion. I should like to return later to amendments 6, 7 and 9 and submit arguments concerning them.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my remarks in this debate will concern the groupings and certain sections of the Act. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) stated that we are only talking about a procedural matter in giving the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) the authority to declare a missing child dead. I do not believe it is a procedural matter but a question that the Government should consider in more detail because it is on a very slippery constitutional slope.

I have looked at some Acts and Law Reform Commissions reports. Perhaps my friends to my right could let me hear myself think.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member who is having a conversation is well aware that he is creating a disturbance by crossing back and forth between the Chair and the Hon. Member who is speaking. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask my friends in the Liberal Party to conduct their conversation behind the scene.

There are a number of matters that the Government should take into account with respect to the legal argument. It should read The Uniform Law Conference of Canada on Vital Statistics. It should read The Canadian Encyclopedia Digest of Ontario with respect to Vital Statistics, Title 146 as well as Title 57 on Life and Death. The evidence section of that specifically shows that the usual practice in our law is that the provincial court must declare someone dead. It is a serious procedure and the person asking for that declaration of death has a burden of proof to show that the person has been missing and has not made any contact with anyone else.

The old common law required a period of seven years to expire before someone could be declared dead. However, someone could be declared dead sooner if the proper evidence were presented. This required a preponderance of evidence, not evidence beyond a reasonable doubt as in a criminal case.

This Bill essentially gives the Minister divine power to declare a missing child dead as a procedural matter, according to my friend from York East. I believe that this is an emotional matter for the parents of missing children. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare can declare a child dead according to an administrative act, it may mean that the police will stop looking for that child. Rather than being an administrative procedure, it could be an emotional blow to parents whose children have been declared dead by the federal Government.

It appears, from a review of the evidence from the committee, that this provision was slipped into this Bill dealing with the deindexation of family benefits. One group, namely Child Find Quebec, was able to express its concern only in a minimal way. Our critic in this area, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) tells me that other groups who are interested in this problem never had an opportunity to respond to this question.

I caution the House that when the Minister says that this is a procedural matter, it means that the federal bureaucracy wants to proceed quickly without perhaps considering the human cost and constitutional consequences.

Let me draw to the attention of the Minister the Uniform Presumption of Death Act which was drawn up by the Uniform Law Conference of Canada in 1976. That Act includes a section dealing with the making of an application by originating a notice of motion and states that the court must be satisfied that a person is missing and appears to be dead.

I understand that the bureaucracy is interested in having a fast procedure. For instance, it could very easily cut off the child allowances for those children who died in the Air India crash. I can understand the bureaucratic urge to be able to cut off easily the allowances of other missing children. On the other hand, we must consider the effect of this on the parents. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) talked about the use of the family allowance by parents to pay for the costs of searches, telephone calls and so on.

I suggest that the Government could delay this and make the proper applications to a provincial court, as has been the tradition in our law.

Let me cite the Quebec Civil Code. Article 70 of the Quebec Civil Code states:

• (1230)

[Translation]

Any death which has occurred in the Province of Quebec may be judicially declared in cases where, in the opinion of the court—

[English]

In the opinion of the court.

[Translation]

—it may be held to be certain and it is impossible to draw an act of burial.

The same applies when the death has occurred outside the Province of Quebec or when it is impossible to establish the place where it occurred, if the deceased had his domicile in the Province of Quebec.

[English]

Clause 71 goes on to talk about fixing a date of death taking into account the presumptions drawn from the circumstances, and so on. That is the law of Quebec. The traditional law in Canada is that the provincial courts declare death.

It is not good enough to say, "Well, the provincial law is talking about a death certificate". That is getting out of the matter on a technicality. I do not think that will hold up in court if it is constitutionally challenged. I know the Department has said: "Well, we have been doing this in the Canada Pension Plan". We have the right to declare ages and so on, which normally one would think would be provincial law. I say that is apples and oranges. One might argue that that has never been challenged.

Has the Minister consulted the provinces? I note from debates in committee that the Member for Vancouver East, considering that this is a possible constitutional question and considering it changes fundamentally the law of Canada, asked whether there had been any consultations with the provinces. At page 15:24 of the committee hearing for November 21, 1985, Mr. Fortier said:

I think I can answer some of your general concern here. I was just consulting with my legal advisor, who tells me that there has been no consultation with provincial authorities. They feel that they are fully within their authority to legislate in this matter and there is no need to consult at this level.

I think that is irresponsible. If you are walking into a provincial domain, which is so set in Canadian law, both in Quebec civil law and English common law, you should at least consult with the provinces.

I refer to the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, on which I have the privilege to serve, which has a check-list of things to scrutinize when studying regulations. I know this is not a regulation but a Bill, nevertheless I think it is worth looking at.

Check No. 6(b) says that the regulation:

—makes the rights and liberties of the subject dependent on administrative discretion rather than on the judicial process.

This Minister, and I say this advisedly, who is a man of God, a religious and a good man, is now trying to play God in this Bill. He is declaring kids dead on his own whim without showing a court or a third party any particular evidence. I think that is dangerous. I think it is bad law and I think the Government could run into constitutional problems with this. The Government should take another look at it.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this has been a very interesting debate. We should recognize that the language in Bill C-70 relating to certificates of presumption of death is currently in two other federal Acts, the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security Act. The Canada Pension Plan Act deals with children's benefits for orphans and the children of persons receiving disability benefits. The language has been in the Canada Pension Act since its inception in the mid 1960s, I believe, in 1965 and 1966. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that no province has ever considered this an intrusion into its jurisdiction, nor has any other foreign country.

Therefore, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties in this House and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 82 or Standing Order 83 with regard to the allocation of time to the report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973.

Therefore, at the next sitting of the House it is my intention to propose the following motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84:

That, in relation to Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, one sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the report stage of the said Bill; and one further sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the Bill at the third reading stage; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government business on the above-mentioned sitting days, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Shame!

Mr. Ouellet: Once more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano).

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words this morning during this debate on the motion moved by my colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) concerning the clause under which the Minister has the power to decide that a child who had disappeared has died and to stop sending family allowance cheques. This power which the Minister wants to give himself is, in my opinion, very important and it not only could, but will, in my opinion, create total confusion in our confederative system. First, the power to declare a person dead comes under provincial jurisdiction. If the Minister were to declare someone, in this case a child, dead when the province has not done so, whose decision will take precedence? Which will be the right one? Would the child be considered dead or not?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer for a moment to my experience in education. In Quebec, the school boards receive subsidies from the provincial Government for each child. Every year, a statement has to be prepared and a statistical report sent to the provincial Department of Education to determine how much the school board is entitled to receive.

In such a case, especially in the education system and for school age children, in the eyes of the school board, the Department of Education has authority, which would create incredible confusion for the parents and people in general. Would the child be considered living or dead since the Minister can sign this certificate and declare immediately that the child is considered dead and stop the cheques.

The second thing which might cause confusion is the cashing of the cheque. Here also, I refer to my own experience as an accountant. My customers have often had serious problems in the past.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the comments being made by the Hon. Member are some of the most relevant comments we have heard this morning and extremely important if we are to devise in this House good legislation to serve all the people of Canada. It is for that reason that I would humbly—although I know he is listening well—ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to pay particular attention during this debate. It is extremely important—

• (1240)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. I know the Hon. Minister pays attention to most of the speeches here and I know, now that the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) has brought it to his attention, that he will be listening.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order—

Mr. Tobin: Another point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is debate. The Hon. Member is wasting the time of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano). Is there another point of order?

Mr. Tobin: No, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I was just speaking about the problem that cashing the family allowance cheques could create, especially for the small corner stores. Months often go by before someone realizes that a child has disappeared or has died.

Under the legislation, if the Minister decides after a certain time, such as one year, to issue a certificate declaring the child dead, stop the cheques and ask for repayment, when the store owner tries to get his money back from his customer, he will be told: "Well no, my child is not considered dead because no court in this land has declared him dead." You can imagine the fight there would be before the courts. The parents of this child would have to hire lawyers and spend more money. Not only will their child have disappeared, but they will also face additional expenses and other very unpleasant problems.

Mr. Speaker, this is why I support the motion of my colleague which adds a new element to the legislation, namely a waiting period of at least five years during which time the search can continue and all these aspects can be considered.

Mr. Speaker, we are trying to debate this issue in this House and to try to find a perfect solution, but the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has just imposed closure.

Mr. Speaker, I object to this procedure which is unfair and undemocratic. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the debate be now adjourned.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I have just moved immediate adjournment of the debate to protest against the proposal of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Could I have the motion, please, and I need a seconder for it? Is it the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)?

Mr. Gauthier: Sure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has been moved by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, that this House do now adjourn—

Mr. Gauthier: No. That the debate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That the debate do now adjourn.

Mr. Gauthier: That the debate be now adjourned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next time, would you please write it out fully so that I know exactly what it is. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There seems to be some question in the your mind as to exactly which word is being used. Could we have a clear example of what in fact has been submitted?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) knows that the Speaker in the chair is one of the most competent men who could possibly be in the chair. He has heard the words of the Member being shouted to the Speaker. Clearly everyone in the House has heard it. The motion is that the debate be now adjourned. The Minister of Health is not helping his cause by engaging in these kinds of delaying tactics.

Mr. Gauthier: I wrote it down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I read it again, please? It is moved by Mr. Gagliano, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, that the debate be adjourned. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those against please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

• (1750)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., the motion before the House has lapsed in terms of Standing Order 9(1), and the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.01 p.m.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, December 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Speaker: Before resuming debate, may I advise Hon. Members that through an administrative error, and only that, today's Order Paper and Projected Order of Business are incomplete. Pursuant to the Order made Monday, December 16, 1985, that is yesterday, all questions necessary to complete the third reading stage of Bill C-74 now before the House will be put at 4.45 o'clock p.m. this day.

Resuming debate. When the House adjourned on December 9, 1985, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) had the floor.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, now that we are down to the final period in the debate on Bill C-74, I want to reiterate that the Party of which I am a member will be voting against this Bill. We are in opposition to the Bill and, in this final stage I want to make it clear why we are in opposition to it and what it is we find objectionable.

We regret very much that there is not more time to debate. We think we have sound arguments and given time more and more members would agree that there are deficiencies in Bill C-74 and would be prepared to support us.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, time allocation has been imposed. That has been dealt with and I cannot go over the arguments of objection that we have to the use of time allocation in a Bill like this. It is essential to indicate, though, that we believe this to be a parliamentary Bill, that there should be full debate, much more consultation and that we should be proceeding by way of agreement.

Why do we have Bill C-74 anyway? What is the reason for which we have, as a primary order of business, Bill C-74? If we accepted the work of the previous boundary commissions under the Act of Parliament brought in by the last administration the House of Commons would be growing to 310 members. That seems to be the basic objection and the main reason for Bill C-74. As it is with the legislation before us, we will have 295 Members of Parliament instead of 310. The argument is on the basis of cost efficiency and of reducing expenditures at the federal level, something no Member of Parliament objects to at all. Nevertheless we will have 15 fewer Members of Parliament than in the previous proposal. We may create some injustices and some unfair situations in the country.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, if our main concern is to reduce expenditures to be more cost effective, I think other areas ought to be looked at first, the bank depositor's Bill, for instance. We do not know who will receive the large ex gratia payments from the taxpayers or how much they will get. If you want to save money, something in the order of about a billion dollars is there and we might take a serious look at that. If we really wanted to be serious about saving money, perhaps we should be talking about the central question in the parliamentary system of Canada, namely, the existence of two Houses. That is an issue rarely raised or discussed.

In Canada at the present time we have this House of Commons elected for a short period of time. Members are accountable to the people. We have another House whose Members are appointed up to the age of 75, and to whom they are accountable no one is quite certain. In order for there to be cost savings involved with 15 Members of Parliament, the Government has brought in Bill C-74. It should be clearly understood that Bill C-74 does not give us strict adherence to representation by population, not at all. It is not what Members of Parliament want in the first place. If we had strict adherence to representation by population, then I do not think we could consider ourselves to be a federal state. With the vast geography of Canada and being a federal state, it is obvious and clear to every Member of Parliament who thinks about it that we cannot have representation by population. There will always be a pull between urban and rural representation, between the settled areas of Canada and those areas on the developing frontier. That pull will always be there between the two and in a federal state neither can be ignored. Therefore, strict adherence to representation by population makes no sense at all.

For example, I have never heard anyone argue that there should not be a Member of Parliament for Yukon. Yukon has only 20,000 people. No one has argued that the Yukon should not have its representative in the House of Commons. The Northwest Territories has double the population, about 44,000, and it has two Members of Parliament. I have never heard anyone argue that the Northwest Territories ought not to be represented by two MPs.

• (1110)

Mr. Nickerson: Fifty thousand.

Mr. Penner: I hear the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He is right up to date on those statistics. I stand corrected, immediately. However, since the time I have been in the House of Commons, I remember when the Northwest Territories had only one Member. It was unreasonable for that region to be represented by a single Member. It was unmanageable. Even as it is now, with two Members of Parliament, they have an enormous task in trying to give fair representation to the people living and developing that most important frontier of Canada. When the Bill was brought in to give the Northwest Territories a second seat, there were no strong arguments to the contrary. It went forward and was well accepted as being just and as being fair.

Of course, Prince Edward Island has four seats. It has the same population as the City of Thunder Bay, just over 100,000 people. That was part of the bargain of Prince Edward Island when it came into Confederation. Although from time to time there may be grumblings about the fact that a constituency in Prince Edward Island only has 37 per cent of the population that one would find in a constituency in Ontario or Quebec, generally it is well accepted. We want Prince Edward Island to be an active member of Confederation as it is, and we do not argue it should not be well represented in the House of Commons.

Within the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, we challenge representation by population on a strict arithmetical basis. For example, we say that the boundary commissions can take into account such aspects as community of interest, community identity and historical demographic patterns. That allows them to depart from strict adherence to representation by population. We tell them how much they can depart. We say that they are allowed to go above or below a provincial quotient by 25 per cent; that is the allowable factor. When boundary commissions do their work, that is the kind of precise detail they like. They like to know exactly what they are allowed to do.

I have appeared before many boundary commissions and have made arguments on behalf of the region from which I come, the one in which my constituency is located. Very often citizen groups have made arguments, as I have, in a very telling and dramatic way. Boundary commissions have always said: "We are convinced by what you have said. However, if you want us to take these kinds of steps and these kinds of actions, you have to give us more precise instructions. You can't just give us vague directions. Parliament has to be specific as to what it wants us to do". I think that is the difficulty we have with Bill C-74. It lacks the specific instruction and detail which would help a great deal.

I should like to give an example of how the lack of being specific creates problems. In previous Acts it was indicated that when boundary commissions made significant changes, they had to show that there was just cause for making them. That is pretty vague. If they make changes, they have to show why; they have to explain in a report to Parliament why something has been done. In about 1978, when the boundary commission in fact eliminated an entire constituency in northern Ontario, I argued that it failed to show all the reasons for doing so. It indicated the reasons in two or three lines in its report, that it was adequate reason that it had fulfilled all obligations laid upon it by Parliament. I argued: What do we do when a boundary commission appointed by Parliament and a Member of Parliament are in disagreement? How can we settle that? I decided that I would settle it by taking the boundary commission to court. That is exactly what happened. I took it to the Appeal Division of the Federal Court of Canada to try to stop the redistribution process before it was in its final stages. The Appeal Division would not grant that stoppage of the action of the commission, so then we went to the Trial Division. The Trial Division listened very carefully to the case put forward by the very excellent legal counsel whom I had engaged. The judge, in his final declaration, said to counsel: "You have made a very convincing case. You have made a strong argument. I comment you for the position you brought forward. However, I regret to say that I cannot see that I have jurisdiction in this matter". Therefore the matter was not resolved.

A great deal of money was expended. Perhaps Hon. Members are interested in knowing how that money was raised. The people of northern Ontario were incensed by the fact that they would lose their level of representation. At that time they had 12 Members of Parliament, running from the Quebec border to the Manitoba border, north of the French River. They had 12 Members of Parliament for a very large geographic area. Mr. Speaker, did you know that that area is more than 80 per cent of the whole landmass of the Province of Ontario? The Province of Ontario is a very large province, and northern Ontario comprises much more than three-quarters of it. They felt that their level of representation ought not to be diluted. When one seat was lost, the communities from the Manitoba border to the Quebec border accepted a levy laid upon them by the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities. It was a small levy, but a tremendous amount of money was raised to pay for the legal costs in fighting that case in the Federal Court of Canada. After we fought the case, if my memory serves me correctly, I believe we still had some $30,000 left over, which was returned to the municipalities on a per capita basis.

When northern Ontario MPs talk with a degree of earnestness and conviction about the level of representation in that part of the province, they are not just speaking for themselves. It is not their own hides which they are trying to save, not at all. It is something about which the citizens of northern Ontario feel very strongly, and they have demonstrated it in a very tangible way by actually putting up dollars when a court case was being fought.

I want to return to Bill C-74 and indicate why we feel there is too much fuzziness or vagueness in the instructions given to the boundary commissions. It is simply not good enough to tell them that they may take into account community of interest and historical patterns. It is not even good enough, as Bill C-74 does—and it has never been done before—to say that when dealing with the northern regions of the provinces with vast geographic areas, they will be allowed to depart from the 25 per cent differential allowed in the Act now. That clause is so imprecise, vague and uncertain that I predict it will be of no use to a boundary commission. Rarely will boundary commissions ever call upon that clause. Perhaps the Government House Leader will say that they have responded to our concerns, that they understand our concerns, and that they have included this clause which allows the boundary commissions to exceed the 25 per cent. If he says that our needs have been met, that we should support the Bill and be happy, it will not work that way because the boundary commissions will say: "You have been too imprecise; you should give us much clearer and unambiguous guidelines". This is why northern Ontario Members of Parliament are arguing for what other parts of the country have, like the Province of Saskatchewan, for example. The populations of Saskatchewan and Northern Ontario are not all that different. The population of Saskatchewan is slightly larger, but it is guaranteed 14 seats. Northern Ontario is much larger in area than Saskatchewan. In fact, our population is just over 800,000 people, whereas the population of Saskatchewan is about 900,000 people. Saskatchewan is guaranteed 14 seats. We are saying that northern Ontario should be guaranteed, in the same way, about 11 seats.

I want to illustrate clearly for Members who may not be aware of how boundary commissions work why this vague clause on manageability in northern regions will not work. Boundary commissioners are busy people. They are taken from the bench or law faculties, and this obligation is placed upon them by Parliament. I do not think they exactly welcome the task because it is not a pleasant and enjoyable duty. However, they are distinguished citizens of this country and accept that obligation.

First, the commission hires bright young demographers and staffers who take the available figures and produce the first set of maps. It is on the basis of this first set of maps that the various electoral boundary commissions in the provinces travel throughout the country for the public hearing stage. Individual citizens, citizen groups or a Member of Parliament may prepare the most compelling briefs imaginable. The electoral boundary commission will listen carefully to all of the ideas for changes that are suggested in the brief and examine the evidence it has received. However, I ask Members of the House if they really believe that no matter how good the quality of those briefs may be, the electoral boundary commission will make radical changes in that first set of maps. Of course not. Once significant changes are made in one region, it begins to affect every other region. That is why there will only be minor modifications and no significant ones.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret but the Hon. Member's time has expired. He still has the questions and comments period.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of your last comment, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) simply to wrap up his speech and perhaps make his final few points to the House. He is certainly well respected on all sides in terms of his credibility and knowledge about the whole question of boundary alignment.

Would he use a couple of minutes to finish his speech, in the spirit that you, Mr. Speaker, had urged on the House with respect to the question and answer period remaining to the Hon. Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know that he will have some questions that he would like to answer. I am sure the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior wishes to make some other comments. I am sure that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader will listen very carefully to the Hon. Member, who has been here for 17 years and can tell us more about what is happening as far as his riding is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Naturally we would want to give every Member of the House every opportunity to speak during this debate. There has never been any suggestion that we were trying to cut off debate or stifle comments. With that spirit in mind, we are prepared to listen to the Hon. Member. However, we would not want it to become a habit that Members can use this time to wrap up their speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate that. I am sure the Hon. Member will conclude his remarks in two minutes so that he can respond to questions and comments.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the House has been generous. I only have one additional point which is specific to northern Ontario and the effect that Bill C-74 will eventually have on northern Ontario. Let me say why I believe it violates an even larger principle, namely, the principle of effective and co-operative federalism. The effect of Bill C-74 on northern Ontario will be to dilute and dilute even further the level of representation. As a result of Bill C-74 our present level of 11 seats could very easily be reduced to 10 or perhaps 9 seats by 1988. It is conceivable that in the next century, northern Ontario—being most of the province incidentally—could have only 4 or 5 seats. Where will those additional seats go? They will go to the City of Toronto.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: An Hon. Member says: "Hear, hear". They will go to the conurbation that is now spreading in both directions from Toronto. Of course, the people who live there need to be well represented, and no one argues against that all. However, does it make sense to have 60 Members representing Toronto and its immediate environs and only 4 or 5 Members for the remaining 88 per cent of the resource rich part of the province? Is that the way in which we would have effective federalism? Ours is a resource region that contributes a tremendous amount to the national economy. It is a region of the country that has consistently looked to the federal Government for regional development policies. Those regional development policies have been effective over a long period of time and have given northern Ontario a very major role in the economy of this nation. Consequently, we are asking that we have a voice in this House of Commons.

There is great distress and concern about the impact Bill C-74 will have on this region of northern Ontario. The people of this region are not asking for anything that is not already the pattern in Canada. It is not interfering with the independence of electoral boundary commissions by asking to establish a floor for northern Ontario. We are simply asking for some justice and fairness.

The Hon. House Leader has looked after his province well. There is a guarantee of 14 seats there. That is how it should be, but we are saying that what is good for Saskatchewan should also be good for northern Ontario, because there is a parallel. I thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has a question or comment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I believe we are dealing with the amendment moved by the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), that the House return Bill C-74 to the committee to reconsider Clause 2. Clause 2 deals exactly with the difficulties of representation by population referred to by the Hon. Member.

It was my understanding that in the amalgam formula which existed before the Bill was presented, we in Ontario were to have 105 seats. According to the formula in Bill C-74, Ontario would have 99 seats, an increase from the actual 95 seats. What does the Hon. Member believe will happen to those four seats? Am I to take it they will not go to northern Ontario?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I was trying to make. There is no guarantee at all that there will be a floor level of representation for northern Ontario.

The number of seats will increase for Ontario, as it should because the population of Ontario has grown. We know that most of the additional seats should be going to the heavily populated part of the province.

We are not asking to be given more representation in northern Ontario. Those of us who represent very large ridings are not crying to the House that we have too much geography to represent and the size of our ridings should be reduced so that we have more Members. If that were our complaint, we could rightfully be accused of self-interest. However, we are not pleading for ourselves, we are pleading on the basis of a well established principle in Canada of providing a floor. We now accept that as a principle because we know that strict representation by population creates unfairness and injustice. It does violence to the federal system.

We are saying that what is good for a great province like Saskatchewan ought to be good for northern Ontario. It is not additional seats we are seeking, it is a level of representation. Although that level of representation is difficult at the present time, Members of Parliament and the citizens of northern Ontario are prepared and willing to live with it.

• (1130)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have this opportunity to speak once more on Bill C-74. What we are talking about here today is the very key to representation from all parts of Canada.

Federalism can be defined by its regional structure. If that regional structure is not allowed to show itself in representation in this House, we will gradually move away from a federal Government and we will have more and more regions feeling isolated because of variations in representation. The regions will feel again, as they did many times in the past and will, I am sure, in the future, that they will have to start espousing separatist sentiments.

In the West, not one election goes by when there are not candidates who put themselves forward under a variety of names representing groups of people in the regions who feel that they are being isolated and do not have the kind of representation in the House that they should have. If, over the years, we can satisfy the population of the entire country that it is being well represented in this House, then those tendencies for certain groups of people to espouse a separatist philosophy will hopefully disappear.

Even those people who are the most vocal about separating the West, the East or Quebec from the rest of Canada have a certain desire to remain a part of Canada, but at certain times they feel that nothing is going the way it should go, so consequently they look at a separatist approach. Even though we are only debating today a Bill which deals with representation and the number of Members allowed from each of the provinces, we should be working toward a kind of federalist structure that allows the regional nature of the country to be recognized.

We have made a certain amount of movement toward the recognition that sometimes representation by population cannot be the basic structure for representation in this House.

We have come to recognize that once in a while it is necessary to ensure that a particular area is fairly well represented and that it should have more Members than it would have if the population were simply divided by 300, it being the number of Members allowed.

We have varied the formula for Prince Edward Island, the Arctic, the Yukon as well as certain other provinces in order to make sure that they will have a continued representation even if their population relative to that of the rest of the country decreases. Although this Bill does deal with that factor, we have not put in place as effectively and knowledgeably as we should have the kind of formula which would make areas like western Canada know that by 1991 or 2001 the trend will be to make sure that representation will be adequate for the remote areas. That is the main reason why we are not particularly happy with this Bill.

The Bill has no guarantee that after the 1991 census of after the 2001 census, we will have the kind of federal representation which we would like to see. There are, of course, other problems with the Bill, problems which we would like to point out now. Even after the Bill passes, we will be making those points with the boundary commissions that will be established in each of the provinces.

I think that all across Canada, we accept the idea that representation by population, although a basic concept, cannot be the only basis of representation in a federal state. We realize that in order to have federal representation, we must recognize the regions and establish equal representation from all areas of the country. You being a westerner yourself, Mr. Speaker, would know that we in the West often hear that by the time the electorate in Ontario and Quebec has voted, it is no use to vote in Alberta. In every election, westerners feel that the decision has been made in Ontario and Quebec and that the West does not count. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that it does count. However, that very feeling is the source of the separatist movement which continues to crop up every once in a while in the West. That feeling of isolation always exists and we should deal with it more thoroughly than we have in this particular Bill.

We do not always adhere to the basic principle of representation by population, but we do not have in place a formula which recognizes the regional structure of the country. Perhaps that is what we should do. Perhaps we should say that the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and the prairie provinces should have the same number of representatives as Ontario. Perhaps there should be a certain number of balanced regions so that no two regions could together hold the balance of power in this House.

There are many people who suggest that a logical solution to the representation problem would be to divide Canada into five regions and give each region the same number of representatives in Parliament regardless of population. The argument for that is based on the fact that quite often, the homogeneous structure of a large city allows a Member to represent it as well even if he represents twice as many people as a Member from a much larger area in another part of the country. I will not spend much more time on this topic. I just wanted to place on the record the concerns of many westerners with respect to the process of representation.

In the discussions which have been held with respect to this Bill, and the debate which has taken place in the House of Commons, I think that almost every problem with respect to representation has been brought forward. I refer specifically to the problem of representing a very small area and the problem of representing a very large area. For instance, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) spoke about the amount of travel which is necessary for him to undertake in order to reach every part of his constituency. The same applies to Saskatchewan where, for example, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) cannot visit anywhere close to his entire constitutency when he goes home for the weekend. His riding covers approximately one-quarter of the province of Saskatchewan. This is the type of representation which possibly needs fewer people but more resources in order to allow a Member to be a good representative of such an area.

We have heard arguments that it is almost as difficult to represent a heterogeneous riding in Toronto as it is to represent a riding in northern Saskatchewan. Anyone who holds that view would have to travel to northern Saskatchewan in order to recognize that it is a difficult job to represent such an area. In the riding of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake there are probably three or four language groups. There is Chippewan, Cree, English and some French, which is spoken by preference. It is not an easy job to be the representative of all these places. As Hon. Members may know, the new boundaries in Saskatchewan give more than half of the province to one constituency. That happens to be the constituency of Prince Albert. Although I know the area very well, I also know it will be a difficult job for one Member of Parliament to try to represent more than half of the province of Saskatchewan.

There have also been arguments with respect to developing regional representation through the reform of the Senate. It is my Party's policy that the Senate be abolished. That is the basic Party position. However, arguments have been presented in the House, and other places, which suggest that we could possibly stay with representation by population but that the regional representation could be established in the Senate. I do not think that this is necessarily the best way to solve the western or the Maritimes isolation problems, although it is one idea which could perhaps be thrown into the hopper in the future when we discuss the best representation procedures to be adopted.

In conclusion, if this Bill were to be sent back to committee, the opportunity would be presented to establish a long-term formula which would recognize regional requirements. Perhaps a basically different method of representation by region could be considered. In that way, we might come up with the type of representation by the year 2001 which would satisfy these areas of the country which now feel isolated because of their lack of population.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the comments made by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I also wish to thank him for his reference in his remarks to my constituency. I can confirm what the Hon. Member has said with respect to my riding covering one-quarter of the Province of Saskatchewan, which is a riding in excess of 175,000 square kilometres. There are certainly some real logistical and practical problems with respect to representing such a large area. I wish to find out what the Hon. Member thinks about striking a balance between Members who represent large ridings, not so much by making additional ridings but by restructuring the present system. This could also include those Members who represent large population centres. Those who represent large ridings could be given a budget for travel and a budget for constituency services which might better accommodate large geographic areas. Has the Hon. Member given this idea any thought as opposed to the addition of extra seats? Would it not be beneficial in large areas to have a budget which more accurately reflects the service needs of such regions?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that if one ends up serving an area such as the constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake one will need a greater budget and more facilities to perform a good job of representation. Perhaps it would be better to say that one needs this in order to perform an equal job of representation when compared with a community in downtown Toronto that is perhaps ten blocks by ten blocks. It is obvious that more facilities are needed in a larger riding. I still worry about how difficult it is to represent a small community with perhaps 3,500 people such as La Loche, Saskatchewan and still not be able to get to know it. The people in that community speak Chippewan. As far as employment is concerned, there is a small base. The only way to find out what is needed in such a community in order to represent it well is to be able to go there and spend some time there. If there are ten such communities which need this type of care it is just not possible to provide it. To do so would take every weekend of the four years that a Member is elected to the House. I am concerned that we should look at these remote areas and give them more Members and put in place a formula which recognizes size and people rather than just population.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is familiar with the last recommended redistribution plan of 1983 which was not adopted by the House. With respect to northern Saskatchewan, would it not make more sense to deal with the northern communities as one large constituency? The Hon. Member makes excellent points about the difficulties encountered in northern communities. If the financial accommodation were provided to a Member representing such a riding, he could easily deal with the 15 communities on the west side of the north of Saskatchewan and those communities on the east side of the north. In this way communities such as La Loche, Buffalo Narrows, Ile à la Crosse over to La Ronge and other areas where Cree, Chippewan and French are spoken could be properly represented. There are problems unique to the north involving mainly resource-based problems and problems with the fishing industry, problems which are not encountered by those who represent ridings which are shared between farming and other industries. If there were to be one riding, albeit a very large one, would it not be better to have a constituency with a uniform set of concerns and, again, a special budget to match the great travel needs and service needs of such an area?

• (1150)

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I agree very much with that suggestion. In fact, perhaps the Hon. Member and I can get together and co-sponsor a Bill making northern Saskatchewan one constituency. It would probably be represented by a northerner who would know that area much better than either the Hon. Member or I who were raised and grew up south of that area. That could be one solution.

If that were done, it would not add much population to each of the 13 southern constituencies. That is, if we were to divide the south into 13 constituencies and have one constituency for the north with 25,000 people in it, that would not add many people to the south, and it would solve to some extent, at least, part of the problem. The Member of Parliament would still have trouble with travel but he would be much more at home in the sense that his constituency would be much more homogeneous.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was just delighted to hear the exchange of comments between the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). What they were proposing for northern Saskatchewan, an area I have had an opportunity to visit on a few occasions, was similar to the amendment I proposed to the House a week or so ago, namely, that the area north of the French River and encompassed by the 11 ridings in northern Ontario, have a floor of representation. It would not affect ridings outside of Ontario, but within the Ontario allocation of 95 seats or, as is proposed, 99 seats, there would be 11 seats dedicated to northern Ontario. It might mean a few more people in the ridings of Metropolitan Toronto. But representing 87,000 or 89,000 people, I do not think is really material compared to losing one or two seats in northern Ontario as will happen under the redistribution formula which is being proposed by the Government.

So I believe the principle of having a floor of representation in northern Ontario might well be applied to the northern areas of other provinces such as Saskatchewan, where it might have a population below the 87,000 limit or average, but its Members of Parliament would have a lot of responsibility.

So I am just delighted that the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, whose Party opposed a floor formula for northern Ontario, seems agreeable to that concept for Saskatchewan. I believe, by extension, he would agree to that principle in northern Ontario, and if he does, he will have a chance this afternoon or at some time to vote to send this Bill back to committee so that those principles, which will be so beneficial to northern Ontario, northern Saskatchewan, northern Quebec and other provinces, could be implemented and applied so that those people would be properly treated.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have just one comment. In order to do that across the country, I think it would be necessary, or should be necessary, to establish some kind of formula so that every area would be treated in somewhat the same way. I think there is a danger of having little pockets of rotten boroughs—if I can phrase it that way—established too easily if we do not have some kind of a formula in place which makes sure that the representation is fairly distributed.

In the case of Saskatchewan, I do not think it is too difficult. Where we have 11 ridings, we need to have some formula by which we are going to make sure the representation is fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments is now terminated. Resuming debate.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to speak on the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on Bill C-74. As the House will recall, I had a chance to speak on this Bill last week on the motion by the Government to invoke closure on discussion and debate in this House. I felt at that time that it was very fundamental to my work as a Member of Parliament on behalf of my constituents of York West to rise in my place and voice not only my objections but the objections I have received from my constituents.

I am pleased to rise on the amendment which is before the House for debate this afternoon, namely, that we take Bill C-74 and move it back into committee. I think there is a feeling—and it was shown quite well over the last number of days—that Members of Parliament are not entirely pleased with the process which has taken place on such a fundamental piece of legislation. We must look at this piece of legislation with all the objectivity that we in this Chamber can muster because it is fundamental to the way Canadians will be governed and to the way Canadians choose their elected representatives.

We have in this Chamber, as you know, Mr. Speaker, 282 Members of Parliament. The last boundary commission proposed an increase from 282 Members of Parliament to 310. Bill C-74 rejects the previous discussions and public hearings which took place from one coast to the other and put a capping on the number of seats at 295. The feeling I have is that there was too much haste and too much partisanship in the way that figure was arrived at. We had a good illustration of that this morning in terms of one Member from Saskatchewan on the government side talking to another Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan who happens to be a member of the New Democratic Party. It was a fair exchange. It was an exchange which indicated that if we cannot get more seats in Saskatchewan, perhaps we can consider, as a way of offsetting that, ways of beefing up the travelling privileges of Members of Parliament from Saskatchewan, or we can beef up the constituency allocations for Members of Parliament for Saskatchewan. Perhaps we can have more than one constituency office with more than one or two staff members.

It was a fair exchange between the Members of Parliament, and that is the kind of exchange that we on this side of the House are asking for. We are asking that that type of exchange be allowed to percolate through the system. We believe that the ideas and aspirations of Canadians can complement that percolation. That is what parliamentary debate is all about and that is what committee work is all about. We try to grasp these ideas, and other ideas, and mould them in such a fashion that all Canadians and all Members of Parliament can feel that the regions are being dealt with in a fair and equitable manner.

That is not the case now. What the Government is attempting to do is to forgo the fermentation of those ideas. It says: "Somehow we know what is right for Canadians. Out of the blue we will grab 295 seats, and that is what we are running with". I would submit, and my Party has been submitting, that that is not the way to proceed. We heard from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), on how Bill C-74 is going to affect Ontario. Under the Bill, the number of seats in Ontario will be increased from 95 to 99. This is a reduction from the proposal in the last Parliament for an increase to 105. I, of course, had a particular interest in the elegantly presented remarks of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior concerning this change because I am a Member from Ontario.

One area which will be a loser is Metropolitan Toronto. Looking at the previous proposal, the number of seats in Toronto surely would have been greater than what this Government is prepared to give. I have some reservations about that because my constituents have some reservations. One of the issues the Government introduced to justify Bill C-74 was the savings involved because of the cost of elected representatives, their offices and staff. Yet, at the other end of the spectrum, we have the bank bail-out and no one on the Government side suggests that it was a waste of money. This is a double standard. More important, how did the Government come to this conclusion concerning the saving of money? I have talked to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). They were Members in the last Parliament when I was not. They were very closely associated with the entire process of boundary realignment. They suggested to me that Canadians who appeared at the public hearings really did not object to an increase in Members from 282 to 310. Had they told me that there was much public animosity over the projected increases, that Canadians were not prepared to support an enlarged Parliament, then I would not get up in my place and suggest that we should not pay attention to those beliefs. However, that is not what they said. The discussions, in fact, were over how best to split up the 310-piece pie. These people did not object to the over-all increase. That is important because this Government is attempting to justify this Bill on a premise I believe to be false.

Another aspect of the debate over increasing the size of the House of Commons are the signals Canadians sent concerning what they want in their elected Chambers. I can tell you what constituents in York West want. I am not suggesting that my riding is an exact mirror of Canada, but I think the aspirations of my constituents as they presented them to me can be associated with those of other constituencies across this country. In a growing impersonalized world, a world which somehow does not have time for the individual, a world that somehow forgets the human element, Canadians are telling me that they want to preserve the personal element in dealing with their Governments and elected Members of Parliament.

Although this is my first term in the House of Commons, I perceive the role of a Member of Parliament as having changed over the years. You know better than I, Mr. Speaker, that a Member has a different role now compared to when he or she first became a Member. A Member now has become almost a social service agency, if you will. Canadians come to us not only to get information and solve problems in our own area of responsibility, but also to deal with problems that are outside of federal responsibility but that are nonetheless very serious. Canadians are saying that they want to maintain personal accessibility to their Governments. They do not want to get a computerized letter in response to a problem which is very real for them and their families. They want their Member of Parliament to deal adequately and sensitively with their problems.

What happens with a Member of Parliament in the normal discharging of our responsibilities? I will tell you what happens. From Monday to Friday Members of Parliament are largely confined to the capital and, more specifically, to this House. Whether we are making representations as I am now, working on committees like those I will be attending this afternoon, talking to the bureaucrats in an attempt to solve constituency problems, or replying to our constituents, we are for the most part here in this place. Therefore, when it comes to dealing with our community, caring for our constituents on a one-to-one basis, we have basically a weekend at our disposal to do those things. When we go back to our ridings, most of us have constituency days, whether it be a Saturday or a Sunday. We spend most of the day huddled in our offices trying to meet with our constituents and deal with their problems. However, there are also other parts of the community where people do not necessarily have a particular problem concerning pensions or taxes or immigration. Nonetheless, they require the presence and thoughtfulness of their Member of Parliament. So, afer you have finished dealing with the problems, you try to attend a local function, visit with local senior citizens or attend a dinner in your constituency. You try not to leave out the schools. You try to talk to the young people. Of course, those of us with large industrial parks in our ridings strive to meet with business people on a regular basis, visit their plants, and determine if the economic proposals of this Government are working or are simply some theoretical pie-in-the-sky. If you want to do all those tings as a Member of Parliament and do them well, then I submit that the weekend is not enough time. At the same time, we cannot be in the riding Monday to Friday because then the first question constituents will ask you is: What are you doing here? Are you not supposed to be in Ottawa looking after our needs?

To be a Member of Parliament in 1985 is a balancing act between serving one's constituents while being here in Ottawa, and serving them on a one-to-one personalized basis in the constituency. Canadians request and rightfully demand that personalized service. I suggest that we are running counter to that desire if we arbitrarily, on a very partisan basis, put a cap or a limit on the number of Members of Parliament who have to represent an increasing population.

A good book, called Megatrends, was written, which most members have read and it was packed, as was Future Shock, with descriptions of the high technology development of our contemporary society. However, it differed from Future Shock in the sense that the author said, "Look, with increased technology, higher technology, you also need higher human touch". One chapter, entitled "High Technology—High Touch" was devoted completely to that concept. The author was right. As we grow more impersonal in today's society, as the computer age arrives, we nevertheless have to increase the human element. The people behind the computers have to learn that the individual still has a place in Canadian society. We should not look at the case of the unemployed or any other case as merely a statistic. We are beginning to move away from personalized service and things become statistics rather than individual challenges that we should be championing.

Therefore, when the Government invokes closure to cap the number of seats in the country, I do not think it is acting properly on such a fundamental piece of legislation. I suggest that that is not appropriate on any piece of legislation. However, while MPs are telling the Chamber that their regions somehow feel alienated and that there are not enough seats in their region and are suggesting that we take seats from one province and redistribute them to make things more equitable, we should not be moving on this piece of legislation as we are. We still have a way to go. We still have ideas to percolate through the system. We still have recommendations and suggestions to hear from the Canadian public.

It is useless to conduct public hearings, which will be the next step after the Debate in the Chamber, because the parameters have already been drawn. Therefore, Canadians can only give their impressions within the general confines of those parameters. Canadians from all parts of Canada are going to come forward and reflect the aspirations which we are espousing in the House, Mr. Speaker. When they do, we will have to tell them that we are sorry, we have already put the cart before the horse, we have already capped the number of seats for their regions and that they should, therefore, scratch that point out and give us another one. Canadians are obviously going to leave those public hearings feeling very frustrated and wondering why they were asked for input when it will certainly have no meaning at all.

That is what is at the heart of the debate on Bill C-74, Mr. Speaker. We must allow Canadians, through their elected representatives, to articulate their concerns. It is hypocrisy to say that we have the best interests of Canadians at heart and then to move on Bill C-74, which will determine how Canadians will elect their Government, in such a shoddy manner. We cannot have it both ways.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, in the way I started, by suggesting to the House that this is the wrong method by which to deal with such a fundamental issue as Bill C-74. This issue affects this Chamber and all Members but, most important, it affects the way Canadians elect their Government and the way in which they will be serviced by their representatives. This is not our place, but Canada's place. Therefore, Canadians ought to have the effective opportunity, on a proper basis, to suggest how they want the Government to function and which services they want rendered. We have not allowed Canadians that opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and I think that is wrong. I hope that somehow at the end of this parliamentary sitting those ideas can sift down to the government benches so that the Government will change the direction in which it has chosen to move the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments, and I also have question for my hon. friend.

First of all, I would like to say I am entirely in agreement with the line of reasoning he followed when describing the work of a Member of the House of Commons and the problems involved in maintaining a balance between the responsibilities we have here in Ottawa, either in the House or in committee, and those we have in our constituencies. I know, for instance, that especially during the holidays there are a lot of activities in our ridings, organized by the senior citizens' club or municipal employees or whatever, which people would like to see their Members attend. That is of course quite normal, and I also think that, generally, people tend to be very understanding.

In any case, I would like to tell him that I share his views on the subject, except that I would like to stress that he was referring to the Toronto area, and what we do not particularly like about the Bill before the House, and I speak as a Quebecer, not that we are opposed to an increase in representation from Alberta, in fact, we suggested that very thing—the Liberal Party suggested it during the previous Parliament. We have no objection to that, and in fact, we fully support an increase in Members from Alberta and Ontario. However, what we do object to most strenuously is that the Bill before the House, the Bill the Government is trying to ram down our throats, will cap representation from Quebec at 75 Members until the year 2001.

And I wonder why Conservative Members from Quebec are not taking part in this debate on a non-partisan basis. This is the first time a Bill to change our electoral boundaries has failed to get a consensus from the parties. This legislation is not important to the Progressive Conservative Party or the Liberals or the New Democratic Party. It is important to the Parliament of this country. If the electoral map is modified by the wish of the majority, the whole balance of our democratic system will be in jeopardy.

I would like to ask my hon. friend who just spoke, whether he, as an Ontarian, thinks it is fair and equitable—does he think that my position as a Quebecer, which is to fight against this partisan capping at 75 Members, up to the year 2001, does he think that is a normal position to take?

Does he consider my position too partisan, too regional, or is he, as an elected representative from Ontario, prepared to support a position that is held by the Liberal Members from Quebec? We seem to be alone in our desire to bring to the attention of the general public something I feel is a definite shortcoming, not because we are opposed to what the others are asking, but in the previous Parliament, the Liberal Members from Quebec had agreed, and they were very numerous—that Ontario should be allowed to increase its representation by several seats and that British Columbia should do likewise. We think it is only fair to give Quebec a chance to pick up a few seats. We were supposed to go from 75 to 79, and now we are being capped at 75 seats.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Thank you.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague raises some very good points, the first about the balance of one's work as a Member of Parliament, and the second about the situation faced in his home province of Quebec. On the balance issue I would like to point out that while Members from Toronto, such as myself, certainly have onerous responsibilities in dealing on a personal base with constituents, one must cushion that with the job of other Members of Parliament. The difficulties of other Members of Parliament from Vancouver or eastern Canada are increased ten-fold. I, personally, was used to a personal type of representation when I was a municipal councillor in North York. That is a very different type of elected representation, which I sincerely miss.

With regard to Quebec, that is what I meant when I spoke about Members of Parliament having the opportunity to offer ideas on the floor of the House of Commons and in committee. It is the inflexibility that we see with the handling of the Quebec situation that I think speaks volumes to the negative aspect of how Bill C-74 is being approached.

• (1220)

The Hon. Member mentions that in a discussion on the number of seats and whether or not that number be frozen at 75, we, on this side of the House, feel that we should not be given that inflexibility. Representations from Quebecers are sorely missing in this debate. The Member is not being partisan in making the representation he just did a few moments ago. He indicated that if Quebec Members of Parliament on the government benches who are of Conservative stripe feel that this is such a good deal for Quebecers and for their constituents, then why are they not on their feet deliberating and telling their constituents the reasons they believe Bill C-74 is an appropriate Bill? Government Members are not doing that with any consistency. Conservative Members are not getting up like Liberal Members debating the needs and aspirations of their constituents. If the Members feel that they have a good deal, he should elaborate on it. It is just like the de Havilland deal. If that is such a great deal for Canada, why is the Government hiding it in some back room until the signatures are dry, Mr. Speaker? You simply cannot offer credibility to Canadians when you say something is a good thing and then fail to have the courage to address it. Therefore, my colleague is suggesting, perhaps in a roundabout way, that Quebecers are looking for leadership and for their interest to be protected and that Government back-benchers are not doing the job.

[Translation]

Mr. St. Julien: Further to the Hon. Member's comments, I would point out to this House that I listened carefully to what was said by the Hon. Members for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), York West (Mr. Marchi) and Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I would like to say that if we really look at what has been done about this legislation in past years, under the Liberals, for instance, if we refer to the riding of Abitibi, I think there is something very odd because they kept it the same size. If they are interested in what the situation is like in the riding of Abitibi, I shall add that it is located in the largest of our ten Canadian provinces, covers 740,000 square kilometers and has a population of 102,000. And it is going to stay the same size. My comment to the Hon. Member for York West mainly concerns the budget of each Member.

The Hon. Member for York West may think that is bizarre, but the important thing is to tell the Liberals not to travel outside Canada and to stay in their ridings. That is what I have been doing since I was elected to the House of Commons. I avoid travelling outside Canada. I travel in my riding.

And I can guarantee that my riding, which is among the fifteen largest ridings in Canada, is nearly 75 per cent Conservative. And today, among the smallest ridings in Canada, there are about ten that belong to the Liberals, and I am talking about ridings covering five square kilometers, with 69,000 voters.

Personally, I think the Bill is an excellent one, and I live in one of the largest ridings in Canada. I work very hard in my riding, and in my view, this is a very good Bill.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) is doing a credible job in his riding. No one ever suggested that he was doing anything but a credible job. That was an objective statement from the Member for Abitibi. If he feels the way it seems, he has 20 minutes available today to explain to this House why he is so positive about Bill C-74. I urge him to tell his constituents through a speech in this Chamber how good Bill C-74 is.

The Member for Abibiti has one of the largest ridings in Quebec. Do his constituents expect him to be a local constituency man? Do they believe that he should be in Ottawa to make statements and speeches in this House or to lobby the Government for an industry his riding might be needing? I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Abitibi that constituents not only want their Member of Parliament to be in the constituency, as important as it may be, but they want him to do his job in this Chamber through the Government on behalf of his constituents. The Member simply cannot perform both functions. Therefore, the whole discussion of the high-tech, high touch type of evolvement through which we are going as espoused by Megatrend is applicable to his riding. I am somewhat surprised that rather than suggest ways of delivering a more personalized and effective type of representation he is trying to say that the status quo is okay.

In the Province of Quebec we would have looked at an increase of a minimum of four seats as a way of addressing the shortcomings of a growing impersonalized political landscape. I would urge the Member to join us in this debate and in our demands by allowing Canadians to join in the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in these closing days before the parliamentary break, it is unfortunate that the House has such an undignified, hasty, and ill-thought of initiative as the one before us today in the form of the Government's proposed redistribution Bill. It stands in stark contrast to the noble efforts about which history tells us, namely, the fundamental fights that have gone on for proper forms of political representation.

Americans fought a revolution over the question of representation by population. Other countries have gone through great debates of philosophical and intellectual propriety on how to represent people, which is the fundamental base of any democratic system. But what does this Government do? It tinkers, it manipulates, it short shrifts, it short circuits and it provides closure. That shows to what extent the Government provides respect for the parliamentary political system.

This issue is critical to the dignity and stature of this House and the way it is seen and perceived. But what do we have? We have a Government that treats it as another ad hoc, capricious initiative fitting already into such a chaotic and unplanned parliamentary timetable that it has to use closure. The Government resorts to the unprecedented initiative of not working out an agreement between Members of all sides of the House, thus turning the issue into a partisan one.

That kind of approach will have a certain insidious result. People will no longer be able to have some sense of respect, trust or confidence that this motion on redistribution is a fair and equitable attempt to provide for effective representation across the country. People will see the approach more as another part of the Mulroney master plan to resurrect the Conservative Party in Canada. That is very dangerous, Mr. Speaker. I certainly have no argument against political Parties trying to advance their interests, but they should know when to do it and what issues to pick. There must be a time and place in which partisan advantage is put aside and a more constructive all-Party non-partisan approach implemented.

That is not the way the Government thinks. The Conservatives polls are plummeting. The Government is looking toward the next election. No Government in the history of Canada has fallen faster in public esteem or confidence than this Government—

Mr. McInnes: What about the Liberals in the last election?

Mr. Axworthy: No Government has fallen faster in the first year of its mandate. The ratings have dropped in such a precipitous fashion that it is no wonder its back-benchers or newly elected Members are now considering what to do when they reach early retirement. They will fight and scrap for every marginal seat which they think they can acquire and, if they can do it through redistribution, all the better. That is the dominant message which comes through clearly in this particular piece of legislation. They are not concerned about the broader issues and questions about how the country will be represented in a federal system. They are not concerned about the roles of Members of Parliament. My colleague from Toronto talked eloquently about the changing roles of Members of Parliament, the services and the sense of responsiveness which must be acquired in this modern age. He was quite right. Whether one represents a rural riding, an urban riding or a downtown constituency, the demands and interests of people have changed. There is now an incredible overload in the system, an incredible sense of demand for response, information and assistance. I fundamentally believe that the Member of Parliament, in this day and age, in many ways replaces the roles of other institutions simply because of availability. The more we grow away from that principle, the more we attempt to cut the cloth of redistribution purely for political partisan advantage, the more the role is injured or deteriorated. Also it provides opportunity for skepticism and cynicism.

● (1230)

Let us look at the reasons for this legislation being brought forward. No one sees any reference to the critical importance of the role of a Member of Parliament, nor is there any reference to how it fits the future needs of our Confederation. I expect most Hon. Members of the House would have spent some time reading the report of the Macdonald Commission and its discussion about federal-provincial relations. It pointed out that other institutions were increasingly replacing Parliament as the forum for debate on national issues. We have almost institutionalized federal-provincial conferences of Premiers and Ministers. That tendency deteriorates and erodes the responsibility of every Member of the House. It is not helped by the way in which the Government treats Parliament with contempt. It treats Parliament as a place in which not to provide information or debate. We have asked, in all seriousness, for proper answers about the proposals on trade. What have we received from the other side? We have received jokes and buffoonery.

Mr. Hopkins: Incivility.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, incivility, but we have not received any answers. The only places where the Ministers of the Government were prepared to address the free trade issue were in a speech in Chicago and in two speeches in New York. They were the only places from which we were able to obtain a broader interpretation of what they planned to do about this crucial issue. They do not involve Parliament in the debate; God forbid that Canadians should know what is going on! We get that kind of information from a wire service story out of New York. I suppose that reflects the basic disregard and disrespect for this institution. Nothing is more clear than the way in which the Government has approached the problem of redistribution.

Earlier the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) pointed to the area of northern Ontario which has a very special set of requirements and interest in Confederation. If the formula in the Bill is allowed to continue, over the years that part of Ontario will find its democratic rights severely eroded, almost abolished. That is not only true in that one part of the country. This goes back to my basic point—there has been no thought given to the consequences of the Bill. There has been no attempt to provide Hon. Members with any sense of what will be the repercussions of the legislation.

There was a series of committee meetings, but the Government brought in a brand new amendment at report stage, with no by your leave or attempt to relate it back to principles of representation and how regional responsibilities would be affected. Therefore, the only conclusion one can draw from that hasty and capricious initiative is that it was done purely for political advantage, because each day Government members saw their electoral advantage willowing away, disappearing and evaporating. Now they resort to the worst refuge of political scoundrels, that is, an attempt to manipulate the political basis of representation in order to gain some political advantage. That is the shame and tragedy of this piece of legislation. It really disrupts and undermines the principle, practice and tradition of the House of Commons which have existed for decades.

Perhaps, all said and done, it is worth-while, in that once again it will provide a good, clear example, if Canadians need another example, of what motivates the Government. It is not motivated by principle, practice or traditions; it is motivated by political advantage. Perhaps Canadians do not need that lesson brought home; there have been enough examples in the past several months to make the case as clear as possible. However, it is another example; perhaps the most grievous example of all. In this case the Government is reaching back into hundreds of years of traditions and eroding them. Perhaps that is what is most serious about it. It will have its just desserts, because Canadians basically understand that kind of political chicanery. No doubt the Government will pay the price. In that sense, I suppose in our own interest we should be applauding this kind of political manipulation, this abuse of parliamentary tradition. However, the fact of the matter is that Hon. Members on this side of the House feel strongly about those traditions. That is why we believe and have brought in amendments—

Mr. Stewart: What a joke!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I am glad Hon. Members opposite are amused when we talk about parliamentary tradition. Obviously it is a matter of great hilarity to them; obviously it is a matter which they treat with contempt and amusement. We do not treat it with amusement; we take it very seriously. This is why we made an effort, in a variety of debates at second reading, in committee and under closure, to try to convince them that this is not the time and place to resort to the street tactics which have been a hallmark of the Government. It is time to get out of the back alleys of political discourse and to try, for once, to do something which lives up to the standards, reputation and traditions of the House. Obviously it is too late. They have the bulldozer on and they are proceeding. All we can do is simply to use these last hours of debate to bring some once again the fundamental issue that this is not the kind of Bill which will provide any redemption for the Government. It is too late, but the Government might have shown some class, some style and some integrity by at least treating this matter with the kind of tradition and respect of the principles that it deserves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), for questions or comments.

Mr. Garneau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) for his remarks. Of course the Province of Manitoba will fare much like the Province of Quebec under the Bill now being considered, in the sense that Manitoba does not stand to gain seats or Members under Bill C-74, but worse still the number of constituencies will be frozen until the year 2001. That is a very long time. I would like to ask the Hon. Member how the people of his province react to this procedure whereby, in a partisan approach, a group of Members are attempting to force all parties to approve an electoral map such that redistribution will be frozen for 15, 16 or perhaps even 20 years.

We in Quebec will end up with 75 seats, whereas we were supposed to get 79. So we lost four seats. We agree that Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario should have more, but do Manitobans react the same way as Quebecers?

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member properly points out that according to the formula that is being imposed, not only regions but provinces themselves will, in effect, have their rights and responsibilities denied for an extensive period of time.

Since September, 1984, as far as Conservative Members of Parliament from there are concerned, the people of Manitoba have become accustomed to the fact that they do not receive representation.

Mr. Gormley: You are one to talk about representation.

Mr. Axworthy: In fact, I should point out that this morning I received a brochure that the Conservatives put out at their provincial convention in Brandon three weeks ago. That brochure listed 14 accomplishments of the Conservatives since they came to office in the Province of Manitoba. The only problem is that 13 of those were Liberal accomplishments. All the agreements and initiatives were started under our Government. Suddenly these are achievements which happened under the Conservative Government. In fact, I was surprised that they were able to list one achievement that we had not initiated.

The title of the pamphlet was: "What the media wouldn't tell you". Of course, the subtitle should be: "And what the Conservatives refuse to tell you". The accomplishments which they listed were projects that we initiated and implemented.

It is even more ironic that several of those were projects which the Conservatives cancelled or refused to implement. Obviously, the printer was in too great a hastle to distribute the brochure. However, the people of Manitoba have become accustomed to this.

The Province of Manitoba has its own demographics, with a very large city and a large rural area. Even with such a balance there is no attempt to provide additional seats as was originally proposed under the redistribution brought forward to Parliament in 1984. There will be no opportunity or flexibility to respond to the shift which is taking place within the province in regard to the change of population in the city and suburban areas. More particularly, certain rural areas have grown faster than others and certain parts of the City of Winnipeg have expanded. Therefore, this will mean a major disruption only of existing boundaries. We have pointed out that this leads ultimately to severe temptations for manipulation of those boundaries that are not based upon the classic formula or representation by population but by political judgment and advantage. That is what I believe concerns the people of Manitoba most deeply.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-74. However, I am keenly aware of the fact that this debate is taking place in the context of time allocation. The Government is forcing us to come to a decision at third reading stage of this Bill.

In addition, there is a proposal to refer the Bill back to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections in order to consider the matter further. I will speak in support of that amendment which has been proposed by the Liberal Party as well as on the Government's actions and the greater issue which gives us reason to justify calling for further consideration of this matter before the committee. It must be considered further in order that there can be proper development of the Constitution of Canada, of which the redistribution Act is a fundamental part.

Members of the Official Opposition have spoken much more than they did when this matter was under consideration in the committee. I suggest it is somewhat ironic that the Liberal Opposition has moved an amendment calling for further discussion in committee on this very important matter. The fact is that Liberal Members did not take much part in the committee deliberations and may well have blighted the possibility of dealing properly with this whole matter. Liberal Members, who should have been before the committee to deal with this crucial matter, were absent. Consequently, we see the posturing in the House which has been taking place recently. I believe more discussion is necessary, so why was this matter not kept before the committee and discussed adequately as it should have been? I suggest that the Official Opposition must bear some responsibility for the Bill being brought back to the House for report stage and third reading so quickly.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) did his best in the committee to raise the large issues that the legislation involves. He did his best to ensure that witnesses were brought before the committee and that there was sufficient discussion before the committee reported and the House considered third reading.

I want to recognize the accomplishments that resulted from his work. The Bill has been amended to recognize the vital principle that redistribution should respect community of interest in ridings, that there should be appreciation of geographical factors that exist throughout the country which give a constituency a certain historical and social reality, and that the boundary changes that may be necessary should be carried out with care in due regard for these historical, geographic and economical considerations. These amendments came about as a result of vigorous representations by the Member for Churchill in the committee.

While I recognize those achievements, as a Member from northern Ontario, I would have liked the Bill to enshrine the principle of stability for a number of ridings in northern Ontario, as proposed by the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). However, I appreciate the fact that community of interest has been recognized.

The basic difficulty that faces us is that this Bill put forward by the Government scraps the work on redistribution done in preceding years and makes fundamental changes to the structure of representation which we have known for decades past all the way to Confederation. We have before us a Bill which is properly entitled amendments to the Constitution Act. It is a departure from such fundamental principles as the decision on the numerical basis of riding size being developed out of the Province of the Quebec and applied across the country. Beyond that, we have seen a deflation in the number of constituencies that will be added to the ridings of those provinces which have grown substantially since the preceding census. They will not, in fact, experience the full increase in constituencies which they had expected. It is those two principles in particular that quite astonish me coming as they do from a Conservative Government which had a large electoral success in the Province of Quebec and then makes this fundamental change in our Constitution which carries through a certain kind of constitutional revolution.

My colleagues have wondered why Government members who represent Quebec ridings have not spoken on this matter as forcefully as they should have. My colleagues have asked a very good question. We in the New Democratic Party who represent northern Ontario spoke on second reading on this matter and put the issue forcefully for our ridings. We spoke forcefully on that matter quite early on and were pointing to some of the issues which were involved. At that point, there was little enough echoing of our sentiments from other parts of the House, and even now we see government Members quietly at work here in the House or in their offices without raising their voices. They clearly have not done so in caucus, or at least not to any effect, and they are not doing anything in the House to slow down the Government.

Looking at the rules that were applied to distribution in the Representation Act, 1974, we find that Subsection 51(1) of the British North America Act, 1867, was amended to read as follows:

> The number of members of the House of Commons and the representation of the provinces therein shall upon the coming into force of this subsection and thereafter on the completion of each decennial census be readjusted by such authority, in such manner, and from such time as the Parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following Rules:—

Rules 1 and 2 are the rules I wish to note in particular. Rule 1 reads as follows:

> There shall be assigned to Quebec seventy-five members in the readjustment following the completion of the decennial census taken in the year 1971, and thereafter four additional members in each subsequent readjustment.

That provided a cornerstone for the distribution pattern of seats in the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I cannot seem to see the Hon. Member who is speaking. Thank you.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Rule No. 2 of the Act, which is now being amended by the Bill before us, reads as follows:

> Subject to Rules 5(2) and (3), there shall be assigned to a large province a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the population of the large province by the electoral quotient of Quebec.

In the following rules, there are provisions for small provinces and intermediate provinces, but it is quite clear that representation from Quebec with 75 Members, or 79 Members in recognition of the population growth in that vital province, was the very cornerstone of the distributional structure of the House of Commons.

What do we find in the new Bill that is before us, the Bill which we want to send back to committee for further consideration? We find that Rule 1 of Subsection 51(1) of the Constitution Act, 1867, is to be amended as follows:

There shall be assigned to each of the provinces a number of members equal to the number obtained by dividing the total population of the provinces by two hundred and seventy-nine and by dividing the population of each province by the quotient so obtained, counting any remainder in excess of 0.50 as one after the said process of division.

This is the cancellation of a fundamental principle that has prevailed in Canadian Confederation since its very beginning. This is a declaration that the House of Commons shall contain about 280 Members and that the total population of the country shall be divided simply by the number 279 to arrive at a figure which will then be divided into the population of each of the provinces. Of course, in the next stage will come the further nuances which will be necessary to make the system work.

I marvel that a Government with the kind of strength it has in the Province of Quebec—or is it actually strength—would do a thing like that. I would say that a preceding Conservative Government, the one of 1957 to 1963 led by the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, was not known for having very much sensitivity to the aspiration of Quebec. To have had the Diefenbaker Government do a thing like this would not have astonished me at all. However, it seems quite astonishing that this Government would change the cornerstone of our system of representation which is based on the Province of Quebec and replace it with a numerical system which has one concern alone and that is to hold down the growth of the Canadian Parliament.

This concern over the growth of the House of Commons is supposedly based on the cost involved in increasing the size of the House of Commons. This leads us to wonder whether the expenditures we incur in representing our constituents are regarded as wasted money. If we were to facilitate the representation of people in isolated communities and make it easy for the citizens who live in my riding to be in touch with me, would it be money wasted? It seems to me that at some point, we would gain to move toward tyranny. What Conservative Members said many a time about the application of closure by the preceding Liberal Government is what Conservative Government members are in fact on the brink of doing. When they suggest that money spent for additional Members of Parliament who would provide good representation in money lost, they are not very far away from saying that all of our deliberations are rather a waste of money. I recognize, however, that that may be a long way away.

There have been seven impositions of closure in just a few weeks on matters that have had precious little debate in the House of Commons. We have a small Opposition which is using a six month hoist motion in order to renew its opportunity to debate these matters and keep them before the public so that we may discover whether or not the people of Canada are critical of measures the Government wants to put through. We see Government members reacting to these attempts to keep matters before the Canadian public in this way even though they themselves are past masters at it. When we see this Government, which has been in office only 15 months and some days, acting in this kind of high-handed and authoritative manner, then surely everything Government members ever said to the last Liberal Government about tyrannical tendencies is fairly enough applied to them.

The consideration of fundamental changes to our Constitution is being pushed through by closure. This is happening because Government members seem to think that, somehow or other, adding to the number of Members of the House will waste the money of the public. At the same time, the Government presumes to sweep away the work already done by commissions and to spend more money developing redistribution that results from its feelings. What is one to say about a Government that behaves that way?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Orders of the Day are called later on this day, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) will have five minutes left in his debate and ten minutes left for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LOCATING OF TOYOTA PLANT IN ONTARIO—ALLEGATIONS OF PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF STATE (TRANSPORT)

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec caucus of the Conservative Party seems to be getting more ineffective by the day, as we hear more about the unfortunate exploits of these powerless unknowns.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with the House some comments allegedly made by the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) at the official opening of the indoor parking garage at Dorval Airport, the same day it was announced that Toyota had decided to set up its plant in Ontario.

The Minister of State for Transport indicated that she had been aware for some time that Toyota would be going to Ontario. If that was the case, why didn't she say so to her caucus? Why didn't she say so to the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), who had people's hopes raised when he promised that Toyota would be coming to Brossard? Why did she let the Conservative caucus move its unanimous resolution to bring Toyota to Quebec, if she had already known for some time that Toyota was going to Ontario?

The Cabinet could not care less about the Conservative Members from Quebec. In fact, it is far more easily influenced by the non-elected friends of the Prime Minister who meet at the Ritz than by those illustrious unknowns, elected when their leader's popularity crested, but it won't last.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Transport explained Toyota's decision, pointing out that the automobile industry was already located in Southwestern Ontario and that it was therefore perfectly natural and normal for Toyota to go to Ontario. These remarks by a Minister who is more interested in trips to Europe than in getting jobs for Quebec have demonstrated once again that she does not belong in Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRICE OF BREAD IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, last January, Weston and McGavin, two large bakeries in Saskatchewan, started a price war which threatened to put smaller local bakeries out of business. Bread which normally sold at $1.05 a loaf retail was being sold at only 58 cents a loaf and sometimes as low as nine cents a loaf. This appeared to be a clear case of predatory pricing designed to intimidate small bakeries, to drive them out of business and, in the long run, to drive up the price of bread.

However, after an investigation, the Director of Investigation and Research in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs ruled that this price-cutting did not constitute predatory pricing. According to the Director, "the wholesale prices of the major bakeries covered their variable costs at all times". Given this ruling, McGavin recently followed Weston's lead and increased the price of bread in rural areas by 13 cents to 15 cents a loaf, bringing the current price to between 95 cents and $1.29 a loaf.

With the price of both wheat and sugar down, and with recent wage settlements falling behind the current rate of inflation, there is no good evidence of increased input costs. Until Weston and McGavin produce evidence which legitimately supports these price increases, Canadians can only conclude that they are being gouged by unfair pricing practices while the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) stands idly by.

If 58 cents was found to cover the variable costs of these bakeries last year, why must consumers bear these large price increases this year?

FORESTRY

SCHOLARSHIPS AWARDED BY HUMAN RESOURCES PROGRAM OF CANADIAN FORESTRY SERVICE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday at Laval University, I had the pleasure of announcing, on behalf of the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), the names of 13 students who were awarded a scholarship for studies in forestry under the Canadian Forestry Service's Human Resources Program. The total value of these scholarships is $150,800. In Canada this year, 50 students will each be receiving $11,600 under this program.

The Canadian Forestry Service promotes research in Canadian universities offering a master's degree and Ph.D. in this subject. The Service's Human Resources Program also offers practical training periods for students, university grants, R&D contracts for universities and training for Service staff.

The Canadian Forestry Service is trying to improve our schools of forestry and attract more students to this area. To this end, it has increased the grants paid to each of the six schools from $48,000 in 1982 to $381,000 this year. I am very proud to be part of a Government that is concerned about the future of our forests and that also recognizes the importance of providing first-class training for our future forestry experts, to ensure the prosperity of this sector. We must not forget that it includes Canada's most important industry.

This program, with the $150 million provided under the Canada-Quebec agreement on forestry development—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

EDUCATION

TRIBUTE TO NEW CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the recent success of Quebec candidates in the chartered accountants' examination. There is now a standard final examination throughout Canada whose purpose is to assess the professional judgment of candidates and their ability to make sound recommendations based on the aptitude to analyze and synthetize which a C.A. is expected to have.

Fifteen of the first 20 candidates who successfully passed the final examination were Quebecers. Better still, eight of the first ten were also from Quebec City. All told, Mr. Speaker, 678 young men and women from Quebec passed the final examination. Given such an achievement, no wonder Quebec has experienced an economic renewal in recent years. Like their predecessors in this profession, they will continue to serve the business, industrial and agricultural communities, as well as the public and near-public sectors.

Mr. Speaker, all these young people will help to protect the interests of Quebecers and serve the community.

Having passed the examination, C.A. candidates will have to undertake a two-year stage with a firm of chartered accountants duly accredited for such training.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the 678 Quebec candidates who passed the examination and, more particularly, the 15 young men and women who ranked among the first 20 in Canada.

TRANSPORT

TRUCK HAULAGE RATES ON FEDERAL PROJECTS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place today to bring to the attention of the Government a resolution which the Canadian Dump Truckers Federation passed recently at a metting in Moncton, New Brunswick. The Truckers Federation is very concerned that haul rates on federal Government contracts do not conform to prevailing rates set by provincial Departments of Transport or Highways. The fact is that the federal Government does not have a minimum haul rate for dump trucks on federal projects. The absence of a minimum haul rate means that contractors on federal projects take advantage of the truckers they engage on the contract by offering them less than the prevailing provincial rate.

This is not a revolutionary request. The Government is requested simply to agree to the minimum provincial rates existing in each province when it tenders out contracts. I ask the Government to eliminate this predatory pricing situation which exists because of the lack of firm guidelines.

The establishment of a minimum haul rate on federal government contracts would stabilize the trucking industry and prevent the bickering and predatory pricing which are now sabotaging the trucking industry.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT ON STAFFING OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, holding the line on government expenditures in the name of deficit reduction can be a dangerous business. The Inspector General of Banks has stated that Treasury Board prevented him from obtaining the staff he needed in the late 1970s to deal with a much enlarged banking system in Canada. Mr. Kennett sough 11 new people in the 1984-85 fiscal year but was given only four. He sought to hire 14 more this year but was only allowed nine. "As recently as last June", he says, "we received a missile from the Treasury Board suggesting we reduce our staff over the next couple of years".

Only after the Canadian Commercial and Northland Banks had failed, at a cost to taxpayers of hundreds of millions of dollars, did Treasury Board authorize an increase in the Inspector General's staff.

In the same week the Great Lakes region is reported to be the most contaminated in North America but the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) finds himself "subject to government restraint" and unable to fund more research. He is unable to fund the Toxicology Research Centre at Guelph which the Government scrapped last year when it slashed $46 million from the budget of Environment Canada. Meanwhile, his Department works on the terrifying problems of cleaning up the St. Clair River.

How large will the cost be in dollars and, perhaps, in lives, because of deficit reduction applied to the Department of the Environment?

RADIO-CANADA

ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT NEWS SERVICE ON UPPER NORTH SHORE

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, it is with a lot of pride and enthusiasm that, last Sunday evening in Forestville, the people of the Upper North Shore welcomed the official announcement by Mr. Pierre Juneau, President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that there will be a permanent news service of Radio-Canada in the region.

This was certainly good news as all members of the social and economic community of the area had been requesting it for nearly fifteen years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should applaud the management of the CBC, its President, Mr. Pierre Juneau, and the Minister of Communications, the Hon. Marcel Masse, for being so sensitive to the needs of a region which is certainly disadvantaged as far as communications, information and an accurate portrayal of its difficult way of life are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the regional services of Radio-Canada provide much more than critical and factual information. They are first and foremost a great agent for social and economic development.

They are also a powerful agent for dialogue and the motivator for an improved sense of identity.

In Forestville Sunday evening, Mr. Speaker, we indeed felt a greater sense of our identity as Canadians when we heard the words: "Ici Radio-Canada, Haute Côte-Nord".

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN EXPORTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention some more good news about the economy. According to data published this week by Statistics Canada, our total commodity exports in the third quarter of 1985 increased $460 million over last year's figures for the same period.

More recently, in October, our commodity exports were valued at nearly $11 billion, with $8.5 billion going to the United States. As far as our balance of commodity trade in concerned, we have a surplus of $2.353 billion with the United States.

Spurred on by increased shipments of coal and refined petroleum products, exports continued to rise in October 1985, reaching a record level of $10.9 billion. This is an increase of 2.1 per cent over September and the third consecutive monthly increase.

Considering the size of our domestic market, Canadians are far more dependent than Americans on foreign markets for exports of goods and services. In fact, exports of goods and services as a percentage of our gross national product are three times the percentage attained in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, here we have the positive results of policies initiated by the Conservative Government that have helped to stimulate the Canadian economy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES PLAN TO CLEAN UP TOXIC DUMP SITES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the city of Niagara Falls, New York, is home to several toxic dump sites. The City is already four months behind in meeting a Federal Court request for a clean-up schedule. Now City Council has rejected the recommendation by City staff to hire a consultant to help and develop a clean-up plan. Why? The consultant's fees would drive up water rates. This act of political cowardice is indicative of the lack of political will to find a solution of how to clean up the dump sites. The lack of political will does not stop at the Canada-U.S. border, though; it is contagious and has infected the present Tory Government.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) refuses to let Canadians know the contents of an American plan to clean up the toxic dumps, a two-month old document which is public in the U.S. Indeed, the Minister will not go even so far as to express an opinion on the contents of the plan. Decisions affecting Canadians are being made behind closed doors, keeping the Canadian people in the dark. I urge the Minister of the Environment to come clean with the Canadian people and tell them what he thinks about the U.S. plan to clean up the dumps, what he intends to do about the shortcomings in the plan, and how he intends to convince the Americans that extraction and destruction of the toxic materials are better than containment, and that action should start in the immediate future.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—SIZE OF PUBLIC FUNDING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in 1974 the Liberals embarked on a bail-out of de Havilland which was in grave financial trouble. The Liberals ignored all advice and moved ahead with their pipe dream, a dream which was to see an ever increasing role for Government in the market-place through the setting up of hundreds of Crown corporations. Along with their bosom buddies from the NDP, they endeavoured to teach the business world a lesson. They appointed new managers at de Havilland and opened wide the taxpayers' purse. After pouring in $830 million of taxpayers' money it was obvious that they had failed miserably. de Havilland's long-term survival was in jeopardy.

• (1415)

Now, through my Government's move to privatize de Havilland, the future of the company and its workers looks bright. The Official Opposition seems to have lost touch with the mood of Canadians. Canadians know that privatization costs the taxpayers less and means more jobs. The Ontario Liberals know this. They are trying to sell UTDC and other Crown corporations. The Quebec Liberals have just appointed a Minister of State for Privatization.

We, the Progressive Conservatives, acted to stop the haemorrhage of public funds and ensure the survival of de Havilland. We acted to save hundreds of jobs. We keep our promises, and Canadian taxpayers recognize that fact.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—TERMS OF PROSPECTUS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister who, according to the House Leader, should be here shortly, I will put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Even he, who has a talent for secrecy, should have recognized that the handling of the de Havilland affair by the Government has been deplorable, even by the Government's own standards.

No thanks to the Government, we have obtained a copy of the secret prospectus which was given to prospective purchasers of de Havilland. It confirms that the Government has been spreading misinformation about the deal.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister once more whether the Government will come clean to the shareholders of de Havilland, they being the people of Canada. Will the Deputy Prime Minister, in conjunction with the Prime Minister, who has just entered the House—

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister has just asked the House Leader what this is all about. I want to tell him. We want the documents, the acquisition agreement, the memorandum of understanding, and the secret prospectus given to prospective purchasers in the de Havilland deal.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has quite rightly been asking for details about this deal. We have been very forthcoming with that information.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: What a statement.

Mr. de Cotret: At the time the Government made the announcement we made available to all Members of the House a summary of the memorandum of understanding, a summary of the letter of intent, background material on de Havilland, and background material on Boeing. Since then I have answered questions on price, book value, tax limitations, credit notes, world product mandates, government equity, royalties, product liability insurance, corporate liabilities, government programs and access thereto, Canadian government content, supplier development, R and D, insurance, new investment, and technology. What more do you want?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROJECTED LOSSES AND PROFITS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is once again risking his reputation in responding to these questions. He has repeatedly said in the House that the reason for selling de Havilland is that it will lose $200 million next year. The prospectus we have, which was prepared by Burns Fry, Merrill Lynch, and S. G. Warburg of London, England, and sent to all prospective purchasers of de Havilland, proves that this is simply not true. The prospective loss for 1986 was not $200 million, but $14 million. The prospective profit for 1987 was $5 million; for 1988, $16 million; and for 1989, $27 million, for a total of $48 million. Would the Minister be good enough to reconcile his version to the House with what the prospectus to potential purchasers said?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer as I have been throughout the last few weeks.

Mr. Gauthier: Tell the truth.

Mr. de Cotret: The estimates that were received from the Department responsible and from the company in question indicated potential losses for the coming year of between $50 million and $75 million—

Mr. Gauthier: You said $200 million.

Mr. de Cotret: —and the necessity of injecting a further $125 million in equity, which meant a cash loss to the Treasury, the CRF as you well know it is called, of $200 million for the coming fiscal year.

Ms. Copps: That's nonsense.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, either we have a misleading Minister or a misleading prospectus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the Minister and the Government ought to come clean and table in Parliament all the relevant documents so that we can make our own judgment about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the document, under the title Acquisition Opportunities, cites a number of advantages, including these two:

> The availability of Government support for development projects under existing funding mechanisms—

That is promised to the prospective purchaser. The second is:

> The prospect that the Canadian Government will continue to support the company.

Will the Minister explain what these two advantages really mean?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I have said time and time again, Mr. Speaker, that de Havilland, under Boeing ownership, will be eligible for all existing government programs as any other Canadian corporation would be eligible. I cannot go much further than that—

Mr. Deans: How much will that cost the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the CRF?

Mr. de Cotret: The company is eligible for those programs as is every other company. I have said that before.

In terms of continuing support, I think this Government has proven over the last 15 months that it supports every company in Canada that has embarked upon growth, job creation, new investment and development. We will continue supporting companies of that kind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATION'S LAND HOLDINGS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. The public and the media have been under the impression that de Havilland owned 54 acres of land in Downsview. The prospectus indicates that it owns 96 acres, and that de Havilland may have purchased from the Government an additional 54 acres, which are worth an additional $60 million at least. Just how much land is there included in this deal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to get the exact number for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: Give it to us now.

Mr. de Cotret: I can only tell the Hon. Member that $60 million is way out of the ballpark; it is nowhere close to that. I will though ensure that the Member gets the exact number of acres.

REFERENCE TO MANUFACTURING PRODUCTS IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I want to ask the Minister about a statement, the most serious statement in the prospectus, namely, the suggestion that the purchaser of de Havilland will have the availability of manufacturing its products in developing countries. What does that mean? That is exactly what it says.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have responded on a number of occasions—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: What is its world product mandate?

An Hon. Member: Which question are you asking?

Mr. Nielsen: Who is that masked man?

Mr. de Cotret: A world product mandate, Mr. Speaker, I think I tried to explain that to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition a few weeks ago, means that de Havilland of Canada has the sole right to produce its existing line of products for sale anywhere in the world.

M. Deans: It has that now.

Mr. de Cotret: It means we are retaining our technology and what is properly ours and we have the availability to sell it world-wide, a much wider market-place, and with better expertise than ever before.

UNION SHAREHOLDER'S REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Has he been made aware of a telegram sent to the Prime Minister concerning the fact that the UAW is a minority shareholder in de Havilland, and requesting as a minority shareholder that the UAW's rights to certain information be upheld with respect to information that has not been provided yet in the House of Commons? Could the Minister tell us whether he has been made aware of the content of that telegram, and has the information requested by the UAW been made available to the UAW?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the fact that the UAW is a minority shareholder in the company. It owns one share.

Mr. Deans: Who is looking after its interests?

Mr. de Cotret: What we are doing in that instance is selling our shares. We are not selling the UAW's share.

I am not aware of the specific content of the telegram. The UAW has not been made privy to information that has not been made available to all those in this House who have been asking questions about this deal.

Mr. Broadbent: I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will hear more directly from the UAW or from its lawyers. I will, however, leave that for a moment.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION—EFFECT ON HOUSE BUSINESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the important right of access by Members of Parliament to documentation relevant to the de Havilland sale. The Prime Minister just before Question Period turned down a suggestion for a meeting with the Leader of the Opposition and myself to work out a schedule for the remaining days of this week.

• (1425)

In terms of the mandate which will be given to his House Leader to negotiate that timetable, will he make it clear that in that will be all details pertinent to the de Havilland sale? Will that be on the negotiating table in terms of sorting out the schedule of debates for the rest of this week?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the meeting to which my hon. friend refers is one which is properly conducted by House Leaders in the normal course of events. The proposition put forward by my hon. friend is a most unusual one. With regard to the de Havilland deal, this Party, not unlike my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, who campaigned for the leadership of the Liberal Party on a program of divesting himself of Crown corporations, and now changes his mind—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): But retaining control in this country.

Mr. Gauthier: Back to Baie Comeau.

Mr. Mulroney: This Party—

Ms. Copps: Boeing, Boeing!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: This Party campaigned clearly on a program of divesting the Government of Canada in those circumstances, which is appropriate, of those kinds of holdings. We sought a mandate from—

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Mr. Mulroney: There is the air going out of the Liberal Party. We sought a mandate—

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Mr. Mulroney: Some of them have more air than others, I will acknowledge that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not as much hot air.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Not during Question Period.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would like to rise on a question of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader knows full well that we take questions of order—

An Hon. Member: Read the rules, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): After Question Period I will rise on a question of order concerning the statement of the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: That is fine.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope he stays here and listens to it.

Mr. Speaker: Questions of order and privilege are normally taken at the end of Question Period.

HOUSE LEADERS' NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He has suggested that this is to be negotiated with the House Leaders. I say to him that our House Leader has requested this three times and has yet to receive an answer. Considering that the Prime Minister campaigned on openness in government, will he assure the House that before we recess his House Leader will negotiate with the other House Leaders the right of Parliament to have access to all pertinent information on the de Havilland deal? Will he give us that assurance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we campaigned and we obtained a mandate from the people of Canada to do precisely what we are in the process of doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Not to give it away.

Mr. Mulroney: While I doubt if there is a more forthcoming Member of the House of Commons than the distinguished House Leader of the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —who meets regularly with the House Leaders of the other Parties, which is why so much effective legislation has passed in this Parliament,—

An Hon. Member: Ray for Leader.

Mr. Mulroney: —I can say that the Government House Leader is ready and delighted to meet with his vis-à-vis at any time and with regard to—

An Hon. Member: His vis-à-vis?

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition said that he would stand to make a point of order. Some of his best points have come when he has been sitting down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROJECTED GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board is either confused or he is misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister has said repeatedly that additional income is going to be needed for de Havilland. I want to ask him why the prospectus says: "No additional equity funds are assumed beyond 1985". Will the Minister stand in his place and tell us why there is this contradiction between his statement in the House and that in the prospectus?

• (1430)

An Hon. Member: Come clean.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I will come clean. It is very clear. We expect to close the deal by December 31 of this year and there will be no further capital injections or equity injections from the Crown thereafter. That is one of the reasons behind the whole purpose of this deal. It is to ensure that we stop sinking hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money into de Havilland every year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister continues to distort the facts and distort the House of Commons on the true value of what—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must ask the Hon. Member simply to withdraw that assertion and finish his question.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I will oblige your ruling and withdraw. My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, if he has the intestinal fortitude and the guts to answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: In view of his promise that Parliament would review the transaction with relation to de Havilland, will he not agree to table the memorandum of understanding so that the distortions and misleading facts that the President of the Treasury Board is portraying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Next question. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

ROYALTY PAYMENTS BY BOEING CORPORATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His Party did in fact campaign on a promise to keep de Havilland and Canadair in Crown ownership, in Canadian hands.

Some Hon. Members: No way.

Mr. Cassidy: We now read in the pages of The Financial Times that Boeing will not be required to pay a nickel in royalty on the sale of Dash-8s until 400 Dash-8s have been sold. Furthermore, the sum that Boeing may have to pay in royalties will be no more than $22 million, considering $400 or $500 million in development costs have been paid by the taxpayers.

Does the Prime Minister believe it is appropriate that we in Parliament should have to learn such details of the deal, such as how much is payable in royalties, through the press rather than having it tabled in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very long question.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had cared to ask the question I would have been more than happy to answer it. The royalty arrangements, which I mentioned in the House before, apply to the Dash-8 after plane 400 to the tune of $225,000 per plane, and apply to the Dash-7 after plane 122 to the tune of $225,000 per plane. To date we have deliveries and firm orders of 107 planes with respect to the Dash-7 and 51 with respect to the Dash-8.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Do we have to go through this strip-tease day after day in order to get information from the Government? Why cannot Parliament have all of the information, refer it to a parliamentary committee and bring before us the people from CDIC, de Havilland and Boeing to find out whether or not this deal is good for Canada and good for Canadians?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me preface my answer by saying once again that it is a good deal for Canada, a good deal for Canadians, and a good deal for the employees of de Havilland.

Mr. Deans: Give us the details.

Mr. de Cotret: As far as making all of the details of the deal available, that question has been asked time and time again and answered time and time again. When the final negotiations are completed all of the details of the deal will be made available in the appropriate forum—

Some Hon. Members: Too late.

Mr. de Cotret: —at the appropriate time.

AIR TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF DEREGULATION OF INDUSTRY IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Last Friday, in response to a question from the Leader of the Opposition regarding the impact of deregulation of the airline industry in the United States on safety and maintenance, the Minister of Transport stated that there was no evidence to suggest that safety and maintenance have been affected by U.S. airline deregulation.

Is the Minister aware of a recent survey of 1,200 American airline pilots which concludes that two-thirds of those pilots believe that safety and maintenance standards have been reduced since the introduction of U.S. airline deregulation?

Would he not agree that such a finding underlines the necessity for the Standing Committee on Transport to study U.S. airline deregulation before the Minister proceeds with his own legislation to deregulate our Canadian airline industry in the new year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the record and the statistics that have been released as far as safety in the United States is concerned.

In terms of fatalities per million passengers, there has been an improvement of about 20 per cent between 1979 and 1984 in the United States. In terms of fatalities per billion revenue passengers there has been an improvement by approximately 26 per cent.

While I am on my feet, perhaps it is time that the Hon. Member and other Members, particularly those who write editorials, reread the document Freedom to Move wherein it states very categorically: "I would like to indicate unequivocally that this Government will neither propose nor permit any economic regulatory reform that might be detrimental to safety standards". That is the policy of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The Minister does not cite 1985 figures when we have had 1,900 fatalities, a record in the history of aviation in this country.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE EXAMINE SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware that in addition to the U.S. survey of pilots, both the Canadian Airline Pilots Association and the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association expressed serious reservations about the Minister's proposed package on deregulation of the airline industry in this country? Why will he not allow the Standing Committee on Transport to help him keep Canada's airline industry one of the safest in the world by letting us examine the U.S. experience south of our border before we proceed with deregulation in this country? Will he do the responsible thing?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has taken a responsible course of action. It recently passed Bill C-36, amending the Aeronautics Act which had not been amended since 1919. It improves the power of the Minister to detain aircraft that are unsafe or likely to be operated in an unsafe manner; gives power to suspend immediately any licence relating to aviation where continuing to allow the holder to operate the licence would create a safety hazard; power to enter the aircraft on premises; enhanced power to make regulations concerning air-worthiness; power to regulate design, manufacture and maintenance, and power to make regulations to license personnel.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! More, more!

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN LANDING RIGHTS FOR AIRLINES UNDER INVESTIGATION IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Transport, concerns the same topic. The previous questioner indicated what the American pilots said. One even said that deregulation and cheap airfares will be paid for in blood.

Will the Minister immediately withdraw landing or route rights in Canada from any foreign commercial or charter airline that is under investigation or has been fined, until his Department is notified that that airline has received a clean bill of health from the regulatory agencies of the foreign countries governing such matters?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member poses quite a question. Inherent in his question is a premature decision that the accident that occurred was a direct result of the practice of deregulation in the United States of America, and his question implies that that is the reason for other accidents. That has not been clearly established. I wish the Hon. Member would wait until the CASB at least brings forth a preliminary report on the causes of this unfortunate accident.

Mr. Benjamin: On his second chance, I hope the Minister will deal with the question.

REQUEST THAT DEREGULATION BE POSTPONED IN CANADA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, that particular airline negotiated a fine of $38,000, half of what it is liable for. It is still under investigation by the FAA. American Airlines just paid a one and a half million dollar fine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Will the Minister heed these warnings and experiences from Canadian and American pilots and air traffic controllers, and not proceed any further with deregulation of air transportation or any other mode until the Transport Committee has been given authorization to conduct further hearings in Canada and the United States and report back to the House?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member knows my commitment to safety very well. I think it is very clear that my record is as good as that of anyone in the House. It was under my leadership that the Dubin inquiry was commissioned, an inquiry from which many of the proposals that have been enacted flowed, and I might add that that has contributed enormously to the safety of aviation in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Consistent with that approach, I will always entertain any measure or initiative that would improve on that course of action. However, when Hon. Members rise in the House to suggest that they haven't had sufficient time to deal with the document entitled Freedom to Move while the attendance of Liberal members at the committee was less than 50 per cent, then they really have no room to argue. At least the Hon. Member across the way attended the meetings 87 per cent of the time.

Mr. Gauthier: That's a lie, Maz. That's a lie and you know it.

Mr. Mazankowski: I've got the figures right here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It's going to be a difficult enough week. Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You got yourself a real problem.

Mr. Gauthier: I've got the figures, Maz.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

FIVE-YEAR PLAN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister recently issued a five-year plan for the National Research Council. As we are moving toward enhanced trade with the United States, and given the importance of research and development, how will the NRC's five-year plan help Canadian business, and particularly small business, to be more competitive in the tough U.S. market?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Order Paper.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's a good question.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the sensitivity of my hon. colleague and friend to the fact that any future improvement in our economy and industrial growth will depend very much on research and development of newer, modern, state of the art industrial technology and, indeed, the application of such technologies. This is a priority of the Government and this priority is reflected in the five-year plan of the Research Council. We should anticipate that our industry, particularly the small—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This should be under Statements.

Oral Questions

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

OWNERSHIP OF BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. According to this morning's news, Ambassador Niles has said that ownership of book publishing is not a major cultural issue and that it is an item to be on the free trade negotiating table. Does the Minister not agree that if the United States Ambassador, who lives right across the street from the House of Commons, does not understand how our communications policy works and does not understand our book publishing policy, Canadians can only conclude that the Government is saying publicly that it will control its own cultural industries while saying another thing to the American Ambassador right here in Canada? My question is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Is book publishing on the table or not?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the provinces and the federal Government will be meeting some time in February or early March. Yesterday, there was a meeting of deputy Ministers to discuss this matter, and to my knowledge, only representatives of provincial Governments and the Government of Canada are invited to attend the meeting.

[English]

MEETING WITH UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Is the Minister not embarrassed and ashamed, first because he did not answer the question, and particularly because he knows that tomorrow morning there will be a meeting between the Minister of Trade and the American Minister of Trade, Mr.—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. A substantive question, please?

Mrs. Finestone: Is the Minister not ashamed that Clayton Yeutter will meet tomorrow morning to discuss book publishing and putting it on the negotiating table?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me whether there was a meeting or not. The provinces and the Government of Canada will be meeting, and to my knowledge, no one from the U.S. Government has been invited to take part. So, we will have Canadians defining policies for Canadians.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—BRIEFING OF ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of a letter sent to the Premier of Ontario which commits the federal Government to brief the Government of Ontario in advance of any announcement of the sale of de Havilland. Why was this not done given that the Prime Minister signed the letter which was sent to the Premier?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that the question is addressed to me, I want to tell my hon. friend that indeed, in advance of the sale, I had a conversation with Premier Peterson and it was agreed that all of the details available to—

Ms. Copps: What were you doing with him?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East asks what I was doing with Premier Peterson. We were speaking of her, what else?

Mr. McDermid: And is he ever relieved that you're up here.

Mr. Mulroney: I won't tell you what he said.

I then asked the President of the Treasury Board to meet with Mr. O'Neil, the Trade Minister from the Government of Ontario, and I believe that was done on the Thursday or Friday of the Halifax conference in advance of any public announcement. As I indicated that we would brief the Government of Ontario fully, we did in advance of the transaction.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I must say that that is certainly at odds with what the Premier has said. However, I cannot say.

Let me ask the Prime Minister a question on a related matter. Why is it that we cannot see the documents to which the President of the Treasury Board constantly refers and from which he constantly reads? Why can we not have the documents now before the sale is completed in order that we can make a proper evaluation of the sale, as we are required to do?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have said time and time again that we are working toward concluding this transaction by December 31 and as soon as the transaction is concluded and as soon as the final details are arrived at, we will make all the details available in the proper time and in the proper forum.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FUNDING OF EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Last Friday when he was asked about recent directives to cut Government programs, and in particular employment programs by $200 million, he said the following:

> —we asked the departments to reduce their daily operational spending by an additional amount, to ensure that funds not spent at the end of the year are saved to keep the deficit . . . at a tolerable level—

How can the Minister justify any cut in funds for employment programs when the national rate of unemployment is still at 10.2 per cent, for youth it is 16.2 per cent, for Atlantic Canada it is 15.9 per cent, and for British Columbia it is 14.5 per cent? How can he justify any cuts in employment programs when that situation still exists?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the directives were quite clear. We are trying to protect the lapse and, as the Hon. Member well knows, every year there is a significant lapse in most Departments and we take very seriously our commitment as a Government to establish through sound financial management a better deficit position with a deficit that is on the way down rather than up. These directives had the purposes of ensuring that the lapses that were predicted for this year were in fact going to carry through.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that it is the practice to recoup the lapses in the last two months of the fiscal year and not in the middle of the fiscal year. Is this not really an attempt to find money to pay for the bank bail-outs? Again, I ask the Minister how he can justify cuts to the employment programs when there is the unacceptably high level of unemployment?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to believe that the Hon. Member would talk about high levels of unemployment and job creation. In the last 15 months we have created on average more than 9,000 jobs per month in Quebec and 416,000 jobs across the country. We have been working on jobs, jobs, jobs, as we promised throughout the election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONTAINER TRAFFIC TARIFFS—EFFECT ON PORT OF VANCOUVER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister has received complaints that new CNR tariffs favour U.S. routes which connect central Canada to the Pacific. Port of Vancouver companies and unions estimate that this will cut Canadian container traffic by 50 per cent and that it will account for the loss of hundreds of Canadian jobs. Does the Minister believe that a railway which is owned by the Canadian people should favour U.S. routes over Canadian routes and be allowed to undermine a port which, as he knows, is already involved in a life and death struggle to survive?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is concerned, as I am, about the diversion of traffic. I think she will also recognize that CN has had a long history of support for the Port of Vancouver. The fact of the matter is that there has been a tremendous diversion of traffic into the United States, and the CNR was being locked out of that traffic in any event. The CNR thought it most appropriate at least to compete for that traffic and obtain a bit of it.

I think the Hon. Member is also aware of the problems with respect to the destuffing clause, which affects containers in the Port of Vancouver. I am pleased that the ILWU and the BCMEA resumed negotiations today, I believe. I hope they will be able to resolve this matter because I think it is central and critical to the whole problem.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF COMPANY'S POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister believe that a railway which is owned by the people of Canada should be involved in this type of matter? It is really taking away Canadian business and Canadian jobs. Will the Minister undertake a review of this policy which is followed by the CNR? Will he also include an assessment of the effect that future deregulation will have on jobs in the Canadian transportation industry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that I have indeed taken this matter up with officials of CN. I repeat, this diversion of traffic was occurring on U.S. lines. There is an affiliate in the United States with which it can compete. As long as the market is such as it is, I think it is in the best interests of CN, at least, to obtain its share of the traffic. Hopefully we can resolve some of the other outstanding issues which will put CN and the American railways on a more equal footing.

Ms. Mitchell: What about the port?

Mr. Mazankowski: The legislation flowing out of Freedom to Move will clearly help that process very much.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION CONCERNING SALE OF FEDERAL PROPERTIES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Upon review, his department has found that an estimated $400 million worth of surplus property could be put up for sale. Could the Minister inform the House whether the disposal of these federal properties will result both in savings for the public Treasury and investment by the private sector?

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, you will probably recall that about fifteen months ago, the Auditor General was almost offensive in his comments on the way Crown assets were administered.

In view of the circumstances, and I am sure all Members of this House will be delighted with the news, we started by selling $36 million worth of surplus property, which means a savings of $5 million in taxes and maintenance, and, as we had hoped, has led to about $2.5 billion worth of investment by the private sector, for the greater benefit of all Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TRAINING PROJECTS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

This morning, people representing some 500 community groups were here on Parliament Hill. Can the Minister confirm that according to internal directives from her department, which I have here, the maximum duration of training projects submitted by community agencies is limited to 24 weeks or less, and that this is the result of a $16 million cutback in the training budget for the Montreal region?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no. Whatever information the Hon. Member has is not correct. Some 71 per cent of the proposals which have been submitted thus far under the Canadian Jobs Strategy in the Province of Quebec have been submitted by community groups. That is a much higher percentage than from any other type of organization within the province. However, our commitment under the Canadian Jobs Strategy is to help those who are most in need. Therefore, the work that we will be doing is particularly directed to those who are long-term unemployed—the people who need the help most.

DEPARTMENTAL POLICY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refuses to answer our questions. She refers continually to the number of applications. I have in my hand a directive from her Department which indicates clearly that community groups are being discriminated against as a result of the policies of her Department. Will she tell us why she asked community groups to submit projects for a period of up to 52 weeks when internal departmental directives indicate to project officers that they are to limit approvals to 24 weeks? Will she explain this in the House and will she explain it to the press?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member is totally confused about the whole Canadian Jobs Strategy.

Mr. Crosbie: As usual.

Miss MacDonald: That is really too bad for the people who reside in his constituency. If he is not able to meet with representatives of the Department of Employment and Immigration and get the facts straight, I do not know how he will be able to inform the people who lives in his riding. We will undertake to inform them directly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFUGEES

GUATEMALA—VISA POLICY APPLICABLE TO REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of last week's shocking murder of a Guatemalan refugee, Beatriz Barrios Marroquin, and also of the many urgent pleas of responsible Canadians and their encouragement, will the Minister now reconsider and revoke her regulation which requires Guatemalans to have visas before they can enter Canada if they wish to make a refugee application?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government we certainly want to express our outrage at this brutal murder which occurred. However, I would like to take this opportunity to point to the Hon. Member that this woman applied for her visa to Canada on November 29 and it was granted on December 6. The reason she could not leave Guatemala was because she required an exit visa from the Guatemalan Government, which she was not able to obtain until December 10. She was brutally murdered that evening.

While this is a terrible incident, and we are outraged over it, it was not as a result of any lack of speed or processing on the part of the Canadian Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

PROVISION OF FIGHTER AIRCRAFT TO TURKEY—GREEK CYPRIOTS' FEARS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Canadians of Greek origin are most concerned that CF-104 aircraft, partly paid for by their tax dollars, may be used against Greeks in Cyprus. Can the Minister advise the House what safeguards, if any, there are in place to ensure that these aircraft will never be used in Cyprus?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this equipment was offered to Turkey under a NATO agreement. The southern-tier countries of Turkey, Greece and Portugal were offered this equipment at the same time. The condition under which they were accepted by Turkey is that they be used to bolster that country's NATO role. I understand that these aircraft will be based in the southeastern part of Turkey, that is, near the Turkey-Iran border, and that they will be nowhere near the Turkey-Greece border, or Cyprus.

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

SALE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Last Wednesday the Prime Minister told Gulf workers that Gaz Métropolitain had not made a serious offer to purchase the Montreal Gulf refinery. Gaz Métropolitain President Pierre Martin later denied that statement.

Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: Can the Prime Minister tell us why he tried to mislead the Gulf refinery workers and discredit Gaz Métropolitain management?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): What a stupid thing to say! It is a stupid comment as usual, considering I had an opportunity to meet personally with the Montreal petrochemical workers who commented on the attempts of the Liberal Member to politicize every file he can lay his hands, on. Ah! That is now well known in the House of Commons.

The fact is that—

Mr. Rossi: Repeat that outside the House!

POINTS OF ORDER

ALLEGED MISQUOTATION BY MR. MULRONEY

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of two notices of points of order. First the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister just said that he can smell a rat. That is not what we learned over the weekend when Mrs. Mulroney said he had no sense of smell.

An Hon. Member: He can't even smell a diaper.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If he had a good nose, he would know this de Havilland deal stinks.

Mr. Gauthier: That's right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My point of order is that the Prime Minister's favourite pastime of misquoting Hon. Members on this side of the House—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Point of Order—Mr. Kaplan

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —particularly when they are out of the House. This afternoon he claimed that I had recommended during the election campaign the sale of de Havilland and Canadair—

Mr. McDermid: That's not a point of order. That's a point of debate.

Some Hon. Members: That's debate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What I said, and I have reviewed my statements very carefully—

Some Hon. Members: That's debate.

An Hon. Member: It's a point of order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is a point of order. What I said, Mr. Speaker, was quite clear. I wanted co-production agreements with international partners. I wanted joint ventures with international partners. But I wanted the retention of control left in Canada, and that has been quite clear right throughout the nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of order at all.

An Hon. Member: No, no.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

An Hon. Member: No, no.

An Hon. Member: We have a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foster: This isn't show and tell time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will deal with the points of order in the order in which I receive them. The point of order next was from the Hon. Member for York Centre.

TABLING OF DOCUMENT QUOTED BY MR. DE COTRET

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period the President of the Treasury Board was asked for some of the terms of the de Havilland sale to Boeing which he has been withholding.

Point of Order—Mr. Mulroney

In giving royalty figures, he read from a document. I refer to Citation 327 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, and ask that the document from which the Minister was quoting, the terms and conditions of the deal, be laid upon the Table as tradition requires.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, if I had a chance to copy my notes, I would be happy to table them, but it is hardly a document. They are handwritten notes.

An Hon. Member: It's not a state document.

An Hon. Member: He just copied them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Members know full well the citation refers to state papers or other such documents. Handwritten notes are not covered by that rule.

ALLEGED MISQUOTATION BY MR. MULRONEY

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wishes to raise a point of order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, I do, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: As one who believes in true and genuine equality between the sexes—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —I want to say a word in defence of those husbands who share equally in the work of the house with the wife at all times, including changing diapers. That is the way it should be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has a point of order?

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition seems to think that is beneath him—

Mr. Fulton: Come on. This isn't Saturday Night Live.

Mr. Mulroney: —but we don't.

Mr. Deans: There was no point of order.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the point of order which was raised—

Mr. Deans: But it was not. The Speaker ruled it was not.

Mr. Mulroney: Indeed, there was. And I have a quote here from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to which I was referring.

Ms. Jewett: What's the point of order?

Mr. Mulroney: On May 10, 1984, the Leader of the Opposition—and he represents his Party as well—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Order.

Ms. Copps: Bye-bye, Brian.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect—

Mr. Benjamin: It's all right. They deserve each other.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What we have here, I take it, is a dispute as to facts, not a point of order.

Order, please. The Right Hon. Prime Minister is claiming he has a point of order. If he has a point of order, I would be glad to hear it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the Prime Minister now wishes to enter into a dispute with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition as to who said what and when, I suggest that it is a matter for debate and not a point of order, with respect.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How about later this afternoon in debate?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order—

Mr. Speaker: That is equally true for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order, the President of the Privy Council.

RIGHT TO RESPOND TO POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that in the course of a—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in the course of Question Period and debate, I know there are differences of opinion. I want to ask your guidance with respect to the fact that when questions are raised under the guise of points of order, I think the normal process should allow at least equal time to respond—

Mr. Ouellet: Oh, come on.

Ms. Copps: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —to what was an improper point of order by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All Hon. Members will resume their seats please—and be quiet.

I appreciate fully the point the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is making. As long as Hon. Members choose to bootleg comments through points of order, there is not a lot the Speaker can do about it, except to come in as early as he deems reasonable to indicate that it is not a point of order, and it would clearly be out of order—

Mr. Prud'homme: He has a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: A point of privilege is recognized when the Chair hears and recognizes the point of privilege and not before.

It would clearly be out of order to allow, on a matter I have already said was not a point of order, any further conversation. Now, is there a question of privilege being raised by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)?

Ms. Copps: Go to it!

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED POLITICISATION OF DEBATE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I will not argue with you about points of order in the House. However, concerning the comments the Prime Minister made about me after a meeting to the effect that the workers had said I was trying to politicize the debate, I am convinced they are false. I can assure you that I will get the signature of each representative. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, if I may—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member claimed the ultimate parliamentary step of a question of privilege. He will now, before he says anything else, tell me precisely what his question of privilege is.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is what he is doing.

Point of Order—Mr. Dingwall

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) will please—

Mr. Prud'homme: But that's what he was doing.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is preceding his question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult enough for me to communicate with the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) without the noise.

May I advise the Hon. Member that he should precede anything else he wishes to say with a point a privilege, not with any commentary or arguments he may wish later—were there to be a question of privilege found—to use in his argument.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I was trying to explain why I raised the question of privilege as a result of what the Prime Minister said about me concerning a meeting.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by telling you that the remarks of the Prime Minister to the effect that I was trying to politicize the debate and the remarks of the workers are false. Mr. Speaker, you may be sure that his remarks were those reported by the workers before the TV cameras.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Clearly there is no question of privilege.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) rises on a question of privilege?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, again during Question Period the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made certain allegations about private conversations he had with the Premier of Ontario concerning me. I would like to advise the Prime Minister that private conversations are just that—

Mr. Speaker: No, no. Order, please. Have we now finished with everyone's use of points of order and questions of privilege?

Mr. Dingwall: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order being raised by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to indicate why the word "distort" which I used in my first question and then subsequently withdrew is unparliamentary? I stand to be corrected, but my reading of Beauchesne is that it has to be "deliberately distorted". That is my understanding. I did not use that expression.

Mr. Speaker: I am perfectly happy to refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne if he wishes to discuss it with me further. I will be perfectly happy to see him about it. He will know that I asked him to withdraw and that I refused to allow his supplementary because he simply repeated himself.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF FORESTRY JOBS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions. The first one is from a large number of Canadians concerned about what is known as the Gibbon's Bill in the United States, Bill 2451. They are very concerned that the Government of Canada has taken insufficient action to protect Canadian forest jobs in Canada. Some 60,000 jobs are now at risk because of the Gibbon's Bill.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the second petition relates to family allowances. The signatories from British Columbia are particularly concerned that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits will reach $600 million by 1990. This is far too much money to be taken away from the children of this country. The petitioners call on this House to bring back full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases.

I also have a petition from a large number of signatories. It may or may not be acceptable because some of the addresses are not as legible as perhaps they should be. However, the petitioners ask that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit because the proposed measures will take $55 million away from children in Canada this year.

My final petition is related to the family allowance issue. A large number of Canadians from Brampton, Malton and Toronto are concerned that child benefit cut-backs will take $600 million per year away from Canadian children by 1990.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from the undersigned, residents of the federal ridings of Vancouver East, Montmorency-Orléans in Quebec, Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière in Quebec, and Lac-Saint-Jean in Quebec, who urge the Government to restore the full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition on behalf of residents of Kapuskasing, Valrita, Harty and Hearst in my constituency.

My constituents object to the deindexation of family allowances. They urge the Prime Minister to withdraw Bill C-70 immediately.

[English]

CONCERN ABOUT FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by approximately 1,670 citizens from the federal riding of Moncton. They express their concern over the future of the CN shops in Moncton. They are concerned that the current assessment of maintenance capacity may have negative implications for the hundreds of people employed in these shops and call upon Parliament to stop any move to downgrade in any way those facilities.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions. The first one is signed by several persons from New Brunswick. They call upon the Government to restore full indexation of family allowances.

The second petition is from citizens from Ontario. The operative clause says that the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

The third petition is from residents in British Columbia who petition the House for the same purpose. They deplore the fact that $600 million annually will be taken from mainly needy children across the country.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from a group of constituents of Richmond-South Delta who protest deindexation of family allowances. I have another petition from a group of people in Perth asking that Bill C-70 be withdrawn. I have another one from Hamilton West which asks that the same Bill be withdrawn. I have another one from Sarnia-Lambton regarding Bill C-70. They ask that indexation be maintained. I have a petition from Halifax concerning restoration of full indexation to family allowances. Finally I have a petition from a group from Provencher who ask that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) do the honourable thing and restore full indexation to family allowances and child tax credits.

OPERATION OF MORGENTALER CLINIC IN TORONTO

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 20 residents of Ottawa West who decry the continued operation in the City of Toronto of the Morgentaler clinic and the failure of the Province of Ontario to enforce Section 251 of the Criminal Code.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions on the subject of family allowances. The first is from a number of citizens from Saskatoon and other communities in Saskatchewan. In their opinion, deindexation of universal family allowances and massive cut-backs to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers.

The next one is from Peterborough and Lindsay, Ontario. The petitioners say that family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit. Even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. They call for full indexation of family allowances and that unfair tax increases be rescinded.

The next is from a number of communities in the lower mainland of British Columbia, from North Vancouver, West Vancouver, Vancouver Centre and Vancouver East. They talk about the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits which will reach $600 million by 1990.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the same subject and the Hon. Member needs only to say that it is a petition on the same subject from somewhere else rather than read the petition.

Ms. Mitchell: These people from the lower mainland ask the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

• (1520)

The next petition is a different one signed by quite a number of people from Ward 5, North York, Downsview, Ontario. These people ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the House of Commons to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. They say that this budget measure will take $55 million away from family benefits by 1987.

The next petition is from the Strathcona area of my riding in Vancouver and also from North Vancouver. It also calls for full indexation of universal family allowance—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect, the Hon. Member has done this before. She knows that she must be as brief as possible. Therefore, if she has more petitions, I invite her to conclude within about 30 seconds, otherwise I will have to go to someone else.

Ms. Mitchell: The final petition is a different one from Women Against the Federal Budget. They say that children are everyone's responsibility and they strongly oppose budget proposals to reduce family allowances. This petition is from Halifax.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a few members of the Cercle des fermières in my riding who ask the Government to maintain the full indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on the same subject matter as that of the Member who just spoke. It is from Canadians in Thompson, Manitoba, who indicate that they are also against the Budget of May 23 and call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and to ensure that those people who are not paying their fair share of taxes do indeed pay their share of the cost of operating the country.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from two places in my riding; Southey, Saskatchewan, in the south end of my riding and Lanigan, located in the middle of the riding. Both petitions are on the same subject. They ask that the House of Commons consider that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-back in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers. The petitioners ask that the House of Commons reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind unfair tax increases on families.

REINSTATEMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT EMPLOYEES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on a different subject. It relates specifically to the decision of the Ministry of the Environment to cut back employees at the time when we are facing the most serious pollution problems we have ever seen in the country. The petition calls upon the Government, and more specifically on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), to reinstate those people who have been laid off, four of whom are from the Canada Centre for Inland Waters in Burlington. The petition is signed by more than 200 people and calls upon the Government to reinstate these people immediately and to freeze any further cut-backs until we deal with the most serious pollution problems that we are facing in the Great Lakes area.

MAIL DELIVERY SERVICE IN WILLOWDALE, ONT.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 140 constituents of my riding of Don Valley East who reside on Postal Walk 127, Willowdale, Postal Station B. The residents of this area are asking that Parliament provide swift action regarding the application of a height requirement regarding postal door slots and that the current mailman on that route, having lost the trust and respect of the residents he serves, be transferred to another postal walk.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions, two from citizens of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and one from citizens of Woodstock and Ingersoll, Ontario. The petitioners say that the deindexation of the family allowance will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and will fall further and further behind. Therefore, they call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by many, many residents of Manitoulin Island who call upon the Government to withdraw Bill C-70 to deindex family allowances. They point out that children are everyone's responsibility and that the principle of universality must be maintained.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions with regard to the family allowance which are signed by hundreds of people from my riding and throughout the City of Winnipeg. The petitioners call upon the Government to reinstate the full indexation of the family allowance and point out that the Government's actions will be taking money away from families and children.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to table today a petition from Mrs. Danielle Coulombe, Val-d'Or President, on behalf of 104 Canadian women who ask that family allowances and the child tax credit be reinstated.

[English]

CALL FOR INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have three different petitions to present. The first is from residents of Vancouver Island and is with regard to the Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. The petitioners are concerned that the policy of the United States Navy of neither confirming nor denying the presence of nuclear weapons on board U.S. vessels is unacceptable. They call for a full public inquiry before the present Canada-United States agreement is renegotiated.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from residents of Ontario who are members of Operation Justice, Families with Children, who call upon the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. This budget measure will take away millions of dollars in family benefits by 1987.

I have a third petition, Mr. Speaker, which is also with regard to the family allowance. It points out that the present proposals of Bill C-70 will result in massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits which constitute an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single-parent mothers. The petitioners call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

SAFETY OF CHANOINE-CÔTÉ SCHOOLCHILDREN

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 706 residents of my Quebec East constituency.

Following the initiative of the Chanoine-Côté primary school committee, this petition is a request to ensure the safety of all children, especially those who have to cross the double railway tracks on Plante Avenue, in Ville-Vanier, at least four times a day to go to school.

I am also sending a copy of this petition to the office of the Minister involved, namely the Minister of Transport.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from persons living in Langley and Surrey, British Columbia, and various other parts of the Vancouver metropolitan area. These petitioners protest the decision of the Government to deindex the universal family allowance and to make cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits. They point out that this will have the effect of reducing benefits to even the poorest families by 1990 and call upon the House of Commons to restore full indexation. The petition from the Vancouver area comes from Operation Justice, Families with Children and underscores this point.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to table in the House a petition on behalf of some 400 citizens of various communities in Essex County including Amhurstberg, Kingsville, Puce, Maidstone, Belle River, Windsor, Tecumseh, and St. Clair Beach. These people add their names to the hundreds who have already exercised their ancient and undoubted right to petition the Government by condemning it for its attack on women, children and the poor and by seeking a response from the Government on their demand that there be a return to a fairer tax system and that complete indexation of the cost of living of family allowances be maintained.

REDUCTION OF CUSTOMS EMPLOYEES AT BORDER POINTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present to this Honourable House three petitions on three different matters.

The first—

[English]

—is from residents of Fort Frances and it calls upon this House to prevent the Customs and Excise Section of the Department of National Revenue from proceeding with plans to reduce the number of Customs employees at border points because of the adverse effect it will have on the tourist industry in that area.

RAIL PASSES FOR CP PENSIONERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have is from residents of Ottawa and Ignace, Ontario, and calls upon the House to use its influence to assist CP Rail pensioners and survivors of pensioners in convincing that company that the proposed withdrawal of employee and survivor pensioner travel passes is unjust and unfair and a breach of the implicit contract which existed between those parties.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): The third petition, Mr. Speaker, will come as no surprise to you or to any other Member of this House. It is from residents of St. Lawrence and calls upon the House to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-90, an Act respecting pension plans organized and administered for the benefit of persons employed in connection with certain federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WATER EXPORT AND DIVERSION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-257, an Act respecting the conservation, export and diversion of water resources.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, briefly, this Bill sets out criteria to be taken into account when examining water export and diversion: the long-term water requirements of Canadians; the impact of a gradual increase in global temperatures; the impact of diversion projects on the interests of our native people; the ecological and economic impact of water exports and the political consequences of creating a foreign dependence on Canadian water supplies.

According to this Bill, the ultimate power to approve or reject these criteria would lie with Parliament. In essence, Mr. Speaker, the intent of the Bill is to make each water export proposal subject to full public scrutiny and debate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Again I must rise and ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) or the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) why they are not answering questions Nos. 450 and 451, subsequently renumbered 487 and 486. Why are they not answering questions Nos. 452 and 453? All these questions pertain to the expenses of the former Minister of the Environment when she travelled to Paris in April and to her other junkets in Europe. I know this is terribly embarrassing, Mr. Speaker, but why does the Government refuse to answer these important questions about which the people of Canada have a right to know?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the Hon. Member that a great deal of time and attention is being taken to establishing what questions were asked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The House will remember that these questions had to be resubmitted after being ruled out of order and this has caused some delay. We are applying ourselves to answering the questions and I expect they will be answered soon.

Mr. Boudria: You had the answer in your head the other day. Why don't you tell the truth?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Speaker: At one o'clock the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) had the floor and had five minutes remaining. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when we rose at one o'clock for the lunch break, I was exploring the way in which the Government in pushing through this redistribution Bill is demonstrating tyrannist tendencies which when the Opposition in the last Parliament it made much of. I was exploring the way in which the redistribution Bill knocks out one of the very cornerstones of the representational system that we have observed since Confederation in using the population of Quebec and a specified number of seats, namely, 75, to go to 79 as the basis for deciding how many representatives other provinces should have and how large the Parliament of Canada should be.

It is specifically the change that has taken place in that particular relationship that is the basis for the motion to refer to committee the Bill that is before us this afternoon. The motion to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for further consideration of Clause 2 is what this amendment speaks to. It is about that I want to say a little more.

If we take a look at Part I of Bill C-74, we note the assignment of a certain number of seats, that is to say 279 as the basis to be used in dividing into the total population of Canada for the number of seats.

In rule 3 we read:

If the total number of Members that would be assigned to any province by the application of rule 1 is greater than the total number assigned to that province by the last preceding readjustment of the representation of that province made in accordance with this Act, the number of additional Members that would be so assigned shall, unless the number of additional Members is one, be reduced so that the actual number assigned is equal to one-half of the additional number that would be so assigned plus, where the number of additional Members that would be so assigned is an odd number in excess of one, one other Member.

It is this rule 3 which represents a deflation of the proper representation of Members in the House of Commons. It is here that the residents, Canadian citizens, living in the provinces of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia have the clearest grievance with the Government. It is here that their expectation that population migration in Canada—adding to the numbers—should lead to proportionate increase in the number of Members they have in the House of Commons. It is here that that expectation is violated.

A Government that is obsessed with deficit reduction, withholding the line on expenditures wherever it can, is a Government that is prepared to violate the principles of the Canadian Constitution. That is what the Government is proposing in this Bill. The astounding thing is that Members who have been so outspoken in the past when in opposition in defence of Parliament, who present themselves often as the only ones who speak for Parliament, are now prepared to do something as fundamental as violating the structure of Parliament and are rejecting the right of people province by province where there is movement to see additional Members. They are quite prepared to see those expectations blasted and the Constitution of the country violated in these areas. The result for Members in northern Ontario is that the movement to Metro Toronto and to other areas, which deserves recognition, will lead to some readjustment of seats. We in northern Ontario do not look forward to a worsening of our representation or a violation of the rights of citizens to be represented properly in Parliament. We do not look forward to seeing that right violated by a penny-pinching Government which refuses to tax properly and cannot hold back on expenditures in other areas, to save a few hundreds of thousands of dollars by keeping down the growth of the Parliament of Canada; by a Government which is prepared to sacrifice principle in the Constitution of the country for budgetary reasons; by a Government which deserves to be turfed out by the people if they only had a chance.

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. There is still the period provided for questions and comments. Since there are no questions or comments, I will recognize the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on debate.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is always good to see you in the chair. I wish you, and through you other Members of the House, the best of the Christmas season. It seems to be the quietest time to do it.

The proposal of the Government to impose closure on Bill C-74, an Act which in effect amends the Constitution of the country with regard to the number of Members who have the right to sit in this Chamber, cuts very deeply into the ability of the House to represent adequately the people of Canada. The House of Commons, its make-up, its essence and how we operate should not be tampered with in a careless, callous and cavalier fashion.

I warn those who sit on all sides of the House, particularly those who sit on the back-benches of the Conservative Government, to take heed and pay close attention to what the Government is attempting to do, because it affects all of us and our ability to represent adequately the people who did us the honour of sending us to the House. I look across to those benches and I see one or two Members who happen to know something about the Bill. Perhaps one of them is delegated as a hit man later this afternoon; we will see what he wants to do. This is about the fifteenth time I have spoken on a Bill or a motion.

Ms. Copps: Unlike the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, unlike the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has spoken only twice—once on Leaders' day and once, for 15 minutes, to give us his vague ambiguities on free trade. I say to the Conservative back-benches and to the book-ends which surround us that they ought to be speaking on a Bill of this importance. They ought to be speaking as well on some of the Bills and other measures against which closure has been applied. I will speak to that. I think it is relevant to this third reading, because we are under the hammer of closure when we speak in the House and before Your Honour. We do not hear much over there. We do not hear much from these silent, invisible, anonymous men and women who pose as back-benchers in the Conservative Party.

This is the first time in the history of the House that a Government has made redistribution a partisan issue. At all times previously, redistribution, a measure to redivide the seats of the House of Commons, has been done in a non-partisan, impartial manner. There was all-Party agreement, in fact for 30 years. I can recall our Leader in the Senate, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, negotiating the deal with the late John George Diefenbaker, who was very close to Your Honour. I had the privilege of knowing him well. That accord made by Mr. Diefenbaker and Mr. MacEachen held over successive redistributions in a non-partisan fashion for the last quarter century. Under the terms of the agreement worked out by all Parties in the House, that formula, technically called the amalgam formula, but familiarly known to those of us who have been in the House for a number of years as the Diefenbaker-MacEachen formula, provided for an orderly adjustment in seat distribution following every census.

Following the 1981 census, the wheels were set in motion once again. All the work had been done, the commissioners were appointed, hearings were held, maps for the various constituencies across Canada were redrawn, and the proposals were being brought back for final agreement in the House. At that time only a short debate was required to complete that process. Suddenly, out of nowhere, out of the magic confines of the back rooms of the Conservative Party, the Government decided to change all the rules in the middle of the game.

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, that question might well be put. All that was required was a short, conclusive debate in the House of Commons. However, the Government reopened the matter in its partisan and insidious greed and produced a White Paper. That paper went to committee—all the work had been done but it was reopened—where many changes were discussed. Then the Government introduced Bill C-74 which was proposed in the White Paper. However, the Bill reflected the White Paper completely. None of the changes discussed in committee by all Parties were reflected or incorporated in the Bill. No account was taken of the arguments made in committee to improve the redistribution principle.

I believe the Bill before the House is a bad Bill in principle. It ends the redistribution process which is already under way, ready to function and needing only a short debate to conclude it and to legitimize it. It starts off another whole round of hearings and discussions.

I have heard the arguments of Government members. They want to save money. They say Parliament is too expensive. I venture to say that we get better value for Parliament than we are getting from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Under your administration, Sir, we get better value for dollars than we are getting for ministerial staffs and a bloated Prime Minister's Office.

We were told that increasing the membership to 310 Members would be estimated to cost $90 million over the next 10 years. The government proposal will cost an extra $41.7 million. We have here a saving over what had been worked out by all-Party agreement as against this proposal now before Your Honour, of $48.3 million over that period or $4.8 million per year.

When we look at the budget of the Prime Minister's Office, it is $7 million for 1985-86. That does not include other ministerial staff. It far exceeds the potential saving between what was agreed upon by all Parties and the cost envisaged by the Bill. This so-called great economizing measure is proposed by a Government which threw away $1 billion on a tax deal for Gulf Oil, a Government which blew another $1 billion to $2 billion on the first bank bankruptcy in the country for 60 years, a Government which does not know what the words competence, good management and good husbanding mean. It comes to the House and tries to tinker with the democratic process by painting a phoney argument for economy; that is what we have before us. I know the people of Canada want money for value—

An Hon. Member: Value for money.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Value for money, thank you. Let us look at the way Parliament works, generally speaking, with the reforms which have been introduced by our colleague on the Conservative benches, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). We will look at those reforms very carefully. We are trying to give the people of Canada value for money in the way we operate the House. However, you cannot put a price on democracy. You cannot justify a partisan measure overriding a non-partisan piece of work that was ready to be implemented on the phoney grounds of economy.

• (1550)

According to the redistribution—I should call it the re-redistribution—in Bill C-74, if it is passed the new boundaries will not be known until the summer of 1988, according to the Chief Electoral Officer. It will be just weeks or months before the usual expiry of a term of a majority Government. But who knows, the way the Prime Minister is addicted to the polls, if he saw a little blip he might go at any time. As a matter of fact, I recommend that he go sooner than later because it is not going too well for him these days.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Bring it on.

Mr. Crosbie: You certainly went according to the polls back in June of 1984. You have forgotten that now.

Mr. Rossi: Go back to sleep, John.

Mr. Crosbie: You were leading 11 per cent in the polls. What happened then?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The last time the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and I were here in the Chamber alone—there is usually a great audience on both sides of the House when we speak—the Minister of Justice was bringing in his so-called reform of the Senate. That was a great measure and he had a head of steam. However, it is an empty engine right now, puffing and huffing—

Mr. Crosbie: You will never see the Senate again. None of you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I told the Minister of Justice not to do it because there will be a place for him there one day. Don't eliminate the very House that may be your haven.

Just weeks or months before a general election these boundaries will finally come into effect if this Bill is passed in the House. There will be mass confusion in the camps of all three political parties as we attempt to find out under which boundaries we will be working. If an election is called early, it will be the current boundaries. Will it be the boundaries agreed to under the amalgam method or Diefenbaker-MacEachen formula or will it be the new Tory boundaries—the new gerrymander boundaries? Will we be operating under the new artistically geographically manipulated boundaries?

The cost of the new Tory boundaries is approximately $5 million or $6 million which is in addition to that which is already spent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the most important thing this Bill does is to take away from the House its right to discuss the redistribution of electoral districts. From now on, all decisions on the subject will be taken by a committee, not by this House and not before Your Honour, Mr. Speaker, and the real reason why the Government wants to bring down the hammer of closure on debate is because it wants to have this Bill adopted. In fact, its reasons are very simple.

First of all, the Government wants to appoint 295 new Conservative returning officers, and since the number of vacancies is very limited, the Prime Minister has found a way to get around this by creating 295 new jobs. All he has to do is have the legislation adopted and limit debate. What a nice Christmas present for 295 party faithful! What a nice Christmas present indeed!

And the second reason is that the Government wants to redistribute electoral districts to its own advantage. It has played around with the seats and manipulated the geographical boundaries of our ridings. They are going to analyze the election results, poll by poll to locate their supporters. They are going to isolate those who voted against them, but as far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we cannot tolerate these manipulations, because they are an affront to the very principle of democratic representation.

Mr. Garneau: We'll beat them anyway!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not going to analyze the results province by province. I am sure that for you, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is very close to home. But as for Quebec, Quebec is losing four seats compared with what it had according to the Diefenbaker-MacEachen formula, already agreed to by all parties in the House and practically finalized, until the Conservative Government, partisan as always, brought in its own objectives.

Now this is a point that particularly concerns you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, you are responsible for appointing two commissioners in each province to monitor the readjustment of electoral boundaries. They are your responsibility. It is very important that these people be completely neutral, and that you can count on the impartial advice of your staff in appointing them and do not have to ask the Government to suggest candidates. You may be sure we intend to monitor the process very closely.

We have to ask ourselves what the Government's priorities are. I know the Conservative backbenchers don't even know the answer to that question. I am sorry that one of our House experts on the subject, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), is not here—he is chairing a committee of the House that is discussing employment equity. But he would probably agree with us and say: Why are they giving this Bill priority? If adopting the amendments arising from the Budget is so urgent, if it is so terribly important to cut back and de-index family allowances, if it is so important to introduce a Bill presented by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to reform divorce proceedings, and all kinds of other measures being insisted upon by the Government House Leader, why adjourn debate on the principle of the Bill for this kind of partisanship? Is it all that urgent? It is just a joke that the Government is asking for and imposing closure to hammer through all kinds of so-called important pieces of legislation—

[English]

—after other matters which are more urgent.

Why is there priority given to this Bill when we are talking on third reading? Yesterday, when the Government came in with its seventh closure motion, we had enough. We used whatever legitimate facilities that were available to an opposition, outnumbered as we are in the House of Commons, to ensure that there be adequate debate and that the people of Canada, after hearing all sides of the question in the clash of that debate be able to form an opinion.

Yesterday, after two hours of debate at the report stage of the Bill to cut family allowance, notice of time allocation was proposed on this Bill for the second time. We are absolutely outraged because this is the Bill that deindexes the family allowances, takes away the protection from inflation for families, particularly those low and middle income families. It takes away that protection. In its arrogance, the Government has already printed the cheques and made them ready to mail in contempt of Parliament, before it has had a chance to discuss that Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Since October, the Government has invoked closure seven times. Let me cite for the record the Bills on which closure has been invoked. One is Bill C-62, concerning employment equity. I have mentioned Bill C-70 dealing with family allowance. Time allocation was imposed twice, once at second reading and once at the report stage. Another is the Bill we are discussing today, Bill C-74 dealing with electoral boundaries. Another is Bill C-79 with respect to depositors compensation. The Government imposes closure on the depositors compensation Bill when we do not even have the names of who we are paying. Parliament is being asked to give a blank cheque of up to $1 billion to people across the country whose names we do not even know.

• (1600)

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Closure was also imposed on Bill C-70, the Excise Tax Bill. Again, closure was imposed on Bill C-84, the Income Tax Act, the Bill which reflects the major provisions of the Budget. Those provisions are clear and include the personal surtax, the corporate surtax and the deindexation of the system. That is to say, every tax bracket has now been deindexed by 3 per cent per year and that means that we have the most massive, hidden increase in income tax in the history of this country. Four years from now, there will be an extra $11.5 billion in taxes collected from individual Canadians and the Minister did not have the guts to say that he was raising taxes.

As well, the Income Tax Bill contains the capital gains exemption which provides $500,000 over a lifetime for those wealthy or fortunate enough to be able to achieve on the disposition of an asset a capital gain. That benefit is not directed to—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you were to check Beauchesne's Citation 320 at page 107, you would notice that it is unparliamentary to suggest that a Member does not have the guts to do something.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will have to look at that. However, I would hope that the right hon. gentleman could continue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I can say that this is a gutless Government and ask the Hon. Member to try to make that into an unparliamentary word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This $500,000 exemption over a lifetime is for those wealthy and fortunate enough to receive such an exemption and the asset that is disposed does not have to be a Canadian asset. It does not have to be a small Canadian business owned by Canadians or even a business listed on the Canadian Stock Exchange. It can be a condominium in Florida, a piece of art from Europe or a business in Hong Kong. It is an absolute giveaway and against that—

Mr. de Cotret: You were in favour of it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was in favour of the capital gains tax exemption for the farmers. I would like to congratulate the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for staying here and responding so actively in this debate. When I had the honour of being the Minister of Finance in 1974, I eliminated the capital gains tax on the sale of a family farm from one generation to another and anyone who wants to maintain the health of the family farm will applaud that particular measure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The average Canadian family will be taxed an extra $350 to $500 per year while those wealthy enough to obtain capital gains have a lifetime cash bonanza of $500,000. There was closure on Bill C-84, the Bill which contained that provision. The personal surtax, the abolition of the $50 federal tax credit, the reduction on the child care exemption and many other measures were covered by Bill C-84 against which closure was applied after two days of debate on second reading and after having reduced by fiat of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the hearings of the committee to one week. The most important Bill to come before Parliament every year is the Bill reflecting the Budget.

Mr. Johnston: Two and a half hours for clause by clause.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There were 64 separate measures, 168 clauses and 200 pages in the Bill. The Minister of Finance asked the Members of Parliament who have the responsibility to impose taxation measures to review that Bill in that time.

I can never remember closure having been moved on a finance measure. I had the honour of presenting five Budgets in this House. I would have considered it absolutely obscene to impose closure on a tax measure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every tax expert in the country wants to talk about this Bill because it is a shambles. My friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston), who is our finance critic also happens to be a very reputable tax lawyer. He can tell us that there are now four tax codes in Quebec. There is the Quebec Income Tax Act, the federal Income Tax Act, the personal exemption for the $500,000 bonanza and the minimum tax. It will be an absolute shambles for the absolute taxpayer to try to understand what is happening.

I will list the Bills the Government wants passed by the end of the week. It wants Bill C-70, the Family Allowance Bill upon which it has imposed closure. That is the Bill that deindexes and cuts the family allowances. The Government wants Bill C-74, the Electoral Boundaries Bill which is before the House at the moment. It wants Bill C-79, the Depositors' Compensation Bill, that Blank cheque of $1 billion written to people we do not know. It wants Bill C-80, the Excise Tax Bill. It wants Bill C-83, the tax discounting Bill and it wants Bill C-84, the Income Tax Bill I have described, the main Budget Bill. That is what the Government wants in one delicious week. Have you ever heard anything like that before in your life, Mr. Speaker?

The Government justified imposing closure on the Income Tax Bill because it said that the Budget was introduced in May. The Bill containing the details of the Budget was only given to the House on November 26. It has only been before us for about two weeks. The most important bit of legislation to come before a free, democratic assembly annually has had closure imposed on it after only two weeks. The Government castrated the committee, limited discussion and refused the people of Canada the right to testify and give opinions.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you must be relieved that you are not a part of this gang and that you can sit here impartially and preside over a free assembly. Do you know what the House Leader wants in addition to all that?

Mr. Lapierre: He wants a vacation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He needs a vacation. However, he wants a 64-page package of procedural reforms approved. We have studied these—

Mr. Lewis: But you want to reform the House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We're all for reform. In general terms, we like the report presented by the Hon. Member for St. John's East ably assisted by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and indeed the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). They did a great job, but this 64-page package takes the best of the reform suggestions put by the Hon. Member for St. John's East and presents it to the House conveniently leaving out those procedures recommended by the Hon. Member that were not favourable to the government side. If the report of the Hon. Member for St. John's East and the Hon. Member for Papineau were before us, we would take a look at it. However, this doctored, manicured, censored type of reform that the House Leader is bringing forward is a partisan, diluted document which we are not going to buy.

What about closure? I looked up the records regarding closure. It is a legitimate tool available to a Government. It is something that a Government can use from time to time but only after adequate debate.

Mr. Lewis: That's a good trick.

Mr. Crosbie: You should be picking these things up for your leader.

Mr. Rossi: Is that what you do for Brian?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Justice saw me drop my notes. If it had happened to him, he would not have been able to bend down to pick them up. In fact, he would have been well advised to leave them on the floor where they fell.

Mr. Crosbie: It's easy to amuse this crowd over here.

Mr. Berger: He and Pat Carney could have picked them up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you offered me some good seats for the Grey Cup game and I appreciated that. Every once in a while, we have to hear from a few people from the bleachers. We need the Minister of Justice here to add a little comedy to the day.

The weapon of closure should only be used after adequate debate and after the issues have been thoroughly debated and presented to the people of Canada through Parliament so that the people can make a sane, cool, collected judgment on the merits of a piece of legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This Government enjoys the largest majority in Canadian history: 211 Members against 30. For a Government with the largest majority in Canadian history having had to succumb to using closure seven times in the last five weeks is an admission of mismanagement and lack of competence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1610)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, because I know you would want me to be fair I have reviewed the use of closure by Liberal Governments for the period 1969 to 1984. During those 15 years we used it on second reading 15 times. We used it in Committee of the Whole six times. We used it at report stage and third reading 11 times. At third reading only we used it three times. That comes to a total of 35 times in 15 years.

This Government has used it seven times in five weeks. It is trying to use the pressure of the Christmas vacation to push this legislation through.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, because I want to be fair I will introduce some citations to the House, since there are some authorities sitting on the other side.

Mr. Gauthier: Are you going, John?

Mr. Penner: Is it getting to you, John? What happened to the old funnyman?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have driven the Minister of Justice from the House.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, have you ever noticed that those who can dish it out cannot take it? That is the way it is in life.

Let me recite the words of the House Leader who, then, was just the simple Member for Saskatoon West.

Ms. Copps: Still is!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not think that "simple" is unparliamentary. However, in the case of the House Leader it is devastatingly accurate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: You've brought back John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is what the then Hon. Member for Saskatoon West said on the Crow debate. I wish to cite his remarks as reported in Hansard of May 16, 1983. Your Honour will recall that at this stage the Crow rate had been under review for about 18 months. These are the words of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West:

> Throughout the 18 months process of consultation leading up to the introduction of this legislation, the Opposition has been systematically excluded. We now find that on a piece of legislation of this importance the Government has seen fit to introduce closure after two days of second reading debate. I truly wonder about the state of our democracy and question whether the Government will be able to continue to call itself democratic in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Gauthier: Who said that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That was Mr. Hnatyshyn, the Government House Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): After two days on second reading debate with respect to the Budget the Government introduced closure not 18 months ago but on November 16. Could we find more accurate and relevant words than those?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, where did Mr. Crosbie go?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is gone again. The Minister of Justice is gone again. He is the Minister of Justice and the Hon. Member for St. John's West. In Hansard he is referred to as Mr. Crosbie. Sometimes when you are quoting directly from Hansard you can use the Hon. Member's name.

I would now like to quote from Hansard of April 2, 1981. These are the words of the Hon. Member for St. John's West:

> Mr. Speaker, what we are now debating is another motion by a closure-crazy Government to close debate.

The Minister of Justice has had to swallow his words before and swallow his Party. He has crossed the floor three or four times in his life so that is not unusual for him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Today, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) was a little testy. We will deal with that in due course. I would like to say for the record that at the hearings of the committee relating to deregulation and to the report entitled "Freedom to Move", our members were in attendance about 95 per cent of the time. We resent very much what the Minister of Transport had to say about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is what the Hon. Member for Vegreville had to say on July 7, 1981. It was with respect to the Crow debate. He said: "By virtue of a closure motion today, we have a further contempt for an erosion of the spirit and privileges of this institution." Those are memorable words. I did not think Maz was capable of it but they are tremendous words. He went on to say: "I believe tyranny begins when parliamentary debate ends."

That gets you right here, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I could not have said it better. When this Government's short term comes to an end and the Minister of Transport is back to his automobile dealership I think we will hire him as a consultant.

An Hon. Member: As a speechwriter.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I refer you to some remarks which the House Leader reputedly made to some journalists which I think affect the position of the Chair. I wish to draw them to the attention of the House. The House Leader told some journalists that if this package of legislation which he wants through before Christmas is not passed by the House he will call the House back during the normal time for the Christmas adjournment, perhaps as early as next week.

I wish to read to the Chair Standing Order 5 in this respect:

> Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet—

Thereby, of course, the House will have to come back earlier than the time set out in the rules. Not only is the House Leader repeatedly imposing closure, he is using the full force of his majority to stifle debate and, through his colleagues, he is keeping relevant and necessary documents from us. The President of the Treasury Board could have solved for himself a great many problems by tabling those necessary documents on the de Havilland deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister could have helped the House and the country by tabling the necessary documents relating to free trade and where we are going. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) could have helped herself and the House by tabling the names of the uninsured, invisible depositors who will be the beneficiairies of a billion dollar bonanza. Thus, we have closure. We see the use of this immense majority and there is secrecy. We now have an implied threat by the House Leader that he wants to call us back next week.

Let me say to the House Leader, through you, Mr. Speaker, that that can only be done, under the Standing Order which I have just read, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that it is in the public interest so to do. It is your decision, Mr. Speaker. It is not the decision of the Government House Leader. I wish to say to Your Honour that you should not feel in any way embarrassed or intimidated by the House Leader because we are not.

Mr. Penner: Certainly not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are going to give Your Honour full support in applying this rule in the way in which it is meant to be applied.

Never in history has any Speaker used this authority, except in the case of a real national emergency, such as a paralysing transportation strike. None of the items on the list of the House Leader which I recited to the House, no matter how important, deal with an emergency in terms of application, time or in terms of their passage to warrant, in our submission to you, Your Honour's exercise of that judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Even the income tax legislation which affects the 1985 tax year does not fall into this category. In the past, income tax legislation has often been passed as late as the following February or March. If it had been so urgent to pass this piece of legislation, or the other measures which the Government has recited, why were they not brought to the House earlier? Why are we playing games with respect to redistribution? Why are we playing games with closure and secrecy and with using the great weight of the greatest majority in Canadian history?

The reason I am bringing this matter to your attention now, Mr. Speaker, is because under the rules you cannot be approached by the Government House Leader while the House is sitting. Standing Order 5 states that that can only be done after the House has adjourned. Only next week, or Friday midnight—whenever the House closes—will the House Leader be able to come to you. At that time we would not have an opportunity to make these arguments to you because the rule states "after consultation with the Government".

I am submitting to you, Mr. Speaker, that the following are the precedents you ought to consider; in 1914 and 1939, when matters of the World War were to be considered, Parliament was not in session and special sessions were called. It was not just a recalling of an adjournment. There were Speeches from the Throne in those special sessions. The same held true in 1950; first, for the railway strike and, second for the Korean War. In 1956 there was a special session called to deal with the Middle East peace-keeping. Those were special sessions. Following are the cases where Parliament was recalled from an adjournment—the veiled threat of the House Leader—August 29, 1966, a railway strike; August 31, 1972, a grain-handlers' strike; August 30, 1973, a railway strike; August 9, 1977, an air traffic controllers' strike; and October 6, 1980, the consideration of a motion to establish a special joint committee of the Constitution. In the latter case, the House was recalled nine days early and the urgency was to get the committee underway before the delivery of the Budget, which was presented on October 28, 1980.

Debate on the Constitution, of course, was not a once in a lifetime matter, but it was the first time in more than a century a Canadian Parliament had been asked to begin so sweeping a change in our basic law. In any case, those citations relate to grave national emergencies, a paralysing transportation strike, grainhandlers' strike and an air traffic controllers' strike, something which goes to the daily convenience and public necessity of this country. Never has that rule been invoked by a Government House Leader, nor applied by a Speaker, just to accommodate the legislative program of the Government—never.

I see some relaxed faces opposite. Those Hon. Members do not want to come back after Christmas any more than anyone else. I say to you, Sir, it would be an amazing affront for the Government to attempt to put the Speaker into this invidious and embarrassing position, particularly when the Speaker has the role in this Parliament of protecting two minorities against the most overwhelming majority in Canadian history.

It may be well—and it is a matter between House Leaders—that some substantial progress can be made on the legislative program this week. However, if the Government continues to abuse the parliamentary system and if it continues to apply the hammer, the closure, the limitation of debate, before we have had an adequate opportunity to review the legislation, then there will be no co-operation coming from this side.

[Translation]

But I asked our House Leader to meet with his friend the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. There are possibilities to accommodate the Government and the Canadian people. But that could be done without the threat of an emergency session next week, without the threat of closure to limit opportunities for debate, without the massive weight of this Government's overwhelming majority.

Mr. Speaker, you know that all Members here have the right and the responsibility to scrutinize measures introduced in the House in the interest of all Canadians. With respect to family allowances, we are against the action of this Government because we want to protect low income families. We speak strongly against the lack of fairness when it comes to the capital gains tax exemption which favours the rich. We object on behalf of average families because at the same time the Government disregards fairness and upsets the balance of our Canadian parliamentary system.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1985

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-74, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Prud'homme (p. 9258).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that under the rules there is no opportunity to question the last speaker so I simply want to put two things on the record because I believe they should be put on the record. First, the last time allocation was used was for the debate on Monday, December 9, when Bill C-84, the important income tax Bill, was called. Bill C-84 was called for 11 o'clock in the morning. There was to be one day's debate. Debate was to finish at 4.45 p.m.

I want to point out to the House that the Bill was called but there was no debate whatsoever on that day. In other words, when the day's debate was called, and the question was called, Hon. Members opposite who have complained so much about closure were not there to debate. Therefore, before anyone starts worrying about time allocation and abuse of democracy, they should realize that the abuse of democracy was when Hon. Members opposite were not there to debate the Bill which was called. The second point I want to put on the record—and I think probably the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did this unintentionally—was when the electoral commissioners filed their reports in the last Parliament, which commissioners were appointed by the previous Liberal administration, it was my duty as the then Deputy House Leader to file the objections to the commissioner's report.

Ms. Copps: That's true.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I want to go on the record for my Party that we never made any suggestion at that time that there was any gerrymandering of any riding.

Mr. Gauthier: There wasn't.

Mr. Foster: There wasn't any.

Mr. Lewis: There was never any suggestion that the boundaries of any of those ridings were politically misconstrued.

Ms. Copps: Thank you.

Mr. Foster: If those boundaries are fair, why are you changing them?

Mr. Lewis: For that reason I think it is unfair and improper to either impugne the work of those commissioners—

Ms. Copps: No one is impugning your word.

Mr. Lewis: —or to suggest that the commissioners who are going to be appointed under this Bill would follow any other course of action than to do what is right for the Canadian people.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a word or two in this debate. I want to begin by saying that much of what was said by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was absolutely correct. His analysis, if you will, of the pressure under which we are put as a result of the Government's use of time allocation is an accurate analysis. It is difficult for people to appreciate that the House of Commons, to a large extent, operates on the basis of goodwill, and goodwill is absolutely essential in the House of Commons if the House is to be able to do the necessary work which is expected of it by the people of Canada.

When the Government chooses—and I say this in this case to the Government across the way—to end debates prematurely by use of time allocation, the goodwill which is necessary becomes considerably lessened. That is true of this Government, and I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, who was not here during the immediately preceding Government, that it was equally true during the time of that Government.

I can remember the numerous times I rose in the House to ask the Government not to move on time allocation and to suggest that it was an inappropriate way to end debate. I want to say, however, in saying that, that I also believe, as I have said on many other occasions, that it is necessary for Hon. Members to be able to discipline themselves. It is necessary for Hon. Members not to simply use up the time of the House without giving due consideration to the over-all program which is before it. I believe it is the responsibility of all Hon. Members to look carefully at the program in front of us and to try to come to grips with the amount of time which may be necessary in order that that program can be adequately dealt with.

• (1630)

I am saying that I agree with what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has said regarding time allocation, particularly in the most recent past. Almost without exception on Bill after Bill it appears that the debate is being closed off. I admit it is not happening in every case but it certainly appears that every time the Government does not get its way it moves very quickly to use time allocation. Not only that, it will extend the sitting through the lunch hours so Bills can be rammed through. That is what causes the dissipation of goodwill which must exist in this House if we are going to do the necessary work. I want the Leader of the Official Opposition to appreciate that in the main I support his argument in that regard. I am, however, concerned about what has happened on this particular Bill.

I know that the Leader of the Opposition is fair-minded in this regard. It was very difficult for us, as the other opposition Party, to read the signals coming from the Liberal caucus. Very difficult. I say that in all fairness. It was hard for us to understand where the Liberal caucus was going on this Bill. My colleagues and I thought that the amendments offered were satisfactory. It was reported to us that the amendments met with the approval of the Liberal critic. They were in fact, in the main, the same amendments he had himself offered as being satisfactory. Therefore, it was difficult for us to suddenly be faced with an uprising, if you will, after the process was finished. I would say this no matter what side of the House I was on. I am not trying to create a battle between us, I am simply telling the truth.

To go back to the beginning of this issue, we were given a paper to look at. My colleague from Churchill, who was a member of the committee, was unable to attend the initial meetings of that committee and I personally attended those meetings in order to be sure we were represented. The process had got to the point where in the final stages of the discussion of the redistribution Bill, when it got to committee, it was felt by most that it had been given reasonable amount of time. I would now be prepared to accept as true that what is being offered is unacceptable. I am not going to argue one side or the other at this point because it is too late in the debate. However, if that was true, if the amendment offered by the Opposition, which became the focal point for the Opposition as being unacceptable, was in fact unacceptable, then why in heaven's name did the Liberals offer it in the first place? That is my problem. Why argue for something and then, when you get it, turn it into a cause célèbre to be used to defeat or stop passage of the Bill? I find that difficult to understand. I like to co-operate, damn it, and support what you are doing. I do support it. But I expect in return that there will be some consistency. If it had not been the intention of the Liberal Party to support the changes finally brought forward as amendments to the House, then they should not have offered them as amendments in the first place.

On top of all that, there would have then been a built-up Opposition. Surely it is not too much to ask that we be able to see where the points of opposition really lie so we can analyze them adequately and make some determination about their validity in order to come to grips with whether or not they are supportable. We were not given that opportunity. The committee worked itsway through and it was only after that, only after the recommendations came to the House having been agreed upon, that suddenly, without any warning, there loomed this massive opposition. To be perfectly frank I find that hard to deal with.

I say now that we would have been perfectly willing to have considered any alternative scheme which was seen as satisfactory. My colleague would have brought that to our caucus, we would have looked it over, and gathered our forces to try and support it. That is all I ask. The process has within it at least three opportunities for debate. However, third reading is not where you start debating the process all over again. That is not where it happens. On third reading you may go back over the arguments you lost. You may want to state your continued opposition to what is happening. However, you do not reopen the entire process at third reading and expect that somehow or other everyone else is going to fall in line.

I say all that with the best of intentions and goodwill. I entirely agree with the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition regarding the way the Government has handled its business. However, I am personally perplexed that we find ourselves in the situation we are now in over this Bill. The Bill was given broad discussion and this point of objection was never raised.

Mr. Foster: We never agreed to this.

Mr. Deans: I am going by the record. If it was raised, it certainly does not appear as if it was. You can disagree with me and I will accept that we disagree on that. However, that is my sense of it, my reading and my understanding of it.

Having said that, let me say something about the Government. Members opposite said, when they ran for office, that they were going to be an open and forthright Government. They said they were going to deal upfront with what could and should be done in Parliament and in the country. Nothing could be further from the truth! There has been no greater disappointment over the last 15 months than this Government's continued attempts to not provide information to the House of Commons. At this moment we are debating two things and I think you will agree with me on this, Mr. Speaker. We are not only debating the content of the Bill, we are debating an atmosphere or mood which has developed over the last while.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Right.

Mr. Deans: We are trying to come to grips with it, find a way around it. However, going back as far as I can, every time we ask the Government to produce documentation to show conclusively how it arrived at the decisions it is taking, the Government has refused. Every single time. The Government says it is open. It says it is prepared to co-operate, to provide the documentation. However, on almost every single occasion that we asked for information regarding several issues over the last 15 months it has refused. I take you back not too far to the bank bail-out. Look at the tremendous problem we had in trying to arrive at an understanding over how the investigation would be undertaken. That was much like the position we are in again today. Here was the Government with a crisis on its hands and an Opposition—I was in on the negotiations—which said that it wanted to look at this objectively. Yes, also politically, I admit. That is, after all, what we are involved in. There is nothing wrong with looking at something from a political perspective; we are in fact in politics! Yes, we would anticipate differences of opinion will arise because of different ideologies as we view certain actions of the Government. However, all we asked in the bank bail-out situation was that we be given the relevant information. However, we had to drag it out inch by inch. We were refused at every turn. Every time we said: Can we have this document? No, you cannot get this document. Could we have that document? No, you cannot have that document. In the end all of the documents that we, in the House of Commons, asked to see have been presented to the Estey Commission—every single last bloody one of them. Now they are all public. However, would the Government be forthcoming and sufficiently trusting in the parliamentary process to provide the information to the House of Commons? Not likely. No, Sir. It could not do that. That was a bone of contention.

• (1640)

At that point I started to wonder about the forthrightness and openness of the Government. We were not asking for secret information. We were asking for the information the Government used to make a decision which will cost the taxpayers of Canada approximately $1 billion, which the Government neither committted itself to spending nor could have anticipated that it would spend. It was an extraordinary expenditure. I believe that we, in the House of Commons, are entitled to know everything there is to know about the background material to support a request by the Government that it be allowed to spend $1 billion that it had not anticipated it would need to spend.

We said that the original bail-out and the subsequent collapse of the bank should be treated in the same way it would be if it were a bankruptcy. We said that those who wanted to make a claim should come forward and make it openly and be paid in accordance with whatever is available to pay them. That is the normal business practice.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Under the Winding-up Act.

Mr. Deans: That is the normal business practice and when we said that we should follow the normal business practice the Government looked at us as if we were mad. It said: "My good God, we cannot possibly tell you who is going to get the money". That is because the Government does not want to. It is not because there is any law against it or because there is any rule governing it. People tell me that the Bank Act does not allow it. This no longer falls under the Bank Act. That is the kind of thing which causes people to begin to withdraw from the co-operative spirit which is necessary to make the House of Commons operate effectively.

We then discovered that there are hundreds of millions of dollars that could be collected in taxes that are not being collected as a result of pre-tax rulings. We do not want to know anything about the people involved, but want to know how much is not being collected in order that we can come to grips with what this really means to the economy of Canada. Why is it that those who work for a living can be taxed at source but others can somehow work out fancy arrangements to save hundreds of millions of tax dollars without anyone understanding or knowing anything about it? We asked for some information with regard to that and the Government said: "Oh, no. You cannot have that. That is bad. You should know a thing like that". That is where we end up in that situation and it again undermines the very essence of co-operation that is so necessary for the House to operate.

We cannot, of course, get the details on de Havilland. We will get them if we ask the right questions every day.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Morsel by morsel.

Mr. Deans: The Leader of the Opposition says: "morsel by morsel". The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) says that he is giving us the answers. Let me assume for a moment that he is. However, surely I do not have to sit up night after night every night of the week thinking up every conceivable question and asking it in the House of Commons to get to the bottom of the deal. That is outrageous and stupid. If the information was going to be given to me anyway, why can I not have the documents? That is all I am asking. I do not want to get into a personality battle over it. I understand that there may well be certain things which cannot be provided because of the delicate nature of the negotiations. I can appreciate that. I am not stupid, and neither are my colleagues. All we ask is to be treated in the way that we are intended to be treated by virtue of the fact that we ran for and got elected to Parliament. We are supposed to be trusted. We are supposed to be able to critically analyse the situation, not after the fact, but before the deal is completed.

I will close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that what is wrong in the House today is simply a lack of co-operation and a lack of understanding which I think the Government has fostered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4.45 o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 84 on Monday, December 16, 1985, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

The question is on the amendment. Mr. Prud'homme, seconded by Miss Nicholson (Trinity) moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for the purpose of reconsidering Clause 2."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

• (1710)

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I say to the House that this was a 15 minute bell, delayed strictly for no other reason than the dilemma in getting the buses up the hill in the snow. It is not to be taken as suggesting that in the future we are in any way changing the practice with regard to a 15 minute bell.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Prud'homme) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the House would be disposed to have this vote counted on the main motion, obviously, but unfortunately reversed, and provided that all the names are recorded as if there had been a normal vote.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If there is a disposition in the House to accept that, I would like to have my vote counted with the correct side.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Save and except for the problem of interpretation which that poses, the question is as follows: Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mr. Clark (Yellowhead) moves that Bill C-74, An Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 and the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act and to provide for certain matters in relation to the 1981 decennial census, be now read a third time and do pass. Shall I take the vote in reverse with the addition of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls in the affirmative?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF SUPPORTING UN RESOLUTIONS ON CYPRUS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should express concern about the continuing illegal Turkish colonization of Cyprus and the latest secessionist movement of the Denktash regime

1. by supporting measures for the implementation of the United Nations resolutions on Cyprus;

2. by ceasing further negotiations with the Turkish Government on the sale of a nuclear reactor, until the latter complies with the U.N. resolutions on Cyprus and shows a respect for international law;

3. by calling upon the Turkish Government to provide immediate information on missing Cypriots;

4. by calling upon the Turkish Government to respect the human rights provisions of the Helsinki accord, especially in regards to Cyprus;

5. by calling upon the Turkish Government to cease immediately, further colonization of Cyprus and to withdraw all illegal colonists transplanted with a view to changing the demographic nature of the Island; and

6. by condemning the new secessionist movement of the so-called "Federated State of Northern Cyprus".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be given an opportunity to present this motion to the House in order to give the House the opportunity of considering the request that I put forward in a motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If there are to be conversations, I hope that they would be held behind the curtains. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin), please get behind the curtain and stop the chatter. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) has the floor.

Mr. Young: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The idea of putting this motion arose out of a function I attended in July of this year. It was a function organized by the Cypriot Federation of Canada along with the Hellenic-Canadian Federation of Ontario, the Cypriot Community of Toronto and the Greek Community of Metropolitan Toronto. This function was entitled "Justice for Cyprus". It was attended by Hon. Members from all sides of the House including my good friend, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and others. I do not want to take too long making my comments because I understand that many other Hon. Members want to say a few words about this motion. I would like to give them the opportunity to do so.

The question of Cyprus and its invasion by Turkey has been raised in the House several times by Hon. Members on all sides of the House, including the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn.). It is well known that there have been many communal differences in Cyprus, some of which are of a long-standing nature. Nevertheless, there has also been a considerable period of time during which the two communities have lived together fairly peacefully side by side. I am convinced that given a chance, those two communities would do so once again but only once the Turkish troops get off the island.

At the function to which I referred, all the participants made it a point that prior to the invasion, even though there were differences between the peoples of Cyprus, more often than not through interpersonal relationships they had got along very well over the years. They were quite convinced that they could do so again provided they were given the opportunity to make their own decisions on their own behalf without a strong military presence on the island.

This is the eleventh year since the Turkish invasion of Cyprus; 11 years since Turkey sent its army to occupy 40 per cent of Cyprus and displace one-third of its population or some 200,000 persons. Turkey also captured thousands of defenceless civilians and shot, butchered or raped hundreds and 2,000 of these are still missing. Turkey then brought in a flood of colonists from mainland Turkey to whom the stolen properties of the displaced refugees were handed over. Despite worldwide condemnation of this action by the United Nations General Assembly, the European Common Market and the Commonwealth, Turkey has ignored all resolutions and pleas for justice in Cyprus and has continued to support the Turkish pseudo state which Turkey alone recognizes.

Justice for Cyprus means the removal of Turkish troops and Turkish colonists from Cyprus, the return of the 200,000 refugees, an accounting of the 2,000 missing Cypriots and their release from Turkish jails. It means a free, united Cyprus as stated in UN Resolution 37/253 which was adopted in 1983.

If we are to achieve justice in Cyprus, we must have a clear understanding of who the aggressors and the victims are. This is not a problem between Greek and Turkish Cypriots and it is not an insoluble problem as the Turkish Government would like to portray it. It is nothing but the occupation by an aggressor of a small island country with a limited defence.

At every appropriate occasion, the Canadian Government at the UN and during Commonwealth discussions on the Middle East and Cyprus should raise the issue of Cyprus with other countries and particularly with NATO and the United States. There can be justice for Cyprus. The problem can be solved but only through outside mediation and influence, particularly through the United States. If the Canadian Government has as close a relationship with the United States administration as it says it has, and if Canada has a direct interest in Cyprus, Canada can indeed bring about a just solution for Cyprus and all of its citizens, both Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots.

Although the island was invaded 11 years ago, during all this time the Government of Turkey and the Turkish Cypriots have ignored several resolutions put by the United Nations and the European Parliament which call for a just settlement. Turkey is also waging a campaign of intimidation against Greece and threatens the integrity of several Greek islands along the western coast. The continuation of Turkish aggression contemplates a threat to peace in the part of the world and goes against the collective interests of the western alliance.

It is because of the global concern over what has been occurring on Cyprus that the UN General Assembly adopted on May 13, 1983, Resolution 37/253. The vote on that resolution was 103 in favour with five against and 20 abstentions. I believe it is important that that resolution be recorded here. Therefore, I intend to make the House aware of it. The General Assembly Resolution reads as follows:

Having considered the question of Cyprus,

Recalling its resolution 3212 (XXIX) of 1 November 1974 and its subsequent resolutions on the question of Cyprus,

Recalling the high-level agreements of 12 February 1977 and 19 May 1979

13. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain from any unilateral action which might adversely affect the prospects of a just and lasting solution of the problem of Cyprus by peaceful means and to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the performance of his task under the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council as well as with the United Nations Peace-Keeping Force in Cyprus;

14. Calls upon the parties concerned to refrain from any action which violates or is designated to violate the independence, unity, sovereignty and territorial integrity of the Republic of Cyprus;

15. Reiterates its recommendation that the Security Council should examine the question of implementation, within a specified time-frame, of its relevant resolutions and consider and adopt thereafter, if necessary, all appropriate and practical measures under the Charter of the United Nations for ensuring the speedy and effective implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations on Cyprus;

16. Welcomes the intention of the Secretary-General, as expressed in his report . . . to pursue a renewed personal involvement in the quest for a solution of the Cyprus problem and, in view of this, requests the Secretary-General to undertake such actions or initiatives as he may consider appropriate within the framework of the mission of good offices entrusted to him by the Security Council for promoting a just and lasting solution of the problem and to report to the General Assembly at its thirty-eighth session on the results of his efforts;

17. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its thirty-eighth session the item entitled "Question of Cyprus" and requests the Secretary-General to follow up the implementation of the present resolution and to report on all its aspects to the General Assembly at that session.

Some 86 voted in favour of this resolution, eight against and 25 abstained.

Hon. Members may be interested to know that on October 1 of this year the United States Senate adopted a similar resolution on Cyprus. The Senate resolved the following:

(a) The Senate hereby congratulates the people of Cyprus on the twenty-fifth anniversary of their independence.

(b) It is the sense of the Senate that the United States reaffirms its continuing commitment to a just resolution of the Cyprus dispute, and its support for the efforts of the Secretary-General to bring peace to that troubled nation.

At the outset I said that I did not have any intention of taking too long since other Members wish to speak on this matter. What I do say is that the arguments presented by the United Nations General Assembly are much more eloquent than ones I could put forward to the House. This is why it is important that I read the resolution into the record.

Also, it seems to me that as a country we have substantial influence and respect in international circles. That respect goes hand-in-hand with a high degree of credibility in the international arena. It seems to me that we should be using that credibility to use whatever influence we have on other nations to bring about a peaceful resolution of the problems in Cyprus. The number one call is for the withdrawal of Turkish troops from the island so that Cyprus itself can get on with making the decisions which will affect the lives of its people and future generations.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor to comment briefly on the same subject. I would suggest this problem has been with us for a long time and it does not seem it will be settled soon.

I have no difficulty with Motion No. 215 of the Hon. Member. I think his motion before the House is logical, but there was really no need to refer to the CANDU reactor issue since it is the subject of a dispute which has nothing to do with the Island of Cyprus. I think the Hon. Member would have been better advised not to include that reference in his motion.

I think that the position of my Party and of the country in this debate . . . We believe the people of Cyprus must decide their own future and that there is no need at all—yesterday, today or tomorrow—to have the Turkish army intervene and have 40 per cent of the Cypriot territory occupied by the Turks.

● (1740)

The unilateral declaration of independence for the northern part of the Island of Cyprus has simply become a totally irrelevant element which does nothing to help matters. The problem ought to be resolved along the lines of the United Nations resolution which would enable all Cypriot citizens to express their views concerning the political solution of this problem which unfortunately has existed for a very long time.

Canada started to offer the services of Canadian Forces to keep peace in that country a long time ago. In my opinion, Canada's contribution to peacekeeping in that difficult situation which has prevailed for over twenty years on the Island of Cyprus should be made available to other parts of the world. And I think we should look at Cyprus and realize that U.N. intervention has to a considerable extent prevented loss of life and that the invasion that took place a few years ago proves that military intervention only makes matters worse instead of dealing with the problem, and that in the circumstances, Canada should continue to provide the services of its troops to keep the peace between the warring factions.

At this point, I believe I would say that I prefer Canada to intervene under the aegis of the UN, because when it is done at the invitation of the warring factions, we are making it impossible for the United Nations to maintain its credibility and intervene in an effective manner. Perhaps because the UN no longer has the prestige it enjoyed, let us say, 25 years ago countries are now intervening as the Turks did in the northern part of Cyprus, and we have seen the results. Thousands of people were displaced. Thousands of people have disappeared. Families want to know whether a person has disappeared or is in prison or what has happened to them. In the resolution, the Turkish Government is being asked to provide all the information they have on these individuals so that the human tragedy that has been going on since the intervention by the military can in some way or other be brought to an end.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a long speech. I think my party's position on the subject is well known, and I know that the present Government's policy is not any different from the one we have supported to date. To clarify my position, perhaps I could read, for the benefit of the House, a short speech, a matter of minutes, which clearly established the Trudeau Government's position. Or perhaps I could simply refer the House to a speech made on November 17, 1983 by the Permanent Ambassador to the UN at the time, Mr. Gérard Pelletier, who clearly and succinctly summarized the Government's position. I could quote a few paragraphs that might be helpful to the people listening to this debate.

The Government's position was, and I believe it still is—and perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary will confirm this later on—that we profoundly regretted the unilateral declaration of independence on November 15 of the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus. We are not prepared to recognize this so-called state on Cyprus. We continue to recognize a single Republic of Cyprus, whose sovereignty and territorial integrity should be respected by all concerned. The unilateral declaration of independence has disrupted negotiations that are already delicate and difficult enough as it is. It is the unfortunate result of a situation previously described by the ambassador in June before the Council, that is, the two communities on Cyprus and certain other parties to the Cypriot dispute have not shown the requisite resolve to search for a compromise which, though difficult, will be necessary to find a valid political solution.

Although we are aware of the impatience and frustration felt by the parties as a result of the lasting stalemate, we cannot agree however that those sentiments warrant such a disproportionate reaction. The action of the Turkish Cypriot community jeopardizes chances for a fair and equitable solution within a unified Cypriot State, and for well deserved peace and prosperity.

Canada strongly deplores this unfortunate situation because our participation in the United Nations Force goes such a long way back. Indeed this force was created to maintain peace and pave the way for a solution to the Cypriot problem, not a unilateral solution but one which would be prepared and accepted by all parties concerned.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is a fair and reasonable position. The military intervention is not justified in these circumstances. We have to go back to the United Nations resolution and hope that the Cypriot problem will be solved by all the citizens of the Island of Cyprus in such a way that lasting peace might make people forget this unfortunate situation which has endured for too long but which, in my opinion and that of my Party, cannot be solved by a military intervention such as the one that took place on the Island of Cyprus.

[English]

Mr. Chuck Cook (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my comments on this issue because there are two other Hon. Members who would like to speak in this debate and from whom I would like to hear and, unfortunately, with the vote, there is not much time left. I will have a brilliant speech ready next time the Cyprus issue comes up. But it will not be this evening.

There are two or three points I would like to make. First, Canada's stand on Cyprus is not ambiguous at all. Our efforts have always aimed at helping the peace process and facilitating the UN Secretary-General's efforts. Second, Canada regrets deeply such actions as the 1974 foreign interventions or the 1983 unilateral Declaration of Independence. Third, Canada has supported resolutions aiming at the withdrawal of foreign military personnel on Cyprus except those provided for in the Cyprus Constitution.

The UN Secretary-General is actively pursuing his efforts to reconcile the two communities. Any unsolicited and one-sided action by Canada at this delicate point of the discussions would undermine his initiative and be counter-productive. In his recent speech at the Fortieth United Nations General Assembly, the Cyprus Foreign Minister called for all to support the Secretary-General and to "assist him in finding a solution to the problem". The motion presented today does not seem likely to have such effect.

Canada is a key member of the United Nations force in Cyprus. Its contingent patrols the most sensitive sector of the "green line". While Canada itself recognizes only the Republic of Cyprus, the Canadian contingent must maintain its credibility in the eyes of the Turkish as well as the Greek Cypriots. The adoption of this motion could raise questions as to Canadian impartiality as peace-keepers.

The lives of 25 Canadian servicemen have been lost in Canada's efforts to bring peace to the country of Cyprus. Tens of millions of Canadian dollars have been spent in our peace-keeping efforts over the years. Passing this motion would undermine that impartiality which Canada must maintain if we are to have a loud and clear voice in bringing peace to that troubled island.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, let me again point out that Canada has many years of experience in Cyprus and that its position has been carefully elaborated over the years. We feel that under the circumstances, this position is the one most likely to help the Secretary-General of the United Nations who has been mandated to bring about a reconciliation in Cyprus. The Cypriot question is a very complex one. Not only is it the result of many centuries of sometimes difficult cohabitation between Greek and Turkish Cypriots, but it is also a product of the often violent relations between two peoples whose language, religion and culture differ considerably.

• (1750)

The vagaries of history kept Cyprus from becoming part of Greece like other islands in the Aegean and Mediterranean in the nineteenth and twentieth century, and in 1878, Cyprus came under the control of Great Britain. Nevertheless, there is still a profound attachment to the Greek language and culture and to the Greek Orthodox religion. At the same time, a Turkish presence on the island since the 15th century had produced a cohesive and strong minority, 18 per cent, with strong ties to the Turkish language and culture and to Islam.

[English]

We are all familiar with the painful process which led to the independence of Cyprus. Hellenism has been there for a long time but not until 1931, it is felt, was a desire for enosis, uniting Cyprus with Greece, expressed with any seriousness. After the war Britain began to decolonize and grant independence to its colonies one by one. A campaign in favour of enosis, accompanied by terrorist attacks against British interests, was launched in Cyprus in 1955. The Turkisk Cypriots, fearing abandonment by England, tried to resist the pressure for enosis and independence and called for the maintenance of the status quo or, failing that, partition of the island. They finally agreed with the Greek Cypriots on a draft constitution in which the right of the minority were protected. Moreover, when independence was achieved, Cyprus signed with London, Ankara and Athens a treaty which gave the three countries the right to inspect implementation of the agreements. The institutions put in place in 1960 by the Zurich and London agreements have not worked. The Turkish Cypriots claim that they have systematically been excluded from important decisions and that their rights have not been respected, while the Greek Cypriots contend that the Turkish Party has refused to cooperate and abused its veto powers.

We do not have the time to review in this House the many events which have marked the past 21 years. In 1964 civil war was raging and the Government of Cyprus, having consulted with the three guarantor states, appealed to the United Nations. Canada has witnessed most of these events. From 1964 through 1974 Canadian soldiers, like their counterparts from other contributing countries, were assigned to positions in the cities, towns and villages where Greek and Turkish Cypriots were fighting. Their main job was to keep the peace, prevent fresh outbreaks of fighting and create conditions conducive to reconciliation.

After the events of 1974 the Island was divided in two. The UN force was re-deployed along the cease-fire line. The Canadian troops were given the difficult mission of patrolling the old sector of Nicosia where the enemy positions are sometimes only a street's width apart and where the presence of many buildings in ruins makes it very difficult to exercise surveillance over the fortifications and the cease-fire line.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before I go on with my speech, I must pay a well-deserved tribute to those 23,000 young Canadians who, with dignity and courage, have performed an extremely dangerous and I would say frustrating task. It is inspiring to see these soldiers and officers, trained to defend their country against the enemy and if necessary, attack that enemy, acting as referees between opponents whose motivation and courage make them formidable fighters.

[English]

One's concept of the role played by the UN force in Cyprus can vary depending on one's own perception of things. This international force, which has numbered as much as 6,800 and is now 2,340 strong, has not always been able to prevent skirmishes from degenerating into widespread combat. It was powerless in the face of the events of 1974. As I said, there must be a reciprocal political desire before the UN force can fulfil its mission. However, many of the soldiers could testify to the lives they have saved, the supplies they have brought to isolated villages, and the hundred of refugees whom they have led to a safe zone. Many times they have passed from one zone to another bringing mail, helping isolated family members visit one another, and watching over the aqueduct work in Nicosia which is proceeding without regard for the Green Line. In short, they are maintaining against all obstacles a state of peace and communications which will enable the political leaders and the UN representatives to continue the dialogue. These soldiers could also tell you about the long nights and days they have spent patrolling the cease-fire line between two rows of fortifications strewn with death-traps. These Canadians are professional soldiers and are always on the look-out for attempts by either side to strengthen an outpost or a barricade, or to move a portion of the cease-fire line. They are also diplomats who, on behalf of the UN, negotiate with each party to resolve initiatives or misunderstandings which might change the status quo and precipitate a confrontation. In 1984 only one life was lost along this line. In 1985, none. Those who feel these troops need not be there have only to imagine what would happen if they were withdrawn or even if their numbers were reduced.

Others feel that Canada is not doing enough. Earlier on, when I mentioned the cost of Canadian participation in this peace-keeping force, I left out what it costs Canada indirectly to send these troops to Cyprus rather than keep them here. Consider also that the services provided by the soldiers are not available to the Canadian people, so that the total cost, not always quantifiable, is actually higher than it appears to be. In sum, those who would like to see Canada take a position on the actions of the parties involved need only ask our soldiers what effect this would have on their ability to keep the peace. I would also ask them to reflect on the effects this motion would have on the mediatory work being done by the UN Secretary-General since the summer of 1984, to mention only the most recent of his initiatives. The Cypriot communities, as well as the Greek and Turkish Governments, recently reiterated their confidence in the Secretary-General's efforts. He earnestly desires to see each party negotiate seriously, with no outside interference and with a willingness to once and for all re-establish the minimal confidence required to produce valid concessions. The two Cypriot communities seem to agree on the principle of setting up a federal state. Yet to be determined is the exact nature of this state, the reciprocal rights each part would have, and the guarantees which would ensure the survival of this federal state and the security of its citizens.

[Translation]

Because they are so far removed from Cyprus, Canadians have trouble understanding what is at stake in a situation that has existed for over 20 years. However, they do realize that any definitive failure of the UN's efforts in Cyprus would have devastating consequences, not only for the Cypriots but for the world community and world peace.

[English]

Before it is too late we must lend all the support we can to the only person who has a chance to bring the two communities back to the negotiating table and keep them there. For the sake of future generations, patience and confidence must be evident among all involved. Threatening or inflammatory declarations, and attempts by the parties to strengthen their positions by drawing the international community into the conflict, are contrary to the objectives of Mr. Perez de Cuellar and the methods he would see used. For its part, Canada will continue to support with all its resources and prestige the multilateral approach to finding a solution. It will, if asked, continue to lend assistance in the field and quietly encourage the parties involved. In this way, and not by passing motions like the one before us, we will best contribute toward a just and appropriate solution to the problems of Cyprus.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

TAXATION—TAX REFORM—GOVERNMENT PRIORITY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on November 27 I wanted to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a question about tax reform. In his absence, I asked the question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). In my question I indicated how confused Canadians are about our tax system and how disappointed they are, and I used other adjectives as well. I did not consider the reply I got to be totally satisfactory. I would now like to outline some of my further thoughts on this vital topic in Canada.

I had the privilege of visiting Washington last spring with a number of colleagues to study the important issue of tax reform. I found it a very worthwhile meeting. As you know, President Reagan has set tax reform as a very, very high priority of his administration and the Americans are moving along that path. It is not easy. We saw several different versions of the so-called minimum tax and flat-rate tax in the United States. However, I believe they have the will and determination to follow through with that. I am confident that we will see the same determination in our country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that we will move along that path and I think it is time we got that process underway.

I would like to talk about a few of the problems with our current system and give a few examples of it. I attended the meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs last evening at which we dealt, clause by clause, with Bill C-84. I will give you just one example of an amendment which we were considering. It reads:

(B) the corporation is, throughout the year, a Canadian-controlled private corporation whose taxable income for the immediately preceding taxation year together with the taxable incomes of all corporations with which it was associated in the year for their taxation years ending in the calendar year immediately preceding the calendar year in which the taxation year of the corporation ended does not exceed the aggregate of the business limits (as determined under section 125) of the corporation and the associated corporations for those preceding years, or"

That is just one example, Mr. Speaker, of the complexity of the Income Tax Act.

With great respect to several of the architects of that Act over the years, I think we have ended up with a band-aid solution. There has been change after change after change. I would defy any tax lawyer or tax accountant in the country to try to comprehend that entire Act. The provision which the Government is moving forward with through the last Budget, the lifetime capital gains exemption of $500,000, is a proposal which I personally feel is a good one. However, as we discussed Bill C-84, that one proposal alone touched on over 130 parts of the Act. Therefore, you can see the complexity of it.

Individuals, as well as companies, have a hard time filling in tax returns. Many of them have given up and have had to go to various tax preparation companies. I think that in itself speaks to the unnecessary complexity of the law.

As the Government deals with tax reform, I believe it should move ahead on the basis of revenue neutrality. In other words, Canadians should not perceive that we are changing the tax provisions just to get more taxes into the Treasury of the country. When we do embark on this in a serious way we should follow the principle of revenue neutrality. When the total changes are made, the Government collects the same amount of money.

• (1805)

Some of the things we should be thinking about and considering, which I call important principles, include the current minimum tax. It has a principle in it, to which I object, having to do with the gross-up of dividends on which people are being taxed. I do not think Canadians should be taxed on money they do not receive.

As we review this whole topic we should look at a consolidated return for corporations. With my business background, I recall when one deals with the acquisition or selling of a company that the first area to be explored is that of the tax consequence. You do not look at the market-place, how long the company has been in business or what the sales force is like, you look at what the tax situation is. Is there a tax loss carry forward? It is almost like a shell game when annual returns are filed, Mr. Speaker, shifting assets into different companies so tax can be minimized. A simple thing, like a consolidated tax return, as they have in the United States, would go a long way toward that very point.

I have a number of other points I want to make on this issue, but let me conclude by saying that as we embark on this important initiative we must ensure that Canadians perceive it as being fair and equitable. They do not at this stage. We have something in the order of over 25,000 employees in Revenue Canada in the excise area—I do not want anybody to lose his or her job—which speaks of the mammoth job at hand, while we have over 12 million people trying to fill out returns. I submit our system is far too complex. We need to get on with strong backing and a strong initiative on tax reform in Canada.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, our Government has shown that it takes the development of a fair and efficient tax system seriously by introducing and proposing a number of initiatives on this issue. These continuing series of steps considered in aggregate represent major advances in fairness.

One of the first actions taken by the Government was to put an end to the abuses of the quick flip mechanism associated with the scientific research tax credit. These abuses by certain individuals and corporations had resulted in a significant loss in revenue for the treasury.

The Government has implemented a number of reforms in the area of tax administration. The November 1984 economic statement introduced measures designed to improve the fairness of tax administration. These measures include requiring a taxpayer to be refunded any overpayment of income tax resulting from a successful appeal—even if under further appeal—restricting the authority of officials for search and seizure, to be consistent with the spirit of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Government does not believe in being Draconian in its pursuit of the tax dollar, and has made changes to humanize the tax collection process.

The May 23 Budget contained a number of proposals directed toward increasing the fairness of the Canadian tax system. Measures relating to these proposals were tabled in the House with the November 21, 1985 Notice of Ways and Means Motion. Two major measures relating to fairness between taxpayers are the restriction on use of the capital cost allowance losses from certain types of businesses for individuals, and the extension of the income attribution rules to income from property acquired from the proceeds of interest-free loans.

In an effort to prevent tax avoidance, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced on November 26, 1985 a measure to prevent the use of trusts to market security issues in a way that income and capital returns to investors are distributed tax free.

• (1810)

On December 4, 1985 a major step was taken when the minimum tax legislation was introduced. It guarantees that high income individuals will not escape paying income tax. In addition, on the same day, the Minister of Finance introduced measures ending the use of partnerships in corporate takeovers for increased tax deductions and clarifying the law on the limits imposed on foreign property investments by pension funds. These measures are designed to make the tax system more fair and to safeguard federal revenue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—MAINTENANCE OF QUOTAS—(A) GOVERNMENT POSITION (B) REQUEST THAT QUOTAS BE RETAINED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, on October 23 I put a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), asking him to act responsibly and maintain quotas in the footwear industry. Now we know that the Government decided to eliminate the quotas, and immediately afterwards, Mr. Speaker, I went to my riding, the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, which has three shoe factories employing 1,000 workers. One of the comments made by the shoe manufacturers in my riding and which they asked me to take down was that, in fact, the worker stands to lose by this decision, because the manufacturers can go on designing Canadian shoes here and have them manufactured in Brazil and then import them into Canada, which they can do because there are no more quotas.

Mr. Speaker, that is the situation at the present time. These are jobs that have been lost as a result of this decision. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this has been confirmed by a report from ILO, which says that eighteen industrialized countries are now experiencing increased job losses in the footwear industry as a result of imports from developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, this indeed confirms statements by manufacturers who intend to stay in business despite the fact the quotas have been lifted. They are going to have the shoes manufactured in developing countries, but our workers, our Canadian workers are going to lose their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, workers in the Canadian footwear industry as well as manufacturers, tanners and suppliers are very disappointed and even concerned, not only because of this Government's very poor policy on import quotas on shoes but also because of the specious arguments invoked since then in the House to justify the Government's decision.

Manufacturers and workers are asking the following question: Why is the Government trying to mislead the House and the public by pointing out that the quotas have cost consumers between $450 million and $500 million? Why does it refer to figures from a theoretical study without taking into consideration the way the shoe market operates or the real price of shoes? Why does it use overestimated figures based on an econometric evaluation—not to mention projections for the years 1984 and 1985—yet fail to mention that, according to the Tribunal, econometric evaluation procedures give results which can never be considered to be totally accurate? Why does it not keep Members aware of that? Why does the Tribunal refer to figures based on an econometric evaluation whose results cannot be considered to be totally accurate?

The Government knew that it was because the Tribunal was unable to obtain figures from retailers and importers, as it indicated in its report. Why did the Government fail to advise the House about what the Tribunal said concerning the price consumers have to pay for shoes?

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and say that Canadians deserve more than mere theoretical studies. They deserve to know the truth because 20,000 workers will be affected by this decision.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like just for the record to quote the promise made on May 4, 1984 by the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, who was then Leader of the Opposition. Here is an article from the newspaper La Tribune:

> On Wednesday Conservative Leader Brian Mulroney told the daily newspaper La Tribune that a Conservative Government would not abolish import quotas imposed by Canada in the footwear and textile sectors.
> "The quota policy would remain unchanged", said Mr. Mulroney because he is not in favour of free-trade in those sectors.
> He added that he would not give in in spite of pressures that might be applied by the Common Market countries or the United States to loosen quotas on shoes or textile products in Canada.
> "I will not miss the opportunity to say so to President Reagan when I confer with him in Washington next month. I will see to it that our interests are protected at all times. A friendship has its price. Neighbours like us are worth a lot", said the Conservative Leader.

What a joke, Mr. Speaker! After 15 months in office he abolishes quotas, yet on May 4, 1984 he had clearly stated he would maintain them, even in spite of pressures from the Americans and the European Common Market.

● (1815)

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question raised by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) on October 23, 1985, and to refer to the decision taken by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and announced in the House of Commons on November 20, 1985 concerning the Government's future policy on shoe imports.

In his announcement the Minister mentioned the Canadian Import Tribunal report which had been commissioned by the previous administration and according to which the Canadian shoe industry, with the exception of shoes for women and young girls, can compete successfully on international markets. In light of the tribunal findings, the Government came to the conclusion that it would not be in the best interests of the country to continue to restrict imports throughout the whole industry.

[English]

Accordingly, effective December 1, 1985, import controls are being continued for a further three years only with respect to women's and girls' dress and casual footwear. Quotas for this sector will be phased out to annual growth provisions of 6 per cent the first year, 8 per cent the second year and 10 per cent the third year.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) stressed that adjustment assistance programs would be available for communities, employees and companies. Furthermore, the industry currently benefits from a tariff of around 23 per cent on footwear imports and will continue to have recourse to the provisions of the Special Import Measures Act.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—HOUSING PROJECT IN SACKVILLE, N.S.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I want to explain further the gross error of the present Government as well as the previous Government in regard to the shell housing program in places like Sackville, Nova Scotia. About 1972 there were a number of houses built. At least 23 have been identified as having trouble now, in which the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved the contractors who constructed the shell and then the shell was sold to the customer—the homeowner-to-be—who is responsible for completing the interior work.

CMHC approved the whole arrangement and approved the contractors. CMHC was responsible for inspecting the houses. The people who bought the houses and are living there yet say that there was no inspection until the end. In the end, the inspector came around, drove up in his car, met with the builder who drove up in his truck or car, but did not go into the house, and signed the inspection documents. In other words, they covered for the fact that he had not inspected it. As I say, this was done under the jurisdiction and with the approval of CMHC. It turns out that the roof was very badly designed. It was designed in such a way that it was bound to rot for lack of ventilation. On one street, 23 of the roofs of that design and construction are rotting in that way. One has already fallen in and others have had to be replaced so that they would not fall in. After complaints that began in 1974 and 1975, it took the Government until 1985 to do anything about it, whichever Government was in power.

● (1820)

The fact is that CMHC was responsible from start to finish, up to the point where the project was handed over to the unsuspecting home owners who foolishly trusted a government body to tell them they were buying sound houses. The present Government has treated them almost as shabbily as the previous Government which produced the bad housing.

Some of the home owners have had to double the amount of their mortgages in their later years in order to fix houses which were faulty when they were sold to them under the jurisdiction and direction of CMHC. Some extra rehabilitation money has been given but it amounts to no more than $2,000 per house for roofs which cost $10,000, $15,000 or $18,000. They should have been fixed before and should not have been charged to the home owners at all. It is the responsibility of CMHC.

The Minister promised to report on this situation to a local Member of the Legislature but repeatedly refused to forward that promised report. His words were that he expected to be able to provide the Member of the Legislature with the results of his investigation by early June. It is December and there is no report. My office requested this report by letter on November 26, by phone on November 26 and December 2, by letter on December 6, in a speech on December 10, in a question on December 12 and in phone calls Friday, Monday and today, and never once did the Minister respond to the request for a report, let alone make the report public.

Clearly the Minister responsible for CMHC is as ashamed to report on the matter as he would have been if he had been the Minister responsible at the time this disgraceful building project was created. The Government has inherited all the power, prestige and revenues of the previous Government and it inherited with that its debts, both legal and moral, of which this certainly is one. The Government owes new roofs to the owners of those houses in Sackville and if it slides out of providing those roofs it is defaulting on a moral obligation and that will bring disgrace to the Government.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested that the Minister and his staff members have a lack of sensitivity or have shown a lack of co-operation. I should remind the Hon. Member, as he certainly knows, that the Minister does indeed take the Hon. Member's representations very seriously and that the Minister and the members of his staff have responded to his inquiries very promptly. As an example, today members of the Minister's staff were, as they were on many other occasions, in contact with the Hon. Member's staff to assist the Hon. Member in his endeavours on behalf of the people he represents.

I would like to respond further to the matter raised by the Hon. Member which, of course, concerns the problems being experienced by the homeowners in a housing project in Sackville, Nova Scotia. The project in question consists of some 22 semi-detached units which were built in the early 1970s as part of a joint federal-provincial program known as shell housing. The basic idea underlying the program was to bring housing units to a stage of construction which permitted occupancy. The owner occupants then completed the work creating equity in the properties at the time of completion. Under the program, CMHC provided loans to builders who were responsible for the shell of the units and to persons with a previously agreed income at an agreed maximum price.

• (1825)

The problem of deterioration in some of the units was brought to the attention of CMHC earlier this year. As a result of that representation an inspection was carried out which found that in some of the units rotting had occurred due to moisture entering the roof system. Contrary to the Hon. Member's suggestion, these observations have been communicated to the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) who, I might add, has made representations to the Minister on behalf of his constituents. As well, these observations have been made known to the local MLA, Mr. Holm.

The actual report was produced for CMHC internal use and, as such, is not a document for public consumption.

The federal Government has no liability in this matter. However, despite that, CMHC has undertaken to do its utmost to respond to the needs of these homeowners within the parameters of existing programs. Many of the occupants have considerable equity in their homes and, where feasible, CMHC will work with lenders and the homeowners to extend mortgages to cover the costs of repair. In the case of hardship, CMHC is prepared to arrange adjustments to loan repayment terms. CMHC has also reallocated available funds in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program to Halifax County for this project.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government's "Yes we are, no we aren't" game on the selling of our cultural industries to the United States is beginning to wear a bit thin with the arts community and with the public in general. Every day the situation is becoming more and more Alice in Wonderlandish or, as Alice herself would say, it gets "curiouser and curiouser".

Earlier this winter leading members of the arts community met with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and were disappointed by his determination not to exclude Canada's culture from free trade talks with the U.S. Then the new head of the Canada Council in a speech in Toronto supported free trade pointing out all of the potential advantages to us. He told us: "We were going to get it, like it or not".

A few weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), cosily ensconced in the bosum of Time magazine in Chicago, denied everything. That night the idea of giving up on our unique cultural identity to the U.S. was unthinkable. Now the U.S. Ambassador has put our cultural industries firmly back on the free trade table. So what is it, Mr. Speaker? What is the policy? Why all the evasion in the House of Commons? Why not set the policy down for all to see?

One of Lewis Carroll's characters fits the Government's actions so well at this time. "Contrariwise", said Tweedledee, "If it was so, it might be, and if it were so, it would be, but as it isn't, it ain't. That's logic". Tweedledee must have been a very good Conservative, Mr. Speaker.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES MAGAZINE DEGRADING INDIAN WOMEN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious matter that I want to bring to the attention of the House in a way that I hope will lead to action.

While in Winnipeg last weekend a number of Indian women brought to my attention the recent edition of Hustler magazine. It contains an eight page pictorial which is degrading and exploitive of Indian women. It portrays an Indian woman being raped and sexually abused. It identifies this woman as a squaw and a redskin, words which have very strong negative connotations.

This House would surely not approve of such images for circulation. Yet this is the same issue of Hustler magazine from which customs officials pulled 12 pages because they degraded women. Why do the same standards not apply to Indian women? If you can pull the pages that apply to women in general, why not pull pages that exploit Indian women?

Customs officials managed to stop a pinball machine from coming into this country because it had a degrading portrayal of Indian women on the pinball machine. Why not apply the same standards to Hustler magazine?

I have sent a copy of this magazine to the Minister responsible. I want some action. I would like to see him pull the magazine from the shelves. I want him to review his policies and procedures to ensure this does not happen again. Indian women will no longer stand for this kind of degradation and exploitation.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POLAND—FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF IMPOSITION OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Pursuant to the May 7 statement to the House, I would like again to draw to the attention of all Members of Parliament the incessant, unjustifiable, and brutal violations of human rights taking place in Poland.

Friday, December 13, marked the fourth anniversary of the 1981 Soviet imposition of martial law upon the Polish people. Since that date, their ongoing oppression has taken many forms, from the denial of even the most fundamental of freedoms to beatings, imprisonment, torture, and even murder.

Given Canada's abhorrence of such conduct and its historic and international reputation as a champion of human rights, it is absolutely imperative that we do all within our power to ensure that the plight of the Polish people is constantly kept alive in world opinion.

Therefore, I urge the Government of Canada, through efforts at the United Nations and direct representations to both the Polish and Soviet governments, to let it be known that Canadians will tolerate nothing less than complete compliance with the Helsinki Accords, the cessation of Soviet intervention, and the full restoration of the democratic will of the people of Poland.

Let Poland be Poland, governed by its own people.

AGRICULTURE

ATTACK ON MEAT INSPECTION SERVICE—CONSEQUENCES FOR LIVESTOCK BREEDER

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, in the last weeks the House and the nation have heard the unwarranted attack on the meat inspection service of Canada. This attack was violent and short-lived as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), veterinarians, and agricultural associations rose to the defence of the meat inspection service, a service unsurpassed by any in the world.

Indirectly there was also an attack on the producers of buffalo meat that will cause long-term damage. It also damaged still another business, the beefalo business, like that of Manfred Kettler of Ashton, who has a very small farming operation. Until now Mr. Kettler could sell this meat from the cross between buffalo and cattle at a premium because of the superior quality of that meat. His current orders have been cancelled.

Yesterday we heard the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) praising his backbenchers and criticizing government backbenchers. On this side we speak when we have facts and can contribute to good government. I cannot believe the right hon. gentleman could praise his backbenchers who, in this case, were ignorant of the topics they discussed and did not care who suffered long-term hurt in their uninformed scramble for short-term political gain.

NATIVE PEOPLES

FUNDING OF ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, at a press conference which I attended last week, the National Association of Native Friendship Centres officially released their urban research study on alcohol, drug, and solvent abuse. This excellent study documents serious health needs of native people in our cities, which are not being adequately met at the present time with any of our existing programs.

In 1982 the federal Government established the National Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program to assist native communities in their efforts to combat the problem of substance abuse. This is an excellent program and it has had a good measure of success. However, as the Association's study shows, significant needs exist as well among native people who live in urban areas, and the Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program does not provide the help and counselling services needed by the native friendship centres to combat this problem.

• (1410)

Earlier this year the Minister expressed the Government's commitment to the Native Alcohol and Drug Abuse Program and gave his assurance that the funding needed to carry out this important work would be provided. In fact he called it a "growing program", and in this context I ask the Minister seriously to consider expanding the resources of this program so that it will include the needs of native people who live in the urban environment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government says it values the family. It would like us to believe its promise to deliver more help to the poor. Government members mouth the rhetoric of equality for women. However, actions speak louder than promises.

The reality is that the Government is intentionally taking support away from families raising children while giving away literally hundreds of thousands, in fact millions if not billions of dollars to the wealthy, the privileged, and the corporate. Erosion of the family allowance is but one part of the over-all strategy which will continually widen the gap between rich and poor. It sacrifices children for deficit reduction and reduces the one program which recognizes the child rearing work of women.

Tories feel smug because they are sure they have pulled the wool over the eyes of ordinary Canadians relying on the common myth that universal social programs give money to the wealthy. Bill C-70 exposes that myth. The deindexation of the family allowance takes its heaviest toll on the poor. Families with incomes under $10,000 will contribute 14 per cent of the money saved by this program while families with incomes over $80,000 will contribute a paltry 1 per cent.

Canadians know the Government has chosen to attack the most vulnerable group in society: women and children. They have watched as the Government has made a mockery of consultation, but Canadians have not been fooled.

AGRICULTURE

AGREEMENT ON PRICE OF 1985 TOBACCO CROP

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, following three consecutive days of bargaining last week, an agreement on the 1985 tobacco crop was reached between the Ontario flue-cured tobacco growers and the four major tobacco manufacturers. The agreement came after the Ontario Government failed to intervene and the federal Agriculture Minister took the extraordinary step, far beyond his statutory obligation, of mediating the negotiations personally.

The Minister's decisive role will result in the tobacco markets opening as early as possible in January. This is certainly good Christmas news for the Ontario tobacco-producing industry. In fact the producers were able to win a contract for 1985 of $320 million, representing a revenue increase of 10 per cent over the 1984 contract.

I was particularly pleased to see that all parties involved in the negotiations were reasonable and co-operative within the forum provided by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). It is certainly a significant accomplishment that such a resolution, which came through the Minister's efforts, should be reached after ten days of negotiations considering the previous nine months of unsuccessful bargaining between the producers and manufacturers.

Many of my constituents from Oxford as well as concerned parties from surrounding constituencies have been calling to voice their appreciation of the Minister for the role he played. I take this opportunity to put this appreciation on the record as it certainly comes from the grassroots of the tobacco-producing industry in Ontario.

THE ECONOMY

OECD'S FAVOURABLE REPORT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, have I got good news for you. Today the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development report gave Canada excellent marks for economic recovery and continued progress. The Government can be justly proud of the measures it has taken to bring about a brighter future for all Canadians. The report indicated that Canada has registered several notable successes, including the highest growth rate in GNP since 1976. Our Gross National Product is one of the best among the organization's 24-member countries.

What are the prophets of doom and gloom on the Liberal and Socialist benches doing? They cannot take good news. They will not give credit where credit is due. Tell me, Mr. Speaker, do you ever hear the Liberals or the NDP tell Canadians about the 416,000 new jobs, or the continued low inflation, or the declining interest rates? No. Why should they? It is good news and, God knows, they are not used to it.

We have record high housing starts, increased business investment, and the stock market is booming. That all means jobs and growth.

• (1415)

We are the first Government to make an effort to reduce the deficit. The OECD recognized this, but not the Liberals or the NDP. This Government has made the right decisions. Even though the Liberals and the NDP will not admit it, we know the rest of the world knows it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO ONTARIO SECURITIES COMMISSION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I am constrained to put my questions to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister likes to play very close to his brief and cite Hansard in response to any question he can. I would like him to refer to Hansard of yesterday which quite clearly sets out that the President of the Treasury Board flatly contradicts those statements found in the prospectus to prospective purchasers with relation to the prospective financial state of de Havilland in the next two or three years. There is a flat contradiction there. Since the exchange in the House yesterday, has the Government reviewed the contradiction which exists between the statement of the Minister and the prospectus? If the Government has not so reviewed the matter, will it refer the whole issue to the Ontario Securities Commission so that the prospectus can be analyzed?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the numbers which were referred to in the House yesterday dealt with projections which were made just about one year ago, or slightly more than one year ago. They were revised by de Havilland themselves—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: The numbers were revised. I tell all Members that at that time we expected to have a loss for de Havilland of some $65 million in 1985 and a loss of roughly $14 million in 1986. Today the facts show that in 1985 the loss is expected to be $83 million and the projected loss for next year is expected to be $50 million, which is what I have said in this House all along. That just shows the extent to which long-term projections which are made in advance with respect to this particular industry can be somewhat off. That is all.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO AUDITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister is so far off the mark here that he owes an explanation to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The figures which he has again recited before Your Honour flatly contradict the figures which appear in a prospectus which was circulated to prospective purchasers of de Havilland. Either the Minister is misrepresenting the facts or the prospectus misrepresents the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would again ask that the Deputy Prime Minister refer this whole matter to the Auditor General, who has a role to audit the CDIC, or refer it to the appropriate federal or provincial authorities in order to get some reconciliation here.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I object strongly to the allegations made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: We never misrepresented the facts.

Ms. Copps: You did so.

Mr. de Cotret: We had a very reputable firm make an objective analysis of the facts as it saw them at that time more than 12 months ago.

An Hon. Member: You misled the House.

Mr. de Cotret: That was not a mispresentation. In this House I have reaffirmed time and time again the numbers which I am affirming today. That is not a misrepresentation in any way, shape, or form. There is no reason to question the integrity of honest Canadian firms which are doing work objectively for this Government or any other Government.

Ms. Copps: It's your integrity we are questioning.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister suggesting that this prospectus was not used by the investment bankers concerned to invite offers for the purchase of de Havilland and that it was not used with Boeing and other prospective purchasers? If that is what he is saying, then let's have it.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say this to the Deputy Prime Minister. Because of the confusion and contradictions we find here, will the Minister not allow this whole matter to come before a parliamentary committee within the 90 days permitted for the conclusion of the sale so that Parliament can have all the requisite documents and so that Parliament can summon the Minister and the investment bankers to find out how these figures were arrived at?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the point is very simple—

Mr. Gauthier: Yes or no?

Mr. de Cotret: We made all the information available to all of the potential bidders throughout the process. At the beginning we made the information talked about by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition available to all of the potential bidders at that time. Throughout the process, when the forecast changed—and forecasts do change—

Mr. Gauthier: Ministers also.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Show us those other documents.

Mr. de Cotret: A former Minister of Finance should know that forecasts change every once in a while. He has had that experience.

An Hon. Member: He was in the film industry, wasn't he?

Mr. de Cotret: We have made all the information available as the event unfolded—

Mr. Gauthier: Change the Minister.

Mr. de Cotret: —and no prospective bidder was prevented from access to that kind of information at any point in the process.

WORLD PRODUCT MANDATE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. One of the terms he has particularly bragged about is the world product mandate he has guaranteed for de Havilland for its products. Why, in that case, does the perspective offer to purchasers the advantage of being able to make de Havilland planes in other countries and not exclusively in our country?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I have tried to explain—

An Hon. Member: You never did.

Mr. Gauthier: You didn't succeed.

Mr. de Cotret: —to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I obviously did not get my message across.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Nor to the country you haven't got your message across.

Mr. de Cotret: But I've tried to explain to him what a world product mandate is.

An Hon. Member: Do it again.

Mr. Rossi: Open up and come clean.

Mr. de Cotret: Let me try again.

An Hon. Member: The Leader of the Opposition is very slow.

Mr. de Cotret: A world product mandate means that the product lines which are currently under production at de Havilland in Canada will be kept in Canada; that the technology which is used in producing those product lines will be retained in Canada; and that the Canadian firm, de Havilland, will have the only mandate to sell those aircraft, and the technology embodied in those aircraft, across the world. That is a world product mandate. That's clear.

Mr. Deans: How is that different from what it has now?

FOREIGN PRODUCTION—MINISTERIAL APPROVAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it says in the information statement put out by the Minister—undated—"No foreign production will be allowed without the approval of the Minister". Now why is foreign production contemplated at all?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: Boeing is getting all of this technology for free. It has been written off. Why does the agreement not say clearly that no foreign production of this equipment, which Boeing gets for nothing and for which the Canadian people have paid nearly $1 billion, will be done outside of Canada, period? Why isn't that the deal?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, apart from the preamble, which contained in itself a number of assertions and questions, let me say first that the book value of de Havilland is less than $150 million at the time of which we are speaking.

An Hon. Member: Says who?

Mr. de Cotret: Second—

Mr. Kaplan: The land is there.

Mr. de Cotret: No, no, don't get on the land question. The land value is minimal compared to the book value of the corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: Second—

Mr. Gauthier: Peanuts.

Mr. Chrétien: I'll pay you two bucks for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: Peanuts.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Chrétien: Let's make a deal, Robert. We can sign the deal right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is perfectly clear that the answer is not wanted. And it is becoming clearer.

An Hon. Member: He's out to lunch.

Ms. Copps: Still.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Minister want to finish his answer?

Mr. de Cotret: The land value is immaterial to this question. It's part of the deal. And, quite honestly, when we talk about the hundreds of millions of dollars which were poured into the corporation, I think, Mr. Speaker, it is totally misleading to suggest that the money went exclusively to finance technology. The money went largely to finance operating losses. Canadians have paid over $800 million over the last several years to maintain that company and are scheduled to pay another $200 million in the coming year. We now have the most successful company in the world in this field willing to give its management, technological and R and D expertise to support the employment and growth of this company.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF GULF REFINERY IN MONTREAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[Translation]

The existing refinery facilities are essential to Quebec, according to several experts. Since Ultramar would close down the Gulf refinery in Montreal if its takeover bid is approved, has the Minister recommended that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion intervene to prevent a takeover that would result in the loss of 490 jobs?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): The Director responsible for enforcement of the Combines Investigation Act and for examining this transaction reached the conclusion that competition had been restricted owing to the elimination of one competitor, and he was therefore making his comments in his official capacity and transmitting them to the authorities and to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada, for subsequent decision by the Government.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am asking for a clear statement of Government policy. The newly elected Government of the Province of Quebec indicates that it disapproves of the takeover bid by Ultramar because it will result in a loss of jobs. As well, there will be a reduction in competition in Quebec which will result in increased consumer costs if this deal is proceeded with. Since we do not want either increased costs to consumers or a loss of jobs, will the federal Government do its job and make sure this takeover bid is not proceeded with?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the Government and the Minister responsible for Investment Canada to consider all the points he has to take into account in order to make a decision. Competition is only one aspect of this issue. The Minister responsible will look into the other points which should be considered and he will give us his decision later on.

PROTECTION OF JOBS IN MONTREAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, pricing is one thing and we need competition here. That is very clear from studies with which the Minister is very familiar. I am also concerned about the job situation. There was another takeover bid which would guarantee that those jobs stay in the Province of Quebec. We would thereby protect jobs and the consumer. Therefore, I repeat, will the Government take the appropriate action and encourage the bid which would keep the jobs in Montreal instead of the bid which would lose them?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, following recommendations by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Ultramar-Gulf case is now under review by Investment Canada. As soon as the review is over, that information will be released.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—ESTIMATED SALES OF DASH-8 AIRCRAFT

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Earlier he said that forecasts change. The Government forecast on the bank bail-out cost us $1 billion.

The de Havilland prospectus states that there is a worldwide potential to sell around 300 Dash-8 aircraft by 1994, and that the company is operating on the basis of that estimate. Will the Minister admit that the royalties he has bragged about are just window-dressing? They are not real because the royalties start at 400 units and the prospectus estimates sales of only 300 units by 1994.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Again, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making reference to a document produced well over a year ago.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That is your problem.

Mr. de Cotret: I have not bragged—

Mr. Gauthier: Show us the documents.

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, I have bragged. I bragged about one thing and I am not at all ashamed to brag about it again. This deal will create more investment, more jobs, and more job security for the employees of de Havilland than they had under Crown ownership. That is the important thing. I will brag about that as long as you want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said earlier that the forecast has changed and that higher losses are projected. Is he now telling us that the forecast has changed again and that higher sales are projected? It is clear that the de Havilland deal is unravelling before our eyes every day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Berger: Has the Government not learned from the bank fiasco that it acts in haste at the peril of the Canadian taxpayer? Will he not submit the sale to a full parliamentary review prior to closing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last of the three questions is no. I have made that very clear before. The answer is absolutely no.

Mr. Chrétien: Arrogant.

Mr. de Cotret: In answer to the first question as to whether the forecast is changing; yes, it is changing. With regard to whether the 400 is changing; yes, it is changing. It is changing because over that period of time we have identified and been able to negotiate, with a world class producer, a deal that will accelerate the whole process, open new markets, and create new jobs and new investment. Yes, that will accelerate what we had in that prospectus and, hopefully, lead to a more stable employment situation in the whole industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX RULING INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. I say to him that if this deal could stand public scrutiny he would have sent it to a parliamentary committee three weeks ago.

Will the Minister confirm that the Boeing deal is now held up pending a tax ruling and that the Government and Boeing are seeking a tax ruling that will allow Boeing to take tax losses of de Havilland and, in some obscure way, apply them to the leasing of de Havilland planes to Canadian consumers? Where is that covered in the Income Tax Act?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, the deal is not being held up in any way by any tax ruling.

MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister then explain the comments he made in his initial press conference indicating that Boeing was going to be prevented from applying some of these tax losses in some directions and allowed to apply them in other directions, both of which provisions are not covered under the Corporations Tax Act? Can he explain that? Has the Cabinet made a special promise to Boeing that it can get special treatment on the tax losses of de Havilland worth $400 million?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is no special $400 million tax concession.

Mr. Foster: How much?

Mr. de Cotret: Second, Mr. Speaker, Cabinet has not been asked to make a decision in this matter. Third, a tax ruling is being sought by Boeing and de Havilland, as we have outlined from the beginning, that limits, as I have mentioned in the House before, the potential of using the tax loss carry-forward for the good of the sale of de Havilland products in Canada. That is proceeding. It is not holding up the agreement. It is not holding up any legal procedures or the signing of any documents. It is going along in the normal way and will not cost anywhere close to the $400 million which the Member suggests.

Mr. Cassidy: How much will it cost?

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVIEW TRANSACTION BETWEEN GULF AND ULTRAMAR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. The Montreal East Survival Committee, the Official Opposition, the Premier of Quebec and the Director of Combines Investigations are asking the Government to block the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar.

My question is as follows: Now that we know the truth, could the Minister inform the House whether the Government is prepared to take immediate action to oppose the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar, in order to save 450 jobs and protect consumers in Quebec?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I can inform the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie that we have shown our concern for the people in his area who work in the petrochemical industry at Gulf in Montreal. We met with them this week. In fact, he was there. All aspects of the case were discussed and assessed, and we listened to what these people had to say.

After ordering an investigation, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has now submitted the results to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who is responsible for Investment Canada. The case will be reviewed, and as soon as an answer is forthcoming it will be made public.

INQUIRY IF MINISTER IS WILLING TO RECOMMEND TRANSACTION BE NULLIFIED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Are Ministers appointed to make decisions or does this Government leave it all up to their officials? The Minister attended the meeting on Monday, where representatives told him that the refinery would be closing down this Friday if no decision was made by then. Is the Minister prepared to assume his political responsibilities and recommend that the takeover bid be cancelled, in order to keep this refinery open in Montreal East? Is the Minister capable of assuming his responsibilities?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed how the Hon. Member asks his questions and the arrogance with which he is trying to politicize this debate. Mr. Speaker, the Government has shown its concern for workers in Montreal as it has elsewhere. We have created 416,000 new jobs in the last twelve months. What does he have to say to the people in Montreal about that—83,000 in Quebec alone? We are doing something about it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RECOMMEND TRANSACTION BE BLOCKED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning Ultramar and Gulf's Montreal East refinery. Is the Minister now prepared to make a recommendation to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada aimed at blocking the deal between Ultramar and Gulf Canada and keeping the 490 jobs in Montreal East? Is he now prepared to make that recommendation?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question a moment ago. The Minister responsible for Investment Canada must take a number of factors into consideration, including competition. On that basis, the Director of Investigation under the Combines Investigation Act submitted a report to the effect that the competition factor was negative. There are other points to clear up, however, and the Minister will weigh the pros and cons before announcing his decision at the appropriate time.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, but I have no idea how Investment Canada officials will react. All I want to know is whether the Minister himself is now prepared to recommend that the Montreal deal be blocked so as to save the 490 jobs.

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss for words: the answer was clear and precise, but they do not want to understand. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has stated quite clearly that he has ordered an inquiry. The facts are there and he submitted them to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who is responsible for Investment Canada. The matter is under review and we will make an announcement in due time. That is clear.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO U.S. NEGOTIATOR ON CULTURAL MATTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister for International Trade a question about a current report by the Canadian Press which attributes to Ambassador Clayton Yeutter, the chief negotiator in the free trade negotiations with Canada, the following statement. He said that if the two countries start limiting the scope of negotiations before they even begin, they could be "shooting ourselves in the foot". He said that as important as cultural matters may be to Canada, he hopes they do not overwhelm important economic issues and that the term "culture" should be defined in such a way as to leave it on the negotiating table. Does the Minister agree with that statement?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I advise the right hon. gentleman that the Prime Minister laid that to rest in Chicago. It has been repeated here in the House many times that our cultural sovereignty is not on the table. Our cultural identity is not on the table and it is not at risk in these discussions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON CULTURAL SOVEREIGNTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister reconcile his statement made just now in the House with what he is reported by Canadian Press to have said in response to Mr. Yeutter? It reads:

● (1440)

Kelleher reiterated that the Government does not plan to do anything to hurt cultural sovereignty, but said at this point it will not take any specific cultural industries off the negotiating table.

How does he reconcile that statement with the Prime Minister's Chicago statement?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to reconcile. We have said in the House many times that we are not taking specific cultural industries off the table.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: But we have said quite clearly that nothing that we will do will impair our cultural sovereignty or our cultural integrity. We intend to stand by that now and during the discussions. You have no concerns whatsoever in that area.

HEALTH

TINNED TUNA—DETENTION OF CANS PACKED IN 1984

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that it was recently reported that Star-Kist is now in the process of recalling another 19,000 tins of tuna from the shelves, or has recently done so, and in view of the fact that a government official has said that this action follows recommendations by the Department of Health and Welfare which resulted from consumer complaints, will the Minister confirm that has indeed happened?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I, along with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, announced today the detention of two lots of 6.5 ounce cans of chunk light tuna packed in water. I have the lot numbers here. They were canned on June 30, 1984, and July 11, 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McDermid: Who was the Prime Minister then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Tuna Turner.

Mr. Mazankowski: Who was the Prime Minister then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PLACEMENT ON STORE SHELVES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Whether it is bad Conservative tuna or bad Liberal tuna, it seems to me that the Canadian people are getting tired of this kind of action. Will the Minister tell the House how this tuna got on the shelf? Does he anticipate that there will be further recalls of bad tuna, whether Liberal or Conservative tuna?

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals are singing a different tuna now.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Hon. Member, to the House and the public generally, that it is intolerable that fish products or food products that are rancid and do not meet the standards that I believe society demands are either placed on our shelves or can be purchased by Canadians. That is the basis on which the Government is operating and that is why these two lots have been put in detention. Obviously the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and myself will take every step we can, through our officials and our Departments and through the power of the Government, to make sure that those principles are not violated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

ACCOMMODATION IN THE WORKPLACE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday's Supreme Court decisions on the O'Malley and Bhinder cases were welcomed in part because they affirm the concept that unintentional or systemic discrimination falls clearly within the Ontario Human Rights Code. However, the Court's decision with respect to an employer's obligation to provide reasonable accommodation leaves unclear the jurisdiction of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and could be devastating to thousands of disabled people who require reasonable accommodation in the workplace.

Will the Minister, in accordance with the recommendations of the Obstacles Report and recommendation 80 of the Equality for All Report, put forward on an urgent basis amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act to ensure that employers will continue to be expected to make reasonable accommodations—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is very long.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is the first serious and intelligent question that has been asked in the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is not likely to be the best answer.

Mr. Crosbie: I am delighted that at least one Member of the House has a serious and intelligent question to ask, the answer to which is, Mr. Chairman—Mr. Speaker—Your Reverence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, it is under consideration and I think the hon. lady will welcome the action we take when we take it, but I cannot reveal the nature of that action right now.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

APPARENT CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS BY TWO MINISTERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. He just informed us that the facts are there and that everything is crystal clear. I want to ask the Minister how he can reconcile his statement with the statement made by his colleague of Consumer and Corporate Affairs yesterday, who said that contrary to what the industry is saying, the refineries were not able to refine enough petroleum to meet the demand in Quebec, and the two statements of his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who said in the House, and I quote: "Mr. Speaker, the decision to shut down the refinery was made because of surplus capacity." How can he reconcile these two approaches coming from the same Government?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my hon. friend that the comments attributed to me were actually made by the Director of Combines Investigations, following a study of this takeover bid. Those were not my words but his own comments, made from an entirely neutral and independent position.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in fact, the Minister was speaking on behalf of the Director yesterday when he held his press conference. I would ask the Minister: Does he agree with these remarks, yes or no?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, in answering this question yesterday I said that any negative impact on competition that in turn would have a detrimental effect on the consumer was a matter of great concern to me.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Again it deals with his decision to act unilaterally with regard to transfer payments to the provinces. Does the Minister not agree with what he said in the House on March 23, 1982, as reported at page 15758 of Hansard:

> This is not time for confrontation and it is no time for unilateral action.

In other words, this is a matter which should be negotiated with the provinces rather than the federal Government imposing it upon the provinces.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me take the Hon. Member back to the basic reason why we have taken this decision. I think it is set out very clearly, if he wants to read the front page of today's Globe and Mail. We are trying to get the economy moving better and the OECD report says that the economy's performance is doing very, very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If we can continue in this direction we will be better able to afford these programs. An OECD economist went on to say that, in an unusual practice, the report did not include a chapter of recommendations to policy makers because there were very few recommendations they could make. We were doing everything right. That is what we will continue to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EFFECT ON MEDICAL CARE COSTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my concern is not that he can read the Globe but that he can live up to the statement he made in the House when he was in opposition.

Will the Minister not admit that by imposing artificial limits on the amount by which transfer payments will increase he is ignoring the fact that it is known that the cost of medicare services will go up by more than he is promising the provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the numbers that the Hon. Member has referred to are artificial. In fact I would say to him that the increase in the GNP of 4.5 per cent this year is not artificial. The reduction in interest rates by 3 percentage points is not artificial. The increase in investment spending of 11 per cent is not artificial. The increase in housing starts of 25 per cent is not artificial. The real drop in the deficit this year is not artificial.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rossi: Bank failures are not artificial.

FINANCE

BALANCED BUDGET INITIATIVE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Friday, December 13, President Reagan signed an historic public debt statute amendment, whereby the United States must achieve a balanced budget by 1991. Even though this amendment excludes the cost of servicing the debt, it is a major step forward. Given the size of our debt, my question is:—

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Attewell: Will we take an initiative such as this one, which I strongly endorse? If so, when will we be doing it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking a very pertinent question. In fact, what we have been doing by our actions is moving in the direction which the Gramm-Rudman Bill has proposed. This year the level of government spending, exclusive of interest costs and transfer payments to individuals and persons, will be absolutely flat. A year ago, under the previous administration, it increased by 10.8 per cent. We will continue in that direction. As we continue in that direction, we will be able to get the deficit under better control.

I forgot one statistic in my last answer. Three hundred—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

REQUEST THAT NO APPOINTMENTS BE MADE DURING CHRISTMAS PARLIAMENTARY RECESS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns patronage. We are fast approaching the anniversary of last year's orgy of political patronage, wherein 150 faithful of the Tories were appointed to the public trough. Will the Deputy Prime Minister, here and now, commit himself to not appointing anyone during the Christmas break, so as to permit the Parliament of Canada to be fully apprised of the political appointments of the Government, in the spirit of reform announced by his Leader last September 9? Yes, or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am almost tempted to say what break, but I won't.

Mr. Prud'homme: You are right; we will be here next week.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: However, I would like to say to the Hon. Member seriously that, as he knows and as his House Leader will have told him, it is my intention to table amendments to the Standing Orders in respect of the reform package which was brought in by the very distinguished Committee on House Reform. Included in that package, the Hon. Member will also know, is the whole question of the opportunity for standing committees to review Order in Council appointments. This is a progressive step taken by the Government. I invite the Hon. Member and his Party to allow these particular improvements to our policies and procedures to be passed quickly—

Mr. Gauthier: Let's discuss them first.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —so that we can get on with the job early next year.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, that is not what I asked. Let me give the Government House Leader another chance.

HEALTH

REMOVAL OF CANNED TUNA FROM STORE SHELVES—REASON FOR INSPECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Just a few minutes ago he pointed out that the tuna which is now being removed from the shelves was canned in the middle of the summer, I believe he said, of 1984. He will recall that that is approximately the same period that the other very bad tuna was canned; within two months of the tuna which was removed from the shelves in September. I would just like the Minister to clarify it. Could he tell us why this tuna is now being removed from the shelves, and could he produce for the House the inspection reports which were done at the time?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the first comments of the Leader of the NDP are not accurate. The second point I should like to make is that the tuna in question, which was canned at the time the former Government was in charge—

An Hon. Member: That is when John Tuna was Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Tiny Tuna Turner.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What I want to say to the hon. gentleman is that, when he was Prime Minister, this tuna in question was never inspected by his inspectors.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We were in the middle of an election campaign.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The point that I make, coming back to the question—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is the point? Was it brought to the attention of the Minister?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Coming back to the question of the Leader of the NDP, there was a consumer complaint last week, and immediately both Fisheries and Health and Welfare checked the lot numbers, and that is why there was a news release.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, just so that Canadian do not run into this every two or three months with tuna products, is there any conceivable reason, in the judgment of the Minister, that Canadians should have any apprehension during the Christmas period or beyond about purchasing any other can of tuna in the country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, both Fisheries and the Health Protection Branch of Health and Welfare are checking the stock of the company in question. I want to assure the Hon. Member that the work is ongoing and the monitoring is ongoing. I can assure both him and consumers that, to the best of our knowledge, with all the details we have and all the work we are doing, both the inspection system and our monitoring are fulfilling the exact requirements which he has mentioned.

CHILDREN

CONVENING OF CONFERENCE ON MISSING CHILDREN

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. This week he announced some important new measures in respect of missing children across Canada. One of those is the convening of a national conference on missing children. Can the Solicitor General indicate when this conference might be held? I say the sooner the better, because missing children are a problem in every urban centre across Canada, and I think action should be taken as quickly as possible.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. I think it would be appropriate for me to start by paying tribute to the Hon. Member for Halifax West for his efforts on behalf of missing children.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: We will be convening the conference early in the new year, as early as possible. Perhaps the best Christmas present which the Government can give to parents across the country is the assurance that everything we can possibly do to protect their children will be done just as quickly as possible.

FUTURE OF REPAIR SHOPS IN MONCTON, N.B.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Are the CN shops in Moncton up for sale?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, not that I am aware of.

REPORTED VISIT BY GENERAL ELECTRIC OFFICIALS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain, then, why there was a secret visit by officials from General Electric to the CN shops on the weekend? Furthermore, could he give us the assurance that there is no secret agenda in relation to the CN shops in Moncton?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of a so-called secret visit. I will certainly check with CN to see whether there is any validity to the statement which has been made, and report back to the Hon. Member.

GRAIN

USE OF PRINCE RUPERT GRAIN TERMINAL NO. 1

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. As he knows, Prince Rupert Grain Terminal No. 1 has been moth-balled for almost a year. The Government of Alberta contracted Price Waterhouse to evaluate profitable ways of operating the facility. They have completed that report and have concluded that the facility can reasonably and profitably ship 500,000 tonnes per year of feed pellets. Will the Minister take some steps—the elevator has been closed almost the whole year—to see it reopened since it can be operated profitably with available feedstocks?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interest of the Hon. Member. I hope he is doing his part to try to find an alternative use for PRG No. 1 as well. A number of parties have expressed an interest in the utilization of this facility. I have acted as a facilitator, to try to get the members of the consortium and the interested parties together. We will continue to be working in that regard because it is our desire to see the facility remain open and operational.

POSSIBLE STORAGE OF ORE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question. As the Minister knows, PRG is now stripping grain terminal No. 1; it is taking off the dryer and moving it. As he also knows, there is a proposal to move various kinds of processed ore through the facility. Can he assure the House, first, that the facility will reopen using feedstocks and, second, if ore is to be stored there, that it will not hamper the operation and viability of that facility for grain and feed products?

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that it would be a requirement of the facility to have a dryer for the movement of ore through it.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honor to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of 13, presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, December 17, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Certain petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson), the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY STATEMENT BY MR. GAUTHIER

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice of a desire to raise a point of order from the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to an exchange that took place in the House yesterday as reported on page 9523 of Hansard in the upper left hand corner. There is a statement attributed to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that I believe is not only unparliamentary but also quite unworthy of the Hon. Member, a Member for whom I have a great deal of respect. I am sure he would want to check the record and make the appropriate withdrawal.

Mr. Gauthier: I am checking Hansard now. I never said it was deliberate, did I? I would not want to call my friend a liar, I would never do that. I retract the statement if I gave that impression.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Transport in the two official languages.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether you are aware that that report is a report of the Conservative members of that committee only. It is not signed by members of the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order to attest that the committee report is being improperly tabled or is he simply making a statement on a point of order?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I was just asking whether you were aware of the fact.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that questions to the Speaker are out of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out that that is a report of the Conservative members of the committee and not of members of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order on which to rise.

Mr. Nowlan: I asked to be heard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: It was not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) have a separate point of order he wishes to raise?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a separate point of order which absolutely obliterates any pretentious point of order on the opposite side. The report is a duly presented committee report by unanimous vote. If the heat in the kitchen is too much—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe I have a point of order in this case.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) indicated that it was a unanimous report of the committee. The Member said clearly it was a unanimous report of the committee. I want to point out that that is quite untrue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. None of these have been proper points of order and I think all of the Members involved know it.

PETITIONS

RAIL PASSES OF CP PENSIONERS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition today signed by more than 50 residents of Schreiber, Ontario. These petitioners condemn the decision of CP Rail to cancel the rail passes of CP pensioners who retired prior to 1978. These pensioners, family and friends ask that Parliament help them in their fight for their rights since they are not represented at any collective bargaining table.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions for the House today. The first one is from British Columbia, of course. The petitioners are concerned about the effect that deindexation on family allowance will have on them and their families. They are particularly concerned that the cut-backs will take $600 million a year away from their children by 1990.

The second petition is from Ontario. These petitioners are also concerned about the need for this House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair increases that have been brought in since the Conservatives were elected.

The third petition is from Nova Scotia. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotians are very concerned about getting full indexation of family allowances, again because so many hundreds of millions of dollars will be taken away from children by 1990.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present, both are identical. One is from residents of various centres in British Columbia and the other one is from various centres in Nova Scotia. All of the petitioners state that the deindexation of universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions today. One is from a number of residents in my own constituency of New Westminster-Coquitlam and a very large number of petitioners from Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, humbly begging us not to allow any deindexation to take place in family allowances.

The second petition is a similar petition from a number of petitioners in New Brunswick.

The third is from a number of petitioners in the Province of Quebec also requesting that there be no deindexation in family allowances.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my petition is from constituents in my riding of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador who are calling upon Parliament to petition the Government to rescind the order that will come in on January 1 whereby pension income will be considered as income for unemployment insurance purposes. This will have a great impact on a lot of middle-aged workers who want to take early retirement and cannot do so.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): I have four or five petitions here, Mr. Speaker, representing the views of residents from my constituency, the towns of Young, Watrous, Semans, Govan, Nocomis and Lockwood. They point out that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by these changes. They, therefore, request the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance program and to rescind the unfair tax increases that were proposed.

CONCERN ABOUT FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Liberal Members have been amazed lately at the constant representations made by citizens of the City of Moncton who are terrorized by the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could I just have the petition, please?

Mr. Tobin: I have a petition to present today on behalf of residents of Moncton who want to bring to the Government's attention the constant rumours that are striking fear into the hearts and souls of the people of Moncton regarding lay-offs from the CN shops in Moncton and they petition that the Minister make a clear and unequivocal statement indicating that the future of the shops in Moncton will be sound.

I have a second petition from the people of Moncton. Several hundred residents of that community petition the Government to make an unequivocal, clear statement regarding the future of CN's operations in Moncton to ensure that the 1200 jobs that are at stake there shall be stabilized and the people of Moncton will be able to sleep at night and enjoy Christmas because at this point, they have not received a clear statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people from the constituency of St. Albert including people from the communities of Leask, Shelbrook, Mont Nebo and Canwood. The undersigned humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present today. The first two deal with the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay. The first petition points out that the test range causes environmental damage to Nanoose Bay and adjacent areas and that it is of doubtful economic value. It calls upon the Government not to renew the agreement between Canada and the United States authorizing the joint maintenance and use of the said test range and to bring to an end all weapons testing at the said test range.

The second petition also deals with the Nanoose Bay test range and calls for a full public inquiry before the agreement is renegotiated and signed.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is from a number of residents of British Columbia and concerns the deindexing of the family allowance, pointing out that this constitutes an unfair attack upon families and especially upon single-parent mothers, that the deindexing is being balanced by tax giveaways to large corporations and calling on the Government to rescind the deindexing and the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition from Canadian residents at the Centre Marie-Salomé in Québec, who are opposed to deindexation of family allowances and to the unfair increases in sales tax, excise tax and income tax, and who humbly pray that full indexation of family allowances be reinstated and unfair tax increases be revoked.

[English]

I also have a petition from people from a number of places in Ontario including Brantford, Waterford, Simcoe, Turkey Point, Port Dover, as well as people from British Columbia including Vancouver, Richmond and White Rock, pointing out that the reduction of the effective buying power of the family allowance along with the new taxes on low-income houses will hurt low-income families severely and they request that the Government rescind the tax increases and stop the deindexation of the family allowance.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today on two separate topics. The first petition is on behalf of the women's coalition asking the Government to withdraw Bill C-70.

DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN ETOBICOKE NORTH

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the second petition I have to present is from a group of individuals who reside on Timothy Court, a new street in my constituency of Etobicoke North, and they call upon the Government through Canada Post to provide door-to-door mail delivery given that this street is located in a well established area in the riding and is not a new subdivision.

CONCERN ABOUT FUTURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first is from the residents of the City of Moncton, New Brunswick, who are protesting very loudly and clearly regarding the lay-offs that have taken place at the CN main shops in Moncton. These residents are appalled by the lack of attention and concern the Government is giving that area—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is perfectly reasonable to read the prayer. It is the preamble and the whole speech surrounding it that is out of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, you consider that to be a preamble, Mr. Speaker? I was considering it to be a fact.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member would like to complete the reading of his petition.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They request that the Government bring an end to the constant rumours that strike fear into the minds and hearts of employees and citizens of our communities by taking appropriate action to ensure that there will be no further downsizing or closure of the CN main shops in Moncton, New Brunswick.

My second petition is from additional residents of the City of Moncton who, like the previous petitioners, are appalled with regard to the closure—

Mr. Speaker, do you have a problem?

Mr. Speaker: Please. I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Dingwall: I respectfully request to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Dingwall: I respectfully request to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Andre: You haven't shown respect for anything.

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, shut your mouth.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. What is the point of order of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thought you were motioning to me and that is why I asked the question as I did. You have a habit of motioning to Hon. Members and I was trying to interpret what the motion meant and that is why I was asking the question.

Mr. Speaker: That's right. I do not think I need to say that there was not a point of order there.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions from the riding of Vancouver-Kingsway to present. The petitioners pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases. I would like to table those petitions on behalf of my constituents.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to present a series of petitions on behalf of Canadians across the country who are asking the Government to move back on its deindexation plans for family allowances and to return to the promise that was made to them during the election campaign. I have petitions from Windsor West, from Saskatoon East, from Mississauga, from Mississauga South and from Saskatoon East.

[Translation]

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF CN MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling a number of petitions from residents in the ridings of Moncton and Westmorland-Kent, in New Brunswick.

The first petition contains 400 names and the second probably 500 names. These people are very concerned about the present situation at the CN shops in Moncton.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have two more petitions from residents in my riding of Westmorland-Kent, namely from Haute-Abujagane, Shediac, and Robichaud, who are asking the Government to apply full indexation to family allowances.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a few petitions I would like to present to the House this afternoon.

The first, from the Ontario Vankleek Hill area in my riding, concerns Bill C-70 and the petitioners ask the Government to withdraw the Bill.

The second comes from the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie which is so ably represented in the House, and asks for the same thing.

This one comes from the beautiful riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. Another one from the riding of Hull-Aylmer. One from the riding of Louis-Hébert, and one from the riding of Western Arctic in the Northwest Territories.

All these petitioners urge the Government to withdraw Bill C-70.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of residents of my riding also signed a petition asking that nothing be changed in the current situation concerning family allowances. They strongly denounce the Government's intention to deindex family allowances. Those hundreds of people reside in my riding, more specifically in Richmond, Windsor, Brompton, Bishopton, Stoke, Saint-Denis, Asbestos and Disraeli. I have the honour to present their petition to the House.

• (1520)

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have four petitions to present today. The first one is from British Columbia. It protests the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits which are projected to reach $600 million annually by the year 1990, on top of sales tax increases, excise tax increases and income tax increases. The petitioners consider this to be unfair. They state that it places an extraordinary burden on middle and low income households. The petition is signed by residents of Delta, Surrey, Richmond, Burnaby and Vancouver.

The second petition I have is a petition which asks Parliament to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit. It is signed by residents of York-Sunbury in New Brunswick.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my third petition, which protests against de-indexation of family allowances and the Government's public retrenchment from the child tax credit, which constitutes an unfair attack against—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it this is another petition on exactly the same subject. The Hon. Member merely need say that and where it is from.

[Translation]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, there is some emphasis here on the status of women and the petition is from Montreal.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO 1985 BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the fourth petition criticizes the hand-outs made in the Budget of last May, such as the $500,000 tax-free capital gains exemption, greater RRSP deductions—

Mr. Speaker: What is the petition, please? Perhaps I should say this once clearly. The Hon. Member should make a brief summary of the subject clearly indicating what the petitioners are asking for, that is, the prayer, and perhaps where it comes from. That is it. I should take very little time. Otherwise it becomes difficult for the House, which is the whole purpose of my attempts to get Hon. Members to be brief with the summaries of their petitions, and that is the only reason.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I will attempt to follow briefly through this particular petition. It attacks and asks for changes in the budget hand-outs with respect to tax-free capital gains, greater RRSP deductions for high income recipients, the $9 billion in hand-outs to the oil companies and the $1 billion bail-out to the banks. It comes from such towns as Woodstock, London, Ingersoll, Norwich and my former hometown of Tavistock.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from my constituents in the riding of Ottawa Centre and other parts of Ottawa who protest the deindexation of the universal family allowance. They term this move an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. The petitioners tell the House that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. They pray the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and rescind the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a group of residents of the province of Quebec, who are also asking that Bill C-70 be withdrawn and full indexation of family allowances maintained.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in total, I have some 350 signatures on a number of petitions which come from many places in Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces and western Canada. The petitioners share in the strong objections which have been registered in the House for many months with respect to the deindexing of the family allowance.

Mr. Speaker, 17 are from the town of St. Marys in Ontario, and approximately 50 are from the Province of Quebec, in particularly from Charlesbourg in the City of Quebec. A number are from Jerseyville and Stoney Creek in the Hamilton area. A number are from Vancouver, including Richmond. These petitioners also object to the deindexing of the family allowance. A number of the petitioners are from Halifax, Enfield, Emsdale and other parts of the Province of Nova Scotia.

A number are from the riding of my friend—

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is saying he has several more petitions.

Mr. Cassidy: From Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have some additional petitions which I hope to be able to table, causing as little vexation as possible to Your Honour. All of these petitions express a concern which, if disregarded by the Government, will impel a new wave of resentment, if not hostility, toward the present Government—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Incorrect in order.

Mr. McCurdy: —and its Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

The first of these comes from British Columbia. It is signed by several citizens of Canada who are exercising their ancient and undoubted right to petition this House. They humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

I have another petition which Your Honour will notice is pink and, therefore, in substance, different. It is from New Brunswick and it is signed by a number of people who are exercising their right to petition the Government for a change in policy. They refer to the extraordinary sums of money which have been accorded the wealthy and huge corporations while at the same time taking funds from the pockets of the poor, of women and of children at the expense of the family. They ask that the indexation of the universal family allowance be retained and that tax measures—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member has petitions on one subject, that is, the family allowance?

Mr. McCurdy: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I think the Hon. Member knows he can be more brief than he has been.

Mr. McCurdy: I will attempt, in so far as it is possible to do so, while at the same reflecting with some precision what the concerns of these signatories are—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Andre: You are supposed to sit down when the Speaker stands up.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the right to present the prayer and make a very brief summary. If he wants to read Beauchesne's on this—and perhaps all Members would be helped if they read it—he should. Therefore, I will recognize him to speak for a few seconds longer.

Mr. McCurdy: These people from Ontario humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: I have another set of signatures from petitioners in Manitoba who petition the House to reinstate full indexation of the family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege today to present four petitions. Because the contents are substantially similar, with your permission, perhaps I might present three of these petitions together, thus avoiding being contentious, tendentious, circumlocutory or gratuitous.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parry: I would say, by way of preamble, that these petitions are on the same topic as the petitions presented by the Hon. Members for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock). They humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

The fourth petition—

[Translation]

—Mr. Speaker, is signed by residents of Montreal who are asking to have full indexation of family allowances reinstated and unfair tax increases revoked.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour today to present once again a number of petitions from different parts in Canada on the whole question of family allowance. The first one is from Edmonton, Alberta. It calls for a fully indexed family allowance. It asks the House of Commons to rescind unfair tax increases.

● (1530)

The next petition is from British Columbia. The petitioners are very concerned as well about the impact that deindexing family allowances will have on families and calls for the full indexation of universal family allowance.

The next petition is from my own riding of Vancouver East, the Strathcona community, which is in Chinatown in Vancouver. It calls as well for fully indexed family allowances and the rescinding of unfair tax increases.

The next petition is from the Province of Saskatchewan. It has quite a number of names. It expresses concern as well about the impact that Bill C-70 will have on families and calls for fully indexed family allowances.

POINT OF ORDER

TRANSPORT—PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I ask that for just one moment you hear what I have to say. It is with regard to the inappropriateness of the tabling of the final report of the Committee on Transport which was received by the House earlier today.

I contend that what is out of order is that the House should not have received the report today. The reason I give is that in the transcripts of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Transport, dated November 24, 1984 and November 29, 1984, on page 1-6, I believe—it is hard to follow the way it is printed—it says that the chairman be authorized to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence when a quorum is not present, provided that four Members are present, one of whom must be the chairman or vice-chairman and one of whom must be a member of the Opposition. I contend that the committee violated that rule during the authorization for the printing of the report which has contained within it the printing of evidence. I contend as well that the committee, once having passed it, at no time did rescind that motion and, therefore, the committee was under an obligation to consider and to authorize the printing of the report only in a situation where there was one of the Opposition members present.

I contend further that that was not followed by the committee and, therefore, the report is at the moment improperly before the House of House of Commons.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the very useful point made by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. I believe it is important that committees understand the seriousness of the terms of reference set out by the House when it makes an order referring a matter to committee. If a committee does not follow the order of reference to the letter, then, I respectfully submit, the entire final report of the committee is tainted and is not properly received by this House. Therefore, I think the report is, to say the very least, null and void.

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that this House should go on record as being very concerned about the order of this House to the Committee on Transport not being followed and that it should be deemed that the report in question of the Committee on Transport is invalid.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I regret that I have to address this matter because I do not share the concerns expressed by the House Leaders of the Opposition.

The difficulty is, I believe, that while a question has been raised with respect to whether or not certain evidence has been received with the appropriate number of people or, at least, the correct identity of the Members who represented the Government and the Opposition, the conclusions drawn from the report itself are based upon the evidence which has been published. The difficulty with this matter is not one which is so fundamental as to affect the conclusions which have been drawn.

We have had an indication now that, certainly, members of the Opposition are not totally enthusiastic about the final conclusions of the majority of the committee. Having said that, though, I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) put his finger on it yesterday when he pointed out that one of the difficulties in hearing evidence, especially from people who have a very great interest in the topic and who often come many miles for the purpose of giving evidence, is that the attendance by members of the Opposition in some cases was not possible. Accordingly, the evidence was taken, the transcript is there, it is a matter of public record, and I do not think it causes this report to be fatal.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: If I may, he is raising a false point. He didn't answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate the fact that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is dealing, in the mind of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), with a point other than the point raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. However, I believe I am in a position to say to all Hon. Members that, first, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is raising a question of order with regard to the way the committee conducted its affairs internally. He knows, I think, that our practices are that that matter should be raised within the committee. Second, the Hon. Member claims that, as a result of that, it would be out of order for the House to receive the report. That clearly cannot be true. It clearly cannot be true that material which is in the report can make a report of a committee not receivable, because the House cannot know that until the report has been received. The House cannot read the report until the report has been received.

Therefore, our practice has been—at least as far as I remember—that when there is a question with regard to the admissibility or the orderliness of a committee's deliberation, that matter would normally be raised on a point of order—I am not saying anything about the quality of the point raised; I am simply dealing now with the timing, if I may—if and when a motion to concur in that committee report is put to the House. Therefore, I would refer the Hon. Member to the citation in Beauchesne's which says, if I may paraphrase briefly, that a committee's report may be found to be not in order—and I am not making any kind of comment or ruling with regard to the grounds which have been raised—even after the report has been received. The citation goes on to say that should that be the case, then a motion to concur would be ruled out of order. Therefore, I suggest to the Hon. Member that his point should be raised at a different time.

Mr. Deans: I accept that. Thank you.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND GOODWILL DAY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-258, an Act respecting International Peace and Goodwill Day.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to change the name of "Boxing Day", December 26, to "International Peace and Goodwill Day" in honour of Canada's commitment to world peace. December 26 follows the day we celebrate the birth of the Prince of Peace so it is only fitting that we also mark the goal of international peace. There are no political boundaries when it comes to working toward peace, it is a goal we all share. I am proposing this change in name for this existing holiday in order to recognize the importance of our goal and to demonstrate Canada's commitment to world peace.

The naming of the International Peace and Goodwill Day will go one step further and show the world that Canadians are committed to working toward world peace and maintaining the principles of goodwill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-259, an Act to amend the Federal Court Act, the Northwest Territories Act, the Supreme Court Act, the Tax Court of Canada Act and the Yukon Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is put forward in response to concerns raised during the last election campaign as well as by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his statement to the House in September of this year. The purpose of the Bill is to establish a process for the parliamentary scrutiny of federal judicial appointments in order to reinforce the public trust that all judicial appointments are of the highest calibre and that in making those appointments the Government is guided by the highest standards of conduct.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

SHOWING OF NOVA SCOTIAN ARTIST

Question No. 489—Mr. Dingwall:

Did Mr. Tom Forrestall, an artist from Nova Scotia, hold a showing in Europe between the summer of 1979 and February, 1980 and did the Government pay for his trip and, if so (a) what was the total cost to the taxpayers (b) were other artists from Nova Scotia advised (c) for what reason was he selected?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Department's records indicate no showings of Mr. Forrestall's work took place in Europe in the period between the summer of 1979 and February, 1980.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that, in keeping with my undertaking to do everything I can for the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), one of the those answers applies to a question of his. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise again to ask the Parliamentary Secretary two things. First, why is the Government not answering Questions Nos. 486 and 487? Second, I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to withdraw what he said yesterday, that it was I who caused the delay in answering those questions. That is found at page 9535 of Hansard, and it is not true.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McDermid: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Boudria: It is not a matter of opinion.

Mr. McDermid: Merry Christmas to you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the reason we could not answer that is that we were answering Question No. 400.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the—order, please.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member knows that our practice is to allow Members to ask that some urgent consideration be given to a question which has been on the Order Paper for some time. However, the Hon. Member asks the Chair to accept a substantial extension of that practice when it is done every day on the same question, I suggest. I therefore suggest also that I am prepared simply to leave it at that for the moment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, although I appreciate the point you are making, you must appreciate how frustrating it is for some of us trying to get information from this Government. I have had Questions on the Order Paper since last February and May, important questions dealing with pensions. Now they are coming forward and saying they do not have time to answer the questions. We could be asking them every day and maybe if we did so orally they would answer. Who knows?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas and co-operation, I asked the Parliamentary Secretary a question two weeks ago about a series of questions dating back to last May concerning the First Ministers' conference on multiculturalism. Two weeks ago he suggested that he would bring them to the attention of the Minister. Did he do so and when can we expect to have an answer from him or the Minister?

Mr. Boudria: These answers are unsatisfactory.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must tell the House that I was left a whole desk-full of questions by David Smith and I am doing my best to work my way through them.

Mr. Marchi: Who is David Smith?

Mr. Lewis: However, I will look into the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Speaker: On a separate point of order, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I raise this matter with you personally because the answers given to me previously by the Parliamentary Secretary were not normal in the sense that you and I were both notified that the question would be answered that very day one month ago. We are not dealing with a regular situation where a Member routinely stands up to obtain that information.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows that what we are doing now is recording the answers the Parliamentary Secretary brings forward and seeking consent of the House that the questions remain on the Order Paper.

Mr. Gauthier: Unanswered.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that the practice which has grown up of allowing Members to point out that there is some urgency was intended as a courtesy to Members, not to create a situation where there would be a debate about Questions on the Order Paper.

Mr. Boudria: He had it in his hand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that Motion No. 16 standing in my name dated November 25 be transferred for debate.

REPORT ON DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA

That an humble Address be presented to Her Excellency praying that she will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the report presented to the Prime Minister pertaining to the drought in Western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, November 22, consideration of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 2 (Miss Nicholson (Trinity)) (p. 8737) and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Riis) (p. 8738).

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to speak once again on this Bill. I would like to be able to thank Hon. Members of this House for a full and wide discussion on Bill C-79. However, this Bill was introduced on October 3 and the kind of questioning and debate we have had in this House has done nothing to assist the depositors in these financial institutions. Therefore, I urge Members of the House at this stage to consider speedy passage of this Bill.

I am, I may say, very grateful to at least some members of the legislative committee which studied this Bill. There were members who questioned a number of witnesses on the significance of paying these depositors. There were also some members who chose to boycott that committee. They did not boycott someone who is part of the political process, the Minister or someone from this House who was speaking on the Bill. They chose to boycott the committee on a day when one of the most expert witnesses in this country came to speak to them and explain—

Miss Nicholson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood that what had been called was the amendment. Would you be kind enough to clarify for us whether the Minister is speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is under debate now are Motions Nos. 2 and 3 which have been grouped for debate.

Miss Nicholson: I assume you were listening and you heard the Minister talking about committees. It has not been considered customary to reflect in this House on committee proceedings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Minister will speak on Motions Nos. 2 and 3 grouped for debate in this House.

Mrs. McDougall: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I am simply giving some background and explanation of why it is important that we consider the amendments and this motion immediately.

Because many Members of the House chose not to listen to the information made available in committee to Members of this House, it is important that we clarify one more time the reasons for compensating uninsured depositors and why the amendments are not the kind of thing we are looking for. This Bill has undergone the most exhaustive study, I believe, of any Bill which has ever been before this House. I have spoken in committee twice and once in the Senate committee, all of which was public. I have also spent a day before Mr. Justice Estey who, I think, will have many recommendations to make that will be useful to the Government and the House. It is very important in terms of our bank legislation that we appointed Mr. Justice Estey to examine this issue in full.

• (1550)

We introduced this Bill on October 3 to seek parliamentary authority to compensate the uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank, and the Canadian Commercial Bank Mortgage Insurance Corporation, should that be necessary, for a number of reasons. I have tried to make these reasons clear before, but I think they bear repeating. Our decision to compensate the uninsured depositors was based on the unique and particular circumstances that these two banks reflect; the fact that they were local banks started at the height of an optimistic period of economic growth, and the fact that the National Energy Program helped to bring about their demise. We weighed very carefully the impact on confidence in other financial institutions and on the economy if depositors in these two banks were to absorb their losses.

Depositors include municipal Governments, credit unions and labour unions. I am surprised at the disloyalty of members of the NDP to the labour unions which were very involved with these banks. Depositors also included religious organizations, charitable organizations, and cultural institutions representing thousands of individual Canadians as well as hundreds of small businesses. The municipalities involved have suffered terribly from the delay in the passage of this Bill. It is costing the City of Kanata, which is very near to this Parliament, $2,600 a day in lost interest while we sit around and deliberate on a Bill, the purpose and objective of which should be clear to everybody.

Mr. Cassidy: It's been sitting on the Order Paper for weeks.

Mrs. McDougall: In light of these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, compensation to these depositors was a most appropriate action and demonstrates the Government's sensitivity to the needs of the regions of the country, its municipalities, its individuals, farmers, small businesses, and people who saved their money and made a commitment to regional institutions and to Canada. By compensating these uninsured depositors the Government is acting to minimize the devastating impact on those savers and on that economy which this loss of savings would produce.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, compensation is not to be 100 cents on the dollar. The first payment will be made on Royal Assent being given to this Bill and the second will be delayed until April, 1986, and no interest will be paid after September 1, 1985. It is not the Government's intention to set a precedent in compensating uninsured depositors. I might say that that precedent was set when the Home Bank failed and the Liberal Government paid uninsured depositors in 1923.

Over the past weeks I have dealt at length with the concern over the need of the Opposition to know the names of those being compensated through this Bill. I have spoken, and I believe strongly, of the right of depositors to privacy, of the responsibility of the Government to protect this privacy, and of the necessity for the Government to abide by the laws which prohibit the publication of this information.

In the House last winter when we were talking about compensating the uninsured depositors of Pioneer Trust, which we were urged to do by the New Democratic Party, and which we did in limited circumstances because of our sensitivity to that situation, not one single member of the New Democratic Party raised the issue of the names of the uninsured depositors. The names of the uninsured depositors of the Home Bank were also never made public.

Mr. Cassidy: The Home Bank?

Mrs. McDougall: Those uninsured depositors were paid by that Party. The precedent was set in 1923. To violate the confidentiality of the Bank Act would, I believe very strongly, violate these responsibilities and imperil all depositors in the future.

I have tabled a detailed breakdown of the classification of uninsured depositors which should meet all reasonable requirements for information without violating this aspect of confidentiality. The public interest is not served by any further disclosure. Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the public interest would be violated by any further disclosure. I might say, as well, that after 40 years of total inaction the Government has taken a great many actions to improve the financial institution sector of our economy.

On November 27, 1985, we tabled Bill C-86 to increase premiums and reduce the deficit in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Through that Bill we increased the members of the board of directors by four. As well, Mr. Speaker, we tabled draft legislation on November 27 to give our regulators the power to issue cease and desist orders. It will give the Minister power to block mergers and acquisitions. It will give regulators the power to establish realistic market values on real estate held by financial institutions. We are proceeding with a private sector study of the Office of the Inspector General's mandate and operations, a study undertaken by Coopers and Lybrand. Through the inquiry by Mr. Justice Estey we have undertaken to detail all the facts leading to the failures of these banks and to come up with recommendations which will be very helpful, in fact instrumental, in the formulation of policy of banks in the future.

The former Government took no action in this area for many years. Despite the fact that it added 58 foreign banks in 1980 and revised the Bank Act to introduce regional banks to the country, it never once moved to increase the supervisory powers and capability of our inspectors to regulate our financial institutions properly. I think that the actions of the Opposition in delaying the passage of this Bill because the names have not been published is despicable and is not in the interest of Canadian people. I am very disappointed in the quality of the participation in this debate by the two opposition Parties. I urge the speedy passage of this legislation.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am really shocked and disgusted at the performance of the Minister.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): And a Merry Christmas to you too.

Miss Nicholson: How can the Minister come into the House and imply that the Opposition is holding up this legislation? I ask you to look at the facts. As the Minister said, she introduced the Bill on October 3. On October 10 the Bill was referred to a legislative committee. On October 28 the legislative committee had its first meeting. What was that enormous group of Conservative Members doing from October 10 to October 28?

After the legislative committee finally met on October 28, the Bill was reported back to the House on November 7. That, surely, cannot be considered an extended examination. After being reported back to the House on November 7, the Bill sat on the Order Paper. The Government did nothing until November 22 when it brought it on late on a Friday afternoon for 14 minutes—

Mr. Gauthier: Fourteen lousy minutes.

Miss Nicholson: —before Private Member's hour was called. Since November 22 it has not been called until today. Now the Minister has the effrontery to try to imply that we have extended this debate. This is the most outrageous thing I have heard in a very long time.

Mr. Marchi: The Minister is laughing.

Miss Nicholson: Yes, it is all very funny to the Minister, but it is not funny to the taxpayers who are being asked to shell out money—

Mr. Penner: That's right, and they are damned mad.

Miss Nicholson: —to nameless, faceless individuals.

The amendment which stands in my name on the Order Paper, which is what this debate is supposed to be about, provides that the names of those who make application for reimbursement under the terms of Bill C-79 be published in the Public Accounts of Canada. This has been our position since the outset. Our Leader introduced an amendment to this effect at second reading of Bill C-79. I will also point out that the Government introduced closure while we were still debating that amendment. Therefore, we never had a full debate on second reading of this Bill either.

We have had a number of opportunities to elaborate on why we think it essential for taxpayers to know who will be benefiting from this $875 million expenditure. I will merely summarize these very briefly today. We have had no answers in the past, and with the Minister's ridiculous performance this afternoon, we certainly have not had an answer today.

• (1600)

The Bill is meant to pay off uninsured depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank Mortgage Investment Corporation, which also recently went into liquidation. The insured depositors, those whose deposits were less than $60,000, which is the limit on deposit insurance, have already been paid. Those who had a right to payment have been paid. This Bill provides for the so-called sophisticated investor with deposits over $60,000 in one institution, who would normally have no right to compensation, to receive ex gratia payments if they come forward and ask for it.

The Government wants Parliament to authorize ex gratia payments, to be paid with taxpayer's money to the tune of $865 million, but these people are to remain nameless and faceless. The taxpayer has a right to know. On October 4 the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) said that the public has a right to know how its tax dollars are spent, that public funds are at all times subject to the scrutiny of Parliament and that the whole purpose of this place is the management of taxpayers dollars. We on this side are in full agreement with that statement. We differ with the Government in that we feel that the principle must be applied consistently.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to intrude on the Hon. Member's statement because she has risen in a state of righteous indignation or unctuous indignation, I am not sure which. However, she quoted a figure of $865 million—I am not quite sure—was that the figure you quoted? You were out by $10 million.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is raising a point of debate.

Mr. Brisco: It is a point of fact.

Mr. Rossi: Go back to sleep.

Miss Nicholson: The figure in the Bill is $875 million.

Mr. Brisco: You did not say that. You said $865 million.

Miss Nicholson: This Bill deals with former clients of former banks in liquidation and now being dealt with under the Winding-up Act. It simply defeats logic how the Minister can claim that the provisions of the Bank Act regarding privacy for depositors for current clients apply to former depositors of a wound-up institution who are asking the Government for ex gratia payments. These people have to make a formal application to get the money. They will not get it automatically as a bank depositor, and once they begin that application process papers will begin floating throughout the Departments and their names will certainly become known sooner or later. What on earth can the Government possibly hope to gain by stifling information to which taxpayers have a right and which will become public eventually?

In fact, the Government does not have a legal or moral leg to stand on. It is in an untenable position which is at odds with the stated desire of the Government, which we share, to promote confidence in our financial system. Withholding information from those who have a right to it, from those who are footing the bill, is not conducive to confidence building. We hope that the Government, in the interest of building confidence and restoring its own credibility in the entire matter of bank failures, will approve this amendment.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the amendment in the Bill presently before the House. In her opening statements, the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) made several interesting observations. First, she claimed that the Opposition has prevented speedy passage of the Bill. That is not quite true because it is the Government, with an overwhelming number of Members in the House and control over the agenda of the House, that determines what is introduced for discussion in the House and in the committees. Surely, with all of its Members, if the Government does not have the ability to pass legislation through the House it is because of its incompetence.

With respect to incompetence, every day that new information comes forward from the Estey inquiry we begin to realize how thoroughly incompetent the Government and its officials were in dealing with this whole matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Come on. The banks were screwed up.

Mr. de Jong: It can best be described as a keystone cop operation. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, in his testimony, claims no responsibility whatsoever. He says that it is not his job to be able to look into the financial statements of these banks. In fact, he takes great credit in extending further financial support to the CCB on the very banking day prior to the Government pulling the plug. The Bank of Canada continued to provide further equity to the Canadian Commercial Bank on the Friday before the Government pulled the plug the following Monday.

When I asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada about this situation when he appeared before the committee, he said that it was not up to him to know whether or not a bank is solvent. He said: "We depend entirely upon the Inspector General of Banks".

However, what does the Inspector General of Banks tell the Estey Commission? He says that it is not his fault. He said that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has the power to know what is going on with the bank. The Inspector General of Banks told the Estey Commission that he could only rely on the outside auditor. What incompetence. It is amazing that the Government has not fired both of those top civil servants when they are juggling billions of dollars.

This is taking place at a time when the Government is attempting to reduce the deficit by deindexing pensions and the family allowance. It is increasing taxes on dog food so that even the blind have to pay more for the dog food they feed their seeing eye dogs. The Government is getting its nickels and dimes from every corner by hitting average Canadians including the poor and middle class. Yet it only requires a weekend to make a decision about billions of dollars.

What were the reasons behind this decision? The Minister told the Estey Commission that she did not know that the bank was running into trouble in California. Yet the Inspector General of Banks apparently had this information for months. Obviously he never saw fit to pass this vital information on to the Minister. I am amazed that the Minister allows this official to continue in his job. Why has he not been fired for that one display of incompetence?

The Government wants to move this legislation through the House because every day that the Estey Commission sits is a further embarrassment to the Government about this whole matter.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No way. You are going to learn the truth.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, would you ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) to shut up. If he has something to say he can rise in his place and give us a speech. If not, I would appreciate it if he would cease his cuckooing.

Was the Government that naive and the officials that stupid—if so, they should be fired—or did the Government and the officials know exactly what they were doing? They knew that the bail-out would not work. They knew that they were just pumping money into a hopeless situation. What would be the rationale for the Government to come forward with a bail-out package which bought this bank a few more months?

Perhaps the purpose behind the whole exercise or this whole facade was to give the banks, particularly the foreign banks, a few extra months to withdraw some of their deposits. Otherwise, instead of a hundred and some million dollars in uninsured deposits being on the books of the CCB, it would have been several hundred million dollars more. All the bail-out did was to provide foreign banks and some of our large commercial banks with an opportunity to lower slowly the amount of money which they had on deposit in CCB. Otherwise, instead of the Government coming to us today and asking for some $800 million to bail out the uninsured depositors, it would have been several hundred million dollars more. Perhaps that was the real intention behind that whole facade.

The amendments we introduced ask the Government to make public the names of the uninsured depositors—the people and the corporations to which the public will be giving hundreds of millions of dollars. I think it is a fair question to ask. It fits in with the whole notion that Parliament is supreme. We as a Parliament—and rightfully so—are the guardians of the public purse. The whole question of public accountability is involved here.

The Minister and the Government say that there are bank Acts and pieces of legislation which provide for the protection of the privacy of these bank depositors. This is not a normal situation. These are not just normal bank depositors. These are people who will be bailed out, 100 per cent on the dollar, for what they had on deposit. They are not just normal bank depositors. What is more important, the supremacy of Parliament or keeping hidden and secret the names of these depositors? The more the Government refuses to give us the information, the more suspicious we in the Opposition and Canadians right across the country become. What is the Government trying to hide? What is so secret about this list?

I, for one, would also like to see the list of all bad loans. Who were the people who really benefited from the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland? Who were the ones who took out loans and now have these assets and will not be paying back the full amount to the bank and eventually to the public of Canada? Who are the people who really benefited from the raids on the assets of the CCB?

There is a lot more to be learned about the CCB, about the bail-out, about what the Government did, about what the Government knew and did not know, about why it acted when it acted, and about why it did not act sooner. For the Government to blame us by saying that the Opposition has obstructed the Government in its attempt to move the legislation forward is nonsense. The Government has held it back so that in the end it could use closure. It does not want full public debate. It is embarrassed by this because it realizes that it will have to continue to increase the taxes on ordinary Canadians and continue to cut programs which benefit ordinary Canadians. Yet, at the same time, it can find billions of dollars for the bail-out of the wealthy. It is shameful, and that is the reason the Government introduced closure. It does not want to see the whole question being debated in the House to a large extent.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-79 and the amendment. The purpose of this Bill is to promote a sense of confidence and fairness with respect to our financial institutions, and I think that is important.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) referred to incompetence. Well, after listening to a number of debates here in the House, I find that the incompetence reflected in the speeches of some Opposition Members goes beyond the mere fact of their being in the Opposition. I think we should remember that very often, Opposition Members have this bad habit of talking about anything at all except the subject before the House, and then they wonder why they don't have enough time.

In March 1985, Mr. Speaker, six major banks, three governments, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and even the Opposition agreed these two banks had to be helped. They agreed on a plan for restructuring the banks. Then in September, we had a problem. And now, they are against any incentive and any measure aimed at helping our Canadian financial system to maintain its stability and the credibility it has always had. The Opposition is against any measures we want to take in this respect.

They are asking us for a list of depositors. Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether Opposition Members would be very pleased if their bank accounts were made public. I would like them to answer that question. I wonder if they would like it if Canadians across this country could read in the papers that the Member for such and such a riding has or had so much money in his bank account. I feel it is a matter of privacy.

Second, the depositors also include unions. I am not sure the unions would be so happy to know the financial position of another union with whom they are more or less competing. There are charitable organizations to whom the same principle applies. There are savings banks and credit unions and municipal governments. We cannot ... and there are small- and medium-sized businesses. Does it make sense, Mr. Speaker, is it normal for me, as the owner of a small- or medium-sized business who does not have an account with one of those who banks, to know that my competitor had a line of credit of so much and had so much money in the bank and so many deposit certificates? I think we should realize the implications of this request from the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) made a very interesting discovery. He is a very hard worker, and at the library, he found that in 1925, under a Liberal federal Government, the Home Bank was in the same situation. A total of $5.5 million was paid to depositors, and I will leave it to my hon. friend from Champlain to explain to the Liberal Opposition that what we want now, for the purpose of improving and helping our Canadian financial institutions, is something that had already been done in the past under one of their own Governments.

It is rather strange because, perhaps unlike Members of the Opposition who must spend their weekends in Ottawa, I am lucky enough to travel throughout the beautiful riding of Trois-Rivières every weekend when I can meet my constituents, discuss issues with them—

Mr. Malépart: I also met them.

Mr. Vincent: You met them, yes, we know. Yes indeed, but strangely enough I met them afterwards and they were able to understand when I explained everything to them. Let us stick to the subject under consideration.

When the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie explains something, he does it in his own way, not the way it should be done.

So, Mr. Speaker, I get to meet my constituents on weekends and we talk about national issues such as the bank problem. Strange though it may seem, the people of the riding of Trois-Rivières readily understand the Government's position on that and they agree. They understand that we must have a sound banking system if we want to keep our dollar strong, maintain low interest rates, and benefit from a national economy ten times as buoyant as it was a year and a half ago. As I say, they understand that we must help the depositors of the two western banks. Our national credibility is at stake, the people of the riding of Trois-Rivières can appreciate that, and I am very proud of them.

They also understand that, when we refer to the cost of this measure, we say the gross cost to the Government will be $900 million. I did say "gross cost", Mr. Speaker, because the net cost will be less, perhaps half of that. We do not know yet because all the assets of the two banks have to be recouped first. Mr. Speaker, the residents of the riding of Trois-Rivières can understand that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate because some banks have incurred substantial losses since September. They incurred substantial losses, once again thanks to Opposition Members who have a way of scaring Canadians with situations that may adversely affect Canada as a whole. I can tell you that I met with a few bank managers in the riding of Trois-Rivieres, and they were not at all impressed by the utterly negative approach of the Opposition. They have lost money because of all that, and I can tell you that Canadian voters, not just the people of Trois-Rivieres but voters across Canada will remember this in the next election, and especially people in the financial sector.

It is incredible: here we are in December, with people waiting to get 60 per cent of their money as soon as Bill C-79 is passed. Here we are in December, and they still don't know whether they are going to get their 60 per cent for Christmas or whether they are—

Mr. Malépart: Mothers are waiting for family allowance payments, but that doesn't count!

Mr. Vincent: Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker! Do they know what they are doing in the Opposition? We are talking about Bill C-79 and he is going on about Bill C-70. Does that make sense? Come on, sir. Sit down if you want to have the floor. And by the way, the backbenches are in the back!

Mr. Speaker, we are going to proceed with Bill C-79. It is important for Canadians to remember that as well.

Mr. Malépart: They certainly will!

Mr. Vincent: Indeed they will. If you had been here two minutes ago, sir, the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), you would have heard and understood what I just said. You were on the other side of the curtains, but you would have seen that Canadians are not very pleased with an Opposition which, instead of working in a positive way and helping our Canadian banking system and our financial institutions, is just trying to scare Canadians. They do not appreciate such tactics at all.

Mr. Speaker, I am of course opposed to the amendment, and I only hope the Opposition will realize there are people who need their 60 per cent, which they won't get until this Bill is passed, and I wish they would understand . . . We cannot turn back the clock, Mr. Speaker. We must concentrate on building a better Canada, and systematic obstruction and being negative and never positive is not the way to go about it. Yes, we can build just the same, but it will be a lot harder. If only the Opposition would understand this, we would get somewhere.

That is all I had to say, and I hope they will understand.

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear to the House that I am unalterably opposed to this Bill in its present form. That message has been made abundantly clear to me by my constituents by way of letter and by way of conversation. If it is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to resist this Bill right through the Christmas period, I am prepared to stay here and resist it.

The Bill is wrong in principle and it is wrong with what it does with the taxpayers' money. For a Government to make ex gratia payments, and in case Canadians do not know what that is, they are hand-outs to people we do not even know how much they are going to get under the name of confidentiality, which is just a nice way of talking about secrecy. It is totally unacceptable. My constituents will not accept it, and I will not accept it.

Mr. McDermid: What did you do on Pioneer Trust, Keith?

Mr. Penner: This motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), are basically the same. They say that after the payments are made we should know who the depositors are who are receiving the money. I would say that of course we should. We should know beforehand who these people are. We should know now who is getting these payments.

If you want confidentiality and secrecy, that is your right as a citizen. If you do not want people to know how much money you are getting from the taxpayers or from the Treasury, you can remain secret but do not expect to get any money. Make up your mind. If you want a payment, let us know who you are and how much you are getting. If you want to keep it secret, if you want your business to be confidential, then no payment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What a crock.

Mr. Penner: Listen to my friend across the way. He is such a learned gentleman.

Let us look at what a group of people say who have looked into this question.

The Government of Ontario has been very concerned about the failure of trust companies, just as we have been concerned here about the failure of banks. We have not had any bank failures since the depression. Now we have had two in short order since the Government took office.

Mr. St. Germain: You are the guys who caused it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Be fair.

Mr. Penner: Let me tell my friends opposite, if they are so concerned about these depositors, to take a close look at the Dupré Report commissioned by the Government of Ontario. They should take it into account.

Listen carefully to what the Dupré Report says. It states:

> As a means to restore discipline to financial markets, large depositors should be made to take a beating and lose their money when banks and trust companies fail.

I go on to quote:

> We believe that a situation which is tantamount to eliminating all risk in making of deposits is fundamentally unsound—

It will inevitably breed a continuation of the unfortunate failures which have occurred.

The report does not even leave out those precious depositors about whom we have been talking in this House as a reason for passing this Bill, such as universities and municipalities. The report attacks depositors, such as universities, municipalities and school boards that had money in failed institutions. It says that the prevalence of these "presumably sophisticated depositors" among the claimants of ill-fated banks "is testimony to the fact that sophistication in deposit making consists in reaching for the highest possible return in blind indifference to the soundness of the institutions.

The report says that only depositors up to $20,000 should be insured and that those depositing larger amounts, up to $80,000, should only receive only partial payment.

Mr. McDermid: Shame.

Mr. Penner: The Hon. Member opposite says shame. Surely to God it is not a shame to report on a document by a task force funded by the Ontario Government that has been deeply concerned about the failure of financial institutions. That is its recommendation.

My constituents concur with it. After all, the Government is reaching into their pockets and it is going to reach deeper into their pockets in the new year with the income tax increases that are coming out of the May 23 Budget. They resent it. People work hard for their money in the mines, in the bush and in the papermills or driving transport trucks, and now you are asking them to pay out to wealthy depositors, who are not known to us, unknown amounts of money. My constituents tell me to stand up and fight. That is what I am doing. I am fighting and I am objecting. Eight hundred and seventy-five dollars and maybe more will be paid out.

At the same time, in my constituency there is less money for direct job creation to municipalities to create jobs, to get projects done that would help those municipalities. Volunteer organizations are getting nothing. Consequently, there are thousands of people who will not be able to qualify this winter for unemployment insurance.

What will those people do, Mr. Speaker? They will be put on the welfare rolls of municipalities. Here is the Government opposite saying you have to pass this billion dollar Bill because it is concerned about poor municipalities. If it really cared about municipalities, the Government would be doing something about job creation for municipalities. This is the same Government that, when it took office, downgraded regional development programs. The Government does not believe in regional development programs. We have heard that from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). He said for a long time that that is not a responsibility of government. I have heard him say many times that that is nothing but statism. He does not even know the history of Canada. This country was built on regional development policies. If we had not had those policies for a long period of time, we would not even have a nation.

● (1630)

The Government claims that we must pass this Bill because it is concerned about municipalities and credit unions that are losing large amounts of money every day. They wonder if we on this side do not have any concern and sympathy for them. If that is really the concern of Government members, let us bring in a Bill to deal exclusively with those who are in need from among those depositors. Let us determine need and then let us pay them.

Mr. McDermid: Who's going to determine that?

Mr. Penner: We determine that by knowing who they are and by having the facts on the table. You people have forgotten that Parliament operates on the basis of facts and information. We cannot operate on the basis of secrecy with everything hidden. That is the way this Government is functioning.

Mr. McDermid: What happened to your belief in universality?

Mr. Penner: Another reason why I will not support this Bill is because Parliament was misled by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who said that if we would support the bail-out, the Canadian Commercial Bank would be put back on its feet and the Government of Canada would get its money back. On the basis of that, we went along with the Minister. Things did not work out that way. The bank failed, another bank failed and now we have to bail out depositors who had deposits in excess of $60,000. These are well-to-do depositors. We are not talking about poor people here. We are talking about people who have deposits in excess of $60,000 and we are supposed to bail them out.

The truth is that the word "incompetency" must apply here. The Government got involved in the money market but it did not understand what it was doing. The House of Commons was misled, but perhaps it was not deliberate because the Minister, using the best information she had, was quite confident that the Canadian Commercial Bank would be viable. However, it failed. In the British parliamentary system, that would mean someone's resignation.

Perhaps the Minister of State for Finance is not the person who should resign because if the stories are true, she resisted strongly the bail-out package. I think those stories are probably true. I have spoken to the Minister and I regard her as being knowledgeable about these matters. She probably put up a good argument against it. However, she was overruled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Of course, we cannot call for the resignation of the Prime Minister but certainly the Minister of Finance is the one who ought to go because of this situation. Has there been any talk about resignation? No, none whatsoever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: Hon. Members opposite applaud. They should keep applauding. I hope they have something to applaud about the next time they go to the people.

There is a concern over there for well-to-do depositors. There are a lot of well-to-do depositors but not a word has been said about those people who bought debentures or were shareholders in the bank. What do they get? There has been no concern for them at all. Among that group, there may be some small shareholders and there may be people who held debentures of modest size but there will be nothing at all for them.

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 would certainly improve the Bill a little bit after it is passed by this huge majority that imposed closure on this Bill at second reading even before an amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) which also asked for more information was put. Before that amendment had been fully debated and before we turned to the main motion, the Government imposed closure. Motions Nos. 2 and 3 would in a very modest way improve the Bill. Certainly, after the money has been paid out, we expect to know who these people are but it would be much better to know now. Even better, knowing now the names, we could select those depositors who really deserve to get their money back. We could determine how many of them are wealthy and how much money is going to foreign banks with large deposits.

I totally object to this Bill. I am opposed to it. I am prepared to stay here and argue against it as long as possible. A great reformer once said: "Here I stand, I can do no other".

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to enter this debate. It is sad that the Government has moved closure on this Bill because this is a matter of very serious concern to Canadians. It is a matter of the utmost importance in terms of economic policy and a mater like this should be debated thoroughly and comprehensively. It is shameful that the Government has imposed closure on the legislation before the House today.

Government Members need to remind themselves that they presented themselves to the people as being a group of people who were competent in the area of economic policy but if there is one thing that the bank bail-out legislation demonstrates, it is the complete incompetence of the Government when it comes to economic matters. Government Members made a decision without knowing all of the facts and without making the necessary efforts to get all of the facts upon which to base the decision. That is an elementary procedure when making a decision of this magnitude.

Why did the Government not get all the facts before it made the decision? Government Members had the opportunity to do so. They could have taken the time to do so but they chose instead to fly by the seat of their pants in a manner that affects the economy and will now affect the pocketbook of every Canadian.

This action and the actions with regard to bank bail-outs in the past demonstrate that when it comes to economic matters, the reputation of Conservative Members is in tatters. They do not have the competence they claim.

Another approach to this legislation before the House is to deal with the policy of the Government to compensate uninsured depositors with dollars that are worth 100 per cent of their value. If people were to know that when they deposit money in a bank, even if their deposits are uninsured, there is no risk involved, they will have less of a tendency to examine the health of the institution into which they are putting their money. I am thinking now of very large depositors like foreign banks and large Canadian banks. There will be less of a tendency to examine the health and worthiness of an institution into which they are putting their money. This in itself will encourage a repeat of the kind of experience we had with the Canadian Commercial Bank.

If there is one thing that stands out in this case, it is the fact that no one bothered to dig in and check the facts. No one bothered to check into the financial health of the Canadian Commercial Bank before it became a matter of public concern although I have spoken to financial analysts who have told me that rumours were circulating a year or two years before the bank collapsed that something was amiss with the bank. Yet no one in a responsible position and no one who is depositing large sums of money in this institution seemed to take the trouble to dig deep and examine the full facts regarding the health of this institution. That simply means that when it comes to banking institutions the type of action which the Government is proposing will encourage this kind of behaviour in the future.

• (1640)

Our amendment calls for a list of all depositors to which a payment will be made under this legislation. We ask for a list of all those people who had uninsured deposits with this bank, that is, deposits larger than $60,000. To be exact, the amount of money we are talking about in this Bill is $875 million. That is pretty close to $1 billion. Of course, this is one way to spend $1 billion of taxpayers' money. However, just to illustrate what $1 billion means, I would like to suggest a few other ways that these public funds could be spent in order to give some meaning to the figure which is contained in the legislation. This $1 billion could be used to build 21,667 non-profit housing units—21,667. By bailing out these uninsured depositors that is what we are giving up. The Government is simply unwilling to tell us who these people are. It is unwilling to make a list of the benefactors available to the public or to the House. We know that in terms of raw figures there was something in the order of $108 million invested by foreign banks in this institution. From Schedule A and B banks there was some $28 million and $39 million respectively.

Mr. McDermid: It is $112 million.

Mr. Keeper: My colleague across the way suggests the amount is $112 million. These are large sums of money.

We would like details with respect to whom this money will be paid, since the type of general information which we have suggests the money will be paid to large financial institutions. This raises the question: Is it better to give these uninsured depositors who may be large financial institutions and foreign banks this sum of money instead of building 21,667 non-profit housing units in the country? One can imagine the employment which would be created as a result of constructing 21,667 non-profit housing units at a time when we have very high unemployment. Rather, this amount of money is simply being thrown down the drain.

There are those who sit on the Conservative benches who may say that there are some individuals, even senior citizens, who may have had uninsured deposits in this bank. In considering this legislation we have proposed the establishment of a hardship fund to which people could apply for compensation if they can demonstrate that they will suffer severe hardship as a result of not being compensated for their uninsured deposits, that is, deposits over $60,000. We have made a proposal which would allow depositors to be treated in a humane way while protecting the public purse at the same time.

Again, to illustrate the magnitude of the amount of money about which we are talking today, $1 billion could be used to create 100,000 new day care spaces in the country—100,000. Mr. Speaker, I can see that you are indicating to me that I have two more minutes. I will wrap up in that time.

What we are asking of the Government is to make available to the public and to the House a list of all those depositors who will be bailed out as a result of the legislation which is before us. We want to know who will benefit from this legislation in order to find out why the Government insists on bailing out uninsured depositors at a time when these public dollars could be put to a much better use. It could be better used in the country if it were not paid to foreign banks and other large financial institutions.

If the Government has a case for helping ordinary Canadians by bailing out uninsured depositors, then let it make the names of all these people available to the House. In this way we will be able to see for ourselves whether or not the Government's claims are accurate. If there are some hardship cases, then let us establish a hardship fund for those who will be hurt and who ordinary Canadians would agree deserve to be compensated because of their particular circumstances.

We believe it is necessary for there to be more information made available to the public with regard to the legislation. We feel that the debate should continue and that the Government should really withdraw this legislation. However, as far as a first step is concerned, we would like to see the Government make a list of depositors available so that we can know exactly who will benefit from this legislation. This legislation provides nothing in terms of an economic sort to benefit the country. We seek an explanation from the Government as to why it is going headlong into spending this $1 billion which could be used more beneficially for ordinary Canadians. The Government could better use this money by providing non-profit housing and day care centres.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak briefly on Motions Nos. 2 and 3 to which I am opposed. In the next few minutes I hope to be able to explain to the House why I am opposed to these motions and to reply to some of the wild statements which have been made by my hon. friends from Trinity, Winnipeg-North Centre, Cochrane-Superior and Regina East.

Mr. de Jong: We will give you more than 10 minutes—you will need it!

Mr. McDermid: I hope I will receive unanimous consent in order to go beyond my 10 minutes. I would be more than happy to go into this matter.

Mr. Rossi: You will never get it!

Mr. McDermid: Before I reply to the statements made by Hon. Members opposite, I would like to point out that it was obviously a very hot day in the House of Commons on June 8, 1925. It was very warm indeed. The Speaker, as reported at page 3958 of Hansard, said:

> Hon. Members are required to maintain the decorum of the House according to the rules. I would be sorry that in Canada we should make our politics in shirt sleeves.

Obviously, someone had their coat off that day when they should not have. On the same day the Liberal Government of the day introduced a motion in the House of Commons which reads as follows:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of the sum of five million four hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the purpose of paying to the several persons who were creditors of The Home Bank of Canada for money on deposit or in current account such proportionate part of the amounts for which they are determined to be creditors in the liquidation proceedings as the said sum will provide, and to authorize the Governor in Council to raise by way of loan such sum as may be required for the purpose of making the payment aforesaid.

On the same page of Hansard is an excerpt from the report of the committee which reads as follows:

> Your committee consider that the facts brought out in the interim report submitted by Mr. Justice McKeown and the evidence therein referred to establish that the depositors of the Home Bank have a moral claim in equity for compensation by the country on account of any loss they may suffer by reason of the failure of the Home Bank.

This is a measure which was brought in by the Liberals. It is a precedent. At that time there was no hue and cry with respect to naming all the depositors.

Mr. Cassidy: The Home Bank, is that your precedent? I don't believe it. Are you Rip van Winkle? Have you been asleep for 60 years? Has nothing changed in that time?

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is, as usual, flying by the seat of his pants. If he wishes to enter into the debate, I suggest he wait until I finish my remarks and then get on his feet and shoot his mouth off. In the meantime, why does he not just sit there quietly, listen and make notes like I did when I had to listen to the diatribe which was presented by his colleagues in his caucus. I would respectfully ask him to do that. If he is going to sit there and yap away, then I will yield the floor to him, but I would like to have my time first, if he does not mind.

• (1650)

Mr. Rossi: You should have done the same thing before when our Member was speaking.

Mr. McDermid: I did—

Mr. Rossi: You were blabbering away.

Mr. McDermid: There is the Hon. Member who is never on his feet in the House of Commons. He always speaks from his seat, the honourable flat-foot from Montreal.

To get back to the subject at hand, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Government has produced a list of some 25 groups which are receiving funding from this particular Bill. The accusation has been made today by a number of Hon. Members who spoke that this Government is trying to hide something.

Mr. Boudria: Of course it is.

Mr. McDermid: I deny that categorically for this reason—

Mr. Keeper: Because you are hiding something.

Mr. McDermid: —first we have asked Justice Estey to get to the bottom of the entire matter, to find out what went wrong with these particular banks. Justice Estey has the names of all of the depositors. There is no cover-up at all. I think that Hon. Members will admit the evidence which has been presented has been frank and I say to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), who made these wild accusations—and I wrote them down—that we are being embarrassed by the study, not at all. We appointed Justice Estey and asked him to come in with a full report as to why that bank collapsed. We are not embarrassed by it at all.

Mr. de Jong: You should be.

Mr. McDermid: I think the previous administration is going to feel the heat, I can tell you that, when the report comes out.

Mr. de Jong: So is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. McDermid: I am sure it will. But there is no way that we are being embarrassed because we want to find out why the bank failed in order to prevent that kind of thing from happening in Canada in the future. It is very important to us.

For some reason, the Opposition thinks that anyone who has $60,000 on deposit in a bank is a rich person, and I challenge that. I can think of many, many senior citizens who over the years have purchased homes, have paid off their homes, who sell their homes, have a nest egg, and who live off the interest on that nest egg. However, I can tell Hon. Members opposite that someone living off the interest on $100,000, and they are lucky if they can get 10 per cent today, only receives $10,000 a year. That is not wealthy by today's standards.

For some reason the Opposition want the list of every single depositor so that they can go on a witch-hunt and those Hon. Members can decide in their wisdom who should get reimbursed and who should not. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) suggested that we Parliamentarians should decide who should get reimbursed and who should not.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The amendment which is standing in my name is exactly the same as the amendment standing in the name of the Member of the New Democratic Party. In each case, what the amendment provides is that the names of those who receive these ex gratia payments be published in the Public Accounts of Canada, in other words, that they be published after the event. Therefore when the Hon. Member speaks about going on a witch-hunt or doing an examination before the event—

Mr. McDermid: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker, for heaven's sake. She has already had her time on debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member may or may not have misunderstood but, nonetheless, it is a matter of debate. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) has the floor.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member already had her 10 minutes. If she wants another 10 minutes, then she is going to have to move another amendment.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the debate was on the amendment, not on what someone perceives the amendment to be.

Mr. Boudria: That is a good point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair believes that the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown is in fact speaking on the amendment.

An Hon. Member: As he always does.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I try to be relevant at all times.

Mr. de Jong: Then why don't you succeed?

Mr. McDermid: I would like to speak for a moment about the Hon. Member for Regina East who fought very hard that the depositors in Pioneer Trust be reimbursed. I never heard him once mention that they be listed. He never once mentioned in this House that we should produce a list of all of the depositors in Pioneer Trust who got reimbursed. Yet he stands here today and demands it for this situation. That is hypocritical in my book.

I have to give the Hon. Member full marks, however. He fought for those depositors in Pioneer Trust. But he never once demanded that those names be published. You know why, Mr. Speaker? It is because they were his constituents, that is why.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. de Jong: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would allow a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That can only be done with unanimous consent. The Hon. Member is now on debate.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I only have 10 minutes. When I finish my speech, with the unanimous consent of the House, I would be happy to answer questions.

I would like to speak about the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior who thought that the report produced by the Ontario Government was a good idea, that we reduce the insurance for depositors to $20,000. He thinks that anyone who has more than $20,000 deposited in a bank is wealthy. That is just not the case today. There are many people who rely on those deposits for their livelihood and they are not wealthy at all. The Hon. Member was opposing higher taxes in his speech, and I can understand why he would oppose higher taxes, but it was the administration to which he pledged loyalty over the years which rang up these huge deficits which someone has to pay for and, like the commercial says: You can pay me now or pay me later. The Liberals ran their Government on the idea: "We can pay later. Those young people who are sitting up in the Gallery, let them pay for it, not us". That was their attitude. Yet the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior talks about higher taxes today. Well, I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be much higher taxes if the voluntary organizations and the municipalities which have moneys in these banks are not reimbursed. There would be higher taxes because of the hospitals which have money invested in these banks.

We never hear about the trade unions. Why do the trade unions not come out and tell us which trade unions have their money in the bank if they agree with their NDP brothers? Obviously, they are not admitting they had money in that bank at all. However, they had a fair amount in there.

Mr. Deans: That is absolutely irrelevant like most of your speeches.

Mr. McDermid: The Government has been very forthcoming. To publish the list of names is entirely irrelevant to this Bill. Justice Estey is looking into the full operations of those banks and these motions which are in the names of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) are entirely irrelevant and should be defeated as soon as possible. The Liberals tell us we are holding up the operations of the House. If the Liberals think we are, then let us have a vote on it right now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I intended to rise at the time of Tabling of Documents earlier today but due to mechanical difficulties I was not able to do so because the document was not finished being printed. I have consulted with my colleagues, the Opposition House Leaders, and I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to revert to the period for Tabling of Documents so that I could in fact table documents in my possession now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to revert to Tabling of Documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Penner: We co-operate on this side.

PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

TABLING OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I appreciate very much the usual good co-operation from the Liberal and New Democratic Party opposition. You are absolutely wonderful.

Pursuant to Standing Order 47(2), I have the honour to lay upon the Table copies in both official languages of a document entitled "Proposed Amendment to the Standing Orders".

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee; and Motion No. 2 (Miss Nicholson (Trinity)), (p. 8737) and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Riis), (p. 8738).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, one certainly cannot let the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) sit down after the comments he made blaming the Opposition for possibly creating higher taxes. It is the bumbling of this Government which has caused higher taxes for the people of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: It does not take much to get them upset. They are on their way.

Mr. Boudria: There is not much there.

Mr. Hopkins: One Hon. Member said this afternoon that some officials should have been fired. The people who should be fired over this issue are the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in that order. They are the people who persuaded the people of Canada to put their money into these banks. There is no question but that the Government of Canada today and its members are handing out $875 million to people who they encouraged to put money in the bank. In asking the taxpayers of Canada to now pay the bill, the Cabinet is admitting they gave bad advice to the Canadian people and is now charging the bill for that bad advice to the Canadian people.

The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown said there would be higher taxes for hospitals and municipal Governments. Why? Because this Government persuaded the hospitals and municipalities to put their money into the Canadian Commercial Bank. The former Minister of Science and Technology does not have very much to offer. We have seen what he had to offer in the past and it is no greater today. I know he is much better speaking from the seat of his pants than he is from the soles of his feet.

Mr. Siddon: Read The Globe and Mail this morning, Len. Best news in years.

Mr. Hopkins: I like the rapport in this new Government, the civility we see in this House. It is really outstanding. If they keep on going this way I am going to start sounding like the Hon. Jack Horner. He used to repeat himself three or four times in speeches for emphasis and I am going to have to repeat myself just to be heard over this crew. We want to get down to useful debate here, not the shouting going on across the way.

Mr. Fennell: We are just trying to spur you on.

Mr. Hopkins: Members opposite want to pay people off but not give anyone the names.

Mr. Chrétien: Why?

Mr. Hopkins: Are they afraid that some of these people will turn out to be their friends? Of course they are their friends, wealthy friends, and they are making the people of Canada pay the bill for their mistakes. What could the Canadian public have done with this $875 million which this Bill represents? The people in those regions of Canada which have been attacked by this Government will be interested to know that this amount of money would pay for four years of Winter Works programs. That amount of money put into regional development would have been a tremendous benefit to those regions. However, we have a Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and a Government who do not believe in the regions of Canada. They believe in making urban areas bigger, big business bigger, and pay them off when they make mistakes. That is what those people over there believe. They always said they were going to support free enterprise in this country. You pay your money and take your chances.

Mrs. Sparrow: You bet you do.

Mr. Hopkins: The Tory Member says: "You bet you do". However, what do they do? They encourage people to invest their money and when they lose they say that is all right, we will ask the Canadian taxpayers to pay you off. That is precisely what is happening here today.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) would be interested in knowing that this $875 million would pay for his low-level air defence system. What does the Government do instead? It gives him a budget which has an annual increase less than the NATO requirement. The Government said all through the last election: Honour the commitment. Members opposite were going to increase real defence spending by 6 per cent. Today it is way below 3 per cent and if it keeps going that way it will be zero growth in defence spending this year. Let them try to explain that. It is because they are giving the money away to their friends.

The North Warning System was 90 per cent completed by the previous Government and 10 per cent or maybe even 5 per cent by this Government. It is interesting to note that the $875 million represented in this Bill would more than pay for Canada's share of the total defence system across northern Canada and down the east coast. There would also be enough left over for a major Winter Works program. That money would also have paid for the Government's ice-breaker. Members opposite announced they were going to build this ice-breaker and send it through the Arctic. It is their $1-billion flagpole. They cannot find enough money to build it even though they have announced it in the House and they do not know who is going to operate it after it is built. What are they doing instead? Spending $875 million to bail out their friends who they persuaded to deposit the money in the CCB.

Let us look at another item which is very dear to my heart. I hope the Minister of Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) does not start shouting across the floor again.

Mr. Siddon: He is not here.

Mr. Hopkins: The former Minister. The degraded and down-graded former Minister of Science and Technology.

What happened in the May 23 Budget? Some $170 million was removed from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and this was agreed to by the then Minister of Science and Technology. Do you realize that the amount of money the Government wants to give to its friends who invested in these banks is five times the amount of money the Government took out of AECL, plus the $70 million taken from the retained earnings of the company?

Mr. Siddon: We are not taking it out.

Mr. Hopkins: Why did the Government start to destroy AECL in this way? The Government wanted to help pay off the national debt. The $70 million the Government took out of AECL's retained earnings was to be applied to the national debt.

Mr. McDermid: Whose money is that?

Mr. Hopkins: What does the Minister of Finance say about that? He says the money we are paying out to bail out these bank depositors will be added to the national debt. We have a $1 billion addition and that is the way Tory arithmetic works. You take $70 million from here, put it over here to pay off the national debt and then bring in a Bill to the tune of $875 million to pay off uninsured depositors in these institutions, all of which will be added to the national debt.

I now want to follow up on the remarks by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). One of the speakers across the way tried to make fun of the Hon. Member for Trinity. I believe the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown had a few remarks to say about her. If any of those people across the floor who have spoken—

• (1710)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House. I did not make fun of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) or any other Hon. Member in this House.

Mr. Hopkins: That is another nice little contribution by the Hon. Member.

Mr. McDermid: You know better.

Mr. Hopkins: You did talk about her.

Mr. McDermid: I debated her points. I did not make fun of her.

Mr. Hopkins: Well, he was very upset about her points, okay. The Hon. Member mentioned that the Minister of State for Finance got up in the House and accused the Liberal Opposition and the NDP of holding up this Bill. In fact, as the Hon. Member for Trinity stated, this Bill came back into the House on November 7 at report stage. It then sat on the Order Paper for 20 days. Yet, the Government considered this to be an urgent matter. Then, on a Friday afternoon, with only 14 minutes left in the day's proceedings, the Government called this Bill. Therefore, there has been 14 minutes of debate at report stage since November 7. That is the responsibility of, and can be blamed on, the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

I suggest to the Minister of State for Finance that when she comes into the House and delivers a speech accusing the Opposition of holding up legislation, she had better get through to her own House Leader because it shows that there is not very much priority in his mind for this legislation.

We should say "Merry Christmas" to the people of Canada because they are paying a $875 million bill for the Government that was created by the confidence which was expressed in these banks by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance. They are the ones who caused this problem, not the Opposition, and now they are making the Canadian public pay for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps appropriate we should be having a debate on this question just before Christmas, since before the average Canadian gets his presents, he first has to help pay the big banks, the big investment companies, and bankers outside Canada, and all this thanks to a Bill that gives $870 million to companies with deposits at the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank.

[English]

We have already talked a bit about the Government coming up with this Bill at the last minute and saying that we had better rush it through since it has been delayed. The delays have come because the Government decided it would not bring this Bill forward. This Bill was very close to conclusion at report stage. There was only one amendment left to be considered. The Government cannot fool Canadians by saying that this has been delayed in the House. It has been delayed deliberately by the Government which now says that we have to get it passed.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that any government that uses the parliamentary procedures surrounding the collapse of the Home Bank in 1923 to justify its refusal to give information to the people of Canada in 1985 is surely grasping at straws. We should be talking about how to deal with Canadians today. We should be talking about the openness and accountability which was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), his Cabinet, and his Party when they campaigned for office in the summer of 1984. Did we get openness? No. Did we get accountability? No. Are we being given the information we require to judge this particular deal? No. Do we know where the money we are paying out through this particular Bill is going? No. The reason for that is that the Government has chosen to pull a veil over this particular deal.

The Government has said that the Bank Act will not allow this because it must be private. This is not an ordinary transaction under the Bank Act. The privacy under the Bank Act is quite different with regard to this particular affair. If a company goes bankrupt the confidentiality with which it treats its creditors becomes public. If they are paid off they have to be disclosed and one knows who the creditors are and how much they will get. That is the situation here, Mr. Speaker. However, because of the Bank Act, that will not apply unless we pass legislation to make it apply.

I would have no problems with the confidentiality if the creditors of the two banks that have gone bust were simply taking their lumps. However, they are being reimbursed for every last penny because of the Government's decision to give them their money. Frankly, I and my party do not think it is justified. The "widows and orphans" argument that has been made by the Government does not hold water. My party suggested some time ago that if there was hardship among certain groups or individuals who had deposits in the two banks in question, we should perhaps look at a hardship fund to compensate them. The Government said "No". It said, however, that we should look at the hardships that would be created if we do not proceed to reimburse every depositor. Hospitals, trade unions, and religious organizations have been cited as particular bodies which might suffer.

The total uninsured deposits in the two banks held by hospitals amounted to $4.7 million. Trade unions had $6 million on deposit and religious organizations had $7.5 million in the two banks. Adding in charities, which had $14 million; pension funds and ethnic groups, which together had less than $1 million; school boards, which had about $3 million; and unincorporated businesses, which together had about $5 million; we are still far short of $50 million. Adding in municipalities with populations of under 100,000 and school boards which had only $3 million on deposit, we come up with a total of less than $60 million in deposits of those for whom some special treatment might be justified as far as Parliament is concerned.

Did we pass a Bill which sought to recompense the particular groups which may have particular problems? No. We are handing out $875 million instead of $60 million. Where is the rest of the money going, Mr. Speaker? It is going to Schedule A banks which have just recorded profits of $37 million. It is going to Schedule B banks which are largely foreign controlled and had $46 million on deposit which is being repaid by the citizens of Canada through their taxes.

Many of my constituents, who are members of the Public Service, are going to suffer. Directives have been issued within the civil service saying to cut back on services, to find another 3 per cent, and to cut back on jobs within the Public Service of Canada. We are being directed to cut back on services to ordinary Canadians in order to pay off these large depositors. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, any government that takes from the poor and ordinary Canadians in order to give to large and wealthy organizations is not dealing fairly with the people of Canada in my opinion. The Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) seems to be upset about this. He used to work for the Conference Board.

Foreign banks have $113 million in deposits for which they are being recompensed. I cannot justify that and I do not know how the Government can. These are not widows and orphans. These are not poor individuals, Mr. Speaker. These are wealthy, foreign banks that happened to put some deposits into Canada because they thought they could make a bit of extra interest on their deposits. They took a normal commercial risk. The Government should allow them to get their share of the assets back from the banks that went bust. That is what happens with other bank failures and it seems to me that that is how they should be treated now.

The Government keeps saying that the economy of the country should be run more like a business. Therefore, for God's sake, let us apply that here with business people who were taking commercial risks. Trust companies are surely wealthy enough to absorb a loss of $8 million. However, they are being fully recompensed. Investment dealers lost $110 million. Surely they and their clients are wealthy enough to take that loss. Large customers with uninsured deposits exceeding $.5 million, both corporations and individuals, had $19.5 million on deposit. They are being recompensed through the raising of taxes on ordinary Canadians and the cutting of services for ordinary Canadians. We are not even to find out who these individuals are who will benefit from these sacrifices of the ordinary taxpayers of Canada. Surely individuals and corporations with deposits exceeding $1 million are not hardship cases. Those individuals have deposits of about $88 million. They will be recompensed down to the last penny while ordinary Canadians must pay the price.

• (1720)

Recently I was visited by one of my constituents who had been in a commercial dispute with the Government of Canada. He was a small contractor and I think it is fair to say that he got rooked by the Government of Canada in a commercial dealing some seven or eight years ago. He was forced to sell his house. He was forced to practically liquidate his business. He has suffered financially for the last seven or eight years but has not been recompensed. He is only gradually getting back on his feet.

Mr. McDermid: That is the insensitivity of the Liberals.

Mr. Cassidy: Now he will have to help pay for these repayments to wealthy corporations and individuals who took commercial risks but are now being recompensed.

Let me say a word about what the Estey Commission is discovering. It is finding out that there was fault in almost every part of the system in terms of regulating those banks. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is nodding in the affirmative.

Mr. McDermid: We want to find out.

Mr. Cassidy: I think the Inspector General of Banks should have submitted his resignation rather than endure the limitations on staff which he faced. If he was dissatisfied he should have indicated that publicly. However, he accepted those limitations and all of us have suffered as a consequence.

The Bank of Canada was clearly at fault. The Finance Department should have known as well. Although the operations of those banks were well known, that information did not penetrate here in Canada. It has become clear that the Progressive Conservative Government did not realize until August that there was something deeply wrong, something rotten in the state of the Northland and Canadian Commercial banks.

Did the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) take the necessary steps to find out what was going on before putting that initial money into the banks? No. Did they take the necessary steps immediately after? No. Did they ask their officials to take those steps? No. They went along, like innocents to the slaughter. However, when the price had to be paid, rather than paying it themselves by resigning they are making the people of Canada pay $875 million for the rescue of these banks.

It is a billion dollars for the banks and a billion dollars for Dome. It is $600 million for Olympia & York, the Little Egypt Bump and we know that it is $400 million for the big Boeing bump which we heard about today. The Government is second to none when it comes to giving out money to large wealthy corporations and individuals in this country. It is about time that we began to look after ordinary Canadians and not just big corporations.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to pursue the representations made by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) and my hon. friend from Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

I am surprised today at the opposition to Bill C-79 expressed by the Liberals in their representations. What is happening here? Have they already forgotten that the problems at our western banks, and I know it is rather ironic, were caused by the neglect and incompetence of our predecessors, who allowed 70 new banks to be created without appropriate legislation? A number of those banks experienced problems we are all familiar with, and now we have to provide a remedy and make up for the Liberals' neglect.

The Liberals got the whole country excited with their National Energy Program. They created a state of national euphoria. Everyone was excited, and everyone believed we would all get rich in no time. That is why businesses were set up with very shaky financing, that is they borrowed far more than they actually invested in the business. The banks became as liberal as the Government. They made too many loans, which caused a number of problems, and today some banks are having to cope with these problems and the Government as well.

That same Government had led businesses to do what is called inflation financing. This means that someone with a project could borrow money on the basis of the expected increase in monetary value of the project in subsequent years, and so he could borrow as much as 100 or 105 per cent of the amount he needed, thanks to the financial climate under the Liberal Government at the time.

Today, they question whether we acted responsibly in the matter of the western banks. Before commenting on our position, I would like to ask whether they recall their own involvement in recent years, when they were in power, when they were involved to the tune of $3.5 billion in certain businesses, especially since today, they are criticizing and asking us questions about our involvement in a crisis situation they themselves created. What did they do with Consolidated Computer? They spent $125 million in public funds. What did they do with CCM, the bicycle manufacturer? They spent $15 million in public funds and taxpayers' money. What did they do with Maislin? They spent $32 million in taxes. What did they do with Massey-Ferguson? They spent $125 million in taxpayers' money. What did they do with the Havilland, the same de Havilland they are complaining about today, now that we have managed to find a solution and a way to turn the company around by attracting a major investor? During all that time they spent $900 million on de Havilland. What did they do with Canadair? They spent $2.1 billion, and this was before they doctored the accounts, before the Auditor General of Canada caught up with them and shed some light on their shady deals.

Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is that they spent $3.5 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money on those few companies. That is how they managed to run up a $200 billion deficit while they were in office. I am sure you realize what a $200 billion deficit means, Mr. Speaker. It means that for every dollar of tax revenue in this year's budget we have to set 39 cents aside to pay the interests owing on the debts accrued as a result of the mismanagement of the economy by our Liberal predecessors.

So now we have to make do with a limited budget to meet urgent needs and cope with expenditures of $105 billion. We have earmarked $45 billion for social affairs and $25 billion to pay the interests accrued as a result of the mismanagement, the wastefulness and the incompetence of our predecessors. We have $35 billion left to run the other departments, Mr. Speaker.

Because we are responsible and want to maintain a climate of confidence, we decided to get involved in the banking operations of two Western Canada financial institutions. We decided to get a handle on the situation so that Canadians and foreigners alike would not lose confidence in our banking system. Why foreigners, Mr. Speaker? Foreign institutions had deposits of only $113 million in those two banks.

Since we know that the two banks account for 1 per cent of the net assets of Canadian banks, we can readily conclude that foreign financial institutions have deposits of at least $15 billion in Canadian banks. Had we not done anything, we could rightly have expected some of those foreign banks to withdraw their $15 billion. We must never forget that our banking system needs those $15 billion to be able to provide a steady cash flow for our small- and medium-sized busineses. That is one of the reasons why we had to intervene in banking operations.

It's a fact that we have received representations calling upon the House to protect a great many depositors such as municipalities, groups, trade unions, etc. It's another factor which the Government has taken into account. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we have the feeling that this is a truly national Government and that Canada is a country which extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific. That is the fact I wanted to emphasize. Hon. Members of the Liberal Party have forgotten that a few years ago, in the Province of Quebec, a number of banks were faced with serious problems. I refer to the "Caisses d'entraide économique". When those credit unions experienced difficulties for which Quebecers had to pay, what did the Liberals do? They ignored the fact that Canada is a country that extends from Newfoundland to British Columbia. They let down the Quebec investors who had deposited their money in the "Caisses d'entraide économique", and they failed to take action. They did not understand the meaning of Canada. We, on the contrary, understand its meaning and we are aware that a number of Western Banks are experiencing difficulties. We are going to help them. This is a national concern.

Mr. Speaker, we are acting for the good of this country; we want to show our interest in all aspects of Canadian life. I suggest that the response is excellent, because we have created 416,000 new jobs in Canada, including 130,000 in the Province of Quebec. While the Liberals created 600 new jobs per month, we have created 9,000 new jobs per month. We have created more new jobs per month over the past 14 months than the Liberals did over the last 55 months of their administration. Which means that the Canadian people, businessmen, small- and medium-size businesses have faith in our administration, and that is why we took action concerning those two banks. The response is also excellent as far as interest rates are concerned. They have gone down by as much as 3.6 per cent since September 1984; there has been a reduction in inflation since 1984; the Gross National Product has increased since 1984. That is why I say that the Liberals are not in a position to criticize this Bill. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to show you the front page of today's issue of The Globe and Mail which deals with organization and co-operation, as well as economic development. There is a very positive article about our administration. It is not even an editorial. It's on the front page of the newspaper. I suggest, therefore, that newspapers everywhere in this country are starting to recognize our competence and say: You are right. Stay the way you are, for we love you that way!

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in my place and to enter the debate on Bill C-79. Earlier in the debate, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) said that at stake in the debate was the credibility of a nation. Well, he was wrong, 100 per cent. What is at stake in this debate is the credibility of the Conservative Government. I am surprised and shocked that the Hon. Member before me would indicate that somehow they had restored trust and faith in the banking system. If they have done anything, they have certainly distanced themselves from any trust or any faith which any banking institution will place in the confidence of this particular Government. The Parliamentary Secretary went on to say that Canadians would not forget this debate. Indeed they will not, and they will not forget the position of the Conservative Government. In essence it is saying to Canadians and to the Official Opposition: "Sign this blank cheque to the tune of $875 million and just take our word for it; just sign on the dotted line and you will have no problems". We are not prepared to do that. We were not prepared to do that several months ago, and we are not prepared to do it now.

Back in February and March the Minister of State came before the House during second reading and said that it was the moral obligation of the opposition Parties to sign the blank cheque to nameless and faceless individuals. What kind of moral definition does she have? Where was the morality on March 25 when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rose in their places and said: "Don't worry about the bail-out because we know what we are doing"? Where was the morality of this Government which declined the repetitive request of the Official Opposition to send the entire matter to a parliamentary committee so that parliamentarians could delve into the situation and find out the answers which Canadians wanted? Where was the morality in that? Where was the morality during Question Period, when on a consistent and regular basis, questions would be thrown to the Government and it would simply say that it had appointed some kind of a commission and therefore could not answer any questions? What about that definition of morality? What about the morality of the Government several months ago when it was prepared to deindex the pensions of senior citizens for the reason that somehow it had to reduce the deficit? What were its excuses in the debate which ensued in the Chamber? They backtracked very quickly because they knew they were wrong then, and they know they are wrong now. Where was the morality in deindexing family allowances despite the promises and the commitments which the Prime Minister made from coast to coast? Where was the morality there?

What kind of hypocrisy are we dealing with when we have a Government which says on one hand "we cannot keep the family allowances cheques the way they used to be, we are changing them, we are lowering them because you too have to fight the deficit, you too have to help us", yet in a quick swoop it says that $1 billion for the bank bail-out is fine. Also it has the audacity to say that it is fine without providing the information required by Parliament and by Canadians. They are the ones who are footing the $875 million blind cheque. It is not the Conservative Government. It is not the banking industry. It is the Canadian people who are being asked to foot the bill. At the same time we have a Government which is not prepared to tell Canadians why they are paying that bill and to whom those moneys will be going.

We have heard a great deal about us somehow not being compassionate about the needy interest groups within that $875 million ambit. We told the Government several months ago—and we tell it again today—that if there were serious, needy situations, we were prepared to look at them on an individual basis.

We are asking the Government to grant Canadians an opportunity to know who will be receiving those moneys. It is not a special request. We are not asking for something that is impossible. Yet, Conservative back-benchers rise and say that the Liberals spent x dollars here and x dollars there. So they did, but they explained to Canadians what those moneys were for. They explained to Canadians their vision of the country. However, this Government is setting a very serious precedent when it cloaks itself in privacy, when it cloaks itself in hiding information from Parliament, and when it cloaks itself in closure. That is a very serious disease, indeed, a disease which must be eradicated as quickly as possible. In 1988 we will make certain that that disease will be eradicated once and for all.

We are not talking about the credibility of the nation. We are talking about the integrity and the credibility of this particular Government, a Government which was prepared to introduce a Budget and to tell earners between $15,000 and $25,000 that they would have to pay 36 per cent in taxes by 1990. On the other hand, it is telling individuals earning upwards of $200,000 that their part of the bill is only 2 per cent. Two per cent for the $200,000 earner and 36 per cent for the $15,000 to $25,000 earner. Is that justice? Is that fair? Is that some sense of morality? Then we have to sit in our places and accept the morality discussions of the Minister of State for Finance! Like heck we will, and Canadians will not stand for it either, Mr. Speaker.

What we are talking about is the integrity of the Government, an integrity slipping minute by minute, day by day, month by month. The Government simply cannot sit back. It cannot laugh and joke about these things because while it has an absolute majority, while it has 212-odd Members, it also has a responsibility to maintain the traditions that are part of this Chamber, traditions that would suggest the Government has an obligation while governing the country to govern it not only in a proper fashion, but to allow Canadians to understand how they are being governed and what they are being governed by. That is not happening in this Bill. That is not happening in the other seven Bills that have had closure imposed on them. It is not happening with the de Havilland case, Mr. Speaker.

We have the Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) the back-benchers, the surfers, the hangers-on, the book-ends, all saying that it is such a great deal, but no one has ever seen the deal. They are all saying it is great for Canada. But do you know what, Mr. Speaker? Canada does not know what the deal is. Why is that? Because the Government knows what kind of a deal it has signed. The Government knows what kind of a giveaway it has enacted. The Conservatives know what kind of disservice they have done. They can read polls as well as we can. They know that 78 per cent of Canadians in a poll conducted by a Tory firm show that Canadians wanted de Havilland to remain Canadian, that there was something of a nationalistic pride and honor that went with de Havilland.

We can talk of de Havilland. We can talk of Bill C-79 and deindexation of seniors and family allowances, but the fact remains the same. People in Canada voted for a change. They got disservice and were hoodwinked. The Government will not get away with it because 1987 and 1988 is just around the corner.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was a bit concerned that when the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) was talking about morality and integrity, he was talking over the heads of the Opposition. I became particularly concerned that he might have gone too far when he referred to the 212-odd Members on the other side but following that he substantiated the allegation.

Earlier we heard the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) state that the legislation before the House was intended to deal with a very particular and unique set of circumstances. That unique set of circumstances, of course, refers to bad management of the banks involved and the incompetence of the Government and the inadequacies of the banking regulatory system.

What we have before us is not only a bank bail-out Bill but if you give it careful consideration, I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would call it the bank enhancement Bill. What is involved is an expenditure of $875 million, very nearly a billion dollars, for the purpose of bailing out an anonymous collection of depositors in two failed banks. The money will be borrowed. Interest on the borrowings will be paid to the banks and the banks will, some at least, be saved from having to be bailed out later.

The amendment with which we are dealing this afternoon has a very simply purpose, a purpose with which I am sure the vast majority of Canadians would agree. Those uninsured depositors who are to benefit from these huge expenditures should be known to those who are going to pay for the bail-out. That is an extremely simple proposition to which the Government has replied in an exceedingly unsatisfactory way, saying first that it would vilate the Bank Act and the Privacy Act, ignoring that it is easy to amend legislation. As has been indicated earlier, we are talking about a closed bank and the power of the House to do with it what it will with respect to this legislation.

There are alternatives that were proposed by those of us on this side. Those include a hardship fund to deal with those cases for which it could be justified to return in part or in whole the deposits to be lost by the closing down of the bank. An alternative amendment would have been to allow an immediate pay-out by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation based on the estimate of the liquidation value of the bank's assets. Those very two reasonable propositions which were rejected in committee. We are left with the present proposal which would give a huge sum of money to uninsured depositors.

The Minister said that the New Democratic Party has ignored the small-business person. I do not know about the small-business people in the constituencies of the Conservative Members, but I know that there are an awful lot of small-business people who would know in advance that if they had made an investment, comparable to a deposit, and if they were they to find themselves in losing circumstances subsequent to the risk that they would not find themselves bailed out by the Government. I would say that the Government to be consistent ought to introduce legislation immediately to ensure that every losing small-business person would be bailed out of their losses in the fashion that we propose to do here.

The Government says it is going to effect this bail-out because it is fair. We believe in fairness, Mr. Speaker. If it is fair to give $875 million to those who willingly took a risk, then it certainly would be fair to give money to those who need homes. It would be fair to give to those on the GIS who have inadequate income. It would be fair to build day-care centres for those who need them. It would be fair to provide jobs for those who do not have jobs. It would be fair to ensure that there would be more than enough money that every young person be guaranteed a university education or training and it would be cheaper to do that than the bail-out here.

If anyone were to advance the proposition that this kind of money be invested to ensure the education, training and jobs of young people, many of whom think they will never get jobs, the Government would say: "Oh, that is too much." The deficit would be important then because the Government has its friends. It has its ideology but it does not really have in its heart the sympathy those of us in the House of Commons ought to have for the people, too many of whom hurt too much and do not have the benefit of of being bailed out.

Mr. Pat Binns (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise to speak on Motions Nos. 2 and 3 regarding Bill C-79. One might wonder why a Member from Prince Edward Island would want to take an interest in these motions and this Bill itself. There are two reasons and they are quite simple.

I grew up in western Canada. I know what happened to western Canada in the last number of years under the Liberal administration. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, as a former westerner something that all Canadians who know about the West know. That is that the former Government so savaged the western economy in its last years that it led not only to a total collapse of the energy and real estate sectors but it actually ruined the lives of thousands and thousands of western Canadians.

• (1750)

The National Energy Program stopped all new oil field development in western Canada. People who were employed in the energy sector were thrown into unemployment. They became dependent on the welfare system. They were degraded. Those who could get jobs had to move to other areas of the world where enlightened Governments—

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, since there are many Members who want to speak, in a spirit of co-operation, I would like to move that the debate be extended until ten o'clock this evening if all the Members agree.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte Marie (Mr. Malépart) who has asked for unanimous consent that the House continue sitting until ten o'clock tonight. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. We shall resume debate with the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns).

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying only a moment ago, western Canadians who were thrown into unemployment because of things like the National Energy Program were forced, if they could get jobs, to get them out of the country. Friends of mine moved to places like Texas, Saudi Arabia and to areas of the world where enlightened Governments were encouraging energy developments in their own countries. However, that was not the case here in Canada. In fact, many Atlantic Canadians moved back east and waited for their chance to get even with the former Government which had put them out of a job. Of course, on September 4, 1984, those Atlantic Canadians and Canadians from across the country took the opportunity to turn the tables and put the Liberal Government of the day out of a job.

Some Hon. Members might ask what this has to do with the motion before us. It seems to me that it was not enough that the former Governemnt, along with the NDP, ruined the western economy. It seems now that they want to insult and embarrass the depositors who suffered through the financial crisis related to the bank failures.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would allow a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) on debate.

Mr. Binns: As I was beginning to say, our Party has said that enough is enough. We are committed to getting the West rolling again. That has begun with things like the Western Accord which has started to put western Canadians back to work. It has caused development to start to roll in the West. People are beginning to rebuild their lives.

Through this Bill, we now propose to help those westerners who would suffer financially without the Bill being passed. We believe that these people deserve not only to be compensated since the former Government caused many of their problems but that their confidentiality should be protected. If the depositors want to tell everyone their story, I think that is their right. However, we on this side of the House respect confidentiality. We respect the provisions of the Bank Act and the Access to Information Act regarding restrictions on the publication of such information.

I would not be surprised if some depositors would want to tell other Canadians what the former Government did to them and what these amendments would do to them. I think if they do, they will ensure that the remaining two Liberal seats in western Canada along with a lot of NDP seats will come our way next election.

I suggested that I had two reasons for speaking on this debate.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member should probably consider not only the remaining seats in western Canada but he should consider his own seat when he talks about those in Cardigan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns).

Mr. Binns: Those Hon. Members seem to be a little upset. I appreciate that. They have good reason to be upset.

The second reason I wanted to speak this afternoon is that this issue relates to having principles. When we talk about principles, we have to look at the nature of the depositors. The depositors were hospital commissions, small colleges, small-businessmen—

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member is happy paying out $857 million to unnamed foreign banks when there is not five cents for the potato farmers in Prince Edward Island. How can he justify that? It is totally irresponsible. Potato farmers are being paid 2.5 cents a pound and it costs them 4 cents to produce them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order, please. On debate, the Hon. Member for Cardigan.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that over the last 15 months, the Government has taken care of the problems that have come along and that is why we are taking care of this particular problem. I am sure the potato growers will not be left behind.

I was saying that hospital commissions, small businesses, credit unions, religious organizations, charitable and ethnic organizations and many other organizations representing individual Canadians have been affected by what has happened because of the collapse of these two banks. As well, there are pensioners. I would think that many pensioners have saved money over the years and put that money in those banks so that they could pass it on to their children or their grandchildren.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just said that depositors who had $60,000 or more—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I respectfully point out to the Hon. Member that this is a point of debate. I shall therefore ask the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Binns) to continue.

[English]

Mr. Binns: As I was saying, I know that many of the depositors affected are senior citizens and, of course, these are people who worked all their lives and saved their money so that they could pass it on to their families and grandchildren. I think that is important.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the Hon. Member would do the honourable thing and table for the Members of the House the names of those senior citizens of which he makes mention in his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. Could the Hon. Member continue on debate?

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, the point is that we are concerned about those senior citizens and about protecting their confidentiality. They deposited money in those institutions and want to be able to pass it on to their children and grandchildren. There is no reason why everyone has to know the details of the amounts of money they were able to save during their years of working.

I am not sure why opposition Members have persisted today in trying to determine who these individual Canadians are who have saved money and made deposits. Surely they are not doing it for the good of western Canada. I believe it is a good thing that this Party is committed to the principle of privacy. Let us maintain that principle and say that enough is enough for those people who have been subjected to the trauma of putting themselves together again after the western economy was ruined and after these banks and businesses have failed. They have been through enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. He will have some time left the next time this matter is debated in the House.

It being 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-70

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie):

That, in relation to Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, one sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the report stage of the said Bill and one further sitting day be allotted to the consideration of the Bill at the third reading stage; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting days, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, what we have before the House today is an approach by the Government to bring order to legislation which has had much debate at all stages that have been brought forward to date. First, the Bill before us had exposure in the Budget. In the budget debate, as all Hon. Members know, topics can be debated; it is a very wide-ranging debate and there is very minimal limitation, if in fact any exists, to debate the issues of the Budget and the economic affairs of the country.

There was a six-day debate in which, the Budget being the main motion, with amendments moved by the Official Opposition and by the NDP, the House disposed of not only the main motion but of every amendment and every sub-amendment.

Mr. Boudria: That was important.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I agree with the Hon. Member's intervention. It was so important that the House divided on it and the House approved the Budget and rejected the amendments. That is majority Government. That is what happened in the passage of the Budget.

Mr. Boudria: It is abuse.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is not abuse; that is democracy. I cannot help it if the Liberals are down to 40 Members, a little rump. They do not yet understand why on September 4, 1984, the people rejected them. When there is a vote in the House, as is the case when there is a vote in the electoral process, we accept the majority rule. They do not want to do that, nor have they accepted it to date. That is the issue with which we are dealing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Additionally, Bill C-70, came into the House and there was a long debate on it. When the Bill was being read the second time, again there was a division in the House and again the House decided, very clearly and in a wide majority view, that the Bill should be passed at second reading and passed in principle.

The Government did not stop there. This Bill was one of the first Bills which was subjected to the new House rules, namely reference to legislative committees. Under the rules on legislative committees, as all Hon. Members know, the size of the committee is generally much larger than that of standing committees. That Bill went through rigorous examination in committee.

Let us look at the British experience. When a Government or a Parliament has decided in principle on a Bill, then a legislative committee—and that is what its role is in the British parliamentary system—examines the principles of the Bill but, more important, examines it from the point of view of technicalities. This Government went further than that. Not only did we look at clauses, amendments and technicalities, we also asked witnesses from various groups in Canada to come forward. They made their points of view. That was also done, quite apart from what legislative committees had been established for in the British parliamentary system.

Ms. Mitchell: You did not listen to them; they were all opposed to what you are doing.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Again in committee the NDP and the Liberals were subjected to votes, and in each case they lost it again. That was also done.

Ms. Mitchell: You ignored the witnesses.

Mr. Frith: They did not even listen to their own back-benchers.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that we finally woke them up. We now come to the matter of report stage. We believe very clearly, for instance, that Clause 5 will give us more ability as a Government to deal in situations of family tragedies and not to move unless we have had consultations with the families. Specific members of the Official Opposition and of the NDP have tried to drag red herrings across the trail in order to stop the matter further. They know very well that what they have been doing has been explained time after time.

Thus, we come to the situation this morning. The situation this morning is that it is time for the House, after having those many votes, to decide, and that is the motion before us. In a democracy the Opposition does not always agree with what the Government is doing, and we obviously do not always agree with what the Opposition is doing. That is democracy, and I accept it. However, democracy also demands that at a certain point decisions must be taken. That time has come now, and that is why the motion is before us. I say to Hon. Members that the motion before us makes sense because we have had no indication whatsoever, at any stage, from members of the Opposition that they are willing to look at a reasonable time, beyond what they have already had, in which the matter can be debated and in which the matter can be decided.

Ms. Mitchell: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: How about some reasonable amendments?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I can hear the NDP. I understand its Members because they have made opposition a fine art. They have never had to understand the other side of the parliamentary process. However, it is another matter when we talk about the Liberals. I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, what Liberal Members have been doing. It is one thing for them to talk but we have to look at their actions. Their actions have been very, very different from their words, and they know it.

• (1110)

Let us look at the time when the Liberal Government froze family allowances. What did Liberal Members do? They froze family allowances in January. Now Liberal Members rise in the House to say that we should not pass these Bills. I have a press release ready which will show that family allowances will be going up on January 1, 1986. However, Liberal Members do not say that.

Additionally, the Liberal Government froze the family allowance in January. Do you know when it passed that legislation? It was passed 12 months later in December. Now we can pass this legislation after these many steps of the legislative process have been taken, but that is not good enough for Liberal Members.

I say that the time has come for a decision to be made. I say to Liberal Members and NDP Members that the case has been clearly made and it is time to make a decision. That is why we put this matter forward and I would suggest that these two hours will provide sufficient time along with another two days to dispose of the issue. I suggest that we dispose of it now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are listening will now understand why most people call him the Minister of social injustice.

Mr. Speaker, this Minister has yet to understand what his role is supposed to be.

I think we should recall that in this country's history, whenever a Budget was brought down, every Minister of National Health and Welfare, and even the Conservative Minister of National Health and Welfare, and even the Conservative Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) who is here in the House, has seen it as his duty to defend the interests of the elderly, the sick and our families. This is the first time in Canada's history, under any government, that we have a Minister who is supposed to defend the interests of these people and who sees it as part of his ministerial duties to crush those very same people and take away their purchasing power.

Today he agreed to move a motion to impose closure on the Opposition. Mr. Speaker, if anyone asks us why the Members of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party are violently opposed to this Bill, our answer is quite simply that the people of this country have asked us to do so.

The Minister has tried to show us how to behave with parliamentary hypocrisy, but I refuse to play the kind of game he wants to play in the House. The people of Montreal-Sainte-Marie did not elect and re-elect me to indulge in parliamentary hypocrisy; they elected me not to defend our institutions but to defend the interests of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the role of Members in this House is not just to consider the British system or Canada, but to consider the people who live in this country.

Mr. Speaker, what this motion means, and I find this absolutely shocking, is that the Minister is asking us to cease debate at a time when Canadians, and I have a copy of the telegram sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and not only women are opposed to this measure, not just family agencies but the bishops as well, who are asking for a meeting with the Prime Minister on Friday . . . Mr. Speaker, these are the people who are asking their Members to object to the decision made by this Minister and by the Prime Minister.

We have received petitions from every riding in Canada, Mr. Speaker. Even people from the riding of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, even people from the Prime Minister's riding are against that measure.

And why are they, Mr. Speaker? First of all, because the Government wants to treat families the same way it tried to treat the elderly. They have been betrayed. People are angry with this Government, and angry with the Prime Minister because they have been misled.

Mr. Speaker, all this will go down in history. Remember when Mrs. Denis came up and told the Prime Minister in no uncertain terms: "You lied to us, Charlie Brown." She was right, and our Canadian mothers are saying the same thing. Mr. Speaker, this is the same Minister who bragged about consulting the people. This is the same Minister who, on behalf of the Government, made a commitment to these people in a document bearing his signature, a document that says that any savings which may result from program changes will not be applied to a reduction of the deficit. That was to mislead the people and the organizations that came to testify. They thought they could trust him, but the Budget has proved them to be wrong.

Mr. Speaker, what the Minister then tried to have us believe about the new legislative committees was a lot of nonsense. First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Members who were there were totally useless. All they tried to do was to obstruct debate, and all they wanted to do was leave. They did not even want to hear witnesses. The Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party had to force Government Members to listen to people who wanted to have their say. Extraordinary steps had to be taken to force the Government to hear the witnesses.

Still with respect to another Bill C-70 clause which has nothing to do with the de-indexation of family allowances, the Minister wanted full authority to decide on his own whether a missing child would be presumed dead. One outrageous incident was the case of a Quebec woman who came all the way to Ottawa. The Government could not spare any money to help her, but it is not so niggardly when time comes to throw a party. I was the one who found the money to bring this mother here to testify. I offered to give up my ten minutes just so she might give evidence before the committee, but the eleven Conservative Members turned me down right in front of the media.

The Minister is going too far, openly misleading the people, and that is why all Quebecers and all Canadians are fuming mad, Mr. Speaker. No wonder this morning's polls reveal that the popularity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is going down fast. No wonder most Canadians are against the policies of this Government.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition laid our cards on the table right after the Budget was introduced because we knew for a fact that three of its measures were unfair and unacceptable.

First, the de-indexation of old age security pensions. With the strong support of elderly Canadians we managed to make the Minister and all Conservative Members eat humble pie, and even the Prime Minister had to backtrack.

Second, the shameful tax on the health of citizens intended to enable the Government to recoup some money. Here again, in August, we were successful in throwing the Government off course, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister and all the silent Conservative Members had to eat crow. The Government had no choice but to retreat.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that our fight for family allowances is not over, and we intend to use every means at our disposal.

Today the Minister announced a 4 per cent increase in Canada Pension Plan and old age security pension benefits. Thanks to whom? Not thanks to the Conservative Government, but thanks to elderly Canadians who won their point. And then the Government has been unwilling to say by how much the family allowances cheques would increase. Canadians ought to know that if the Bill is adopted, monthly family allowances will go up by 37 cents in English Canada, and 18 cents for each child in Quebec.

Yesterday I listened to the Prime Minister on the Radio-Canada program "Le Point" when he kept repeating that he wanted to be generous with the people. Generous to the tune of 18 cents a month, big deal! At the same time the Government drops the guillotine to push through a Bill to bail out rich depositors who had over $60,000 in the western banks.

Mr. Speaker, you should not wonder ... Which province does the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) come from? Which region is he from? Whose interests is he trying to defend, Mr. Speaker? His western Canadian chums who had money in the bank that went belly up because they were bad administrators, but he simply could not care less about the three million needy Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to all the Conservative Members of Parliament, even those who are not in the House today, since it is useless to speak to the Minister as he is a lost cause. If you do not take steps in each of your constituencies to stop this Bill from being approved, if you do not take steps to ensure that family allowances will be fully indexed, if you continue to grovel before the Prime Minister, if you continue to be so spineless, if you continue to grovel and to defend the wealthy as you are now doing, during the coming months and next year, people will go to see you at your offices and ask you to justify yourselves.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to say that 1988 will come quickly, and during the next electoral campaign, the Conservative Members will do door-to-door canvassing, they will go to meetings, they will go and see the senior citizens and say that they need their support. The senior citizens will reply: "Where were you when I needed you? You did not take care of me; that's it!" As for families with children, when these Conservative Members go and see the mothers to tell them that they need them, they will say: "Where were you when it was time to defend our interests? You were not there so we are getting rid of you!" The same thing has been happening on all the issues, but I see that my alloted time is over. I urge the Conservative Members to reflect on this. It is Christmas time, the time of family reunions. It is the most important family holiday of the year, and I trust that the gift that the Prime Minister brings to Canadian men and women on New Year's day will not be a reduction in their family allowance cheque.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members that yesterday Father

Christmas visited us out in the front lobby after Question Period. He had a long chin and no belly. In fact, he was a very skinny Father Christmas. He gave out empty Kraft Dinner boxes to people who were there, in particular a poor mother with her child. He appeared at the behest of a low income support group from Ottawa. He was here to show the feeling which low income people have that this was not really Father Christmas but the Grinch in disguise—a green monster. I would not hesitate to say that this was a green monster who represents the Hon. Member who comes from the hills of Provencher who wants to steal Christmas from children, mothers and, of course, families. The message which is being given out by the Conservative Government is that it will cut the value of the family allowance for Canada's children and families and, in particular, mothers who are struggling so hard to raise children. The Government is doing this as a Christmas present.

While this was going on Members of Parliament, at least those of us who sit in Opposition, continued to present petitions, something which we have been doing now for weeks. We have presented hundreds of petitions with tens of thousands of signatures on them which have been sent to us from people all across Canada. They continue to flood into Members' offices, at least into mine, every day. We had hoped that, as a result of this particular protest and appeal from Canadians, the Minister, like the Grinch, would perhaps have his heart warmed and reconsider, or at least delay until after Christmas, taking any action with respect to Bill C-70. Of course, this morning we know what the answer is.

As a Christmas present to Canada's children, the Government has brought in time allocation which will force us to push through this Bill. This is only a repeat of what the Government has done since the introduction of Bill C-70. It brought in time allocation when we first debated the Bill at second reading stage. It imposed time allocation when there was no need for it. Then, when the Bill was before the committee, the Government reduced the number of weeks which had been allowed for witnesses to appear before the committee. It refused to hear from certain witnesses who had appealed to appear before it. I am thinking particularly of groups which are very concerned about the missing children section of the Bill and the child find groups which wanted to appear. I have before me petitions from about seven or eight of those groups from across Canada who appealed to the Minister to let them be heard. Of course, the committee refused to hear them on the advice of the Minister. Again, we had time allocation in that respect.

Native women were not heard. Native groups which suffer the greatest poverty in the country and which also have much larger families depend on a fully indexed family allowance for their families. They were not heard from. The Government brought in time allocation with respect to the proceedings of the committee and here we see it being imposed again at the report stage of the Bill. I think this is an absolute disgrace. It shows the insincerity and the mess which the Government is perpetuating.

The Minister has said over and over again that his social policy was to reinforce families. He has said that he cares about families and that he supports them. Yet, as a result of this Bill, he is attacking them. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), the Minister responsible for the status of women and, in fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have said that women will be an important priority of the Government. Yet they were responsible for presenting a Bill the first thing this fall that attacks women. It attacks particularly low income women and those women are stuggling to raise children on their own.

The Minister can laugh, but it is no laughing matter to mothers across Canada who will see a reduction in their family allowance benefits as a result of this measure.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It's going up.

Ms. Mitchell: The Minister again says that it is going up. The Minister has not listened to the consultations. He is trying to create a myth and perpetuate misconceptions for Canadians. He is trying to say that there will be a piddling increase in January, while at the same time the CLC has given him figures to which he has not paid attention. These figures show that the family allowance will be reduced considerably for all families over the next few years.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is going up.

Ms. Mitchell: The child tax credit will be reduced as well. The Minister is perpetuating a real myth and misconception on the people of Canada as a result of what he is saying. I do not think the people of Canada are so stupid as not to know what kind of games the Minister is playing. What is the Minister doing? He is giving some Christmas present to Canadians! He is telling mothers and fathers that what they do in terms of parenting is not important to the Government. He is saying that his Government can come in and impose time allocation with respect to debate on this Bill. He has not listened at all to what was said in committee. He has not listened to social policy groups or women's groups. He has not listened to poverty groups or groups of senior citizens. He has not listened to any of the groups which appeared before the committee and which sent telegrams and letters appealing to him. I bet he has not had one telegram or letter which expresses support of his policy.

I wish Conservative Members of Parliament would present the petitions which I am sure must have come into their offices. I know that stacks of petitions went to the Prime Minister himself. Yet, we have heard nothing about it. I have copies of those petitions which went to the Prime Minister and we have not heard from him about this matter at all. The Government is giving a negative message to Canadians, and it will come out. It will just be repeated again and again as the life of this Government goes on. Canadians will not forget this measure. They will not forget the Chirstmas present that the Minister and his Government is giving to Canadian families.

I cannot understand just from a political point of view why the Government is doing this at Christmas time. The Grinch who stole Christmas has told us that he would do all these wonderful things for families. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) also, incidentally, told us that this was just a temporary measure. He said that these measures in the Budget which were hurting people were just going to be temporary until the economy improved. Every day in the House the Government tells us that the economy has improved, that there are many more jobs and more people are paying taxes. The Government brought in a minimum tax and it received our congratulations. That tax will give $300 million more to the Treasury, yet the Government will not use any of that money to maintain family allowances. It found $1 billion for the banks and is taking away $1 billion from our children by the year 1990, yet the Minister brags about putting a few more cents onto the family allowance in the new year. We know what he is up to and the people across the country know what he is up to.

• (1130)

I want to say to the Government that the protest is just starting. That is why the Government is bringing in closure. The United Church of Canada is just starting a campaign and we are receiving all kinds of telegrams and letters, which I hope are going to the Minister and to the Prime Minister as well. Last week the Catholic Bishops said that the proposed changes in family allowance payments is the latest in a series of measures which threaten the universal social rights of Canadians. They said: "It is our fear that the social and human impact of the proposed change to the family allowance will only add to the already widespread suffering of our families, particularly families headed by women". We also heard from the Vanier Institute, which was not that vocal earlier on but is now very deeply concerned. It said last week that Bill C-70 is a gift to families which does not fit and cannot be returned. It went on to say that the proposed change over time will make the family allowance program worth very little to Canadians.

We have heard over and over again from the social policy groups, and so has the Minister both in consultation privately and through the committee. But he has not listened. He is sitting over there laughing and exclaiming "Oh, ho, ho", and he does not listen to any of the groups which have told him what a devastating impact this will have on families. I have repeated in several speeches the information we have received from those groups. I am sorry I do not have the time to go through it again.

The Parent-Teachers' Federation is another group which is just beginning to become active in this area. The trade union groups are sending in petitions as well. And in the time I have left, I would just like to read one very touching letter, which is actually a poem. It is called "Broken Lives and Broken Promises". It is an open letter to the Prime Minister regarding Bill C-70. It is from June Wilson of the Unemployed Action Centre in Penticton, British Columbia. She writes: "What made us think you'd be different? What made us think you'd care? What made us think you'd keep your word and give the poor their share? You with your wealth and power—"

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allocated to her has now expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to listen to the New Democratic Party talk about how terrible things are in Canada today, because consumer spending has never hit such heights. I suggest that those Hon. Members wander over to some of the shopping centres and take a look at the stores which are just jammed with people. That does not indicate that this country is going to rack and ruin.

There is certainly no hypocrite like a Grit hypocrite. I just want to set the record straight. The family allowance will now be increased by the annual increase in the consumer price index in excess of 3 per cent. That is up, not down. The principle of universality is maintained. And we are going to maintain universality. It is interesting to read what a top Grit has been saying. "Abandon universality, Liberals told", by a former Liberal cabinet Minister, Otto Lang. He wants universality abolished. It is interesting to note the double standards of the Liberals. Their hidden agenda probably includes the abolishment of universality.

The child tax credit, which is of particular benefit to low income families, will be increased by 36 per cent, from $384 in 1985 to $524 in 1988. In 1986 there will be a $70 increase, raising the credit from $384 to $454 per child. In 1987, there will be a further $35 increase. In 1988 there will be an additional $35 increase. The child tax exemption, which is of particular benefit to high income families, will be reduced, so we are not looking after the rich as someone mentioned here a moment ago. It will be reduced by almost half from $710 to about $380, to equal the amount of family allowances. These changes will enhance the support provided to low income families while reducing benefits to higher income families, thus correcting inequities in the existing system.

Speaking of taxes, my Province of Manitoba, which has a New Democratic Government, has the highest taxes in Canada. That is really tough on the poor. The NDP policy is "tax, tax, tax". Manitoba has the highest taxes in the country. Its payroll taxes put a burden on employers so they cannot employ more people. That is how the NDP governs in Manitoba. It makes it really difficult for everyone.

This Government is committed to protect and improve social programs in Canada. We are now spending more on the social envelope than on any other envelope. The total social spending will rise by $4 billion, to $46.7 billion, close to half of total government expenditures. In this vein, the Government has expanded the eligibility for the spouses' allowance, benefiting 85,000 younger widows and widowers who had previously not qualified for benefits. So more people are going to benefit, not less.

Veterans' benefits have been improved for more than 140,000 Canadians and tax assistance has been extended to 185,000 disabled Canadians. So there is no cut-back in social programs in this country.

I would like now to comment on the Grit hypocrisy. Between 1974-75 and 1984-85, the Grits reduced spending on social programs. They were not worried about the aged or the poor at that time. Spending on social programs dropped from 50 per cent of federal expenditures to 43 per cent. So that tells us they are against the poor.

Prior to 1973 the Liberal Government did not index family allowances at all. That is real hypocrisy. In 1976, the Grits suspended the indexation of family allowances for a full year. With respect to the petitions they have been distributing, I wonder if they have provided those people with this kind of information. I will bet not.

On January 1, 1979, the Grits reduced family allowances by 20 per cent. How come they are not telling the people that? They should put that on the petitions they are spreading around—those phonies. In 1983-84, the Grits brought in their six and five program, which dramatically reduced inflation protection at a time of rampant inflation. They should put that at the top of their petitions.

To give a clear indication that the poor are not being neglected and social spending is certainly not dropping in this country, I will read a list of the social programs we have in this country: Canada Assistance Plan, provincial tax credits, veterans' allowance, social assistance to on-reserve Indians, guaranteed income supplement and spouses' allowance, child tax credit, social housing, child care expense deduction, family allowance, child tax exemption, assistance to the married and equivalent to married, unemployment insurance, training allowance, workers' compensation, employment expense deduction, and seven different programs for the elderly. This comes to a total in federal and provincial spending of $61.6 billion. We are doing this despite the problem we have inherited from the Grits, the huge debt load for which the Leader of the Grits is responsible, that architect of the uncontrolled spending in this country. We are spending $61.6 billion, Mr. Speaker, and our problem is to try to maintain that amount, but I have no doubt we will certainly maintain it.

There is no shortage of spending on social programs in this country. The $61.6 billion does not include what municipalities are spending on social assistance. The Grits talk about how upset the seniors were when we were going to reduce indexing somewhat. What the seniors said to me was: "At least you listen". In the past, when the Grits were reducing pensions, they certainly did not listen. When I explained to these people the debt problem, and I gave them the entire explanation and all the information, then they realized how serious a problem it is. They want to co-operate. This is the kind of information Members opposite should be putting on their petitions. Explain everything to these people. Show them the amount being spent. Give them all the information.

• (1140)

Mr. de Jong: Why don't you give that information to the bankers?

Mr. McKenzie: If they still want to object, then let them object. I provide my constituents with all the information on the debt load.

Mr. Frith: The way you gave us the information on de Havilland and the bank bail-outs?

Mr. McKenzie: The NDP does not like that. They would not give the truth to anybody.

Mr. de Jong: Tell the bankers that. Tell the bankers to forget their billion-dollar bail-out.

Mr. McKenzie: Regina is really yelling his head off today.

Mr. de Jong: Winnipeg is sure getting red in the face.

Mr. McKenzie: I would like to have a look at your householder. You just tell your constituents what we are spending on social programs. Explain it all to them. Then, if they want to criticize, they can criticize.

What about the original architect of this mess, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner)? I do not know how he has the nerve to show his face in this House.

Mr. Frith: You had better go back and redraft your speech, McKenzie.

Mr. McKenzie: As Minister of Finance, that top Grit, between January of 1972 and September of 1979, was the father of deficit financing and big spending. After that man had finished horsing around with Canada's finances, this is what the Auditor General said: "I am deeply concerned that Parliament, indeed the Government, has lost or is close to losing effective control of the public purse". That is the record of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra who created this huge national debt where, out of every $3,000 in taxes collected, $2,400 goes just to pay interest on the debt. Put that on the petitions you are distributing.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, it is rather fitting that this debate, which opened one year ago, has come full circle and is coming to a close in the final two days of this parliamentary session. I would like to take the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on a trip down memory lane and recall for him some of the words spoken at the very beginning of this debate one year ago in this Chamber. At that time there was apparently a genuine effort being made by the Government front bench to address some of our problems, not only the size of the federal deficit but also the way in which our social programs were supposedly not being targeted to those who needed help the most. I recall that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated at the very beginning of this debate that he did not know why a bank president making $500,000 a year should receive family allowance benefits. That was the beginning of the debate one year ago. I also recall that the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that any money saved in the Government's attempts to retarget social benefits towards those in our society who need the help most, would be used only in the social policy envelope and would never be used for deficit reduction.

Ms. Mitchell: Did he say that?

Mr. Frith: Those were the promises made at the very beginning of this debate. Six months after the debate began, and I bring us now to the spring of 1985, the whole issue of child benefits was referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I, along with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), spent hour upon hour listening to the various groups who came before the commitee. We made a series of recommendations to the Government in the spring of 1985 which we felt would address at least some of the problems reflected in the present system of child benefits. All of those recommendations were totally ignored by the Government when it decided to bring in changes to child benefits on the night of May 23 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) finally brought in his Budget.

At the heart of this issue, the reason why the parliamentary Opposition are so fundamentally and adamantly opposed to the measures put forward in Bill C-70, is the fact that these measures do not address the major issue we began discussing at the time we started the debate on universality, the issue of fairness. This Government began the debate based on the concept of putting in place more equity and fairness in the package of child benefits. However, it then comes forward with Bill C-70 which will, along with the tax measures in Bill C-84, impact severely on the low and middle-income earners of this country. That is an affront to the intelligence of all Members of this House, including the Government back-benchers. I note that those back-benchers have been conspicuously silent in this debate from the very beginning through to May 23.

I do not want to but I am going to ask that Members recall some of the words they used when they were in opposition four and five years ago and there was some discussion about the possibility of deindexing the tax system. The Conservatives placed an ad in the newspaper which said that that form of deindexation was a form of taxation with staggering consequences for every taxpayer, especially the low-income earner. Deindexing, they said, is a scheme to guarantee that everyone will pay higher federal income taxes year after year after year. That is what they said when they were in opposition, but my, how the tune changes when they find themselves to the right of the Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: And the left-hand side, too. Both ends.

Mr. Frith: It is true that they did bring forward a very conservative Budget. I am glad they did so because the Canadian public can see what the Conservative Party stands for. One has to realize the impact of not only Bill C-70 by itself, but also as it is linked to the income tax proposals in Bill C-84, which is now at report stage. One now begins to see the kind of social policy that the Conservative Party is advocating.

The numbers I have chosen here are numbers which have been used in the debate previously and they are undisputed. The net effect of plans to deindex family allowances and personal income taxes and fully implement the budget proposals means the following. If you have a family income of $15,000 a year you are going to pay an additional $1,879 in taxes over the next five years as a result of those two Bills alone. A family earning $35,000, which StatsCan indicates is a middle-income family, will pay an additional $3,452 in taxes. However, what happens to the family who earns $80,000 a year? They will only pay an additional $1,125 in taxes. In other words, the low and middle-income earners will pay more in taxes than the family with an $80,000 a year income. That is why the Opposition in this Parliament stand adamantly opposed not only to deindexation of family allowances but also to many of the measures in the May 23 Budget concerning taxes.

How in heaven's name can we justify a social policy which will widen the gap between the rich and the poor? It is evident that that is the Conservative social policy and it reflects the lack of a common sense approach to the difficulties faced by this country. We on this side of the House in the Opposition recognize that the deficit is a problem which has to be addressed by whichever Party is in power. However, if you are attempting to create the political will in this country to undertake the necessary reforms, you certainly do not do it with a Budget which widens the gap between the rich and the poor in our society.

• (1150)

I will respect the rules of the House and not wave an ad that I saw in The Citizen in Ottawa several days ago. I think most Members in the House have seen it. It is a full page ad which shows a well-to-do middle-aged couple. The wife is wearing a mink and the husband is wearing a tuxedo. The caption reads: "Buy your wife a condo for Christmas". The ad goes on to explain the various tax breaks that the Budget of May 23 will give to that group. The disparity in the country between the poor and the rich is the major reason we are fundamentally opposed to the social policy direction which the Conservative Government has undertaken since it assumed office in September of 1984.

To be a competent Opposition we should be able to put forward amendments to the Bill which we feel would improve the legislation. The recommendation that we made last spring to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs were totally ignored by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) when he finally brought forward his plan to deindex the family allowance. More important, when Bill C-70, which we are debating on the floor of the House today, was referred to the committee, members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party put forward a series of amendments to it which we knew would significantly improve the Bill. Yet, the Conservative majority on that committee steadfastly refused every amendment we put forward. They did not allow certain groups which both opposition Parties recommended be allowed to testify to do so.

Why is it the Government, which supposedly placed such a high value on consultation, has now introduced time allocation on this Bill to deindex the family allowance? Why did the Government, which put so much value on consultation, refuse to listen to every major social agency in the country that represents the poor and middle income people and have said that the plan to deindex the family allowance and, in particular, the technicalities of the way in which the Government is going to do so, is going to result in a new child benefit package that will help no one after 1989? Even the poorest of the poor will lose purchasing power under the proposals in Bill C-70.

The Government misleads the public when it indicates that next month's cheque will be larger than this month's cheque. It is true that it will be larger by 31 cents. However, the Government fails to point out that by deindexing the personal income tax system and the child tax credit beyond 1989 every family in the country will lose purchasing power. That includes families earning $9,000 a year and those earning $15,000 a year. That is at the heart of the matter, Mr. Speaker.

The Government does not seem to place any importance on the fact that its policies will widen the gap between the rich and the poor in our society. I predict that, unless the Government reverses this trend, there will be a disturbing trend of increasing violence in our society which tolerates the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer on the backs of the middle-income.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to speak on the motion which is before the House today which, as other Members have pointed out, will bring this debate to a close. I would like to address that issue. We have been hearing for many, many months now the arguments concerning this legislation. The time of the House has been taken up day after day since the introduction of the Budget on May 23 with the presentation of petitions. The time of the House has been taken up with debate.

Ms. Mitchell: That's what the House is for. What do you think we are here for?

Mr. Penner: That's why we exist.

Mr. Dorin: That is right, that is what Parliament is for, but there comes a time when the Government must make a decision.

Ms. Mitchell: You should decide not to go forward with Bill C-70.

Mr. Dorin: The Government was elected in September of 1984 to make decisions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dorin: The electorate did not ask us to go to Parliament and debate for four years and then have another election.

Ms. Mitchell: They didn't say to cut the family allowance either.

Mr. Dorin: They said that we should go to Parliament, make some decisions, get this country moving again, and get people back to work.

Ms. Mitchell: You won't get the country moving by cutting the family allowance.

Mr. Dorin: We have put people to work by creating 411,000 jobs. We have put some fiscal responsibility back into government. We know it is working, Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Mitchell: Why are you cutting the baby bonus if it is working?

Mr. Dorin: —because the OECD report issued yesterday did not have any recommendations to offer Canada. It said that the Canadian Government is on the right track and doing a good job and that it should keep up the good work.

I would like to discuss the motion before the House. When the six and five legislation was brought in in 1982 it was debated for three days at second reading, on December 1, 2, and 3, 1982. It was debated for three days in committee, on December 7, 9, and 13, 1982. It went through report stage in one day, on February 7. It was concurred in on February 8, and given third reading on February 10, 1983.

Bill C-70, which flowed from the Budget, which itself was debated for six days in the House, was introduced on September 13. It was brought forward for second reading on September 16 and was given seven days of debate at that stage before being given second reading on September 30. It was sent to committee on October 8 where it was debated for 13 days. In other words, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-70 was debated for twice as long at second reading as was the six and five legislation and for four times as long in committee.

We are hearing arguments from members of the Opposition that we have not spent enough time on this Bill. They are suggesting that we should defer a decision on this Bill until after Christmas. We understand that the Opposition is opposed to this Bill, but the Opposition must also understand that the Government has to go forward with the important Bills which are before the House today awaiting decisions in order that Canadians can understand the tax regime which is going to prevail so that they can make their decisions based on it. We must give them some certainty about the regime they will be operating under in the next taxation year.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the motion moved today to end the debate on this Bill is appropriate. I have pointed out that we have had a long debate. We have heard the arguments and heard from interest groups. I believe that we have tested the endurance of every Member of Parliament almost daily on this Bill. We are now coming to the time when we are going to make a decision.

Mr. Axworthy: Like the Crow debate.

Mr. Dorin: Well, we may have a Crow debate next year as well. I expect that that will be coming. Having addressed the motion before the House, I would like to discuss briefly the Bill itself. I have not yet taken an opportunity to speak on this Bill. I have received virtually no letters on this Bill from my constituents. I have received virtually no telephone calls in my office. I have received far fewer calls and letters on this than I have on any single major issue. It is by far fewer letters than I have received about the post office, the national institution which probably causes Members of Parliament more difficulty than any other government organization.

● (1200)

Having said that, I have gone to public meetings and spoken to constituents about what they felt the Government was doing right and what it was doing wrong. The overwhelming response is that the provisions in the November 8 economic statement coupled with the Budget of May 23 are right. This is one of those important provisions of the Budget and I believe that after the debate which has taken place, after the creation of over 400,000 jobs in the last year and the fact that the OECD has said we are on the right track, we can now say with some confidence that we are headed in the right direction. This Bill is an important part of that direction. It is time that we passed this Bill, ended this debate and brought it to a vote so we can begin to debate other important pieces of legislation waiting to be passed prior to the Christmas break. These Bills include Bill C-84 and Bill C-79.

It is for that reason that, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a), I move:

That the House continue to sit through the lunch hour for the purpose of continuing its consideration of the motion now before it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I believe Hon. Members have heard the motion.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have two points. The Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) rose on a point of order. The Speaker looked toward the Member to recognize him but the Hon. Member's microphone did not come on. It was not turned on. He made his point but it was not heard in the House. We have not heard the motion from the Hon. Member opposite. We do not know what is being moved. One must speak in one of the two official languages in order for Members of the House to know what is being proposed. In this case we do not know what is being proposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I will admit frankly that the Speaker is a little surprised by the comments made by the Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). First, when an Hon. Member puts his motion before the House, it is normal practice for the Speaker to wait until the motion is forwarded to the Chair.

I recognize that I did not hear or see the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) rise on a point of order. If it is the case that the Hon. Member's microphone did not work, of course this is a matter that will be brought immediately to the attention of those whose responsibility it is to see that the equipment works correctly. We can only regret that.

With respect to hearing the motion, the motion will be put to the House. That is the way we usually proceed. The motion is as follows: Mr. Dorin, seconded by Mr. Kilgour, moves that, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(a), the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion now before it.

Will those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And more than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Twenty-five or more Members having risen, pursuant to Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been negatived.

Motion (Mr. Dorin) negatived.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was the intention of the Government to move this motion in order that we would go four minutes into the normal lunch hour and accomplish the business of the House. The point I want to make—

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is questioning our motives.

Mr. Lewis: I am not questioning the motives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Unless I am greatly misled, I am not under the impression that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is going to make a point of order. Resuming debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put into the record the poem that my colleague, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), began to put on the record. It is a poem written by a person from Penticton, British Columbia, who is active with the Unemployment Action Centre Co-op. The poem is entitled "Broken Lives and Broken Promises". It reads:

What made us think you'd be different?
  What made us think you'd care?
What made us think you'd keep your word?
  And give the poor their share

You with your wealth and power
  You with your easy life
What do you know of poverty
  And accompanying grief?

While you sit in your ivory tower
  Decreeing life or death
I sit alone with my children
  By a cold and dismal hearth

I dry their tears
  And still their fears
With lies
  Like the ones you told
When you rode to the throne
  A year ago
On the backs of the sheep in the fold

Do you really believe I care to live
  Stripped of hope and pride,
Will you stand up and say
  "I didn't know",
Will my death be justified?

But what made us think you'd be different?
What made us think you'd care?
What made us think you'd keep your word?
When we'd heard it all before

Indeed, I think the person who wrote that poem really put his finger on the matter. We have seen in the last number of weeks, and are seeing again today, a very blatant display of the real priorities of the Government.

Members of the Government have justified moving closure on this motion because there are other pieces of legislation with which the House must deal. What are those other pieces of important legislation to which they refer? One of those important pieces of legislation which they say must be passed is the Bill to bail out the banks and provide some $800 million to bail out uninsured depositors, many of whom are foreign bankers and large banking concerns in this country.

Another piece of legislation which they say must be passed is a Bill to give half a million dollars in tax free capital gains to the wheelers and dealers in this country.

It is blatantly obvious that the priority of the Government is to spend some $800 million to bail out large sophisticated depositors who had money on deposit at the Canadian Commercial Bank because they could get a half point higher interest at that bank. It is to provide a half million dollars tax free to people who speculate in condominiums, jewellery and other luxuries. That is the priority of the Government. Today we are seeing a blatant transfer of weatlh from the poor and middle class of this country to the well-to-do and filthy rich of this country. It is shameful. The Minister and Government Members laugh as they sit in their comfortable seats. Let me warn them that it will be the mothers of this country who will have the last laugh come the next election. They will not forget the blatant transfer of wealth which the Government has perpetuated with the Budget and the tax measures that it has introduced. Of course, this is all being done in the name of fighting the deficit. There is no doubt the deficit is a serious problem, Mr. Speaker. But to justify nickel and diming mothers and families in the name of fighting the deficit is a disgraceful farce. It will not be believed by the people. People will not believe that nickel and diming mothers and children will effectively put a dent in the deficit when the Government is forking over billions of dollars to the banks.

● (1210)

The Government is allowing capital gains. What about the $32 billion or $33 billion in deferred taxes alone that the large corporations owe to the Government? Corporations have been able to defer taxes from year to year until now and most of the large amounts now owing to the Government are being written off.

Canadians will not be hoodwinked. They know what is going on. If the Government were genuinely sincere in reducing the deficit, the Government would go to the people who have the ability to pay and who legally owe the money and would start collecting from them. Instead the poor are getting nicked.

The other argument the Government uses is that a universal scheme—the family allowance—has a lot of money going to the well to do. A study recently released by the Canadian Council on Social Development explodes this myth. It pointed out that families earning the average income or less—and the average income for a family estimated in 1984 is some $35,000—will be losing the bulk of the money that would have normally gone to them through the family allowance.

When you look at the figures you begin to realize that those whose incomes are $50,000 or more only account for 12 per cent of what the Government will save on this measure. The people who earn less than $50,000 a year will lose some 78 per cent of what the Government will save in this measure. They are the ones who will pay.

It is obscene for a Government to elect to save money through programs like the deindexing of family allowance while it introduces regressive tax measures, such as the capital gains measure. It is obscene for any civilized country so blatantly to take from the poor and give to the rich. It goes against our tradition and our sense of values. It is, as I mentioned before, an obscenity. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the Government which started out with such popular support is now seeing its popularity decrease month after month after month?

We have seen and heard groups that have gone public as opposing this tax measure. We have received petitions signed by hundreds of thousands of people. The Family Service Bureau has publicly come out against the measure. So have the National Action Committee, the Vanier Institute of the Family, the Canadian Council on Children and Youth, the Canadian Council on Social Development and the churches. The Government is prepared to ignore this wide representation of Canadians and instead is listening to the pleas of the well-to-do.

Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, and let me remind the Government, that the time will come to face the public, and the public will not forget.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today. However, I would not be entirely honest if I did say that because today, we are facing a Government that abuses its powers, a Government that for the seventh time in 21 days has moved a motion of closure in the House. In this particular instance we are considering a Bill that will take away from those who have less and give more to the wealthy.

[English]

At the present time family allowance in Ontario for one child is $31.27. What does a 3 per cent index which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) wants to give the families in Ontario amount to? Thirty-one cents more. The family allowance cheque will rise from $31.27 to $31.58.

That is the Christmas present of the Tories to the families of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Boudria: It is a 31 cent gift, Mr. Speaker. It is not enough to buy a bow to go around a gift. The Tories in these few days before Christmas are attempting to be the Grinch who stole Christmas. We in the Liberal ranks do not intend to allow them to be the Grinch who stole Christmas.

If all this were done to save money, if all of this were done with good intentions, then maybe there would be a small amount—and I say small—of redeeming value to the whole scheme. Why are we doing this? Is it to reduce the deficit? Is ti because the people who receive those amounts are too rich? Is it because the Government has great plans to put the money to better use elsewhere? No, not at all, Mr. Speaker. The Government is saving some $55 million over two years by cancelling full indexation on family allowances. Do you know what the Government is doing with that money?

Mr. Hopkins: Giving it to the banks.

Mr. Boudria: The Government is giving billion dollars to the rich people who did not know enough to secure their assets before investing in the banks. The Tories collectively misled the people who had invested in those banks and now they have to give back the money to save their faces. It will not work. Obviously the people who invested in the banks still know that they were misled by the Government. They still know that the Government is incompetent. The poorest people who will suffer as a result of the Government cancelling full indexation are not taking too kindly to it.

● (1220)

We will save $55 million, but at the same time we will spend $56 million to buy new uniforms for the military. I have a little picture of the new military uniforms. It was provided to me by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen). It shows one officer in beige, one in blue and one in white. They will be in three colours so that the Minister of National Defence can tell one from the other. This will cost Canadian taxpayers $56 million. At the same time, the Government is taking away $55 million from those people who receive family allowances. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to name one soldier who would not give up his uniform so that the people of the country could keep the full indexation of the family allowances. Obviously you would not find such a person. Of course, if such people were sitting in this room instead of the Tories across the way, they would have better judgment and they would know which is the correct priority.

I see Hon. Members across the way, the surfers who move behind cabinet Ministers so that their mothers can see them on television every now and then because that is the only chance they have of being seen. Why do they not rise in the House and speak on this Bill? Why do they not rise in the House and say that they will not put up with it, that their constituents are fed up and that their constituents think that money for families is more important than money for bankers? Why do they not stand up and say that? They cannot. The Government House Leader, "Erik the dreaded" and others have told them that they do not have the authority to speak in the House.

Let us look at the total effect of these budgetary measures on families in Canada.

[Translation]

A family with an annual income of $15,000 will have $1,879 less, five years from now. And all this thanks to the budgetary measures of the Conservatives. A family with an annual income of $35,000 will be getting $3,452 less, while a family with an annual income of $80,000 will be getting $1,125 more. That is where we see the true colours of the Conservatives, Mr. Speaker: a Government for the rich—

An Hon. Member: Tory blue!

Mr. Boudria: Yes, a Tory blue government, exactly; a royal blue government, an aristocratic government, a government that does not represent the Canadian people. What did they say during the last election campaign? Did they promise they would remove benefits? Did they promise to take from the poor and give to the rich, a reversal of Robin Hood? Why, not at all!

[English]

The Tories, as you know, Mr. Speaker, being a non-partisan person, made many promises to Canadians. In fact, there are 338 of them in this little book. I may have mentioned this once or twice before, but I just want all Canadians to know that if they want a copy of this book of 338 Tory promises, all they have to do is to send a letter to my office and I will gladly send them one. No stamp will be necessary, Mr. Speaker. If you want one, I will provide one for you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Free of charge?

Mr. Boudria: Absolutely free of charge, I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). The book contains two full pages of Tory promises on social programs. What do they promise? I will read their second promise, which I am sure Mr. Speaker has memorized already:

> Assist Canadians who are unable to provide for their own needs.

Let me read another promise:

> Enable women to participate fully and equitably in the economic life of the nation.

How does one do that by taking money away from women? Many times family allowance cheques are the only money they get. I see Hon. Members across the way reflecting upon this. They may be having second thoughts. Hopefully they will be able to vote the right way on this issue, as opposed to voting like training seals, the way their Leader and deputy Leader told them to. More than likely it was the deputy Leader.

Also the Tories promised to reform the institution of Parliament. They promised that under their regime they would not use closure. The Tories said that they would be accountable through the Parliament of Canada to Canadian people. However, what happened to these accountable Tories? The spoils of power—no sooner were they elected and started to use fancy limousines parked by the west door, that they forgot about all the promises. They invoked closure seven times in 21 days. That is a record in the history of our country, a record of disrespect for Parliament. That is the Tory record.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Conservatives go to their ridings this weekend, they will have to think about how they voted today or tomorrow. Mr. Speaker, I seriously advise them to change their minds and prevent the Government from reducing family allowances. The Canadian people will not stand for it!

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) defend this indefensible proposal by the so-called Progressive Conservative Government, I wondered if he would have made the same speech in an earlier Parliament when he represented the constituency of Winnipeg-St. James. In that constituency, unlike the constituency which he now represents that includes in its boundaries the wealthiest people in Metropolitan Winnipeg, he represented some poor people. I wonder whether he would have made the same speech then. I wonder whether he would make the same speech if he took the time when in Winnipeg to visit some of the church agencies which are handing out food baskets to people who are hungry, or some of the centres which provide meals for people who are hungry, or some of the schools in the core area of Winnipeg which have nutrition programs so that some of the children attending those schools get their only decent meal of the day. That is the situation in Winnipeg.

It is because of those kinds of situations, because we know how many people are in need and how many children are in need that we are so unalterably opposed to what the Government wants to do, insists on doing and brings in closure to achieve its aim.

From the end of World War II to about 1975, Canadian people and the political Parties which represented them federally and provincially seemed to agree that the country was wealthy enough and had the ability to provide a whole series of programs to meet basic needs and to put in place a floor below which people would not have to live. Therefore, we established the Unemployment Insurance Program and improved the Old Age Security Program. We established the Canada Pension Plan and provided universal hospital and medical insurance. We brought in the Canada Assistance Program under which the federal Government shared with the provincial Governments the cost of providing for basic needs of people who are unemployed or unable to work because of illness.

The Family Allowance Program was a fundamental part of the whole range of programs which we provided to the Canadian people. Until about 1975, there seemed to be a consensus that these programs should not only be continued but should be improved upon and expanded. Beginning in 1975 when the Canadian economy, like the economy of the rest of the world, began to experience serious problems, we began to see the beginnings of cut-backs. We saw a new and more onerous provisions imposed on the Unemployment Insurance Program. Doctors began to extra bill when provinces did not provide in their medical insurance plans enough money to pay doctors what they thought they should get. The Liberal Government put the six and five cap on programs including the Family Allowance Program.

During the last federal election campaign, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that social programs were a sacred trust. He said that if the Conservative Party formed a Government, it would not only maintain the programs but would improve upon them. What we have seen since the election of the Conservative Government has been the exact reverse.

We have seen, in the Conservative Government's supposed determination to reduce the deficit which it claims is higher than the country can afford, that the Government is determined to impose cuts on a whole series of programs. We know about the new restrictions and cuts in unemployment insurance benefits. We know that the Government proposed to deindex old age pensions. Fortunately for the senior citizens, we were able to mount the kind of campaign that made the Government realize that there would be tremendous adverse political consequences if it proceeded with that proposal, so the Government backed down. However, as we can see today by this closure motion, the Government is determined to deindex family allowances.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), in his speech, tried to confuse the issue again by saying that family allowance benefits would increase. Of course they will increase. If the cost of living increases next year, as it seems to have increased this year, by 4 per cent, the family allowance benefits will increase by 1 per cent rather than 4 per cent. The amount Canadians will receive will decrease by 3 per cent in real value. If the cost of living goes up by 4 per cent in each year, and that is a relatively modest estimate as in the past it has risen by 10, 12 and 14 per cent, it is pretty obvious that the real value of the family allowance benefits will decrease throughout the years.

Why has the Government proposed to do this? It is because the Government says that we must reduce the deficit. What the Government is doing has been criticised by every single agency and group which is interested in the welfare of children and families. Let me put on the record a couple of the views of organizations which know a great deal more about the needs of families and children than the Conservative Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who brought forward this proposal. The Canadian Council on Children and Youth put out a press release dated December 12, 1985, which indicated the following:

"By de-indexing family allowances, reducing the child tax credit and lowering the income level at which families are taxed on the child tax credit, the Government of Canada is stating that Canadian parents are getting too much to raise their children."

"Nothing could be farther from the truth," said Brian Ward, executive director of the Canadian Council on Children and Youth. There are 6.3 million in Canada, and a shocking 20 per cent of them or 1.2 million are living in poor families.

I would invite the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine to join me in visiting some of these families to see what the proposal he is supporting will mean to them.

Again on December 12, 1985, the Vanier Institute of the Family said the following:

"Under their Christmas trees this year, parents will find a present to them from the federal government, a present wrapped in the prosaic prose of Bill C-70 which proposes to partially deindex Family Allowances."

The Institute goes on to say:

"It proposes a change that, over time, will make the Family Allowance program worth very little to Canadian families."

If the people of Canada have to tighten their belts, any Canadian Government which really cared about the people of Canada would see that the belt tightening would be equitable and would be done by those who could afford it most. What do we see? We know that there are something like 8,000 Canadians who had taxable incomes of over $50,000 and 270 Canadians who had taxable incomes of over $200,000 who did not pay a penny in income tax for the last year for which figures are available.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has announced that he is bringing in a minimum tax, a proposal which we urged for years and which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) endorsed during the federal election campaign. We welcome that announcement but now that we have had an opportunity to look at some of the fine print, we realize that what the Minister is proposing is a great deal less than it seems to be.

It is not only individual Canadians who have not been required to do their fair share of belt tightening. Dome Petroleum Limited, under terms of a special law that gives the Cabinet almost unlimited powers to skirt the Income Tax Act, was given a tax break that could save the company up to $1 billion by 1990 on taxes payable by its subsidiary, Hudson's Bay Oil & Gas. If I am not mistaken, that was done under the former Liberal Government, so there is not much difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Petro-Canada saved $250 million in taxes on its 1981 takeover of Petro-Fina Limited after the Liberal Government pushed through retroactive legislation in January 1984 to iron out a wrinkle that would have denied Petro-Canada tax breaks. According to the Auditor General, this extra $250 million is in addition to another bit of paperwork under which Petro-Fina's Belgian shareholders avoided about $200 million in taxes. As well, Olympia & York Corporation, when it purchased Gulf Canada, was able to use the loopholes in the tax system to reduce its taxes by between $500 million and $600 million.

The few illustrations given simply prove that the Government, while it talks about the need to reduce the deficit and the need to realize that we will not be able to have the same kind of benefits that were implemented over the many years, and while it talks about the need for ordinary people to tighten their belts, is continuing the same kind of policies which the former Liberal Government implemented and which this Government has expanded upon. An example of this is the $500,000 capital gains tax provision. The percentage of Canadians who can benefit from that provision is very small. It has been estimated that only 7 per cent of Canadians can benefit from this Government proposal which will cost the people of Canada hundreds of millions of dollars. It is only for the wealthy, while this reduction in family allowance benefits is only for ordinary Canadians.

Again, we see the Government, as we so frequently saw Liberal Governments, asking ordinary Canadians to make sacrifices and to pay a much higher percentage of their taxes to meet the requirements of the Government. At the same time the people in higher income tax brackets and large corporations are permitted to avoid, to a large extent, their fair share of what is required.

Again I say, as members of my Party have said, that the first time the Government brought forward this proposal we opposed it. We intend to continue to oppose it. We intend to alert the Canadian people to what is happening. We intend to remind them now and in the years to come until the next election who is responsible for the retrograde provisions which are included in this proposal.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, here we go again—another time allocation order. Closure has been imposed once more. More and more it is becoming the pattern, a matter of course, for this Government with its massive majority which surrounds the Opposition on all sides. More and more we are seeing time allocation orders with respect to debate on important principles.

I have said before, and I repeat, that under all circumstances time allocation is not objectionable. There are certain circumstances in which it can be quite legitimately justified. For example, let us suppose that there was a program or policy which was central to the philosophy of a political Party which was elected to power. In this instance, after due debate, let us suppose it was decided to bring in time allocation with respect to this central policy. I think Members of the House can understand and accept that. I have already used the illustration of Investment Canada replacing the Foreign Investment Review Agency. During the election campaign members of the Conservative Party made it clear that they did not believe in having a monitoring agency look at foreign takeovers in the country. They wanted to open the doors wide and let foreign investors come in and buy whatever they wanted to buy. They brought in a Bill to deal with this philosophy early in their mandate and they imposed time allocation on it. I disagreed with the Bill and argued against it. However, I can understand why the Government would use time allocation with respect to such a provision.

I now wish to turn to the matter of time allocation. Is it true that the central policy of the Conservative Government is to begin the dismantling of the Canadian social security system? Is that the central policy of the Conservative Party now that it is in government? It certainly appears to me that it is. Yet, I remember well that catchy phrase used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was asked repeatedly across the country about our social security system. He was asked: "Sir, is it under any threat by you?" He replied with that very memorable phrase: "No. This is a sacred trust". That question was asked for good reason since there has always been a suspicion in the country that the Conservative Party does not really believe in a comprehensive social security system. That is a suspicion which lingers in the minds of Canadians. That is why they wanted to be assured before they voted in the last federal election that our system would not be dismantled. They were given that assurance and we are now beginning to dismantle it. In order to get on with the dismantling, time allocation has been imposed.

I would like to ask the question: When is there sufficient debate on a Bill which is as controversial as this one? I suppose there are many answers to my question. I believe debate should not come to an end until the public has been made fully aware of the implications of a piece of legislation. That takes some time. After all, Canadians do not focus all of their attention all of the time on the House of Commons. They have jobs to do. They have families to raise. They have recreational pursuits to follow. They just do not spend all their time following the proceedings of the House. That is why they have sent us here. They say: "Look. We do not have time. We have important things to do. Go down there and keep an eye on those fellows. See what they are doing. Watch over them for us". Even though technology has given us an effective communications system, it still takes time to inform the public fully with respect to what is being done as a result of legislation which is introduced in the House. I would say that although the public is catching up quickly to what Bill C-70 means, it still needs additional time. That is what the Opposition is providing—additional time to inform the public and make it completely aware of what is involved in Bill C-70.

I argue that the Government has failed to make its case with respect to the validity of Bill C-70. We know that because petitions continue to pour in. They have not all been read. the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) argues that the House of Commons is having its time wasted because petitions are being read. He fails to understand what Parliament is all about. Do not the people of Canada who have become aware that a certain piece of legislation is threatening them have the right to petition the House of Commons? Do they not have the right to have their petitions read here in this place? They certainly do. It is a fundamental right. It is a basic right. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine who suggests otherwise really reveals that even after all his time here he has failed to grasp the importance of the parliamentary system.

I wish to say that the petitions which have been presented have not only been presented by members of the Opposition. Some petitions have been presented by those who sit on the benches in the bookends. Those Government Members have had the courage to say that their constituents have a right to petition the House of Commons with respect to Bill C-70.

The Minister has said: "The Opposition is getting it all wrong. The family allowance will be increased". As my colleague just mentioned a few moments ago, the family allowance will be increased by 31 cents. At the same time we know that the rate of inflation has increased by 4 per cent. Therefore, the buying power of the family allowance cheque which will be sent to families in January will be much less. The Government knows that. It is a kind of callous misinformation for the Minister to suggest that the family allowance will be increased.

When the legislative committee met and representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress appeared before it, they pointed out clearly that the social security system and, in particular, the family allowance, will deteriorate and be undermined over a period of time. They gave this fact. They said that over a 20-year period, if one assumes a rate of inflation of only 3 per cent, and if we use 1985 dollars, today's $32 family allowance cheque will be worth only $18 in terms of its spending power in 20 years' time. This is a standard way of proceeding for the purpose of making such a projection. The child tax credit about which the Minister likes to argue will offset this decrease. He has said: "Don't forget the child tax credit". The Canadian Labour Congress looked at that as well and stated that in that same period of time, the Child Tax Credit will go from $384 in spending power to $326. The family income level for those who can qualify for this universal benefit will go from $26,500 today down to $13,800.

This Government has been rather clever in that the present formula for the child tax credit will improve for a three-year period. That cannot be denied. From 1987 to 1990, there will be an improvement in the child tax credit. But what the Government has not been forthright about is what happens after 1990. What happens to the child tax credit in 1991? We have looked at this area very carefully and we know that in 1991, deindexation will cause poor families to fall further and further behind in their buying power. We know that after that time the child tax credit, instead of increasing, will start to go down.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women has called these changes unfair and unjust. It goes on to point out that the present system—the system this Government is changing—of family allowances fully indexed to the cost of living and taxed back from the wealthy by a progressive tax system, is clearly effective in transferring income from wealthy families to poorer ones. That is exactly what is the essential and primary role of any Government. What the Government does in allowing the family allowance cheque to deteriorate is to weaken one of the most prominent universal social programs in the country. I call upon the Government and the Minister to let the present system of universal fully indexed family allowances be maintained. I ask that the increase in the child tax credit be not only for a short duration of three years but that it continue to increase to meet the genuine needs of families and their children in the future. I ask that the total amount of money spent to benefit families and children not be reduced but in fact increased.

I know why members of the Government would not want to listen to Liberals or New Democrats. I heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) spit out the word "Grit" with all the anger he could muster. I could understand that, but I wonder if that Hon. Member, who cannot stand Grits and New Democrats, hates with equal passion the Catholic Bishops of Canada?

Ms. Mitchell: He probably does.

Mr. Penner: Perhaps he does. I don't know. The Catholic Bishops have joined with other social agencies in this country to urge the federal Government to abandon its plan to limit inflation protection of family allowance payments. Bishop Proulx said that the Conservative Members of Parliament should persuade the Government to put a stop to this Bill. That same bishop, who heads the Council on Social Affairs, has written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and has described the changes in the family allowance payments. He said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time allocation has now terminated.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, this is the eighth closure motion I have participated in. It is becoming a habit. I guess it is called "Government by Progressive Conservatives' eighth closure motion".

Bill C-70, on which the Government has brought in closure, was introduced in the Budget back in May. The Government did not bring the Bill forward for months and months. Now here we are in the dying days of 1985 and suddenly it recognizes that it has to speed this thing up, and the only reason it has to speed it up is that it has all the cheques printed. The cheques are all ready to be put in the mail. That is exactly the way the Liberals used to operate. Before they even got Parliament to pass a law, they had all of the provisions in place. Then, of course, that forced their hand to use the kinds of Draconian methods such as closure to close off debate.

Bill C-70 is a very important Bill. It does not only deal with the deindexing of the family allowance. There is also a very sensitive clause which gives the Minister of National Health and Welfare the power to declare that the child is dead. So we have the spectacle of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) setting up a national registry of lost children, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare, because of the very insensitive Clause 5, has the power to declare the child dead. The Government has not asked for the opinion of the provincial Governments on this question. It is a very serious constitutional question. Does the Government have the authority to do that in the first place? As I understand it, only one witness appeared before the committee to discuss the implications of Clause 5. The Government does not comprehend the seriousness of this issue. What are the implications for police forces across the country in terms of looking for lost children once they know that the federal state, because of one of its pieces of legislation, has declared a child dead? Is there the same incentive to look actively for the lost child?

I suspect it is only part of the cosmetology of the legislation to have the Solicitor General set up a national registry for lost children. I really want to appeal to the Conservative Government. I do not want to get members of the Government stirred up because I have their best interests at heart, but I must say to them that the Government is falling in the polls. I know Members of the Government read the polls and believe them like a Bible. I want to say to Members of the Government that their Party is dropping in the polls like a stone. Why is this happening? It is because the Government is bringing in legislation like Bill C-70. I want to tell the Government: cancel this Bill. Forget it. Let it die. Reprint the cheques or send them out and make good on the amount the following month. The Government can add the 60 cents back on in the following month. Then it might just go up in the polls just as it did when it backed off on the old age pensions. I think that is a wise suggestion which the Government should consider. It is not too late. It should repent before it is too late. Repent or ye shall be lost. I make this plea: You can be saved, brothers. Put your hand on your desk and repeat after me, "I will withdraw Bill C-70".

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Rodriguez: All those in the House who think that Bill C-70 should be withdrawn say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Rodriguez: All those who think it should not be withdrawn say nay.

The yeas have it, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Members who said yea join thousands upon thousands of Canadians who have asked their Members of Parliament, through petitions, letters and telegrams, to plead with the Government to listen to the voice of the people, to be saved. I want to say to the Government that if it does what we ask, it will thank us in three months' time.

May I call it one o'clock, please, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SEEK SOLUTIONS TO PROTECT GULF REFINERY JOBS IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the difficult situation in Montreal East, and I must say that ever since the Montreal East Survival Committee was set up on October 15, it has shown a tremendous spirit of solidarity and co-operation in its efforts to save both jobs and industries.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec the situation is very bad in connection with the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar. I think the attitude of the president of Ultramar who is blackmailing and threatening the federal and provincial Governments is absolutely deplorable. I think he ought to follow the example of the people in Montreal East, who, instead of resorting to blackmail, sat down together to find a solution to their problems.

Unfortunately, we are now seeing the oil multinationals getting involved in an attempt to shut down the Gulf refinery and prevent Gaz Métropolitain, in which the Caisse de dépôt et de placement du Québec has an interest, from acquiring the Gulf refinery and getting a foothold in the market.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister and his Government will have the political courage to resist the pressure being exercised by the directors of the multinationals, that they will listen to the voice of reason and common sense and will find solutions to protect the jobs at the Gulf refinery in Montreal East and—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

HEALTH

OPPOSITION TO USE OF DEPO-PROVERA AS CONTRACEPTIVE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, Depo-Provera is a hormone drug which can be used as an injectable contraceptive. Among its reported side effects are blood clots, high blood pressure, irregular bleeding, excessive weight gain, severe depression, and hair loss. The long-term effects are not known at this time, but animal and clinical tests indicate infertility and increased risk of cancer and heart disease.

The U.S. Federal Drug Administration refused to approve Depo-Provera as a contraceptive in 1974, 1978, and again in 1983. Some 62 groups in Canada have formed a coalition to demand public hearings into this issue which is too important to be decided behind closed doors where the Minister's officials listen only to the company's story. I call upon the Minister to release the documents and research on which the advisory committee made its recommendation, and to open up the entire process to the public.

It has also come to my attention that this drug is being used on mentally retarded teenagers and other young people considered to be juvenile delinquents. This is not only unacceptable by any standard, it is immoral. I call upon the Minister to ban the use of this drug in Canada immediately and specifically prohibit its use on young children who are developmentally handicapped or are juvenile delinquents, until it has been proven safe.

MINES AND MINING

TIMMINS, ONT.—ACQUISITION OF KIDD CREEK MINES BY FALCONBRIDGE LTD.

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak today about the recent acquisition of Kidd Creek Mines Ltd. by Falconbridge Ltd. The main asset of the company is an ore body in Timmins, the major community in my riding. Kidd Creek is the major employer in Timmins. Workers, suppliers and others have called my office and I want to assure them and the community that we feel the transaction will be a positive one. We have spoken to various people about this matter and all feel the local mining industry will be strengthened and Falconbridge will broaden its economic base.

We have been told that in the past Falconbridge has had a hands-off policy toward its wholly-owned subsidiaries, and we expect that to continue. Therefore the community can look forward to dealing with the same excellent management team at Kidd Creek which has operated the mine for the past few years. This team will now be seconded by the management team at Falconbridge, headed by President Bill James, who is also President of the Mining Association of Canada.

We would draw to the community's attention that the other major shareholder in Falconbridge is Dome Mines Ltd. As a result, people are available to Falconbridge who are very familiar with Timmins and local conditions. We have the same rich ore body, the same management team, enriched by those from Falconbridge and Dome, and the same highly trained and dedicated workforce, along with one of the most modern smelters in the world. Therefore the Kidd Creek operation and Timmins can look forward to the future with confidence.

AGRICULTURE

BENEFIT OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX EXEMPTION TO OLDER FARMERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the May Budget provided that a farmer, to qualify for the immediate $500,000 capital gains exemption, had to have farmed the land for at least five years since 1972. Older Canadians who farmed for many years, but not for five years since 1972, expressed concern. I congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for listening to these concerns and acting by eliminating the reference to 1972, thereby expanding the definition of farm property qualifying for the immediate $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption.

Now, effective January 1, 1985, land owned by the taxpayer and used by him, his spouse or children in the business of farming in Canada, either in the year of sale or in at least five years during which the property was owned by the taxpayer or his family, will qualify. Older Canadians who may have rented out their land in recent years, but who have farmed for at least five years, will now enjoy the immediate exemption retroactive to January 1, 1985.

Livestock drought assistance, fuel tax rebates, crop insurance, western grain stabilization, crop disaster assistance, the domestic wheat reference, the Soviet grain agreement, and the capital gains exemption, are but a few of the many responsible agricultural initiatives put forward by the Government—a Government that listens and acts.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CLIMATIC CHANGES—CONSEQUENCES OF PROJECTED GREENHOUSE EFFECT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this House and the present Government will be well advised to start plans and policies that will take into account the consequences of the greenhouse effect which, according to scientists, will cause temperatures to rise by two or three degrees centigrade around the globe over the next 70 years. Many will be the consequences of the warming-up trend. For instance, agriculture will shift northward. In southern Canada lands presently used for agriculture could be lost because of dryness. Therefore water will become more and more precious because our needs will increase considerably.

As a consequence of these climatic changes we will have to learn to manage our water better, to squander less and, most of all, not to yield to pressures for export and diversions of fresh water. Water conservation is a practice we should adopt. We should also drastically improve ways of controlling and regulating what we discharge into water so as to protect water quality.

At present, Mr. Speaker, water is perceived to be an abundant commodity. As our climate warms up, water will gradually become a commodity in short supply. This trend need not be a disaster provided we plan and manage well the transition to a warmer climate by a judicious use of our water resources and by becoming a water-efficient society.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN IRAN—UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on December 13 the United Nations General Assembly passed its first resolution expressing deep concern over "specific and detailed allegations of human rights violations in Iran". The resolution, I am proud to say, was initiated by Canada and the Netherlands, with 10 other countries co-sponsoring it. The resolution comments on the summary executions, torture, and oppression of religious minorities in Iran, and endorses continued monitoring of the situation.

Iran has been asked to extend full co-operation which, up until now, it has refused, including not allowing the U.N. Special Representative on Human Rights to visit Iran. We are told that it is of tremendous help to the Bahai's and other oppressed minorities in Iran to know that they have not been forgotten by the world, even when they are apparently without rights in their own country.

I urge the House of Commons and the Government of Canada to remain fully informed on this grievous situation and to support the Canadian delegation at the U.N. in maintaining the vigilant and courageous international leadership by which it has been distinguishing itself on this issue in its efforts to end persecution and atrocities in Iran.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

FIGHT AGAINST DRUNKEN DRIVING—OPERATION "RED NOSE"

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, during the holiday season, in the Quebec metropolitan area, we will have what is known as Operation "Red Nose", a project initiated by Jean-Marie de Koninck, a professor at Laval University. For the time being, this operation is to be seen as a preventive mechanism. Now in its second year, after only six days there were 715 calls from people who took advantage of the service, and as a result, everyone got home safe and sound. "Play it safe for everybody's sake". Mr. Speaker, how distressing to recall that according to the statistics of Health and Welfare Canada, 49.7 per cent of drivers killed in accidents had alcohol in their blood. What folly!

S.O. 22

The second point I want to make is public awareness. Not long ago, at a cocktail party in Quebec City, I was very pleased to see that thanks to all the publicity about this operation, many business people had come by taxi. The organizers of this project are very serious-minded and always work in co-operation with one of Quebec's youth organizations, in this case, the "Rouge et Or" swimming team at Laval University, the local municipal police, in this case the Quebec City police, and a radio station with high ratings, in this case CHRC. The operation is part of our fight against drunken driving, and I may refer the House to Bill C-19. Mr. Speaker, I would urge other regions in Canada to do likewise.

I want to congratulate the sponsors, the volunteers and the participants in this operation—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

AIR TRANSPORT

PRESERVATION OF SAFETY STANDARDS IN DEREGULATION PROCESS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians mourn the recent tragedy of the crash of the DC-8 at Gander, Newfoundland. At the moment the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board and the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration are working together to determine the cause of this disaster. To date, the cause has not been found.

In wake of such a tragedy the Opposition have insinuated that with the Government's current proposals for economic regulatory reform of Canada's transportation sector, many more aviation accidents will occur. I find such insinuations morally reprehensible.

The Government will make a lot of changes to our regulatory framework but it will never allow safety standards for transportation services to be sacrificed for economic expediency. For the past several weeks the parliamentary Standing Committee on Transport has listened to the recommendations and concerns of many interested parties. During its entire lengthy proceedings, the committee stressed to all parties that safety standards would not be debated.

Canada's high level of safety standards is being maintained and has been enhanced. An example of this is the Government's passage of Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Aeronautics Act. As the Minister of Transport stated in the preface of his policy paper entitled Freedom to Move: "I would like to indicate unequivocally that the Government will neither propose nor permit any economic regulatory reform that might be detrimental to safety standards".

I hope that certain members of the Opposition who have an inclination for distorting the truth will take heed of the Minister's words and not try to induce panic into the Canadian public regarding transportation safety standards.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX

EFFECT OF CHANGE ON MINERS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the House an unfair situation involving my constituents in the Hemlo Gold find area of northern Ontario. It is an unfairness created as a consequence of the May 23 Budget.

The employees of the Teck-Corona Mine, near Marathon, as a result of the May 23 Budget have been divided into two groups: one group of 51 employees are forced to pay tax on a benefit derived from the company, a benefit in the form of a housing loan; at the same time another group of 49 employees with the same company will be receiving a non-taxable benefit from the same type of loan. This is all because of an income tax change which was included in the last federal Budget.

The company has been hiring its staff over the past year and a half. Therefore, many employees bought their houses before May 23. When Teck-Corona suggested that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) allow all housing loans to be exempt as of May 23, the Minister stated in a letter that an extension of this kind would represent an additional tax expenditure and would add significantly to the deficit. I doubt the validity of that assertion.

More important, we have a new tax measure which creates inequity among employees working for the same company and living in the very same community.

Therefore I ask that the Minister of Finance immediately reconsider his initial response. Let there be a grandfather clause in this tax relief measure.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA—LOCAL CALLING CHARGES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, recently there have been some rumours about Bell Canada proposing a charge for local telephone calls. I have been assured by both Bell Canada and the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission that there is no such proposal in the works.

Following press reports implying that local charges may apply in the event of deregulation, many of my constituents and others across the country have approached me with deep concern. Our senior citizens depend on local calling in emergencies, and for companionship during lonely hours. Children and teenagers are a cash-poor group who need unlimited local calling to maintain healthy social lvies. And, of course, I need not tell any Member in this place about the devastating effect local calling charges would have on small business throughout Canada.

● (1415)

If the CRTC deems deregulation is advantageous for Canadians, so be it. However, Bell Canada should not react with local calling charges as part of a rebalancing for providing cheaper and more competitive long distance rates. If local charges become the only route to maintaining Bell profits, let us have smaller profits and equal service instead.

FISHERIES

FISH INSPECTION STANDARDS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Perhaps we could just give him a minute to get into his seat.

Mr. Siddon: Thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Henderson: Would the Minister confirm news reports that fish inspection standards have been lowered? It was only yesterday in the House that the Minister of Health stated—

[Editor's note: And the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion having entered the Chamber:]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Henderson: I hope that period of applause is not deducted from me, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to welcome the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion back to the House. It is good to see him here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Henderson: Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in the House that rancid fish products are intolerable. Why has the Minister of Fisheries allowed the standards for fish inspection to be weakened? Has the Minister not learned from his Government's mistakes?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, indeed we can be proud of the standards that are applied to the quality of fish products produced in Canada, notwithstanding the unfortunate incidents of recent months with regard to canned tuna products. I can assure this House that the quality standards, while they may have been changed, have not been weakened. Nonetheless, I am taking initiatives that will be announced later today to ensure those standards are reviewed to ensure the ultimate quality of product available to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REVIEW OF STANDARDS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the Minister is going to review the standards once again. Why do the new inspection standards require that smell from rancid tuna be persistent, distinct, and linger for 10 to 15 minutes, before being rejected? Is tuna that only stinks for five minutes okay for human consumption?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Henderson: I want to ask the Minister some of those questions, and I hope he will look after them.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if standards are changed under this administration or this Minister, those changes will be designed to enhance the quality, not to lower the quality of product available to Canadian consumers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPEARANCE OF TAINTED TUNA ON STORE SHELVES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Two months after the Prime Minister said of tainted tuna:

> As soon as I found out about it, I dealt with it immediately.

and two months after the Minister of National Health and Welfare recalled the tainted tuna from the grocery shelves, it is still appearing on grocery shelves.

Is the Government so inept and the Minister of Health so incompetent in his control of the Department that they could not get the tainted tuna off the shelves and keep it off?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. I want to tell the Hon. Member that we have now recalled over 800,000 cans as a result of the recall ordered in September.

Since September, on the basis along with other responsibilities that people have in the Atlantic region, we have had between 75 and 100 people at a given period of time working on this recall. That is why I think we have had a very good recall with over 800,000 cans having been returned. Two cans have been found and detained. I would think that two cans in the retail system wherever they might have been, behind a box, behind a shelf, underneath a shelf, speak very well for what we have been doing.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF ALL CANS OF TAINTED TUNA

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, it is two cans for today, but we do not know what the future is going to be.

What steps is the Minister going to take this afternoon to ensure that every can of tainted tuna is off the shelf? In addition, what procedures will be tightened up within the Health Protection Branch to ensure that cans are not missed in some other future recall?

● (1420)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is tight. We have been devoting the amount of person-years and the amount of money to that issue which I just outlined to the Hon. Member. He is a reasonable person. We have now found two additional cans in a recall of over 800,000 in the Canadian retail system. I think even he would admit that that is a pretty good system. We are continuing to monitor it. As I said yesterday, as the Prime Minister said, and as I said in September, we are not overlooking any effort which is physically possible for us as a Department to make sure that none of that tuna is on the shelves in Canada.

RANDOM INSPECTION PROCESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When we questioned yesterday about the most recent discovery of rancid tuna, the Minister in reply seemed to suggest wrongdoing by the former Government when he stressed that this particular batch had not even been inspected. Of course the Minister knows and acknowledged outside the House that the random process of inspection was not only conducted by the previous Government but is still ongoing. Considering that it is possible by this method of inspection to miss a whole lot of tuna, a considerable lot, without it being inspected at all, will the Government now tighten up the process to make sure all the tuna is inspected?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer the question asked by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. I will be announcing this afternoon a significant tightening up of the sampling procedure. I have ordered the meticulous examination of all canned tuna products produced in Canada on shelves in Canadian stores, by a rigorous sampling process. I have instructed my officials to implement immediately new inspection procedures ensuring that samples are drawn and analysed from every production lot of canned tuna at the plant of origin.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is good to be able to hear this today. It is just unfortunate that the people of Canada did not have this process already in effect; perhaps we would not have have had this problem. Since the Minister said that he would make an announcement later today, does he plan to make it outside the House, or will he show respect for the institution of Parliament and the questions raised in the House by making his announcement here in the House of Commons?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have just indicated to the House some of the procedures which will be followed. If the Hon. Leader of the NDP cares to ask more questions, I will elaborate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT IN HOUSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to shift the question away from the Minister, because we do not want to go through the whole process that we had on the de Havilland deal. It was like trying to pull teeth to find out information. I ask the House Leader or the Deputy Prime Minister whether they will take steps to ensure that the statement, to which the Minister just alluded, will be made later today in the House of Commons instead of outside the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the Minister will be prepared to table his statement just as soon as he has it completed, later today.

PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we witnessed public outrage earlier this year when a Minister of the Government intervened to lower fish inspection standards, which caused tainted fish to be sold in stores across the country. The Government has had time to plug the holes, but now we discover that it has not. My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Why has the Government not been able to protect the public against unacceptable food products?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what we have is an inspection procedure which was put in by the Liberal Party and followed throughout the entire Trudeau years. The Minister of Fisheries has said today that he is going to tighten it even further. What I am saying to him—and it goes back to what happened yesterday—is that that tuna was canned when his Leader was Prime Minister of Canada. That is what he should remember.

● (1425)

NUMBER OF GOVERNMENT INSPECTORS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my supplementary question will answer the first question better than the Minister did. Will the Minister confirm the facts that we already have, which are that the numbers of inspectors have actually decreased since the Tory Government took office? Why did the Government do that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the first fact is that the Department of National Health and Welfare has not cut the inspectors. The second fact is that when the Leader of the Opposition was the Prime Minister, and when Herb Breau was the Minister of Fisheries, they approved that fish and that procedure. They approved the inspection procedure and the canning of the fish.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That was the system at that time. Today it is being improved.

FOOD INSPECTION DEREGULATION INQUIRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. We know from information gathered previously that hours allocated to food inspection have been decreased by the previous Government and are continuing to decrease under this Government due to the philosophy of deregulation of food inspections. Does the announcement made in the House today by the Minister of Fisheries indicate that deregulation of food inspection is now a dead issue and that we will return to the kind of food inspection service that we had before?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no question whatsoever of deregulation in the food industry. For the Hon. Member to be sowing that kind of seed of fear in the hearts of Canadians is totally unworthy of him. If anything, the regulations applicable to food inspection will be tightened in order to ensure the highest possible standards of health and safety for the Canadian consumer.

AVAILABILITY OF INSPECTOR'S REPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Fisheries has just acknowledged that they have to tighten up those regulations, can he tell us how consumers will be able to monitor the food inspection system so that they will have a way of knowing that their health and safety are being protected? At this time consumers cannot get the reports of the federal food inspectors. The only reports we are able to get are those from U.S. inspectors who do annual tests of Canadian plants anf file the information through the information laws in the United States.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will recall that when I was answering questions of a similar nature some time ago, I mentioned the food inspection services with respect to the work of the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review. At that time I mentioned an improved and centralized food inspection service that will eliminate the overlap and duplication of four Departments of Government. I am happy to inform Hon. Members that that work is progressing very well and is very close to completion. It will see vast improvements in the application of a regiment of regulations that will insist upon the highest standards of health and safety for all consumers in Canada.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am glad to see him back in good health.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Knowing the Minister, I am afraid he has retained his obsession with dumping de Havilland at any price. Having followed the debate, as I am sure he did, has the Minister watched the public interest in the matter? Is he now prepared to take some of the 90 days that he negotiated within which this deal can be closed to tell Canadians what the real deal is all about, in order to settle the confusion and uncertainty and fill in the blanks before the deal closes?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, may I first thank the Hon. Member for York Centre for his kind personal remarks and I would also like to take this opportunity to thank all Hon. Members who sent such kind good wishes to me while I was in the hospital and afterward. It was very much appreciated.

• (1430)

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I have been following the discussions. In fact, I have been both disappointed and almost alarmed in many ways that a deal, which I think is essentially a good deal, should be given a negative side and that misinformation is being circulated concerning it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is no information; that is the problem.

Mr. Stevens: I am sure that the Hon. Member, and other Hon. Members, will probably be pleased to hear that I certainly have no objection, and neither do my colleagues, including the President of the Treasury Board, to this matter being considered at the appropriate time by a committee of this House, at which time the information, other than that which may have some commercial sensitivity, can be put before a committee for full discussion.

Hon. Members will also be interested to know that this can be done prior to the closing of the deal. It turns out that while we are anxious to close this deal by the end of the month, in order to save about $60 million which the Crown may have to provide to de Havilland in additional financing, partly for procedural reasons and partly because Boeing has no objection, the closing can be postponed until some time later in January. I would be pleased to meet with a committee of this House, if it is so desired, to give the type of information which I am sure the Hon. Member would like to have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now what are you going to do?

Mr. Deans: Claim a victory. What do you think?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, in light of that, I am really glad to see the Minister back. This change in the Government's attitude with respect to informing Parliament and the Canadian people about the deal is very welcome. I am glad that we will be given this opportunity.

REVIEW BY INVESTMENT CANADA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I now wish to ask the Minister about the review by Investment Canada. He is bound to accept advice on the question from the Investment Canada agency which has been established by legislation introduced by the Government. Has he received the advice yet from Investment Canada? Will he inform Members of the House what that advice is when he does receive it?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with officials of Investment Canada. I have to tell the Hon. Member that, to date, they have not been in a position to advise me on this deal. However, I can certainly assure the hon. gentleman that I do not see any particular reason Investment Canada would have to rule prior to the committee hearing to which I have referred. At that time, undoubtedly, there will be ample opportunity for people to make comments, if they see fit, with respect to this transaction.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS IN JANUARY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. We have made more progress in terms of parliamentary scrutiny on the de Havilland deal in the one-half hour since the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has returned than in the 11 days we spent questioning the President of the Treasury Board.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Let's hear it for Sinc!

Mr. Cassidy: Since the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has indicated that we can have committee scrutiny of the de Havilland deal before it is concluded, will the Government now undertake to permit a committee, and give it a mandate, to look at the deal early in January, and possibly before the House returns, so that we will have scrutiny of the deal by Parliament before it is concluded?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just responded to that question. I see no inconsistency with his willingness to inform a committee of the House and the statements which have been made by the President of the Treasury Board. He now tells us that the closing may well be delayed until the end of January. Assuming our return here on January 13, there is that period of time between January 13 and the end of January to hold committee hearings. I can see no reason why those cannot be arranged through the usual machinery of Parliament.

Mr. Frith: This is the Christmas spirit!

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT TO COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it looks as though the spirit of Christmas cheer may well be with us in the House. I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for his comments. However, I would now like to be a bit more specific.

The Deputy Prime Minister also indicates that he sees no reason why this cannot be arranged before the deal is concluded. Could we have a commitment given here in the House today that a committee of the House of Commons will, in fact, examine the Boeing purchase of de Havilland before the deal is made final? Will the Minister assure us that we will have an opportunity to question the various parties involved and look at the documents before the deal is made final?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if that is the wish of the House, and if the Hon. Member would like me to sign today's "blues" for him, I would be happy to do that. In the meantime the usual process would be for the House Leaders to discuss those arrangements, as is customary in making arrangements for that type of committee sitting.

Mr. Deans: What do you think we have been doing for the last three days?

Mr. Broadbent: Why didn't you tell Ray about that today?

Mr. Nielsen: The Leader of the New Democratic Party asks me why I did not tell my House Leader. I am asking my House Leader now to get together with the other House Leaders, as he has been all along in this whole scenario, to make those appropriate arrangements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY IF GOVERNMENT WILL STOP TRANSACTION BETWEEN GULF AND ULTRAMAR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I also want to welcome him back to the House, and I hope he will be as nice to me as he was to my hon. colleague. Mr. Minister, you are aware that the Montreal East Survival Committee, the Official Opposition and the Quebec National Assembly are asking your Government to stop the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar.

Could the Minister inform the House today whether a decision was made by Cabinet this morning to advise the employees that you intend to stop the transaction between Gulf and Ultramar and allow Gaz métropolitain to buy the Montreal East refinery? Are you ready to announce that decision to the House now?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, he is quite correct. This is a matter which is before Investment Canada. Investment Canada is advising me. It has certain additional information which it would like to have confirmed or otherwise before it gives me final advice. As of this moment, I have not been put in a position to approve or disapprove the proposed purchase by Ultramar.

[Translation]

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware that a decision must be made promptly. Speed is of the essence. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has recommended that the transaction be stopped, for the sake of Quebec consumers. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that his decision will be made before tomorrow, or Monday at the latest?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I certainly can give the Hon. Member the assurance that we intend to arrive at a decision at the earliest possible moment. I doubt if it will be this week. Hopefully, it will be early next week.

AIR SAFETY

IMPACT OF INDUSTRY DEREGULATION—SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, earlier today we heard how the Government has seen the wisdom of reregulating the food inspection system in the country. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question regarding the impact of deregulation on aviation safety.

I wish to ask the Minister if he is he aware that the safety record in terms of injury and damages with respect to U.S. charter aircraft is nine times worse than that with respect to flights of scheduled airlines. American industry analysts are saying that travellers would be wise to choose their charter airlines carefully. Does the Minister accept this concept of buyer beware?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since 1979 aviation safety in this country has improved progressively, thanks to the steps which we took when we were in government in 1979.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I refer to the Dubin Inquiry and the legislation which flowed therefrom. As a matter of fact 1985 will probably go down as one of the best years in aviation history for Canada in terms of fewer accidents and fatalities. I think that is recognition of the fact that Canada's safety standards are high, will remain high, and will be enhanced wherever necessary.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, in light of what the Minister has just said, and since the inspection staff he has available to him is only able to inspect carriers once a year, and then for only about two hours, just in terms of performing a paper inspection, how can he say to the House that in a deregulated environment we will not have some problems? How can he say that to us?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is something in excess of 600 people involved in the inspection service for all elements of the inspection. If we need more, we will certainly consider that. But I must tell the Hon. Member that the Auditor General was very critical of some of the things Transport Canada was doing with respect to air traffic control towers and services of that nature. Perhaps that report will have to be looked at with some degree of objectivity.

However, I want to assure the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of this House, that this Government has no intention of degrading safety. It is clearly stated in the Freedom to Move paper. The Standing Committee clearly recognized that. And wherever necessary, as we have done in the past, we will be taking measures to enhance and secure safety for the travelling public at all costs.

Oral Questions

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO DEAL WITH SENTENCING

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General is aware that because of the Young Offenders Act, a 14 year old, who was convicted in Toronto yesterday of the first degree murder of three people, faces a maximum sentence of only three years imprisonment, one year for each of the murders. Will the Solicitor General assure the people of Canada that the changes he is contemplating in the Young Offenders Act will deal to their satisfaction with this problem? And can he tell us when those changes will be placed before Parliament?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can indicate to the Hon. Member that I hope to place before Parliament legislation to amend the Young Offenders Act in the new year. I would like to have it passed prior to the summer recess, if at all possible. The next stage will be to meet with the provincial Attorneys General and Solicitors General in February to discuss this issue.

I might indicate that there is a provision in the Young Offenders Act for transfer to adult court with the consent of the court in cases where it is deemed to be appropriate. My understanding is that, in this particular case, leave to transfer was not sought.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—STATEMENT MADE BY U.S. NEGOTIATOR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Yesterday, in a meeting with the U.S. trade representative, it was stated that we would be shooting ourselves in the foot unless we agreed to put all matters of economic consequence between the two countries on the bargaining table. It really appears that the U.S. is aiming a gun at another part of the Canadian anatomy, not at our feet. Has the Minister agreed to those conditions which were put forward by the U.S. trade representative? Are we now agreeing that matters such as the cultural industry, the auto pact, financial services, and agriculture will now be on the negotiating table contrary to all of the assurances given in the past to the provinces, to private industry groups, and to this Parliament?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): I am pleased to be able to advise the Hon. Member that I have not agreed in any way whatsoever to any conditions, as he put them, which were set forth by Mr. Yeutter yesterday. Let me say that it is quite normal, prior to the commencement of any negotiations, for parties to put their positions forward. That is their privilege. Mr. Yeutter did that yesterday. I would like to remind the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members of this House, that our Prime Minister did so in Chicago and I did so in New York, and our position quite emphatically is that our cultural sovereignty and identity—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Tell us right here.

Mr. Kelleher: —are not on the table in these discussions.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the new willingness to be forthcoming established by the Minister responsible for DRIE today, perhaps the Minister for International Trade might be prepared to make the statement in the House of Commons, not in New York or Chicago, on what the position of the Government might be.

AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): I would like to ask the Minister for International Trade specifically about the statement made by the Secretary of State in a letter written to the Automotive Parts Manufacturers that he sees no reason why the auto pact should be subject to negotiation. Specifically, did the Government now agree that the auto pact will be on the negotiating table as demanded by the U.S. trade representative?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would again, if I may, remind the Hon. Member that not only have I made my statement in New York but I made the same statement here in the House on many occasions.

Mr. de Corneille: Answer the question.

An Hon. Member: Lloyd either doesn't listen or doesn't understand.

An Hon. Member: Lloyd was never there.

Mr. Kelleher: Perhaps the hon. gentleman was not here on that particular occasion. I can state that we have no intention at this time of putting the auto pact on the table, nor have we been asked to do so. But if the Americans wish to put it on the table, as the Secretary of State has set out in the past, there are two sides to a table and they are entitled to discuss it if they so desire.

UNITED STATES' POSITION ON AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The reason we are so concerned about this set of demands is that the auto industry, with its safeguards for Canadians, gives us 130,000 jobs. When the question was raised by Mr. Yeutter yesterday, did the Minister turn to him and put it quite bluntly that in this case the U.S. was out of luck and the auto pact is not up for grabs in these trade negotiations?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can reply by reading to the Hon.

Member just exactly what Mr. Yeutter said yesterday: "From my viewpoint, everything is on the table but that should not be interpreted as meaning that the auto pact would be changed in any way. We should not draw any conclusions as to whether the pact will be changed at all. It seems to be working well".

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is not the question. We are trying to get a measure of this man's capacity as a negotiator.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): When Mr. Yeutter made his comments, did the Minister also add that not just himself, but the Minister of State for External Affairs and the Deputy Prime Minister had already ruled that out? Did the Minister take it off the table as he should have, given those comments in the House of Commons?

Mr. Fulton: Come on, fence post.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I said previously on many, many occasions, we are not in the process of taking particular subjects off the table at this time. As I explained earlier, Mr. Yeutter is entitled to put forward the position of his country, just as we have put forward the position of our country on many occasions.

INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF UNITED CANADA COMPANY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I gather the Minister is familiar with the plight of an insurance company called United Canada which happens to insure 238 of the major trucking companies in Canada which represent 25 per cent of the trucking industry or approximately 23,000 jobs. During the last month United Canada has been in a deficit position and effectively 238 trucking companies on the road have been technically uninsured. Tomorrow the Superintendent of Insurance will close down that company and I want to know what action the Minister has in mind.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to explain to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that both the Minister of Transport and myself have been in constant touch with the Truckers' Association and with the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Foster: There goes another $1 billion.

Mrs. McDougall: We do recognize the seriousness of this situation and have been working with the industry toward a solution. Even as we speak, the industry is discussing a private sector solution and when I have the complete facts on that I will be happy to inform the House.

IMPACT ON TRUCKING INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the company goes under tomorrow—it has been in deficit for a month and 25 per cent of our entire trucking industry is technically without insurance—it will be too late.

The Canadian Trucking Association has been in touch with us. It said it has been talking to the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Transport for the last four weeks without results. It is unable to find a private solution without some sort of federal guarantee to get it going. Is the Minister going to supply that guarantee?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, some of the truckers have found insurance with other insurance companies so I do not want the Hon. Member to over emphasize the problem, although I recognize it is serious. The truckers themselves know of my concern. However, at the moment negotiations are going on and I would not be prepared to prejudge their conclusion.

• (1450)

NEED FOR ACTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am trying to impress upon the Minister that she has no more time. Only 30 of 238 companies have managed to find other insurance and tomorrow some 25 per cent of the industry on the road will be uninsured. She has no more time and the Canadian Trucking Association takes this very, very seriously indeed.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I did not actually hear a question, but let me just say that the Trucking Association is very well aware of the concern and assistance this Government has given.

SMALL BUSINESS

REFORM OF CORPORATE INCOME TAX

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns small business financing. Many small businesses capable of making profits and competing in the market-place cannot survive simply because of cash flow problems as a result of the past recession. Can the Minister tell the House if reform of the corporate income tax now being considered will be aimed directly at alleviating this most serious problem for small business?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the interest of the Hon. Member in both the problems and opportunities of small business is well known to all Members. I appreciate his question. He is aware, I am sure, that in the May Budget we released a paper on corporate tax reform which touches on some of the concerns he raises. The tax reform is directed at reducing some of the tax incentives but at the same time reducing tax rates if corporate tax reform is followed, and that should result in some increase in cash flow for small businesses.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CALCULATION OF PENSIONS AS EARNED INCOME

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I hope the spirit of Christmas is still flowing in the Minister's heart.

Mr. Nystrom: Optimist.

Mr. Rodriguez: Some time ago the Government announced it was going to change the Unemployment Insurance Act so that pension income would be considered earned income as of January 1, 1986. I want to give the Minister a chance to repent before it is too late. Does the Government intend to proceed with that most barbaric regulation?

Mr. Broadbent: Don't be barbaric, Flora.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as you know, this question has been asked on a number of occasions. I provided the answer on a continuous basis.

Mr. Frith: Back to church.

Miss MacDonald: That change to the regulations was first proposed on November 4, 1984. Implementation was delayed for a year in order to give employees and employers time to adjust to the change. As we announced at that time, it will come into effect January 1, 1986.

Mr. Nystrom: Scrooge.

FORGET COMMISSION STUDY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has told this House that she has referred this matter to the Forget Commission. Does she think it is fair or sensible to go ahead with the change on January 1, 1986, when the Forget Commission could very well study the matter and make recommendations? The Minister could then move on the matter. Does she not think she is being rather precipitate in this action?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, indeed I expect the Forget Commission will study this change as it is studying all aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Program.

Mr. Rodriguez: Then why make the change now?

Miss MacDonald: This one is no different. This was proposed much earlier than the establishment of the Forget Commission and will go into effect as we have indicated.

I will say, however, that there are many other issues in this field which have to be addressed, other adjustments which have to be made, as for instance the announcement made in Sudbury yesterday when the Government of Canada joined with the Government of Ontario and the private sector to provide some $5 million to help the people in the Sudbury area to adjust to changes in the labour force.

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SITUATION IN QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am very happy to see him back, because his Government is in a state of utter confusion, and this is particularly true in the case of the petrochemical industry. My question to the Minister is as follows: Considering that his colleague at Energy, Mines and Resources claims that Quebec has a surplus production capacity, that the Director of Combines and Investigations is claiming there is a shortfall and that today, Quebec workers are caught in the crossfire, I want to ask the Minister who is telling the truth? What is the real situation in Quebec? Is there a surplus capacity or is there a shortfall, according to his information?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive the good wishes of the Hon. Member but I must inform him that I am no Solomon.

Mr. Beatty: Sure you are, Sinc.

Mr. Frith: You used to be Solomon.

Mr. McLean: Where did this modesty come from, Sinc?

Mr. Stevens: I cannot determine, as he says, who is telling the truth when there appears to be two conflicting statements. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that we noted the different conclusions referred to and I have asked our DRIE people to give me an explanation of why the two conclusions were arrived at.

INQUIRY WHETHER PRESSURE EXERTED TO PREVENT NEW COMPANY FROM ENTERING QUEBEC MARKET

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister has decided to postpone announcing his decision in the case of Ultramar and Gulf, contrary to what was promised by the Secretary of State, who said it would be announced tomorrow. Now, considering recent events, including the stated intention of Gaz métropolitain to get into the petroleum industry, could the Minister confirm to the House that he has had endless calls from the Petroleum Club and, more specifically, that there have been strong pressures on the part of the multinationals to stop a new oil company from entering the market in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I hasten to reassure the Hon. Member that no pressures of the nature he has referred to have been brought to bear on me. He must bear in mind that the Gaz métropolitain offer he referred to was never put in a final written form. It also had certain conditions and it was $40 million or more less than the Ultramar offer.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF AND VEAL IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will be aware that there has been a great deal of confusion regarding the level of beef and veal imports into Canada over the past few years, particularly highly subsidized imports from the European Economic Community. Can the Minister advise the House what those levels were for 1985 and what our Government will be doing to protect our valuable beef industry in 1986?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome that question because it gives me another opportunity to demonstrate this Government's continuing support for the agriculture industry and, more specifically, the cattle industry. The Minister of International Trade and I announced today that we are going to invoke the Meat Import Act in 1986 in the same way we did 12 months ago for the year 1985. The heavily subsidized EEC beef which came into this country in 1984 amounted to some 50 million pounds. We invoked the Act, negotiated levels, and reduced that to 23 million pounds. That is a real measure of support for the Canadian cattle industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to say to the Minister that this may continue on statements.

Some Hon. Members: More!

EMPLOYMENT

1986 SUMMER YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who today announced her summer employment program for youth. Bearing in mind that $205 million was spent in 1985 on youth employment, how does the Minister have the gall to claim that this has been increased to $210 million in 1986 when $30 million is being used to subsidize the census without any guarantee of youth employment?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to confirm that some $210 million will be spent during the summer of 1986 on employment for young people across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Miss MacDonald: We estimate, Sir, that that will involve some 118,000 young people during the summer months. I would hate to think that the Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville would try to deny young people the opportunity of taking part in the census which is a very important socio-economic part of the operations of government and, indeed, the country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUNDING INQUIRY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am as interested in summer employment and the census as is anyone else. However, I do not understand, and I would like to know, how the Minister can stand in her place and defend a scam through which money is taken away from the Canadian Jobs Strategy and transferred to the census without creating a single new job or a single new training place. Those are the facts.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last year when the Government announced Challenge '85 the Hon. Member was very critical. I must tell you, Sir, that despite that criticism Challenge '85 was a tremendous success. It produced over 101,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if Challenge '85 was that kind of a success without the co-operation of the Hon. Member, just think how successful Challenge '86 will be with his co-operation, which I invite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of eight, presented by Hon.

Members on Wednesday, December 18, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe Mr. Tardif), and the Hon. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate to ask the customary question about the business of the House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think that the best way to respond at this time, without being in the least frivolous, is to say with all sincerity that we are now in the process of having meetings to see whether an agenda can be reached with respect to what will transpire between now and tomorrow afternoon. It is my hope that those meetings will be fruitful. I think I should say no more at this time other than that I intend to carry on the discussions as long as there is a possibility of coming to an agreement.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader a question which does not relate to anything that we are discussing. In the House yesterday the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), in response to a question about whether there could be a parliamentary review of the de Havilland-Boeing matter before the deal is closed, said:

> Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last of the three questions is no. I have made that very clear before. The answer is absolutely no.

The Minister said that and, understandably, he is not in the House today. Since the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has indicated quite the contrary, could the Government House Leader tell us under what order of reference the committee hearings which have been promised by the Government can take place since, as far as I know, there are no Estimates before any of the committees which would provide a vehicle. If I am correct in this, will he immediately table a mutually satisfactory motion referring the matter of Boeing and de Havilland to the Committee?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated behind the curtains to the Hon. Member, my distinguished colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), indicated just after I had my first meeting with the Opposition House Leader today that the matter would not finally be closed until later in January. This gave us a new dimension in terms of the available time.

Mr. Gauthier: Sure it did.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) was, of course, only talking in terms of whether the House would have a veto power prior to the closing of the deal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Frith: This is revisionist thinking.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This Party has always been quite prepared to use parliamentary vehicles and committees to their fullest extent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is another demonstration of that willingness. I suggest to the Hon. Member and to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party that we will make arrangements that are mutually satisfactory to ensure that a full hearing will be held at a time convenient to the Opposition and to my distinguished colleague.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members will recall, I promised that before the end of the current year I would report back to the House and to the Canadian people on the results of the investigations into the so-called "blob" in the St. Clair River. Before doing so, Sir, allow me to apologize to the official spokespersons of the opposition Parties. It simply was not technically possible for me to get a copy of my notes for these remarks to them beforehand.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We are getting used to this.

Mr. McMillan: Although the scientific investigation is not yet complete, I would like to make a preliminary report on the situation in the St. Clair River. It should reassure—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to interrupt the Minister, but it is necessary in this sense. This procedure of not giving the spokespersons for members of the Opposition adequate time is becoming contagious among Ministers of the Government. I wonder whether the Minister would give our representative and that of the NDP some time to look at copies of the statement by postponing it until later this afternoon or until tomorrow. We have had not time to look at this.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a similar point of order. I think that in the interest of informed exchange on ministerial statements it would be far, far better if at least a short period of time were permitted for opposition spokesmen to review the material to be read.

Mr. Speaker: I am required, of course, to indicate that this is not technically a point of order but a representation.

Mr. Gauthier: It's a point of politeness.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I have apologized to the Opposition.

Mr. Rodriguez: That's not good enough.

Mr. Keeper: That is not good enough. Resign.

Mr. McMillan: What I am giving to the House is the most—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, can I ask the Minister why he cannot make this statement tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Order!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If he was not planning to be in the House he should give the House priority and be here tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Yes. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask why, under the circumstances, the Minister cannot make his statement tomorrow. If he does not plan to be in the House tomorrow, why can he not give the House priority, show some respect to Parliament, be here, make the statement tomorrow—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please! I did indicate that these are not points of order but representations. I cannot, therefore, allow a point of order that is not a point of order to continue to be presented. I think Hon. Members know that.

• (1510)

An Hon. Member: What arrogance.

Mr. Thacker: Go downstairs then. If you don't want it in the House we will go downstairs to the press room.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister of the Environment.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to members of the Opposition who rose on this point of order, they can hardly argue that members of the Government have been discourteous, especially when the Liberal Party, when in goverment, made a practice of not even making statements in the House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. McDermid: You weren't even here, Turner. How do you know?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are not going to take that. We have had enough of you, Ray.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stewart: Oh, Johnny.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We won't take any of this nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rossi: One language Stewart.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), order. The Hon. Minister may resume his statement but I caution him that a point of order which I have ruled out of order should not be continued or commented on.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, although the scientific investigation is not yet complete—

Mr. Keeper: Arrogant.

Mr. McMillan: —I would like to make a preliminary report on the situation in the St. Clair River based on the most up-to-date information as of 3.10 this afternoon. It should reassure both the Canadian public and Members of the House that the federal Department of the Environment is moving, in co-operation with the Opposition and the Government of Ontario, on all fronts to remove and identify the source of the tarry substance that is disfiguring the river and causing concern about the quality of the drinking water of thousands of Canadians.

I should explain that this statement is an interim one only, because the situation has proved to be more complex than the investigative team originally thought. Moreover, ongoing clean-up of the river has been complicated by bad weather. Since the House will not be meeting until after the New Year, as of tomorrow, I thought that nevertheless it would be useful to report on the findings to date.

To put the matter into context, let me briefly review the sequence of events in the St. Clair River. Certain tarry substances have been noted in the river since the mid-1970s. Continuous sampling has taken place, but it was not until two years ago that more sophisticated analytical methods were developed for this type of natural phenomenon. In 1984, the Great Lakes Institute, acting on behalf of both the federal Department of the Environment and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment, conducted a survey to identify "hot spots" in the St. Clair River. In August, 1984, a sample of the tarry substance was submitted to the Ontario Ministry of the Environment for analysis. In mid-August of this year, the tests were completed and, based on the results, additional sampling was authorized.

Between August 13 and August 16 of this Year, Dow Chemical situated on the river, spilled perchloroethylene, of which all but 2,500 gallons was recaptured. My first act, after my appointment as Minister of the Environment on August 19, was to instruct department officials to offer full scientific and technical advice to their Ontario colleagues in order to clean up the remainder of the spill.

By November 1, information from officials of the Department of the Environment made it clear to me that the problem was much more complex and potentially more serious than just the spill itself. That same day I set up a team of scientists whose only task since then has been to identify all the components of the so-called blob and to identify other pollution problems in the St. Clair River, locate their origins and begin working on solutions to them. That analytical team, I might say, includes Canada's most distinguished scientists in every relevant field—organic chemistry, hydro-dynamics, hydrogeology, pollution enginering, diving and underwater photography to mention just a few. There are more than 50 scientists in all working literally seven days a week on the St. Clair River problem. Moreover, because our American neighbours have a direct stake in the purity of the St. Clair River, I have kept Lee Thomas, Director of the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States, fully informed, and his scientists are giving my Department their complete co-operation.

In that first week of November, the CSS Advent, Environment Canada's scientific research vessel, was dispatched to the St. Clair River. Underwater photography gave us the first clear picture of the extent of the pollution there. Divers immediately began collecting samples from the riverbed and these have now been analysed in the laboratories of the National Water Research Institute. The scientific team has completed more than 2,000 analyses for a full range of organic pollutants.

On the basis of those analyses, the scientific team, established on November 1, is now integrating and interpreting data in order to provide a complete and coherent picture of the St. Clair River. By January 20, I expect to have their report and be able to release it to the House, and through the House, to the Canadian public.

On the basis of the work done to date, we do know that the so-called blob comprises extremely high concentrations of perchloroethylene and carbon tetrachloride. The two chemicals are used as dry-cleaning solvents and, in fact, it is the very properties that render them useful in dry-cleaning that make them obnoxious in drinking water. In this case, they have absorbed other contaminants throughout the St. Clair River into themselves and of course compounded the magnitude of the tarry-like substance that is now being vacuumed.

Let me turn now to private sector involvement in the St. Clair problem and the context in which it exists.

First, every Member of the House, and in fact every person in the country, has to recognize that we live in a chemical society. Today there are more than 60,000 chemicals being used in the world's trade and commerce, and more than 1,000 new compounds are being introduced annually. Each year, companies in North America produce more than a ton of chemicals for each man, woman and child living on the entire continent.

In Canada, economic and historical forces have combined to create a chemical valley along the St. Clair River and it includes Dow Chemical Canada Limited. We know that a key to the current problem is a spill of perchloroethylene by Dow between August 13 and August 16, 1985. Moreover, for many years, Dow disposed of chemical waste by placing them in abandoned salt caverns that lie below the riverbed. Other companies injected their wastes into the shallower Detroit Formation. I should stress that the companies' waste disposal methods were consistent with what was understood at the time to be safe.

Dow has been vacuuming the St. Clair River since concern first focused on the tarry material and is continuing to do so to this day. An area approximately 30 metres square is being cleaned. It has been divided into a grid comprising 66 squares and, as of noon today, 52 of them, or 80 per cent in all, have been cleaned. The material being vacuumed is being stored in a holding pond on Dow's property.

My Department's scientific team posits that three possible factors have contributed to pollution problems in the St. Clair River. First, over the years there have been spills from Dow and from other companies. Second, there is continuous discharge from the property of various companies directly into the river itself. Third, there is a continuous leakage, not from direct sources, that is to say from the companies themselves directly into the river, but from past underground waste disposal practices.

In my few remaining remarks I will address the third theory, a theory which has received wide attention. It holds that industrial wastes injected into the salt caverns at a depth of 600 metres have seeped through crevices up into the river bed. That particular doomsday scenario, my experts tell me, is an extremely unlikely possibility. They are, therefore, concentrating their efforts elsewhere. The question of seepage from the Detroit Formation has not been answered, either positively or negatively, to date. There is no absolute certainty yet, but there is increasing evidence that the dominant cause of the problem is Dow's recent spill, combined with a degree of continuing seepage from various sources, plus past environmental accidents.

I can assure Members of the House, in conclusion, that my Department is taking strong measures to counter pollution of the kind that has concerned us in the St. Clair River. However, the steps now being formulated for action in 1986 will go far beyond the one situation, the St. Clair River, however serious.

First, my Department is drawing up plans to control chemicals from the cradle to the grave and even before, using birth control on some new chemicals, if you will. This action will take the form of tough screening to ensure that only safe compounds and safe uses are permitted.

Second, the Department has already begun a thorough review of all existing environmental legislation, in particular the Environmental Contaminants Act, with an eye to overhauling and strengthening the entire range of laws and regulations. This process will be completed in co-operation with the other federal and provincial Departments which share jurisdiction for pollution control.

Third, in connection with the aforementioned review, we are laying the groundwork for a major rationalization of environmental law within federal jurisdiction.

Finally, there is a need to be concerned, not only with pollutants, but also with the resources they damage. In that regard my Department is drawing up plans for a Canada-wide water policy, a need which was clearly enunciated in the recently released Pearse Report.

Despite these bold measures, no Government, no company, no individual can be complacent about the events which have occurred in the St. Clair River. However, I think that these events have been highly instructive for all Canadians concerned about environmental protection. The St. Clair is an index of the degree to which we have become a chemical society. What is more, the state of the river is an indictment of our society for its carelessness and shortsightedness. If we are committed to a new era of chemical care and control—and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is unequivocally committed to that era and to bringing it about—the country must do an awful lot more than it has done to cope with what I have called the chemical society. If we take the actions required, the St. Clair River will be seen in future years to have been a turning point—yes, a watershed, quite literally—in the country's history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, certainly it is not very helpful to receive a copy of the Minister's statement five minutes after he has started reading his text. It shows vacillation, it shows indecision until the last minute, and perhaps it shows a sloppy and disorganized office which cannot come up with a text in time for the Opposition to see it, even at the beginning of the Minister's statement. That process leaves very much to be desired, and my Leader has already made an intervention to that effect. It does not seem to be an isolated case. It seems to be an alarming and increasing pattern on the part of the so-called Progressive Conservative Government.

However, what disturbs me in the approach of the Minister is the fact that he made a high-sounding declaration about a chemical society and the St. Clair River perhaps being a turning point in the treatment of the situation in those waters. He did not address the broader and basic questions which flow from the cuts which he and his Government allowed in the research of toxic chemicals at a time when we badly need them. I am referring to the badly needed scientific knowledge, as corroborated two weeks ago by the Royal Society of Canada in its study, about the effect of toxic chemicals on human health and the cancellation of the centre which was announced in November, 1984 by the Conservative Government.

In addition to that, I refer to the cancellation of the $2.5 million which the Department of the Environment usually and regularly sought from the Treasury Board every year before

April 1, in order to intensify and conduct research on the leaking of toxic chemical dump sites into the Niagara River. Of course I am referring, in larger terms, to the broad $70 million cut in the National Research Council which includes matters related to chemicals and substances affecting human health.

In his statement the Minister focused upon the St. Clair River, but he failed to address the broader question of our international obligations to the Americans under the Great Lakes Water Agreement. That is a very serious flaw in his presentation today. We have an obligation under that agreement to the Amercains. We have an obligation to the communities downstream to Sarnia and Windsor and to our native people on Walpole Island. We have an obligation to deliver on the Canadian side of the river because we want the Americans to respect their obligations along the Niagara River where millions of Americans and Canadians are affected by a similar situation. It is only that the chemicals are different.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: It is the linkage, the overview and the understanding of the totality of the picture in the Minister's statement today that dismay and shock me. The Minister arrived today a few minutes after three o'clock, apologized and expected to be treated in a kind manner both on substance as well as on process. That, Mr. Speaker, we cannot do for him.

• (1530)

Second, there has been a failure on the part of the Minister to recognize that the problem is not that of having a chemical society. We can have a chemical society with the number of chemical products that are produced and still have a clean society. The Minister has not addressed that point, the major point which preoccupies everyone in the country. Responsible companies and institutions can produce chemical products and still ensure that our water and air remain clean.

In his statement, the Minister failed to address the number of incentives that already exist in the Income Tax Act which favour the corporations operating along the St. Clair River. He has not indicated whether or not he has incentives in mind for those same corporations, incentives which would encourage them to introduce along the St. Clair River the necessary works that will permit the companies to clean up their acts at an accelerated pace.

Everyone knows that there are some companies along the St. Clair River which, in their daily operations, do discharge into the St. Clair River without sewer separation. This is a situation that must be remedied. Therefore, it is necessary to focus on the instruments the Government of Canada has in the Income Tax Act to accelerate the initiatives of companies toward cleaning up their daily operations now. If the facilities that exist in the Income Tax Act are not adequate for this purpose, perhaps the Minister could indicate which incentives he would like to adopt in order for the companies to separate the sewage, treat the discharges so that they will not be released into the river until they are safe and ensure that the monitoring equipment is up to date and not just mechanical as is the case with some of these corporations.

As the Minister said, the report is incomplete and I agree with that. It is a report that is based on temporary information. It does not really go to the cause of the problem. It simply deals with an assessment of the situation and its manifestations about which we know already. We have here a dangerous situation. Dow Chemical alone experienced some 11 spills between January and August of this year. Evidently, it is a company that has had certain difficulties and certain operating shortcomings that must be addressed.

The Minister has not addressed the shortcomings in the day-to-day operations of the companies that are causing the problem, willingly or unwillingly. In true Tory fashion, he has dealt with the symptoms and not with the root of the problem. That is what is distressing about his statement. He has simply told us to accept the fact that we have a chemical society and that we are now examining this particular river. He said in beautiful words that he was unequivocally committed to a new era but how are we going to arrive at a new era? That is what we want to know. I would have hoped that the Minister would have shown some leadership in coming to the House today before Christmas to indicate to us the road that he intends to travel beyond expressions of good intentions. That is not good enough.

We would like to express our dismay with the handling of this matter so far and also with another matter. At this time, two months have gone by since the Americans have submitted to the Government of Canada a plan regarding another river but one which is linked with this one because of our international obligations. The plan involves how to deal with the leaching along the Niagara River, a plan to which the Minister has not yet responded. The Government has not said a word about it. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Caccia), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Point of order, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek your guidance on the events which have just occurred. I want first to raise with you, Sir, whether you might consider and perhaps rule later on a question I want to place before you, that being that it was my understanding and has been ever since my entry into the House of Commons that it was necessary for a motion to be before the House in order that a motion to adjourn could be considered. I have attempted personally, in times past, to move adjournment during Routine Proceedings and I have had that adjournment motion ruled out of order inasmuch as there was no motion before the House. I would very much appreciate if at some time in the future you might reflect upon that and perhaps give guidance to the House as to the occasions during which such a motion might be acceptable.

The second point I want to raise for your consideration is this. Upon making such a motion to adjourn it must be assumed by the mover that the question could be decided in the affirmative. Thus the motion today had the potential of preventing my colleague from commenting on the statement of the Minister. That is most unusual behaviour. I can think of no occasion in this House of Commons—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I can think of no occasion in this House of Commons where such a display of bad manners and lack of co-operation has ever been accepted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: We knew he needed time to prepare, Ian.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raises two points, one of which is clearly not a point of order. The other one has caused me, I can tell the Hon. Member, some difficulty. He may have seen me, when I had a sense of what might be coming, consulting book after book after book. Let my try to say in the best way I know that it would give the Chair very useful quidance if the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization were to deal with this question. I think that is all I should say on that matter.

The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is rising to respond to the Minister's statement?

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to deal with either the question of lateness of receipt of the official statement or with the points raised by my House Leader concerning the performance of the Liberal Party. Let me start with the conclusion of the Minister's statement where he says, I think eloquently, that the state of the St. Clair River is an indictment of our society for its carelessness and short-sightedness. That is absolutely true. That is the touchstone from which we should start. That is the basis on which we should proceed. If we take the situation in front of us, one which is summed up by the fact that at least 12 of the major pollutants which are part of the blob in the St. Clair River are also part of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency priority pollutants, we have a small measure of just why that Minister and his Government have said that we face an awesome situation with respect to the cleanup of that river.

I want to pay tribute to a young man who came into my constituency office late in August of this year and said to me: "This may cost me my job but it's something I think you should know about". That was the first public acknowledgement, outside of the environs of the scientific community and members of Ministries of the Environment, that a classic, absolutely catastrophic environmental problem was in front of us as a society. I want to pay tribute, and I hope the House will also, to the courage of that young man. He is not part of any of these official agencies. He knew his job could be at risk because he was prepared to let the rest of society know that these high concentrations of cancer-causing dioxin had been discovered in the source of drinking water for my community and the communities of a great many other people in this country.

This is a deeply serious problem as I said when I first raised this question with the Minister at the beginning of our dealings with the problem. It is a chronic problem which we have known about since 1979 and 1980. At that time studies by the Ministry of the Environment in Ontario identified benzines and chlorethylenes within the St. Clair River, all of which have cancer-causing properties. Yet, at that stage nothing was done. The nature of the problem is demonstrated by the fact that between 1972 and 1984, 275 spills took place in the chemical valley. That is a totally irresponsible, totally unacceptable, and totally abhorrent level of consistent, chronic pollution which we should have acted on years ago.

This problem has not only affected the St. Clair River. Studies have been done by the Great Lakes Research Institute which indicate through their analysis of octochlorostyrene that throughout much of Lake St. Clair, a large, large body of water, there has been a spread of the chemicals coming from the St. Clair River. It is a problem which has been recognized by the Royal Society itself just this past week. Its damning study said that the people of the Great Lakes region face toxic chemical levels far in excess of those in any other part of the country. This is, again, an unacceptable, intolerable, and abominable situation.

What are the solutions to this problem? There has been a myth crated by Dow Chemical that all that is required is a short-term cleanup of this blob from its properties in the St. Clair River. It claims that because of a great spill—which no one denies took place—of laundry cleaning fluid last summer. Yet, Mr. Speaker, this blob and its toxic qualities existed in 1984, before that large laundry cleaning spill took place. Therefore, we are dealing with a problem which is much more deep-rooted than is suggested by Dow's excuses. We have a problem that has its roots, in part, in the lack of government action to give us guidelines on water pollution. Scientists have told us that 36 ou of 37 of the times within this blob do not even have guidelines to give us a direction as to what levels are safe within the waters outside our communities.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, we have a long-run challenge which is recognized by the Minister, although he does little about it in this statement. The challenge is recognized by the interim report of the scientists who have investigated the issue of a long-run problem of seepage from deep-pressure wells which have already had their effect in the tunnel that goes beneath the river at Sarnia.

We have challenges, Mr. Speaker, but from challenges there are lessons that we can learn. The lesson in this case is to toughen significantly the action that we as a society take against this pollution problem in our waters. This problem does not only affect our drinking water, but, through the food chain, affects our fish life and, through evaporation, affects the rain which falls on the crops on some of the best agricultural lands in the country.

We must respond with urgency. I fear, Mr. Speaker, that the vague commitments in this statement, welcome as they are, are not urgent enough. There are no commitments in this statement to ending the self-compliance by the companies in studying pollution. That is crucially required. Self-compliance has proven to be a recipe for irresponsibility on the part of the companies. There is no commitment to put in place urgently a zero discharge process which will stop, rather than reduce, the discharge of these dangerous toxic chemicals into our waterways. There is no commitment to making pollution a criminal matter as should surely be the case after 275 spills. There is no commitment to this ministry spending the money to give us the details we require for the new guidelines which will be able to give our communities a sense of security in their drinking watrs in the future. There is no commitment to reinstate the cuts to agencies such as the Toxicology Research Centre at the University of Guelph.

There is no commitment to restore morale within this Ministry. I do not think the Minister is responsible for that decline in morale, but that his Government is. I say to him with regret that he must take that decline in morale seriously. It must be a matter or urgent concern when some of the best scientists are seeking to leave the Ministry. It must be a point of priority for him to change those conditions of poor morale.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will make a point which has been made across Ontario. We have had far too many years of disaster in the St. Clair River, in the Niagara River, and in other parts of the country. We must have a commitment to probe why those disasters have been permitted to occur. The Environmental Law Society in Ontario has called for a judicial inquiry in the case of the St. Clair crisis. I support that call 100 per cent. Everyone in the House should support that call 100 per cent because we must get to the bottom of a situation that has allowed 275 spills to take place over a 12-year period.

● (1620)

Finally, I want to make a general point. Water pollution is not just a problem for Members of Parliament and Ministers. It is a problem for our communities and one which is killing people in our communities.

Our communities must fight back. They must form their own action groups and their own grass roots citizens' organizations, as has happened in Wallaceburg and in Windsor this weekend, to lead the fight against pollution. These groups must be committed in a non-partisan way to water quality in our country.

I call on the Minister to display leadership. I believe that throughout the country there is a sense of hope that the Minister will take leadership. Above all, I call for urgency, seriousness and citizen involvement. We must stop trying to pretend that these pollution problems should be covered up in order not to give a bad name to our community. We must become serious and act now with urgency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the opposition House Leaders with respect to the possibility of the House returning to tabling of documents so that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) can table a document. I believe if you were to seek unanimous consent there might be disposition to allow us to return to that item under Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for that suggestion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FOOD AND DRUGS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT RESPECTING QUALITY OF FISH

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 47(2), I have the honour to table in both official languages a document laying out measures to ensure the quality of Canadian canned fish.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the House that because of the ministerial statement this day's sitting will be extended by 41 minutes. Therefore, Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.41 p.m.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a large number of petitions which concern family allowances. These petitions ask the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, these petitions are from residents in the federal ridings of Richelieu, Shefford, Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Québec East, Lévis, Portneuf, Trois-Rivières, Frontenac, Saint-Maurice, Champlain, Scarborough North, Scarborough West, Etobicoke Centre and the community of Saint-Thomas, and finally, the City of Toronto.

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition I wish to table—

[Translation]

—signed by an number of constituents in the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe declaring their support for family allowances and the need to continue these allowances without de-indexing them.

[English]

P.E.I.—NEW BRUNSWICK FERRY SERVICE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition containing seven pages of names of residents from Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to revert the schedule of the ferry service between Borden, Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick to the one that was provided for the winter service of 1984-85.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario expressing their concern that the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, contributes to the nuclear arms race and militarism in general. They ask the House not to renew the agreement between Canada and the United States authorizing the joint maintenance of the said test range, bringing to an end all weapons testing at the test range and to undertake to convert it to peaceful purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by Sharon Thomas and Lana Bowey of White Rock. They humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone is starting to get into the Christmas spirit.

I have the honour of presenting a series of petitions, and I will do as you suggested to the House, which is simply to announce the subject and the ridings, but I would like to name the ridings because there are several, and they like to be considered individually instead of being lumped together.

As you know, this concerns the tax credit and family allowances. The petitions are from our friends, a lot of people from the riding of Sherbrooke.

I also have the honour of tabling a petition addressed to the Prime Minister by the riding of Saint-Denis, and one by Mrs. Marthe Fréchette, in charge of the Comité culturel of the well-known Cercle des fermières d'Ahuntsic, making the same request; I have a strong petition from the riding of Châteauguay on the same topic, namely family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has given me the privilege of presenting one of her petitions from the riding of Mount-Royal, for which I thank her, and I know that she herself will have another one later on from my riding. Mr. Speaker, we also have a petition on the same subject from the federal riding of Abitibi.

Mr. Speaker, it should come as no surprise that people as energetic and well-informed as the residents of the riding of Laval should also be very keen on having a petition presented on their behalf and on the same subject. And from the riding of Brome-Missisquoi, I think this is very important, since—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Member to be very brief in continuing with his petitions?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: It is important.

Mr. Prud'homme: I do not know how I can be any briefer, I am saying they are on the same subject. Mr. Speaker, since the formula is that the petitioners "humbly call upon the Chair", I would rather not say: "Here is a pile of petitions, that's it". There has to be a limit. If we expect petitioners to declare something humbly, I think it should be done with dignity, and that is what I am doing.

From the riding of Northumberland-Miramichi, a petition along the same lines. From many people of various Toronto ridings, yours included, Mr. Speaker, we have a similar petition. From the riding of Huron-Bruce, from the riding of—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I invite the Hon. Member to simply file the rest of his petition with the Table?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to present a petition concerning family allowances and the child tax credit. You know, Mr. Speaker, a lot of people in my riding have asked me to present this petition on their behalf. I have several others which I present together, they come from my riding. And then, of course, hundreds of people from Vancouver Centre have asked me . . . They have a problem and I think they have asked us to look into it. Residents of the Ottawa region—certainly not Ottawa-Vanier, the other Ottawa ridings—did not have an opportunity to tell us about their concerns. People from Halifax have also asked me to present this petition to you, Mr. Speaker.

Naturally, the people of Nickel Belt have grave concerns about family allowances, Mr. Speaker. They have asked me to convey them to you.

My colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Frith) is out of the House for the moment, but he did ask me to present a petition from his constituents who feel exactly the same way and expect you to understand their problem, Mr. Speaker.

Then the people of Prince George who want us to present their petition.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I invite the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) to conclude as briefly as possible, please?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I agree with you, but those people went to the trouble of having the petition signed by their neighbours, they deserve and have the right . . . I could read the whole formula.

Mr. Speaker, one here from residents of Ontario. A petition which has been circulated, and another one from the region of Sudbury urging you to give every consideration to their request.

Mr. Speaker, I have so many of them, and I know it is an important issue. More people from Sudbury who have asked us . . . Mr. Speaker, just so you will not lose patience—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I advise the Hon. Member that of course he knows that simply filing the rest of the petitions with the Table has exactly the same effect?

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, you have . . . and I think you have every right to advise the House of the way we should proceed, because I do not understand. Canadians—

An Hon. Member: —men and women!

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, Canadian men and women, as my hon. colleague has just said, have an ancient right. Should we say immediately: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has not raised a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to table a petition on behalf of residents of the Hull-Aylmer riding, more specifically the executive of the Cercle des Fermières du Québec, who are asking the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

I also have the pleasure and duty to present petitions from residents of the Manicouagan riding and the Brome-Missisquoi riding.

Mr. Speaker, I have similar petitions to table on behalf of residents of the Province of Quebec, more specifically from the federal ridings of Charlevoix, Chambly, Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Jonquière and Langelier, who are asking the Government to reinstate full indexation. Also from the federal ridings of Drummond and Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, the latter being represented by our colleague who is ill and to whom we wish a Merry Christmas, a very Happy New Year, and a quick recovery—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I invite the Hon. Member to conclude as briefly as possible?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: —the federal ridings of Trois-Rivières, Saint-Maurice, LaSalle and Champlain, all in Quebec, as well as the riding of—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I simply advise the Hon. Member that he has the same effect by filing the rest of his petitions?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions dealing with the same topic to present. They are signed by several residents of St. John's, Newfoundland; by 216 residents of Windsor, Local 444 of the United Auto Workers Union; and by several individuals from Hamilton. These petitions call upon the Government to reverse the decision it has taken today in respect of using pension income as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes, which will take effect on January 1, 1986.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition dealing with a different topic to present. It is signed by residents of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Quebec. These individuals protest the use of the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. They believe that it contributes to the nuclear arms race and militarism in general, and call upon the Government to bring an end to all weapons testing at the said test range and to undertake to convert the said test range to peaceful purposes.

[Translation]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and, even more, the duty to present a petition from some of my constituents in Vancouver Quadra who ask that the Government of Canada restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, in my constituency of Saint-Jacques, people are also concerned about the cutbacks to the family allowance and child tax credit programs. They therefore ask that this Government reestablish full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

In accordance with your instructions that we be brief, Mr. Speaker, I shall simply say where these other petitions come from without giving their contents since they are all on the same subject. I have one from Hamilton-Wentworth, in Ontario; another one on the same subject from Belleville, in Ontario; one from Pointe-aux-Roches, in Ontario, also about the indexation of family allowances; and one from the federal constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, in Ontario. I have another petition from residents of Toronto, one from the federal constituency of Saint-Maurice, in Quebec, and one from the constituency of Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude as briefly as possible, please.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have another one from the beautiful constituency of Frontenac, in Quebec, one from the constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, in Quebec, one from the federal constituency of Saint-Jean, in Quebec, one from the constituency of Richelieu, one from the constituency of Shefford—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I ask the Hon. Member to table the rest of his petitions which are on the same subject?

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present petitions, and I know that you will forgive us, Mr. Speaker, for taking so long on this side of the House, but it is because the Government does not have any petitions, and the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) seems—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Petitions

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I want to present petitions from the federal constituency of Richelieu, the federal constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, in Quebec, the federal constituency of Quebec East, the federal constituency of Portneuf, the federal constituency of Skeena, the federal constituency of Victoria, in British Columbia, the federal constituency of Comox-Powell River, the federal constituency of Prince George-Peace River, and also a petition from the good people of the consituency of Champlain, in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! May I ask the Hon. Member to conclude as briefly as possible?

Mr. Rossi: I have two more, Mr. Speaker.

From the federal constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, from a federal constituency in the City of Toronto and from the riding of my colleague for Ottawa-Vanier.

The undersigned pray that the Government of Canada will reinstate full indexing of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I consider it an honour and my duty to present a few petitions signed by women who ask the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexing of family allowances and of the child tax credit.

Those women live in the following constituencies: Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, Brome-Missisquoi, Abitibi, Charlesbourg, Richelieu, Shefford, Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Champlain, Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead; Saint-Boniface, Manitoba; Trois-Rivières, Quebec; Vancouver Quadra; Saint-Maurice, Québec; Restigouche, New Brunswick; Mississauga-South, Ontario.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling in the House today a petition signed by the residents of Dauphin, Manitoba, and the residents of the riding of Provencher, the riding represented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). The petitioners indicate to the Government of Canada that they wish the Government to withdraw its plans to deindex the family allowances and they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to do that.

In addition, I table a petition on behalf of the constituents of the riding of Restigouche in the great Province of New Brunswick and from Campbellton indicating that the people of that riding have the same concerns about the plans of the Government to deindex the family allowances. In addition, I rise on behalf of my own constituents from the riding of Sudbury who also indicate to the Government their total displeasure with the Government's intentions with respect to family allowances.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Very well represented.

Mr. Frith: I would say that as well.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member can conclude more briefly than this if he tries hard.

Mr. Frith: As well, I have petitions signed by the residents of Simcoe County and Renfrew Country. In addition, I want to indicate that I have a further petition from the residents of the great riding of London North who indicate their displeasure on the same matters of which I have spoken previously. As well, I have one last petition from the great Province of British Columbia which my Leader has the privilege to represent, including Surrey, British Columbia and Delta, British Columbia, and they also indicate their displeasure at the intent of the Government.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions. The first petition is from residents of my riding who live in Foam Lake, Kelvington, Elfros, Bankend, Hendon and Humboldt who note that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits which will reach $600 million annually by 1990 on top of sales tax increases, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low-income households so they call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a second set of petitions from the Hamilton area including residentss of Cambridge, Waterdown, Dundas and Ancaster, Ontario, who note that the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental Test Range at Nanoose Bay contributes to the nuclear arms race and that the said station could cause environmental damage so they call on Canada not to renew its agreement with the United States, to bring to an end all weapons testing at the range and to undertake to convert the range to peaceful purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from people of my riding of Vancouver East and the Lower Mainland around Vancouver asking that the Government rescind Bill C-70 and fully re-index the universal family allowances and also rescind unfair tax increases.

I have another very interesting petition which is one of many which come from the riding of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta. I was very interested to see that the Hon. Member had only two signatures when we have had hundreds from his riding protesting the family allowance deindexation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They want to go to a sympathetic Member.

Ms. Mitchell: That's right. They know where to go and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Mitchell: I must say that there have been a great number of petitions from that riding.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to do her petitions without comment.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the Province of Quebec which is also opposing the Government policy to reduce the indexation of family allowance and asking for full indexation. Another petition is from Fort Erie and surrounding communities in Ontario and the petitioners are asking for the same thing.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have two other petitions on different subjects. The first one is from people in British Columbia who live in the Delta-Surrey area and they are asking that the House act to remedy the crisis which has to do with the youth unemployment in the Province of British Columbia which is at excessive levels and mention the fact that the provincial Government's five-year forestry program is inadequately funded and under-spent and the petitioners respectfully submit that the House remedy these two crises by initiating labour-intensive reforestation and silvaculture projects.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my next petition is on a different subject and comes from many people in the Vancouver area and I see that there is representation from Guelph, Ontario, as well and from Victoria and it asks that the House of Commons not renew the agreement between Canada and the U.S. authorizing the joint maintenance of the test range at Nanoose Bay and bring to an end all weapons testing at the said test range and undertake to convert the said test range to peaceful purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from my constituents in that great riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke and some from other parts of Canada. These petitioners protest vehemently the deindexing of universal family allowance and feel that this move is very unfair to women in particular and that it is also particularly unfair to young families and single-parent mothers. They pray that the House of Commons reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowance and rescind this unfair form of tax increase. The first petition is from the Pembroke-Petawawa, Ontario, area. The second petition is signed by people from the communities of Cobden, Forester's Falls and Renfrew and the Opeongo Road. The third petition is signed by people from Pembroke, Eganville and other places in the Valley. Fourth, I have a petition here signed by several citizens from Scarborough West. I have another petition here from people who live in the constituency of York North. I also have a petition signed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I invite the Hon. Member to conclude very briefly, please?

Mr. Hopkins: This petition is signed by many people from the Toronto area including those from Scarborough, Etobicoke, Rexdale and Mississauga. Next I have one from—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must invite the Hon. Member to table the remainder of his petitions. That has exactly the same effect.

[Translation]

WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70 REQUESTED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I also have here a number of petitions from citizens who ask the Prime Minister to immediately withdraw Bill C-70 which is aimed at deindexing family allowances.

The undersigned believe that the whole of our society must share the responsibility for children and that the principle of universality must be maintained.

The first petition, Mr. Speaker, comes from residents and citizens of the federal constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, comes from the federal riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul, which has been represented here by our former colleague, Mr. Savard, who was recently elected Mayor of Verdun.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member could conclude by presenting his petitions briefly without comment.

• (1650)

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the third petition comes from the federal riding of Sherbrooke.

The fourth petition comes from the riding of Chambly, Quebec, and they have the same objective as the previous ones.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the federal riding of Rosemont, which as we know is represented by the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier). I also have a petition, Mr. Speaker, from the federal riding of Longueuil, on the south shore from Montreal. There is also a petition from the federal riding of Restigouche, New Brunswick.

[English]

I also have a petition from the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the Hon. Member to table the rest of his petitions.

The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions which call upon the Government to withdraw the deindexation measures with respect to family allowance. In this regard a petition from St. Hyacinthe points out that this measure will cost families $55 million over the next two years in respect of family allowance benefits.

The second petition I have is from Etobicoke North. It calls upon the Government to withdraw the Bill with respect to the deindexation of the family allowance.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I also have petitions from Skeena, Portneuf, Shefford, Richelieu, Champlain, Saint-Maurice, Comox-Powell River, Toronto, Surrey-White Rock-North Delta in British Columbia, Saint-Jean in Quebec, and Québec-Est. Each and every one of these petitions prays that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who is with us this afternoon, withdraw Bill C-70. I hope he will bear these petitions in mind and soften his heart at Christmas time.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have three different petitions to table in the House today. The first contains eight pages of signatures from petitioners in the Queen Charlotte Islands, specifically from Queen Charlotte City, Tlell, Masset, Skidegate and Skidegate Landing, who are concerned about the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay. Their concern is that Canada and the United States should stop the use of the test range and bring to an end all weapons testing at the said range.

The second petition is from petitioners in the Vancouver area. They also share the concerns about Nanoose Bay. They hope that the test range will soon be converted to peaceful purposes which would be more useful.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the third petition I have is from Ontario. It raises concerns about the amount of money which is going toward tax-free capital gains and handouts to the oil companies and banks while at the same time the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is cutting back on the indexation of the family allowance.

The final petition I have is again from the Delta area. The Hon. Member who represents that area does not seem to receive too many petitions from constituents in his own riding. It concerns—

Mr. Speaker: Just present the petition, please, and no comment.

Mr. Fulton: The petitioners who have signed this petition are concerned about the deindexation of the family allowance.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty, as the Member for Abitibi, to table a petition requesting full indexing of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I invite the entire Liberal caucus to resume their seats, please.

[Translation]

Mr. St. Julien: Mr. Speaker, that petition is signed by 80 Members and by Jeannine Barrette, President of the Cercle des fermières of St-Mathieu, Abitibi.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to follow a Conservative Member of Parliament who has backbone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, as per Your Honour's instructions, I wish to present a series of petitions which are all on the same subject. I will not bother to read each and every one. I wish to present a petition signed by people from the federal riding of Hull-Aylmer who protest the cut-backs and deindexing of the family allowance.

I wish to present a petition from the constituency of Saint John, New Brunswick. The residents who have signed the petition protest the cut-backs in family allowance payments.

As well, I present a petition from the residents of Laval. The people who have signed this petition protest the reductions and cut-backs in family allowance payments.

I wish to present a petition from residents of Richelieu who protest, as well, reductions in family allowance payments.

I wish to present a petition from residents of Verchères, who protest the vicious cut-backs in family allowance payments. I only used the adjective, Mr. Speaker.

I wish to present a petition from the residents of Saint-Jean who are protesting the brutal and vicious cut-backs with respect to family allowance payments.

Mr. Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member to conclude briefly.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, this is what the petitioners are saying.

I wish to present a petition from the people of Drummond, who protest the terrible cut-backs in family allowance payments and ask Conservative Members to stand up and to be counted.

WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70 REQUESTED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have here a number of petitions from residents of some of the major constituencies in Canada asking the House of Commons that the Government withdraw Bill C-70. They are the constituencies of Etobicoke Centre, represented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), of St. Paul's and of Manicouagan.

Mr. Speaker, I have another one here from the constituency of Manicouagan. Those people ask and demand that the House of Commons urge the Prime Minister to withdraw Bill C-70 in order to protect family allowances. They are from the constituencies of Champlain, Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, Rosemont . . . the people from the riding of Saint-Jacques are very well represented. The people from the riding of Verchères . . . Mr. Speaker, I have only two other petitions left, from the ridings of Richelieu, and Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, and I can assure you that tomorrow we will deal with the rest of them, Mr. Speaker.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have in hand three petitions coming from ridings in Quebec. I would like to begin with a petition from the federal riding of Richelieu; secondly, with a petition from Champlain, and thirdly, one from Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Those three petitions, Mr. Speaker, obviously have to do with the indexation of family allowances. Each one of them urges the Government of Canada to restore the full indexation of family allowances.

[English]

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by people from the Ladysmith and Vancouver areas of British Columbia. They protest the plans which are going on with respect to the test range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia, which I am told is a beautiful part of the world just north of Nanaimo. They pray we not renew the agreement between Canada and the United States of America to authorize the joint maintenance of the said test range.

The second petition I have concerns Nanoose Bay as well. It is signed by people from the City of Vancouver. They want to see an end to all weapons testing at the said test range brought about.

The third and last petition on this particular topic comes from Vancouver as well. The people who have signed this petition want a public inquiry before the present agreement is negotiated between the two great countries of the United States of America and Canada.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by people from British Columbia. This petition is with respect to the question of family allowances. The petitioners protest the deindexation of the universal family allowance.

The next petition I have is also from the City of Vancouver. The petitioners protest the deindexation of the family allowance. They say that this will place an extra hard burden on low and middle income households.

The last but not the least petition I have is also on the subject of the deindexation of family allowances. The petitioners protest the fact that this will mean that a very unfair and intolerable burden will be placed upon low and middle income people. I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) would agree with that and he would be doing the same thing if he were sitting here in opposition.

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my petitions are very unusual because they include not only the signatories but also a boot which is full of coal and which will be sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I invite the Hon. Member to present her petitions without comments or displays.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, my boot is from Susan Shoes and Cougar Shoes in Hamilton whose employees are among the hundreds of signatories who have already sent petitions to our office. Because the Canadian footwear industry is responsible for 20,000 jobs at an estimated value of $830 million per year and because the industry has made serious efforts to improve its efficiency and productivity, the Government's decision to end quotas on footwear imports as announced on November 20 will cause widespread damage. We pray that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) and the Prime Minister will reinstate quotas on all footwear imports for the next five years thereby protecting existing jobs and allowing for the creation of new jobs in the industry.

I have another petition from the employees of the De Carlo Shoe Co. in Toronto. There are almost 100 signatories.

I have another petition signed by more than 100 workers in the great area of Cambridge who are concerned about the fact that over the last four months, five shoe manufacturers have either closed down their operations or have had serious lay-offs as a direct result of the Government's decision to cut import quotas. They humbly call upon the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade to reinstate quotas in order to save 20,000 jobs in the footwear industry.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the great riding of Hamilton East, the greatest riding in the country of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member conclude her petitions briefly, please, and restrict herself to the petitions.

Ms. Copps: This particular petition is from the Women's Coalition on Family Allowances which calls upon the Government as follows: We the undersigned ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to act immediately to withdraw Bill C-70 which would reduce the indexation of family allowances. We believe children are everyone's responsibility and the principle of universality must be maintained.

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I have a petition from a different group, from 211 workers from the city of Toronto, again referring to the loss of jobs which is imminent as a result of the decision of the Government to terminate shoe quotas. The petition is signed by more than 200 workers in Toronto who call upon the Government to reverse its unwise decision to cut off the workers in the footwear industry.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): I have another petition from the great—

Mr. Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to please conclude very briefly.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition from another group, the Coalition of Women for Family Allowances from the riding of Champlain, which is asking the Government—

Mr. Malépart: They have no Member there!

Ms. Copps: With those deuces of spades over there, we of course have to present their petitions. This petition comes from citizens asking full indexation of family allowances for all children and families, especially the single-parent families.

Mr. Speaker, I only have another petition which I will briefly introduce. It comes from the riding of Trois-Rivières and asks the Government which had undertaken during the election to take steps aimed at helping women—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is also reading the petitions, which is not allowed.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I only have one petition from a group of citizens from the riding of Longueuil. They ask me, through you, Sir, to beg this Government to restore full indexation of family allowance and child tax credit. I must say, Mr. Speaker, these people are in very hard straits and I want some sympathy for them.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to present and they do not deal with the same matter. I will try to make it short, because I am sure that you would like me to do so.

[English]

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have here a petition signed by employees of the Celebrity Shoe Factory Limited at 53 Hymus Road in Scarborough, Ontario who ask the Government of Canada to reinstate shoe quotas.

I have another petition on the same topic. It is signed by 95 employees from Toronto who work at the Eve Footwear Incorporated Shoe Factory in Toronto.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a series of petitions with respect to family allowance which I would like to present to you, Mr. Speaker, very briefly. The first petition is from the town of Rockland and Clarence Creek in the great riding of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell.

I have another petition from the federal constituency of Sudbury. The people there, of course, are so well represented in this House. I have other petitions from the riding of Mississauga South, from Hamilton-Wentworth, Scarborough West, Broadview-Greenwood and the City of Toronto.

[Translation]

The federal riding of Trois-Rivières, the ridings of Champlain, Jonquière, Portneuf in Quebec, Quebec East, Saint-Hyacinthe, but I wonder where are the Members for those ridings, Mr. Speaker. The next and last—

Mr. Speaker: Well, that is fine, thank you.

Mr. Boudria: —one cames from constituents of Shefford who are so well represented in this House, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of petitions to present. The first group requests the House of Commons to not renew the agreement between Canada and the United States of America authorizing the joint meetings with respect to the test range at Nanoose. These come from Edmonton, Alberta and Victoria, Smithers and Parksville, British Columbia.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): The second group of petitions deal with family allowances. The signatories are from British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to present a petition today. I have two petitions dealing with different subjects and I will go through them briefly.

The first petition comes from Nanoose, British Columbia. It deals with the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range which contributes to the nuclear arms race and militarism, causes environmental damage and is of doubtful economic value. The petitioners call upon the Government and this House not to renew the agreement between Canada and the United States authorizing the joint maintenance of the said test range, to bring to an end all weapons testing at the said test range and to undertake to convert the said test range to peaceful purposes. That is the first set of petitions.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): The second set of petitions, Mr. Speaker, deals with family allowances. The petitioners point out that the deindexation of family allowances is an attack on families and children and is unfair in light of the tax breaks which are being given to the rich. They call upon the Government to rescind the deindexation of family allowances and return to a just social policy in this country.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions as well to present from various parts of the country. To expedite matters I will refer to one only. The petitions are from areas in Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Ontario and Saskatchewan. The petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal Family Allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the Child Tax Credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle income earners.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to do my humble duty in the name of the constituents of Mount Royal who are quite distressed about the Government cuts and wish to have full indexation restored to the Family Allowance and Child Tax Credit. This budget measure will take away $55 million in family benefits by 1987.

[Translation]

And now from the riding of Brome-Missisquoi. Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of presenting, on behalf of the constituents of this riding, a request for repeal of the measures aimed at reducing family allowances and the child tax credit which are vitally needed by families with children.

That was from Brome-Missisquoi. And the organization is called: Opération Justice Familles avec enfants.

Mr. Speaker, from the riding of Richelieu, of Saint-Hyacinthe—the riding of our Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne)—the riding of Dollard, whose Member has been in China for three weeks, and the riding of Etobicoke Centre, and I think the Hon. Member is in the House, the riding of Quebec East, the riding—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude as briefly as possible, please.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, these are very concerned citizens. I am pleased to present petitions from the ridings of Portneuf and Shefford in Quebec, as well as Broadview-Grennwood, Spadina and Thunder Bay-Nipigon. I have two petitions as well from extremely unhappy people in Kitchener and Toronto, Ontario.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, the constituents of the lovely riding of Saint-Maurice have been calling me at my office, insisting that their Member rise in the House to present petitions on behalf of the electoral district of Saint-Maurice.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of the riding of Saint-Maurice respectfully state that the Government programs providing family allowances and the child tax credit are vitally needed by families with children, and that a large proportion of these families are headed by single parents, who form one of the most disadvantaged groups in our society.

And they therefore humbly pray that this petition be tabled in the House of Commons. I think I will dispense with reading all the names mentioned in this petition, since I would not want to take up too much of the time of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I have another one from the riding of Saint-Maurice, because these constituents are very disappointed with the Government's attitude. They have asked me to present another petition on the same subject. Family allowances are extremely important to the people of the riding of Saint-Maurice and the residents of all neighbouring ridings including Trois-Rivières . . .

Mr. Speaker: Another petition on the same subject?

Mr. Chrétien: I would like to table a petition on family allowances. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to lay on the Table of the House another petition from the people of the riding of Saint-Maurice.

I even received a petition in my office from residents of the riding of Moose Jaw in Saskatchewan, Mr. Speaker. They sent me a petition that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I don't think I have to explain our practice with respect to petitions for the benefit of the former Minister. Has the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice almost finished?

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the people from Moose Jaw have written a petition asking the Government not to proceed with this disgraceful legislation which will take bread away from their children. They are humbly asking me to present to Your Honour here this afternoon this petition of concerned citizens from the beautiful City of Moose Jaw in the beautiful Province of Saskatchewan.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to present to this House petitions sent by residents of various constituencies. I have a very special one from the federal constituency of Manicouagan, represented by the Prime Minister, whose residents object to the decision of the Government not to provide full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. I have been asked to present this petition to this House in the hope of convincing the Government to reverse this very unfortunate decision.

I also want to present a petition on the same subject from residents of the federal constituency of Charlesbourg. I also have a petition from residents of the federal constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe. I have another petition from residents of the federal constituency of Verchères. I also want to present a petition from residents of the federal constituency of Louis-Hébert, Mr. Speaker. I also have a petition sent to me by residents of the federal constituency of La Prairie. Also, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on the same subject presented for the same reasons by residents of the federal constituency of Terrebonne.

Finally—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the Hon. Member to be as brief as possible, please.

Mr. Ouellet: I shall hurry, Mr. Speaker, but the least I can do is to point out that this petition comes from residents of the federal constituency of Rosemont. I have another one from the federal constituency of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I invite the Hon. Member to file with the Table the rest of his petitions?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions from a grand coalition of people across this country who deeply protest the injustice of this Government and the victimization of children and families as contained in the present legislation. My first petition is on behalf of the very wonderful people in the constituencies of Saskatoon East and Saskatoon West in the Province of Saskatchewan. Accompanying those petitions are petitions from the federal constituency of Victoria which is in the Province of British Columbia. They too protest this injustice perpetrated by the Government.

Quickly jumping from Victoria to parts of central Canada with which you would be most familiar, there is a large petition from people in the City of Toronto, a place which you dearly adore and love—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could we have the petitions without the travelogue?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is all for the sake of information. The people of Toronto also protest this action.

Along with the people of Toronto we have their wonderful neighbours in Scarborough North. They also wish to present a petition on behalf of children and families. Just slightly to the other side of Toronto we have a petition from people in Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the Hon. Member to conclude as briefly as possible.

Mr. Axworthy: Hamilton-Wentworth is a very long word and I want to get it out clearly.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Very badly represented, too.

Mr. Axworthy: There are a number of people from that area who also wish to protest. Coming back from Toronto to the west coast, we have people from the constituency of Vancouver Quadra who also wish to present a petition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows be can achieve the same purpose by filing the rest of his petitions with the Table.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I have one further petition, if I might, from Calgary South, Calgary North and Calgary West.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1720)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, without imposing a travelogue on you, I simply want to report the fact that the Women's Coalition for Family Allowances has completed a petition in Toronto and wishes to have it deposited in the House. The petition urges the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to abandon the deindexation of the family allowance and to restore it to its normal process.

A group of citizens from Red Deer, Alberta, have expressed the same wish. In Saskatoon East and North a group of citizens have presented a number of signatures with the same intent.

[Translation]

I also have the honour, Mr. Speaker, to present to the House petitions from citizens of the Moncton region and the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie who want the full restoration of the indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. I have another one from the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie; another one from the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie; another one from the riding of—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I invite the Hon. Member to be as brief as possible in his conclusion.

[Translation]

Mr. Caccia: —Montreal-Sainte-Marie, plus two more from the same riding.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions from several federal ridings of Canada in protest against the deindexation of family allowances. Naturally, the first petition I am presenting comes from the beautiful riding of Outremont, and it has been signed by men and women who vehemently protest against the decision of the Government to deindex family allowances.

I have also received petitions from the ridings of Montmorency-Orléans and Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot. I have several petitions from the riding of Sherbrooke. I have many more petitions in my office, and all those people are protesting against the de-indexation of family allowances.

I received others from Lac-Saint-Jean and Beauce, in Quebec. Still against the deindexation of family allowances, petitions from men and women of Trois-Rivières, Saint-Maurice and Champlain who protest against the deindexation of family allowances. I have some from Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead, sent by the Coalition des femmes pour les allocations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member to please conclude quickly.

Mrs. Pépin: Quickly . . . Brome-Missisquoi, St. John, N.B., New Westminster-Coquitlam, Saskatoon West, LaSalle and Richelieu. Of course, all these people are asking the Government to reconsider its decision to deindex family allowances.

[English]

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions here on different subjects. The first two deal with the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nanoose Bay, British Columbia. It point out that it is of doubtful economic value, causes environmental damage, and contributes to the nuclear arms race and militarism in general. It calls upon Canada not to renew the agreement with the United States of America and to bring to an end all weapons testing at the said test range.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, deals with the same subject. It calls for a full public inquiry before the present agreement is renegotiated. The signatories on both of those petitions are from Vancouver Island.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the third petition I have deals with Bill C-70. It points out that one in five children under 16 in Canada live in poverty, that Bill C-70 will party deindex family allowances, and that this means that all families with children will eventually lose—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Member, but I think he knows that all references to "points out" or the preamble are out of order.

Mr. Manly: It calls upon the Government to rescind Bill C-70.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): I have a third petition which calls upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases. This petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by residents from the riding of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

RIDING NAME CHANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition which I am sure Members from all sides of the House will wish to join me in. It reads as follows: "We, the undersigned, do humbly pray—" and I stress the word "humbly"—"that the name of the riding of Saint-Maurice be changed to "Saint-Maurice-Bay Street".

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from the liberated riding of Spadina signed by people who point out that the 3 per cent deindexation of the family allowance and the tax increases are hard on families with children. They, therefore, humbly call upon the House to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

I have also a petition from Canadian citizens residing in the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, who also object to the Government's decision to deindex family allowances and increase taxes, and who humbly ask the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases.

[English]

I have a similar petition, only in English, from residents of Vancouver which also protests the decrease in the family allowance and the increase in taxes on low-income families.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from residents of Peterborough, Islington, Waterloo, Windsor, Niagara Falls and Gloucester, Ontario. There are also signators from some areas of Vancouver. They are concerned about the Nanoose Bay test range and its contribution to the nuclear arms race and militarism. They request that this honourable House not renew the agreement between Canada and the United States of America authorizing joint maintenance of the test range and say that the test range should be converted to peaceful purposes.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a few petitions to present today. In presenting them, I trust you will correct me if I fall into the Liberal errors of heaping gratuitous and undesired praise on my—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member just present his petition without comment?

Mr. Parry: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and without incorrectly naming federal ridings either. I have a petition concerning the Nanoose Bay test range. The signators to this petition are from areas such as New Hamburg and Kitchener, which used to be Berlin. The petition indicates the contributions of Canadians of German descent who petition this honourable House to bring to an end all weapons testing at the Nanoose Bay test range and to undertake to convert that range to peaceful purposes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by residents of British Columbia. I also have another petition which is exactly the same signed by residents of my own riding of Kenora-Rainy River. The signators humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases.

USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present petitions this afternoon on two different topics. The first petition I have deals with the Canadian Forces Maritime Experimental and Test Range at Nonoose Bay which, the petitioners show, contributes to the nuclear arms race and militarism in general. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to convert this range to peaceful purposes. This petition is signed by a great variety of people, Mr. Speaker. One petition is signed by persons from the Kitchener-Waterloo area in Ontario and by signators from parts of British Columbia. The other petition is signed by people from Vancouver, Burnaby, and Gabriola on the Island in British Columbia as well as by persons from New Hamburg, Stratford, Mitchell and Tavistock in the Province of Ontario.

• (1730)

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): My second petition deals with family allowance and protests the deindexation of the universal family allowance and massive cut-backs in public commitment to child benefits which will have the effect of reducing even the poorest families to a worse state by 1990 than they otherwise would face. The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to re-establish full indexation. This petition is signed by persons from Campbell River and Nanaimo in British Columbia, from Govan, Saskatchewan, Spiritwood, Saskatchewan, Saskatoon and other good towns in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): First of all, Mr. Speaker, concerning the ill-advised decision concerning the footwear quotas, I wish to table a petition on behalf of several hundreds of workers who deplore this outrageous decision to abandon the quotas in the footwear industry.

Through this petition, these Canadian men and women would like the Government to reconsider its decision and give back their jobs to those who have lost them.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I have also several petitions addressing the major issue of family allowances. Hundreds or rather, in a still more realistic way, thousands of mothers are horrified by the most despicable decision reached by this Tory Government who wants to have us accept the deindexing of family allowances.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those Canadian men and women want the Bill to be withdrawn, or at least they would like full indexing to be reinstated.

Those petitions, Mr. Speaker, originate from a number of constituencies. In view of the rules set down, I will simply refer to the area where they originate. I have a first one from the federal constituency of Manicouagan, Mr. Speaker. I have another one from a constituency whose Member is doing nothing, the federal constituency of Champlain—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! No comments and briefly, please.

Mr. Tardif: I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, still on that same question of family allowance deindexing, from the federal constituency of Champlain. A fourth one, Mr. Speaker, that one from the federal constituency of Quebec East, in the Province of Quebec. From the federal constituency of Portneuf, in the Province of Quebec, where again many Canadian men and women have stepped forward... Mr. Speaker, I am trying to be as brief as possible, simply naming the constituency where it originates.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I invite the Hon. Member—

[English]

I invite the Hon. Member to table the rest of the petitions with the Table. It has exactly the same effect.

[Translation]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions from various constituencies and dealing with family allowance deindexing. Those citizens ask that the Government reinstate full indexing of family allowances and the child tax credit.

They are referring to the $55 million budget cuts that will affect the area of family support within the next two years if the Government does not reconsider that unfair and discriminatory budget proposal.

Mr. Speaker, this is just about the end. Those petitions, from the beautiful multicultural constituency of Saint-Léonard-Anjou—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gagliano: And again from the riding of Saint-Hyacinthe, from the federal riding of Peterborough in Ontario, from the federal riding of Mississauga in southern Ontario, from the federal riding of St. John, New Brunswick, and the last one, Mr. Speaker, from the riding of Richmond-South Delta in British Columbia.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions relating to the withdrawal of Bill C-70 which would reduce the indexation of family allowance. In order to facilitate the matter, I will simply read the names of the communities in these petitions. They are the area of Etobicoke Centre; the area of Brampton-Georgetown; the area of St. Catharines and Fort Erie; the area of Calgary North and Calgary South; the area of Renfrew, Nippising, Pembroke which is very well represented; the area of Scarborough East; the area of York Centre and Beaches; the area of Edmonton North and Strathcona; the area of Edmonton South and the area of Brampton and Beaches.

I have another petition from the area of Shefford. The next petition is from Malpeque.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude briefly.

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Other areas include Mississauga South; York North; Vancouver; Edmonton-Strathcona.

Petitions

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present on a different subject. It deals with the shoe industry. The petitions state that the Government's decision to end quotas on footwear imports as announced on November 20 will cause widespread damage to the Canadian footwear industry and threatens thousands of jobs. That petition comes from the Pickering and Toronto area.

I also have a petition concerning the footwear industry, on practically the same subject matter. It comes from the area of Scarborough, Ontario.

There is one other petition which I cannot locate. However, I will certainly get to it tomorrow.

ACTION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of concerned Canadians. They wish to register their protest against the actions of the Official Opposition. The nature of this petition is to request—

Some Hon. Members: Read the names.

Mr. Shields: By unanimous consent I will read the names.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just a brief summary of the petition.

Mr. Shields: The brief summary is that they are saying they voted for change. They want the Official Opposition to stop its juvenile tactics and allow the Government of Canada to get on with its work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it may not surprise Your Honour or the Hon. Member who just spoke that I have a petition, the essential thrust of which is somewhat different. It is protesting the Government's announced change in its inequitable and, I say to Members opposite, unfair proposal to make changes in the family allowance legislation which is now in the law books of Canada. These petitioners come from such esteemed Canadian communities as Harrow, Brampton and Woodstock in Ontario. At this point I have the great honour of concluding the long list of petitioners for my Party.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently not. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I snuck up on him, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to present a petition from residents of Thunder Bay, Ontario in the heart of the northwest. They object strongly to the deindexation of family allowance and call upon the Government to give them the kind of change they really voted for.

I also have the privilege to present a number of petitions from the cities of Kingston and Toronto. These people feel that the financial arrangements which the Government is offering are not appropriate, and they call upon the Government to continue to index family allowances.

• (1740)

Finally, I have a petition to present from a number of people in southern Ontario who believe strongly that the deindexation of family allowances is not appropriate and call upon the Government to reverse its decision.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-89, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1986.

I am now prepared to recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on a petition, the last Member who indicated to me that he wished to present a petition.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of the federal riding of Saint-Jean, Quebec, who now exercise their secular and indisputable right to present a common grievance being certain that your honourable House will bring remedy thereto.

And the undersigned humbly pray and call upon the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition from residents of Toronto who also exercise their secular and indisputable right to present a common grievance being certain that this honourable House will bring remedy thereto.

This petition calls upon the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker: It being 5.41 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

SENIOR CITIZENS' DAY

SUGGESTED DESIGNATION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to study the question of designating, as Senior Citizens' Day, the second Sunday in June each year in order to recognize the outstanding contribution made by our senior citizens to our country and our lifestyle.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to present this motion. I hope the House will concur and send it to the Standing Committee, so that we will have a day to pay tribute to those in our society who have contributed so much to the enrichment of our lifestyle.

I wish to say at the outset that the purpose of the motion is not to establish another holiday but simply a day to pay tribute to senior citizens in Canadian society. It seems only fitting that we recognize in an official way our gratitude for the rich heritage which has been given to us by our senior citizens. They have given long years of dedicated time, effort and skill to make Canada one of the most favoured nations on the face of the earth. They have provided an environment in which succeeding generations have flourished and prospered and will continue to do so.

It is not enough to strive only to see that the physical and economic needs of our seniors are met. We want to express our gratitude to them by publicly recognizing the priceless legacy they have given to us. Our senior citizens have a unique place in our society. They are the channels through which the traditions and cultures of earlier generations are passed on to the ones who follow them. They are the custodians of our history, our story, our progress. They are the molders of our present day lifestyle. It is our responsibility now to uphold those traditions of righteousness and integrity which have been our inheritance from them.

Canada is a new country. There are still many of those with us who left the Old World to make a better life for themselves, for their children and for their grandchildren. Religious freedom, economic security and a sense of adventure brought them to Canadian soil. However, often a high price was paid for those freedoms. Great physical hardship was endured in establishing a foothold in this country and in pushing its frontiers north and westward. Personal leisure and comfort was necessarily sacrificed in the carving out of our future in this magnificent country. They wrestled a living from the soil, often combating an inhospitable climate, plagues of insects, backbreaking toil and loneliness. The agony and deprivation of wars and years of depression were a part of their historical past as well.

I am sure I am speaking for all Members of the House whose parents, like my own, immigrated to Canada to enjoy the freedoms with which we are presently blessed.

I will keep my comments very short, in the hope that the House will agree to referring this very important motion to committee so that we can pay tribute to a generation which contributed so much to the lifestyle we enjoy today.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions with members of the two Opposition Parties. I think, if you were to seek unanimous consent, you would find that there is disposition that the sitting of the House to consider Private Members' Hour not extend beyond 6.41 and that, when the debate ends at 6.41 or sooner, the motion be put without a recorded division.

We are content that this go to committee. My colleague has discussed it with the two people in the Opposition Parties who normally handle this type of matter. I think if you were to ask—and I have discussed this—it would be agreeable to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, what the Parliamentary Secretary has said reflects the agreement which has been concluded. This motion will be passed without recorded vote and the House will not sit past 6.41 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the motion. There is unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Agreed and so ordered.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, as was the case with the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) who moved the motion, I will not interfere too long with the proceedings before the House. I find the proposal to have the second Sunday in June designated as Senior Citizen's Day to be amazing, ironic and sad. Perhaps it is fitting that the Hon. Member chose the second Sunday in June to commemorate the attempted assault of the Government on our senior citizens' last June. On the night of May 23, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced plans to deindex the pensions of senior citizens. It was only through the efforts of both Opposition Parties, along with senior citizens, that a victory was won, for the plans to deindex their pensions were rolled back by the Government. A great deal of work was done by the Opposition and by senior citizens' groups across the country.

I should like to reiterate our Party's stance in this sense. The idea which the Hon. Member presented to the House bears some merit. We have had other occasions in the calendar year to honour various groups in society, and I think it would be rather fitting so to honour our senior citizens who have done so much, as the previous speaker indicated, to build our country of Canada.

Without delaying the House, I should like to indicate concurrence on behalf of my Party in the idea of designating the second Sunday in June each year as Senior Citizens' Day. The matter could be referred to the appropriate committee. I think, Mr. Speaker, you will find disposition of this side of the House to concur in the recommendation made by the Hon. Member from Alberta.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House also concur in the motion and agree that it be referred to committee. In so doing, we certainly acknowledge the particular contribution of people in the older age group of our society. We respect and appreciate not only what they contributed in the past, but what they are contributing today and will indeed contribute in the future.

• (1750)

In bringing forward this motion, I wonder if there has been consultation with senior citizens' groups from across the country. My experience has been that people in this age group feel increasingly that they do not all want to be categorized together and they do not like to be labelled. I would be very interested to know the feelings of this group as to how this day might be celebrated.

Certainly one of the things I have learned from various groups not only in my own riding but in meetings with councils of seniors who have come to Ottawa is that seniors are very resentful of any kind of Government program or policy that is in the least bit patronizing. They want to participate in society as equals and they have much to contribute. Certainly, past and present experience indicates that their experience is extremely valuable and something which society needs.

I am thinking particularly of the experiences of my own riding. Seniors have helped each other and not only have they helped each other but they have helped other people in society. I am moved to say as did my colleague that it is the seniors who showed how much fight they had when they organized to force the Government to repeal the very unfair policy which would have deindexed pensions. It is the grandparents and older people in society who also believe that the Government should back down in the same way and remove the deindexing plan which exists in Bill C-70 and would impose a reduction in indexation on family allowances. Many groups to which I spoke last spring felt just as strongly about the children of Canada as they did about the pensioners.

I am sure all Members will agree that a very important contribution made by seniors is their real desire to contribute as reformers in society. One example of this is the experience to which I just referred but there are many others of which I can think. In Vancouver, it was senior citizen and pensioners' groups that formed together in a very effective coalition to work as a solidarity movement to oppose many of the very unjust policies that were being imposed by the provincial Government of British Columbia. They did it not only because the policies were very damaging for people in their own age groups but because the policies were very damaging for society in general.

We certainly agree that senior citizens should be recognized on a special day. They should be recognized as the builders of our country and contributors to it during the productive working years of their lives. They should be recognized as being great fighters for reform. They certainly deserve not only the respect of all of us but also the very great sensitivity to the situation faced by many seniors today.

Just briefly, I would like to mention the particular concern all of us should have and I hope do have for the older poor and particularly for elderly women who are not yet 65 years old but are in the middle years of their lives and who have very few resources being alone and not able to enter the workforce. Their poverty continues as they reach a pensionable age. They receive very low pension benefits and are therefore condemned to a cycle of poverty. These are things that we must remember as we celebrate a day that would honour senior citizens. We would hope that it would be considered by all Hon. Members of the House. In closing, I would like to say that we agree with the proposal. We hope that there will be consultation with senior citizens' groups as to how best we should celebrate this day. With that, I will sit down.

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, since there is unanimous consent on both sides of the House, I ask that the motion be referred to committee.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this motion. I am rather puzzled that a Government Member, after they decided to cut back, to deindex Old Age pensions, after they forced senior citizens to make a historic gesture, something they never had to do before to defend their rights in Canada . . . these people had to come all the way to Parliament Hill, although under previous governments, Members of this House had been ready to defend their interests, to protect them from undue health care costs, and to guarantee them a better income. And now the hypocrisy of designating a Senior Citizen's Day! Mr. Speaker, will it be the day Mrs. Denis came here to tell the Prime Minister what senior citizens thought of him? Will the honorary president be Mrs. Solange Denis, who stood up for the rights of senior citizens? Where was the mover of this motion when senior citizens were asking him for help?

Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely shocking that now that Christmas time is approaching, when families go to visit their parents, that we had to fight those Government Members who wanted to cut Old Age Security pension cheques—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand), on a point of order.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, since earlier, we received the consent of both sides of the House, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) whether he is for or against the motion?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. First of all, the House will realize this is not a point of order, and I am going to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to proceed.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I assume I have ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker, to answer the question, we agreed not to ask for a recorded vote, but personally, I do not agree with the kind of hypocrisy we are seeing here today. Conservative Members will have to realize that being here is a serious matter. We represent people. We represent human beings. And today, just before the holidays, they want to set it up so that the Prime Minister can say to senior citizens, in his Christmas and New Year's message: This is what I am doing for you. In June, we are going to have a Senior Citizens' Day, while three months ago, we saw the other side, when he wanted to cut back the benefits to which these people were entitled. Now I ask you! Let's be serious, let's be honest. We represent human beings.

I agree with the previous speakers that our senior citizens are the people who built this country. But one wonders why the Hon. Member who moved the motion and why the Parliamentary Secretary forgot about this when the Government decided to deindex Old Age Security pensions? Is there anyone on the Conservative side who has an answer to that? Is there anyone on the Government side who is willing to answer? It is absolutely shocking! This is hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker, and that is something I cannot tolerate. And I am sure that the vast majority of my colleagues are of the same opinion. The Prime Minister and his Government will have to make a New Year's resolution for 1986 to change that. They will have to say and do things differently. We saw this on television. Everybody from Quebec saw the broadcast Le Point yesterday. All that talk about being generous, but people never get a nickel out of it, Mr. Speaker, only cut-backs for the citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my Conservative colleagues are indeed realistic, honest, and aware of what is going on. Not so long ago after the Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was telling Opposition Members that he had met with senior citizens and that those people were prepared to accept smaller old age security benefits. They had to demonstrate. People of 75 and 80, women came from every region of Canada, those people had to spend a lot of time to circulate petitions in an attempt to make the Prime Minister and the Government realize the consequences of what they were doing. And today a fine speechmaker on the Government side rises and would have us believe . . . We want a day like that, Mr. Speaker. I would agree to have a day like that, a memorable day when Mrs. Denis told him what the people thought of Charlies Brown, Mr. Speaker. I will agree to designate that day on the condition that Mrs. Denis be appointed honorary president. I want to be sure. If she is appointed, Mr. Speaker, I will be sure, but if it is somebody appointed by the Progressive Conservatives, never, never. I am very much afraid that such a day would be used to make people swallow something else, like another Budget cut-back.

• (1800)

We all remember those promises. You must remember, Mr. Speaker, you were there. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was in Sherbrooke when he said: We will restore full indexation. You remember how generous he can be, all ears when he listens, clean-cut, ever so generous with everybody. Words, and more words. He is not stingy with words.

Remember when he tabled the blue paper of the Minister—the Minister of social injustice, that is how we call him now. It said: We will not tamper with old age security pensions. You can sleep in peace. The Prime Minister is indeed a generous man. I solemnly declare that I will protect the elderly.

So what happened in the Budget, Mr. Speaker? What happened after he guaranteed social programs, saying that universality was a sacred trust, Mr. Speaker? Those were the words of the Prime Minister of Canada. What about the Budget cut-backs? He was the great champion of universality. When elderly people took him to task on Parliament Hill, Mr. Speaker, when those people came here they forced the Progressive Conservatives to eat their words, they forced the Prime Minister of Canada to eat his words, and he had to admit he was wrong. And then, like a sore loser, the Prime Minister tried to blame all Canadians, saying they were not mature because they did not want to talk about universality and accept changes, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, this man is off his head. He had just said that universality was a sacred trust. Having lost face, he criticizes the Canadian public for not being mature enough. That is utterly ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that all Hon. Members should speak out. I remember that there were a number of PC Members from Western Canada who were against deindexation. A number of them even told the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): I should like you to show me the senior citizens who are in favour of that. It is a fact that the pals of the Minister of Finance are certainly not the same people I meet.

The people I meet are ordinary people, while his friends and himself are concerned only with money. Are we going to allow this to happen in this holiday season? It is just another scenario full of hypocrisy designed to make it possible for the Prime Minister in his New Year message to list all his so-called achievements. Some people say that we should beware when he starts talking in his sugary fashion and be very careful of what he says. This year, we are thinking of designating a Senior Citizens' Day. No! I want to listen to what other Members have to say about this. I should like to hear what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bertrand) really and sincerely thinks of that.

I should like to know what she thinks in her heart of hearts. I should like to know how it is that these people, who are prepared to pay tribute to our older citizens who have built this country and made great sacrifices to raise their families, are not willing to stand up and speak against the Government'sdecision to deindex Old Age Security pensions. How is it that all senior citizens whom he met were in favour of cutting their pension cheques by 3 per cent? And if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) announced today a fully indexed increase in the Old Age Security pension will be fully indexed, it's not because of PC Members. It is today that the Minister has made this announcement and it is today that a motion was introduced to designate one day for them. I wonder if it is not out of sheer remorse.

Yes, you should be ashamed of yourselves!

I understand why you would be ashamed of yourselves, but you will not redeem yourself simply by designating a Senior Citizens' Day. It is not a day but a week it should take, Mr. Speaker! A whole week would be required to consult senior citizens, seek their participation, ascertain their needs. From now on, Canadian men and women will no longer accept that Parliamentarians decide for senior citizens in Canada. Senior citizens are clever enough to want to participate and meet their members to tell them: This is what we need and this is what we want, as far as housing needs, social policies, cultural, sporting and leisure activities are concerned. These are adults; they are intelligent and able people. Tomorrow, it will be our turn. It is not because one day you are 64 and the next day 65 that you loose all your ability and intelligence, Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite! We have to put to good use the talents, the natural abilities, the knowledge and the experience of our senior citizens. They are willing to use them for the benefit of all Members of Parliament—

An Hon. Member: We have to listen to them.

Mr. Malépart: —but, as my Leader has just said, we have to listen to them. We have to do what they want. They do not want to have a special day just for show, just for appearances' sake. Was this decision made by the Conservative caucus or by the federation of senior citizens' clubs, Mr. Speaker? I would really like the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister to rise and tell us whether the Quebec Federation of Senior Citizens made such a request. I did not hear about it and I am very close to these groups. Was this requested by the AQDR, an association which came here and asked to meet the Quebec Conservative caucus to defend their rights under the employment development programs, but the Conservatives refused to see them. How hypocritical for these people to refuse such a request one day and to do this the very same week. It is really too much, Mr. Speaker. Today, someone rises to say: We are proud of our senior citizens because they have built this country and sacrificed a lot for us and we are going to have a special day for them. Mr. Speaker, the time when others make your decisions for you is over. People want action. They have had their fill of the broken promises of the Prime Minister. They have had enough of the messages and speeches of the Prime Minister. They have had enough.

One year and a few months later, the people are fed up with the comments of the Prime Minister and the Conservative Members of Parliament. The people say: We want action, we want to be consulted. You have not consulted us. You have misled us. We want you to listen to us and do what we want. We know our own needs, we know what we want and we know the answers, but if you want to listen to us and help us, we are going to tell each Member of Parliament what they can do. However, I have not seen one of them do so, Mr. Speaker. I have distributed petitions in the House. It was under a year ago that the Government discriminated against widows and widowers in its spouse allowance legislation. If only one Conservative Member had had the courage and the honesty to rise and say that he wanted the spouse allowance to be extended in 1986 to people living alone, whether they are single, separated or divorced! At this time, Mr. Speaker, there are still 80,000 people in Canada, most of whom are women, whose applications for the spouse allowance are rejected by the Health and Welfare officials simply because they are single, separated or divorced. Mr. Speaker, those people are between 60 and 65 years of age, and they are turned down because of that party's decision. And you think that all those people in each and every one of our constituencies today will buy that proposal to have a day designated in their honour?

An Hon. Member: They are not stupid.

Mr. Malépart: They are not stupid, as my Leader said. And they say: No, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Quebec, we know what those words mean: No thank you, Mr. Speaker. It means we will not be fooled. This is unacceptable and I feel certain that my colleague for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), who is very dedicated and has a long experience of many years with all the issues relating to the aged and social problems, will want to rise.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, there is something I have to say: We have leaders in each of our parties, but the difference between my leader and the one you have on the other side is this: mine is sincere, honest, and a man of his word. Mine does not work on the basis of winning votes and for his image on TV. He works on the basis of honestly fighting for the rights of Canadian men and women. My leader accepts that we fight, that we struggle to defend the rights of citizens. Yours thinks only about presiding before TV screens and press cameras. It is for a reason that the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Côté) was looking up the results of the polls. He was anxious to know what percentage of the people oppose and disagree with the Government policies, but this today is going a bit too far.

Mr. Speaker, nobody can find words for that masquerade, that blue Santa Claus suit that someone would have us put on today. In Quebec we feel we are being literally conned in this festive period with respect to the issues in the east end of Montreal, but here someone is trying to sell a crooked blue Santa Claus to senior citizens.

But, thank God, as on many other issues, the Official Opposition was there. I remember having to think things over and arrive at a decision: whether to go back to the National Assembly in Quebec or to stay here in Ottawa. And I will tell you that I had decided to stay here at the federal level, and here I am, knowing full well that I would be elected as an MLA in Quebec. And the strongest reason for staying here in Ottawa rather than going back to Quebec, as I said publicly, was that as we see it confirmed today, and my wife and children were of the same opinion—the present Prime Minister cannot be trusted with social programs. What is going on today justifies the decision I came to a month ago, Mr. Speaker.

I am looking at the Hon. Member who put that proposal forward. Maybe he was honest and sincere, but where was he when the decision was made to deindex old age security pensions? What did he do at that time to protect senior citizens from having their income slashed? What did he say at that time? They were ignoring everything about those people who built this country. Was it Mrs. Denis' indignation when she cried out with all her heart to the Prime Minister: "You have betrayed us, Charlie Brown!" Was it that cry that stirred you up and caused such twinges of conscience that you are looking for forgiveness? If that is what Progressive Conservative Members want to be forgiven for, I will help them. I am ready during the Christmas break—I will be spending Christmas with my family—but after the New Year, I am ready to organize in Quebec for all of Canada, a meeting with all the representatives of senior citizens's associations in Canada. We will sit down together, Liberals, New Democrats, Conservatives. We will listen to them, but we will do what they tell us. I have a small idea what they will ask about. It is not enough to have a day named in their honour. In the first place, they will say: Remove the discrimination in connection with the spouse allowance. Give it to everyone, whether they are single, separated or divorced.

Secondly, they will say: Tell your Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and your Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that within your reform of private pension plans you should add minimum indexation because the income from our pension plan was satisfactory seven or eight years ago, but today we are on social welfare, since our pensions have not been increased. Finally, with respect to the pension plan, Mr. Speaker, we should set aside that hypocrisy and that masquarade before the Christmas season.

I would rather we did not pass that measure, because we have to be sincere and honest but if after the holiday season some Tory members want to co-operate with me to improve the quality of life of our senior citizens, I would suggest to all Members to reconsider their decision and to remove all those discriminations as soon as possible because it is a bad record for the Tories.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, although lacking the experience of my hon. colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), I cannot agree with the general tenor of his speech, and I intend to try and explain, very calmly, why I disagree, and what my position is.

I think that as a group, the elderly are a very convenient subject for making political points and generalizations . . . I let you speak your piece . . . and generalizations, Mr. Speaker. It is easy to say that just before the holidays, these people are being abused. It is easy to make this point and that point just before Christmas—

Mr. Speaker, I have said before in the House that it is easy to confuse issues. I am against any form of indexation, Mr. Speaker, and indexation is being confused with universality, which is not the same thing at all. Removing indexation of family allowances today does not mean taking away their universality. Lifting indexation as we wanted to do at the time and on which we reversed our decision as a Government, removing indexation of Old Age Security pensions does not at all mean eliminating the universality of these pensions. It is not the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I was talking to one of the FQDR clubs. Yes, I am also interested in meeting senior citizens clubs, just as I am interested in meeting people who are on welfare. I said to these people, to some 300 or 350 members of the FQDR, and I wrote to them saying that although it was perhaps not politically advantagious, that I was against indexation. I am against this kind of payment and payment increases which means that next year's has to be indexed to last year's. It does not make sense to run a country like that. And people confuse this with universality, and it is not the same thing at all. These are two entirely different concepts.

Mr. Speaker, I would be attacking universality if I said: I am taking away the Old Age Security pension from people with an income of so much or over. That would be eliminating universality. But when I say I am removing indexation, I am neither removing nor attacking universality. I am not attacking the program's universality. That is what I want to make clear to my hon. friend. I have every respect for his views, and he is entitled to express them. But I feel I have a duty to set the record straight and say that universality is not indexation.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking to the people at the FQDR, I said . . . and there was a Mr. Miron there, whose youngest son had just graduated from university. And I wondered what was more important to Mr. Miron: The fact that he would get a dollar more in Old Age Security pension benefits every week or that I could do something about the economy so that his son could get a job.

An Hon. Member: He wants both.

Mr. Hudon: He wants both, of course I realize that. But I am sure you know which of the two he is willing to give up. He will choose indexation, a way to share wealth which is so automatic that it allows the Government no alternative whatsoever. You made exactly the same speech in 1980.

What I mean to say, Mr. Speaker, is that indexation and universality are two completely different things. The FQDR people think so too. First of all, they said: We wish to congratulate you for your frankness. I said so publicly. That I told members of a great many senior citizen's clubs and it was widely reported in the media.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to be aggressive about this. I said stricly this: Indexation and universality are two completely different things and mixing them up is a mistake.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a sense of real sadness. I truly find it mind-boggling that Members across the way chose a time like today, on the eve of very solemn and important family celebrations, to put forward what is essentially the most ridiculous suggestion I have heard in a long time. Members across the way cannot say and do what they have been saying and doing over the last year and expect anyone to believe they truly want a day to celebrate the role senior citizens have played in our society. I said yesterday that this place gets curiouser and curiouser. I was quoting Lewis Carroll and Tweedledee. Believe me, I hit the nail on the head.

Stop and think about just who are our senior citizens. They are the people who, over the course of the building of this country, made many sacrifices so we could have what we have today. They built this nation from the roots up. They sacrificed. Then I have to listen to my colleague across the floor say that they should now sacrifice themselves once again in the interests of their children. I do not think that the youth of this country expect our senior citizens to tighten their belts because we as a whole have not found the answers to some of the problems in our society. That is not the way to go about it.

Senior citizens are perfectly able to express their concerns for themselves. They are able to say to the Government: "We have some very serious problems. Don't cut our income because we live close to the poverty line already". People have to live on 25 per cent of what they had been living on before they turned 65. The Government may not believe this but there are people who did not have enough income to buy a private pension plan or they may not have worked in a business where private pensions were available. These people are entitled to a continuity of lifestyle but we have not, in our review of pensions in our society, found a way to enable those people to have that continuity of lifestyle. Having a day to celebrate the fact that they have lived this long is no way to celebrate.

We need concrete proposals by seniors for seniors. These people did not lose their marbles the day they hit 65. They are intelligent, competent, capable and educated. Whether they have a university degree or not is of no consequent. Ask them about social issues. Ask them about their housing, transportation, and medical health service problem. Ask them about what they need. Stop treating them like children and speaking for them. What right have you or I to speak for older people? Our obligation as elected Members of this House is to go out and consult.

This Conservative Government came into office on a great big wave promising open Government, the Government will consult, it will be open to society and reflect social concerns and needs. I have not seen this Government consult with anyone. I have been witness to and even participated in consultations which are so strict and rigid that you do not have time to listen. I sat in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. We heard from one group after another who had plenty to say about deindexation and the changes required in the OAS and pension system. The Government, misleading as usual, indicated it would not touch the system because it was fine for now. It then proceeded to touch the whole system.

Our lack of attention to the needs of older people to maintain their jobs, to have access to education and retraining means we do not give credit where credit is due. We do not allow them the kind of facilities they require. However, did we talk to them? Did we review our job programs with them? Or, have we left them out? If we do consider them——for a few twenty-week jobs and then goodbye.

[Translation]

[English]

I would like to come back to what my colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) said. If it had not been for Madame Denis, who said "Bye, bye, Charlie Brown", I wonder what would have happened. The senior citizens, including Madame Denis, do owe the Conservatives one major vote of thanks. By indexing OAS pensions, the Government mobilized Canada's grey power. Never will this country be the same as a result of those inept, inconsiderable, indeed unconscionable actions. These people have been organized and they will certainly let the Government know what they think. They will no longer allow themselves to be ignored in the political process. They have become a powerful lobby and the grey heads of this country will have to be listened to.

I suggest that the Government not throw them a sop, or whatever Members opposite think it is, in the form of a one-day festival. The Government can be sure that we will appreciate that nevertheless because it will be a great day to remember the foolhardy measures taken by that Government affecting the people who built this nation. I suggest it would be a great day every year to talk about the broken promises. We can talk about the Government that wanted to cut back the OAS. We can talk about the Government that did not give a darn about what is happening to older people, the Government which did not bother to consult.

I think, along with my colleague from Montreal-Saint-Marie, that perhaps this is the best think to have happened. Not only did the Government precipitate the organizing of the grey power, it now wants to give them a day to speak out. Maybe we will end up with the best possible deal.

If the Government is so concerned, which I wish it was but it is not, about the well-being of senior citizens, then show that concern by legislating the money we need for spouses' allowances to cover the 80,000 people who were left out because they were either single, divorced or separated. That is a fine way to be equalitarian, to treat people equally, particularly in light of Section 15 which we brought in and which the Government fought—

Mr. Gurbin: Why are they still there, Sheila?

Mrs. Finestone: Why is who still there?

Mr. Gurbin: Those people who were left out?

Mrs. Finestone: They are not voting for you, I can assure you.

Mr. Gurbin: They are there because you left them there. You left them hanging for years.

Mrs. Finestone: The Government's attitude is that it can, without consultation, determine what our seniors need in the way of health care, housing and transportation. The Government has cut federal-provincial transfer payments.

Yes, I know, you are going to tell me you have added dollars but you have not added anything to the provinces' net purchasing power. You have created a lot of problems around the educational and health institutions across the land.

• (1830)

I am not pleased, Mr. Speaker I certainly am not going to speak against a day for the elderly in our society. I think that is great. We are going to have a great big festival when we can celebrate an unconscionable, unthinking, and cold-hearted group in our society, the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am curious and ask for some direction. I am not going to get into the hypocrisy that the Liberal party is presently dealing with.

Mr. Caccia: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Elzinga: I would like to receive some guidance from you, Sir. The Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) consented to the referral to committee of this motion for the establishment of a senior citizens' day, being the second Sunday in June. I am not sure whether, in the event that the Liberal Members opposite continue to talk, this motion will die at 6.41, or whether it will go to committee. I seek your guidance as to which is the case. The hypocrisy of the opposite side will really shine through in the event that this motion does die.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. In response to the question of the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), according to the order of reference on which the House agreed, we will go to 6.41 and I will put the question to the House at that time without any vote.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was part of the agreement which we understood to have been adopted by the House. Indeed we go to 6.41. At that time there could be a vote, but it will be a voice vote rather than a recorded vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, it is both a pleasure and an honour to take part in this discussion.

[English]

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to make a nuisance of myself, and I wish to acknowledge the outstanding contribution you are making to this House. However, I find it rather odd that when a Conservative Member rises after a Liberal Member has spoken another Liberal Member would be recognized.

Mr. Althouse: Nobody else is standing.

Mr. Deans: Who rose?

Mr. Caccia: He has been recognized now.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, if I may.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please, all Members. The Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) brings up the fact that there may have been another Member rising at that time. The fact is that the Chair did not see that Member at that time and recognized the Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif). I am very sorry if that has caused an inconvenience, but that is the situation and we will resume debate with the Member for Richmond-Wolfe.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest to the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) who, through his remarks, has clearly demonstrated that, like his Party, he has entirely lost contact with reality.

This PC Member has just told the House: Mr. Speaker, I am against indexation. But to make such a statement in the House in 1985 when dealing with our senior citizens is simply outrageous. For him to state publicly that he is against indexation is simply odious.

And to use that term he just did use... Mr. Speaker, whoever knows the way senior citizens live... The senior citizens come to us and say: Sir, I have to choose my housing on the basis of what I get.

Mr. Speaker, a great many of these older people—something my hon. colleagues have recognized—have built this country and provided us with what we have today. Now that they need the Government, the Government is saying to them: Listen, you must share in the sacrifices. You still have obligations and you will have to do without an indexation which would provide you with the basic requirements.

Today, we are discussing the possibility of designating a Senior Citizens' Day. This demonstrates clearly to what extent this Government is odious and irresponsible in its dealings with older people, some of them came to Ottawa very recently to denounce this injustice and say: Listen to us, gentlemen, who are managing the country: we need what to us appears to be essential. In order to eat decently, we need not only what you are giving us but a little more, and there is no way we want to give up our indexing. But you are telling them: Listen, you have sons and daughters in the university, you will have to tighten your belts in order to allow us as a Government to give them a little more. But I will say to you honestly: You do not go to your constituencies, you do not speak with those senior citizens, in other words you are completely disconnected from reality.

Mr. Speaker, hardly a few months have passed since that historical insult to senior citizens, and the Government is now saying here in this House: Let us have a national day for senior citizens. My view is this is a slap in the face, an insult that is too horrendous for words. You think this will make them forgive, make them forget what you just did to them a few months ago?

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens are most responsible people, people who have developed over the years a wisdom that is a real wealth to this country. They are people who, in difficult times, in hard times, are capable of listening to reason, of willingly accepting sacrifices and sensible measures. But they are not imbeciles, they can see day after day through what you have been doing since you came to power. They are well aware that hardly a few hours ago you wanted us to push through a $800 million-plus blank cheque for people who are very well off indeed. Those seniors do not understand and do not accept such a way of managing the affairs of this country.

So, Mr. Speaker, it takes a lot of nerve to come up with such an unbelievable initiative, an initiative that, as I said, is truly an insult to those people who worked all their lives and are now in 1985 at the mercy of a society which they themselves have built, and developed, entirely dependent on a small cheque over which they have no control whatsoever and for which they impatiently wait to buy the things that are simply essential. Those people, as I said, who have to plan months ahead for expenses that often to us their juniors look irrational, things we could easily do without but which those people need; they are in crying need of all that we are giving them, and their only way of coping with the future is the hope of having that part we call indexing, and now members opposite are saying: "They agree with that, they are responsible people, they are willing to do without indexing". And we are told: "We are for universality but against indexing".

Senior citizens had an opportunity, as you very well remember and as you will remember for quite some time yet, believe me, to state that indexing was a vital issue for them. And now, to have them forget, to have them forgive that historical insult, you are offering them a national day. I think it shows very clearly your absolutely irresponsible way of managing the country, when you directly attack those people whom we, their juniors, definitely need and whom we have a clear responsibility and obligation to support, and to defend, something which apparently you have completely forgotten since you came here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). There are 30 seconds left.

• (1840)

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that I also find it incredible that the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) would say that deindexing family allowances and the old age security pension is not the same as removing universality. It is obvious that he does not understand the basic facts of this issue.

Mr. Speaker, this week—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member who is now speaking.

Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a problem about how to interpret the arrangement made in the House about an hour ago. May I ask Your Honour to read it so that everyone will know what is involved?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I do not have the text of the arrangement itself. As I understand the agreement made in the House when this debate began, at 6:41, when the debate comes to an end, the Speaker will put the question, but there will not be a recorded vote. This is what I intend to do in a few minutes. This means that—

[English]

There would be no recorded vote on this specific motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well, but I repeat that there seems to be some confusion. In my opinion, the only way to clear up this confusion would be for Your Honour to read the exact text of the agreement. It would be surprising if the Chair had made a ruling without having read the text of the agreement.

Mr. Lapierre: He was not the one occupying the Chair at the time.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It was my understanding of the agreement which was made with my colleague across the way—and I also discussed it with the critic for the NDP—that it would go to committee on a voice vote but there would not be a recorded division. That was the whole reason for the discussion.

I am sure that I speak for the Progressive Conservatives in the House when I say that we are prepared to have the question of designating a Senior Citizens' Day considered by a Standing Committee. We think that that is very worth while, and we would be prepared to have that happen. However, if the members of the Liberal Party who are here—and I specifically say members of the Liberal Party who are here—do not want to have that very important matter discussed by the Standing Committee, I am prepared to hear their nays.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was party to the agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of ordeer.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was one of the people consulted in this regard, and I want to give you the benefit of what I recall as having been the consultation. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader spoke with me and asked whether I would be agreeable to an arrangement in the House which would allow that at 6.41, or when the debate completed if it were prior to 6.41, this matter could be referred to a committee for further study, and that that would take place without a recorded vote. That is what I was asked to agree to, and I agreed to that.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have to agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Indeed the agreement, as I understood it, differs from what I just heard from the Deputy Government House Leader. My understanding of Private Members' Hour is very much the same as that which all Hon. Members are used to working under, and that is that if a vote was indeed put, it would not be a registered vote. "If" is the big word I must use. I insist that you read the order, Mr. Speaker, unless I misunderstood the situation. I have no personal objection to this motion going to a committee, and I said so to the Hon. Member. However, I cannot, nor can the Government or anyone else take it upon ourselves to make deals as to how the private Members in the House operate within their own hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Private Members' Hour has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—TASK FORCE ON CHEMICAL ACCIDENTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, just over one year ago on December 3, 1984, the world experienced the most disastrous chemical spill that had ever occurred, in Bhopal, India. Officially something like 1,757 people were killed at that time as a result of a leak of poison gas from a chemical plant owned and operated by Union Carbide in Bhopal, India. It is likely, however, that there were many more than 1,757 people killed. It has been estimated that that figure may have gone as high as about 2,500. It is also estimated that there were likely something in the neighbourhood of 17,000 people injured in that chemical spill, and perhaps even as many as 300,000 people who will be affected either directly and immediately or indirectly and at some later stage in their lives, or perhaps even in the lives of those yet to be born. It has been suggested that there could be a great many side effects like birth defects, miscarriages and lung, eye, liver, kidney, brain and nervous system problems resulting from all of this. As well, a substantial number of lawsuits have been launched in India against Union Carbide over the chemical spill.

Why did all this happen? How is it possible that it could have happened? It has been suggested that there are at least three reasons for it. One is that a town of some 17,000 people was built cheek to jowl with the chemical factory. Another is that the technology at the factory was outdated and outmoded. A third is that the warning system in the factory was not up to modern standards. Whatever the cause, it did happen. We in Canada do not want to see it happen here.

Many people have suggested that it could not happen here and that this sort of thing would be impossible in our own country. However, at the same time we know that we have already experienced problems with chemical spills here in Canada. We know, for instance, of the Mississauga train derailment. Some 250,000 people had to evacuate their homes as a result of that. We know that train derailments have not stopped. In fact, there are on average two train derailments in Canada every month. If it happens that chemicals are being carried on those trains, obviously there will be the potential for another Mississauga disaster or something even more significant.

We know as well that back in 1982 there was a blowout at a sour gas well in Lodgepole, Alberta, and that one person was killed as a result. Thousands of people were sickened by the fumes from that leak. We know that earlier this year, there was a PCB spill near Kenora, Ontario. We know that there is also a great potential for disaster with the chemical dumps along the American side of the Niagara River. Those chemical dumps being the Love Canal, Hyde Park, S Area and the 102nd Street dumps. We also know that there are many mini-spills occurring all the time.

In my own community we have experienced three of these spills in the last very few years. One of them resulted in a fire at the Bate Chemical plant in my community. Another one just two or three years ago occurred at the Bristol-Meyers plant where there was a chemical spill into the sewer system which flowed into the Don River. That resulted in the pollution of a poriton of Lake Ontario. Not more than a year and one-half ago there was another chemical spill at the Nuodex plant in my own community. All of these spills have indicated to me the great potential for disaster which can occur on the spur of the moment, quite unexpectedly.

I am concerned about what we are doing about these matters in our own country and in our own provinces. We are doing something. I know that the Government has taken certain action. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated in the House a short while ago that he intended to establish a task force on the transportation of dangerous commodities by rail through metropolitan Toronto and area. I am looking forward to seeing that task force established in the very near future.

As well, we know that there are currently negotiations ongoing between the EPA in the United States and Environment Canada. We also know that there was a task force set up to investigate industrial chemical spills with a view to seeing what potential is for similar spills in Canada, similar to the one which occurred in Bhopal, India.

On December 10 I asked the Parliamentary Secretary what recommendations the task force had made and when they were likely to be made public. At that time he indicated that he expected they would be made public very soon. The Parliamentary Secretary is here with us tonight. I am hoping he will advise exactly what those recommendations were and when they will be made public. Canadians are waiting and hoping for an answer so that we can be sure to avert other potential disasters such as the one which occurred in Bhopal, India.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his question. He is very consistent in the attention which he pays to this type of matter. He asks the best questions and, hopefully, he receives some of the better answers.

His question specifically relates to the Bhopal incident, but really includes all types of industrial accidents. No one in Canada escaped a sense of emotion over the vulnerability we might have to a big accident. The Hon. Member quite correctly points out a number of smaller incidents which may be occurring on a daily basis without our knowledge.

With respect to the substance of the question in terms of the task force, four days after the Bhopal incident we initiated at the federal level, in co-operation with the provinces, an approach to the problem. The approach was the establishment of the task force which commenced its study in March of 1985, and concluded in July of 1985. That task force consulted with a whole range of interested parties—if we can call them that—across the country. There were really three working groups which came together and produced this report, which is now being assessed, and those working groups first looked at a whole list of areas where in fact we might have a vulnerability, where we could experience accidents. One of the groups looked at procedures which are now in place to try to manage those incidents if they should occur. A third group looked at the strategies and levels of responsibilities between jurisdictions and so on. So all of those factions have come together to bring that report forward.

In short, what they have indicated is that we do have some problems. They have made a specific series of recommendations, all of which are being considered by that broad range of interests which I indicated in the previous answer.

We will in fact, federally, through the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), be releasing that assessment and the final report with recommendations by the end of January, 1986. I believe that will help to make sure that in the future in so far as possible, and within the jurisdiction and limitations we have at the federal level, we are meeting as fully as possible our obligations to prevent that kind of thing happening in Canada.

I would like to say in conclusion that we have had excellent co-operation from the provinces and from the industry.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—GREAT LAKES CHEMICAL TOXICITY. (B) GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder how much more the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) knows that he didn't know before having received that reply.

The Royal Society of Canada produced a week ago a very important and far reaching report on the Great Lakes and on the agreement we made with the Americans. It analysed what is happening in that eco-system and put forward a number of recommendations, too many of them to quote today. I will just mention a few of those extremely important recommendations.

The report recommends, given the continuing problems of operating some of the largest sewer treatment facilities and the difficulties in correcting combined sewer overflow problems, that the agreement between Canada and the United States continue to emphasize the improvement, maintenance and replacement of sewage treatment systems. This recommendation alone will require on the part of this so-called Progressive Conservative Government that it make a renewed commitment to sewage upgrading, particularly in regions like Vancouver, the Fraser Estuary, Lake Ontario, the St. Lawrence River, downstream to the Maritimes. There is no evidence whatsoever on the part of the Government of a commitment of this nature. That is demonstrated by the fact that so far, despite renewed requests and pressure from my municipality in Metropolitan Toronto, not one penny has been devoted to the question of sewer separation in that large municipality.

The Royal Society also talked about the necessity of mapping ground water conditions around and under the Great Lakes Basin and the necessity of collecting data on geology, hydrology, soils and depth of water tables. But what we have seen so far on the part of the Government is a withdrawal from any substantial activity in terms of research and collection of further data with respect to toxicity and other activities.

The Royal Society recommends a comprehensive toxic substance strategy. It makes the point that we need an inventory of toxic chemicals found at potentially significant levels in the Great Lakes ecosystem. The second portion of that strategy is for action towards an effective long-term solution to leaking toxic waste dumps. The third strategy is for control actions against all identifiable sources of toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes Basin. Finally, it recommends the operation of modern toxic waste treatment centres in all regions of the Basin.

When I read the specific recommendations for a strategy, I ask myself what on earth can the Royal Society expect from a Government which has not been able to say one public word on a proposal by the United States, which is already two months old, with respect to the Niagara River. This has been kept a secret in Canada even though it is public south of the border. The Minister has had this on his desk for two months and not a word or an indication as to what the people in the Niagara region and around the Lake Ontario Basin can expect from this Government in reply to that proposal.

The Royal Society recommended the development of better data on contaminants in the food chain. This is an important new development which has emerged from a recent study by scientists in Ontario concerning contamination in the food chain resulting from evaporation of water from our lakes and precipitation in other areas.

In contrast to that recommendation, this Government has taken steps which have led to the virtual elimination from the face of the earth of a plan to build in Guelph the finest toxicology centre ever to be established. The Government has eliminated $2.5 million of toxic chemical research programs which were approved every year by Treasury Board for specific research in the Niagara region. Then it eliminated some $70 million in general research under the auspices of the National Research Council. Then the Minister comes into the House today with a shallow non-document which recites what we knew already. Neither does it give us any indication as to what specifically will be done to correct the situation and prevent deterioration along the St. Clair River. He tells us that he will improve certain laws. Laws will not enable us to clean up this mess or eliminate the possibility of this happening in the future because they do not impose specific controls on the performance of industry along that water body, or any international water body for that matter.

So here we have a fantastic report by the Royal Society of Canada, and an answer to my question exactly one week ago in this House by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) which said nothing and which had nothing to do with the content of the report. I am therefore anxious to know from the Parliamentary Secretary what on earth this Government will do—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Caccia: —in relation to the recommendations contained in this report.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, the Royal Society can expect a lot more consideration, co-operation, understanding and action from this Government than it ever got from his Government.

Mr. Caccia: What do you know?

Mr. Gurbin: I can say with some certainty because I sat and watched his Government do nothing for four or five years.

What we have from the Royal Society is an assessment which really did not tell us a lot more than was already pretty obvious. We have major problems in specific areas and there are ways to try and deal with those problems.

• (1905)

Time after time I hear the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) ask questions, give responses, and make comments. I wonder why he is so limited in his readings of some things. Why, for instance, would he not take a look at the Government's new initiatives in the toxic chemical research area? Take for example the wildlife toxicology fund. The Member takes great exception to this. It is politically easy for him to talk about herring gull aid programs in spite of the fact that he knows that the major and important part of those programs are still in process.

Mr. Caccia: Not in full.

Mr. Gurbin: I agree totally that it is not fully in process. However, in the time I have I would like to be very specific because the Member likes specificity. He asks a hundred questions and wants a hundred specific answers. I will be specific on this point.

The wildlife toxicology fund now has 14 proposals before it; six of which have been accepted, one of which has been refused, and eight of which are in additional assessment areas. Those are additional active programs in areas of research which include the effects on agriculture and forest chemicals as well as the effects of toxic pollutants on wildlife, the monitoring of the success of measures to mitigate these effects, the development and implementation of techniques that use wildlife as indicators for toxic chemicals in the environment, and environmental pathways by which toxic substances may affect wildlife. That is just one specific example of what is working and what we are doing.

I would like to speak very specifically to the matter of inventory which the Member brought up in his comments. Canada is one of the few industrialized countries that has not had an inventory of toxic chemicals. We have had serious meetings in preparation for providing that inventory of over—

Mr. Caccia: That is a Liberal initiative.

Mr. Gurbin: It started and was not finished. It is something that has to be done. It is something that the Government will accomplish.

There were many other things which were started and talked about. The Member for Davenport was very careful to talk about Treasury approval year after year of funds which were never sure and about different programs that were never sure. He knows that the majority of those programs were concluded or incorporated into other programs. In fact, we have taken and will continue to take new initiatives following the three major assessments which are now underway. One is being done by ourselves and one is being done by the Science Council of Canada. An additional area of assessment is in our scientific research into toxic chemicals.

My time is up, Mr. Speaker, so I must stop, but I look forward to my next interchange with the Member for Davenport, and I wish him a merry Christmas.

TRADE—CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AGRICULTURAL MARKETING QUOTAS. (B) QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for his warm round of applause. On December 2 I asked a very important question of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) which he dealt with in a very light manner. That really surprised me because I have the utmost respect for the hon. gentleman. I asked him a very fundamental question on trade as it pertained to the shoe industry and to agriculture.

I asked the Minister if dairy programs would be sacrificed in free trade negotiations with the United States. To that he answered, of course, that the programs would not be sacrificed. Being the non-partisan person that you are, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that the only reasonable supplementary question would be to ask the Minister how we could believe him when the Government lied about the quotas on shoes. Why should we believe that the Government will preserve the quotas in the dairy industry, as it said it would, when it also said the same thing about the shoe industry? I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, that the Government did not live up to its promise in that regard. I will prove to you that it did not.

I have a story from the Canadian Press of May 4, 1984, which appeared in Le Journal de Montréal. It says:

> A Conservative Government will not remove footwear or textiles quotas imposed by Canada, stated the Leader of the Conservative Party, Brian Mulroney, to the newspaper La Tribune.
> "The quota policy will remain the same as it is", declared Mr. Mulroney, adding that he was not for free trade in those industries.
> He added that he will not "bow" to the pressure that might come from countries of the Common Market or from the United States in order to reduce footwear and textile quotas.

● (1910)

What we received was in fact inconsistent with the truth. I bring this to your attention because the dairy farmers of my constituency are very concerned. They have been phoning me and asking if their quotas will disappear next. That is a very legitimate question.

In attempting to represent my constituents the best way I can—which I am sure all Members of the House would want me to do—I have sent a petition to every farmer in my riding which I will table in the House in the same manner that we have been tabling petitions lately. The purpose of this is to get a firm commitment from the Government and ensure that it will not bargain away the dairy programs, poultry programs and other market-sharing quota programs that we have in Canada.

I sent this petition, with a letter which I have in my hand now, to every farmer in my riding. I am asking that they sign a petition which states that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) give his immediate personal assurance that no agricultural program will be sacrificed in the free-trade negotiations with the United States.

The farmers of Canada have to be reassured, not simply with empty words as we heard about the shoe quotas. We need the truth rather than more empty rhetoric. We have had enough of the Government making promises and breaching them.

The Tory Government breached another promise this afternoon when it failed to introduce lobbying legislation in the way the Prime Minister promised in his death-bed repentance speech of September 9.

We on this side of the House are fed up. The people of Canada are fed up, as demonstrated in the public opinion polls, with getting evasive answers from the Government. We need a commitment that what it says in the future will be the truth.

With respect to this issue, the Government should ensure that free-trade negotiations concerning agriculture will not endanger the existing programs. We need a firm commitment that our market-sharing quotas will be maintained. The dairy farmers, the poultry farmers and egg producers want that commitment. Nothing less than that personal assurance from the Prime Minister, who I thought would have been replying to this question personally, is acceptable.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are two issues contained in the Hon. Member's question. With respect to the first issue, I can only comment that the Government took the advice of a Liberal-appointed tribunal. Perhaps such appointments are not always the best, but the Government accepted that assessment of the shoe industry and took what action made sense. I do not know if the Hon. Member is mixing up shoes and milk, but it is somewhat like comparing apples and oranges.

Mr. Boudria: Read the question.

Mr. Gurbin: When the Hon. Member talks about agriculture, I believe there are a couple of issues that he does not want to address or does not want to know. I would wager that there are some facts that he does not even tell his farmers. For instance, in 1984 there were $2.3 billion worth of agricultural exports to the United States. I wonder if there are any hog farmers in his riding?

Mr. Boudria: Yes.

Mr. Gurbin: They probably know what happened.

Mr. Boudria: I have hundreds of them.

Mr. Gurbin: That is good. They know what happened when protectionist sentiments arose in the United States and tariffs were implemented. The industry was threatened and the price of hogs went down.

Many other agricultural products, including potatoes, have been affected by those protectionist sentiments in the United States. There are 300 protectionist measures currently in the United States which could affect a wide range of products in Canada, many of which are agricultural products.

The Government is looking to secure approved access for Canadian agriculture. Throughout these free-trade discussions we will in fact be talking and dealing closely with all sectors of Canadian agriculture. We will do our best to get a good deal for all Canadian agriculture. We will not sign an agreement that is not a good deal for Canada.

On September 26 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) proposed that Canada and the United States pursue bilateral freer trade talks. The Government's aim in pursuing discussions with the United States was to secure and enhance Canadian access to what is by far our largest export market and provide a predictable trading environment with a better set of rules. This is welcomed by the United States.

• (1915)

At this point in time, these agricultural issues, or any number of other issues, are part of our discussions. We will not go in there with a set position on any number of issues, quite simply because that is not the way in which to negotiate. If the Hon. Member does his reading, he will know that yesterday a farm Bill was passed through Congress. The United States has a number of farm policies and measures in which it has just as much at stake as we have in ours. The Hon. Member also knows that the Conservative Party has always supported market supply management systems in agriculture when producers wanted them.

THE ADMINISTRATION

"THE WAY IT WAS" IN 1985

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, this being close to the end of December let us review the year 1985.

January: two Tories are reported to have received a $60,000 untendered advertising contract. February: the Solicitor General meets privately in a room at the Chateau Laurier with Premier Hatfield. March: the Irish eyes were smiling at the Shamrock Summit, while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was giving away the store to the Americans. April: everything became relative; the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) awarded cushy contracts and appointments to all their relatives. May: the Minister of Finance introduced his Budget which viciously attacked the poor and the senior citizens of the country. June: senior citizens are really mad at the Government and the Government reinstates pensions. July: the Minister of the Environment had a wonderful time in Paris at a mere cost of $64,000 to Canadian taxpayers. August: the Secretary of State (Mr. McLean) took an African safari. September: the tainted tuna scandal. We now know why the Prime Minister lost his sense of smell. October: the first bank fiasco in 62 years. November: the Tory Government gave away de Havilland to Boeing. December: the Government bullies Parliament by introducing closure seven times in 21 days.

That is "the way it was" in the great year of 1985. Merry Christmas anyway.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-70

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's refusal to meet today with members of la Coalition des femmes pour les allocations familiales, which represents thousands of Quebec women, is a further indication of his insensitivity to the concerns of women and the needs of children.

Undoubtedly he cannot face them because he has no just explanation to give for proceeding with Bill C-70 to reduce the purchasing power of family allowances. Instead, he intends to push through this incredible legislation which attacks families and children, especially women raising children on their own and on low incomes. Once again the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) cannot defend his broken promises. Bill C-70 denies his promises never to hurt universal social programs, to help those in greatest need, to act on women's concerns, and to reconsider cuts when the economy improved.

The Prime Minister could save face, re-establish his credibility, and make all Canadians have a happy Christmas by allowing Bill C-70 to die and by sending out fully indexed family allowance cheques in January.

THE ECONOMY

IMPROVEMENT DURING 1985

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this is a time to look back over the year—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ravis: —and take stock of what we have accomplished in 1985.

One accomplishment stands out as something of which all Canadians ought to be proud. The people of Canada, and our Government, have proved that by working together we can accomplish great things.

At home, the economic signs are excellent. The inflation rate has not risen above 4 per cent since we took office. Consumer and business investment is up. Housing starts are on the rise. Interest rates and unemployment are down. The number of new jobs in Canada continues to increase. We could not have accomplished so much without the enthusiastic participation of every Canadian, particularly small business people.

Over the past year Canadians have proven that they also have great concern for those in need around the world. The generous donations of both time and money by all Canadians to the Government's African Famine Relief Program have been tremendous. I am especially proud that Saskatchewan had the highest rate of contributions per capita to overseas assistance this year, a year when the residents of my province were afflicted with severe drought and difficulty in harvesting their crops. This accomplishment is not surprising since Saskatchewan has the highest rate of volunteers in the country.

S.O. 22

Government alone cannot bring about economic recovery. Government alone cannot feed the starving. But working together Canadians and our Government can make this country and the world a better place in which to live.

THE ECONOMY

FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Under the Liberal administration, Mr. Speaker, not only were investors not interested, but they even shut down several refineries in Montreal East. Today, we have three national companies which are seriously considering getting financially involved in Montreal East, namely Shell Canada, Gaz métropolitain and Ultramar.

Our open and welcoming approach has proved to be the driving force which has renewed the confidence of investors and prompted the management of those companies to invest in Montreal East.

For several days now the Liberals have been trying to use those investment projects in an insidious attempt to spread dissension among Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, our Government has achieved a national consensus. In the same way, Mr. Speaker, we intend to protect, maintain and strengthen the solidarity of Quebecers no matter where they live.

Aware of its responsibilities towards every region of Canada and Quebec, aware of the wider credibility it is gaining every day from private investors, aware of the challenges it has created for investors from all quarters, our Government will soon announce a strategy designed to inspire even more confidence on the part of investors, consumers and workers in Montreal and Quebec.

THE FAMILY

DIFFICULTY IN COLLECTING ALIMONY PAYMENTS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the case of Mrs. Gwen Wills of Ottawa who has been unable to collect alimony payments for three years.

Mrs. Wills obtained an Ontario Supreme Court ruling ordering her husband to provide for some of the needs of their two children.

But her former husband left Ontario and now resides in Nova Scotia where he has launched a series of appeals against the ruling in a successful attempt to put off those payments. Indeed Mrs. Wills' former husband does not have to pay alimony for as long as the case is before the court.

This case proves the urgency of establishing a Canada-wide alimony payments collection system. Unfortunately Bill C-48 does not provide for such a system which would help thousands of women in dire straits such as Mrs. Wills, because of legal proceedings.

In the meantime we are forced to realize that the rights of women and children are severely breached. One child out of five lives in poverty, and most of the victims of poverty in Canada happen to be women.

Bill C-48 will do nothing to keep track of defaulting husbands and will not be of any use to 80 per cent of women waiting in vain for their alimony payments.

Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Wills is legally unable to defend herself, and I think that her predicament is absolutely absurd.

Therefore I urge the Government to amend Bill C-48 so that women in Canada will be able to receive their alimony payments.

AGRICULTURE

DELAY IN SIGNING TOBACCO CROP AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the House has been following with interest the Government's attempt to set up a national tobacco marketing board. It was one of the first items of farm business to go through the House. Legislators here have been watching its progress with interest. One year after we passed the Bill there is still no board in place.

Farmers were agitating outside the House. The Minister took the two sides, locked them up under the old system, a provincial board, and announced to the delight of the House that there was an agreement. We now find that the agreement seems to have fallen apart when the two parties got together to sign it. The manufacturers have refused to sign and have decided to take some time off for the Christmas holidays.

• (1110)

The Government now has very few options. It can take the proposal from the National Products Marketing Council and sign it into law, which would permit the various provincial producer groups to take that agreement and begin negotiations from there. Instead, the Government seems to have chosen the route of going through the courts causing the resultant delay. Another point the Government should be very much aware of is that in the intervening time between now and when the agreement finally can be reached, there should be temporary border controls placed on importation of tobacco and tobacco products. It is unfair for the manufacturers—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASED INVESTMENT FORECAST FOR 1986

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the latest survey of financial and economic forecasters of the Conference Board of Canada reveals that business investment spending is expected to continue its strong 1985 performance into 1986. According to the findings of this independent survey, growth of 6.6 per cent in general investment spending is expected in 1986. This represents an increase over the already high level of growth we experienced in 1985.

In addition, several trends are evident in the responses to the survey in the past few quarters. To start off, the average growth forecast for the GNE in 1985 has been steadily rising over the last four surveys and now averages 4 per cent. Second, the average growth rate projection for the GNE in 1986 has been increasing and now rests at 2.9 per cent, compared with 2.6 per cent in the fall survey. Finally, the over-all economic picture is improving steadily in the eyes of the forecasters.

All of these positive indicators are music to the ears of Canadians. Unfortunately, some people do not want to hear good news and I am referring to Hon. Members of the Opposition whose shortsightedness almost destroyed our economy. It is time that the Opposition starts giving credit where credit is due instead of constantly engaging in mud-slinging and backbiting.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ANNOUNCED IMPROVEMENT IN BENEFITS

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to congratulate both the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on the recently announced improvements to the Canada Pension Plan.

In exchange for slightly higher contributions, more Canadians than ever will be eligible for CPP benefits at an earlier age, and with less restrictions. I am especially pleased that survivor benefits will no longer be terminated if a widow or widower remarries. I am told that approximately 35,000 Canadians will have benefits reinstated as a result of this change. The disabled will have the base rate of their pensions increased by $136 per month, and I understand that 140,000 Canadians will benefit.

These two changes alone will result in 175,000 Canadians receiving more generous benefits, to say nothing of the many Canadians who will be eligible for CPP benefits five years earlier, at age 60, rather than at age 65, with appropriate actuarial adjustments.

As a supporter of this Government I am very proud that, after little more than a year in office, the federal Government, with unanimous provincial support, has introduced the most generous and comprehensive amendments to the Canada Pension Plan since that Plan was enacted some 20 years ago.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, some people are very busy and get a lot done. Some others use the excuse that they are too busy so they do not have to do certain things. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) falls into the latter category.

A delegation of business people, labour and professional researchers from the Deep River area have been trying to have a meeting with the Minister ever since the disastrous cuts within AECL were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget of May 23.

The Government cut the R and D budget of AECL by $100 million and robbed the company of another $70 million of retained earnings. The former Minister of Science and Technology stated in this House two days ago that money was not being taken out. He cannot even read the Government's own Budget Papers because it is right there in very plain language.

The Minister of Energy keeps saying that she does not have time to meet with the delegation from the Deep River-Chalk River area. I am amazed that she even had the time to approve the cuts. However, she obviously was around then. This is a case of hit and run or, even worse, a case of hit and then hide. I wrote a follow-up letter to the Minister on August 1 asking for a meeting with her on behalf of the business community, labour representatives and research scientists. To date my letter has not even been acknowledged. The Minister is still saying she does not have time to meet with people in the community.

This is a perfect example of how this so-called open Government works. Ministers do not have time for small business people, labour or scientific researchers in Canada. Because of the manner in which she is—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATIONS OF FUTURE SALES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and my colleagues, to offer to you and, through you, the staff of the House of Commons and our pages our warmest Christmas greetings and wishes for a happy holiday. I also want to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on the very spectacular lights on the Hill this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They may be the only light we have had in recent days.

[Translation]

And I also wish to offer the Prime Minister personally, his family and the Members of his caucus and also the Hon. Member for Oshawa and his colleagues, our best wishes for the holiday season.

[English]

I also want to extend those greetings to the Fourth Estate, members of the Press Gallery.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Nystrom: Not Duffy.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We also want to remember Canadians less fortunate than ourselves, those who are out of work and having a tough time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Now that the de Havilland documents are going to be presented to a parliamentary committee which will have an opportunity to review the deal, I hope the Government has drawn a lesson from this. Will the Prime Minister give an undertaking to the House that in any future sale of a Crown corporation the full documentation and details of that sale will be referred to a parliamentary committee before the sale is closed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I want to thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his generous comments to all Members of the House, Mr. Speaker. May I take this opportunity on behalf of my Party and the Government to extend to him and all of his colleagues, as well as the Hon. Member for Oshawa and his colleagues, and to you, Mr. Speaker—but I will not go much beyond that—as well as to all members of the Gallery and our staff, our very best wishes as well for happy holidays.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: In any future transactions we will be respectful of the traditions and customs of the House and we will be searching for ways to provide as much information as possible to Members of the Opposition and public.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR PRECISE RULES FOR FUTURE SALES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when a Crown corporation is put up for sale, we must remember these companies belong to Canadian taxpayers, who are the real shareholders.

In the circumstances, could the Prime Minister, in future, provide more specific rules for prior consideration of these transactions, including information on the future of the jobs involved, the future of Canadian technology and research, and especially on whether control will remain in Canadian hands?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have ever denied the fact that we have an obligation to provide the Opposition and the Canadian people with all the facts of the case, while bearing in mind that we are also talking about a commercial transaction that has a number of confidential aspects, which is only normal.

There are elements that may become problematic if they are revealed before the sale is closed. I think we all know that. However, this does not relieve us from our responsibility to be open in all circumstances, where the sale of Crown assets is concerned. We were in this particular case, and we hope to be even more so in subsequent cases to be considered by the House. In any event, the Leader of the Official Opposition can count on our co-operation at all times with respect to matter that are so vitally important to us.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have one final question. In view of the widespread opposition in the country, particularly that of our religious leaders, would the Prime Minister withdraw Bill C-70 relating to the deindexation of family allowances?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: I'll agree to that.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I have great respect, Mr. Speaker, not only for the religious leaders to whom my right hon. friend refers, but for other leaders in the country, many of whom have expressed deep gratification with the course that the Government is following to restore sanity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Come on.

Mr. Mulroney: As a result of that, the course upon which we have embarked will be followed because we believe that, as the OECD reported yesterday, the Government of Canada is doing better than any other of the OECD countries with few exceptions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I know my right hon. friend would wish us well in the pursuit of jobs and justice for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Mr. Prime Minister, it is the holiday season and therefore a time when we should express our generosity, not just in words but also by our actions. Everyone in Canada will be exchanging gifts at Christmas and New Year's. We have here representatives from all the groups that are asking you . . . I am not just speaking for the Opposition but for all these people, religious leaders, family agencies and women, who are all asking whether you would have the generosity to announce immediately the withdrawal of Bill C-70, for the sake of all the children across this country.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as has been said many times in the House, there is an increase in the child tax credit which makes up for any changes in the family allowance.

Mr. Nystrom: Scrooge.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): As Members know, there will also be an increase in the family allowance as of January 1 rather than the decrease which they have been speaking of in the country.

Ms. Mitchell: That's inaccurate.

Mr. Heap: You know that's not true.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Additionally, Bill C-70 follows the principle of directing the money in social policies to those in greatest need. That principle remains.

[Translation]

INQUIRY IF PRIME MINISTER WILLING TO MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF CERTAIN GROUPS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Mr. Prime Minister, why has your office refused to let you meet all our religious leaders and the family agencies who have a very important matter to discuss with you? Would the Prime Minister be prepared to meet them outside the House?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been meeting with various groups, not only in relation to Bill C-70. The Minister of Finance and I have recently been meeting with social reform groups and considering further issues. Those meetings will continue. The Member should keep in mind that Ministers of the Government have been meeting with these groups and will continue to do so. If he looks at the record he will find that that is the case.

INQUIRY IF PRIME MINISTER DISPOSED TO DISCUSS GOVERNMENT'S DECISION TO REDUCE FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to begin my questioning by joining the Prime Minister and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in wishing, on behalf of my colleagues, all Members opposite a joyful personal year in the months ahead.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What about us?

Mr. Broadbent: And with respect to the Party to my right, figuratively speaking, I say without qualification that I wish it and all its members and their families, in their personal lives, an enjoyable new year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I even extend that, without qualification, with total generosity as the Prime Minister might say, to all the men and women up there in that Gallery.

Mr. Benjamin: Expect Mike Duffy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Now, to get back to Scrooge—

[Translation]

—I have a question about the Government's decision to reduce family allowances. Here in Ottawa, we have a coalition representing a large number of Canadians from all regions, and it wants to meet today with the Prime Minister. My question is directed to the Prime Minister: Will he accept this invitation? Would he be prepared to discuss with Canadians the Government's decision to reduce family allowances?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that discussion has been taking place. It has taken place on the Budget, on the Bill, in the Legislative Committee, and again when the Bill came back. It has been taking place with members of the Government and members of the Opposition meeting with the public. That discussion has taken place.

I believe that the airing of the matter has been adequate. Furthermore, I remind the Leader of the New Democratic Party that when we look at benefits to families, he should also be reminded of the increase in the child tax credit, that there was a strong representation from social groups to change the tax expense for children on the basis that it gave greatest benefit to those with greatest income, and that there was a change to the family allowance that he has addressed personally.

I think we must look at that entire package. I believe the debate has been adequate.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister that I am also aware of the fact that the Government has given a capital gains tax gift to the rich of Canada that will cost the treasury some $500 million a year, which is more than enough to continue family allowance payments the way they should be.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET CHURCH REPRESENTATIVES AND OTHER GROUPS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister because the request for a meeting is with him, now the Minister of National Health and Welfare. That meeting is requested by representatives of the church, women's groups, representatives of the rich and poor and families throughout Canada. That request to meet with the Prime Minister was made some time ago. Will he meet with them sometime today in an act of generosity and Christmas spirit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is probably fair to say that I have been very accessible to groups who wish to meet with me. I have done it on a regular basis at all times. I have never turned down a reasonable request at any time for a meeting that I could accommodate.

Ms. Mitchell: What about women?

Mr. Mulroney: I know that Ministers have—meeting with the women? I am the first Prime Minister to meet with representatives of women's groups in this country on a regular basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: And with representatives of the poor, with religious groups and peace groups. I am the first Prime Minister of the country to go to speak to the peace groups.

Ms. Mitchell: You don't listen and you do not do anything when they ask.

Mr. Benjamin: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask Hon. Members to please allow questions to be put and answered.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: We were elected to deal with the important social problems. For example, the people here who believe today—I know it is not Christmas-like for them to do so—but the people in the galleries should remember that when we brought in our economic program the Members opposite were predicting a loss of 200,000 jobs, but 416,000 new jobs were created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is social justice for the country.

Mr. Speaker: May I remind all Members on all sides that any reference to the presence of anybody in the gallery is entirely out of order.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is right, as he is, that the economy is doing better than not only the Government's forecast and the Opposition's forecast—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Questions and answers should be allowed to be put and answered without applause and comments.

An Hon. Member: It is a big "if".

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Prime Minister with this improvement he should show some generosity by making sure the people get the money who need it, namely, the recipients of family allowances.

Since the Prime Minister has just suggested that he is willing to meet with a lot of groups, instead of meeting with groups at his convenience when he wants to persuade them to do something, will he meet with a group that wants to meet him to persuade him to change his mind?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a supplementary question. It is simply the same question put for the third time, with respect.

Mr. Manly: No.

Mr. Speaker: With respect.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am perfectly prepared to allow supplementary questions but—

Mr. Broadbent: It is a new rule.

Mr. Axworthy: It is a new rule.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is not a new rule. The same question put over and over is contrary to our practice. Order, please. The Hon. Member for York Centre.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SALE OF DE HAVILLAND—HIRING OF BROKERAGE FIRM

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I note that the President of the Treasury Board is back, Mr. Speaker. I hope he heard the news—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —that there has been a very welcome flip-flop by his Party over the question of giving information on the de Havilland sale.

I note that the brokerage firm of Burns Fry has been used as the agent on four of five of the Government's privatizations. There are other good firms that are capable of doing that work. I understand as well that very large commissions will be paid. Will that aspect of this transaction and all the documents be reviewed by the committee looking into the de Havilland sale?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his words of welcome. I was absent yesterday because I was meeting with the ambassadors from the European Economic Community at the behest of the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is the country going to get?

Mr. de Cotret: On the question of information, Mr. Speaker, I think we have made available on the whole transaction all the information that was potentially available to the Opposition from a commercial point of view.

I further made available this morning an addendum to the memorandum outlining many of the points that were made in this House over the last few weeks just so Members opposite can focus their minds more clearly on the specific details that have obviously been concerning them. We will continue in that same spirit of providing all the details.

We are still committed, I would like to emphasize, to the sale of de Havilland to Boeing. We will throughout this process make available, as I indicated in my covering note this morning, all available information. Please phone or call, and we will give you the information that you request.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AWARDING OF BROKERAGE CONTRACTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I consider the Burns Fry information to be very relevant and important. We want to be certain that all these privatizations are not being used as a way of awarding very lucrative business to the friends of the Government.

Again, if I phoned and asked for that information, as the Minister has invited me to do, will I get it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of the privatization exercise, we have employed a great number of firms. I would be happy to make the list available to the Hon. Member. There is no problem there whatsoever.

The reason we are employing a considerable number of outside advisers is to make sure that we are protecting the Canadian taxpayer in every way possible in the sale and divestiture of Crown assets by ensuring that we have the best possible advice. The list is much longer than just one firm. For that reason, I would like to take it under—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since he and the Minister of Finance promised to reconsider budget cuts to social programs when the economy improved, and since the P.M. feels the economy has improved, will he agree to take steps now to index family allowances fully for January? It will cost only $75 million.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are gratified by the manner in which the economy is responding to the leadership shown by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We are also pleased the Hon. Member's Leader has recognized that fact. What we are saying to her—as we have said in the Budget and as we have said subsequently—is that the Government is looking at further social policy initiatives on an ongoing basis. Obviously we want to get the finances of Canada and the deficit under control. Let me say to the Hon. Member that the best guarantee she and Canadians can have for better social programs is for us to have an economy that can afford those social programs. That is our job. That is the relationship between social and economic policy, and we will continue on that path.

Ms. Mitchell: There is absolutely no justification for taking money from children, Mr. Speaker, when there is money coming in through the economy.

USE OF MINIMUM TAX REVENUE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): I want to ask a question of the Finance Minister this time since the Prime Minister will not answer. He has recently introduced a minimum tax, or is in the process of doing so. We agree with that: we will have $300 million extra in the kitty.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question please?

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Finance Minister use the $300 million as extra income to reindex the family allowance in 1986?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member continues to isolate the family allowance. If she is going to be honest with herself and her constituents, she will be looking at this as a total package. The child tax credit has been increasing significantly, much higher than the reduction in the growth rate of the family allowance. As well, something she herself has been calling for—

Ms. Mitchell: It is still deindexed. Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —is a reduction in the child tax exemption.

I would like to be able to say to the Hon. Member that as the economy performs, as we are able to generate the economic activity, that is starting to occur in a very favourable way and the OECD report has been, I think, quite pointed in the way it has referred to the economy this year, by saying that it has no policy recommendations for the Government of Canada. Because things are going so well the OECD has nothing more to add to the policy directions that we have already taken.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION TOWARD PEOPLE OF PORT-CARTIER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Prime Minister had the nerve to inform the House he was available, when we know that the Mayor of Port Cartier has been trying to reach him for a month and a half, but without success.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told the people of Port Cartier that with him as their elected representative, the employment problem at the ITT plant would be dealt with. For months, Cascades Inc. has been setting up a project, and the only other partner they need to carry out the project is the federal Government.

I want to ask the Prime Minister: Why does he insist on undermining the credibility of the promoter and on ignoring urgent calls for help from the Mayor of Port Cartier and people who are seeking jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement is erroneous in the extreme.

On the North Shore, we did indeed inherit a disastrous situation, thanks to the policies of the Liberal Government and the federal Government in Port Cartier, where the impact was very serious indeed. The federal Government has agreed to invest $60 million at Port Cartier which will create 450 new jobs on a permanent basis, something the people appreciate as a very important step.

Furthermore, regarding the ITT matter and others as well, I had an opportunity to discuss this last Friday with Premier Bourassa, who is very interested in this particular case. If there is a solution, it will take joint action on this issue and on others as well. In fact, we will probably have an announcement to make in the near future.

CASCADES INC.—GOVERNMENT'S OFFER—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Prime Minister may have discussed this with the Premier of Quebec, but the Quebec Premier's offer is on the table. I just spoke to Mr. Bernard Lemaire, President of Cascades, who told me that if by January 1 the federal Government had not made its offer of $12 million as stipulated, there would be no more promoter—

Mr. Speaker: The question, please!

Mr. Lapierre: Is the Prime Minister going to deliver the goods by January 1? Otherwise, he can kiss the project goodbye.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): That is interesting. Now if the promoter feels that the way to proceed is through the Liberal Opposition, that is his concern. But as far as we are concerned, we are handling this jointly with the Government of Quebec.

Mr. Malépart: Shades of Duplessis!

Mr. Mulroney: There is a joint dossier involving both the Quebec Government and the federal Government.

Mr. Bourrassa was sworn in last Thursday. We met that Friday, the very next day.

Mr. Ouellet: A federal decision!

Mr. Mulroney: A decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: —was made, Mr. Speaker, to assign Messrs. Roch Bolduc and Paul Tellier, our respective Clerks, to work on these issues. We are expecting to receive a joint recommendation, from Messrs. Tellier and Bolduc in the near future, on a series of projects, including Port Cartier. And I think I can inform my hon. friend that Port Cartier and the North Shore will fare much better in this instance than they did under the Liberal Government.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED DEREGULATION—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON SAFETY AND MAINTENANCE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, my questions are directed to the Minister of Transport. They arise from the events of the last few weeks and the statements which he has made. The Minister has said that he will not allow any deregulation or legislative changes which would denigrate safety, maintenance, and inspection. How does he know how to do that without having conducted a thorough, in-depth study, including the Transport Committee, to define properly, in strong and clear terms, what "fit, willing and able" mean, and what the whole matter of freedom of entry and exit means in the areas of safety, maintenance, and inspection? Is it his intention to do that before he brings in legislation, and when will he be bringing in that legislation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should know that the position paper presented in July reflected the Government's desire to move toward regulatory reform. We identified a number of areas of concern, which we asked the Standing Committee on Transport to look at and give us recommendations. I have received those recommendations. Certainly they will be taken into consideration during the drafting process. Anything in that report which will enhance safety or economic regulatory reform and produce the best transportation framework for Canada, to meet its unique circumstances, will certainly be taken into account.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SAFETY MEASURES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, in his last report the Auditor General indicated that none of the Transport Canada regional offices could inspect all airlines in their jurisdiction even once a year, and the Minister has said that he has beefed up safety measures—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Will he say—

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Benjamin: Wait for it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, a question, please.

Mr. Benjamin: Will he say exactly, in some detail, what that beefing up consists of? All I have seen is a campaign poster which reads: "Think security in airports in Canada". What has he done to beef up inspection procedures and the number of inspectors required to do a decent job?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the system-wide operation, there are some 614 inspectors. With regard to the passenger safety side, there has been a 20 per cent increase in the number of people between 1984-85 and 1985-86. That is a clear indication that safety is of paramount importance. Surely the Hon. Member knows that we just passed the Aeronautics Bill, which amounts to the most progressive aviation legislation in the world. Surely he also knows that in many areas of transportation safety the mechanisms are beefed up. There are more mechanisms to enforce the necessary rules and regulations. I hope the Hon. Member will continue to work with us in improving the environment of safety to which I am committed and to which I am sure he is committed.

TRADE

ENTRY OF SERVICE TECHNICIANS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He will know that manufacturers in my riding and throughout Canada have had trouble in recent months getting after sales service people into the United States. This is still a problem. Could the Minister tell us whether something will finally be done about it?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that yesterday the United States Court of Appeal set aside the ruling of the lower court until such time as the appeal is heard. Our workers and servicemen will now be able to continue to enter the States to service those contracts without any problems. Also I am happy to advise him that I discussed the problem with Mr. Yeutter during my talks this past Wednesday, with a view to seeking a permanent solution to the problem.

Oral Questions

LOBBYING

PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On September 9 the Prime Minister promised the following in a document which he sent to my office:

I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House what forced him to break yet another promise to the Canadian people?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): In answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we have quite simply decided to give the matter more consideration, and we hope that Canadians generally will indeed express their views. It would certainly be more constructive if the Hon. Member were to voice his representations before the parliamentary committee instead of indulging in cheap criticisms.

ALLEGED PRESSURE EXERTED BY LOBBYISTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In an interview yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs admitted that lobbyists had brought pressure to bear on him with respect to this matter. Can he tell us today who were those lobbyists who used such pressure tactics? Can he name them and, more particularly, can he tell us why he listened to them, contrary to the advice of his leader?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, we believe that the impact of regulations on lobbyists and lobbying deserves more consideration and public airing, which is why we made that decision.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF BILL C-70

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister; I hope he will answer it. In the spirit of Christmas, and as a gift to the kids of the country, will he now withdraw Bill C-70, a Bill to deindex family allowances?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the best gift that any Government can try to give to the kids of the country is jobs and a sound economy, and that is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We are going to take that mountain of debt off the backs of the children of the country, which was being placed there by you and your Liberal friends.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We are finally going to give the kids of the country an equal chance for some growth and prosperity and new jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, we have heard enough rhetoric.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Nystrom: I would like an answer to the question. Will he or will he not withdraw Bill C-70? Why chisel on the children of the country? Will he or will he not withdraw that Bill? I want an answer.

• (1150)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the answer in this case. May I remind the Hon. Member that there are several Hon. Members of his own Party who are rising to ask questions. I will therefore allow this to be the last time that simple question is asked.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as you indicated, it is the same question, and the same answer applies.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL MAILED TO CHILDREN

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. I know it is the time of year for the giving and receiving of gifts, but a 13-year-old boy from my riding recently received an unsolicited catalogue from a film distribution company based in Canada. The material, or trash, contained in the brochure was, in my opinion, of an explicit, pornographic nature and entirely unsuitable for a minor, particularly one as young as 13 years old. Can the Minister tell the House how this type of material can he sent through our postal system to a 13-year-old boy, and what steps the Government is taking to prevent this type of occurrence?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for bringing this to my attention. I share his concern. I will bring this matter to the Security and Investigation Branch of Canada Post Corporation for its review and recommendations.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

OPENING OF OFFICE IN BARBADOS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to know whether or not the Prime Minister gave his permission for the Christmas-in-Barbados junket undertaken at the taxpayers' expense by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth in order to open an office which has been open for the last six months?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I saw the report in this morning's press, the one to which the Hon. Member is apparently referring. The matter will be the subject of inquiry to see whether or not the accuracy level of it is of the same standards as the accuracy level of several other similar stories that have come out in the last several months.

TRAVEL BY MINISTERS AND MEMBERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Canadian government officials in Barbados confirmed today that the trip was organized at a time when the Member was probably going to be in the Barbados anyway at his own family hideaway. I would ask the Prime Minister, in light of the fact that he is asking the women and children of the country to pay through cut-backs in the increases in family allowances, how he can justify April in Paris, July and August on safari, and Christmas in the Barbados for his own Members of Parliament.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): And Taiwan for Boudria.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I want to know if he is going to send a cheque for $15,000 back to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer to my question. The women and children of this country want an answer.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Ms. Copps: This is the House of Commons and you're ripping off taxpayers. It's a taxpayers' rip-off.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is indeed the House of Commons.

Ms. Copps: Well, answer!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

NATIONAL REVENUE

FORMER CAPE BRETON EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR TAX REMISSION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It refers to the closure by the Government of the heavy water plants on Cape Breton Island. As a result of those closures, 630 workers have lost their jobs and they will lose up to 60 per cent of their severance package to income tax. Will the Minister tell the House whether or not he will grant the tax remission to those workers that they have requested?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concerns of my colleague. As he knows, we met with some of the employees last October and I would like to point out to the Hon. Member and to the House that the severance package offered by AECL is an equitable one and that there is a measure of tax relief available to those employees either by using contributions to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan or a Registered Pension Plan. I can only assure the Hon. Member that we will consider studying the situation.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member and the House that the Government, led by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is doing something far more practical. We are making extraordinary efforts to provide alternative jobs for the people of Cape Breton, which in the end is the most practical solution.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL CONSIDERATION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Obviously that is where the log jam lies. I would like to give the Minister a chance to be Santa Claus. In light of the fact that these workers face a very bleak future while at this time we are lucky enough to have jobs, will the Minister of Finance give the serious consideration that was given by the Prime Minister to the workers of Gagnon, to a tax remission for these 630 workers from an area in which the chances of getting a job are very, very bleak indeed? Can he at least do that for them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows, I have had a number of discussions with the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso on this particular matter and we are reviewing the question very carefully. I would ask the Hon. Member not to spread these negative doubts about the future of Cape Breton.

As my colleague has just said, we are making extraordinary efforts through the Cape Breton tax credit, the most generous tax credit available in any part of the country. It is starting to work.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why don't you give them some help now?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is. We are helping people now because people are gettings jobs as a result of that tax credit.

Mr. Rodriguez: But they're not going to get those jobs for a long time. You give them some help. Give them some help now.

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE IN INDIA

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I will direct my question to the Minister for International Trade. As the Minister may be aware, Vancouver Island remains one of the last densely populated areas in Canada which does not enjoy the benefits of natural gas. Consequently, recent media reports that Canada may be providing substantial financial assistance toward a proposed natural gas pipeline in India have created some consternation among the citizens of Vancouver Island. Would the Minister clarify the Government's financial involvement in the India gas line project and the reasons behind that involvement?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise the Hon. Member that India has called for bids on a pipeline project. A number of Canadian companies are interested in it and, to enable them to be in a position to bid on it, export financing must be made available. I am happy to announce that the Export Development Corporation is prepared to make export financing available for a company from Canada that would be successful in bidding on this project, and no aid or concessional financing from CIDA is involved in this matter.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED REVELATIONS TO UNITED STATES TAX AUTHORITIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. I received a letter from a solicitor in Manitoba which alleges a very serious breach in the confidentiality of the tax system. According to this document, the Canadian tax authorities have given information to U.S. tax authorities relating to the exact earnings European investors holding assets in this country have received. I believe that this constitutes a serious breach of Section 241 of the Income Tax Act. Did the Minister authorize the transfer of this information to U.S. tax authorities? Does he know about it, and does he not also consider it to be a serious breach of our tax system?

• (1200)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my colleague that it is a very serious matter if there are some irregularities involved. However, as the Hon. Member knows, pursuant to tax treaties between countries, the provision of information under certain circumstances in permissible. I will check to see whether or not there has been any breach in procedure, either on our part or on the part of American recipients of this information pursuant to the treaty. I will report back to the House.

CONCEPT OF CONFIDENTIALITY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Government has several times in the House used the concept of confidentiality as a means of protecting disclosure of information on such matters as the Gulf takeover. There now seems to be a free flow of information to U.S. tax authorities. Will the Minister provide us with the guidelines which are used and which set out what rules are now applied by his officials in supplying information to U.S. tax authorities on any resident or non-resident in Canada who pays taxes in this country?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consider this as a representation. However, I want to tell my colleague that I think he is exaggerating when he talks about a free flow of information. I do not believe that to be the case. I repeat to him that there are certain exceptions to Section 241 and to confidentiality requirements pursuant to tax treaties between countries. If there has been any breach of these types of safeguards, I will certainly provide him with the details.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, December 19, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

However, 129 petitions out of 300 presented do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You guys are misleading the country!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask all Members and all Ministers to come to order.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask all Members and all Ministers, and all Ministers and all Members, to come to order, please.

The two petitions presented by filing with the Clerk of the House meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED ACCUSATION BY MR. MULRONEY

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I submit to you it is indeed an attack on the privileges of every Member of this House when certain false accusations are made against an Hon. Member in the House by another Hon. Member, which has been done on repeated occasions by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

The Prime Minister made reference to the trip which I took to Taiwan with Conservative Members from Mississauga North (Mr. Horner), Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), York North (Mr. Roman) and Vaudreuil (Mr. Cadieux), and others. The Prime Minister has insinuated falsely, I submit to you—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: Listen to him, he has a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear any argument with regard to any matter, I must ask the Hon. Member to tell me precisely what his question of privilege is.

Mr. Ouellet: He is doing that!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) will please allow me to hear the Hon. Member's argument.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell knows that our practices are that rather than give me the argument he may wish to put to the House at this point, he must give me immediately his prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Ouellet: That is what he is doing.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that there have been serious erroneous attacks by a Member of Parliament against another Member of Parliament, which is my initial submission.

Mr. Speaker: Would you please fix the House microphone.

Mr. Boudria: I submitted to you in the first sentence that an untrue attack made by a Member of Parliament against another Member in this House is an abuse of our parliamentary privileges.

Ms. Copps: A lie!

Mr. Boudria: I was going on to describe very briefly what, indeed, that attack had been by the Hon. Member for Manicouagan, the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member is making an allegation that—

Mr. Ouellet: No!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member is arguing that a mistatement of fact on one side or the other is the substance of his—

Mr. Ouellet: No!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is that the basis of his suggestion, that there is a question of privilege involved? I think he knows that is not true.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member knows that, if he believes that something has been said which is improper or otherwise, there are recourses which he may take. However, it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer you to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 319. During Oral Questions the Prime Minister referred to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell by his family name. I think that is contrary to the rules and customs of the House. I want Your Honour to remind the Prime Minister that we are supposed to be addressed properly in the House. I refer to him as the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I think he should be made aware of the rules and follows them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has raised a correct point of order. In fact, it is the practice and custom of the House not to use family names and that all Members should be referred to by their ridings. I ask all Members—all Members—to remember that rule since it is honoured increasingly in the breach.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The first point of order I will hear will be that of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Point of Order—Mr. Prud'homme

[Translation]

POINTS OR ORDER

REQUEST FOR PHOTOCOPY OF PETITION PRESENTED IN HOUSE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, you made a ruling a while ago about the petitions tabled yesterday, and my point of order concerns those petitions.

The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who is a very good friend, tabled a petition which said that the Official Opposition was presenting too many petitions yesterday.

I immediately went to the table to read the petition and to obtain a photocopy. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very surprised to hear that I would not get a complete photocopy, which is quite unprecedented. I was told: You can have a photocopy of half of it, namely the text, but not of the names.

However, I already knew quite well what the petition of the Hon. Member for Athabasca said and I wanted to know who were these Canadians who objected vigourously to having the Opposition present a series of petitions on deindexation.

I was very surprised at what happened, Mr. Speaker, because, for the last several years, I have been able to get nearly on the spot all the photocopies I wished of certain petitions which had caught my attention when I wanted to see the names of those who had signed them. I was therefore quite surprised not to be able to get a copy since these documents are official. Moreover, I was informed that I could copy it by hand later, but I could have sat down at the table to copy the names.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to see the names of these people immediately to satisfy myself that, while they might be Canadians from various parts of the country, they probably were, as they were indeed, I believe, employees of the House of Commons, and they had signed the petition on the spot.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, before a precedent is set, and in accordance with Citation 344 of the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne, I would like to ask you to rule today that, if a Member asks for a photocopy of a document which has been made public by the fact of being tabled, he should get it, and get all of it.

[English]

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: May I resolve this point of order, please. I will then hear from the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), followed by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

I think the Hon. Member is raising a point of order which was brought to my attention earlier this morning. The Hon. Member did leave a note at my office last night. I was otherwise occupied at that precise moment.

I have checked our practices. I understand it is our practice, in fact, not to reply to requests generally for photocopies of petitions but to indicate that petitions are available for reading, after, of course, a judgemnt has been made with respect to whether or not they are in order. Therefore, I appreciate the point the Hon. Member is raising. I would be perfectly happy to review our practices and report back to the Chamber on the matter.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West on a point of order.

ALLEGED ACCUSATION BY MR. MULRONEY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have always understood it to be the tradition that when something is said by an Hon. Member which is untrue, the Hon. Member about which it is said has the right to rise in his place and put the facts before the House. In the case of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), he wants to put before the House that the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to his having spent taxpayers' funds to go to Taiwan is untrue.

Mr. Tobin: Absolutely false.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Either on a point of order or on a question of privilege, it has always been traditional for the Hon. Member to have the right to set that out.

In fact, if Your Honour looks at the precedents you will see that there have been occasions when allegations by one Member against another have been accepted as grounds for a question of privilege, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and have been the matter of a decision. One way or another this House will be tainted unless the untrue and unfair accusation of the Prime Minister against the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is put aside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West has, indeed, just done what it is our custom to do. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell rose on a question of privilege which, in my view, is quite a different matter. I asked him to repeat his question of privilege and what he put before the House was the issue that there was a question of privilege involved.

• (1210)

Ms. Copps: It was a lie.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Be quiet, Sheila.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate exactly the point the Hon. Member for Windsor West is making. That is why I chose to let him make his point of order. However, I have always tried to make the distinction between the use of a short statement under a point of order, which I understand to have certain values and meanings, and the use of that through a Question of Privilege, which I happen to regard as a very distinct and special issue of parliamentary matter.

Therefore, I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West can draw from what I have said that I have sympathy with what he is saying as a point of order. I think the point has been made.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Are you going to recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order so he can put the facts on the record?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the Hon. Member for Windsor West has put the facts on the record.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They are not on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West has made a point of order—

Mr. Gauthier: You interrupted him.

Mr. Speaker: —which is not a point of order, and I have tried to deal with it as best I can.

The next point of order I received was from the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Then I will hear the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre).

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) said in his point of order that he wanted to check—

Mr. Gauthier: We are debating.

Mr. Shields: —the petition with respect to whether the petitioners were real Canadians or House of Commons staff. I got that on translation and I just wanted some clarification. I am sure he is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are getting farther and farther and farther away from what is a point of order.

Ms. Copps: I will write up another petition.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Following your advice, I would like to raise the matter I raised with you previously but this time on a point of order, which I understand is your direction. I will be very brief in explaining to this House that I believe the accusations made against me by the Prime Minister are untrue, are false and certainly should not have been made in this House of Commons.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that at no time at all during the trip which seven Conservative Members of Parliament and I made to Taiwan were public taxpayers' funds used. The allegations were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to review the "blues" as we refer to them, and arrive at a judgment upon it yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You just want to protect the Taiwanese.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every time you try it, Ray, we are going to get up—every time.

Mr. Speaker: Could I ask Hon. Members and Right Hon. Members to come to order, please.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has put his view of what is true on the record and that is what that procedure is for. There is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege involved.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a large number of residents of British Columbia, including a number of residents from Hornby Island and from Vancouver Island, as well as the lower mainland, who are concerned that the deindexation of universal family allowance and the cut-back in public commitment to child benefits will have a particularly unfair effect on single parent mothers. They call upon us in the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases of the last Budget.

EXPORT OF LOGS THROUGH PORT OF STEWART

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a very lengthy petition signed by almost every resident of the community of Stewart in Northwestern British Columbia. The petitioners hope that the House will do something to encourage that the logs which are presently being exported through the Port of Stewart be loaded on ships locally. This will help to create immediate jobs in the Town of Stewart. The Stewart residents feel they deserve a part of the value of this forest resource. I would like to thank Lloyd and Joan Jagoda and Frank Morrison for co-ordinating—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and the duty of presenting to the House some petitions asking the Government in this festive season to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

These petitions are from Etobicoke-Centre, from Portneuf, Quebec, and from the federal constituency of St. Paul's, in Ontario. Another petition is from Hull-Aylmer, and finally I have another one from the federal riding of Richelieu, Province of Quebec.

FULL INDEXATION OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty of presenting to the House a petition that comes somewhat belatedly, but on which I want to act just the same. It is a petition from people living in the Habitations LeMans, one of the major institutions in my constituency, run by Mr. Euclide Laliberté. Those constituents asked that the Government maintain full indexation of old age security pensions. They will be happy to know that this has been done, but I want to table the petition on their behalf just the same.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility and the privilege of tabling in this House some petitions signed by residents of Leross, Semans, Nokomis and Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. All of these petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of family allowances.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to the House of Commons a series of petitions dealing with the family allowance. These petitioners are from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan and Calgary and Edmonton, Alberta. These petitioners call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several hundred people from my riding dealing with the family allowance. These people state specifically that, in their opinion, the deindexation of universal family allowances is an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers, and that the cut-backs in family allowances are unfair in the face of budget hand-outs of billions of dollars to the oil companies and to the banks.

I have another petition with regard to family allowances from another group of residents from Winnipeg with slightly different wording.

INQUIRY INTO USE OF NANOOSE BAY TEST RANGE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have three different petitions here. The first two petitions relate to the test range at Nanoose. One petition calls for the agreement between Canada and the United States not to be renewed until a full public inquiry has been held.

The second petition states that because of the test range's contribution to militarism and its damage to the environment, the agreement should not be renewed at all.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND REPEAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): I have a third petition, Mr. Speaker, which calls upon the Government to rescind its plans to deindex family allowance partially and to rescind unfair tax increases which are combined at the same time with tax give aways to oil companies and banks.

Mr. Speaker: I will rturn to petitions in a moment but there is something I should say now which I should have said before.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO TABLE OFFICER, MR. MAXIME GUITARD

Mr. Speaker: The House, I believe, will want to extend congratulations to one of our very special people. There is a gentleman sitting at the Table whose last day at the Table will be today. He is not leaving the House of Commons, I assure Hon. Members. Maxime Guitard has given unbelievably fine service at the Table. He will be performing a new job as of next week. He is not leaving the Chamber, I assure those of you who care, as we all do, about Maxime. I thought the House would want to extend its congratulations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting on behalf of citizens of the federal constituency of Shefford a common grievance on the problem of family allowances. These citizens would like the federal Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I will also present the same petition on behalf of residents of the federal constituency of Richmond-South Delta in British Columbia, residents of the wonderful constituency of Hillsborough in Prince Edward Island, and residents of the constituency of Okanagan North in British Columbia.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from people in several constituencies in Canada relating to the deindexation of family allowances. These people pray that the Canadian House of Commons reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind this unfair form of tax increase. The first petition is from Trois Rivieres in the Province of Quebec. The second petition is from Kootenay West in British Columbia and is signed by many people from that area. The third petition is from the constituency of Assiniboia in Saskatchewan. It is signed by a lengthy list of petitioners and is with regard to the deindexation of family allowances—

[English]

I have a petition from the great riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore in Toronto signed by many petitioners. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Broadview-Greenwood, also in Toronto, signed by many petitioners. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from the riding of Sarnia-Lambton which is signed by a large number of Canadian citizens from that riding.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO MR. MAXIME GUITARD

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I want to join you in congratulating Mr. Maxime Guitard, and thank him for his loyal and extraordinary services to the House of Commons. It is my hope that we will continue receiving his excellent advice, which he always extends in a fair and equitable way to all Members in this House.

As an officer of the Table his duty is to treat every Member of the House of Commons equally, new or old, from any of the three Parties. I think he has given a good example of that, as have all the others, of course.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): To comply with Your Honour's wishes, I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to table a number of petitions. The first one is signed by a group from the Champlain riding, namely, the Coalition des femmes pour les allocations familiales, concerning the Government's decision to deindex family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table another petition from people residing in the federal riding of Portneuf who are asking again the Prime Minister of Canada to renounce its project to deindex the family allowances and child tax credit. I take this opportunity to congratulate my friend the Hon. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who has tabled a great many petitions we are all aware of his complete dedication to this cause, and I hope he will have a restful Holiday Season, because he has been very active throughout the year, having been selected by our caucus as our champion on these issues.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on the same subject from Toronto. It is addressed to the Prime Minister of Canada and the Cabinet and begs them to reconsider their final decision. While offering you my best wishes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to present my last petition from the fabulous, beautiful district of Kootenay West where Expo '86 will be held—

Ms. Mitchell: Expo will not be held in Kootenay West!

Mr. Prud'homme: Expo '86 will be held in Vancouver, British Columbia. Maybe some people will offer each other gifts during the Christmas season and go to Expo in British Columbia. It is a beautiful province and it is going to be a fabulous Expo. However, the people there are also very, very worried about this project to deindex family allowances. I would like to table this petition, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, petitions continue to flood in every day on the issue of having family allowances reindexed to the real cost of living so that children and mothers will not suffer through a reduced family support system.

The first petitions are from Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. The next petition also asks for full indexation of the universal family allowance and for the House of Commons to rescind the unfair tax increase. It is from Calgary, Alberta.

I have another petition on the same subject from Edmonton, Alberta, the land of Conservatives who are telling the Conservatives to reindex the family allowance.

I also have a petition from Saskatchewan with quite a number of names on it, Mr. Speaker. The petitioners are saying that the accelerated cut-backs in child benefits on top of the sales tax changes and excise tax increases are unfair.

They are asking that those taxes be rescinded and that the family allowance be fully indexed.

I have quite a number of petitions from Ontario. The first is from Kanata, Kingston, and Gloucester, Ontario. It protests the deindexation of universal family allowances, the massive cuts that this will mean to child benefits, and the unfair taxes. They call for full indexation of the universal family allowance.

Another petition is from Crystal Beach, Ontario, which is near where I grew up. There are quite a number of signatures on it. I am glad that the good people of Crystal Beach, Ontario, realize that the Conservatives are doing a disservice to Canadians, particularly to Canadian families. They are calling for the reindexation of the univeral family allowance and the rescinding of unfair tax increases.

I have another petition which is from the machinists' union, as was the last one. This one is signed by citizens of St. Thomas Ontario. They are opposed to the Government policy and, I am sure they would expect the Government, now that it is saying that the economy is improved, to fulfil its promise not to cut back on social programs if the economy improves. These people want full indexation returned to the family allowance.

The next petition is on the same subject and is from a number of members of the Gray family in Aylmer, Ontario. They also protest the cuts in the family allowance.

Several of the many petitions I have yet to present are from British Columbia. The first one is from Victoria Drive in Vancouver in my riding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I believe the Member is well aware of the rules. If she has more petitions on the same subject, could she please file them with the Table?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I just have two more petitions from Vancouver which I would like to include. They are on the same subject and ask the Government and the House of Commons to reindex the family allowance to the full cost of living and to rescind unfair tax increases before Christmas.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I wish also to table a number of petitions against deindexation of family allowances from citizens residing in the Quebec ridings of Sherbrooke, Beauce, Laval, Lotbinière, Champlain, Saint-Maurice, Trois-Rivières, as well as in Mississauga-South, Moose Jaw (Saskatchewan), and Vancouver-East.

All these Canadian men and women are asking the Government not to deindex the family allowances.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have also a number of petitions against the Government's plan to deindex the family allowances. These petitions are from the Quebec ridings of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, Quebec East and Rosemont.

• (1230)

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions that deplore the fact the Government intends to deindex family allowances.

The petitions are of course from several different ridings, and I am told that some were sent to Conservative Members, who refused to table them in the House, so that with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring a number of these petitions to the attention of the House. They all have one thing in common and that is that they deplore deindexation of family allowances.

First, I have one from the federal riding of St. Catharines. I have another one from the federal riding of Manicouagan. I have another one, Mr. Speaker, from the riding of Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead. I have another from the federal riding of Trois-Rivières. Mr. Speaker, I have another petition, this time from the federal riding of Jonquières. And I have another one from the federal riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, where people wrote to tell me, Mr. Speaker, that their Member refused to table petitions, and they are insisting on full indexation of family allowances.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a number of petitions sent to me by constituents in a number of ridings in this country who are asking the Government of Canada to reinstate immediately full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

These petitions are from the federal riding of Brome-Missisquoi, from the City of Toronto—it is hard to tell exactly which riding—but in any event, they are residents of the City of Toronto. I also have petitions from residents of the federal ridings of Sudbury and Windsor West in Ontario, and finally from Ottawa-Carleton in the National Capital Region.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO MAY 1985 BUDGET PROVISIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): I too have hundreds of extra names to add to the pressure that we hope will lead to the Government making some shifts in its policy. The first petition protests the budget hand-outs made in the past Budget, such as half a million dollars in tax-free capital gains, greater RRSP deductions for high-income recipients, plus the $9 billion in hand-outs to the oil companies and the billion dollar bail-out of the banks. This petition comes from Nova Scotia and such towns as Enfield, Windsor Junction, Milford, Dartmouth, Halifax, Milford Station, Wellington, Sackville, Fall River, Nine Mile River and Oakfield.

CHANGES IN CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): The second petition I wish to present is in protest to the changes in the child tax credit which will lead to a decrease for even the poorest families by 1990. It comes from the Canadian Association of Schools of Social Work here in Ottawa.

[Translation]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): The third petition, Mr. Speaker, comes from Quebec. It opposes changes to family allowances, and the petitioners humbly ask for full indexation of family allowances.

Those petitions come from Westmount, Dorval in Montreal, Saint-Eustache, Lachine and other parts of the Province of Quebec.

[English]

My final petition is from North York in Downsview. It is signed by several hundred people who are making, as strongly as they possibly can, the demand to restore indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit system in this country.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions. The first is from the Women Against the Federal Budget. It states that we, the undersigned, believe that children are everyone's responsibility and that all parents should receive Government assistance whose value is at least as high or higher than present family allowance values. We therefore strongly oppose the budget proposals to reduce the cost of living protection of family allowances and demand that this proposal be withdrawn as soon as possible.

I am sure that citizens from the Toronto-St. Paul area who wrote this petition were referring to the family allowance Bill.

[Translation]

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, comes from the riding of Longueuil, in Quebec. It submits that the family allowances and the child tax credit, which are Government programs, are an essential help for families with children.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could I ask the Hon. Member to summarize and not read the petition?

[Translation]

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, this petition deals with family allowances, and those families ask that they be reinstated at their proper level. Those petitioners are from Longueuil.

I have another one from the federal riding of Quebec East asking for the reinstatement of full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. It says $55 million will be cut from support to families if the Government does not reconsider that measure.

[English]

You may be uncomfortable but these people are the constituents who voted for the Members opposite. They have a right to speak their mind and be heard.

The last petition comes from the riding of Richelieu. It is my pleasure to speak on their behalf and tell the Government that they would like to see the Bill withdrawn and indexation restored as soon as possible.

[Translation]

They are signed by both English and French-speaking people, which means that both—

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, when the little boys across the way come to order I will present a petition which comes from the liberated riding of Spadina—liberated from the two old Parties. The people of Spadina are stating that the 3 per cent deindexation of the family allowance and the other cut-backs to the child benefits, too numerous to mention in the reading of a petition, are very unfair to families with children, especially in light of the very large hand-outs to those who already have more money than they need. Therefore, your petitioners are requesting the House to ensure that the Government will withdraw its legislation which is chopping family allowance and is making poor families poorer, and also will rescind the unfair tax increases and unfair tax give aways to the large corporations.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to protect the reputation of people who are wrongly charged with an offence and who are therefore subject to be fingerprinted and to have a police record established, by forbidding publication of this record in case of acquittal or withdrawal of the case.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move concurrence in the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments presented to the House on Thursday, October 17, 1985.

Before hearing the question put, I would like to say a few words about this report.

I am the joint chairman of this Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. To appreciate the nature of our report and the significance of our all partisan and our bicameral criticism of the oil carriage limitation regulations, it is important that I tell the House something about our committee concerning its mandate and its composition.

This committee is not one of the oldest in the House of Commons or in the other place. It is a committee which has an important job, although it is a job which, in my brief time of service and some association with the committee in the past, has never been at all in the public limelight. The limelight does not assist this committee in doing its work. Remarkably, over the past years we have been able to operate, I believe, almost completely by unanimity, not only unanimity among all Parties in the House but unanimity among members of the committee and the other place.

I want to pay tribute to members of the committee, who have served without very much public attention over the years, in keeping this important committee going. I want particularly to refer to my predecessor, the present Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) who was a distinguished House Chairman of that committee for several years.

The practice has always been that the House joint chairman should be a member of the opposition Party. During the time when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was Prime Minister, the House chairman was Mr. Ken Robinson, a former colleague of ours, a former Liberal Member of Parliament who also performed a distinguished function as joint chairman of the committee.

I want to say a few words about the composition of the committee. More important, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell you about our mandate and what it is that has brought us to our criticism of the oil carriage regulations to which I have referred and which our report addresses.

The committee's mandate has developed over the near decade the committee has been in existence. The mandate has been developed in consultation with interested parties across the country and in consultation with other democratic parliamentary institutions around the world, which have also been developing a form of review of the regulations and other statutory instruments generated pursuant to statute and pursuant to prerogative in those countries.

I wish we had the time to look at all our criteria, but the criteria have developed. There are 15 of them. I would like to tell the House something about each and every one of the 15 criteria that we use in examining regulations and other statutory instruments, particularly those criteria having to do with the oil carriage limitation regulations, the subject of this report.

Some of our criteria are very obvious. We are first mandated to examine regulations and other statutory instruments to see whether or not they are authorized by the terms of the enabling statute. Or, if there is no enabling statute, if such regulations are an exercise of the royal prerogative, that the terms of the exercise of the royal prerogative are in conformity with the common law. We have added to that first of our 15 terms of reference the additional observation that we expect the regulation or other statutory instrument to state clearly the precise authority for the making of the instrument.

That is the weakness of the regulation which is before us, Mr. Speaker. The regulation is purported justified by a section of the Canada Shipping Act. In the unanimous view of our committee, it is bolstered by the very competent legal advice we received from the Library of Parliament, for which we are most grateful. Those regulations are not justified by the section of the Act which the regulations claim justify their creation.

We also examined regulations and other statutory instruments to see whether they complied with the Statutory Instruments Act in respect of transmittal, recording, number or publication. I remind the House that the Statutory Instruments Act was a great step forward in the development of this area of public policy. It established tight criteria, designed to ensure that, almost like legislation itself, regulations and other statutory instruments would come to the attention of the public, particularly those affected by them. Also it would ensure that by looking at them, they would be able to understand them, where they come from and what they were intended to do. As I indicated, that is one of the failings of the subject of the fourth report on which I am moving concurrence.

Our third criterion is to require—and this is another requirement of the Statutory Instruments Act—that the instrument with which we are dealing has complied with any tabling provision or other condition set forth in the enabling statute. This criterion was needed because very often—In fact, more often than one would expect or more often than was really required—a particular statute sets out its own internal code for regulations which are to be created and are to emanate under the statute. We want not only to ensure that the regulation complies with the Statutory Instruments Act as to those formalities—I call them "formalities", but they are important for the citizen; that is the whole object of our efforts—but to ensure that it complies with any requirements of a similar sort which may be put out under its enabling statute.

Under the third of our 15 conditions, we want to assure ourselves, in doing our job as a joint committee, that the time and manner of compliance with the enabling statute are clearly set out.

Our fourth criterion is somewhat more controversial. It is that in doing our work, and eventually making our reports, we seek to ascertain whether the regulation or other statutory instrument makes some unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the enabling statute or by the prerogative. Mr. Speaker, you and other Hon. Members might think that this criterion could give rise to partisanship and to some criticism based upon ulterior motives by one or another of the members of the committee. That has never been the case. When the royal prerogative or the legislative authority has been used in some unusual or unexpected manner, there has been unanimity within the committee that it ought to be brought to the attention of the Minister responsible and that hopefully the concern of the committee can be allayed by some action which the Minister might take.

For example, we have been occasionally concerned when fees have been increased by a very substantial amount. This can be done under the regulation. The regulation authorizes the Minister to set fees but we, as a committee, have always felt that, if a fee is quadrupled or multiplied by 10 or 20 times, that is the sort of initiative under a regulation or other statutory instrument on which we ought to focus the attention of the Government and ask it to take another look at it to see whether the enabling authority or prerogative, whichever of the two it is, might be used in a more expected and defensible manner.

Our fifth criterion calls upon us to ascertain that the regulation or other statutory instrument does not trespass unduly on the rights and liberties of the subject. This can happen sometimes. We are now looking at some regulations under the postal Act which allow, or appear to allow, very abrupt rights of entry to officials working for the postal corporation, to ascertain whether the stamping machines are being used properly, whether the fees have been paid and so on. We are focusing on that in our committee to try to encourage the post office to develop more normal, usual and safeguarded methods of providing for entry, which could sometimes take place into someone's home, as the Act is presently written and as the regulations presently provide.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Why don't you use the telephone book, Bob?

Mr. Kaplan: That is not the criticism that we have of the regulation which is the subject of this report.

Our sixth criterion is one to which we have very frequent recourse in our committee. It is the criterion by which we criticize regulations and other statutory instruments that tend, directly or indirectly, to exclude the jurisdiction of the courts without explicit authorization therefor in the enabling statute, or that make the rights and liberties of the subject dependent upon administrative discretion rather than upon the judicial process.

This is an area in which I should like to congratulate those responsible for the production of regulations and other statutory instruments. Over the last few years there has been a considerable decline in the use of phrases like "in the opinion of the director", "in the opinion of the officer" or "in the opinion of the Minister". Leaving those expressions out gives the citizen more rights, because the citizen can go to court and ask it to determine whether the interference with his decision-making or his conduct is justified or unjustified.

I will give an example. The regulations which govern cemeteries in national parks have been before our committee on several occasions.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Earth shattering.

Mr. Kaplan: I hear the Minister's observation. In those circumstances we have seen a discretion awarded to an official with which we happen to agree. We looked at it and decided after some consideration not to criticize giving the official discretion. Because the Minister has expressed interest in it, I should like particularly to tell him what that discretion was. The regulation provides that tombstones have to meet the test of the discretion of the director as to whether they are in good taste and not offensive to people who have their loved ones buried in the cemetery and might be visiting. We could have written to the Minister responsible and told him to set out criteria on how large the tombstones have to be, what shape they have to be, what colour they have to be and what sorts of language on them would be acceptable or unacceptable. If we had been doing that, we would have been rigorously applying this criterion. We decided not to do that, because it struck us that such discretion of a director of a cemetery would likely be used in a reasonable way and that it would be justified to allow him some type of discretion, because we were told stories about people who wanted to mark their graves by planting an automobile on its side or some marker which they might consider to be appropriate but which would be found offensive to other persons who had their loved ones buried in the cemetery. However, it is an important criterion.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) had the floor.

Mr. Kaplan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know I only have another four minutes left today—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I had many criteria to discuss, and out of the 15 I had only managed to cover six. I am uncertain that I would receive unanimous consent to continue if I sought it, but I hope that the few brief remarks I was able to make this morning gave Hon. Members of the House a—

[Translation]

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, what we do in our committee is not an examination, it is not something we do because we are personally motivated, but it is very important because, just as laws can even prescribe death and restrict the rights and privileges of the citizens, so can regulations and other initiatives taken pursuant to the royal prerogative have similar implications. It falls within the responsibility of our committee which, as I said, is an all-party committee with representation from all House parties and both sides of the other place. We do our best to correct the Government and other authorities which do have legislative powers, indirect though they may be, through authority granted pursuant to the statutes and the royal prerogatives.

In the few seconds I have left I would like to comment very briefly on the subject-matter of our report.

Our committee unanimously concluded that the Government does not have the right to pass a regulation, under the Canada Shipping Act provision it has chosen, to restrict the access of "potentially" polluting ships to New Brunswick's Harbour Head Passage.

• (1405)

[English]

The Government has passed a regulation which would prevent ships carrying oil from entering Head Harbour Passage, New Brunswick. In our opinion, with that regulation as enacted, if a vessel were to enter Head Harbour Passage, the regulation would not stop it because that regulation has been passed without any authority whatsoever under the article of the Statutes to which reference is made in the regulation. It is a very important legislation. That is a part of New Brunswick where fishing is important and Head Harbour Passage is one of the most beautiful passage in our country.

When the regulation was introduced, it was designed to combat a very serious evil but the regulation does not work. In this report, all the members of the committee are urging the Government to rewrite the regulation in accordance with the rule of law so that the people from Head Harbour Passage will be genuinely protected.

There are a great many other things I would like to say, but I think that those who want as well to speak for the first time on a report of the Regulations and Statutory Instruments Committee should be given the opportunity to do so.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of Parliament, I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member who chaired this very important committee. Because of my area of responsibility, I have to deal with questions referring to housing and labour. Most recently I discovered to my dismay that under the regulations that relate to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Conservative Government, without going to Parliament, has decided that it will not longer allow handicapped persons to be eligible for the same kinds of grants for the purposes of residential reconstruction as are made available to every other Canadian. This particular discrimination against the handicapped was not brought before the House of Commons but was done solely by regulation. The result is that many people in the community do not realize that the Government is introducing by regulation elements which discriminate against the handicapped, particularly in the area of housing, something which is so crucial to them.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he examined the under-the-table regulations which allow this type of discrimination to take place. What suggestions does the Hon. Member have to ensure that this activity which goes against the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Abella Commission Report and the Equality Now Report, does not slip through by regulation without even having the Government go to Parliament?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think the question the Hon. Member has asked touches on the outrageous use of the power of regulations to deprive citizens of rights which they might have been given under the regulations and to discriminate. Unfortunately, and I say this with considerable regret, it is not within our mandate to deal with or criticize regulations on the basis of the impact that they might have on less fortunate members of Canadian society. That is regrettable because I know that particularly under the new Government, regulations are being used to take away many of the benefits for which groups have fought and which the former Government has established. This is the stuff of politics and it is the stuff of debate.

The Government is obsessed with the deficit and is delivering benefits to the better-off in society at the expense of people in the middle and at the bottom. That is what we in this House debate. Unfortunately, the mandate of the commitee does not open the door for us to deal with such egregious matters, but all of the regulations that we criticize could probably be passed and made acceptable if they were simply put in some other form.

Although we protect the rule of law, we tend to deal with technical problems that have arisen. The Bill with the regulation which we brought before the House in this report is one on which the Government has held an opposite view from that of all the members of the committee. The Government feels that the regulation is valid and we feel that it is invalid, but we do not feel that it is a bad regulation. After all, its object is to protect Head Harbour Passage from pollution by vessels that are not safe or by vessels that are too large. This is a very desirable object, but as much as we wish we could accept the regulation, we are obliged to reject it because the Government has put it forward under a section of the legislation which it does not have the authority to use for that purpose.

I must say that I was disappointed by the letter the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) wrote to our committee. He refused to tell us why he rejected our advice. I am worried that Minister after Minister will simply draw the line as this Minister did and say that the matter should be settled in court. What the Minister meant by that is, "We should let a boat go into Head Harbour Passage. Let that boat get into some difficulty. Let us try to prosecute under the regulation. Let the owners of the boat go to court to fight for their right to use the passage and their right to disregard the regulation". That is an uncivilized thing to do, which invites disrespect for the law. I would have hoped that a Minister as enlightened as the present Minister of Transport would have paid more attention to this piece of advice which was unanimously given with respect to the regulation being invalid. For him to say: "Let the courts settle it" is almost a challenge which could be regarded as being irresponsible.

• (1410)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Member comment with respect to whether or not the recent amendments to the Canada Shipping Act, which I believe were presented in the form of Bill C-54, would legalize the particular legislation which is referred to in this document?

Also, could one not conclude that if this regulation which covers a zone within the area so covered by the said regulatory authority in the Act, were improperly passed that, legally, by singling out a portion of that area one would in fact have passed a regulation covering the entire area, as is the case under the Act and as is prescribed in the regulation?

Does the hon. gentleman know about what I am talking with respect to the second question? I am not sure that he does.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think I would like to pull out the minutes of the committee meeting which were taken before we decided to table the report. The issues raised by the Hon. Member are precisely the issues which preoccupied the members of the committee for the time in which we studied the regulation. We were very concerned about the exact points which the Hon. Member mentions. However, we were able to resolve them.

The Hon. Member has asked whether or not the regulation could be legalized by the Act which is presently before the House. I suppose it could, if it contained a provision stating that all ultra vires regulations which have been put out before are now legal. However, it does not do that, of course. All it does is to give a fresh and more enlightened regulation-making authority to the Minister and to certain officials under the Act. It does not validate an existing regulation which was not valid under the statute under which it received its generation. No, the existing regulation is still a bad one. That is why we took the trouble of putting it into the report. It is not an easy thing to ask Conservative members of a committee to sign a report which criticizes the Minister of Transport. Yet they were prepared to do that because they recognized the importance of trying to get the new Government, as we did with the former Government, to comply with the rule of law.

The Hon. Member's second question is an interesting one. It is one on which we spent a great deal of time. It dealt with whether or not a court might give life to that invalid regulation by removing the portion of it which accounts for the invalidities. The section in question, in effect, says to the Minister: "You can put forward a regulation banning ships from the whole of the area south of the 60th parallel but you cannot ban a little piece of it". What the Minister tried to do here is ban the boats in a little zone. The Hon. Member is saying: Why does the court not just read away the reference to the small zone, because without it it would be perfectly valid regulation? That was not done because, in our opinion, and our law officer conforms this, the limited zone was the essence of the regulation and there was no interest at all on the part of the authority to ban such vessels from the whole of Canada. After all, we need those vessels. They bring us oil and they take oil out of the country. We need them but we do not want them to go into the ecologically sensitive areas of Canada where they can damage the shoreline or fisheries and compete in that way with other economic and ecological interests. The court will not allow that. The only real way out is for the Minister of Transport to take the advice of the committee. He does not even have to rescind the regulation because, in our view, it is invalid. I would like to see Head Harbour Passage protected, but I would like to see it protected by valid legislation.

[Translation]

Several attempts were made to convince various officials of that department. One does not begin by writing directly to the Minister. One begins by making representations to the department's counsels. Now and then they are invited to appear before our committee to listen to our arguments and give us their views because, obviously, lawyers are there to advise department officials whose opinions differ from ours. But just the same, when in the end the Minister says something like "I'll see you in court", that does not appear to us to be the proper way to proceed!

[English]

Mr. Layton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If we might revert to the introduction of Bills, I could introduce a Bill on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to order made earlier this day, we will now revert to the introduction of Bills.

• (1415)

CANADA PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bob Layton (for Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-92, an Act to regulate interest in petroleum in relation to frontier lands, to amend the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, and to repeal the Canada Oil and Gas Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan to concur in the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to address the House with respect to the report which has been put forward by the committee. It is important to note the work which this committee has done, especially when we consider how long it has been in the process of preparing its report.

In order to set the stage, because I do not think we are trying to find fault with any particular Minister in terms of the report, a suggestion was made during the course of remarks that it was unfortunate that the Minister would not take advice. I think it is important to note that this type of committee report should be above partisan remarks and that perhaps remarks such as the one I have just mentioned were unintentional. If the only point of our debating the motion was to blame the Minister in question, then it would naturally come to the attention of the House that the Minister in question was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who was then Minister of Transport. The regulation about which we are speaking was passed in 1982. Due to the excellent work of the present Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty), who was one of the joint chairmen of this committee, and a gentleman from the other place, it was found that the regulation was perhaps in contravention of the law under which it was passed.

I think it is also important to note right off the bat that this should not be treated as a partisan matter. We should view the committee as having tried to do everything properly. We should concern ourselves with the fact that laws which are passed by Governments, whichever Party is in power at the time, and when they provide for regulations, are proper. In trying to understand the thinking behind the Government of the day let us take a look at exactly why the regulation was made. On March 10, 1982, regulations were made under Part 20 of the Canada Shipping Act stipulating that no oil tanker may carry on board oil, either crude or product oil, in excess of 5,000 cubic metres in the waters of Head Harbour Passage, New Brunswick.

For those people who are not as familiar as I am with the geography of New Brunswick, I will tell you that Head Harbour Passage Lies between Deer Island and Campobello Island in New Brunswick.

These regulations were made in an effort by the Government of the day—and we concur with that effort—to control shipping where the product in question may be a danger to the environment. I believe all Hon. Members of the House understand the importance of regulations which are there to protect our environment, whether it is shipping, as in this case, or other dangers with hazardous products which are shipped by railway lines. That is something with which, in terms of the chemicals we are shipping these days, there can be quite a problem environmentally.

In any event, there was a proposal to build a marine oil terminal and a refinery at East Port, Maine. The only way one can get to East Port, Maine is through the Canadian waters of Head Harbour Passage. It is my understanding that the waters of Head Harbour Passage are extremely hazardous and that officials of the Coast Guard were concerned about the safety of regular super-tanker traffic through the area. There are navigational problems within these waters including not only strong currents, but rip tides, whirlpools, fog and, in time of winter, vessel icing.

So it was recognized by the Government of the day—the Liberal administration—that there was a potential for casualties involving the large and less manoeuvrable vessels and that the clean-up of any oil spills, should they occur, as a result of a collision or damage to a vessel, would be almost impossible because of the strong currents. The other problem is what type of fish are found in the waters which would be affected by this kind of oil spill? It is my understanding that the area is the production ground for one of the world's largest herring population, and we must be concerned about the livelihoods of people in the fishing industry. There are some 5,000 fishermen, fishplant workers and families who are dependent on the area for their livelihood.

Something else that should be recognized is that the Fundy Isles, which are very close to Head Harbour Passage, are recognized as one of the most important tourist designated areas of the province. For example, when I explained to the House exactly where Head Harbour Passage is, I mentioned Campobello Island. That is the location of the Camp Roosevelt Campobello International Park, a bi-national memorial to the late President of the United States. So we have not only an environmental problem which the Government of the day tried to address but we also have a problem with the tourist industry if we had any oil spills which would damage the environment.

• (1425)

We also have navigational risks and environmental problems, which is the reason the Government of the day promulgated these regulations which led the committee to examine whether or not this regulation was in fact proper under the law under which it was passed. There was some doubt. The committee expressed the view that there was no authority to act under the relevant provision of the Canada Shipping Act so as to limit the application of the regulation to a particular body of water, in this case Head Harbour Passage. And, as I said, the Department of Justice, which was consulted prior to the making of the regulation, believes that there is sufficient authority under the Canada Shipping Act.

I should point out that this is the result of a move in 1977 whereby the then Minister of Justice arrived at an arrangement with the committee that officials should provide explanations to the committee regarding the making of the regulations. This was done but it was understood, however, that the explanations would not include the legal advice given by the Department of Justice.

The committee now has requested that it be provided with the legal reasons which support the opinion of the Department of Justice. The concern of the Department of Justice is that these reasons would fly in the face of the previous arrangements and if this is the intention, it is suggested that the committee take this matter up with the Minister of Justice

(Mr. Crosbie) so that we can work on a new policy which would apply to all regulations, not just this regulation.

What we are saying is that we are, under the Minister of Justice, open to suggestions which will improve the process. We, as much as anyone, want to have regulations which will stand up under the laws which are passed. However, if we need a new policy, then we are suggesting that the committee might sit down with the Minister of Justice to see if we cannot work out an arrangement which would be satisfactory to all Parties.

The House will also know that this particular matter is being reviewed because of the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which the Minister brought forward and which were first debated in this House on Tuesday, October 15, 1985. I know that in the regulations the committee made reference to the fact that Bill C-75, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act, was before the House. So we have amendments to the Act before the House, and there is every intention that the concerns of the committee, as put forward in its report, will be addressed.

• (1430)

In his remarks on that Bill, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) put great emphasis on environmental problems. Our Government has always had an immense interest in conservation of the environment. We know this is of concern to all Canadians and that is why we brought forward these amendments. I understand the Bill has gone to committee and I am sure the work that the committee has done will be helpful in the debate. There is a lot of interest in this issue on our side. Our Members represent all 10 provinces and the Territories, which is not the case with the other two Parties, unfortunately. Members of the NDP and Liberal Party are rather restricted because of the narrow geographic scope of their membership. The Liberals have some Members from Newfoundland but not too many. When we talk about the Arctic, there is no one from the NDP or the Liberal Party with that familiarity with those areas and their waters. There is only one Liberal from the West Coast as well. Therefore, the committee work will be carried by our Party with its 211 Members representing all parts of Canada, and doing very well at that.

As I said, the Minister of Transport has shown great concern for problems in this area. For example, at page 7620 of Hansard he points out the problems which would occur, for example, if a 60,000-tonne laden tanker importing crude into Canada experienced a spill. He says as well:

> Improvements are to be made to the maritime pollution claims fund, which will be renamed the ship source oil pollution fund, whereby small claimants, such as fishermen and resort owners, will in future be able to claim directly against that fund.

As well, earlier in my comments I referred to the tourist industry. We are concerned that should an oil spill occur, we will be able to compensate the many people in that industry who would suffer. We are also concerned about the regulations dealing with the carriage of dangerous goods in bulk.

In bringing my remarks to a close, I would just point out that some comments by members on the other side were partisan in nature. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) got carried away, as she often does, and tried to bring some extraneous issues into the debate. Her colleague, quite properly, made a good summation of the committee's position. It is unfortunate that in the middle of a discussion on shipping regulations we had this extraneous interjection by a Member who did not understand the process and who was trying to be partisan. I know that is not the nature of the chairman who brought forward this report. We cannot erase those remarks from Hansard but I would hope that anyone who reads the record in future will understand that perhaps the Hon. Member got a little excited and tried to start a debate on something that was not before the House, namely regulations promulgated by the CMHC.

Just to put that in perspective if I may, there is no question about this Party's efforts on behalf of the disabled. The House will know that the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) brought forward new regulations for the disabled dealing with transportation. This is part of our ongoing effort to try to right some of the wrongs which exist. It is hoped that in the future people reading Hansard will understand that that was an unnecessary intervention on the Hon. Member's part, and perhaps in due time the member will find another vehicle for venting her spleen.

In any event, I think it is very important that we have these reports considered. I appreciate—

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I had to come back immediately I saw the Hon. Member denigrating the fact that my remarks about the disabled were not relevant to the debate and dealt with another problem. However, he demonstrated the poor logic of his argument by going into a long comment about his Government's record vis-à-vis the disabled. If we accept his first argument that my intervention regarding the disabled was out of order, then why does he buttress my intervention by commenting further on the record of his Government in this area? It is totally illogical.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that this was an attempt at a point of order which was not a point of order, but that is all right.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is the first time I have ever had a question in a point of order. We appreciate the Hon. Member is having some difficulty adjusting to this House. We are very much behind her under the circumstances. I think it was very kind of the Chair to let her go so far while trying to bring in a question on a point of order in this very important debate. I think she will find, as time goes on, that she will become aware of when to ask questions and when to make points of order.

In any event, I wanted to close by making direct reference to the comments of the committee chairman who pointed out the very important work this committee has been doing. I just want to compliment the committee members on their efforts to make sure, regardless of who is in power, that the regulations promulgated are in order under the law that was passed.

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he feels that the remarks of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), about which he just commented, were more or less out of order than the speech he made in the House last week on the subject of the committee's third report.

Mr. Gauthier: More or less.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I entered that debate on patent law with very little knowledge of patent law.

Mr. Gauthier: We know that.

Mr. Lewis: And I managed to prove it. Any hope I have for a position with Gowling, Henderson as a patent attorney is gone, in the same way that our QCs went last week.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) how much time he had for preparation and how frequently this House is asked to take part in these types of debates. Under what circumstances do we usually have to debate on concurrence in these reports. As I understand it, this came upon him somewhat by surprise and I would like to know exactly the length of time he had to prepare before standing up in this House and giving a speech, which I thought was excellent.

Mr. Lewis: I will do this as modestly as I can, Mr. Speaker. Although I did not have an awful lot of time, I would have wished that the chairman had given me some time. However, we all jumped into the breach and did the best we could to put those very important remarks on the Patent Act on the record. I am sure posterity will give them the credibility they deserve.

• (1440)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, having advised the House that he has been denuded of his Q.C., the Member is, nonetheless, still a lawyer and is fairly familiar with the high cost of taking people to court. The Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) pointed out very succinctly that the Governement is avoiding the all-Party resolution which points out the difficulties that the Government is going to have if it forces a company to take it to court on the issue of the specific regulation dealing with this specific geographic location.

How much does the Hon. Member think it will cost the taxpayers of Canada to fight that issue in the courts? Does the Member not believe that it would be easier if the Government would accept the recommendation of the all-Party committee, which would prevent any future legal action by any person or persons who have a direct interest in this particular legislation?

Mr. Lewis: That is very easy, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Member was not here when her colleague discussed the regulation. The regulation is to prevent a ship going through a passage. It is awfully difficult to imagine that there would be an awful lot of litigation arising from that. Mind you, lawyers are inventive and there is often a way to find litigation where others may not.

I might point out that this was an initiative of the former Liberal Government, so I would not get partisan on this. This is in the interest of the country. We put the interest of the country above partisan politics, which is advice that I might address to my hon. friend. There are more important things than scoring cheap political points. My colleague has brought forward an important matter which we are trying to deal with. I hope that the committee will address itself to this very important matter.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I rise to compliment the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) on his excellent presentation. I realize, of course, that he did hot have a great deal of time to prepare it, but I would like to bring to his attention the fact that he said that this is a big country and that we have a lot of water to the east, to the west and to the north to look after. I would like to bring to his attention the fact that one of our busiest waterways is to the south. I live in the riding of Essex-Kent beside Lake Erie, which is part of the Seaway system. I was wondering whether the Member left that out on purpose or whether his research notes did not bring that to his attention.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the speech I made was strictly a saltwater speech. I have another speech I make for waters that have no salt in them. That may have escaped the attention of a lot of people, but this was definitely a saltwater speech.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we all know that this report was tabled in the House on October 17, 1985, so the Parliamentary Secretary has had two months in which to prepare his speech. I listened to him very attentively. I see that in the Statutory Instruments Act and the Oil Carriage Limitation Regulations which are before us there is reference to the 60th parallel. I know that the Member is a good lawyer and a good accountant, but I wonder if he is a geographic expert as well. Can he tell us exactly where the 60th parallel is?

Mr. Frith: It's 11 degrees above the forty-ninth.

Mr. Lewis: I have done a lot of research into that. You will find that the 60th parallel is directly above the fifty-ninth and below the sixty-first.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Member has commented that we should approach this in a very non-partisan fashion. On the eve of our Christmas break it is certainly incumbent upon all of us to approach this issue in en extremely non-partisan fashion. That is why I am a little confused. In his speech the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) made it quite clear and plain that an all-Party committee composed of Liberals, Conservatives and New Democrats had made certain recommendations to the Minister with respect to the wrong-headedness and wrongfulness of this specific regulation. In fact, the Member will be aware that the concern was that the regulation was directed toward a specific body of water rather than dealing with bodies of water in general across Canada.

Could the Member clarify for the House how he sees this as a non-partisan issue when the Minister has in fact rejected the recommendation of an all-Party committee which has put its collective wits together to come up with a recommendation endorsed by all the political Parties? That particular recommendation has been ignored, abused, and rejected by the Minister.

Mr. Lewis: It has not been ignored, abused, or rejected by the Minister. The Minister is simply making the point that he has advice that the regulation is in order. I do not see that as ignoring and abusing anything. The regulation was promulgated when the Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister of Transport. As I keep trying to tell the Member, this is not always a partisan place. This is not always a place where people are trying to score cheap political points.

Mr. Kaplan: Or even expensive points.

Mr. Lewis: We are trying to do the best we can in this place. I know that is what the Hon. Member did. We put the environment far ahead of anything the Hon. Member does. We put the environment ahead of cheap political points. We put the safety of the Canadian people ahead of cheap political points.

Mr. Kaplan: That is a cheap political point.

Mr. Lewis: It may be. We put the tourism industry ahead of cheap political points. I think we have all tried to avoid making cheap political statements today. If we carry on as we are—as I am, anyway—in the interests of this debate, we will be able to make definite progress on other things.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for some time for this report to come forward. I did not expect it to come forward today, but I am pleased that it has. I would like to say that I agree entirely with the Parliamentary Secretary that this is really not an essential part of that issue. However, this is a very important parliamentary issue. I know that if the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) were here, he would be interested in this parliamentary issue. I would like to direct my comments to that particular point. This report has nothing to do with pollution or the control of shipping, but has a great deal to do with the way in which Parliament does its work.

I would like to begin by saying that it is rather shocking for a Member of Parliament to realize how much careless drafting of legislation goes on. I had the privilege to sit on a parliamentary committee which recently did a clause-by-clause study of a Bill on another subject. From that it became abundantly evident that Members of Parliament cannot simply assume that there is good drafting on all legislation. I do not want to be at all unfair to the drafters who work for the Government in the Department of Justice. I do not want to bring any dishonour or disrespect on those public officials. It is probably true that they are overworked. It is probably true that they are pushed too hard to get Bills done in a relatively short space of time. However, Mr. Speaker, it is the case that errors are made and that mistakes occur. It is the case that mistakes occur.

The second point is also well known by Your Honour. We have a great deal of legislation these days and in days gone by called enabling legislation, enabling Bills. What enabling Bills do is to give the Government very broad, let me say even sweeping authority to take certain courses of action. In order to determine how those courses of action will be carried out, there has to be drawn up a whole host of regulations, sometimes extremely detailed. These regulations have the force of law. They can sometimes be unfair, unjust and punitive. Sometimes they can impact upon a citizen, an organization or a business in our society, which is very unfair. What recourse do these citizens, organizations or businesses have?

It is absolutely necessary that someone peruse and examine these regulations with the utmost care. If we fail to do that, we are going to have something which may be like bureaucratic totalitarianism. That is why Parliament, not so very long ago in the period of time I have been in this honoured place, being aware that there was a danger to democracy under this process, a danger to the liberty and freedom of our citizens, decided that there ought to be a very special joint committee of Parliament called the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It is a mouthful to say. Many Members of Parliament are not even aware that it functions. This committee does some of the most important work of Parliament that can be done, Mr. Speaker. The committee works quietly. A report like this was almost neglected and overlooked. What this committee does is to take a very careful and detailed look at regulations promulgated under one of these enabling Bills passed by Parliament.

I have seen their work with respect to an Act with which I am most familiar, namely, the so-called Indian Act, which is one of the worst pieces of legislation to be found anywhere in the democratic world. In this case, the committee looked at the Canada Shipping Act. The committee found that there were certain regulations that had been promulgated under that Act. After careful study and after seeking expert advice, the committee came to the conclusion that these regulations were ultra vires. They cannot be in effect legally. Very quickly I will deal with the regulations so that everyone is made aware of what we are talking about.

The purpose of the regulation was to restrict the quantity of oil that may be carried on board an oil tanker. The regulation said that this specified quantity of oil in an oil tanker applies to those ships operating in one body of water, namely Head Harbour Passage, New Brunswick.

On the surface that does not sound like a very earth-shaking thing. So diligent is this committee, Mr. Speaker, that it looked at the validity of the regulation and said that it was wrong and illegal to make a regulation apply only to a particular body of water.

The Act is so worded that any regulation made under the authority of the Canada Shipping Act must apply to all waters. The committee had quite a lengthy debate about one phrase or clause within the Canada Shipping Act. It reads:

Except where otherwise provided or in any regulation—

Mr. Nickerson: That is a very important point.

Mr. Penner: The committee wondered whether this was a door that could open the way for the regulation to apply to only one body of water. The committee went further into the role of regulations and the validity of regulations. It drew attention to something that ought to be of interest to all Members of Parliament. When a Bill is drafted, great care must be taken especially if it is an enabling Bill, because every single clause can open a door and, therefore, every word must have a meaning and be given all due importance.

To illustrate how well done this report is, the committee went back to a very old precedent, a precedent that was made by Viscount Simon in a court case about parliamentary legislation. If Members have the report with them, they can find it on page 2. Let me quote very quickly:

—it is to be observed that though a parliamentary enactment (like parliamentary eloquence) is capable of saying the same thing twice over without adding anything to what has already been said once, this repetition in the case of an Act of Parliament is not to be assumed. When the legislature enacts a particular phrase in a statute the presumption is that it is saying something which has not been said immediately before.

That cannot be accepted. It goes on:

The rule that a meaning should, if possible, be given to every word in the statute implies that, unless there is good reason to the contrary, the words add something which would not be there if the words were left out.

Mr. Nickerson: Do you agree with that, Keith?

Mr. Penner: They have to look at every single word. That is why Members of Parliament do not always get the credit that is due to them for the work they do. All the work does not go on in this Chamber. The most important work goes on in the legislative committees which study the Bills clause by clause.

This Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee concluded that the regulation, which prescribes the maximum quantities that may be carried on board ships of a designated class, must apply to all Canadian waters, except—and the Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who is very, very attentive this afternoon will know that—it would not apply where there is already a shipping safety control zone. Where is that? Right north of 60. It would not apply either in waters that are under the fishing zones of Canada. They are otherwise protected.

Now I come back to the work of this Parliament. Not long ago in this House we were dealing with Bill C-75. I think the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic participated in that debate.

Mr. Nickerson: I certainly did.

Mr. Penner: This was the Canada Shipping Act. It was an Act to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Bill, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act. When this Bill was in the House being debated, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) knew that Bill C-75, under instruction from the Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee, should have been amended to take into account this problem of a regulation that was too specific and did not have the authority of the Act.

I am sad to say that the Minister—although I want to repeat that this is a parliamentary issue, not a partisan issue—did not even feel the need to do so. He simply stated that the committee had all the explanation necessary. Further, he went on to say that the Department had had legal advice proferred, given by the legal advisers to all Government departments, namely, the legal advisers in the Department of Justice. The Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments Committee wanted to have this legal advice. They said: "Show us this legal advice and maybe we can be persuaded otherwise". What was the response to that? The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) knows the answer.

• (1500)

Mr. Nickerson: Do I?

Mr. Penner: Yes, he does. They said: "We cannot release that information because it is confidential". Confidentiality is something about which we hear too much in the House. For "confidentiality", read "secret". There is too much secrecy.

I will make a small point as a diversion for a moment, but I will not belabour it. I really hoped that we would have much more openness from the new Government. I believe in openness from any Government. Those fellows over there promised that Parliament would be supreme and that we would have the information we needed to do our job. There was to be a new openness. My gosh, I listened to those arguments and I almost voted for them myself. However, sanity took over before I went into the polling booth and I withdrew from that temptation. We do not have that. It is another example of confidentiality and secrecy.

Would it be too strong for me to say that this simply disregards the rights of Parliament?

Mr. Boudria: No, go ahead and say it.

Mr. Penner: Is it all right?

Mr. Boudria: Sure.

Mr. Penner: Then I will say it. It disregards the rights of Parliament. Once again it overrides the rights of elected Members under the guise of executive privilege. How often have we heard that?

The Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has not accepted the response from the Minister. In relation to the responses which it received, on page 3 it said the following:

> In consequence of the Minister of Transport's refusal to provide the explanations it requested, your Committee requests the Government to table a comprehensive response to this Report in accordance with Standing Order 70(16) of the House of Commons.

That is the response we want; that is the purpose of the debate this afternoon. All we want is an adequate response from the Government. On July 4, 1984, the committee brought the matter to the attention of the then Minister of Transport. At that time one of the joint chairmen was the Hon. Member of Parliament (Mr. Beatty) who is now the Solicitor General of Canada. As the Parliamentary Secretary has already mentioned, the Minister at that time was the Minister under the previous administration. Between July and the time of the election, there was no correspondence and no action taken. It became a problem passed on to the next Minister, the present Minister of Transport. When he was sworn in and assumed his duties, he replied to this request by saying: "Departmental legal advisers say that there is sufficient authority under the Canada Shipping Act". Then he went on to make an astounding assertion which really bothers me more than a little. He said: "If there is any dispute, then take it to court".

Whatever happened to the idea or principle that this is the highest court in the land? Have we abandoned that principle, idea and concept? Is that old fashioned? Has it gone out the window? The Statutory Instruments Committee took it to court; it took it to this court, the highest court in the land. The committee wants a response and it wants action.

Also in the letter to the committee the Minister promised that consideration would be given to amending the Canada Shipping Act appropriately. Without repeating what I said earlier—and the Hon. Member for Western Arctic knows it—when Bill C-75 came before us, there was no such amendment. There was nothing in it to change the Act to give those regulations validity.

Now I go to April 3, 1985. The committee wrote to the Minister stating that his response was not adequate. This was a joint committee of the two Houses of Parliament; they were all Members of Parliament and it had joint chairmen. In that letter the committee made the following very telling comment:

> The Committee cannot accept as sufficient a mere statement that a conclusion supporting the validity of an instrument has been made.

In other words, the committee said that it was not good enough, that the Minister could not just send it a letter and say that it was valid and that was the end of it. These Members of Parliament deserve some special recognition, they are that diligent. The committee wanted a substantive response, and the Minister and his Department failed to provide it.

I conclude by saying that this is a parliamentary issue. This is a question of the rights of the legislature versus the power of the executive branch of Government. That is what the issue is all about, plain and simple. The entire purpose behind the McGrath committee report and all the work it did, which I applaud with all the enthusiasm I can muster, was to redress a long-standing grievance of Members of Parliament that there was a shocking imbalance between the legislature and the executive, that is, the Cabinet and the bureaucracy.

Will Parliament be satisfied with a report like this? Will it get the satisfaction it deserves? We want a response and we want it now. So far we have failed to get it. That is why this is not in any way a partisan issue. It is a very key and central parliamentary issue. I hope it will be adequately addressed and met so that the Members of Parliament, who were elected by their constituents, will get the satisfaction they deserve.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) a question. I listened very attentively to his remarks. I think you would want me, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate him on his excellent exposé this afternoon on this very important issue. It is really a fundamental issue for all Members of Parliament sitting on every side of the House—the respect which individual cabinet Ministers must display not only to opposition Members of the House but indeed to the House itself and to all Members collectively.

Does the Hon. Member remember during the election campaign that the new Government made several promises? Mr. Speaker, you may recall that the Conservative Party made 338 such promises. I just happen to have a copy of the book of those promises. If you want one, Mr. Speaker, or anyone out there, you are welcome to write to me and I will gladly send you a free copy. Does the Hon. Member remember promises on Government processes, in particular the first four promises? First the Government promised:

> Return Parliament to the forefront of legislative activity.

That was a solemn commitment made to the people of Canada. As the Hon. Member said so eloquently, that promise was not only made to the people of Canada, but to the Parliament of Canada, to opposition Members and to Government back-benchers. Does he recall their second promise? It read:

> Improve the parliamentary committee system for a better and more independent review of legislation.

Their third promise was:

> Amend parliamentary rules to make full use of the skills and potential of all Members of Parliament, regardless of party affiliation.

We can see how it is very important. The last one read:

> Respect ministerial responsibility for the actions of Government and its Departments and agencies.

I am sure you have identified, Mr. Speaker, by now that all four promises relate directly to the issue at hand. Would my good friend and colleague comment upon those commitments?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, let me say briefly that we have the recipe for what was promised. As enunciated by my hon. colleague and friend, the recipe is now in the possession of parliamentarians. The McGrath committee report is a radical report. Before anyone becomes too upset by the term "radical", I am using it in the best sense of the word. That is to say that this report goes to the root of the problem, as the word "root" is the origin of the word "radical". What is the root of the problem? It is that there is a serious imbalance between the work that Members of Parliament are supposed to do with the authority that they have and the power and authority of the Cabinet or the executive branch of Government. We see evidence of this all the time in Parliament. We have what can only be described as periodic impasses in the work of Parliament because the executive attempts to use its power and Members of Parliament take recourse in all that is available to them, the provisions of the Standing Orders.

Obviously something is terribly wrong. Our main interest ought to be serving the people of Canada. Our main goal ought not to be to perpetuate ourselves in power or to further a political Party although I know that that is always part of it but it ought to be to make this country better and stronger and to make sure that citizens are well served. We spend 175 days per year in this place and what is our productivity? To what extent does that which we produce benefit citizens and to what extent does it merely cause them more grief, agony and trouble?

I say that we have the recipe. The question now is are we going to bake the cake. When the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) spoke that evening we devoted to the entire question of parliamentary reform, I think he put it very succinctly by saying that this is not simply a matter of changing Standing Orders, but what is really required on behalf of all of us is a different attitude and a different approach to the reason we are here and what we are supposed to do. The problem is as much or more attitudinal than it is simply with the Standing Orders or any specific rules that govern our lives in this place.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I think the level of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) have done him credit. He has discussed the subject matter which is before us in a fashion which I think is constructive. I wish I could say the same of some of the other remarks I have heard in this House from his Party confrères but unfortunately I cannot.

Today, we in the House are involved in a process which perhaps derived from an example set in years gone by and I must say that opposition Members have graduated from that training summa cum laude. They certainly have shown what can be done, whether it be credible or otherwise.

I do wish to say to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior that some of the tactics which have been used in the House have certainly caused grief, agony and trouble. There are 450 people who are improperly out of work in my constituency today and some are not yet eligible for unemployment insurance benefits in the Christmas season. I have heard a great deal about the Christian spirit which exists in the House at this time of the year but it certainly has been lacking in the last three months. Repeating as nearly as I can the words of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, we are going to cause more trouble for Canadians than we correct by some of the work we do in the House and by the pursuit of the perpetuity of power. Certainly that is what we have seen in this process.

I am thoroughly in support of the concept that this committee should indeed have an opportunity to express itself and that it should indeed consider the regulations. However, with all that holier than thou atmosphere which we have perceived as supposedly being created by this opposition-generated discussion of the subject matter, I would like to recall to you, Mr. Speaker, that I once sat on this committee and only once. It was during a discussion of a totally illegal expenditure which was, 18 months after the fact, supposedly legalized by a regulation passed by the then Government. I must say that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) was probably a member of the Cabinet at the time that regualtion which in fact spent money illegally was passed.

When an effort was made by myself and other members of that committee to have some consideration in the House of that particular report, we were thwarted. As a matter of fact, when the report was tabled in the House, it for some reason or other barely mentioned the subject matter of a totally illegal regulation. When it was pursued in the House privately and publicly, no redress could be obtained. I say to all members of the Opposition that it is a case of the pot calling the kettle black when members of the Opposition call for information and correction of items which may have been improperly addressed through regulation.

I suppose I feel very strongly on this subject matter. I do not believe that I can find words within the vocabulary acceptable to the House to express myself. May I simply say that as I listened to the remarks made here by those who would now want to be perceived as being holier than thou, I certainly found it to be a disgusting performance. Proclaiming the sanctity of what has happened before without giving much consideration to the damage, grief and trouble which they may cause people in the pursuit of selfish political reasons, they are certainly not admirable.

If there is one think which this debate has emphasized more than another, it is that we should not try to govern by regulation but we should instead try to govern by legislation. This House should be able to work in such a fashion that urgent legislation could indeed be passed. If at the time these regulations were passed it had been the choice of the Government of that day to introduce a Bill into the House to accomplish what these regulations were supposed to accomplish, I do not believe that it would have taken 15 minutes to consider that piece of legislation in all its phases within the House. We would have had the unquestionable support of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Perhaps I am making an assumption which I should not make, but I believe that the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) would have supported it, knowing her environmental concerns. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr.

Darling), to name Members from all sides of the House, would have been totally in support of the Bill and would have encouraged immediate consideration of legislation rather than the adoption of these regulations behind the curtain of the secrecy of Orders in Council.

A regulation is the wrong vehicle for Government. Whether or not there is legal basis for it is in question and obviously the report carries contradictory legal statements as to whether or not the committee should in fact have made the report that it did with the finality of the type of comment it made.

There has been a discussion of secrecy in today's debate. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) that he sat on the Fisheries Committee with me on many, many occasions since 1972. Among other requests that were made by the Fisheries Committee was a list of licensees in certain areas of the fishing community of eastern Canada. My motion was seconded by a Liberal Member, the then Hon. Member for South West Nova, I believe, but that information was never forthcoming and has not to this day been received. I am again making efforts to get it. I find that the bureaucratic rigmarole which exists is denying me that information to this day. So there are items in this structure which should not be confidential which, in fact, remain as confidential, to the detriment of the better Government of this nation.

To a degree, secrecy is imperative in Government. For instance, when we talked about the expropriation or creation of Crown corporations, such as de Havilland, there was no information available to the House of Commons about the terms and conditions under which that was taking place. There was no notice given to the Government of Canada, or to the people of Canada, that this would take place. It was not given the consideration which the sale seems to require by members of the Opposition. We have a total situation of inconsistency. There is a time and a place for items to be placed before the public. To request some of the information which the Government is declaring as excessively secret is just not in the best interests of Canada. It is pretty nearly time that the people of Canada recognized the false pretenses which are being put forward by the Opposition when they were the artists of secrecy and those who denied us information, even under the Access to Information Act, and under other sources through which Members of Parliament should have been privy to information.

I wish to discuss the regulations with which we are presently dealing. During the debate there were two former cabinet Ministers sitting in the House who also participated in the debate and whose names should appear as having attended cabinet meetings when these regulations were created. They were created for environmental purposes of national and international consequence. I am just not sure what the long-term effect of a greedy Opposition using this as a subject matter for discussion in this House at this point or at any point in time will be. This is a subject matter which could have been discreetly and properly discussed by conscientious Members of Parliament with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), the Attorney General (Mr. Crosbie) and Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty), or with whatever source this should have been discussed. However, under any circumstances, this should not be the discussion of a debate, as it is presently taking place.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not serving Canada well. I hope the consequences which might flow from this do not, in fact, result. I hope that it may be so far back in the past that it is no longer consequential. However, this is an abuse of the education which they received when they were in Government as they are trying to stall. This is a weak excuse for the absorption of time at this or any other moment in the House of Commons. It serves Canada very poorly, as poorly as they are now held in the opinion of the 450 people who are out of work at Christmas for no valid reason.

For instance, the regulations were presented to the House and should have been enacted. As I said before, they were presented to Cabinet and passed by Cabinet in the best interests of 5,000 fishermen, fishplant workers and families who depend upon the fishing industry in that area for their livelihood, which was threatened if these regulations were not effected. They were made to protect a unique ecology of an area which favours more marine biological research. It is one of the areas in the Atlantic Ocean which is a source of information unlike any other within another 1,500 miles of that location—the Bay of Fundy. It has a proliferation of marine species which is just unheard of along most of the Atlantic Coast of North America. The Deer Island archipelago was designated as a natural area of Canadian significance. That is why those regulations were passed. It is one of the most important tourist areas in eastern Canada. Campobello on Campobello Island and the Roosevelt-Campobello International Park represent a bi-national memorial to the late U.S. President. The regulations dealt with the degree of navigation risks associated with the continuous year-round supply of crude oil and product distribution from the proposed refinery which was seen to pose a serious threat to the ecology of the region, not to mention anything about the livelihood of it.

This is what we are putting before Canada as an example of a regulation which was approved by a Cabinet in which two former cabinet Ministers were members and who are still present in the House, one of whom was the Solicitor General and who should know better. He is the proponent of this debate. I have no objection to bringing important matters of Canadian Government before the House and debating them publicly. However, I do object to bringing any subject matter before the House which may be of major detriment to Canada in the long run. That is precisely what those graduates of delay are using as a subject matter for further delay in the House and for which they should be condemned publicly and privately.

There are Hon. Members who have spoken in this debate, such as the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr.

Boudria), who has a right to speak of secrecy, but I think he should consider the consequence of a discussion of this particular subject matter as an example to put before Canada and the international press. It does a disservice to Canada. I say to the Hon. Member for York Centre that he should know better. We should not be engaged in this debate today.

I do not believe there is much more than can be added. I support the concept that secrecy is too prevalent in too many of our dealings with Government. I support the concept which I wish had been pushed a little harder by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior, namely, that there should be more Government by legislation and less Government by regulation. Until that takes place, debates of this type will be prevalent in the House for a long while. It is simply government by secrecy; it is not government in public.

I regret the fact that some of the legislation which is being discussed here today was considered by committee and recommendations were made for amendment and those recommendations were not accepted. I agree with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior who said that we need to have more capability in terms of drafting legislation and that draftsmen may need more time to draft it and they may need more staff.

If this regulation is ultra vires, as the committee contends, and as the legal advice from the proper Canadian Department denies, then it is certainly an example of why we should have better draftsmen, and better planning and less regulation—much less reglation. I wish to say personally to members of the Opposition, and to the Hon. Member for Davenport in particular, that nobody would have supported these regulations, or would have more quickly supported an amendment to the proper Act to make it legislation, than the Hon. Member for Davenport or others whom I have earlier mentioned. It is an example of an unnecessary regulation. With a little bit of negotiation in the House it would have passed as law in 15 minutes in all three stages. However, here we chose to regulate. We have now chosen to place an unfortunate example of the frailty of regulations in a legal sense and of the unnecessary nature of regulations in the broad sense as an instrument of Government before the House.

I sincerely hope that the motion will now be dropped and that the report of the committee will be treated as any other committee report would be treated. I ask this of a former cabinet Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, who should be a responsible man looking after the best interests of Canada. Drop the cheap political advantage. Let's get on with the business of this House. Use another subject matter but do not belabour this one any longer.

• (1530)

Mr. Caccia: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In his last intervention, the Hon. Member made reference to the Hon. Member from Davenport. I want to make sure he was really referring to the Hon. Member for Davenport and not to another Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will take that as a question or a comment with respect to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in response to the question, Mr. Speaker, that I have respect for his interest in the environment. This is an environment-related subject matter. I said we had something in common.

Mr. Speaker: I will interrupt questions and comments for a point of order by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual consultations between House Leaders and I think you will find a disposition at this time for unanimous consent to have the following Order presented and accepted without debate or a vote. The Order is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, the House shall immediately proceed to the consideration of Government Orders provided that the motion presently before the House shall be transferred to Government Orders;

That the first item of business shall be the consideration of the report stage of Bill C-79, An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits and the second item of business shall be the consideration of report stage of Bill C-83, An Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

Provided that;

1. During the consideration of the said bills not more than two Members from each Party shall speak for more than 15 minutes.

2. At not later than 4:45 o'clock p.m. this day, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the Report Stage and the third reading stage of Bill C-79, An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, and of the Report Stage and the third Reading Stage of Bill C-83, An Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

3. If a recorded division is demanded on any of the above-mentioned questions, the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded once for not more than fifteen minutes.

4. When the House has concluded its consideration of the above-mentioned Bills, the Speaker shall suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair.

5. The provisions of the Standing Order 70(1) shall be deemed suspended with respect to the membership of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

6. When the House takes up consideration of the Report Stage of Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and related statutes and to amend the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Financial Administration Act and the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, not more than four sitting days shall be allotted to the consideration of the report and Third Reading stages of the said Bill provided that, at not later than fifteen minutes before the end of the time provided for government business on the fourth such day the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall put forthwith and successively every question necessary to dispose of the said stages of said Bill.

7. When the sitting is resumed for purpose of witnessing the Royal Assent once that proceeding has been concluded, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until 11:00 o'clock a.m., Monday, January 13, 1986.

Mr. Speaker: May the Chair have clarification of point No. 1?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The intention, Sir, is that with respect to each of the Bills there will be two speakers per Bill on all stages, that is to say, notwithstanding our normal rules with respect to 10-minute speeches. It is understood, I believe, that the remarks can be general with respect to the legislation and not specifically on the—

Mr. Speaker: It is just a straight mathematical question. Is it intended that there would be two speakers from each Party on each Bill or two speakers from each Party in total?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Each Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. That is something the Chair needed to be clear on.

Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the Order?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There being such consent, shall the Order carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 18, 1985 consideration of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 2 (Miss Nicholson (Trinity)) (p. 8737) and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Riis) (p. 8738).

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I must tell Hon. Members that in my nearly 18 years as a Member of Parliament, Bill C-79 strikes me as being the most objectionable and unacceptable piece of legislation I have ever seen. It will not take me a full 15 minutes to summarize once again my objection to this Bill. I will be much briefer than that.

I do want Members of Parliament to know why I feel so negative about this Bill, and I want to assure my constituents that, as they have instructed me to do, I will fight with all the vigour I can muster as a private Member of Parliament against this piece of legislation.

I will begin by saying, first, that we were misinformed about the circumstances surrounding the Canadian Commercial Bank. In fact, I would go so far as to say we were fooled when the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) assured us that if the Government of Canada participated in a bail-out package, it would put the Canadian Commercial Bank back on its feet and that the taxpayers of Canada would receive back the amount of money they had contributed to that bail-out package. We were assured of that.

The Minister made the prediction that if we in this Party supported her in that bail-out package that all would be well. I believe that will go down in the history of Canada as one of the world's worst predictions. In fact there is a little volume which has been published called "The World's Worst Predictions". I think the Minister of State for Finance will find that her statement about the importance and success of that bail-out package will be listed in that little volume.

Hon. Members might be interested in knowing another prediction which comes out of that little volume. In 1868, Congressman Ferris was talking in the U.S. Congress on the subject of the purchase of Alaska: He said: "The possession of this Russian territory can give us neither honour, wealth or power but will always be a source of weakness and expense without any adequate return". The Minister of State for Finance has made herself famous in the assurance she gave to the House that the bail-out package would work and it will go into this volume of the world's worst predictions.

This bank fiasco, in my view, reveals two things, and I will not dwell on either because the point has been made repeatedly. However, the bank fiasco does reveal that there is continuing incompetence within this Government. The Government has not yet got its act together. It does not know where it is going and when it started messing around in the money markets, it got its fingers badly burned and it took all of us with it, including a lot of dollars from the Canadian taxpayers. So I must say that Bill C-79 is a demonstration of Government incompetence.

I would also like to say that Bill C-79 does not have anything at all to do with justice, be it natural justice or otherwise, but has everything to do with face-saving of a Government which is deeply embarrassed because it made a prediction which was wrong and it now wants to save its own face and it is doing that at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers.

• (1540)

My second point is that I object as strongly as I possibly can to the secrecy surrounding Bill C-79. I know this is being done under the very high-sounding principle of confidentiality. However, I ask again, as my leader asked when this debate started: How can we approve unspecified ex gratia payments to persons unkown. That offends everything Parliament stands for. That is why my leader put forward an amendment at the very beginning of this debate which said tell us who these depositors are and then we will consider approval of such a Bill. We never got those names. In fact, before we had even finished debating the amendment, time allocation was imposed and debate was cut off.

We have heard pleas to pass this Bill because credit unions and municipalities are hurting, and that we in the Opposition are being unfair in debating this Bill because those organizations are suffering. Let me say that these organizations could be easily not ashamed to make themselves know. They have said they made a mistake. They put money into badly managed financial institutions. Their ratepayers are unhappy and their credit union members are unhappy. Well, we should pay them because we know who they are. The principle of confidentiality does not apply. Disclosure of the beneficiaries of these payments should be a minimum requirement of this Bill. They are benefiting at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer and we ought to know who they are. Remember, Sir, that nothing in Bill C-79 will help the Surrey Credit Union in British Columbia. Why not? That credit union was not a depositor in either of the two banks. They purchased debentures from the Northland Bank and there is nothing in Bill C-79 which will help them at all.

The Dupré Report was commissioned by the Government of Ontario because that province has had to deal with failed financial institutions which cost people many millions of dollars. That report makes it very clear that there should not be any back-stop legislation for financial institutions. That is to say, above and beyond what we already have, such as deposit insurance up to $60,000. The report says that is adequate. In fact, it argues that it is more than adequate. Why does the report not want back-stop legislation? Because it simply encourages inefficient, sloppy management. That is exactly what we had with the Canadian Commercial Bank. Perhaps what we really ought to be doing at this time is bringing in a law which makes such gross mismanagement an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada.

My final point is that my constituents find this Bill to be outrageous and unwarranted. It is dipping into their pockets for money they can ill afford. The people I represent work very hard for their wages and salaries.

Mr. Oostrom: So did the depositors.

Mr. Penner: People in the pulp and paper plants, in the bush, in the stores, in restaurants on the road all work very hard for their dollar and they get few if any tax breaks. On May 23, for example, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought forward a modest tax relief measure dealing with loans for houses granted to employees by their employers. It is a good tax relief measure. However, as I have told this House before, in my constituency there is a company which grants such loans to its employees and they have a divided house; those who got the loan after May 23 get tax relief. Those who got their loan before do not. They work for the same company and live in the same community. I pleaded with the Minister to incorporate a grandfather clause to correct this injustice but what did he say? He said: "I am sorry but if we did this it would increase the deficit in an unacceptable way". Increase the deficit! It is such a modest expenditure in the name of fairness and to say it would increase the deficit is totally unacceptable. Here we have a Bill which will cost taxpayers of this country $875 million and they give me that kind of argument where there is a genuine case of injustice.

Another example is that of prospectors, some 4,000 of them, who go out under the most adverse conditions to locate new mineral deposits. In many instances these prospectors exchange their claims for property. In due course they sell the property. The Minister of Finance brought in a new tax measure involving an exemption for capital gains in a certain amount over the lifetime of the taxpayer. Whether that is a good measure or not has yet to be debated in the House. However, the curious thing is that a prospector who wants to take advantage of that measure is denied the right to do so. He does not qualify when he sells that property which he exchanged for claims. That is considered to be income and I say that is an injustice for that category of person. Finally, Sir, dealing with unfairness and injustice, when family allowances are distributed next year what will the increase be? A ridiculous 31 cents. That is why my constituents object and object strongly to this Bill.

Although we are going to divide on this Bill today and the Government's majority will certainly carry the Bill, this issue of bank failures, bail-outs and payments to unknown persons in unspecified amounts will not go away. The Estey Commission has yet to be heard from. The names of those depositors will eventually come out. We will know who they are. This bank fiasco will have a serious negative effect on this Government and there will be a fall-out for a long time to come.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great respect.

Mr. Penner: I oppose the Bill. The debate is over. I rest my case.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by making quite clear something I am sure is not misunderstood by anyone in the House or the country, and that is that we have opposed this measure from the start. We continue to oppose it. It was wrong when it was first conceived. It was conceived as a result of either misinformation provided to the Ministers, or because they did not understand the information given to them. I want to make it clear that there is absolutely no justification for dipping into the pockets of taxpayers to pay uninsured depositors' losses. Those depositors in this instance put their money in this bank because they felt they could achieve a marginally greater rate of return than they could have got from any of the other financial institutions available to them. In doing that they knew they were taking a risk. They knew full well, right from the very beginning, that the insurance limits established by law on deposits in financial institutions in Canada were $60,000. So I say people who put their money in these banks, whether they be institutions or individuals, were fully aware of the insurance limit in place and there can be no justification for the Government of Canada now moving in and using taxpayers' dollars to bail those people out.

I want to ask other Members to go back with me to the early part of the 1980s when farmer after farmer was losing his farm because they could not meet their mortgage commitments. It was not possible for them to work out an arrangement with banks not unlike this bank. Where was the Government of Canada when it should have bailed out those farmers? I ask you to consider the small-business people who could not afford the debt load that was imposed upon them by banks that were charging 20, 21, and 22 per cent interest and who lost their businesses as a result of the banks' usury. Where was the Government when it should have bailed out those people?

I ask Members of the House of Commons to think about homeowners in the country in the early 1980s who, when faced with the requirement to renew mortgages, found themselves unable to meet the exorbitant rates that the banks were foisting upon them. They, therefore, lost all the equity they had in their homes. Where was the Government to bail them out at that time? If we could not afford to do for the farmers, the small-business people, and the homeowners of this land what was required to be done by way of support during periods of grave difficulty, how in heaven's name can we justify doing it now for those who had money to put into a bank and took a higher risk which caught up with them?

I want Members to think carefully about that reality. Who are we giving the money to? We are about to decide that we will hand out $875 million to unsecured depositors.We are not to know who they are. No one is going to tell us. We are not entitled to know. How in the name of heaven can we be prepared to hand out almost $1 billion that could have been used for so many other worth-while purposes to people whose names we are not permitted to know? I have an obligation, to the best of my ability, to ensure that the Government spends the taxpayers' dollars wisely. It is a difficult enough job given the rigmarole that we have to go through on a daily basis. However, to ask me to approve an expenditure in the order of $1 billion, and to allow those tax dollars to be handed over to unnamed people, whether corporate or private, is both unfair and wrong.

Mr. Heap: And foreign.

Mr. Deans: My colleague says "and foreign", and I think that is another point which must be made at this time. Almost $112 million of this $1 billion is to be paid out to foreign banks. They are to be given Canadian taxpayers's dollars under circumstances in which, if they were to occur within the jurisdiction where they have a head office, they could not claim, nor would they get, the kind of largess that is being offered by the Government at the expense of the people of Canada. Not a single solitary one of those foreign banks could go to the Government of the United States, where most of them come from, and ask that Government to bail them out because another bank in which they had deposits failed. There is no such law, provision, or intention. The same thing is equally true in every other country. It makes no sense.

To allow this to happen in the face of all the problems that we are confronted with on a daily basis does draw into question the sense of Members of Parliament with regard to their responsibilities to their constituents. Not to cast aspersions, it is understandable that Members on the Government side would want to support their Government, whether it is right or wrong, and would feel the necessity to rise behind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and support them in the endeavour.

Surely, however, deep down in their hearts when they think about it they know that the measure being proposed is inappropriate and wrong and that there can be no justification for providing for those who determined that they would speculate and for providing that that speculation be ensured beyond that which was available to all others operating within the same area across the country. I suggest, therefore, that we could and should be finding alternative uses for the money that is to be sent out by cheque in the new year to a lot of people who are, no doubt, very nice, but who, in fact, have no business expecting that the Government of Canada will bail them out.

What could we have done with the money? We could have built 21,667 new non-profit housing units, or we could have created 100,000 new day care spaces, or we could have provided 300 shelters for battered women, or we could have given each single mother in Canada $2,000, or we could have created over 100,000 jobs for people who are now unemployed, or, if it was ever the desire of the Conservative Government, we could have raised all GIS recipients above the poverty line. That is what we could have done with the nearly $1 billion which we are about to give out, improperly and without justification in my opinion, to people who chose to seek a somewhat higher rate of return than that which they could have received from the larger institutions and other sources of investment.

We are now prepared to deprive the country of those benefits by taking $1 billion out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians to give to those who sought a little more rather than being satisfied with what was available. That is exactly what the Government is doing and that is what makes it so wrong.

We have made the case time and time again, and there is no point in remaking it every day, that the Government has, for one reason or another, failed to provide the kind of leadership necessary to bring about fiscal responsibility. When the Government was in Opposition and sought power it claimed that it would operate in such a way that the deficit would come down through some mystical, magical means. This year we will see the highest deficit in the history of Canada. We will have the highest deficit in history because the Government is prepared to take the inopportune and improper steps which this Bill exemplifies.

I cannot help but feel that the arguments being made to us with regard to necessity are wrong even from the point of view of the people who will get the benefit. I have listened to representatives of the credit unions, many of whom are my friends, as they have argued that they need the money. However, the fact is that through the credit union centrals a protective mechanism was put into place many years ago to guarantee the assets of member credit unions at the local level. There is already an umbrella operation which covers losses of individual credit unions in the extent of bad management or bad luck with investment. To suggest that the credit unions are faced with dire consequences unless this Bill passes is not true. The facts are clear that the credit union movement is solvent because it is prudent and it is prudent because it has been managed well. It has put insurance in place to cover the possibility of losses. It does not need, nor would it have asked, the Government to provide this kind of support. The only reason why we are now being lobbied to pass the Bill quickly is because the Government rushed out like Santa Claus in the middle of the year and said not to worry because it will pay it all off. It did not consider for one minute where it would get the money.

• (1600)

I suggest that it is time that we drew the line and said, no, we will not do it because it is wrong. It is wrong because it does not reflect the kind of attitude that we want Canadians to have toward the Government. If I were a Tory I would be rising and saying that people cannot expect the Government to do everything for them. That is the attitude we hear from the Tory benches whenever I want to raise the issue of giving unemployment insurance for people whose benefits have expired and are still without jobs. The Conservatives say: "The Government cannot do everything for you". When I raise the question of people who are being ripped off by exorbitant rents and cannot find sufficient social housing to accommodate themselves and their families, the Conservatives say: "The Government cannot do everything for you".

Now we see a situation where a few of their good friends, hidden somewhere in the list of names, want to get a few more dollars from the system. The Conservatives, always ready, come forward to make sure that they are bailed out with taxpayers' dollars. I say that this will be done over the most strenuous objections of the New Democratic Party. It will be done in spite of what is right. It will be done only because the Conservative Party enjoys the largest majority in Canada's history. If it were in any other Parliament, it would not and could not be done.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address this—

Mr. Lewis: Wait. The third—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary is recognizing that I was in difficulty as a result of one Conservative Member and the Right Hon. gentleman rising at the same time. In that context I chose to recognize the Right Hon. gentleman, unless he chooses to wait and let the Conservative speak.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not depriving the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Not at all.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to address this issue at second reading and put an amendment, against which closure was applied. That is becoming a newly contagious habit of the Government. It enjoys the largest majority since Confederation yet it is unable to process its Bills through the House without using the hammer, without abusing the free flow of debate and without applying a guillotine to virtually every measure that comes into the House. I can say quite categorically that we are against this legislation because it is bad legislation which should never have been brought into the House.

I want to congratulate my colleague, the Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) who spoke earlier and set out the arguments very well this afternoon. I also want to pay tribute to my colleagues who have followed this matter through the committee, particularly the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), who has been the official critic on this issue and has been very penetrating indeed in her analysis and questioning. I believe that her questions to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have been beautifully crafted and an example to every other Member in the House as to how to put a Minister on the spot.

I also want to reinforce my congratulations to her by paying tribute to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and the Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who supported her in the committee very effectively.

The bank failure fiasco that led to this Bill is an incredible tale of ministerial incompetence and deception.

Mr. Lewis: That is not what the Senate said.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is exactly what the Senate said. The other place divided on the issue of ministerial responsibility because they wanted a unanimous report and we could not persuade the Conservative members in the other place to give full vent to their feelings as to the ministerial incompetence that took place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when the original bail-out came before the House in March we in the Liberal Party supported it on the assurance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on the word of the Minister of Finance and the word of the Minister of State for Finance. Let me quote the Minister of Finance when he said on March 25 that: "We are satisfied that this bank is now a viable bank, that it will be profitable in the future, that we will be repaid as will other members of the support group out of the future profits of the bank".

What a pathetic prophet the Minister of Finance turned out to be. Just six months later, having induced Parliament to dedicate $255 million of hard earned money from the Canadian taxpayers, not one bank went belly up, the Canadian Commercial Bank, but the Northland Bank as well because of the ineptitude of the Minister of State for Finance when she linked the Northland to the Canadian Commercial Bank in her press release of September 3. These two banks were the first banks to go bankrupt in this country in 60 years.

We agreed to the original bail-out because we were impressed with the Minister's arguments that the bank would remain solvent and because we wanted to endorse confidence of Canadians in our banking system. We felt that it was important to maintain confidence in our banking system because of the indebtedness around the world, the large indebtedness in the farming community, the indebtedness in Latin America and the indebtedness in corporate North America.

We believed in the flexibility and decentralization of our regional banking system which was introduced into western Canada by the previous Government under Mr. Trudeau. It allowed citizens of British Columbia, Alberta and other western provinces to deal with their finances closer to home rather than having to go on bended knee to central Canadian bankers in Montreal or Toronto. For those reasons we agreed with the Bill. We did not know at the time that the two Ministers involved were shamefully incompetent. We did not know that under their direction no audit had been requested of the loan portfolio of the Canadian Commercial Bank and that no one had done their homework.

According to the testimony before the Finance Committee and the evidence coming from the Estey Commission, the Canadian chartered banks suggested that they should look at the loan portfolio before investing their money. They offered to have officials review the situation over the weekend to determine the facts.

Rather than $255 million in loans being sour, it turned out that $600 million to $800 million of loans in the loan portfolio of the Canadian Commercial Bank were rotten. The bail-out did not have a chance of succeeding.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance brought a measure before the House that was absolutely incapable of succeeding. The reason for that legislation was that the Ministers went to the Prime Minister during the weekend of that national economic conference. The Prime Minister said that he did not want to know the facts because he did not want a bank to go belly up under a Conservative administration. He said: "I do not want a Conservative Government to be responsible for the first bank failure in over 60 years. I do not care what the facts are, save the bank".

The Government was flying blind. During second reading of this Bill I said that it was amateur night on the Rideau River. Parliament was conned and we were misled. The Minister did not know what they were talking about. Incidentally, neither the Minister of State for Finance nor the Minister of Finance who are defending this legislation have the courtesy to be in the House to see that this Bill is passed at third reading. At one time Ministers who were responsible for legislation before Your Honour were here for the debate. They were here to listen to the opinions of Members of Parliament. However, that is not the case with these Ministers and the Government. It relies on the blind majority of those silent, anonymous, invisible surfers, to use the eloquent words of some of our junior Members. They do not come and face Parliament on the last day before the House rises to defend this legislation, listen to what Members of Parliament have to say and justify the expenditure of $875 million. They are not here.

Mr. Ouellet: There is not a single Minister in the room.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is one.

Parliament was conned and the commercial banks were fooled. This is an example of shameful incompetence on the part of the Government. We are being asked to approve a cheque for $875 million without knowing to whom the Canadian taxpayers' money is to be paid. I do not believe there has been a precedent for that.

Members of our caucus had to swallow hard before agreeing to the arrangement we have today to allow this Bill to go through. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said that we had to hold our noses. The Prime Minister need not do that because he does not have a sense of smell. However, I can tell you that we do. This Bill stinks. Here we have another example of the lust for secrecy which the Government has. We finally got the documents on de Havilland, thanks to the tremendous efforts of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—a tremendous victory for what an individual Member of Parliament can do in his riding if he persists hard enough. We finally got the documents. We may have got an undertaking from the Prime Minister that a parliamentary committee will be given a chance to review Crown corporations if they are on the block, up for sale, and that all Members of Parliament will be given a chance to look at them. But we have this blank cheque. It is virtually unconscionable to ask Members of Parliament to authorize this amount of money when we do not know the recipients of it.

• (1610)

Of course, the Minister of State for Finance said to know is illegal under the Bank Act. We do have a tradition judicially in force, legally in force, statutorily in force, of the confidentiality of our banking system, but that does not apply. This bank is under the Winding-Up Act. This bank had a curator appointed to it and then a receiver. There is no way under the Winding-Up Act that creditors can be kept secret. They have to declare themselves. This Parliament has been persuaded and bludgeoned to preserve the veil of secrecy over these depositors.

Mr. Gauthier: For good reasons.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There may well be good reasons. The facts will come out. We have the inquiry under Mr. Justice Estey. We have the lists in the hands of certain people. The names will come out. I cannot understand the Government. We will find out the real reason the Government is withholding the names from us.

This was a political decision. It was not an informed economic decision. The incompetence of the Government failed to stem the haemorrhage of the Canadian Commercial Bank. I admit the bank was badly managed. I will admit the bank overconcentrated its loans in real estate, in oil in Alberta, California and Texas. It may be that other consequences will flow from the report of Mr. Justice Estey. The way the Government handled it sapped a good deal of confidence from our banking system. So much so, Mr. Speaker, that when the Mercantile Bank was finally saved, Ottawa was irrelevant. The banking system put the deal together in Montreal and Toronto and told the Minister of Finance after it had been put together that it did not have confidence anymore in how Ottawa was conducting its affairs.

What is the final cost, Mr. Speaker? The traditional historic first right of Parliament is to raise taxation and to spend the people's money. That is why we are here. Nothing is more important. This is why we would not knuckle under to closure on the budget Bill.

What is the final cost? We have tried to estimate it. Sixty million dollars was the Government's share of the original bail-out, $875 million to be authorized today before Your Honour for uninsured depositors, whose names we do not know; $75 million was the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation's portion of the original bail-out; 250 million for the insured depositors for the Canadian Commercial Bank and $170 million for the insured depositors of Northland.

How much money was the Bank of Canada forced to print in order to add to the liquidity of those two banks? Two billion dollars? We do not know. In any event, the total amount of money contributed by the Central Bank and by the Ministry of Finance is somewhere in the range of $3 billion.

Yet a measure of this importance was subjected to closure at second reading. Why the big rush? Why the anonymity? Why the secrecy? Why this blank cheque from Parliament for almost a billion dollars? A billion dollars is about $20,000 per taxpayer.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one billion dollars means $20,000 per taxpayer in Canada. It will buy 100,000 automobiles or 8 million bicycles or 8,000 or 10,000 housing units for the poor and the needy in our country. One billion is a lot of money! We say the words "one billion dollars", and it may not mean much to the Minister, but this is 1,000 times one million! Who are these depositors? We know that two individual depositors are going to receive $3.5 million. We don't know them. They are ghosts. Who are these people? Well—

[English]

We accept the inevitable, Mr. Speaker. We put all the issues we could before you. This is a result of Government incompetence. It involves ministerial responsibility of two Ministers who do not have the courtesy to appear in the House on third reading when this measure is being put before Your Honour.

We are talking about a huge amount. We are talking about something, perhaps you in your greater wisdom can, Mr. Speaker, but I can never remember a blank cheque being issued by the Parliament of Canada to men and women in institutions whose names we are not given. We are paying out over $1 billion to anonymous depositors, a delicious Christmas present for people we do not know who they are. I venture to say that we will find out some day. Why? We are doing it at the expense of the poor and the disadvantaged who could use the money at this time. We are arguing about family allowances. The farmers in western Canada wonder why there cannot be a more generous drought program and why there cannot be a more generous program of financing and rescheduling of debt. The farmers of western Canada wonder why their banks are being saved at their expense. People risked depositing in those banks for a high rate of interest. We are not talking about the uninsured depositor of $60,000 or less, but those depositors over $60,000.

Mr. Axworthy: The greedy ones.

Mr. Ouellet: The rich.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have money for them, Mr. Speaker. The Government endorses that payment by way of a blank cheque, yet we do not have any money for the western farmer, for family allowances, the disadvantaged or the unemployed. We gulp. There it is, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your giving me the generosity of your attention and your time.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I may say that I was very happy, and with me I suppose all the Members of this House, to see a new spirit, a Christmas spirit, a holiday spirit had pervaded the House this afternoon to help us agree on the menu for this last day, so that we can look forward to spending some pleasant holidays at home with our families.

Around Christmas time, we all have a tendency to look back over the years, and that is what I would like to do in connection with Bill C-79. And considering the spririt of openness shown by the party whips, and the atmosphere of generosity that pervades this House, Mr. Speaker, I will of course refrain from saying anything that might spoil the new ambience we sense in Parliament today.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may point out that if we go back to 1925, there was a Bill at the time referred to as Bill 182—

[English]

—an Act for the relief of the depositor of the Home Bank of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, history can teach us a number of things, and first of all, that it tends to repeat itself, but it can also repeat itself in reverse. And after listening to the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), followed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) and finally the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), I would like to quote the Hon. Member for Halifax at the time, a Mr. Black, who said the following about the disastrous circumstances of the failure of the Home Bank:

[English]

The Home Bank failure is one of the greatest "black marks" which banking in Canada has ever experienced . . . The principles of good banking were ignored; deception and fraud were practised; so that in the end shareholders, depositors and others suffered severe loss. There was a period when this government could have saved heavy loss to those interested parties, the depositors and shareholders, without costing the country a dollar . . . Now the country is called upon to provide some five and a half millions to reimburse the depositors who unfortunately made bad investments by placing their savings in that bank—

Mr. Black continued as follows:

This is a dangerous policy, forming a precedent and opening the door for further claims, past or future, of similar character.

● (1620)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today, history repeats itself with Bill C-79. In 1925, Le Devoir printed the following headline: "Nearly five and a half million for Home Bank customers". And who led the federal Government in 1925, Mr. Speaker? It was none other than the Right Hon. Mackenzie King! The motion presented by the Liberal Government at the time was adopted with 100 in favour and 20 opposed. I may add that in 1925, which was 61 years ago, five and a half million dollars was . . . Index that at 8 per cent with compound interest. How much would that be today, in 1985? Since I am not a financial expert, I'd rather not figure it out, but it was an astronomical sum for 1925.

And to continue this digression into history, what were the motives that brought the Members of the House to adopt this measure? There were two. People mentioned patriotism. In fact, it was said that the failure of a Canadian bank would be a disaster for Canada's prestige. That was one of the arguments. Our national credibility was at stake. And it was also said that this fiasco was due to World War I, which, it seems, had ravaged our economy. And, Mr. Speaker, even though I can feel this atmosphere of optimism and warmth, consultation and brotherly love, was it not the Liberal Government that went out to the West with its energy policy, and are not the results of that policy very similar to the economic devastation brought about by war? Those were the motives mentioned at the time for supporting this measure.

As the Hon. Member for Halifax, Mr. Black, said: We have created a precedent. Today, probably for the same reasons, we are faced with a disastrous situation, and this Government has decided to protect the interests of depositors and protect Canada's credibility by introducing a measure that is not necessarily a reason for rejoicing. Nobody likes to mop up the other guy's mess. It is not with overwhelming enthusiasm that we use public funds today to come to grips with a critical situation.

You know, we must put the fire out, and a fire is red, like a Liberal. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have to do it because we are in office and we are stuck with the same Canadian reality.

History usually repeats itself, Mr. Speaker. The then Government had also appointed a royal commission of inquiry to study the matter. Now we have the Estey Commission, but then Mr. Harrison A. McKeown was the commissioner. And of course, throughout the inquiry, much had been said about the enormous difficulties experienced by the management of the institution which handled a lot of venture capital in certain cases. Some Members at the time had expressed reservations about inquiries made by a few public officials.

It would seem that this institution, the Home Bank, had certain guarantees in British Columbia and that the Government could not very well ignore them. As a result of a thorough investigation, however, they had given rise to some questions, and properly so.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I think that some of the Members who rose in the House earlier should have refreshed their memory about history. At least two of them forgot something, particularly the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) when his own party at one time was forced to take similar steps in nearly identical circumstances. The same arguments had been used then, of course. A Member at the time, Mr. Kennedy of Glengarry, had stated that the amount involved was to be used to repay other depositors as well. Other institutions had been mentioned, like Banque Ville-Marie, Banque du Peuple, to mention Quebec banks, of course, and Banque Saint-Jean which had been unable to qualify for the same kind of generous assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Government had to intervene, however regretfully, and Members should not attempt to indulge in petty politics with this matter which happens to be a reality, the result of a declining economy in Western Canada, the aftermath of incidents over which this Government had no control. The Government did so with generosity, undoubtedly inspired by the principles which had guided this Parliament in its decision in 1925. We are showing that this Parliament can be generous towards destitute people.

And at the time, Mr. Speaker, the Government did not reveal the names of the Home Bank depositors either. At the time, they respected the privacy of these depositors. And of course the Opposition pointed out all the precedents this would create.

However, I think that with this spirit of generosity, we also have a duty as Members and as Parliament to cope with difficult situations and of course, these are extremely difficult choices to make, but we wanted to protect the broader interests of Canada vis-à-vis the world community, and we also particularly wanted to protect the interests of the neediest in our society, small depositors, municipalities and small- and medium-sized businesses.

And if a few big fish who perhaps should not benefit from our generosity get through the net as well, I think that our democratic system and our system of freedoms is structured in such a way that, to save the greatest number, we unfortunately have to let a few profiteers through as well.

Mr. Speaker, it is with very little enthusiasm that we are supporting this measure, but at least we can rest assured that it will benefit Western Canada and the country as a whole.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lessen of history to be learned for many of us. Perhaps one of the lessons of history that is most important to learn is that when it comes to helping the large corporations, the big companies that go bankrupt and those who are already rich and wealthy but run into trouble, scratch a Conservative and you will find a socialist, Mr. Speaker. Conservatism in this country as indeed Liberalism has often meant, when it comes right down to it, is socialism for the rich and dog eat dog for the poor. That is what has been demonstrated by this Bill.

If Hon. Members of the House, like me, have held community meetings in the small towns and villages of their constituencies and if they have talked with people from the different cities that they represent, they must have heard the one particular question I heard from people who voted Conservative, who believed in Conservative members and who felt that the election of a Conservative Government somehow represented a new step in this country's history. That question was how could this kind of giveaway from the poor and ordinary Canadians to the rich possibly have taken place?

At the community meetings I have held in my constituency in recent weeks, person after person has risen to ask me why this $1 billion is being given to the banks. Frankly, it is a difficult question for me to answer even if I am able to put on my partisan hat.

The questions the people ask are very tough and hard questions. First, they ask why this large giveaway is being handed out at a time when the Government says the country faces near bankruptcy because of the size of the deficit. They also ask why it is that this money is being given in a secretive way to people whose names we do not even know. Having heard some of the details, they ask why we are not prepared to give help only to individuals because it could well be that there are individuals who are hard up and for whom the loss of more than $60,000 would seriously damage plans for retirement or the future. However, that cannot justify the giving in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank $108 million to foreign banks, over $65 million to other banks, over $56 million to investment dealers and brokers and over $51 million to large corporations. In the case of the Northland Bank, it is a further $4 million to foreign banks, $20 million to the rich existing banks in Canada, $54 million to investment dealers and brokers and $90 million to other corporations.

If we were giving money to those who deeply, desperately needed the resources of the taxpayers, then there might be some justification for this. However, to give this money to those who are already rich and wealthy is something which my people simply cannot understand. My people see around them people hurting badly, farmers in Essex County going bankrupt, small business people going bankrupty, women needing help for retraining to go back into the workforce with equity and fairness, young people such as those we have met recently through the youth task force who are looking for special help and umeployed people of whom there are still far too many in our community. They see for each of these groups a desperate need for help and they hear in response to the demands each of these groups make for help the same answer from the Government: we cannot afford it because the deficit is too high and becasue we do not have the money. Yet when the banks come begging, socialism for the rich becomes an historical reality once again. The banks get what they want and the people are left facing insecurity, difficulty and a sense of unfairness that to them is simply overpowering. The people simply cannot see the justice in powerful individuals, corporations and banks being helped despite the law while poor people do not get the valid assitance to which they feel entitled.

I appreciate the history lesson given by the Hon. Member who spoke earlier. It is a lesson that shows that socialism for the rich has a long, dishonourable tradition in Canada, a tradition that harks back to the Home Bank. It is a tradition which we see today being carried on by the Government for the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank. It was always so and that is what makes this country so cynical about our politics and the fairness of our governmental system.

We cannot practise socialism for the rich and dog-eat-dog for the poor and still claim to be a country in which fairness rules. I will be proud to vote against this Bill today along with the remainder of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party. I will do so out of a sense of equity and fairness and out of a sense that the socialism that we need in Canada is socialism for ordinary Canadians and not a socialism for the rich like that we see being perpetuated in this Bill and that we have seen in the past.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There being no further speakers on Bill C-79 I take it that it was the intent of the House in this situation, pursuant to the order which was adopted earlier, that I would now defer all votes with regard to Bill C-79 until five o'clock.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You are now about to proceed to Bill C-83.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I am.

Mr. Deans: I would simply like to ask that all the motions which are on the Order Paper be deemed to have been moved for the purpose of the debate.

Mr. Lewis: We are in agreement with that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will have to deal with that in a minute.

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-83, an Act to amend the Tax Rebate Discounting Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to deem the motions which are in order to have been moved. However, I must indicate to the House the following. In my view, Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3, which are in order, will be grouped for debate. Motion No. 1 will be voted on separately. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 will obviate the necessity of a vote on Motion No. 3. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 will require the question to be put on Motion No. 3. Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 6 are out of order, since they attempt to introduce in the parent Act a definition which was not contemplated in the Bill at second reading and, therefore, are beyond the scope of the Bill. I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Citation 773(1).

Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9 and 10 are in order and should be debated and voted on separately. However, for the purpose of this understanding I suggest that we simply deem all the in order Motions, that is Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 9 and 10, to have been moved and to be before the House and grouped for debate for this Special Order.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 15 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"ninety-nine per cent of the refund of".

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 16 to 22 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"tax,

(b) where the refund of tax is greater than three hundred dollars but less than nine hundred dollars, two hundred and fifty-five dollars plus ninety-five per cent of the amount by which the refund of tax is greater than three hundred dollars, or

(c) where the refund of tax is equal to or greater than nine hundred dollars, eight hundred and twenty-five dollars plus one hundred per cent of the amount by which the refund of tax is greater than nine hundred dollars;"

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 19 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

"dred and eighty-five dollars plus ninety"

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 1 by adding immediately after line 9 at page 2 the following:

"(4) A person using a discounter for the preparation of income tax under the Income Tax Act shall be entitled to the rights of information, impartiality, courtesy and consideration and presumption of honesty as stated in the Revenue Canada document, Declaration of Taxpayer Rights."

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-83, be amended in clause 2 by striking out line 28 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"client's return of income tax to a standard deemed acceptable by generally accepted standards of professional tax preparers or for any other".

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 28 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"(ii) a".

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-83, be amended in Clause 2 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 4 the following:

"including the discount rate as an annual rate, calculated as a percentage for the following time periods: four weeks, six weeks, eight weeks, twelve weeks;"

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I propose to recognize the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the Conservative Government one last time to accept two amendments to the Tax Rebate Discounting Act.

First of all, I want to thank the Hon. Members for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), Grand Galls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) and Laurier (Mr. Berger) for their contribution to the work and proceedings of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-83.

I regret the absence of the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), the official critic for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who I am sure would have liked to take part in the debate on this Bill. I hope she was able to notice that the Members who took over her responsibilities in connection with this Bill fought vigorously on her behalf and on behalf of the needy families in this country. This fact should be of some comfort to her and help her get well soon and come back to the House at the beginning of 1986.

Mr. Speaker, the work done by my colleagues and myself has demonstrated our desire to serve this institution and especially the neediest families in Canada. The important thing, to us, is to make an effort to show that we are on the side of the little man. It is quite obvious that the Bill does not at all meet the expectations of the neediest families in Canada.

And because we were very serious about this issue, we presented two amendments. First of all, I want to express my profound regret that the Government Members on the parliamentary committee refused to accept those amendments. We, in the Opposition, had opened the door to a compromise by presenting an initial amendment prohibiting the discounting of child tax credits. This amendment was to have been complemented by another amendment that would have given the Minister a chance to choose the right time to adopt the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, now we all know the truth about the tax rebate discounting industry. We know that only 11 per cent of their clients earn $20,000 or more. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post (Mr. Côté) says that he wants to ensure this consumer group has a choice. I think he is referring to the group that earns more than $20,000, because how can anyone claim that people earning $20,000 or less can see the loss of a substantial sum of money as an alternative?

The problem, the real problem is with the time it takes to process income tax returns from those in the low-income bracket.

This Bill does not do anything about that, yet the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), who was supposed to change everything during his mandate at Revenue Canada, did not do anything at all to improve the situation in that respect. More significant still, the Bill does not deal with Canada's ever worsening poverty problem. In fact, the proposed measures will only take more money out of the pockets of the most needy Canadians. We deeply regret the fact that our country is witnessing the further impoverishment of its most destitute citizens, whereas the Government is trying to help shaky financial institutions with an ardour which, had it been applied to the discounting problem, would have led to a much more constructive and much more equitable solution.

The coincidence of the two measures we are forced to adopt today reveals the true face of the Conservatives: on one hand, generosity towards wealthy bank depositors and, on the other, stinginess towards the poorest families in this country. For instance, the Government did not hesitate to abolish quotas on shoes, thereby eliminating many thousands of jobs in Canada to please a few major import companies, but then it simply will not abolish tax discounting, which indeed would benefit Canada's most destitute families.

There is a second amendment which would enable the clients of discounters to pay no more than $75 for this service. In other words, we are proposing that this $75 ceiling be enforced. I would also like to express my regret about the fact that this amendment was defeated in committee. My only satisfaction, Mr. Speaker, is that a Government Member did support our amendment. I hope that now the Government has a last chance to adopt at least two decent amendments to make the legislation more acceptable, it will take advantage of this opportunity to let the neediest families in Canada have the full amount to which they are entitled, because this money is actually an income tax overpayment. The full sum should go back to them, to pay for clothing or furniture or dental bills for a child or another family member. Since the Government has once again demonstrated it is oblivious to the plight of the neediest in our society, I would invite them, now we are getting ready for Christmas, to show the neediest in our society they have some heart and some generosity and accept these two amendments.

[English]

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) will agree with me that the changes which we have made to the child tax credit have little to do with our national footwear industry.

I would also point out, in contradiction to one of the statements made by the Hon. Member, that what we are trying to do with respect to Bill C-83 is two things. First, we are trying to address the needs of the needy and not remove the service from those who need it most. At the same time, we are realizing that there is a service supplied by the discounters. It is not merely a commission or an interest paid. If that were the case the banks would be performing this service. I suggest to the Hon. Member that the banks are not in the least bit interested in supplying this service.

I would also remind the Hon. Member that it was his Government, the former Liberal Government, which introduced tax discounting. It did this for the purpose of supplying a need to the needy. Unlike that administration, in comparison with this administration, the turn-around time from the time of filing to the time of receipt is much less now than it was under the former administration. The Minister says: comme ci, comme ça, but I remind him that the time in some cases is as little as four and one half weeks if filed on time and with the proper information.

• (1650)

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member to think about what would happen if he was in the money lending business, January 15 rolled around, he wanted to get his money in advance and he was offered a rate of 1 per cent or $75, which the Minister suggests is the maximum for discounters, and the amount which was to be received by that client looking for money in advance was $900. Would he lend $900 at 1 per cent or $75 for up to three months? We must be realistic and we must appreciate the fact that when the money is requested from the discounter on January 15, it is physically impossible, since we do not even turn on the computers until February, to refund that money within a four-week period. Therefore, what the discounter is doing is preparing the income tax form for a fee. In addition to that, he is charging what we consider to be a more reasonable rate because of these amendments. We recognize the need for that service, as did the former Government. The only thing we are saying is that it needs to be less because of the shorter turn-around period.

What we have in effect done is said to the people who would like their cash in advance that they can now go, with the passing of Bill C-83, to a discounter, receive their money in advance and have their income tax form filled out for a fee or 15 per cent on the first $300. There is no interest charged. It is just a 15 per cent fee on the first $300, which is $45. That includes the average cost of preparing income tax forms. The discounter then borrows the money in order to pay that person his money in advance and waits until the federal Government makes the refund.

I am sure the Hon. Member will agree, as well as the New Democratic Party, that the odd person in Canada files their income tax and there is a follow-up. There is a change, adjustment or request for further information by the Revenue Canada people. This delays the payment back to the discounter, and we have now reduced the 15 per cent down to 5 per cent on all funds advanced by the discounter in excess of first $300.

To indicate how the consumers feel about this, I would like to read a letter which was sent to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) by the Consumers Association of Canada. It says in part: "In particular, we note that you have agreed with the Consumers Association of Canada's position on the need to lower discount rates and proposed a maximum allowable charge of 5 per cent on any amount over $300". The letter goes on: "You have also accepted CACs view that tax return processing has been too slow and have acted decisively to remedy this situation". This is the paragraph which should be noted: We applaud proposals to pay child tax credit periodically which is in the same piece of legislation by intent in the new tax year to simplify procedures for getting advance loans from financial institutions and to improve the Tax Rebate Discounting Act making it easier to detect and prosecute violators". I feel that Bill C-83, having gone through a series of hearings from interested groups and individuals and from the Consumers Association and the tax discounters that a compromise has been reached. Yes, the discounters would like to make more money and, yes, the consumers would like to get their tax refunds without any cost. However, I respectfully submit that 5 per cent for an advance payment on an amount in excess of $300 is a reasonable charge for the service rendered. I refuse to accept the arguments of the Official Opposition and of the other Opposition, the New Democratic Party, that 5 per cent is an unreasonable rate to charge with the risk involved and the delays which can occur. The delays are caused, as I have explained before, in some cases because there is extra information required and there is no guarantee to the discounter that that tax refund would be returned within four weeks or five weeks. It is a fact that the return time for income tax returns today is quite a bit shorter than it was in 1978 when the Act was first passed allowing the legalization of discounting for those in need.

I refuse to accept the argument that it is only the poor who require money. I do not suppose there are very many Hon. Members sitting in this House who at some time have not asked for money in advance on a promise to pay from a banking institution in order that they could meet current costs. Discounting is necessary and this legislation is a fair way to approach it.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we oppose this measure not because we think what is now in place is acceptable but because we believe there ought not to be the option to charge people who are in need for the money they have coming back from the Government of Canada.

We want to put on the record that it is the responsibility of Revenue Canada, and if there is the need to advance additional moneys forthwith to those who are in the greatest need, then that should be done through the auspices of Revenue Canada. I want to say that this Bill fails to deal with the question of ripping off the poor. There is close to unanimous opposition to what the Minister has brought forward by the majority of those who understand its implications. The Bill legitimizes the exploitation of the poor in a way in which the original legislaton had not envisaged. The growth of the business of exploitation has been phenomenal over the last few years, with kiosks springing up in every shopping plaza, and the vast majority of those who undertake the measure are the representatives of a major corporation, in fact two major corporations which operate within the field from the United States, and it is wrong. Those who are doing in Canada what they are doing could not do the same thing in the United States where they come from and they ought not to be allowed to do it here.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the present situation is unacceptable. Adopting this Bill will not change it. Parliament must immediately put a stop to this practice.

[English]

I ask this Parliament to consider the necessity to stand up and admit that it is not enough to say you can charge a little bit, that it is absolutely essential to say that we are going to make Revenue Canada operate effectively and efficiently, and we are going to make sure that those who need the rebates get them without having to pay exoribitant fees.

Mr. Speaker: There being no further debate, and it being, for the sake of argument, five o'clock, pursuant to the Order made earlier this day, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of Bill C-79 and Bill C-83 respectively. I propose to commence with the deferred votes with respect to Bill C-79.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 2 (Miss Nicholson (Trinity)) (p. 8737) and Motion No. 3 (Mr. Riis) (p. 8738).

Mr. Speaker: The first vote will be on Motion No. 2. Miss Nicholson (Trinity), seconded by Mr. Riis, moves:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-79, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 6 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the Bank Act, the Minister shall cause to be published in this year's Public Accounts a list of all depositors to which a payment was made under this Act."

Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House order allows for one bell. Does the House prefer that we deal with the reading of all of the motions and all of the voice votes and defer all the standing votes until the end?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that with respect to all report stage votes, I think the voice vote would apply. If you want to call the third reading vote at this time and then call Bill C-83 and deal with it in the same way, we will then ring the bells, get everyone in, and we will know what we are voting on. Is that reasonable?

Mr. Speaker: It is reasonable. There may be one technical difficulty in that we have to re-read the motions at that time. However, I suspect we can handle that. Therefore, a standing division being required on that amendment, I shall defer that division and proceed to the next amendment. The next vote will be on Motion No. 3. Mr. Riis, seconded by Mr. Keeper, moves:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-79, be amended in Clause 12 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 6 the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the Bank Act, the Minister shall cause to be published in this year's Public Accounts a list of all depositors to which a payment was made under this Act."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. Accordingly, that division shall stand deferred for the moment.

The final matter would be the motion to concur standing in the name of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). Here is the technical difficulty. It is difficult for me to put the concurrence motion until the divisions have been taken on the amendments. Therefore may I suggest we revert to the second amendment where I have seen sufficient Members rising.

Therefore, call in the Members.

The first question is on Motion No. 2. A vote on this motion will dispose of Motion No. 3.

The House divided on the motion (Miss Nicholson) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, I declare the motion lost.

According to my notes, I suspect that we will be trying to apply votes. I take it that the Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) is now here. The Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) and the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) wish to be included with their Parties in future votes. The Hon. Member for Calgary North says no.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be concurred in.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask that the vote on the motion we just dealt with apply to this one. However, I am sure the Government House Leader will insist that it be in the reverse. I would ask that the individual votes be recorded in the same way, except in reverse.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that is a request to apply the same recorded vote in reverse?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If the Government House Leader wants to change his vote and that of his Party, of course we will accept it.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the Motion adopted on the reversed recorded division, with the addition in the affirmative of the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Witer) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), and with the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in the negative. Is that correct?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to abstain from this vote on the CCB and Northland Banks.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for Athabasca shall not be recorded with regard to the motion to concur, nor with third reading I take it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made earlier this day, Mrs. McDougall (St. Paul's) moves that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be now read a third time and do pass.
